Writing in "The Fix" blog on the website of the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M), Aaron Blake lists Biden and Warren as the debate "winners" and Bloomberg, Sanders, and the moderators as the debate "losers." Under the headline "Who Won The Democratic Debate? Experts Weigh In," the New York Times (2/25, Astor, 18.61M) highlights Twitter reactions to the debate from various political observers and operatives. The Charleston (SC) Post and Courier (2/25, Brown, 290K) and the New York Times (2/25, 18.61M) run fact-check pieces examining the various claims made in the debate. Ahead of the debate, Major Garrett, one of the event's moderators, said on the CBS Evening News (2/25, story 2, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.63M) that the debate represented "the last opportunity anyone not named Bernie Sanders has to slow his momentum. Bernie Sanders' momentum is real. It's not an abstraction. And every other Democrat on the stage tonight knows that."

Warren Accuses Bloomberg Of Telling Pregnant Employee To "Kill It." One debate exchange is the focus of some media coverage: Warren's claim that Bloomberg told one of his employees to have an abortion. USA Today (2/25, Siano, Young, 10.31M) reports, "During the debate, Warren said she lost a teaching job due to her pregnancy at age 21. She used the opportunity to attack Bloomberg. 'At least I didn't have a boss who said to me, 'Kill it,' the way that Mayor Bloomberg alleged to have said to one of his pregnant employees,' she said." Firing back, Bloomberg asserted, "I never said that. And for the record, if she was a teacher in New York City, she would never have had that problem. We treated our teachers the right way, and the unions will tell you exactly that."

The Washington Times (2/25, Swoyer, 492K) says that Warren "was referencing a lawsuit lobbed against Mr. Bloomberg years ago by an employee, which has been detailed in media reports." Axios (2/25, Perano, 521K) reports, "Per the Washington Post, a former saleswoman has alleged workplace discrimination against Bloomberg and his company and says Bloomberg told her to "kill it" when he learned she was pregnant. Bloomberg denied the allegation under oath and entered a confidential settlement with the woman." Bloomberg is quote as saying during the debate, "Categorically never said it. When I was accused of doing it, we couldn't figure out what she was talking about. But right now, I'm sorry if she heard what she thought she heard or whatever happened, I didn't take any pleasure in that."

The New York Post (2/25, Lapin, 4.57M) reports that Warren "also trashed Bloomberg LP's practice of having women sign nondisclosure agreements binding them to silence, as she did during last week's debate in Nevada. 'If he says there is nothing to hide here, then sign a blanket release and let those women speak,' she said." Bloomberg "criticized Warren for again bringing up the NDAs, and said he had, as Warren had called for in last week's debate, signed a blanket release to allow the women who signed the documents speak out. 'The trouble is with this senator is enough is never enough,' he said."

Daily Caller: Bloomberg Said During Debate He "Bought" Democratic House Majority. The Daily Caller (2/25, Davis, 716K) reports that Bloomberg said during the debate "that he 'bought' the Democrats' majority in the House of Representatives. 'They talk about 40 Democrats, 21 of those were people that I spent $100 million to help elect,' Bloomberg said. 'All of the new Democrats that came in and put Nancy Pelosi in charge, and gave the Congress the ability to control this president, I bought, I got them.' Bloomberg's slip up went unnoticed on stage."

Biden Mistakenly Says 150 Million People Have Been Killed By Guns Since 2007. The Washington Examiner (2/25, Brest, 448K) reports that during the debate, Biden "erroneously claimed more than 100 million people in the United States have been killed by guns in the last decade and a half." He made the claim "while touting his record on gun control and taking a dig at...Sanders. 'Imagine if I said we give immunity to drug companies, we give immunity to tobacco companies. That has caused carnage on our streets. One hundred and fifty million people have been killed since 2007 when Bernie voted to exempt the gun manufacturers from liability. More than all the wars,' he said." The article adds, "The Biden campaign told the Washington Examiner, 'He meant 150k. He's used that line multiple times before.'"

Media Analyses: Moderators Let Debate Get Out Of Control. Writing for the Daily Caller (2/25, 716K), Anders Hagstrom says that "the story of the night was candidates incessantly speaking over one another and moderators unwilling or unable to rein them in." Hagstrom identifies the debate moderators as "Norah O'Donnell, Gayle King, Margaret Brennan, Major Garrett and Bill Whitaker," and adds that "candidates frequently spoke over one another to the point where it was difficult to follow what was being said."

Similarly, Emily Stewart writes for Vox (2/25, 2.27M), "There was a lot of yelling at the Democratic debate in South Carolina on Tuesday. Like to the point that sometimes it was really unclear what was going on." Stewart adds that "the debate went off the rails pretty quick, and it never really got back on track." The New York Times (2/25, Goldmacher, Epstein, Paz, 18.61M) reports, "It was a messy two-hour affair, marked by moderators who went missing for long stretches as cross-talk, over and over, made the conversation intelligible."

Politico (2/25, Ward, 4.29M) reports that the debate "had something of an awkward ending – a cliffhanger that kept candidates at their podiums, uncertain about whether or not it was over." After one question was presented as the last of the debate, moderator King asserted that the debate wasn't over, and CBS cut to a commercial. Politico adds, "When the station returned to the debate from commercial, the candidates were still in place. King then officially marked the end with a clearer closing. 'Thank you,' King said. 'That concludes our debate.'"

Reuters/Ipsos Poll: Sanders Surpasses Biden In Support Among African Americans.

Reuters (2/25, Kahn) reports that a Reuters/Ipsos national poll released on Tuesday shows that Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "has widened his lead for the Democratic presidential nomination and overtaken Joe Biden in support among African Americans." According to the poll, 26% of "registered Democrats and independents...said they would vote for Sanders, while 15% said they were backing [Michael] Bloomberg and another 15% supported Biden." Among African-Americans, "26% said they would vote for Sanders,," 23% "said they would back Biden...and 20% would support Bloomberg." Reuters says the findings "could spell trouble for Biden. ... To remain a viable contender, Biden has been banking on a strong showing in Saturday's South Carolina primary, a state where black voters make up more than half of the Democratic electorate."

Poll: Sanders Has Widespread Support Among California's Communities Of Color. The Los Angeles Times (2/25, Lauter, 4.64M) reports that "a poll conducted by Strategies 360 from Feb. 12 through 19" found that Sanders has "widespread support among communities of color in California, outstripping his nearest Democratic rivals," Biden and Bloomberg. The Times adds, "Asked to pick among the leading Democrats and President Trump and say who they would most like to see as the next president, a third of Latino adults, one quarter of African Americans and just over 1 in 5 Asian Americans chose the Vermont senator." About "1 in 8 Latinos and Asian Americans" and "1 in 6 African Americans" chose Bloomberg. Biden "drew the same support as Bloomberg among Latinos," but "did slightly better among African Americans and significantly worse among Asian Americans, being the top pick of fewer than 1 in 10."

Politico Analysis: Sanders Might Not Be Unstoppable.

In an analysis, Politico (2/25, Harris, Mahtesian, 4.29M) considers "some of the reasons to say 'not so fast' in assuming" that the "impressive momentum" Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) has "coming out of the Nevada caucuses makes him unstoppable." Politico says attacks on Sanders from his rivals in debates could change his "perceived juggernaut status." In addition, if Joe Biden "can for once exceed expectations with a decisive South Carolina showing the Democratic contest suddenly look quite different." Also, the "two most widely respected figures in the Democratic Party – Barack Obama and Nancy Pelosi – are worried that a Sanders nomination could be disastrous for the party in the fall." Party leaders may not "wield the same levers of power in an era of online ideological movements," but that "doesn't mean they have no leverage." Politico also questions "the assumption that the Democratic National Convention couldn't dare deny the nomination to Sanders if he has a first-round plurality."

Internal Bloomberg Poll Says Sanders Would Drag Down Vulnerable Democrats. Politico (2/25, Cadelago, Barrón-López, 4.29M) reports that a poll conducted by Michael Bloomberg's presidential campaign shows that Sanders at the top of the Democratic ticket "could drag down vulnerable House Democrats trying to hold onto their competitive districts." The poll "found that Sanders is less popular than Trump and loses significant support when hit for holding socialist positions." While the poll "found Sanders essentially running even with Trump in a head-to-head match-up across the districts, trailing the incumbent by just one point," Trump "opens up 6-point advantage after a list of negative messages about Sanders' ideology and alleged ineffectiveness in the Senate is presented to poll respondents." In addition, a "plurality of voters, 39 percent, say they will be less likely to vote for a Democrat for Congress if Sanders is the Democratic nominee and his ideas are folded into the party platform." The New York Post (2/25, Campanile, 4.57M) says the poll claims that Sanders "would 'jeopardize' the re-election of 42 House Democrats in battleground districts and therefore the party's majority rule." Townhall (2/25, McCarthy, 177K) provides similar coverage of the poll.

NRCC Chairman Says Democrats In Trump Districts Are Panicked Over Sanders. Politico (2/25, 4.29M) reports that NRCC Chairman Rep. Tom Emmer (R-MN) "revealed...in Democratic panic" over Sanders' "frontrunning campaign for the party's presidential nomination, expressing confidence that the GOP would be a shoo-in to retake control of the House with a self-described democratic socialist atop the opposite ticket." Emmer is quoted as saying, "The Democrats' embrace of socialism will cost them their majority in the House. They know that. ... You look right now. You have in the 30 seats that Donald Trump won two years ago that have Democrats currently in them. These folks are in an all-out panic.”

Townhall: CNN Anchor Appeared Shocked To Learn About Sanders’ Past Writings. Townhall (2/25, Rosas, 177K) reports Michael Bloomberg’s campaign adviser Tim O’Brien “held nothing back in his criticisms” of past writings by Sanders “regarding women fantasies and cancer.” On CNN’s New Day Tuesday, O’Brien said, “Bernie has all of this loopy stuff in his background saying things like, you know, women get cancer from having too many orgasms or toddlers should run around naked and touch each other’s genitals to insulate themselves from porn. ... He has written about women’s rape fantasies. That hasn’t been surfaced. That’s the loony side of Bernie.”

WPost: Sanders Is Promising “Impossible Levels Of New Spending.” A Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) editorial criticizes spending promises by Sanders. The Post argues that “it takes no courage to promise impossible levels of new spending and programs that could not work as advertised. It takes courage to level with voters.” As an example, the Post cites Sanders’ “plan to enable all Americans to get child care,” which would cost twice as much as similar plans from Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and Pete Buttigieg. The Post argues, “True progressives recognize that federal money is scarce and must be spent carefully, with the poorest first in line.”

At South Carolina Event, Biden Said He Is A Candidate For US Senate.

The New York Post (2/25, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports that during a Democratic event in South Carolina Monday, Joe Biden referred to himself as “a Democratic candidate for the United States Senate.” At the “First in the South Dinner,” Biden “delivered remarks about returning the White House and the Senate to Democratic control before making the error.” As he was “wrapping up his speech, he confused which elected office he was seeking.” Biden said, “You’re the ones who sent Barack Obama the presidency. And I have a simple proposition here: I’m here to ask you for your help. Where I come from, you don’t go very far unless you ask. My name’s Joe Biden. I’m a Democratic candidate for the United States Senate.”

Biden Says He Worked On Paris Agreement With Leader Who Died In 1997. The New York Post (2/25, Bowden, 4.57M) reports that during a campaign stop in South Carolina Saturday, Biden claimed “to have worked on the 2016 Paris Climate Accord with a Chinese leader who died 19 years earlier.” Biden said, “One of the things I’m proudest of is getting passed, getting moved, getting in control of the Paris Climate Accord. ... I’m the guy who came back after meeting with Deng Xiaoping and making the case that I believe China will join if we put pressure on them. We got almost 200 nations to join.” Deng Xiaoping “died in 1997.” The Post adds, “It’s unclear if Biden was referring to China’s current President Xi Jinping, who took power in 2013 and oversaw China’s involvement in the 2016 climate deal.”

WPost: Biden Uses Obama To Attack His Opponents. A Washington Post (2/25, Hohmann, 14.2M) analysis says Biden is “no longer content to merely cite” former President Barack Obama “as validation.” He “now invokes his old boss to attack his opponents – specifically Bernie Sanders and Tom Steyer, who are nipping at his heels in South Carolina by making inroads with African American voters.” The Post says Biden “exudes a new sense of urgency as he makes what could be his last stand ahead of Saturday’s primary, in which the majority of voters will be black.” Biden said, “When we were president – when Barack was president, and I was vice president – we went to HBCUs,” in a reference to historically black colleges and universities.

NYTimes Highlights How Biden’s Sister Has Benefited From His Political Career. The New York Times (2/25, Saul, 18.61M) reports that Biden’s sister, Valerie Biden Owens, “managed all of his Senate campaigns and his first two presidential races, playing a central role in her brother’s career – as his confidante, closest political adviser and one of his top surrogates on the campaign trail.” In addition, she has “benefited from her connections to her brother, receiving jobs, appointments and speaking engagements over the years.” It is, the Times adds, “not the first time that Mr. Biden’s family have raised questions.” The Times goes on to highlight a number of examples.

Hunter Biden Seeks To Delay Child Support Deposition Until After Key Primaries. The Washington Examiner (2/25, Yilek, 448K) reports that Hunter Biden has asked a judge to delay his child support deposition, which is scheduled for this week “until after key voting contests for his father, Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden, are over.” According to a court motion filed Tuesday, Hunter Biden “is seeking to push it back to April 1.”

Bloomberg’s Girlfriend Says People Bothered By NDAs Should “Get Over It.”

Townhall (2/25, McCarthy, 177K) reports that when he was confronted during last week’s Democratic presidential debate about “his company’s Non-disclosure agreements (NDA), with regard to potential sexual harassment allegations against” employees of his company, Michael Bloomberg “initially brushed off the idea of female employees being limited by NDAs after employment, but then released a statement admitting that at least 3 NDAs were signed by women who may have filed grievances against Bloomberg himself, and the former mayor has agreed to release the women from the NDAs if they so choose.” Townhall adds that the situation “took a turn” Tuesday morning when Bloomberg’s “longtime girlfriend, Diana Taylor, outright dismissed any claims of misconduct, telling those speculating to “get over it.”

Ed O’Keefe reported in the lead story for the CBS Evening News (2/25, lead story, 2:55, O’Donnell, 4.63M), “In an exclusive interview with CBS News,” Taylor “defended the former mayor’s use of nondisclosure agreements.” Taylor: “It was 30 years ago. Get over it. ... In none of them was he accused of doing anything or saying something nasty to a woman. That is not who he is. Life has changed.” David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (2/25, story 4, 2:25, 7.48M) that the Bloomberg campaign was “quick to distance itself from the comments.” Mary Bruce added, “Bloomberg’s team says Taylor was speaking for herself there and not for the Bloomberg campaign.”

WPost Analysis: 9/11 Attacks Fueled Bloomberg’s Rise To NYC Mayor, Presidential Candidate. In a 3,000-word analysis, the Washington Post (2/25, Schwartzman, 14.2M) reports that Bloomberg was a Republican mayoral candidate when the 9/11 attacks occurred and “what Bloomberg did not know in that moment – what no one could have known – is that the deadliest foreign attack on American soil would fuel his unlikely rise as New York’s mayor and become a foundation for his race for the White House.” Bloomberg “invokes his stewardship of post-9/11 New York to cast himself as the competent, even-keeled antidote to President Trump’s turbulent reign.”

In Weekend Meeting, Schumer Urged Bullock To Challenge Daines.

Politico (2/25, Everett, Arkin, 4.29M) reports that Senate Minority Leader Schumer met with term-limited Montana Gov. Steve Bullock (D) last weekend “as Democrats make a last-ditch effort to woo him to” mount a 2020 challenge to Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT), “according to multiple sources.” Politico says that Bullock “has repeatedly said he has no plans to” enter the race. However, “the state’s filing deadline is just over two weeks away, and Democrats have continued to pitch Bullock on seeking the Senate seat before the window closes.” Politico adds, “Democrats believe that if Bullock were to” enter the race, “it would instantly put Montana in play this fall and give them a wider path to taking back the chamber. Republicans have a 53-47 majority.”

WSJournal: Federal Judges Association Should Explain “Emergency” Meeting.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that media reports last week of an emergency meeting called by Federal Judges Association in the wake of President Trump’s criticisms over the sentencing of Roger Stone raise questions about judicial impartiality. The Journal urges the group to give further clarification into the purpose of the planned meeting to allay concerns about the independence of the judiciary.

WSJournal: Democrats Sow Chaos With Early Voting Efforts.

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Democratic efforts to expand early voting could result in mayhem on Election Day, delaying results, increasing the risk of mistakes and misbehavior, and undermining the legitimacy of the process. The Journal says early voting means leads on Election Day could disappear in the following days as absentee ballots roll in, and voters may be casting ballots for candidates months before new developments shift the political landscape.

Meacham: Religion Offers “Best Hope” Against Trump.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (2/25, 18.61M), author Jon Meacham writes, “For many Americans, especially non-Christians, the thought that Christian morality is a useful guide to much of anything these days is risible, particularly since so many evangelicals have thrown in their lot with a relentlessly solipsistic American president who bullies, boasts and sneers.” But according to Meacham, “history suggests that religiously inspired activism may hold the best hope for those in resistance to the prevailing Trumpian order.” He acknowledges that “Christianity has been an instrument of repression,” but adds that “in the living memory of Americans it has also been deployed as a means of liberation and progress – which feeds the hope that it can become a force for good once more.”

Declassified Study Shows Costly NSA Phone Program Provided Limited Results.

The New York Times (2/25, Savage, 18.61M) reports a newly declassified study indicates an NSA system that evaluated “logs of Americans’ domestic phone calls and text messages cost $100 million from 2015 to 2019, but yielded only a single significant investigation.” The study, produced by the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board and provided to Congress on Tuesday, “said only twice during that four-year period did the program generate unique information that the FBI did not already possess.” The study concluded, “Based on one report, FBI vetted an individual, but, after vetting, determined that no further action was warranted. The second report provided unique information about a telephone number, previously known to US authorities, which led to the opening of a foreign intelligence investigation.” To the Times, the large cost and “low utility of the call records collected sheds new light on the NSA’s decision in 2019 to shutter the program amid recurring technical headaches.”

Man Charged With Plotting To Blow Up Car At Pentagon.

The AP (2/25) reports “an Arkansas man was arrested on charges he tried to blow up a car outside the Pentagon, federal officials said Tuesday.” CNN (2/25, Cole, 83.16M) recounts on its website that “Matthew Dmitri Richardson, 19, of Fayetteville, was approached by a Pentagon police officer standing by the car with a cigarette lighter and a piece of fabric stuffed in the car’s gas tank, according to a criminal complaint.” Richardson “allegedly told the officer that he wanted to ‘blow this vehicle up.’” The Washington Times (2/25, Glenn, 492K) reports “Richardson pulled free and ran away when the Pentagon police officer tried to grab him,” and “surveillance video cameras later spotted him climbing a fence into Arlington National Cemetery, according to court documents.” He “was later discovered near Arlington House inside the cemetery grounds.” The Washington Examiner (2/25, Dibble, 448K) says “the owner of the vehicle targeted at the Pentagon was found to be an active-duty service member who does not know Richardson.” Reuters Holland, MI (2/25, Inc., 399) and the Herndon (VA) Patch (2/25, Belt, 1.03M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

NYTimes Report: Calls For Law Targeting Domestic Terrorism Growing.

The New York Times (2/25, Macfarquhar, 18.61M) reports that “when the New Jersey Office of Homeland Security and Preparedness issued its terrorism threat assessment for 2020 last week, it noted a marked shift. The threat level from violent, homegrown extremists, and specifically white supremacists, was marked in red as the top category: 'High.' The threat from the Islamic State, Al Qaeda and their ilk was demoted to third, in green: 'Low.'" The Times also reports that "terrorism experts believe that holds true for the entire United States," and adds that "even as the menace from homegrown extremists grows more explicit, however, law enforcement is wrestling with how to combat it. That challenge has spawned a fervent debate over whether the United States needs a new law to specifically criminalize domestic terrorism, or whether such a statute would threaten basic First Amendment rights."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 46.3%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 46.3%, and his disapproval at 50.6%. The President's job approval is up 0.6 since yesterday and his disapproval is down by 0.6.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (2/20-2/24) finds Trump's approval at 52%, with 47% disapproving. The President tweeted in reaction to the numbers, "52% in the new Rasmussen Poll. 95% Approval Rating in the Republican Party. Thank you!"

A Politico/Morning Consult survey of 1,192 "registered voters" (2/21-2/23), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 45%, and his disapproval at 52%.

IMF Calls Talks With Lebanon "Productive" As Hezbollah Declares Opposition To IMF Managing Crisis.

Reuters (2/25, Lawder) reports the IMF in a statement "said on Tuesday its staff held five days of 'very informative and productive' talks with Lebanese authorities on their plans to deal with debt and economic challenges and stand ready to provide further technical advice." IMF spokesman Gerry Rice, in the statement, "said the IMF team met with Prime Minister Hassan Diab as well as the country's deputy prime minister, central bank governor, finance minister, and other officials." The statement "made no mention of debt restructuring or the possibility of IMF financial assistance to Lebanon."

Reuters (2/25, Perry, Francis, Bassam, Nakhoul, Arnold) also reports Hezbollah said Tuesday it is against giving the IMF a role in managing Lebanon's financial crisis, saying it would oppose any bailout from the IMF that comes with tough conditions for the indebted country. Hezbollah deputy leader Sheikh Naim Qassem said, "We will not accept submitting to (imperialist) tools ... meaning we do not accept submitting to the International Monetary Fund to manage the crisis. ... Yes, there is nothing to prevent consultations ... and this is what the Lebanese government is doing."

Japan Signals Readiness To Counteract Economic Damage From Coronavirus.

Reuters (2/25, Leussink, Wada) reports Japan's Vice Finance Minister for International Affairs Yoshiki Takeuchi "said on Tuesday the government and the central bank may need to take further action if the fallout from the coronavirus outbreak on the economy broadens." Takeuchi "also said a communique issued by Group of 20 finance leaders over the weekend confirmed their shared understanding that stable currency moves were important." Takeuchi told reporters, "Financial markets have been volatile since the start of this week. (The G20 finance leaders) agreed to continue monitoring market developments with a sense of urgency, given heightened market volatility." Takeuchi added, "Depending on developments, the government may need to consider what more it can do with cooperation from the Bank of Japan."

Malpass: First-Half Global Growth Likely To Suffer Blow From Coronavirus.

Bloomberg (2/25, Kearns, 4.73M) reports World Bank President David Malpass "said global economic growth in the first half of 2020 is likely to fall short of the 2.5% pace that the lender has forecast for the full year." Malpass said Tuesday in Washington, "The good news is that was slightly higher than what the growth rate was in 2019, but the bad news is, for one, the first half is probably to be slower than that given the coronavirus. But also, even at 2.5% real growth for the world, that simply is not enough growth to really lift developing countries." Malpass said the coronavirus is the number one topic at the Bank, adding, "We are looking at ways to respond or to make available resources for developing countries. We're also very closely coordinating with WHO, the World Health Organization, which is on the front line of the virus, and we have a range of tools that the bank can use as the pandemic spreads."

US Airstrike Kills Al Shabaab Leader Tied To Attack On Kenyan Base.

Citing the Pentagon, Reuters (2/25) reports that a US airstrike over the weekend in Somalia "killed an Islamist militant who helped plan last month's attack on a military base in Kenya in which three Americans died." Africa Command (AFRICOM) said in a statement the Saturday strike killed a senior member of al Shabaab "who was in charge of planning and directing terrorist operations on the Kenya border region, including the recent attack on Manda Bay" and his wife, who was described as a "witting and active" al Shabaab member. On January 5, "three Americans – one US military service member and two contractors – were killed during an attack by al Shabaab on the Manda Bay military base in Kenya used by both US and Kenyan forces."

Escalation Of Yemeni Civil War Could Provide Opening For AQAP Resurgence.

The Washington Post (2/25, Raghavan, 14.2M) reports that last month's death of the leader of al Qaeda's Yemen branch in a US drone strike "has dealt a blow to the group's ambitions, but Western officials and analysts warn that a recent escalation in Yemen's conflict could allow it to regroup to some extent." Over the past 10 years, "al-Qaeda has bounced back a few times, regaining territory and recruits by taking advantage of security vacuums arising from the conflicts among Yemen's myriad warring factions." Now, after "a relative lull in the war, fighting is intensifying in at least four provinces, including in or near areas where both al-Qaeda and the Islamic State have a presence or support from local tribes."

Army Judge Proposes 2022 Trial In USS Cole Bombing Case.

The New York Times (2/25, Rosenberg, 18.61M) reports Army judge Col. Lanny J. Acosta Jr. yesterday proposed a February 2022 trial date for the death penalty tribunal of a Saudi man who is accused of orchestrating the bombing of the USS Cole that killed 17 sailors off Yemen two decades ago. Acosta included the date "in a four-page order that set out a series of deadlines for pretrial litigation over the next two years" in the case against Abd al-Rahim al-Nashiri.

Iranian Security Official Accuses US Of Withholding Information About Missile Attack In Iraq.

Reuters (2/25, Dehghanpisheh) reports, "Ali Shamkhani, secretary of Iran's top national security body, accused the White House on Tuesday of withholding information about an Iranian missile attack on a U.S. base in Iraq." Shamkhani "did not give details in a tweet reacting to accusations" by Secretary of State Pompeo on Tuesday "that the Islamic Republic may have withheld information about the spread of coronavirus inside the country." The US military "has said that more than 100 U.S. soldiers were diagnosed with traumatic brain injury from the Iranian attack while Iranian military officials have said the missile strike killed several American soldiers."

Ebadi: Iranian Revolution Was A Mistake.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M), Shirin Ebadi, a lawyer, human rights activist, and recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize, writes that her generation made a "mistake" 41 years ago by supporting Ruhollah Khomeini in overthrowing the Pahlavi dynasty. Ebadi writes that "with the benefit of hindsight, most of us can agree that 1979 was not the time for a revolution. What we needed most was reform, not the total destruction of the system." The mistake has rippled down to today, she writes, as "economic mismanagement and political repression have created a profound sense of hopelessness among the younger generation." She asks for forgiveness from the younger generation, and wonders why her generation was "unable to create a better society for our children to be born into."

Pompeo: Informal Truce With Taliban "Working Perfectly" So Far.

The Washington Times (2/25, Taylor, 492K) reports Secretary of State Pompeo expressed "cautious optimism Tuesday that a formal truce with the Taliban will be signed this weekend," saying a temporary truce with the militants is "working perfectly," but also warning the path ahead will be "arduous" and "complex." To Reuters, Pompeo's remarks at a State Department news conference "came amid mounting uncertainty over what will occur after a more lasting truce gets inked." The Secretary, however, "said he's confident the next step of intra-Afghan talks between the Taliban, the US-backed Afghan government and a wide spectrum of other Afghans will occur. But he steered clear of commenting on political disarray currently gripping Kabul."

USA Today: Trump, Khalilzad Deserve Credit For Peace Progress. USA Today (2/25, 10.31M) editorializes that "if the reduction [in violence] continues through this week, the United States and the Taliban are to sign an agreement Saturday that could be a first step toward ending the war" in Afghanistan. USA Today says President Trump and his chief negotiator, special envoy Zalmay Khalilzad, "deserve credit for bringing the process this far. It has been a long time coming." It argues that "a glimmer of peace is finally coming to light from Afghanistan, though much rests on a tangled process that lies ahead."

US Says Afghan Election Results Should Be Reviewed.

The Washington Free Beacon (2/25, Kredo, 78K) reports that more than a week after Afghanistan announced the results of its presidential election, the US is "demanding a review of the outcome in comments likely to complicate the president's efforts to foster a peace accord with the Taliban." The Administration, "which had remained quiet since the results were first announced, said on Tuesday that the results should be reviewed." In a statement the Free Beacon says is "likely to complicate efforts...to ink a landmark peace accord with the Taliban," State Department spokeswoman Morgan Ortagus said, "Concerns have been raised about the election process. We expect these concerns to be handled in accordance with constitutional and legal procedures."

Governments Increasingly Ordering Internet Shutdowns To Quell Dissent.

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, A1, Solomon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that governments around the world are cutting off access to the Internet with increasing frequency and scant transparency. Human-rights advocates claim the shutdowns are being ordered to silence critics and quash protests.

Chinese Court Sentences Swedish Bookseller To 10 Years In Prison.

The AP (2/25, Wang, Olsen) reports that "a court in eastern China has sentenced a Swedish seller of books that took a skeptical look at the ruling Communist Party to 10 years in prison for 'illegally providing intelligence overseas.'" Gui Minhai "first disappeared in 2015, when he was believed to have been abducted by Chinese agents from his seaside home in Thailand. He and four others who worked for the same Hong Kong publishing company all went missing at around the same time, only to turn up months later in police custody in mainland China." The AP adds that "for years, Gui sold gossipy books about Chinese leaders in...Hong Kong."

According to the New York Times (2/25, Ramzy, 18.61M), Gui's case "angered residents in Hong Kong who saw his detention by the Chinese authorities as a stark sign of the erosion of civil liberties under Beijing's growing influence." The Times adds that "the outcry over China's reach took on international dimensions because Mr. Gui was secretly spirited to China from Thailand and held in custody for two years. Then, in 2018, he disappeared again in dramatic fashion when he was snatched from a train bound for Beijing while accompanied by two Swedish diplomats."

The Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) editorializes that the sentencing of Gui to 10 years in prison is another example of Chinese leader Xi Jinping's "arrogant disregard for the rule of law not only inside China but also in other countries." In the Post's view, "Gui's case is a particularly shocking example of the Xi regime's attempts to intervene in other countries, a campaign that has included pressuring critical academics at Western universities, demanding that U.S. airlines and the National Basketball Association toe Beijing's line on Hong Kong and pulling the visas of three China-based Wall Street Journal reporters because of a headline on an opinion column."

Macron Pension Plan That Sparked Protests Set To Become Law.

The New York Times (2/25, Nossiter, 18.61M) reports that "the weeks of strikes that began in December and stretched into the New Year against" French President Emmanuel Macron's "plans to overhaul the French pension system have fizzled, even if the anger has not." According to the Times, Macron is "poised to win his latest battle," and "his government is hoping that his plan to eliminate France's 42 different pension schemes and merge them into one will pass the lower house of Parliament, where his party has a lock, by mid-March." The Times adds that "would change France deeply, like his other programs."

Mubarak Dies At Age 91.

The AP (2/25, Magdy) reports "Hosni Mubarak, the Egyptian leader who was the autocratic face of stability in the Middle East for nearly 30 years before being forced from power in an Arab Spring uprising, died Tuesday, state-run TV announced. He was 91." Mubarak "was a stalwart US ally, a bulwark against Islamic militancy and guardian of Egypt's peace with Israel." According to State TV, he "died at a Cairo hospital where he had undergone an unspecified surgery." In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) argues that neither President Trump "nor Egypt's new strongman has learned the lessons of Mr. Mubarak's failure," as "the Arab world's most populous nation continues to lag behind other developing nations," and "sadly, the repressive, stagnant regime that Mr. Mubarak created has become Egypt's standard."

Calabria Discusses State Of GSE Reform Efforts, Goals Going Forward, And Timeline Predictions.

FHFA Director Mark Calabria was interviewed on Bloomberg TV Bloomberg Markets: Balance of Power (2/25, 4.73M), discussing the state of the GSEs' conservatorship, his goals as regulator, limitations on what actions the FHFA can take, and a potential timeline for the GSEs' exit. Calabria said that the GSEs' "primary role" is to provide "countercyclical liquidity" to the market. While Calabria wants to promote homeownership to the greatest extent possible, he stressed that the GSEs are today focused on promoting "sustainable" homeownership. Calabria said that there are certain actions that require action from congress; for example, he has requested that congress grant him the ability to charter more competitors to the GSEs (which he says should reduce systemic risk). Calabria reiterated that the timeline for the GSEs' release is "process"-driven, not "calendar"-driven. Raising capital is crucial, and the GSEs are currently not "in the position" for a big capital raise. Calabria said that the necessary steps on the path to the GSEs' release from conservatorship will likely take at least a year to complete, as the GSEs and the FHFA need to prepare themselves for ushering in and operating in a post-conservatorship landscape.

On its website, Bloomberg (2/25, 4.73M) posted an eight-minute segment of its interview with FHFA Director Calabria. At [4:19], Calabria said that "only Congress could come in" and give the GSEs an explicit government guarantee, so "we are calling for Congress to come in and define the situation." Calabria believes that "any guarantee should be on MBS only." Calabria said that FHFA "will be re-proposing a capital rule soon" in "coming months," but "at this point, we don't have a number." Calabria said that the GSEs also need to be "well-run institutions," adding that there are "a number of supervisory matters that they need to fix." At [6:15], Calabria said that preparing the market for such a large public offering could involve multiple tranches, multiple equity raises, and launching both equity raises either at once or sequentially. Asked if he believes it is more likely that the GSEs will "go sequentially," Calabria responded, "I think so." The FHFA's financial advisor, Houlihan Lokey, is currently helping the agency explore these options. At [7:19], Calabria discusses the Treasury Department's stake in the GSEs.

In an article recapping the interview, Bloomberg (2/25, Dexheimer, 4.73M) reports that Calabria said, "The shareholders will be heavily diluted when we raise capital. So at the end of the day I am not focused on whether there's a windfall, because I don't think there's really going to be that big of a windfall." He noted that the shareholders haven't had a dividend in more than a decade.

Calabria Talks About Pre-Crisis G-Fee Deals.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (2/25, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "On Monday, Federal Housing Finance Agency Director Mark Calabria let his hair down a bit on the topic of guarantee fee deals (pre-crisis) between Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac and their mortgage banking customers." Speaking at a CUNA conference, Calabria said, "You may recall that, when I came in the door, we had limitations on Fannie's and Freddie's pricing strategies. For those of you who remember, before the conservatorship it wasn't unusual when the Countrywides of the world (I don't mean to speak ill of the dead) would come into Fannie or Freddie and pay something like 12 basis points, and a credit union would come in and pay 20 bps, in terms of the guarantee fee. ... Fannie and Freddie, pre-crisis, drove the consolidation in origination business in a way that I believe disadvantaged small players."

Bove: Government Is Making GSEs Less Competitive, Disincentivizing Investment.

Value Walk (2/25, 1K) reports that Odeon Capital analyst Dick Bove "believes the government is...making the government-sponsored enterprises less attractive to investors." In a note to clients this week, Bove "responded to the questions that were asked by a group of Democratic senators and answered by the Treasury Department and Federal Housing Finance Agency." Bove said that the answers were "broad and ill-defined," promising "nothing." Bove said that some of the responses "clearly indicate the government's intent to reduce the profit and growth capacity of these two companies."

Role Of GSEs In Multifamily Sector Evolves As They Move Toward Privatization.

In a piece accessible to subscribers, GlobeSt (2/25, Dolce) reports, "Recently the Federal Housing Finance Agency created a new group with the goal of ensuring that both Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac foster a competitive, liquid and resilient multifamily market." During the MBA CREF conference, FHFA associate director for multifamily Siobhan Kelly said, "By creating a new group, it speaks to a commitment and dedication to focus on affordability in multifamily." According to GlobeSt., although HUD provides a significant amount of capital in the multifamily sector, the GSEs "remain the industry heavyweights. Their mission, though, is evolving as they inch towards privatization." Freddie Mac EVP Deborah Jenkins, head of the GSE's multifamily division, reportedly "noted that this is the first quarter the GSEs have had the 5 cap." Jenkins said, "In looking at the next steps, there is actually progress happening now on the exit train. What we will be looking at is how those steps actually impact the market. Also, we will look at what will the cap be for 2021."

CBRE Arranges Freddie Mac Acquisition Financing For Denver-Area, Garden-Style Community.

New Kerala \(IND\) (2/25) reports, "Orion Real Estate Partners (Orion) announced today that it has closed on the acquisition of Continental Court Apartments, a garden-style apartment community in Denver, Colorado. ... This is Orion's sixth acquisition in the Denver MSA with a continued favorable long-term outlook on both job and population growth outpacing national averages. CBRE Multifamily Capital provided an attractive 10-year floating rate acquisition loan through Freddie Mac."

HUD Announces Changes To FHA's CWCOT Program.

DS News (2/25, Albanese) reports that on Tuesday, HUD "announced changes" to the FHA's Claims Without Conveyance of Title (CWCOT) program. According to DS News, "Changes proposed by HUD include: Providing for a second appraisal once a property becomes vacant; Expanding the number of states for marketing services and auction services into the judicial states; Modifying the 'haircut' structure in a manner more specific to the value of that property; and changes to reimbursement for property preservation and eviction expenses." Dror Oppenheimer, Senior Advisor to the Assistant Secretary for Housing-Federal Housing Commissioner at HUD, commented, "We think these changes will improve the take-up rate of the CWCOT program, which has already gone from 25% to 75%. We think this is going to expand way beyond the 75% and provide real benefit for servicers and the FHA. We look forward to hearing back from the industry." National Mortgage News (2/25, Sinnock) reports that Oppenheimer said that HUD would "like the feedback in two weeks."

US Mortgage Rates Hit Eight-Year Lows.

CBS News (2/25, Brooks, 3.68M) reports US mortgage rates have fallen to eight-year lows, "a boon for house-hunters and homeowners looking to refinance." The 30-year mortgage charges 3.34 percent, while 15-year mortgages sit at 3.09 percent, down over a full point in just a year.

Non-Agency Jumbo Production Rose Significantly In 2019, Despite Slowing In Q4.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (2/25, Ivey, Subscription Publication) says that non-agency jumbo mortgage originations "increased significantly in 2019, though growth slowed in the final three months of the year." According to IMF, "An estimated $413.0 billion of jumbos were produced in 2019, up 47.0% on an annual basis and the highest yearly volume in the sector since 2006 ($480 billion). The increase looks to be 'a rising tide lifts all boats' scenario, as total first-lien mortgage originations increased by 45.7%." Non-agency jumbos made up 17.4% of total mortgage originations in 2019, "up slightly from a 17.2% share the year prior." However, "the estimated $122.0 billion of fourth-quarter production was only a 1.7% increase on a sequential basis."

Case-Shiller HPI: Home Prices Rose An Annual 3.8% In December.

The AP (2/25) reports that home prices "rose at a faster pace in December as mortgage rates remained low and a falling supply of available properties set off bidding wars between buyers." According to a PRNewswire (2/25) press release, "The S&P CoreLogic Case-Shiller U.S. National Home Price NSA Index, covering all nine U.S. census divisions, reported a 3.8% annual gain in December, up from 3.5% in the previous month. The 10-City Composite annual increase came in at 2.4%, up from 2.0% in the previous month. The 20-City Composite posted a 2.9% year-over-year gain, up from 2.5% in the previous month." According to MarketWatch, "Phoenix, Charlotte and Tampa reported the highest year-over-year gains among the 20 cities."

HousingWire (2/25, 23K) reports S&P Dow Jones Indices managing director Craig Lazzara said, "At the national level, home prices are 59% above the trough reached in February 2012, and 15% above their pre-financial crisis peak. At a regional level, Phoenix retains the top spot for the seventh consecutive month, with a gain of 6.5% for December. Charlotte and Tampa rose by 5.3% and 5.2% respectively, leading the Southeast region. The Southeast has led all regions for the past year. ... As was the case last month, after a long period of decelerating price increases, the National, 10-City, and 20-City Composites all rose at a faster rate in December than they had done in November. It is, of course, too soon to say whether this marks an end to the deceleration or is merely a pause in the longer-term trend."

FHFA House Price Index Rises 0.6% In December From November.

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Parker, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the pace of home price appreciation accelerated at the end of 2019, according to the FHFA's House Price Index and the Case-Shiller Home Price Index. The FHFA's index showed that prices rose 5.1% annually in Q4, and also rose in every state. Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (2/25, Dmitrieva, 4.73M) reports that FHFA's index showed that "home prices climbed 0.6% in December from the previous month, the most since September, and were up 1.3% in the fourth quarter."

On its website, Bloomberg (2/25, 4.73M) posted an eight-minute video segment of its interview with FHFA Director Calabria, which began with Calabria's comments on the FHFA House Price Index. Asked if he believes we are near the "top of a housing cycle," Calabria said, "We continue to see positive appreciation, but it's also important" to consider that "the rate of increases started to slow over the last couple of years, so I think we're still going to have another couple of years of positive appreciation, but it's going to be a little bit lower."

HousingWire (2/25, Lloyd, 23K) reports that FHFA Deputy Director for Research and Statistics Lynn Fisher said, "Falling interest rates and steady job growth renewed housing demand in 2019 and may have arrested the recent deceleration in home prices that began in 2018." Fisher also said that this was the first time in two years that the index did not show a slowdown in home-price gains. National Mortgage Professional (2/25, Hall) reports that Fisher said, "The revised measure of home price growth in the third quarter was also 5.1 percent. Prices in the Mountain region had the highest gains, posting a 6.7 annual growth rate in the fourth quarter." According to NMP, "The FHFA's seasonally adjusted monthly index for December was up 0.6 percent from November. House prices rose in 97 of the top 100 largest metropolitan areas over the last four quarters and have risen for 34 consecutive quarters, or since September 2011."

M Report (2/25, Albanese) says that state-by-state, "Idaho led the nation with an annual home-price appreciation of 12%. Utah came in at second at 8.1%, Arizona saw price growth rise at 7%, Washington reported 7% growth, and Indiana had 5% growth. Connecticut's annual price growth of 1.9% was the smallest in the nation." Looking at cities, Realtor (2/25, 25.12M) reports that the FHFA's index showed that Boise, Idaho had the nation's highest annual price growth, with a gain of 12.7%. MarketWatch (2/25, Passy, 1.67M) reports that Boise was "followed by Colorado Springs, Colorado (11%) and Orlando, Florida (10%)." National Mortgage News (2/25, Centopani) reports, "Values in Albany, N.Y., actually lost 1.75%, followed by a 25-basis-point decline in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and a 14-basis-point drop-off in Bridgeport, Connecticut."

Mortgage News Daily (2/25, Swanson) reports, "FHFA reports prices based on purchase mortgages acquired by the GSEs Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. The HPI was benchmarked to 100 in January 1991. The November 2019 reading was 283.0." According to Seeking Alpha (2/25, Kiesche, 512K), FHFA's House Price Index swept pass consensus predictions, rising 0.6% compared to an expected 0.3% and doubling the prior reading of +0.3%. The +5.2% Y/Y growth exceeded the +4.9% previous (unrevised) reading.

NAR Data Shows That Homeownership Is Less Attainable For People Of Color.

SFGate \(CA\) (2/25, 2.13M) reports, "Achieving the American dream of homeownership has become a benchmark that many folks use to measure their success. But it isn't as attainable for many people of color – particularly black Americans – and that's better or worse depending on where they live." NAR recently found that "just 8% of black residents living in Montana and North Dakota owned their home." Nationwide, "black Americans had the lowest homeownership rate of any group, at just 44% in the last quarter of 2019, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. And that percentage has been steadily rising over the past few years. But it's significantly lower than that for white Americans, who had the highest homeownership rate, at 73.7%. And it's less than that of other minorities, including Asian Americans, at 57.6%, and Hispanic Americans, at 48.1%."

Shares Of Mobile Home Park Companies Have Soared Since Housing Crash.

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Dezember, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports shares of trailer-park companies have soared since last decade's housing crash, vastly outpacing the general market. Big mobile-home park owners like Sun Communities and Equity LifeStyle Properties have benefited from rising housing prices, a low-risk business model, and local regulations that limit the construction of new parks.

Dollar Remains Little Changed.

Reuters (2/26, Sano) reports, "The dollar nursed losses on Wednesday as rising expectations of a US rate cut and warnings from US health officials about the spread of the coronavirus called into question the perceived strength of US financial assets." The dollar index against a basket of six major currencies "stood at 99.081, little changed on the day but down 0.9% from a near three-year high of 99.915 hit last week." Against the yen, the dollar "traded at 110.37 yen, gaining 0.1% in Asia." Meanwhile, the euro "fetched $1.08815, extending its rebound since it hit near three-year low of $1.0778 on Thursday."

Gold Edges Higher.

Reuters (2/25, Singh) reports, "Gold edged higher on Wednesday after a sharp drop in the previous session, as investors sought safe haven assets following a warning from the United States over the potential domestic spread of the coronavirus." Spot gold "was up 0.3% at $1,639.74 per ounce, as of 0340 GMT," while US gold futures "eased 0.5% to $1,641.80."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (2/26, Obayashi) reports, "Crude prices inched higher on Wednesday as investors covered short positions after three sessions of losses and eyed potential supply cuts, even as fears of a coronavirus pandemic deepened." Ex-Microsoft Employee Convicted In Digital Currency Scheme.

The AP (2/25) reports, "A jury on Tuesday convicted a former Microsoft worker of wire fraud and other charges in what prosecutors described as a scheme to steal $10 million in digital currency." Federal prosecutors in Seattle "said Ukrainian citizen Volodymyr Kvashuk, 25, helped test Microsoft's online retail sales platform. He was accused of stealing digital currency such as gift cards that could be redeemed for Microsoft products, then reselling them on the Internet and using the proceeds to buy a $160,000 Tesla vehicle and a $1.7 million lakefront home. Kvashuk faces up to 20 years in prison when he is sentenced in June."

Lack Of Transparency Over Florida's Efforts To Protect Election Security Threatens To Sow Mistrust.

The Tallahassee \(FL\) Democrat (2/25, Schweers, 180K) reports, "Florida's March 17 presidential primary will be a referendum on state and county elections officials' efforts to build a wall to stop hacking attempts that are constantly bombarding the system." According to the article, "at a time when 59 percent of the public doesn't trust the election process, state elections officials have thrown a veil of secrecy over that work, refusing to disclose details about the weaknesses detected in their systems and whether they've been fixed." But such efforts "threaten to make a casualty out of transparency in the Sunshine State."

RSA Conference Will Focus On Chinese Hackers, CISA Role.

Politico (2/25, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that today is the "real kickoff of the RSA Conference, with the meat of it going through Thursday and tailing off on Friday." The president of RSA (the company, not the conference), Rohit Ghai, "gets things started with a speech on the 'human element' of cyber, entitled 'Reality Check: The Story of Cybersecurity.'" Panels on Tuesday featured, among others: "John Demers, assistant attorney general for national security; William Evanina, director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center; Thomas Murphy, director of the Protecting Critical Technology Task Force at the Office of the Secretary of Defense; Robert Kolasky, assistant director of the DHS National Risk Management Center; and James Murphy, private sector lead at CISA."

CISA Chief Krebs Discusses Cybersecurity Threats To Voter Registration Databases Ahead Of The Election.

Business Insider (2/25, Elder, 3.67M) reports the head of cybersecurity for DHS "told the RSA Security conference Tuesday in San Francisco. Ransomware or other attacks on voter registration databases are a key election security concern." Christopher Krebs, director of CISA at DHS "said the DHS is looking at 'the areas where information is centralized.'" Krebs "noted that the decryption 'keys' often don't work, and victims are better off not paying." He "said his department is working with state and local law enforcement and said, 'We can figure this out together.'" Krebs "aid that the risk to voter registration databases is compounded by the technical challenge for the government of protecting 8,800 election jurisdictions across the country." Krebs "said his department is also looking to warn the public about fake news on social media and elsewhere by determining and explaining 'this is what they're going to try to say.'"

US Assistant Attorney Demers Discusses US-China Cybersecurity Relationship.

US Transportation Command Chief Says Cyber Is The Most "Consequential" Issue Facing Sector.

Defense News (2/25, Pomerleau, 21K) reports cybersecurity remains a "critical concern for US Transportation Command, the organization's leader said Feb. 25." Gen. Stephen Lyons, commander of Transportation Command, told the Senate Armed Services Committee, "The way I would characterize the cyber vulnerabilities is it's probably the most consequential to the mobility enterprise. We've included contract language in all of our contracts. We check compliance, we have a self-reporting mechanism. We believe that their level of cyber hygiene is increased significantly from this level of effort." Given the heavy reliance "on hundreds of commercial companies to move people and resources across the globe, cyber has long been a major concern for Transportation Command leaders." Lyons "said he doesn't have that authority. DOD leaders have become increasingly concerned that adversaries are targeting the defense industrial base for critical information."

Trump Official Asserts Huawei Is Like "The Mafia" As White House Combats Company's Role In 5G.

CNBC (2/25, Javers, 3.62M) reports a senior Trump Administration official "denounced the Chinese telecom as 'the Mafia' and suggested it could spy on the British Parliament as the White House ratcheted up its war of words against Huawei." In comments to CNBC, the official "denounced Huawei as an 'utterly nonmarket player' that wants to wipe out competition through dumping, theft and racketeering." The official, who "declined to be named due to the sensitivity of the subject," said, "How do we deal with that when the largest player is in essence the Mafia? What do you do? It means there is some kind of a role for government." The official declined "to specify how the US government will respond."

Trump Administration Discussing Possible Renewal Of Chevron License In Venezuela.

Reuters (2/25, Pamuk, Gardner) reports the Trump Administration's Special Representative for Venezuela Elliott Abrams said the US is engaged in discussions regarding a renewal of Chevron Corp's license for operations in Venezuela. Abrams "said in an interview on Monday that he would not talk about specific future activities on Chevron," adding there are "conversations taking place and at the appropriate moment OFAC will say whatever it needs to say." The Trump Administration "has been divided on whether to revoke California-based Chevron's ability to continue operations in Venezuela, home to the world's largest oil reserves and where the company has been active for about 100 years. It has renewed the license for Chevron and four other U.S.-based companies several times and the current one expires on April 22."

Federal Reserve

Clarida, Kaplan Say "Too Soon" To Make Monetary Policy Decision In Response To Virus Outbreak.

Reuters (2/25, Dunsmuir) reports Fed Vice Chair Richard Clarida on Tuesday echoed Kaplan, saying, "It is really just too soon to tell the extent to which this does impact global activity and the extent to which it might impact the U.S. economic activity and whether or not it will be material and persistent. ... What we've said is that we're really going to be looking at all the data on this." The New York (NY) Times (2/25, Smialek, Rappeport, 18.61M) and The Financial Times (2/25, Greeley, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

Reuters (2/25, Chatterjee) reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan "said on Tuesday events are still too fluid around the coronavirus outbreak to say the U.S. central bank needs to lower short-term rates," adding that "it's too soon to make a judgment about how it might relate to monetary policy." The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Fed Meeting Minutes Show All 12 Regional Banks Want To Keep Rates For Emergency Loans Unchanged.

Reuters (2/25, Dunsmuir) reports minutes from the Fed's discussion Tuesday show all 12 regional Fed banks wanted to keep the rate commercial banks pay for emergency loans unchanged. The Fed "plans to keep rates on hold this year, barring a 'material' change in the US economic outlook." The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and Barron's (2/25, Beilfuss, 1.07M) also report.

Pivotal GOP Senators Unconvinced By Trump's Pick Of Judy Shelton For Fed Board.

American Banker (2/25, Reosti, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports three key Republicans on the Senate Banking Committee – Sens. John Kennedy (R-LA), Richard Shelby (R-AL), and Pat Toomey (R-PA) – "said Monday that they remain undecided on President Donald Trump's nomination of Judy Shelton to the Federal Reserve Board." Kennedy "said he's still reviewing Shelton's work, trying to determine where she stands on policy issues regarding the Fed." He added that her position has "changed pretty dramatically." A single no vote from the panel could block Shelton's nomination if Democrats unite in opposition as well, but a vote on her nomination hasn't yet been scheduled.

NY Fed Accepts $49.5B In Overnight Repo Bids.

CFPB's Kraninger Promises Qualified Mortgage, Remittances Policy Revisions No Later Than May.

American Banker (2/25, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Director Kathy Kraninger said Tuesday the bureau will issue proposed change to the "qualified mortgage" rule and a revised policy on remittances no later than May. Kraninger "said both steps will come as part of an ongoing review of agency rules, and show her 'commitment under the law to be effective and evidence based' to provide clarity to stakeholders." The qualified mortgage regulation requires lenders to verify ability to repay and includes protections for a certain category of loans with safe features including a debt-to-income limit of 43 percent.

CFPB May Allow Collectors To Contact Consumers Over Debt Past Its Statute Of Limitations.

The Washington Post (2/25, Merle, 14.2M) reports the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau "could spark a fight about what should happen to consumers' old debt." According to the Post, "Debt collectors lose the right in many states to sue consumers after their debt reaches their statute of limitations, typically three or more years." However, under the bureau's new proposal, "debt collectors could continue to try to collect on those old debts but would have to tell consumers upfront they are outside their statutes of limitations and the consumer can no longer be sued to recoup the money." The Post says "the proposal is part of a broad revision of debt collection rules the CFPB implemented last year that include allowing debt collectors to call consumers seven times a week and to send unlimited texts and emails."

Industry Observers Question Effect Of NCUA's New Sub Debt Rule.

American Banker (2/26, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "While the National Credit Union Administration is considering letting hundreds of additional credit unions issue subordinated debt, there is a growing belief among industry observers that investor appetite might be limited." Peter Duffy, managing director at Piper Sandler, commented, "There's a real question about what the demand is going to be for credit union issuance and what the cost is going to be." Since January 1996, "only low-income credit unions have been allowed to access secondary capital," but the NCUA's new rule would allow complex credit unions to raise secondary capital, as well. However, "very few appear eager to take advantage of the opportunity," in part, because the proposed regulation "doesn't expand the number of credit unions able to include subordinated debt in net worth calculations, said Dennis Dollar, principal partner at Dollar Associates."

Otting Discusses CRA Reform, Wells Fargo, Health Of Banking Industry.

Yahoo! Finance (2/25) reports in video its interview with Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting about a range of topics, including his agency's proposal to reform the Community Reinvestment Act, supervision of big banks such as Wells Fargo, and the health of the industry. Otting outlined the four key areas of the CRA plan and said the OCC believes its proposal would add $100 billion to what goes into communities annually via CRA activities. Otting confirmed that he has talked "with most of the major bank CEOs," saying, "I think people are really pleased and supportive that we've took this initiative on." Of the banking industry, Otting said it is safe and secure, and banks have the best capitalization and liquidity we've ever seen.

OCC To Host Risk, Compliance Workshops This Spring.

Compliance Week (2/26, Orie, 75K) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency is hosting two separate workshops this spring. "Risk Governance: Improving Director Effectiveness," a one-day workshop designed for community banks and federal savings associations to enhance their understanding of the OCC's risk-based supervision, will take place March 17 in Washington, D.C. "Compliance Risk: What Directors Need to Know," on March 18, is meant to help banks "understand the critical elements of an effective compliance risk management program."

Experts Say Wells Fargo And Its Former Execs Are Not "Out Of The Woods" Yet.

Reuters (2/25, Prentice) reports that despite Wells Fargo's $3 billion settlement with the US Department of Justice and Securities and Exchange Commission last week over abusive sales practices, "the bank and its former executives are not out of the woods yet, legal and regulatory experts said." Last week's deal did not address issues with the bank's "mortgage and auto-lending businesses, where customers were enrolled in unwanted products that charged fees. Nor does it preclude potential charges against individuals who were in charge at the time of sales abuses." Former CEO John Stumpf and ex-head of community banking Carrie Tolstedt "were among eight former Wells Fargo executives sanctioned by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency" last month. US authorities have also been investigating individuals, according to sources.

Radius Bank CEO Talks About Regulatory Response To LendingClub Acquisition.

Bank Director Magazine (2/26, Buker, 75K) reports on its interview with Radius Bancorp President and CEO Mike Butler about the bank's acquisition by LendingClub. Asked about regulators' response to the deal, Butler said, "LendingClub has been in the de novo application process for over a year, predominantly with the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency. ... [R]egulators were positioned to issue a de novo charter to LendingClub, but LendingClub felt...that an acquisition was a faster path." In Radius' discussions "about the opportunity for a fintech to buy a bank," Butler continued, "we're extremely confident that the Federal Reserve and the OCC – and both of their offices of innovation – recognize the inevitability of this type of event and want to participate in helping the future and being a part of it, rather than not being part of it." As such, he added, "we're excited and optimistic about how the process will go."

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"Trump Says America Is 'Full.' Mick Mulvaney Lets Slip That Isn't True." In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) says Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney "let slip" a few days ago in England "that the United States needs more immigrants, lest severe labor shortages and anemic birth rates sap economic growth." The Post says Mulvaney's comments are "in line with the views of most economists and employers in an array of worker-hungry industries, not to mention Republican orthodoxy until Donald Trump, having weaponized nativism, devoured the GOP." The Post argues that "it makes sense to recalibrate immigration policy to meet the labor market's future demands, including by admitting more high-skilled workers," and "it's self-defeating to use immigration as a political whipping boy, which will only put Mr. Mulvaney's self-evident prescription further out of reach."

"China Kidnapped Gui Minhai. Now It Wants To Lock Him Away." The Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) editorializes that the sentencing of a book publisher to 10 years in prison is another example of Chinese leader Xi Jinping's "arrogant disregard for the rule of law not only inside China but also in other countries." In October 2015, Gui Minhai, a Swedish citizen, was "living in Hong Kong and preparing to publish an uncensored biography of Mr. Xi when he was abducted from his vacation home in Thailand and spirited into China." In the Post's view, "Gui's case is a particularly shocking example of the Xi regime's attempts to intervene in other countries, a campaign that has included pressuring critical academics at Western universities, demanding that U.S. airlines and the National Basketball Association toe Beijing's line on Hong Kong and pulling the visas of three China-based Wall Street Journal reporters because of a headline on an opinion column."

"Egypt Hasn't Learned From Hosni Mubarak's Failure." In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) argues neither President Trump "nor Egypt's new strongman has learned the lessons of Mr. Mubarak's failure," as "the Arab world's most populous nation continues to lag behind other developing nations" and "sadly, the repressive, stagnant regime that Mr. Mubarak created has become Egypt's standard."

“Bernie Sanders’s Big-Spending Promises Aren’t A Sign Of Courage.” A Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) editorial criticizes Sen. Bernie Sanders’ (I-VT) spending promises. The Post argues that “it takes no courage to promise impossible levels of new spending and programs that could not work as advertised. It takes courage to level with voters.” As an example, the Post cites Sanders’ “plan to enable all Americans to get child care,” which would cost twice as much as similar plans from Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and former South Bend, Indiana Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D). Sanders “would make government-sponsored child care free to all,” while Warren and Buttigieg “would ask families that could afford to pay something to do so.” The Post argues, “True progressives recognize that federal money is scarce and must be spent carefully, with the poorest first in line.” Sanders “presents himself as the only one who really cares about issues such as health care, climate change and pre-K,” the Post says other Democrats “are treating these issues with the seriousness they deserve.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Spending Virus.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Senate Minority Leader Schumer’s $3.1 billion figure for coronavirus response is arbitrary and that he and other Democrats have not backed up their calls for more funding with specifics.

“The Federal Judges’ Mystery Meeting.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that media reports last week of “an emergency meeting” called by Federal Judges Association in the wake of President Trump’s criticisms over the sentencing of Roger Stone raises questions about judicial impartiality. The Journal urges the group to give further clarification into the purpose of the planned meeting allay concerns about the independence of the judiciary.

“March Primary Madness.” The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Democratic efforts to expand early voting could result in mayhem on Election Day, delaying results, increasing the risk of mistakes and misbehavior, and undermining the legitimacy of the process. The Journal points out early voting means leads on Election Day could disappear in the following days as absentee ballots roll in, and voters may be casting ballots for candidates months before new developments shift the political landscape.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "All right, the South Carolina Democratic presidential debate has just wrapped up, and guys, it was a little crazy. ... It was wild tonight. I haven't seen white people go at each other that hard since khakis were on sale at Banana Republic."

Trevor Noah: "This debate is the last one before the South Carolina primary this weekend and, remember, a few days after that is Super Tuesday. That's when 15 states all hold their primaries at the same time. And they do it at the same time because they got a deal on Groupon."

Trevor Noah: "Michael Bloomberg was so bad at the first debate he got slammed by everyone – CNN, NBC, Fox, even 'The Bachelor.'"

Trevor Noah: "Bernie didn't give [Bloomberg] a chance. Right, he doesn't mess around. If Bernie was a boxer, he would hit you in the locker room before the fight."

Trevor Noah: "Now, if Bernie Sanders was the...appetizer, Elizabeth Warren brought the main course. ... Man, when it comes to Bloomberg, Elizabeth Warren is relentless. She destroyed him in the first debate, and she came after him tonight. I bet when he got in his car, she popped up in the back seat like, 'Oh, and another thing!'"

Trevor Noah: [On Pete Buttigieg promoting his website for campaign contributions during the debate] "You see, folks, that's what happens when you let a teenager join the debate. They stop talking about policy, and they ask you to raise their allowance."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This is debate number ten for the Democrats, and one of the big questions going into this is how Mike Bloomberg would respond to his poor showing at the debate last week. So far, Bloomberg spent about $500 million to get smacked around by Elizabeth Warren on television."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Bernie has a lot of plans, expensive plans. He's no dummy. Every time one of the other candidates asks who's going to pay for these programs, he points to Bloomberg and says, 'Him!'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Meanwhile, President Trump is on his way back home from India where he was well buttered. This is going to surprise you. He believes the reception he got was like nothing the Indian people had ever given before. ... Of course he got a big reception. They love cows in India."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We did learn some interesting things about Donald Trump's health today as the former White House doctor Ronny Jackson told the New York Times that he regrets not being able to do more to improve the President's diet and exercise. This is a real quote from a man who was the actual doctor for the actual President of the United States, all right? 'We were working on his diet. We were making the ice cream less accessible. We were putting cauliflower into the mashed potatoes.' That is what we do with our 5-year-old at home."

Stephen Colbert: [On Pete Buttigieg saying imagine spending 2020 with Bernie Sanders instead of Donald Trump] "This time, it wasn't just Bloomberg attacking Sanders. All the candidates had their torches out to set fire to the wicker Bernie. For instance, Mayor Pete proposed a thought experiment. ... Personally, I think it would be great because Bernie and Trump are the only two impressions I can do. It's really hard to do a Mayor Pete."

Jimmy Fallon: "Tonight's debate in South Carolina aired on CBS. When people first saw Bernie, Bloomberg, and Biden, they thought it was a live audition for 'Old Sheldon.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "After a rough debate last week, Mike Bloomberg tried preparing for tonight a little differently. For instance, this time he prepared."

Jimmy Fallon: "And this is interesting: After last debate, people are saying that Pete Buttigieg and Amy Klobuchar don't like each other. That's crazy. Buttigieg and Klobuchar don't sound like rivals, they sound like furniture at IKEA. 'Honey, what do you think? We'll get the Buttigieg in ivory.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, I saw that President Trump just wrapped up his big trip to India. When he first got to India, he was like, 'Wow, I can't believe Mike Pence used to be governor of this place.'"

James Corden: "As you know, tonight was the tenth Democratic presidential debate. And it was hosted right here on this network, CBS. ... That means CBS is now home to both 'The Amazing Race' and 'the really long, annoying race.'"

James Corden: "CBS is, of course, also home to the long-running soap opera 'The Bold And The Beautiful.' And in an effort to draw in those viewers, here's how they promoted tonight's debate: 'The Old And The Buttigieg.'"

James Corden: "Last week's debate had six people onstage, but there were seven tonight, because long-shot billionaire Tom Steyer was a last-minute qualifier. So there you have it. Six presidential candidates and Tom Steyer. Tom Steyer is the guy at the party who busts through the door and is like, 'I'm back!' And everyone's like, 'Oh, I didn't realize you'd left.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump's former White House doctor said he would put cauliflower in Trump's mashed potatoes in an effort to improve his diet. Of course, the hard part was getting the mashed potatoes into his bacon cheeseburger."

Seth Meyers: "That's right, Trump's doctor would put cauliflower into Trump's mashed potatoes to improve his diet. I mean, it's interesting. If that works, can we try it out with other stuff? 'I only signed it because it was in my mashed potatoes.'"

Democrats Urge Administration To Impose Sanctions On Russia.

Politico (2/24, Levine, 4.29M) reports Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-NY) has called on Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "to impose sanctions on Russia amid concerns that the country is again meddling in US presidential elections." In a letter to the Secretaries, Schumer, along with Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ), ranking member on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH), ranking member on the Senate Banking Committee, wrote, "We urge you to immediately and forcefully impose sanctions on the government of the Russian Federation, any Russian actors determined to be responsible for such interference, and those acting on their behalf or providing material or financial support for these election interference efforts." The letter "lists several sanction tools the administration could impose, including the 2017 Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, which imposed new sanctions on Russia, North Korea and Iran." Reuters (2/25, Zengerle), The Hill (2/24, Miller, 2.98M), and Newsweek (2/24, Touchberry, 1.53M), among other outlets, also report.

Menendez said on CNN's Situation Room (2/24, 802K), "The consequences of not acting are the same consequences that we've had under this Administration, that it only emboldens Putin and Russia and sends a global message to any other nefarious actors that you can do this and get away, undermining American elections, undermining American democracy." Menendez added that the Administration "has laws" and "executive orders on the books. It doesn't even need a new law. All it needs is to use the powers that we've given the President to go after Putin, to go after the nefarious actors and make it very clear in no equivocal terms that, in fact, this will not be tolerated but that has not happened under this administration."

Rep. Jim Himes (D-CT) said on CNN's Situation Room (2/24, 815K), "Quite frankly, the Obama Administration's response to the 2016 electoral meddling that the Russians did was inadequate. The message that the Kremlin took away was that you can mess around in US elections and basically get a wrist slap for that. So, not only would I favor being really aggressively forward leaning with sanctions on people that we believe are in the process of trying to meddle again, I would be fairly direct, probably quietly, with the threat that if there is another assault on our election, there will be United States offensive counter measures that exact a cost from those who seek to meddle at the very heart of our democracy."

FBI Official: Russia Wants America To "Tear Ourselves Apart." The AP (2/24, Tucker) reports David Porter, an assistant section chief with the FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force, warned Monday that Russia wants to watch Americans "tear ourselves apart" ahead of the 2020 elections. As an election security conference on Capitol Hill, Porter "accused Russia of conducting brazen operations aimed at spreading disinformation, exploiting lines of division in society and sowing doubt about the integrity of U.S. elections and the ability of its leaders to govern effectively." While he "did not address the briefing or whether Russia had a preference for particular candidates," he "aid Russia was generally engaged in 'information confrontation' aimed at blurring fact from fiction, eroding American confidence in democratic institutions and driving wedges into society's fracture lines." Said Porter, "The primary objective is not to create a particular version of the truth but rather cloud the truth and erode our ability to find it, creating a sentiment that no narrative or news source can be trusted at all."

Leading National News

Media Analyses: Huge Crowds Welcome Trump To India, But Visit Lacks "Substance."

Coverage of President Trump's trip to India details the warm welcome he received and notes the huge crowd that came to see him at a rally – dubbed "Namaste Trump" – yesterday in Ahmedabad. A number of reports, however, also assert that the President is not likely to advance any policy objectives while in India, despite suggesting earlier that the two countries might seal a trade deal during his visit.

All three networks covered the rally, but dedicated less than a minute in combined airtime to the story. NBC Nightly News (2/24, story 6, 0:10, Holt, 6.67M) reported the President "was greeted by massive crowds" of "more than 100,000 people." ABC World News Tonight (2/24, story 6, 0:15, Muir, 7.63M) likewise referred to "enormous crowds" of "more than 100,000 people cheering for him" and the CBS Evening News (2/24, story 5, 0:25, O'Donnell, 4.89M) similarly reported on "what was called a 'Namaste Trump' rally."

Reuters (2/24, Holland, Pal) reports that Trump "was cheered by more than 100,000 Indians at the opening of the world's largest cricket stadium on Monday, promising 'an incredible trade deal' and 'the most feared military equipment on the planet' at his biggest rally abroad." Some in the crowd "wore cardboard Trump masks and 'Namaste Trump' hats to welcome the US president at the huge new Motera stadium in Prime Minister Narendra Modi's own political homeland, the western city of Ahmedabad."

To the New York Times (2/24, Crowley, 18.61M) the "Namaste Trump" rally, "a daylong affair featuring popular singers, dancers and pounding music," was "an unabashed homage to Mr. Trump, whose name and image appeared in dozens of banners and billboards throughout the stadium." The President "looked out with satisfaction at the grand display, and said it had made a lasting impression on him." According to the Fox News (2/24, Aaro, 27.59M) website, the "Namaste Trump" rally "was a sequel to the 'Howdy, Modi' event Trump held with prime minister Narendra Modi in Houston last September."

Townhall (2/24, Barkoukis, 177K) reports that "to say President Trump was welcomed in India is an understatement. While thousands of people lined the streets to greet America's 45th president, that was just the beginning. ... The 110,000-seat arena was completely filled." Breitbart (2/24, Spiering, 673K) has a similar report under the headline "Trump Addresses Roaring Crowd Of Over 100,000 People In India At 'Namaste Trump' Rally."

Business Insider (2/24, Cranley, 1.82M) says "Trump spent his first day in India amid a whirlwind of adoring crowds," and People (2/24, Carlson, 50.07M) reports on its website that his visit "so far has included a lavish presentation...including more than 100,000 attendees at a 'Namaste Trump' rally." The President tweeted video highlights of his speech at the rally, along with a tweet from Modi, who wrote, "During his speech at the #NamasteTrump programme, @POTUS @realDonaldTrump highlighted aspects of his vision for USA. He also spoke at length about India's greatness as well as the greatness of our culture, ethos, people and more. I thank him for his kind words."

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (2/24, 831K), House Minority Leader McCarthy said, "If India isn't today, they will be next year, they will be larger than China. To have this relationship changes the course of history going forward. I give this President great deal of credit. And what Indian-Americans have contributed to our society and others, this just creates a much bigger bond. And so for the President to do this and build with Modi, this makes the world stronger."

To Politico (2/24, Kumar, 4.29M) yesterday's rally "at times...felt a little like one of Trump's MAGA rallies in the US. Some attendees went out of their way to criticize journalists, blast the mainstream media and praise Fox News." The Los Angeles Times (2/24, Stokols, 4.64M) likewise compared the atmosphere to a Trump rally back home, but says he "avoided the more charged, controversial rhetoric that typically marks his rally speeches" in the US. Breitbart (2/24, Spiering, 673K), meanwhile, noted that a "sea of white hats replace[d] Trump's trademark red MAGA hats" the yesterday's rally. The hats said "Namaste Trump" and featured the US and Indian flags on the brim.

In a report headlined "Trump's India Visit Prioritizes Pageantry Over Policy," the AP (2/24, Colvin, Lemire) reports the President, "prioritizing pageantry over policy...basked in India's welcoming embrace on a day that featured a mega-rally with cheering crowds, a mutual admiration show with his counterpart and a sunset tour of the famed Taj Mahal." Trump used the first day of "his whirlwind 36-hour visit to India to reaffirm close ties with...Modi and tease progress on a trade deal down the road. But the day was largely devoted to a trio of enviable photo-ops."

Under the headline "Trump's India Visit Opens With More Symbolism Than Substance As He Celebrates Ties With A Fellow Nationalist," the Washington Post (2/24, Gearan, Kim, Slater, Masih, 14.2M) reports that Trump has "offer[ed] no public critique of recent actions by...Modi that have been widely condemned as discriminatory." Trump also "did not mention Modi's controversial citizenship law passed in December or the state of emergency his Hindu nationalist government imposed on Kashmir." Instead, Trump and Modi "celebrated their warm personal bond and shared nationalist political philosophy while talking up economic and military cooperation that is a bulwark to China."

Modi, MSNBC (2/24, Benen, 7.86M) reports on its website, "opted to appeal to Mr. Trump's first love – crowd size – as he stages a rally of more than 100,000 people in Ahmedabad on Monday after a drive in from the airport along roads where perhaps 100,000 more will line the motorcade route." Indians, it adds, hope it will "satisfy his need for affirmation."

The Indo-Asian News Service (2/24) notes that Modi said Trump's name "22 times during the "Namaste Trump" event," while Trump said Modi's name "12 times and mentioned India 50 times in his speech." An AP (2/24, Yen, Schmall) "Fact Check" of the President's address, meanwhile, says he "overstated India's progress in achieving universal access to electricity, skirted facts about sanitation and exaggerated his own administration's record." Still, Tunku Varadrajan, Executive Editor of Stanford University's Hoover Institution, writes in the Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that Trump's address sounded like it could have been delivered by former President Obama.

Bloomberg (2/24, 4.73M) reports the President also announced yesterday that the US and India "will sign military deals worth more than $3 billion with India on Tuesday." Said Trump, "We make the greatest weapons ever made. Airplanes. Missiles. Rockets. Ships. We make the best and we're dealing now with India. But this includes advanced air-defense systems and armed and unarmed aerial vehicles."

According to The Hill (2/24, Chalfant, 2.98M), the two countries, "will also continue discussions on a possible trade agreement over the next two days, though a final deal is not expected, given various points of contention." With regards to a possible trade deal, Politico (2/24, Behsudi, 4.29M) reports that "over the last few weeks," the Administration "has struggled to clinch a miniature agreement that will result in some modest access for medical devices, motorcycles and milk products in a market of more than 1.3 billion people." According to Politico, "The president has already tamped down expectations last week, saying that a 'big deal' may only be possible after he wins a second term." A "senior administration official" is quoted as saying, "We want to address a lot of concerns and we're not quite there yet. We will likely have discussions with the prime minister about these concerns."

Axios (2/24, Falconer, 521K), meanwhile, reports that after yesterday's "massive" rally in Ahmedabad, President Trump visited the Taj Mahal. BBC World News (2/24, 3.28M) notes the First Lady joined the President on the visit. The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Agarwal, Bender, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also have reports on the President's visit.

Gidley Says Trump Drew "125 Million People" To Rally. White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley said on Fox News (2/24, 896K) that Trump's reception in India was "electric. I woke up to seeing some of these images and I couldn't believe it. I should be able to understand and know this was going to happen considering I've been to enough rallies at this point and seen tens of thousands of people filling arenas for this President. ... What's so amazing here is this President can go overseas, pull 125 million people into the world's largest cricket stadium. Democrats can't pull 125 at a convention center in South Carolina." Gidley added, "A lot of people in India appreciate what the President has been able to do, quite frankly, because of the relationship he has developed with Prime Minister Modi. They have a strong bond. They are working to expand energy partnerships and exports and imports between the two countries but also working on a safe and secure Indo-Pacific, as well."

Police Officer Killed During Protests In New Delhi. The AP (2/24) reports that in New Delhi on Monday, "Hindu nationalist and communist groups held pro- and anti-US street demonstrations in the capital." According to the AP, "One police officer was killed in the violence. ... Eleven police officers also were injured as they were hit by rocks trying to separate rival groups." The Press Trust of India "said three protesters also were killed during clashes in several parts of the Indian capital."

Supreme Court Hears Arguments In Atlantic Coast Pipeline Case.

The New York Times (2/24, Liptak, 18.61M) reports on Monday, the Supreme Court heard oral arguments in the case of US Forest Service v. Cowpasture River Preservation Association in which opponents are seeking to stop the Atlantic Coast Pipeline from going under the Appalachian Trail, and, according to the Times, “even some of the court’s more liberal members express[ed] skepticism about the breadth of the groups’ legal theory.” The Forest Service approved the pipeline, but opponents and the US Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit argued that no agency has the power to approve a pipeline crossing “lands in the National Park System.” Justice Samuel Alito suggested that the trail is on the surface while the pipeline would be traveling “600 feet below the surface” and so will not cross the trail.

Vaping Manufacturers Face May Deadline To Show FDA Public Health Benefits Of Products.

The Washington Post (2/24, McGinley, 14.2M) reports that “by May 12, for the first time ever, vaping manufacturers must file applications to the Food and Drug Administration proving their products benefit public health – or risk having them yanked from the market.” The article says that “for public health groups, May 12 represents a milestone in the FDA’s sluggish, long-overdue effort to regulate e-cigarettes.” Meanwhile, for small vaping companies, “the deadline looms as an existential threat.”

Juul To Present New Version Of Vaporizer As Part Of FDA Application. The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Maloney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Juul Labs plans to present to the FDA a new version of its vaporizer that will only unlock for users who can verify they are at least 21 years old as part of an application that the company must file to keep its products on shelves. The submission will also include scientific studies, marketing materials, and an update on its efforts to prevent illegal sales to minors, according to a Juul official.

Intuit To Buy Credit Karma For $7.1B.

The New York Times (2/24, Popper, De La Merced, 18.61M) reports Intuit, “the parent company of TurboTax and Mint, agreed on Monday to pay $7.1 billion for Credit Karma, a start-up that has become one of the most popular financial applications for young consumers.” The deal is “expected to create a Silicon Valley financial technology company that can help people easily get their credit scores, calculate and file their taxes and better access loans.” Credit Karma “says it has 100 million customers, including a third of all Americans who have a credit profile and half of all millennials.” Intuit “belongs to an older generation of online financial firms and has been looking for ways to appeal to younger audiences.”

Report Finds Most States Have Contracts With Chinese Tech Companies That May Threaten Security.

The Washington Times (2/24, Gertz, 492K) reports, “Leading Chinese technology companies have sold equipment to state governments in the U.S. that can be used by Beijing to obtain sensitive information,” according to a report by Strand Consult released by China Tech Threat on Monday and announced by Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL). The report found that “contracts for China-based Lexmark and Lenovo permit the companies to send data and information they receive from state and local government work to China.” The report found that “more than 30 states have contracts with Lenovo and 10 states have deals with Lexmark.” The report also said that the two companies are “banned by multiple military and intelligence agencies in the U.S. and around the globe.”

Chu, Raskin Say FBI Being Too Hard On Chinese-American Scientists.

The Washington Times (2/24, Mordock, 492K) reports, “The feds have arrested and/or convicted a slew of Chinese nationals on charges of stealing intellectual property from U.S. businesses,” but according to Reps. Judy Chu (D-CA) and Jamie Raskin (D-MD), “the FBI is too tough on friendly visitors.” They wrote to FBI Director Wray, “The FBI has arrested and charged many Chinese-American scientists who have turned out to be innocent.”

Trump: Schiff Should Not Have Access To Intelligence.

In a tweet Monday night, President Trump highlighted an exchange between Fox News anchor Martha MacCallum and Fox News legal analyst Gregg Jarrett on Fox News’ The Story and argued the House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff “should not have access to intelligence.” Trump wrote, “U.S. Intelligence official overstated assessment of Russian efforts to help Trump.’ @FoxNews @GreggJarrett They supposedly told Crazy Bernie that Russia was looking at him, not me. This is all a big scam between Intel and the Democrats. They want Bernie OUT, & hate ‘Trump.’ It has been a scam right from the beginning with the illegally started Mueller Report, FISA, the leaking, lying & more. Schiff should not have access to Intelligence, he is a corrupt pol. ‘Amazing that they went to Bernie Sanders, but not to President Trump.’ @marthamacallum”

Intel, National Security Officials Refute Claim Russia Working To Reelect Trump.

Breitbart (2/24, Mora, 673K) reports that “intelligence and national security officials have reportedly refuted the claim that Russia is interfering in the 2020 elections to help” President Trump’s reelection, “arguing in media reports published over the weekend that the United States does not have evidence to support the allegation.” The New York Times reported on Sunday that intelligence officials “now maintain that the House members either misheard or misinterpreted a key part of the briefing, and that the Office of the Director of National Intelligence [ODNI] did not mean to say that it believes the Russians are currently intervening in the election explicitly to help President Trump.” CNN cited three unnamed national security officials who said the US “does not have evidence that Russia’s interference this cycle is aimed at reelecting Trump.”

On Fox News (2/24, 896K) Monday, White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley said, "This is a joke. It's another Russian witch hunt hoax. It started when this President took over in the White House and it continues today. They cannot get past themselves on these Russian lies. ... I don't know how many times journalists have to get leaks from Adam Schiff or his staffers that are completely false and proven to be a lie before they just start discounting everything he says. It's absolutely incredible to watch what they are trying to do to this President."

House Judiciary Committee Planning To Debate FISA Reform Legislation.

The Washington Post (2/24, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports the House Judiciary Committee is "poised to debate a bill this week that would repeal NSA's authority to collect large amounts of Americans' phone call data, ending any possibility that the government could revive a now-dormant program that had stoked controversy over its impact on privacy." The bill also proposes "modest reforms aimed at enhancing oversight of surveillance in national security investigations." The reforms, however, "do not substantively address issues raised by a DOJ IG report in December that found significant procedural and substantive errors in an application to wiretap Carter Page, a former campaign aide for Donald Trump that the department suspected of being a Russian agent, according to privacy advocates." The bill, which was "drafted in consultation with the House Intelligence Committee, would outlaw a 'call detail record' program."

The New York Times (2/24, Savage, 18.61M) reports the bill "would be the first legislative response to" the DOJ IG report. It is not clear "whether Republicans will sign onto the legislation, which is expected to be formally introduced on Tuesday and marked up at a Judiciary Committee hearing on Wednesday." The timing of the legislation "is driven by the March 15 expiration of three counterintelligence investigation powers." The Hill (2/24, Carney, 2.98M) reports that, "among the expiring provisions that Congress needs to make decisions on is a controversial records program, known as Section 215, that gathered metadata on domestic text messages and phone calls." They'll also need "to make decisions on two other provisions – one authorizing 'roving' wiretaps and the other on lone wolf surveillance authority." The biggest sticking point "will be the metadata program that will put a spotlight on divisions between privacy hawks and leadership, the House and Senate and even GOP lawmakers and the White House."

DOJ IG: FBI Agent "Primarily Responsible" For FISA Errors, Omissions. The Washington Examiner (2/24, Chaitin, 448K) reports that the Justice Department Inspector General referred FBI agent Stephen Somma, a counterintelligence investigator in the Bureau's New York filed office, "for disciplinary review after an investigation into alleged Foreign Intelligence Surveillance abuses." Inspector General Michael Horowitz's report identified Somma only as "Case Agent 1," but a New York Times report cited sources who said Somma is that agent. According to Horowitz, Somma was "primarily responsible for some of the most significant errors and omissions" while obtaining FISA warrants to "wiretap Trump campaign adviser Carter Page in 2016 and 2017."

Stone Juror Claimed She Was "Not Sure" If She Posted About Russia Investigation.

The Daily Caller (2/24, Ross, 716K) reports that while Tomeka Hart, a former Democratic congressional candidate and the lead juror in Roger Stone's trial, "said in a written questionnaire for prospective jurors that she was 'not sure' whether she posted online about the Russia investigation or Stone, and that she 'may have shared an article' on social media on the topics," her Twitter feed "shows that she indeed posted multiple times about the Russia probe and at least once about Stone." Stone's lawyers argued in a Feb. 14 motion "that Hart's social media activity shows that she was biased against President Donald Trump and Stone." Judge Amy Berman Jackson "said last Tuesday that she would decide after Stone's sentencing whether to grant a retrial." Although Jackson "did not comment directly on reports about Hart during Stone's sentencing," she "did say that the jury in Stone's case acted with 'integrity.'" The Washington Post (2/24, Hsu, Weiner, 14.2M) says Jackson "has scheduled a closed-door hearing for Tuesday afternoon regarding his request for a new trial based on allegations of juror misconduct."

"Public Charge" Rule Barring Immigrants Who Rely On Government Benefits Takes Effect.

The Washington Times (2/24, Dinan, 492K) reports that the Administration on Monday took a "major step" toward a longtime conservative goal of creating "an immigration system that rewards immigrants who won't be a burden on society and discourages those who will." The "public charge" rule which took effect Monday gives USCIS "the authority to refuse green cards...to people who have used a wide range of nonemergency welfare programs." The Times says the rule "has survived an onslaught of court challenges, howls of complaints from Democrats on Capitol Hill and fierce opposition of immigration rights groups, who called it racist and elitist." The AP (2/24, Snow) says the guidelines "are part of the Trump administration's broader effort to reduce immigration, particularly among poorer people." Critics say the amount to a "wealth test."

DHS Deputy Secretary Cuccinelli said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (2/24, 831K), "It's not a moral judgment on individuals. It is an economic one. And we expect in America, as we have for over 140 years, that people seeking to be long-term immigrants here, and maybe join us as citizens, will be able to stand on their own two feet, and are willing to stand on their own two feet. ... So they won't become a burden on taxpayers. It's been a major priority for the President." In a report that aired on Nexstar Media Group (2/24, 12K) stations across the country, Cuccinelli was shown saying that the rule "reinforces and effectively reinstates the American legal transition of self-sufficiency for people coming here to live their lives with us here in America. ... The public charge rule will filter out a small portion of people who apply for green cards."

NYTimes Links 11% Decline In Legal Immigration To Trump's Policies.

The New York Times (2/24, Kanno-Youngs, 18.61M) attributes a more than 11 percent decline in legal immigration to President Trump's immigration policies, "like travel bans and visa restrictions or refugee caps and asylum changes." According to an analysis of government data by the National Foundation for American policy, "the number of people who obtained lawful permanent residence, besides refugees who entered the United States in previous years, declined to 940,877 in the 2018 fiscal year from 1,063,289 in the 2016 fiscal year." The Times adds that "a report released on Monday projected a 30-percent decline in legal immigration by 2021 and a 35-percent dip in average annual growth of the U.S. labor force."

Mexico On Track To Boost Extradition Of Criminal Suspects To US This Year.

The New York Times (2/24, Semple, 18.61M) reports, "The Mexican government is on track to dramatically increase the number of extraditions of criminal suspects to the United States this year, as the Trump administration has pressured Mexico to step up its fight against organized crime." So far in 2020, "the government already has extradited at least 30 suspects to the United States," compared to 58 for all of 2019, 69 in 2018, and 57 in 2017. The Times adds that Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador "has struggled to show gains in his government's effort to rein in organized crime." Attorney General Barr has been to Mexico twice "for bilateral meetings with the Mexican authorities."

Krugman: Republican Cynicism About Deficits Benefits Trump.

Paul Krugman writes in his column for the New York Times (2/24, 18.61M) that Republicans are guilty of "the most cynical policy reversal of modern times" in having criticized "Barack Obama's auto bailout" but not criticizing Trump's aid to farmers, and changing from "insisting that federal debt posed an existential threat under Obama to complete indifference to budget deficits under Trump." Krugman says "this cynicism may win Trump the election." That's because, contends Krugman, "the biggest factor working in Trump's favor is a strong economy," and, he writes, "what's driving the U.S. economy now is the very deficit spending Republicans pretended to be horrified by during the Obama years."

White House Requests $2.5B To Combat Coronavirus.

The AP (2/24, Taylor) reports the White House on Monday sent Congress "an urgent budget request for $2.5 billion to address the deadly coronavirus outbreak." According to the White House budget office, "the funds are for vaccines, treatment, and protective equipment." The Administration is seeking "$1.25 billion in new funding and wants to transfer $535 million more in funding from an Ebola preparedness account. It anticipates shifting money from other HHS accounts and other agencies to complete the $2.5 billion response plan." Earlier in the day Monday, White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley told Fox News (2/24, 896K), "We need some funding here to make sure that we protect all Americans. ... We need to combat this, we need to make sure our people are safe and the President is always going to take action to do that."

The Washington Times (2/24, Howell, 492K) says Democrats "panned the request as belated and lackluster." The Washington Post (2/24, Werner, 14.2M) reports House Appropriations Chairwoman Nita Lowey called it "woefully insufficient to protect Americans" and criticized the Administration for "trying to 'raid' money from other public health accounts." The New York Times (2/24, Weiland, Cochrane, Haberman, 18.61M) says Senate Minority Leader Schumer said in a statement that request was "too little too late." Schumer said, "That President Trump is trying to steal funds dedicated to fight Ebola – which is still considered an epidemic in the Democratic Republic of the Congo – is indicative of his towering incompetence and further proof that he and his administration aren't taking the coronavirus crisis as seriously as they need to be."

Poll: 70% Favor Quarantine For People Who Recently Visited China.

The Washington Times (2/24, Harper, 492K) reports that "wide-ranging Economist/YouGov poll" shows that Americans "appear to favor a strident approach" to combating coronavirus. The poll found that 70 percent of US voters "say the government should 'quarantine people in the United States who have recently been to China.'" In addition, 53 percent "say that the government should deny entry to any 'foreigner' who has been diagnosed with coronavirus."

Number Of Coronavirus Cases In US Climbs To 53.

ABC World News Tonight (2/24, story 2, 2:55, Muir, 7.64M) reported that "the number of COVID-19 cases in the US climb[ed] to 53, after tests confirm[ed] new cases among those former cruise ship passengers. It comes as towns fight plans to move infected patients into isolation in their communities."

Judge Says California City Does Not Have To House Coronavirus Patients. The New York Times (2/24, Stockman, Keene, 18.61M) reports that, in a decision that "could complicate California's efforts to deal with the coronavirus crisis," a federal judge ruled Monday that the city of Costa Mesa, California does not have to house coronavirus patients. Judge Josephine L. Staton "kept a temporary restraining order in place that would prevent the infected patients from being moved to Costa Mesa, at least for now." Staton "said she would reconsider the issue after state and federal authorities provide more details about how they plan to protect the health of the community, as well as the people with coronavirus."

WHO: World Not Ready For Major Coronavirus Outbreak.

The New York Times (2/24, Myers, Wee, 18.61M) reports the WHO "warned" Monday that "the world was not ready for a major" coronavirus outbreak. The Wall Street Journal (2/24, McKay, Stancati, Yoon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the WHO said it is not yet clear whether the virus can be stopped from spreading further. While some infectious disease experts believe it will be impossible to stop the virus from spreading more widely, the WHO said that is not yet clear.

On NBC Nightly News (2/24, story 3, 2:10, Holt, 6.67M), Richard Engel said, "The coronavirus is looking more and more like a global pandemic, spreading far beyond mainland China." However, the AP (2/24, Tong) quotes WHO Director General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus as saying, "The past few weeks has demonstrated just how quickly a new virus can spread around the world and cause widespread fear and disruption. ... Does this virus have pandemic potential? Absolutely, yes." But, he added, "for the moment we're not witnessing the uncontained global spread of this virus." The Washington Post (2/24, Taylor, 14.2M) and the New York Times (2/24, 18.61M) provide additional updates on the spread of the virus and the global response.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) says that while case data from China which suggest that the coronavirus epidemic there "is easing" is hopeful, "a moment of optimism should not distract from preparations for a less favorable outcome."

WHO: China's Measures May Have Prevented Hundreds Of Thousands Of Transmissions.

The New York Times (2/24, Myers, Wee, 18.61M) reports that the WHO "praised China's aggressive efforts to wrest the [coronavirus] epidemic under control." A WHO team sent to China has "concluded that the draconian measures China imposed a month ago may have saved hundreds of thousands of people from infection." Bloomberg (2/24, 4.73M) reports Bruce Aylward, an Assistant Director General at the WHO, "praised the sometimes extreme measures China has taken to prevent the spread, including locking down most of Hubei province, which has a population of about 60 million." According to Aylward, the approach "changed the course of the virus."

Coronavirus Death Toll In Italy Rises To Seven.

Reuters (2/24, Pollina, Za) reports that in Italy, "the death toll in Europe's largest coronavirus outbreak rose to seven on Monday and new cases climbed above 220." Authorities in the northern regions of Lombardy and Veneto "banned public gatherings including the famed Venice carnival." Reuters adds that "local authorities announced four new deaths on Monday – three men in their 80s and a 62-year-old. Three previous fatalities recorded since Friday were also elderly people. All those who have died had underlying health problems."

The AP (2/24) reports that "the majority of those known to be infected with COVID-19 hail from two main clusters – some 10 towns in Lombardy and another area in the neighboring region of Veneto." The Washington Post (2/24, Harlan, Pitrelli, Denyer, 14.2M) reports that Italy "has responded aggressively. Checkpoints outside hot spot towns are allowing only those with special permission to enter or leave." Furthermore, "if the virus expands across Italy, neighboring governments could face public pressure to back away from the continent's open border ideals in the name of security." However, "European officials in Brussels on Monday emphasized there was no plan to close borders." Mark Phillips said on the CBS Evening News (2/24, story 3, 2:00, O'Donnell, 4.89M) that Italian health authorities "say the next few days will be critical to see whether they've contained it."

Iran Dismisses Claim That 50 Have Died From Coronavirus There.

The AP (2/24, Batrawy) reports that the Iranian government "said Monday that 12 people had died nationwide from the new coronavirus, rejecting claims of a much higher death toll by a lawmaker from the city of Qom that has been at the epicenter of the virus in the country." Iran's Health Ministry "said the total number of infections have risen to 61 while deaths stood at 12. But a lawmaker from Qom, Ahmad Amirabadi Farahani, was quoted by the semi-official ILNA news agency as saying that the death toll was 50."

The New York Times (2/24, Kirkpatrick, Fassihi, Mashal, 18.61M) says Iran is "emerging as the second focal point after China for the spread of the disease. Cases in Iraq, Afghanistan, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Lebanon, the United Arab Emirates – even one in Canada – have all been traced to Iran, sending tremors of fear rippling out from Kabul to Beirut."

Iranian Theology Student In Iraq Tests Positive. Reuters (2/24) reports that "Iraq's first coronavirus case, an Iranian theology student, has been detected in the holy city of Najaf...leading authorities to briefly close the gates to one of holiest sites for Shi'ite Muslims." According to Reuters, "The patient entered Iraq before the government shut border crossings and banned the entry of non-Iraqis coming from Iran."

Ninth Circuit Upholds Trump Administration Abortion Rules.

The AP (2/24, Johnson) reports the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has upheld Trump Administration rule changes that include a ban on "taxpayer-funded clinics in the Title X program from making abortion referrals and prohibit[ing] clinics that receive federal money from sharing office space with abortion providers." The court "found that the U.S. Supreme Court had already approved nearly identical regulations in a 1991 decision." The Washington Examiner (2/24, Dibble, 448K) says the "reliably liberal" Ninth Circuit has been "tilted it to the Right" by Trump judicial nominees approved by the GOP-controlled Senate.

McCconnell To Force Votes On Abortion Bills In Bid To Energize Conservatives. The New York Times (2/24, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell "is about to plunge the Senate into the nation's culture wars with votes on bills to sharply restrict access to late-term abortions and threaten some doctors who perform them with criminal penalties." The Times says McConnell "is expected to bring the bills up for votes on Tuesday. Both lack the necessary 60-vote supermajority to advance, and the Senate has voted previously to reject them. But by putting them on the floor again," McConnell "hopes to energize the social conservatives" who helped elect President Trump "and whose enthusiasm will be needed to help Republicans hold on to the Senate this year."

Virginia Senate Committee Approves Seven Of Eight Gun Control Bills After Amending Two.

The Washington Post (2/24, Schneider, 14.2M) reports a Virginia state Senate committee on Monday "advanced seven of the eight gun-control bills" advocated by Gov. Ralph Northam (D), "a week after killing a proposed assault weapons ban." Two of the seven "were scaled back to help preserve support among more centrist members of the Democratic caucus, and another has already failed once on the floor of the Senate." The Post adds, "Democrats have made gun control the centerpiece of this year's session" and "the House of Delegates passed all eight measures recommended by Northam."

"DC Sniper" Malvo Withdraws Supreme Court Appeal After Virginia Passes Parole For Juveniles.

The New York Times (2/24, Liptak, 18.61M) reports the Supreme Court, "which heard arguments in October about the fate of one of the men who terrorized the Washington region in the fall of 2002 with deadly sniper attacks, has been asked not to decide the case after all." Saying that a new Virginia law, "rendered the case effectively moot," attorneys for the man, Lee Malvo, "and prosecutors in Virginia submitted a letter to the court on Monday asking the justices to dismiss his case." A Supreme Court decision would not have necessarily have helped Malvo, since he has received a separate sentence for murders in Maryland, and could face charges in other states, "but scores of other inmates who committed murders before they turned 18 might have obtained new sentences had the court ruled for Mr. Malvo."

The Washington Post (2/24, Jackman, 14.2M) reports "there are more than 700 inmates in Virginia who were juveniles when sentenced to adult prisons. Of those, 233 would be eligible for parole in the next six years, according to the Virginia Department of Corrections, including Malvo."

Smollett Pleads Not Guilty To New Charges In Alleged Fake Attack.

The Chicago Sun-Times (2/24, Grimm, Sneed, 875K) reports Jussie Smollett on Monday "pleaded not guilty to a new, six-count indictment charging him with falsely reporting he was the victim of a hate-crime attack near his Streeterville apartment on a frigid night in January 2019." Smollett was "released on his own recognizance" after signing "a written promise that he'll appear at future court hearings." Smollett's next court date is "set for March 18 – one day after a primary election where State's Attorney Kim Foxx is seeking a second term as four opponents are seeking to make the race a referendum on how her office handled Smollett's case."

The Chicago Tribune (2/24, Crepeau, Meisner, 2.65M) reports, "After Monday's brief arraignment, Smollett's attorneys said they had no intention of negotiating any plea deal" with special prosecutor Dan K. Webb, "and that they would take the case all the way to trial if need be." They have also "filed an emergency petition with the Illinois Supreme Court asking that the indictment and Webb's appointment as prosecutor be thrown out altogether." Smollett's attorneys are also asking Judge James Linn to throw out the case, "contending it violates Smollett's double-jeopardy protections."

USA Today (2/24, Hauck, 10.31M) reports, "Olabinjo and Abimbola Osundairo, the brothers who claim Smollett hired them to stage the attack, were present in court Monday, raising some questions about why they were present. Should Smollett's case go to trial, the brothers would be key witnesses." Gloria Schmidt Rodriguez, who represents the Osundairos, "said that they were present to support the criminal justice process."

NBC Nightly News (2/24, story 8, 0:15, Holt, 6.67M) reported "the charges are similar to those dropped by prosecutors last year." On the CBS Evening News (2/24, story 7, 1:15, O'Donnell, 4.93M), Dean Reynolds reported "those original charges were abruptly dropped without much of a reason" and "a judge appointed a special prosecutor to take another look."

The New York Times (2/24, Chiarito, 18.61M) reports Foxx's "campaign denounced the 'James Comey-like timing' of the new charges, referring to the former F.B.I. director's public pronouncements about the investigation into Hillary Clinton's email server just before she lost to Mr. Trump." Webb "said that he had not found any wrongdoing by Ms. Foxx's office, but that he was still investigating."

WPost: Weinstein Conviction A Landmark Moment Of #MeToo Era.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) says a jury's verdict on Monday finding Harvey Weinstein guilty of two felony sex crimes was "a singular moment in the #MeToo movement, a statement that any man who sexually mistreats women in the workplace, no matter his wealth or prestige, can be held to account." While the jury acquitted Weinstein of the "most serious charges," the Post says that "the not-guilty findings on those charges, which would have rested on a pattern of conduct, don't diminish the importance of the justice rendered in a case that was fraught with legal complexities and social and political overtones." The Post hopes "the bravery of these women coming forward to tell their stories under terrifying circumstances – and the fact that they were believed – will empower others who have been victimized."

NYTimes: To Empower Sexual Assault Victims, Criminal Justice System Needs To Change. The New York Times (2/24, 18.61M) editorializes that "the hard-won, long-overdue conviction" shows the "obstacles presented by the American legal system to successfully prosecuting abusers." For a "more balanced legal approach to sexual assault," the Times supports changes to state statutes of limitations "to give victims the opportunity to come forward even years after a traumatic assault." The Times also says "law enforcement authorities need to let women know that they will be listened to, and that their cases will be prosecuted quickly and thoroughly."

WPost: Maryland Education Plan Calls For More Spending Without Addressing Underlying Problems.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) criticizes the high "price tag" of Maryland's education plan, which "would require $4 billion a year in new spending from state and local governments," because it would do enough to solve underlying issues. The Post, pointing out that the state spends more than the national average on certain metrics, argues that "just spending more without attacking the inherent problems or insisting on real accountability is misguided." It concludes that the plan "comes with a high cost while doing far too little."

Conway, Gidley Defend Effort To Remove Officials Who Do Not Back Trump Agenda.

Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (2/24, 815K), "CNN has confirmed an effort is underway to identify so-called 'Never Trumpers' working inside the Administration and push them out, and top White House officials are all but endorsing the effort." White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News (2/24), "We should not have people in government who are undermining the President's agenda. The President got elected because his issues, his ideas prevailed, and the woman he beat, hers failed." White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley similarly said on Fox News (2/24, 896K), "The President has been pretty clear about the fact that he wants people in this Administration who want to forward his agenda. Donald Trump was the only one elected. He was the only one the American people voted for. They didn't vote for someone at any of these other agencies, any of these other departments."

Ginni Thomas Has Been Active In Efforts To Dismiss Those Disloyal To Trump. The New York Times (2/24, Haberman, 18.61M) reports Ginni Thomas, "a politically active conservative who for nearly seven years has led a group called Groundswell" and the spouse of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, has been a leader in an effort to press President Trump to remove officials seen as disloyal or insufficiently committed to his agenda from government posts. Among her "top targets have been officials at the National Security Council, the former head of the White House personnel office, Sean Dooney, and other top White House aides." Another target was ex-US Attorney Jessie Liu, who left her job "for a job in the Treasury Department that was later withdrawn by the White House."

Grenell's Past PR Consulting, Commentary Facing Fresh Scrutiny.

The Washington Post (2/24, Brown, Reinhard, Bennett, 14.2M) reports that before he was nominated by the President to be US Ambassador to Germany, Richard Grenell, who the President last week named Acting DNI, "wrote an op-ed about Nigeria's highly charged 2015 presidential race." A year later, he "defended the government of Moldova against corruption allegations from a whistleblower." In addition, his public relations firm "was paid to do work for a U.S. nonprofit funded almost entirely by the Hungarian government led by far-right Prime Minister Viktor Orban." The Post says Grenell's "public relations consulting and foreign policy commentary, as well as his reputation as a vocal loyalist of Trump's, are part of an unusual résumé for a leader of the U.S. intelligence community," and Grenell's promotion to that job "is drawing fresh scrutiny" of his past, "including his foreign affairs commentary and consulting work after he served as U.S. spokesman at the United Nations during the George W. Bush administration."

Sen. Collins Says Grenell Lacks Needed Intel Experience. The Washington Examiner (2/24, Halaschak, 448K) reports Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) said Monday that she disagrees with the President's selection of Grenell to serve as Acting DNI. Collins said, "I would have much preferred that the President nominate Acting Director Maguire for the post. ... I care deeply about that position and believe the person needs experience in the intelligence community, which regrettably Ambassador Grenell does not have." Collins "is the first Republican to push back on Trump's pick."

Mar-A-Lago At Center Of Massive Fundraising Effort For Trump Campaign.

The Washington Examiner (2/24, Doyle, 448K) reports President Trump's Mar-a-Lago property is "a fundraising powerhouse where the campaign deploys the president, family members, and aides to a campaign coffer-swelling effect." Political fundraising at the estate has "raised tens of millions of dollars for Trump's reelection campaign." Trump has "visited Palm Beach more than 30 times since becoming president and has hosted close to a dozen Mar-a-Lago fundraisers during the winter season. His next event is scheduled for March 8."

Lara Trump, Bloomberg's Daughter To Host Rescue Dog Fundraiser At Mar-A-Lago.

The Washington Examiner (2/24, Doyle, 448K) reports, "Michael Bloomberg's daughter Georgina Bloomberg and President Trump's daughter-in-law Lara Trump are putting rescue dogs above politics at Mar-a-Lago to host a high-dollar fundraiser" on March 14, that will feature "a celebrity dog fashion show." The Wine, Women, and Shoes event for Big Dog Ranch Rescue "is expected to draw hundreds of attendees," and last year, a similar event "raised $1.5 million."

Trump Faults Sotomayor For Accusing Other Justices Of Pro-Trump Bias.

President Trump on Twitter, cited Fox News' Laura Ingraham as reporting that Justice Sotomayor "accuses GOP appointed Justices of being biased in favor of Trump,” and commented, “This is a terrible thing to say. Trying to ‘shame’ some into voting her way? She never criticized Justice Ginsberg when she called me a ‘faker’. Both should recuse themselves on all Trump, or Trump related, matters! While ‘elections have consequences’, I only ask for fairness, especially when it comes to decisions made by the United States Supreme Court!”

Trump Recommends New Book On Conservative Values And Liberalism’s Failures.

On Twitter, President Trump on Monday recommended a new book, “Taken for Granted, How Conservatives Can Win Back Americans That Liberalism Failed”, by Gianni Caldwell. Trump calls Caldwell “a young winner” and says Caldwell will be “at the Ronald Reagan Library, Simi Valley, California, on Thursday at 6 PM, PT.” Later, Trump followed up with a tweet correcting the spelling of Caldwell’s name.

Wasserman Schultz Reportedly Mulling Bid For House Appropriations Chair.

Politico (2/24, Ferris, Caygle, 4.29M) reports that “a battle to lead the powerful House Appropriations Committee has broken out behind the scenes, as a trio of lawmakers vie for the coveted leadership post that oversees all federal spending.” Politico says Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-CT), “who has spent 27 years on the panel, remains the frontrunner,” but some Democrats “are already speculating about a potential last-minute shakeup led by dark horse challenger” Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-FL). In addition, Rep. Marcy Kaptur (D-OH) “is mounting a long-shot bid.”

WPost Profiles Clyburn Proposal That Some Democrats See As “Practical Restitution.”

The Washington Post (2/24, Jan, 14.2M), under the headline “Reparations, Rebranded,” profiles “a race-neutral anti-poverty program” House Majority Whip Clyburn “conceived a decade ago [that] is now catching fire among candidates for the Democratic nomination as a way to provide practical restitution for slavery.” The program “targets federal spending on certain high-poverty areas” and “allocates federal funding to persistently poor counties.” But casting it “as reparations has drawn criticism from African Americans living in poor urban neighborhoods.”

Supreme Court To Hear Case On Philadelphia Foster Care Agency’s Stance On Same-Sex Couples.

The Wall Street Journal (2/24, A1, Kendall, Bravin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Supreme Court on Monday agreed to decide whether the Philadelphia may exclude a Catholic agency that does not place children with same-sex couples due to its religious beliefs from the city’s foster care program. The court will hear the case when their next term begins in October.

The Washington Free Beacon (2/24, Daley, 78K) reports the case could have “have far-reaching implications” on “questions of religious liberty and nondiscrimination,” because in addition to the asking the court to require the city to renew its contract with the agency, the plaintiffs are also “asking the justices to overturn the 1990 case Employment Division v. Smith, which held that religious believers cannot claim exemptions from laws that apply to everyone in a neutral way.”

The Washington Post (2/24, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the decision in the 1990 case, written by Justice Antonin Scalia, “has become unpopular, and the court’s four most conservative members – Justices Clarence Thomas, Samuel A. Alito Jr., Neil M. Gorsuch and Brett M. Kavanaugh – have said they are open to reconsidering it.”

The New York Times (2/24, Liptak, 18.61M) reports the case, Fulton v. City of Philadelphia, is also “broadly similar to that of a Colorado baker who refused to create a wedding cake for a same-sex couple.” In 2018, the Supreme Court punted on “the central issue in that case: whether businesses may claim exemptions from anti-discrimination laws on religious grounds.” It held “instead that the baker had been mistreated by members of the state’s civil rights commission who had expressed hostility toward religion.”

Oregon Senate Republicans Leave, Denying Democrats Quorum To Approve Climate Bill.

The New York Times (2/24, Baker, 18.61M) reports, “Less than a year after Oregon’s Senate Republicans fled the state with passports in hand and hid out in Idaho cabins to avoid voting on a climate change bill, they have disappeared again.” The Times adds that “most Republicans refused to attend a floor session on Monday morning, and a search by the Senate chamber’s sergeant-at-arms failed to find them.” The Senate was, therefore, “one short of a quorum,” which “threatened to derail a range of bills” as the session ends in two weeks. Senate Republican leader, Herman Baertschiger Jr., “said in a statement that Democrats had refused to work with Republicans and had voted down all their proposed amendments.” The Democrats have 18 of the 30 seats in the Senate, but 20 senators must be present to conduct business.

Sheriff Says Former DHS Official’s Death Has Not Been Determined To Be A Suicide.

The Washington Examiner (2/24, Picket, 448K) reports on the death of Philip Haney, 66, “former Department of Homeland Security official during the Obama administration,” who “was found dead with a bullet wound on Friday morning about 40 miles east of Sacramento, California.” The Amador County Sheriff’s office said, “Unfortunately, there was misinformation immediately being put out that we have determined Mr. Haney’s death to be a suicide. This is not the case.” The office added, “No determination will be made until all evidence is examined and analyzed.” The sheriff’s office also said, “we have reached out to our law enforcement partners in the Federal Bureau of Investigation to assist in analyzing documents, phone records, and a laptop that were recovered from the scene and Mr. Haney’s RV.”

Schumer Confirms Spending $8,600 Over A Decade On Cheesecake.

USA Today (2/24, Cummings, 10.31M) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer "admitted Sunday that he has dropped almost $9,000 on his favorite cheesecake over the years." At a news conference, Schumer "responded to a New York Post report that said Federal Election Commission filings reveal he spent $8,600 on cheesecake from Junior's, a restaurant that boasts it has the best cheesecake in New York, over the course of a decade." Schumer spokesman Angelo Roefaro "told CNN that no taxpayer money was used to purchase the desserts."

Poll Finds Plurality Of Democrats See Sanders As Strongest Trump Challenger.

The Hill (2/24, Easley, 2.98M) reports "a plurality of Democrats" in a Morning Consult survey believes Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) is the party's "best shot at defeating President Trump in November." In the poll, 33% of Democrats called Sanders "the best candidate they could put up in a head-to-head match-up against Trump," followed by Joe Biden at 23% and Michael Bloomberg at 18%.

Tim Scott: Sanders Would Be Strongest Democrat Against Trump. Politico (2/24, Ross, 4.29M) reports that in a Monday interview with CBS, Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC) said, "If [Trump] on his game, as he was at the State of the Union, I don't think there's a candidate in the country that can beat him. If there is a second choice, other than himself, it would be Bernie Sanders. Bernie Sanders brings that outside game in a similar fashion that President Trump did in 2016." The Washington Times (2/24, Sherfinski, 492K) also covers Scott's comments. The Washington Examiner (2/24, Drucker, 448K) reports "GOP strategists say" a Sanders-led ticket "would solve President Trump's most concerning November liability – the leftward drift of suburban voters that has plagued the Republican Party since 2016."

Conway: Sanders "Can't" Beat Trump. White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway was asked on Fox News (2/24) about Sanders' claim that he can beat the President. Conway said, "He can't. But I can't blame him for saying it, because electability is the mother's milk of the Democratic nomination this time. They have all claimed they are the ones who can beat Donald Trump. ... Electability is no match for electricity, though, and the President has that."

Rothenberg: Sanders Nomination Would Preclude Referendum On Trump. Stuart Rothenberg writes in CQ Roll Call (2/24, 154K), "Whatever you think about Sanders...there should be little doubt that the Vermont senator is a controversial, even divisive, figure. ... So instead of a November matchup between Trump and Sanders being 'about' the man currently in the White House – about his vulgarity, his profanity, his lies, his efforts to undermine key institutions (like the FBI, the CIA and a free press), his efforts to undercut the power of Congress and his anger and divisiveness – suddenly a 2020 general election becomes as much 'about' Bernie Sanders as it would be 'about' Donald Trump."

Polls Show Biden Leading In South Carolina, With Sanders Gaining.

The CBS Evening News (2/24, story 4, 2:35, O'Donnell, 4.89M) reported, "Our news CBS News battleground poll has Joe Biden leading the pack here in South Carolina ahead of Saturday's primary. But Bernie Sanders is closing in fast" following "his convincing win in the Nevada caucus over the weekend." NBC Nightly News (2/24, story 7, 2:00, Holt, 6.67M) also reported that its own "new poll shows Bernie Sanders gaining on Joe Biden there."

On its website, NBC News (2/24, Murray, 6.14M) reports that an NBC News/Marist poll of 539 likely South Carolina Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 18-21, shows Biden leading with 27%, followed by Sanders at 23%, Tom Steyer at 15%, Pete Buttigieg at 9%, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) at 8%, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) at 5%. NBC News says the poll "was conducted...before the results were known from Saturday's Nevada caucuses, which Sanders easily won, beating Biden by more than 2 to 1."

Bloomberg (2/24, Beckwith, 4.73M) reports that a Public Policy Polling (D) survey of 866 likely South Carolina Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 23-24, shows Biden leading with 36%, followed by Sanders at 21%, Warren at 8%, Buttigieg and Steyer each at 7%, and Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-HI) at 6%; no other contender tops 3%. The Hill (2/24, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports, "Most recent polls have shown a tightening race between Biden and Sanders in South Carolina. A CBS News/YouGov survey released on Sunday showed" Biden's "lead narrowing to just 5 points. And a Winthrop University poll released last week also showed a 5-point race between Biden and Sanders."

NY Poll: Sanders 25%; Bloomberg 21%; Biden 13%; Warren 11%; Buttigieg 9%; Klobuchar 9%. The Rochester Democrat & Chronicle (2/24, Spector, 360K) reports on a Siena College poll of 315 New York State Democratic voters, taken Feb. 16-20, shows Sanders leading with 25%, followed by Michael Bloomberg at 21%, Biden at 13%, Warren at 11%, and Buttigieg and Klobuchar each at 9%. New York's presidential primary will be held April 28.

The Hill (2/24, Klar, 2.98M) reports that Sanders' "support in the state shot up 12 points since the same poll in November. ... Biden had previously held a 10-point lead in the poll, with 24 percent of respondents backing him in November." The Syracuse Post-Standard (2/24, Weiner, 531K) reports, "All six Democratic presidential candidates would easily defeat [President] Trump in New York by margins of 14 to 25 percentage points, according to the" survey's larger sample of 658 New York voters.

National Poll: Sanders 32%; Bloomberg 19%; Biden 18%; Buttigieg 11%; Warren 11%. A Morning Consult national tracking poll of 2,631 Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 23, shows Sanders leading with 32%, followed by Bloomberg at 19%, Biden at 18%, and Buttigieg and Warren each at 11%; no other contender tops 4%.

Florida Democrats Conceded Sanders' Castro Comments Would Cost Ticket The State.

Reuters (2/24, Renshaw) reports Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "came under fire" on Monday for comments about Fidel Castro in a weekend interview with CBS' 60 Minutes. Sanders said, "We're very opposed to the authoritarian nature of Cuba but you know, it's unfair to simply say everything is bad. ... When Fidel Castro came into office, you know what he did? He had a massive literacy program. Is that a bad thing? Even though Fidel Castro did it?" Reuters says that comment "drew blowback from elected Democrats in Florida...home a large population of people who fled Cuba during Castro's rule and their descendants."

Ed O'Keefe reported on the CBS Evening News (2/24, story 4, 2:35, O'Donnell, 4.89M), "His response infuriated Democratic lawmakers from South Florida, a key swing state where public support for the Castro regime is a non-starter." Rep. Donna Shalala (D-FL): "He made more than a mistake. It's what he believes, and it's unacceptable to our community." ABC World News Tonight (2/24, story 5, 3:00, Muir, 7.63M) Sanders is "facing new scrutiny" over the remarks, "including from South Carolina's most powerful Democrat," House Majority Whip Clyburn. ABC's Byron Pitts: "What did you make of Sanders' comment on Sunday about the virtues of Castro's communist Cuba?" Clyburn: "I thought, when I heard that, I shivered. That reinforced the fear that South Carolinians have about his so-called democratic socialism. I think that was an unforced error."

The Miami Herald (2/24, Daugherty, 1.09M) reports Sanders "lost the 2016 Democratic primary by 31 percentage points in Florida, and Florida Democrats are wary of a party nominee offering anything other than unequivocal condemnation of left-leaning authoritarian leaders like Castro and Venezuela's Nicolás Maduro." The Washington Post (2/24, Wagner, 14.2M) quotes Florida Democratic Party Chair Terrie Rizzo saying, "Florida Democrats condemn dictators who toppled democracies across the globe and stand in solidarity with the thousands of people who have fled violent dictatorships in Cuba, Venezuela and Nicaragua." Politico (2/24, Caputo, 4.29M) reports state Rep. Javier Fernandez (D) said, "Donald Trump wins Florida if Bernie is our nominee."

The New York Times (2/24, Mazzei, 18.61M) says "Cuban exiles and Democrats...angrily rejected" Sanders' comments – which, the Times says, "threatened to undercut his candidacy for the Democratic nomination in the nation's largest presidential swing state." The New York Post (2/24, Campanile, 4.57M) calls the comments "just the tip of the iceberg," writing that Sanders "had a romance with the Marxist Sandinista government of Nicaragua in the 1980s and even honeymooned with wife Jane in the Soviet Union in 1988." The Washington Post (2/24, Witte, 14.2M) looks at Sanders' trips at that time under the headline "In Cold War Travels, Bernie Sanders Found Much To Admire Behind Enemy Lines. Now That's A Problem For His Campaign."

The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Sanders gets Cuba's history wrong, writing that the country had a high literacy rate before Castro took power, and that nations like Colombia and Ecuador came from behind to surpass Cuba in development while Castro's Cuba stagnated.

NYTimes Analysis: Sanders Has Yet To Show He Can Bring In New Voters. In an analysis, the New York Times (2/24, Ember, Cohn, 18.61M) says that while Sanders has asserted "that his progressive movement will bring millions of nonvoters into the November election, driving record turnout especially among disaffected working-class Americans and young people," so far, he has "prevailed by broadening his appeal among traditional Democratic voters, not by fundamentally transforming the electorate."

Sanders' "Hidden Health Records" Draw Scrutiny. USA Today (2/24, Alltucker, 10.31M) reports under the headline "It's The Classic Glass Half Empty: Bernie Sanders Hidden Health Records Raise Questions" that "more than four months after suffering a heart attack on the campaign trail, [Sanders] refuses to release detailed medical records that might yield clues about his overall health." Sanders says he does not intend to release further records, though "the lack of transparency raises questions about the Democratic frontrunner's health that medical experts say could be answered – and silenced – with the release of detailed records." The Washington Post (2/24, Viser, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports that though presidential candidates until recently released health records as a matter of course, "that sense of obligation has vanished. ... Four of the six major Democratic candidates are 70 or older," and "the candidates, for the most part, have declined to release full dossiers on their health."

Sanders Proposes $1.5T Early-Education Plan. Politico (2/24, Perez, 4.29M) reports Sanders on Monday "outlined a pitch to replace the country's onerous child care and early childhood education system with a federally funded and universal program." Sanders' plan "offers free, full-day child care for every child from infancy through age 3, and free pre-kindergarten education for every child in the country, starting at age 3," according to his campaign.

Rivals Step Up Anti-Sanders Messaging. Politico (2/24, Korecki, 4.29M) reports under the headline "Sanders Under Fire In South Carolina From All Directions" that Joe Biden's campaign is airing a new digital ad in South Carolina that accuses Sanders "of trying to undermine Barack Obama's 2012 reelection by threatening to primary him." The ad says in part, "When it comes to building on Barack Obama's legacy, Bernie Sanders just can't be trusted." In another piece, Politico (2/24, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that Michael Bloomberg "unleashed one of his strongest attacks yet" on Sanders on Monday, "lashing the Democratic primary frontrunner's record on gun control." Bloomberg tweeted, "The NRA paved the road to Washington for Bernie Sanders. He spent the next three decades making sure they got a return on their investment. We deserve a president who is not beholden to the gun lobby."

The Washington Times (2/24, McLaughlin, 492K) reports Pete Buttigieg "told voters at a campaign event in North Charleston that the Sanders brand of politics is too divisive to develop a winning coalition in the 2020 general election."

AIPAC Responds To Sanders' Boycott. The Washington Times (2/24, Chasmar, 492K) reports, "The pro-Israel lobbying group American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) issued a blistering statement" criticizing Sanders "for claiming the organization gives a platform for 'bigotry.'" Sanders said over the weekend "that he would be keeping in tradition by not attending AIPAC's annual conference this year, writing that the Palestinian people deserve 'peace and security' just like the Israelis." The Washington Examiner (2/24, Klein, 448K) reports Sanders last year "spoke at an Islamic conference that featured a parade of anti-Semitic speakers who have denied Israel's legitimacy." The New York Post (2/24, Jacobs, 4.57M) also reports.

Facebook Investigated Suspicious Content Promoting Sanders. The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Glazer, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Facebook has recently investigated suspicious content supporting Sanders, but was unable to substantiate claims that Russian actors or supporters of the President were involved.

Biden Says He Will Win South Carolina "By Plenty."

The AP (2/24, Peoples) reports, "Joe Biden expressed confidence on Monday that he would win this weekend's South Carolina primary." Biden "said he would win 'by plenty' in Saturday's contest in South Carolina, the first state with a sizable black population to weigh in on the Democratic race." The AP (2/24, Foreman) reports that there is a "generational split among black voters" that could hurt Biden, who has led "among black Democratic voters overall" while trailing Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) nationally among African American voters under 35.

Biden Releases $640B Housing Plan. Bloomberg (2/24, 4.73M) reports that Biden on Monday "unveiled a $640 billion housing plan that includes tax credits for first-time homebuyers and low-income renters, as well as more federal assistance for the country's poorest renters." According to Bloomberg, Biden's advisers think the plan is "especially important in aiding African Americans and Latinos."

Stern: Trump "Loves" Bloomberg, "Knows How Strong The Guy Is."

The Washington Examiner (2/24, Yilek, 448K) reports that radio host Howard Stern on Monday "claimed President Trump has a soft spot" for Michael Bloomberg "and doesn't want to run against the former New York City mayor. 'I've talked to Donald a million times privately about Bloomberg. We both agree that he was one of the best [expletive] mayors on the planet,' Stern said...on his SiriusXM radio show. 'Donald loves Bloomberg,' he added. 'That's why he doesn't want him running.'" The article adds that Trump has stepped up "his attacks on Bloomberg in recent weeks, mocking his height and debate performance." However, "Stern asserted it's all a farce. 'He knows how strong the guy is,' Stern said. 'He loves him. We all love him. Donald would even say, 'He's better than I am.'"

South Carolina's Largest Newspaper Endorses Buttigieg For Democratic Nomination.

The Columbia State (2/24, 390K) endorses Pete Buttigieg for the Democratic presidential nomination, writing that the party's nominee "will face a formidable general election opponent" in President Trump, "an incumbent armed with a strong economic record and a force of personality that has spawned a fiercely loyal base of supporters. It is vital, then, for the Democrats to nominate an energetic, disciplined candidate who can offer voters a powerful yet pragmatic vision of a better America." The State says that candidate is Buttigieg, who has a "message of unity [that] is an inspiring and empowering one."

Protesters Criticize Buttigieg's Participation In South Carolina Minimum Wage March. Reuters (2/24, Renshaw) reports Pete Buttigieg marched on Monday with McDonald's workers in Charleston, South Carolina "who are demanding a $15 minimum wage. Buttigieg joined the front of the line, helping carry a large sign that read 'Unions for All' while workers chanted." But "a group of counter-protesters wearing shirts that read 'Black Voters Matter' disrupted the speeches with chants: 'Pete can't be our president. Where was $15 in South Bend?'" Buttigieg "briefly addressed them, saying, 'No matter who you support for president, I support you and I support unions and a $15 minimum wage.'"

Liberal Groups Upset Klobuchar Voted For Several Trump Judicial Nominees.

The New York Times (2/24, Lerer, Corasaniti, 18.61M) reports that Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) has been touting "her years of experience as a lawmaker and her bipartisan appeal as a pragmatist as the central assets that would make her the toughest Democratic nominee to face off against President Trump. But one aspect of her record in particular has frustrated and even outraged some [Democrats]: her support for Mr. Trump's judges." In 2019, her "willingness to aid the Trump administration in its sweeping transformation of the federal judiciary earned Ms. Klobuchar an F grade from a liberal advocacy group focused on the federal judiciary. From 2017 to 2018, Ms. Klobuchar voted to advance Mr. Trump's judicial confirmations 64 percent of the time, according to Demand Justice, the advocacy group."

Man Whose Murder Conviction Is Being Questioned Points Finger At Klobuchar. ABC News (2/24, Carrega, 2.97M) reports on its website, "A Minneapolis inmate who spent more than half his life so far behind bars says he was wrongfully convicted for murder and blames...Klobuchar, in part, for standing by what he calls an injustice. Myon Burrell, now 33, was convicted for the 2002 first-degree murder of 11-year-old Tyasha Edwards, who was shot by a stray bullet as she was doing homework inside her house. Burrell, who was 16 when he was arrested," and "Hans Williams and Ike Tyson, two men in their early 20s at the time and not previously known to Burrell, were convicted and sentenced the following year. At the time, Klobuchar was the chief prosecutor of Hennepin County, where the case took place." Last month, the AP reported, according to ABC News, "there were several flaws with Burrell's case at the time of the investigation – flaws that Burrell claims should lead to his exoneration."

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (2/24, Xiong, 1.04M) reports that Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman on Monday came to Klobuchar's defense regarding Burrell's murder conviction. The article says that Burrell "was convicted in 2003 when Klobuchar served as Hennepin County attorney at the time, and again in 2008 when Freeman ran the office. 'Amy Klobuchar was not the trial attorney on the case,' Freeman said in a written statement. 'It should not be treated like a political football.'" The article adds, "A brief clip of Burrell's interview posted on the ABC News website showed him responding to a reporter's question about Klobuchar's culpability. 'Personally, I feel like she is the source of everything that happened,' Burrell said. ... Klobuchar has said any new evidence in the case should be reviewed."

Steyer's Spending In African American Community Draws Scrutiny.

The New York Times (2/24, Saul, 18.61M) reports Tom Steyer "has lavished money on the black community – employing black-owned businesses, hiring African-Americans for his staff and buying ads with black-owned news organizations." However, the Times says that "as he tries to forge connections with the black community, some of Mr. Steyer's transactions have drawn increased scrutiny, and prompted suggestions that he is trying to wield influence through his spending." That spending "includes commercial rent payments to a company owned by Jennifer Clyburn Reed," daughter of House Majority Whip Clyburn, "whose endorsement is considered a seal of approval for candidates hoping to win [South Carolina]'s critical African-American vote."

WTimes Analysis: In 2020 Democratic Race, Little Talk Of Potential SCOTUS Vacancies.

The Washington Times (2/24, Swoyer, 492K) reports, "The unexpected death of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia on the day of the 2016 Republican debate in South Carolina made the high court a top issue in the race and ultimately rallied conservative voters to help put Donald Trump in the White House." In this year's Democratic presidential race, however, "the tilt of the Supreme Court is barely a blip on the radar." The Times says "the issue of potential Supreme Court vacancies hasn't been raised much – if at all – in the nine debates the Democratic Party has held." University of Tennessee-Knoxville political scientist Richard Pacelle "said the Democrats are skipping over Supreme Court nominees to get to subjects where they clash more violently, such as on health care." Said Pacelle, "You are looking for the distinctions between the candidates rather than the things they agree on. But I think they do this to their own peril."

NYTimes Analysis: Nevada Caucuses Had Similar "Errors And Consistencies" As Iowa Contest.

The New York Times (2/24, Collins, Lu, Smart, 18.61M) reports, "The final results of the Nevada Democratic caucuses were released on Monday, and the data appears to contain errors and inconsistencies similar to those that plagued the contests in Iowa a few weeks ago." The Times says an "analysis" it conducted "found flaws in the results of at least 9 percent of precincts, including some instances in which delegates appeared to have been given to the wrong candidates." The Times adds, "Shortly after the final caucus results were released, the Nevada State Democratic Party chairman, William McCurdy, said in a statement that the state should consider abandoning caucuses." Said McCurdy, "I believe we need to start having a serious conversation ahead of next cycle about the limitations of the caucus process and the rules around it. It's time for our state party and elected leaders to look at shifting to a primary process moving forward."

MSNBC's Matthews Apologizes For Comparing Sanders Nevada Win To Nazi Conquest Of France.

The New York Times (2/24, Grynbaum, 18.61M) reports MSNBC's Chris Matthews "issued an unusual apology" to Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) on Monday night "after he compared his victory in the Nevada caucuses to the Nazi takeover of France in World War II." Matthews said, "Sen. Sanders, I'm sorry for comparing anything from that tragic era in which so many suffered, especially the Jewish people, to an electoral result of which you were the well-deserved winner." The Times calls it "a moment of humility for the veteran 'Hardball' anchor," who "who has a reputation for pugnacious commentary."

Upton Will Seek Reelection In MI6.

The Detroit News (2/24, Mauger, 825K) reports that Rep. Fred Upton (R-MI), "who's increasingly become a Democratic target, will run for an 18th term" this fall, "he said Monday night. The decision by Upton, who said he had 'unfinished business,' ensures that Republicans will have a well-funded incumbent to run in what could be a competitive" race in MI6. In 2018, "a year when Democrats flipped two other US House seats in the state, voters re-elected Upton by 4.5 percentage points." The News adds, "Known as a moderate Republican, Upton has, at times, publicly disagreed with President Donald Trump. He said his 'unfinished business' included fighting the opioid epidemic, immigration reform and protecting the Great Lakes. He also touted his willingness to work across the aisle."

The AP (2/24) reports Upton "was being watched closely as a potential House retiree as Republicans attempt to regain the chamber majority in the November elections. He entered the House in 1987." The AP adds that Upton "said in an interview that the rise" of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "as front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination 'probably' was a factor in his decision to run again. Many Republicans believe a Sanders nomination would dramatically increase their chances of capturing House control. Upton told [the AP] he believed Sanders would hurt the campaigns of down-ballot Democratic candidates, saying Sanders is 'too much to chew on' for many Michigan voters."

Bloomberg Analysis: Pence Has "Early Edge" In 2024 GOP Race.

In an article titled "Mike Pence's 2024 Presidential Campaign Has Already Begun," Bloomberg (2/24, 4.73M) reports that President Trump's reelection campaign is giving Vice President Pence "an early edge in the race that's already shaping up for the Republican nomination in 2024." According to Bloomberg, Pence "has lately been a mainstay at Trump's signature campaign rallies, seldom missing the opportunity to introduce the president while test-driving a few crowd-pleasing lines of his own. The vice president has his own political action committee and has been steadily expanding his travel as a surrogate for Trump, with a particular focus on Michigan, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania.”

WSJournal Backs Suit Against California’s Restrictions On Officials’ Comments About Unions.

The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial writes that after the Supreme Court’s 2018 Janus v. Afsome ruling, California established rules that the Journal says undermined the decision, by prohibiting public officials from speech that may be understood as critical of union membership or union dues, but on Friday seven California officials sued, contending that the prohibition violates the First Amendment and is also unconstitutionally vague. The Journal agrees with their objections.

Campaign Finance Law Criticized As Benefiting Wealthy Candidates And Media.

Bradley A. Smith, Chairman of the Federal Election Commission, 2001-2005, and John R. Lott Jr., President of the Crime Prevention Research Center, write in the Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), arguing that campaign finance law gives advantages to Michael Bloomberg not only because he is free to spend his own money, but also because he is free to use Bloomberg Media to attack President Trump. Smith and Lott add that while Democrats have objected to corporate involvement in politics after the Supreme Court’s 2010 Citizens United decision, Bloomberg has already spent more money in the 2020 cycle than did all corporations combined for the entire 2016 cycle.

Man Arrested After Exhibiting Suspicious Behavior At Pentagon.

The Washington Times (2/24, Wolfgang, 492K) reports, “A man was arrested after ‘acting suspiciously’ in a Pentagon parking lot Monday and is now being questioned by the FBI, military officials said.” The man was “approached by Pentagon security forces about 10:45 on Monday morning and then fled the area, spurring a chase through nearby Arlington National Cemetery.” According to officials, “authorities have searched the Pentagon’s north parking lot and all surrounding vehicles and the area is now considered safe.”

Rival Shiite Parties Seek Al-Sadr’s Help In Quelling Anti-Government Protests.

Reuters (2/24, Davison) reports, “When the grip of Iraq’s Tehran-backed Shi’ite Muslim parties and militias threatened to slip following the killing of Iranian general Qassem Soleimani, they turned to an unpredictable rival. At meetings in the Iranian holy city of Qom, they struck a deal with populist Shi’ite cleric Sayyed Moqtada al-Sadr, who commands a following of millions of Iraqis.” Citing “senior Iraqi officials and militia insiders,” Reuters says the parties “promised Sadr a greater say forming a new Iraqi government and an augmented spiritual leadership role among Shi’ite paramilitary groups. In return, he would draw on his mass following to weaken the anti-government and anti-Iran dissent that has erupted on Iraqi streets, and redirect the unrest toward demands for the withdrawal of U.S. forces from Iraq.”

Trumps Received $88K In Gifts From Foreign Leaders In 2018.

The AP (2/24, Lee) reports, “Foreign leaders appear to have scaled back their generosity when it comes to gifts given to President Donald Trump, his family and top officials,” according to an accounting posted to the Federal Register website on Monday. The list reveals “that Trump, his wife, Melania, his daughter Ivanka and son-in-law Jared Kushner reported receiving $88,420 worth of gifts from foreign leaders in 2018. That’s down from more than $140,000 they reported in 2017.” According to the article, “virtually all the gifts to the Trumps were turned over to the National Archives for display or storage, but as government employees, they have the option to purchase them.”

Administration Mulling Expelling Chinese Journalists From US.

Bloomberg (2/24, 4.73M) reports that the Administration “is weighing whether to expel Chinese journalists after China kicked out three Wall Street Journal reporters, part of a push by the Trump administration to show leaders in Beijing that it will resist restrictions on Americans working in China.” According to Bloomberg, “The administration’s options were to be discussed in a meeting of senior administration leaders at the White House later Monday led by Matt Pottinger, the deputy national security adviser who was once a Wall Street Journal reporter in Beijing.” Bloomberg says “there’s an intense debate over how severely to respond to the expulsions last week. Some advocate ordering dozens – and perhaps hundreds – of Chinese reporters to leave, while others say that’s not legally possible or in keeping with American values on freedom of the press.”

The New York Times (2/24, Wong, Barnes, 18.61M) reports the Administration is also looking to limit “intelligence collection efforts in the United States by expelling journalists who have contact with intelligence agencies, people familiar with the discussions said.” Among the Administration’s “concerns is a belief that, unlike American journalists, some of the Chinese journalists working for state-run news organizations in the United States are filing reports, at least part of the time, for Chinese intelligence agencies, according to people familiar with the matter.” According to the article, “retaliation by the United States could lead to escalating cycles of retribution involving the two governments, private and state-run news organizations and intelligence agencies.”

Lawyer For US Claims Assange Put Lives In Danger.

The New York Times (2/24, Santora, 18.61M) reports that in London (2/24), a lawyer representing the US government “began laying out its extradition case against Wikileaks' Julian Assange "by arguing that he had put lives at risk." Attorney James Lewis said, "Reporting or journalism is not an excuse for criminal activities or a license to break ordinary criminal laws." The Times says Assange "has been indicted on 17 counts of violating the Espionage Act for his role in obtaining and publishing secret military and diplomatic documents and he could face as many as 175 years in prison if found guilty on all charges."

Reuters (2/24, Holden) reports that Lewis "said hundreds of people across the world had to be warned after the WikiLeaks disclosures. Some had to be relocated. Others later disappeared, he said, although he said the United States would not try to prove that was directly a result of the disclosures. Some WikiLeaks information was found at Osama bin Laden's hideout in Pakistan, he added."

The AP (2/24) reports that Edward Fitzgerald, Assange's lawyer, "countered that the WikiLeaks publisher was being victimized by a 'lawless' American government that wanted to make an example of him." According to the AP, Fitzgerald "also said the 'inhuman' conditions Assange was likely to face in an American prison would put him at high risk of suicide." The Washington Post (2/24, Booth, Adam, 14.2M) reports Fitzgerald also "argued that Assange would not receive a fair trial in the United States because of his foreign nationality and his political opinions."

Malaysian Governing Coalition Collapses.

The New York Times (2/24, Beech, 18.61M) reports that Mahathir Mohamad, "the 94-year-old prime minister of Malaysia," and "his perennial presumptive heir," Anwar Ibrahim, "were the oddest of political colleagues: a nonagenarian onetime autocrat and the former protégé he had jailed for sodomy." But they "joined forces in 2018 to oust a governing party to which both had once belonged," and which was "at the center of the 1MDB scandal, the brazen looting of billions of dollars of Malaysia's public funds." The Times says "the unwieldy coalition that brought Mr. Mahathir and Mr. Anwar together crumbled on Monday. After a flurry of meetings...Mahathir submitted his letter of resignation as prime minister on Monday afternoon." However, the Times says "the move...did not appear to be designed to result in Mr. Mahathir actually giving up leadership of Malaysia. ... Malaysia's constitutional monarch accepted the resignation letter on Monday evening but then named Mr. Mahathir the interim prime minister."

Developer Abandons Canada Oilsands Plan Amid Political, Economic Uncertainty.

The New York Times (2/24, Krauss, 18.61M) reports, "A major effort to expand development of Canada's oil sands has collapsed shortly before a deadline for government approval, undone by investor concerns over oil's future and the political fault lines between economic and environmental priorities." The project "would have increased Canada's oil production by roughly 5 percent," but "it would have also slashed through 24,000 acres of boreal forest and released millions of tons of climate-warming carbon dioxide every year." The "unexpected withdrawal" by developer Teck Resources "relieves" Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "of a choice that was sure to anger environmentalists or energy interests, if not both."

WPost: Journalist Punished For Seeking To Hold Azerbaijan's Autocratic Ruler Accountable.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) accuses Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev of "high-level corruption and cronyism," and practicing "retribution and repression" against dissidents. The Post says Aliyev is "continuing to punish one of the journalists who investigated his family riches, Khadija Ismayilova, while also presiding over a phony parliamentary election." The Post lauds Ismayilova as "a courageous journalist struggling to carry out the very essence of democratic ideals – holding the powerful to account – under a regime with no tolerance of free expression or rule of law."

WSJournal Faults UK Prime Minister's High-Speed Rail Project.

The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial criticizes UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson's decision to approve HS2, a high-speed rail line from London to Manchester, that is to cut travel time between the two cities in half to one hour with top speeds of over 250 miles per hour. The Journal cites estimates that its final cost may be more than double the original estimate of £50 billion with the completion date now expected to be 2036 rather than the original 2027. The Journal argues that England would be better served by an array of less expensive projects to improve its train service rather than focusing on a single very expensive project.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45.7%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45.7%, and his disapproval at 51.2%. The President's job approval is down 0.3 since yesterday and his disapproval is up 0.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (2/19-2/23) finds Trump's approval at 49%, with 50% disapproving.

G20 Urges Countries To Adopt Cryptocurrency Regulations.

Law360 (2/24, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall that the G20 on Monday "urged more countries to adopt regulations that would compel cryptocurrency exchanges to collect customer information as a means of combating money laundering and terrorist financing, plus other potential macroeconomic problems." The G20's statement "referred to guidelines adopted last June by the Financial Action Task Force that it sees as key to stopping financial crimes.” The FATF’s “so-called travel rule aims to limit money laundering by calling on ‘virtual asset service providers,’ such as cryptocurrency exchanges, to collect extensive identifying information about individuals involved in cryptocurrency transactions. The G20 formally endorsed the FATF’s guidelines last July.”

EU Ministers Set To Approve Mandate For Negotiating Post-Brexit UK Trade Deal.

Reuters (2/25, Strupczewski, Strauss) reports governments in the EU “are set to adopt a negotiating mandate for their executive European Commission on Tuesday to clinch a deal with Britain this year on future ties after it left the bloc in January.” The mandate “aims to offer Britain, which sells 45% of exports and buys 53% of imports from the 27-nation bloc, no tariffs and no quotas in the future.” In exchange, the EU “wants London not to undercut European companies with lower – and therefore less costly – environmental, labor, tax and state aid standards.” However, the UK “does not want to make such a commitment, stressing its ‘primary objective in the negotiations is...economic and political independence’ and that it could accept tariffs and quotas similar to a deal the bloc has with Canada.”

Le Maire: France Will Support Lebanon, Including An IMF Program.

Reuters (2/24, El Yaakoubi) reports French Finance Minister Bruno Le Maire told reporters in Abu Dhabi that France is assessing options to assist Lebanon recover from its ongoing financial crisis, options that could include an IMF aid program should Beirut seek one. Le Maire “also told reporters in Abu Dhabi that he had discussed the situation in Lebanon with the United Arab Emirates leadership,” saying, “We are very concerned. ... We are looking at different options, maybe an IMF programme if the Lebanese government asks for one... but we will not manage any effort to help Lebanon.”

Inhofe Says Esper Told Him There Are No Plans To Reduce US Troops In West Africa.

The Washington Times (2/24, Meier, 492K) reports Defense Secretary Esper “is privately assuring nervous lawmakers that no African troop drawdown is in the works after getting significant pushback on Capitol Hill.” According to Senate Armed Services Chairman James Inhofe, Esper “said, if anything, we could be increasing the troops in the western part of Africa ... he said I want to make sure that we make very clear we have no plans to decrease our presence specifically in West Africa.” Inhofe, the Times adds, “last week led a delegation of lawmakers to Africa to highlight the importance of continued military cooperation in the region.”

Supreme Court Justices Appear To Favor Higher Damages For Embassy Bombing Victims.

The AP (2/24, Gresko) reports the Supreme Court “suggested Monday that it’s inclined to allow a bigger award of money to victims of the 1998 bombings of the U.S. embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.” The case “involves lawsuits filed by victims and their families against Sudan that accused the country of causing the bombings by aiding al-Qaida and leader Osama bin Laden, who lived in Sudan in the 1990s.” On Monday, the article says, “both conservative and liberal Supreme Court justices peppered Sudan’s lawyer with often skeptical questions and seemed more open to the arguments of the victims’ lawyer and a U.S. government attorney arguing on their side.”

Islamic Jihad Fires More Rockets At Israel After Announcing Stoppage.

Reuters (2/24, Al-Mughrabi, Ayyub) reports, “Gaza militants on Monday fired rockets toward Israel, which responded with air strikes, in the second day of an escalation that ebbed but did not come to an end despite the Palestinian militant group Islamic Jihad announcing a halt to its attacks.” According to Reuters, Islamic Jihad “has fired 80 rockets toward Israeli communities along the Gaza border since Sunday, an Israeli military spokeswoman said, while Israel has attacked sites in Gaza and Syria that have killed three Islamic Jihad members.” Reuters reports that Islamic Jihad “said earlier on Monday it had ended its ‘military response’ to Israel. But it then reversed course and resumed firing rockets, saying Israel had continued air strikes after the militants’ apparent de-escalation.”

Nomura’s Howlett: Sanders Nomination Could Accelerate Current Administration’s Push To Release GSEs.

Bloomberg (2/24, Maranz, 4.73M) reports, “As U.S. stocks tumbled on Monday, hit by mounting coronavirus fears, analysts also flagged the possibility that investors haven’t been taking Bernie Sanders seriously enough, after the Vermont senator’s surprisingly broad support in the Nevada caucus Saturday.” Bloomberg says that “Sanders winning the Democratic nomination would boost the chances the Trump administration will end the conservatorship of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac ahead of the November election,” according to Nomura’s Matthew Howlett. He “recommends clients buy Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac common stock ahead of the Democratic convention.” Howlett said, “It may sound counterintuitive, but we believe Bernie Sanders (who is coming off a strong showing Saturday and continues to increase his lead in the polls), as the Democratic nominee for president greatly increases the chances the GSEs will be released from conservatorship prior to any potential change at the White House in Jan. 2021.”

Odeon’s Bove Disagrees With Nomura’s “Buy.” Seeking Alpha (2/24, Kiesche, 512K) reports, “Answers from the U.S. Treasury and Federal Housing Finance Agency regarding their plan to release of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac from government conservatorship leads Nomura Instinet to reiterate its Buy recommendations on both Fannie and Freddie, while Odeon's Dick Bove says the answers were 'ill-defined and promised nothing.'" Disagreeing with Howlett's take, Bove wrote in a note, "While the Treasury has set out a framework as to what is to be done, the hard work of creating specific recommendations from these concepts has not been completed – or perhaps not even begun."

GSE Multifamily Originations Slowed In Q4.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (2/24, Hollier, Subscription Publication) reports, "Originations of multifamily loans for delivery to the government-sponsored enterprises slowed in the final three months of 2019 as the industry adjusted to the new investment limits set for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." In September, the FHFA "increased the cap on Fannie's and Freddie's multifamily lending to $100 billion each through the end of 2020, with at least 37.5% of their business earmarked for affordable housing. Previously, the two GSEs' multifamily lending was individually capped at $35 billion per year, with exceptions for affordable-housing and energy- or water-efficiency loans." According to IMF, "Walker & Dunlop, one of the top originators of GSE multifamily loans, produced $3.22 billion of the product in the fourth quarter of last year, a 31.6% decline from the last quarter of 2018." W&D said, "Fannie and Freddie origination volumes were lower than a typical fourth quarter but in line with our expectations ... as the GSEs pulled back on their lending at the beginning of the quarter, resulting in lower market-wide GSE volumes."

Equifax: HELOC Market May Be In For A Rebound.

National Mortgage News (2/24) reports, "The HELOC business is booming, but traditional lenders risk losing market share. Rising home values, flat wage growth, record levels of consumer debt and interest rate uncertainty have driven home equity line of credit (HELOC) loan origination to record highs. In fact, a 2018 report from Freddie Mac projects that HELOCs will continue to be a key market driver well into the future." NMN adds that according to a "recent report from J.D. Power, online lenders receive higher customer satisfaction scores than traditional home equity lenders. More importantly, that same study found that HELOC borrowers are more likely to look for alternative lending sources before choosing a home equity loan."

Joe Biden Releases $640B Housing Plan.

The Hill (2/24, Budryk, 2.98M) reports that on Monday, Democratic presidential hopeful Joe Biden released a $640 billion housing plan. According to Biden's campaign, on top of improving affordability, the proposal would establish a "Homeowner and Renter Bill of Rights." The proposal is based on six "Biden principles for housing," including: "affordability, stability, safety/health, accessibility, energy efficiency/resilience and proximity to good schools and jobs." Biden's plan would strengthen eviction protections, and crack down on exclusionary zoning and land use restrictions. Biden reportedly also "pledged to address discriminatory practices by financial institutions by expanding upon 2013 legislation enacted by the Obama administration."

Bloomberg (2/24, Epstein, 4.73M) reports, "Biden would also aim to work with Congress on a tax credit for low-income renters who make too much money to qualify for Section 8 vouchers but still struggle to pay their housing costs. It would aim to reduce rent and utilities to 30% of annual income and would cost $5 billion annually, according to his plan. It would also fully fund the Section 8 program so that all eligible families can benefit, according to Biden's campaign."

National Mortgage Professional (2/24, Hall) reports, "Furthermore, Biden is proposing the creation of a $100 billion affordable housing fund to build new homes and upgrade existing ones. This would include $20 billion for the Housing Trust Fund, paid for with an increase in the assessment on Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac."

Newsweek (2/24, 1.53M) provides additional coverage of Biden's housing plan.

FHFA To Reexamine FHLBanks' Membership Guidelines.

American Banker (2/24, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "The Federal Housing Finance Agency is taking a closer look at its membership guidelines for the Federal Home Loan banks in light of 'conduit arrangements' between Home Loan bank members and entities that are not allowed to belong to the system. In a request for information issued Monday, the FHFA said it would be conducting an overview of how it regulates the 11 Home Loan banks to ensure that they are complying with the mission of the Home Loan Bank System to advance community development, and that they can withstand an economic downturn." FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "We've only heard of a handful of instances where people were trying [to take advantage of conduit deals], but if you could imagine, it is one of those things where if you get a handful that have figured out a way to do that ... you're opening the door." National Mortgage News (2/24) and Asset Securitization Report (2/24) carry American Banker's coverage.

National Mortgage Professional (2/24, Hall) reports that Calabria said, "We look forward to hearing from all interested parties about how FHFA's membership regulations affect the safety and soundness and mission of the FHLBanks. There is no predetermined outcome for this RFI, other than to ensure that membership rules are clear, consistently applied to all applicants, and that access to the Banks' low cost advances do not jeopardize the System's role as a key source of liquidity to support housing finance."

The ABA Banking Journal (2/24) reports, "Comments on the RFI are due in 120 days and will be used to inform any potential rulemaking FHFA may deem appropriate. The American Bankers Association welcomed the FHFA's efforts to ensure the safety and soundness of the FHLB system and allow adequate time for the industry to provide feedback."

Calabria Wants FSOC To Look Into Potential Systemic Risks Posed By Nonbank Mortgage Lenders.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg Law (2/24, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports that FHFA Director Mark Calabria "says he's encouraged fellow members of the Financial Stability Oversight Council to look into potential systemic risks posed by the mortgage market." Calabria told reporters on Monday, "It would be my hope that FSOC begins a process this year to look more broadly at an activities based framework for the overall mortgage market." While Calabria said that he does not wish to "prejudge the process," he hopes the FSOC will probe issues like how regulators cooperate to address concerns about a nonbank. Bloomberg BNA (2/24, 4K) carries Bloomberg Law's coverage.

Calabria Stresses Importance Of CUs, Community Lenders At CUNA Conference.

According to the Credit Union National Association (2/24), FHFA Director Mark Calabria "talked about credit unions from the regulator perspective Monday at CUNA's Governmental Affairs Conference." Calabria said that credit unions and other community lenders are the "backbone of the mortgage finance system." CUNA says that Calabria "expressed admiration for credit unions and said he was committed to making a strong mortgage market that works for all, with credit unions an important part. Calabria encouraged credit unions to reach out to FHFA with recommendations on policy changes and ways to streamline regulations." Calabria said, "I think it's so important that what you do is special, and how you do it is special. No one else in the mortgage origination business can say their borrowers are other members. I think it's fair to say that the last thing you'd ever want to do is foreclose on a member; rather, you'd like to help them stay in their home through good times and bad."

Republicans Seek To Slash Regulatory Costs To Promote Affordable Housing.

The Hill (2/24, Bucchino, 2.98M) reports, "Republicans at the state and federal level are pushing for lower costs associated with regulations as a way to address the nation's affordable housing crisis." Rep. Ralph Norman (R-SC) and North Carolina state Sen. Paul Newton (R) "highlighted regulations at a forum last week in Charlotte, N.C., hosted by The Hill, arguing that cutting those costs, while creating more sustainable housing, would help with homeowner stability."

Agency MBS Trading Starts 2020 Off With A Bang.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (2/24, Muolo, Subscription Publication) says, "The average daily trading volume in agency MBS started the year on a high note at $251.5 billion for January, according to figures compiled by Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association. It was the strongest reading over the past 13 months and then some, coming at a time when bond market watchers are unsure of which way rates might be headed." According to IMF, "New MBS creation was strong in January, a month that typically brings weak volumes." According to "figures compiled" by IMF, "Ginnie Mae issuers placed $55.0 billion of bonds with investors during the month, a sequential gain of 6.7%. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac issuance came in at $61.2 billion and $51.1 billion, respectively, representing slight declines for both. All three agencies together managed a combined gain of 1.0%."

First American: Low Rates, Millennial Demand Drive Housing Market Potential To A Two-Year High.

HousingWire (2/24, Lloyd, 23K) reports that low mortgage rates "drove the nation's housing market potential to a two-year high in January, according to First American." Chief Economist Mark Fleming said, "Housing market potential increased 1.4% in January 2020 relative to the previous month, and grew 4.7% year over year, an increase of 240,050 potential existing-home sales and the highest rate of yearly growth since December 2017. Actual existing-home sales exceeded housing market potential by 1%, or an estimated 53,900 seasonally adjusted annualized sales." According to Fleming, low mortgage rates and rising demand from Millennials are primary drivers. He said, "In 2020, 4.8 million Millennials will turn 30 – the peak age for home-buying. They're fortunate to be entering the housing market at a time of historically low mortgage rates and a strong economy. However, there are challenges. Millennials face a very limited supply of existing homes available for sale, especially homes in the entry-level price range."

VA Originations Soar In 4Q19.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (2/24, Brooks, Subscription Publication) says, "Mortgage firms originated a record $75.7 billion worth of VA loans in the fourth quarter, a sequential improvement of 16.3%." According to IMF, "For the full year, production soared by 42.7% to $216.8 billion, also a record. The driver: strong refinance volume driven by low interest rates. VA purchase lending fell 14.3% to $28.7 billion from the third to the fourth quarter. However, for all of 2019, purchase loans improved a modest 7.5%." The decline in Q4 purchase activity "was a disappointment given the rising trend in the VA purchase loan market during the three previous quarters. Nonetheless, purchase lending accounted for a substantial share of total VA business in 2019." IMF says, "In terms of full-year origination volume, Veterans Home Loans led the pack with $15.5 billion, followed by Quicken Loans ($14.0 billion) and USAA FSB ($11.1 billion)."

Altisource: AI Gains New Importance In Competitive Origination Market.

M Report (2/24, Albanese) says that Altisource's recently-released "State of the Originations Industry" report indicated "that 22% of those surveyed said artificial intelligence as the most important factor in a competitive mortgage market." Altisource VP Ben Hall said, "While the cost to originate a mortgage has continued to rise in recent years, advances in technology are providing opportunities to improve the bottom line. It is more important than ever for organizations to invest in technology and work with vertically integrated third-party service providers to leverage leading technology solutions." According to Altisource's report, "POS solutions are being used to improve the customer experience by making the process of applying for a loan more simple and consistent. Back-office workflow incorporates AI and machine learning to improve quality, drive efficiency and enhance margins for early adopters. Two examples of how organizations are using these technologies include high-volume document processing and intelligent data extraction."

Industry Leaders Praise Nomination Of Dana Wade For FHA Commissioner.

DS News (2/24, Albanese) reports, "Insiders from the housing market reacted favorably to President Donald Trump's announcement that he intends to nominate Dana T. Wade to be the new Federal Housing Commissioner." Five Star Global CEO Ed Delgado said, "Dana is ideally suited to succeed Commissioner Montgomery as head of FHA and I applaud the nomination." The Collingwood Group Chairman Tim Rood said, "President Trump's choice to nominate Dana Wade for Assistant Secretary for HUD & FHA Commissioner is well deserved and well-timed." USMI President Lindsey Johnson said that her organization "applauds" Wade's nomination.

Singletary: Reverse Mortgages Allow Older Adults To "Borrow For Retirement."

In her column for the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M), Michelle Singletary discusses how reverse mortgages allow older adults to borrow for retirement. She explains, "Unlike a traditional mortgage, with this loan product, you don't have to make monthly payments. Reverse mortgage borrowers don't pay back their loans until they move, sell or die." Then, "once the home is sold, any equity that remains after the loan is repaid is distributed to the person's estate." Singletary highlights a February paper by researchers at the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College, which "looked at whether a reverse mortgage is worth it for older homeowners who need money and have equity in their homes." The researchers wrote, "For many households, particularly those with less wealth, their home equity is larger than their financial assets," and "tapping home equity in retirement could provide millions of retirees with a way to make ends meet or to maintain their standard of living." But, there are costs, which means that "a reverse mortgage works best if you plan to stay in your home for a long time."

Angel Oak EVP: QM Patch Expiration Will Push Volume Into Non-QM Market.

Writing for National Mortgage Professional (2/24), Angel Oak EVP Tom Hutchens says that on January 10, 2021, "the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's (CFPB) "QM Patch" will expire, meaning that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will no longer be allowed to back loans for consumers with DTI greater than 43 percent." According to him, "The impact on loan officers will be dramatic," and when the QM Patch expires, "the non-QM market will certainly spike as far fewer loans will be eligible for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac participation."

Analysis: Demand For Rental Housing Is Recession-Proof.

Writing for National Real Estate Investor (2/24, 131K), Pat Jackson says that "it does appear that demand for rental housing is impervious to economic downturns and other key real estate variables." Arguing that "current trends support constant demand for multifamily units," Jackson urges readers to consider "the government agencies' role and commitment to multifamily." According to him, "Both Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae are mission-driven when it comes to housing. However, their vision is not myopic. They solve their housing goals by deploying numerous strategies, whether long duration, fixed-rate or other debt types. Unsurprisingly, rental housing remains a critical component of their strategy."

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (2/18, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 1.357 percent.

Dollar Stays Flat.

Reuters (2/25, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar checked its march higher on Tuesday, as investors sharply raised bets that the growing fallout from the coronavirus outbreak would prompt US interest rate cuts." The dollar index against a basket of currencies "was flat at 99.321." The yen, meanwhile, "rebounded hard overnight," but "handed back a bit of its rise as Asian traders still fret about its exposure to China."

Gold Falls.

Reuters (2/25, Narayanan) reports, "Gold prices fell on Tuesday as investors booked profits from a jump to a seven-year high in the previous session and as equities regained some footing, but a spike in coronavirus cases outside of China capped bullion's losses." Spot gold "was down 0.7% at $1,648.36 per ounce as of 0605 GMT," while US gold futures "fell 1.6% to $1,650.60."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (2/25, Obayashi) reports, "Oil climbed on Tuesday as investors sought bargains after crude benchmarks slumped almost 4% in the previous session, although concerns about the coronavirus spreading out of China and curbing major economies and fuel demand capped gains." Brent crude "rose 49 cents, or 0.9% to $56.79 a barrel by 0751 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude futures "gained 42 cents, or 0.8%, to $51.85, recovering from a 3.7% drop in the previous session."

August Trial Set For Backpage.com Founders In Sex-Ad Case.

The AP (2/24) reports, "An Aug. 17 trial in Phoenix has been scheduled for the founders of Backpage.com in what federal authorities have described as a scheme to knowingly publish ads for sexual services and launder money earned from the ads." According to the AP, "Founders Michael Lacey and James Larkin and the four employees of the classified advertising site have pleaded not guilty to the charges. Additionally, the site's chief executive and sales and marketing director have pleaded guilty." Backpage.com "is accused of ignoring warnings to stop running advertisements promoting prostitution, sometimes involving children, because the site has brought in $500 million on prostitution-related revenues since its inception in 2004."

Experts Say US Should Not Be Confident About Security Of 2020 Election.

The Washington Post (2/24, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that an informal survey of more than 100 cybersecurity experts of The Network found 57 percent of respondents were not confident about security for the 2020 election. Dave Aitel, a former NSA computer scientist who is now CEO of the cybersecurity company Immunity, said, "There are no signs that any part of our institutions are capable of providing an election that is reasonably secure from tampering and manipulation." Bruce Schneier, fellow and lecturer at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government, added, "Every part of the voting process is vulnerable. This includes the voter registration process, the voting itself, the vote tabulation, and the results-reporting system." The Network features experts "from the US government, private sector and the security research community."

US Agencies Reacting To Security Concerns With TikTok.

The Hill (2/24, Bimbaum, 2.98M) reports that, despite TSA's move to bar its employees from using the TikTok app, the episode also "highlighted frustration that various government agencies have been slow to recognize the potential threat from TikTok – and how difficult it can be to manage employees' personal social media presences." The TSA move came "after criticism from Senate Minority Leader Charles Schumer (D-NY), who along with other China hawks have raised concerns about government employees using the app, which they claim could allow China to access sensitive information about people in the US." Schumer wrote in a Sunday letter to TSA Administrator David Pekoske, "Recently, both the US military and the DHS, which oversees the TSA, detailed social media policies and guidelines as it relates to use of the China-owned app TikTok due to security and privacy concerns."

European Commission Moves To Messaging App "Signal" To Boost Security.

The Verge (2/24, Porter, 2.05M) reports the European Commission has "told its staff to switch to the encrypted Signal messaging app in a move that's designed to increase the security of its communications." Politico reports that, earlier this month, "a message on the commission's internal messaging boards notified employees about the change." According to Politico, Signal "will not be used for all communication." Encrypted emails will be "used to send non-classified but sensitive information, and classified documents use tighter security measures still." The UK's Conservative party "also recently switched to the service." The initiative comes as "the EU is attempting to lock down the security of its communications in the wake of high-profile hacks."

Pentagon Issues Guidelines For Battlefield AI.

The Washington Times (2/24, Wolfgang, Glenn, 492K) reports on Monday, the Department of Defense "rolled out a sweeping set of ethical guidelines to govern the use of artificial intelligence on the battlefield," which the Times calls "a major step forward in the military's campaign to establish firm controls over 21st-century technology." The guidelines were "developed after 15 months of consultation with top technology industry leaders." Under the guidelines, "AI will be employed only in a given situation after an explicit, well-defined purpose has been laid out and is thoroughly understood by all involved," and will always be subject to being overridden by a person. Defense Secretary Esper said, "AI technology will change much about the battlefield of the future, but nothing will change America's steadfast commitment to responsible and lawful behavior."

The AP (2/24, O'Brien) reports the Pentagon is "adopting new ethical principles as it prepares to accelerate its use of artificial intelligence technology on the battlefield." The new principles "call for people to 'exercise appropriate levels of judgment and care' when deploying and using AI systems, such as those that scan aerial imagery to look for targets." Air Force Lt. Gen. Jack Shanahan, director of the Pentagon's Joint Artificial Intelligence Center "said that decisions made by automated systems should be 'traceable' and 'governable,' which means 'there has to be a way to disengage or deactivate' them if they are demonstrating unintended behavior."

The Hill (2/24, Rodrigo, 2.98M) reports Secretary of Defense Mark Esper said in a statement, "The US, together with our allies and partners, must accelerate the adoption of AI and lead in its national security applications to maintain our strategic position, prevail on future battlefields, and safeguard the rules-based international order.” The recommendations, which were “developed over 15 months, follow the guidelines released by the White House in January.” The White House’s Office of Science and Technology Policy “said in a memo circulated to federal agencies that proposed regulations should encourage ‘fairness, non-discrimination, openness, transparency, safety, and security.’”

PDVSA Moves Oil Shipments To Different Rosneft Unit As US Threatens Further Sanctions.

Reuters (2/24, Parraga) reports internal documents from Venezuelan state-owned oil company PDVSA showed the company “has shifted several oil cargoes from Rosneft Trading SA, which was hit by U.S. sanctions last week, to another affiliate of the Russian oil giant.” Reuters says the documents showed “four cargoes carrying some 6.7 million barrels of Venezuelan oil which had previously been allocated to Rosneft Trading for February loading were changed in recent days to another unit of the Russian firm, TNK Trading.” The Trump Administration’s Special Representative for Venezuela Elliott Abrams “told Reuters on Monday that he was aware of the cargoes shifted to TNK Trading,” saying, “I’d only say that if they play games like that with OFAC, all that will happen is additional companies will get sanctioned.”

Federal Reserve

Fed Rate Cut Now Expected By The Middle Of The Year

According to the Washington Post (2/24, Siegel, 14.2M), “Central bank chiefs may be ill-equipped to battle the economic consequences” of the epidemic because interest rates are “already in negative territory in Europe and near historic lows in the United States.” The Post reports “making credit less expensive – the Fed’s standard tool for combating a slump – may offset some of the financial upheaval, but will do little to remedy broken supply chains or ease worker and consumer fears of contagion.” Nevertheless, the Post reports that “some investors now expect the Fed to cut rates to counteract some of the economic weakness.”

The Wall Street Journal (2/24, McCabe, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that there is still very little expectation among economists that a recession in the U.S. is imminent. The Journal also reports that federal-funds futures indicate that traders think there is an 85% probability that the Fed will cut rates by the middle of the year. Reuters (2/24, Burns) reports that “a month ago that was seen as a roughly 50-50 prospect.” According to Reuters, “Contracts expiring in early 2021 were priced for a Fed policy rate of around 1% or lower, compared with the current level of between 1.50% to 1.75%, where it sits after three rate cuts last year.” However, “Top U.S. central bank officials have signaled repeatedly that they see no need to cut rates further any time soon because they see the American economy performing well and it is too soon to judge the risk from coronavirus.”

Mester: Coronavirus Could Threaten US Economy But Too Soon To Assess Need For Rate Changes.

Bloomberg (2/24, Hajric, Ossinger, 4.73M) reports that Cleveland Fed President Loretta Mester on Tuesday “said the worsening coronavirus outbreak represents a threat to the U.S. economy, but not one that yet justifies any change in monetary policy.” Mester, “who is a voter this year on the Federal Open Market Committee,” is quoted as saying, “At this point, it is difficult to assess the magnitude of the economic effects. ... In my view, our current policy stance is appropriate given the outlook of growth near its trend pace,” and “solid labor market conditions.” The AP (2/24, Rugaber), Reuters (2/24, Dunsmuir), The Financial Times (2/24, Greeley, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and CNBC (2/24, Cox, 3.62M) also report.

Fed Accepts $40.75B In Overnight Repo Operation.

Reuters (2/24, Kerber) reports the New York Fed “said it accepted $40.75 billion in overnight bids from primary dealers in a repurchase agreement operations, a move intended to keep the federal funds rate within its target range.”

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Otting Discusses CRA Reform With Operation HOPE’s John Hope Bryant.

The Atlanta SaporitaReport (2/24) features a video on its site of Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting and senior executives at the OCC speaking with Operation HOPE Chairman John Hope Bryant about Community Reinvestment Act reform.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Lessons Of #MeToo’s Monster.” The New York Times (2/24, 18.61M) editorializes that “the hard-won, long-overdue conviction” of Harvey Weinstein “shows the obstacles presented by the American legal system to successfully prosecuting abusers.” For a “more balanced legal approach to sexual assault,” the Times supports changes to state statutes of limitations “to give victims the opportunity to come forward even years after a traumatic assault.” The Times also says “law enforcement authorities need to let women know that they will be listened to, and that their cases will be prosecuted quickly and thoroughly.”

Washington Post.

“Coronavirus Dangers Loom. Complacency Is One Of Them.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) says that while case data from China which suggests that the epidemic there “the epidemic there is easing” is hopeful, “a moment of optimism should not distract from preparations for a less favorable outcome.”

“The Weinstein Verdict Was A Singular Moment In The #MeToo Movement.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) reports a jury's verdict on Monday finding Harvey Weinstein guilty of two felony sex crimes was “a singular moment in the #MeToo movement, a statement that any man who sexually mistreats women in the workplace, no matter his wealth or prestige, can be held to account.” While the jury acquitted Weinstein of the “most serious charges,” the Post says that “the not-guilty findings on those charges, which would have rested on a pattern of conduct, don't diminish the importance of the justice rendered in a case that was fraught with legal complexities and social and political overtones.” The Post hopes “the bravery of these women coming forward to tell their stories under terrifying circumstances — and the fact that they were believed — will empower others who have been victimized.”

“An Education Plan That Trades A High Cost For Far Too Little.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) criticizes the high “price tag” of Maryland's education plan, which “would require $4 billion a year in new spending from state and local governments,” because it would do enough to solve underlying issues. The Post, pointing out that the state spends more than the national average on certain metrics, argues that “just spending more without attacking the inherent problems or insisting on real accountability is misguided.” It concludes that the plan “comes with a high cost while doing far too little.”

“In Azerbaijan, A Travel Ban And A Sham Election.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/24, 14.2M) accuses Azerbaijan President Ilham Aliyev of “high-level corruption and cronyism,” and practicing “retribution and repression” against dissidents. The Post says Aliyev is “continuing to punish one of the journalists who investigated his family riches, Khadija Ismayilova, while also presiding over a phony parliamentary election.” The Post lauds Ismayilova as “a courageous journalist struggling to carry out the very essence of democratic ideals — holding the powerful to account — under a regime with no tolerance of free expression or rule of law.”

Wall Street Journal.

“A Market Pandemic.” A Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial seems to caution investors against panicking over the coronavirus' effect on the global economy. The Journal argues that the US economy is strong, with low unemployment, solid wage growth and strong consumer spending. Given that stock prices are high, the Journal adds, a market correction does not foreshadow a recession.

“Bernie's Cuba Illiteracy.” The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) gets Cuba's history wrong, writing that the country had a high literacy rate before Castro took power, and that nations like Colombia and Ecuador came from behind to surpass Cuba in development while Castro's Cuba stagnated.

“California's Janus Jiu Jitsu.” The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial, writes that after the Supreme Court's 2018 Janus v. Afsome ruling, California established rules that the Journal says undermined the decision, by prohibiting public officials from speech that may be understood as critical of union membership or union dues, but on Friday seven California officials sued, contending that the prohibition violates the First Amendment and is also unconstitutionally vague. The Journal agrees with their objections.

“The Train That Ran Over Boris Johnson.” The Wall Street Journal (2/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial criticizes UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson's decision to approve HS2, a high-speed rail line from London to Manchester, that is to cut travel time between the two cities in half to one hour with top speeds of over 250 miles per hour. The Journal cites estimates that its final cost may be more than double the original estimate of £50 billion with the completion date now expected to be 2036 rather than the original 2027. The Journal argues that England would be better served by an array of less expensive projects to improve its train service rather than focusing on a single very expensive project.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Conan O'Brien: "Bernie Sanders is now the front-runner. ... He's getting a lot of attention. People are asking a lot of harder questions. For example, Bernie Sanders is now refusing to release his full medical records. That is true. Yeah, the senator defended himself. He said, 'It's not my fault. No one kept records during the bubonic plague.'"

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump is in India. ... Yes, and 100,000 people came to a stadium to hear him speak. Which, keep in mind, in India, that's like playing to an empty house. That's nothing."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump arrived in India, and there was kind of an awkward moment when Trump pulled out his laptop and said, 'Who can help me?'"

Trevor Noah: "Last night, [President Trump] flew 8,000 miles for his first state visit to India. Seven million people came out to see Trump go from the airport to the stadium. That's impressive. Although, to be fair, it's also India. There's 7 million people between any two locations."

Trevor Noah: "It is true that Donald Trump is very popular in India. All right? Some like him because of his anti-Muslim rhetoric. Some like him because of his business savvy. All of them like him because his skin looks like tikka masala."

Trevor Noah: "They're trying so hard to impress Trump that they're even building a wall to hide their slums. Trump has to love that: 'They built a wall, and I haven't seen a single Mexican.'"

Stephen Colbert: "A lot of moderate Democrats are concerned about having a democratic socialist at the top of the ticket. Last night, '60 Minutes' aired an interview with Bernie, and he didn't do much to put his critics at ease. ... Bernie, are you trying to kill everyone at MSNBC? You sound like Fidel Castro's mom. 'Now I know Fidel did a lot of murder, but look at this macaroni picture he made in the third grade. These little rotini down here are the graves of his enemies.'"

Stephen Colbert: "While the Democrats battle it out back home, Trump is abroad in India. ... Trump's first stop was at the home of Mahatma Gandhi, where he got the chance to spin a replica of the wheel that Gandhi used to make his own clothes. That's lovely. Now he knows what it feels like to work in one of Ivanka's factories."

Stephen Colbert: "The day's big event was a giant political rally for the President called 'Namaste Trump,' which I really hope means he had to publicly do yoga."

Stephen Colbert: "'Namaste Trump' was Modi's way of thanking Trump for a rally in September, when Trump joined the prime minister in Texas for an event called 'Howdy Modi!' Which went a lot better than Trump's event with the Chinese President, 'That's What Xi Said.'"

Stephen Colbert: "There is one challenge for Trump in India because Modi is a devoted vegetarian and plans to serve vegetarian food to the President. Oh, my God. We're going to war with India."

Jimmy Kimmel: "You know, a week from tomorrow, it's Super Tuesday. Fourteen states – including ours, California – vote. And if you're voting for a Democrat, you have to pick a candidate. ... Unfortunately, most people I talk to about this still don't know which one. Do you go with the candidate who has the best chance to beat Donald Trump? Do you go with the one you like the most? Or the candidate with the strongest teeth and bones?"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Boy, the debate on Wednesday was a disaster for Mike Bloomberg. The Democrats put on a...it was a real Vegas magic show. Elizabeth Warren sawed Bloomberg's campaign in half in Las Vegas."

Jimmy Kimmel: "You know, [Bloomberg]'s spending a lot of money. He's spent more than $500 million so far. He's buying everything – commercials, social media, billboards. He even hired the Houston Astros to go around stealing the other candidates' signs."

Jimmy Kimmel: "What I think the candidates should do, and I know this is not the traditional way they do it, but this isn't a traditional election. ... Instead of waiting for the nomination, I think the candidates should pick their running mates now to make it easier for us. Mike Bloomberg, for instance. He spent a ton of money and it worked, but he got hammered in the debate with stop-and-frisk and these harassment-related confidentiality agreements. What Michael Bloomberg needs is a strong running mate, and that running mate – I thought about this a lot – should be Denzel Washington. ... You'd get a huge chunk of the black vote. And while a lot of women want a female President, you know what else a lot of women want? Denzel Washington. That's right. Bloomberg-Washington. That's a strong ticket."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Next you have Joe Biden, another old white man whose biggest problem is that he's not progressive enough. So who do we pair him with? Flo. Energetic, woman, only person in the world with more commercials than Mike Bloomberg. She's got name recognition. She's literally progressive. She works for the company. And if anyone can figure out this insurance mess, she's been on that for years. And on top of that, Joe and Flo – great bumper sticker. Even Joe Biden could remember that."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Now we have Elizabeth Warren. She's tough, intelligent, almost too intelligent. Kind of the grown-up version of the smart kid no one likes that much in school. Very bright. But she needs someone fun. She needs someone like Lizzo. Liz and Lizzo."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Next we have Amy Klobuchar. She doesn't have a lot of support, doesn't have a lot of charisma. Out of money. Amy Klobuchar's only hope right now is Oprah Winfrey."

Jimmy Kimmel: "And the other wild card is Buttigieg. Mayor Pete. He's got some hurdles, though. He's too young. He's too clean. He's gay, which sadly is going to bother some people. And he's from South Bend, Indiana, which is just slightly bigger than a Walmart."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Meanwhile, the President is in India right now for a two-day 'Eat, Pray, Love Himself' tour."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The Indian prime minister organized a huge rally to welcome Trump at the largest cricket stadium in the world. Trump doesn't know much about cricket. The only cricket Trump knows are the ones he hears when he asks Melania if he can sleep in her room."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump and First Lady Melania Trump visited Taj Mahal today in India, and it must have been upsetting to Trump that Taj Mahal has been there for 400 years, but he declared bankruptcy after a year."

Seth Meyers: "While in India today, President Trump and First Lady Melania Trump visited Mahatma Gandhi's former home. Said Trump, 'Cool, where's he live now?'"

James Corden: "Of course, the other huge contest over the weekend was the Nevada caucuses. Bernie Sanders won big, which means he has now firmly established himself as the Democratic front-runner. Bernie is, of course, thrilled about this. This must be an incredible feeling. Almost nobody spends the weekend in Vegas and feels good about how things turned out."

James Corden: "Meanwhile, President Trump is making an official visit overseas. Today, he arrives in India for his first trip there. President Trump and First Lady Melania took some time to do a little sightseeing today. Here they are visiting the world famous Taj Mahal. Trump described the Taj Mahal as 'too understated.'"

More Than 100 New Coronavirus Deaths Confirmed, Total Now Tops 1,000.

The AP (2/11, McDonald) reports that "the daily death toll in China from a new virus topped 100 for the first time, pushing the total fatalities above 1,000 Tuesday." According to the AP, "Despite the official end of the extended Lunar New Year holiday, China remained mostly closed for business as many remained at home, with some 60 million people under virtual quarantine." The AP goes on to report that "with the death toll reaching 1,016 in mainland China and no end in sight, heads are beginning to roll. ... State media reported Tuesday that the top health officials in Hubei province, home to the epicenter of Wuhan, have been relieved of their duties."

Reuters (2/11, Kirton, Nebehay) reports that "layoffs were beginning despite assurances by President Xi Jinping that widespread sackings would be avoided, as supply chains for global firms from car manufacturers to smartphone makers ruptured." According to Reuters, "Statistics from China indicate about 2% of people infected with the new virus have died, and many had pre-existing medical conditions or were elderly. But the spread of the virus, which causes fever, cough and breathing difficulties, has already caused widespread disruption."

The CBS Evening News (2/11, story 6, 1:35, O'Donnell, 4.69M) reported the World Health Organization is "using its strongest language yet, calling that deadly coronavirus a very grave threat that could have powerful consequences, more powerful consequences than a terrorist attack." The New York Times (2/11, 18.61M) and the Washington Post (2/11, Denyer, 14.2M) have more updates on the coronavirus epidemic.

Crowley: Trump Administration Closely Monitoring Situation. Treasury Department Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs Monica Crowley said on WOR-AM (2/11, 17K), "Administration-wide we are really keeping a close eye on the coronavirus out of China and how it's spreading internationally as well. There are members of the Administration and the President's economic team who are keeping a close eye on this. They have said publicly – including the Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, Peter Navarro, the trade adviser, Larry Kudlow, the President's chief economic adviser – they have all said that we are taking a wait-and-see approach on this. They want to see if and when the coronavirus may peak, but certainly, they're keeping a close watch on any kind of economic impact that it might have."

Crowley: Trump Has "Delivered For American Communities."

Treasury Department Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs Monica Crowley said on WOR-AM (2/11, 17K) that when Trump "came into office, he pledged that he would revive the US economy through tremendous economic growth and that is exactly what we are seeing. Since his election, over seven million jobs have been created. The President has been talking about a blue collar boom – 100 percent. ... Just in the month of January, 44,000 construction jobs created. Wages rising now faster for lower income workers, which is the reverse from the trends that we saw under the previous Administration. ... When you pair that with unemployment at or near record lows for African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, Asian-Americans, women, Americans with disabilities, military veterans, poverty levels at or near record lows. This President and his Administration have delivered for American communities, American businesses and they're delivering for you."

Trump Withdraws Former US Attorney For DC As Nominee For Treasury Post.

Axios (2/11, Swan, Basu, 521K) reports President Trump is "withdrawing his nomination for former U.S. attorney for D.C. Jessie Liu to serve as the Treasury Department's undersecretary for terrorism and financial crimes, a top position overseeing economic sanctions, according to two sources with direct knowledge." Liu "stepped down from the U.S. attorney's office last month after Trump announced his intention to nominate her to the Treasury position in December 2019." Liu's confirmation hearing with the Senate Banking Committee was scheduled for this Thursday, but she was "informed that Trump was pulling her nomination Tuesday afternoon." Axios says the move to pull the nomination "was 'the president's call,' according to a former administration official familiar with the situation," and was made today. However, the decision

"has administration officials questioning the circumstances that led to Trump changing his mind – with the developments in the Roger Stone case today being the only new information they are aware of." Among other outlets, The New York \(NY\) Times (2/11, Baker, 18.61M), CBS News (2/11, Reid, Watson, Hymes, 3.68M), NBC News (2/12, Lee, Dilanian, Alexander, 6.14M), The Week (2/11, Krawczyk, 1.94M), The Hill (2/11, Moreno, 2.98M), Fox News (2/11, O'Reilly, 27.59M), and Fox Business (2/11, Shiff, 1.73M) also report.

Trump Administration Floats Treasury Official For Number Two Job At IMF.

Reuters (2/11, Lawder) reports the Trump Administration "is considering filling the No. 2 job at" the IMF "with Geoffrey Okamoto, a 35-year-old acting assistant secretary at the U.S. Treasury, three people familiar with the selection process said." The appointment of Okamoto "could strengthen the Republican administration's influence over the IMF, an institution Trump officials view as an ally in their efforts to rein in China's trade and economic practices." Okamoto "would replace David Lipton as the IMF's longest-serving first deputy managing director, whose departure was announced on Friday, 19 months before the end of his official term." Okamoto "has worked at the Treasury since 2017 and been involved in U.S.-China trade negotiations, planning and negotiations for the G20 and G7 meetings in addition to other international finance and development issues including debt relief for Somalia." Bloomberg (2/11, Martin, Mohsin, 4.73M) also reports.

Lawmakers Spar Over Treasury Rulemaking Process For Trump Tax Law.

The Hill (2/11, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports lawmakers at a House Ways and Means Committee hearing Tuesday "debated regulations meant to implement provisions for businesses in President Trump's 2017 tax-cut law, the latest round in the messaging battle between Democrats and Republicans over the president's signature legislative accomplishment." Democrats on the panel "argued that Treasury Department regulations were overly favorable to businesses as a result of lobbying from corporations." Ways and Means Chairman Richard Neal (D-MA) said, "Unfortunately, Treasury gave away the store by issuing some regulations that give even more tax breaks to corporations, and that are likely to further the deficit." Conversely, Committee Republicans "defended the Treasury Department's rule-making process and pushed back against the idea that the regulations will lead to additional increases in the deficit." Rep. Kevin Brady (R-TX) said, "We heard some criticism about Treasury here today. It seems to me, that when you rewrite the tax code as we did, it's a major undertaking. Rules and regulations have to be drawn to both implement and interpret what Congress intended."

Treasury's Bureau Of Fiscal Service Launches Pilot Programs Looking At Blockchain, AI.

Federal News Network (2/11, Brust, 220) reports the Bureau of the Fiscal Service's Office of Financial Innovation and Transformation (FIT), housed in the Treasury Department is launching two pilots, "one on distributed ledger technology, or blockchain, and another on artificial intelligence." These pilots will strive to answer the question of how digital workforces "can improve financial management and federal agencies' customer service." Adam Goldberg, "FIT's executive architect," told FNN that he thinks there should be an agency focused on "thinking about the future." Goldberg said, "Where we sit within the government at Treasury, there's many opportunities to really explore how an agency interacts with us, and how that might change how citizens interact with us, and how that may change and how any other entity like a bank is also interacting with Treasury." Goldberg, speaking on uses for blockchain, "said that about half the time FIT has pursued the application proactively. Half the time it's responding to possible uses which present themselves."

Sanders Narrowly Defeats Buttigieg In New Hampshire; Klobuchar Strong Third, Biden Fifth.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) won the New Hampshire Democratic presidential primary Tuesday, but much of the initial coverage focuses on the very strong showings by Pete Buttigieg and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) and the weak fifth-place finish by former Vice President Joe Biden. With just over 90% of votes counted, Sanders had 25.9%, Buttigieg 24.2%, Klobuchar 19.9%, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) 9.3%, Biden 8.7%, Tom Steyer 3.6%, Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-HI) 3.2%, Andrew Yang 2.8%, Deval Patrick 0.4%, and Sen. Michael Bennet (D-CO) 0.3%.

The AP (2/12, Peoples) reports Sanders "won New Hampshire's presidential primary Tuesday night, edging moderate rival Pete Buttigieg and scoring the first clear victory in the Democratic Party's chaotic 2020 nomination fight." Sanders and Buttigieg "represent different generations, see divergent paths to the nomination and embrace conflicting visions of America's future." Reuters (2/12, Whitesides, Becker) says "it was also a good night" for Klobuchar, while Biden "finished in a disappointing fifth place." As for Warren, she "said it would be a long, drawn-out battle for the nomination and the race was far from over." Bloomberg (2/12, 4.73M) says the "tight finish allows multiple candidates to claim success, even though Sanders came out on top. Voters looking for a moderate alternative to Sanders' democratic socialism were left without a clear choice."

The New York Times (2/12, Martin, Burns, 18.61M) reports Sanders "narrowly won" the primary, "consolidating support on the left and fending off a late charge by two moderate rivals to claim his second strong showing in two weeks and establish himself as a formidable contender for the Democratic nomination." The results "raised immediate questions about how much longer Mr. Biden and Ms. Warren, onetime front-runners, could afford to continue their campaigns." USA Today (2/12, Morin, Cummings, Wu, Garrison, 10.31M) reports, "Since 1972, no Democratic candidate finishing lower than second in the New Hampshire primary has gone on to win the nomination."

The Washington Post (2/12, Viser, Sullivan, 14.2M) says Sanders "claimed unchallenged control of the Democratic Party's left wing"

while Buttigieg "and a newly surging" Klobuchar "vied for the opposition mantle in a campaign that has been remade over the past eight days." Klobuchar's showing "represented a remarkable turnabout for a candidate who placed fifth in the [Iowa] caucuses in the state next door to her own." The New Hampshire Union Leader (2/12, Landrigan, 109K) reports Klobuchar "declared a clear victory after a disappointing fifth place in the Iowa caucus." She "said her showing was a validation that she's a candidate who can win crossover support from independents and even moderate Republicans." The Minneapolis Star Tribune (2/12, Condon, 1.04M) reports, "After languishing most of last year in low single digits in early-state and national polls, and landing in fifth place in Iowa despite a heavy investment in the state, Klobuchar shot into contention over the weekend in a show of resilience just ahead of a potential make-or-break contest."

New Hampshire's Foster's Daily Democrat (2/12, 17K) says the "unexpectedly strong performance" gave Klobuchar "a path out of New Hampshire as the contest moves on to the string of state-by-state primary contests that lie ahead." WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (2/12, Enstrom, 239K) reports on its website that Warren "praised Sanders and Buttigieg and noted Klobuchar's strong showing." She said, "Right now, it is clear that Sen. Sanders and Mayor Buttigieg had strong nights. And I also wanna congratulate my friend and colleague Amy Klobuchar for showing just how wrong the pundits can be when they count a woman out."

The Boston Globe (2/12, 972K) reports Sanders "thanked New Hampshire for 'a great victory tonight,'" while Buttigieg "congratulated Sanders on his 'strong showing tonight' but vowed to continue on the campaign trail." Buttigieg "said he 'might get dismissed as a naive newcomer,' but 'a fresh outlook is what makes new beginnings possible. It is how we build a new majority.'" The Boston Herald (2/12, Cotter, 410K) says Sanders "squeaked out a win." New Hampshire Public Radio (2/12) says on its website that it was Sanders' "second consecutive" New Hampshire primary victory after winning there in 2016 by a much wider margin. Despite the closeness of the race, the Wall Street Journal (2/12, Day, Collins, Jamerson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Sanders' win shows his continued resilience just months after a heart attack.

The Los Angeles Times (2/12, Barabak, 4.64M) says Sanders "eked out a narrow victory" over "a pair of more moderate Midwestern rivals who together out-poll[ed] the champion of progressive Democrats on his New England home turf. ... It was the second contest in a row – after last week's Iowa caucuses – in which Sanders failed to meet the high expectations generated by big crowds and his enormous nationwide fundraising success." CNN (2/11, 83.16M) reports on its website that though Sanders "won Iowa's popular vote," he "had fewer awarded delegates" than Buttigieg.

Politico (2/11, Siders, Murray, Spiner, Caputo, 4.29M) says Sanders "assert[ed] himself as the tentative frontrunner in a still-muddled Democratic primary field" as Klobuchar "sparked to life with a third-place finish." MSNBC (2/11, 7.86M) reports on its website that NBC exit polls "showed that 48 percent of the state's Democratic primary voters made up their mind within the past few days – a substantial increase from 25 percent saying they did in 2016 and 38 percent in 2008. The same amount of Democratic voters, 48 percent, said Friday's debate, in which Klobuchar's performance was widely praised, was either the most important or an important factor in their choice."

The AP (2/12, Woodall) writes, "New Hampshire Democrats gave Bernie Sanders a win, but also a warning." His "durability, based both on his 2016 campaign and the first two contests this year, cannot be questioned. ... But Sanders' liabilities are also clear, at least among a large segment of voters in the party who are wary of the 78-year-old self-identified democratic socialist, and how that label could be demonized" by President Trump.

Fox News (2/11, Re, 27.59M) reports on its website, "Sanders and Buttigieg will likely each receive 9 delegates to the Democratic National Convention after Tuesday's primary, because the state awards them proportionally; Klobuchar will receive 6." The Washington Times (2/12, McLaughlin, Sherfinski, 492K) reports Warren and Biden "were projected to lose out on winning any of the state's 24 delegates, which are distributed proportionately to those who finish above 15% either statewide or in a congressional district."

The New York Times (2/12, Flegenheimer, Glueck, 18.61M) says in an analysis that Warren and Biden – "the two fading former favorites who once seemed to have a hold on the liberal establishment and the moderate establishment...lost, badly. Two other professed unity candidates," Buttigieg and Klobuchar, "performed well in New Hampshire but have shown little capacity to resonate with nonwhite voters so far." The AP (2/12, Barrow) reports Biden moved on to South Carolina Tuesday, "staking his hopes for a comeback on the loyalty of black voters in the state." However, Susan Page writes in USA Today (2/12, 10.31M) that "the collapse of his support into single digits will not only make raising money and rallying supporters more difficult. It also raises questions about whether his campaign can survive until the Super Tuesday contests now three weeks away."

Dan Balz writes in the Washington Post (2/12, 14.2M), "Democrats braced themselves Tuesday night for a long and divisive contest for their party's presidential nomination after New Hampshire voters added new uncertainty to a race already scrambled by last week's caucuses in Iowa. ... The likely prospect now is that Sanders and several other candidates will divide the vote and delegates the rest of this month and into March, when more than 60 percent of the pledged delegates will be chosen." After the New Hampshire results were known, FiveThirtyEight updated its forecast and projected that while Sanders has a 38 percent chance of winning a majority of pledged delegates before the Milwaukee convention in July, there is a one-in-three chance that no candidate will secure a majority. On its website, NBC News (2/11, 6.14M) shows Buttigieg coming out of New Hampshire with a total of 23 delegates, Sanders 21, Warren eight, Klobuchar seven, and Biden six. A candidate needs 1,991 delegates to win the nomination.

The New York Times (2/11, 18.61M) reports that a national Monmouth University poll released Tuesday showed Sanders with "an outright lead" over Biden "for the first time since Monmouth began polling this election cycle." The poll had Sanders at 26%, Biden 16%, Buttigieg and Warren at 13% each, and Michael Bloomberg at 11%. Bloomberg (2/11, 4.73M) reports that the Monmouth poll "highlighted how Biden's fourth place finish in the Iowa caucuses last week has reshaped the nomination fight."

Before the polls closed Tuesday, Buttigieg told the CBS Evening News (2/11, story 4, 0:50, O'Donnell, 4.69M), "It will be very important for us to put up a very good showing, even knowing that we are competing against some competitors who are from right here in New England." In her own interview with the CBS Evening News (2/11, story 3, 1:50, O'Donnell, 4.69M), Klobuchar expressed optimism saying, "People are realizing, you know, what? She's actually doing better than anyone thought. And I think that's the story of my life, and that's the story of this campaign." The Hill (2/11, Manchester, 2.98M), Axios (2/11, Perano, 521K), and Vox (2/11, Nilsen, 2.27M) are among the other outlets with additional coverage of the Democratic race. ABC World News Tonight (2/11, lead story, 3:25, Muir, 7.77M), the CBS Evening News (2/11, lead story, 2:15, O'Donnell, 4.69M), and NBC Nightly News (2/11, lead story, 2:40, Holt, 6.35M) all led their newscasts with coverage before polls closed.

Trump Wins GOP Primary With 86% Of Vote. President Trump won the Republican primary with 86.1% of the vote. Ex-Gov. Bill Weld (R-MA) received 9.1%, with the remainder divided between minor candidates and write-ins. The New Hampshire Union Leader (2/11, 109K) reports supporters "chanted 'four more years; at a victory party Tuesday night, confident that the Democratic opposition will bolster the incumbent's chances of re-election." WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (2/11, Enstrom, 239K) reports on its website that the President "was not in New Hampshire, but his son, Donald Trump Jr., was in the Granite State and said his father has strong support in the state because of his record as president." Trump Jr. said, "He's the first politician in generations to actually do the things he said he was going to do, to actually implement the policies that he talked about."

At 11:45 p.m., the President tweeted, "The Fake News Media is looking hard for the Big Democrat Story, but there is nothing too fabulous. Wouldn't a big story be that I got more New Hampshire Primary Votes than any incumbent president, in either party, in the history of that Great State? Not an insignificant fact!" The Washington Times (2/11, Boyer, Sherfinski, 492K) says Weld "was banking most of his long-shot hopes on a strong performance in his backyard, and the lopsided loss could hasten his withdrawal from the race." The Week (2/11, 1.94M), however, says Weld did "surprisingly well." Reuters (2/11, Chiacu), the Fox News (2/11, O'Reilly, 27.59M) website, Politico (2/11, Oprysko, 4.29M), and The Hill (2/11, Axelrod, 2.98M) also report on Trump's victory.

Meanwhile, Politico (2/12, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports Trump "freely shared his thoughts on his potential rivals" on Twitter as the Democratic results came in, "throwing out insults to the underperformers and some rare praise to those who had a strong evening." At 9:21 p.m., Trump tweeted, "Elizabeth Warren, sometimes referred to as Pocahontas, is having a really bad night. I think she is sending signals that she wants out. Calling for unity is her way of getting there, going home, and having a 'nice cold beer' with her husband!" At 9:34 p.m., the President tweeted, "Impeachment King Steyer (how did that work out?) spent 200 Million Dollars and got less than 1% of the vote in Iowa, and only 3% of the Vote in New Hampshire. Could it be that something is just plain missing? Not easy to do what I did, is it?" At 10:23 p.m., Trump tweeted, "Bootedgeedge (Buttigieg) is doing pretty well tonight. Giving Crazy Bernie a run for his money. Very interesting!"

Bennett, Yang End Campaigns; Patrick May Soon Follow. Bennet and Yang ended their White House bids after their poor showings in New Hampshire. The AP (2/11, Burnett) reports that Yang, "an entrepreneur who created buzz for his presidential campaign by talking about his love of math and championing a universal basic income that would give every American adult $1,000 per month, suspended his 2020 bid." Yang told supporters, "I am the math guy, and it is clear to me from the numbers that we are not going to win this race. ... I have been persuaded that the message of this campaign will not be strengthened by my staying in the race any longer." The AP calls Yang "one of the breakout stars of the Democratic primary race, building a following that started largely online but expanded to give him enough donors and polling numbers to qualify for the first six debates."

USA Today (2/11, Lalljee, Morin, 10.31M) says Yang's candidacy "comes to an end following an unexpected rise last year, where he outlasted a New York City mayor, former and current governors, and even several U.S. senators in his quest for the presidency. Despite being relatively unknown when he first announced his candidacy, Yang grew an energetic and passionate base – known as the Yang Gang – that propelled him into a household name." The New York Times (2/11, Stevens, 18.61M) calls his bid "one of the Democratic primary's most surprising story lines, removing a candidate who developed a fiercely loyal following of disaffected voters from across the ideological spectrum and intrigued even skeptics with his wit, levity and relentless positivity." The Washington Post (2/11, Weigel, Wang, 14.2M) says his "sometimes bleak message on the campaign trail was contrasted with his upbeat, irreverent style of campaigning." Fox News (2/11, Pappas, 27.59M) writes on its website, "Though he didn't make it past the two early voting states, Yang's rise is remarkable for someone who was hardly famous before entering the race."

The Los Angeles Times (2/11, Barabak, 4.64M) reports Bennet entered the race "as a long shot and never rose beyond also-ran status." He "joined the contest relatively late, in May 2019, and offered little politically to stand apart in the sprawling field of contestants." The Denver Post (2/11, Murray, 720K) reports Bennet told supporters in New Hampshire, "I think it's fitting that we end the campaign tonight. Tonight is not going to be our night. But let me say to New Hampshire – you may see me once again." CQ Roll Call (2/11, 154K) reports, "As a moderate, policy-minded senator, he lacked the national profile to break through in a crowded Democratic field. He struggled to raise money and qualify for the most recent debates." Aaron Blake of the Washington Post (2/12, 14.2M) writes, "Michael Bennet, we hardly knew ye. It's tough to think back to a sitting senator who made less of a showing in a campaign and yet actually stuck around for the votes."

Reuters (2/11, Ax, Chiacu), the Wall Street Journal (2/11, Collins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Politico (2/11, Daniels, 4.29M), and The Hill (2/11, Manchester, 2.98M) also cover the two exits, while Matt Stout of the Boston Globe tweeted, "With results filtering in, @DevalPatrick said he and his wife are going to go home tonight and 'make some decisions' tomorrow morning about future of campaign. Said he needed the 'winds of from New Hampshire to carry us on.'" At 9:47 p.m., President Trump tweeted, "A lot of Democrat dropouts tonight, very low political I.Q."

MSNBC's Tur Encounters Trump Supporter Outside Sanders Rally. Writing at Townhall (2/11, 177K), Cortney O'Brien says that MSNBC's Katy Tur "camped outside" a Sanders rally on Tuesday "expecting to find some of the senator's fervent fans," and encountered a supporter of the President. Asked why Sanders did not appeal to him, the man said, "The whole ideology would be destructive to the country. It's anti-growth, it's anti-family, it's anti-American."

Sanders told NBC Nightly News (2/11, story 2, 2:50, Holt, 6.35M) Tuesday, "In 2016, Trump ran as a 'friend' of the working families of this country. He lied. So what I would say to those people, many of them are hurting. Many of them work longer hours for lower wages. Many have seen their jobs go to China or Mexico. Check my record. I have a lifetime of service and fighting for the working class of this country."

Scalia Says Economy Is "Booming" By "Any Objective Measure."

Labor Secretary Scalia said on WDBO-AM (Orlando, FL (2/11), "We've got a situation that most of us haven't seen in our lifetimes – just an extraordinary job market and you can see that by looking at a few different things. ... First, the unemployment number we just released Friday is 3.6 percent in January, just a great number. ... Job creation has been huge. More than six million jobs created since President Trump took office. Wages are going up. When you have low unemployment, that forces employers to do more to help workers and one thing they do is they raise wages and they are raising them more for lower-paid workers." Scalia added that "really by any objective measure, things are booming. And like the President said in his State of the Union last week, it's a blue-collar boom that is helping lower-paid workers especially."

Trump Touts "Best USA Economy In History." The President took to Twitter yesterday to write, "BEST USA ECONOMY IN HISTORY!"

Pelosi Looks To Shift Focus Of Attacks On Trump From Impeachment To Economy.

Politico (2/11, Caygle, Ferris, 4.29M) reports House Speaker Pelosi is "looking to make a sharp pivot from the heated politics of impeachment and lash President Donald Trump in another key area: the economy." According to the article, "in a series of private meetings this week, Pelosi has all but explicitly told her members that with the election just nine months away, it's time for Democrats to shift the spotlight away from the Ukraine scandal and other controversies ensnaring Trump." Pelosi "hosted a special speaker's meeting on Tuesday with a top Obama economics adviser to explain to Democrats why the economy isn't actually as strong as Trump claims and how they can message that to voters."

Study: Democrats' Payroll Tax Hikes Would Depress Wages And Growth.

Bloomberg (2/11, Davison, 4.73M) reports that according to a study from the "right-leaning" Tax Foundation, "proposals by several Democratic presidential candidates to shore up Social Security by raising payroll taxes could have a downside: lower economic growth and reduced wages." Former Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) are among those "proposing higher payroll taxes as some voters grow concerned that the Social Security trust fund they're paying into won't be there when it's time for them to retire." The Tax Foundation study reads: "An increase in the payroll tax rate or the payroll tax base results in lower wages for workers, as payroll taxes are fully borne by labor. This results in lower economic growth and lower after-tax incomes, ranging from a drop in economic output from -0.28% for Biden's proposal to -1.17% for Sanders'."

The Daily Caller (2/11, Hopkins, 716K) reports that Biden has pledged to "slap a 12.4% payroll tax on wages higher than $400,000." Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) and Pete Buttigieg "have pushed for levying a 12.4% tax on wages above $250,000," and Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "has called for a 14.8% tax on wages higher than $250,000." The Daily Caller adds that Sanders' plan "would generate the most for Social Security, with the self-described socialist calling for not only a 12.4% payroll tax on wages above $250,000, but also an additional 7.5% payroll tax on employers, but with an exemption for the first $2 million in paid wages."

Scalise: Election Will Pit Trump's Job Creation Against Democrats' "Move Towards Socialism." Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (2/11), House Minority Whip Scalise said, "We had a great jobs' report...come out at the end of the last week. ... You are seeing the record numbers of job creation. ... And with the sign that chances for recession are even lower because the economy continues to be strong, that is going to be dominant force the in this election. The President wants to keep this going, said the best is yet to come. The Democrats want to move towards socialism. I don't think this country is a socialist nation and never will be."

FTC Expands Antitrust Review Of Big Tech Companies.

The New York Times (2/11, Kang, McCabe, 18.61M) reports, "The Federal Trade Commission said on Tuesday that it had ordered Amazon, Apple, Facebook, Google's parent company Alphabet and Microsoft to turn over information about past acquisitions, broadening its review of the power of big tech companies." The FTC "said it requested information about hundreds of smaller deals made by the five tech companies over the past decade that weren't required to be reported to regulators by law and could provide insights into antitrust abuses." In examining the smaller transactions, the FTC "signaled it was looking specifically into a tech industry practice, known as 'killer acquisitions,' that smaller rivals have said was used to choke off competition. Under that strategy, the large tech companies purchase a nascent competitor to protect their dominance and prevent the smaller company from growing into a bigger threat."

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, McKinnon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports FTC Chairman Joseph Simons said, "Digital technology companies are a big part of the economy and our daily lives. This initiative will enable the commission to take a closer look at acquisitions in this important sector, and also to evaluate whether the federal agencies are getting adequate notice of transactions that might harm competition. This will help us continue to keep tech markets open and competitive, for the benefit of consumers."

Federal Judge Blocks States' Bid To Stop Sprint/T-Mobile Merger.

NBC Nightly News (2/11, story 10, 0:20, Holt, 6.35M) reported a judge on Tuesday approved T-Mobile's takeover of Sprint "for more than $26 billion." The AP (2/11, O'Brien, Anderson) reports the judge "rejected claims by more than a dozen states that the deal would mean less competition and higher phone bills." The AP says that "though the deal still needs a few more approvals, T-Mobile expects to close it as early as April 1."

Reuters (2/11, McLymore, Bartz) reports that "during a two-week trial in December, T-Mobile and Sprint argued the merger will better equip the new company to compete with top players Verizon Communications Inc and AT&T Inc as the third-largest U.S. wireless carrier, creating a more efficient company with low prices and faster internet speeds."

ABC World News Tonight (2/11, story 11, 0:15, Muir, 7.77M) reported, "Thirteen states sued to block the deal over fears of higher prices and job cuts." The New York Times (2/11, Lee, 18.61M) reports that Judge Victor Marrero of the United States District Court in Manhattan "rejected an unusual challenge led by attorneys general from 13 states and the District of Columbia." The Times says the suit was "brought in June after regulators at the Department of Justice and Federal Communications Commission approved the deal." The Times reports that in his ruling, Marrero "praised T-Mobile, calling it 'a maverick that has spurred the two largest players in its industry to make numerous pro-consumer changes.'"

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, FitzGerald, Krouse, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the ruling also means Dish Network will enter the wireless market as the fourth major carrier, under a deal brokered by federal regulators. Marrero said he was persuaded that Dish could operate as a viable competitor, and that its entry will benefit consumers. The Washington Post (2/11, Telford, 14.2M) and Bloomberg (2/11, 4.73M) also cover the ruling.

WSJournal: Merger Will Boost Competition, Benefit Consumers. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/11, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) welcomes Marrero's decision, arguing that it will increase competition in the wireless space and speed up the rollout of 5G across the US. The Journal also praises Marrero, an Obama appointee, for resisting calls from Democratic state attorneys general to scuttle the merger.

Prosecutors Say Former UAW Official Used Kickbacks To Pay For Homes, Cosmetic Surgery.

The Detroit News (2/11, Snell, 825K) reports, "The $1.5 million in kickbacks a corrupt United Auto Workers official received included cash and $10,000 worth of cosmetic surgery for a relative, federal prosecutors said Tuesday." According to the article, "the new details were revealed as prosecutors asked a federal judge to sentence former UAW official Mike Grimes to two years in federal prison for his role in a bribery and kickback scheme that involved two others, including former union vice president Joe Ashton." Prosecutors "portrayed" Grimes "as a vindictive shakedown artist, demanding kickbacks from UAW vendors who supplied union-branded merchandise and penalizing one UAW contractor who initially refused his demands."

Vice Media, Struggling To Make Profit, Faces Large Payments To Investor.

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Mullin, Hagey, Rizzo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Vice Media Group, which raised money from an investor valuing the company at $5.7 billion in 2017, is now facing large payments to that investor at a time when it is struggling to make a profit and trying to execute a turnaround plan. Under a deal in which private-equity firm TPG invested $450 million, Vice agreed to make payments worth up to nearly $400 million between 2020 and 2024. The TPG deal now threatens to dilute the holdings of other investors and their returns.

Madison, Wisconsin's Real Estate Market Lifted By Job Opportunities.

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Flint, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Madison, Wisconsin's residential real estate market has been rising, fueled in part by strong hiring by health records software company Epic. Epic has been attracting young, tech talent to its offices in Verona, one of the 14 communities making up greater Madison.

National Chain Of Wedding Venues Closes Abruptly.

The CBS Evening News (2/11, story 10, 1:25, O'Donnell, 4.69M) reported "a national chain of wedding venues" has "abruptly closed." CBS' Janet Shamlian reported "2,800 weddings and special events across the country are now at risk after" Noah's shut down, and customers are "out more than $7 million." Shamlian added, "Noah's filed for bankruptcy last May after investor allegations of fraud" and a judge last week ordered "it to close immediately."

Trump Vows To Address US Trade Deficit With EU.

Reuters (2/11, Shalal, Lawder) reports that an "emboldened" President Trump has "set his sights on restructuring the more than $1 trillion US trade relationship with the European Union, raising the specter of another major trade war as the global economy slows and he seeks re-election." Trump "has long complained that the EU's position on trade is 'worse than China,'" and yesterday told governors "that he was training his sights on Europe. ... 'Europe has been treating us very badly,' he said. 'Over the last 10, 12 years, there's been a tremendous deficit with Europe. They have barriers that are incredible ... So we're going to be starting that. They know that.'" Reuters adds, "European officials say they are willing to work with Trump to address some irritants in the relationship. But they warn that they will retaliate against any US move to impose tariffs on cars and other products, as Trump has threatened."

WPost: Trump Budget "A Dishonest Exercise."

The Washington Post (2/11, 14.2M) says in an editorial that President Trump's proposed budget for Fiscal Year 2021 "is a dishonest exercise. ... Trump is hardly the first president to obey his legal requirement to present a spending plan to Congress by sending one that has no chance of passing," nor is he "the first to engage in rosy forecasting – but in this case, the exaggeration is especially flagrant." The Post says Trump's proposal "serves but one useful purpose: to record the warped priorities upon which Mr. Trump is willing to campaign for a second term."

In an analysis, the Washington Post (2/11, Werner, Stein, 14.2M) writes that Medicaid "was one of several social safety net programs the White House targeted for major cuts, and one the Obama administration fought to expand." However, the Post says "even with the proposed cuts, Trump's decision to wall off Social Security, Medicare and the Defense Department from big reductions would keep the government's fiscal picture largely out of balance."

Trump Budget Includes More Than $800M For New Air Force One. The Washington Times (2/11, Wolfgang, Boyer, 492K) reports Trump's budget request "sets aside more than $800 million for a revamped Air Force One, complete with a new red, white and blue paint job." Pentagon budget documents "include a rendering of the new presidential plane, which will feature a white top half, a darker blue bottom half, and a red stripe through the center."

NYTimes Examines Changes To Federal Budget Under Trump. On its website, the New York Times (2/11, Parlapiano, Bui, 18.61M) looks at how Trump's budget proposal breaks down per person, offering "a selection of well-known federal programs that make up about 80 percent of the federal budget, and how their funding per person has changed during Mr. Trump's presidency."

Furman: US Corporate Tax Revenue As Share Of GDP Second-Lowest Among Developed Countries.

CQ Roll Call (2/11, Sword, 154K) reports Harvard University economist Jason Furman told the House Ways and Means Committee Tuesday that corporate tax revenue "as a share of gross domestic product is lower in the United States than any of 30 developed countries – with the exception of Latvia." Furman, who served as Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Obama, told the committee, "Corporate revenue collections are very low."

WPost Backs Northam's Plan To Raise Gas Tax.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/11, 14.2M) argues in favor of a proposal by Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) "to raise the state's current gas tax, which is among the lowest in the nation, by roughly 75 percent over the coming three years." Virginia drivers currently "pay less in taxes to fill up their tanks than they would in neighboring Maryland and North Carolina – and nowhere near enough to cover the cost of maintaining and repairing the roads they use." The Post says "drivers want and need more funding for roads, without which congestion will worsen," so Northam's plan to raise the per-gallon tax on gas is sensible.

Trump Says Military Should Consider Disciplinary Action Against Vindman.

The Washington Times (2/11, Boyer, 492K) reports President Trump told reporters Tuesday that the military "should look at disciplinary action against Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman, who gave testimony against the president in the impeachment inquiry." Trump said the White House removed Vindman from the NSC last week "and that the military can deal with him any way it wants." However, Trump "said he wasn't happy with Lt. Col. Vindman or his brother, Yevgeny, who also worked for the NSC and was removed from that job last week." He "said the brothers falsely reported information about his phone calls with Ukraine's president last year, conversations that led to the impeachment." Trump said if a possible disciplinary review, "If you look at what happened, I would imagine they would certainly take a look at that. ... It's up to them. We sent him on his way to a much different location. The military can handle him any way he wants."

The Washington Post (2/11, Rucker, Kane, 14.2M) reports on Trump's comments under the headline "Trump Escalates Campaign Of Retribution As Republican Senators Shrug." The Post says Senate Republicans "resigned themselves this week to the reality that they are unable to check or even influence Trump." The New York Times (2/11, Baker, 18.61M) calls Trump "an aggrieved and unbound president," who in the wake of his acquittal in the Senate impeachment trial, "has sought to even the scales as he sees it." The Times says the "war between Mr. Trump and what he calls the 'deep state' has entered a new, more volatile phase as the president seeks to assert greater control over a government that he is convinced is not sufficiently loyal to him." Trump "has shown a renewed willingness to act even if it prompts fresh complaints about violating traditional norms."

In Wake Of Trump Trial, Lawmakers Consider Changes To Impeachment Process.

The New York Times (2/11, Hulse, 18.61M) reports that while President Trump's impeachment trial is over, "in the Senate, the fight over how to conduct the next one – of him or a future president – is just beginning." While Republicans "want to make it more difficult to impeach and try a president for high crimes and misdemeanors," Democrats "are working to require that any such trial allow new evidence." Those "dueling proposals reflect the polar opposite stances of the two parties on Mr. Trump's impeachment, but they also underscore deep worries among Republicans and Democrats alike that the exercise is likely to become more frequent, given persistent and intense partisanship." The Times goes on to list proposals being offered by lawmakers from both sides of the aisle, but adds that "some senior lawmakers warn that the Senate should not act hastily in making underlying changes to the rules when emotions remain raw."

Poll Finds Utah Reaction To Romney Impeachment Vote Favorable By 49%-40% Margin.

Utah's Deseret News (2/11, Romboy, 308K) reports, "Reaction to Sen. Mitt Romney's vote to remove President Donald Trump from office has ranged from outrage to praise across the country and in Utah," and "those mixed emotions are reflected in a new Deseret News/Hinckley Institute of Politics poll with KSL showing 22% of Utahns are disappointed and 21% are proud to have Romney as their senator in light of his vote to convict Trump." The poll also "found that 14% are encouraged, 13% are pleased, 11% are embarrassed and 8% are angry. Another 11% weren't sure." The News concludes that "given those results, Utah voters overall reaction to Romney's decision was 49% positive to 40% negative, with 11% not sure," even as "Romney's approval rating dropped slightly" and "Trump's went up a sliver compared to the Deseret News/Hinckley Institute poll conducted in January before the Senate impeachment trial started."

Politico (2/11, Everett, 4.29M) reports that "fresh off a series of scathing attacks from...Trump for his vote to remove the president from office," Romney "spent the day hunting for votes for the president's agenda." Politico adds "Senate Republicans – including Romney – have already moved on," and "there will be no retribution on Trump's behalf."

Stone Prosecutors Resign After DOJ Rejects Sentencing Recommendation.

NBC Nightly News (2/11, story 5, 1:35, Holt, 6.35M) reported on a "stunning" development "in the Roger Stone case," with DOJ "backpedaling on the suggested sentence for the convicted ally Trump hours after the President called it unfair. Now all four prosecutors resigning from the case." Jeff Pegues on the CBS Evening News (2/11, story 5, 1:35, O'Donnell, 4.69M) recounted that "the controversy started yesterday when prosecutors asked a judge to sentence Stone to seven to nine years in prison," and "President Trump responded overnight on Twitter, calling it 'horrible' and a 'miscarriage of justice.'" On ABC World News Tonight (2/11, story 3, 2:15, Muir, 7.77M), Dan Abrams said, "For the Attorney General to step in, in this way, at this point, is practically unheard of." ABC added that DOJ "says the decision to reverse the recommendation came before the President's tweet, insisting there was no White House involvement." Trump was shown saying, "No, I didn't speak to – I'd be able to do it if I wanted, I have the absolute right to do it. I stay out of things to a degree that people wouldn't believe. But I didn't speak to them." David Spunt said on Fox News (2/11, 27.59M), "Trump did not comment on a pardon, though some believe it is possible."

Politico (2/11, Gerstein, Lippman, 4.29M) reports "the sudden withdrawal of the entire prosecution team assigned to Stone's case – including two veterans of special counsel Robert Mueller's office – following the Justice Department's decision to back away from the government's original sentencing proposal seemed to embolden and energize Trump." A "jubilant president took to his favorite social media venue, Twitter, on Tuesday night to celebrate and settle more scores." Trump tweeted, "This is a horrible and very unfair situation. The real crimes were on the other side, as nothing happens to them. Cannot allow this miscarriage of justice!" Moreover, he added, "a swamp creature with 'pull' was just sentenced to two months in jail for a similar thing that they want Stone to serve 9 years for. A phony Mueller Witch Hunt disgrace. Caught! ... Whatever happened to Hillary campaign manager Podesta's BROTHER? Wasn't he caught, forced to leave his firm, with BIG BAD things to happen? Why did nothing ever happen to him, only to the 'other' side?" Trump also wrote on Twitter, "Is this the Judge that put Paul Manafort in SOLITARY CONFINEMENT, something that not even mobster Al Capone had to endure? How did she treat Crooked Hillary Clinton? Just asking!"

Reuters (2/11, Lynch) points out "the abrupt change of course" on the part of DOJ "came just hours after Trump criticized the proposed sentence of seven to nine years as a 'miscarriage of justice,'" though the AP (2/11, Balsamo) reports that DOJ "said the decision to shorten the sentencing recommendation was made Monday night – before Trump's tweet – and that prosecutors had not spoken to the White House about it." Nevertheless, the AP says "the move was sure to raise questions about political interference and whether Trump's views hold unusual sway over the Justice Department." The New York Times (2/11, Benner, 18.61M) also reports that "senior Justice Department officials...intervened to overrule front-line prosecutors and will recommend a more lenient sentencing for" Stone, who the Times says was "convicted last year of impeding investigators in a bid to protect his longtime friend...Trump." The Times adds "the move is highly unusual and is certain to generate allegations of political interference."

The Daily Caller (2/11, Ross, 716K) reports that "prosecutors in the US attorney's office in Washington, D.C., recommended Monday that Stone serve between 87 months and 108 months in prison on charges that he made false statements to the House Intelligence Committee and committed witness tampering during the Russia investigation." The Washington Post (2/11, Zapotosky, Barrett, 14.2M) indicates, meanwhile, that "top" DOJ officials "professed to be blindsided by the seven-to-nine-year penalty prosecutors urged a judge to impose." A "senior Justice Department official" is quoted as saying, "That recommendation is not what had been briefed to the department. ... The department finds the recommendation extreme and excessive and disproportionate to Stone's offenses." The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Viswanatha, Tau, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), New York Post (2/11, Fredericks, 4.57M), Axios (2/11, Basu, 521K), and Bloomberg

(2/11, Strohm, Larson, 4.73M), among other news outlets, run similar reports.

Wolf Blitzer said on CNN (2/11, 664K) that all four federal prosecutors have resigned from the case "after the Justice Department reduced its original sentencing recommendation for Stone following public criticism by the President." Earlier in the day, Jake Tapper said on CNN (2/11, 628K) that the prosecutors' resignations was "a stunning turn of events, and I cannot imagine what would happen, what a Republican Congress or Senate would do if President Obama had done something like that for a Democratic crony, interfering, involving himself in the course of justice like that."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal (D-CT) said on CNN (2/11, 664K), "It is the equivalent of a Saturday Night Massacre, and obviously timed so that it would be overlooked on the night of the New Hampshire primary. ... I have called for an investigation by the Office of Inspector General in the Department of Justice. I'm also going to call for hearings by [Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey] Graham. ... He owes it to the committee to have hearings immediately."

WPost Analysis: Trump "Leaning Heavily" On Immigration As He Seeks Reelection.

The Washington Post (2/11, Miroff, 14.2M) reports in an analysis that President Trump "is closer than ever to delivering on his promise for a United States with taller walls, tighter immigration laws and fewer foreigners entering the country." Trump "has hardened the nation's immigration system into an obstacle course of physical and bureaucratic barriers, causing illegal border crossings to plummet and legal immigration to slump." The Post says Trump ran on that message in 2016 and he is "leaning heavily" on it again. Trump "has told aides he plans to run for reelection on his immigration record and his pledge to complete more than 500 miles of new barriers along the Mexico border by early next year."

Apprehensions At US-Mexico Border Rise For Eighth Straight Month.

The Washington Post (2/11, Hauslohner, 14.2M) reports that according to CBP officials, "the number of migrants taken into custody along the U.S.-Mexico border declined for an eighth straight month in January, but unauthorized crossings by Mexican nationals are on the rise." Acting CBP Commissioner Mark Morgan said Tuesday that 36,679 migrants were apprehended or deemed "inadmissible" in January, but "he said the number of Mexican adults taken into custody has climbed 32 percent from this time last year." Morgan attributed the increase to smugglers "scrambling to come up with new tactics." Said Morgan, "While this number represents the eighth straight month of declines, smuggling organizations are changing their tactics. ... They're looking to other vulnerable groups." Morgan credited the Administration's immigration policies for the overall decline.

Americans Who Have Been Quarantined For 14 Days Set To Be Released Tuesday.

Reuters (2/11, Erman, Mishra, Lambert, Trotta) reports that "nearly 200 Americans evacuated from the epicenter of the coronavirus outbreak in China could be released from quarantine at a U.S. Air Force base in California on Tuesday after 14 days." Reuters says this "first group of U.S. citizens to be evacuated from the coronavirus-stricken Chinese city of Wuhan are mostly U.S. State Department employees and their families." Reuters adds that last Wednesday, "two more planes carrying about 350 Americans out of Wuhan arrived at two other military base in California and are subjected to 14-day quarantines."

On NBC Nightly News (2/11, story 6, 1:50, Holt, 6.35M), Miguel Almaguer reported that "the all-clear" at the California air base "comes during a scare at another nearby. In San Diego at Miramar, the CDC confirms the 13th case of coronavirus in the United States." The patient was "mistakenly released from a local hospital before returning for treatment after officials realized the mix-up."

Cruise Ship Passengers Remain Confined To Rooms. ABC World News Tonight (2/11, story 4, 2:00, Muir, 7.77M) reported thousands on a "cruise ship, right off the coast of Japan," remain "confined to their rooms." The passengers "have no windows" and are "allowed to get air on an upper deck just once every four days."

Xi Reportedly Told Officials Virus Response Was Hurting Economy. Reuters (2/11) reports that last week, Chinese President Xi Jinping "warned top officials...that efforts to contain the new coronavirus had gone too far, threatening the country's economy...days before Beijing rolled out measures to soften the blow." According to Reuters, "After reviewing reports on the outbreak from the National Development and Reform Commission (NDRC) and other economic departments, Xi told local officials during a Feb. 3 meeting of the Politburo's Standing Committee that some of the actions taken to contain the virus are harming the economy." Reuters says Xi "urged them to refrain from 'more restrictive measures.'"

Some People In Wuhan Reportedly Question Coronavirus Test Results. The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Deng, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that some people in Wuhan are questioning the accuracy of diagnostic tests for coronavirus. Possible flaws in testing has raised concerns that the extent of the outbreak could be larger than the official data suggests. The possibility of undiagnosed cases has sparked calls to use chest scans for diagnosis, instead of swab tests.

Pakistani Students Told To Remain In Wuhan. The New York Times (2/11, Abi-Habib, 18.61M) reports Pakistan "has asked...800...Pakistani students in Wuhan to stay put, the result of a grim government calculus." According to the Times, "Pakistan's health care system is in shambles. Already strained hospitals lack trained doctors and supplies. If infected nationals return home, the virus would likely spread unabated across the country."

Cotton Backs Extending Targeted Travel Ban Due To Coronavirus Epidemic. Appearing on CNBC's Squawk Box (2/11, 58K), Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) said, "We are currently excluding any foreign nationals who have been in China in the last 14 days, or any Americans that have been in Wuhan province...they are being quarantined for 14 days. And it's only a prudent step to stop more than 20,000 persons traveling through our country from the Chinese mainland every day, given how many uncertainties there are about the very dangerous virus." Asked about the origins of the virus, Cotton said, "There were reports that it started in the food market, and we now know that it did not start in the market. It went into the market and went out of it. I do know that we need to get to the bottom of it. And we do need to ask questions about the super laboratory that is in Wuhan. There's too many unanswered questions and China has been too deceitful for us to just take the word of the Chinese Communist Party."

Administration Closely Monitoring Situation. Undersecretary of State for Economic Growth Keith Krach said on Fox Business' Claman Countdown (2/11), "As President Trump has said, the first thing is to protect the American citizens, and I can tell you, coming from the private sector and watching the White House, the State Department, the inter-agency and decisiveness in terms of how fast we have moved, and everybody working together, this what is we are really built for." Krach added, "We are erring on the side of caution. The other thing, too, is that the United States is the most generous country in the world. As we were picking up some of our diplomats, we brought in about 18 tons of aid in terms of equipment. There's been over a quarter of a billion donated between the United States government and the private sector, and over the last three years, the United States has donated $43 billion in terms of viral diseases like this."

McConnell Says GOP "Internal Divisions" Preventing Drug Price Bill From Moving Forward.

The Hill (2/11, Sullivan, 2.98M) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell said that Republican senators are divided over a bill that would aim to lower drug prices. Sen. Charles Grassley (R-IA) has been pushing the bill for months, saying it is supported by the White House and several vulnerable Republicans up for reelection in 2020. However, McConnell said that "internal divisions" among Republicans are stopping the bill from coming to the floor.

Senate Committee Holds Hearing On "Born Alive" Abortion Bill.

CQ Roll Call (2/11, Raman, 154K) reports, "Senate Republicans signaled in a hearing Tuesday that they intend to keep courting abortion opponents on the campaign trail by talking about a bill they say would protect infants born during attempted abortions, legislation that Democrats call redundant." The Senate Judiciary Committee's hearing on the legislation "comes the day before a House Energy and Commerce Health Subcommittee holds its own hearing on Democrats' interest in expanding abortion rights." According to the article, two of President Trump's "key priorities for Congress are passing this bill and passing legislation that would ban abortions after 20 weeks."

Breitbart (2/11, Kraychik, 673K) reports the Born-Alive Abortion Survivors Protection Act offers Democrats the "opportunity to reject infanticide," Sen. Joni Ernst (R-IA) said during an interview Tuesday. The Daily Caller (2/11, Olohan, 716K) reports "Democrats highlighted race and downplayed the need for infanticide legislation" at the hearing. They "focused on infant mortality rates and racial biases in health care while suggesting that Republican lawmakers were pushing the bill out of anti-abortion bias."

Planned Parenthood Sues Over Abortion Payment Rule. The Washington Times (2/11, Vondracek, 492K) reports, "Planned Parenthood of Maryland filed a lawsuit Tuesday seeking to block a new rule by the Trump administration that would increase paperwork for insurers and patients seeking abortions." Attorneys for Planned Parenthood argue "the rule released in December by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) and the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) would force insurance companies in the Obamacare exchanges to send two separate bills to customers for abortions."

Driver Who Targeted GOP Voter Registration Tent Motivated By Opposition To Trump.

Politico (2/11, Ward, 4.29M) reports that Gregory Timm, "the Florida man who drove his van into a Republican voter registration tent was motivated by his opposition to President Donald Trump," according to the Duval County Sheriff's Office report on his arrest. Timm "reportedly accelerated his vehicle toward the tent and tables, while multiple victims moved to avoid being struck." He then "knocked over several tables, chairs and the tent with his car, according to the report, and got out of his vehicle, took out his phone and 'flipped them off' before driving away." The report says he "'willingly' showed officers the video, which cuts off before he struck the tent," and adds that "the suspect was upset that the video ended before 'the good part.'" The Daily Caller (2/11, Hasson, 716K) says Timm, who is "facing six criminal charges, including two counts of aggravated assault on a person 65 years or older," told police he drive through the tent because "someone had to take a stand." The police report states, "The suspect advised that he does not like President Trump."

Movie About "Elites" Hunting "Deplorables" To Hit Theaters In March.

The Washington Examiner (2/11, Brest, 448K) reports that "The Hunt," a "horror movie about liberal elites hunting conservatives for fun, will hit theaters after a monthslong delay." The movie, which tells "the story of a group of 'elites' who hunt other people known as 'deplorables,'" was "slated to hit theaters in September, but Universal Studios pulled it after the mass shootings in El Paso, Texas, and Dayton, Ohio." A new trailer posted Tuesday says the movie "will now hit theaters on March 13." The New York Times (2/11, Barnes, 18.61M) provides similar coverage.

Barr: "Rogue DAs" Are Contributing To Rise In Violent Crime In Cities.

The Washington Times (2/11, Dinan, 492K) reports that in a speech to the Major County Sheriffs of America on Tuesday, Attorney General Barr blasted "rogue DAs," who "he said are sabotaging the sanctity of the criminal justice system by bringing lesser charges or pleading down cases in order to keep people out of prison." Barr argued that the "self-styled 'social justice' reformers" are contributing to the increase in violent crimes in the nation's largest cities despite an overall trend in the opposite direction. Barr said, "These DAs think they are helping people, but they end up hurting them. These policies actually lead to greater criminality. ... By allowing young lawbreakers entirely off the hook the first time – or the second time or even the third time – these DAs are potentially placing them on a conveyor to further and heightened criminality."

Milbank: Barr's DOJ Awards Trump Friends, Punishes Trump Enemies. In his Washington Post (2/11, 14.2M) column, Dana Milbank criticizes senior Justice Department officials for denying grants "to highly rated Catholic Charities in Palm Beach, Fla., and Chicanos Por La Causa in Phoenix" and instead giving "more than $1 million combined to lower-rated groups called the Lincoln Tubman Foundation and Hookers for Jesus." Milbank says "the head of the Catholic Charities affiliate had been active with Democrats and the Phoenix group had opposed President Trump's immigration policies," while "Hookers for Jesus is run by a Christian conservative and the Lincoln Tubman group was launched by a relative of a Trump delegate to the 2016 convention." Milbank argues that this "says much about Barr's Justice Department. Friends of Trump are rewarded. Opponents of Trump are punished. And the nation's law enforcement apparatus becomes Trump's personal plaything."

Virginia House Passes Assault Weapons Ban.

The Daily Caller (2/11, Davis, 716K) reports that on a "near party line vote" Virginia's House of Delegates on Tuesday passed "a package of gun control proposals" that includes "a ban on the sale of several firearms defined as 'assault weapons,' including the popular AR-15." While Virginians who own the firearms "will not be forced to participate in a mandatory buyback program as had initially been considered by state Democrats," the measure "gives the state government the authority to confiscate certain types of ammunition that are considered 'high capacity.'" The Washington Examiner (2/11, Neale, 448K) says that with the bill's passage, "Democrats in the Virginia General Assembly took another step toward restricting the lawful ownership of loosely defined 'assault' weapons."

After Attacks On NYPD Officers, Union Lashes Out At De Blasio.

The New York Times (2/11, Fitzsimmons, Mays, 18.61M) reports that after a gunman attempted to kill several NYPD officers, "police labor leaders lashed out at Mayor Bill de Blasio, with one union head 'declaring war' on the mayor and blaming him for fostering an anti-cop atmosphere in the city." Edward D. Mullins, the President of the Sergeants Benevolent Association, tweeted, "Mayor de Blasio, the members of the N.Y.P.D. are declaring war on you! We do not respect you. Do not visit us in hospitals. You sold the N.Y.P.D. to the vile creatures, the 1 percent who hate cops but vote for you." The Times says it is not clear if the comments "reflect the feelings of regular rank-and-file officers: Mr. Mullins is known for his tendency to make incendiary remarks, especially against the mayor." De Blasio "told reporters that he 'was disgusted' by Mr. Mullins's comments, which he said did not represent the views of officers."

Smollett Indicted On Charges Of Staging Fake Hate Crime.

The Chicago Sun-Times (2/11, Sneed, Grimm, 875K) reports, "After having the charges initially dropped against him, Jussie Smollett was indicted Tuesday again in connection with allegedly staging a fake hate crime attack." Smollett now "faces six charges related to making four separate false reports to police. He is scheduled to be arraigned Feb. 24." The Chicago Tribune (2/11, Crepeau, Meisner, 2.65M) also reports the story, and Page Six (2/11, Lapin, 1.6M) recalls "Smollett was accused of hiring two brothers to stage an attack on himself that included tales of a noose and bigots screaming racist, homophobic slurs." However, "Chicago police ultimately determined that Smollett made the whole thing up to advance his career."

All three major network newscasts covered the indictment last night. NBC Nightly News (2/11, story 7, 1:25, Holt, 6.35M) reported "authorities said prosecuting Smollett is in the interest of justice, and because police expended so many resources to investigate the false reports. Attorneys for Smollett have not responded to" the "new charges." The CBS Evening News (2/11, story 9, 0:30, O'Donnell, 4.69M) briefly indicated "a grand jury returned six new charges against Smollett," as did ABC World News Tonight (2/11, story 7, 0:15, Muir, 7.77M). The Washington Post (2/11, Izadi, Andrews, 14.2M), New York Times (2/11, Jacobs, 18.61M) and USA Today (2/11, Trepany, 10.31M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

WSJournal: Report Finds Testing Helps Disadvantaged Groups.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/11, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights a finding by a University of California task force that test scores are helpful in the college admissions process. The Journal points out that it is a conclusion from a liberal faculty that is contradictory with social justice orthodoxy. Noting that the report by the task force says that test scores actually help schools select candidates from underrepresented groups, the Journal argues that the key to expanding access to higher education isn't to ban testing but to increase choice and accountability in K-12 schools.

O'Brien Says He Is "Reforming" NSC.

Bloomberg (2/11, Fabian, 4.73M) reports that on Monday, while traveling with President Trump to New Hampshire, National Security Advisor O'Brien "said his staff was 'bloated' when he took over last year and that he plans to reduce it to about 100 people, after an aide who testified in the House impeachment inquiry was dismissed on Friday." O'Brien is quoted as saying, "We think a more efficient NSC and leaner NSC is a more effective NSC. ... This is something that people in both parties have been concerned about in the past, the size of the NSC. ... So I think we've streamlined it. We're reforming it."

Meadows: "Parts" Of Administration Are Working Against Trump. On Fox News' Fox & Friends (2/11, 831K), Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) said that in the wake of President Trump's acquittal following his impeachment trial, "There's a renewed sense of energy. ... Not only did the President have the best week he's had in three years with acquittal and the State of the Union, but the jobs report and everything else." Meadows went on to say that "this is the only President who can run on his accomplishment in the first three years, and still run against his own Administration. Because part of his Administration is trying to defeat the Trump agenda. ... Can you imagine what this President could have accomplished if everyone were in the boat rowing the same way?"

O'Brien Reportedly Pushing Trump To Nominate Stewart For DNI Post.

The New York Times (2/11, Barnes, Haberman, Fandos, 18.61M) reports Rep. Chris Stewart (R-UT) has "emerged as a top contender to be the next director of national intelligence in the weeks before the acting intelligence chief must by law give up the post, people briefed on the matter said on Tuesday." National Security Adviser O'Brien is said to be pushing President Trump to nominate Stewart for the position. Stewart is "well-liked by congressional Republicans and is thought to enjoy support from Senate Republicans, who would confirm him if he is nominated." However, "Democrats are likely to balk at the selection of a House lawmaker" who "vigorously defended" Trump during the impeachment process.

Mar-A-Lago Trespasser Testifies She Was Simply A Confused Tourist.

The Miami Herald (2/11, Nehamas, Blaskey, 1.09M) reports Lu Jing, "the Chinese woman accused of trespassing at Mar-a-Lago and resisting an officer without violence, unexpectedly testified in her own defense in a Palm Beach County court Tuesday, saying she was a harmless and confused tourist who walked through the open and unguarded main entrance of [President Trump's] private club and home to take pictures" in December. Speaking through a Mandarin interpreter, Lu said, "It was an open gate that was very pretty." Lu, "who police say is in the country on an expired visa, faces the two misdemeanor charges, as well as eventual deportation."

New Hampshire Man Seeks To Aid Homeless Mired In Opioid Crisis.

The CBS Evening News (2/11, story 11, 1:50, O'Donnell, 4.69M) reported on the efforts of a New Hampshire man who was inspired to help the homeless after he lost his son to opioids. Peter Kelleher started out "making soup for the homeless" and his nonprofit "Support the Soupman" has expanded to include donations of care packages and warm clothes.

Senate Confirms Trump Appointee To 11th Circuit Court Of Appeals.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (2/11, Mitchell, 895K) reports the US Senate yesterday "confirmed US District Judge Andrew Brasher to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals, which handles cases filed in Georgia, Florida and Alabama." The 52-43 vote "fell strictly along party lines." The Washington Times (2/11, Swoyer, 492K) points out "liberal advocacy groups decried the confirmation of...Brasher, who has been a judge for the Middle District of Alabama since May of 2019," but "conservatives cheered" it, "applauding the president's historic number of federal court appointments."

Fox News (2/11, Olson, 27.59M) reports on its website that "the 38-year-old Brasher is Trump's 51st judge confirmed to the appeals courts and 188th overall, according to a Heritage Foundation count." Brasher "was confirmed to the Middle District Court of Alabama last year and was previously the Alabama Solicitor General, a job in which he argued before the Supreme Court and the 11th Circuit, the bench Trump and Senate Republicans would like him to join." Fox adds that "also a former white-collar criminal defense lawyer and civil litigator, Brasher received a unanimous "Well-Qualified" rating from the American Bar Association for his nomination to the 11th Circuit."

McConnell Touts Remake Of Ninth Circuit. The Washington Times (2/11, Swoyer, 492K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell, who "is keeping his chamber focused on filling judicial vacancies," told "conservative radio host Hugh Hewitt that Senate Republicans have been able to remake the 9th US Circuit Court of Appeals so it doesn't lean so far to the left." Said McConnell, "We've changed the Ninth Circuit. ... My motto for the year is 'leave no vacancy behind.'"

Thomas Advocates For Judicial Restraint During Dedication Ceremony. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (2/11, Rankin, 895K) reports, "Judges must adhere to the rule of law and not substitute their own racial, religious or partisan preferences to achieve a desired result, US Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas said Tuesday." Speaking at a dedication ceremony for the new Nathan Deal Judicial Center in Atlanta, Georgia, "Thomas preached his long-held belief of the need for judicial restraint." Thomas said, "Our decisions should not be driven by a desire to be revered or lionized for reaching certain outcomes. We are not mass media icons. We are judges, nothing more and nothing less."

Wheeler: One Trillion Trees Initiative Shows Trump's Commitment To Environment.

In an op-ed for USA Today (2/11, 10.31M), EPA Administrator Wheeler writes that in another example that President Trump is committed to the environment, the US will join the One Trillion Trees Initiative, “an ambitious effort to bring together government and the private sector to plant new trees in America and around the world.” In Wheeler’s view, “Americans should be optimistic with the environmental progress we are making and with the vision President Trump has for our future.” Wheeler writes that “from 1970 to 2018, America has reduced the six main criteria air pollutants by 74% while the economy grew over 275%, all of which have seen reductions over the past three years under President Trump.”

USA Today: More Needs To Done To Address Climate Change. In an editorial, USA Today (2/11, 10.31M) argues that tree planting is “just one of many steps needed to help stave off catastrophic global warming,” but Trump “seems to regard it as a substitute for other necessary and substantive actions.” The editorial observes that Trump is withdrawing the US from the Paris climate agreement and “working to reverse Obama-era plans for cutting power plant and vehicle carbon pollution.” Moreover, “Trump wants more logging, mining and development of the Tongass National Forest in Alaska, America’s largest natural reservoir for carbon storage.”

Oil Production From Federally Managed Lands And Waters Increased 13% Last Year.

The AP (2/11, Brown) reports that “oil production from US- managed lands and waters topped a record 1 billion barrels last year...as technological advances helped drive development in new areas and the Trump administration eases rules on the industry.” The AP adds “the production figure was up 122 million barrels, or more than 13 percent, from 2018.” Acting Assistant Secretary of the Interior Casey Hammond told the AP “that breaking the billion-barrel threshold marks a major milestone in the Trump administration’s drive to increase domestic energy production.”

Montana Mining Town Warily Awaits Cleanup Plan For Superfund Site.

The Washington Post (2/11, McLaughlin, 14.2M) reports residents of Butte, Montana have “been waiting years to learn how the Environmental Protection Agency will finish cleaning up” Berkeley Pit, “now a mile-long, 900-foot-deep poison lake, and a vast network of contaminated subterranean tunnels.” Parties in charge of the Superfund “cleanup have negotiated privately; the outcome may be revealed within weeks, if not days.” But “many residents are exhausted by the closed-door dealings, technical and bureaucratic jargon and the seemingly endless process.” They are also skeptical of “regulators’ insistence that public input has been critical to their decision-making.”

WTimes Analysis: Equal Rights Amendment Raises LGBTQ Issues.

The Washington Times (2/11, Dinan, 492K) reports, “Virginia’s purported ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment last month created a legal mess. Among the questions raised is whether the equality promised for two sexes would apply to the growing LGBTQ movement.” The ERA would guarantee equality of rights on “account of sex,” but the article says “what that means exactly is contentious,” and “if the amendment is added to the Constitution, it would create a morass of legal questions – chief among them whose vision of sex would control it.”

Virginia Lawmakers Approve Bill To Award Electoral Votes Based On National Popular Vote.

The Washington Times (2/11, Richardson, 492K) reports, “The Virginia House of Delegates passed Tuesday a bill to award its electoral votes to the winner of the national popular vote as the newly elected Democratic majority sought to join the pact to leapfrog the Electoral College.” The state House “voted 51-46 to enter into the National Popular Vote Interstate Compact, sending H.B. 177 to the state Senate despite opposition from Republicans who argued that the measure would upend the intent of the Framers.” If the bill is signed into law by Gov. Ralph Northam (D), “Virginia would join 15 states and the District of Columbia in the agreement to have their electors cast their ballots for the presidential candidate who gains the most popular votes nationwide, instead of the statewide winner.”

Nevada Democrats’ New Caucus Plan “Unlikely To End Growing Concerns” About Process.

The Washington Post (2/11, Bailey, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports that having scrapped two “apps similar to the one that caused chaos in Iowa, the Nevada State Democratic Party said it would use paper ballots and an online check-in process in its presidential caucuses, a plan unlikely to end growing concerns about the coming vote. In a memo distributed to representatives of the 2020 campaigns on Monday night, party officials outlined several new procedures for early caucusing, set to begin Saturday,” including “the use of an online Google check-in form designed to help party officials ‘track participants and streamline data collection’ and the assignment of a numeric ‘voter PIN’ and separate identification number tied to state voter registration to help route a participant’s ballot to their home precinct.” Still, “experts warned that this new proposal would leave the caucuses vulnerable to big security threats. They said, too, that they were puzzled by how the plan would work.”

In 2015 Audio Clip, Bloomberg Says “All The Crime” Is In Minority Neighborhoods.

The AP (2/11, Jaffe, Lemire) reports ex-New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg is “under fire” over resurfaced audio in which he says that to bring down murder rates “put a lot of cops” in minority neighborhoods because that is where “all the crime is.” Bloomberg made the comments during a 2015 appearance at the Aspen Institute as he was defending “his support for the controversial ‘stop and frisk’ policing tactic that has been found to disproportionately affect minorities." The New York Post (2/11, Jacobs, Golding, 4.57M) reports that in the audio, Bloomberg says, "Ninety-five percent of murders, murderers and murder victims fit one M.O. You can just take a description, Xerox it, and pass it out to all the cops. ... They are male, minorities, 16 to 25. That's true in New York, that's true in virtually every city (inaudible)." Bloomberg also says that "the way you get the guns out of the kids' hands is to throw them up against the wall and frisk them," and suggests "that the ends of 'stop-and-frisk' justified the means." He added, "If you can stop them from getting murdered, I would argue everything else you do is less important."

The New York Times (2/11, Burns, Haberman, 18.61M) points out that Bloomberg "apologized for his administration's law-enforcement tactics in November just before he entered the race," but "he had previously spent years insisting that the policy was justified and effective, showing no indication that he had developed serious misgivings about stop and frisk." The Times adds that in the audio, Bloomberg offers "a particularly blunt defense" of the policy.

Bloomberg (2/11, 4.73M) reports that the audio "surfaced hours after a Quinnipiac poll came out Monday showing Bloomberg rising in presidential preference polls among black voters." According to the poll, his "support among black voters jumped 15 percentage points since an earlier poll on Jan. 28, from 7% to 22%." At the same time, former Vice President Joe Biden's "once-overwhelming advantage among the same voter pool dropped from 49% to 27%." Andrea Mitchell said on NBC Nightly News (2/11, story 4, 1:45, Holt, 6.35M) that Bloomberg has "soar[ed] to third place in a national poll," and is "siphoning off critical African American support from Joe Biden." But he is "now a target."

In Now-Deleted Tweet, Trump Called Bloomberg A "Total Racist." Axios (2/11, Green, 521K) reports that in a now-deleted tweet, President Trump posted the audio and called Bloomberg a "TOTAL RACIST." The Washington Times (2/11, Boyer, 492K) says Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale also tweeted out the audio and wrote, "All the money in the world can't undo this." The New York Times (2/11, Burns, Haberman, 18.61M) says, "The highlighting of Mr. Bloomberg signals a change in approach for the broader Trump apparatus, which has mostly ignored Mr. Bloomberg even as the president has fretted about the billionaire's profligate spending." Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (2/11, story 2, 3:20, Muir, 7.77M) that "Trump himself has repeatedly promoted stop and frisk." Trump: "It worked very well in New York. It brought the crime rate way down."

Trump also retweeted a photo of himself and Bloomberg, apparently on a golf course, and wrote, "Mini Mike is a short ball (very) hitter. Tiny club head speed. KEEP AMERICA GREAT!"

Bloomberg responded to Trump's tweet calling him a "total racist" by accusing the President of being a racist. Reuters (2/11, Lange) reports that Bloomberg issued a statement in which he "cited what he called his commitment to criminal justice reform and racial equity," and added, "In contrast, President Trump inherited a country marching toward greater equality and divided us with racist appeals and hateful rhetoric." The Daily Caller (2/11, Talcott, 716K) quotes Bloomberg as saying in the statement, "President Trump's deleted tweet is the latest example of his endless efforts to divide Americans. ... Make no mistake Mr. President: I am not afraid of you and I will not let you bully me or anyone else in America." A Wall Street Journal (2/11, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes Trump's tweet calling Bloomberg a racist, since he has faced unfair allegations of racism himself. The also argues that while Bloomberg's comments were politically incorrect, they were basically true.

Meanwhile, Politico (2/11, Forgey, 4.29M) says Bloomberg's "Democratic rivals mostly dodged questions regarding the clip Tuesday, declining to engage with the controversy as they campaigned in New Hampshire." However, Politico says Biden "suggested he would reference 'stop-and-frisk' during the primary debate next week in Las Vegas." Biden said, "We're going to debate him there. And so I'm anxious to talk about it." Politico adds that Tom Steyer "challenged Bloomberg most directly." Steyer said, "The racist stereotypes he uses have no place today, and anyone running for the presidential nomination should disavow them."

Trump Says He'd Rather Run Against Bloomberg Than Sanders. Breitbart (2/11, Spiering, 673K) reports that Trump said Tuesday that he would rather run against Bloomberg than Sanders. Trump said, "Frankly I'd rather run against Bloomberg than Bernie Sanders because Sanders has real followers. ... He has followers, Bloomberg's just buying his way in."

NYTimes Analysis: Bloomberg Controversy Showed Trump Is A Master At "Hijacking" A News Cycle. A New York Times (2/11, Shear, Haberman, 18.61M) analysis says Tuesday could have been a day in which Trump "saw himself losing control of the narrative in the face of wall-to-wall coverage of his Democratic rivals in the presidential primary in New Hampshire." But, with the Bloomberg audio, Trump saw "an opportunity to try to shape the coverage of the Democratic contest more to his liking." Trump "poured accelerant on the story, aided by his oldest son, Donald Trump Jr., and his campaign manager." The Times says it was "a reminder, if anyone needed one, that the first reality show star turned president has mastered the art of hijacking the modern internet-dominated news cycle, taking old but not well-known information and hyping it to make it feel new and potentially damaging for one of his political enemies."

Sanders Says He Has "A Real Problem" With Bloomberg Trying To "Buy The Election." The New York Post (2/11, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports that in an interview with NBC, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) said he has a "real problem" with Bloomberg spending millions of dollars of his own money for his presidential campaign. Sanders said, "I don't begrudge his wealth, but I do begrudge a billionaire thinking he can buy the election. He has every right in the world to run for office...But he doesn't have the right to buy an election. This is exactly the problem with American politics." Sanders said he has "a real problem with multibillionaires literally buying elections."

Former CNBC Anchor To Challenge Ocasio-Cortez In NY14 Democratic Primary.

The New York Post (2/11, Moore, 4.57M) reports "former CNBC anchor Michelle Caruso-Cabrera filed paperwork to challenge freshman Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez in the Democratic primary for her Bronx-Queens congressional seat." Caruso-Cabrera, who "left the network in 2018 and will no longer be a CNBC contributor, filed late Monday as a Democrat." On its website, CNBC (2/11, Calia, Javers, 3.62M) quotes Caruso-Cabrera as saying, "I am the daughter and granddaughter of working class Italian and Cuban immigrants. ... I am so lucky to have had such a wonderful career and I want everybody to have the opportunity that I've had. That's why I'm running."

To the Washington Examiner (2/11, Lowe, 448K), "Ocasio-Cortez may finally face a serious possible threat to her seat." The Examiner adds that "as a fellow Latina granddaughter of working-class immigrants, Caruso-Cabrera's background remarkably matches Ocasio-Cortez's, rendering the identity politics debate of Democratic primaries all but useless." The AP (2/11) recounts that "Caruso-Cabrera became a CNBC contributor when she left her full-time position at the network in September 2018." She "served as chief international correspondent and as co-host of 'Power Lunch' during her 20-year career at the network." The Washington Times (2/11, Harper, 492K) indicates "she will be the 15th candidate to campaign against the outspoken freshman lawmaker, who is currently on the road" with Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "in his bid for the White House."

Axios (2/11, Knutson, 521K) says "the race pits Caruso-Cabrera, a proponent of free markets and limited government, against Ocasio-Cortez, a democratic socialist and one of the most popular progressive politicians in the country." USA Today (2/11, Cummings, 10.31M) reports that "in her 2010 book, 'You Know I'm Right: More Prosperity, Less Government,'" Caruso-Cabrera "described herself as a fiscal conservative and social liberal who was 'part of a new and growing crowd of "sort-of Republicans."'" She also "said Ronald Reagan was her favorite president, followed by Bill Clinton."

Lawyer For Accused 9/11 Plotter Seeks To Be Excused From Case.

The New York Times (2/11, Rosenberg, 18.61M) reports James P. Harrington, the "long-serving capital defense lawyer" for Ramzi bin al-Shibh, "one of the five men accused of plotting the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks, asked the judge on Tuesday to be excused from the case, citing his health and other issues, casting doubt on whether the trial can begin as scheduled next year." Col. W. Shane Cohen, the judge, "recessed what was meant to be a week of pretrial hearings to allow" Harrington "to put his request to leave the case in writing."

Rose, Soufan Make Case For Designating White Supremacist Groups As Terrorist Organizations.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (2/11, 18.61M), Rep. Max Rose (D-NY) and former FBI special agent Ali H. Soufan write that "the enemy we currently face is not a jihadist threat. It's white supremacists – in the United States and overseas." They argue that "so-called domestic terrorism" is not domestic at all and cite "the existence of a global network of white supremacist extremists that stretches across North America, Europe and Australia. White supremacists today are organizing in a similar fashion to jihadist terrorist organizations, like Al Qaeda, in the 1980s and 1990s." But US law "has not caught up to the new threat we face." Because "international white supremacist groups are still not designated as foreign terrorist organizations," law enforcement and intelligence agencies "cannot access the full suite of tools available to them in countering groups like ISIS and Al Qaeda."

Esper Wants NATO To Step Up Role In Fight Against ISIS.

The AP (2/11, Burns) reports Defense Secretary Esper "said Tuesday he is looking to NATO allies for more help countering the Islamic State extremist group in Iraq and in bolstering US defense efforts in the Middle East more broadly." The AP adds that "in an interview while flying to Brussels to attend a NATO defense ministers meeting, Esper told reporters he wants NATO countries to do more to help Iraq's security forces." Said Esper, "As they put more forces in, that could allow us to decrease" the US military's role.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45.1%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45.1%, and his disapproval at 52.1%. The President's job approval is down 0.1 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (2/6-2/10) finds Trump's approval at 49%, with 49% disapproving.

Argentina Delays $1.47B Bond Payment Ahead Of IMF Talks.

Reuters (2/11, Raszewski, Bronstein) reports Argentina "has decided to postpone a $1.47 billion principal payment on the country's AF20 bond until Sept. 30, the economy ministry said on Tuesday, potentially complicating a wider debt restructuring program." In a statement, the government "said it planned to continue making scheduled interest payments on the bond. But investors may still frown on Argentina changing payment terms without consulting the bondholders." Reuters quotes Goldman Sachs emerging markets analyst Alberto Ramos saying, "It is a unilateral decision by the debtor, and not a move that creates goodwill in the market." The announcement comes "on the eve of talks with Argentina's biggest creditor," the IMF, "over the government's strategy for getting out of recession," a strategy that "starts with re-negotiating IMF loans and sovereign bonds." The AP (2/11) also reports.

Egypt's Central Bank Governor Says Talks Occurring With IMF On Technical Assistance, Structural Reforms.

Reuters (2/11, Laessing) reports Egypt's central bank governor "said on Tuesday that Egypt is in talks with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) about technical assistance regarding structural reforms. Governor Tarek Amer added that the priority was to grow the economy."

Lebanon's New Government Wins Confidence Vote As Mass Protests Continue.

Reuters (2/11, Perry, Nakhoul, Francis, Bassam, Knecht) reports Lebanon's new government "won a vote of confidence from parliament on Tuesday as protesters trying to block the session clashed with security forces, leaving hundreds injured." The government's new cabinet, "formed last month with the backing of the powerful Hezbollah group, is hoping a financial rescue plan that formed the basis of its confidence vote in parliament can help pull the country from a deep financial crisis." It will need to do so fast, as Lebanon "must quickly decide how it will deal with maturities including a $1.2 billion Eurobond due in March, part of $2.5 billion owed this year." Reuters says Parliament Speaker Nabih Berri "was quoted saying Lebanon should seek IMF technical help to draw up an emergency plan but should not 'surrender' to the IMF because the nation could not bear its conditions."

McConnell Urges Senate To Oppose Bill Constraining Trump's Iran War Powers.

The Washington Times (2/11, Meier, 492K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell on Tuesday "vowed to vote against a war powers resolution that would restrict President Trump's military authority in Iran." In a speech on the Senate floor, McConnell "called the measure 'blunt and clumsy,' and claimed that if passed, the resolution 'would tie our own hands.'" McConnell "called on his fellow Senate colleagues to join him in rejecting the legislation."

Pompeo Warns Iran's Space Efforts Could Help Development Of Missile Program.

The Washington Times (2/11, Meier, 492K) reports Secretary of State Pompeo on Tuesday "criticized Iran's recent failed satellite launch, calling the attempt 'reckless.'" The US has "warned the satellite launch – that Iran claims was intended to gather geographic imagery and data – was part of a larger effort to further a nuclear program and has expressed concerns that the long-range ballistic missile technology used to launch the satellites could be linked to nuclear development." Pompeo said "the technologies used to launch satellites into orbit are virtually identical and interchangeable with those used in the longer-range systems, including intercontinental ballistic missiles."

Hezbollah Reportedly Increased Cooperation With Iraqi Militias After Soleimani Strike.

Reuters (2/11) reports that "shortly after Iranian Major General Qassem Soleimani was killed in a U.S. drone strike in Iraq," Hezbollah "urgently met with Iraqi militia leaders, seeking to unite them in the face of a huge void left by their powerful mentor's death." According to Reuters, "The meetings were meant to coordinate the political efforts of Iraq's often-fractious militias, which lost not only Soleimani but also Abu Mahdi al-Muhandis, a unifying Iraqi paramilitary commander, in the Jan. 3 attack at Baghdad airport." Citing "sources in a pro-Iran regional alliance," Reuters says Hezbollah "has stepped in to help fill the void left by Soleimani in guiding the militias."

UAE's Gargash Supports Iran Deescalation.

Reuters (2/11, Khalek) reports, "United Arab Emirates minister of state for foreign affairs Anwar Gargash said on Tuesday his country supports calls for de-escalation with Iran and to reach a political solution, Al Arabiya TV reported." Gargash "added that preventing Iran from having nuclear weapons under the Vienna accord as the sole restriction is not enough."

Syrian Army Recaptures Strategic Highway Held By Rebels Since 2012.

Reuters (2/11) reports the Syrian army yesterday "seized control of a highway in northwest Syria for the first time since 2012...as they pressed their campaign to eradicate the last rebel strongholds in Idlib province and the Aleppo countryside." Citing the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, Reuters says Syrian soldiers have "seized the entire length of the M5 highway," which "runs from Aleppo in the north to the capital Damascus then on to southern Deraa." Reuters goes on to report that in Ankara, "talks between Turkey and Russia ended without agreement on stopping clashes in which 13 Turkish soldiers have been killed in Syria in one week."

The AP (2/11, Mroue, Fraser) reports that in northern Syria, unidentified "rebels" shot down a Syrian helicopter "killing its crew members in a fiery crash." According to the AP, "The Syrian helicopter gunship was shot down by insurgents amid fighting near the village of Nairab as rebels, backed by Turkish artillery, tried to retake it after losing it last week." The AP says Turkey, "a main backer of the rebels, has rolled armored vehicles into Idlib, apparently to prevent government forces from reaching the border areas with Turkey."

Doctor Featured In Documentary Was Only Woman Running A Hospital In Rebel-Held Syria.

The New York Times (2/11, Gupta, 18.61M) profiles Amani Ballour, a Syrian doctor featured in the Oscar-nominated film "The Cave." Ballour studied medicine at Damascus University and almost immediately after graduating, she "started volunteering at a hospital in eastern Ghouta – a rebel stronghold near Damascus – as one of the few doctors in the area. The hospital, which was under construction, was intended to be a large, six-story medical hub, but the work was abandoned as government forces ramped up attacks and seized the area, forcing the team of 13 doctors to move operations into the winding, subterranean space that made up the foundation of the unfinished building. Soon enough, the new, underground clinic came to be known as the cave." In 2016, she was promoted to manager, "making her the first and only woman in charge of a hospital in rebel-occupied Syria."

Trump Gives Conditional Approval To Peace Deal With Taliban.

The New York Times (2/11, Mashal, Jakes, 18.61M) reports, "More than 18 years after the United States invaded Afghanistan, President Trump has conditionally approved a peace deal with the Taliban that would withdraw the last American troops from the country, potentially beginning the end of America's longest war, according to Afghan and American officials." However, "the deal will only be signed if the Taliban prove their commitment to a durable reduction of violence over a test period of about seven days later this month." The Times adds that "if the Taliban do end hostilities and a deal is signed, the United States would then begin a gradual withdrawal of American troops, and direct negotiations would start between the Taliban and Afghan leaders over the future of their country." Secretary of State Pompeo "informed Afghanistan's top leaders in separate phone calls on Tuesday that Mr. Trump had given tentative approval to this approach, according to a senior Afghan official briefed on one of the calls."

Earlier yesterday, Reuters (2/11, Landay, Nair) reported "Afghan President Ashraf Ghani said on Tuesday he was told by...Pompeo that 'notable progress' had been made in talks between the United States and the Taliban on an agreement for a US troop withdrawal from Afghanistan." On Twitter, Ghani said "Pompeo had informed him in a telephone call that the Taliban had made a proposal 'with regards to bringing a significant and enduring reduction in violence.'" Reuters added "Ghani's tweet indicated a possible breakthrough in talks between US and Taliban negotiators."

The Washington Post (2/11, DeYoung, 14.2M) reports "Ghani and Afghan Chief Executive Abdullah Abdullah, who received separate calls from Pompeo, both expressed optimism about a potential 'reduction in violence,' but indicated in statements on Twitter that no final agreement had been reached."

Six Killed In Kabul Bombing Targeting Military Academy.

The Washington Post (2/11, Hassan, Salahuddin, 14.2M) reports that "after months of relative calm in the Afghan capital, a suicide bombing on Tuesday morning outside a military academy left at least six dead and 12 wounded." The Post adds "bombings in Kabul have dropped off in recent months as peace talks between the United States and Taliban insurgents have reached a critical stage. In addition, large-scale military operations in the country's east have disrupted the extremist Islamic State group's ability to plan and carry out attacks." The Kabul military academy that was attacked "has been the target of attacks in the past claimed by the Islamic State," but "no group immediately claimed responsibility for the latest attack."

Trumps To Host State Dinner For Spanish Royals.

The AP (2/11, Superville) reports that in April, President Trump and First Lady Melania Trump "will host the administration's third state dinner...for King Felipe VI and Queen Letizia of Spain." King Felipe and Trump "met in the Oval Office in June 2018 during a royal tour of the US to mark the 300th anniversaries of the founding of New Orleans and San Antonio, cities with historical ties to Spain." The AP adds that Trump, "at the time, praised the 'outstanding' relationship between the US and Spain and cited excellent cooperation between them on trade and military defense."

Grenell: Evidence Shows Trump's Foreign Policy Style Is Working.

US Ambassador to Germany Rick Grenell said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (2/11), "I really believe in this new foreign policy for conservatives. And I really think that there's a lot of successes that President Trump has had. So I'm happy and humbled to be a part of it. I truly am. So I'm going to do what the President wants. I will say this, that you know, there's a lot of talk about President Trump's style. And I'm somebody who takes that bait every single time someone brings it up. I would love to engage on this idea of whether or not President Trump's style is working, because I think we've got a lot of evidence to show that it actually is working. And so we should be thankful that we have a President with President Trump's style, because it works."

Grenell Cites Progress In Efforts To Serbia-Kosovo Relations. Grenell was asked on the Hugh Hewitt Show (2/11) about efforts to normalize relations between Kosovo and Serbia. Grenell said there has been "some progress." Grenell said he "found that they just really wanted a normalization on the economic front. And so our goal became how do we begin to move commerce to a more normal level. ... We needed to have the first flight from Pristina to Belgrade in 21 years," and "we were able to get an agreement. ... It's really the Trump goal of trying to use the economy to really drive forward political issues." Grenell added, "I do think in a typical Donald Trump Administration fashion, we are pushing the parties together, and trying to not have this kind of US-centric idea that's imported...onto these countries, but to really say to" both sides, "do you all have the political will to move forward, create jobs for your young people, and really change the economic outlook?"

CIA's Secret Ownership Of Encryption Company Enabled Expansive Espionage For Decades.

The Washington Post (2/11, Miller, 14.2M) reports a Swiss company that supplied encryption devices to governments around the world "well into the 21st century" was "secretly owned by the CIA" for years in a classified "partnership with West German intelligence." The spy agencies "rigged" Crypto AG's devices "so they could easily break the codes that countries used to send encrypted messages." The operation was "successful beyond their wildest projections," and generated profits that were used to fund other projects.

At UN, Abbas Denounces Trump's Plan For Israel And Palestine.

Reuters (2/11, Holland, Mohammed) reports that in an appearance before the United Nations Security Council, Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas "angrily rejected" President Trump's "Middle East peace proposal...as a gift to Israel and unacceptable to Palestinians." Abbas, "waving a copy of a map that the US plan envisions for a two-state solution for Israel and Palestine...said the state carved out for Palestinians looked like a fragmented 'Swiss cheese.'" Reuters also reports that "in a potential rebuke to the Trump plan, a draft UN Security Council resolution being circulated to council members by Tunisia and Indonesia would condemn an Israeli plan to annex its settlements in the West Bank."

The New York Times (2/11, Gladstone, 18.61M) similarly reports "Abbas categorically repudiated everything about the plan, which Mr. Trump unveiled with great fanfare two weeks ago in Washington with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel at his side." The plan "would give Israel most of what it wanted while offering the Palestinians the possibility of a state with limited sovereignty." To the New York Post (2/11, Moore, 4.57M), meanwhile, "the proposal, the culmination of a three-year effort by Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner, doubles the territory under Palestinian control and offers a path to statehood if the Palestinians meet a number of conditions," though "it also recognized Israel's sovereignty over settlements in the West Bank."

The Washington Times (2/11, Frantzman, 492K) reports "Israel has waited a long time for President Trump's vaunted 'deal of the century,' and now it is waiting some more." While "the peace plan...was widely seen as a diplomatic triumph and security coup for Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu...he is finding his country in a state of suspended animation" ahead of "a national election March 2." The Times adds "the US and Israel are looking to the March 2 elections in hopes that they will provide clarity and an Israeli government that can act."

Palestinian Push For UNSC Vote Condemning US Plan Fizzles. The Washington Post (2/11, Gearan, 14.2M) reports "the Trump administration claimed a symbolic victory at the United Nations on Tuesday, as an effort to formally condemn the new US Middle East peace plan fizzled." The Post adds "a UN Security Council vote that would have been a referendum against the plan never happened, an indication that there were not votes to approve the Palestinian-backed measure."

Axios (2/11, Ravid, 521K) reports that "the White House is signaling that it's willing to make changes to the plan if the Palestinians return to the table," with "senior US officials" saying "their goal was to show the Palestinians that they won't get anywhere through the UN and would be better off negotiating with Washington." Said one such "senior official," "Today, by not putting forward a polarizing resolution, the United Nations Security Council demonstrated that the old way of doing things is over."

Natan Sharansky, a political prisoner in the Soviet Union who served in four Israeli cabinets, and Gil Troy, a professor of history at McGill, defend the Administration proposal in the Wall Street Journal (2/11, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), pointing out that Palestinian leaders have rejected peace plan after peace plan. To Sharansky and Troy, the issue is that Palestinian leaders are not seeking peace and will continue to refuse to recognize Israel as a Jewish state. Instead, to the authors, Israel and international actors should forego Abbas and negotiate with Palestinian pro-democracy business leaders.

Philippines Tells US It Intends To Exit Security Agreement.

The New York Times (2/11, Gutierrez, 18.61M) reports the Philippines announced yesterday that it "had officially informed the United States that it was scrapping a military pact that has given the longtime American ally a security blanket for the past two decades." The agreement "still remains in force, but the notice to terminate it, delivered to the American Embassy in Manila, starts a clock under which it will remain in effect for 180 days before lapsing." The Times adds "the notice to terminate the pact, the Visiting Forces Agreement, comes as President Rodrigo Duterte has warmed up to China while distancing himself from the United States, the Philippines' former colonial ruler. The move also comes as the Philippines has shown increasing reluctance to stand up to China over its territorial claims in the South China Sea."

Reuters (2/11, Lema, Petty) reports that "the mercurial Duterte, who has clashed with the former colonial ruler over several issues, decided to pull the plug on the two-decade troop rotation pact to enable the Philippines to be more independent in its relations with other countries, spokesman Salvador Panelo said." Said Panelo, "The President will not entertain any initiative coming from the US government to salvage the VFA, neither will he accept any official invitation to visit the United States."

The AP (2/11, Gomez) reports Defense Secretary Esper "said Tuesday in Brussels, Belgium, that he only received notice of Duterte's order on Monday evening and had not yet fully digested the details." Esper called the development "unfortunate," adding, "I do think it would be a move in the wrong direction."

NYTimes Analysis: Merkel Heir's Exit Exacerbates Concerns About German Leadership.

The New York Times (2/11, Bennhold, Erlanger, 18.61M) reports that "even before Chancellor Angela Merkel's chosen successor announced this week that she would step aside, sending German politics into deeper disarray, there were complaints about German leadership in Europe." The Times adds "those concerns will come into even sharper focus this week, with the opening on Friday of the annual Munich Security Conference." To the Times, "It is telling that, 30 years after German reunification, Germany and its stagnant government, split ideologically and with Ms. Merkel in her last year in office, will barely feature on the agenda," and "the resignation on Monday of Ms. Merkel's chosen successor, Annegret Kramp-Karrenbauer, will only intensify questions about where Germany is headed."

Guaidó Says He Is Back In Venezuela.

Reuters (2/11, Kinosian) reports interim Venezuela President Juan Guaidó on Tuesday "wrote on Twitter that he has arrived in his country after traveling in North America and Europe." The Washington Post (2/11, Zuñiga, Faiola, 14.2M) recounts that "the opposition said a caravan of pro-Guaidó lawmakers traveling to greet him was stopped by police, prompting some to start a miles-long walk toward the airport. About 40 other lawmakers who had traveled separately managed to arrive by early afternoon to await Guaidó's return."

WPost Analysis: Increasing Role Of Military In Latin American Countries Reflects Dissatisfaction With Democracy.

The Washington Post (2/11, Brigada, Sheridan, 14.2M) reports a "show of force" by El Salvadoran soldiers who marched into a legislative assembly "this week has fueled an outcry over the increasingly visible role of the military in Latin America's nascent, in some cases fragile democracies." According to analysts, "the growing tendency of political leaders to turn to the military to assert their power reflects a mounting frustration with democracy." The Post says "the military is often viewed as less corrupt, more patriotic and better able to restore order than politicians." Leaders "turn to the armed forces to give luster to their governments, or legitimacy to their decisions."

Official: Sudan To Turn Bashir Over To ICC.

The AP (2/11) reports, "A top Sudanese official said Tuesday the country's transitional authorities and rebel groups have agreed to hand over officials wanted by the ICC, presumably referring to long-time autocrat Omar al-Bashir, who is wanted for war crimes including mass killings in Darfur." Al-Bashir, "overthrown by the military last year amid a public uprising, is wanted by the ICC on charges of crimes against humanity and genocide related to the Darfur conflict." The New York Times (2/11, Walsh, Dahir, 18.61M) cautions that "an official at the International Criminal Court said on Tuesday that the court had received no communication about a handover from Sudan's government, and that there were no negotiations at the moment." The Washington Post (2/11, Bearak, 14.2M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Australians' Support For Coal Shaken By Climate Concerns.

The Washington Post (2/11, Wilson, 14.2M) reports, "As much of a warming world considers alternatives to coal, Australia embarked last year on one of the largest expansions of the industry in a generation." However, "a series of ominous signs over the last three years have shaken the rock-solid support among Australians for their country's leading export." For instance, recent wildfires have forced many Australians "to confront the global impact of the Australian coal industry and along with it, the future of a national economy built in large part on briquettes."

WPost: Western Governments Should Help Belarus Resist Putin.

To counter Russian President Vladimir Putin's push "to subjugate Belarus," an editorial by the Washington Post (2/11, 14.2M) urges Western governments to support Belarusian President Aleksander Lukashenko, who is resisting Putin's calls to "implement a 20-year-old agreement that would merge the two countries, essentially turning Belarus into a province." Opposing Putin could result in harming the Belarusian economy, and in that case, the Post says "the United States and the E.U. should do what they can to ease the pain, while continuing to press for improvements in human rights."

Freddie Mac Survey Reveals Most Renters Mistakenly Believe They Pay Less Than Homeowners.

Mortgage News Daily (2/11) reports, "Renters questions in a new Freddie Mac survey expressed a rather unfortunate misconception. In its new Profile of Today's Renter and Owner, the company said it found that 'An unprecedented number of renters believe renting is more affordable than owning. Eighty-four percent of respondents stated that belief, up 17 percentage points from the February 2018 survey and an all-time high. However, the survey also found that 42 percent of renters paid more than one-third of their income on rent compared to 24 percent of homeowners who paid that much on their mortgage.'"

According to M Report (2/11, Albanese), Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman said, "The housing market is strong and, based on our survey, the low mortgage rate environment may inspire both renters and owners to make an educated move this spring. While Baby Boomers tend to be satisfied with their current housing situation, younger generations are still struggling to determine whether to rent or purchase a home, largely due to lack of supply and affordability constraints." Multifamily Executives At MBA CREF 2020 Conference Are Optimistic.

The National Real Estate Investor (2/11, 131K) reports on nine "takeaways" from the first day of the MBA CREF 2020 Conference. Among other topics, NREI reports that multifamily lenders "see little risk to their business right now," other than those in markets facing rent regulation. Freddie Mac Multifamily EVP Deborah Jenkins said, "In the core [multifamily] businesses, there's nothing that's making me nervous, especially on the middle-market, workforce side, so maybe [this cycle] is a double header." PGIM Real Estate Finance Managing Director Michael McRoberts was also optimistic, stating, "I think we can roll for a while and have a period of time when returns are not as good as they have been, but they are still fine."

Scotsman Guide (2/11, Aurellano) reports, "At its 2020 Commercial Real Estate Finance/Multifamily Housing Convention & Expo in San Diego, the Mortgage Bankers Association (MBA) announced that 2020 will mark a rebound in commercial and multifamily mortgage maturities." The rise "should kick off a stabilization in mortgage maturation patterns after a rollercoaster ride in the last few years, according to Jamie Woodwell, the MBA's vice president of commercial real estate research." Woodwell said, "This year marks the beginning of a 'return to normalcy' after the so-called 'wall of maturities' in 2016 and 2017, and the 'trough of maturities' in 2018 and 2019." According to him, the volume of 2020 maturities is "muted," even with the rebound. Woodwell said, "This is particularly true for multifamily mortgages held or guaranteed by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and FHA, of which less than 2 percent of the outstanding balance will mature. Loans made by investor-driven lenders, such as mortgage REITs, debt funds and credit companies, tend to be shorter-term, which is why nearly one-quarter of the outstanding balance of those loans will mature in 2020."

NY Fed: US Household Debt And Mortgage Debt Hit Another High In Q4.

American Banker (2/11, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that US household debt "hit another all-time high in the fourth quarter, as outstanding balances on mortgages, student loans, auto loans and credit cards all climbed to record levels, according to data released Tuesday by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. Total consumer debt rose to $14.15 trillion, up nearly 5% from the end of 2018 and roughly 27% from 2013, when debt levels started rising again after years of belt-tightening." In Q4, "mortgage originations rose by $223 billion from the previous quarter, as many homeowners used falling interest rates as an opportunity to refinance their debt. With average on rates on a 30-year fixed-rate mortgages falling to 3.45% last week – their lowest level in three years, according to a survey by Freddie Mac – observers expect the purchase market to perk up as well." Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "The combination of very low mortgage rates, a strong economy and more positive financial market sentiment all point to home purchase demand continuing to rise over the next few months."

MBA Releases Commercial And Multifamily Servicer Rankings.

REBusiness Online (2/11, Tostado) reports, "The Mortgage Banker Association (MBA) has released its 2019 ranking of commercial and multifamily mortgage servicers, which is calculated by deal volume." The MBA "ranked a few different categories in its report, including ranking the top agency servicers. For Fannie Mae loans, Wells Fargo, Walker & Dunlop, Berkadia, CBRE and Newmark Knight Frank (NKF) are the top five servicers. For Freddie Mac, Wells Fargo, KeyBank, PNC, CBRE and Berkadia are the top five performers. ... Orix Real Estate Capital, Walker & Dunlop, Berkadia, Greystone and Wells Fargo were the top Federal Housing Authority (FHA) and Ginnie Mae servicers."

Podcast: DeMarco Discusses QM And ATR Rule, GSE Reform.

HousingWire (2/11, 23K) reports, "Housing Policy Council President and former Federal Housing Finance Agency Interim Director Ed DeMarco visited HousingWire Monday to talk about the latest developments on the Qualified Mortgage and the Ability-to-Repay rule." In a "special podcast episode, DeMarco talks about the shifts in the QM rule, and what it would mean to remove the debt-to-income requirement from Ability-to-Repay." At the end of the podcast, DeMarco also discusses "GSE reform, and what it means to have someone like FHFA Director Mark Calabria at the helm as Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac prepare to exit conservatorship."

Multifamily Financing.

KeyBank Provides $23M Freddie Mac Refi For Louisiana Tech Student Housing.

REBusiness Online (2/11) reports, "KeyBank Real Estate Capital has provided a $23.2 million Freddie Mac refinancing loan for University Crossing Apartments, a 552-bed student housing community located near Louisiana Tech University in Ruston."

CBRE Originates $20M Freddie Mac Acquisition Loan For Denver Community.

Multi-Housing News (2/11) reports, "Montgomery Partners has purchased the 168-unit Aspenwood in Aurora, Colo., for $30 million from a private investor, Yardi Matrix data shows. CBRE Capital Markets originated a $19.6 million Freddie Mac loan for the new owner. The financing matures in 2027."

Freddie-Financed Atlanta Property Refinanced.

Commercial Real Estate Direct (2/11, Moynihan) reports, "Walker & Dunlop has originated $26 million of Fannie Mae financing against the 210-unit Reserve at Johns Creek Walk apartments in the Atlanta suburb of Johns Creek, Ga. The loan allowed the property's owner, JLL Income Property Trust, to retire a $22.8 million Freddie Mac loan that was securitized through FREMF, 2013-K713."

Research Suggests CECL Could Prompt Federal Banking Regulators To Loosen Capital Requirements.

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Maurer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a study by researchers from the University of Minnesota and the Netherlands' Tilburg University suggests that the Current Expected Credit Loss (CECL) accounting standard could lead United States banking regulators to loosen capital requirements for financial institutions. Lenders, who have generally criticized the rule, could stand to benefit, according to the research.

NAR Panel Focuses On Closing The Racial Homeownership Gap.

Mortgage Professional America (2/11, Smith) reports that the homeownership gap between white and black Americans is growing wider, according to the National Association of Realtors. Last year, the gap was "larger than it was more than 50 years ago," according to MPA. At a panel in Washington, DC, experts "discussed the factors putting homeownership out of reach for many Americans and proposals to alleviate housing-supply constraints, improve access to credit, and increase post-purchase and support programs." Bryan Greene, NAR's director of fair housing policy, said at the conference, "In 2020, there is still a persistent gap in homeownership rates between whites, African Americans, Hispanic Americans and Asian Americans. On one hand, you might expect there to be a lower homeownership rate among minority Americans, as a history of discrimination in this country has left many with lower incomes ... and less generational wealth to pass on for down payments and the like."

With Latest Drop In Rates, Mortgage Investors Prepare For A New Wave Of Refis.

Bloomberg (2/11, 4.73M) reports, "With the 30-year mortgage rate just 14 basis points above its all-time low of 3.31% seen in November 2012, mortgage-backed security investors are bracing themselves for a wave of refinancings in the coming months. The prevailing sentiment for higher prepayments ahead is shown by a Bloomberg Barclays U.S. MBS index duration that is just 2.62 years, down from 4.71 one year ago and approaching the trailing-one year low of 2.34 seen on Sept. 4, according to data compiled by Bloomberg." Bloomberg reports that "about 60% of conventional (Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac) and 70% of government (FHA and VA) home owners" now have "at least 0.50% of incentive to refinance."

CoreLogic: National Overall Delinquency Rate Was 3.9% In November.

M Report (2/11, Albanese) says, "CoreLogic found that the nation's overall delinquency was 3.9% in November 2019, which is a marginal decline from last year's 4%. November's reading was the lowest reading for November in more than 20 years." The delinquency rate in November "historically peaked in 2009 at 11.5%," but since March 2018, "the overall delinquency rate each month has been lower than the pre-crisis period from 2000 to 2006. The rate averaged 4.7% during that time." CoreLogic reported that the serious delinquency rate has held steady at 1.3% since April 2019.

Industry Still Has Questions About QM And ATR.

In its Pipeline Press rundown, Mortgage News Daily (2/11) reports, "The QM Patch will not become permanent given the feedback from FHFA and CFPB. And Appendix Q is detailed to the level of being paralyzing." One compliance expert said, "The industry is wondering, if ATR is 'consider and verify' in the 8 categories, how is QM standard different, if at all?" MND says, however, that "investors in securities backed by mortgages have many options. There are different maturities, different geographic breakdowns, different guarantees, or no guarantees/insurance at all! Lately investors have turned their eye on non-Agency MBS for various reasons spelled out in this article."

LoanDepot Survey: Millennials, Gen Z Expect Help From Parents When Buying First Home.

National Mortgage Professional (2/11, Hall) reports that a new survey from LoanDepot revealed that Millennials and Gen Zers are "still getting assistance from the Bank of Mom and Dad to help finance their property purchasing." According to NMP, "The survey, which polled 1,045 adults, found 77 percent of Millennials and Gen Zers are expecting to receive financial assistance from their parents to purchase their first home. The most common expectations included downpayment assistance (38 percent), co-signing the mortgage (31 percent) and covering closing costs (24 percent). Of those expecting down payment assistance, the majority of respondents were looking for less than $10,000, while 19 percent anticipated $10,000 or more."

NAR Studies Impact Of Legal Marijuana On Real Estate.

Mortgage News Daily (2/11, Swanson) reports that study from the National Association of Realtors "grew out of a survey conducted with over 150,000 of its members, equally divided between those who operate in the commercial area (including building owners and managers) and those who practice residential real estate." According to MND, "The study looked at states where marijuana has been legalized for medical purposes, for recreation, and for both, examining how it is grown, harvested, stored, sold, and consumed within those states. ... In states where marijuana is legal in some form, between 9 percent and 23 percent of members who responded to the survey said they believe the inventory of available homes is tight for multiple reasons, including all-cash purchases from within the marijuana industry. While most respondents hadn't seen any changes in property values near dispensaries, between 7 percent and 12 percent said they had seen an increase in values while 8 percent to 27 percent said they had seen values decline.” Scotsman Guide (2/11, Aurellano) provides further coverage.

Some San Francisco Bay Area Builders Embracing Tiny Homes After ADU Restrictions Loosened.

KNTV-TV San Francisco (2/10, 138K) reports “some enterprising builders” in the San Francisco Bay Area “are thinking small” when it comes to solutions for the area’s housing crisis. Several groups have begun offering accessory dwelling units, which they expect to become more popular “now that the state has streamlined the permitting process, and loosened restrictions on renting them out.”

CVS To Invest $75 Million In Affordable Housing.

Forbes (2/11, 9.71M) contributor Bruce Japsen writes, “CVS Health will increase investments in affordable housing to address social determinants of health as insurers intensify strategies to reduce costs and improve outcomes beyond covering traditional medical treatments.” In 2020, CVS “will invest $75 million in affordable housing in several communities on top of $67 million invested in 2019.” Karen Lynch, CVS Health’s executive vice president and president of Aetna said, “Providing affordable housing options to people who are facing significant challenges can be their first step on a path to better health,” and “we work with community organizations to provide access to services such as independent living skills, cooking and nutrition...client centered treatment plans and social support.”

FierceHealthcare (2/11, Minemyer, 146K) reports that in addition to the 2019 investments going to “new permanent supportive housing units,” the investment “also backed the creation of 450 units for seniors, 59 for veterans and their families and 38 dedicated to Native Americans and their families.” The article covers various housing investments made by CVS last year including a low-income community and a “permanent supportive housing facility for individuals with mental health issues.”

Analysis: Hiring Of Houlihan Lokey Moves Government Closer To Ending GSE Conservatorship.

In a The Motley Fool (2/11, Nyitray, CFA, 1.22M) analysis piece, CFA Brent Nyitray discusses the FHFA’s hiring of Houlihan Lokey and the next steps in the Administration’s push to end the conservatorships of the GSEs. According to Nyitray, “In many ways, the common stock of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac represents a litigation lottery ticket. Much will depend on the opinion of the president’s administration.” Nyitray believes that a “big question will remain regarding Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac’s mission and government guarantee.”

Analysis: Mortgage Company Investors Should Understand Cross-Default Risk.

In a guest piece for National Mortgage News (2/11), Mayer Brown partner Lauren Pryor shares what “buyers and sellers should be aware of the following five issues that may pose transaction risk for buyers and sellers in U.S. mortgage company investments.” One of these is “cross-default risk.” According to Pryor, “Buyers may consider whether an equity investment in a Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac seller/servicer or a Ginnie Mae issuer would pose “cross default” risk with another servicer or issuer under common ownership or control with the target company. The Ginnie Mae mortgage-backed securities guide, Fannie Mae selling and servicing guides and Freddie Mac seller/servicer guide all include cross-default provisions applicable to parties under common ownership or control. The cross-default provisions provide that a default under the applicable guide or servicing agreement by one entity may be deemed to be a default with respect to another entity under common ownership or control.”

Puerto Rican Bank To Resolve US Money Laundering Probe For $1 Million.

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Sun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the Justice Department said on Tuesday that Bank of San Juan Internacional Inc. has agreed to pay $1 million to settle a federal probe of alleged money laundering. Federal prosecutors alleged that the bank laundered millions of dollars related to transactions and loan agreements with Venezuela’s state-owned oil company Petróleos de Venezuela SA.

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (1/27, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury Yield rose to 1.61 percent.

Dollar Holds Onto Gains.

Reuters (2/12, Westbrook) reports, “Asian currencies found support on Wednesday from a slowdown in the spread of coronavirus, but a strong dollar and caution about the rising death toll kept gains in check, while the New Zealand dollar jumped after the central bank dropped its easing bias.” The euro “clambered from a four-month low to trade at $1.0916,” while the yen “was steady at 109.86 per dollar.”

Gold Remains Flat.

Reuters (2/12, Sistla) reports, "Gold was little changed on Wednesday, as equities rose after the number of new coronavirus cases fell, while uncertainty over the economic impact of the outbreak underpinned bullion." Spot gold "was flat at $1,567.82 per ounce by 0348 GMT," while US gold futures "edged 0.1% higher to $1,571.20."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (2/12, Chung) reports, "Oil prices extended gains on Wednesday as China reported its lowest daily number of new coronavirus cases since late January, stoking investor hopes that fuel demand in the world's second-largest oil consumer may begin to recover from the epidemic." Brent crude "was up $1.12, or 2.1%, at $55.13 per barrel at 0748 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate "rose 74 cents, or 1.5%, to $50.68 a barrel."

China Denies PLA Was Behind Equifax Hack.

The Washington Post (2/11, Fifield, 14.2M) reports China "has flatly denied – again – any suggestion that its operatives are conducting cyberattacks or espionage in the United States, following the Justice Department's move to charge four members of the Chinese military with a 2017 hack of the Equifax credit reporting agency," which "compromised the personal information, including Social Security numbers and birth dates, of about 145 million people." Foreign Ministry spokesman Geng Shuang said, "The Chinese government, military and relevant personnel never engage in cybertheft of trade secrets."

The AP (2/11) reports that Geng "said China was committed to 'firmly oppose and combat cyberattacks of any kind,' adding that it is a staunch defender of cybersecurity." Geng "also turned the accusation back on the U.S., saying past events had shown Washington is 'engaging in large-scale, organized and indiscriminate cyberstealing, spying and surveillance activities on foreign governments, enterprises and individuals.' 'China is also a victim of this,' Geng said."

CNET News (2/11, Ng, 1.99M) reports that Geng said, "It has long been an open secret that the US government and relevant departments, in violation of international law and basic norms governing international relations, have been engaging in large-scale, organized and indiscriminate cyber stealing, spying and surveillance activities on foreign governments, enterprises and individuals."

AFP (2/11) reports, "The US Justice Department on Monday accused the hackers of stealing the sensitive personal information of some 145 million Americans, in one of the world's largest-ever data breaches. Four members of the Chinese army's 54th Research Institute were charged with multiple counts of hacking, computer fraud, economic espionage and wire fraud." US officials "said it took well over a year to track them through the 34 servers in 20 countries they allegedly used to hide their tracks. 'This was an organized and remarkably brazen criminal heist of sensitive information of nearly half of all Americans, as well as the hard work and intellectual property of an American company, by a unit of the Chinese military,'" Attorney General Barr said.

The Washington Examiner (2/11, Yilek, 448K) reports, "None of those charged are in custody and aren't likely to be arrested any time soon. U.S. officials said the charges serve to publicly shame those responsible and would allow the U.S. to arrest them if they travel."

CBS News (2/11, 3.68M) reports, "The DOJ said there was no evidence the stolen information was being used, though according to electronic privacy expert Alan Butler, that might not be the case for long. 'There's no assurance that the use of this data is going to be limited to the Chinese military, it very well could end up on the black market,' he told CBS News' Anna Werner." Butler "noted that Equifax's problems occurred when hackers exploited a known vulnerability in a software program that the company had previously failed to fix. 'Companies are collecting far too much data,' he warned. 'They're not storing it securely, and we don't have a legal regime in the United States that addresses the types of vast quantities of data that these companies are collecting.'"

In a piece for Wired (2/11, 3.49M), Garrett M. Graff writes, "China's hoovering of Americans' private data has long been one of the biggest open secrets of modern intelligence. Gradually, over years, the Justice Department and US government publicly pointed the finger at China for each breach in turn." According to Graff, "Monday's detail-heavy indictment against Chinese military personnel marks the first time that the US has directly gone after Chinese government hackers since its groundbreaking May 2014 indictment against five PLA members for economic espionage – a case that came down even as Chinese hackers were, unbeknownst to the US, already inside the OPM system. Barr's announcement and the accompanying charges also directly tied the Chinese Communist Party to the case, as part of a larger 'China strategy' that the Justice Department has been pushing to raise the costs of China's rampant intellectual property theft and economic espionage."

In a piece for Lawfare (2/11), Graham Webster writes, "At first glance, the Department of Justice's Feb 10. announcement that it indicted four Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) service members in connection with the 2017 Equifax breach bears a resemblance to its 2014 indictment of five PLA officers. Both indictments allege individuals participated in Chinese state-sponsored hacking of U.S. targets. Both allege theft of trade secrets. And both have miniscule chances of going to trial, let alone resulting in convictions," but "there is one major difference." According to Webster, "The new indictment alleges economic espionage along with wire fraud and typical hacking crimes. But it makes one strange claim in order to support the economic espionage charge. It labels the 'personally identifiable information' of U.S. citizens and 'database schemas,' which can be understood as blueprints of how information is stored, allegedly stolen by the hackers as Equifax's 'trade secrets.' Economic espionage is usually understood to be theft for commercial gain, and it's hard to imagine what significant commercial advantage the PLA or its hypothetical business clients could be seeking through theft of U.S. personal information and a map of how it's stored."

In a piece for Slate (2/11, 1.58M), Josephine Wolff writes that "the conception of Equifax's customers' personal data as a form of 'trade secret' is so bizarre it really feels like the U.S. government grasping at straws to turn this into a case of economic espionage and thereby bolster its broader contention that China is busy stealing U.S. intellectual property." According to Wolff, "The Equifax breach looks an awful lot like political espionage. The stolen information is very far from nuclear power plant plans – it's hard to see how it could be classified as intellectual property or provide Chinese companies with a clear competitive advantage."

New Warrant Reveals How Apple Detects Child Pornography.

Business Insider (2/11, Hamilton, 3.67M) reports, "A police warrant unearthed by Forbes has given some insight into how Apple monitors for child pornography images being sent over its devices." The warrant "shows Apple's systems flag messages that could contain child abuse images using a technique called 'hashing.' Hashes are like digital watermarks which can be assigned to images or videos which have previously been identified as child abuse." According to BI, "When Apple's servers detect a hashed piece of content, they flag the message or the file and immediately quarantine it, so it doesn't reach the intended recipient. Apple then tips off the relevant authority or law enforcement, and an Apple employee inspects the quarantined content along with any attached messages and compiles a small report." BI adds, "In this specific case, Apple detected suspected child pornography being uploaded by an iCloud user. An Apple employee inspected a series of emails containing a total of 16 images."

Senior DNI Officials Warn Of Rising Cyber Threats.

WTOP-FM Washington (2/11, 385K) reports on increased warnings from senior DNI officials on cyber threats facing the US. Director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center (NCSC) William R. Evanina said, "The lights are blinking faster and brighter." He was referring "specifically to nation-state cyber threats to critical infrastructure, such as energy, financial and telecommunications enterprises." Evanina "said improvement in detection capabilities has led to a better understanding of the thinking, skill sets and operations of adversaries." He pointed out that "foreign adversaries could take the failure of the voting app in the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3 and 'pour gasoline on it.'" His concern is that "a well-oiled disinformation machine...could explode the Iowa app collapse into a wave of doubt about the security of election infrastructure in the US."

Marsden: NSCS Threat Report An Excuse To Justify More Federal Spending. In her syndicated column in the Minneapolis Star Tribune (2/11, 1.04M), Rachel Marsden writes, "In case you were wondering why you should hide under the covers these days (aside from the coronavirus), the US National Counterintelligence and Security Center has just released a report itemizing the top threats facing the country. ... the report also serves as a blueprint for how to funnel cash into the pockets of federal agencies and their military-industrial cronies to keep the charade going." She concludes, "National security has become grossly synonymous with financial security – not for the average American, but for those who rely on the endless flow of your tax dollars. The audience for this report is meant to be you – not so much to inform you about threats you can do nothing about, but rather to convince you that you need protection from far-flung menaces and that you must pay government for that privilege."

US Officials Say Huawei Can Access Mobile Phone Networks Through "Back Doors."

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Pancevski, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that according to US officials, for more than a decade, Huawei Technologies Co. has had the ability to access mobile-phone networks worldwide using "back doors" created for use by law enforcement. Huawei is denying the allegations, which come as the US is seeking to convince allies to keep the company off their networks. The New York Times (2/11, Barnes, 18.61M) reports US intelligence officials have long "said privately that Huawei has so-called back doors that could allow the company to obtain data that flows on the networks they build and maintain." But publicly, officials "have spoken mostly about the potential that Huawei could provide Chinese officials with access to all kinds of data, without offering concrete proof." Digital Trends (2/11, Matyus, 929K) reports, citing the WSJournal, that officials said that "they have been aware of the backdoor access since 2009 but declined to say if the company actually used this access since it was discovered." Huawei did not immediately "respond to our request for comment but denied claims that it had any sort of access in a statement to the Journal."

Germany's Merkel Reportedly Not Supporting Complete Local Ban Of Huawei 5G. Reuters (2/11, Rinke) reports sources "said legislators from German Chancellor Angela Merkel's ruling conservatives have backed a position paper on 5G mobile networks that recommends tougher rules on foreign vendors while stopping short of banning China's Huawei." The document was drafted "by Christian Democrat leaders to address the concerns of party rebels who see Huawei as a threat to national security." It is intended "to lay the ground for Merkel's coalition government to adopt a common position on 5G after months of divisive debate." The move pushes back against President Trump's calls "on Washington's allies to bar the Chinese telecoms giant from next-generation networks after Britain stopped short of an outright ban and the EU backed a rules-based approach."

New Poll Shows Canadian Opposition To Huawei 5G Is Waning. AFP (2/11) reports new polling showed opposition "to Huawei telecommunications equipment being deployed in fifth generation wireless networks in Canada is waning." According to the Angus Reid Institute, "only 56 percent of Canadians would support a ban, down from 69 percent at the end of 2019." Ottawa has not yet made a decision. Canada's intelligence agencies are "reportedly split on the issue, while military leaders were said by the Globe and Mail on Monday to favor a ban."

Republican Senators Block Three Election Security Bills.

Axios (2/11, Allassan, 521K) reports Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) on Tuesday "blocked an attempt by Sen. Mark Warner (D-VA) to pass three election security-related bills via 'unanimous consent,' calling them a 'federal power grab.'" The Democratic-controlled House "passed several election security bills last year, but none have been taken up by Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-KY)." Two of the bills "proposed by Senate Democrats Tuesday would require campaigns to call the FBI if they're offered help from a foreign power." Another bill would "provide funding for the Election Assistance Commission and would ban voting machines from being connected to the Internet." The Hill (2/11, Carney, 2.98M) reports Blackburn "accused Democrats of trying to move the bills knowing that GOP lawmakers would block them and giving them fodder for fundraising efforts." She said, "They are attempting to bypass this body's Rules Committee on behalf of various bills that will seize control over elections from the states and take it from the states and where do they want to put it? They want it to rest in the hands of Washington, DC bureaucrats."

DHS' Cybersecurity Agency Releases 2020 Election Security Plan.

CQ Roll Call (2/11, DeChiaro, 154K) reports the DHS' Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency "will focus on four key objectives to secure this year's elections from hacking and other interference: protecting election infrastructure, assisting political campaigns, increasing public awareness about foreign intrusion, and facilitating the flow of information on vulnerabilities and potential threats between the public and private sectors." The blueprint follows "a GAO report that said the agency would struggle to execute a nationwide strategy without a finalized agenda." The strategic plan "describes the agency's plans to work with federal law enforcement and state and local election officials on a "whole-of-nation effort" to defend electoral systems." ExecutiveGov (2/11, Martin) reports CISA "said it is engaging with partners to protect the US election infrastructure and develop resilience against foreign adversaries under the #Protect2020 effort." The agency intends "to spread awareness, boost local engagement, further risk initiatives, apply lessons learned and improve security practices for this year's national elections."

Nakasone: DOD Will Play A Key Role In 2020 Election Security. ExecutiveGov (2/11, Martin) reports NSA chief Gen. Paul Nakasone "said DOD plays a vital role in the security of national elections." Nakasone said at the Reagan National Defense Forum, "The biggest success was we put in place, both organizationally and from a business practice standpoint, a focus on an enduring mission to protect the democratic process." The group works "to investigate adversaries that pose cyber threats to election security." The Election Security Group was created in reaction to Russia's interference during the 2018 midterm elections.

New Study Finds Cryptocurrency Crime Losses Doubled To $4.5B In 2019.

Reuters (2/11, Chavez-Dreyfuss) reports a study by blockchain forensics company CipherTrace concludes "losses from cryptocurrency crime surged to $4.52 billion last year, as insider theft soared even as hacking losses declined." Last year's losses "were up nearly 160% from 2018's total of $1.74 billion." The report found cryptocurrency user and investor "losses due to fraud and misappropriation in 2019 increased by more than five times, while hacks and thefts fell by 66%." Dave Jevans, CipherTrace chief executive officer, said, "We noticed a significant uptick in malicious insiders scamming unsuspecting victims or leaching on their users through Ponzi schemes. Attacks from the inside of organizations lead to significant exits with major consequence to the crypto-ecosystem."

FBI Issues New 2019 Internet Crime Report.

KNTV-TV San Francisco (2/11, Jackson, 138K) reports new FBI data indicate that "more than 50,000 Californians reported being victims of online crime last year." The FBI added that the "combined losses totaled more than half-a-billion dollars." The FBI's 2019 Internet Crime Report "summarizes cyber-crime complaints reported through the agency's Internet Crime Complaint Center, or IC3, and offers a broad look at the billions of dollars Americans lost to thieves lurking online." The FBI "said it received 467,361 Internet crime complaints last year, or about 1,300 per day." That led to "more than $3.5 billion in reported losses by crime victims, both businesses and individuals." ZDNet (2/11, Cimpanu, 299K) reports the FBI "said that almost half of the reported losses – an estimated $1.77 billion – came from reports of BEC (Business Email Compromise), also known as EAC (Email Account Compromise) crimes." BEC/EAC is "a sophisticated scam targeting businesses and individuals performing wire transfer payments." The FBI says the BEC scheme "at its heart...relies on the oldest trick in the con artist's handbook: deception,"

State Officials Argue For More Federal Funding To Fight Cyberattacks.

The Hill (2/11, Miller, 2.98M) reports top federal and state officials "pressed a Senate committee on Tuesday to provide more resources and authorities to fight cyberattacks, an issue of increasing concern in the wake of debilitating attacks on governments entities this past year." Senior cybersecurity and tech leaders "from Michigan and Texas noted during their testimony before the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee that efforts to combat cyberattacks have been hampered by a lack of federal resources, particularly from DHS." Christopher DeRusha, the chief security officer within Michigan's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Protection Office, told lawmakers. "We see the intent everyday of DHS trying to get everywhere across the state, particularly in the run-up to the elections, and I think it's just a matter of they need more boots on the ground, and they need a specific state representative to get more familiar with that state."

Seattle Pushing Limits Of Electronic Balloting Despite Iowa Fiasco.

The Washington Post (2/11, Greene, 14.2M) reports the failure last week "of an app meant to help tally the results of Iowa's caucuses, leading to days of partial and unreliable results, prompted concerns." Despite issues in Iowa, "mobile voting has its supporters." Nonetheless, in Seattle, besides "making mobile ballots available to all voters, Seattle-based Democracy Live, which is providing the voting technology, is instituting a digital signature feature for mobile devices in which voters use their fingers to sign, similar to ones used by mobile payment systems such as Square." That way, election officials "can compare their signatures with the ones kept on file for each registered voter." Andrew Appel, a computer science professor at Princeton University who studies digital election security, "said that mobile voting is prone to cybersecurity breaches just as other forms of election technology are." New digital voting efforts "exacerbate the concerns of those already nervous about the susceptibility of election systems."

Proposed 2021 Federal Spending On Cyber Issues Has Winners And Losers.

Politico (2/11, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that President Trump's proposed fiscal 2021 budget wasn't "all rainbows and teddy bears for federal cyber spending." The president is "seeking a $258 million cut for CISA." The Administration also wants to "reorganize elements of CISA's budget to streamline it." Budget documents "boast of unspecified amounts of funding at DHS to support Trump's executive order on the cyber workforce, and contend that shifting the Secret Service from DHS to Treasury will aid cybercrime investigations." The Pentagon's digital budget "would see a slight increase under the president's request."

New Study Finds Mac Cyber Threats Outpaced Windows By Two To One.

Forbes (2/11, Winder, 9.71M) reports the 2020 Malwarebytes 'State of Malware Report,' "took a deep dive into the real-world threats that faced Android and iOS users, browser-based attacks and both Mac and Windows PCs." The report concludes that "the volume of Mac threats increased by more than 400% year-on-year in 2019, outpacing Windows 'threats per endpoint' by a ratio of nearly two to one." That latter number "being the more important as it allows for the fact that Malwarebytes has a larger Mac userbase than Windows." The report suggests "that only one of the Mac threats in 2019 didn't involve tricking the user into downloading and executing something malicious."

Upcoming Stress Tests To Focus On Leveraged Lending.

American Banker (2/12, Dobbs, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that leveraged lending's rise in popularity "has drawn the attention of regulators, to the point that leveraged loans will play a key role in the Fed's annual Comprehensive Capital Analysis and Review test." The Fed will use the stress test "to pull in more data on how leveraged loans and [collateralized loan obligations] will perform in a recession." According to industry experts, the research "is important because leveraged loans can be an early indicator of deteriorating credit quality, which in turn could hurt banks' profitability and usher in an economic slump."

Nicaragua Creates New State Fuel Companies Following US' December Sanctions.

The AP (2/11, Selser) reports Nicaragua's Parliament "approved the creation Tuesday of four state companies that will handle the importation, storage, distribution and sales of oil and gas, two months after the country's main energy company was sanctioned by Washington for allegedly laundering money for family members of President Daniel Ortega and then sold to the government days later." The measure creating the companies "passed without debate, analysis in committee or consultation with other government or business entities under rules for urgent legislation in a Parliament controlled by Ortega's Sandinista party." Members of the opposition, "who have accused Ortega of running the petroleum sector without being accountable to Parliament, saw self-interest behind the measure." Opposition lawmaker Jimmy Blandón said the new companies were created in an attempt "to evade the U.S. Treasury Department sanctions, in case they sanction them again."

Federal Reserve

Powell Upbeat On Economy, Sees No Reason To Raise Or Cut Rates.

The AP (2/11, Crutsinger) reports that Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell, testifying before the House Financial Services Committee yesterday, "said...that the US economy appears durable, with steady growth and unemployment near a half-century low, but faces risks from the broadening viral outbreak that began in China." Powell "also said that the Fed is content with where interest rates are, suggesting that no further rate cuts would be contemplated unless economic conditions were to change significantly." Politico (2/11, Guida, 4.29M) also reports that Powell "emphasized that the central bank does not currently see a need to adjust interest rates, and he struck an upbeat tone about the US economic expansion, the longest in the country's history, pointing to healthy job gains and rising wages."

Reuters (2/11, Timmons) quotes Powell as saying, "We find the US economy in a very good place, performing well. ... There is no reason why the expansion can't continue." Reuters reports that in response to lawmakers' questions, Powell "defended the Fed's plan to ease strains in the banking system with Treasury bill purchases and repo operations, and said the central bank will likely reach an appropriate level of reserves around mid-year." Bloomberg (2/11, Condon, Reyes, 4.73M) indicates that Powell "also responded to lawmakers on a range of issues including volatility in money markets, Libor, minimum wages, digital currency and community banking."

To the New York Times (2/11, Smialek, 18.61M), meanwhile, "the Fed is treading cautiously as the economy continues to add jobs but inflation remains low." While "an initial trade deal with China has eased one major source of economic uncertainty...tariffs remain on Chinese goods and tensions with other nations could reignite." Moreover, "the new virus – which has killed more than 1,000 people and sickened tens of thousands – has emerged as an economic wild card."

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), USA Today (2/11, 10.31M), CNBC (2/11, 3.62M), Barron's (2/11, Beilfuss, 1.07M), and MarketWatch (2/11, 1.67M), among other outlets, also reports.

Powell: Federal Budget Needs To Be Put On A "Sustainable Path." The Washington Post (2/11, Long, 14.2M) reports that Powell, in his testimony yesterday, warned about the size the federal budget deficit, which the Post says is "expected to top $1 trillion this year." Powell is quoted as saying, "Putting the federal budget on a sustainable path when the economy is strong would help ensure that policymakers have the space to use fiscal policy to assist in stabilizing the economy during a downturn." Powell's "warning comes as the US federal debt has grown by about $3 trillion since President Trump took office, and the president's latest budget proposal submitted this week would add another $5 trillion to the debt over the coming decade." The Hill (2/11, Lane, 2.98M) also reports.

Lawmakers Press Powell On CRA Reform. American Banker (2/11, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports House lawmakers questioned Fed Chair Jerome Powell Tuesday "on a host of regulatory issues including the Community Reinvestment Act, a new capital buffer for big banks, the transition to a new interest rate benchmark and the impact of climate change on the financial system." Powell hinted at the Fed possibly putting forth its own CRA proposal after the central bank held back support for the overhaul proposed in December by the OCC and the FDIC. Powell also "reaffirmed his support of Fed Gov. Lael Brainard's criticism" of the OCC and FDIC's approach, saying he is "very comfortable with the thinking" she outlined in a recent speech. Democrats urged Powell to ensure that the CRA isn't weakened, while "Republicans, who have largely supported the OCC's proposal, pushed Powell to get in sync with the OCC and FDIC in order to provide regulatory clarity to banks."

The ABA Banking Journal (2/11) reports Powell "declined to say whether the Fed would issue its own CRA modernization proposal," but he "indicated that the agency would carefully study the comments received on the joint proposal issued by the FDIC and the OCC." He said, "We want to be very sure that what comes out of this is a proposal...that will leave all major participants in CRA better off," adding that "we think it's important that each metric, each change that we make is grounded in data."

Powell Sees No Need For Legislation Aimed At Libor Transition. Behind a paywall, Law360 (2/11, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports that Powell "told House lawmakers Tuesday that his agency doesn't see a need for any new federal legislation to help the financial industry smoothly ride out the impending end of the London Interbank Offered Rate, a benchmark used in pricing trillions of dollars of financial instruments." Powell "said federal regulators are working hard to make sure banks and other financial services firms are ready by the end of next year for Libor's cessation, but he didn't bite when the prospect of congressional intervention was floated."

House Democrat Questions Powell For Attending Bezos Party. Bloomberg (2/11, Boesler, 4.73M) reports Rep. Katie Porter (D-CA) "chided" Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell "during his semi-annual congressional testimony Tuesday for his attendance at a Washington party thrown by Amazon.com Inc. Chief Executive Officer Jeff Bezos last month." Porter "grilled Powell over whether the people in attendance – including Bezos, Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner, Kellyanne Conway and Jamie Dimon – were in a position to benefit financially from the ability to weigh in on monetary policy in private conversations with the Fed chair." Porter asked, "Can you imagine how attending a lavish party at Jeff Bezos's $23 million home – along with Jared and Ivanka, and the CEO of JPMorgan Chase, Jamie Dimon – might give off the sense to the public that you are not, in fact, immune from external pressures?" She added, "I would just suggest that attendance at this kind of event with these kinds of people is inconsistent with what I would otherwise commend you on."

CNN (2/11, Borak, 83.16M) reports "Powell said he was there to escort his son and his daughter-in-law, who are newly married, and he introduced the couple to General James Mattis, Trump's former defense secretary." Rep. Warren Davidson (R-OH) "came to Powell's defense." Davidson said, "I don't know we want to say just because you're at event somehow this is nefarious. ... The way that these things are linked for political motives is embarrassingly partisan and bad."

Bullard: Repo Interventions Mean Fed's Message "Blurred" On Monetary Policy.

Reuters (2/11, Schneider) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard said continuing Fed interventions in repo markets have "blurred" the central bank's messaging on monetary policy. Bullard was also "again advocating that the Fed set up a permanent 'repurchase' program to make those interventions less necessary." Bullard said, "The blurring between what the (Federal Open Market Committee) is trying to do with monetary policy and what the (New York Fed) is trying to do to control short-term rates is inappropriate. We need to get going on this," to establish a permanent solution for those liquidity issues.

Reuters (2/11, Schneider) also reports that while speaking to CFA Society St. Louis, Bullard said the Chinese economy is expected to "slow noticeably" because of efforts to contain the coronavirus. Bullard said, "The efforts to bring the virus under control are substantial enough that the Chinese economy is expected to grow noticeably slower in the first quarter of 2020 than it otherwise would have."

MarketWatch (2/11, Robb, 1.67M) reports Bullard said that while global trade policy uncertainty has declined, policy makers must wait and see whether it has declined enough to encourage global manufacturing.

Kashkari: Central Bank's Monetary Policy Only Providing Small Boost To Economy.

Reuters (2/11, Saphir) reports Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari said Tuesday that the Fed's monetary policy is only delivering a small boost to the economy. Kashkari said the Fed's current 1.5 percent to 1.75 percent targeted range puts policy "close to neutral or slightly accommodative today, but not very accommodative."

NYTimes: Shelton Is Disastrous Choice For Federal Reserve.

In an editorial, the New York Times (2/11, 18.61M) opposes the nomination of Judy Shelton to the board of the Federal Reserve, saying it "amounts to an attack on the Fed's congressional mandate." Specifically, the Times takes issue with her "advocacy of an international gold standard" and her shifting views on monetary policy depending on the political climate. In short, the Times is concerned about the likelihood that Shelton will "simply vote for policies that served" President Trump's "short-term political interests."

The Hill (2/11, Lane, 2.98M) reports Shelton "is considered Trump's most viable chance to place an ally within the Fed after Senate Republicans rejected his past two picks, economist Stephen Moore and Herman Cain, who were both seen as sharp critics of the bank." However, Shelton's "reversal on monetary policy has raised questions about her ideological integrity and whether she'll prioritize the Fed's legal mandate over Trump's political prospects."

Internal Revenue Service

IRS Has Not Ruled On Carbon-Capture Tax Credit Approved In 2018.

According to the New York Times (2/11, Plumer, 18.61M), "A rare policy enacted under President Trump to address climate change has run into an unexpected hurdle: the tax man." In 2018, Congress "approved a lucrative tax break for companies that use carbon capture technology to trap carbon dioxide produced by industrial sites before the gas escapes into the atmosphere and heats the planet." The Times adds that "at least a dozen carbon capture projects, potentially representing billions of dollars in investments, have been announced since" 2018, "but two years later, those plans remain blocked because the Internal Revenue Service has yet to explain how, exactly, companies can claim the tax credit that would make the projects viable." Sen. John Barrasso (R-WY) is quoted as saying, "The delay is unacceptable and will only further slow much-needed investment in carbon capture."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Scharf To Divide Wells Fargo's Business Units, Change Reporting Hierarchy.

The Wall Street Journal (2/11, Eisen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Wells Fargo CEO Charles Scharf's first effort to overhaul the bank's corporate structure following its scandal with fake accounts will be to change its reporting hierarchy. The bank will split its current three business divisions into five, with the former wholesale division split into commercial and investment banks, while its former consumer bank will be split into small business and consumer-focused divisions. The heads of each of the new units will report directly to Scharf, who began his tenure in October.

M Report (2/11, Albanese) reports the bank "is continuing to reshape its executive team" following the fake-accounts scandal. Last month, federal officials announced that former head of Wells Fargo John Stumpf has been banned for life from the industry. In a press release, Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting said, "The actions announced by the [Office of the Comptroller of Currency] today reinforce the agency's expectations that management and employees of national banks and federal savings associations provide fair access to financial services, treat customers fairly, and comply with applicable laws and regulations."

American Banker (2/11, Kline, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Wells Fargo is hiring Mike Weinbach to head its newly-created position of consumer lending head. Weinbach previously worked as JPMorgan's home lending CEO, and will join Wells Fargo in May, where "he will have responsibility for home lending, auto loans, personal loans, credit cards, and merchant services."

Bloomberg (2/11, 4.73M), Reuters (2/11, Moise, Manikandan), The Financial Times (2/11, Armstrong, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), Fox Business (2/11, 1.73M), and Bank Innovation (2/11, Hornblase) provide similar coverage.

Fifth Third Notifies Customers Of Data Breach.

The Cincinnati Business Courier (2/11, Subscription Publication, 840K) reports Fifth Third Bank "has notified customers that some of its employees have stolen customer information." A small number of Fifth Third employees provided privileged client information to people outside the bank; those employees have since been terminated. The bank's internal investigation uncovered the information theft which was then referred to law enforcement. While authorities continue their investigation, Fifth Third is cooperating fully and said "we look forward to seeing justice served." Fifth Third said it has notified customers who may be impacted and will provide identity theft monitoring to them at no cost.

The Cincinnati Enquirer (2/11, Coolidge, 223K) reports Fifth Third "wouldn't say how they discovered the irregularities or what authorities were investigating." The bank "did not provide any status on the investigation," and officials with the OCC, the bank's primary regulator,

"declined to discuss the breach or whether they are one of the 'authorities' investigating."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"This Is No Way To Run A Central Bank." In an editorial, the New York Times (2/11, 18.61M) opposes the nomination of Judy Shelton to the board of the Federal Reserve, saying it "amounts to an attack on the Fed's congressional mandate." Specifically, the Times takes issue with her "advocacy of an international gold standard" and her shifting views on monetary policy depending on the political climate. In short, the Times is concerned about the likelihood that Shelton will "simply vote for policies that served" President Trump's "short-term political interests."

Washington Post.

"Trump's Proposed Budget Is Entirely Dishonest – Except In Its Alarming Clues About A Second Trump Term." The Washington Post (2/11, 14.2M) says in an editorial that President Trump's proposed budget for Fiscal Year 2021 "is a dishonest exercise. ... Trump is hardly the first president to obey his legal requirement to present a spending plan to Congress by sending one that has no chance of passing," nor is he "the first to engage in rosy forecasting – but in this case, the exaggeration is especially flagrant." The Post says Trump's proposal "serves but one useful purpose: to record the warped priorities upon which Mr. Trump is willing to campaign for a second term."

"Putin Has Set His Eyes On Belarus. The West Can Help It Resist." To counter Russian President Vladimir Putin's push "to subjugate Belarus," an editorial by the Washington Post (2/11, 14.2M) urges Western governments to support Belarusian President Alexander Lukashenko, who is resisting Putin's calls to "implement a 20-year-old agreement that would merge the two countries, essentially turning Belarus into a province." Opposing Putin could result in harming the Belarusian economy, and in that case, the Post says "the United States and the E.U. should do what they can to ease the pain, while continuing to press for improvements in human rights."

"Why Ralph Northam's Proposal To Raise The Gas Tax Is A Good Idea." In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/11, 14.2M) argues in favor of a proposal by Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) "to raise the state's current gas tax, which is among the lowest in the nation, by roughly 75 percent over the coming three years." Virginia drivers currently "pay less in taxes to fill up their tanks than they would in neighboring Maryland and North Carolina – and nowhere near enough to cover the cost of maintaining and repairing the roads they use." The Post says "drivers want and need more funding for roads, without which congestion will worsen," so Northam's plan to raise the per-gallon tax on gas is sensible.

Wall Street Journal.

"Sprinting To Faster 5G." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/11, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) welcomes Judge Victor Marrero's decision approving T-Mobile's takeover of Sprint, arguing that it will increase competition in the wireless space and speed up the rollout of 5G across the US. The Journal also praises Marrero, an Obama appointee, for resisting calls from Democratic state attorneys general to scuttle the merger.

"Michael Bloomberg's 'Racism.'" A Wall Street Journal (2/11, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes President Trump's tweet calling Democratic presidential candidate and former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg a racist, since Trump has faced unfair allegations of racism himself. The also argues that while Bloomberg's comments on stop-and-frisk policing were politically incorrect, they were basically true.

"Liberal Faculty Endorse Testing." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/11, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights a finding by a University of California task force that test scores are helpful in the college admissions process. The Journal points out that it is a conclusion from a liberal faculty that is contradictory with social justice orthodoxy. Noting that the report by the task force says that test scores actually help schools select candidates from underrepresented groups, the Journal argues that the key to expanding access to higher education isn't to ban testing but to increase choice and accountability in K-12 schools.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Conan O'Brien: "Because he voted to impeach President Trump, Republicans are now referring to Mitt Romney as Judas. Yeah. Of course, if Romney is Judas, that makes President Trump a Jesus that was married three times and got with a porn star. That Jesus gets around."

Conan O'Brien: "Today, Joe Biden said that Mickey Mouse could run against President Trump and have a shot. Then Biden found out that he was polling third behind Mickey Mouse."

Trevor Noah: "New Hampshire – it's the state always asking Vermont to do something about the weed smell. But today, they were the state holding the second Democratic primary, and because normally the most exciting thing to do in New Hampshire is watch mountains grow, election day gets the people going like nothing else."

Stephen Colbert: "Today was the New Hampshire primary. ... Before the votes were even counted, Biden and his wife flew out to a South Carolina launch party. That doesn't exactly sound confident. That's like a guy on his wedding day saying, 'To love, honor, and cherish 'til death do us part. Now, if you'll excuse me, I have a date.'"

Stephen Colbert: "It was announced that the Justice Department will take the extraordinary step of lowering the recommended prison time for Roger Stone. ... So Donald Trump and his Attorney General are using the Justice Department to go easy on his cronies. The only difference between this and a banana republic is that Trump does not eat fruit."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Tonight, it was New Hampshire's time to shine. The polls have closed. And, if all goes well, we should have the final results of the Democratic caucus by June 28."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This caucus system, it's confusing. But the reason they start them, the reason the primaries begin in Iowa and go to New Hampshire, is so that we know what the very whitest people think first."

Jimmy Kimmel: "A tape has emerged of a tape of [Bloomberg] touting the stop-and-frisk policy. This morning, Trump tweeted, 'Wow, Bloomberg is a total racist,' which is amazing, because a lot of people think the President might be racist himself. ... By the way, 'stop and frisk' is also Trump's policy backstage at his beauty pageants. Did you know?"

Jimmy Fallon: "Today was the New Hampshire primary. The polls close at 8:00 p.m., and when they declared a winner, Iowa was like, 'Pssh, show-off.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Yep, the New Hampshire primary was held today, and good news – if anyone's in the market for some Joe Biden campaign merchandise, I think it's about to get a whole lot cheaper. Based on a lot of polls, Joe Biden was on track to finish the night in fourth or fifth place. I'm not saying Biden is in trouble, but the coronavirus is polling ahead of him."

Jimmy Fallon: "Today, Biden actually left New Hampshire early to start campaigning in South Carolina. And since it was Joe Biden, he didn't really leave early as much as wander off."

Jimmy Fallon: "But this morning, Warren, Biden, and Buttigieg were all spotted at Dunkin' Donuts. Dunkin' was like, 'You can't buy this kind of publicity.' Then Mike Bloomberg was like, 'Yeah, you can.'"

Seth Meyers: "Federal prosecutors yesterday recommended that former Trump adviser Roger Stone be sentenced to seven to nine years in prison for lying to Congress. Then today, the Department of Justice issued a statement calling for much less prison time for Stone, and Trump said that he had the right to tell the Justice Department what to do. Then all four prosecutors in the Stone case resigned in protest, and then, Trump called for the military to pursue legal action against Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Vindman for testifying against him in the impeachment trial. And Senate Republicans blocked three bills to prevent foreign interference in our elections. And Lindsey Graham and Don Jr. showed up on Fox News in matching Trump merch. I guess what I'm telling you is, by this time tomorrow, we might be a cooking show."

Seth Meyers: "During an event this weekend, former Vice President Joe Biden responded to a question about his electability by calling a woman a, quote, 'lying dog-face pony soldier.' But don't worry, it was just a joke that nobody understood because he's 100."

Seth Meyers: "Voting in today's New Hampshire primary started at midnight last night in the 12-person town of Dixville Notch. 'Dixville Notch' is also what Joe Biden called a voter that disagreed with him."

Seth Meyers: "The Justice Department is being criticized following a report that it gave over $1 million to unfamiliar nonprofit organizations, including one called Hookers for Jesus. Said Trump, 'You had me at hookers, and lost me at Jesus.'"

James Corden: "Of course, it was a big day for Democratic presidential candidates. The nation's first primary was held today in New Hampshire. Wow. New Hampshire already. It feels like they just started campaigning – six hundred years ago."

James Corden: "And while we don't have final results at the time of this taping, it appears Bernie Sanders is going to win. And if he does, Bernie plans to splurge on a big pigeon-feeding trip to the nearest park bench."

James Corden: "And shortly after midnight last night, it was announced that Mike Bloomberg won in a place called Dixville Notch. Dixville Notch. I'm just amazed we can say that on CBS. 'Dixville Notch' sounds less like a place and more like something Joe Biden would scream after stubbing his toe. 'Dixville Notch!'"

James Corden: [On the small New Hampshire town of Dixville Notch] "This is true – five residents voted. That's right, five. And Bloomberg won with three votes ... What a weird tradition. It shouldn't be a news story that someone won an election with the same number of votes as there are Jonas brothers."

James Corden: "Two other New Hampshire towns voted at midnight last night, and they were both won by Amy Klobuchar. Before you Klobuchar fans get too excited, those two towns combined have a population of 62 people. Or as the people of Dixville Notch call that, 'those big, ol' fancy cities.'"

Treasury in the News

House Democrat Pens Letter To Mnuchin Criticizing Treasury Over Hunter Biden Docs.

The Hill (2/7, Jagoda, 2.98M) reported Rep. Bill Pascrell (D-NJ) "is criticizing the Treasury Department for providing Republican senators with financial records as part of their probe concerning Hunter Biden." Pascrell, in his letter to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "blasted the department for turning over the documents while at the same time refusing to provide House Democrats with President Trump's tax returns." Pascrell wrote, "Continuing to violate the law to shield Donald Trump's tax returns while simultaneously aiding a blatantly partisan investigation is an affront to public service."

Johnson, Grassley Say Democrats Undermining Investigation Into Hunter Biden. The Hill (2/7, Carney, 2.98M) reported Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Chairman Ron Johnson and Senate Finance Chairman Chuck Grassley "are accusing Democrats of trying to undercut an ongoing investigation involving Hunter Biden and Ukraine." The Hill said Johnson and Grassley "accused 'one or more' Democrats of trying to 'actively seek to undermine our legitimate oversight by selectively leaking information to the press'" after the office of Senate Finance Committee Ranking Member Ron Wyden (D-OR) on Thursday "disclosed...that the Treasury Department had been complying with a request from Johnson and Grassley as part of their months-long investigation." Fox News (2/7, Olson, 27.59M) also reported.

Commentary: Treasury Department Assisting In "Trump Revenge-A-Thon." Jennifer Rubin, in her column for The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) regarding Sen. Mitt Romney's (R-UT) vote against President Trump in the impeachment trial, writes that the Treasury Department, "failing to measure up to the high standards of the Ukrainian government, continued its inquest into Hunter Biden, providing confidential financial information to senators." Robert Schlesinger wrote in an NBC News (2/8, 6.14M) column that the Treasury Department "has reportedly already sent sensitive financial records pertaining to the younger Biden to Grassley and Johnson" and is "the same agency which has for years – and recently in violation of federal law – refused to divulge Trump's tax returns and participated in Trump's evidentiary obstruction and coverup during the impeachment proceedings." Kevin Drum of Mother Jones (2/7, 881K) wrote that the Treasury Department "has complied with the Republican requests in nearly record time. Meanwhile, when it comes to records about Donald Trump that Treasury is legally required to turn over, they've told Democrats to 'pound sand,' as Sen. Ron Wyden puts it. Welcome to America, our planet's newest banana republic."

Trump 2021 Budget Proposes Large Non-Defense Spending Cuts, Leaves Medicare, Social Security Untouched.

The AP (2/9, Taylor) reports President Trump "is offering a $4.8 trillion budget plan for the upcoming fiscal year that rehashes previously rejected spending cuts while leaving Social Security and Medicare benefits untouched." Trump "has succumbed to the Washington temptation to deliver spending increases and tax cuts first and then deal – or not – with their impact on the deficit." Trump and Administration officials such as Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "had promised that Trump's signature cuts to corporate and individual tax rates would pay for themselves; instead the deficit spiked by more than $300 billion over 2017 to 2019, falling just short of $1 trillion." Reuters (2/9, Mason) also reports.

WPost Report: Secret Service Pays Up To $650 Per Night In Trump's Hotels, Mnuchin Opposes Cost Disclosure.

The Washington Post (2/7, A1, Fahrenthold, O'Connell, Leonnig, Dawsey, 14.2M) reported President Trump's company "charges the Secret Service for the rooms agents use while protecting him at his luxury properties – billing U.S. taxpayers at rates as high as $650 per night, according to federal records and people who have seen receipts." The Post says the "full extent of the Secret Service's payments to Trump's company is not known. The Secret Service has not listed them in public databases of federal spending, as is usually required for payments over $10,000." Senate Democrats "have asked the Trump administration to provide more details on the costs of Trump's travel as part of negotiations over a bill governing the Secret Service." However, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has told the Senate committee that he opposes a requirement to deliver those details until December 2020 at the earliest, which falls after the election." Vox (2/7, 2.27M) also reported.

White House Backs Shifting Secret Service From DHS To Treasury, Sources Say.

The AP (2/7, Long) reported the White House "is throwing its support behind a plan to transfer the U.S. Secret Service back to the Treasury Department to better focus on the growing threat of online financial crimes," according to five Administration officials, who told the AP that although Congress would have to approve the change, President Trump "is confident enough that he plans to include the Secret Service under the Treasury's budget in his proposal expected Monday." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said last week on Fox Business, "We think it will very much help us in combating money laundering and terrorist activities." The Hill (2/7, Moreno, 2.98M) also reported.

Watchdog Poll Names DeVos As Most Unpopular Trump Administration Official.

A survey conducted by Global Strategy Group on behalf of government watchdog Allied Progress found that Education Secretary Betsy DeVos "received the lowest approval rating of any Trump administration official tested," Salon (2/7, Derysh, 88K) reported. The survey showed DeVos with an approval rating of 28 percent and "also found overwhelming support for congressional investigations into whether DeVos abused taxpayer funds or used her position to benefit herself or her family." Derek Martin, the director of Allied Progress, said, "If Secretary DeVos was hoping Americans are too distracted by President Trump's scandals to notice or care are about her efforts to sell out student borrowers, she's in for a shock."

Yahoo! Finance (2/7, Swaminathan) reported the poll found the second and third least popular Administration officials are Acting White House Chief of Staff Mick Mulvaney at 33 percent and Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin at 25 percent.

Some In Congress Question Payouts From Aid Program For Farmers To Subsidiary Of Brazilian Firm.

The New York Times (2/9, Haberman, Rappeport, 18.61M) reports the Administration "plans to shutter its bailout program for farmers hurt by tariffs." The Times says, "About $67 million in bailout funds have gone to JBS USA, the subsidiary of JBS S.A., a Brazilian company that is the world's biggest meat-processing firm." Sens. Marco Rubio (R-FL) and Bob Menendez (D-NJ) along with Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-CT) "have asked" Agriculture Secretary Perdue "to investigate JBS S.A." Sens. Rubio and Menendez have also asked the Treasury Department "to investigate possible ties that JBS S.A. has with the government of Nicolás Maduro in Venezuela, whom the United States does not recognize as the rightful president."

Leading National News

Trump Faults "Weak Leadership" By Cuomo, De Blasio In Wake Of Bronx Attacks On Police.

The New York Post (2/9, Sosa, Moore, 4.57M) reports President Trump "slammed Gov. Andrew Cuomo and Mayor Bill de Blasio for 'weak leadership' after two cops were shot in the Bronx this weekend." The President tweeted Sunday morning, "I grew up in New York City and, over many years, got to watch how GREAT NYC's 'Finest' are. Now, because of weak leadership at Governor & Mayor, stand away (water thrown at them) regulations, and lack of support, our wonderful NYC police are under assault. Stop this now!" The New York Daily News (2/9, Shahrighian, 2.52M) reports that in addition to the shootings, Trump "was referring to incidents over the summer in which cops were seen on video being soaked with water in humiliating attacks." USA Today (2/9, Bacon, 10.31M) reports Trump "tweeted that he grew up in the city and appreciated the great work by police." The Washington Examiner (2/9, Mastrangelo, 448K) also covers Trump's tweet.

NBC Nightly News (2/9, story 2, 1:50, Snow, 3.6M) reported, "A gunman is in custody in tonight after what the mayor of New York City is calling 'assassination attempts' on two police officers. The ambush shootings were both caught on camera." NBC's Erin McLaughlin reported, "Just before 8:00 a.m., the 41st Precinct was under attack. ... The suspect lays on the ground, authorities say, only after he runs out of bullets. One officer was shot in the arm. He's expected to make a full recovery." Suspect Robert Williams "was paroled in 2017 for attempted murder. Twelve hours earlier, authorities allege Williams was two blocks away. Surveillance footage shows the moment the suspect opens fire as the police van drives away. One officer was shot in the neck, released from the hospital today." The CBS Weekend News (2/9, story 7, 0:25, Quijano, 9.6M) had a brief report.

De Blasio tweeted, "This morning a gunman walked into the 41st Precinct in the Bronx and shot an officer. I'm relieved to report the officer is stable, and the gunman is in custody. This vicious assassination attempt is the second one we've seen in 24 hours – and an attack on our NYPD officers is an attack on ALL New Yorkers. This despicable hatred is an attempt to divide our city and undermine our safety. We cannot and will not let that happen." Cuomo tweeted, "Horrified by the multiple attacks on @NYPD officers in the Bronx. NY's law enforcement officers put their lives on the line every day to keep us safe. These attacks are heinous. Those responsible will be brought to justice & held accountable to the fullest extent of the law." The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Chapman, Honan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) covers de Blasio's tweet.

The AP (2/9, Rosenbaum, Hajela) reports New York City Police Commissioner Dermot Shea said at a news conference, "It is only by the grace of God and the heroic actions of those inside the building that took him into custody that we are not talking about police officers murdered inside a New York City police precinct." Shea "called the gunman a 'coward' and said he had a lengthy criminal history, including a 2002 shooting and carjacking in which he also fired a gun at police officers."

The New York Times (2/9, Brown, Levenson, Watkins, 18.61M) reports the gunman "carr[ie]d out brazen attacks against officers in a patrol van and a precinct station house that left two wounded and the department shaken. Local officials called the shootings 'assassination attempts.'" The Washington Post (2/9, Mettler, 14.2M) reports, "The first attack took place at 8:30 p.m. Saturday, when a man shot into a marked police van in the 41st precinct, striking an officer in the chin and neck with bullets that narrowly missed his carotid artery, authorities said. The second shooting occurred just before 8 a.m." at the headquarters of the precinct. Fox News (2/9, Sorace, 27.59M) reports on its website that police "are conducting tests on the suspect's weapon to determine whether it was used" in the Saturday night attack. Among the other outlets with straightforward accounts of the incidents are Reuters (2/9, O'Brien), TIME (2/9, Law, 18.47M), and the WNBC-TV New York (2/9, 344K) website.

Moody's: Large Companies Expanded In 2019; Smaller Firms Did Not For First Time Since 2010.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Simon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a Moody's Analytics analysis of ADP payroll data found that businesses with 500 or more employees continued to hire more people last year for the tenth consecutive year, while companies with fewer than 20 employees did not. The Journal says 2019 was the first year since 2010 that smaller companies did not increase their employment. Moody's chief economist Mark Zandi said that small businesses were having trouble finding people to hire and that larger businesses will have the same problem unless the US relaxes immigration controls.

Study Finds Pay Increases For Low-Income Workers Mostly Due To Minimum Wage Increases.

USA Today (2/9, Davidson, 10.31M) reports a study by the National Employment Law Project (NELP) found that as President Trump said in his State of the Union address, that pay is "rising fastest for low-income workers," but, according to the study, "a large portion of those gains can be traced to minimum wage increases in more than half the states." The study found that "in the 26 states that lifted their base wages at least once from 2013 to 2018 – real or inflation-adjusted – median hourly pay rose 3.8% from the end of the recession in 2009 through 2018," while "in the 24 states without a minimum wage hike, real median pay fell half a percentage point." The study also found "that trend appeared to continue in Trump's administration."

Few S&P 500 CEOs Sold Stock Last Year.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Gryta, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that just 80 S&P 500 CEOs have sold stock in their companies while the S&P 500 index rose 30 percent to record highs in 2019. That number included Amazon's Jeff Bezos and Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg, and in both cases they are still the company's largest individual shareholder. One corporate governance adviser said that CEOs should not sell stock until three years after they leave the company.

House Panel Will Consider Autonomous Vehicle Regulations.

Reuters (2/9, Shepardson) reports a House Energy and Commerce Committee subcommittee "will hold a hearing Tuesday on autonomous vehicles as lawmakers try to hammer out legislation to advance self-driving cars." Congress "has worked for four years on legislation that would remove regulatory barriers but has not reached agreement."

WSJournal A1: Tesla's Share Price Rise Closely Watched By Critics, Fans.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Banerji, Zuckerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in a front-page story on Tesla shares that investors who have shorted the company have lost $8.4 billion since January as the stock has continued to climb, rising about 79 percent in that period. Meanwhile, other investors have profited from the short-sellers losses. The Journal says that Tesla's critics point to the lack of profits, while its supporters are confident profits will come.

More Companies Offering Time Off After Miscarriage.

NBC Nightly News (2/9, story 9, 3:15, Snow, 3.6M) reported, "It's estimated up to a quarter of pregnancies end in miscarriage. Tonight, we look at how employers respond. Some companies now offer paid time off after a pregnancy loss. But it's still not the norm." NBC recounted some women's experience and cites Reddit as offering two months of paid time off following a miscarriage. It also quoted one advocate of such policies as saying that there is movement among more companies to recognize the need for time off to grieve and to recover.

WPost Uses New Hampshire Town As Example Of Rural Areas Still Facing Economic Hardship.

The Washington Post (2/9, Witte, 14.2M) reports on the situation in Berlin, New Hampshire, where unemployment "is down to 3 percent" and "property values are climbing," but, says the Post, Berlin "hardly feels like a city on the mend." That's because "residents say just about the only jobs available pay minimum wage with no benefits" and "the last elementary school shuttered last year." The Post also reports that in New Hampshire, "poverty has fallen to the lowest rate in America." The Post comments, "If Berlin is an example of a 'blue-collar boom,' as Trump called it this week, residents shudder to imagine a bust."

New York City Program Brings Tech Employees Into CUNY Classrooms As Instructors.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, King, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that tech companies in New York City, including Google, LinkedIn and Spotify, are helping the City University of New York meet demand for tech instruction by supplying employees as instructors. Tech companies' employees are instructors in 22 courses at CUNY this spring under the Tech-in-Residence Corps program. The city is planning to expand the program to offer more courses.

WSJournal: House Approves Pro-Union Bill After Trumka Threatens Democrats.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial entitled "Big Labor's Payoff Day" says that the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives last week approved the PRO Act, in what it calls the most pro-union legislation since 1935's Wagner Act. The Journal says the bill would make it easier for unions to organize employees and end employees' right to a secret ballot and would overturn right-to-work laws. According to the Journal, the House approved the bill after AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka said the union would not help any Democrat who did not vote for the bill.

WPost: Congress' Failure To Protect Privacy Means Government Can Track Everyone's Cellphone.

The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) in an editorial says that the US government is buying location data "that charts the movements of millions of citizens' cellphones from a company called Venntel." The Post says, "Congress has failed to pass a comprehensive privacy statute that shields people from having their every move logged in a database," and "now, this lack of privacy from corporate actors has become an excuse for government to bypass the right to privacy from the state that the Constitution is supposed to enshrine."

WSJournal Warns Opponents Of .Org Sale Are Seeking Their Own Interests.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial argues that opponents attempted to create hysteria in response to the net neutrality policy favored by FCC Chairman Ajit Pai, but that policy was approved and has not led to the threatened problems. The Journal says some of the same people are now trying to frighten people by the prospect of the sale of the .org web-registry to Ethos Capital. The Journal warns opponents are simply seeking their own interests and worries that they will intimidate regulators that must approve the sale.

US-China Trade Disputes Credited With Slowing Global Trade Growth.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, A1, Zumbun, Solomon, Lewis, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that what it calls a trade war between the US and China led to global growth in trade of just one percent last year. Some countries, it says, benefited because both China and the US turned to other countries to supply the goods they were not buying from each other. The Journal identifies as the major beneficiaries of increased US trade: Vietnam, Mexico, Taiwan, South Korea, Thailand, Malaysia and the Philippines. Among countries that suffered fallout from the trade disputes, the Journal mentions Germany and Japan which lost trade because China's economy slowed. The Journal also reports that the International Monetary Fund expects global trade growth to rise to three percent for 2020, though it says that estimate was made before the coronavirus appeared.

WPost Says Trump Trade Policy Harms "Friends," Reduces Economic Efficiency.

The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) in an editorial criticizes the Administration's trade policy, while saying, "superficially, the news on trade and the U.S. economy is encouraging" with "the smallest trade deficit in six years," and "prospects...for a relatively less volatile trade year in 2020." Yet, the Post warns that "both the China deal and USMCA" are agreements in which trade is decided by "politicians – not determined by economic criteria." The Post also says that tariffs imposed on some finished aluminum and steel goods "will be heavily felt by U.S. users of those goods, as well as by the countries that sell them to us – principally Taiwan, Japan and the European Union." The Post concludes, "These are U.S. friends, not threats to our security," and accuses the Administration of "compound[ing] injuries to economic efficiency with insults to the truth."

Trump Blasts Manchin, Romney, Jones Over Impeachment Votes.

In a series of tweets over the weekend, President Trump lashed out at Sen. Joe Manchin (D-WV) over his vote to convict Trump on two articles of impeachment. On Saturday, Trump tweeted, "Can't say I mind the fact that the great people of West Virginia are furious at their puppet Democrat Senator, Joe Manchin. They will never forget his phony vote on the Impeachment Hoax. All he had to do is read the Transcripts, sadly, which he wouldn't understand anyway. But, just like the people of West Virginia will no longer look at weak & pathetic Joe Manchin the same (I got the Pension Bill approved, Manchin couldn't do it), the wonderful people of Utah will never look at "grandstander" Mitt Romney with anything but contempt & disgust!" Trump followed that with a tweet on Sunday in which he again said the people of West Virginia are mad at Manchin over the vote. Trump wrote, "They are really mad at Senator Joe Munchkin in West Virginia. He couldn't understand the Transcripts. Romney could, but didn't want to!"

The Washington Times (2/9, Howell, 492K) says Trump "was reportedly hoping Mr. Manchin, who's cozied up to the White House at times, would buck his party and vote to acquit him of charges he abused his power and obstructed Congress.”

USA Today (2/9, Cummings, 10.31M) reports that Manchin defended his vote, writing in a tweet, “No Democrat has worked harder in a bipartisan way in the hopes that you would succeed.” Manchin added, “I’ve read the transcripts thoroughly & listened to the witnesses under oath. ... Where I come from a person accused defends themselves with witnesses and evidence.”

Trump also took aim at Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) for his vote to convict. Trump retweeted a post from the Wall Street Journal’s Kimberly Strassel, who wrote, “Mitt Romney may think he’s taking a shot at POTUS. But any real damage he causes will in fact be to Senate Rs in tough races. [Senate Minority Leader] Schumer’s goal with all this was retaking the Senate. If he succeeds, he’ll hopefully remember to send Romney a thank you.” Trump wrote, “Romney hurt some very good Republican Senators, and he was wrong about the Impeachment Hoax. No clue!”

In addition, Trump lashed out at Sen. Doug Jones (D-AL), who he called a “do nothing stiff.” Trump tweeted, “So good to see that Republicans will be winning the Great State of Alabama Senate Seat back, now that lightweight Senator @DougJones cast a partisan vote for the Impeachment Hoax. Thought his boss, Cryin’ Chuck, would have forced him to vote against the Hoax. A Do Nothing Stiff!”

Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) said on MSNBC’s AM Joy (2/9, 762K), “I watched the President, as we all did, in the East Room, right after the exoneration, and to watch all the sycophantic politicians sitting there and laughing with them and clapping with him and clapping for him was just untoward of any of this. I so like what Adam Schiff said when he talked about cords of steel will bind them to this President for all of history. And that’s exactly right. They’re going to be embarrassed by this vote. It might be next month. It might be three months from now. It might be a year from now when more things come out. We know that.”

Trump: Wray Testimony Shows “Whole Scam Investigation” Was “A Fixed Hoax.”

In a reference to FBI Director Wray’s testimony before the House Judiciary Committee last week, President Trump argued in a tweet that Wray’s comments show “the whole scam investigation” and “everything else” was “a fixed hoax.” Trump wrote, “FBI Director Christopher Wray just admitted that the FISA Warrants and Surveillance [sic] of my campaign were illegal. So was the Fake Dossier. THEREFORE, THE WHOLE SCAM INVESTIGATION, THE MUELLER REPORT AND EVERYTHING ELSE FOR THREE YEARS, WAS A FIXED HOAX. WHO PAYS THE PRICE? This is the biggest political crime in American History, by far. SIMPLY PUT, THE PARTY IN POWER ILLEGALLY SPIED ON MY CAMPAIGN, BOTH BEFORE AND AFTER THE ELECTION, IN ORDER TO CHANGE OR NULLIFY THE RESULTS OF THE ELECTION. IT CONTINUED ON WITH THE IMPEACHMENT HOAX. Terrible!”

Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) said on Fox News’ Sunday Morning Futures (2/9) that Wray’s testimony was “good and bad. Number one, Chris Wray actually has taken care of a lot of the senior leadership at the FBI that we all know was part of that corrupt cabal of Strzok, Comey, Page that we have been fighting against for so long. But then he also was not real clear on what he was going to on how, besides implementing the instructions from the Horowitz report, is their other things that can be done? The lower level folks who are involved in this, what has happened to them? He wouldn’t comment on that.”

Nunes: Whistleblower Testimony Would Reveal “Fake Impeachment Hoax.”

Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA) said on Fox News’ Sunday Morning Futures (2/9), “I think as soon as the whistleblower actually gets called...before the Senate and conducts an interview, you will be able to fit the pieces in between the Democrats in the House and their staff who met with the whistleblower and the scam that the [intelligence community inspector general] is under, who refuses to provide the evidence for his outlandish claims that you didn’t need to have firsthand information, you only had to have second hand information and that somehow miraculously the form was changed. None of those stories actually make any sense. When you put all that together, I think you are going to find a fake impeachment hoax.”

Professor: Paul Revealing Alleged Whistleblower’s Name Was Wrong. In an op-ed for the New York Times (2/9, 18.61M), Joanne Freeman, a professor of history and American studies at Yale, argues that Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) exposing the name of the alleged whistleblower during a Senate floor speech last week was “not strictly speaking illegal,” but his actions “were wrong, and some Republican colleagues said as much, privately admitting that they ‘probably’ wouldn’t have done it.” Freeman argues that for Paul, “violating norms was the point. By exposing the name – and getting away with it – he was warning off potential whistle-blowers-to-be.” Freeman adds that if one potential informant is dissuaded from stepping forward, or even given pause to do so, “Paul has scored a victory. President Trump’s public name-calling and bullying have done much the same, frightening people into compliance for fear of vengeance in Washington or back home.”

Tim Scott: Trump’s Impeachment “Started In January Of 2017.”

Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC) said on Fox News’ Sunday Morning Futures (2/9), “If you look at the very foundation of impeachment, it did not start three or four months ago. It actually started in January of 2017. One of the first headlines of the Washington Post was, ‘Impeachment Begins,’ and what happened immediately, the Russia investigation. ... The entire foundation, the presumption of innocence has been void for this President the entire time he’s been in office. It is the closest thing to a witch hunt we’ve seen of a President in my lifetime.”

Graham Defends Removal Of Vindman, Sondland.

Natalie Brand reported on the CBS Weekend News (2/9, story 2, 2:10, Quijano, 9.6M) Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham "defended the Administration's removal of impeachment witnesses EU Ambassador Gordon Sondland and Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman from the National Security Council." Bloomberg (2/9, Brody, 4.73M) reports Graham called their removal "justified." Bloomberg says Vindman and Sondland "were dismissed in an act of retribution" following Trump's acquittal in the Senate impeachment trial. Both "offered damaging details" during the trial "about Trump's pressure campaign on Ukraine to investigate his political rivals." On CBS' Face The Nation, Graham said of Vindman, "I don't think he could be effective at the NSC," and he "suggested without evidence that Vindman may have improperly provided information to an administration whistle-blower who first raised concerns about Trump." Graham said that like other ambassadors, Sondland "serves at the pleasure of the President." The Washington Times (2/9, Howell, 492K) provides similar coverage of Graham's comments.

John King said on CNN's Inside Politics (2/9, 474K), "Several Republican senators urged the President not to fire Sondland. But a Trump aide defended the firings, it was, quote, 'necessary,' describing them as, quote, 'flushing out the pipes.' Anyone who thought the President was going to show restraint after this was foolish. That's a kind word."

Michael Shear of the New York Times said on CNN's Inside Politics (2/9, 511K), "Any restraint that you would normally think a politician, a president would have – certainly Bill Clinton when he was in essentially the same position after his acquittal in this impeachment trial, went the other direction and tried to offer some contrition and apologies. But that isn't this President. And I think...anybody that expected that from him is ridiculous."

Johnson Criticizes Trump's Removal Of Sondland. Politico (2/9, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that in an interview Sunday, Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) criticized Trump's removal of Sondland. Johnson told Politico he "would have handled it a different way." Johnson said, "Gordon was pretty resigned he was going to be leaving the post anyway and I think it would have been nice to give him the ability to exit on his own terms and in his own time in a few weeks." However, like Graham, Johnson "did note that since Sondland was a political appointee who served at the pleasure of the president, firing him was ultimately Trump's call." Politico adds that Johnson "said he made several phone calls to the White House before Sondland was removed to urge the president to not fire him."

Graham Says He Will Investigate FISA Abuses, Hunter Biden.

Politico (2/9, Beavers, 4.29M) reports that after a "somewhat cryptic tweet" from President Trump which said, "DeFace the Nation will tell @LindseyGrahamSC that he must start up Judiciary and not stop until the job is done. Clean up D.C. now, last chance!", Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham "addressed the president directly...as he pledged to carefully investigate Joe Biden's son." Graham told CBS' Face The Nation (2/9, 2.76M), "If he's watching the show, here's what I would tell the President: I'm going to get to the bottom of the [Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act] process, because it was an abuse of power at the Department of Justice and the FBI. ... We'll make sure Hunter Biden's conflict of interest is explored, because it's legitimate." Graham said, "Here's what I want to tell the President: I'm not going to be the Republican Christopher Steele. So, Rudy Giuliani last night said he's got the goods on Hunter Biden. ... I called the Attorney General this morning, and Richard Burr, the chairman of the Intel Committee, and they told me take very cautiously anything coming out of the Ukraine against anybody."

The Washington Post (2/9, Kane, 14.2M) reports Graham "said Sunday that the Justice Department is vetting information" from Giuliani "regarding Hunter Biden's work on the board of a Ukrainian energy company." Citing a conversation with Attorney General Barr, Graham "said that...Giuliani is giving his information to national security experts and that he would back off his own plans to use the Senate Judiciary Committee as a vehicle to investigate the Biden family." Graham said, "The Department of Justice is receiving information coming out of the Ukraine from Rudy to see – he told me that they have created a process that Rudy could give information and they would see if it's verified." The Post says Graham "warned that Giuliani might be getting bad information from his trips to Ukraine as part of a disinformation campaign by Russian security experts." The New York Times (2/9, Edmondson, 18.61M) says a Justice Department spokeswoman "declined to comment" on Graham's assertion that Barr told him the Department was "receiving information coming out" of Ukraine delivered by Giuliani.

The AP (2/9, Superville) reports Graham "said anything Giuliani has obtained from Ukraine needs to be given to the Justice Department or Congress' intelligence committees" because "it could be Russian propaganda." The New York Post (2/9, Moore, 4.57M) quotes Graham as saying, "If Rudy Giuliani has any information coming out of the Ukraine, he needs to turn it over to the Department of Justice because it could be Russian propaganda."

The Washington Examiner (2/9, Mastrangelo, 448K) says Graham "complained that the media are turning a blind eye to 'legitimate' concerns" the Bidens' business dealings in Ukraine. Graham said, "I just think the media's so in the tank over this issue, it makes me sick to my stomach. ... I don't think you take it seriously." Axios (2/9, Knutson, 521K) provides similar coverage of Graham's comments.

Biden Says His "Anger" Over Attacks On Hunter Won't Stop His Campaign. Politico (2/9, Dugyala, 4.29M) reports that on ABC's This Week, Joe Biden "said that his 'anger' at seeing his son become a 2020 campaign target cannot overshadow his platform." Biden said, "I can't let my anger overcome the desire and the need to have unite, heal this country. ... I've got to move beyond me and beyond my family. Because it's about your family, it's about everybody else's family, not mine." Biden said President Trump's attacks on his son are "pure sham," but added, "I'll be damned – I've been hit a lot. But It's not going to work on me and I'll be damned if I'm going to walk away and not take this country back."

Giuliani: Bolton Is "Either A Liar Or A Backstabber."

Rudy Giuliani was asked on Fox News' Sunday Morning Futures (2/9) about former National Security Adviser John Bolton's claim in his manuscript that Giuliani, Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney, and White House Counsel Pat Cipollone were present when the President asked Bolton to call Ukrainian President Zelensky and "paved the way for [Giuliani] to go investigate." Giuliani said, "I was never in any such meeting. ... I do not know what John is talking about. ... At no time during the entire period this was going on did John Bolton...come up to me and say, 'Rudy, I'm concerned about what you're doing, I'm worried about what you're doing.' Never. Instead, he says he went around my back to the Secretary of State and complained. The Secretary of State said he didn't, by the way. So, I don't know what John is up to. He's either a liar or a backstabber."

Prosecutors Seek To Delay Flynn Sentencing.

Politico (2/9, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports that federal prosecutors are seeking to delay former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn's sentencing, "arguing that his request to withdraw his guilty plea may require testimony from his former lawyers." In what Politico describes as "unusual Sunday morning court filings," prosecutors "did not explicitly call for a postponement of Flynn's scheduled Feb. 27 sentencing on a single felony charge of making false statements to the FBI, but suggested putting off looming deadlines in a way that would make it unlikely for any sentencing to take place this month." In the new filings, they argue that Flynn's claims that he received ineffective assistance from his former attorneys "will require information and perhaps testimony from those attorneys."

The Hill Says Impeachment Trial Is "Wild Card" In Battle For Senate Control.

The Hill (2/9, Bolton, 2.98M) reports that President Trump's impeachment trial is a "wild card" in the upcoming fight for control of the Senate. The near party-line votes on the two articles of impeachment "are most likely to impact the reelection bids" for Sens. Susan Collins (R-ME) and Doug Jones (D-AL), "who were already considered two of the most vulnerable senators heading into November." While Collins has cast herself "as an independent," that "branding took a hit" when she voted to acquit the President on both articles. Her Democratic challenger, Maine House Speaker Sara Gideon, "quickly seized on Wednesday's vote to tie her opponent to Trump" and Senate Majority Leader McConnell. The Hill adds that Jones' "votes to convict Trump on both articles of impeachment likely will seal his defeat, but given his long-shot path to victory, they won't change the calculus for Senate control greatly."

Pitt Uses Oscar Speech To Criticize Impeachment Trial.

The Washington Times (2/9, Morton, 492K) reports that in the first acceptance speech during Sunday's Oscar ceremony, Brad Pitt, who won the best supporting actor prize, took aim at the Senate impeachment trial. Pitt "immediately noted that he had 45 seconds for his acceptance speech." He said, "That's 45 seconds more than John Bolton got" before the Senate. Pitt suggested that his director, Quentin Tarantino, make "a movie about it and the adults do the right thing."

Grijalva Says Border Wall Crews Are Blasting Sites In Areas Sacred To Native Americans.

The Washington Post (2/9, Firozi, 14.2M) reports that according to Rep. Raúl Grijalva (D-AZ), construction crews have started "blasting sites within Arizona's Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument as part of the construction of President Trump's border barrier, and the affected areas include sites sacred to" the Tohono O'odham Nation and other Native American groups. In a statement, CBP said, "The construction contractor has begun controlled blasting, in preparation for new border wall system construction, within the Roosevelt Reservation at Monument Mountain. The controlled blasting is targeted and will continue intermittently for the rest of the month."

Trump Budget Would Reduce Border Wall Request, Would Not Eliminate Deficit Within Decade.

The Washington Post (2/9, Stein, Werner, 14.2M) reports, "The White House is preparing to propose a budget that would fail to eliminate the federal deficit over the next 10 years, according to an internal summary of the plan" obtained by the Post. White House officials instead "plan to say that their budget proposal would close the deficit by 2035. The White House last year claimed their budget plan would eliminate the deficit by 2034." The budget proposal expected to be released Monday "calls for about $2 trillion in cuts to 'non-defense discretionary programs,' a category of government spending that does not include Social Security or Medicare." The Wall Street Journal (2/9, A1, Davidson, Restuccia, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the budget deficit would be $966 billion next year under the plan, down from 2020's $1 trillion but more than twice the President's projection in 2017.

The New York Times (2/9, Rappeport, Kanno-Youngs, Sanger-Katz, 18.61M) says the proposal "is expected to be roughly in line with the $4.75 trillion budget request last year" and will include a 7 percent increase for CBP and a 23 percent increase for ICE. The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the planned request of $2 billion for border wall construction compares to the $8.6 billion in related funding requested last year. The Daily Caller (2/9, Datoc, 716K) reports that though the plan "requests fewer funds for border wall construction than in previous years," a "senior White House official explained how the administration has 'now shifted from securing funds to being able to build more wall.'" The official said, "The President has kept his promise to secure the border. With funding available, the Administration will build up to approximately 1,000 miles of border wall along the southwest border." Politico (2/9, Emma, 4.29M) also highlights the border wall funding request.

Reuters (2/9, Mason) reports the President will also "seek to make a 21% cut in foreign aid in the proposal, which seeks $44.1 billion in the upcoming fiscal year compared with $55.7 billion enacted in fiscal year 2020, an administration official said."

USA Today (2/9, Jackson, Collins, 10.31M) reports House Budget Chairman John Yarmuth "said based on initial reports 'this destructive and irrational president is giving us a destructive and irrational budget.'" Bloomberg (2/9, Sink, Wasson, 4.73M) and the Washington Times (2/9, Boyer, 492K) also report on the cuts.

As Coronavirus Death Toll Exceeds That Of SARS, Wolf Discusses Administration Efforts To Protect Americans.

Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said on Fox News' Sunday Morning Futures, "The President has been very clear we need to protect Americans" from the coronavirus. Wolf added, "We put together a multilayered strategy, an across agency task force to address this issue. We put measures in place at air ports of entry, land ports of entry and maritime ports of entry. We are allowing flights from China to 11 airports, and that includes other individuals flying from other countries who have been to China, to make sure they get the right medical screening and care they need at the 11 airports. What we hear from the CDC is that 14 day period, whether you are symptomatic is very critical. We are looking at that and making sure folks have the right medical care and if they need to be government quarantined or a self-imposed quarantine, that they do that."

The CBS Weekend News (2/9, story 5, 2:05, Quijano, 9.6M) reported that "more than 900 people have died" from the coronavirus, a death toll the Wall Street Journal (2/9, Woo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) exceeds that of the SARS epidemic nearly twenty years ago. Mola Lenghi said on the CBS Weekend News (2/9, story 6, 1:55, Quijano, 9.6M), "Hundreds of Americans remain under a two-week quarantine on military bases in Omaha, San Antonio, and Fairfield, California."

NBC Nightly News (2/9, story 3, 2:30, Snow, 3.6M) reported that "desperation is growing in China as officials try to find places to help care for the tens of thousands who are ill." NBC (Frayer) added that "anxiety...is rampant, and conditions in Wuhan, outright desperate." The Washington Post (2/9, Shih, 14.2M) says China "faces a crucial test beginning Monday as laborers from across the country trickle back to work in major cities that have been effectively emptied and shut down since the Lunar New Year in late January." Reuters (2/9, Zhou, Patton) reports that Liu Xiaoming, China's ambassador to Britain, told the BBC Sunday that the virus is "the enemy of mankind," but it "is controllable, is preventable, is curable."

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, A1, Page, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on Shen Wufu, who visited Wuhan on Jan. 18 as part of a multicity trip as an example of how far the virus may have spread before China's government confirmed it could transfer from person to person. According to the Journal, more than 40 people came into contact with were quarantined.

Ambassador Says China Would Welcome US Participation In WHO Effort To Address Coronavirus. China's Ambassador to the US, Cui Tiankai, told CBS' Face The Nation (2/9, 1.94M), "We welcome the American experts to participate in our efforts, and we are coordinating with the World Health Organization, because a lot of things are done under the auspices of the World Health Organization. We certainly welcome American experts to join the group that the WHO is assembling. And I'm sure they will be going to China very soon." The New York Times (2/9, Myers, Zraick, 18.61M) says Cui "declined to say whether a team of experts from the C.D.C would also be allowed into China. He suggested instead that American experts could be admitted as part of the W.H.O. or as individuals."

The Washington Times (2/9, Howell, 492K) reports that in response to a question about "suggestions" by Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) "and others that the coronavirus may have come from a Chinese 'super laboratory' instead of popping up in a live-animal market in Wuhan, China," Tiankai said rumors about the virus' origin would spark rumors and "stir up xenophobia." Tiankai said, "How can we believe all these crazy things? ... It's probably coming from some animal, but we have to discover more about this. ... A lot is still unknown, and our scientists...are doing their best to learn more about the virus. It's very harmful, very dangerous to stir up rumors."

Sen. Collins Receiving "Credible" Death Threats In Wake Of Impeachment Vote.

The AP (2/9) reports Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) "says she's getting death threats after her vote to acquit President Donald Trump at his impeachment trial, saying three of them were deemed 'credible' and are being investigated." Collins "made the disclosure Friday while addressing the Maine Chiefs of Police Association winter conference," saying, "I just want you to know that I've always loved you and appreciated you. But now I have a real personal appreciation for all that you do to keep us safe."

Florida Man Looking To "Assassinate" Trump Arrested Near White House.

The Washington Post (2/9, Laris, 14.2M) reports, "A Florida man with a knife in a sheath on his hip was arrested about a block from the White House on Saturday for threatening to kill the president, authorities said Sunday." According to District of Columbia police, suspect Roger Hedgpeth, told a Secret Service officer, "I am here to assassinate President Donald Trump. ... I have a knife to do it with." The New York Post (2/9, Brown, 4.57M) indicates "Hedgpeth was found with a 3 1/2-inch knife in a sheath on his left hip, and an empty pistol holster on his right one."

Man Arrested After Driving Through GOP Voter Registration Tent In Florida.

WJXT-TV Jacksonville, FL (2/8, Jones, Henning, 298K) reported that "hours after a van plowed through a Republican Party tent where volunteers were registering voters, Jacksonville police arrested a 27-year-old man on two counts of aggravated assault on a person over 65 years old, criminal mischief and driving without a license." Gregory William Loel Timm "was identified as the person behind the wheel of the van that struck the tent set up the parking lot of a Walmart Superstore at the corner of Atlantic and Kernan boulevards about 3:50 p.m. Saturday." The AP (2/9) indicates "the county GOP said via Twitter that six volunteers for President Donald Trump's campaign 'were intentionally targeted while registering voters.'"

The Daily Caller (2/9, Ross, 716K) reports "no injuries were reported from the incident, but a party volunteer told Jacksonville's Channel 4 news that she was almost hit." The Washington Post (2/9, Mettler, 14.2M) points out "no one was hurt in the incident," and reports Duval GOP Chairman Dean Black said in a statement, "We are outraged by this senseless act of violence toward our great volunteers. ... The Republican Party of Duval County will not be intimidated by these cowards and we will not be silenced." The Post also reports that "as word spread and Republican Party leaders and elected officials weighed in, Trump issued a warning on Twitter," writing, "Be careful tough guys who you play with!" Trump made the remark "alongside a statement from GOP Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel," who "called the incident an 'unprovoked, senseless' attack and said 'these disgusting acts will only make us work harder to win in November.'"

The New York Post (2/9, Moore, 4.57M) reports that "after slamming into the tents, the driver stopped to take video of the mayhem and 'flipped off' the campaign volunteers gathered in a Walmart parking lot before driving off." The Florida Times-Union (2/9, Stepzinski, 203K) says "one of the victims was able to give police cell phone photographs of the fleeing van," and that "detectives with the Sheriff's Office Intelligence Unit were leading the investigation."

NIH And CDC Funded To Conduct Research On Gun Safety.

USA Today (2/9, Hauck, Ellis, Filby, 10.31M) reports, "Firearm-related injuries kill nearly 40,000 Americans each year...and the nation's firearm homicide rate is more than 25 times that of comparable affluent countries." USA Today adds, "Congress approved $25 million in federal funding to study gun safety," which will "be split evenly between the National Institutes of Health and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention."

US Cities To Use Surveillance Planes To Help Solve Crimes.

NBC Nightly News (2/9, story 8, 3:10, Snow, 3.6M) reported on "controversial crime fighting surveillance planes that could be filming everything happening in your city." NBC's Gabe Gutierrez added that Ross McNutt, an Air Force veteran, founded Persistent Surveillance Systems in Ohio and "wants to roll out the battlefield technology in US cities after he developed it for the military in Iraq." The system is described as a Cessna "equipped with 12 powerful cameras" that "can hover more than a mile above a city for hours at a time, capturing everything in public view." NBC continued, "Once someone calls police and reports a crime, technicians can zoom in on a recording of a particular area, essentially turning back the clock to look for evidence." NBC also reported, "Baltimore plans to start a pilot program in May. St. Louis is also considering it."

Girl Highlighted In SOTU Address Attends "Sought-After Charter School."

The Washington Post (2/9, Meckler, 14.2M) reports, "The Philadelphia fourth-grader whom President Trump singled out during his State of the Union address as one of thousands of students 'trapped in failing government schools' actually attends a sought-after charter school." Trump said Janiyah Davis "was one of thousands of students on a waiting list for private school scholarships, and he urged Congress to pass a federal tax break that would reward donations to these scholarship programs." Davis "attends the popular Math, Science and Technology Community Charter School III, known as MaST III."

Some Jailed Over Unpaid Medical Bills.

The CBS Weekend News (2/9, story 10, 3:30, Quijano, 9.6M) reported, "There is at least one issue a divided electorate can agree on this election year. A recent poll finds 90 percent of those surveyed agreed on the importance of making healthcare more affordable." CBS (Oliver) describes a situation in Coffeyville, Kansas in which people owing medical bills are summoned to court to declare they cannot afford the bill and if they do not appear are jailed for contempt of court. Nusrat Chowdhury of the ACLU said, "What's happening here is a jail shakedown for cash. That is the criminalization of private debt." The situation is reported to be common in the US.

WPost: DC Rise In Opioid Deaths In 2019 Came Despite More Vigorous Efforts By Government.

The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) in an editorial says that during a peak in opioid overdoses in the District of Columbia, "it was clear that one of the factors was the city government's sluggish – some said negligent – approach to the problem," but, adds the Post, even though Mayor Muriel E. Bowser has had "a far more robust response ... 2019 saw another dramatic and dispiriting spike in overdose deaths." That's after "the number of deaths had dropped substantially in 2018." The Post hopes that new efforts will be more effective.

Trump Focused On Increasing Share Of Black Vote In 2020.

The Hill (2/9, Chalfant, Samuels, 2.98M) reports the President "is increasingly highlighting his pitch to African-American voters," though it adds that this is "despite a history of divisive rhetoric on race." The Hill also says that the President's "effort was on prime-time display last week" in the "Super Bowl advertisement on criminal justice" and the "State of the Union address and speech in Charlotte, N.C., peppered with appeals to black voters." According to campaign adviser Ken Blackwell, the campaign is focused "on a group of seven to nine states, including Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Michigan." Blackwell said, "We believe that we can get anywhere from 12 to 18 percent in 2020." The Hill adds, "Any efforts to improve his standing among minority groups could have the added effect" of helping among suburban voters who voted Democratic in 2018.

The Washington Examiner (2/9, Mastrangelo, 448K) reports that on CBS' "Face The Nation," political analyst Jamal Simmons "listed off a series of accomplishments President Trump has achieved that will help him with African American voters," mentioning "Trump's public friendship with celebrity power couple Kim Kardashian and Kanye West, the extradition of rapper A$AP Rocky from Sweden, and an uptick in federal money given to Historically Black Colleges and Universities."

Activists Seek To Convince Puerto Ricans To Identify As Black. The New York Times (2/9, Alford, 18.61M) reports, "More than three-quarters of Puerto Ricans identified as white on the last census...down from 80 percent 20 years ago, but activists and demographers say it is still inaccurate and they are working to get more Puerto Ricans of African descent to identify as black on the next census." One activist said that the Administration's "slow response after Hurricane Maria and other natural disasters has made many Puerto Ricans reconsider their decision to identify as white Americans."

Luntz: Media's Bias Against Trump Making His Reelection More Likely.

Pollster Frank Luntz said on Fox News' MediaBuzz (2/9, 536K), "Our press has become like in is in the United Kingdom, where there's a right wing, a center and a left and that has never been part of what America was supposed to be and you lose the faith and trust in the media to hold people accountable because they keep picking sides. ... I actually think this makes Donald Trump reelection more likely not less because if the public feels that there's a deliberate bias against the President, they will rally around him."

Emerson NH GOP Poll: Trump 84%, Weld 16%.

An Emerson Polling (2/9) poll of 500 likely New Hampshire Republican primary voters, taken Feb. 8-9, shows President Trump at 84% and ex-Gov. Bill Weld (R-MA) at 16%.

Iowa Democratic Party Says Buttigieg Won Most Delegates; Sanders Camp To Seek Recanvass.

The New York Times (2/9, Gabriel, 18.61M) reports, "Nearly a full week after the Iowa caucuses, the state Democratic Party on Sunday released results" showing ex-South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg "was the winner after it updated data from 55 precincts. But errors in the result tabulations have led several news organizations...to refrain from calling the race." Meanwhile, Faiz Shakir, who manages the campaign of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), "said the campaign would be calling for a partial recanvass of the results. The deadline for a campaign to make such a request is noon Central time on Monday. The party's re-examination did not change earlier projections that Mr. Buttigieg led in the count of national delegates, but it moved one more into his column." According to the party, Buttigieg "received 14 delegates," followed by Sanders with 12, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) with eight, ex-Vice President Joe Biden with six, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) with one.

The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) reports, "Late Sunday, Sanders adviser Jeff Weaver said the campaign would seek a partial recanvass – a process that Weaver said would put the senator from Vermont on top in the delegate count. Sanders won the popular vote, netting support from about 6,000 more caucus-goers on the first expression of preferences, known as an alignment, than Buttigieg. But the delegate allocation is based on projected support for each candidate at the state convention, known as state delegate equivalents or SDEs, which is traditionally the metric used to declare a winner of the caucuses." The Post says that Buttigieg and Sanders both "have declared victory in Iowa."

The AP (2/9, Jaffe) reports, "The Associated Press remains unable to declare a winner because it believes the results may not be fully accurate and are still subject to potential revision." And "with the slim margin separating Buttigieg and Sanders, the slightest mathematical or reporting mistake could have a significant impact on the race. In its request for a recanvass, campaigns must provide 'an explanation about how the national delegation could be altered as a result of the problem or its correction,' according to the Iowa Democratic Party's delegate selection plan. A Sanders aide said the campaign will be asking the state party to review the results from 20 to 30 precincts. The potential recanvass would further extend a process already clouded by uncertainty."

Sanders, appearing Sunday on CNN's State Of The Union (2/9, 619K), said, "All I can say about Iowa is it was an embarrassment. It was a disgrace to the good people of Iowa who take their responsibilities in the caucuses very seriously. They screwed it up badly, is what the Iowa Democratic Party did. But at the end of the day, to me what is most important, I don't know anybody can debate it, we ended up on the first ballot 6,000 votes ahead of anybody else. And after the realignment process, which is a fine process, we ended up 2,500 votes ahead of Mayor Buttigieg. When you win an election by 6,000 or 2,500 votes from where I come from, you win the primary or the caucus. So we are confident that we, in fact, won the Iowa caucuses and I thank the people of Iowa for that."

On NBC's Meet The Press (2/9, 2.92M), Sanders said, "The voter turnout in Iowa was not what I wanted. I think other candidates were not able to bring out their voters as well. But at the end of the day, we won the Iowa vote by 6,000. We won the realignment vote by 2,500. Where I come from, that's a victory. Here's something not talked about a whole lot. The young vote of people under 29 years of age increased by 33 percent over where it was four years ago and was even higher than Obama's extraordinary victory in 2008. So young people did come out in very big numbers, which I think is a great omen for the 2020 campaign."

Sanders, on CNN's State Of The Union (2/9, 619K), outlined his plan for the rest of the 2020 primary. He said, "The truth is that our agenda is precisely the agenda that the overwhelming number of people want. Among young people, people under 29 years of age, we increased the voter turnout [in Iowa's caucuses] by some 33 percent. That's a huge voter turnout. We do that all over the country, I think you're going to see incredible gains for down ballot Democrats."

Buttigieg, appearing Sunday on CNN's State Of The Union (2/9, 619K), said of the Iowa caucus results, "It was a great night for Bernie and it was a phenomenal night for us. This is a campaign that began a year ago with no money, no national name recognition. Our exploratory committee staff started out, I think, with four people in a tiny office. I don't have any personal fortune. We built this. What we were able to build is, I think, a different vision for what America can be. We're turning the page, leaving the politics of the past in the past and what I'm especially encouraged by is that the result that we had in Iowa came from rural and urban and suburban communities. We did well in counties that had voted for President Obama and then voted for [President] Trump and really demonstrated, I think, how we can put that majority together to win."

On Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), Buttigieg said, "For the last year candidates have been claiming that we are the ones who can put the campaign together that is going to ultimately going to defeat Donald Trump. The process of proving that began in Iowa. I was especially pleased we had a coalition of suburban, rural, and urban voters, caucusgoers. We had older and younger caucusgoers supporting us. We did particularly well in some of those counties that had swung from President Obama to vote for Trump. But that is one state and one day. New Hampshire is a state with a very strong independent streak. We know we have to earn every vote here so I will continue to be on the ground doing events, taking questions, being on the ground with voters making sure that they hear our vision and I hear their concerns."

WPost Analysis: Post-Iowa "Infighting" Between Democrats May Hurt Party's Odds Of Defeating Trump. The Washington Post (2/9, Scherer, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports, "Democratic leaders have edged toward the brink of open war with one another in recent days after a series of jarring setbacks that could jeopardize the party's chances against President Trump, who continues to solidify his iron-fisted control over the Republican election apparatus. The infighting focuses largely on the failed caucus process in Iowa, with state and national Democratic leaders at odds over who deserves blame, as well as an increasingly bitter dispute over the rules governing who gets into future nationally televised candidate debates – a process that could allow billionaire Mike Bloomberg to make the stage later this month. In a particularly stark sign, supporters of...Sanders...have returned to bashing the" DNC, "reviving grievances from the divisive 2016 primary race."

Democrats Concerned Over Lower-Than-Expected Turnout In Iowa Caucuses. Meanwhile, the New York Times (2/9, Lerer, Herndon, 18.61M) reports that "after the first test of the 2020 presidential nominating season, the Iowa caucuses, Democrats are awakening to a troubling possibility: Their #Resistance energy may be flickering. Turnout for the Iowa caucuses fell far short of expectations. The leading campaigns were prepared for as many as 300,000 people to show up – 60,000 more than the record set in 2008" – but "just 176,000 showed up, less than 3 percent more than in 2016. While that's higher than 2016, it's a striking change from just a few years ago, when turnout in the midterm elections reached the highest level in a century and Democrats took control of the House of Representatives." The Times adds that "the lagging results in Iowa have raised concerns about Democrats' ability to marshal their force in November, particularly against an incumbent president likely to spur a groundswell of support within his own party."

NYTimes Analysis: Iowa Caucus Debacle "Was A Total System Breakdown." The New York Times (2/9, Epstein, Ember, Gabriel, Baker, 18.61M) reports, "As disastrous as the 2020 Iowa caucuses have appeared to the public, the failure runs deeper and wider than has previously been known, according to dozens of interviews with those involved. It was a total system breakdown that casts doubt on how a critical contest on the American political calendar has been managed for years. Until now, the main public villain in the Iowa caucus fiasco has been the reporting app, created by a company called Shadow Inc., along with a 'coding issue' in a back-end results reporting system that state party officials blamed for the chaos. But the crackup resulted from cascading failures going back months."

DNC May Take Away Elections From State Parties After Iowa Caucus Problems. DNC Chair Tom Perez, appearing Sunday on CNN's State Of The Union (2/9, 619K), discussed the party's difficulties during the Iowa caucuses. He said, "I think it needs to be state election officials running elections. One of the conversations we had after the 2016 election, in addition to the super delegate reform to return power to the people, we incentivized states to go from caucuses to primaries. There were 14 states that held caucuses four years ago, seven are now primary states. Iowa chose to keep their caucus status, and I think what we learned from all of the mistakes that were made, it's undeniably unacceptable. I'm frustrated. I'm mad as hell and everybody is. I think what we're going to do at the end of this cycle is have a further conversation about whether or not state parties should be running elections. We are really good at building parties, building and organizing, building the best voter file, winning elections."

Axios' Allen: Democrats Had Their "Worst Week" Since Trump's Election. Writing for Axios (2/9, 521K), Mike Allen says, "This was the worst week for Democrats since Donald Trump's election-night shocker of 2016. ... In less than 200 hours, Democrats botched Iowa, watched Trump hit an all-time popularity high, debated ousting the DNC chair, and watched a socialist soar and an ideological civil war intensify." Allen adds, "There's a new fatalism in my conversations with Democrats, with many telling me that what once seemed unthinkable – Trump's re-election in November – is now starting to look more likely than ever."

New Hampshire Polls Show Sanders Leading Buttigieg.

The Boston Herald (2/9, Battenfeld, 410K) reports that a Franklin Pierce University/Boston Herald/NBC10Boston poll of 512 likely New Hampshire Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 5-8, shows Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) leading the race for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination with 23%, followed by ex-South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 20%, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) at 16%, ex-Vice President Joe Biden at 14%, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MA) at 6%; no other contender tops 3%. The Herald says Buttigieg's support is up eight points "in just one week."

The Boston Globe (2/9, Pindell, 972K) reports that a Boston Globe/WBZ-TV/Suffolk University daily tracking poll of 500 likely New Hampshire Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 7-8, shows Sanders leading with 24%, followed by Buttigieg at 22%, Warren at 13%, Biden at 10%, and Klobuchar at 9%. The Globe says Buttigieg's support is down three percentage points from the previous day, while Klobuchar's support is up three percentage points. The Globe says that poll results "reflect a two-day rolling average of 500 likely voters." On its website, WBZ-TV Boston (2/9, 92K) reports that Klobuchar "appears to be the only candidate to get a boost from Friday's debate, with two-thirds of the poll taken during and after that event."

In an online article, CBS News (2/9, Salvanto, De Pinto, Khanna, 3.68M) reports that a CBS News Battleground Tracker poll of 848 likely New Hampshire Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 5-8, shows Sanders leading with 29%, followed by Buttigieg at 15%, Warren at 17%, Biden at 12%, and Klobuchar at 10%. CBS News says that Buttigieg's support is up "12 points since" January, while Sanders' support is up two points since then.

On its website, CNN (2/9, Agiesta, 83.16M) reports that a CNN/University of New Hampshire tracking poll of 384 likely New Hampshire Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 5-8, shows Sanders leading with 28%, followed by Buttigieg at 21%, Biden at 12%, Warren at 9%; and Klobuchar at 6%. CNN says that Sanders and Buttigieg held "even with their performance in the previous day's" poll. Axios (2/9, Axios, 521K) reports on the results of the CNN/University of New Hampshire and WBZ/Boston Globe/Suffolk University polls. The Washington Examiner (2/9, Leonardi, 448K) reports on the results of the CNN/University of New Hampshire poll.

With New Hampshire Primary Election Looming, Biden, Buttigieg And Sanders Trade Attacks.

On NBC Nightly News (2/9, lead story, 2:30, Snow, 3.6M), Kate Snow reported that ahead of Tuesday's election, "the Democratic candidates are jockeying for position in New Hampshire." In the wake of "a disappointing finish in Iowa, former Vice President Joe Biden has a new strategy: Criticizing the Iowa front runners, Pete Buttigieg and Bernie Sanders." NBC's Stephanie Ruhle added that Biden "is on the attack," taking aim at Buttigieg over "his inexperience." Biden was shown saying, "This guy is not Barack Obama." Ruhle: "Buttigieg firing right back." Buttigieg was shown saying, "Well he's right. I'm not. Neither is he." Ruhle said that Biden is also targeting "Sanders' electability." Biden was shown saying, "Bernie calls himself a Democratic Socialist. ... You're going to win with that label?" Ruhle: "Sanders, who currently leads in New Hampshire polls, directing his fire at Buttigieg, who's polling a close second. Hitting him on contributions he takes from corporate executives."

On the CBS Weekend News (2/9, lead story, 2:00, Quijano, 9.6M), Nikole Killion reported that Biden and Sanders are "on defense." Biden was shown saying, "I didn't attacked Pete. Pete's been attacking me. He has completely misunderstood or misrepresented my record." Killion: "Against a surging Pete Buttigieg, now digging into" Biden's "moderate support." The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Day, Torry, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that during a Sunday campaign event in Nashua, Buttigieg, referring to the attacks from Biden, said, "As some folks would say, what business does a mayor have running for president? You don't have an office in Washington, DC, you don't have decades of establishment experience, you're not even from one of the biggest cities in the United States. To which I say, that's very much the point. We need to bring new voices to Washington, DC."

On CBS' Face The Nation (2/9, 2.76M), Buttigieg addressed an attack ad launched by the Biden campaign that hits him on racial issues, among other things. Buttigieg said, "It's a typical political attack that doesn't tell most of the story. It makes no mention of the work that we did, for example, in my administration, appointing the first African American top lawyer for the city, helping the first city-wide executive African-American woman get elected in South Bend. And I know that a lot of mayors are speaking up today about the idea that what happens in communities doesn't count. Maybe my community does look small from the perspective of Washington, but to us, a lot of times, it's the infighting in the Washington establishment that looks small and the work that we're doing on the ground in communities that are tired of being treated as a Washington punch line."

On NBC's Meet The Press (2/9, 2.92M), Buttigieg said that "one of the things [Biden] made fun of, an infrastructure investment, was an investment in minority-owned businesses in corridors on our city's west side because on the ground you have to do these things. We have faced these issues, rolled up our sleeves and gotten a real measurable track record of results. Cutting black unemployment, cutting black poverty. Our city was nationally recognized for work on economic empowerment. It's not that we solved all these issues in South Bend, just like no one has solved these issues in the country. But I will stack up my record against anybody else who is running for President, all of whom are implicated in the realities that our country faces, especially when it comes to racial and economic inequality."

Sanders, on Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), said, "Here's the problem, everybody knows this, whether you are a conservative or progressive. It is the billionaires and the big money interests that control what goes on politically, what goes on legislatively in this country. If you do, as Mayor Buttigieg does, take huge amounts of contributions from the CEOs of the pharmaceutical industry, from financiers in the fossil fuel industry, from the insurance companies, from Wall Street, does anyone seriously believe that you are going to stand up to those powerful entities and represent working people?" On CBS' Face The Nation (2/9, 2.76M), Sanders said that "we're going to contrast our views with Mayor Buttigieg. One of the areas of contrast, to be honest with you, is that at last count, he has about 40 billionaires who are contributing to his campaign, the heads of the CEOs of the large pharmaceutical industries, the insurance companies and so forth."

On NBC's Meet The Press (2/9, 2.92M), Sanders said, "Let's talk about money and politics. Right now our campaign, as you know at this moment, has received more campaign contributions from more Americans averaging $18.50 than any candidate in the history of the American politics. That's extraordinary. We are funded by the working families of America. Teachers are the profession that is contributing most. We had a lot of contributions from Amazon workers and so forth." Sanders added that Buttigieg "has received, I believe, contributions from over 40 billionaires. Joe Biden, the same. ... And Mike Bloomberg has every right in the world to run. He was mayor of New York City, he has a right to defend his record. But I think it speaks to a corrupt political system when billionaires can buy elections. You wanted to run for President? That's fine, but you should not be able to spend hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars."

Buttigieg, on CNN's State Of The Union (2/9, 619K), said, "Bernie's pretty rich and I would happily accept a contribution from him. Look, this is about making sure we bring everybody into the fight at a moment when we're going to be going up against Donald Trump who, with his allies, $25 million bucks in one day. This is a fight of our lives. I'm not a fan of the current campaign finance system, but I'm also insistent that we've got to go into this with all of the support we can get. And by the way, my campaign is where it is because hundreds of thousands of individuals, no corporate PACs, individuals have contributed...two million plus contributions. The average under $40 bucks. I'm the mayor of South Bend. It's not like that's an establishment fundraising powerhouse. We were able to get here by putting together a movement and that movement is the one that is going to turn the page."

On ABC's This Week (2/9, 2.69M), Buttigieg said, "The Trump campaign raised $25 million bucks in one day. If someone wants to donate to a campaign, fine, we need to accept and encourage and welcome help from everybody who's part of this cause. And by the way, we rely very heavily on grassroots donations. ... The average is under $40 bucks. Someone like the mayor of South Bend doesn't become a major presidential candidate as an establishment powerhouse. We're here because we built a movement and that's going to carry us to the White House." On Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), Buttigieg said, "We have two million contributions in this campaign. I think the average is under $40. We are building a movement that is going to defeat Donald Trump. I want everybody to help out, I want everybody who shares that vision to be at our side. I think Donald Trump and his allies raised $25 million in one day. I am building a campaign that is not defined by who we reject, it is defined by belonging, it is defined by inclusion, it is defined by pulling together in the coalition to get the job done."

On CBS' Face The Nation (2/9, 2.76M), Buttigieg said that "my campaign has been built from the grassroots. We have hundreds of thousands of supporters, most of whom went on peteforamerica.com and chipped in a few bucks because they share this vision we have for the future. Being the mayor of South Bend, Indiana, is not an establishment powerhouse. We're here because this message and this vision I'm offering is connecting with voters of all backgrounds. At a time like this, if somebody is ready to help us put together the campaign that's going to defeat Donald Trump, then I welcome that support, no matter how they voted in the past, no matter if they got a lot of money or not, I want their help, because let me tell you, Donald Trump and his allies right now are doing everything they can to hold on the power."

The Washington Post (2/9, Sullivan, Janes, 14.2M) reports that Buttigieg and Sanders "are not fighting to win over the same pool of New Hampshire voters." Instead, "according to strategists in both campaigns, each is trying to energize his supporters by vowing to block the other from winning the Democratic nomination – with Sanders, the democratic socialist, portraying Buttigieg as a captive to his billionaire donors, and the more centrist Buttigieg railing against Sanders as a 'my way or the highway' leftist." In a front-page story headlined "Democrats Turn Combative To Gain Edge In Tight New Hampshire Primary," the Wall Street Journal (2/9, A1, Siddiqui, McCormick, Thomas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) similarly reports on the attacks launched by the leading Democrats ahead of tomorrow's primary election.

USA Today (2/9, Page, 10.31M) reports, "The volatility in the New Hampshire electorate and the high stakes of its primary fueled an escalation in political attack and counterattack during a fierce final weekend of campaigning. Whatever happens Tuesday, the results are likely to clarify the contest, streamline the field and signal the Democratic message ahead."

WPost Analysis: Biden, Warren Brace For Disappointing Finish In New Hampshire. The Washington Post (2/9, Wootson, Viser, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports that as Buttigieg and Sanders battle "to win Tuesday's primary" in New Hampshire "and seize the momentum in a highly unpredictable race, another drama is playing out with serious implications for the other high-profile candidates in the Democrats' once-sprawling field." The Post says Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) faces "the prospect of losing badly in a state neighboring her home of Massachusetts, while...Biden's campaign is bracing for another potentially humiliating defeat and, as a result, a new round of anxiety among its top donors and questions about the viability of a former vice president once seen as the Democrats' best hope to defeat President Trump. The grim question facing Warren and Biden is not whether they can win New Hampshire, according to strategists, but how low they will finish – and what that result would mean for their candidacies."

Warren Allies Unhappy With Lack Of Campaign Help In NH From Kennedy. Politico (2/9, Thompson, Murray, 4.29M) reports, "All of...Warren's big-name political surrogates are hitting the trail in New Hampshire this weekend as she tries to stage a comeback from her disappointing third-place finish in Iowa. All, that is, except for one: Rep. Joe Kennedy III." The Massachusetts congressman – "a former student of Warren's at Harvard Law School who introduced her when she formally announced for president – has made only two campaign appearances for Warren since then," popping "over twice to New Hampshire." Politico says, "Kennedy's absence has frustrated some Warren allies who feel he could be an eloquent and forceful presence on the trail in the final stretch, when she needs all the help she can get." Kennedy is mounting a primary challenge to Sen. Ed Markey (D-MA).

On Sunday Shows, Buttigieg Pitches His Candidacy.

Ex-South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg, on ABC's This Week (2/9, 2.69M), discussed his plans for the New Hampshire election and the rest of the 2020 primary. He said, "If we're talking about a voter interested in progressive change, I'd be the most progressive President we've had in a half century. I'm calling everyone into a sense of belonging that will unite Democrats who had been at our side all along and some independents and some Republicans who know we need a different President. That's how we're going to win and govern. In a moment where our country is frighteningly polarized, we'll need some healing in the name of our values."

On CNN's State Of The Union (2/9, 619K), Buttigieg said, "We are in a new moment calling for a different kind of leadership. Look, we are facing the most disruptive President in modern times and I don't think the same playbook that helped us get here is going to work against him. We're also facing the most divisive President in modern times, which is why I'm equally concerned about a message that says if you're not either for revolution you must be for the status quo, because I think that leaves most people out. I'm building a campaign that is about calling as many people as possible in. Standing together to make sure that we not only defeat Donald Trump, but face the issues that our country is going to be confronting."

On NBC's Meet The Press (2/9, 2.92M), Buttigieg said, "The way to beat Donald Trump is certainly not to rely on the familiar playbook. And it's also, in my view, not to say that we need either a revolution or you must be for the status quo. The reason my campaign was so effective, especially in places that supported Barack Obama and then Donald Trump in the caucuses, is that we are reaching out to everybody, putting together a majority that is prepared not only to stand up for replacing this President, unified in what we're against, but even more so unified on what we're for, the need for economic empowerment, the need for higher wages, the need for healthcare, dealing with climate change and gun violence. There's a powerful American majority right now ready not only to win but to govern. And my campaign is about how to galvanize and not polarize that majority. That's how we're going to beat Donald Trump."

On CBS' Face The Nation (2/9, 2.76M), Buttigieg said, "New Hampshire is a state that likes to think for itself, and we'll be engaging Democrats as well as a lot of undeclared voters and maybe handful of Republicans who know that they won't agree with me on everything but are just sick of looking their kids in the eye and trying to defend or explain this President. That kind of hard work we'll be putting in all the way until polls close on Tuesday, and we're confident that it's going to lead to a great night."

Politico's Lizza Examines Buttigieg's "Barrier-Breaking" Bid As A Gay Candidate. Under the headline "Buttigieg Reluctantly Embraces His Barrier-Breaking Candidacy," Ryan Lizza writes in a piece for Politico (2/9, 4.29M) that Buttigieg "likes to say that he's 'not running to be the gay president of the United States,' but rather 'to be a president for everybody.'" Lizza says that "for the most part, the historical impact of a gay man winning Iowa has been something that has been thrust upon Buttigieg – by the media, by proud gay activists, by [his husband,] Chasten in [a] moment backstage – rather than something that he has boasted about." Lizza adds that Buttigieg "is in the complicated space of being a barrier breaker: He's willing to celebrate and ruminate on the history when pressed, but being defined as a gay candidate is not part of his strategy to win."

Buttigieg, on NBC's Meet The Press (2/9, 2.92M), addressed a video of a supporter attempting to withdraw her vote after learning he was married to a man. Buttigieg said, "First is what I have to say to that voter, which is I'm saddened that she sees things that way, but I'm running to be her President, too. No matter who she votes for as President, I'm going to get up in the morning and try to do a good job for her and for every American. Another thing I was struck by in that exchange is how well our volunteer handled the situation, reflecting the values of this campaign. Look, the reality is prejudice is still out there and you've got to deal with it. I would not have been able to get reelected where I did in Mike Pence's Indiana if people were not able to look past that."

Buttigieg Looks To Earn Support From Minority Communities. Buttigieg, on ABC's This Week (2/9, 2.69M), outlined his efforts to gain support from minority communities. He said, "I'll have to work to earn that vote just as did in South Bend. I returned to office by a multiracial coalition. Now, I know especially heading into the South, I'm now getting a second look from a lot of voters who frankly weren't sure we were competitive in the first place. We're prepared to build a campaign that calls everybody in, that will defeat Donald Trump and that's exactly the work we're doing. This is about belonging both within our campaign and across our country."

Buttigieg Plans To Decriminalize Drug Possession. Buttigieg, on Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), outlined his plan to decriminalize drug possession. He said, "I think what we need to focus on is where you have distribution. ... The point is not the legal niceties, the point is that we have learned through 40 years of a failed war on drugs that criminalizing addiction does not work. Not only that, incarceration does more harm than the offense that it's intended to deal with. This is not saying that these substances are okay, it is saying when someone develops a kind of addiction, throwing them in jail, or being in a situation where jail is the closest thing they will ever get to inpatient treatment, shows a profound failure in our country's mental health and addiction treatment system. ... Frankly, expecting the law enforcement system, first-responders and jails to be the front lines of mental health is just no way to run the United States of America."

On CNN's State Of The Union (2/9, 619K), Buttigieg said that "all of us are implicated in these problems and I take responsibility for everything good, bad, and indifferent that we did in our city. I also take responsibility for the fact that arrest rates for black residents in my city on drug charges were lower than in the state and around the country. But, look, that doesn't get any of us off the hook. These systemic disparities and the systemic discrimination that goes on throughout our system are one of the reasons that I am calling not only for us to legalize marijuana but for us to end incarceration as a response to drug possession altogether."

Buttigieg Looks To End Electoral College. Buttigieg, on Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), discussed his proposal to end the Electoral College. When asked if that would lead to candidates excluding small states in favor of large population centers, Buttigieg said, "I don't think that would be the effect. The reason is we run every other election in this country in the traditional fashion. When you're running for governor of a state of any size, you go to the big cities and you go to the small towns. We don't run governors' races with some Electoral College system or where some counties count more than other counties. If you want to earn that office, you campaign everywhere. I think the same is true for the country, at the end of the day. ... It doesn't even benefit small states. It just benefits some states. I think it is more fair for everybody's vote to count the exact same like we do in every other election that we run in this country."

Sanders: "My Socialism" Helps Working Families, "Trump's Socialism" Helps "Billionaires."

The Washington Times (2/9, Howell, 492K) reports that Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) on Sunday "accused President Trump, who frequently rails against Democrats and their 'socialism,' of leveraging that same ideology to prop up his business and the rich." Sanders, on Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), defended his stance on democratic socialism. He said, "In many respects, we are a socialist society today. We have a huge budget, it puts money into all areas. Donald Trump, before he was President, was a private business person. He received $800 million in tax breaks and subsidies to build luxury housing in New York. Now, what does that mean? When the government gives you $800 million in tax breaks and subsidies. The fossil fuel industry, whose product happens to be destroying our planet, right now receives tens of billions of dollars in tax breaks and subsidies, so does the pharmaceutical industry. The difference between my socialism and Trump's socialism is I believe the government should help working families, not billionaires. ... I believe, in fact, that the rich must start paying their fair share of taxes when you have massive levels of income and wealth inequality."

On NBC's Meet The Press (2/9, 2.92M), Sanders said, "How do you talk about an economy that's working when the people on top are making hundreds of billions of dollars more and the average worker is making 17 cents. We need an economy that works for working people. And my agenda is that agenda. That's raising the minimum wage, that's healthcare for all, that's making sure that all of our kids, regardless of their income, can get to college or trade school by imposing a modest tax on Wall Street speculation. ... Half of the American people are living paycheck to paycheck. Today you've got half a million people sleeping out on the streets, when you've got three people owning more worth than the bottom half of America. ... Please don't tell me that this economy is working well for all people. It is working phenomenally well for Trump's billionaire friends, not for working people."

Sanders Says Medicare For All Will Cost Less Than Insurance Payments. Sanders, on Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), outlined his healthcare plans in more detail. He said, "First of all, we pay for everything that we propose. In terms of healthcare, the question that Trump, Joe Biden, anybody else has got to answer is if we leave the status quo alone, the next ten years we're going to be spending $50 trillion. We are now spending twice as much per person, $11,000 a year, as do the people of any other country on earth. We are spending a fortune for healthcare, yet we have 87 million Americans uninsured or underinsured. 30,000 die each year because they don't get to a doctor. Unbelievably, 500,000 people go bankrupt because of medically related illnesses, they get cancer, they go bankrupt, that is insane. Medicare for all will cost the average American less than the $12,000 a year they are paying right now to the insurance company."

On CBS' Face The Nation (2/9, 2.76M), Sanders said that "the problem is we already are spending about 50 percent of our healthcare dollars which already come from the federal government. We are going to add the other 50 percent. But here's the main point that people should appreciate. If we do nothing, according to Health and Human Services, we'll be spending $50 trillion. We spend twice as much per capita on healthcare as do the people of Canada or Europe. So, of course we can provide healthcare to all people spending less than we are doing now, because we're going to end the $100 billion in profiteering that goes to the drug companies, that goes to the insurance companies and the hundreds of billions in administration of thousands of separate plans, an enormously complicated and wasteful system."

Sanders Emphasizes Need To Address Climate Change. Sanders, on Fox News Sunday (2/9, 1.13M), discussed his efforts to combat climate change. He said, "In terms of climate change, I do propose a lot of money. You know why? The scientists are telling us the future of the planet is at stake. We spent $60 billion dealing with Hurricane Sandy. You see what is happening in Puerto Rico, you see what is happening in Australia right now. What the scientists are telling us is we have an existential crisis. How much you think it is going to cost when we have more and more extreme weather disturbances? ... The Green New Deal, by the way, creates up to 20 million good paying jobs, transforming our energy system away from fossil fuel to energy efficiency. ... We need a forceful response. That is not Bernie Sanders, that is what the scientific community is telling us. By the way, it is a disgrace that we have a President who ignores that reality."

Sanders Says He Is In Good Health. Sanders, on NBC's Meet The Press (2/9, 2.92M), discussed his fitness for office after having suffered a heart attack in September. He said, "The American people have a right to know whether the person they're going to be voting for for president is healthy. We will certainly release our medical records before the primary. Certainly before the first votes are cast. ... We have released as much documentation I think as any other candidate. ... We have released the substantive part of our medical records. We have doctors and cardiologists who have confirmed I am in good health. I am in good health."

Biden Defends Record Amid Uphill New Hampshire Primary.

In a prerecorded interview on ABC's This Week (2/9, 2.69M), former Vice President Joe Biden outlined his plans for the Democratic primary. He said, "Let's be realistic, it'll be an uphill fight running against two of the neighboring senators. I think it's an uphill fight." When asked about his ads about Mayor Buttigieg, Biden said, "I didn't attack Pete. He's been attacking me. I think he has completely misunderstood or misrepresented my record. I've done a great deal. I have gotten a lot done both as a senator and as vice president. ... I was able to get Detroit back on its feet. I've been able to get the chemical weapons treaty passed. I was responsible in large part for what happened in Paris with John Kerry and so on. I don't understand how those things don't matter and I don't understand when they talk about the past why Barack was such a lousy President, I think he was a pretty darn good President."

Biden Uses John Wayne Quip To Answer Woman's Question About Iowa Caucuses, Calling Her A "Lying, Dog-Faced Pony Soldier." The Hill (2/9, Klar, 2.98M) reports former Vice President Joe Biden in response to a woman asking him "about his performance in the Iowa caucuses" asked her, "Ever been to a caucus?" After she said yes, Biden said, "No you haven't, you're a lying, dog-faced pony soldier. You gotta be honest." The Hill said it was "a joke his campaign said he has made before." One Biden aid tweeted, "It's from a John Wayne movie and he's made it plenty of times before." Biden also told "the woman he doesn't think the Iowa caucus is a good measure of how a candidate will perform in other states."

The Washington Post (2/9, Wootson, 14.2M) reports the woman, Madison Moore, 21, a student at Mercer University in Georgia, asked, "How do you explain the performance in Iowa, and why should voters believe that you can win the national election?" According to the Post, Moore was "a little shaken" by Biden's response.

Warren Says Campaign Is Built To "Go The Distance."

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), on ABC's This Week (2/9, 2.69M), discussed her efforts moving forward in the primary. She said, "I don't think in terms of strategy but the opportunity to get out and talk about the things people really care about. I have been doing town halls and taking unfiltered questions for a year now and things that people ask about, whether we can do universal child care and whether we can expand social security payments, want to know how that would work. I have plans for all of those. ... The way I see this it's going to be a long campaign. When I made the decision not to spend 75 percent of my time raising money from billionaires and corporate executives and lobbyists I had more time to go around the country. I have been to 31 states. We have built a campaign to go the distance. And that's what I think is going to happen here."

Sanders, Steyer Making Strong Effort In South Carolina.

The AP (2/9, Kinnard) reports former Vice President Joe Biden "is facing increasingly formidable competition in South Carolina," as Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and Tom Steyer "are challenging" him there, in a state the AP calls "an important gauge of black support." Sanders, the AP says, "has generated enthusiasm from younger black voters," while Steyer "is flooding the South Carolina airwaves with millions of dollars in ads, building a robust staff and making numerous visits." The AP also reports, "Biden's aides remain confident in his chances in South Carolina."

Politico (2/9, King, 4.29M) reports on Steyer's effort in South Carolina, where "he's spent $14 million in TV and radio ads, spent over $100,000 on ads in black-owned newspapers, hired 93 staffers, an army of volunteers and assembled the largest state-wide operation of any other campaign." He has, adds Politico "been in double-digits in all three surveys released this month," and "is second only to Joe Biden in the state, with Bernie Sanders a close third." Steyer has also, says Politico, "been endorsed by a growing number of South Carolina black leaders."

Bloomberg-Supported Center At NYU Places Climate Activists In State Attorney General Offices.

The Washington Times (2/9, Richardson, 492K) reports former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg "is advancing his climate change agenda behind the scenes with the help of one Democratic state attorney general at a time." The Times says, Bloomberg's "State Energy & Environmental Impact Center at New York University School of Law has quietly planted climate lawyers – paid by the center – with Democratic attorneys general in nine states and the District of Columbia." And, adds the Times, "emails obtained by Energy Policy Advocates showed the office of Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel entering into discussions to bring on a Bloomberg-funded 'special assistant attorney general.'" So far, "the center has embedded climate lawyers in attorneys general offices in Connecticut, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Mexico, New York and Oregon."

Republican Primary To Succeed Hunter In CA50 Is Focused On Who Will Best Support Trump.

The Los Angeles Times (2/9, Clark, 4.64M) reports on the campaign to succeed Rep. Duncan Hunter (R-CA) who resigned last month, focusing on former San Diego City Councilman Carl DeMaio (R) and ex-Rep. Darrell Issa (R-CA), who "have traded pointed barbs for months in TV ads, tweets, mailers and forums – all about who would be the strongest and most ardent supporter of President Trump if elected to Congress."

First Film From Obamas' Production Company Wins Oscar For Best Documentary Feature.

The Hill (2/9, Kurtz, 2.98M) reports, "'American Factory,' the first Netflix film from former President Obama and first lady Michelle Obama's production company," won the Academy Award for Best Documentary Feature Sunday evening. The "project from filmmakers Steven Bognar, Julia Eichert and Jeff Eichert followed the story of an Ohio factory after it was reopened by a Chinese billionaire. ... [The Obamas] didn't appear on the Oscars stage to accept the award, but Bognar and the Eicherts thanked the Obamas' production company, Higher Ground, during their acceptance speech." The Obamas were not "personally nominated for the Academy Award."

Fox News (2/9, Napoli, 27.59M) reports on its website, "The former President tweeted Sunday: 'Congrats to Julia and Steven, the filmmakers behind American Factory, for telling such a complex, moving story about the very human consequences of wrenching economic change. Glad to see two talented and downright good people take home the Oscar for Higher Ground's first release.'"

NYTimes Examines QAnon.

The New York Times (2/9, McIntire, Roose, 18.61M) reports on QAnon, saying it “began online more than two years ago as an intricate, if baseless, conspiracy theory that quickly attracted thousands of followers [and] has since found footholds in the offline world,” appearing “in political campaigns, criminal cases, merchandising and at least one college class.” Online, “QAnon fans shared groundless theories online linking the liberal billionaire George Soros to technological problems that hobbled the [Iowa] caucuses, and passed around bogus and potentially dangerous ‘treatments’ for” the coronavirus. The Times says, “The seepage of conspiracy theorizing from the digital fever swamps into life offline is one of the more unsettling developments of the Trump era,” and adds that the President “has relentlessly pushed groundless conspiracies to reshape political narratives to his liking.”

Guantanamo Reportedly Unprepared To Host Major 9/11 Trial Next Year.

The New York Times (2/9, Rosenberg, 18.61M) reports that in the military court in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba “in the case of the five men accused of plotting the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks,” Judge Col. W. Shane Cohen “has scheduled jury selection...to begin early next year,” but, says the Times, “Guantánamo is not yet ready.” There will be “a substantial influx of people to the base – potential jurors, legal teams, journalists and relatives of victims,” and “flights and housing have to be sorted out.” The Times describes in some detail the shortcomings of facilities for lodging, dining, the press, and transportation.

Ransomware Attacks Increasing In Frequency And Costs.

The New York Times (2/9, Popper, 18.61M) reports on ransomware attacks in which “hackers have taken to locking down entire computer networks and demanding payments to let users back into their systems.” The Times says that according to Emsisoft, which aids companies subjected to such attacks, last year, “205,280 organizations submitted files that had been hacked in a ransomware attack – a 41 percent increase from the year before.” Security firm Coveware found that “the average payment to release files spiked to $84,116 in the last quarter of 2019, more than double what it was the previous quarter.” But, according to Coveware, cities “are among the only victims who have to report the attacks,” and “public sector organizations represented only around 10 percent of all victims last year.” According to Europol, ransomware is the “most widespread and financially damaging form of cyberattack.”

RCP Average Has Trump’s Job Approval At 45.5%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump’s job approval stands at 45.5%, and his disapproval at 51.8%. The President’s job approval and disapproval are unchanged since yesterday.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 “likely voters” (2/4-2/6) finds Trump’s approval at 49%, with 49% disapproving.

A The Hill/Harris survey of 1,000 “registered voters” (2/6-2/7), meanwhile, has the President’s job approval at 49%, and his disapproval at 51%.

IMF Deputy Director To Depart As Georgieva Forms Team.

Reuters (2/7, Lawder) reported IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva on Friday “made her first major personnel move since taking over the institution last October, announcing that her top deputy, David Lipton, will leave at the end of February.” The IMF said in a statement that Lipton’s departure was “in the context of changes she will be making to the leadership team,” adding that the search for Lipton’s replacement would commence shortly. Reuters said that, traditionally, the IMF “has been headed by a European, while the No. 2 spot has been held by an American, reflecting the U.S. status as the Fund’s largest shareholder.” Bloomberg (2/7, Kearns, 4.73M), The Independent \(UK\) (2/7, Thornton, 1.36M), and The Wall Street Journal (2/7, Talley, Zumbrun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reported.

VP Fernandez: Argentina Will Not Pay “Even Half A Cent” While Recession Continues.

Reuters (2/9, Marsh) reported Argentina’s Vice President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner “said on Saturday that the government will not pay ‘even half a cent’ of its debt back” to the IMF prior to ending the country’s current recession. Fernandez de Kirchner, speaking at a book presentation, said, “The first thing we have to do in order to be able to pay is to exit the recession. ... If there is a recession no-one will pay even half a cent and the way you exit recession is through a lot of state investment.”

Kudlow Says Xi Told Trump China Will Meet Trade Commitments Despite Coronavirus.

Reuters (2/7, Lambert) reported White House adviser Larry Kudlow said Friday on Bloomberg Television that Chinese President Xi Jinping has told President Trump that China will still meet its purchasing targets under the Phase One trade deal, despite delays associated with the coronavirus. Kudlow “said there was no tension between the United States and China over the handling of the fast-moving virus outbreak.”

Credit Suisse CEO Resigns Following Spying Scandal.

The New York Times (2/7, Tsang, De La Merced, 18.61M) reported Credit Suisse CEO Tidjane Thiam announced his resignation, with Thiam having been “brought down over a spying scandal involving his neighbor, the bank’s former head of wealth management, Iqbal Khan.” According to the Times, “The dispute between [the] two men, who had homes in the Lake Zurich area, stemmed from an argument Mr. Khan had with Mr. Thiam's partner over some trees on the Thiam property, according to news reports." Khan eventually left Credit Suisse, which commenced surveillance of him "to see if he was trying to poach employees or clients, which would have been a breach of his Credit Suisse contract." An inquiry commenced by Credit Suisse which was carried out "by an outside law firm" determined "that Mr. Thiam and other executives had not been aware of the surveillance effort." However, "the incident was damaging for the bank."

In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (2/7, A1, Patrick, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported Thiam will depart this coming week after 4.5 years as head of Credit Suisse. He will be succeeded by Thomas Gottstein.

Bank Of Italy Says Europe Needs Crisis Tools For Small Banks.

Reuters (2/8, Mandala, Za) reported, "The Bank of Italy on Saturday called for European rules to handle smaller banks' crises and urged them to consider mergers to cut excessively high costs." At the annual Assiom-Forex conference of financial markets' participants, Bank of Italy Governor Ignazio Visco "said European banking rules introduced after the global financial crisis made it harder to find solutions when a small lender ran into trouble." He added that mergers could allow smaller banks to achieve much-needed scale. Costs at smaller peers "with a traditional business model run on average at 72% of their income, compared with 66% at bigger rivals, he said."

US, Other Donors Consider Suspending Aid To Yemen After Houthi Rebels Announce "Tax" On Aid.

The Washington Post (2/9, Ryan, Hudson, 14.2M) reports the Administration "is considering suspending much of its humanitarian assistance to Yemen" because of "new restrictions imposed by Iran-linked Houthi rebels." The US, according to an official at the State Department, is "coordinating with other donor nations and aid organizations on possible responses to a 2 percent 'tax' on assistance projects and other new measures in swaths of Yemen administered by the Houthis." The donor nations will be meeting in Brussels next week to discuss the matter.

Iran Again Fails To Launch Satellite Into Orbit.

The AP (2/9, Vahdat, Gambrell) reports, "An Iranian rocket failed to put a satellite into orbit on Sunday, state television reported, the latest setback for a program the US claims helps Tehran advance its ballistic missile program." Defense Ministry space program spokesman Ahmad Hosseini told state TV, "Stage-1 and stage-2 motors of the carrier functioned properly and the satellite was successfully detached from its carrier, but at the end of its path it did not reach the required speed for being put in the orbit." Hosseini "still sought to portray the failure as a 'remarkable' achievement for its space program," as "previous Simorgh launches of the 80-ton satellite carrier suffered other failures."

At any rate, the Washington Examiner (2/9, Pearce, 448K) reports, "the latest mishap is the fourth time a satellite launched from the Khomeini spaceport has failed to reach outer space. The previous failed attempted happened on Aug. 29." The Examiner recalls that "after the August failure, the Trump administration placed sanctions on the Iranian Space Agency for the first time in its history," because "US officials said that Iran is using its space agency, purportedly meant for space research, as a covert means of placing satellites carrying ballistic missiles into space."

The Washington Times (2/9, Meier, 492K) says Iran's "latest unsuccessful attempt came amid heightened tensions between Washington and Tehran and just over a month after the US killed a top Iranian military commander, which led Iran to launch a missile strike on a US military base in Iraq."

WSJournal Criticizes Democratic Candidates' Answer To Soleimani Question.

A Wall Street Journal (2/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes former Vice President Joe Biden, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and former South Bend, Indiana Mayor Pete Buttigieg for their answers during last Friday's Democratic presidential debate to a question about President Trump's decision to order a strike on Iranian Gen. Qassem Soleimani. All three were critical of the decision, and the Journal argues that while Sanders' reply was not surprising, Biden and Buttigieg missed an opportunity to show that they, like Trump, would act to stop anyone who would kill Americans.

China Investing Heavily To Build Influence In Middle East.

The Washington Times (2/9, Wolfgang, 492K) reports China is "banking on forging multibillion-dollar partnerships with Iraq, Pakistan and even war-torn Syria to provide fuel in its quest to supplant the U.S. as the world's top power." The Times adds, "Iraq's unexpected announcement last fall that it intends to join Beijing's massive Belt and Road Initiative... is just one example," as China has spent "about $24 billion" in Iraq since 2005, and "across the Middle East and North Africa, China has invested roughly $200 billion over the past 15 years." The Times also states, "China's economic clout carries serious geopolitical ramifications," and "often come[s] at the expense of American companies." In response, Secretary of State Pompeo "and other top Trump administration officials in recent weeks have warned nations in the region to be wary of doing business with Beijing," but "it seems unlikely that Middle Eastern countries will heed those warnings."

Two American Soldiers Killed In Insider Attack In Afghanistan.

Reuters (2/9, Sediqi, Ali) reports, "Two US soldiers and an Afghan soldier were killed when an individual in an Afghan uniform opened fire on them with a machine gun in eastern Afghanistan, the US military and two senior Afghan officials said on Sunday." Colonel Sonny Leggett said in a statement. "Current reports indicate an individual in an Afghan uniform opened fire on the combined US and Afghan force with a machine gun." The Washington Post (2/9, George, Hassan, 14.2M) points out "some Afghan officials said the attacker was a member of the Afghan security forces."

NBC Nightly News (2/9, story 4, 1:45, Nichols, 3.6M) that "the ambush that took the lives of" the two US soldiers "was quick and violent. An individual in an Afghan uniform opened fire on the combined US and Afghan force with a machine gun, according to the Defense Department." The militant unloaded "his weapon at the end of a meeting with local leaders in Nangarhar Province, a nest for Taliban and ISIS combatants." The CBS Weekend News (2/9, story 3, 0:25, Quijano, 9.6M) briefly covered the story last night.

The AP (2/9) reports "six US service members have been killed in Afghanistan since the start of 2020, including Saturday's casualties. Last year, 22 US service personnel died in combat there." The New York Post (2/9, Lapin, 4.57M) indicates "officials on Sunday identified the two US soldiers killed in an apparent insider attack in Afghanistan."

The San Antonio Express-News (2/9, Quinn, 762K) reports on the identity of the US fatalities: "Sgt. 1st Class Javier Jaguar Gutierrez, 28, was from San Antonio, according to officials." Gutierrez "was killed along with Sgt. 1st Class Antonio Rey Rodriguez, 28, from New Mexico."

Campaign Against ISIS In Afghanistan May Have Displaced, Not Destroyed, Group.

The Washington Post (2/9, George, O'Grady, Hassan, 14.2M) reports that though the US-Afghan action against ISIS in Afghanistan late last year "appeared to be a success," with attacks in Kabul subsiding and hundreds of displaced villagers returning home, "it has now become clear that military operations also scattered many fighters they aimed to defeat: The group's senior leadership fled further into the Spin Ghar mountains, crossing into Pakistan or pushing north," while "others simply went into hiding."

US Ambassador Warns Israel Against "Unilateral" Annexation Of West Bank.

The AP (2/9) reports "the US ambassador to Israel...cautioned Israel against 'unilateral action' in annexing West Bank settlements, warning that such a move could endanger the Trump administration's recently unveiled Mideast plan." Ambassador David Friedman "wrote Sunday on Twitter that 'the application of Israeli law to the territory which the Plan provides to be part of Israel is subject to the completion of a mapping process by a joint Israeli-American committee.'" The Jerusalem Post (2/9, Havrov, Lazarov, 90K) notes Friedman added, "Any unilateral action in advance of the completion of the committee process endangers the plan and American recognition." Friedman "expanded upon his comments during an event at the Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs in which he clarified that the Trump administration does not obviously control the Israeli government." Said Friedman, "The US cannot prevent Israel from doing anything. Israel is a sovereign nation, and Israel can do what it wants to do, and we have no control over Israel and its sovereign actions."

Reuters (2/9, Williams) reports Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "initially pledged a speedy 'application of Israeli law' – de facto annexation – to Jewish settlement blocs and the Jordan Valley, delighting his religious-rightist base ahead of Israel's March 2 election, where he hopes to win a fifth term," but "was forced to backpedal after the White House made clear it wanted a US-Israeli mapping process – likely to take weeks or more – completed first." Reuters adds Friedman "intervened" after "Defence Minister Naftali Bennett and other Israeli ultra-nationalists" urged "an immediate cabinet vote on sovereignty in the West Bank." The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Schwartz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Israel Imposes Ban On Palestinian Agricultural Exports. AFP (2/9, Ezzedine) reports "Israel on Sunday imposed a ban on Palestinian agricultural exports, in a move the Palestinians blasted as a "dangerous" escalation in a five-month trade war." COGAT, "the Israel defence ministry unit that oversees civilian activities in the Palestinian territories," said in a statement, "Starting from today... export abroad of Palestinian agricultural product through the Allenby crossing will not be allowed." AFP adds "the Israeli-controlled Allenby border crossing between Jordan and the occupied West Bank is the only route through which Palestinian goods can reach foreign markets." AFP also reports "COGAT said the measure was in response to a Palestinian decision in October to stop importing calves from Israel."

Thousands Rally Against US Mideast Plan In Morocco. The AP (2/9) reports "thousands of people marched in Morocco's capital Sunday to protest US President Donald Trump's peace plan for the Mideast and to oppose what they see as the Moroccan government's lenient position toward it." The AP adds "Moroccan political leaders, from Islamists to left-wing figures, took part in the march through Rabat alongside union members, activists, and members of civil society groups." The marchers "expressed frustration with Moroccan Foreign Minister Nasser Bourita, who declared his country's 'appreciation' for Trump's plan and urged its citizens not to be 'more Palestinian than the Palestinians themselves.'"

AFP (2/9) points out "some of the demonstrators, who wore red-black-green-white scarves in the colours of the Palestinian standard, burned an Israeli flag and spoke against any attempt by Morocco 'to normalise' ties with the Jewish state." Morocco "has warming but quiet relations with Israel, and no formal diplomatic ties." The two nations "opened 'liaison' offices in each other's countries in the mid-1990s but Rabat closed them after an escalation of Palestinian-Israeli violence in 2000."

Trump Hopes To Ease Dispute Between Egypt And Ethiopia Over Dam On Nile.

The New York Times (2/9, Walsh, Sengupta, Boushnak, 18.61M) reports, "A colossal hydroelectric dam being built on the Nile...in the lowlands of Ethiopia, threatens to further constrict Egypt's water supply – and is scheduled to start filling this summer." The dam "has become a national preoccupation in both countries, stoking patriotism, deep-seated fears and even murmurs of war." Egyptian President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi has said, "The Nile is a question of life, a matter of existence to Egypt." President Trump has been mediating the issue, and "has suggested that his efforts might merit a Nobel Prize." The US "is pushing for an agreement by the end of February."

Sinn Féin May Enter Irish Government After Strong Election Results.

The New York Times (2/9, Mueller, 18.61M) reports that according to election results released yesterday, Sinn Féin, "a leftist party long ostracized from Irish politics over its ties to sectarian violence, won the popular vote and seized its largest-ever share of parliamentary seats in the country's national elections this weekend." The Times adds that "the vote loosened a 90-year stranglehold on power by two center-right parties in Ireland and put Sinn Fein on the doorstep of joining a coalition government, a remarkable rebuke to a political establishment that tried to paint it as aberrant and unelectable throughout the campaign."

The Washington Post (2/9, Ferguson, Noack, 14.2M) also reports Sinn Féin "shattered the country's center-right status quo with its strongest-ever performance in this weekend's general election, throwing Irish politics into uncertainty." Sinn Féin is now "on par with or ahead of the two mainstream parties that have dominated Irish politics for nearly a century, with young voters embracing the long-marginalized party en masse." Meanwhile, "the center-right Fine Gael party of Prime Minister Leo Varadkar suffered humiliating losses." The Belfast Telegraph (2/9, Young) reports "the leader of Fianna Fail... failed to rule out entering government with Sinn Fein in the Republic."

The Guardian (2/9, Carroll, 4.19M) also says Sinn Féin "will try to form a government in Ireland after apparently winning more votes than any other party in Saturday's general election – a historic result that upended the political system." Sinn Féin, "once a pariah for its IRA links, won almost a quarter of first-preference votes, possibly pipping Fine Gael and Fianna Fáil, two centrist rivals that have taken turns ruling Ireland for a century." The party "rode a wave of anger over homelessness, soaring rents and hospital waiting lists as well as disillusionment with the traditional political duopoly."

Hungary Concerned About Surge In Illegal Border Crossing Attempts.

Breitbart (2/9, Tomlinson, 673K) reports "Hungarian authorities have seen a surge in attempted border crossings so far this year, with a recent attempt allegedly motivated by false information given to migrants in Serbia." Hungary "re-opened its border crossing at the town of Tompa on Friday, after roughly 500 migrants had gathered there and demanded to be let into the European Union, holding English-language signs claiming, 'We are only refugees, not criminals.'" Breitbart adds "the action followed a surge in the number of migrants attempting to cross from Serbia, which is not part of the European Union, into Hungary, which is, over the course of this year, with French newspaper Le Figaro claiming that around 3,400 migrants made attempts on border in January – several hundred more than in January of 2019."

Some In Congress Question Payouts From Aid Program For Farmers To Subsidiary Of Brazilian Firm.

The New York Times (2/9, Haberman, Rappeport, 18.61M) reports the Administration "plans to shutter its bailout program for farmers hurt by tariffs." The Times says, "About $67 million in bailout funds have gone to JBS USA, the subsidiary of JBS S.A., a Brazilian company that is the world's biggest meat-processing firm." Sens. Robert Menendez (D-NJ) and Marco Rubio (R-FL), along with Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-CT), have asked Agriculture Secretary Perdue to investigate JBS S.A. Sen. Debbie Stabenow (D-MI) has alleged that money from the program "was being concentrated in the south, that certain crops were being unfairly favored and that large and foreign companies were receiving big benefits while small farms struggled." She also "specifically pointed to JBS USA."

Pesticides Have Become Among Most Lucrative Of Counterfeited And Smuggled Products.

The Washington Post (2/9, A1, McCoy, 14.2M) reports on the smuggling of pesticides, which "has quietly grown into one of the world's most lucrative and least understood criminal enterprises." The pesticides, "adulterated in labs and garages, hustled like narcotics, co-opted by gangs and mafias...are flooding developed and developing countries alike, with environmental and social consequences that are 'far from trivial,'" according to the UN Environment Program. The World Health Organization estimates that "pesticides poison 3 million people and kill more than 200,000" annually. While US food corporations say they test for pesticides and train suppliers in the use of them, "analysts say tests cannot determine whether produce was grown with counterfeit pesticides." The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development estimates that "roughly 10 percent of the agrochemical trade" is illicit, and the OECD believes it to be 14 percent in Europe and 20 percent in Brazil, which is "the world's biggest pesticide market."

Freddie Mac Planning To Sell Up To $8B Of Guaranteed PCs In 2020.

Commercial Mortgage Alert (2/7) reports, "Freddie Mac is ramping up issuance of securities backed by single loans that don't match the profile of its main K-Series securitization program. Freddie plans to sell as much as $8 billion of so-called guaranteed participation certificates in 2020, or twice the amount it sold last year. In 2018, its output of 'multi-PC' deals totaled just $1 billion." Freddie Mac Multifamily SVP Robert Koontz said, "It's all about pipeline management. This is just another tool for transferring risk."

Industry Reacts To FHFA's Proposed Servicer Liquidity Requirements For Nonbank Servicers.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (2/7, Muolo, Subscription Publication) says, "When the Federal Housing Finance Agency late last week proposed tightening capital and liquidity requirements for nonbank seller/servicers, the market initially shuddered. But now, after taking a closer look at the proposal, few in the industry believe it's much of a game changer." MIAC Capital Markets President Steve Harris said, "The mortgage community has expected these increased standards for some time. It's very topical given the counterparty reviews being conducted by Ginnie Mae." SitusAMC Managing Director Mark Garland said, "It's only a big deal if you're one of those smaller servicers that happens to be undercapitalized." According to IMF, "Garland and other industry advisors interviewed over the past two weeks say nonbanks are not overly concerned because they made so much money on originations last year. In other words, they have cash in the bank and meeting FHFA's proposed guidelines shouldn't be a stretch."

"Leading Voices In Real Estate" Listed Among Top Real Estate Podcasts.

Business Insider (2/7, Nicoll, 3.67M) lists 15 of the top podcasts for listeners working in real estate and the mortgage industry. According to Business Insider, "Leading Voices in Real Estate" is hosted by Matt Slepín, "the founder of real estate executive search firm Terra Search Partners. Slepín interviews a range of real estate executives. Recent guests include Fifth Wall cofounder and managing partner Brad Greiwé and Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman."

Green Drive in southeast Houston, to a private Dallas-based company. ... Berkadia's Dallas office arranged a 10-year, floating rate Freddie Mac loan on behalf of the buyer."
- KeyBank Secures $23M Freddie Mac Refi For Louisiana Student Housing Facility. Student Housing Business (2/7) reports, "KeyBank Real Estate Capital has secured a $23.2 million refinancing for University Crossing Apartments, a 552-bed student housing community located near Louisiana Tech University in Ruston. Hayley Suminski and Amanda Kutia of KeyBank secured the floating rate financing through Freddie Mac on behalf of the borrower, WFINvestments."
- Orion Buys Denver Apartments With $10M Freddie Mac Financing. Mostly behind a paywall, Commercial Real Estate Direct (2/7, Mandzy) reports, "Orion Real Estate Partners has paid $13.5 million, or $137,755/unit, for the 98-unit Continental Court Apartments at 3129 West Arkansas Ave. in Denver. ... The seller had purchased the property in 2016 for $10.1 million, and financed it with an $8.3 million loan from Banner Bank of Santa Monica, Calif. Orion's acquisition was financed with a $10.13 million Freddie Mac loan written by CBRE."
- Waterton Buys Nashville Apartments With Freddie Mac Financing. Commercial Observer \(NY\) (2/7) reports, "A Chicago-based investor is using three Freddie Mac loans from Wells Fargo totaling $105M to buy a multifamily development in Nashville, Tennessee."
- Berkadia Arranges Freddie Mac Financing For College Station Apartments. The Texas A&M Real Estate Center (2/7, 38K) reports, "Lantower Residential has sold Magnolia Grove, a 268-unit apartment community at 12601 S. Green Dr. ... Berkadia represented the seller and secured a Freddie Mac loan on behalf of the buyer, a Dallas-based private investor."
- Continuing Coverage: Insula Cos Gets $46M Freddie Mac Refi For Kissimmee Apartments. Multi-Housing News (2/7) reports, "Insula Cos. has obtained a $45.9 million Freddie Mac loan to refinance Ridge @ 4100, a 320-unit community in Kissimmee, Fla. Working on behalf of the borrower, Berkadia originated the 10-year, floating-rate loan with five years of interest-only payments."

NAR: Tax Cuts And Jobs Act "Disincentivized" Homeownership.

RISMedia (2/9, 2K) reports, "The Tax Cuts and Jobs Act disincentivized homeownership. the housing industry says, bearing broad consequences in the economy, for household wealth, and more." At a NAR forum on Thursday, "experts and legislators met on policy, addressing affordability, credit, gaps in the homeownership rate and supply, and the far-reaching implications of the legislation. In tandem, NAR released reports on accessory dwelling units, tenure and zoning, and, most notably, a research white paper, prepared by Rosen Consulting Group (RCG), to advocate for incentivizing ownership. Among its provisions, the TCJA cut down the mortgage interest deduction, imposed a limit on state and local tax deductions – which include property taxes – and doubled the standard deduction, deterring filers from itemizing, the RCG research shows."

Real Estate Groups Challenge NY Ban On Broker Fees For Renters.

The New York Times (2/7, Haag, 18.61M) reports the Real Estate Board of New York on Friday "said it would file a lawsuit on Monday accusing the New York Department of State...of abusing its authority and failing to follow the proper steps before adopting a new rule" after it announced "a new, far-reaching rule declaring that tenants no longer have to pay a broker's fee." The Times says the New York State Association of Realtors will also join the lawsuit.

California Voters To Take Second Look At Statewide Expansion Of Rent Control.

The AP (2/8) reports California voters "will consider expanding rent control statewide in November, the secretary of state's office said Monday, as they weigh in on the controversial issue for the second time in two years amid a worsening homelessness crisis." Secretary of State Alex Padilla "said the measure qualified for the fall ballot after election officials determined that a sufficient number of the nearly 1 million signatures submitted by supporters in December are valid." The initiative "would end current restrictions in state law, allowing cities and counties to implement and expand rent control policies that limit how much rents can increase each year." Voters in 2018 "rejected a similar initiative after a $100 million battle between advocates and the real estate industry."

Bowser Lays Out Goals For Addressing DC's Housing Restrictions.

The Washington Post (2/8, Stein, 14.2M) reports on an event regarding Washington, DC's housing crunch that was held in Shaw on Saturday and featured a conversation with DC Mayor Muriel Bowser. Said Bowser, "There has been displacement of black people out of this city." She added, "We have to confront the decisions that the government made to encourage that and deal with this head on. Some of them the local government made. And many more the federal government made – and for much longer." According to the Post, "The event was consistent with her administration's political messaging that affordable housing is a social justice effort and residents from all backgrounds need to be supportive." Bowser's "administration has blamed the uneven distribution of affordable housing across the city on decades of housing policies that she said would take a generation of 'focused and sustained effort' to address."

President Trump Touts Opportunity Zones At North Carolina Summit.

The Washington Post (2/7, Wagner, Thebault, 14.2M) reports President Trump at an event in North Carolina on Friday "ticked off a range of programs advanced by his administration, including opportunity zones and prison reform, that he said demonstrated its commitment to helping African Americans and others in disadvantaged communities. 'We're one American family. We rise together, we thrive together, and we win together,' Trump said."

The AP (2/7) reports that the President "was speaking to a friendly crowd at the Charlotte summit on economic opportunity for those in low-income areas." According to the AP, "The event took on the feel of one of his raucous political rallies, with audience members at one point leaping to their feet and breaking into chants of 'Four More Years, Four More Years.'" The AP says Trump "revived portions of this week's State of the Union address and made a few overt appeals for support from African Americans, a demographic that polls show he fares poorly with." The President delivered closing remarks at the North Carolina Opportunity Now Summit at Central Piedmont Community College. AP reports that "it's the first in a series of trips he will be taking to promote opportunity zones."

Wells Fargo Mortgage Borrowers' Suit Amended To Exclude Subclasses.

Law360 (2/7, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports a suit by Wells Fargo mortgage borrowers claiming wrongful denials on loans modifications was amended on Thursday to exclude subclasses. A judge previously ruled "that subclasses for a nationwide class bringing intentional emotional distress claims and various state consumer protection claims were too individualized to fulfill federal class action requirements."

Agency MBS Issuance Held Strong Over The Winter.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (2/7, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "New single-family MBS issuance from Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae often slows down over the winter as housing-market activity hits a seasonal lull. This winter has been different." According to IMF, "The three agencies issued $167.24 billion of single-family MBS in January, a 1.0% increase from December," and "purchase-loan volume was actually up 4.3% to its highest level since October, while the refinance sector saw a modest decline." January's new issuance "was more than double the total produced in the first month of 2019." IMF says, "While the two GSEs had modest month-to-month declines, Ginnie posted a 6.7% gain to $55.02 billion, which doesn't include MBS backed by FHA reverse mortgages. It was Ginnie's second-highest monthly volume ever, with October 2019 holding the record."

Fannie Mae's HPSI Rises For Third Consecutive Month.

According to M Report (2/7, Albanese), Fannie Mae's Home Purchase Sentiment Index (HPSI) "rose for the third consecutive month, growing 1.3 points in January to 93 – just in sight of the survey's high of 93.8." Four of the six HPIS components, "including the share of Americans who believe mortgage rates will go down over the next year, increased from December." The share of Americans "who believe mortgage rates will go down is now 55%." On a year-over-year basis, the HPSI "is up 8.3 points, and according to Fannie Mae, this is due in part to the consumers' 'increasingly positive view' that it is a good time to buy a home."

Mortgage News Daily (2/7, Swanson) reports Fannie Mae Chief Economist Doug Duncan said, "The HPSI posted another strong reading to open the new year, helped in large part by the upward trend in the share of consumers saying they expect mortgage rates to remain steady," said Doug Duncan, Senior Vice President and Chief Economist. "Low rates continue to be a key driver of consumer optimism about both current homebuying and home-selling conditions. Favorable views on job security and personal financial expectations reflect the strength of the labor market, which we believe will continue to bolster housing demand."

Fannie Mae Economist: Mortgage Rates Offer Historic Opportunity For Spring Season.

The Wall Street Journal (2/8, McCaffrey, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported that the US housing market is poised for a boost entering the critical spring selling season thanks to mortgage rates that are at a three-year low. With the average 30-year fixed-rate mortgage at 3.45 percent, Fannie Mae Chief Economist Doug Duncan called this a "historic opportunity."

Inventory Of Homes For Sale Tumbled 14 Percent In January, Realtor.com Finds.

HousingWire (2/7, Howley, 23K) said that the nation's inventory of homes for sale "tumbled 14% in January, falling to the lowest level since at least 2012, according to a Realtor.com report." The inventory of entry-level homes "saw the steepest drop in the series that goes back to 2012, the report said." The supply of properties "priced under $200,000 fell 19%, while homes priced $200,000 to $750,000 declined 12%." A supply shortage "is choking the housing market, as evidenced by December's 4.9% drop in pending home sales, the largest in almost a decade, according to the National Association of Realtors."

Yardi Matrix: Rent Prices Still Have Room To Rise.

HousingWire (2/7, Falcon, 23K) reports, "Despite a prolonged multifamily growth schedule, there is still room for rent prices to go up, according to Yardi Matrix. A healthy job market means that economic growth will remain moderate, so rent gains should remain healthy in most metros." HousingWire says, "Nationally, rent growth only dipped below the 2.5% long-term average early in the cycle. The report attributes the growing rent prices to a high occupancy rate and growing wages. More than 1.5 million units have been delivered over the last five years, with an expectation of 300,000 units to be delivered in 2020."

Housing Choices Are Limited For People With Developmental Disabilities, Survey Finds.

Disability Scoop (2/10, 1K) reports a national report from The Arc "finds housing choices are limited for people with developmental disabilities who often get little say about where they might live when they leave home." Based on a survey of 615 people, the report found that "about 75 percent of adults with disabilities live with an aging parent or caregiver and most are not utilizing public supports or services" and "more than half of families have no plan for the future."

Whalen: Calabria-Driven Changes Could Provide Some Respect For Non-Banks.

In a National Mortgage News (2/7, Whalen) opinion piece, Whalen Global Advisors LLC Chairman Christopher Whalen says that FHFA Director Mark Calabria "promised to change his agency," and so far he "is not disappointing." On top of "pushing to move Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac out of federal conservatorship, he is also making some changes to how all four government-sponsored enterprises – the others being Ginnie Mae and the Federal Home Loan Banks – operate and are regulated." The mixture so far "is a combination of positives and negatives, but the long-suffering independent mortgage banks – also known as nonbanks – may yet get some respect."

BankThink: Big Banks' Mortgage Lending Strategies Are "Flirting With Disaster."

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (2/7, Subscription Publication, 31K), Nations Lending Corp. CEO Jeremy Sopko argues that banks "have experienced record profits in recent years," but they are "ignoring all of the warning signs in their peripherals. Without action, they may find themselves caught – with all the tunnel vision money can buy – in a failing long game." According to Sopko, "Large banks withstood an average loss of $4,803 for every retail mortgage originated in 2018 (compared with a net profit of $376 per loan for independent mortgage bankers). Appetite for these kinds of losses is increasing. Wells Fargo, JPMorgan Chase and Bank of America have all shown an affinity for originating loans with negative margins, by offering certain mortgages with no origination fees, for example."

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (1/27, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 1.575 percent.

Dollar Holds Firm.

Reuters (2/10, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar held gains on Monday after job market data provided the latest sign of US economic strength, while worries about the coronavirus epidemic kept other trade-exposed currencies subdued." The dollar reached "milestone highs against other majors and safe-haven currencies such as the yen trading firmly." Against the euro, the greenback "was just below a four-month high of $1.0940 hit on Friday at $1.0948."

Gold Steadies.

Reuters (2/10, Sistla) reports, "Gold prices held steady on Monday as rising concerns over the severity of the coronavirus outbreak offset a slight reprieve for equities after China eased some work and travel restrictions." Spot gold "was little changed at $1,570.50 per ounce by 0746 GMT, while US gold futures were up 0.1% to $1,575.60."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (2/10, Tan) reports, "Oil prices slipped lower on Monday as traders assessed China's oil demand following the coronavirus outbreak and waited to see if major producers will cut output further to balance markets." Brent crude "slipped to $53.63 a barrel in early Asian trade, the lowest since Jan. 2, 2019, before recovering to $54.32 by 0804 GMT, down 15 cents." West Texas Intermediate "fell 17 cents to $50.15 a barrel after striking a low of $49.56."

North Miami Beach Police Department Hit By Ransomware Attack.

The Miami Herald (2/8, Smalls, 1.09M) reports, "The North Miami Beach Police Department is the latest agency to suffer a cyberattack." According to the Herald, "City officials confirmed the breach Friday evening, saying they discovered the ransomware on Tuesday. The affected computer systems were immediately shut down, but public safety services haven't been interrupted, the city said. 'Our Police Department continues to conduct all operations to keep our residents and streets safe,' a statement from the city says, 'and citizen calls for assistance will continue to be responded to promptly.'" The Herald adds, "An ongoing investigation has yet to conclude whether other departments or services were hacked. Early indications suggest they might have escaped without incident, city officials said. Federal investigators are assisting with these efforts. According to the FBI, the number of ransomware attacks has increased 300 percent since 2015."

FBI Reportedly Says Wisconsin Ransomware Attack Came From Russia.

The Racine (WI) Journal Times (2/9, Rogan, 114K) reports, "Despite some city staff members and social media posts theorizing that 'the Russians' were behind the ransomware virus that crippled the City of Racine's internal online networks since at least Jan. 31, it still isn't known who (or what) exactly was behind the attack, city spokesman Shannon Powell told The Journal Times," but "another cyberattack that hit the City of Oshkosh at about the same time appears to have come from a group of Russian hackers, Oshkosh City Manager Mark Rohloff said, citing what he was told by the FBI. 'The FBI folks said this (cyberattack) was (staged by) a Russian group that was known to them,' Rohloff told The Journal Times." Powell and Rohloff "both said there is no evidence that the attacks on Oshkosh and Racine were coordinated," but "Racine's Management Information Systems Department told Powell that the source of the attack does not appear to be local and likely originated outside of Wisconsin."

Pence Declines To Endorse Barr Suggestion For Countering Huawei.

Reuters (2/7, Shepardson) reports Vice President Pence on Friday "declined to endorse an unusual suggestion from" Attorney General Barr that the US "consider taking control of two major foreign rivals of China-based Huawei Technologies Co Ltd." Reuters says that on Thursday, Barr "said...the United States and its allies should consider taking a 'controlling stake' in Finland's Nokia and Sweden's Ericsson to counter Huawei's dominance in next-generation 5G wireless technology." On CNBC, Pence said, "Great respect to Attorney General Barr, but we believe the best way forward is what [FCC Chairman] Ajit Pai announced just over the last several days." Reuters says Pence was "referring to" Pai's "efforts to free up more spectrum for 5G wireless use." Pence said, "That's the plan the president has endorsed and will be carrying forward."

Meanwhile, Reuters (2/7) reports NEC Director Kudlow was asked about the UK government's decision to include Huawei in its 5G network and the implication on the upcoming post-Brexit US-UK trade talks. Kudlow said, "We will be working with our British cousins on 5G. We think we can work with them and show them options. We'd love to do a free trade agreement."

Navarro Raises Alarm Over Chinese Counterfeits. On Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (2/7), White House Trade Adviser Peter Navarro discusses the volume of counterfeit goods coming from China and their potential dangers.

US Blocks Google, Facebook From Using Internet Link To Hong Kong. The Wall Street Journal (2/7, FitzGerald, O'Keeffe, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a DOJ national security panel blocked the efforts of Google and Facebook to use an 8,000 mile Pacific Light Cable Network that would've made Hong Kong a key global data hub. According to the Journal, the decision is reflective of the US' growing concern over China's ambitions in the technology sector.

China Calls On France To Not Discriminate Against Huawei.

Reuters (2/9) reports the Chinese embassy in Paris on Sunday "urged the French government not to discriminate against Huawei as it selects suppliers for its 5G mobile network, saying it feared the company would face more constraints than rivals." France is in the "early stages of rolling out its next-generation wireless technology, and the government's stance over Huawei's possible role still lacks clarity, according to some telecoms industry trade bodies." Some French media outlets "have reported in recent months that the company could face restrictions in several cities." The Chinese embassy said in a statement on its website that it was 'shocked and worried' by such reports, adding that French President Emmanuel Macron and other officials had given repeated assurances that all companies would be treated fairly."

Swedish Digital Minister Says US Interest In Ericsson Makes Sense. Reuters (2/7, Hellstrom, Johnson) reported, "Sweden's digital minister stressed Ericsson's importance for jobs and technology in Europe on Friday after a US official suggested the US buy stakes in the telecoms gear maker or Finland's Nokia to counter Huawei's dominance in 5G." Reuters reports Swedish Minister for Energy and Digital Development Anders Ygeman "said potential U.S. interest in Ericsson made sense, given that no U.S. company offers a full suite of 5G products, but he stressed the company's importance for Swedish business." Cevian Capital managing partner said in an email to Reuters, "A U.S. interest in Ericsson is clearly positive for Sweden, the company and the shareholders. ... A potential deal would have to be based on a completely different valuation level than today's ridiculous share price for Ericsson. The board and management need to drive and handle this question with the highest priority."

Opinion: Huawei Must Be Stripped From UK Networks. In an op-ed in the Telegraph \(UK\) (2/9, 956K), former leader of the Conservative Party Iain Duncan Smith writes, "The Foreign Secretary admitted that the UK Government accepted that China was a threat. Yet at the same time, the Government decided to give Huawei significant involvement in our next generation communications structure – 5G. This makes no logical sense. It is inconceivable that such a decision should be made in the face of all the evidence of the threat that China poses to us and our allies." He contends, "The problem is that nearly two decades ago, the Communist government of China made it a national priority to capture the global market in telecommunications. On the current trajectory, in 10 or 20-years' time, that domination will be complete." He concludes, "I believe that the best course for the Government, given that it has inherited the existing involvement of Huawei, is to plan to clear the firm out of our systems as quickly as possible."

German Legislator: EU Will Not Cooperate With US On 5G If It Faces A Trade War. Reuters (2/8, Shalal) reported, "Norbert Roettgen, a member of German Chancellor Angela Merkel's Christian Democrats, said he told U.S. officials during a visit to Washington that he saw opportunities for greater transatlantic cooperation on 5G that would benefit both sides." Roettgen said that "it must be clear that cannot happen if there is simultaneously the threat of trade war on the table." President Trump "has threatened to slap 25% tariffs on European car imports, a move Brussels says it would counter with tariffs of its own." The two parties have also been in disagreement "over digital services taxes, aircraft subsidies, and Huawei."

How The JPL Works To Secure Its Missions From Nation-state Adversaries.

TechCrunch (2/9, 605K) talked with a key "NASA cyber security researcher, about that work, which is a fascinating mix of 'totally representative of infosec today' and 'unique to the JPL's highly unusual concerns.'" The key message is "firmly in the former category, though: information security has to be proactive, not reactive." Each mission at JPL is "like its own semi-independent startup, but their technical constraints tend to be very unlike those of Valley startups." For instance, mission software "is usually homegrown/innovative, because their software requirements are so much more stringent: for instance, you absolutely cannot have software going rogue and consuming 100% of CPU on a space probe."

New Cybersecurity System Protects Networks With LIDAR.

C4ISR & Networks (2/7, Atherton) reported that "when it comes to identifying early cyber threats, it's important to have laser-like precision." Mapping out "a threat environment can be done with a range of approaches, and a team of researchers from Purdue University created a new system for just such applications." They are calling that "approach LIDAR, or 'lifelong, intelligent, diverse, agile and robust.'" Purdue's LIDAR is "a kind of architecture for network security." It can adapt to "threats, thanks in part to its ability to learn three ways." These include "supervised machine learning, where an algorithm looks at unusual features in the system and compares them to known attacks."

UK's National Cyber Security Centre Launches CyberFirst Girls Competition.

BBC News Online \(UK\) (2/8, 1.02M) reported hundreds of girls "across the UK are trying their hand at being spies." On 8 February, girls "across the UK will be using their laptops to solve a series of online puzzles." It's part of "the National Cyber Security Centre's CyberFirst Girls Competition." The competition is for "young female codebreakers." The aim is to "try and help discover the spies of the future and get more girls interested in cyber security." The female cyber spies "will be working in teams of up to four to take on a series of codebreaking challenges."

Prominent Disinformation Investigator Ben Nimmo Profiled.

The New York Times (2/9, Satariano, 18.61M) provides a profile on Ben Nimmo, a pioneer in disinformation investigations. The Times writes, "For the last five years, Mr. Nimmo, a founder of the Atlantic Council's Digital Forensic Research Lab, has been a leader of a small but growing community of online sleuths. These researchers serve as an informal internet police force that combats malicious attempts to use false information to sway public opinion, sow political discord and foment distrust in traditional institutions like the news media and the government." His efforts came to the "fore after the 2016 American presidential election, when intelligence agencies concluded that Russia had used Facebook and other internet platforms to influence voters." His research has since "caused Facebook and other companies to ban thousands of disinformation-related accounts; he has also been tapped as an expert by governments studying foreign interference."

US Blacklists Venezuelan Airline Conviasa: Treasury Website.

Reuters (2/7, Heavey) reported that according to a notice "posted on the Department of Treasury's website," the US applied new sanctions to Venezuela Friday, "targeting its state-run airline carrier Conviasa."

Reuters (2/7, Campos) also reported that US Special Envoy For Venezuela Elliott Abrams "said on Friday that the U.S. government talks frequently with Spain and oil major Repsol, which operates in the South American country." Reuters says Abrams' remarks "come after a U.S. official warned oil companies including Repsol who do business with Venezuelan state oil company PDVSA, which Washington sanctioned last year, to 'tread carefully.'" Speaking in Spanish, Abrams stated, "If the conditions, the sanctions, change, we will talk to Repsol."

In Caracas, Russian Foreign Minister Blasts US Sanctions Targeting Maduro Regime. Reuters (2/7, Ellsworth, Buitrago) reported that Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov in Caracas, Venezuela on Friday "slammed U.S. sanctions against Venezuela...providing a public show of support for President Nicolas Maduro as Washington mulls ramping up pressure on" his regime. Reuters says Lavrov "arrived in Caracas on Thursday, only hours after the State Department suggested its Venezuela sanctions program could begin targeting Russia, whose oil companies have helped Maduro by buying much of the OPEC nation's crude. ... 'We consider sanctions to be unacceptable,' said Lavrov during a televised meeting with his Venezuelan counterpart, Jorge Arreaza, and other Venezuelan officials." Lavrov is quoted as saying, "It is outrageous that unilateral actions by the United States affect social and humanitarian projects."

GOP Senators Demand Twitter Block Sanctioned Iran Officials.

CNBC (2/7, Feiner, 3.62M) reported Sens. Ted Cruz, (R-TX), Tom Cotton, (R-AR), Marsha Blackburn, (R-TN), and Marco Rubio, (R-FL) "wrote to Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey on Thursday that the company would be subject to U.S. sanctions law if it did not end its service for sanctioned Iranian leaders, including Supreme Leader of the Islamic Republic Ayatollah Ali Khamenei and Iranian Foreign Minister Javad Zarif." The Senators said "that an exception for internet-based communications services created by the Obama administration in 2014 would not apply when the person receiving the service has been designated to a special list kept by the Treasury Department, as is the case for Khamenei and Zarif." Fox News (2/7, Casiano, 27.59M), The Hill (2/7, Rodrigo, 2.98M), and Axios (2/7, McGill, 521K) also reported.

Study Finds North Korea Using Internet To Evade Sanctions.

The New York Times (2/9, Sanger, 18.61M) reports, "North Korea has vastly expanded its use of the internet in ways that enable its leader, Kim Jong-un, to evade a 'maximum pressure' American sanctions campaign and turn to new forms of cybercrime to prop up his government," according to a study by Recorded Future. The study indicates that since 2017, "the North's use of the internet has surged about 300 percent," with "nearly half of that traffic now flow[ing] through a new connection in Russia."

Federal Reserve

Central Bank Watchers Turn To AI For Help Analyzing Officials' Statements.

The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Hookway, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a growing trend among investors is to use artificial intelligence to analyze statements from Fed officials and predict what actions they will take. The Journal also touches on other ways central bank watchers evaluate the statements from policymakers around the world.

Fed Cautions Coronavirus To Pose Economic Risk.

The Wall Street Journal (2/7, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported the Federal Reserve on Friday said the coronavirus could weigh on its outlook for the US economy. Reuters (2/7), Bloomberg (2/7, Condon, Torres, 4.73M), and CBS News (2/7, Sherter, 3.68M), among others, also reported.

Fed Report Signals Rates Likely To Stay Unchanged For Now.

The AP (2/7, Crutsinger) reports the Fed released its semi-annual monetary policy report on Friday, in which it "did not signal any imminent changes in its benchmark interest rate, which it cut three times last year to the current historically low range of 1.5 to 1.75 percent." Fed Chair Powell will testify before Congress about the report on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Trump Fed Pick Faces Challenge Getting Confirmed In GOP-Controlled Senate.

In the lead story of its daily "Finance 202" rundown, the Washington Post (2/7, Newmyer, 14.2M) reported President Trump "has gone an ignominious zero-for-four on winning Senate confirmation of his most recent picks for the Federal Reserve Board. His latest controversial pick, Judy Shelton, will face a trial by fire Thursday when she takes questions from Republicans on the Senate Banking Committee." Shelton, the Post said, "has a history of expressing policy views outside the mainstream. While she has met with some with senators, the pressure will be on to sand off the rough edges when she appears before the committee."

NY Fed Accepts $42.75B In Repo Operation.

Reuters (2/7) reported the New York Fed "said it accepted $42.75 billion in overnight bids from primary dealers in a repurchase agreement (repo) operation, a move intended to keep the federal funds rate within its target range." The Wall Street Journal (2/7, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reported.

Financial Regulatory Agencies

CFPB Order Against Citizens Bank Stumps Industry Watchers.

American Banker (2/9, Berry, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that "just as banks were starting to see clarity" about the CFPB's enforcement strategy, the bureau's recent order "order against Citizens Bank is challenging assumptions about the [its] approach." Industry observers and GOP lawmakers "are still scratching their heads about the recent CFPB lawsuit filed against Citizens Bank...over how the $165.7 billion-asset institution handled credit card fraud debates," questioning why the bureau sued the bank "five years after Citizens says it self-reported the issues in 2015." The case is also drawing attention "because the tough stance by the Trump-appointed CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger is the opposite of what the industry expected." Moreover, it is "rare, in general, for the CFPB to penalize a bank (versus a nonbank) and for the bank to challenge the agency's findings in court."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Releases 2020 Stress Test Scenarios.

DS News (2/7, Welborn) reported the OCC "released economic and financial market scenarios for use in the upcoming stress tests for covered institutions." In a statement, the OCC said, "The results of the company-run stress tests provide the OCC with forward-looking information used in bank supervision and will assist the agency in assessing the company's risk profile and capital adequacy." The scenarios for 2020 "can be found on the OCC's stress test website."

Lawmakers Consider Steps To Eliminate Fake Comments On Proposed Rules.

S&P Global Market Intelligence (2/7, Hood) reported, "Congress may take steps to deter interest groups attempting to influence policymakers through the submission of phony comment letters." As the OCC and the FDIC work to finalize revisions to the Community Reinvestment Act, "lawmakers on the Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee expressed concern during a Feb. 6 hearing over which voices policymakers are listening to." Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting, who is leading the effort to modernize the CRA, "has touted that he has read all 1,500 comments submitted to the agency regarding the proposal." In a recent letter, House Financial Services Committee Chair Maxine Waters (D-CA) asked Otting "to detail submission procedures for reviewing comments and detecting false identities." She also asked if any fake comments were submitted to the OCC during a 2018 advanced notice for proposed rulemaking period, citing the recent history of an industry group that submitted phony comments to the SEC.

Twenty-Four AGs Say New Lending Rules Could Support Predatory Lenders.

The Triangle (NC) Business Journal (2/7, Ohnesorge, Subscription Publication, 839K) reported behind a paywall that 24 attorneys general are pushing back against the OCC and the FDIC's proposals "meant to eliminate uncertainty" resulting from a 2015 Second Circuit ruling holding "that a nonbank that purchased charged-off loans from a national bank could not charge the same rate of interest on the loan that federal regulations allowed the national bank to charge." The group of AGs in a letter to FDIC Chair Jelena McWilliams outlined their objections, arguing that the proposed rules would effectively overturn that ruling.

LATimes: OCC, FDIC Proposals Would "Bless Rent-A-Bank Schemes." In an editorial, the Los Angeles Times (2/7, 4.64M) criticized the OCC and the FDIC's proposals that would allow lenders to issue loans with interest rates above state interest caps, calling the proposed rules "outrageous." The Times said the proposed rules would reopen the door to "rent-a-bank" schemes, adding that "If the Administration doesn't abandon its effort to promote predatory loans, the courts should stop it."

Banks, Fintechs Battle Over Customers' Data.

Politico (2/7, Guida, 4.29M) reported that US banks "are locked in a bitter fight" with fintech startups "over the control of their customers' financial data – and the consumers whose personal information is at stake are mostly spectators." Major lenders including JPMorgan Chase and PNC "are threatening to limit the access of middlemen that are hired by financial apps like Venmo and Betterment to grab customers' account information from the banks' websites." Bank regulators such as the OCC "don't have the same ability to oversee" the middlemen, known as "screen-scrapers," as they would over firms "specifically contracted by banks to perform an outside function because the banks usually don't have a formal relationship" with the screen-scrapers.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"Apps Are Selling Your Location Data. The U.S. Government Is Buying." The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) in an editorial says that the US government is buying location data "that charts the movements of millions of citizens' cellphones from a company called Venntel." The Post says, "Congress has failed to pass a comprehensive privacy statute that shields people from having their every move logged in a database," and "now, this lack of privacy from corporate actors has become an excuse for government to bypass the right to privacy from the state that the Constitution is supposed to enshrine."

"Trump's Trade Policy Is Injurious And Insults The Truth." The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) in an editorial criticizes the Administration's trade policy, while saying, "superficially, the news on trade and the U.S. economy is encouraging" with "the smallest trade deficit in six years," and "prospects...for a relatively less volatile trade year in 2020." Yet, the Post warns that "both the China deal and USMCA" are agreements in which trade is decided by "politicians – not determined by economic criteria." The Post also says that tariffs imposed on some finished aluminum and steel goods "will be heavily felt by U.S. users of those goods, as well as by the countries that sell them to us – principally Taiwan, Japan and the European Union." The Post concludes, "These are U.S. friends, not threats to our security," and accuses the Administration of "compound[ing] injuries to economic efficiency with insults to the truth."

"New Data On D.C.'s Opioid Deaths Is Disheartening." The Washington Post (2/9, 14.2M) in an editorial says that during a peak in opioid overdoses in the District of Columbia, "it was clear that one of the factors was the city government's sluggish – some said negligent – approach to the problem," but, adds the Post, even though Mayor Muriel E. Bowser has had "a far more robust response ... 2019 saw another dramatic and dispiriting spike in overdose deaths." That's after "the number of deaths had dropped substantially in 2018." The Post hopes that new efforts will be more effective.

Wall Street Journal.

"Market Phobia Comes To Cyberspace." The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial argues that opponents attempted to create hysteria in response to the net neutrality policy favored by Federal Communications Commission Chairman Ajit Pai, but that policy was approved and has not led to the threatened problems. The Journal says some of the same people are now trying to frighten people by the prospect of the sale of the .org web-registry to Ethos Capital. The Journal warns opponents are simply seeking their own interests and worries that they will intimidate regulators that must approve the sale.

"The Democrats On Soleimani." A Wall Street Journal (2/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes former Vice President Joe Biden, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and former South Bend, Indiana Mayor Pete Buttigieg for their answers during last Friday's Democratic presidential debate to a question about President Trump's decision to order a strike on Iranian Gen. Qassem Soleimani. All three were critical of the decision, and the Journal argues that while Sanders' reply was not surprising, Biden and Buttigieg missed an opportunity to show that they, like Trump, would act to stop anyone who would kill Americans.

"Big Labor's Payoff Day." The Wall Street Journal (2/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial says that the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives last week approved the PRO Act, in what it calls the most pro-union legislation since 1935's Wagner Act. The Journal says the bill would make it easier for unions to organize employees and end employees' right to a secret ballot and would overturn right-to-work laws. According to the Journal, the House approved the bill after AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka said the union would not help any Democrat who did not vote for the bill.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Colin Jost (Saturday Night Live): "President Trump then spoke at the National Prayer Breakfast and held up a headline about his acquittal. I assume to prove that prayers don't work. Then he went and attacked Mitt Romney, a devout Mormon who voted to convict him. Trump said I don't like people who use their faith as a justification for doing what they know is wrong. At which point, even the leaders of the National Prayer Breakfast were like, 'Jesus Christ, dude.'"

Colin Jost (Saturday Night Live): "During the State of the Union Address, Trump gave a medal to Rush Limbaugh and celebrated the creation of the Space force, a moment that was predicted by a 'Mad Lib' I did in 1992."

Colin Jost (Saturday Night Live): "Trump also railed against public schools, calling them failing government schools. Okay, but you went to private school and you don't even know where Kansas City is. After the Chiefs won the Super Bowl, Trump mistakenly tweeted congratulations to the state of Kansas, despite the fact that the Chiefs are from Kansas City, Missouri. Incidentally, Kansas also has the only Manhattan where Trump is still welcome."

Colin Jost (Saturday Night Live): "The results for the Iowa caucuses were delayed after officials found inconsistencies due to a problem with a new voting app. So I guess it's no surprise that Iowa's voters chose the candidate who looks like the grandson that fixes your computer. This problematic voting app was developed by a company called Shadow Inc. Remember in the 2016 primaries where the Democrats' main problem was transparency? And then this time, they hired a company called Shadow Inc. That's like losing half your money in wire fraud and then putting everything you have left into something called 'Nigerian Prince National Bank.'"

Michael Che (Saturday Night Live): “On Friday, Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman who testified in President Trump’s impeachment trial was escorted from the White House and fired. Now, you might recall that Vindman received a Purple Heart due to a wound in combat, while Trump has a purple heart because his blood type is hamburger grease.”

US, China Both Say Progress Made On "Phase-One" Trade Deal.

Politico (10/26, Tang, 4.29M), in a story published "as part of a content partnership with the South China Morning Post," reported that "China and the United States are making good progress on the 'phase-one' trade deal they hope to sign next month, with some sections now close to being finalized, the two sides said in separate statements." Politico adds "the announcements came after China's Vice-Premier Liu He spoke to Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin over the phone on Friday night, as they continued to look for ways to bring an end to a 15-month trade war that has damaged economies around the world." The New York Post (10/26, Levine, 4.57M) said that "while details are still emerging, it appears that agricultural issues have thus far dominated discussions."

USTR Says US, China “Close To Finalizing” Parts Of Agreement. Reuters (10/25, Lawder, Shalal) reported the US Trade Representative’s Office said Friday that US and Chinese trade officials “are ‘close to finalizing’ some parts of an agreement after high-level telephone discussions,” adding that “deputy-level talks would proceed ‘continuously.’” The USTR “provided no details on the areas of progress.” Bloomberg (10/25, Donnan, 4.73M) reported USTR Lighthizer, Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, and Chinese Vice Premier Liu He spoke Friday morning. The Financial Times (10/25, Politi, Sevastopulo, Hampshire, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), CNBC (10/25, Pramuk, 3.62M), Business Insider (10/25, Reinicke, 3.67M), Fox Business (10/26, Henney, 1.73M), and The Hill (10/26, Axelrod, 2.98M) also reported on this story.

However, under the headline “Businesses Fear U.S., China Won’t Reach Deal On Core Issues,” the Wall Street Journal (10/25, Mauldin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported corporate leaders are worried the Administration will not address economic issues of relevance to industry, including intellectual property issues.

Sources Say Navarro Fighting “Phase One” Of Agreement. CNBC (10/25, Tausche, 3.62M) reported that as the negotiations continue, “trade hawk Peter Navarro has been fighting the deal behind the scenes, according to three people close to the talks.” CNBC adds Navarro “has taken particular issue with the shelving of certain protections for intellectual property and technology that appeared in earlier versions of the deal, according to these three sources, who are in regular contact with Trump and the administration. Navarro has urged Trump to force China to recommit to previous promises on IP protection or walk away from a deal.” However, Convicted Financier, “Longtime” Mnuchin Friend Could Gain From Changes He’s Urging Trump Administration To Make.

The New York Times (10/26, Lipton, Drucker, 18.61M) reported that Michael Milken, the former “swashbuckling financier” who went to prison in the 1990s on insider-trading charges and has since worked to “rehabilitate his reputation through an influential nonprofit think tank,” the Milken Institute, “is in a position to personally gain from some of the changes that his institute has urged the Trump administration to enact.” The Milken Institute “is a leading proponent of a new federal tax break that was intended to coax wealthy investors to plow money into distressed communities known as ‘opportunity zones.’” The institute’s leaders “have helped push senior officials in the Trump administration to make the tax incentive more generous, even though it is under fire for being slanted toward the wealthy.” And, in one case, “the Treasury secretary, Steven Mnuchin, directly intervened in a way that benefited Mr. Milken, his longtime friend.” Further down, however, the Times added, “Treasury officials said the change was part of an effort to iron out inconsistencies in different Treasury rules.”

In an analysis, The Week (10/26, O’Donnell, 1.94M) said the Treasury Department, “reportedly at the personal instruction of Mnuchin, made an area of land in Nevada owned by” Milken “eligible for a federal tax break that it did not previously qualify for after alleged pressure from Milken’s business partner and other landowners.” The IRS “expressed its doubts about the decision, arguing in an internal memo obtained by the Times that ‘failure to apply the designation standards equally across the board will call into question the legitimacy of the process by which the designations were made.’” The IRS memo “also stated that the appearance of ‘arbitrary’ Treasury standards like this one could open the ‘door for accusations that the determination process was influenced by political considerations or bias.’”

Deficit Hit $984B In FY2019, Expected To Top $1T In 2020.

Reuters (10/25, Dunsmuir) reported the federal government ended Fiscal Year 2019 “with the largest budget deficit in seven years as gains in tax receipts were offset by higher spending and growing debt service payments.” Bloomberg (10/25, Dmitrieva, 4.73M) reported the budget deficit widened to $984 billion from $779 billion in FY2018. The New York Times (10/25, Rappeport, 18.61M) reported the Treasury Department also said the deficit “will top $1 trillion in 2020...as a slowing global economy and festering trade tensions weigh on economic growth” in the US.

The Washington Post (10/25, Long, Stein, 14.2M) reported, “The country’s worsening fiscal picture runs in sharp contrast to President Trump’s campaign promise to eliminate the federal debt within eight years. Since taking office, Trump has endorsed big spending increases and steered most Republicans to abandon the deficit obsession they held” during the Obama Administration. The Hill (10/25, Elis, 2.98M) said the deficit “was $587 billion in the last full fiscal year before Trump took office.”

The AP (10/25, Crutsinger), the Wall Street Journal (10/25, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Bloomberg (10/25, Dmitrieva, 4.73M), CNN (10/25, Borak, 83.16M), CNBC (10/25, Franck, 3.62M), Fox Business (10/25, Leggate, 1.73M), Newsweek (10/26, Fearnow, 1.53M), and the Financial Times (10/25, Badkar, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also reported on this story.

Neal Proposes Adding Pension Relief Legislation To New NAFTA Deal.

The Washington Post (10/25, Werner, Lynch, Sieff, 14.2M) reported that House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard E. Neal (D-MA) “has approached Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin about adding legislation that would rescue certain union pensions to the pending North American trade pact, a sign of intense final-stage dealmaking on the trade agreement.” Neal’s proposed addition to the bill “could act as a powerful sweetener for organized labor and wavering Democrats who are skeptical about agreeing to a rewrite of the North American Free Trade Agreement pushed by President Trump.” Neal “said Mnuchin had a ‘courteous’ response to his suggestion about tacking the Butch Lewis Act onto the trade deal. The Butch Lewis bill, a longtime priority for Neal and other Democrats, would shore up failing pensions for more than a million American workers through the sale of Treasury bonds.”

Senators Hunt For GOP Support Of Bipartisan Bill Cracking Down On Anonymous Shell Companies.

CQ Roll Call (10/25, Saksa, 154K) reports, "After only 25 House Republicans voted for passage of a bill that would curb the use of anonymous shell companies, the bipartisan drafters of a Senate version are negotiating tweaks designed to win more GOP support." Both the Senate and House versions of the bill "would require corporate entities to report the identities of beneficial owners to the Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN), making it harder for criminals or terrorists to hide assets and launder money through a series of limited liability companies or corporations." The legislation "would also increase FinCEN staffing, encourage more coordination between FinCEN and Justice Department investigators, require the attorney general and Treasury secretary to consider raising the monetary threshold for banks filing suspicious activity reports, and update the definition of "coins and currency" to include cryptocurrencies."

Trump Says ISIS Leader Baghdadi Died "Whimpering And Crying" In US Raid.

President Trump's announcement Sunday morning that ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi was killed in a raid by US special forces in northwest Syria is being hailed as delivering a severe blow to the terror group. Reuters (10/27, Holland, Stewart), for example, refers to "a severe blow to Islamic State," the Washington Post (10/27, Ryan, Lamothe, 14.2M) refers to it as "an important breakthrough," and the AP (10/27, Miller) to "a milestone in the fight against [ISIS]," and "a significant foreign policy success for Trump." The Los Angeles Times (10/27, Stokols, Bulos, 4.64M) says Baghdadi's death "brought to a close a manhunt that lasted nearly a decade and dealt a significant blow to a jihadi group known for its extremism and brutality." In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (10/27, lead story, 4:50, Llamas, 3.6M) called the raid "a strategic and political victory for the President," and Politico (10/27, Morgan, Toosi, 4.29M) writes that the raid was "immediately hailed by both parties as a major victory in the fight against Islamic terrorism."

A New York Times (10/27, Karni, Haberman, 18.61M) analysis says that "from the moment President Trump learned that Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi...had been killed in a commando raid in Syria, he handled the news in an unusual way." Saturday night, he tweeted, "Something very big just happened!" The Times says "an or so hour later, after convincing Mr. Trump that waiting until the morning to elaborate on his cryptic Twitter message was a better way to steer the news that would dominate the Sunday talk shows, the president's aides announced a rare, nationally televised presidential address in the morning." To the Times, the "Diplomatic Reception Room setting gave Mr. Trump the kind of made-for-television presidential moment he has long craved — a parallel to President Barack Obama's late-night announcement in 2011 that Osama bin Laden had been killed — at a time when he has been eager for a story line outside of impeachment."

David Nakamura writes in the Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) that "for both Obama and Trump, the moments represented a measure of vindication — evidence that each had demonstrated the resolve as commander in chief to finish the job in the face of considerable risk and criticism from the opposing political party. But if Obama's nine-minute speech...was notable for his measured tones and appeals to the enduring strength of America's values, Trump's 50-minute performance in the Diplomatic Reception Room was marked by the overt showmanship, blunt language and airing of personal gripes."

Breitbart (10/27, Wong, 673K) likewise says Trump's "nearly 50-minute live press conference" was "a contrast to the statement from former President Obama when he announced the operation that killed al Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden, which was about nine minutes and contained few details about the operation." Martha Raddatz said in its lead story on ABC World News Tonight (10/27, lead story, 4:50, Llamas, 3.6M), "At one point, the President compar[ed] it to the killing of Osama bin Laden." The New York Post (10/27, Moore, 4.57M) quotes Trump as saying, "This is the worst ever. Osama bin Laden was very big but Osama bin Laden became big with the World Trade Center. This is a man who built a whole — as he would like to call it — a country, a caliphate. And was trying to do it again."

The Washington Times (10/27, Boyer, 492K) reports that in a televised address to the nation from the White House, Trump said, "Last night the United States' brought the world's Number One terrorist leader to justice." The Times says he also "provided graphic details of the raid," saying, "I got to watch much of it. He died after running into a dead-end tunnel, whimpering and crying and screaming all the way." Trump also "confirmed that al-Baghdadi killed himself, and three of his children, by detonating a suicide vest as he was cornered by US troops." Townhall (10/27, Baumann, 177K) reports Trump said Baghdadi's two wives, who "were also wearing suicide vests but they bombs did not detonate," were also killed in the raid.

The Washington Examiner (10/27, Halaschak, 448K) reports the President said "at least eight military helicopters carried US commandos to the compound where the roughly two-hour operation took place," and that an "on-site test" was conducted to confirm Baghdadi's identity. USA Today (10/27, Jackson, Subramanian, Collins, 10.31M) reports that no US personnel were killed in the raid. In what she called "a dramatic press conference," Kate Snow reported on NBC Nightly News (10/27, lead story, 3:35, Snow, 3.05M) that "Trump went into remarkable detail on just how the operation went down." Later on NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 3, 1:16, Snow, 3.05M), correspondent Courtney Kube warned, "It's possible that President Trump's bellicose language about the manner in which [Baghdadi] died could actually inspire some ISIS fighters to retaliate."

On the CBS Weekend News (10/27, lead story, 2:30, Quijano, 1.67M), David Martin reported, "A team of about 70 American commandos, led by the Army's Delta Force, assaulted the compound in northeastern Syria in a violent raid that began Saturday evening." According to Martin, "The US had been zeroing in on Baghdadi's whereabouts following information provided by one of his wives, who had been captured." But on NBC Nightly News (10/27, lead story, 3:35, Snow, 3.05M), Richard Engel said, "Kurdish officials tell us that they had a mole very close to Baghdadi. Someone who would visit him, was trusted by him, and was passing information to the Kurds right until the very end, and that they were passing that information along to the United States." ABC World News Tonight (10/27, lead story, 4:50, Llamas, 3.6M), meanwhile, said "a US official tells ABC that the break came after the arrest and interrogation of one of Baghdadi's wives and a courier. The information they provided was one of the keys in a long trail that eventually led them to Baghdadi's hideout after a lot of hard work by the CIA and Kurdish partners."

The New York Post (10/27, Moore, 4.57M) quotes Trump as saying, "The United States has been searching for Baghdadi for many years. Capturing or killing Baghdadi has been the top national security priority of my administration," and US special forces "accomplished their mission in grand style." Along similar lines, The Federalist (10/27, Clark, 126K) reports the "Administration considers this mission a massive success as Baghdadi's execution was one of the top national security priorities of [Trump's] administration."

The Washington Free Beacon (10/27, Press, 78K) reports Trump also "thanked Russia, Turkey, Syria, Iraq, and Syrian Kurds for their help in the mission." According to the Daily Caller (10/27, Kruta, 716K), the President "also stated that the mission had netted valuable intelligence about the origins of ISIS and had resulted in the deaths of a number of ISIS fighters — a number he promised would be released later."

To The Hill (10/27, Chalfant, 2.98M), "the announcement will serve as a boost for Trump, who has faced scrutiny in recent weeks for his decision to withdraw US troops from northern Syria." The New York Times (10/27, Baker, Schmitt, Cooper, 18.61M) likewise says "raid could help Mr. Trump with at least some hawkish Republican lawmakers who had broken with him over his Syria decision." Trump invited Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "usually a strong ally who had been the most outspoken critic of his Syria decision, to join him for the speech on Sunday morning and then sent Mr. Graham to brief reporters from the lectern in the White House briefing room, an unusual spectacle for a lawmaker." In fact, Politico (10/27, Levine, 4.29M) reports that the President "received widespread Republican criticism for his decision to withdraw troops from northern Syria just weeks ago," with the death of the Baghdadi, "Republicans are praising him for his efforts to fight terrorism." For example, Graham, who "previously denounced the troop withdrawal," said, hailed Baghdadi's killing is "a game changer in the war on terror."

The New York Post (10/27, Schultz, 4.57M) reports Graham also called on the President's "worst critics" to give him a round of applause. Said Graham, "Last night the best of America confronted the worst of mankind and the good guys won. This is a moment where President Trump's worst critics should say, 'Well done.'" The Washington Examiner (10/27, Dibble, 448K) likewise says "Graham called on President Trump's critics to applaud his decision to kill...Baghdadi."

Appearing on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (10/27, 1.18M), Graham said, "The caliphate has been destroyed because President Trump changed the rules and allowed our military to get the job done. Obama had one hand tied behind his back. President Trump unleashed the military to destroy the caliphate."

Bloomberg (10/27, Jacobs, Wingrove, 4.73M) and the Wall Street Journal (10/27, A1, Bender, Lubold, Abdulrahim, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), are among other news outlets also reporting on Trump's announcement, and NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 8, 2:01, Snow, 3.05M) profiled the White House Situation Room, where the President monitored the mission.

Pence: "All Credit" For Raid Goes To Trump's "Decisiveness" And Special Forces. The Hill (10/27, Budryk, 2.98M) reports Vice President Pence on Sunday called Baghdadi's death a "great day for America" and said the outcome of Saturday's raid was a testament to President Trump's "decisiveness." Pence told CBS' Face The Nation, "It's a tribute to the courage of our armed forces, special forces that executed the raid on the compound last night, but it's also a tribute to the decisiveness of President Donald Trump."

The Washington Post (10/27, Ryan, Lamothe, 14.2M) reports Pence told CBS' Face The Nation, "he and Trump were first informed of the likelihood that Baghdadi would be at the target site on Thursday," and the President "authorized the mission on Saturday morning." Pence said on Fox News Sunday (10/27, 108K), "We had some indication in the last week that we had a location but it was Thursday afternoon that the President and I were informed there was a high probability that al-Baghdadi was going to be in that compound in the province. At that point, President Trump asked our armed forces leadership to develop options. He was presented with those options on Friday morning. He made an immediate decision that as the information developed and it developed through Saturday morning that we would move forward with an operation against al-Baghdadi."

National Security Adviser O'Brien told NBC's Meet the Press (10/27, 2.88M), "It was a courageous decision on the President, but it was incredible bravery and skill of our men and women in the armed forces and the intelligence community to execute this flawlessly." Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT), on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (10/27, 1.29M), similarly praised the President's decisiveness, saying, "The President understands clearly his role here is to protect the homeland. ... What we saw this morning... [is] exactly how President Trump leads. He's mission focused. He set a goal and delivered it for us last night, working with US military. I could not be more proud of this President and our military." Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA), also on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (10/27, 1.31M), said, "It goes to show you this President, who's been attacked and harassed by an impeachment probe...kept his eye on the ball of killing the ISIS leader and terrorist. He shows that you can do two things at one-time. Obviously, our House can't do that. Speaker Pelosi and the Democrats are incapable of doing that."

Defense Secretary Esper, on ABC's This Week (10/27, 1.96M), said, "When you take out a leader like that, it's going to have a major impact on the organization. ... Our job is to stay on top of that and to make sure that we continue to take out their leadership and their organizations." On CNN's State Of The Union (10/27, 927K), Esper said, "The troops now that are denying ISIS access to those oil fields are doing so, so we make sure ISIS doesn't generate the revenue that would allow them to buy weapons to attack our partners in Europe or the homeland."

Reporting Pence and Esper's remarks, The Hill (10/27, Budryk, 2.98M) says "top Trump administration officials took to the Sunday shows to praise President Trump and US special operations forces for the death of...al-Baghdadi, but they and others stressed the need for continued vigilance in dealing with the terror group." The CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 2, 2:17, Quijano, 1.67M) reported last night that "there are still up to 18,000 ISIS members in Iraq and Syria, according to the Pentagon's watchdog, as well as tens of thousands of accused ISIS fighters and their families in prisons and camps."

Citing "Washington Leaks," Trump Did Not Inform Democratic Leaders In Advance. The New York Times (10/27, Baker, Schmitt, Cooper, 18.61M) says that "while he tipped off a couple of Republican senators, Mr. Trump made a point of refusing to inform Speaker Nancy Pelosi or other Democratic leaders in advance of the raid, as is customary, saying they could not be trusted not to leak, even though he said he notified Russia beforehand." CQ Roll Call (10/27, Bennett, 154K) likewise says Trump said "his team informed 'some' congressional leaders but opted not to notify a larger group because Washington 'leaks.'"

The Hill (10/27, Klar, 2.98M) quotes the President as saying, "We were going to notify them last night, but we decided not to do that because Washington leaks like I've never seen before. There's no country in the world that leaks like we do, and Washington is a leaking machine." He added, "I told my people we will not notify them until our great people are out — not just in but out." The New York Post (10/27, Moore, 4.57M) reports that when asked if he had notified Speaker Pelosi, Trump said, "I didn't do that." The Washington Times (10/27, Miller, 492K) says "Trump singled out Mrs. Pelosi when saying congressional leaders couldn't be trusted in the planning of the attack in Syria." However, NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 2, 2:46, Snow, 3.05M) reported that when asked by Fox News' Chris Wallace if the President trusts the Speaker "with sensitive national security information," Pence replied: "I don't think that was the implication at all."

USA Today (10/27, Collins, Jackson, Subramanian, 10.31M) reports Speaker Pelosi, in a statement, "saluted the 'heroism, dedication and skill' of the military and intelligence officials who played a role in the mission and said she was relieved that no US personnel died in the raid." But, she added, "the House must be briefed on this raid, which the Russians but not top congressional leadership were notified of in advance." Townhall (10/27, Baumann, 177K) also reports her comments under the headline "Instead Of Celebrating ISIS Leader's Death, Pelosi Uses The Opportunity To Chide Trump," while the Washington Post (10/27, Sonmez, 14.2M) writes that "US presidents typically follow the protocol of contacting congressional leaders, regardless of their political party, when a high-level military operation is conducted."

Cecilia Vega likewise said on ABC World News Tonight (10/27, story 2, 1:20, Llamas, 3.6M), "Past protocol has been for Presidents to alert top congressional leaders in both parties. That did not happen here, though. ... Democrats are not happy. They say Russia got advanced warning about this raid before they did."

Addressing reports that Russia was informed while Democrats were not, National Security Adviser O'Brien said on NBC's Meet the Press (10/27, 2.88M), "Let me make it very clear: Russia is not an ally of the United States, the President doesn't believe that. ... There are times when our interest overlaps with the interests of Russia. Last night it overlapped. We didn't want Russian air missiles being shot at our men and women in this raid. And they don't like ISIS as the President pointed out. Last night our interests overlapped with Russia."

The Washington Examiner (10/27, Pickett, 448K) reports the House Intelligence Committee, "currently spearheading impeachment inquiry proceedings against the President," was also "not notified about the raid in advance, one aide told CBS News." Texas Republican Rep. John Ratcliffe, a member of the House Intelligence Committee, told Fox News' Sunday Morning Futures (10/27, 108K), "that Democrats on the committee have been too distracted by the impeachment inquiry to hold any intelligence briefings in over a month." Said Ratcliffe, "Unfortunately, the intelligence committee that I serve on hasn't been spending a whole lot of time on these issues. We've been caught up in Adam Schiff's secret impeachment inquiry, so we haven't had a briefing on these issues."

House Intelligence Committee Chair Schiff, the New York Post (10/27, Moore, 4.57M) reports, said Sunday it was a "mistake" not to notify congressional leaders of a military operation. Schiff told ABC's This Week (10/27, 1.7M), "Had this escalated, had something gone wrong, had we gotten into a firefight with the Russians, it's to the administration's advantage to be able to say, 'We informed Congress we were going in, they were aware of the risks. We at least gave them the chance to provide feedback.' That wasn't done here. I think that's a mistake."

Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA), on Fox News Sunday (10/27, 108K), said, "It is unfortunate that the Speaker of the House and the gang of eight on the Democratic side were not notified. With the Osama bin Laden raid, the Gang of Eight was brought in by President Obama, and I hope it doesn't go to other issues where we are not being informed and able to play our oversight authority."

Lawmakers, Commentators Praise Raid, Urge Continued Vigilance Against ISIS. Lawmakers from both parties yesterday welcomed news of Baghdadi's death but cautioned that the US and its allies should maintain vigilance in the region. For example, Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), on CBS' Face The Nation (10/27, 1.7M), said, "This was a take-down of a very dangerous terrorist, and so we have to take this moment to thank those that put themselves in danger, the decision was a good one. ... But...this doesn't mean that ISIS is not still there."

Rep. Hakeem Jeffries (D-NY), on NBC's Meet the Press (10/27, 2.88M), said, "This is a very meaningful step in the right direction in terms of the war on terror. The military should be commended. The intelligence committee should be commended. ... Hopefully, we'll see a continuing American presence as appropriate moving forward, because we know that ISIS will still try to reconstitute itself notwithstanding the death of its top leader."

Rep. Debbie Dingell (D-MI), on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (10/27, 1.29M), said, "I want to thank the brave men and women of our military, of our intelligence community and everyone who participated in what happened last night. It is far too easy for us to forget or not give appreciation to those who served and protect our freedom every single day. ... I still continue to worry about the Middle East. I'm worried about Syria, Turkey, the Kurds. ... ISIS does not go away, that's another concern that I have to remind people of."

Rep. Michael Waltz (R-FL), also on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (10/27, 1.29M), warned ISIS "is growing and so...we have to stay forward, we have to keep a presence, we have to have assets in the region...to prevent them from reconstituting and growing again. Operationally, I don't know that this will have a huge impact, but public relations and symbolic standpoint and their ability to recruit and ability to inspire attacks in the United States this is huge. And I really give the President a lot of credit for making a bold call. This was not easy to pull off."

Commentators likewise say that while the President deserves credit for ordering the raid, ISIS still poses a threat and the US is less prepared to fight it after withdrawing its troops from northern Syria. Former US special envoy Brett McGurk, for example, writes in the Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) that Baghdadi's killing is "great news for the civilized world" and the details of the operation "speak as well to larger truths about Syria — and to what we have forfeited with the sudden US retreat across its northeast this month." He argues that while "Trump deserves full credit for approving the operation that led to Baghdadi's demise," it is "a shame the information that led to the raid apparently did not come to him before the tragic decision to abruptly pull US Special Forces from much of northeastern Syria. Because everything we already know about the raid reinforces just how valuable, unique and hard-fought the small and sustainable American presence there had been."

Similarly, Jonathan Swan of Axios (10/27, 521K) writes that the "Baghdadi raid demonstrates the value of continued US engagement in the region, and it helps explain why Iraq's president and others are so worried about Trump's planned retreat" from Syria. In an interview with Axios on HBO (10/27), Iraqi President Barham Salih, "The entire neighborhood is concerned about" President Trump's actions in northern Syria. He added, "The Turkish invasion, US policy, and its implications for the wider US policy in the Middle East. This is causing everybody to recalibrate, to rethink. And the implications for the Middle East are huge." Asked to what extent he can trust the US as an ally under President Trump, Salih said, "The staying power of the United States is being questioned in a very, very serious way. And allies of the United States are worried about the dependability of the United States."

The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Baghdadi's death will not end the threat posed by ISIS, but is nonetheless an important victory. A USA Today (10/27, 10.31M) editorial likewise praises Baghdadi's death, but says, "Ironically, the vacuum President Donald Trump created this month by precipitously withdrawing most US troops from Syria could tragically improve the odds of ISIS — with an estimated 15,000 to 30,000 fighters still at large — reemerging."

Thomas L. Friedman writes in his New York Times (10/27, 18.61M) column that Baghdadi's death "should certainly further weaken the most vile and deadly Islamist movement to emerge in the Middle East in the modern era," and "good for President Trump for ordering it, for the intelligence agents who set it up, for the allies who aided in it and for the Special Forces who executed it. But this story is far from over." Friedman adds, "Only Trump would boast of defeating ISIS and thinking that all that needs to be done now is to protect the Middle East's oil wells and America's favorite dictators — and not its wells of decency."

Jennifer Rubin writes in her Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) column that Baghdadi's death is "a major breakthrough," but says it "another leader of the Islamic State undoubtedly will emerge to replace Baghdadi. Tracking down and killing its leaders is a necessary but hardly sufficient aspect of our war against Islamic terrorists."

Senior international correspondent Ben Wedeman said on CNN's Inside Politics (10/27, 574K), "In terms of its leadership, this is clearly a significant blow to" ISIS. But, "this is an organization that understood that after reaching its height that it would be reduced to what it is today. So, clearly they've been planning for this eventuality and it's highly likely that there's already somebody in place to replace Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi. So, as an organization, it has taken a hit, but it's certainly not out of the game altogether."

Top Baghdadi Lieutenant Also Reported Killed. The New York Times (10/27, Hubbard, Shoumali, 18.61M) reports that a day after Baghdadi's death, "a separate attack killed the man who was considered his likely successor, according to the leader of a Syrian Kurdish militia and a Syrian activist." The ISIS spokesman, "known by his nom de guerre Abu Hassan al-Muhajir, was being smuggled across northern Syria in the back of an oil tanker truck when it was hit by what witnesses said they believed to be an American airstrike, according to Hussein Nasser, an activist who said he had spoken to people at the scene." Mazlum Abdi, the head of a Kurdish-led SDF, likewise "wrote on Twitter that Mr. al-Muhajir had been killed on Sunday in an operation coordinated between his forces and the United States."

Mission Named After ISIS Victim Kayla Mueller; Parents Praise Trump And Criticize Obama. The Washington Examiner (10/27, Dibble, 448K) reports National Security Adviser O'Brien revealed Sunday "that US forces named its mission to kill ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi after Kayla Mueller." During an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press," O'Brien "explained that the mission was inspired by the urge to bring justice to Mueller and other Americans who had been brutalized by Baghdadi and his followers." Said O'Brien, "We finally brought justice to a man that beheaded the three Americans: two journalists and a humanitarian worker," said O'Brien, adding, "One of the things that General Milley did is General Milley named the operation, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, named the operation that took down al-Baghdadi after Kayla Mueller."

USA Today (10/27, Bland, 10.31M) reports Kayla Mueller's father, Carl, told The Arizona Republic on Sunday shortly after Trump's announcement, "What this man did to Kayla — he kidnapped her. ... She was ultimately raped by al-Baghdadi himself." He added, "He either killed her or he was complicit in her murder. I'll let people who read this article make up their own mind how a parent should feel." Townhall (10/27, Stocking, 177K) reports that in the interview, "Mueller's parents praised President Trump for the death of their daughter's rapist and wished that President Obama had been more of a decisive leader like President Trump because maybe then their daughter would still be alive." Mueller's mother, Marsha, said, "I still say Kayla should be here, and if Obama had been as decisive as President Trump, maybe she would have been."

Conservative Outlets Criticize WPost For Baghdadi Obituary Calling Him "Austere Religious Scholar." The Federalist (10/27, Justice, 126K) reports Baghdadi's death "marks the execution of the world's most dangerous terrorist since Osama Bin Laden's killing in 2011," but the obituary from the Washington Post, however, "framed one of the world's most brutal terrorists as an 'austere religious scholar.'" The Post's initial headline read, "Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, austere religious scholar at helm of Islamic State, dies at 48," but was later changed to, "Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, Islamic State's 'terrorist-in-chief,' dies at 48" and finally read, "Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, extremist leader of Islamic State, dies at 48." The Federalist says that "while the Post eventually made the headline somewhat better...the obituary still reads remarkably well-disposed touting the ISIS leader's academic credentials and career building his vast terrorist empire responsible for torturing countless innocent people." The Daily Caller (10/27, Kruta, 716K) likewise says the "opening paragraphs of the obituary went on to list al-Baghdadi's 'achievements' in bringing a brutal terror organization onto the global stage."

Reporting the Post's original headline, Breitbart (10/27, Delingpole, 673K) asks, "Was that really the best way to sum up the life of a mass-murdering religious psychopath, responsible for many thousands of rapes, tortures, burnings-alive, crucifixions, a surge in global terrorism and the attempted genocide of the Yezidis?" Townhall (10/27, Baumann, 177K) reports "the Post's Vice President of Communications said the headline on the al-Baghdadi obituary 'should never have read that way.'"

Trump Touts ABC's Coverage Of Announcement. President Trump yesterday took to Twitter to praise ABC News' coverage previewing his announcement Sunday morning, writing, "Thank you to @MarthaRaddatz and @TerryMoran for a job well done!" The tweet also included video of their report.

SNL Mocked Trump For "Making ISIS Great Again" On Night Of Raid. The Washington Examiner (10/27, Gage, 448K) reports Saturday Night Live "made fun of President Trump's policy in Syria on the same day US special operations killed" Baghdadi in Syria. SNL's episode Saturday night featured a skit of "a fake Trump rally in which Pete Davidson came on stage pretending to be a fake ISIS terrorist thanking the president." Said Davidson, "I was a prisoner in Syria until last week when you freed me, so I just wanted to say, thank you for bringing jobs back to ISIS. And I promise that I will make ISIS great again!" Alec Baldwin, who played Trump, said about Davidson's character, "Terrific, what a great guy. ISIS is back in a big, big way, folks. And we love that, don't we?"

Clapper: Baghdadi's Death Could "Galvanize" ISIS. The Washington Examiner (10/27, Gage, 448K) reports former DNI James Clapper warned that Baghdadi's killing "might 'galvanize' the remaining parts of ISIS." Appearing on CNN's "State of the Union," Clapper said, "What is going to be interesting is to the extent to which this negatively affects ISIS or does it galvanize ISIS, the remnants of ISIS, which still survives as an ideology and has franchises in other places besides Syria."

Townhall Analysis: Omar Slow To Acknowledge Baghdadi's Killing On Twitter. Townhall (10/27, Stocking, 177K) reports that while the "news cycle has been inundated with coverage of...Baghdadi's killing," Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) was "a little slow to respond to the news, only doing so after many people called her out on Twitter. But on Instagram, she did manage to post a photo right away of herself wearing a CAIR t-shirt." Omar "did finally post about al Baghdadi's death" on Twitter.

Kurdish Fighters Announce Withdrawal From Turkish Border.

Reuters (10/27, Barrington, Francis) reports "the Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) said on Sunday it had agreed to withdraw more than 30 km (19 miles) from the Turkish border, an announcement welcomed by Damascus which said Turkey should now end its 'aggression' in northeast Syria." Turkey "launched its cross-border offensive on Oct. 9 targeting Kurdish YPG forces in northeast Syria after President Donald Trump pulled US troops out of the area."

New Mexico Divided Over How To Spend Oil Boom Revenues.

The New York Times (10/27, Romero, 18.61M) reports that in the oil-rich southeastern of New Mexico known as "Little Texas," people "are seething over a political shift to the left in the state capital," that is being laid bare by "a frenetic oil boom." Democrats "now in power in New Mexico are coming under fire on two fronts: from oil patch conservatives, for pushing to hike oil royalties and spend the windfall on progressive causes, and from environmentalists on the left, for allowing the oil boom to materialize in the first place." New Mexico "is now the third-largest oil-producing state" and Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham (D) "is moving fast to use the bonanza." Conservatives "question why the rest of the state should benefit from their work when their own roads and schools need funds," while Lujan Grisham is also "facing an outcry from progressives about boosting production of fossil fuels that contribute to global warming."

WSJournal Photo Essay: Trump Remains Popular In Coal Country Even Amid Loss Of Jobs.

A photo essay on the Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) depicts West Virginia coal country, where, it says, President Trump's popularity does not appear to be diminishing even though coalfields are once again cutting jobs after an increase over the past two years.

California's Marijuana Crop Valued At More Than $11 Billion.

The CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 13, 1:26, Quijano, 1.67M) reported that three years after California legalized marijuana, "business is growing.” The story was a preview of a piece on CBS' 60 Minutes by Sharyn Alfonsi, who reported that marijuana is California's "largest cash crop." Alfonsi added, "Valued at more than $11 billion, it's worth more than the state's grape and almond industries combined." The rest of the report can be seen here.

WSJournal Analysis: As Stocks Near Record Highs, Investor Concerns Limit Gains.

The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Ramkumar, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in an analysis that while stocks are nearing record highs, investor concerns about poor prospects for global growth and corporate earnings have limited recent gains. The Journal also cites skepticism about progress on a US-China trade agreement and the possibility of a new round of tariffs in December as contributing to investor caution.

WSJournal Analysis: Hedge Funds No Longer Good At Selecting Stocks. A Wall Street Journal (10/27, A1, Chung, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) analysis reports that while hedge fund managers once ruled the investment industry, for three straight years, clients have withdrawn money from the funds, marking the longest stretch of net outflows from them. According to the Journal, the reason for the change is that hedge funds are no longer good at picking stocks.

GM's Labor Agreement Could Pose Problems For Its Competitors.

The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Naughton, Colias, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the deal reached between GM and the UAW this past week to end a 40-day strike could pose problems for GM's competitors as the union will use the deal as a template in contract talks with Ford Motor Co. and Fiat Chrysler. According to industry analysts, the new contract is expected to add $350 million to GM's annual labor costs, and according to the Journal, such an increase will be more difficult for its less profitable competitors to absorb.

Amazon, Saudi Arabia Partnership Has Stalled Since Khashoggi's Murder.

In a more than 3,000-word story, the Washington Post (10/27, Fisher, O'Connell, 14.2M) reports that Amazon and Saudi Arabia "moved aggressively in the past few years toward a $1 billion deal to build Amazon data centers in the desert kingdom." But since the murder of Post journalist Jamal Khashoggi, "the partnership appears to have stalled."

NYTimes Report: Weeks Before Crashes, Boeing Lobbied To Undercut Government Oversight.

The New York Times (10/27, Kitroeff, Gelles, 18.61M) reports that Boeing last year "scored one of its biggest lobbying wins: a law that undercuts the government's role in approving the design of new airplanes." While "the government had been handing over more responsibility to manufacturers as a way to reduce bureaucracy," those paragraphs "cemented the industry's power, allowing manufacturers to challenge regulators over safety disputes and making it difficult for the government to usurp companies' authority." The Times says Boeing "and its allies helped craft the legislation to their liking, shaping the language of the law and overcoming criticism from regulators." Weeks after the law's passage, the Times adds, "a Boeing 737 Max jet crashed off the coast of Indonesia, killing everyone on board. A second Max crashed in Ethiopia less than five months later, and the plane was grounded."

Louis Vuitton Parent Company Bids To Take Over Tiffany.

The Wall Street Journal (10/27, A1, Dummett, Kapner, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Louis Vuitton parent company LVMH has made a takeover bid of $10 per share for Tiffany and Co.

WSJournal: Amazon Challenging Seattle's Far Left Government.

A Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that while Amazon touts its progressive values, after Seattle's progressive City Council imposed a $250 head tax for every employee at any business with $20 million or more in annual revenue, the company is working to elect a more business-friendly council. Amazon has given more than $1.4 million to the PAC run by the Seattle Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce, which has drawn fire from national Democrats. Council member Lorena González, whose seat is not up for reelection this year, plans to introduce a cap on individual contributions, and she wants to ban campaign contributions from companies with foreign shareholders, like Amazon. To the Journal, this is a sign that if they are not defeated, the far left will rig the system to prevent additional challenges.

Ratcliffe: Change In Durham Probe To A Criminal Investigation "Is Not A Coincidence."

The Daily Caller (10/27, Ross) reports Rep. John Ratcliffe (R-TX) told Fox News Sunday Morning Futures Sunday that it "is not a coincidence" US Attorney John Durham's investigation into the origins of the Trump-Russia investigation became a criminal matter as the Justice Department's IG is about to release a report of FBI surveillance abuse against the Trump campaign. Ratcliffe said, "I don't believe in coincidences, and the end of the inspector general's investigation and his impending report coming at the same time as the start of John Durham announcing that this is now a criminal probe is not a coincidence." Ratcliffe added, "John Durham announcing that this is now a criminal matter is a significant development."

Schiff: Barr Is "Weaponizing" DOJ To Go After Trump's Enemies. Politico (10/27, Levine, 4.29M) reports House Intelligence

Chairman Schiff said on ABC's This Week that the fact that Durham's probe has become a criminal investigation "means that [Attorney General] Bill Barr on the president's behalf is weaponizing the Justice Department, to go after the president's enemies. ... He's demonstrating once again that he is merely a tool of the president, the president's hand, not the representative of the American people."

Pence: Trump's Call With Zelensky Showed No Quid Pro Quo.

Vice President Pence said on CBS' Face The Nation (10/27, 2.65M), "I can only tell you what I know. And what I know is that the transcript of the President's call with President Zelensky shows there was no quid quo pro. He did nothing wrong. ... I can also say in all of my interactions with President Zelensky, we focused entirely on [Ukrainian] President [Volodymyr] Zelensky's agenda to bring about reforms to end corruption in Ukraine and to bring together the European community to provide greater support for Ukraine. President Zelensky said there was no pressure."

Republicans Say Democrats Are Limiting Their Access To Impeachment Documents.

The Washington Times (10/27, Muñoz, Meier, 492K) reports that Republicans with access to the impeachment inquiry "have accused Democrats of strong-arming them behind the scenes and limiting their access to key documents and transcripts, tilting the proceedings against President Trump." According to "GOP sources," Republican members "are allowed to view transcripts only with Democratic committee staffers supervising them in the secure room." Republicans in the hearings "say their ability to participate is hamstrung by committee leaders such as House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam B. Schiff, California Democrat." The Times adds, "The top lawmakers from all three House committees leading the impeachment inquiry – the intelligence, oversight and foreign affairs panels – have sounded alarms about Democrats skewing the process to edge out Republican members."

Book: Push To Impeach Trump Began Long Before Whistleblower Call.

The Washington Times (10/27, Smith, 492K) prints excerpts from journalist Lee Smith's book, "The Plot Against the President: The True Story of How Congressman Devin Nunes Uncovered the Biggest Political Scandal in U.S. History." The book states that the push to impeach President Trump "began long before the whistleblower's complaint regarding the president's July phone call." It dates back "to former FBI Director James Comey's March 20, 2017, testimony in front of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence." Nunes said, "I thought Comey would be a calming influence. I thought he would answer questions and say, 'OK, we're interviewing a few people, but this is not about the president.' ... Comey leaves the whole world with the impression they were investigating Trump while playing word games that they were only investigating the campaign." The book argues, "In announcing the investigation, Mr. Comey set a trap: if Mr. Trump fired him, he'd become vulnerable to charges of obstructing an ongoing investigation."

Biden Defends Hunter's Work For Burisma, Says Trump Should Release His Tax Returns.

Former Vice President Biden was asked on CBS' 60 Minutes (10/27, 6.84M) about the President's call for an investigation into his son Hunter's work for Burisma. Biden said, "I've never discussed my business or their business, my sons' or daughter's, and I've never discussed them because they know where I have to do my job and that's it and they have to make their own judgments." Biden added that "it turns out he did not do a single thing wrong, as everybody's investigated." Asked about Trump's claims that he and his son are corrupt, Biden said, "Mr. President, release your tax returns. Let's see how straight you are. Okay, old buddy? I put out 21 years of mine. So show us your tax returns, bud. What are you hiding? You wanna deal with corruption? Start to act like it. Release your tax returns or shut up."

Biden: Trump Ad Running On Facebook Is A "Flat Lie." Biden said in the CBS' 60 Minutes (10/27, 6.84M) interview, "Facebook is running, right now, paid advertising by Trump that everybody knows is a flat lie. You know, I'm glad they brought the Russians down. Why don't you bring down the lies that Trump is telling and everybody knows are lies?" Asked if he is concerned that Trump repeating the claims will cause people to believe it, Biden said that "it's coming from a man with no integrity so it helps. No, I sincerely mean it. I never thought I'd talk about a president this way."

Biden Says Trump "Doesn't Want To Do Anything" About Foreign Election Interference. Biden was also asked in the CBS' 60 Minutes (10/27, 6.84M) interview about foreign interference in the 2020 election. Biden said, "I'm very concerned about foreign interference, beyond me. Everybody knows what's going on. Trump not only doesn't wanna do anything about it, he's going out and asking for help. Come help me. Come help me...keep Biden from being the nominee." Asked about Trump's claim that Russian interference is a hoax, Biden said, "He's an idiot in terms of saying that. Everybody knows this. Everybody knows it. Nobody doubts it." Norah O'Donnell added, "In a statement to 60 Minutes, a White House spokesperson said President Trump 'takes election security seriously,' and has 'delivered both offensive sanctions and defensive hardening of our election security.'"

Gans: Bolton Testimony Might Not Provide What Resistance Wants To Hear.

In a piece for Politico Magazine (10/27, 4.24M), John Gans, director of communications and research at the University of Pennsylvania's Perry World House, writes that while "everyone wants to talk to" former national security adviser John Bolton "amid the inquiry into President Donald Trump and his associates' pressure campaign against Ukraine," no one "get too excited about what Bolton will ultimately say. ... A look at his career...suggests his testimony is unlikely to be everything the resistance wants to hear." Bolton "will seek to keep his hands clean and stay true to his principles, even if he is participating in something that challenges them." While Bolton "might be willing to undermine a president for pursuing an operation that would appear to violate Bolton's policy preferences and view of the law," he "is unlikely to undermine the presidency – and principles like executive privilege – any more than he has to."

Reeker Says He Raised Alarm About "Shadow Foreign Policy" For Ukraine.

David Wright reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/27, story 6, 2:21, Llamas, 3.6M) that House impeachment investigators this weekend "heard from America's top European diplomat," Philip Reeker, who "reportedly said he and others sounded the alarm about what appeared to be a shadow foreign policy for Ukraine serving the President's political interests, only to be shut down by top officials at the State Department."

Schiff Downplays Graham's Resolution Condemning Impeachment Inquiry.

Politico (10/27, Levine, 4.29M) reports that on Fox News' Sunday Morning Futures, Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) "touted his resolution introduced Thursday that condemns the House impeachment inquiry." Graham said, "Fifty Republicans have told the Nancy Pelosi House Democrats that what you're doing to the president is unfair." However, House intelligence Chairman Schiff "was unfazed by Graham's resolution and instead touted a court decision Friday, in which a federal judge ruled that the Justice Department needed to turn over former Special Counsel Robert Mueller's grand jury evidence to the House Judiciary Committee." Schiff said on ABC's This Week, "I think what we're seeing really is Lindsey Graham trying to respond to the devastating testimony that's come out from Ambassador Taylor, and others."

Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT) said on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (10/27, 1.29M), "I think there's a telling resolution in the Senate in the last 72 hours led by Lindsey Graham, a resolution condemning the process, that Nancy Pelosi and Adam Schiff are using right now. It does not allow the President to cross-examine accusers, this is being managed through press releases and leaks. We need a full-blown transparent process and lastly, the House hasn't even voted to move forward on this. ... Nancy Pelosi is bypassing that and that really makes the process illegitimate, if it comes to the Senate, bottom line is this, 50 US Senators signed the resolution condemning the process that Nancy Pelosi is using, that's pretty telling because it would take 20 Republican US senators to join to impeach the President."

Lisa Lerer of the New York Times said on CNN's Inside Politics (10/27, 574K), "The maxim in Washington is if you're working on process, you're losing, I'm not sure that quite implies here because I think the impeachment process is confusing and so hard to follow that these kinds of arguments could get traction. But it certainly shows that Republicans at this moment are not operating from their strongest position and you're seeing that from the White House, too."

Catherine Lucey of the Wall Street Journal said on CNN's Inside Politics (10/27, 574K), "What we're hearing from Republicans and allies to the President outside the White House is a frustration with where they are meant to take their argument. So part of the reason that they're focused so much on process is a lot of them don't feel like they're getting clear signals from the White House in how to argue this."

Democrats Defend Impeachment Inquiry. Rep. Hakeem Jeffries (D-NY) said on NBC's Meet the Press (10/27, 1.58M), "Speaker Pelosi is doing a phenomenal job. We made clear we are going to continue to proceed in a serious and solemn fashion to undertake our constitutional responsibility. We're going to follow the facts. We're going to apply the law, be guided by the constitution, present the truth to the American people no matter where that leads because nobody is above the law. Chairman Adam Schiff will make the ultimate decision from the committee standpoint in terms of when we transition from the accumulation of information which has been coming in, in a rapid way, to the public presentation and we'll see when that occurs."

Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA), on Fox News Sunday (10/27, 108K), said, "We are meticulously moving through and this happened last month. ... Nearly 50 Republicans are invited to participate, they get equal time to ask questions and unlimited time to ask questions but you would be shocked about how few of them actually show up and participate."

Rivkin, Foley: Impeachment Inquiry Seeks To Undermine Election Process. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), David B. Rivkin Jr., who served at the Justice Department and the White House Counsel's Office during the Reagan and George H.W. Bush Administrations, and Elizabeth Price Foley, a professor of constitutional law at Florida International University College of Law, argue that the House impeachment inquiry is an unfair attempt to overturn the 2016 election that must be rejected. They write that if the President's policies are objectionable, the people, not Congress, are responsible for removing him.

Klobuchar: Whistleblower's Testimony Would Be "Good" But Not "Necessary."

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) said on CBS' Face The Nation (10/27, 1.7M), "I think it would be good to have the whistleblower testify. I don't know that it is necessary that the whistleblower testify, because we have people like Ambassador Taylor that have come forward with firsthand knowledge. The whistleblower was simply reporting on something he had heard from others. I think what's most important is to keep getting the testimony of people that were actually there on the scene."

NYTimes Analysis: Impeachment Inquiry Faces Test As It Moves Closer To Trump.

The New York Times (10/27, Fandos, Schmidt, 18.61M) reports in an analysis that House impeachment investigators are moving toward "new White House barriers meant to block crucial testimony and evidence from the people who are closest to President Trump – obstacles that could soon test the limits of Democrats' fact finding a month into their inquiry." Investigators are "trying to secure cooperation from higher-ranking advisers who can offer more direct accounts of Mr. Trump's actions but are also more easily shielded from Congress." Democrats are likely to face one such roadblock Monday "when one of Mr. Trump's closest advisers is expected to defy a subpoena as he awaits a federal court to determine whether he can speak with impeachment investigators." Legal experts and lawmakers say "others could soon follow...forcing Democratic leaders toward a consequential choice: Try to force cooperation through the courts or move on to begin making an argument for impeachment in public."

Some Called For Roberts To Recuse Himself From Presiding Over Trump Impeachment Trial.

The Washington Times (10/27, Swoyer, 492K) reports that chief Justice John Roberts, who has "clashed" with the President "over the perceived political bias of the federal courts," would preside over an impeachment trial in the Senate. President Trump "would have to count on him for a fair hearing when the fate of his presidency hangs in the balance." That prospect "has caused rumblings in Washington that the chief justice should recuse himself." According to Josh Blackman, a professor at South Texas College of Law, if Roberts were to decide not to preside over a Senate impeachment trial, the most senior justice, Justice Clarence Thomas, would step in.

Liberal Fox Contributor Hahn: Trump Won't Run For Reelection Because Of Impeachment.

The Washington Examiner (10/27, Brest, 448K) reports, "Fox News contributor Christopher Hahn predicted that President Trump will not run for reelection in 2020." Hahn, "a lawyer who is one of the network's most frequent liberal guests, told the Washington Examiner on Saturday that he believes the 'most likely' outcome is that the Senate will advise Trump not to run for reelection based on accusations of quid pro quo."

Biden Would Repeal Trump Tax Cuts For Those Making More Than $400K.

Former Vice President Biden was asked in an interview on CBS' 60 Minutes (10/27, 6.84M) about his call to repeal President Trump's tax cuts. Biden said, "Trump gave the middle class a tax cut that was negligible. The fact is that what we should be doing is making sure that the wealthy pay their fair share." Asked, "What's wealthy," Biden said, "Making over $400,000 a year, and those tax cuts will be repealed. And people making between $250,000 and $400,000...their tax rate would increase. But here's the deal. What the middle class people really care about is can they afford education. Can they afford their healthcare. I would take the money and I'd pay for the health care proposal I put forward. I'd pay for education. So there's a whole range of things that go directly to affect middle class people."

WSJournal: Report Shows No Corruption In Air Force's Use Of Trump Turnberry.

A Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says the Air Force's official review of crews' overnight stays at the Trump Turnberry golf resort in Scotland shows that there was no corruption involved in the decision to use the facility. The Journal argues that the President's critics, who painted the matter as a violation of the Emoluments Clause, owe him an apology.

O'Brien Discusses New Role As National Security Adviser.

National Security Adviser Robert O'Brien, on NBC's Meet the Press (10/27, 2.88M), discussed his new role within the Administration. Said O'Brien, "It's the President's agenda we're going to implement. I didn't come to this job as national security adviser with my own agenda, others may have in the past. My best job is to get the best from the IC, the Treasury Department and give those options to the President. The President has a chance to look at those option and make the best decisions for the American people. If he asks my advice, I'll give it to him. ... Look, it's not my job to say no to him. ... I wasn't elected President. It's my job to make sure he gets the very best options and advice from his cabinet secretaries and other advisers."

Biden: Medicare For All Will Raise Middle Class Taxes.

Former Vice President Biden said in an interview with CBS' 60 Minutes (10/27, 6.84M), "Let's talk about Medicare For All. Do you think there's been any truth in advertising on that? It's gonna raise taxes on middle class people, not just wealthy people."

Leonhardt: Next Democratic President Shouldn't Exhaust Political Capital On Healthcare Reform.

In his New York Times (10/27, Leonhardt, 18.61M) column, David Leonhardt writes that the next Democratic president will have a limited amount of political capital upon entering office and, realistically, "they have to pick one or two sweeping bills to try to push through Congress in their first year." Leonhardt says healthcare reform should not be Democrats' top priority, arguing that addressing climate change and electoral reform, such as expanding voting rights, are more crucial issues. Unfortunately, he says these issues "are being pushed to the margins in the 2020 campaign, while media attention has focused obsessively on Medicare."

Law Professor: High Court Should Resolve DACA Case On Narrow Grounds.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (10/27, 18.61M), Benjamin Eidelson, an assistant professor at Harvard Law School and co-counsel for challengers to the DACA rescission in the Supreme Court, writes that when the Supreme Court considers President Trump's decision to end the DACA policy, the justices could resolve the case "on narrow grounds," and "steer clear of the political fray and their own jurisprudential divisions. Such a ruling would leave DACA in place for now, but leave the policy's ultimate fate to the political process – reaffirming the vital distinction between law and politics.”

Chinese Speculators Treating High-End Sneakers Like Financial Derivatives.

The Wall Street Journal (10/27, A1, Xie, Wernau, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in a front-page story on the Chinese market for high-end sneakers. According to the Journal, Chinese trading platforms are flooded with the product and speculators are treating them like financial derivatives.

Shooter Kills Two, Injures A Dozen At A&M Commerce Homecoming Party.

ABC World News Tonight (10/27, story 5, 1:41, Moore, 3.6M) reported on the “urgent manhunt underway in Texas,” where “authorities say a single shooter stormed into a packed party to celebrate the Texas A&M Commerce homecoming, killing two, and injuring a dozen others.”

NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 7, 2:10, Chesky, 3.05M) indicated “police say it was close to midnight when that gunman walked into the back of the building, pulled out a hand gun and opened fire, sending more than 700 people running for their lives.”

The Dallas Morning News (10/27, Branham, 946K) reports “authorities said they were looking for a single gunman but hadn’t identified a suspect or received a detailed description of the person from witnesses.” The Morning News adds “the party, which had been promoted as a homecoming event but wasn’t school-sanctioned, was attended by about 750 people, mostly in their teens and early 20s.” The Austin (TX) American Statesman (10/27, Moreno-Lozano, Subscription Publication, 343K) indicates Hunt County Sheriff Randy Meeks said yesterday that “of the 14 injured, 12 suffered gunshot wounds,” and “four or five’ of those who are injured are students at Texas A&M University-Commerce.” The Washington Post (10/27, Shammass, 14.2M) says “four people remain in critical condition.”

The CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 6, 2:01, Villarreal, 1.67M) reported, “Dramatic cell phone video shows the aftermath of a mass shooting,” with “wounded party goers laid out on the floor as others desperately tried to help them.”

Thousands Hold Vigil To Remember Tree Of Life Shooting Victims.

The CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 7, 0:22, Quijano, 1.67M) reported that last night, “thousands gathered at a vigil in Pittsburgh to remember the victims of the deadliest anti-Semitic attack in US history. It was a year ago today that a gunman killed 11 people and wounded seven others at the Tree of Life synagogue. The building remains closed, but the congregation’s rabbi vowed it will reopen. If not, he said, evil wins.”

The Pittsburgh Tribune-Review (10/27, Guza, 380K) also reports “a packed Soldiers and Sailors Memorial Hall wept as one as family, congregants and strangers came together to remember the 11 worshippers killed in the Tree of Life building one year ago.” The Tribune-Review adds “family members lit 11 tall, white candles – 11 burning reminders symbolizing their loved ones. Hundreds of people attended the memorial, lining up for hours before the service at 5 p.m.” The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (10/27, Smith, 616K) says “those at the prayer service were just some of the steady stream of crowds that filed by the site all day, from the group of children from the Islamic Center of Pittsburgh who paid their respects in the morning to the scores of people who left flowers and other mementos, or stopped to contemplate the display of artwork facing the building, many of them created by students from other datelines of gun violence such as Parkland, Fla.; Newtown, Conn.; and Littleton, Colo.”

New York City Agency Accused Of Abusing Impoverished Clients.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (10/27, 18.61M), Mara Gay, a member of the Times editorial board, and Emma Goldberg is a researcher for the editorial board, condemn what they describe as abuse of impoverished New York City residents by employees of the city’s Human Resources Administration, including acts of violence by security officers and by private guards hired by the agency. They argue that “the treatment endured by those who seek help at New York’s welfare offices cries out for a new approach. It demands urgent, focused attention by the mayor to stop an alarming pattern of abuse against people living in poverty.”

Klobuchar Plans To Offer Free Two-Year, Technical School Education.

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), on CBS’ Face The Nation (10/27, 1.7M), discussed her plan to offer free two-year college and technical school education, saying, “These are the fastest-rising degrees right now in terms of the number of jobs we’re going to have. 74,000 openings for electricians. Nearly that many for plumbers, for medical tech people, for home-care workers. ... My education plan costs approximately $500 billion. I would pay for it by taking the capital gains rate, which has been a ripoff for average Americans, and changing that to the personal income rate. I have shown how I’m going to pay for it, because I think we have a President that has added up debt, trillions of dollars, hasn’t shown. I want to make college more affordable, double the programs and do this in a smart way instead of paying for rich kids to go to college, which is sadly what my opponents plans do.”

DC Crowd Boos Trump At Game 5 Of World Series.

USA Today (10/27, Joseph, 10.31M) reports the President “attended Sunday’s Game 5 of the World Series at Nationals Park, but he wasn’t the recipient of a warm welcome. Not even close.” Trump, “who did not arrive in time for the national anthem or first pitch, was shown on the videoboard ahead of the fourth inning during a Salute to Veterans in-game segment," and "the crowd immediately responded by booing Trump loudly." Moreover, "the crowd continued into a 'lock him up' chant."

The AP (10/27, Madhani) points out Trump's appearance "came at a high-profile moment of his presidency," but "he still drew loud boos and jeers when introduced to the crowd" – though he "appeared unfazed and continued waving." The Washington Post (10/27, Judkis, Dawsey, 14.2M) also reports "the president appeared unmoved, waving to fans and soon moving to chat with House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy in his luxury box along the third base line." Politico (10/27, Dugyala, 4.29M) recounts Trump "and first lady Melania Trump took their seats alongside several lawmakers, including Sen. Lindsey Graham, Rep. Matt Gaetz and Rep. Kevin McCarthy."

Nat's Owners Asked MLB Not To Sit With Trumps. WUSA-TV Washington (10/27, Wise, 98K) reports it "has learned that the family who owns the Washington Nationals, the Lerner, asked Major League Baseball that they not be put in a position to respond to any requests that...Trump sit with them during Game 5 of the World Series." WUSA added that "a representative of the Lerner family, the principal owners of the Nationals, had a special request of the MLB last week: that they had no desire to be put in a position of turning down a request from the White House for...Trump to sit with Theodore Lerner, 94, the family patriarch, or any other member of the ownership group, a person familiar with the family's thinking told WUSA9 on condition of anonymity."

California Governor Declares Statewide Emergency Over Wildfires, Orders Mass Evacuations.

The Washington Post (10/27, Teague, Donosky, Hawkins, Epstein, 14.2M) reports "California's governor declared a statewide emergency Sunday as wind-fueled fires spread across Sonoma County and prompted mass evacuations." Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) "pledged to deploy 'every resource available' as authorities fought blazes on both ends of the state and weather conditions threatened to exacerbate fire threats." The AP (10/27, Chea, Nguyen) says "the biggest evacuation was in Sonoma County where 180,000 people were told to pack up and leave," where "Sheriff Mark Essick pleaded with residents in the evacuation zone that stretched from the wine country to Bodega Bay on the coast to get out immediately, citing the 24 lives lost when fire swept through the region in October 2017."

ABC World News Tonight (10/27, story 3, 2:39, Llamas, 3.6M) reported "power has already been cut off to nearly one million customers, and there are warnings of even more cuts in the week ahead?" ABC (Reeve) added that "power is cut to prevent lines from sparking or anything else that might cause a fire. ... On the front lines, reports of firefighters battling hurricane force winds. Major threats to neighborhoods...and the whole region." NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 4, 3:03, Brock, 3.05M) reported "more than 3,000 firefighters are battling to keep the flames from spreading southwest near heavily populated areas near the Pacific Ocean, trying to protect more lives and property from the wrath of the Kincade Fire, far from over." NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 5, 1:59, Harmon, 3.05M) also reported "officials are issuing new advisories for parts of Napa, telling people be ready to go at a moment's notice. ... A situation like this is a nightmare for everyone."

The CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 3, 1:44, Shamlian, 1.67M) also reported "conditions remain very dangerous," and the CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 4, 1:07, Vigliotti, 1.67M) that "there is an emerging housing crisis here in Marin County as thousands of people struggle to find a place to ride out this firestorm." The Wall Street Journal (10/27, A1, Carlton, Kusisto, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Amid Calls To Turn PG&E Into Public Utility, Newsom Calls On Warren Buffett To Make Bid. The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/27, Wiley, Kasler, 567K) reports "calls to transition the troubled Pacific Gas and Electric Co. into a public utility intensified Sunday, as nearly 1 million customers lost power throughout California and the Kincade Fire blazed through Sonoma County." The Bee adds "a day earlier, Gov. Gavin Newsom told Bloomberg he would encourage Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway to make a bid for PG&E," saying, "We would love to see that interest materialize, in a more proactive, public effort." Newsom "has issued relentless criticism of the utility in recent weeks, blasting PG&E for decades of what he said is failed leadership. The mismanagement has led to blackouts that disadvantage and, at times, put California customers in peril, Newsom said."

Gas Prices In California About $1.50 Per Gallon Higher Than National Average.

The CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 9, 1:49, Quijano, 1.67M) reported "California drivers are feeling real pain at the pump," as they "are paying about $1.50 a gallon more than the national average. The governor has ordered an investigation." CBS (Evans) showed Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) saying, "I believe something is happening to manipulate those prices. But I cannot prove that." CBS added that "in California, drivers pay $4.07 a gallon, in Montana $2.71. After subtracting the cost of environmentally regulated gasoline blends and the highest gas taxes in the country, California consumers are still paying about 33 cents more." At any rate, "Californians voted for many of the environmental regulations that led to high gas prices," but "just the threat of an investigation may be enough to bring them down a little."

"Rising Democratic Star" Hill Announces Resignation Over Sex Scandal.

Steve Hilton said on Fox News' The Next Revolution (10/27) last night that Rep. Katie Hill (D-CA) has announced "she will resign from Congress amid allegations of inappropriate relationships with staffers." Hilton called Hill's resignation "a blow to Democrats." Hill had taken to Twitter to write, "It is with a broken heart that today I announce my resignation from Congress. This is the hardest thing I have ever had to do, but I believe it is the best thing for my constituents, my community, and our country." The AP (10/27, Kellman, 2.13M) calls Hill "a rising Democratic star in the House" and the New York Times (10/27, Cochrane, 18.61M) "a rising star in the caucus," while the Ventura County

(CA) Star (10/27, Culver, 174K) recounts that "in 2018, she edged out two-term Republican incumbent Steve Knight to take the hotly contested seat."

The Washington Post (10/27, Lee, 14.2M) reports "Hill's spokeswoman said that the resignation is not immediate and that Hill is still deciding on when she will leave office." Politico (10/27, Claygle, Bresnahan, Cheney, 4.29M), which broke the story of Hill's resignation, says "multiple people with knowledge of her plans said she could step aside as soon as Nov. 1." Hill "was a prominent figure in the historic Democratic freshman class, and her resignation was a blow to the colleagues who defended her as the 10-day episode unfolded." Speaker Pelosi, "who has taken a hard line in sexual harassment cases, said in a statement that Hill had made the right decision in stepping down." Said Pelosi, "[Hill] has acknowledged errors in judgment that made her continued service as a member untenable. ... We must ensure a climate of integrity and dignity in the Congress, and in all workplaces."

Hill, says the Washington Examiner (10/27, Becker, 448K), "is the first female member of Congress to resign from office over a sex scandal, a move that several male lawmakers have made throughout US history." The Santa Clarita Valley (CA) Signal (10/27, Staff, 11K) reports that "reached by phone Sunday afternoon," Hill had "said she wasn't planning to resign at the beginning of the leaks of personal pictures and texts, but it became clear there were 'hundreds of pictures and texts' that were being threatened to leak." Said Hill, "They've made it clear that this is their purpose – to force me to resign, and I want to make sure I can do it in a way that allows me to do it with some shred of dignity and allow me to continue to work in my community." Hill also "said the incident left her terrified for future women who might want to run for office."

The San Diego Union-Tribune (10/27, Wire, 755K) says "the resignation marks a dramatic fall for Hill, who was elected to Congress as part of the 'blue wave' that allowed Democrats to take the House in 2018." Hill "had been a regular presence on cable news shows and was chosen by her fellow freshmen as their representative to the House leadership." That "gave her a seat at the table with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-San Francisco) and some of the biggest names in the national party."

CNN (10/27, Leblanc, Lah, Byrd, 83.16M) reports it "chronicled Hill's campaign as part of a 'Year of the Woman 2018' political series," and that "in multiple interviews, Hill gave CNN access to her campaign office, events and her extended family." Hill "proudly talked about her bisexual identity, pledging she'd be a voice for the LGBTQ+ community in Washington." Hill told CNN in November, "I've made it very clear through this campaign that I'm not playing by the rules that have been laid out previously."

BuzzFeed News (10/27, Nocera, Goba) reports "the conservative website Redstate published text messages and photos indicating that Hill had been in a consensual sexual relationship with a female staffer on campaign, and that she was also involved with a male staffer in her congressional office." Hill, who is "openly bisexual, admitted and apologized for having a relationship with the female staffer, but denied any improper relationship with the male staffer." Hill "said those claims came from her ex-husband, who she is divorcing. In her resignation, Hill called her ex-husband 'abusive.'" Rolling Stone (10/27, Wade, 12.8M), New York Post (10/27, Schultz, Garger, 4.57M) and Wall Street Journal (10/27, Rubin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

LATimes Columnist: Hill Should Not Have Resigned. In a column for the Los Angeles Times (10/27, 4.64M), Robin Abcarian writes, "I really wish...Hill had not resigned. ... Should we have expected more from her? Yes," but "she has done nothing – that we know of at least – that should have led her to step down. ... I think Hill, to her credit, is taking one for the party." Adds Abcarian, "Unlike Republicans, who can pay off porn stars, proudly boast of sexual assault and still maintain their standing with voters."

NYPost's Devine: Hill Saga "Exposed Left's #MeToo Hypocrisy." Under the headline "Katie Hill Scandal Exposed The Left's #MeToo Hypocrisy," Miranda Devine writes in the New York Post (10/27, 4.57M) that "by claiming that Hill was the victim of a political smear, she and her supporters showed no concern for the vulnerable 22-year-old who was preyed upon by her boss and who now, two years later, is bereft, abandoned and a self-described 'mess.'" Devine adds that "the same people who demonize males for far less gave Hill a free pass for her egregious abuse of power."

Trump 2016 Campaign Adviser: Democrats Will Again Win Popular Vote, But Lose Election.

The Washington Examiner (10/27, Brest, 448K) reports Trump 2016 campaign senior adviser David Urban believes President Trump could lose the 2020 popular vote "by millions." Urban doubts any Democrat can get the necessary electoral college votes to defeat Trump. Urban told the Examiner, "I'm not worried about any particular candidate, because I think as long as the Democratic Party espouses the views that, 'We're going to take your gun, we're going to eliminate the border'...the president will get reelected."

Tlaib Endorses Bernie Sanders For President.

The Detroit News (10/27, Mauger, 825K) reports Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-MI) "on Sunday endorsed Bernie Sanders for the Democratic presidential nomination, joining two other members of the progressive group known as the 'squad' in backing the Vermont senator." The News adds that "echoing a Sanders' catchphrase about his Medicare for All legislation," Tlaib said yesterday, "We deserve someone who writes the damn bill. ... We deserve Bernie Sanders." The Sanders campaign "released a video Sunday in which Tlaib explained her endorsement," which showed her saying, "He's not going to sell us out. ... He understands that it's just not about policies and about words, but it's going to be also about completely transforming the structures in place that are hurting American people." The News also reports that "two other members of the progressive 'squad,' US Rep. Ilhan Omar of Minnesota and US. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York, had previously endorsed Sanders."

Biden Says Obama Will Campaign For Him When He's The Nominee.

Former Vice President Biden was asked in an interview with CBS' 60 Minutes (10/27, 6.84M) why he should be elected President. Biden said, "Well, because I think, as I said we need somebody who, on day one, knows exactly what to do. Can command the world stage. No one wonders whether I know a great deal about these issues and foreign policy and domestic policy. They're things I've done." Asked about criticism that he is "offering essentially four more years of a Obama-like Administration," Biden said, "Well, let me tell you something, I-- I love the fact that, all of a sudden, the Democratic party doesn't think Obama was that great a president. I-- I find that fascinating." Asked why Obama has not endorsed him, Biden said, "Because I have to own-- I wanna earn this on my own. ... I have no doubt when I'm the nominee he'll be out on the campaign trail for me."

NYTimes Analysis: Buttigieg's Sexuality Complicates Pitch To Black Voters.

The New York Times (10/27, Gabriel, 18.61M) reports that as South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) "increasingly presents himself to Democrats as a younger, moderate alternative to former Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr., he is struggling badly to compete against one of Mr. Biden's strengths: deep connections to black voters." Buttigieg struggles with black voters for many reasons, but an internal campaign memo last week suggested that, according to black voters in focus groups, "being gay was a barrier" for him. Black Democratic party officials in South Carolina "largely said that Mr. Buttigieg's sexuality was not a concern to them, while voters expressed more divergent views." Most party leaders and voters agree "that being a married gay man would cause some discomfort with religious or conservative black Democrats."

Buttigieg Targets Moderates, Republicans In Suburban Iowa. The Washington Times (10/27, McLaughlin, 492K) reports Buttigieg has opened a campaign office in Dallas County, Iowa, a move that is "emblematic of the surging...mayor's strategy to engage voters – including disenfranchised Republicans and independents – who tend to get less attention than those living in the more urban bastions of liberal activism that traditionally serve as the biggest battlegrounds in the Iowa caucuses." Pollster John Couvillon said, "While a lot of the Democrats are fighting over the progressive wing, the moderate wing has not been much fought over and that is what I think Buttigieg is trying to do, and Dallas County is ground zero for that effort." According to the Times, Dallas County is "emblematic of the suburbs across the country that used to be reliably Republican, but would up powering the Democratic takeover of the U.S. House in the 2018 midterm elections."

Husbands Of Democratic Hopefuls Consider Public, Private Campaign Roles.

The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Parti, Thomas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on how husbands of Democratic presidential candidates are supporting their spouses' campaign. Some husbands appear to be more visible on the trail; Chasten Buttigieg has helped his husband Pete headline high-dollar fundraisers. Others take on a low-key role. For example, Bruce Mann, Sen. Elizabeth Warren's (D-CA) husband, is still teaching full-time at Harvard Law and has said he does not consider himself a policy adviser.

Conyers Passes Away At Age 90.

The Detroit News (10/27, Burke, 825K) reports "John Conyers Jr., a Korean War veteran who was the longest serving African-American member of Congress in US history, died Sunday at age 90, Detroit police have confirmed." Conyers was "a founding member of the Congressional Black Caucus in 1969, which promotes the legislative concerns of black and minority communities," but "his legacy was clouded by allegations that he sexually harassed or mistreated several female staffers – complaints that prompted his resignation in December 2017." The Detroit Free Press (10/27, Gray, Spangler, 1.52M) also indicates Conyers' career "ended in 2018 with a sudden resignation amidst claims of sexual harassment and verbal abuse of employees and misuse of taxpayer funds to cover-up those claims." However, his "tenure was a remarkable 53-year-run during which the lawmaker, the son of a well-known labor lawyer in Detroit, compiled a near-record legacy of civil rights activism, longevity and advocacy for the poor and underprivileged."

NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 6, 0:25, Snow, 3.05M) reported Conyers "served more than 50 years before stepping down in 2017, amid multiple allegations of sexual harassment, charges he denied." The CBS Weekend News (10/27, story 8, 0:15, Quijano, 1.67M) also mentioned the scandal in a brief report on Conyers' passing.

Axios (10/27, Axios, 521K) indicates "Conyers entered Congress in 1965 during the presidency of Lyndon B. Johnson and served the Detroit area for more than five decades, becoming the longest-serving African American member of Congress in history." NPR (10/27, Wamsley, 3.12M) recounts that "famed civil rights activist Rosa Parks worked in his Detroit office from 1965 until she retired in 1988." The Washington Post (10/27, Otis, 14.2M), CNN (10/27, Henderson, Leblanc, 83.16M) and Fox News (10/27, Re, 27.59M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

WPost: GOP Embracing "Voter Suppression As A Strategy For Party Survival."

The Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) editorializes that "mobile polling places that popped up on college campuses and other population-dense areas were 'the most effective program we had,' Dana DeBeauvoir, the chief elections official in Travis County, Tex., told the New York Times. That would explain why Texas Republicans shut them down." As a result, "as Texans head to the polls, it will be substantially harder for college students to vote." Republicans "throughout the country have embraced voter suppression as a strategy for party survival, and this is one more sad example." The Post adds the GOP "should stake its future on offering policies and candidates that can attract voters – not on keeping potential voters away from the polls."

WPost: Democratic Wins This Year To Decide Whether "The Center In Virginia Will Hold."

The Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) editorializes that "Virginia is a politically moderate state whose recent tilt toward Democrats – no Republican has won a statewide race in a decade – owes as much to the GOP's accelerating estrangement from centrist politics as to the growing diversity of the Old Dominion's electorate." The Post goes on to deride the positions of several GOP candidates, which it deems extreme, and concludes "voters will determine the composition of the state legislature Nov. 5 and decide whether the center in Virginia will hold."

McKeon, Schaerr: Patriot Act's Section 215 Must Be Amended.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), former Rep. Buck McKeon (R-CA) and Gene Schaerr, a former associate counsel to President George H.W. Bush, write that the interpretation of Section 215 of the Patriot Act by the FBI and other security agencies poses a threat to Americans' constitutional rights. They argue that the section should be amended before it is reauthorized in order to protect Americans' privacy and constitutional rights while keeping the nation safe.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 41.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 41.6%, and his disapproval at 55%. The President's job approval and disapproval are unchanged since yesterday.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (10/22-10/24) finds Trump's approval at 43%, with 56% disapproving.

Peronistas Appear Poised To Regain Argentinean Presidency.

The AP (10/27) reports from Buenos Aires that "official early results show Peronist presidential candidate Alberto Fernández leading Argentine election." The Washington Post (10/27, Lacunza, 14.2M) reports "several South American countries have erupted in violent protest over the question of fiscal austerity versus government largesse. On Sunday, Argentina put it to a vote," as voters "hit the polls to elect a president" with a "stark" choice: "Stick with the austerity program of President Mauricio Macri, a businessman who has failed to deliver on promises of growth, or return to the social spending of the Peronista ticket of...Fernández and Cristina Fernández de Kirchner, a former president and current senator who faces nearly a dozen separate corruption cases." Macri "took office in December 2015 promising pro-market reforms that he said would bring immediate and solid economic growth for 20 years." However, "at the end of his four-year term, poverty has increased by some 10 percentage points, annual inflation is over 50 percent and the public debt is equal to 100 percent of GDP, on the verge of default." Reuters (10/25, Jones, Strohecker, Campos, Burin), the Financial Times (10/27, Mander, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), CNBC (10/26, Imbert, 3.62M), and TIME (10/25, Nugent, 18.47M) also reported on this story.

IMF Managing Director Applauds Trump's Use Of Tax Cuts To Spur Growth.

Axios (10/27, Salmon, 521K) reports that in an interview with Axios on HBO, IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva applauded the Trump Administration's "bravery to use a tax reform to spur more growth." Axios adds that Georgieva "vowed that she would be able to persuade the U.S. to commit more money to the fund during the course of her five-year term." She said, "I will get my quota increase."

ECB Will Restart Bond Purchases Oct 30, Stop Before Christmas.

Reuters (10/25, Koranyi) reported the ECB "will restart its bond purchase scheme on Oct 30, with first settlements due on Nov 1, it said in a market message on Friday." The bank "added that it would temporarily halt purchases between Dec 19 and Jan 1 in anticipation of significantly lower market liquidity toward the end of the year."

Biden Questions Kushner's Credentials To Negotiate Middle East Peace.

Former Vice President Joe Biden was asked in an interview with CBS' 60 Minutes (10/27, 6.84M) if he believes Jared Kushner should be negotiating a Middle East peace solution. Biden said, "No, I don't. I don't. What credentials does he bring to that?"

Hong Kong Police Fire Tear Gas To Clear Protesters.

Reuters (10/27, Geddie, Westbrook) reports Hong Kong protesters "set fire to shops and hurled petrol bombs on Sunday, police said, after riot police fired tear gas, water cannon and rubber bullets to disperse thousands." Police "detained some protesters as they gathered in a rally that had not received official permission."

Amid Protests And US-China Trade War, Hong Kong Banks Face Downturn. The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Yoon, Chiu, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that while Hong Kong for years has been a top global banking market, Hong Kong's economy is now shrinking amid the US-China trade war and months of protests.

Far-Right Beats Merkel's CDU In Regional Election.

Reuters (10/26, Carrel, Hummel) reports "the far-right Alternative for Germany (AfD) beat Chancellor Angela Merkel's conservatives into third place in Sunday's regional election in the eastern state of Thuringia, in which the incumbent far-left Linke came first, an exit poll showed." Reuters adds "the result follows the AfD's successes in the eastern states of Saxony and Brandenburg, where it surged into second place in Sept. 1 elections, and marks a setback for Merkel's Christian Democrats (CDU)."

WPost Criticizes Cambodia's "Authoritarian Prime Minister."

The Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) writes in an editorial, "Hun Sen, the authoritarian prime minister of Cambodia, is worried, and is using every trick in the book to threaten Sam Rainsy of the banned opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party, who plans to return to Cambodia from exile on Nov. 9." While "Hun Sen dominates parliament and politics," he "still shows signs of insecurity over the return of Mr. Rainsy, an exponent of democracy, returning for the first time in four years." The Post adds that "not surprisingly, the prime minister would also prefer to be unbothered by independent journalism," with an ongoing "trial of two journalists has moved from being unjust to being just farce."

Freddie Mac's Mortgage Portfolio Grew An Annualized 10.7% In September.

Mortgage News Daily (10/25, Swanson) says, "Freddie Mac reported this week that its total mortgage portfolio increased at an annualized rate of 10.7 percent in September, down from 12.9 percent the previous month. The portfolio balance at the end of the period was $2.295 trillion compared to $2.275 trillion at the end of August and $2.149 trillion a year earlier." According to MND, "Single-family refinance loan purchase and guarantee volume was $22.2 billion in August, up from $21.7 billion in August and representing a 48 percent share of total single-family mortgage portfolio purchases and issuances compared to 42 percent the previous month." Freddie Mac's single-family delinquency rate held steady "at 0.61 percent for the third straight month." Its multifamily delinquency rate "was 0.04 percent, the same as in August. The rate a year earlier was 0.01 percent."

NCSHA: Modifications To GSEs' Duty-To-Serve Plans Would "Substantially Scale Back" Purchase Targets For Some Products.

According to The National Council of State Housing Agencies (10/25), the FHFA on Thursday "released a Request for Information (RFI) seeking public input on several changes Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have proposed to their respective Underserved Market Plans for years 2018-2020. A number of the proposed modifications would reduce or eliminate the firms' loan purchase targets in several areas, including rural housing, manufactured housing, and shared equity loans." The NCSHA says, "Many of the proposed modifications from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would substantially scale back the GSEs' original loan purchase targets for 2019 and 2020 for certain programs and products."

Commentary Advises Condo Buyers About Making Informed Purchases.

Carla Fried writes for the Boston Herald (10/25, 410K) to advise readers seeking to buy a condominium to research the neighborhoods and neighbors where they are looking. Fried warns that while condos have a lower price point that makes them attractive to buyers, "the condo price advantage is on the wane in many markets." Fried also urges buyers to consider how requirements for conventional and FHA-insured mortgages impact occupancy rates, adding that if buyers "want a standard mortgage, Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and FHA typically require that no more than 35% of the square footage of the project be for commercial space."

Sales In Southwest Michigan Housing Market Fall, Data Show.

The St. Joseph (MI) Herald Palladium (10/25, Wittkowski, 41K) reports home sales in Southwest Michigan dropped 12 percent in September when compared to August rates, according to Alan Jeffries, Association Executive of Southwestern Michigan Association of Realtors. Compared to September 2018, "the number of houses sold slipped 3 percent, to 348 from 360 houses," which Jeffries "said...was the lowest number of homes sold in the month of September since 2015." Locally, the mortgage rate rose from 3.69 in August to 3.78; and nationwide, "the Freddie Mac mortgage rate in September rose to 3.65 from 3.58 in August for a 30-year conventional mortgage."

Fannie, Freddie's Role In Mortgage Interest Rates Highlighted.

Contributor Tara Mastroeni writes for Forbes (10/25, 9.71M) to discuss the factors contributing to mortgage interest rates, spotlighting how lenders sell debt to mortgage aggregators, including Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which take "mortgage debt, bundle it with other debts, and repackage it into what's known as mortgage-backed securities."

National General Lender Services EVP: GSEs Are Holding Servicers To "Increasing Levels Of Accountability."

DS News (10/25, Albanese) interviewed National General Lender Services EVP Jody Gunderson about the state of servicing and how data can be used to benefit both borrowers and lenders. Asked how the GSEs' servicer obligations have evolved over the years, Gunderson responded, "Servicers continue to be held to increasing levels of accountability by the GSEs. Specifically, they are required to maintain higher levels of vendor oversight, as servicers are held accountable for their actions of their service providers. The increasing capacity of technology allows National General to make the necessary updates to quickly update business rules to meet the ever-changing requirements of the GSEs and private investors. We also partner closely with our clients' vendor management teams and provide transparent reporting that is required for their GSE and other regulatory audits."

DOJ Responds To NAR's Motion To Dismiss Antitrust Cases.

DS News (10/25, Welborn) reports the Department of Justice "has responded to the National Association of Realtor's (NAR) motion for dismissal of the antitrust cases currently lobbied against it. According to NAR in May, the case misrepresents NAR's rules, 'which have long been recognized by the courts across the country as protecting consumers and creating competitive, efficient markets that benefit home buyers and sellers.'" NAR has "moved to dismiss" the 2008 case, US v. National Association of Realtors. However, "According to DOJ's response to the motion, NAR inaccurately portrays the 'express permission' that DOJ provided its MLS compensation rules in the settlement." The DOJ said, "In that case, the United States did not examine the rest of NAR's policies, including those at issue here, and therefore those policies simply were not subjected to antitrust scrutiny."

Secret Agreement Allows Homebuilders To Block Building Code Changes On Climate Change.

The New York Times (10/26, Flavelle, 18.61M) reports that its review of certain documents shows that "a secret agreement has allowed the nation's homebuilders to make it much easier to block changes to building codes that would require new houses to better address climate change." The agreement "guarantees industry representatives four of the 11 voting seats on two powerful committees that approve building codes that are widely adopted nationwide." The pact has "helped enable the trade group that controls the seats, the National Association of Home Builders, to prevent changes that would have made new houses in much of the country more energy-efficient or more resilient to floods, hurricanes and other disasters."

Los Angeles Outlaws No-Fault Evictions Ahead Of Statewide Rent Control Law Implementation.

HousingWire (10/25, Falcon, 23K) reports the Los Angeles City Council voted 14-0 on Tuesday to approve "an emergency ban on 'unjust,' no-fault evictions to stop landlords from evicting some of their tenants." The measure follows the approval of a statewide rent control policy taking effect in January 2020.

Ginnie Mae Designates EOriginal As EVault Vendor.

National Mortgage Professional (10/25, Hall) reports, "Ginnie Mae has signed Baltimore-headquartered eOriginal Inc. to be its provider for eVault software and services." The company "will work with Ginnie Mae to implement its digital collateral pilot program, with goal of enabling the use of electronic notes as acceptable collateral for Ginnie Mae MBS."

Data Highlight Markets Where Rental Occupancy Is Falling Rapidly.

HousingWire (10/25, Falcon, 23K) reports on the five markets where rental occupancy is falling quickly, based on new data from Yardi Matrix. These include Midland-Odessa, Texas; North Central Florida; Chattanooga, Tennessee; Scranton-Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania; and Youngstown, Ohio.

Leveraged Loan Segment Could Be Showing Signs Of Stress.

MarketWatch (10/27, Wiltermuth, 1.67M) reports a new study from Bank of America has found that "cracks have formed in the roughly $1.2 trillion leverage loan market that could bring the sector closer to a 'point of no return' should conditions in this corner of corporate finance further deteriorate." Appetite for leveraged debt has fallen sharply over the last 12 months as investors fear a spike in default rates, with red flags raised by "credit rating agencies, regulators, the International Monetary Fund, and even by bankers." Retail investors have pulled $38 billion from leveraged loan funds since November 2018, a move "tied partially to the Federal Reserve's recent path of interest rate cuts, which can dampen the appeal of floating-rate leveraged loans when dwindling rates of interest paid by borrowers mean less income flowing to debtholders." However, falling rates means borrowers can more easily afford to service their debts.

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (10/24, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 1.832 percent.

Dollar Rises.

Reuters (10/28, White) reports, "The dollar traded near its highest in more than two months versus the yen on Monday ahead of a US Federal Reserve meeting this week where policymakers are expected to cut interest rates but emphasize their reluctance to ease policy further." The dollar "traded at 108.77 yen on Monday, close to 108.94 yen, which is the highest since Aug. 1." The dollar "was quoted at $1.1083 per euro, close to its strongest in more than a week." The dollar index against a basket of six major currencies "stood at 97.849, also near its highest in more than a week."

Gold Holds Steady.

Reuters (10/28) reports, "Gold was unchanged on Monday, after climbing nearly 1% in the previous session, as trade tensions between the United States and China eased, while a strong dollar also capped gains." Spot gold "was steady at $1,504.60 per ounce as of 0059 GMT," while US gold futures "were up 0.1% at $1,507.40 per ounce."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (10/28) reports, "After strong gains last week, oil prices were slightly lower on Monday as data released in China reinforced signs that its economy is slowing, though progress in China-US trade talks has supported prices." Brent crude "was down 12 cents, or 0.2%, at $61.90 a barrel by 0409 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude futures "were down 16 cents, 0.3%, at $56.50 a barrel."

WSJournal A1 Details How Law Enforcement Officials Brought Romanian Hackers Behind Attack On Trump Inauguration To Justice.

In a more than 2,700-word front-page article headlined "The Hapless Shakedown Crew That Hacked Trump's Inauguration," the Wall Street Journal (10/25, A1, Hinshaw, Pop, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) details how law enforcement authorities took down the Romanian hacking crew that embedded ransomware in the video surveillance cameras in DC just eight days before President Trump's inauguration, according to documents and interviews.

Ransomware Attacks Weigh On Insurance Companies.

Reuters (10/25, Barlyn) reports that insurance companies covering cyberattacks "are facing more claims related to ransom-demanding hackers who cripple businesses' technology systems, and only stop after receiving substantial payments." The number of detected ransomware attacks rose 365% year on year in the second quarter, according to cybersecurity company Malwarebytes, with the average payout tripling to over $36,000 – though some demands have gone as high as $5 million. Insurance companies offering cyber insurance have seen their payouts rise in tandem, as they also pay out claims related to "data recovery, legal liabilities for exposing sensitive customer information, negotiators fluent in hackers' native languages and the ultimate ransom payments." As cyber insurance and ransomware attacks both become more common, "insurers are grappling with pricing" as they try to determine the best way to respond.

Legislator Seeks Answers From White House On Exodus Of Cybersecurity Staff.

Newsweek (10/26, 1.53M) reports Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) "has written a letter to White House Acting Chief of Staff Mick Mulvaney about a large exodus of cybersecurity staff." The letter, obtained by Axios, "seeks answers on measures the White House is taking against national and cyber security threats." On Wednesday, Axios reported that "an internal White House memo informed, 'the White House is posturing itself to be electronically compromised once again.'" The memo was penned "as a resignation from White House cybersecurity director Dimitrios Vastakis." Vastakis detailed that Office of the Chief Information Security Officer "was being targeted by Trump officials." The OCISO was created following "a Russian hack of White House servers in 2014 to develop a secure network for the White House." He also "informed staff that 'it is highly concerning that the entire cybersecurity apparatus is being handed over to non-PRA entities.'"

Battleground States Need To Do More To Prevent Voting Machine Hacks In 2020.

Fortune (10/26, 3.91M) reports three companies "control the fate of US elections." Election Systems & Software, Dominion Voting Systems, and Hart InterCivic "dominate 92 percent of the voting machine market, standing to make bank as states rush to update their systems before the looming 2020 election." In 2016, counties in 16 states "used paperless equipment without backup records." The Department of Homeland Security later "notified six of those states that hackers targeted their systems." There's now widespread recognition that paperless machines "are the least secure." Some state governments "control voting methods, others delegate the decision to local authority, but in most of those states, officials are moving to purchase new machines."

Ohio Governor Signs Law Enhancing State's Efforts Against Cyberattacks.

The AP (10/25) reports Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine has signed "a bill aimed at enhancing Ohio's resilience to cyberattacks, including those aimed at its election systems." The measure signed Friday "adds a chief information security officer at Secretary of State Frank LaRose's office who will work to enrich both state and county election security technology efforts." The law gives LaRose, Ohio's elections chief, and Ohio National Guard "additional power to improve responsiveness in the event of a cyberattack and requires county elections boards to conduct post-election audits." It also places LaRose "on the Ohio Homeland Security Advisory Council."

Hackers Ramped Up Cyberattacks Against Human Rights, UN Organizations.

The Washington Post (10/25, Harris, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that hackers have “ramped up cyberattacks on more than a dozen human rights organizations around the globe, including high-profile targets such as the UN and UNICEF, according to a report from researchers at anti-phishing firm Lookout released yesterday.” Researchers couldn’t identify “who was behind the attacks or whether their motivations were financial, but the phishing attempts point to a growing trend of attacks on nongovernmental agencies.” To dupe employees of the organizations, hackers “created look-alike sites that closely mirrored official login pages for the organizations”. At least six of the pages “still have active SSLs, a domain feature that indicates to a user that a Web page is protected with encryption, adding to an appearance of authenticity.”

BlackBerry Says Android And iOS App Stores Hide “Prolific” Spyware.

Forbes (10/26, Doffman, 9.71M) reports BlackBerry has not pulled “any punches in publishing a heavyweight report into the ‘prolific and pervasive’ government spyware it says is being spread far and wide by the official Android and iOS app stores.” Setting out “to paint the ‘big picture’ on mobile malware, BlackBerry’s Cylance research team has collated examples – some old, some new – to emphasize the point.” BlackBerry exec Brian Robison discussed the report, “Consumers are laboring under a false sense of security with the app stores. I don’t trust apps.” According to Robison, “hundreds’ of such apps have circumvented Apple and Google security measures.” Now BlackBerry wants consumers to be in “no doubt that they cannot trust as safe everything available on the official stores.”

Possible Florida Ransomware Incident May Block Law Firms From Official Records.

The Miami Herald (10/25, 1.09M) reported reams of digital legal documents “have been held hostage under a ransomware threat to a South Florida software company that manages electronic records for thousands of law firms nationwide.” The full impact of the threat “against Coral Gables-based TrialWorks was not immediately clear.” But on Thursday, a Florida law firm was forced “to request more time to meet a filing deadline in a gender-discrimination employment case in federal court because it could not access its electronic documents stored with TrialWorks.” attorney Jason Melton, a managing partner with Whittel & Melton in Spring Hill said, “My request for information has fallen on deaf ears. They have kept us in the dark. It has been one of the more frustrating events [at this law firm] in a long time.”

Three Oil Tankers Bound For Asia After US Eases Sanctions.

Reuters (10/25, Saul, Eaton) reported, “At least three tankers are on their way to Asia with U.S. oil cargoes after Washington gave temporary approval to wind down transactions with a Chinese shipping company that it sanctioned last month, according to data and shipping sources.” Reuters says that while the US in September “announced sanctions on Chinese tanker companies, including COSCO Shipping Tanker (Dalian), a subsidiary of China’s state-owned shipping group COSCO,” sources in the shipping industry “said Washington had begun to grant temporary waivers for the conclusion of shipments around Oct. 15.” This news “followed a notice from the U.S. Treasury on Thursday which allowed for the ‘maintenance or wind down of transactions’ including offloading non-Iranian crude oil involving the COSCO subsidiary until Dec. 20.”

Trump Administration Moving To Isolate Iran Further From Global Financial System.

The Wall Street Journal (10/25, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported the Trump Administration is moving to isolate Iran even further from the global financial system, declaring the Islamic Republic a “jurisdiction of primary money laundry concern.”

Meanwhile, the AP (10/25) reported, “The U.S. is taking steps to ease sales of food and medicine to Iran amid stringent sanctions imposed on the country by the Trump administration.” The Treasury Department “says it has created a way to ensure humanitarian aid can continue despite the administration’s effort to isolate the Islamic Republic.” It also “said it would allow ‘permissible trade’ to support the Iranian people while maintaining efforts to deprive the Iranian government of the resources it needs to develop missiles and support militant activities around the Middle East.”

Federal Reserve

Fed Faces Tough Decision On Signals For Future Rate Cuts.

The Financial Times (10/27, Politi, Smith, Aplan, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports the Fed faces a difficult decision over whether to signal its intention to interrupt its recent monetary easing following what its widely expected third consecutive rate cut this week.

Fox Business (10/25, Henney, 1.73M) reported that Goldman Sachs believes the Fed “will likely cut interest rates next week for the third time this year...but the central bank may also signal that the current easing cycle is over.” Goldman, in a research note, estimated “a 95 percent chance of a modest reduction during the meeting.” The note added, “Strong signaling from Fed leadership indicates that the modest trade war de-escalation since September has not deterred them from completing a 75bp, 1990s-style ‘mid-cycle adjustment.’” However, “Goldman economists said they believe policymakers will tweak the Federal Open Market Committee’s post-meeting statement to make it slightly more hawkish — essentially paving the way to hold borrowing costs steady and putting an end to the series of cuts that began in July.”

Meanwhile, Bloomberg (10/27, Torres, Saraiva, 4.73M) reports that Fed Chair Jerome Powell's "disagreement with Wall Street over recession risks is backed up by data showing that much of the talk is concentrated in a few industries with big megaphones – manufacturing and banking." Powell "has repeatedly said that the wider U.S. economy is still in a good place," and he'll "likely do so again after a Fed meeting this week – at which it is widely expected to cut interest rates for the third-straight time – while signaling he doesn't see grounds for much more easing."

NY Fed Adds $77.3B To Financial Markets Through Repo Operation.

Reuters (10/25) reported the NY Fed on Friday "accepted $77.343 billion in bids from primary dealers at a repurchase agreement (repo) operation, a move intended to help maintain the federal funds rate within the target range." That amount "was lower than the $89.154 repos awarded on Thursday." The Wall Street Journal (10/25, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reported.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Otting Confident That Fintech Charter Will Be Affirmed On Appeal.

Law360 (10/27, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting "said Sunday that he believes his agency's power to institute its fintech charter will eventually be affirmed by the courts, despite a judgment against the agency less than a week ago in a suit challenging its ability to do so." Speaking at the Money 20/20 conference in Las Vegas, Otting said that Judge Victor Marrero of the US District Court for the Southern District of New York was wrong in siding with the New York Department of Financial Services in its suit against the OCC's fintech charter. Otting "confirmed that the OCC planned to appeal Judge Marrero's decision to the Second Circuit."

Meanwhile, in a piece about online marketplace Rakuten applying for an industrial loan charter, Payments Journal (10/25, Grotta) says the OCC's fintech charter "is going to be taken up by the Supreme Court."

Otting Speaks About Childhood, Career, CRA.

On Spectrum News 1 Los Angeles (10/26) Owning a Piece of America, Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting spoke about his childhood, the start of his career, and his role as head of the OCC. Otting said that modernizing the Community Reinvestment Act, something he's worked on since he was sworn in November 2017, is "the biggest thing that we can do for communities across America." The CRA annually produces around $400 billion per year, he continued, but "I think that could be $100 billion more."

OCC Closes Resolute Bank Of Maumee, OH.

American Banker (10/25, McCarthy, Davis, Subscription Publication, 31K) reported the OCC has closed Maumee, Ohio's Resolute Bank, appointing the FDIC as receiver. In a press release, the OCC said that it intervened after finding that the bank "had experienced substantial dissipation of assets and earnings due to unsafe and unsound practices."

Reverse Mortgage Daily (10/27, Clow, 43K) reports Buckeye State Bank in Powell, Ohio "absorbed all of Resolute's deposits, in addition to purchasing essentially all of Resolute's remaining assets." Resolute "is the third FDIC-insured institution to fail in the United States this year, according to the press release."

The Bowling Green \(OH\) Sentinel-Tribune (10/26, 14K) and Bankers Online (10/25) also reported.

Regulators Approve Blue Ridge-Virginia Community Merger.

The Charlottesville \(VA\) Daily Progress (10/27, reports, 94K) reports Blue Ridge Bank and Virginia Community Bank have received regulatory approval to merge. The OCC, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, and Virginia State Corporation Commission approved the merger, which remains subject to shareholder approval. The merger "will expand the Luray-based Blue Ridge Bank's presence in Central Virginia through the addition of Louisa-based Virginia Community Bank's seven branches and will add approximately $252 million in assets, $168 million in loans and $223 million in deposits to Blue Ridge."

Head Of Chase's Philadelphia Retail Expansion Vacating Role.

The Philadelphia Business Journal (10/25, Blumenthal, Subscription Publication, 860K) reported that just over a year after being hired to lead JPMorgan Chase's retail expansion into Pennsylvania, Delaware, and South Jersey, Michele Lawrence is transitioning out of the role. A spokesperson at Chase "said while Lawrence would be vacating that role, she has not left the bank and that a successor had yet to be identified." The Journal notes Chase "plans to add 50 branches in the region over the next five years," and has identified nearly 40 branch locations in Philadelphia, according to records with the OCC.

Robinhood COO Aims For Scale, But At A Reasonable Pace.

CNBC (10/26, Rooney, 3.62M) profiled Gretchen Howard, a former Google executive and COO at Robinhood. Howard's goal for the startup "is scale – but at a reasonable pace, she said." Robinhood co-CEO and co-founder Vlad Tenev said Howard was integral in "resetting" the company after a failed deposit product and "reinvesting in the right things to make sure what happened with checking and savings wouldn't happen again." CNBC noted that Robinhood "is still in the early innings of democratizing finance." Earlier this year, the company applied with the OCC for a national bank charter.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

“Republicans Escalate Their Strategy Of Voter Suppression.” The Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) editorializes that “mobile polling places that popped up on college campuses and other population-dense areas were ‘the most effective program we had,’ Dana DeBeauvoir, the chief elections official in Travis County, Tex., told the New York Times. That would explain why Texas Republicans shut them down.” As a result, “as Texans head to the polls, it will be substantially harder for college students to vote.” Republicans “throughout the country have embraced voter suppression as a strategy for party survival, and this is one more sad example.” The Post adds the GOP “should stake its future on offering policies and candidates that can attract voters – not on keeping potential voters away from the polls.”

“Cambodia’s Strongman Wants ‘Democracy’ Without Competition.” The Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) writes in an editorial, “Hun Sen, the authoritarian prime minister of Cambodia, is worried, and is using every trick in the book to threaten Sam Rainsy of the banned opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party, who plans to return to Cambodia from exile on Nov. 9.” While “Hun Sen dominates parliament and politics,” he “still shows signs of insecurity over the return of Mr. Rainsy, an exponent of democracy, returning for the first time in four years.” The Post adds that “not surprisingly, the prime minister would also prefer to be unbothered by independent journalism,” with an ongoing “trial of two journalists has moved from being unjust to being just farce.”

“Will Virginia’s Center Hold In Its Election?” The Washington Post (10/27, 14.2M) editorializes that “Virginia is a politically moderate state whose recent tilt toward Democrats – no Republican has won a statewide race in a decade – owes as much to the GOP’s accelerating estrangement from centrist politics as to the growing diversity of the Old Dominion’s electorate.” The Post goes on to deride the positions of several GOP candidates, which it deems extreme, and concludes “voters will determine the composition of the state legislature Nov. 5 and decide whether the center in Virginia will hold.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Lessons Of Baghdadi.” The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi’s death in a raid by US special forces will not end the threat posed by ISIS, but is nonetheless an important victory.

“The Air Force And Trump Turnberry.” A Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says the Air Force’s official review of Air Force crews’ overnight stays at the Trump Turnberry golf resort in Scotland shows that there was no corruption involved in the decision to use the facility. The Journal argues that the President’s critics, who painted the matter as a violation of the Emoluments Clause, owe him an apology.

“Amazon’s Seattle Tax Revolt.” A Wall Street Journal (10/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that while Amazon touts its progressive values, after Seattle’s progressive City Council imposed a $250 head tax for every employee at any business with $20 million or more in annual revenue, the company is working to elect a more business-friendly council. Amazon has given more than $1.4 million to the PAC run by the Seattle Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce, which has drawn fire from national Democrats. Council member Lorena González, whose seat is not up for reelection this year, plans to introduce a cap on individual contributions, and she wants to ban campaign contributions from companies with foreign shareholders, like Amazon. To the Journal, this is a sign that if they are not defeated, the far left will rig the system to prevent additional challenges.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

John Oliver: "Just time for a quick recap of the week. And we begin with Stupid Watergate 2, the least-wanted sequel ever, closely followed by every 'Pirates Of The Caribbean.' It was yet another week of damning revelations for the President."

John Oliver: "The information emerging in the Ukraine probe does not look good for the White House, which is perhaps why Trump's supporters spent the week attacking the impeachment process itself. ... And as if things couldn't get dumber, there was this amazing story that broke on Friday afternoon. ... Rudy Giuliani butt-dialed an NBC News reporter and could be heard saying completely non-suspicious-sounding things like, 'The problem is, we need some money.'"

John Oliver: "And the wild thing is, this isn't a one-off. Apparently, Giuliani butt-dials reporters all the time, so much so, one reporter tweeted, 'Everyone has a good Rudy butt-dial story.' Which begs the question, how is he doing this so much? It's genuinely difficult to butt-dial someone with a smartphone. Your butt has to unlock the phone, scroll through your contacts to find the reporter, and then dial. So how often does Rudy sit on his phone? And how wiggly is he when he sits? I don't know how this story gets any stupider, but I'm sure it will – just as sure as I am that Rudy is butt-dialing another reporter right now."

John Oliver: "Let's instead move on to the other ongoing fiasco of the week, Brexit, the term coined to describe Britain's exit from the EU that combines the words 'bad idea,' 'really bad idea,' 'extremely bad idea,' and 'toodle-oo!' It is the 'toodle-oo' part that lets you know Britain's involved; otherwise the word's just complete nonsense."

Small-Business Relief Rollout "Marred By Confusion" As SBA Platform Reportedly Crashes.

USA Today (4/6, Davidson, 10.31M) reports the Treasury Department and SBA "allowed firms with less than 500 employees to start applying for the loans on Friday, but the early rollout has been marred by confusion, technical glitches and banks' own loan volume limits."

Reuters (4/6, Schroeder) reports, "The platform the U.S. Small Business Administration uses to process relief loan applications from small businesses crashed for several hours Monday, according to three banking sources." The sources said "banks have been unable to submit applications to the $350 billion program since it crashed around noon on Monday, and the portal was still down later in the afternoon." However, in a separate article, Reuters (4/6, Schroeder) reports "it is 'not accurate' that banks were unable to submit small business relief loan applications after the Small Business Administration's portal crashed, according to a senior administration official." The unnamed official said, "SBA continues to process/approve/guarantee billions of dollars in loans and continues to add lenders to the system."

The Hill (4/6, Gangitano, 2.98M) reports the American Bankers Association said, following a meeting Sunday with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and other officials from Treasury and SBA, "SBA officials emphasized that they have been balancing security and speed in providing access to the systems that allow banks to make PPP loans."

Bloomberg (4/6, Niquette, 4.73M) reports the Independent Community Bankers of America "sent a letter to SBA and Treasury late Saturday night complaining about the technology and a 'myriad of unanswered questions and lack of clear instruction on how to complete loans through the SBA.'" The group "made several recommendations, including enhancing SBA systems."

Politico (4/6, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports, "As lenders continued to report issues, banks received word that the Fed was intervening to help backstop the program, as it has done across financial markets throughout the Covid-19 pandemic. The Fed announced that it planned to provide financing to banks that issue the loans." Politico says that over the past week, "small banks in particular urged the Fed and Treasury Department to come up with a mechanism to buy the loans off banks' books to help free up lending capacity."

Senators Push Mnuchin, Carranza To Address Small Business Relief Rollout Problems. The Boston Globe (4/6, Nanos, Leung, 972K) reports Massachusetts Sens. Elizabeth Warren (D) and Ed Markey (D) "submitted a letter to Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin Monday criticizing the rollout of the SBA loan plan, and expressing concern that the funds allocated in the Payroll Protection Program will be quickly depleted." The senators wrote, "As the program went live last week, issues with the program immediately became clear," citing reports of numerous delays at large banks. They add, "We urge you to move quickly to issue additional guidelines and clarifications to ensure that loans are disbursed quickly. ... The ability of small businesses to access this money in a matter of days could determine whether or not they will need to shut their doors to their employees and customers forever."

The Financial Times (4/7, Noonan, Armstrong, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports the letter was sent to Mnuchin and SBA head Jovita Carranza, and that Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) also wrote Mnuchin and Carranza on Saturday regarding problems with the loans.

Airlines Discuss Terms Of Bailout With Treasury Department.

The Washington (DC) Post (4/6, Aratani, Duncan, 14.2M) reports "more than a half-dozen US carriers," including American Airlines, United Airlines, Delta Air Lines, Southwest Airlines, JetBlue Airways, Alaska Airlines, and Spirit Airlines, have submitted applications for a portion of the $29 billion in grants for passenger airlines to be distributed by the Treasury Department. The Post says the grants do "not come without strings," as airlines would not be allowed to furlough workers until September 30, would not be allowed to issue dividends or buy back stock until the end of 2021, and they would be required to maintain service levels "as far out as 2022." The carriers "will now work with the Treasury Department to negotiate the terms of a possible deal." The Post says labor groups and Democratic lawmakers have suggested that airlines may choose to reject taking the funds allocated in the CARES Act if the Trump Administration places harsh conditions on taking the money.

RavnAir Files For Bankruptcy. Reuters (4/6, Shepardson) reports RavnAir, the largest regional carrier in Alaska, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection on Sunday, announcing that it was suspending all operations and laying off all of its employees. The airline said it "took these actions to ensure our airline has a future, and to give us time to 'hit pause'" while the airline seeks access to the airline grants awarded by the Treasury Department and "other sources of financial assistance that will allow us to weather the coronavirus pandemic and emerge successfully once it has passed." In a letter, RavnAir CEO Dave Pflieger said the airline was working to "resume the vital air service you depend on to get home to your families, to your businesses, to medical appointments, and to other duties that are essential to our communities and the state of Alaska."

Reuters (4/6, Shepardson, Rucinski) reports Alaska's congressional delegation, sent a letter to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin last week warning that many regional airlines, including RavnAir, "are in danger of bankruptcy and failure and could leave many of our rural and Alaska Native communities completely isolated." Sens. Lisa Murkowski (R) and Dan Sullivan (R) and Rep. Don Young (R) wrote that the "lack of air service could damage our other industries such as oil and gas, mining, seafood, and tourism."

Analyst: Boeing Stock Depends Entirely On Secretary Mnuchin.

Barron's (4/6, Root, 1.07M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin – "in particular – is key to the future success of Boeing stock," according to Citigroup analyst Jonathan Raviv. Raviv wrote, "We've had a slew of Boeing conversations in recent weeks with a wide swathe of investors, both equity and credit. ... Investing in BA has become a game of analyzing Steven Mnuchin. That's not a great place for fundamental analysts or investors." Raviv added, "The Treasury could require equity, left to the discretion of Secretary Mnuchin. So we have to wonder what the Secretary wants."

Kudlow: Bonds Could Be Issued To Pay For Coronavirus Response.

Reuters (4/6) reports that NEC Director Kudlow indicated on Monday that the White House is considering issuing bonds to fund the federal response to the coronavirus pandemic. According to Reuters, Kudlow "said this was a time to sell bonds to raise cash for coronavirus relief efforts and a 'war bond' was a great idea." Speaking to reporters at the White House, Kudlow said, "We're just looking at it ... let's see where it leads." Kudlow also said in a CNBC interview, "People calling us and emailing us and so forth. I know" Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "is looking very carefully at that."

The Hill (4/6, Samuels, 2.98M) quotes Kudlow as saying, "We've kicked this around before." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "and I and the President and others talked about selling long-term paper." The Washington Times (4/6, Boyer, 492K) reports similarly.

Bloomberg (4/6, Parker, 4.73M) reports it is an idea Mnuchin has "refrained from endorsing." According to the article, "Mnuchin generally advocates the traditional Treasury position that bond issuance should be 'regular and predictable.'" However, "his department is again considering the issuance of ultra-long-term U.S. debt instruments to help finance the stimulus."

Churches, "Other Faith-Based Organizations" Eligible For SBA COVID-19 Relief Loans.

NPR (4/6, Gjeltén, 3.12M) reports on its website, "In a development that could challenge the Constitution's prohibition of any law 'respecting the establishment of religion,' the federal government will soon provide money directly to U.S. churches to help them pay pastor salaries and utility bills." NPR says the "$350 billion for the Small Business Administration (SBA) to extend loans to small businesses facing financial difficulties as a result of the coronavirus shutdown orders" will include churches "and other faith-based organizations" that "are among the businesses that qualify for aid under the program, even if they have an exclusively religious orientation." The SBA said in a statement, "Faith-based organizations are eligible to receive SBA loans regardless of whether they provide secular social services. No otherwise eligible organization will be disqualified from receiving a loan because of the religious nature, religious identity, or religious speech of the organization." NPR adds, "In introducing the new SBA program, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said Pence and President Trump 'made sure' that churches would be included in the program."

IRS Asking Tax Professionals' Help To Inform Citizens Of Relief Payment Eligibility.

Law360 (4/6, Rosenberg, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports IRS Commissioner Chuck Rettig "has asked bar associations and other groups to help inform those who don't usually file tax returns about their eligibility for payments from the government to provide relief from the novel coronavirus pandemic." After the IRS "initially encouraged nonfilers to submit simple tax returns to receive their rebates, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said last week that Social Security recipients who don't file tax returns would be able to receive coronavirus relief payments without having to file additional tax information." However, "some lawmakers have said that doesn't go far enough. House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal, D-Mass., said Friday that the IRS should also automatically process payments to veterans and Supplemental Security Income recipients, many of whom lack the resources necessary to file tax returns."

LA Times: Mnuchin, Powell Work With Foreign Counterparts Is Rare Bright Spot Of Int'l Cooperation.

In an editorial, the Los Angeles Times (4/6, 4.64M) says President Trump "has made good – or rather, bad – on his campaign promise to put 'America First,' which in practice has often meant 'America alone.'" The Times argues his "insular approach to foreign policy – coupled with his early attempts to minimize the threat posed by COVID-19 – is undermining U.S. leadership in rallying the world to deal cooperatively with the pandemic." The Times admits, "To be fair, the U.S. has engaged with other nations on some issues related to the pandemic," adding that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "and Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome H. Powell have joined with other finance ministers and central bank officials in seeking to ameliorate the economic effects of the contagion."

NY Times: Navarro Has Been Handed The Power To Advance A Protectionist Trade Agenda.

The New York Times (4/6, Swanson, 18.61M) reports that Navarro "has been corporate America's biggest nemesis" for three years, "punishing multinational companies for moving jobs offshore by advocating tariffs and other trade barriers in pursuit of President Trump's 'America First' strategy." Now, as policy coordinator for the Defense Production Act, he "has been handed expansive authority over those multinational firms and their global supply chains." The Times calls it "a vast expansion of power for the 70-year-old Mr. Navarro, as well as a rare opportunity to advance the type of protectionist agenda that has endeared him to Mr. Trump." Navarro's "aggressive approach has not been confined to industry. He has played the antagonist within the Trump administration, clashing with more moderate economic advisers like Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin over trade issues."

Private Equity Maneuvers For Access To Stimulus Funds Amid Questions Of Administration Ties.

The Washington Post (4/6, Leonnig, O'Connell, Lee, 14.2M) reports, "The private-equity industry is pressing members of Congress and senior Trump administration officials, including President Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner, to help them gain access to billions of dollars of stimulus funds to protect their riskier investments." The "jockeying" by "private-equity firms to get a bigger piece of the stimulus windfall has put a spotlight on the numerous ties between wealthy industry figures and Trump and his family – raising questions about potential conflicts of interest as the Treasury Department writes the rules for handing out billions of dollars in loans and grants." According to the Post, "Some of the private-equity industry's most influential executives have long-standing ties to key members of the administration, including Kushner and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, a former investment banker." The Financial Times (4/6, Foroohar, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) comments on private equity's efforts in its "FT Swamp Notes" newsletter.

Election Assistance Commission Speeds Up Process To Get States Funding.

The Hill (4/6, Miller, 2.98M) reports the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) "is speeding up the process of sending recently appropriated funds to states to help bolster elections during the coronavirus pandemic." The EAC "announced late last week that it planned to send funding to states that they can use for measures such as boosting mail-in and absentee voting, along with hiring more poll workers and buying sanitization supplies, by the end of next week." EAC commissioners "noted that both the Treasury Department and the Office of Management and Budget had been assisting in the effort to get the money to states, as postponed primaries loom and state officials increasingly scramble to make preparations to allow the elections to continue."

Media Reports Highlight Coronavirus Task Force Members' Disagreement Over Anti-Malaria Drug.

Media reports highlight a disagreement among members of the White House Coronavirus Task Force over the efficacy of the malaria drug hydroxychloroquine in treating the virus. The disagreement is generally cast as causing a rift inside the task force as President Trump has touted the drug as what one report describes as a "miracle cure," and Defense Production Act policy coordinator Peter Navarro has made publicly made that case, while NIAID Director Fauci has advised caution and stressed there is insufficient data to prove the drug is effective. A number of reports highlight what is described as a heated discussion of the issue between Navarro and Fauci during a task force meeting on Saturday.

NBC Nightly News (4/6, story 5, 2:05, Holt, 8.63M) described "a raging controversy in the Trump Administration over how aggressively to recommend" the drug. The New York Times (4/6, Baker, Rogers, Enrich, Haberman, 18.61M) says Trump "has seized on the drug as a miracle cure," and while he "may ultimately be right," it "remains far from certain." The Times adds that his "assertiveness in pressing the case over the advice of advisers...has driven a wedge inside his coronavirus task force and has raised questions about his motives." Politico (4/6, Diamond, Cook, 4.29M) says "top health officials are increasingly unsettled" by Trump's "continued championing" of the drug "even as some of the president's political and policy advisers and outside allies cheer him on."

The AP (4/6, Miller, Riechmann) says Trump and other Administration officials on Monday "kept up their out-sized promotion" of hydroxychloroquine "even though scientists say more testing is needed before it's proven safe and effective against COVID-19." Navarro touted the drug "in television interviews a day after the president publicly put his faith in the medication to lessen the toll of the coronavirus pandemic." However, "medical officials warn that it's dangerous to be hawking unproven remedies, and even Trump's own experts have cautioned against it." The AP reports that "in a heated Situation Room meeting of the White House's coronavirus task force on Saturday, Navarro challenged [Fauci] over his concerns about recommending the drug based only on unscientific anecdotal evidence."

Politico (4/6, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that again Monday, Navarro "questioned the experience and medical judgment of...Fauci – dragging his reported dispute with the nation's top infectious diseases expert out of the White House Situation Room and onto cable news." In what Politico describes as a "fiery interview" on CNN's New Day, Navarro "appeared to confirm media accounts of his altercation with Fauci." Navarro said, "There was that discussion on Saturday, and if we didn't have disagreement and debate in the Trump administration, this administration would not be as strong as it is," Politico adds that "although Navarro has no medical experience, he went on to assert that 'doctors disagree about things all the time,' and forcefully defended his credentials as sufficient for him to weigh in on the scientific deliberation over the drug." USA Today (4/6, Morin, 10.31M) reports that Navarro said, "I let [Fauci] speak for himself...but I would have two words for you: second opinion. ... Doctors disagree about things all the time," while the Washington Examiner (4/6, Brest, 448K) quotes him as saying, "My qualifications in terms of looking at the science is that I'm a social scientist. I have a Ph.D., and I understand how to read statistical studies, whether it's in medicine, the law, economics, or whatever."

Navarro said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (4/6, 831K), "We have 29 million tablets of hydroxy in FEMA warehouses and the question before the group was shouldn't we surge that hydroxy into the hot zones, and the task force unanimously voted to do that with the proviso that this can have side effects and that it has to be dispensed not by the federal government but by the patient/doctor relationship." Navarro added that "the media is trying to blow it up as a big big debate, but I can tell you that within the room, the decision was a sound one and it was unanimous."

Reuters (4/6, Chiacu) reports that Fauci "and other top health advisers have argued there is not enough data from the limited studies that have been done to prove the drug is effective against COVID-19." While Navarro acknowledged that "he has no scientific background," he "said he believed the hydroxychloroquine studies done so far were convincing." Reuters says the disagreement "illustrated the tensions between the White House's scientific and health experts and other policymakers or advisers in the administration with no medical or research training, led by the president himself, who have been pushing the malaria drugs, chloroquine and hydroxychloroquine, for use during the coronavirus crisis." Trump "has made his opinion on the drug well known and personally pressed federal health officials to make them available to treat coronavirus, two sources have told Reuters."

The Washington Post (4/6, Rucker, Costa, McGinley, Dawsey, 14.2M) cites "allies" who said that "Trump's obsession with hydroxychloroquine stems from a place of desperation and an optimism that the drug will work, even if the science is not conclusive." The Post quotes "one person" as saying, "The President lives in a world of wishes and hope." The Post also quotes a "former senior administration official" who said, "It's the only thing anyone has held out as offering an immediate reprieve from what's become his greatest challenge – and political threat." This former official described Trump's "overwhelming desire for a silver bullet to make it all go away."

HUD Secretary Carson said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle, "The fact of the matter is, this is very promising and it's being used in a number of other countries. The observations are multiple. So it's very unlikely that this is a fluke. I agree that we need to do the science and we need to do the double-blind studies but we could be doing that simultaneously while we are utilizing this."

White House Coronavirus Task Force response coordinator Deborah Birx said on Fox News' Hannity (4/6, 535K), "I think we do a lot of drug use off label, physicians do all the time and I think that's why the President made it very clear that this is up to the physician and the patient and what the President has worked really hard on is making sure that the medication is available in pharmacies and hospitals around the United States, so physicians have the ability to make that choice. At the same time, there are rigorous clinical trials going on in both the WHO and NIH to look at this drug and other drugs that are under development."

Doctors Report Positive Results From Hydroxychloroquine. Townhall (4/6, Pavlich, 177K) reports that "doctors around the country" are using hydroxychloroquine "and seeing positive results." Townhall cites comments from doctors in Los Angeles, New York, New Jersey. Townhall also reports, "An international poll of thousands of doctors rated the Trump-touted anti-malaria drug hydroxychloroquine the best treatment for the novel coronavirus." Matt Gutman said on ABC World News Tonight (4/6, story 6, 1:40, Muir, 9.55M) that while "we've spoken to people across the country who believe that the drug contributed to their recovery," the "scientific community is cautioning us that it could take weeks or even months before studies actually prove that the drug is effective against COVID-19."

McAdams Says He Took Hydroxychloroquine During His Recovery From Coronavirus. The Washington Times (4/6, Sherfinski, 492K) reports Rep. Ben McAdams (D-UT) told Fox Business Monday that he took hydroxychloroquine during his recovery from the coronavirus. McAdams said, "I guess I don't know to say whether it helped or it didn't – I think we should be trying everything we can to develop those therapies that are going to help people bounce back." McAdams said that while he still felt "pretty awful" while he was taking the drug, "Maybe it stopped me from getting worse; maybe it shortened how long I was sick – I'm going to leave that to the scientists to determine."

Michigan Lawmaker Credits Hydroxychloroquine, Trump For Her Recovery From Coronavirus. The Detroit Free Press (4/6, Egan, 1.52M) reports that Michigan state Rep. Karen Whitsett (D) "is crediting hydroxychloroquine – and Republican President Donald Trump who touted the drug – for saving her in her battle with the coronavirus." Whitsett, "who learned Monday she has tested positive for COVID-19, said she started taking hydroxychloroquine on March 31, prescribed by her doctor, after both she and her husband sought treatment for a range of symptoms on March 18." She said she began to feel relief in "less than two hours." Whitsett also said that "Trump's comments helped in her case." She said, "It has a lot to do with the President...bringing it up. ... He is the only person who has the power to make it a priority." The Detroit News (4/6, Mauger, 825K) quotes Whitsett as saying, "This is really difficult not just for myself, but for thousands of others. ... The fact that he is paying attention really matters." Whitsett said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (4/6), "If President Trump had not talked about this, it would not be something that is accessible for anyone to be able to get right now. It would not even be possible. And I mean that honestly."

Trump tweeted his congratulations to Whitsett Monday evening. He wrote, "Congratulations to State Representative Karen Whitsett of Michigan. So glad you are getting better!"

Capito: Trump Should Let Healthcare Professionals "Take The Lead" On Coronavirus Response. The Hill (4/6, Carney, 2.98M) reports Sen. Shelley Moore Capito (R-WV) "said on Monday that President Trump should let healthcare officials within the administration take the lead on the response to the coronavirus." Capito told reporters that while it is "important" for Trump to speak to Americans, there must be a "consistent message." Capito said, "I think he probably would be better served, and maybe others would, when it's not used as the press conference for everything else, I think, I think he should...let the health professionals guide where we're gonna go. Dr. Fauci and Dr. Birx." The Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) reports Capito said Trump's daily news briefings about the outbreak sometimes go "off the rails a little bit, but you know, that's the way the President conducts business."

Grisham: Trump Spoke With Pharma, Biotech CEOs About Developments On Coronavirus Therapeutics. Reuters (4/6, Lambert) reports that White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham tweeted Monday that Trump hosted a call with "CEOs of pharmaceutical & bio-tech companies to discuss developments in therapeutics to fight the Coronavirus. ... We are working hard to tear down barriers, cut red tape, & encourage cooperation across private industries & government." The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Walker, Loftus, Hopkins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that according to Informa Pharma Intelligence, there are more than 140 experimental drug treatments and vaccines for the coronavirus in development around the world, 11 of which are in clinical trials.

Brzezinski Suggests Trump Has A "Financial Tie" To Hydroxychloroquine. Fox News (4/6, Flood, 27.59M) reports on its website that on MSNBC's Morning Joe Monday, "host Mika Brzezinski suggested President Trump has a 'financial tie' to hydroxychloroquine on Monday because he has repeatedly promoted the drug as a possible treatment for coronavirus." After co-host Joe Scarborough questioned why Trump has "pushed an unproven drug," Brzezinski said, "A lot of people would say, follow the money. There's got to be some sort of financial tie to someone, somewhere that has the President pushing this repeatedly."

India, Which Makes Almost Half Of US Hydroxychloroquine, Bans Its Export. Bloomberg (4/6, Du, 4.73M) reports that "nearly half the supply of hydroxychloroquine to the U.S. comes from makers in India, a flow that has now been abruptly stanching after the Asian nation banned exports of all forms of the malaria drug touted by...Trump as a 'game changer' for treating the coronavirus." According to Bloomberg, "India's export ban on the drug is aimed at ensuring it has enough supply for domestic use after" Trump's "endorsement sparked global stockpiling of the medication." Bloomberg says that "according to data compiled by Bloomberg Intelligence, 47% of the U.S. supply of the drug last year came from India makers. Only a handful of suppliers in the top 10 are non-Indian, such as Actavis, now a subsidiary of Israeli generics giant Teva Pharmaceutical Industries Ltd." And Bloomberg adds that "it's likely that some of their production facilities are nevertheless located in India, the biggest maker of generic drugs in the world."

FCC Rejects Group's Petition To "Censor" Trump's Coronavirus Briefings. The Federalist (4/6, Justice, 126K) reports that the FCC on Monday "rejected a request by the far-left media group 'Free Press' to censor" the President's news conferences. The group had petitioned the FCC "to constrain public access to updates on the federal response to the ongoing public health pandemic by mandating television disclaimers to the president and media figures who possess opposing political views from Free Press." The Washington Examiner (4/6, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that the FCC "said that there is a strong argument that broadcasters are serving the public interest by airing live coverage of news events such as the press briefings by Trump and his team of health experts."

Trump Says His Press Conferences Are "Vital." In a tweet Monday morning, President Trump retweeted a post from commentator Gayle Trotter, who quoted from one of her columns in which she wrote, "The pandemic has not changed the mainstream media's war against @realDonaldTrump As much as they try to leverage our current crisis to debilitate the president, their efforts continue to backfire" Trump wrote in his tweet, "Thank you Gayle. I only wish the public could fully understand how corrupt & dishonest so much of our Lamestream Media is. My Press Conferences are vital. They are reaching millions of people that are not being told the truth, & haven't been for years (Witch-Hunts, Fake News)!"

Four Proposals For Oversight Probe Of Pandemic Preparedness In Circulation. Politico (4/6, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that "a bipartisan traffic jam is forming to demand a painstaking investigation into the missteps and policy holes that led to a massive U.S. coronavirus outbreak." According to Politico, "Lawmakers are circulating at least four proposals in the House intended to establish a coronavirus commission that delves deeply into the government decision-making that failed to prevent the mass illness and death now wracking the country." Politico says that "though all four proposals are overwhelmingly similar...the backers are making competing cases for why their specific bills should advance. And the reactions they're generating have more to do with the identity of the sponsors than the substance of the measures, though Republican resistance could be an obstacle for any of the plans."

Ohio Lawmaker Says Trump's Hydroxychloroquine Comments Constitute Crimes Against Humanity. The Washington Free Beacon (4/6, Christenson, 78K) reports Ohio state Rep. Tavia Galonski (D) "said she will attempt to prosecute" the President for committing "crimes against humanity" for his suggestion that hydroxychloroquine could be used to treat coronavirus. After a White House press conference Sunday, Galonski tweeted, "I can't take it anymore. I've been to The Hague. I'm making a referral for crimes against humanity tomorrow. Today's press conference was the last straw. I know the need for a prosecution referral when I see one." After her tweet, the Ohio Capital Journal "interviewed Galonski...asking whether she seriously intended to follow through." She said, "Yes!" But, "when pressed, she seemed uncertain how to go about it."

Democrats Target Trump's Coronavirus Response. The Washington Post (4/6, Olorunnipa, Linskey, 14.2M) reports that as Democrats step up their "general-election campaign against the president, they have targeted his failure to act urgently to deflect the damage the coronavirus is wreaking over lives and the economy." As "ammunition," they are using "Trump's own comments, aired daily in the marathon coronavirus briefings where he commands center stage." Priorities USA Chairman Guy Cecil said, "It's important when you have a President who's literally just lying, misinforming, mismanaging, that you use the President's own words. ... And you help people understand that we are in this position now because the administration didn't take it seriously."

McDaniel: Democrats Exploiting Pandemic For Political Gain. The Washington Times (4/6, McLaughlin, 492K) reports RNC Chair Ronna McDaniel argued Monday that Democrats are seeking to exploit the coronavirus pandemic for "political gain." In an op-ed published on the Fox News website, McDaniel argued that calls from Democrats including Joe Biden and House Speaker Pelosi to expand mail-in voting options would "vastly expand opportunities for fraud and weaken confidence in our elections, but all Washington Democrats see is a potential benefit for their party. ... The Democrats' all-mail ballots proposal is a ruse to legalize ballot harvesting nationwide. ... Any person would be allowed to return an unlimited number of absentee ballots for voters, opening the door for political operatives to deliver ballots in bulk."

White House, Congressional Leaders Nearing Agreement On Need For New Relief Package.

The Washington Post (4/6, Werner, Debonis, 14.2M) reports "Congressional leaders and the White House are converging on the need for a new package of assistance to try and contain the coronavirus pandemic's economic devastation, fearful that a $2 trillion bailout law enacted last month will only have a limited effect." House Democrats are "eyeing a package of spending increases that would 'easily' cost more than $1 trillion," House Speaker Pelosi "told lawmakers Monday, according to two officials on the conference call who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss it." President Trump has "signaled support for some of the ideas Democrats back, such as expanded assistance to small business owners and new bailout checks for households." Meanwhile, Republican leaders have "also called for more corporate aid and money to boost the overwhelmed health care system."

White House And Congress Pull Back From Infrastructure In Next Relief Bill. The Washington Examiner (4/6, Crilly, 448K)

reports the White House is "scaling back expectations of a huge infrastructure bill to energize the coronavirus-crippled economy as focus returns to delivering money to struggling businesses and workers amid record unemployment increases." According to the article, the proposal "set up a possible clash" with Senate Majority Leader McConnell and "conservatives who have long questioned Trump's costly election infrastructure promises." Also, on Friday, "worse-than-expected employment numbers, with 6.6 million initial unemployment claims, saw [Pelosi] move her infrastructure plans on to the back burner in favor of more direct economic help for the worst affected."

Schumer Says Next Relief Bill Will Have To Be "Big And Bold" To Address "Huge" Problem. The Hill (4/6, Carney, 2.98M) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer "said on Monday that there will 'definitely' need to be a fourth coronavirus bill, which he said will force lawmakers to return to Washington." Schumer said, "Look, I believe we are going to definitely need to do a COVID four. There are many needs that are unmet. And the problem may be of greater magnitude than people thought a few weeks ago. And so I do think we have to come back relatively soon." Schumer added, "All I can tell you is I think we are definitely going to need a COVID four and I think it's going to have to be big and bold because the problem is so huge."

GOP Senators Say Because Of Logistical Issues, Next Relief Bill May Need Unanimous Consent. CQ Roll Call (4/6, Lesniewski, 154K) reports, "A pair of Senate Republican appropriators suggested Monday that it would be difficult to envision lawmakers returning to the Capitol for votes on the next round of coronavirus aid any time soon." Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) "indicated that any action taken in the immediate future may require consent of the entire Senate." Also, Sen. Shelley Moore Capito (R-WV) "highlighted the challenge of reconvening the Senate on schedule."

On the "CQ Budget" podcast posted on the website of CQ Roll Call (4/6, Shutt, 154K), David Lerman and Jennifer Shutt discussed "ongoing negotiations for a fourth aid package to address the health care and economic impacts of COVID-19." They analyzed Pelosi's proposal, where McConnell "wants additional funding to go, and the logistical difficulties of bringing lawmakers back to Washington to vote."

Hawley Splits From GOP Senators With Call For Ambitious Intervention Plan. Politico (4/6, Everett, 4.29M) reports that while "most Senate Republicans are taking a cautious approach to the next step of Congress' coronavirus response," Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) is "pitching far-reaching proposals, including the federal government directly financing businesses to keeps millions of workers on their payrolls – part of what he calls a 'survival then surge' strategy in the face of a sputtering economy and dozens of state stay-at-home orders." Hawley is "one of the first Republicans to push a major new add-on to Congress' already extraordinary relief effort, and he's fighting an uphill battle with his guarded colleagues." However, "the early maneuvering is a hint of the debate to come in what was once a budget slashing party that must now weigh just how big to go in the face of a terrifying crisis."

Trump Nominates White House Lawyer To Oversee Coronavirus Relief Funds.

The Daily Caller (4/6, Dato, Rodgers, 716K) reports President Trump nominated Brian Miller on Monday to serve as the Special Inspector General for Pandemic Recovery, "a new position with the Treasury Department with oversight powers into the government's coronavirus response." Miller currently serves as Special Assistant to the President and Senior Associate Counsel in the Office of White House Counsel. Aides for Senate Majority Leader McConnell "confirmed they had received the nomination but did not elaborate when asked about a potential timeline for a confirmation vote."

Small Business Aid Program Beseet By Technical Problems For Fourth Day.

Reuters (4/6, Schroeder, Price) reports the "$349 billion small-business rescue program entered its fourth day on Monday, plagued by ongoing technology and processing problems that are delaying disbursements to businesses hurt by the novel coronavirus, according to industry groups, bankers and an email seen by Reuters." Lenders, flooded with "thousands of loan applications, struggled to access the government's technology system for processing the paperwork over the weekend, while that paperwork also changed more than once, the sources said." Over the weekend, the Independent Community Bankers of America "complained to the Treasury and SBA about banker frustration with 'failed technology' and 'massive delays' its members were experiencing with the SBA platform, which was not designed to process the massive program."

SBA Acknowledges Issues With Loan Application Process. The Washington Times (4/6, Boyer, 492K) reports the Small Business Administration "acknowledged to banks Monday in an email obtained by The Washington Times that there are frustrating flaws in its system for handling loan applications for distressed small businesses, even as the White House and lawmakers considered a second round of massive aid for companies." An email from SBA regional offices to lenders said, "We know that your efforts have been frustrated with system issues, policy questions and slower than usual responses."

WSJournal: Lawmakers Need To Fix Program. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Congress put the Small Business Administration in a difficult position, giving the agency little guidance in how to dole out $350 billion in loans to millions of small businesses in a relatively short period of time. The Journal says lawmakers should fix problems in the program in order to speed up loan approvals and save businesses.

NYTimes Analysis: US "Nowhere Close To Reopening The Economy."

Under the headline "U.S. Is Nowhere Close To Reopening The Economy, Experts Say," Jim Tankersley of the New York Times (4/6, Tankersley, 18.61M) writes, "It is still very early in the U.S. effort to snuff a lethal pandemic by shutting down much of the economy," and "essentially, economists say, there won't be a fully functioning economy again until people are confident that they can go about their business without a high risk of catching the virus." Tankersley adds, "Interviews with more than a dozen economists, many of whom are veterans of past presidential administrations, reveal broad consensus on the building blocks the economy needs – but does not yet have – to begin the slow process of restoring normalcy in the American economy."

USDA Urged To Ease Food Stamp Restrictions.

The AP (4/6, Galvan, Khalil) reports that "buying groceries online – which many Americans are doing to drastically reduce how often they leave their homes – is only open to SNAP recipients in six U.S. states," and "now, state governments... are imploring the U.S. Department of Agriculture to make the program more flexible and easier to access." The AP says "the calls have even come from conservative states where lawmakers have tried to reduce or limit food aid." According to the AP, Arizona Gov. Doug Ducey (R) "has asked the agency to waive interview requirements for applicants, allow families to purchase hot meals, waive work requirements for some and enact other changes that would help families deal with the economic fallout of the pandemic." Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf (D) has "urged the federal government to expand a pilot program launched in New York and Washington state that allows people to use their debit-style benefit cards to order online groceries."

Pandemic Affecting US Meat Production.

The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Bunge, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the pandemic is slowing and temporarily halting US meat production at some facilities, as sickness and fear sideline workers. Workers' concerns over infection risks have led to walkouts and complaints, while an increasing number of positive cases have resulted in some meat companies scaling back operations.

Study: Florida, Nevada May Be Hit Hardest By Economic Downturn.

Reuters (4/6, Schneider) reports a newly released study by Oxford Economics predicts Maine, Nevada, and Vermont will be "among the states most vulnerable to the economic shock being caused by the pandemic," with Florida "the only heavily populated state near the top of the list." Oxford economists found "states such as New York and California that have so far had the heaviest COVID-19 case loads may actually be among the more economically resilient." Oxford ranked the 50 states and the District of Columbia "using 10 measures its economists felt could make a local economy more vulnerable, including the share of the population over 65, dependence on retail sales, and the importance of the tourist industry."

Airbnb Raises $1B In New Funding Amid Pandemic.

The New York Times (4/6, Griffith, 18.61M) reports Airbnb said Monday "that it had raised $1 billion in new funding as it grapples with devastation from the coronavirus pandemic." The private equity firm Silver Lake and the investment firm Sixth Street Partners "led the investment, which was a mixture of equity and debt." In a statement Airbnb said, "The new resources will support Airbnb's ongoing work to invest over the long term in its community of hosts who share their homes and experiences."

Many Millennials On Shaky Financial Footing As They Face Their First Economic Crisis.

The New York Times (4/6, Popper, 18.61M) reports young adults are "facing what is, for most of them, the first serious economic crisis of their lives," and "by most measures, they are woefully unprepared." Millennials, "overloaded with credit card and student debt, and underrepresented in the housing and stock markets," have "entered this uncertain period with significant obligations and few resources." According to the article, "the sudden disappearance of paychecks, combined with a wide array of monthly debt payments and the declines in any investments, is forcing some millennials to take desperate measures," such as pulling funds "out of 401(k) retirement accounts to pay for rent."

Progressives Want Biden To Blame Trump For Recession Caused By Pandemic.

Politico (4/6, Siders, Schneider, 4.29M) reports that the economy had "looked like the one thing that could overcome Donald Trump's stubbornly low approval ratings and carry him to a second term. ... But now that the coronavirus has laid waste to the surging stock market and low unemployment, Democrats are discovering another obstacle – framing a coherent economic argument that all the party's factions can rally around." According to Politico, "It's already become a source of friction within the Democratic Party, even as some major Democratic outside groups begin pummeling Trump for the economic fallout of the pandemic." Politico says the party's "left flank" is "increasing pressure on Joe Biden... to adopt more progressive economic policies" as "activists accuse Trump of prioritizing corporate America over low-wage workers." Politico reports that "many moderate Democrats are leery of drawing such distinctions, training their criticism of Trump solely on his initial mishandling of the pandemic."

Dimon: Recession Exacerbated By "Bad Planning And Management." Politico (4/6, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports that JPMorgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon, in an annual letter to shareholders that was released on Monday, "warned of a coming deep recession with financial shocks similar to the 2008 Wall Street meltdown, after poor planning" by the US before the COVID-19 pandemic. According to Politico, Dimon "took a veiled swipe at the Trump administration and other U.S. leaders for failing to prepare for the outbreak. He said the pandemic 'is only one example of the bad planning and management that have hurt our country.'" Reuters (4/6) reports that JPMorgan "will extend benefits to customers hit hard by the health crisis, by introducing measures such as waivers for late fees and a 90-day grace period for mortgage and auto loan payments, according to the letter."

Yellen: GDP Will Decline By "At Least 30 Percent." Politico (4/6, Ward, 4.29M) reports that former Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen said on Monday, "Other sectoral indicators, daily credit card data, other data that we have, just showed a dramatic decline in economic activity. You know, probably for the second quarter at an annual rate, we're going to be looking at a decline of GDP of at least 30 percent, and I've seen far higher numbers."

Carson Says Economy Will Bounce Back After Virus Threat Passes. HUD Secretary Carson said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle, "The fundamentals of the economy are very strong. We just have to bridge this gap and we will be able to get right back to having our strong economy after this is over and we know that this, too, will pass."

Russia, Saudi Arabia Said To Be Closing In On Oil Deal.

The Washington Times (4/6, Meier, 492K) reports Russia and Saudi Arabia "are 'very, very close' to a deal to cut oil production and settle the oil price war that has rocked global markets, the head of Russia's sovereign wealth fund RDIF said Monday." Russian Direct Investment Fund CEO Kirill Dmitriev told CNBC Monday that "the whole market understands that this deal is important and it will bring lots of stability, so much important stability to the market, and we are very close."

Brouillette: Russian And Saudi Production Hikes Undermined The US Shale Industry. Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (4/6), Energy Secretary Brouillette was asked about talks between the governments of Russia and Saudi Arabia about a potential deal to end their ongoing oil production war. Brouillette said, "I think what they're going to do is meet later in the week. We're not parties to the OPEC conversation, if you will, not in a direct way. But our understanding in conversations with both minister in Saudi Arabia and the minister in Russia is they're going to get together later this week and hopefully end this disagreement that started perhaps two or three weeks ago in the last OPEC meeting."

Brouillette: "It's A Great Time To Fill" The Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (4/6), Brouillette was asked if the federal government can do anything to boost the oil industry as it deals with the recent precipitous drop in the price of crude. Brouillette said, "We looked at this week some of the tools that we have available to us in the US government. One of those is the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, and we've made available that storage to this particular industry. What happens in the oil business, when you're producing oil you have to either use it or you have to store it. Because demand is down, storage becomes the only option. We have approximately 77 million barrels left in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve and we're making that available to the industry."

Cisco Denied Same Tariff Exemption Apple Received Last Year.

Bloomberg (4/6, Leonard, King, 4.73M) reports under the headline "Trump Risks U.S. Jobs While Saving Apple's At Austin Factory" that though President Trump last fall exempted Apple "from tariffs levied on components it imports from China" that are used at a Texas plant, other companies like Cisco "didn't receive the same treatment. Now jobs related to the manufacture of its products are at risk." Last July, Cisco "asked the government to exempt the company's power supplies for U.S.-made servers and switches from the same 25% tariff. ... After months of being stuck in the process, Cisco was told March 5 that its application for the tariff exemption was denied."

Coronavirus Model Cited By White House Now Projects Fewer Deaths By August.

Breitbart (4/6, Leahy, 673K) reports, "The Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation (IHME) model cited by the White House Coronavirus Task Force lowered its projections of coronavirus deaths in the United States by August 4 to 81,776, down more than ten percent from the 93,765 projected on April 1." The model "also lowered projections of the number of states that will not have enough regular or ICU hospital beds to admit all identified coronavirus patients at the peak in their states from 37 in the April 1 projection to 20 in Monday's projections."

The AP (4/6, Long, Peltz, Hinnant) says the model "relies on much more robust data from Italy and Spain and from hospitals." Guy Benson of Townhall (4/6, 177K) calls the update "good news," writing, "It looks like real progress is being made." President Trump tweeted, "LIGHT AT THE END OF THE TUNNEL!"

The Washington Examiner (4/6, Halaschak, 448K) reports NIAID Director Fauci and White House Coronavirus Task Force response coordinator Deborah Birx "expressed guarded optimism about America's ability to reduce the death toll from the coronavirus pandemic" on Monday. Fauci said, "I don't accept that we have to have 100,000 to 200,000 deaths. I think we can really bring that down." Birx "also expressed hope at the briefing, saying she 'doesn't accept' that the United States is resigned to those numbers and that the nation can save lives by continuing the measures in place."

Birx said on Fox News' Hannity (4/6, 535K), "The American people are following the Presidential guidelines, social distancing, not gathering in groups over 10. ... We know this is a very transmittable virus, and having all Americans pull together in this moment of great need as a nation is really inspirational."

Verma: "We Are Going To See An Increase" In Deaths. CMS Administrator Verma said on KTSA-AM San Antonio (4/6, 3K), "Unfortunately, we are going to see an increase in the number of deaths. ... That is really based on what happened two or three weeks ago. ... That being said, it is important that everybody really double down on those efforts on social mitigation, 30 days to slow the spread so that we don't see more of this."

HHS IG Report Confirms Hospitals Face Testing, Equipment Shortages.

The Washington Post (4/6, Goldstein, 14.2M) reports the HHS Inspector General "is corroborating warnings by governors and front-line health-care workers that hospitals' ability to combat the coronavirus pandemic is being impeded by shortages of tests, protective gear, staff and space, as well as inconsistent government advice." The New York Times (4/6, Kaplan, Thomas, 18.61M) reports, "Testing availability remains a signature failure of the battle against the coronavirus in the United States, despite President Trump's boast last week that he got a rapid test and results within minutes."

The Los Angeles Times (4/6, Wilber, 4.64M) says the IG report, the first public federal report "on the state of the nation's hospitals amid the coronavirus pandemic," was "based on hundreds of interviews of administrators at 323 medical centers coast-to-coast between March 23-27." The HHS inspector general "found that hospital administrators were particularly frustrated by the lack of testing." Some administrators "noted they had not received any medical equipment from the federal government's Strategic National Stockpile."

On the CBS Evening News (4/6, story 5, 1:30, O'Donnell, 5.86M), Weijia Jiang said the "scathing new report reveals hospitals nationwide are already struggling with widespread shortages of critical equipment. One received two shipments of protective gear from FEMA that had expired ten years ago. Another got 1,000 masks, half of which were for children and unusable for adult staff."

The AP (4/6, Alonso) reports that "three out of four U.S. hospitals surveyed are already treating patients with confirmed or suspected COVID-19, according to" the report "that finds hospitals expect to be overwhelmed as cases rocket toward their projected peak." The report "warns that different, widely reported problems are feeding off each other in a vicious cycle."

Trump Calls ABC's Karl A "Third-Rate Reporter." The Daily Caller (4/6, Morefield, 716K) reports that during Monday's coronavirus task force news conference, the President called ABC's Jonathan Karl a "third-rate reporter." The exchange came after Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir finished addressing the HHS IG report. Trump asked Karl, "How long has that person been in government?" Karl said she has served in the "previous administration," and Trump "sarcastically" replied, "Oh, I see. You didn't tell me that, Jon. ... See, there's a typical fake news deal. ... You're a third-rate reporter, and what you just said is a disgrace."

Trump Says 3M Will Produce 166.5M Masks.

Politico (4/6, Diamond, Lim, 4.29M) reports President Trump said Monday that 3M "would produce 166.5 million masks over the next three months, cementing a commitment from a company the administration had blamed for exacerbating a shortage for health workers responding to the coronavirus pandemic." The President said, "We have reached an agreement, a very amicable agreement, with 3M. The 3M saga ends very happily."

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (4/6, DePass, 1.04M) reports Trump last week "attacked 3M, saying it was 'going to pay' for its business practices, which involved continuing to export some mask supplies to Canada and Latin America."

Cook Says Apple Will Make 1M Face Shields Each Week. The Washington Times (4/6, Lovelace, 492K) reports Apple CEO Tim Cook said Monday that the company "will manufacture and ship 1 million face shields each week to health care workers fighting the coronavirus outbreak" in the US. Cook said in a video, "We've launched a company-wide effort, bringing together product designers, engineering, operations and packaging teams and our suppliers to design and produce and ship face shields for health workers. Our first shipment was delivered to Kaiser Hospital facilities in the Santa Clara Valley this past week and the feedback from doctors was very positive." Breitbart (4/6, Nolan, 673K) reports, "The company has already donated 20 million N95 masks to governments and hospitals."

Trump: Cruise Ship Passengers Allowed To Disembark "When Appropriate."

President Trump tweeted Monday morning, "For humanitarian reasons, the passengers from the two CoronaVirus stricken cruise ships have been given medical treatment and, when appropriate, allowed to disembark, under strict supervision. Very carefully done. People we're dying & no other countries would allow them to dock!"

Trump Says He Had "Friendly Conversation" With Biden About Coronavirus Monday.

The Hill (4/6, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports in a brief item that President Trump "said Monday that he had a 'friendly' and 'warm' conversation" with Joe Biden about the coronavirus outbreak. Trump said, "He gave me his point of view and I fully understood that. We just had a very friendly conversation. It was really good, really nice. I appreciate his calling." Fox News (4/6, Singman, 27.59M) reports on its website that the call came after Biden "offered [last week] to have a phone call with Trump directly to discuss a strategy to combat coronavirus."

Weijia Jiang said in a brief CBS Evening News (4/6, story 7, 0:20, O'Donnell, 5.86M) report that Trump "described [the] conversation as warm and friendly." The New York Times (4/6, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports, "One person familiar with the discussion described it as mutually respectful, saying it lasted between five and 10 minutes and focused solely on the virus."

Earlier, Politico (4/6, Oprysko, 4.29M) reported that in a Monday morning tweet, Trump "appeared to suggest" that Biden "had ulterior motives for suggesting Democrats may need to hold their nominating convention virtually because of the coronavirus pandemic." Trump tweeted, "Joe Biden wanted the date for the Democrat National Convention moved to a later time period. Now he wants a 'Virtual' Convention, one where he doesn't have to show up. Gee, I wonder why? Also, what ever happened to that phone call he told the Fake News he wanted to make to me?"

Georgia, South Dakota Say They Did Not Get Biden Campaign's Offer To Assist. The New York Post (4/6, Bowden, 4.57M)

reports, "In the early hours of Monday morning, Joe Biden's campaign sent an email to state leaders offering to connect them with desperately needed coronavirus resources." But "at least two states with Republican governors, South Dakota and Georgia," said they "never got the email, while one governor's office said the campaign's efforts to insert themselves in the pandemic was only making their jobs harder."

Obama Endorses Warren's Coronavirus Framework. Politico (4/6, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports former President Obama on Monday "offered high praise" for Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), endorsing her "extensive framework for how to jump-start the economy once the coronavirus pandemic recedes." Obama tweeted, "As she often does, @SenWarren provides a cogent summary of how federal policymakers should be thinking about the pandemic in the coming months." Obama linked to a Vox interview in which Warren "discussed her multiple plans to address the global pandemic and its economic fallout."

Trump Asks Reporter If She Works For Chinese Government.

The Daily Caller (4/6, Ross, 716K) reports that the President asked a reporter Monday if she was working for the Chinese government after the reporter "asked a question about medical supplies that Beijing has provided" the US. The reporter, "who said she was with Phoenix TV, a Hong Kong-based outlet sympathetic to Beijing, began her question by noting that the Chinese government and companies like Huawei and Alibaba have donated medical supplies and equipment to the U.S. to handle coronavirus pandemic." Trump said, "It's a statement more than a question." When the reporter asked, "Are you cooperating with China," Trump replied, "Who are you working for, China? ... Do you work for China, or are you with a newspaper? Who are you with?"

As Navy Chief Apologizes To Crozier, Trump Says He May Move To Settle Dispute.

USA Today (4/6, Brook, 10.31M) reports "the acting Navy secretary disparaged the former captain of the USS Theodore Roosevelt, calling him 'too naive or too stupid' to command the aircraft carrier stricken with COVID-19, before issuing a remarkable apology taking back the insults." Axios (4/6, Falconer, 521K) says Acting Navy Secretary Thomas Modly said last night, "Let me be clear, I do not think Captain Brett Crozier is naive nor stupid. I think, and always believed him to be the opposite. ... Captain Crozier is smart and passionate. I believe, precisely because he is not naive and stupid, that he sent his alarming email with the intention of getting it into the public domain in an effort to draw public attention to the situation on his ship. I apologize for any confusion this choice of words may have caused ... [and for] any pain my remarks may have caused." The Washington Examiner (4/6, Halaschak, 448K) reports the apology came "amid a torrent of criticism" over his earlier remarks.

On ABC World News Tonight (4/6, story 7, 1:50, Muir, 9.55M), Martha Raddatz reported, meanwhile, that the President "has been critical of...Crozier," but said yesterday "he's going to look into all of this, saying the captain's career has been very good before this and he doesn't want to destroy somebody for having a bad day." The Washington Times (4/6, Wolfgang, 492K) also reports "Trump said Monday he is 'going to get involved' in settling" the "heated dispute." Said Trump, "I've heard very good things about the gentleman, both gentlemen. ... I may just get involved ... You have two good people and they're arguing. And I'm good, believe it or not, at settling arguments." The Washington Examiner (4/6, Dibble, 448K) quotes Trump as saying, "He's the captain of a ship. He's a very important person of a very expensive ship, a nuclear-powered ship. He shouldn't be writing letters like that. But it happens. Sometimes I'll write a letter that I'll say 'I wish I didn't send it.' Not too often, but it happens."

The New York Times (4/6, Ismay, Ziezulewicz, 18.61M) reports that Modly had "excoriated the fired commander of the U.S.S. Theodore Roosevelt to its crew...amid a coronavirus outbreak among their ranks." The Times adds that "in a profane and defensive address that one crew member described in an interview as 'whiny, upset, irritated, condescending,' Modly took repeated shots at the integrity...Crozier, who was removed from command last week." The CBS Evening News (4/6, story 6, 0:30, O'Donnell, 6.03M) showed Modly saying, "He was 'A,' too naive, or too stupid to be a commanding officer of a ship like this. The alternative is that he did this on purpose."

The Washington Post (4/6, Lamothe, 14.2M) reports that "a Navy official, speaking on the condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the issue, said there 'is no official transcript' of Modly's remarks." Said the official, "His remarks were intended to be private, between the Secretary and each member of the crew." Politico (4/6, O'Brien, 4.29M) indicates, meanwhile, that Modly "said on Monday he stands by 'every word' he said to the crew." Modly released a statement reading: "The spoken words were from the heart, and meant for them. I stand by every word I said, even, regrettably any profanity that may have been used for emphasis." Rep. Elaine Luria (D-VA), "a retired Navy officer who represents the Norfolk area, called for [Defense Secretary] Esper to oust Modly over his remarks to sailors aboard the Roosevelt." Likewise, Sen. Tim Kaine (D-VA) "slammed Modly on Monday over the Navy leader's criticism of the captain. 'Based on the transcript I've read, Secretary Modly's comments were completely inappropriate and beneath the office of the Secretary of the Navy,' Kaine said in a statement."

Reuters (4/6, Ali, Stewart) reports that according to an unidentified "US official," Modly's remarks "angered the crew, who were already upset at his surprise decision on Thursday to relieve...Crozier of his command." Reuters adds, "One U.S. official...said military officials had recommended against firing Crozier, including Chief of Naval Operations Admiral Michael Gilday, arguing that it was better for an investigation to be complete. The official said it did not appear that Trump spoke with Modly before the firing, but Modly was made aware that the White House wanted Crozier to be relieved of his command."

The AP (4/6, Baldor, Burns) also reports on the "extraordinary broadside punctuated with profanity," and USA Today (4/6, Brook, 10.31M) that Modly "disparaged the former captain of the USS Theodore Roosevelt." The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Craymer, Kesling, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Washington Times (4/6, Glenn, 492K) and Fox News (4/6, Wallace, 27.59M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

In Remarks To Crew, Navy Chief Also Criticizes Biden. The New York Times (4/6, Ismay, Ziezulewicz, 18.61M) reports that Modly, in his remarks to the USS Theodore Roosevelt crew, "eventually injected partisan political tones into the address by attacking" Joe Biden, who has "repeatedly criticized Crozier's removal."

Duckworth: Trump Should Not Be Called A "Wartime President" Until He Starts Acting Like One.

In an op-ed for USA Today (4/6, 10.31M), Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) writes that President Trump recently "crowned himself a 'wartime president,'" but "his actions have been tantamount to sending his own troops into battle without body armor or a single weapon." Duckworth accuses Trump of wasting precious time "denying the gravity of the situation, telling lies and stoking xenophobia, preying on our worst instincts in a way that's catapulted us ever closer to a worst-case scenario situation when we once upon a time had an opportunity to minimize the risks this pandemic posed to our nation." Duckworth concludes "it's time for Trump to prove that he will make the kinds of choices that actually help the people he was elected to serve – the people this virus is killing every hour he fails to follow the advice of public health experts and actually do the right thing."

White House Regularly Testing Officials In Close Proximity To Trump, Pence.

NBC Nightly News (4/6, story 4, 0:40, Holt, 8.63M) reported, "The White House is signaling they are not making any changes to better protect the President at this point." White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham told NBC, "We're very confident in the protocols the White House has in place." The Administration noting the President has tested negative twice already. White House doctors are doing regular testing for officials in close proximity to the President and Vice President. President Trump has acknowledged it can be hard to keep a distance from Vice President Pence, but stresses they're both healthy."

Adams: New Orleans, Michigan, Southern Florida Could Be Next Hot Spots.

Asked on the CBS Evening News (4/6, story 8, 2:45, O'Donnell, 5.86M) where the next COVID-19 hot spots will be, Surgeon General Adams said, "We know New Orleans has not hit their peak yet. They're a hot spot. We know that Michigan is really struggling, particularly in the Detroit area. We know that southern Florida...is a hot spot. From a supply point of view, we sent a lot of our supplies and resources to New York. Once they hit their peak, they will be redeployed to other areas. We ultimately can't afford to have 15, 20, 30 hot spots at once, because that could overwhelm our ability to be able to respond."

The Washington Times (4/6, Howell, Sherfinski, 492K) reports, "Coronavirus deaths appeared to be leveling off in New York, Italy and Spain, but the White House told America to keep its foot on the pedal to avoid squandering its gains, as U.S. deaths crossed the somber milestone of 10,000 on Monday." Members of the coronavirus task force "said places such as New York City, neighboring New Jersey and Detroit are turning the corner even as they reel from mounting death tolls. Other places in the U.S. may peak in the coming weeks, though officials are hopeful their social-distancing techniques are working as companies race to develop drug treatments."

Wilkie Says VA Has Been Preparing Since Early February.

VA Secretary Wilkie said on WHKT-AM Norfolk, VA (4/6) that the VA has "been preparing since the first week of February in a way that the rest of the country wasn't, at least in the private medical sector. We have been providing those services to veterans and that allows us to fulfill our fourth mission, which is...where we have excess capacity, we can provide a bridge between the federal government and states and localities." Wilkie was also interviewed on WFLA-AM Tampa Bay, FL (4/6, 8K).

Severino: Treatment Decisions Must Be Based On "Best Objective Medical Evidence."

HHS Office for Civil Rights Director Roger Severino said on WHAM-AM Rochester, NY (4/6, 8K) that his office is "here to make sure that nobody is left behind. ... We enforce our civil rights when things are calm and when things are put to the test. We can't forget the fundamental principles that we don't stereotype people. We don't put people at the back of the line because of disabilities. We don't take into account so-called quality-of-life factors. ... Any decision must be based on the best objective medical evidence." Severino was also interviewed by American Family Radio (4/6).

NYTimes Analysis: "Hybrid" PPE Distribution System Causing Confusion And Frustration.

The New York Times (4/6, Kanno-Youngs, Nicas, 18.61M) reports that after pushing states "for weeks...to procure their own protective gear, like masks, gloves, ventilators and face shields," the Administration is now working "to create a hybrid system of distribution – divided between the federal government, local officials and private health care companies" – that "has led to new confusion, bordering on disarray, and charges of confiscation." Colorado Gov. Jared Polis (D) said on CNN, "Either be in or out, folks. Either you're buying them and you're providing them to the states and you're letting us know what we're going to get and when we're going to get them, or stay out and let us buy them."

WPost: Administration Sending "Mixed Messages" During Pandemic. President Trump and Administration officials are sending

"mixed messages," an editorial by the Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) says, "at a time when public cooperation is desperately needed to blunt the disease" and "clarity is essential." In the Post's view, "the reason for the confusion is no mystery: Mr. Trump will not consistently defer to experts, and his officials fear crossing him." The editorial concludes, "That is no way to defeat a pandemic."

African Americans Account For Disproportionate Number Of COVID-19 Deaths.

Reuters (4/6, Wolfe) reports that "early data from U.S. states shows African Americans are more likely to die from COVID-19, highlighting longstanding disparities in health and inequalities in access to medical care." The CBS Evening News (4/6, story 3, 2:10, O'Donnell, 6.03M) reported, "In Illinois alone, more than 40 percent of those who have died are African Americans, even though only 15 percent of the population is black." CBS' Adriana Diaz added, "African Americans account for 41 percent of COVID deaths in Michigan, though only 14 percent of residents. In Chicago, black residents represent 72 percent of deaths but just 30 percent of the population."

The Washington Post (4/6, Williams, 14.2M) reports that "a civil rights group and hundreds of doctors are calling on the federal government to release race and ethnicity data on infections and deaths" from the pandemic, stating that it "is affecting African Americans at a disproportionate rate. The information is necessary to 'better inform a robust public health response in the Black community' and to 'ensure COVID-19 tests are not being administered or withheld in a racially discriminatory manner,' says a letter" sent to HHS Secretary Azar from the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law.

Milwaukee Responding To Racial Disparity In Casualty Numbers. The Washington Post (4/6, Samuels, 14.2M) reports residents "in African American communities ravaged by COVID-19...are wondering what they might do to soften the virus's deadly blow." In Milwaukee, "the city's mayor, Tom Barrett, said officials are trying to address the disparity." Barrett "said that the county was quick to identify the trend, as one of the few jurisdictions in the United States collecting data related to race. Residents there are now tested at nearly twice the rate of the city's majority-white areas."

Chicago Mayor Takes Steps To Address "Public Health Red-Alarm" In Racial Disparity. The Chicago Sun-Times (4/6, Spielman, 875K) reports Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot on Monday "outlined a sweeping plan to bridge a racial divide tied to the coronavirus pandemic that mirrors the life expectancy gap between black and white Chicagoans: 72% of city residents who have died from the virus are African American." Health Commissioner Allison Arwady pointed "to the higher incidence of chronic diseases among African Americans and to unequal access to health care, healthy food choices and safe, walkable streets." Lightfoot "declared a 'public health red alarm' that calls for attacking the problem on multiple fronts."

US Death Toll From Coronavirus Passes 10,000.

The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Calfas, Ping, Kostov, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the US death toll from coronavirus has passed 10,000 at the beginning of a week that some health officials have predicted will be the worst yet. Confirmed infections stood at nearly 357,000, with the death toll at 10,524, according to data Monday from Johns Hopkins University.

On the CBS Evening News (4/6, story 2, 1:20, O'Donnell, 6.03M), Mola Lenghi reported "hot zones" across the country "include Detroit, where cases have tripled in the last nine days to more than 5,000." Meanwhile, "in Louisiana, COVID-19 cases have more than doubled since last Wednesday," while Chicago is "approaching 5,000 cases." According to Lenghi, "the next hot spots include Miami and Philadelphia."

On ABC World News Tonight (4/6, story 5, 2:00, Muir, 9.55M), Matt Gutman reported, "With the national death toll topping 10,000, some" are "still ignoring stay home orders." Also, so far, governors of nine states "have still not issued statewide shelter at home orders."

On ABC World News Tonight (4/6, story 2, 1:25, Muir, 9.55M), Tom Llamas provided accounts from across the country on the front-line battles "to save lives."

Data Suggest Pandemic May Have Plateaued In New York.

The AP (4/6, Villeneuve) reports that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) on Monday "extended stay-at-home restrictions through the end of the month and increased fines on violators to up to $1,000, citing fresh evidence...that the outbreak-fighting rules could be helping the state avoid a worst-case catastrophe." According to the AP, New York state "has tallied 4,758 deaths from COVID-19, with 599 reported in the last 24 hours." However, "There are signs the surge might be slowing. The number of new people entering hospitals daily has dropped, as have the number of new patients requiring ventilators." The AP says "recent data suggests the state could be at or near the peak, meaning fewer hospital beds would be needed in the coming weeks than the most dire projections had indicated."

The New York Times (4/6, 18.61M) reports that on Monday, "for the second day in a row, officials found reasons for hope even as hundreds of people continued to die and thousands clung to life on ventilators. On both Sunday and Monday, fewer than 600 deaths from the virus were reported in New York: 594 on Sunday, 599 on Monday." Cuomo is quoted as saying, "If we are plateauing, we are plateauing at a very high level and there is tremendous stress on the health care system."

Reuters (4/6, Layne, Szekely) reports Cuomo said on Monday that there are signs the coronavirus outbreak is "flattening" in the state, but he also warned against complacency as the death toll for the whole US passed 10,000 with the total number of cases exceeding 350,000. On NBC Nightly News (4/6, story 2, 2:30, Holt, 8.63M), Gabe Gutierrez reported, "Cuomo is warning New Yorkers not to let their guard down, doubling the fine for not social distancing to $1,000."

Bloomberg (4/6, 4.73M) reports that Cuomo "cautioned" that "the challenge...is to maintain the social distancing that has finally pointed New York toward a possible peak in fatalities." According to Bloomberg, "For two days in a row, the death toll was about the same, a turnabout from increases for more than a week. Case increases were less than 10% for two days, a turnabout from numbers about twice as large a week earlier."

On ABC World News Tonight (4/6, lead story, 2:40, Muir, 9.55M), Tom Llamas reported that even with numbers that look to be leveling off, "hospitals here are overwhelmed. Pushed to capacity and beyond." The New York Times (4/6, Feuer, 18.61M) reports, "The continuing flood of patients into hospital emergency rooms has presented a daunting challenge to policymakers like Mr. Cuomo who are trying to predict on the fly not only where the crisis might be headed, but also when New York might be able to return to a semblance of normalcy." Cuomo "said on Monday that schools and nonessential stores would remain closed at least through April 29."

Cuomo Says State Does Not Need More Ventilators At The Moment. The Daily Caller (4/6, Olohan, 716K) reports Cuomo on Monday said that the state does not need more ventilators "right now." Cuomo said, "There is no hospital that needs ventilators that doesn't have ventilators, there is no hospital that needs PPE [personal protective equipment] that doesn't have it in the state system." He added, "Have we saved everyone? No. But have we lost anyone because we didn't have a bed or we didn't have a ventilator, or we didn't have health care staff? No."

Trump Allows COVID-19 Patients On USNS Comfort. On the CBS Evening News (4/6, lead story, 2:55, O'Donnell, 6.03M), Mola Lenghi reported the naval ship "Comfort," which was brought "to treat non-coronavirus patients," will now "begin accepting coronavirus patients" after a decision by President Trump. On ABC World News Tonight (4/6, story 3, 0:45, Muir, 9.55M), Tom Llamas reported Trump has "approved for patients from New Jersey to go over to the Comfort as well, which is great news for New Jersey."

New York City Mulls Mass Grave In Park For Casualties. The New York Times (4/6, Feuer, 18.61M) reports New York City Councilman Mark Levine "says the city has a contingency plan to bury victims in a public park if morgues fill up, though the medical examiner's office said no final decision had been made." Levine did not specify "which park was under consideration, noting only that it would likely have to be a large one 'out of the way of the public.'" On Monday, Mayor Bill de Blasio "said no such plans had been put in place yet, though he added it remained a possibility."

De Blasio Defends His Excursions To Public Park. The New York Post (4/6, Calder, Garger, 4.57M) reports New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) "insisted that even during the coronavirus pandemic he opts to exercise in Brooklyn's Prospect Park – 12 miles from Gracie Mansion – in order to remain an effective leader." De Blasio was "responding to a question from a viewer about why he's driven to Brooklyn for a walk in the park when his Upper East Side home abuts acres of waterfront parkland." The mayor has "been spotted – and called out on social media – for his recent strolls inside Prospect Park with First Lady Chirlane McCray." But on Monday, "he shrugged off the criticism, and defended his inter-borough trips."

New Jersey's Curve May Have Started To Flatten.

Politico (4/6, Sutton, 4.29M) reports that "a new coronavirus tracker prepared by Rutgers University-Camden researcher Sarah Allred suggests the curve of coronavirus-related deaths in New Jersey has started to flatten." Politico adds, "While the data doesn't suggest New Jersey is anywhere close to being out of the woods – far from it – the speed with which new deaths are announced is starting to slow," suggesting the stay-at-home order issued by Gov. Phil Murphy (D) "is having its intended effect." According to Politico, "As of Sunday, at least 37,505 New Jersey residents had tested positive for the virus and 917 people have died."

Politico (4/6, Sutton, 4.29M) reports Murphy said Monday that social distancing efforts are beginning to bear fruit. Murphy said, "Our efforts to flatten the curve are starting – I say starting – to pay off even with the lag time in getting test results back from the lab. I use that word cautiously." State officials "expect to see infections and hospitalizations peak between April 19 and May 11, according to models Murphy presented during the briefing."

Deaths In DC Region Jump As Hospitals Prepare For Surge.

The Washington Post (4/6, Chason, Nirappil, Portnoy, Harden, 14.2M) reports, "The District, Maryland and Virginia saw their biggest single-day increase in fatalities related to the novel coronavirus Monday, with deaths up to 169 as officials warned that the region could become one of the country's next hot spots and hospitals prepared for a surge." According to the Post, "there was a 114 percent increase in confirmed coronavirus cases in the D.C. region in the past week." From Friday to Monday, "there were an average of 393 new cases a day – up from an average of 70 new cases a day March 22 through March 24."

California Lends 500 Ventilators To National Stockpile.

The AP (4/6, Ronayne) reports that California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) on Monday "announced...the state would loan 500 ventilators to the national stockpile for use by New York and other states experiencing a crush of coronavirus-related hospitalizations, even as he said the nation's most populous state needs to find more ventilators of its own."

The Los Angeles Times (4/6, Willon, 4.64M) reports, "Newsom said lending the critically needed ventilators was possible because hospitals throughout California have procured thousands of devices in the last few weeks, increasing their total ventilator inventory from 7,587 to 11,036." With coronavirus cases "not expected to peak until May, under current estimates, California could afford to lend the medical devices to parts of the country where they are in seriously short supply, Newsom said.”

Politico (4/6, White, 4.29M) says California’s “act of generosity completes a bi-coastal aid package after both Washington and Oregon lent medical supplies to New York, which is battling the nation’s worst outbreak.”

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Times (4/6, Fry, Wigglesworth, Money, Shalby, 4.64M) reports that across California, “the total number of confirmed cases has topped 15,000 and the number of deaths surpassed 350.” In Los Angeles County, “health officials urged residents to stay home this week, to limit time spent outside and to even avoid shopping if possible to slow the spread of the virus.” Los Angeles County officials on Monday “confirmed 15 new coronavirus-linked deaths, bringing the county’s total to 147, and said the county’s mortality rate had crept up.”

Minnesota’s Death Toll Rises, But Predicted Impact Drops.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (4/6, Olson, 1.04M) reports Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz (D) “hinted Monday that he plans to extend the current stay-at-home order to reduce the spread of the COVID-19 virus in Minnesota, but with a tailored approach that allows some businesses to resume normal operations.” Cases of COVID-19 in the state continue to rise, “with 30 deaths and 986 confirmed cases in the state so far,” but “Walz said there are encouraging signs, including a confirmed case rate of around 17 per 100,000 people in Minnesota that is the lowest among all states.” Walz “said he is conducting a ‘sector by sector’ analysis of businesses that could reopen after the current stay-at-home order expires Friday without jeopardizing the state’s progress in limiting COVID-19 cases.”

Antibody Test Underway In South Florida.

On the CBS Evening News (4/6, story 9, 1:40, O’Donnell, 6.03M), Jon Lapook reported, “An ambitious testing program by the University of Miami began [Monday] in south Florida. The goal: to clear up the chaotic picture of just how widespread the virus is, helping some governments plan their response. The test looks for a person’s antibodies. ... It doesn’t look for current infection. Instead, it detects who has had it in the past, whether they knew it, or not.”

Officials Criticize Georgia Governor For Reopening State’s Beaches.

USA Today (4/6, Yancey-Bragg, 10.31M) reports, “Some local officials in Georgia are denouncing” Gov. Brian Kemp (R) “for issuing a shelter-in-place order that upended local efforts to curb the spread of coronavirus.” Tybee Island, a coastal city “that depends on tourism, closed its beaches two weeks ago amid the growing pandemic.” However, “the town’s decision was abruptly reversed when Kemp’s shelter-in-place order went into effect and reopened the state’s beaches.” Mayor Shirley Sessions “called the decision a ‘reckless mandate’ adding that the health of the town’s 3,100 residents, staff and visitors are now at risk.”

Coronavirus Infections Spread Swiftly At Texas Facility.

USA Today (4/6, Nadolny, Kwiatkowski, Ball, 10.31M) reports positive cases of COVID-19 are mounting at the Denton State Supported Living Center in Texas. As of Friday night, the count had “swelled to 50 residents and 25 employees.” According to the article, “the outbreak has become a crisis on a campus where many residents have pre-existing medical conditions and are considered at high risk if they contract the coronavirus.” The Texas center is “a case study for how the coronavirus can quickly overwhelm a facility not set up to handle a pandemic.”

Chicago Mayor Defends Getting A Haircut Amid Coronavirus Pandemic.

The Chicago Tribune (4/6, Pratt, 2.65M) reports that Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot “defended getting a haircut over the weekend” after photos on social media showed her with a stylist. Lightfoot “acknowledged getting a haircut, then said the public cares more about other issues.” She said, “I think what really people want to talk about is, we’re talking about people dying here. We’re talking about significant health disparities. I think that’s what people care most about.” After a follow-up question, she said, “The woman who cut my hair had a mask and gloves on so we are, I am practicing what I’m preaching.”

Grocery Chains Report First Deaths Of Workers.

The Washington Post (4/6, Bhattarai, 14.2M) reports, “Major supermarket chains are beginning to report their first coronavirus-related employee deaths, leading to store closures and increasing anxiety among grocery workers as the pandemic intensifies across the country. A Trader Joe’s worker in Scarsdale, N.Y., a greeter at a Giant store in Largo, Md., and two Walmart employees from the same Chicago-area store” have died of COVID-19 in recent days, the companies said Monday.

WSJournal: Pennsylvania’s Closing Of Liquor Stores During Pandemic Is Misguided.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes attempts to shut down alcohol sales during the pandemic, because attempts at prohibition invariably cause more problems than it solves. In particular, the Journal takes issue with Pennsylvania’s order to restrict alcohol sales, which has led to residents traveling to other states to buy alcohol, potentially spreading the virus.

Goldberg: GOP States “Exploiting” Pandemic To Ban Abortion.

In her column for the New York Times (4/6, 18.61M), Michelle Goldberg writes, “Since the pandemic began, governors in several red states have tried to use it as an excuse to ban abortion.” Goldberg likens these moves to authoritarians around the world who “have exploited the coronavirus to scrap civil liberties.” Now, Goldberg says, “as in the days before Roe, some will now likely turn to D.I.Y. abortion methods.”

Politico Analysis: Congress Unlikely To Address Atkinson Ouster.

Politico (4/6, Desiderio, 4.29M) describes a “muddled message” from senators in the wake of President Trump’s “firing of the intelligence community’s top watchdog.” Some are “calling for hearings,” while others are “saying lawmakers have far more important issues to tackle.” To Politico, the “scattershot response suggests Congress is unlikely to urgently address Trump’s decision to sack Michael Atkinson, the intelligence community’s inspector general – and it underscores how difficult it will be for the Senate and House to conduct oversight of the surprising firing, especially in the middle of the coronavirus pandemic.” However, Atkinson’s firing is “an urgent priority to some,” including Sen. Angus King (I-ME), “who said the Senate should hold a hearing.” King told Politico, “It should be an open hearing to have members of the administration come forward and provide an explanation.” The Washington Post (4/6, Nakashima, 14.2M) points out that Sen. Charles Grassley (R-IA), the chairman of the Senate Whistleblower Protection Caucus, also “demanded more information on Atkinson’s removal.”

The New York Times (4/6, Savage, 18.61M) reports that Atkinson released a statement on Sunday in which he “called on whistle-blowers to overcome any fears and come forward with information about waste and illegality in the government despite the administration’s reprisals.” The Times says Atkinson “drew the president’s ire last year after he received a whistle-blower complaint from an intelligence community official accusing the president of abusing his power over foreign policy to coerce Ukraine’s government into announcing investigations that could deliver him personal political benefits.” The Times says Trump “gave no reason for firing Mr. Atkinson,” but “made clear...on Saturday that he dismissed Mr. Atkinson because he was angry that the inspector general had pushed to tell Congress about the whistle-blower complaint in the first place.”

WPost: Atkinson’s Firing A “Blatant And Shameful Act Of Retribution.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) says Trump “used the cover of night and the novel coronavirus pandemic” to fire Atkinson and “extend his purge of officials who cooperated with the exposure or investigation of his wrongdoing.” The Post calls the move “the most blatant and shameful act of retribution yet by a president who has sought to shut down all independent checks on his behavior.”

Senate Intel Committee Approved “Key Portion” Of Russian Meddling Review For Release Last Month.

Politico (4/6, Desiderio, Matishak, 4.29M) reports the Senate Intelligence Committee last month “unanimously approved for release a key portion of the panel’s ongoing review of Russia’s interference in the 2016 presidential election, according to committee sources – a significant step that sets the stage for the final two installments of the exhaustive review” to possibly be published before this November’s election. Sen. Angus King (I-ME) told Politico, “It was an exhaustive review...which found that in fact there was substantial Russian interference with the [2016] election and that part of the purpose of that interference was to support the election of Donald Trump.”

Nunes Says FBI “Clearly Targeting” Trump Campaign In 2016.

The Washington Examiner (4/6, Chaitin, 448K) reports Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA) claimed in a television appearance that the FBI “were ‘experts’ at eluding the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act process by the time the 2016 election came around.” Nunes said, “They were clearly targeting the Trump campaign. It just so happens they already knew how to do it because they had been doing it before. So the dirty cops that were in place, who had been basically breaking the rules, violating people’s civil liberties, they knew exactly what they were doing.”

ICE To Deport Haitians Despite Coronavirus Concerns.

The Miami Herald (4/6, Madan, Charles, 1.09M) reports, “Some US lawmakers and immigration advocates are expressing outrage” at ICE’s decision to continue deportations to Haiti “in the midst of the accelerating COVID-19 global pandemic,” saying the decision “presents an unacceptable public health risk to both deportees on board and the citizens of Haiti.” According to immigration lawyers and advocates, “at least 14 Haitian nationals are scheduled to board a deportation flight from Alexandria, Louisiana, to Port-au-Prince Tuesday.” Late Monday, “members of Congress were mobilizing to try and halt it after being contacted by lawyers and prominent health and human rights groups working in Haiti.”

SCOTUS Rules In Vehicle Stop, Federal Age Discrimination Cases.

The New York Times (4/6, Liptak, 18.61M) reports the Supreme Court ruled 8-1 Monday “that police officers may stop vehicles registered to people whose driver’s licenses had been suspended on the assumption that the driver was the owner, rather than, say, a family member,” with only Justice Sonia Sotomayor dissenting. The Court also ruled 8-1 “that federal workers can win age discrimination suits under a more relaxed standard than employees in the private sector,” with Justice Clarence Thomas dissenting. The Washington Post (4/6, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the majority said Congress “meant for federal workers to have higher protection from possible age discrimination than workers in the private sector or who work for state and local governments.”

Court Will Not Take Up Metro Religious Advertising Ban. The Washington Post (4/6, Barnes, Marimow, 14.2M) reports the Court also said it "will not take up a lower court's decision" that the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority "did not violate the First Amendment by banning religious advertising. ... Two justices said the lower-court decision was wrong." However, Justice Brett Kavanaugh "was recused after earlier work on the case," leading conservative justices to express concerns of a 4-4 split. The Washington Times (4/6, Swoyer, 492K) reports Justice Neil Gorsuch "warned that this would not be the high court's last word on this religious speech issue."

WSJournal: Teachers' Unions Demands On Equity Preventing Remote Learning.

The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that by insisting on total equity for all students, teachers' unions are forcing some schools to not offer online education since not all students have computers or Internet access. The Journal says this denies opportunity to all.

Politico Profile: Meadows Beginning White House Tenure In Midst Of Crisis.

Politico (4/6, Cook, Zanona, 4.29M) says Chief of Staff Meadows "relinquished a safe seat in Congress and agreed to join the White House in early March, when the unemployment rate sat at a historic low and [President] Trump's team appeared confident about his reelection." However, "a month later...Meadows is now presiding over vastly different West Wing, which is under siege like never before due to the coronavirus pandemic. The administration still lacks the ability to widely test Americans for the virus." Politico says Meadows "faces the unenviable challenge of guiding the White House through this unprecedented public health crisis and political test of Trump's leadership."

Trump Mocks "Failing New York Times," WPost Over Drop In Advertising.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Advertising in the Failing New York Times is WAY down. Washington Post is not much better. I can't say whether this is because they are Fake News sources of information, to a level that few can understand, or the Virus is just plain beating them up. Fake News is bad for America!"

Court Reverses Evers, Says Wisconsin Primary To Proceed.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (4/6, Beck, Marley, 632K) reports "Wisconsin voters will head to the polls Tuesday" after Gov. Tony Evers (D) "failed to shut down Tuesday's election in a historic last-minute move that was swiftly rejected by the conservative majority of the Wisconsin Supreme Court." The AP (4/6, Bauer, Peoples) also says that "hours after...Evers issued an order postponing the election for two months, the conservative-controlled Wisconsin Supreme Court on Monday sided with Republicans who said he didn't have the authority to reschedule the race on his own."

The New York Times (4/6, Corasaniti, Epstein, Lerer, 18.61M) points out that "the court ruled 4-2, along ideological lines," that Evers "could not use emergency powers to unilaterally change the date of the election, which he sought to do to circumvent Republican opposition to the move." Evers, The Hill (4/6, Wise, 2.98M) points out, "had previously said that he didn't have the power to change the election without violating state law."

The Washington Post (4/6, Gardner, Viebeck, 14.2M) reports "the bitter showdown presented a grueling test case for other states planning primaries during the coronavirus pandemic, not to mention the November elections." It "also foreshadowed the likelihood that Wisconsin, by some measures the most important presidential battleground state, could become the epicenter of partisan rancor as the health crisis continues to upend the 2020 race."

To the New York Times (4/6, Herndon, Rutenberg, 18.61M), "Wisconsin voters will face a choice between protecting their health and exercising their civic duty on Tuesday after state Republican leaders, backed up by a conservative majority on the state's Supreme Court, rebuffed the Democratic governor's attempt to postpone in-person voting." The Times adds that "in a decision late Monday capping the election-eve chaos, the US Supreme Court's conservative-leaning majority dealt its own blow to Wisconsin Democrats. In a 5-4 vote, the majority ruled against their attempt to extend the deadline for absentee voting in Tuesday's elections, saying such a change 'fundamentally alters the nature of the election.'"

Reuters (4/6, Whitesides, Ax) recounts that "in the US Supreme Court ruling, the court's conservative majority said the federal courts should not alter rules on the eve of an election." Axios (4/6, Axios, 521K), the Washington Times (4/6, McLaughlin, 492K), CQ Roll Call (4/6, Akin, Bowman, 154K), Politico (4/6, Korecki, Montellaro, 4.29M) and Wall Street Journal (4/6, Corse, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, run similar reports.

Trump Urges Wisconsinites To Vote For Justice Kelly. President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "The Wisconsin Supreme Court ruled that tomorrow's election will proceed as scheduled. VOTE for Justice Daniel Kelly tomorrow, and be safe!"

Florida Poll: Biden Leads Trump 46%-40%.

Politico (4/6, Fineout, 4.29M) reports that a University of North Florida poll of 3,244 Florida voters, taken March 31-April 4, shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 46%-40%. According to the poll, 45% of those surveyed approve of Trump's handling of the coronavirus crisis, while 53% disapprove. Politico says, "A key problem for Trump is that a majority of" those polled, 58%, "don't trust him to provide reliable information about the pandemic." Meanwhile, the poll pegged NIAID Director Fauci's approval rating at 85%, with 86% of those surveyed saying "they trust information coming from him." The Hill (4/6, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports that Michael Binder, "director of UNF's Public Opinion Research Lab, said that Biden's lead should be taken with caution. The survey results are based on responses from...registered Florida voters, rather than likely voters, making it difficult to compare to past election data."

Potential VP Pick Whitmer Appears On Biden's Podcast.

The Detroit Free Press (4/6, Egan, 1.52M) reports, "Calling her one of the most talented people in the country," Joe Biden praised Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D-MI) "in his podcast this week. The appearance, the first by a person Biden has identified as being on a list of potential running mates, is fueling speculation again that Whitmer is a leading contender for vice president if Biden," as expected, emerges as the Democratic presidential nominee. Discussing the coronavirus pandemic, Biden told Whitmer, "You're not the only governor with whom I've spoken. You just happen to be doing it as well as anybody who's doing it." Whitmer told Biden, "You would expect to be able to call your partners in federal government and get some help. But the crisis was downplayed from the get-go and it's made our jobs as governors more difficult."

The Hill (4/6, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports that Whitmer's appearance on Biden's podcast "could stoke speculation he's considering her as a potential running mate." Fox News (4/6, Steinhilber, 27.59M) reports on its website that Biden's "praise of...Whitmer is stoking more speculation that her star's rising as the all-but-certain Democratic presidential nominee begins the process of choosing a running mate." Said Biden, "Gov. Whitmer is an outstanding governor. She is one of the most talented people in the country in my view. She also is a supporter. She was also a co-chair of my campaign. She's a good friend, but she has been laser-focused, laser-focused on delivering for her state."

Sanders Supporters Divided Over Whether He Should Remain In Race.

The Washington Post (4/6, Sullivan, Weigel, 14.2M) reports that "lengthy deliberations" by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "about the future of his presidential campaign have exposed divisions in his movement between die-hard liberal activists with little appetite to fall in line" behind Joe Biden "and more conventional Democrats who see some merit in Sanders withdrawing from the race. After revelations that some top aides and allies have urged" Sanders "to consider ending his campaign, some" of his "supporters voiced alarm about the people surrounding him and have even called for their ouster." The Post says it reported over the weekend "that the group lobbying him to consider withdrawing" included campaign manager Faiz Shakir and Rep. Pramila Jayapal (D-WA).

NYTimes Analysis: For Sanders, Wisconsin Primary May "Be His Last Stand." The New York Times (4/6, Ember, 18.61M) reports that Sanders remains "in the Democratic presidential race for now, trailing badly in the delegate contest with just one primary looming on the distorted political calendar: Wisconsin votes on Tuesday. Just weeks ago, aides and supporters of Mr. Sanders had optimistically pointed to the Wisconsin primary as a possible springboard for revitalizing his campaign, viewing him as well positioned to recapture a state that he dominated in his 2016 presidential bid." However, Wisconsin "may instead be his last stand. A recent poll showed him far behind Mr. Biden in the state, and top Sanders advisers have all but ceased speaking about his chances there." The Times adds that "if Mr. Sanders suffers another big loss, it is certain to intensify the growing calls for him to exit the race."

DNC Reserves $22M In YouTube Ads.

The New York Times (4/6, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that the Democratic National Committee on Monday announced that it has "reserved $22 million in YouTube advertisements across 14 states that the party believes will be competitive in the general election, the beginning of a broad digital effort to defeat President Trump this fall." The Times says "the reservation comes two and a half weeks after" ex-New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg "transferred $18 million from his unsuccessful presidential campaign to the DNC for the party's battleground states program." However, DNC officials "said that the Bloomberg money was not being used to fund the new ad reservations."

The Hill (4/6, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports, "The reservation is the single largest by any Democratic group so far. In 10 of the states – Arizona, Colorado, Georgia, Minnesota, Maine, North Carolina, New Hampshire, Nevada, Ohio and Virginia – the ads will begin running on Oct. 1 and will continue through Election Day on Nov. 3. In four other states – Florida, Michigan, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania – the ads will begin on Sept. 1 and will run through Election Day, the DNC said."

Collins-Commissioned Poll Shows Him Trouncing Loeffler In Georgia Senate Race.

The Hill (4/6, Bowden, 2.98M) reported on a Battleground Connect poll of 1,035 likely Georgia voters, taken March 31-April 1, that shows Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) leading this fall's special Senate election with 36%, followed by Raphael Warnock (D) at 16%, appointed Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) at 13%, and education advocate Matt Liebman (D) at 11%; all other candidates were in the single digits. The poll was commissioned by the Collins campaign. All candidates will appear on the same ballot this fall. Loeffler has been under fire "over stock trades she made amid the coronavirus outbreak, including shares in retail outlets and travel companies, in the days before major restrictions were placed on many businesses across the US and travel restrictions were implemented by the Trump administration."

Mediaite (4/6, Petrizzo, 327K) reports on the poll results, and adds that Loeffler, "according to The Daily Beast's reporting, sold stock shares with her husband Jeffrey Sprecher (CEO of the New York Stock Exchange) worth between $1,275,000 and $3,100,000 between Jan. 24 and Feb. 14. 'On Feb. 14, she also purchased the Citrix stock and another $100,000 to $250,000 in technology company Oracle, which has seen its share price decline by more than 18 percent since then,' after a Senate Health Committee meeting regarding the coronavirus on Jan. 24th, according to the Beast. Loeffler denies that he had any involvement in the sell-off or buying of stocks in her or her husband's portfolio."

WPost Examines Loeffler's "Turbulent" First Few Months In Senate. Under the headline "The Young And Eventful Senate Career Of Wealthy Georgia Businesswoman Kelly Loeffler," the Washington Post (4/6, Roig-Franzia, 14.2M) profiles Loeffler, saying that the dueling controversies over her appointment to the Senate and her stock sales have made for a tumultuous start to her political career, with the latter "controversy threaten[ing] to make her one of the first political casualties of the global pandemic." The Post adds that Loeffler's "turbulent debut on the national stage has obscured a backstory with a compelling arc: the rise of the small-town daughter of a moderately prosperous Illinois farming family to the heights of the business world." The Post goes on to detail the flap over Loeffler's stock sales.

Politico Analysis: Small Business Lending Oversight Gives Rubio A Platform Ahead Of 2024.

Politico (4/6, Everett, Levine, 4.29M) reports that "as chairman of the usually sleepy Small Business Committee," Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) "has a key position in the country's response and recovery from the pandemic. His panel's $377 billion lifeline for small businesses is a linchpin of Congress' $2 trillion economic rescue package, and Rubio's efforts are winning praise from Republicans and Democrats alike even as implementation of the program remains deeply uncertain." Politico says, "And his work may just be beginning: Rubio and his panel are likely to be called upon again soon as the economy craters to provide more aid and potentially improve the rescue law's signature Paycheck Protection Program." Politico adds that "Rubio's emergence...is fueling talk among his colleagues that he" is interested in running for president in 2024.

WPost Questions DC Board Of Elections' Ability To Make June Primary Successful.

Citing past errors by the District of Columbia Board of Elections, the Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) says in an editorial that is "understandable that there are some questions, even skepticism, about whether the agency will be able to pull off the June primary amid the unprecedented challenges of the novel coronavirus pandemic – especially as it involves an ambitious plan to get more people to vote by mail." While the board "absolutely made the right decision in limiting the number of physical voting sites for the June 2 presidential and local primary," the success of the effort "depends upon execution."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 46.7%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 46.7%, and his disapproval at 50%. The President's approval is down 0.2 sin yesterday; his disapproval is down by 0.5.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (4/1-4/5) finds Trump's approval at 44%, with 53% disapproving.

An IBD/TIPP survey of 1,226 "adults" (3/29-4/1), meanwhile, has both the President's approval and disapproval at 45%.

IMF Considers Program To Help Liquidity-Strained Countries Participate In Fed Debt Exchange.

Bloomberg (4/6, Mohsin, Martin, 4.73M) reports the IMF "may launch a new program to help address the global shortage of dollars, providing a backup to the Federal Reserve's campaign to keep greenbacks flowing around the world economy." IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva "is preparing to offer short-term dollar loans to countries that lack enough Treasuries to participate in a Fed program that enables foreign central banks to temporarily exchange U.S. debt for dollars." Georgieva said Friday in an online briefing, "Our board is going to review a proposal in the next days on creating a short-term liquidity line that is exactly targeted to countries with strong fundamentals, strong macroeconomic fundamentals, that may be experiencing short-term liquidity constraints." Bloomberg says the proposal "has the support of the U.S. Treasury and may be launched within weeks, according to people familiar with the matter."

IMF Sees Signs Of Recovery Signs In China But Warns Of Infections Resurgence.

Reuters (4/6, Shalal) reports the IMF "cited limited but encouraging signs of recovery in China, the first country to suffer the full force of the COVID-19 pandemic, but said it could not rule out a resurgence of the pandemic in China and elsewhere." The IMF's top economists, in a blog post Monday, "said the pandemic caused by the new coronavirus had pushed the world into a recession that would be worse than the global financial crisis, and called for a global, coordinated health and economic policy response." The officials wrote, "The economic damage is mounting across all countries, tracking the sharp rise in new infections and containment measures put in place by governments."

Amid Pandemic, PBOC Hints At End To Stimulus Restraint In Beijing.

The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Taplin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that while Western central banks have poured liquidity into their economies amid the COVID-19 pandemic, the People's Bank of China has been quiet in that respect. However, the Journal says the PBOC may be changing its stance.

South Africa's Ruling ANC, Allies Reject Calls To Approach IMF For Help Amid COVID-19 Pandemic.

Reuters (4/6, Winning) reports South Africa's governing African National Congress (ANC) party, along with two close allies, said Monday in a joint statement that the country should not approach the IMF and World Bank for help amid the COVID-19 pandemic. The statement said, "The Secretariat is very concerned by the suggestions, conveyed through the Minister of Finance, that South Africa should approach the IMF (or the World Bank) for 'assistance'. The suggestion is rejected. Instead, the Secretariat reaffirms the need to safeguard South Africa's democratic national sovereignty, the fundamental right to self-determination, our independence, which are non-negotiable, even in the midst of a crisis." Asking the IMF and other multilateral organizations for funds "is deeply unpopular with a radical faction in the ANC and trade unions the party uses to rally support ahead of elections, partly because of the stringent conditions that can accompany IMF lending programmes."

Nigeria Requests Combined $6.9B From IMF, World Bank, African Development Bank, Per Finance Minister.

Reuters (4/6, Carsten) reports Nigeria "has requested $6.9 billion from multilateral lenders to combat the impact of the coronavirus pandemic on Africa's biggest economy, the finance minister said on Monday." Nigeria, "whose revenues have tumbled with the fall in oil prices, has asked for $3.4 billion from the International Monetary Fund, $2.5 billion from the World Bank and $1 billion from the African Development Bank (AfDB), Zainab Ahmed said." Nigeria's finance minister "said IMF support would not be tied to a formal programme and the funds would not have conditions attached because the cash was being borrowed previous Nigerian contributions to the Fund."

Azar: China Rebuffed US Offer To Send CDC Teams To Study Virus.

HHS Secretary Azar said on WIBC-FM Indianapolis (4/6, 6K) that "one of the most important things that could have happened and should have happened is we offered shortly after being alerted by the Chinese to the novel virus, we offered to send our CDC teams into China. ... We offered to be part of a World Health Organization team to come in to get answers to the foundational questions like does this disease transmit before people have symptoms, does it transmit when people don't have symptoms, can there be people carrying and shedding this...who never actually get symptoms. All of that we could have been working on a lot sooner if China had taken us up on our offer to get CDC people in or the World Health Organization team."

China Reports 39 New Cases. Reuters (4/6, Zhang, Munroe) says China "reported 39 new coronavirus cases as of Sunday, up from 30 a day earlier, and the number of asymptomatic cases also surged as the government vowed tighter controls at land borders." China's National Health Commission "said on Monday that 78 new asymptomatic cases had been identified as of the end of Sunday, compared with 47 the day before."

Brazilian Minister Accuses Chinese Medical Suppliers Of Benefiting From Pandemic. Reuters (4/6, Simões) reports, "Renewed attacks on China by a member of Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro's inner circle soured diplomatic relations again on Monday as the education minister accused Chinese medical equipment makers of profiteering from the coronavirus pandemic." Brazilian Education Minister Abraham Weintraub "suggested in a Twitter post, which he later deleted on Sunday, that the disease would help China 'dominate the world,'" referencing "a cartoon character with a speech impediment to mock Chinese accents." The Chinese Embassy in Brazil "denounced the minister in a statement on Monday."

British Prime Minister Johnson Moved To ICU.

The Washington Post (4/6, Booth, Adam, 14.2M) reports that British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, sick with COVID-19, "was moved into an intensive care unit on Monday evening after his condition worsened." Johnson "has asked Foreign Secretary Dominic Raab to 'deputise for him where necessary,' meaning essentially to take the lead in governing the country." The Prime Minister's office said Johnson was "exhibiting a persistent cough and fever" when he was admitted to the hospital on Sunday night, but "until he was moved to the ICU, Johnson was said by his staff to be working from his bed." Axios (4/6, Lawler, 521K) points out that according to his office, Johnson "was moved to the ICU as a precaution in case a ventilator is needed."

ABC World News Tonight (4/6, story 4, 2:35, Muir, 9.78M) showed President Trump saying, "We're very saddened to hear that he was taken into intensive care this afternoon, a little while ago. And Americans are all praying for his recovery. But when you get brought into intensive care, that gets very, very serious with this particular disease."

Richard Engel reported on NBC Nightly News (4/6, story 3, 1:50, Holt, 8.63M) that "just hours" before being taken to the ICU, "Johnson tweeted, 'I'm in good spirits and keeping in touch with my team.'" The CBS Evening News (4/6, story 4, 2:15, D'Agata, 5.86M) recounted that "Johnson last appeared in public on his Downing Street doorstep on Thursday night to clap in support of British healthcare workers, unaware then how personal that fight would become."

The AP (4/6, Kirka, Lawless) reports "Johnson's spokesman, James Slack...insisted that 'the PM remains in charge of the government.'" Added Slack, "He is receiving updates in hospital and is continuing to receive a (ministerial red) box" of files and briefing papers. The New York Times (4/6, Castle, 18.61M) indicates that "the lack of details on the prime minister's condition or any sign of ongoing communication between Mr. Johnson and Mr. Raab had caused some unease in Britain." Reuters (4/6, Piper, James, Faulconbridge) points out that Britain

"has no formal succession plan should the prime minister become incapacitated, though Raab, 46, chaired the government's emergency COVID-19 meeting on Monday. Asked at the news conference whether he had been in touch with Johnson on Monday by either text or by telephone, Raab said he had last spoken to the prime minister on Saturday." Bloomberg (4/6, Ross, 4.73M), USA Today (4/6, Hjelmggaard, 10.31M), Politico (4/6, Cooper, 4.29M), The Hill (4/6, Budryk, 2.98M), Wall Street Journal (4/6, Colchester, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), New York Post (4/6, Fitz-Gibbon, 4.57M), Daily Caller (4/6, Caruso, 716K), Breitbart (4/6, Lane, 673K), Washington Times (4/6, Meier, 492K) and Washington Examiner (4/6, Brest, 448K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) offers good wishes and prayers for Johnson, and expresses confidence in Britain's ability to weather the crisis.

Some European Nations Look To Ease Lockdowns As New Cases Decline.

Reuters (4/6, Pinedo, Wacket) reports European nations, "including hard-hit Italy and Spain, have started looking ahead to easing coronavirus lockdowns after steady falls in fatality rates." In Spain and Italy, "which account for over 40% of the world's fatalities, the death rate has been declining for several days and public discussion has turned to how and when to ease weeks of drastic curbs on personal and economic activity." Germany, meanwhile, has drawn up "a detailed plan. Yet the global figures remain stark, and show no sign of plateauing yet."

The AP (4/6, Parra, Kirka) reports Italian Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte "declined during a press conference to say when the nationwide lockdown, now in its fifth week, would be lifted. The current measures expire April 13, but how and when Italy will enter a next phase of 'co-existing' with the virus will depend on a technical panel of experts."

Austria, Reuters (4/6, Murphy) reports, is "preparing for a 'resurrection' the day after Easter by reopening some shops in an initial loosening of its coronavirus lockdown, Chancellor Sebastian Kurz said on Monday, the first European country to outline such plans." Austria "was broadly shut down three weeks ago, with schools, bars, restaurants, theatres, non-essential shops and other gathering places closed. ... The lockdown has helped reduce the daily increase in infections to 1.6%, Health Minister Rudolf Anschober said."

The Czech government, Reuters (4/6) reports separately, "agreed on Monday to relax some lockdown measures...as growth of new coronavirus infections has been levelling off in recent days." The nation "was among the first in Europe to declare a state of emergency in March, imposing some of the strictest curbs on public life to prevent the spread of the coronavirus when the proven number of cases was still below 200."

The Washington Post (4/6, Birnbaum, 14.2M) reports that in Denmark, "the plan is for nursery and primary schools to reopen April 13, while companies will resume business gradually." Denmark "imposed its lockdown relatively early, on March 11, and invested in widespread testing." The "border controls will remain in place, and gatherings of more than 10 people will remain banned."

New Cases In Italy Continue To Decline; Death Toll Rises To 16,523. The Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) reports Italy "announced 3,599 new cases of the novel coronavirus on Monday, the lowest daily increase since March 17, bringing the total number of cases in the hard-hit country to 132,547." In addition, Italy's Civil Protection agency "announced 636 deaths in its daily briefing, increasing the total death toll in the country to 16,523, the highest in the world." The death toll was "higher than Sunday's figure of 525, which had been the lowest since March 19. However, it remained considerably lower than the recent high of 919 new deaths, which was recorded March 27."

Reuters (4/6, Bastaniello) reports that "authorities in northern Italy have begun testing health workers for antibodies that may help identify individuals with immunity to the coronavirus as they look for ways to ease the lockdown imposed a month ago to contain the epidemic."

Rate Of New Cases Slowing In Spain. Reuters (4/6, Pinedo, Faus) reports the "pace of new coronavirus deaths in Spain slowed for the fourth day on Monday." Spain "has the second highest death toll in the world after Italy, but data gave some cause for hope that the worst may be passing. On Monday, the country reported 637 fatalities in the previous 24 hours – a 5% increase in total and less than half the pace recorded a week earlier." Maria Jose Sierra, deputy head of Spain's health emergency committee, told reporters, "The pandemic's growth rate is slowing down in almost every region."

Death Rate Accelerates In France As Cases Near 100,000. Reuters (4/6, Van Overstraeten) reports France's "coronavirus figures on Monday showed that the rate of increase in fatalities – now at almost 9,000 – sped up again after several days of slowing, while the increase in people needing intensive care continued to decelerate." The total number of cases "increased by 5,171 over the last 24 hours to 98,010, meaning France will likely become the fifth country, after Italy, Spain, the United States and Germany, to cross the 100,000 threshold on Tuesday."

Politico Analysis: Reports Of "Confiscated" Masks Fuels Germans' Dislike Of Trump. Politico (4/6, Karnitschnig, Mischke, 4.29M) reports, "Late last week in Bangkok, a shipping container holding thousands of masks destined for the German capital was redirected at the last minute." Berlin Mayor Michael Müller tweeted, "The actions of the U.S. president do not just betray a lack of solidarity, they are inhumane and irresponsible." Andreas Geisel, Berlin's interior minister, "went even further, accusing the US of 'confiscating' the masks in Thailand." Politico writes, "If Germans didn't trust President Donald Trump before the coronavirus outbreak, the crisis has convinced them that he's not just untrustworthy, but dangerous, driven by an unyielding 'America First' instinct that puts other countries and their citizens at risk."

Japan To Impose State Of Emergency, Launch $1T Stimulus.

Reuters (4/6, Sieg, Kim) reports Japan is expected "to impose a state of emergency in Tokyo and six other prefectures as early as Tuesday to contain the coronavirus, while the government prepares a $990 billion stimulus package to soften the economic blow." To date, there have been 4,000 confirmed cases and 93 deaths domestically, but "the numbers keep rising, with particular alarm over the spread in Tokyo, which has more than 1,000 cases including 83 new ones on Monday." Prime Minister Shinzo Abe explained to reporters, "Japan won't, and doesn't need, to take lockdown steps like those overseas. ... The state of emergency will allow us to strengthen current steps to prevent an increase in infections while ensuring that economic activity is sustained as much as possible."

The AP (4/6) reports Abe "said experts on a government-commissioned task force urged him to prepare to declare a state of emergency, with the COVID-19 outbreak rapidly expanding in major cities including Tokyo, and hospitals and medical staff overburdened with patients." Abe said the state of emergency will be in effect "for about a month."

Russian PM Criticizes Regions That Have Closed Internal Borders.

Reuters (4/6) reports Russian Prime Minister Mikhail Mishustin on Monday "issued an unusual rebuke to regional governors for closing their borders after some regions, including Chechnya in the south, imposed tough restrictions against the coronavirus." Chechnya "said last week it would close its borders with the rest of Russia from April 5 despite having reported only a dozen confirmed cases of coronavirus." Mishustin, "without naming the regions in question, said that 'several regions (had) closed their administrative borders, obstructing the passage of people and transport onto their territory.'"

Indonesia Announces Largest Daily Increase In Cases.

Reuters (4/6) reports that Indonesia on Monday "announced its biggest daily increase in novel coronavirus cases...and a medical association said 24 doctors had now died after contracting the virus." The rise in the death toll among doctors, "which has doubled since last week, followed criticism of a lack of protective equipment in Indonesia." The 218 new coronavirus cases "took the number overall in Indonesia to 2,491. The 209 confirmed deaths among people who have contracted the virus is the highest number of fatalities in Asia outside China."

Israel Declares Lockdown For Passover Holiday.

Reuters (4/6, Rabinovitch) reports Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu announced Monday "a national lockdown would begin on Tuesday and end on Friday to try to stem the spread of the new coronavirus during the Jewish holiday of Passover." In a televised address, Netanyahu "said travel restrictions would be tightened on Tuesday and that Israelis will be banned from leaving their homes on Wednesday evening, when families traditionally travel to festive Passover 'seder' meals."

Brazil's Bolsonaro Dismisses Coronavirus As "Little Flu."

The Washington Times (4/6, Puglie, 492K) reports that "what may sound like a Donald Trump press briefing from a month ago, when US deaths from COVID-19 had barely topped double digits, was actually Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro last week as his country logged its 200th fatality from the viral disease." For weeks, the Times says, "Bolsonaro has not just downplayed but outright dismissed the COVID-19 pandemic as a 'little flu.'"

Ontario Running Out Of PPE After US Officials Blocked Export Of 3M Masks.

Reuters (4/6, Ljunggren) reports Canadian officials Monday said the government is "pressing Washington over a complaint that US officials had blocked the export of three million face masks bought by the province of Ontario to fight the coronavirus outbreak." Ontario Premier Doug Ford "told Global News the incident had happened over the weekend and described it as 'absolutely unacceptable.'" Ford "said Ontario...would run out of personal protective equipment in a week." Deputy Prime Minister Chrystia Freeland "told reporters that Ottawa was aware of 'some difficulties' shipping the masks across the border and would do all it could to help."

Domestic Abuse Rises Worldwide Amid Coronavirus Pandemic.

The New York Times (4/6, Taub, 18.61M) reports, "Movement restrictions aimed to stop the spread of the coronavirus may be making violence in homes more frequent, more severe and more dangerous." The United Nations called on Sunday for "urgent action to combat the worldwide surge in domestic violence." Secretary-General António Guterres wrote on Twitter, "I urge all governments to put women's safety first as they respond to the pandemic."

US Labels A White Supremacist Group "Terrorist" For First Time.

The Washington Post (4/6, Hudson, 14.2M) reports the State Department on Monday designated an ultra-nationalist movement based in Russia as a terrorist organization, "the first time it has applied that label to a white-supremacist group." The US "for years has applied the 'global terrorist' label to Islamist groups, but officials say the designation of the Russian Imperial Movement signals a growing concern about transnational white-supremacist organizations and their potential for violence." Ambassador Nathan Sales, the State Department's counterterrorism coordinator, said, "These designations are unprecedented. We are taking actions no previous administration has taken to counter this threat."

The New York Times (4/6, Savage, Goldman, Schmitt, 18.61M) reports the Department also designated "three of the group's leaders...as individual terrorists." To the Times, the move "could cut against criticism that the Trump administration has played down the threat of white nationalist violence for political reasons." The Washington Times (4/6, Gertz, 492K) reports the designations "come with financial sanctions designed to freeze funding, limit travel and impose other restrictions."

Nicaraguan Leader Absent From Public View For Nearly A Month.

The New York Times (4/6, Robles, 18.61M) reports the Nicaraguan government "has promoted big public events, despite the coronavirus. But the president himself has been conspicuously absent from view for 25 days." President Daniel Ortega "has been conspicuously absent from public view since March 12," failing "to attend the funeral of a friend, government functions, and even the rallies promoted by his administration." According to the Times, "Ortega, 74, is widely believed to suffer chronic illnesses and is known for spending stretches of time out of the public eye without explanation from his government." The government did not respond to requests for comment.

Housing

FHFA Hires Milbank To Advise On GSE Release.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg Law (4/6, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports, "The Federal Housing Finance Agency has hired New York-based Milbank LLP to provide legal counsel on its plans for freeing mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac from U.S. control, according to a document posted to a government awards website."

Black Knight: Servicers May Have To Advance $3B To $13B In Missed Payments Per Month.

National Mortgage News (4/6) reports, "Servicers' aggregate obligations to advance or temporarily absorb unpaid funds due to coronavirus payment suspensions could range from $3 billion to $13 billion per month, according to Black Knight. The amount will depend on the number of loans for which borrowers delay payment." In addition, "Loan performance and deferral rates may not be uniform across markets." FHA loans "tend to have higher rates of delinquency that could boost deferrals significantly," but "servicers in this market may receive limited assistance with P&I payments if needed from Ginnie Mae." For Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae loans, "Black Knight estimated that obligations could reach $1.6 billion if 5% of borrowers deferred, $3.1 billion if there were a 10% forbearance rate, or $6.2 billion if there were a 20% payment-deferral rate."

FHFA Director Discusses GSE Forbearance.

The latest DS5 episode from DS News (4/6, Welborn) features an interview with FHFA Director Mark Calabria, who "discusses what regulators are doing to assist homeowners, lenders, and servicers, including the mortgage forbearance programs being offered to homeowners." Calabria urged borrowers to "be honest" when utilizing forbearance, explaining, "We are asking and we're putting together a script for servicers. This is supposed to be limited to if you've lost your job, you've lost income. Please, if you haven't lost your job, continue paying. If you can pay your mortgage please do so because we really need to focus on the people who can't." According to DS News, "Despite the honor system in place, borrowers will still have to provide documentation when setting up their repayment plans. According to Calabria, up to 2 million borrowers could be applying for loan forbearance by May and said that mortgage servicers, as well as Fannie and Freddie, could handle that if it was just for a few months."

The AP (4/6) reports that the stimulus package "includes a 120-day ban on evictions for many renters, as well as a moratorium on foreclosures for most mortgages. People who have federally backed mortgages (including Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, FHA, VA and Department of Agriculture) and who can attest to COVID-19-related financial hardship can request forbearance from their mortgage lenders." USA Today (4/6, Menton, 10.31M) reports, "The FHFA, which aims to be the standard-bearers for the mortgage market, anticipates that about 90% of mortgages will be covered under some forbearance option, even if it's not formally provided by Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, or other government entities, [FHFA press secretary Raphael Williams] says." WCTI-TV Greenville, NC (4/6, Elnashar) says that according to FHFA Director Mark Calabria, GSE-owned properties alone make up around half of the housing market.

B Riley FBR Analyst Downgrades GSEs To "Sell," Citing CARES Act.

According to Morningstar (4/6, 73K), analyst Randy Binner "turned bearish" on Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, citing "significant unintended consequences" for mortgage insurers stemming from the CARES Act. Binney reportedly "downgraded both Fannie and Freddie to sell from neutral, and halved his stock price targets for both to $1 from $2."

MBA, NAR, NMHC, And USMI Push For Liquidity Facility To Help Servicers Deal With Forbearance.

American Banker (4/6, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "The Federal Reserve and Treasury Department have made noises about providing extra help to mortgage servicers who could face a catastrophic spike in delinquencies, but efforts to provide a broad liquidity backstop are still plagued by uncertainty." Mortgage Professional America (4/6, Johnston) reports, "A broad coalition of organizations representing the financial industry and affordable housing advocates released a statement over the weekend calling on lawmakers to provide a source of liquidity to mortgage servicers. The coalition includes the Mortgage Bankers Association, National Association of Realtors, National Multifamily Housing Council and U.S. Mortgage Insurers, among others." The coalition said it is "incumbent upon the government to provide the final piece of the puzzle – a liquidity facility for single-family and multifamily servicers – to ensure that the entire industry can deliver much-needed economic relief to consumers through this unprecedented forbearance plan." Ginnie Mae "recently addressed some servicer liquidity concerns surrounding COVID-19 in a blog post, noting the strain that issuers are facing is being considered," and "members of the Financial Stability Oversight Council" have reportedly "discussed holding off on setting up such a program to see if other policies would suffice in easing liquidity shortfalls."

Banker and Tradesman (4/6) reports, "Under the terms of the CARES Act and administrative actions announced by the Federal Housing Finance Agency and taken by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac in March, both homeowners and owners of multifamily buildings with mortgages backed by either GSE can put those mortgages into forbearance if they face financial difficulty due to the pandemic." While "many banks and credit unions service mortgages they may have originated but sold onto the secondary market, many servicers are non-depository financial institutions, and so have less money on hand to continue forwarding payments to mortgage holders while payments from mortgagees decline."

CNBC (4/6, Olick, 3.62M) reports, "In an interview on CNBC last Wednesday, Mark Calabria, director of the FHFA, which oversees Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, said he estimated about 2 million borrowers would seek forbearance by May. He did not agree that servicers need liquidity now, only later."

Also reporting are M Report (4/6, Albanese), National Mortgage Professional (4/6), Seeking Alpha (4/6, Alpher, 512K), and World Property Journal (4/6).

PennyMac: Forbearance Buybacks May Be On The Way. Meanwhile, HousingWire (4/6, 23K) reports that PennyMac is warning originators "that forbearance buybacks could be coming." PennyMac said, "Any loan in forbearance or for which forbearance has been requested is not eligible for purchase by PennyMac. Additionally, any loan that is in forbearance or for which forbearance has been requested up to 15 days post purchase by PennyMac may result in a repurchase." According to HousingWire, "The move by PennyMac is a notable one considering its status as the largest mortgage aggregator in the country last year, according to data from Inside Mortgage Finance."

As Pelosi Preps $1T Stimulus Bill, Yellen Suggests More Funding For Local Governments, Intervention From FHFA.

According to a paywalled Bloomberg Law (4/6, Wasson, Subscription Publication, 4K) piece carried by the Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M), "Congress's next stimulus bill to prop up the U.S. economy during the coronavirus crisis will be at least another $1 trillion, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi told Democrats on a private conference call. The next stimulus package would be focused on replenishing funds for programs established in Congress's $2.2 trillion virus relief bill signed into law last month, according to people on the call." Pelosi "said there should be additional direct payments to individuals, extended unemployment insurance, more resources for food stamps and more funds for the Payroll Protection Plan that provides loans to small businesses, lawmakers on the call said." Former Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen, who also participated in the call, responded to "a question from Nevada Democrat Steven Horsford about the best way for states to respond." Yellen "said there will be tremendous need for additional funds to support local governments," and "suggested that the Federal Housing Finance Agency could get involved to help head off a foreclosure crisis."

B Riley FBR Analyst: Cares Act's Mortgage Holiday Could Impact Private Mortgage Insurers.

National Mortgage News (4/6) reports that private mortgage insurers could see "unintended consequences" stemming from the year-long mortgage holiday in the CARES Act, according to B. Riley FBR analyst Randy Binner. He said, "For mortgage insurers, elevated delinquency expectations resulting from the 12-month mortgage holiday embedded in the CARES Act have raised questions about capital adequacy under the Private Mortgage Insurer Eligibility Requirements. While MIs have significant capital and reinsurance protections, they would likely rely upon a reporting forbearance from FHFA if nonperforming mortgages increase over 10% of risk-in-force." According to NMN, "Binner's analysis assumes that the delinquent mortgage portfolio of the two mortgage insurers mentioned in his report, MGIC and National MI, will increase to 15% of the book of business. However, he is also factoring in a 70% haircut to the assets normally required to be held against nonperforming loans, in line with what the Federal Housing Finance Agency had done in natural disasters. But that relief has yet to be granted for the coronavirus."

NAHB: Homebuilding Could Help Economy Overcome Recession.

Mortgage Professional America (4/6, Mendoza) reports, "The National Association of Home Builders reported that building 1,000 average single-family homes creates 2,900 full-time jobs and generates approximately $110 million in taxes and fees, which the government can use to support police, firefighters, and schools. Similarly, building a thousand rental apartments results in 1,250 jobs and $55.91 million in taxes and revenue for local, state, and federal government, while $10 million in remodeling expenditures generates 75 jobs and roughly $3 million in taxes." NAHB Chairman Dean Mon said, "Before the coronavirus pummeled the US economy, housing was on the rise with January and February new-home sales numbers posting their highest reading since the Great Recession. The demand is clearly there, and as this study shows, we expect that housing will play its traditional role of helping to lead the economy out of recession later in 2020 when the pandemic subsides."

Dworkin: Rent Strikes Hurt Everyone.

In an opinion piece for The Hill (4/6, 2.98M), National Housing Conference CEO David Dworkin argues that rent strikes are “bad for everyone,” as they have the potential to “jeopardize the stability of a housing market left seriously shaken by COVID-19.” According to Dworkin, “With eviction moratoriums now imposed at the local, state and federal level, some renters that have not experienced medical or financial hardship and remain able to pay their rent appear to be considering skipping their rent payments. The choice to electively skip rent payments could create devastating consequences for those renters with the necessary financial means available. While it may help conserve cash in the short-term, it could jeopardize a renter’s long-term financial stability and housing.”

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (3/12, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.749 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (4/7, White) reports, “The dollar fell against the yen on Tuesday as underlying concerns about the economic shock wrought by the coronavirus crisis kept many investors on edge.” The dollar “fell 0.43% to 108.76 yen on Tuesday.” Against the euro, the dollar “eased to $1.0837.”

Gold Eases.

Reuters \(UK\) (4/7, Sistla) reports, “Gold prices eased on Tuesday from a one-month high as the U.S. dollar gained strength on signs of a slowdown in fresh coronavirus cases, but concerns over the economic fallout from the pandemic provided a floor to bullion.” Spot gold “was down 0.2% to $1,658.10 per ounce, as of 0353 GMT,” while US gold futures “rose 1% to $1,710.40.”

Oil Rises.

Reuters (4/7) reports, “Oil rose on Tuesday amid hopes that the world’s biggest producers of crude will agree to curtail production as the coronavirus pandemic ravages the global economy, even as analysts cautioned the cuts may do little to boost demand.” Brent crude “was up by 73 cents, or 2.2%, at $33.78 a barrel by 0026 GMT,” and West Texas Intermediate crude “was up by 97 cents, or 3.7%, at $27.05 a barrel, having dropped nearly 8% in the previous session.”

Cybersecurity

Federal Officials Warn Of Remote Collaboration Technology Vulnerabilities.

Federal Computer Week (4/6, 263K) reports in the wake of a recent FBI warning about hackers disrupting Zoom tele-meetings, “federal agencies are warning staff to be on the lookout for signs that their remote collaboration tools are being attacked or compromised by hackers.” The article cites an April 3 email from “a divisional CIO at the Department of Health and Human Services” warning that “the surge of telework among federal agencies following the coronavirus outbreak has created a wide attack surface for malicious third-parties to exploit in numerous ways. The agency warned both employees and contractors that such security concerns go beyond Zoom and other web conferencing software.”

The AP (4/6) reports on the “increasingly common form of cyber attack known as ‘Zoom bombing.’” Many employees newly working from home amid the coronavirus outbreak “have reported uninvited guests who make threats, interject racist, anti-gay or anti-Semitic messages, or show pornographic images. The attacks have drawn the attention of the FBI and other law enforcement agencies.” According to the FBI, a school in Massachusetts “reported a person who accessed a meeting and showed swastika tattoos.” The Boston Field Office “recommended that users of video-teleconference platforms prioritize their security by ensuring that hosts have sole control over screen-sharing features and meeting invitations.”

TFI/Sanctions

Commentary: Sanctions During Pandemic “Morally Depraved,” Illegal Under International Law.

In an op-ed for MarketWatch (4/6, Beeton, Duarte, 1.67M), Center for Economic and Policy Research international communications director Dan Beeton and MADRE policy and strategic engagement director Diana Duarte write, “While the United States is fighting COVID-19 here at home, U.S. sanctions against other governments are aiding the virus’s spread abroad. They’ve already likely contributed to many unnecessary deaths in Iran, and Venezuela’s experience with the pandemic may also be much more deadly due to these punitive measures.” They write that US sanctions “against Iran make it difficult for the country to obtain medical supplies, sanitation equipment, and other goods we now know are necessary to slow the virus’ spread. The sanctions do not directly target medical supplies, but they reduce Iran’s ability to pay for them.” They conclude that the coronavirus pandemic “is a global crisis that requires a global response, and that includes stopping the economic coercion that prevents governments from obtaining essential supplies and medicines.”

Former Diplomats Urge US To Remove Sanctions On Iran.

The Washington Post (4/6, Morello, 14.2M) reports that “two dozen former diplomats and national security leaders from the United States and Europe,” including former Secretary of State Madeline Albright, called on the Administration “to ease sanctions against Iran as part of the battle against the coronavirus pandemic.” According to the Post, “Some of the most storied diplomats in recent U.S. history signed the statement calling for the acrimony to be put aside for sanctions relief now, saying it could help stem the spread of the novel disease and potentially save the lives of hundreds of thousands of people.” The signatories also include Wendy Sherman, a former under secretary of State, and Federica Mogherini, the former EU foreign policy chief, both of whom “were involved in negotiations with Iran for the 2015 nuclear deal.”

Reuters (4/6) reports Iranian Foreign Ministry spokesman Abbas Mousavi said Monday that Iran “will never ask the United States for help in the fight against the new coronavirus.” Mousavi said in a televised news conference, “Iran has never asked and will not ask America to help Tehran in its fight against the outbreak ... But America should lift all its illegal unilateral sanctions on Iran.” The Washington Times (4/6, Meier, 492K), among other news outlets, also reports Mousavi’s comments.

Federal Reserve

Federal Reserve To Purchase New Small Business Payroll Loans.

The New York Times (4/6, Smialek, 18.61M) reports the Federal Reserve “said on Monday that it would take steps to urge more banks to lend to small businesses, moving in to support a new federal program that has gotten off to a rocky start.” The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Davidson, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Fed said it will purchase loans that financial firms make through the government’s emergency small-business lending program. The move will create a secondary market for loans offered through the Small Business Administration’s Payroll Protection Program.

Also reporting are Bloomberg (4/6, Mohsin, 4.73M), the AP (4/6, Rugaber), Reuters (4/6, Schneider, Dunsmuir), The Financial Times (4/6, Politi, Fedor, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), Fox Business (4/6, De Lea, 1.73M), The Hill (4/6, Lane, 2.98M), Business Insider (4/6, Winck, 3.67M), and American Banker (4/6, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K).

Cohn, Hutchins: Fed’s New Role In Lending Calls For Top Talent, Unassailable Transparency. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (4/6, Cohn, Hutchins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Gary Cohn, a former director of the National Economic Council, and Glenn Hutchins, co-chairman of the Brookings Institution, write that Congress has expanded the Federal Reserve’s role in the government’s efforts to stabilize the economy, giving it a new responsibility in which it has little experience: funneling capital directly to companies. In order to succeed at this task, Cohn and Hutchins says the Fed will need top-notch talent, strict governance, and stringent disclosure.

New York Fed Says Commercial Paper Facility Will Launch April 14.

The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Federal Reserve Bank of New York said that its new commercial paper market facility will launch next Tuesday, with applications for participation required to be submitted by Thursday. The new facility will help smooth over businesses’ funding needs by purchasing eligible three month commercial paper from eligible issuers. On its website, the Fed said, “the commercial paper market has been under considerable strain as investors have become reluctant to purchase commercial paper,” and that resulted in surging interest rates and some firms being unable to access the market. The Fed says its support to this market will provide “credit that will support families, businesses, and jobs across the economy.” MarketWatch (4/6, Oh, 1.67M) and Reuters (4/6, Marte) also report.

Regulators Lower Leverage Ratio For Community Banks.

American Banker (4/6, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the $2 trillion stimulus package “temporarily lowered the community bank leverage ratio – a simplified measure that institutions below $10 billion of assets can use instead of more complex capital requirements – by one point to 8%,” but regulators are expanding the capital relief. In a joint press release, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Federal Reserve, and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. “said Monday that community banks choosing to use the CBLR would only need to raise it to 8.5% in 2021. The 9% minimum would be reinstated the following year.” The regulators said, “This transition will allow community banking organizations to focus on supporting lending to creditworthy households and businesses given the recent strains on the U.S. economy caused by the coronavirus.” Reuters (4/6, Schroeder) reports similarly.

Fed May Temporarily Lift Wells Fargo Asset Cap To Help Small Businesses.

The New York Times (4/6, Flitter, 18.61M) reports banks are “so overwhelmed” with small business loan requests that Federal Reserve officials “are considering easing restrictions on Wells Fargo to make it easier for it to lend.” The Fed in 2018 imposed growth limits on Wells Fargo as a penalty for opening millions of fake accounts in customers’ names. However, “there is so much demand and chaos in the $349 billion lending program, which went into effect via participating banks on Friday, that Fed officials are now discussing a temporary truce with Wells, according to two people with knowledge of the matter.” Senior executives at the bank “are now talking with Fed officials about a short-term pause in the penalties,” which would involve lifting the asset cap, “just long enough to let the bank handle more loan volume, said the people.”

The Financial Times (4/6, Noonan, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports Wells said Sunday night that it reached its limit for loans via the relief program overseen by the Small Business Administration. American Banker (4/6, Cross, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the bank “has capacity to lend $10 billion to small-business clients under the $349 billion U.S. program, but customers already have expressed more interest than that, Wells Fargo said in a statement late Sunday.” CEO Charlie Scharf said, “While we are actively working to create balance sheet capacity to lend, we are limited in our ongoing ability to use our strong capital and liquidity position to extend additional credit. We are committed to helping our customers during these unprecedented and challenging times, but are restricted in our ability to serve as many customers as we would like.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

“This Is Trump’s Vilest Act Of Retribution Yet.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) says President Trump “used the cover of night and the novel coronavirus pandemic” to fire Michael Atkinson, the intelligence community’s inspector general, and “extend his purge of officials who cooperated with the exposure or investigation of his wrongdoing.” The Post calls the move “the most blatant and shameful act of retribution yet by a president who has sought to shut down all independent checks on his behavior.”

“Clarity Is Essential Amid This Pandemic, Yet The Trump Administration Sends Mixed Messages.” President Trump and Administration officials are sending “mixed messages,” an editorial by the Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) says, “at a time when public cooperation is desperately needed to blunt” the coronavirus pandemic and “clarity is essential.” In the Post’s view, “the reason for the confusion is no mystery: Mr. Trump will not consistently defer to experts, and his officials fear crossing him.” The editorial concludes, “That is no way to defeat a pandemic.”

“D.C.’s Board Of Elections Needs To Get It Together For A Smooth June Primary.” Citing past errors by the District of Columbia Board of Elections, the Washington Post (4/6, 14.2M) says in an editorial that is “understandable that there are some questions, even skepticism, about whether the agency will be able to pull off the June primary amid the unprecedented challenges of the novel coronavirus pandemic – especially as it involves an ambitious plan to get more people to vote by mail.” While the board “absolutely made the right decision in limiting the number of physical voting sites for the June 2 presidential and local primary,” the success of the effort “depends upon execution.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Congress’s Small-Business Ventilator.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Congress put the Small Business Administration in a difficult position, giving the agency little guidance in how to dole out $350 billion in loans to millions of small businesses in a relatively short period of time. The Journal says lawmakers should fix problems in the program in order to speed up loan approvals and save businesses.

“Yanks For Boris Johnson.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) offers good wishes and prayers for British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, and expresses confidence in Britain’s ability to weather the crisis.

“The Teachers Union Ate My Homework.” The Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that by insisting on total equity for all students, teachers’ unions are forcing some schools to not offer online education since not all students have computers or Internet access. The Journal says this denies opportunity to all.

“Prohibition Makes A Comeback.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes attempts to shut down alcohol sales during the pandemic, because attempts at prohibition invariably cause more problems that it solves. In particular, the Journal takes issue with Pennsylvania’s order to restrict alcohol sales, which has led to residents traveling to other states to buy alcohol, potentially spreading the virus.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Here in the United States, the country is bracing for a week that the Surgeon General Jerome Adams said is going to be our Pearl Harbor moment and our 9/11 moment. Adding that this is going to be the hardest and saddest week of most Americans' lives. ... But despite these warnings, there are still people who are not taking social distancing seriously. ... Okay people, just because Jesus is on your side doesn't mean you can't get sick. Don't forget, Jesus was on Jesus' side, and he died, okay? He came back, but that was like a one-time thing."

Trevor Noah: "And you know, it is funny how these same people say Jesus will protect them from coronavirus are the same people stocking up on guns. I don't get it, won't the blood of Jesus protect you from an intruder?"

Stephen Colbert: "After saying yesterday that this was going to be a tough week, this morning [President Trump] tweeted, 'light at the end of the tunnel!'"

Stephen Colbert: "Despite experts saying we need a national stay-at-home order, Trump has refused to implement one, so social distancing requirements have been left up to the states. And while some state officials are taking it seriously, others are not. Take Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp. ... Even though many Georgia tourist areas decided to close during the pandemic, Kemp enraged local leaders by reopening all the state's beaches, an order which supersedes those issued on the city or county level. That would be like a teenager deciding not to go to a house party and his dad saying, 'No, you will go, you will drink too much Jagermeister, and you will try to jump over the bonfire to impress the seniors, young man!'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump said over the weekend that despite testing negative for coronavirus twice, he may start taking an experimental drug that's been used to treat malaria. Said Trump, 'If it's good enough for my wife Malaria, it's good enough for me.'"

Seth Meyers: "Yesterday about the coronavirus pandemic, Queen Elizabeth told Great Britain that, quote, 'Better days will return.' Unlike Harry and Meghan, who absolutely will not."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump said last week that he plans to stay in the White House for the rest of the month because of the coronavirus pandemic and said it is, quote, 'sort of like the nerve center.' Which makes sense, because it is the source of all of our panic attacks."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump said there was no reason to postpone or alter plans for the summer's Republican National Convention. Of course he's not going to cancel a party in his honor. Trump would interrupt a funeral to announce it's his half birthday."

Treasury in the News

Wyden Writes Mnuchin About Possible Trump Interference In Court Case With Turkish Bank.

Reuters (10/24, Pamuk) reports Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR) on Thursday "questioned whether President Donald Trump interfered with a criminal investigation of Turkey's Halkbank, which has been accused of conspiring to evade U.S. sanctions against Iran." Wyden, "the ranking member on the Senate Finance Committee, wrote to U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin asking if Trump or anyone acting on the president's behalf had asked Mnuchin to 'handle, intervene, or otherwise engage with Turkish concerns related to Halkbank, or with Halkbank generally?'" His letter "cited an Oct. 16 Bloomberg report that Trump told Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan in April that Mnuchin and U.S. Attorney General William Barr would handle the Halkbank issue." Bloomberg (10/24, Mohsin, Jacobs, Wadhams, 4.73M) and Mother Jones (10/24, Friedman, 881K) also report on this story.

Yellen Says Warren's Policy Proposals Would Not Increase Likelihood Of Recession.

Newsweek (10/24, Croucher, 1.53M) reports former Fed Chair Janet Yellen in an interview "said the economic policies of Senator Elizabeth Warren, a leading candidate for the Democratic Party's 2020 nomination, would not increase the odds of a recession." Yellen told Newsweek, "I see no reason why her proposals would make a recession more likely. She proposes various taxes to pay for high priority spending initiatives. On balance, tax-financed spending should boost, not restrain, demand. She also proposes tough regulation of the financial system, which diminishes the odds of a future financial crisis." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "claimed in September that Warren's plans for the economy would lead to a recession or a worse economic crisis," telling reporters, "I think if you listen to the Elizabeth Warren plan, it is 100 percent recession, if not worse."

Treasury Department Temporarily Blocks Creditors From Seizing Citgo In Victory For Venezuelan Opposition.

Reuters (10/24) reports the US on Thursday "temporarily blocked a creditor seizure of Citgo, a win for political leaders in Venezuela struggling to retain control over the U.S. refiner owned by the chaotic South American nation." Shares of Citgo, "a subsidiary of Venezuelan state oil company PDVSA, were used as collateral for a bond issue expected to go into default next week when a $913 million payment comes due." However, the Treasury Department, "which maintains a broad sanctions program against the government of Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro, said no transfers or sales of Citgo shares linked to the PDVSA bond could take place until Jan. 22." Treasury's announcement "appeared to be more of a short-term workaround than a permanent move by the Trump administration to keep Citgo out of creditor hands, as allies of opposition leader Juan Guaido have repeatedly sought." The AP (10/24), Bloomberg (10/24, Bartenstein, 4.73M), and the Financial Times (10/24, Smith, Long, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report on this story.

US Gives Firms Time To Wind Down Deals With COSCO Unit Hit By Iran Sanctions.

Reuters (10/24) reports the US Treasury Department on Thursday "issued a nearly two-month waiver for companies to wind down transactions with a Chinese tanker company it sanctioned last month for allegedly transporting Iranian oil." According to a notice from the department's Office of Foreign Assets Control, the waiver, valid through December 20, "allows 'maintenance or wind down of transactions' including offloading non-Iranian crude oil involving COSCO Shipping Tanker (Dalian) Co. Ltd." Concern about the sanctions "caused shipping costs for oil and liquefied natural gas to more than double around the globe."

Leading National News

Forty-Six GOP Senators Sign Onto Resolution Condemning Impeachment Process.

Media reports cast an unfavorable light on GOP attempts to fight back against the impeachment drive against the President, describing it as an attempt to distract from the facts and as a response to prodding from the White House. Reuters (10/24, Morgan, Cowan) reports Republicans "pressed their offensive against the Democratic-led impeachment inquiry...with...a Senate resolution calling it illegitimate." The CBS Evening News (10/24, story 2, 2:14, Cordes, 4.05M) said "Trump has been urging his party to step it up all week, calling his GOP critics 'human scum,'" and "House Republicans" had already "complied" on Wednesday "storming into an impeachment deposition." USA Today (10/24, Behrmann, 10.31M) indicates the Senate resolution's main sponsor, Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "called for the House to give the 'same rights to Trump as Clinton and Nixon'...had during their investigations." The measure "calls on House Democrats to hold a formal vote to open an impeachment inquiry," and "for allowing Trump to bring forth witnesses in his defense and give Republicans...the ability to issue subpoenas, reiterating, 'House Democrats are even denying their own Republican colleagues basic procedural rights that the minority party was granted throughout previous impeachments.'" Graham said on Fox News' Hannity (10/24, 9:07 p.m. ET, 535K) that the resolution has garnered 46 signatures so far – more than enough to acquit the President if the Senate were to hold a trial.

Encapsulating the tenor of much of the coverage, the Washington Post (10/24, 14.2M) editorializes this morning, "There is an old Washington saying that if you're arguing about process, you're losing. A follow-on maxim might be: If you are wrong on process, too, you must really be in trouble." The Post adds, however, that "holding a vote" in the House "would add legitimacy, and, more to the point, the sooner House investigators move from closed hearings to open ones, the better. ... Of course, all of this could happen sooner if the Trump administration were not stonewalling." Along those lines, NBC Nightly News (10/24, story 4, 1:55, Alexander, 5.63M) reported "Democrats argue Republicans are just trying to distract from [Ambassador Bill] Taylor's testimony," and showed Sen. Dick Durbin (D-IL) saying, "Usually when you have no substantive argument to make, you try to get a headline arguing against process, or getting attention." NBC added that "despite the criticism...House Democrats [are] moving forward with more closed door hearings beginning this weekend."

Among the resolution's sponsors is Senate Majority Leader McConnell, who according to the Washington Examiner (10/24, Ferrechio, 448K) "called the House impeachment proceedings 'grossly unfair' and said Trump 'has legitimate concerns about the process.'" McConnell, The Hill (10/24, Carney, 2.98M) reports, "confirmed to reporters that he will back the measure, saying, 'Obviously I support it.'" The AP (10/24) reports "the nonbinding resolution gives Senate Republicans a chance to show support for Trump at a moment when Trump is urging his GOP allies to get tougher and fight harder for him as the House impeachment probe gathers momentum."

The New York Times (10/24, Shear, Fandos, 18.61M), under the headline "Republicans Fight Trump's Impeachment By Attacking The Process," calls Graham's resolution "a symbolic objection to the investigation a day after Republicans in the House stormed a secure room in the Capitol to disrupt it." The New York Post (10/24, Fredericks, 4.57M) points out Graham "lashed out at the House impeachment inquiry, dismissing testimony from the acting US ambassador to Ukraine as 'hearsay.'" Graham said, "I've got nothing against Bill Taylor. It's the process. You're asking me do I believe something based on a statement that hasn't been tested. Until we get the full picture, I think – I said this yesterday, I think it's hard to draw any conclusions." Townhall (10/24, O'Brien, 177K) notes that pressed on the Trump-Zelensky call, Graham said yesterday, "To me, it's not an impeachable offense. ... I have no problem with the phone call." Graham "added that the impeachment inquiry isn't only partisan, but... 'dangerous to the president'" and "to the future of the presidency."

The Hill (10/24, Carney, 2.98M) reports Graham also "said on Thursday that he discussed impeachment messaging with acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney." Said Graham, "So I talked to Chief of Staff Mulvaney. I think they're working on getting a messaging team together." Under the headline "Senate Republicans Toughen On Impeachment After Trump Gripes," Politico (10/24, Levine, Zanona, 4.29M) reports that while "Senate Republicans have lambasted House Democrats for holding depositions behind closed doors and for declining to hold a vote that would formalize an impeachment inquiry," the President's "conservative allies in the House are growing frustrated that their Senate counterparts aren't doing more to protect the president."

The Hill (10/24, Carney, 2.98M) pointed out yesterday afternoon that "the GOP senators not cosponsoring the resolution as of Thursday afternoon, according to a list from Graham's office, are: Sens. Mitt Romney (R-Utah), Susan Collins (R-Maine), Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), Cory Gardner (R-Colo.), Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.), Mike Enzi (R-Wyo.), Johnny Isakson (R-Ga.), Dan Sullivan (R-Alaska) and Rob Portman (R-Ohio)." To the New York Times (10/24, Edmondson, Cochrane, 18.61M), in a story titled "Vulnerable Senate Republicans Shrink From Defending Trump," Republicans face the "growing fear" the impeachment investigation "will also determine their" fate. The AP (10/24, Fram, Miller) reports, meanwhile, that while "most Republicans were still standing by Trump" they are doing so "in delicately calibrated ways after Tuesday's closed-door testimony by acting ambassador William Taylor."

The Daily Caller (10/24, Athey, 716K) reports "House Democrats have repeatedly flouted normal congressional procedures in their attempts to conduct the impeachment inquiry against President Donald Trump behind closed doors, sources tell the Daily Caller." The DC adds "three individuals who are intimately familiar with House procedures expressed dismay at several tactics used by Democrats, including the use of a SCIF – a Sensitive Compartmented Information Facility – to conduct interviews, the issuing of subpoenas to force depositions, and the lack of a vote to give official authority to the committees charged with conducting the impeachment proceedings." These "sources – who wished to be anonymous in order to speak candidly about the inquiry – told the Caller that these actions show that the Democrats are more concerned about optics than proper procedure or transparency." A "GOP aide" said, "There are no rules. ... Schiff is making up the rules as he goes along."

Writing for the Federalist (10/24, 126K), Adam Mill says "criticisms of Rep. Adam Schiff's impeachment tactics have begun to bite," as "fair-minded people have begun to ask why is it necessary to have secret witnesses, secret hearings, and leaks of distorted, out-of-context excerpts from transcripts," Asks Mill, "Why is it necessary to block the president from sending representatives to attend these hearings so he can have equal access to any evidence? Why was it necessary for House Intelligence Committee Chairman Schiff to 'parody' the transcript of the president's call to the Ukrainian president? Aren't parodies supposed to be funny? Shouldn't the chairman be proceeding with sober deliberation and fairness instead of romping about with gleeful shtick? ... And why are Democrats shutting out Republicans from the process?"

Rep. Lee Zeldin (R-NY) said on Twitter, "This impeachment inquiry has produced NOTHING to impeach POTUS for (I've been inside every depo thus far). While Dems run from the MANY gross flaws of how this circus is run, I welcome a debate on just how massively screwed up their clown show is on the SUBSTANCE."

Rep. Paul Gosar (R-AZ) tweeted, "The only reason Adam Schiff is conducting these unclassified interviews in a SCIF is to allow Democrats to control the narrative getting to the press. We are watching a coup happen right in front of us. It's time to fight back."

Rep. Jodey Arrington (R-TX) spoke with CNN Newsroom (10/24, 9:17 a.m. ET, 864K) about the impeachment proceedings against President Trump. He said, "I'm doing my part like my colleagues to raise the awareness of the fact that this is what I call an impeachment inquisition, not an impeachment process. And it will only be that. It will be purely political until there's openness and fairness and due process, like we've done in past impeachment proceedings with previous presidents." He continued, "The President not only did what was appropriate. He did, I think, faithfully executed his constitutional responsibility as a fiduciary taxpayer resources."

Rep. Andy Biggs (R-AZ) said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/24, 7:03 a.m. ET, 831K), "What we felt was so important is to elevate the conversation for the American people to understand that everything that's happening here is process-driven. There is no substance to their allegations. So the process is corrupt. It's behind closed doors. It's Soviet-style. They have already predetermined they are going to seek impeachment and work on articles of impeachment, but they are not letting us in. As members of Congress, they are not letting the American people see what's happening. They are not letting transcripts be available. ... We felt we just had to get in there so we could see it. And we went in very orderly, very calmly, and basically sat there and as soon as we got there, [House Intelligence Chairman Adam] Schiff and the witness left."

Rep. French Hill (R-AR) said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/24, 7:43 a.m. ET, 1.36M), "Bill Taylor is a distinguished diplomat and fine guy. He clearly differed with foreign policy by the White House. He made it clear in the 15-page opening statement. What we don't have as Republicans is the give and take you have and an open hearing process. ... I know we have Republican members on the committees questioning, but I think – you go back to your Judiciary Committee work during the Clinton days, I believe the Speaker should have declared an inquiry, had the Judiciary Committee begin to hold hearings. Those hearings could have been closed if necessary, but nothing is classified about what is being asked."

Fred Fleitz, former Chief of Staff and Executive Secretary of the National Security Council under Trump, told CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (10/24, 9:01 p.m. ET, 1.14M) that the impeachment investigation is not being conducted according to the precedents set by prior impeachments and is unfair to President Trump. He said he understood that "Republicans destroyed [Bill Taylor] in the closed hearing. ... I'm going to give the President the benefit of the doubt until I see the entire testimony." He went on to repeatedly express doubts that when open hearings are held that they will be held in a fair manner.

Kimberley A. Strassel writes at the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Strassel, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that the failure to hold a vote on the impeachment inquiry also House Intel Chairman Schiff to avoid the rules that would normally apply to such an inquiry. She argues that barring Republicans and the White House from this stage of the proceedings will color the narrative that is presented later.

USA Today (10/24, Wu, 10.31M) reports, meanwhile, that though "Republicans have denounced the impeachment inquiry as happening in 'secret,' a 'sham,' and a 'Soviet-style process'...the 47 Republicans on the committees leading the investigation have access to the closed-door depositions." Moreover, "Republicans claim they have not been able to access relevant documents and testimony from the impeachment hearings, but Democrats disagree and say Republicans have not shown up for the depositions." The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Andrews, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) runs a similar story under the headline "Democrats Defend Private Interviews In Impeachment Probe," and the Washington Times (10/24, Lovelace, 492K) quotes Senate Minority Leader Schumer as saying yesterday on the Senate floor, "All the facts must come out and those who are attempting to obstruct this fact-finding inquiry may regret the day when they said all they want to do is open up the process. ... Our Republican friends may get what they wished for – all the facts coming out – they will regret it because at least from reports, the facts are very, very troubling."

ABC World News Tonight (10/24, story 6, 2:01, Moran, 14.63M) reported that "in both the Nixon and Clinton impeachments, closed-door hearings were held," and that "even on the President's favorite Fox News show this morning, a defense of the impeachment inquiry." Andrew Napolitano was shown saying, "They are consistent with the rules, and when were the rules written last? In January of 2015, and who signed them? John Boehner. And who enacted them? A Republican majority." ABC added "Democrats have made clear they will hold public hearings probably sometime next month."

Rep. Jackie Speier (D-CA) said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/24, 7:29 a.m. ET, 1.32M), "We've never had a President like this before, so the laws that we've had on the books have oftentimes been inappropriately responded to. Clearly, he looks at every legal loophole and says we have to close those. If a staff member, a federal employee refuses to meet with Congress, they should be in a position where they lose their salary for a period of time. We should use inherent contempt, which we haven't done, which would bring people to the House floor. They could be questioned there and then if they don't comply."

Speier told CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (10/24, 8:18 p.m. ET, 1.19M) that the timeline for the impeachment proceedings is not set but "if you're comparing what we're doing with the impeachment inquiry versus the Benghazi committee work, which was held and controlled by the Republicans, we're on a fast-track." Meanwhile, she said Democrats are in favor of "making sure that there is a very fulsome open hearing discussion on what is a really serious issue, and that's why the Republicans aren't talking about the actual corpus. That is the conduct of the President trying to get a foreign government to interfere in our election on his behalf." She rebutted the hearsay arguments being made by some Republicans, concluding that "it's really in my view, a very clear case."

Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) said on CNN's New Day (10/24, 8:14 a.m. ET, 683K), "There will be public hearings. ... Why we are not doing it publicly right now? There was no preliminary investigation done by a special prosecutor or special counsel like Watergate or in the Clinton impeachment trial. We know, however, we have evidence, very recently, that there are witnesses in our case who are talking to each other. That's exactly what we don't want to happen until we have that preliminary investigation. We don't want them to tailor the testimony to each other. We're trying to protect the information before we bring it forward to the public."

House Majority Whip Clyburn said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/24, 8:38 a.m. ET, 1.26M), "We've got 109 members of these three committees. Of that 109, 47 of them in the room every day are Republicans with their counsel. They are participating. They get equal time to ask questions and to follow up with questions. So this notion that we're doing something in secret is just absolutely not true. It is in private, and that's where you do fact-finding because we are supposed to not just pursue the guilty, but we are to protect the innocent. You cannot do that in public view. So it is shameful that they would be misrepresenting this process this way."

House Majority Leader Hoyer told CNN's Out Front (10/24, 7:06 p.m. ET, 1.07M) that he's open to a broader impeachment inquiry against President Trump. He said, "I'm certainly open to it based upon what the facts dictate. I think there are a lot of members who believe that the American people get that it is improper to be asking a foreign head of government to involve himself in our elections. They think that's not the right thing to do under the constitution and laws of our country or under election laws." With regard to objections raised by Republicans, Hoyer said, "I think the process argument is a distraction and is phony. What is at question here is the substance of the President's actions."

Democratic presidential candidate Tom Steyer told CNN Right Now (10/24, 1:20 p.m. ET, 965K) that the "President has been corrupt from day one. I think that he has committed crimes, I think we all know that. Michael Cohen is in prison for the crimes that he committed at the behest of this President." With regard to impeachment Trump has "broken his word to the Constitution and his trust with the American people. ... I think that this Ukraine incident as we see the evidence mount that it was very clearly a quid pro quo, that he was using his office to benefit himself personally, politically, and then trying to cover it up is very clear."

Gabbard Calls For Transparency: "I Don't Know What's Going On In Those Closed Doors." Presidential candidate Tulsi Gabbard told Fox News' Hannity (10/24, 9:30 p.m. ET, 535K) that with regard to impeachment, she said "I think there are areas of concern that were raised around the conversations that happen between Trump and the Ukrainian President, which is why I supported the inquiry. I think that entry needs to be done in a very narrowly focused way, and it must be done transparently." She continued, "I don't know what's going on in those closed doors. We as members of Congress do not have access to the information that's being shared. I think the American people deserve to know exactly what the facts are, what the evidence is being presented as this inquiry goes on."

GOP Senate May Dismiss Articles Of Impeachment Without Trial. The Hill (10/24, Carney, 2.98M) reports "Trump's biggest allies in the Senate are looking to quickly quash articles of impeachment that the Democratic-controlled House might pass in the coming months." Republicans, "who believe it is likely the House will impeach Trump, are weighing what is best for their party: a rapid dismissal of impeachment or a vote to acquit Trump after a trial. Sixty-seven votes are needed to convict a president." Rudy Giuliani has "backed the Senate dismissing any articles of impeachment, telling The Hill earlier this month that it would be "horrible" if the Senate held a trial." The Hill adds "a Senate GOP leadership aide noted in a memo about the Senate's impeachment rules that a motion to dismiss would be in order."

Trump Thanks House GOP For Helping Fight "Witch Hunt," Grisham "Glad" About "Sit-In." On Thursday morning, President

Trump tweeted, "Thank you to House Republicans for being tough, smart, and understanding in detail the greatest Witch Hunt in American History. It has been going on since long before I even got Elected (the Insurance Policy!). A total Scam!"

Asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/24, 8:33 a.m. ET, 831K) about GOP representatives disrupting a Wednesday impeachment inquiry hearing, White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham said, "I'm glad they did it. These Dems have been doing everything behind closed doors and in secret. It is about time somebody made a very bold stand – I guess a sit-in, which is what they did – and it was great and the point was well-taken. Now I'm hearing the Dems agreed in three weeks they will open these up to the public. I don't know why they don't do it starting now. Seems like it is working. They know they're wrong." The Washington Post (10/24, Wagner, 14.2M) also reports Grisham "said Thursday that...Trump was 'very supportive' of the Republicans who stormed the secure room where depositions are being taken in the impeachment inquiry on Wednesday, prompting a five-hour delay."

As Trump Challenges Whistleblower's "Fictitious Account," Democrats Says He Won't Testify. The President tweeted last night, "Where is the Whistleblower, and why did he or she write such a fictitious and incorrect account of my phone call with the Ukrainian President? Why did the IG allow this to happen? Who is the so-called Informant (Schiff?) who was so inaccurate? A giant Scam!" The Washington Post (10/24, Debonis, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports, meanwhile, that "the whistleblower who initially unmasked...Trump's effort to pressure Ukraine for political favors has moved steadily toward the periphery of the House impeachment inquiry as several Democrats said Thursday they have ample testimony from senior Trump administration officials to back his claims." The Post adds that "over the past month," Democrats "have grown cold to the idea of exposing him to additional scrutiny after several witnesses described how Trump leveraged access and military aid to secure a promise from Ukraine to launch investigations that could help his 2020 reelection bid." A "person familiar with the discussions between the whistleblower and House investigators...said Thursday that there are no active efforts to arrange for the individual's testimony."

Politico Report: Democrats Say Their Probe Had "Yielded A Mountain Of Damaging Evidence." Politico (10/24, Cheney, Desiderio, Caygle, 4.29M) reports, "Democrats leading the impeachment inquiry...have provided no time frame for moving their highly secretive process out from behind closed doors – and that's because there isn't one." Politico adds that "interviews with a dozen Democratic lawmakers and aides reveal little urgency to cut short a string of closed-door depositions with senior Trump administration figures that have yielded a mountain of damaging evidence, amid Republican lawmakers' gripes about the tightly controlled process." While "Democratic leaders still view the end of 2019 as a rough deadline to complete the impeachment...the unexpected deluge of testimony that investigators have received in private from witnesses willing to defy the White House's efforts to silence them has left lawmakers reluctant to stanch the flow — and possibly miss crucial details."

McLaughlin Poll: 52% Say Impeachment "Political" Effort To Hurt Trump's Reelection. Pollster John McLaughlin tweeted yesterday that according to his firm's latest poll, "52% majority says impeachment is political to stop @realDonaldTrump reelection only 36% legal 47%-33% say @POTUS shudn't cooperate n 59%-33% say it's a waste n Dems need to work w/ Reps to solve nations problems."

DOJ's Durham Investigation Of Russia Probe's Origins Becomes A Criminal Inquiry.

The New York Times (10/24, Benner, Goldman, 18.61M) reports, "For more than two years, President Trump has repeatedly attacked the Russia investigation, portraying it as a hoax and illegal even months after the special counsel closed it," and "now, Mr. Trump's own Justice Department has opened a criminal investigation into how it all began." DOJ "officials have shifted an administrative review of the Russia investigation closely overseen by Attorney General William P. Barr to a criminal inquiry, according to two people familiar with the matter." That "gives the prosecutor running it, John H. Durham, the power to subpoena for witness testimony and documents, to impanel a grand jury and to file criminal charges." The Times adds "the opening of a criminal investigation is likely to raise alarms that Mr. Trump is using the Justice Department to go after his perceived enemies," because the President "has made clear that he sees the typically independent Justice Department as a tool to be wielded against his political enemies." The AP (10/24, Balsamo) also says the move "is likely to raise concerns that...Trump and his allies may be using the powers of the government to go after their opponents."

USA Today (10/24, Johnson, 10.31M) reports "Barr launched the inquiry in April into whether federal investigators abused their surveillance authority as they sought to understand Russia's interference efforts during the 2016 presidential campaign." Barr "later appointed Connecticut's chief federal prosecutor, John Durham, to manage the investigation." Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) "praised Barr after news of the criminal investigation broke," tweeting, "If true, this shows Bill Barr is doing EXACTLY his job: following the facts. ... Those who damaged America and broke the law to spread this hoax are about to face accountability." The Washington Examiner (10/24, Dunleavy, 448K) recounts that "Durham, whose investigative portfolio recently expanded to include events from the launch of the inquiry in 2015 or 2016 through the appointment of special counsel Robert Mueller in 2017, has taken overseas fact-finding trips with...Barr, who was given 'full and complete authority to declassify information' related to the origins of the Trump-Russia inquiry in May."

Politico (10/24, Gerstein, 4.29M) says "former officials had expressed repeated concern about Durham's inquiry in recent weeks, saying there were indications that it was expanding beyond a typical look-back at how high-profile matters were handled."

Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) said on Fox News' Hannity (10/24, 9:07 p.m. ET, 535K) that he has "lot a confidence in Bill Barr to be fair to everybody, including the subject of investigation. ... We can't live in a world where the rule of law only applies to Democrats, not Republicans."

DOJ IG To Lawmakers: Finalizing Of FISA Abuses Probe "Nearing Completion." Fox News (10/24, Re, 27.59M) reports, "Justice Department Inspector General Michael E. Horowitz told Senate and House lawmakers Thursday that the process of finalizing his report into potential Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) abuses ahead of the 2016 presidential election was 'nearing completion,' according to a letter obtained by Fox News." Fox adds "the 'lengthy' draft report 'concerns sensitive national security and law enforcement matters,' Horowitz wrote in the letter, adding that he anticipated 'the final report will be released publicly with few redactions.'"

Johnson, Grassley Ask ICIIG Whether New Strzok Texts Are Being Investigated. Fox News (10/24, Re, 27.59M) reports "top Republicans on Wednesday demanded that Intelligence Community Inspector General (ICIIG) Michael Atkinson explain why the watchdog hasn't said if it's investigating 'a number of leaks of highly sensitive information' in recent years – and released several previously unpublished texts and emails from since-fired FBI agent Peter Strzok." Senate Homeland Security Committee Chairman Ron Johnson (R-WI) and Finance Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley (R-IA) "specifically asked the ICIIG why Strzok texted bureau colleague Lisa Page on Dec. 15, 2016: 'Think our sisters have begun leaking like mad. Scorned and worried and political, they're kicking in to overdrive.'" Wrote the senators, "What are they worried about, and what are they kicking into 'overdrive'?... Who are the 'sisters,' and what does it mean to say that the 'sisters have [been] leaking like mad'?" Moreover, "the senators pushed to know whether the ICIIG was looking into Strzok's email to FBI colleagues on April 13, 2017, when he wrote that an unidentified 'agency' might be the 'source of some of the leaks' to the media that he'd been seeing."

Cicilline, Swalwell Say Impeachment Witnesses Have Been Coordinating Testimony.

The Daily Beast (10/24, Brodey, 1.39M) reports, "Some Democrats involved in the impeachment inquiry are beginning to suspect that certain witnesses have coordinated with each other ahead of testifying to ensure their stories do not conflict – the very outcome investigators are trying to avoid by conducting hearings behind closed doors." Reps. David Cicilline (D-RI) and Eric Swalwell (D-CA) said that "over the course of the nine witness depositions they have conducted over the last several weeks, there have been suggestions that certain witnesses spoke to each other about what they would say to impeachment investigators." Swalwell said, "We have direct evidence from our investigation that witnesses have talked to each other about their testimony."

Sondland Disputes Taylor Testimony.

Breitbart (10/24, Nolte, 673K) reports "US ambassador to the European Union Gordon Sondland disputes the most damning portions of Acting Ukraine Ambassador William Taylor's impeachment testimony." Adds Breitbart, "Time and time and time again, this is how it works... Some Deep State Never Trumper delivers a 'bombshell' testimony that is certain to see the Orange Bad Man removed from office, and then it appears to fall apart once all the facts come to life, once the full context becomes clear." According to Taylor's opening statement, "this man who has never met or spoken with Trump, claims he heard third- and fourth-hand information," through Sondland, "proving there was a dastardly quid pro quo between Trump and Ukraine." However, "through his attorney, among other things, Sondland told the far-left Washington Post he 'did not recall conversations recounted by Taylor in his House deposition.'"

Conservative Leaders Sign Letter Backing Mulvaney In Fight Against "Swamp."

Fox News (10/24, Olson, 27.59M) reports on its website that "dozens of conservative leaders are coming to the defense" of Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney, "who has faced rumors he could be on the way out of the Trump administration." In a letter to the White House, the Conservative Action Project writes in part, "Conservatives are proud to support the role Mick Mulvaney continues to play in the Trump Administration. Recent news reports demonstrate that...the D.C. Swamp is attacking him – and we believe it is because he has been the most successful Chief of Staff in this administration to advance the Trump pro-America agenda." The AP (10/24, Miller) says "Mulvaney came under fire from Trump allies after he appeared to acknowledge that Trump held up military aid to Ukraine partly for political reasons." He "then later denied that he had said it."

Axios (10/24, Swan, 521K) reports "at least 47 conservative leaders have signed the statement so far," including Tim Chapman of Heritage Action, Jenny Beth Martin of Tea Party Patriots, Tom McCluskey of March for Life Action, David McIntosh of the Club for Growth, Lisa Nelson of the American Legislative Exchange Counsel, and Tony Perkins of the Family Research Council. Politico (10/24, Cook, 4.29M) reports Kenneth Blackwell of the Constitutional Congress, David Bossie of Citizens United, and Myron Ebell of the Competitive Enterprise Institute have also signed.

White House Defends Trump Calling "Never Trump" Republicans "Human Scum."

The Hill (10/24, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports "White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham said Thursday that President Trump does not regret calling 'Never Trump' Republicans 'human scum' and said they 'deserve strong language like that.'" Grisham said on Fox & Friends, "The people who are against him and who have been against him and working against him since the day they took office are just that., ... It is horrible that people are working against a president who's delivering results for this country and has been since day one. ... The fact that people continue to try and negate anything that he's doing and take away from the good work he's doing on behalf of the American people, they deserve strong language like that."

GOP Senators Growing Frustrated With Romney. The Hill (10/24, Bolton, 2.98M) reports "Sen. Mitt Romney's (R-Utah) public battles with...Trump are taking a toll on his relationship with fellow GOP senators, with many resenting the implication that they're afraid of standing up to the president." Sen. James Inhofe (R-OK) "told The Hill he's frustrated with Romney's regular critiques of Trump and suggested his colleague might have unresolved feelings about failing to defeat former President Obama in the 2012 presidential campaign." Sen. David Perdue (R-GA), meanwhile, "likened Romney to a fan who boos a quarterback when the going gets tough."

Bolton Reportedly Warned Lighthizer Against Restoring Ukraine Trade Privileges.

The Washington Post (10/24, Lynch, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports USTR Lighthizer "in late August withdrew a recommendation to restore some of Ukraine's trade privileges after John Bolton, then-national security adviser, warned him that President Trump probably would oppose any action that benefited the government in Kyiv, according to people briefed on the matter. The warning to [Lighthizer] came as Trump was withholding $391 million in military aid and security assistance from Ukraine."

War In Ukraine Continues As US Focuses On Impeachment. The New York Times (10/24, Kramer, 18.61M), under the headline "Behind An Impeachment Inquiry, A Forgotten War," reports on the ongoing conflict in eastern Ukraine that "has killed 13,000 people, put a large part of the country under Russia's control and dragged on for five years almost forgotten by the outside world – until it became a backdrop to the impeachment inquiry of President Trump now unfolding in Washington." Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky wants the US "to take a more active role in pressuring Russia to withdraw its forces from eastern Ukraine – which the Kremlin does not even acknowledge are there – and accept a peace deal to end the conflict."

Biden Defends Son, Attacks Trump Family In 60 Minutes Interview.

The CBS Evening News (10/24, story 3, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.05M) reported that in a "60 Minutes" interview set to air this Sunday, Joe Biden insisted that his son, Hunter, did nothing wrong in Ukraine "and he unleashed his sharpest criticism yet of President Trump's family." He said, "Their actions speak for themselves. ... If I'm President...my children are not going to have offices in the White House." He continued, "It's just simply improper because you should make it clear to the American public that everything you're doing is for them, for them. And the idea that you're going to have...his children, his son-in-law, etc., engaged in the day-to-day operation of things they know nothing about." Biden also said "all the really solid people" in the Administration have left. He continued, "They're thugs. You know, Giuliani and the two guys helping him, they get arrested at the airport, trying to leave the country – I mean, where has that happened on any other President's watch."

Eric Trump: I'd Be In Jail For What Hunter Biden Did. Eric Trump told Fox News' Hannity (10/24, 9:23 p.m. ET, 535K) that, compared to Joe Biden's son, "If I got $0.30 from Ukraine or $0.30 from China or remain or anywhere else, I'd be thrown in jail." He continued, "The funny thing it's not like they were trying to hide the whole thing. It's so blatantly obvious what they are doing. How do they get paid $50,000 to get set on the board of an energy company? He was being paid...to sit on a small Ukrainian energy company, the board of a small Ukrainian energy company, he's been played twice what executives get paid to sit on the board of Exxon Mobil. Let that sink in for a moment. It's corruption at the absolute worse."

Set To Testify, Reeker Cancels Speaking Gig For Burisma-Funded Think Tank.

Breitbart (10/24, Klein, 673K) reports "Ambassador Philip Reeker, the acting assistant secretary of State for European and Eurasian affairs who is set to testify to the Democrats secretive impeachment inquiry this weekend, cancelled a speaking gig earlier this week at the Atlantic Council think tank." Breitbart says "the Atlantic Council is funded by and works in partnership with Burisma, the natural gas company at the center of allegations regarding Joe Biden and his son, Hunter Biden." Alex Kisling, the Atlantic Council's Deputy Director for Media Relations, said; "The Atlantic Council was informed late last week that Acting Assistant Secretary Philip Reeker would be unable to participate in our event on October 22 due to scheduling conflicts." The cancellation in part prompted a letter to Reeker from Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) "asking for an explanation as to why Reeker's name was removed as a panelist for the Atlantic Council event."

Navarro Declines To Say Whether Bidens Came Up In US-China Trade Talks.

CNN (10/24, Cole, 83.16M) reports on its website that Office of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Director Peter Navarro declined Thursday "to answer questions about whether China opening an investigation into former Vice President Joe Biden and his son has come up during trade talks with the US." At a New York event, CNN's Jim Sciutto asked Navarro, "Did you bring up investigating the Bidens as part of the negotiations?" Navarro replied, "It's not an appropriate question in my judgment. ... I'm not going to talk about that stuff. If I answer that question then you'll ask me another question."

Pompeo: State Will Comply With "Everything We're Required To Under The Law."

McClatchy (10/23, Shorman, Wilner, 19K) reports Secretary of State Pompeo "suggested on Thursday that the Trump administration plans to comply with a court order to release Ukraine-related documents, including communications between State Department officials and President Donald Trump's personal lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, within 30 days." Pompeo said in an interview with the Wichita Eagle and the Kansas City Star, "I haven't seen the ruling. ... But I can assure the American people that their State Department always complies with everything we're required to do under the law. There's no reason to think we would do any different there."

"Legal Experts": Giuliani Unlikely To Be Indicted For Foreign Agents Registration Act Violations. Politico (10/24, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports that "to Democrats and other Trump critics, the scene would be almost deliciously ironic:" Giuliani, "the ex-prosecutor known for perfecting the 'perp wall' in the 1980s, getting a taste of his own medicine." However, "how much legal risk does the president's most outspoken personal lawyer actually face?" However, while Giuliani "has faced widespread predictions that he's on the verge of being indicted on charges of acting as an unregistered foreign agent...many legal experts say Giuliani needn't be quaking in his boots – at least on that score," because "two recent high-profile attempts by prosecutors to advance" a push to "crack down on violations of the Foreign Agents Registration Act" have "met with failure," and "the public defense Giuliani has offered is uncannily similar" to the one that was successful in those cases.

Anti-Impeachment Radio Show Being Broadcast From Bannon's House.

The New York Times (10/24, Peters, 18.61M) reports that "a rogue, freelance messaging operation to fight impeachment" is being broadcast from ex-White House adviser Stephen Bannon's Washington home. Bannon says the nightly program will continue every day "for the next two months – or 'until the day after the acquittal of Donald J. Trump.'" ... The people involved in the radio show, all former Trump aides and supporters, say their intentions are clear: They want to nudge the White House, its allies and the president himself into taking a more focused and aggressive posture to undermine" the House impeachment inquiry.

White House Welcomes China's New Intellectual Property Protections.

The Washington Examiner (10/24, Crilly, 448K) reports White House officials have "welcomed new intellectual property protections unveiled by China, claiming they represent a victory for President Trump's tough trade line and work by his chief science adviser to protect research secrets." The new measures, announced Wednesday by Ning Jizhe, the vice chairman of China's National Development and Reform Commission, "will set up a punitive system of damages for infringements of intellectual property." A senior Administration official said, "China's intellectual property theft is real, damaging, and ending thanks to President Trump's strong trade actions and his OSTP director's focus on ending abuses in our open society's education and research systems," referring to the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy.

Navarro: US Cannot Allow China To Steal IP. National Trade Council Director Peter Navarro told Fox Business Mornings with Maria (10/24, 7:06 a.m. ET) that the Chinese "hack our computers, steal our intellectual property, force technology transfers, currency manipulation, they kill us with fentanyl. These are the structural issues we have to deal with. We would love to have China be a rule-abiding member of the international global community. But absent that, they're hurting not only American workers but they're hurting the rest of the world."

Navarro: USMCA Could Turn US Into "Powerhouse Of Manufacturing."

National Trade Council Director Peter Navarro told Fox Business Mornings with Maria (10/24, 7:06 a.m. ET) that the sticking point for USMCA "is Nancy Pelosi. The false narrative is the issue about labor enforcement. That problems been effectively solved. That's where [USTR] Lighthizer is doing a great job, working with folks in Mexico and everybody in between. This thing is ready to go." He continued, "It's designed to turn North America, and particularly the US into a powerhouse of manufacturing for the 21st century."

Cuellar "Very Confident" USMCA Will Pass This Year. Rep. Henry Cuellar (D-TX) said on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/24, 8:06 a.m. ET, 1.73M), "We are going to pass this trade agreement. It is important for the US, Mexico, Canada. ... I feel very confident that we will get this deal done this year."

Stocks Little Changed Thursday.

The AP (10/24, Veiga) reports, "Solid profits and forecasts from several technology companies helped lift US stocks to modest gains Thursday." The Dow Jones Industrial Average closed down 28.42 points at 26,805.53, the Nasdaq was up an even 66 points to 8,185.80, and the S&P 500 was up 5.77 to 3,010.77. Reuters (10/24, Joyner) says "the S&P 500 and the Nasdaq rose on Thursday following strong quarterly reports from several technology companies, including Microsoft Corp," but "dour results from 3M Co...stymied the Dow."

Capital Goods Orders Decline.

Reuters (10/24, Dunsmuir) reports the Commerce Department said Thursday that "new orders for key US-made capital goods fell more than expected in September and shipments also declined, a sign that business investment remains soft amid the fallout from the US-China trade war." Orders for "non-defense capital goods excluding aircraft, which are seen as a measure of business spending plans on equipment, fell 0.5% last month on less demand for transportation equipment, motor vehicles and parts, and computers and electronic products." Data for August were "also revised down to show core capital goods orders falling 0.6% instead of declining 0.4% as previously reported."

Warren, Wyden Seek FTC Probe Of Amazon Server Security.

Reuters (10/24) reports Sens. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and Ron Wyden (D-OR) have asked the Federal Trade Commission to examine whether Amazon failed to secure its servers prior to a hacking attack that exposed the names and addresses of about 100 million US Capital One customers. The Wall Street Journal (10/24, McMillan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Amazon says its web services system was not hacked and says the Capital One breach was caused by a server-side request forgery.

More UAW Members Have Voted In Favor Of GM Contract.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Naughton, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports United Auto Workers members at several major General Motors factories have voted in favor of a proposed contract. The Detroit Free Press (10/24, Lawrence, 1.52M) reports a vote by the UAW local in Flint, Michigan "pushes the tentative agreement...closer to ratification, but whether the almost six-week-old nationwide strike against the automaker will end is still not likely to be clear until Friday." The Detroit News (10/24, Hall, 825K) reports, "The UAW wants all ballots turned in by 4 p.m. Friday. UAW leaders voted to keep its roughly 48,000 members out on strike while they vote on the contract."

Kanye West Discusses Trump Support, Plans To Manufacture Shoes In America.

The Washington Examiner (10/24, Gage, 448K) reports "Kanye West talked about his support for President Trump in a recent interview and said he wanted to bring the manufacturing for his Yeezy shoes to the United States." He said, "Give me some other examples where someone is saying what isn't culturally what you're supposed to say. ... Give me an example where someone is saying what you're not supposed to say. You don't want to say it, do you, liberal?" West "said he planned on moving his shoe factories within the next couple of years to help bring jobs back to the US." He "said he plans to have his shoes in American factories within the next two years and for Yeezy to hire US workers in prison reform systems."

Schumer Climate Plan Focuses On Electric Cars.

The New York Times (10/24, Davenport, 18.61M) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer "is preparing a $450 billion climate change initiative that aims to replace about a fifth of the nation's traditional gasoline-powered vehicles with hybrid, electric or hydrogen fuel-cell cars and trucks in the next 10 years." His "proposal is far narrower than the economy-altering plans put forth by most of the Democratic presidential candidates, and it has no chance of passage in the current, Republican-led Senate." However, in an opinion published in the New York Times (10/24, 18.61M), "Schumer said his proposal to push the country away from internal-combustion engines would be part of any climate-change measure that would be considered if the Democrats won the Senate next year." He said, "I, as majority leader, will introduce bold and far-reaching climate legislation. ... The proposal for electric cars would be a key element of that bill."

Tesla Stock Soars After Delivering Profits In Q3.

Reuters (10/24, Malara, Randewich) reports Tesla "shares soared 17% on Thursday after the electric carmaker surprised Wall Street by delivering on Chief Executive Officer Elon Musk's promise of a profit in the third quarter, even as doubts remained about its long-term prospects." Tesla "reported a quarterly profit, citing improvements in operating efficiency and a reduction in manufacturing and material costs." Meanwhile, "at least eight brokerages raised their price targets on Tesla shares, while the company's average rating on Wall Street remained 'hold', with just 11 of 34 analysts recommending investors buy the stock."

Amazon Profit Down Due To Cost Of Speeding Up Shipping.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, A1, Mattioli, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Amazon's profits have been weighed down by its investment in reduced shipping times. Amazon reported its third-quarter profits fell 26% compared to a year ago, its first profit decline since 2017.

IPO Scrutiny Led To WeWork's Dramatic Fall.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, A1, Farrell, Hoffman, Brown, Benoit, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) details how WeWork went from being courted by the major stock exchanges to a spectacular fall in a matter of months. Little of the company's business changed during those months but the process of filing to go public put its shaky finances on display.

WeWork Founder's Exit Package Highlights Problems With Dual-Class Shares. The Washington Post (10/24, McGregor, 14.2M) reports that "Adam Neumann's eye-popping deal with SoftBank to exit WeWork is being described by corporate governance experts as a prime example of the issues with dual-class shares." The Post says "the news of Neumann's package, which would let him walk away with as much as $1.2 billion, as well as a loan to repay a credit line, comes amid increasing pushback from investors as start-up unicorns such as Lyft, Pinterest and Peloton continue to go public with such arrangements." Amy Borrus, Deputy Director of the Council of Institutional Investors, said: "Adam Neumann will essentially get a king's ransom for grossly mismanaging the company on his way out. ... This is a cautionary tale about the dangers of the dual-class share structure."

Nissan Seeking To Restrict Ghosn's Access To Prosecutors' Files.

The New York Times (10/24, Dooley, 18.61M) reports lawyers for former Nissan boss Carlos Ghosn want access to evidence against him seized by Japanese authorities "but prosecutors have declared thousands of the files off limits" because Nissan "considers the information too sensitive." Ghosn's appeal is now headed to Japan's top court, as his "lawyers make a last-ditch attempt to access the files, or at least find out what they are being barred from seeing." His attorneys argue the decision not to disclose the files "highlights the cozy relationship between prosecutors and Nissan, as well as a Japanese legal system that too often favors prosecutors."

DroneUp Bringing 41 New Jobs To Virginia Beach.

WAVY-TV Norfolk, VA (10/24, 5:28 p.m. ET, 32K) reports that DroneUp, a web and mobile platform for on-demand drone pilot services, is expanding its headquarters in Virginia Beach, creating 41 new jobs.

New Universal Theme Park Expected To Create 14,000 New Jobs.

WOGX-TV Gainesville, FL (10/24, 6:13 p.m. ET, 1K) reports that Universal's new theme park in Florida will open sometime this year. WOGX says "Universal's Epic Universe is also expected to create 14,000 new jobs with $15 per hour pay."

Plastics Manufacturer Adding Jobs To Lynchburg, Virginia Facility.

WSET-TV Lynchburg, VA (10/24, 6:10 p.m. ET, 2.33M) reports Tessy Plastics is expanding and bringing new jobs to Lynchburg, Virginia. The company has 235 employees "and will be adding 34 over the next few years for a number technical positions." The company "recently finished a $10 million expansion adding 35,000 square feet."

WSJournal: Rich Philanthropists Being Targeted By Liberal Activists.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that liberal activists are stigmatizing and banishing rich philanthropists who support America's great cultural institutions. The Journal says many philanthropists are only being targeted because they are rich.

Conway Denies Washington Examiner's Account Of Exchange With Reporter.

Washington Examiner reporter Ciatlin Yilek tweeted yesterday, "Kellyanne Conway disparagingly told me it was improper to write about her husband and threatened to investigate my personal life in a conversation she thought was off the record. It wasn't." Yilek went on to report in the Washington Examiner (10/24, 448K) that "Conway, describing herself as 'a powerful woman,' aggressively and disparagingly told a female reporter that it was improper to write about her husband and threatened to investigate the reporter's personal life." The Examiner writes, "Conway, who is notorious for berating journalists, told this reporter, 29: 'Let me tell you something, from a powerful woman. Don't pull the crap where you're trying to undercut another woman based on who she's married to. He gets his power through me, if you haven't noticed. Not the other way around. And if these are the quote standards unquote at the Washington Examiner, then yes I'd be happy to talk to your editor. But I've known your editor since before you were born.'" The Examiner says Conway "threatened that the White House would delve into the personal lives of reporters if they wrote about her husband," saying, "Listen, if you're going to cover my personal life, then we're welcome to do the same around here."

Conway also responded on Twitter, writing, "The false tweet below [in reference to Yilek's] makes my point about how dangerous it is to characterize someone else's intentions, feelings, or state of mind, even if it's for clicks and kicks." Conway, the Washington Examiner (10/24, Gage, 448K) reports, went on explain that "the things she said in the phone call were things she has said on the record before and maintained that the phone call was never off the record." Conway also "contested the characterization that she 'threatened' Yilek, quoting herself as saying, 'If you're going to cover my personal life, then we're welcome to do the same around here.'" Conway also "provided background about her husband and his feud with President Trump, noting that it is 'unusual...for a man to gain newfound fame and power through his wife, following his own storied, decades-long career.'"

Student Loan Official Resigns, Calls For Large Debt Forgiveness Program.

The CBS Evening News (10/24, story 7, 1:37, O'Donnell, 4.05M) reported, "A top official in the federal student loan program resigned today, calling the system fundamentally broken. He also wants hundreds of billions of existing debt forgiven," and "that's a costly request." CBS (Strassmann) added Federal Student Loan Office COO "Wayne Johnson thinks Washington should follow his lead and quit the federal student loan program." CBS continued, "Johnson reported directly to Education Secretary Betsy DeVos and watched student debt keep ballooning with the cost of college. In all, 42 million Americans currently have student debt. The average household owes almost $47,000." CBS concluded, "To pay for it, Johnson would hike corporate taxes by one percent. He's about to run in Georgia as a Republican for the US Senate."

NBC Nightly News (10/24, story 9, 1:55, Holt, 5.63M) reported, "A dramatic move to get rid of crippling student loan debt tonight from none other than the official who was in charge of federal student loans until he resigned today." NBC (Beck) added, "Johnson is proposing radical change, making student loan debt forgiveness the centerpiece of his campaign to become a Republican senator from Georgia."

Bloomberg (10/24, Nasiripour, 4.73M) reports Johnson "abruptly resigned Thursday after calling for the government to wipe out most of the nation's $1.6 trillion of student debt." Johnson "said that the federal government needs to wipe out the first $50,000 of debt owed for higher education by some 42 million Americans. That would jump-start economic growth by eliminating more than $900 billion of federal student loans – and completely erase the debt for the vast majority of borrowers, he said." According to Bloomberg, Johnson said the losses "would result anyhow...because much of the nation's student loan debt ultimately won't be repaid." Johnson also proposes "reimburs[ing] past borrowers who've already paid off their loans with as much as $50,000 in income tax credits," and "eliminat[ing] the federal loan program and replac[ing] it with $50,000 in grants to cover college tuition and work training and licensing programs."

Politico (10/24, Stratford, 4.29M) reports Johnson, "resigned Thursday to launch a long-shot bid for an open Senate seat in Georgia centered on his sweeping plan to forgive hundreds of billions of dollars in student debt." Politico adds that Johnson "said he believes there are 'fundamental flaws' in the nation's student loan system that require drastic changes." Politico also says Johnson's plan "is far more generous than those of several 2020 Democratic presidential candidates, whose ideas DeVos recently attacked as 'crazy.'"

The Washington Post (10/24, Douglas-Gabriel, 14.2M) reports Johnson's resignation and proposal "arrives as House Democrats ramp up their investigation of the role Education Department officials, including Johnson, played in helping Dream Center Education Holdings," which "operated the defunct for-profit chain Argosy University and the Art Institutes." The Post adds that Johnson was COO of the Office of Federal Student Aid.

Pompeo's Visit To Kansas Refuels Speculation He May Run For Senate.

The AP (10/24, Lee, Hanna) reports Secretary of State Pompeo "has been finding ways to swing through his home state of Kansas this year, feeding speculation about a potential Senate run and offering something of a refuge from the storm surrounding him in Washington over impeachment." On his "fourth trip to Kansas this year, Pompeo was in Wichita on Thursday for a visit that will get him local voter attention." Pompeo held a workforce development roundtable, "a topic typically outside his foreign affairs portfolio," with White House adviser Ivanka Trump. To the AP, the visit "shows how Pompeo is trying to reconcile his conflicting ambitions in Washington and back home in Kansas."

The Washington Post (10/24, Gowen, Morello, 14.2M) likewise says Pompeo's visit Thursday is "refueling speculation amid an expanding impeachment inquiry of President Trump that he may leave the administration to run for the Senate next year." The Post says that "despite Pompeo's repeated attempts to tamp down speculation on a possible Senate bid...he has sometimes couched his denials in vague enough terms to suggest he is trying to keep his options open."

Jeh Johnson Calls On Trump To Appoint A DHS Secretary.

Former DHS Secretary Jeh Johnson writes in the Washington Post (10/24, 14.2M), "President Trump must appoint a Senate-confirmed secretary of homeland security, and soon. Particularly in the current threat environment, our nation cannot afford a continued string of temporary, acting secretaries promoted from within the ranks of DHS to, as some would have it, simply receive and transmit orders from the White House. The job is one of the most complex and critical in the US government."

Secret Service Agents Interviewed Eminem Over Song Insulting Trump, Threatening Ivanka.

BuzzFeed News (10/24, Leopold) reports a Freedom of Information Act request filed with the Secret Service has confirmed that agents were sent to speak with rapper Eminem in January 2018. According to December 2017 documents, "A concerned citizen reported Marshall Mathers the rapper 'Eminem' had a new song called 'Framed' with an inappropriate comment towards President Donald Trump and a threatening comment towards Ivanka Trump." The documents show the agency's Protective Intelligence and Assessment Division "conducted a background check on Eminem and started to arrange an interview with the rapper through his attorneys" in late December 2017 and interviewed him one month later.

IG Report: VA Office Intended To Protect Whistleblowers Was Used To Punish Them.

The Washington Post (10/24, Rein, 14.2M) reports, "One of President Trump's signature initiatives to turn around a culture of retaliation against whistleblowers" at the VA is the Office of Accountability and Whistleblower Protection, which is "in disarray that instead has punished them – and held almost no wrongdoers accountable. Those are the conclusions of a scathing report released Thursday by the agency's inspector general." The IG report says the office "has shown 'significant deficiencies,' including poor leadership, skimpy training of its investigators, a misunderstanding of its mission and a failure to discipline senior leaders for misconduct."

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Kesling, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the report says the office's first executive director, Peter O'Rourke, used his position to bury claims and retaliate against whistleblowers. He eventually rose to a higher post within the VA and has since left the government, now serving as executive director of the Florida Republican Party. Politico (10/24, Allen, 4.29M) and the Washington Times (10/24, Boyer, 492K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

On Twitter, Omar Blames Trump For Death Of Child Who Did Not Die.

The Daily Caller (10/24, Olohan, 716K) reports Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) "blamed" President Trump "for the death of an infant who is still alive before correcting herself." Omar "tweeted a New York Times article Thursday that discussed an ill 9-month-old baby named Elijah who lost his Medicaid coverage." Omar tweeted, "A nine month old died as a direct result of Trump's cuts to Medicaid and CHIP. He is one of a million children to lose healthcare. Let that sink in." The Times article, says the Caller, described the child's "visit to a Texas hospital in September and his mother's distress over her child's lack of Medicaid coverage." The Caller adds that "over two hours later," Omar tweeted, "almost died.*" According to the Caller, "The Trump administration has not 'explicitly tried to limit' Medicaid coverage for children, The NYT noted."

Townhall (10/24, Rosas, 177K) reports, "After she posted the tweet about his 'death' just before 11:00 a.m., people were pointing out Elijah Johnson did not die. Omar sent a short, corrective tweet a few hours later." Townhall added that the child and the woman's other children are again covered by Medicaid.

Townhall's Lee: GOP Could Be "Party Of Healthcare" If It Listens To New Proposals.

Sarah Lee writes in Townhall (10/24, 177K) that in March 2019, President Trump said, "The Republican party will soon be known as the party of health care," and now, "legislative committees and small business advocacy groups have begun releasing months-worth of research in the form of 'ideas lists.'" Among those are the Republican Study Committee's "66 pages of ideas gleaned from months of work in which they reached out to think tank and health care leaders across the US"; and the Job Creators Network Foundation's "market research, which includes the opinions of 25,000 American voters representing all political affiliations" and is focused on "increasing choice in health care." Lee adds, "If Republicans in Congress begin to take the ideas of both the RSC study in the house and JCNF's market research in the Senate...then Trump's prophecy that the GOP will become the party of health care will surely come to pass."

Warren Receiving Advice On Financing Medicare For All.

The Washington Post (10/24, Stein, 14.2M) reports, "Internal and external economic policy advisers are trying to help Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) design a way to finance a single-payer Medicare-for-all health-care system," after Warren "promised more details within weeks." The plan "could cost more than $30 trillion over 10 years." Economist Robert Pollin of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has suggested "redirecting existing public health-care spending from Medicare, Medicaid and the Department of Veterans Affairs," with the balance "raised by a $600 billion annual 'gross receipts' tax on businesses"; "a 3.75 percent sales tax on 'nonnecessities';" and "a 0.38 percent tax on wealth above $1 million." Cornell University's Robert C. Hockett "has urged Warren's team to propose financing Medicare-for-all in part with a 'public premium' that would function similarly to a tax." The Post adds that other suggestions have been a "progressive consumption tax" or having Warren "sell her Medicare-for-all plan as a tax cut."

Judge In Daleiden Trial Allowed Showing Of "20/20" Report On Fetal Tissue Trafficking.

The Federalist (10/24, Osburn, 126K) reports, "Journalist and abortion activist David Daleiden took the witness stand in a San Francisco courtroom on Tuesday, where he testified that it was an undercover ABC News '20/20' report on fetal tissue trafficking that inspired him to record similar undercover videos." Daleiden and others at the Center for Medical Progress "are being sued by Planned Parenthood for allegedly wiretapping, trespassing, and breaking confidentiality while recording undercover videos." The judge, adds the Federalist, "has resisted allowing certain videos Daleiden recorded to be shown to the jury," but did allow "defense attorney Charles LiMandri to show an investigative ABC News report that Daleiden said influenced his own undercover project." The "20/20" video "features footage recorded by an undercover ABC producer [who] posed as a potential investor" and who interviewed "an abortionist talking about the profits he made from the sale of body parts he harvested from the bodies of babies he aborted."

British Lord Contends Harm Reduction Is Better Than Prohibition For Vaping.

Matt Ridley, a member of the British House of Lords, writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), likening efforts to ban vaping to prohibition, contending that governments should follow harm reduction strategies rather than prohibition and so work to ensure that vaping is regulated and made more safe than it otherwise would be as an illegal item. He argues that in the UK, the government has encouraged smokers to switch to e-cigarettes and regulated it so that almost all users of e-cigarettes are former smokers, and there have been no deaths and few if any lung diseases attributed to vaping.

Trump Says US Will Never Let ISIS Reclaim Syrian Oil Fields.

President Trump tweeted at 11:25 a.m., "The Oil Fields discussed in my speech on Turkey/Kurds yesterday were held by ISIS until the United States took them over with the help of the Kurds. We will NEVER let a reconstituted ISIS have those fields!" About 25 minutes later, he tweeted, "I really enjoyed my conversation with General @MazloumAbdi. He appreciates what we have done, and I appreciate what the Kurds have done. Perhaps it is time for the Kurds to start heading to the Oil Region!"

The Washington Post (10/24, Ryan, Lamothe, Fahim, 14.2M) says Trump's tweets "emphasiz[ed] his interest in the energy assets there despite his steps to curtail the US military mission in the country." To the Post, the plan to secure Syria's oil fields "highlights that the US mission appears to be shifting from one focused on fighting the Islamic State to at least partly keeping the country's own government from possessing all its oil fields."

Pentagon To Send Tanks, Armored Vehicles To Defend Oil Fields. USA Today (10/24, Brook, 10.31M) reports the Pentagon is "preparing to send tanks and armored vehicles to Syrian oil fields, according to a US official." USA Today calls the move "a stunning reversal of President Trump's decision to withdraw US forces" from the country, and says the "deployment of heavy armor to Syria would represent a significant escalation in the fight, requiring a contingent of additional troops to operate and maintain the vehicles, as well as forces to protect their bases." The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Lubold, Youssef, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the plan also calls for leaving about 500 US troops in northeast Syria.

The CBS Evening News (10/24, story 4, 1:30, O'Donnell, 4.05M) too is reporting that "a Pentagon official" says the US "is planning a major increase in firepower to protect" the oil fields. Sen. Lindsey Graham said he was briefed yesterday by Joint Chiefs Chairman Gen. Mark Milley. Graham: "There's a plan coming together they think may work, that may give us what we need to prevent ISIS from coming back, Iran taking the oil, ISIS from taking the oil."

Pompeo Defends Administration's Syria Policy. The Wichita \(KS\) Eagle (10/24, Shorman, Wilner, 291K) interviewed Secretary of State Pompeo on a range of issues during his Thursday visit to his home state. Regarding Syria, Pompeo said, "From my time in Congress, I remember who invited the Russians into Syria. It was President Barack Obama. I mean, he didn't just let them come in. He invited them in. He had them come in and pretend to be chemical weapons inspectors. He actively worked with the Russian leadership, said, 'No, come on in, come on into Syria.'" Asked if recent US actions in Syria have "undercut US credibility," Pompeo said, "The whole predicate of your question is insane. ... The word of the United States is much more respected today than it was just two and a half years ago." The Daily Caller (10/24, 716K) headlines its piece on the interview "'Your Question Is Insane': Pompeo Heads Home To Kansas, Gets Grilled By Hometown Paper."

NYTimes: Trump Takes Credit For Ending "Brutal Battle He Had A Hand In Starting." The New York Times (10/24, 18.61M) editorializes that in announcing a "permanent" cease-fire along the Turkish-Syrian border on Wednesday, President Trump declared that "this was an outcome created by us, the United States, and nobody else." The Times says that "in effect, Mr. Trump was blithely taking full credit for ending a brutal battle he had a hand in starting and claiming a significant feat when in fact the betrayal of the Kurds and the brusque, thoughtless American withdrawal undermined American credibility and was a major victory for Presidents Vladimir Putin of Russia and Bashar al-Assad, the butcher of Syria."

Esper Criticizes Turkey's "Unwarranted" Invasion Of Northern Syria.

The AP (10/24, Baldor) reports Defense Secretary Esper "lashed out Thursday at Turkey for its military assault across the border on Syrian Kurdish fighters." Speaking at the German Marshall Fund, Esper "said Turkey's 'unwarranted' invasion into Syria jeopardizes gains made there in recent years" against ISIS. Said Esper, "Turkey put us all in a very terrible situation. I think the incursion was unwarranted. I think President Erdogan was fixated on making this incursion for one reason or another and there was not a possibility that we were going to start a war with a NATO ally."

The New York Times (10/24, Cooper, 18.61M) says Esper also "called on Ankara to start acting like an ally and not a foe" during a meeting of NATO ministers, but was "besieged by questions about President Trump's sudden decision to withdraw American troops and declare victory against the Islamic State in Syria."

Grisham: Trump "Will Absolutely Reimpose" Sanctions If Turkey Reneges. White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham was asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/24, 8:33 a.m. ET, 831K) about President Trump's announcement of a permanent cease-fire in northern Syria and the lifting of sanctions on Turkey, Grisham said, "What 'permanent' means – and the President said this yesterday – what 'permanent' means in that part of the world is to be determined, but they have given us their word. We will lift sanctions. If we they go back on their word, the President will absolutely reimpose those sanctions. He mentioned yesterday, we're the biggest economic power in the world because of President Trump. He will use diplomatic and sanctioned areas to try to stop people doing anything harmful to the world and to this country."

Syria Says Turkish Forces Attacked Government Troops Thursday. NBC Nightly News (10/24, story 6, 1:10, Holt, 5.63M) reported, "Despite a permanent cease-fire declared in northern Syria, there was new fighting [Thursday] as Turkish forces continue the assault on US allies the Kurds." The AP (10/24, Mroue) reports, "Turkish forces and their allies attacked Syrian government troops in northeastern Syria on Thursday, killing some of them, and they also clashed with Kurdish-led fighters," according to the Syrian state-run SANA news agency. The AP says the fighting "underscored the risks of violence as multiple and often opposing armed forces jostle for new positions in the tight quarters of the northeastern border zone." The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Malsin, Osseiran, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Russian aircraft carried out strikes on the last remaining rebel stronghold in the region early Thursday.

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Policies Causing Increasing Concern Among European Leaders. The New York Times (10/24, Erlanger, 18.61M) writes that though European leaders "have long understood that President Trump is an unreliable ally, subject to loud tantrums, abrupt shifts and sudden whims," the President's Syria policy – as well as alleged actions regarding Ukraine – have increased their concerns. The Times says "there is agreement that Mr. Trump has destabilized Europe's near neighborhood in a major, even fundamental, way that requires a unified response, if only Europeans can come together. ... Trump's capriciousness is testing Europe's ability to cohere and adjust."

Families Urge Australia To Help Bring Women, Children In ISIS Camps Home.

In a follow-up to its two-part podcast on "The Daily," the New York Times (10/24, Albeck-Ripka, 18.61M) reports on the fight by Australian families whose loved ones are among the women and children held in ISIS camps in northern Syria. They have been urging the government of Australia to help bring them home, but it "has maintained that it would not put other lives in harm's way to extract them from the Al-Hol camp, and following the pullout of US troops from the region, these dangers have only escalated." Some ministers have also argued "that some of these women are radicalized, and could pose a threat."

USA Today Criticizes Trump's Involvement In Navy SEAL Murder Case.

USA Today (10/24, 10.31M) editorializes that the commander of the Navy SEAL commando force Rear Adm. Collin Green "warned about an ethical and professional crisis in the ranks" amid the trial of SEAL Edward Gallagher, who was "accused by members of his platoon of battlefield atrocities in Iraq." President Trump, however, got involved in the case, and the USA Today says "the Navy was faced with a dilemma: It could kick Gallagher out of the SEALs to help restore good order and discipline, but risk a reversal by Trump that would effectively emasculate SEAL leadership. So no action has been taken."

In an opposing USA Today (10/24, Parlatore, Contributor, 10.31M) op-ed, Timothy Parlatore, a former Navy officer and lawyer representing Gallagher, writes Adm. Green "was correct when he said 'we have a problem' in Naval Special Warfare, but his desire to punish Edward Gallagher is not the solution, it is part of the problem." Parlatore argues that "if Green really wanted to fix Navy SEAL culture, he should abandon his fixation on punishing Gallagher and instead sit down with him to learn what the real problems are from his deckplate perspective."

USCIS Touts Success In Implementing Trump's Agenda.

The Miami Herald (10/24, Roth, 1.09M) reports that during his time in office, President Trump "has signed several executive orders designed to restrict both legal and illegal immigration and tighten the criteria for the adjudication of immigration benefits." The Herald says the US Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) "has been one of the federal agencies enforcing some of these measures," and "issued a report last week celebrating the results of its efforts to implement Trump's agenda during Fiscal Year 2019." In a statement, Acting Director Ken Cuccinelli said, "FY 2019 has been a historic year for USCIS and we have achieved many of President Trump's goals to make our immigration system work better for America," pointing to measures to "mitigate the loopholes in our asylum system" and "combat fraudulent claims."

Administration Testing Rapid Asylum Review, Deportation Process In Texas.

The Washington Post (10/24, Moore, 14.2M) reports the Administration has begun testing "a secretive program" in El Paso, Texas that "aims to speed up the deportation of asylum-seeking migrants after they cross the US-Mexico border." The pilot program — known as Prompt Asylum Claim Review — "streamlines the asylum process so that migrants who are seeking safe refuge in the United States will receive a decision in 10 days or less, rather than the months or years it currently takes, according to Customs and Border Protection officials." The Post says the "accelerated reviews seek to accomplish two Trump administration goals: deterring migrants from attempting to cross the US border and pushing asylum seekers out of the United States."

Administration: Dreamers Exploited Loophole To Gain Citizenship.

The Washington Times (10/24, Dinan, 492K) reports that "DACA wasn't supposed to be a pathway to citizenship, yet at least 14,000 illegal immigrant 'Dreamers' managed to use the Obama-era deportation amnesty for exactly that purpose, the government revealed this week." The Dreamers took advantage of a "loophole" that "allowed them to leave the country and be 'paroled' back into the US — and under the law, anyone who is paroled can apply to adjust their status to a full legal permanent resident." The Times says the "revelation came in a filing in the ongoing litigation over President Trump's 2017 attempt to phase out the program."

ACLU: 1,500 More Migrant Children Taken From Parents By Administration.

The Washington Post (10/24, Sacchetti, 14.2M) reports the ACLU said Thursday that the Administration "separated 1,556 more immigrant children from their parents at the US-Mexico border than has previously been disclosed to the public." According to the group, the "majority of the children are ages 12 and under, including more than 200 considered 'tender age' because they are under 5 years old." The ACLU said the Justice Department "disclosed the final tally — which is in addition to the more than 2,700 children known to have been separated last year — hours before a federal court deadline to identify all children separated since mid-2017."

Lawyer Releases Police Video Of 2017 Shooting Of 16-Year-Old By Fresno Policeman.

The Washington Post (10/24, Horton, 14.2M) reports on the 2017 shooting of Isiah Murietta-Golding, 16, by a Fresno police officer, which "shatter[ed] the teenager's head, just above his brain stem. He died three days later in a hospital." The Post adds, "An investigation...found that the officer...was justified, and that he feared for his life because the unarmed teen had reached for his waistband." Stuart Chandler, attorney for Murietta-Golding's father, Anthony Golding, released a police surveillance video of the shooting and said, "It's clear this shooting was not justified. He was running away, holding up his pants, posing no threat to anybody."

AOC: Emissions From "Predominantly White" Areas Causing Storms That Kill Minorities.

The Washington Times (10/23, Richardson, 492K) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "put a racial spin Wednesday on climate change and hurricanes, attributing emissions from 'predominantly white' corporations and communities for juicing recent storms that cost 'predominantly black and brown lives' in" places like Louisiana and Puerto Rico. During a House hearing, Ocasio-Cortez said, "The people that are producing climate change, the folks that are responsible for the largest amount of emissions, or communities, or corporations, they tend to be predominantly white."

DeVos Held In Civil Contempt For Violating Judge's Order On Student Loan Collection.

USA Today (10/24, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports Education Secretary DeVos and the Education Department "were held in civil contempt by a federal judge on Thursday for violating an order to stop collecting loan payments from now-defunct Corinthian College." The Department "had been ordered to stop collecting on the federal loans of students who attended the school, which closed in 2015," but "disclosed it had continued to garnish wages and seize tax returns of thousands of borrowers." The federal judge also imposed a $100,000 fine for violating the order.

New Documentary Examines Erosion Of Free Speech On College Campuses.

The Washington Times (10/24, Toto, 492K) reports "comedian/podcaster Adam Carolla and conservative talk show host Dennis Prager say the next battleground in the fight for free speech on college campuses is Phoenix, "where their documentary "No Safe Spaces" debuts Friday. In the documentary, Carolla and Prager "are joined on screen by conservative comedian Tim Allen, liberal CNN commentator Van Jones, libertarian talk show host Dave Rubin and controversial psychology professor Jordan B. Peterson, among others — all sharing how strictures on speech at colleges seep into the culture at large."

Lara Trump Defends Jared Kushner, Ivanka Trump's Work In White House.

Lara Trump spoke with Fox News The Story (10/24, 7:39 p.m. ET) and responded to Joe Biden's criticism of Trump family members working at the White House. She said, "Well, I will say first and foremost but I think Jared and Ivanka do such a great job at the White House White House. Neither of them take a paycheck. They work day in and day out under intense scrutiny from everyone. ... Donald Trump gave up an incredible business career, spent millions of dollars of his own money to run for President in – whenever he became President, the Trump family got out of international business, much different then the Biden family."

House Democrats Subpoena GSA For Financial Records Of Trump's DC Hotel.

The Washington Post (10/24, O'Connell, 14.2M) reports "the House Transportation Committee issued a subpoena to the General Services Administration on Thursday seeking financial records and other information regarding President Trump's D.C. hotel." The Post adds that "the Trump International Hotel...has become the center of lawsuits and conflict-of-interest concerns since he took office," and "according to a copy of the subpoena, sent by committee Chairman Peter A. DeFazio (D-Ore.) to GSA Administrator Emily Murphy, the committee is seeking any communications between the GSA and President Trump, Donald Trump Jr., Ivanka Trump or Eric Trump, as well as monthly financial records that the Trump Organization provides to the agency."

New Jersey Seeks To Revoke Liquor License For Trump Golf Club After Fatal Car Crash.

The Washington Post (10/24, Fahrenthold, 14.2M) reports the state of New Jersey is seeking to revoke the liquor license for one of President Trump's golf clubs — "a rare and potentially damaging punishment, triggered by a 2015 case where the Trump club allegedly overserved alcohol to a man who then caused a fatal wreck." The proposed punishment was "laid out in an Oct. 21 letter to the Trump golf course in Colts Neck, N.J." The Trump Organization was given 30 days to challenge the planned revocation.

The New York Times (10/24, Shanahan, 18.61M) reports New Jersey officials contend that staff at "one of President Trump's golf clubs...continued to serve a man who was already intoxicated and got into a fatal car crash shortly after leaving the club in 2015."

Surgeon General Talks About Family Connection To Opioid Epidemic.

CQ Roll Call (10/24, Macgillivray, 154K) reports Surgeon General Jerome Adams Thursday "spoke about his personal connection to the opioid epidemic" during a Senate Finance Committee hearing. Adams "told lawmakers that his brother, Phillip, struggles with substance abuse disorder." Said Adams, "He's currently serving a 10-year prison sentence for crimes committed to support his addiction."

White House To Order Federal Agencies To Cancel NYTimes, WPost Subscriptions.

Reuters (10/24, Brice, Holland) reports "the White House said on Thursday it is planning to order federal agencies to end their subscriptions to the New York Times and the Washington Post after repeated criticism of their coverage by President Donald Trump." White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham "said in a statement that the move would generate savings, but Trump on Monday said the White House would likely end its subscriptions to the papers because they are 'fake,' a term he has used to describe coverage that he views as unfavorable." The AP (10/24) also notes Grisham said "not renewing subscriptions across all federal agencies will be a significant cost saving for taxpayers – hundreds of thousands of dollars."

The New York Times (10/24, Grynbaum, 18.61M) reports "Jonathan Karl, the president of the White House Correspondents' Association, said on Thursday, 'I have no doubt the hardworking reporters of The New York Times and Washington Post will continue to do quality journalism, regardless of whether the president acknowledges he reads them. Pretending to ignore the work of a free press won't make the news go away or stop reporters from informing the public and holding those in power accountable.'" The Hill (10/24, Samuels, 2.98M) and Wall Street Journal (10/24, Restuccia, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Senate Confirms Former Kavanaugh Clerk To Federal Bench.

The Washington Times (10/24, Swoyer, 492K) reports, "The Senate confirmed a former clerk to Justice Brett M. Kavanaugh, who was a staunch defender of his boss during the controversial hearings last year, for the federal bench Thursday over Democrats' concerns the pick lacked enough trial experience to be a judge." Justin Walker "was confirmed to the US Western District of Kentucky by a 50-41 vote," becoming "the 110th district court judge appointed by President Trump." Walker "teaches legal writing at the University of Louisville," and "previously clerked for Justice Kavanaugh when he sat on the federal appeals court in Washington and clerked at the Supreme Court for now-retired Justice Anthony M. Kennedy."

Zervos Attorneys Lay Out Evidence In Suit Against Trump.

The Hollywood Reporter (10/24, Gardner, 1.89M) reports, "For the first time, season-five Apprentice contestant Summer Zervos has laid out some of her evidence supporting claims that Donald Trump attacked her in a hotel room in 2007." Court papers filed Thursday "include emails to Trump's secretary Rhona Graff to set up a meeting with him and responses from her. There are also calendar entries for Trump and his bodyguard showing how they flew from Las Vegas to Los Angeles in December 2007 and stayed at the Beverly Hills Hotel. ... Further documents are said to also corroborate Zervos' account 'with even more granularity,' but for the time being, information about what is in those documents is redacted." The New York Post (10/24, Degregory, 4.57M) points out Trump lawyer Marc Kasowitz disagreed, saying, "Ms. Zervos' claims are entirely meritless and not corroborated by any documents."

Trump Awards Penske Presidential Medal Of Honor.

The Detroit News (10/24, Laing, 825K) reports President Trump "gave Metro Detroit billionaire businessman and auto racing legend Roger Penske the Presidential Medal of Honor, the nation's highest civilian honor." Penske, owner of Team Penske who founded Penske Corp. "is considered the most successful auto racing team owner in history." Trump "hailed Penske as one of the most successful businessmen in America and he said the two have shared a long friendship." Trump said, "I'm delighted to present our nation's highest civilian honor to a giant of American industry, entrepreneurship and auto racing, the legendary Roger Penske. ... He's been a friend of mine for a long time. We go a long way back." Penske said, "It's a wonderful honor to receive this award. ... It's amazing to be here today. ... Winning the Presidential Medal of Freedom is very special, and to me it means more than any business success or motor sports trophy."

Trump Awarding More Presidential Medals Of Freedom This Year. The New York Times (10/24, Rogers, 18.61M) reports President Trump has presented 13 Presidential Medals of Freedom – "and will bestow another on Thursday to the racing magnate Roger Penske – but that is a long way from President Barack Obama's record of 123 over two terms." Trump "is on track to award the fewest of any president since Nixon. But lately, Mr. Trump seems to be picking up the pace and basking in the tradition of a presidential ceremony before turning back to the political battles at hand." This week's ceremony "will be the second medal Mr. Trump has given out since the impeachment inquiry began, and the seventh such ceremony he has held so far this year." The Times says "Trump has used the Presidential Medal of Freedom...as a way to reward his political allies and boast about his own achievements."

Trump Says He May Attend Game Five Of World Series.

The New York Post (10/24, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports President Trump "said Thursday that he might attend a World Series game between the Washington Nationals and Houston Astros on Sunday – if the series isn't over by then." Trump "said he might take in the game at Nationals Park. ... But the commander in chief joked about his heft when asked if he would be throwing out the first pitch." He said, "I don't know, they got to dress me up in a lot of heavy armor – I'll look too heavy."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (10/24, Baker, 18.61M) reports the White House said yesterday it had no information on whether President Trump will be attending the first World Series game to be held in Washington on Friday. The Times say if "Trump skips the game altogether, it will underscore a striking estrangement between a president and the national pastime." Trump is the only president since 1910 to not attend "a major-league baseball game while living in the White House, dispensing with an apple-pie tradition that has provided unifying moments even in divisive times." However, "Trump is surely aware that Nationals Park may not be the most hospitable territory for a president who drew just 4 percent of the vote in the District of Columbia in 2016 and describes its permanent residents as 'the Swamp.'"

Defense Department Complete Nuclear Command Modernization Effort.

The New York Times (10/24, Stack, 18.61M) reports that in June the Defense Department completed its "modernizing" effort that "transitioned away from a 1970s-era nuclear command and control system that relied on eight-inch floppy disks." David Faggard, spokesman for the Air Force Global Strike Command, said that the Strategic Automated Command and Control System (SACCS) "is still in use today but no longer uses floppy disks. ... Air Force Global Strike Command is committed to modernizing for the future." This update is part of a broader overhaul "that began under President Barack Obama and has continued under President Trump."

Polls Show Public Confidence In Supreme Court.

The Washington Post (10/24, Barnes, 14.2M) reports on a number of recent polls that asked about the Supreme Court. First, "a Gallup poll that shows rising public approval for the court, with far more Americans thinking it is 'about right' ideologically than either too conservative or too liberal." Meanwhile, an Annenberg Public Policy Center survey shows "two-thirds of people trust the court to operate in the best interests of the public, and 70 percent think the court has the right amount of power." Finally, a survey from Marquette Law School found "that a majority of Americans have more confidence in the Supreme Court than other parts of the federal government, and few believe the justices take extremely liberal or extremely conservative positions." Lawrence Baum, a political science professor at Ohio State University, the findings suggest "a fairly deep reservoir of support for the court."

WSJournal: Buttigieg Apparently Moderating On Supreme Court Reform. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg was pushed into prominence in part through his proposal to pack the Supreme Court in order to move a progressive agenda forward. However, recently Buttigieg has been sounding a more moderate tone, citing Justice Anthony Kennedy and Justice David Souter as examples of additions who could depoliticize the court. The Journal concludes that he should clarify what he means by Supreme Court reform.

New Nude Picture Of Hill Shows Her Holding Bong, Sporting Apparent Iron Cross Tattoo.

The Washington Examiner (10/24, Dibble, 448K) reports, "Photographs of California Democratic congresswoman Katie Hill [D-CA] naked and holding a bong have emerged." The photographs, "obtained by the Daily Mail, were taken Sept. 11, 2017." The New York Post (10/24, Italiano, 4.57M) says "the saga of 'throuple'...Hill has gone from lawdri to worse -0- as a new, leaked photo has emerged showing the California Democrat naked while holding a bong and sporting what appears to be an Iron Cross tattoo." The Post adds "naked photos of Hill have also turned up online under a thread called 'WouldYouFMyWife,' the Mail reported, without elaborating." The Washington Post (10/24, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports, meanwhile, that "lawyers for...Hill sent a cease-and-desist letter to the DailyMail.com on Thursday demanding that the publication remove from its website nude photos it claims are of the congresswoman and threatening legal action if it refuses."

In a report that is somewhat sympathetic to Hill, ABC World News Tonight (10/24, story 5, 1:38, Davis, 6.47M) called her "a rising star" and said she "is the first openly bisexual member of Congress" and that she "admits she did engage in a consensual relationship with...a woman on her campaign staff. Hill is now apologizing for that, acknowledging that it was 'inappropriate.'" Hill and her husband, added ABC, are "now in the middle of a nasty divorce. Hill accuses her husband of leaking nude pictures of her and the campaign staffer, saying he's 'determined to try to humiliate me,'" and "has alerted the Capitol Police, though she tells her constituents distributing intimate photos with the intent to publish them is a crime."

Hill Paid Thousands To Former Lover In "Consulting Fees." The Washington Examiner (10/24, Picket, 448K) reports "Hill was still paying consulting fees to her campaign staffer and former lover Morgan Desjardins, 24, as recently as last month." The Examiner adds that "according to FEC Records, since April 2019, Hill's campaign has paid a little over $14,000 in fundraising-related consulting fees to Desjardins, doling out around $2,500 most months. Additionally, between 2017 and 2018, she made around $50,000 as a senior campaign staffer."

Gaetz Defends Hill Amid "Absurd" Ethics Investigation. The Daily Caller (10/24, 716K) reports Hill "is getting support from an unlikely ally as she contends with an ethics investigation over an alleged affair with a young staffer." Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL) "called the investigation into Hill's behavior 'absurd,' and implied Thursday that she was only being subjected to an ethics investigation because she is bisexual." Gaetz tweeted, "This is just absurd. The only person who seems to have a gripe is @RepKatieHill's soon-to-be ex. Who among us would look perfect if every ex leaked every photo/text Katie isn't being investigated by Ethics or maligned because she hurt anyone – it is because she is different."

Guam Delegate Becomes Second House Democrat Accused Of Affair With Aide.

CQ Roll Call (10/24, Tully-Mcmanus, 154K) reports "the House Ethics Committee has opened an investigation into Guam Democratic Del. Michael F.Q. San Nicolas over allegations that he may have had a sexual relationship with a member of his staff, converted campaign funds for personal use and accepted improper campaign contributions." Roll Call adds "Ethics Chairman Ted Deutch of Florida and ranking member Kenny Marchant of Texas said in a statement Wednesday that the committee will gather additional information on the allegations and that the probe 'does not itself indicate that any violation has occurred.'" The Washington Examiner (10/24, Ferrechio, 448K) indicates the lawmaker is a Democrat, and that the complaint alleges "he misused campaign funds and was having an affair with a woman working in his congressional office."

The Washington Times (10/24, Miller, 492K) reports "it was the second investigation the committee launched in as many days that involved a Democratic member having sex with a staff member, which is prohibited under House ethics rules." The Washington Post (10/24, Itkowitz, 14.2M) points out that the two cases "mark the first publicly known ethics investigations into lawmakers allegedly having sexual relationships with subordinates on their staff. The prohibition was only adopted last year in the House rules after the #MeToo movement unearthed many cases of powerful men abusing that power in politics, news media and entertainment." The New York Times (10/24, Cochrane, 18.61M) also reports on the investigation of the "Democratic freshman."

Scaramucci: Many Republicans Privately Deride Trump.

Anthony Scaramucci spoke on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (10/24, 9:37 p.m. ET, 1.04M) about Trump's comments that his opponents are "scum." He said, "He's projecting. He feels that way about himself.... And many of those people are human scum because behind his back they're deriding him and they're saying, geez, what a quote unquote handful he is and how damaging he is and how are we going to survive him as the head of the GOP."

Donald Trump Jr. Stumps For Mississippi Republican Gubernatorial Candidate.

The Washington Times (10/24, Varney, 492K) reports Donald Trump Jr. was in Mississippi Thursday to stump for "Lt. Gov. Tate Reeves, a Republican who will face off against Democratic Attorney General Jim Hood in the" Nov. 5 gubernatorial election. Reeves and Trump Jr. "will hold a $500-a-plate fundraiser...at a hunting lodge near Hattiesburg," followed by both men speaking at the annual Good Ole Boys and Gals BBQ in Oxford.

Cheney Leads Loomis In Wyoming GOP Senate Poll.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/24, Matamoros, 78K) reports a Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) has a 20-point advantage over former Rep. Cynthia Lummis in Wyoming's Republican Senate primary. A Montana State University-Billings poll has Cheney with 40 percent of respondents and Lummis with 17 percent. Lummis formally entered the Senate race in July, "while Cheney has yet to confirm whether she will run in 2020."

Omar: Asked To Choose Between Biden And Buttigieg, Said "None."

The Washington Times (10/24, Blake, 492K) reports Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) "said in a podcast out Thursday that it would take something 'tragic' for fellow Democrats to nominate Joseph R. Biden or Pete Buttigieg for president." In an interview with The Intercept, Omar was asked, "If one of them is the candidate for your party, who would you rather it be?" Omar replied, "So you're saying if something tragic happened and they ended up being the nominee?" Omar then said, "I don't know. It's hard. 'None' comes to my head." Omar favors Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT).

Quinnipiac National Democratic Poll: Warren 28%, Biden 21%, Sanders 15%, Buttigieg 10%.

USA Today (10/24, Cummings, 10.31M) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "has vaulted to a 7-point lead over former Vice President Joe Biden in the Democratic primary race, according to a poll from Quinnipiac University released Thursday." The poll of 713 Democratic and Democratic-leaning independent voters, conducted October 17-21, had Warren at 28%, Biden 21%, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) 15%, South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) 10%, Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) 5%, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) 3%. No other candidate topped 1%. USA Today also says, "the poll appears to be an outlier," as Biden has been "coming out ahead in every major national poll released after Oct. 15 except for Thursday's from Quinnipiac." USA Today adds that Warren led among those with "the best policy ideas" at 30%, while Biden led as "the best leader" with 28% and also "continued to lead in the all-important question of who is most likely to beat President Donald Trump."

The New York Times (10/24, Stevens, Russonello, 18.61M) considers the "starkly different results" between recent polls on the Democratic race, writing, "It is not clear why the CNN and Quinnipiac polls present such divergent results" for Warren and Biden. But the polls, "both considered to be of high quality and able to help candidates qualify for the next Democratic debate, add data points to a divide that has emerged in recent weeks: between surveys that show Mr. Biden with a commanding lead, and those that have him in a statistical dead heat with Ms. Warren." The Times suggests "it may reflect the fact that many respondents are not yet certain about their feelings."

Biden Campaign Drops Opposition To Super PACs.

The Washington Examiner (10/24, Simonson, 448K) reports, "With campaign cash coming into Joe Biden's coffers more slowly than his 2020 Democratic rivals, the former vice president reversed a long-standing position and will now welcome help from outside, free-spending super PACs." Biden campaign spokeswoman Kate Bedingfield said, "In this time of crisis in our politics, it is not surprising that those who are dedicated to defeating Donald Trump are organizing in every way permitted by current law to bring an end to his disastrous presidency." The Examiner adds that in September, Biden spokesperson, T.J. Ducklo, said, "Since the beginning of this campaign, Biden for president has not and will not welcome the help of super PACs." The New York Times (10/24, Goldmacher, 18.61M) similarly reports, "After ending the third quarter with less cash than four rivals, Joe Biden's campaign reversed course to stop discouraging supporters from forming a super PAC." The Times says it "represents a stark reversal and an implicit acknowledgment of his weakened position in the contest." And the Washington Post (10/24, Viser, 14.2M) reports, "Biden is apparently dropping his long-held opposition to" a super PAC, which it says is "a recognition that financial struggles are becoming a major problem for his presidential prospects." The Post adds, "spokesman TJ Ducklo declined to provide further clarification on the statement or to comment on why the campaign is reversing what had been a long-held position."

Bloomberg (10/24, Epstein, 4.73M) reports, "Allies of Joe Biden are laying the groundwork for a potential super-PAC to support his presidential campaign." The effort includes "Julianna Smoot, who was Barack Obama's 2008 national finance director and a 2012 deputy campaign manager; Steve Schale, a top Florida adviser to both Obama campaigns; and Larry Rasky, a longtime Biden adviser."

Anita Hill Says She Wants To Hold Biden Accountable For Thomas Hearings. The Washington Examiner (10/24, Lim, 448K) reports Anita Hill, speaking at CNN's "Citizen" event in New York City, said that she "wants proof that 2020 presidential candidate Joe Biden has learned from his mistakes in handling her sexual misconduct allegations against Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas." She said, "I'm ready to move on, but I'm also ready to hold Joe Biden accountable."

Sanders Unveils Proposal To Legalize Marijuana.

The Washington Post (10/24, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports 2020 presidential hopeful Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) unveiled "a proposal Thursday to legalize marijuana across the country and expunge criminal convictions related to the drug, embracing an overhaul of federal laws on the eve of a presidential forum expected to renew the debate on race, drugs and police violence." Sanders is "the latest Democratic White House aspirant to issue a plan for more tolerant drug laws, a shift from past presidential elections when Democrats, like Republicans, often promoted more toughness." Sanders' proposal would also ban tobacco companies from participating in the marijuana industry.

Senate Democrats Discourage Hillary Clinton To Not Run Again.

Politico (10/24, Everett, Levine, 4.29M) reports that a "host of Democratic senators" are sending Hillary Clinton a "polite warning" against running for president in 2020. In the unlikely event Clinton takes a "last-minute plunge into the primary, she might struggle to win the backing of any Democrats from a chamber in which she served for eight years." However, most of her allies "don't take the buzz seriously and say they are happy with the field as it is, despite griping by some in the establishment about the current roster of Democrats."

Gabbard Says She's Standing Up To Warmongering Politicians Like Clinton. Presidential candidate Tulsi Gabbard told Fox News' Hannity (10/24, 9:30 p.m. ET, 535K) that as a veteran she believes "war should be a last resort." In response to comments from Hillary Clinton, Gabbard said, "What is so concerning about what Hillary Clinton is doing here is she is not only calling me a traitor, she is not only trying to smear my character, she's sending a warning out to every veteran, every single American, anyone who stands up against the warmongering foreign policies that really are her legacy, that have been so destructive and costly to my brothers and sisters in uniform, cost the American people trillions of dollars, and cost so much damage in the war. This is what's so dangerous."

Ryan Ends Democratic Presidential Bid.

The AP (10/24) reports Rep. Tim Ryan (D-OH) announced Thursday that he is ending his presidential campaign. USA Today (10/24, Lalljee, 10.31M) says Ryan "focused his presidential campaign on trying to win working class voters who voted for President Trump in 2016." The Washington Post (10/24, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports Ryan "failed to qualify for the third and fourth Democratic debates. He has a Dec. 11 deadline to file to run for reelection in his Ohio district."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/24, Eaton, 895K) says Ryan's campaign "didn't catch fire in the large field of better established and better funded candidates like former Vice President Joe Biden. He raised around $1.3 million for the race, a sliver of what competitors" like Sens. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "have collected, and didn't register at all in many polls." The Youngstown Vindicator (10/24, 171K) reports, "As of Sept. 30, Ryan's campaign had only $158,348.92 in its account." Several weeks ago, "Ryan vowed to stay in the race until at least the end of February after the four early-state primaries and caucuses." Reuters (10/24, Heavey, Lambert, Bernstein), Politico (10/24, Strauss, 4.29M) and The Hill (10/24, Budryk, 2.98M) also report the announcement.

WPost Highlights Warren's Time At University Of Houston Law Center.

Under the front-page headline "The Transformation Of Elizabeth Warren," the Washington Post (10/24, A1, Bailey, 14.2M) profiles Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), focusing on her time at the University of Houston Law Center, which "was in a period of transition when Warren interviewed there in 1978. At the time, the law school had just one full-time tenured female professor, but the number of female students was soaring." The Post says that "in an interview, Warren recalled being acutely aware of her status as one of the only women on the staff. 'The faculty members themselves, often the men, treated me as if I were a second-class citizen,' she said. 'It was a lonely experience.'"

Milwaukee Democratic Activists Tasked With Turning Out Inner-City Black Voters.

The Washington Post (10/23, Johnson, 14.2M) reports Democratic local activists are being tasked to boosting black voter turnout in battleground states like Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, and Michigan. Angela Lang, with the help of Milwaukee lawmakers and union organizers, "launched Black Leaders Organizing for Communities (BLOC) in November 2017 to focus on voters in Milwaukee's most impoverished neighborhoods, places where paid canvassers for campaigns often don't go because they deem it too dangerous or because many residents, with criminal records, are not eligible to vote." Lang's group hopes "organizers can spark excitement about the stakes involved in races that are closer to the bottom of the ballot."

NYTimes Analysis: As Student Vote Rises, Republicans Taking Steps To Suppress It.

The New York Times (10/24, Wines, 18.61M) reports college student turnout in the 2018 midterms, at 40.3 percent of 10 million students, was "more than double the rate in the 2014 midterms," according to Tufts University's Institute for Democracy & Higher Education. Because "students lean strongly Democratic," Republican politicians around the country "are throwing up roadblocks between students and voting booths." For example, in New Hampshire, a "Republican-backed law took effect this fall requiring newly registered voters who drive to establish 'domicile' in the state by securing New Hampshire driver's licenses and auto registrations." Republicans in Texas, North Carolina and Wisconsin have also imposed restrictions on using students ID for voting.

Cummings Honored By Congressional Leaders And Colleagues At Capitol.

The AP (10/24, Daly) reports, "The late Rep. Elijah Cummings was hailed as the 'North Star' for fellow House Democrats as congressional leaders and colleagues paid tribute to him at a Capitol ceremony Thursday." House Speaker Pelosi, "a close personal and political ally, said that not only was Cummings a guiding light, 'Elijah was truly a master of the House.'" Senate Majority Leader McConnell "recalled Cummings' efforts to calm his native Baltimore amid violent 2015 protests following the death of a black man, Freddie Gray, in police custody. Cummings' involvement, taking to the streets with a bullhorn, helped quiet the disturbances." The Washington Post (10/24, Portnoy, Wiggins, 14.2M) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer "said Cummings was 'universally respected and admired in a divided time,' with power that came not from his booming baritone, but from his moral force."

The New York Times (10/24, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports Cummings "was memorialized by congressional leaders in both parties as a man of faith and dignity, and a dedicated public servant, but also as a friend." Rep. Mark Meadows, "the conservative North Carolina Republican whose close friendship with Mr. Cummings, despite their strong political differences, was well known in the Capitol," said, "Perhaps this place and this country would be better served with a few more unexpected friendships. I know I've been blessed by one."

The Baltimore Sun (10/24, Barker, 1.33M) reports, "Cummings was the first African American member of Congress to lie in state in the Capitol. Civil rights pioneer Rosa Parks and Capitol Police officer Jacob Chestnut – killed in a Capitol shooting in 1998 – had previously received the distinction of 'lying in honor,' which is what the honor is called for no-elected citizens." USA Today (10/24, Cummings, Morin, 10.31M), Washington Times (10/24, Muñoz, 492K), Politico (10/24, Ferris, Bresnahan, 4.29M), The Hill (10/24, Marcos, Lillis, 2.98M) and CQ Roll Call (10/24, 154K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

NBC Nightly News (10/24, story 5, 0:19, Holt, 8.26M) and the CBS Evening News (10/24, story 5, 0:23, O'Donnell, 4.05M) ran brief segments on Cummings, and ABC World News Tonight (10/24, story 8, 1:05, Muir, 6.47M) said "Members of Congress put aside their differences to honor" him. ABC added "one of the most emotional tributes to the Democratic congressman was from his Republican colleague and close friend, Congressman Mark Meadows." Meadows was shown saying, "For me, I was privileged enough to be able to call him a dear friend. Some have classified it as an unexpected friendship, but for those of us who know Elijah, it's not unexpected or surprising. Perhaps this place and this country would be better served with a few more unexpected friendships. I know I've been blessed by one."

CNN's Zucker Praises Shepard Smith, Says He'd Like To Hire Him.

Breitbart (10/24, Caplan, 673K) reports, "CNN President Jeff Zucker signaled Thursday that he is 'very open' to hiring former Fox News Channel daytime anchor Shepard Smith." At the network's "CITIZEN by CNN" forum, Zucker also "called Smith, who unexpectedly resigned from Fox News earlier this month, both a 'great journalist' and an 'incredibly talented' anchor."

WTimes Analysis: Susan B. Anthony List Growing In Political Prominence.

The Washington Times (10/24, Lovelace, 492K) reports on Tuesday, "Marjorie Dannenfelser, leader of the pro-life group Susan B. Anthony List," met with President Trump and Vice President Pence in the Oval Office, and Trump "pledged to get a federal ban on abortion 'after five months' of pregnancy." The meeting, adds the Times, "signaled the newfound prominence of her organization in the Trump era." Dannenfelser told the Times, "I want [Mr. Trump] to know we're proud of him, supportive of him." The Times also says the SBA List has "contributed to the GOP's electoral successes, helping the party maintain a Senate majority in 2018 and supporting the confirmation of two Supreme Court justices amid unprecedented opposition." SBA List spokeswoman Mallory Quigley "said SBA List plans to spend $41 million in the 2020 election cycle, up from $28 million in the 2018 cycle."

Judge Restores Father's Conservatorship In Case Of Boy Whose Mother Says He Wants To Be A Girl.

Townhall (10/24, Meads, 177K) reports Texas Judge Kim Cooks on Thursday "overruled a jury that decided on Monday that Jefferey Younger, father of seven-year-old boy James Younger, had no conservatorship of his children in terms of medical decisions." The result of the jury's decision would be that "James' mother and Younger's ex-wife, Dr. Anne Georgulas, would have been allowed to continue chemical castration and other gender-changing medical procedures such as puberty blockers, despite the father's wishes." The decision by Judge Cooks "grants conservatorship back [to] Mr. Younger as well as Dr. Georgulas."

Carter Released From Hospital.

The AP (10/24) reports former President Jimmy Carter "is out of the hospital where he was treated after fracturing his pelvis in a recent fall at his home, a spokeswoman said Thursday." The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/24, 895K) reports that "the 95-year-old Carter fell in his Plains home on Monday night and was rushed to the hospital for observation and treatment. It was his second accident in two weeks and third major accident since May, when he fell and broke his hip." USA Today (10/24, Wu, 10.31M), among other news outlets, also reports the story, while NBC Nightly News (10/24, story 11, 0:10, Holt, 5.63M) and ABC World News Tonight (10/24, story 12, 0:11, Muir, 6.47M) briefly mentioned it last night.

Wildfires Continue To Multiply Across California.

ABC World News Tonight (10/24, lead story, 2:32, Muir, 6.47M) reported a new wildfire has erupted just north of Los Angeles while "hundreds of firefighters are now fighting flames across California." ABC said the Tick Fire broke out near "Santa Clarita, north of Los Angeles, engulfing structures amid extremely critical fire conditions. ... Trees are going up like kindling here, the embers coming in every direction. No matter where you are, you have to be wary of the wind because it can change at any second." Utilities companies have preemptively shut off power to many customers due to high winds but "that move did not prevent this fire from starting" and "flames now threatening transmission lines." Meanwhile, "they're gearing up for another major wind event this weekend into Monday."

The CBS Evening News (10/24, lead story, 2:51, O'Donnell, 4.05M) reported "warnings cover 25 million of the state's 40 million people." In addition to the latest fire, "another explosive fire is burning in Sonoma" where homes have been destroyed and "thousands had to actually run for safety." The state's largest electric company, PG&E, "has shut off power to more than 150,000 homes and businesses to prevent more fires from being sparked." Thursday night, 2,000 people remained "evacuated, many of them don't know the fate of their homes."

NBC Nightly News (10/24, lead story, 2:31, Holt, 5.63M) reported that the power outages may have slowed down evacuations and phone lines were no longer functioning. The blackouts "have left more than half a million people in the dark, taking a toll on homes, businesses, even farmers."

Californians Coping With Second Round Of Blackouts, Economic Impact. The AP (10/24, Gecker) reports "dangerously windy weather sweeping through the state brought power outages to Northern California as the state's largest utility staged blackouts designed to prevent catastrophic wildfires." Pacific Gas & Electric "began rolling blackouts stretching from the Sierra foothills in the northeast to portions of the San Francisco Bay Area." The blackouts affect "a half-million people...in 15 counties, and PG&E warned that a second round of outages could occur over the weekend when winds return to the region." Meanwhile, "in the south, where hot, dry Santa Ana winds were expected to hit Thursday, Southern California Edison warned that it might black out about 308,000 customers – perhaps 750,000 people – depending on the forecast." In addition, "San Diego Gas & Electric warned of power shutoffs to about 24,000 customers."

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, A1, Carlton, Kang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the PG&E shuts off power to many California small business, they are tallying their losses. Energy expert Michael Wara of Stanford University's Woods Institute calculated that a shutdown earlier this month led to total economic losses as much as $2.5 billion, largely due to lost industrial and commercial activity.

Increasingly Visible Homelessness In Austin Sparks Backlash.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Findell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Austin's decision to allow people to legally reside on sidewalks and rights of way has sparked a backlash among some residents who are concerned about health hazards. Conservative politicians are concerned that Austin will follow the path of West Coast cities with highly visible homeless populations.

Author Urges Making US "Democratic."

Malka Older, a sociologist and science fiction author, writes in the New York Times (10/24, 18.61M), "It's hard to claim that the United States, at any point in its history, has been a democracy in the rigorous sense of the word." Still, Older adds, "we've grown more democratic, expanding the franchise to women and people of color and instituting the direct election of senators by popular vote." Older also suggests "There are myriad ways that we can make our system more representative, more accountable, more reflective of what people want." Older concludes, "We need to keep reinventing and refining government, to keep up with changes in society and technology."

WSJournal: Trump Administration Deregulation Benefits Rural California Communities.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Trump Administration has revised the smelt and salmon biological opinions in a way that will allow pumping of groundwater to be adjusted in California. The Journal says environmentalists are angered but the move will benefit rural communities in the state.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 41.8%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 41.8%, and his disapproval at 54.5%. The President's job approval is down 0.3 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.4.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (10/21-10/23) finds Trump's approval at 43%, with 54% disapproving.

Financial International News

ECB Leaves Rates, Guidance Unchanged As Draghi Exits.

CNBC (10/24, Amaro, 3.62M) reports the ECB "kept rates unchanged on Thursday, in what marked President Mario Draghi's last monetary policy meeting at the institution." The ECB "also kept its forward guidance unchanged, suggesting that its main interest rates will remain at their current or lower levels until there's strong evidence of a pick up in prices." Draghi told reporters Thursday, "Incoming economic data continue to point to moderate, but positive growth in the second half of this year." He also "explained that weakness in international trade was denting manufacturing activity in the euro area, as well as business investment." The Financial Times (10/24, Arnold, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) and Business Insider (10/24, 3.67M) also report.

At His Final ECB Press Conference, Draghi Tells Lagarde To "Never Give Up" On Eurozone. Reuters (10/23, Canepa, Koranyi) reports outgoing ECB President Mario Draghi "told his successor on Thursday to 'never give up' on propping up the euro zone economy in the face of a worsening outlook and little help from governments." At the final press conference "of his eight-year tenure, the man credited with saving the euro from collapsing kept the door open to even more easy money, days before he hands the reins over to Christine Lagarde on Oct 31." Draghi "refused to give specific advice to Lagarde but said his legacy was defined by a single-minded quest to boost price growth in an ailing and divided currency bloc."

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/24, Skolimowski, 4.73M) reports Draghi "said there's no reason to fret that his newly revived quantitative-easing program will run out of space, with plenty of room to work around its legal constraints."

Pressure On BOJ To Act Eases As Markets Calm, Trade War Settles.

Reuters (10/24, Kihara) reports the BOJ "is leaning toward keeping monetary policy steady next week as stable markets, a truce in U.S.-China trade talks and robust domestic demand give it room to save its dwindling ammunition to battle the next recession, sources said." Developments over the last month "have taken some pressure off the BOJ, with the United States and China agreeing on a temporary pause in a trade war that has hurt global growth." However, the report says, "the decision will be a close call," and the BOJ "stands ready to act if a flare-up in trade tensions or renewed fears of a disorderly Brexit jolt markets and spark an unwelcome yen spike, say sources familiar with the central bank's thinking."

Japan, South Korea Agree To Ease Feud Following High-Level Talks.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/23, Lee, Nobuhiro, 4.73M) reports Japanese PM Shinzo Abe and South Korean Premier Lee Nak-yeon "agreed they must work to ease feud between the two neighbors that has spilled over into trade and security at their highest-level meeting in more than a year."

Big Banks Push For Clearing House Reforms.

The Financial Times (10/24, Tett, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports that several large banks are calling on regulators to impose better default buffers, disclosure, and corporate governance on central counterparty clearing houses.

Iran's Economic Minister Cancels Visit To World Bank After US Rejects Delegates' Visas.

The Independent \(UK\) (10/24, Mortazavi, 1.36M) reports, "Iran's economic minister has cancelled his upcoming trip to Washington to protest against the US government rejecting visas to members of his delegation." The minister "has sent a letter of protest to the president of the World Bank, criticising the US government for creating 'ungrounded obstacles' and imposing 'illegal, unprecedented and hostile' restrictions on Iran, Iranian state media reported."

Finance Industry Taking Notice Of Global Protests.

Reuters (10/24, Jones, Dolan) reports, "An alarming spread of street protests and civil unrest across the world in recent weeks looms large on the radar of financial markets, with investors wary the resulting pressures on stretched government finances will be one of many consequences." The report says, "Money managers and risk analysts seeking a common thread between often unconnected sources of popular anger – in Hong Kong, Beirut, Cairo, Santiago and beyond – reckon the unrest is particularly worrying following years of modest global economic growth and relatively low joblessness."

Pence Criticizes China's Actions Regarding Hong Kong, Slams Nike And NBA.

Reuters (10/24, Alper, Spetalnick) reports Vice President Pence "accused China of curtailing 'rights and liberties' in Hong Kong" in a Thursday speech on US China policy at the Wilson Center. Pence said, "Hong Kong is a living example of what can happen when China embraces liberty. And yet, for the last few years, Beijing has increased its interventions in Hong Kong and engaged in actions that curtail the rights and liberties that Hong Kong's people were guaranteed through a binding international agreement."

CQ Roll Call (10/24, Bennett, 154K) says the Vice President "credited President Donald Trump with altering US-China relations 'forever,' saying the decades during which 'we rebuilt China...are over.'" The New York Times (10/24, Wong, 18.61M) reports Pence "went on to say that the Trump administration sought to engage with China on candid terms and did not want a 'decoupling' of the economies."

The Washington Times (10/24, Howell, 492K) reports Pence also "waded into the fervor over the NBA's retreat in the face of Chinese anger over a pro-Hong Kong tweet by a member of the Houston Rockets' front office," and the AP (10/24, Riechmann) says he "took a swipe at Nike and the NBA," singling out "the shoe company for removing Houston Rockets merchandise from stores in China after the team's general manager angered the Chinese government with a tweet supporting protesters in Hong Kong. He said the NBA was acting like a 'wholly owned subsidiary of the authoritarian regime' for failing to stand up to the government's criticism of Rockets General Manager Daryl Morey." The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Mauldin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Nike and NBA representatives had no immediate comment.

USA Today (10/24, Shesgreen, 10.31M) says Pence's remarks "seemed to put him out in front of his own boss." President Trump "has been mostly mum about the democracy movement, and he even posted a congratulatory tweet to Chinese President Xi Jinping marking the country's 70th anniversary of communist rule." The Washington Post (10/24, Nakamura, 14.2M), Bloomberg (10/24, Sink, Novy-Williams, 4.73M) and Politico (10/24, Bolanos, 4.29M), among other news outlets, also cover Pence's remarks.

Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial page writer Jillian Kay Melchior argues in an op-ed that China, with the deployment of troops along the Hong Kong border, is seeking to send a message to mainlanders as well as to protesters in Hong Kong.

Senators Call For Intelligence Probe Into Chinese-Owned App TikTok. Reuters (10/24, Culliford) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer and Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) on Wednesday asked intelligence officials to investigate whether the popular Chinese-owned app TikTok poses national security risks. In a letter to Acting DNI Macguire, the senators "raised concerns about the video-sharing platform's collection of user data and whether China censors content seen by US users." The letter "also suggested TikTok could be targeted by foreign influence campaigns." NBC Nightly News (10/24, story 7, 1:40, Holt, 5.63M) showed Schumer saying: "There are 110 million Americans who have information with TikToc, and the Chinese government could be grabbing every one of them."

The Washington Examiner (10/24, Quinn, 448K) says Schumer and Cotton "aren't the only two lawmakers urging the Trump administration to take a closer look at TikTok." Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) requested this month the Treasury Department's Committee on Foreign Investment in the US "review the national security implications of TikTok's acquisition of Musical.ly and purported censorship of content."

DOE's Brouillette: US "Gains" To Reduce Pollution "Offset" By China In "One Month." In an interview with Breitbart (10/24, Moran, 673K), Deputy Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette – who President Trump has tapped to replace outgoing Secretary Perry – said Chinese pollution has "offset" American "gains" to reduce pollution in "one month." Said Brouillette, "All of the gains that we have made are offset exponentially by the Chinese. It shows the fallacy of an agreement of the Paris Accords. We have reduced our energy-related emissions by 14 percent. That has been offset exponentially by the Chinese in probably a month or maybe a month and a half. They are making near-zero progress regarding these types of issues."

UN: Iran Executed Seven Children Last Year.

The AP (10/24) reports a UN human rights expert said Wednesday that Iran executed "seven child offenders last year and two so far this year even though human rights law prohibits the death penalty for anyone under age 18." Javid Rehman, the UN special investigator on human rights in Iran, also told the General Assembly's human rights committee "that he has 'credible information' there are at least 90 child offenders currently on death row in Iran."

North Korea Urges US To Act "Wisely" Through Year-End Deadline.

The AP (10/24, Tong) reports North Korea on Thursday "accused US officials of maintaining hostility against Pyongyang despite a 'special' relationship between leader Kim Jong Un and President Donald Trump and urged Washington to act 'wisely' through the end of the year." The AP says the statement issued by Foreign Ministry adviser Kim Kye Gwan was "clearly referring to an end-of-year deadline set by Kim Jong Un for the Trump administration to offer mutually acceptable terms for a deal to salvage their diplomacy." Kim Kye Gwan is quoted as saying, "We want to see how wisely the US will pass the end of the year."

Russia Extends Detainment Of Whelan Through Dec. 29.

The Washington Times (10/24, Blake, 492K) reports Paul Whelan, a former US Marine jailed in Russia on suspicion of spying, was "ordered Thursday to remain held through Dec. 29, a year and a day since he was arrested in Moscow." A "closed-door hearing held at Lefortovo Court in Moscow resulted in a judge agreeing with investigators to keep Mr. Whelan in custody, several regional media outlets reported."

NYTimes Analysis: Russia Increasingly Cracking Down On Dissent. The New York Times (10/24, Higgins, 18.61M) reports on the "increasingly assertive actions of a security apparatus seemingly bent on proving the Kremlin's harshest critics right when they say that Russia has taken a dangerous turn as President Vladimir V. Putin serves out what is supposed to be his final term." The prosecution of "harmless critics comes against the backdrop of foreboding and uncertainty over what might follow Mr. Putin," even amid questions "of whether he will depart as scheduled in 2024." The Times says the "resulting jitters, exacerbated by economic stagnation and mostly small but widespread protests that erupted this summer, have left Russia's numerous law-enforcement bodies scrambling to prove their mettle against potential threats, no matter how puny, and secure their future in a country they all view as a fortress besieged by enemies at home and abroad."

Chechen Authorities Crack Down On LGBTQ Community. ABC World News Tonight (10/24, story 7, 2:25, Muir, 6.47M) reported, "It's been called a police state, a place fiercely loyal to Vladimir Putin. There are reports of hundreds of gay men and women allegedly kidnapped, tortured, and abused at the hands of the Chechen government. ... Despite a global outcry in 2017, fresh victims have continued to come forward."

Johnson Abandons Hope Of October Brexit, Seeks December 12 General Election.

The AP (10/24, Lawless) reports British Prime Minister Boris Johnson "has finally abandoned his promise of an October Brexit and pinned his hopes on a December election." Reuters (10/24, Holton, Piper, Maclellan) reports Johnson "called on Thursday for a general election on Dec. 12 to break Britain's Brexit impasse, conceding for the first time he will not meet his 'do or die' deadline to leave the European Union next week." Johnson "has twice failed before to win the votes in parliament for an election, where he needs the support of two-thirds of its 650 lawmakers."

Bloomberg (10/24, Evans, 4.73M) reports that a ComRes poll taken one week ago projects a tight race if Brexit does not happen by October 31, with Labour at 27%, Johnson's Conservatives 26%, the Brexit Party 20%, and the Liberal Democrats 18%. However, USA Today (10/24, Hjelmgard, 10.31M) reports that "most polls show that Johnson would likely comfortably win any new national vote." The New York Times (10/24, Castle, 18.61M) reports, "With Labour at just around 25 percent in many opinion polls, trailing well behind the Conservatives, as many as half the party's lawmakers are thought to oppose a winter election." The Washington Post (10/24, Booth, Adam, 14.2M) and Wall Street Journal (10/24, A1, Colchester, Douglas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets also report the story.

Unionists in Northern Ireland To Protest Johnson's New Brexit Proposal. The New York Times (10/24, Yeginsu, 18.61M) reports that as British lawmakers "prepared to debate Prime Minister Boris Johnson's new Brexit deal in Westminster on Monday, hundreds of irate unionists in Northern Ireland poured into the East Belfast Constitutional Social Club to plan how they would resist the agreement, should it eventually become the law of the land." Protestant unionists, "who favor preserving the political union between Northern Ireland and Britain, vehemently reject any Brexit arrangement that separates their territory from the rest of the United Kingdom." Prime Minister Boris Johnson's new proposal, "which would take Britain out of the European Union but leave Northern Ireland effectively in the bloc's customs union and single market, does just that, they say."

UK Police Suspect Trafficking In Deaths Of 39 Chinese Nationals. The Washington Post (10/24, A1, Adam, Booth, 14.2M) reports on its front page that British authorities said Thursday that "the 39 people found dead inside a tractor-trailer at an industrial park in southeastern England are Chinese nationals, probably the victims of gangs who smuggle human cargo into Britain via shipping containers from European sea ports." According to the Post, it is "one of Britain's biggest ever homicide cases, with investigations extending to Belgium, Ireland, Bulgaria and China."

Spain Exhumes Franco's Remains.

The AP (10/24, Giles) reports Spain on Thursday exhumed the remains of dictator Gen. Francisco Franco "from his grandiose mausoleum outside Madrid and flown them by helicopter for reburial in a small family crypt north of the capital." The "government-ordered, closed-door operation," the AP says, "satisfies a decades-old desire of many in Spain who considered the vainglorious mausoleum that Franco built an affront to the tens of thousands who died in Spain's Civil War and his subsequent regime."

Morales Claims Outright Victory In Bolivian Presidential Race.

The AP (10/24, Valdez) reports Bolivian President Evo Morales "declared himself the outright winner of the country's presidential election Thursday, which would give him a fourth straight term after a vote that has sparked days of protests by both his opponents and supporters over accusations of fraud." With nearly all votes counted, Morales had 46.8% of the vote to 36.7% for ex-President Carlos Mesa. Morales needs a margin of at least 10 percent to avoid a runoff. Reuters (10/24, Taj, Ramos) reports Morales said Organization of American States observers "had slandered him by raising what it called 'serious doubts' about the election." Morales told reporters, "I don't want to think the OAS mission is already taking part in a coup d'etat."

The Washington Post (10/24, 14.2M) editorializes that "allowing a runoff, as the OAS recommended, is the option Mr. Morales would take if he does not, in fact, want to be seen as what the opposition calls him: a 'dictator.' There is still time for Bolivia's president to step back from the brink."

WTimes Analysis: Argentina's Fernandez Poised For Comeback.

The Washington Times (10/24, Puglie, 492K) reports former Argentine President Cristina Fernandez, "whose Peronist party was kicked to the curb by voters just four years ago, could be on the brink of a remarkable comeback." Fernandez will be on the ballot Sunday "as the vice presidential running mate to Alberto Fernandez, no relation," and "analysts expect her to be calling the shots if, as polls suggest, the populist left comes back to power."

Chilean Protesters Reject Government Concessions As Insufficient.

The AP (10/24, Vergara) reports, "Demonstrators returned to Chile's streets on Thursday, dissatisfied with economic concessions announced by the government in a bid to curb a week of deadly violence." President Sebastián Piñera "acknowledged that the steps taken to ease public anger won't fully address the grievances of many people in the country," but insisted that it "constitutes important relief."

Lebanon's Aoun Says He Is Ready To Talk With Protesters.

Reuters (10/24, Francis, Knecht) reports Lebanese President Michel Aoun "said on Thursday he was ready for a dialogue with protesters to help save the country from collapse after days of demonstrations against the ruling elite, and he suggested a government reshuffle was possible." Reuters adds, "Protests fueled by worsening economic conditions have paralyzed the country and kept banks shut."

Freddie Mac: 30-Year FRM Average Rises From 3.69% To 3.75%.

The Washington Post (10/24, Lerner, 14.2M) reports, "Mortgage rates rose to their highest level in 12 weeks, according to the data released Thursday by Freddie Mac, with investors continuing to react to the possibility of a positive resolution to the ongoing trade dispute between the United States and China." The 30-year FRM average rose from 3.69% to 3.75%. The 15-year FRM rose from 3.15% to 3.18%. The 5/1 ARM rose from 3.35% to 3.40%. Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "The dramatic year-long slide in mortgage rates has abated partly in response to the potential improvement in trade negotiations and partly due to the still underrated strength of economic fundamentals. Going forward, while the level of rates remain a positive force for the housing market and home buyer demand continues to improve, the lack of housing supply is a major impediment to not just the housing market but the continued economic recovery."

Reuters (10/24) reports, "The 30-year fixed mortgage rate has dropped more than 125 basis points since last November's peak to an average of 3.69%," according to data from Freddie Mac. The AP (10/24) reports, "Lower rates have helped reinvigorate the housing market, which stumbled last year. Sales of existing homes reached a 17-month high in August, though they fell modestly in September. New home sales jumped 15.5% in September from a year earlier. Single-family home construction has also ticked up." MarketWatch (10/24, Passy, 1.67M) reports, "Even though mortgage rates have risen from the 2019 low recorded at the beginning of September, they remain more than a full percentage point below where they were at this point last year. That's helped those home buyers who may have struggled to meet the repayment requirements." Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/24, Maurus, 4.73M) provides similar coverage.

FHFA, GSEs Release Part Of URLA, Add Chinese Resources To Mortgage Translations Clearinghouse.

According to National Mortgage News (10/24) reports, "The Federal Housing Finance Agency, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac released static elements of the revised Uniform Residential Loan Application on Wednesday, and also announced separately that they are adding traditional Chinese language resources to a mortgage translation clearinghouse they have." The Mortgage Bankers Association "generally backs outreach to LEP borrowers, but it had opposed the FHFA's addition of a language question to the application due to concern that doing so could lead to unreasonable borrower expectations about lenders' ability to provide related services and forms." According to NMN, "With the addition of Chinese to its pre-existing Spanish resources, the online clearinghouse will contain information in the two most common languages spoken by limited English proficiency borrowers in the United States."

Updated AUS Specs And Documents Should Be Ready In November. HousingWire (10/24, Lane, 23K) reports, "Beyond removing the language preference question and housing counseling information, the GSEs also state that the new form contains changes to the Borrower Information, Additional Borrower Information, Lender Loan Information, Continuation Sheet, and Unmarried Addendum sections of the form." When the FHFA "announced the changes in August, it delayed the implementation of the URLA form." The GSEs "now state that they are...on track to publish their respective updated automated underwriting system specifications and supporting documents next month and will announce the updated implementation timeline and mandate 'before the end of the year.'" The GSEs indicated "that they will release an interactive PDF version of the redesigned URLA in early 2020." Bankers Online (10/24) also reports.

Calabria: GSE Reform Needed To Protect Sustainable Homeownership, Affordable Rental Housing.

Writing for The Boston Business Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 866K), FHFA Director Mark Calabria says that the GSEs were "created to support sustainable homeownership and affordable rental housing in underserved communities by ensuring mortgage credit availability for very-low to moderate-income borrowers. This is a critically important mission in the Bay State. Between 2011 and 2017, house prices in Boston increased 8 percent faster than per capita income and in Suffolk County rent increased 6 times as fast as household income. As in many other communities, the rising cost of housing in Boston is putting an increasing amount of financial pressure on families' budgets." According to Calabria, as it stands, the GSEs "will fail in an economic downturn, which will hurt those most in need of their support for affordable housing and could again leave taxpayers on the hook to cover those losses." However, "The good news is that it is not too late to avert this disaster." While the Administration is laying the groundwork, "ultimately, only Congress has the power to enact the structural reforms needed to fix today's broken mortgage finance system. The need for reform is undeniable and urgent. The future of affordable housing in America depends on it."

FHFA Hires Jonathan McKernan, Raphael Williams.

National Mortgage Professional (10/24, Hall) reports, "The Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) has announced the hiring of Jonathan McKernan as Senior Counsel for Policy and Raphael "Raffi" Williams as Press Secretary and Senior Communications Advisor." Williams joins the FHFA from HUD, where he served as Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Office of Public Affairs. Previously, Williams "was a reporter with Circa.com and Deputy Press Secretary for the Republican National Committee."

Study: Cash-Out Refis Are On The Rise.

Vermont Business Magazine (10/24, 23K) reports, "According to Refi Guide, Cash-out refinancing helped cause the Great Recession. Americans are refinancing to take out cash for immediate needs – such as cars or remodeling their house – and sinking further into debt, which could again become insurmountable if the economy worsens. Refi Guide...released a study titled States With The Highest Levels of Recent Refinancing using data from Freddie Mac from 1990 to 2019 which shows many of the alarming trends appear to be repeating."

- NorthMarq Arranges $20M Freddie Mac Refi For Carbondale, IL Student Housing. REBusiness Online (10/24) reports, "NorthMarq Capital has arranged a $20 million Freddie Mac loan for the refinancing of Aspen Court Apartments in Carbondale, home of Southern Illinois University." Student Housing Business (10/24) provides additional coverage.
- Freddie-Financed GA Property Trades For $31M. Commercial Real Estate Direct (10/24, Moynihan) reports InterCapital Group "has paid $31.2 million, or $141,818/unit, for the 220-unit Hickory Falls apartment property" in the Atlanta suburb of Villa Rica, Georgia. The property is "encumbered by a $12.2 million Freddie Mac loan that is securitized through FREMF, 2014-K717."

Senate Banking Committee Holds Hearing Regarding Data Ownership And Privacy Rights.

DS News (10/24, Welborn) reports, "The Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Hearing held a hearing to examine data ownership, focusing on exploring implications for data privacy rights and data valuation." Chairman Mike Crapo said that private companies are "collecting, processing, analyzing and sharing considerable data on individuals for all kinds of purposes." According to DS News, a "common idea brought up in the sharing is the 'data as property model,' which, in theory, gives people more control over their data." ACLU Senior Advocacy and Policy Counsel Chad Marlow voiced concern over the way the model is being presented, however. He said, "While the data as property model may have merit as a tool for redistributing the money that is currently being made off the sale of personal information, any claim that it advances privacy is false. To the extent Congress is seeking to provide greater private protections for Americans' personal information, what we need is an affirmative consent-based model that provides all individuals the ability to opt-in (or not) to the sharing of their personal data."

Originations Surge To New Records In Q3.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/25, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "The third quarter of 2019 was one for the record books, as primary market originations of first-lien home loans hit a post-crisis high. Lenders produced an estimated $700 billion of new first-lien mortgages during the third quarter." According to IMF, "That 23.9% increase from the previous quarter pushed year-to-date production to a whopping $1.620 trillion, within a whisker of output for the entire year in 2018. With strong refinance demand, low rates and solid housing sales for this time of year, 2019 could end up as the best year since 2006, when originations totaled $2.550 trillion. The bumper crop produced during the July-September cycle was the biggest since the second quarter of 2007, when first-lien originations totaled $704 billion."

Ginnie Mae Plans Pilot Program To Begin Accepting ENotes.

HousingWire (10/24, Lane, 23K) reports, "The rise of the fully digital mortgage is about to take a big step forward, as Ginnie Mae, the government agency that issues mortgage bonds backed by Federal Housing Administration or Department of Veterans Affairs loans, is moving closer to accepting and utilizing eNotes." While the promissory note was previously a "paper document," in "recent years, a move towards digitization in the mortgage business saw a rise in digital promissory notes. ... The move towards more widespread use of eNotes was aided last year when Wells Fargo announced that it would begin buying eNotes. And data released earlier this year by MERS CORP shows that the number of eNotes added to the MERS eRegistry skyrocketed in the first quarter of this year." With Ginnie Mae now "planning to launch a pilot program that will see the agency begin to accept eNotes as satisfactory collateral for its mortgage-backed securities," the industry moves a step closer to "fully digital FHA and VA loans."

DS News (10/24, Albanese) reports on its interviews with "an array of title professionals about the state of the industry, how it can best leverage technology, and what challenges await as 2020 closes in." Michelle Garcia Gilbert, Managing Partner of the Gilbert Garcia Group, "[said] that both Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have launched initiatives for electronic closings." According to her, this is largely due to "the direction of the lead loan underwriters in the country." She explained, "Evolve or don't evolve, at your peril. The industry is innovating to adapt to the new digital age."

Investor: Fannie's Multifamily CAS CRT Is "Insanely" Oversubscribed.

Debtwire (10/24) reports, "Fannie Mae for the first time is pushing its multifamily credit risk to the CRT bond market through its Multifamily Connecticut Avenue Securities 201901 and investors apparently can't get enough, according to three investors." One investor said that with yields near 12%, the CAS CRT is "insanely" oversubscribed.

Zillow: Younger Buyers Willing To Make Financial Sacrifices To Afford Homes.

M Report (10/24, Albanese) says, "Zillow reports that 55% of homebuyers make a financial sacrifice to achieve homeownership, and 71% of millennials and Generation Z homeowners make at least one financial tradeoff to buy a home. This number falls to 57% for Generation X homebuyers and 33% for Baby Boomers and the Silent Generation." According to M Report, "13% of millennial and Gen Z homebuyers skipped healthcare services" to buy a home. According to Zillow economist Kathryn Coursolle, "The fact that homebuyers have to make tradeoffs to save for the down payment is not surprising. That's pretty much the study of economics: how people make decisions when they can't have everything. But today's tradeoffs are non-trivial and often cut into more than just the 'nice-to-haves.' Indeed, some of those who manage to buy young are foregoing going to the doctor or paying for insurance. To buy young means sacrificing more, ostensibly for the ability to sacrifice less, later."

Hometap Study: A Fifth Of Homeowners Feel "House Rich, Cash Poor."

Mortgage Professional America (10/24, Mendoza) reports, "One in five homeowners in the US felt that the rising costs of homes across the country and worsening income-to-mortgage ratios were holding them back from reaching their financial goals. Roughly 19.5% of homeowners tagged themselves as 'house rich, cash poor' most or all of the time, while 73% admitted they feel that way at least some of the time, according to the findings of the Hometap Homeownership Study." Hometap CEO Jeffrey Glass said, "We knew there were pockets of homeowners who felt house rich, cash poor – we see that every day in our work – but were surprised to find that one in five feel[s] that way so often. Mortgage rates are at historic lows, which is encouraging more people to buy, but despite 45 million homeowners with excess equity, we're seeing really conservative behavior – perhaps a lasting effect of the 2008 financial crisis. Unless wages start to rise relative to home values, we'll see more homeowners falling into the house rich, cash poor category."

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (10/24, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 1.773 percent.

Dollar Holds Steady.

Reuters (10/25, White) reports that on Friday, the dollar index against a basket of six major currencies "was little changed at 97.688 but up 0.42% on the week." Against the yen, the dollar "held steady at 108.61 yen, on course for a 0.18% weekly advance." Meanwhile, the euro "held steady at $1.1103 in Asia on Friday, on course for a 0.62% weekly decline."

Gold Rises.

Reuters (10/25) reports, "Gold rose to a fresh two-week high on Friday, as weak US economic data spurred expectations for another interest rate cut by the Federal Reserve later this month." Spot gold "hit its highest since Oct. 10 at $1,504.35 and was slightly down at $1,501.67 per ounce, as of 0117 GMT." US gold futures "were flat at $1,504.40 per ounce on Friday."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (10/25, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil prices pulled back on Friday, retracing some of the gains of a three rally on Friday, as downbeat economic growth forecasts revived concerns over the outlook for fuel demand." Brent crude "was down 18 cents, or 0.3%, at $61.49 by 0642 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude "was down 21 cents, or 0.4%, at $56.02."

FBI Launches Video Series Warning Election Campaigns About Foreign Hackers.

Bloomberg (10/24, Turton, 4.73M) reports, "As the U.S. presidential campaign heats up, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has launched a video series to help candidates shore up their cybersecurity to avoid the kind of online meddling that disrupted the 2016 election." Bloomberg adds, "Dubbed Protected Voices, the initiative includes a series of videos featuring FBI special agents and computer scientists detailing ways foreign actors could seek to hack or influence political campaigns." The initiative "also provides tips on how campaigns can improve their digital security, such as communicating using encryption, hardening routers and spotting foreign agents that may try attempt to infiltrate computer systems. 'Protected Voices aims to help political campaigns, private companies and individuals protect themselves from foreign actors who want to hijack their message,' FBI Director Christopher Wray says, in a video introducing the initiative. 'We've created these protected voices videos to showcase the methods these adversaries might use and to help campaigns practice good cyberhygiene because the foundation of election security is cybersecurity.'" Fortune (10/24, 3.91M) also reports.

FBI Issues Warning About E-skimming Attacks.

ZDNet (10/23, Cimpanu, 299K) reports the FBI on Wednesday "issued...a warning for the US private sector about e-skimming attacks, also known as web skimming, or Magecart attacks." These types of attacks "have been happening since 2016, but they've intensified during the last two years, in 2018 and 2019."

FBI: Russian Hacker Charged In Pittsburgh Wanted For Allegedly Running Global Conspiracy.

KDKA-TV Pittsburgh (10/24, 144K) reports from Pittsburgh, "A Russian computer hacker accused of leading a worldwide conspiracy that targeted hundreds of thousands of computers with malware, enabling his group to steal more than $100 million from business and other bank accounts is still wanted by the FBI." KDKA-TV adds, "Criminal and civil allegations were filed in Pittsburgh against the accused man, Evgeniy Bogachev, in 2014. Some of his victims are from western Pennsylvania." Federal authorities "say Bogachev's group infected computers with software that captured passwords and account numbers and stole millions of dollars from victims."

Ocala, Florida Targeted In "Spear Fishing" Attack.

The Ocala (FL) Star-Banner (10/24, Medina, 81K) reports, "A 'spear phishing' email attack led an Ocala employee to mistakenly transfer $640,000 to a fraudulent bank account set up by a scammer." Ocala Mayor Kent Guinn "said about $110,000 was still in the account when the city learned of the fraud," so "the scammer collected little more than $500,000." The Star-Banner adds, "City spokeswoman Ashley Dobbs said someone sent an email to a city department made to look like it was from a current construction contractor working with the city." The email "requested payment for services via electronic transfer," but "the bank account provided, however, did not belong to the contractor, according to a press release." The city "reported the incident to the Ocala Police Department, which in turn notified the FBI, Dobbs said."

US Cyber Warriors Are Working To Protect Against Election Threats.

CBS News (10/24, Gazis, 3.68M) reports the US government's actions "to disrupt Russia's attempted cyber incursions into the 2018 midterm elections took place in part in a newly constructed Joint Operations Center (JOC) on the National Security Agency's expanding Fort Meade campus in Maryland." Efforts to protect the 2020 elections "are expected to follow a similar drill." Located in the middle of the Cyber Integration Center – a 380,000 square foot, $520 million building whose construction was completed last September – the JOC "links two adjoining facilities where NSA and US Cyber Command personnel reside." A massive floor "dotted by pods of desks and dominated by three curved, 20-foot-tall screens, the JOC is run by roughly 200 civilian and military officials who work 12-hour, rotating shifts – 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year."

Republicans Storm A Secure Congressional Facility.

The Washington Post (10/24, Marks, 14.2M) reports in its Cybersecurity 202 column that a group of House Republicans "could have created a field day for Russian and Chinese intelligence agencies when they stormed into a secure Capitol Hill room where their colleagues were taking impeachment testimony yesterday with their cellphones in tow." The protest "violated the most basic cybersecurity protections technologists try to impose on the rooms where lawmakers receive and discuss classified information – basically giving insider access to any spy agency that had compromised a single lawmaker's cellphone and could snoop through the camera or microphone."

Business Insider (10/24, Sheth, Frias, 3.67M) reports intelligence veterans were "stunned by news that Republican lawmakers stormed a secure area on Capitol Hill where impeachment hearings were taking place Wednesday, saying what some called a 'thuggish' stunt could pose a threat to national security." More than 30 House Republicans "barged into the area, known as a Sensitive Compartmented Information Facility, while a witness was about to testify in a closed-door session." The move is a breach of congressional rules "because no personal electronic devices, namely cellphones, are allowed in the facility." Glenn Carle, a former CIA covert operative, "told Business Insider that cellphones were 'essentially microphones for sophisticated intelligence services' because 'services can implant code remotely – from phishing and various attacks – into the phones, which could capture emissions in a given range, and then transmit them later.'"

Italian, Australian Officials Defend Assisting Barr in Review of Russia Probe's Origins.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Gurman, Legorano, Pannett, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Italian Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte said Wednesday after a hearing of the Italian parliament's national-security committee that Italian intelligence services have no ties to a professor whose encounter with a Trump campaign aide in 2016 led the FBI's counterintelligence to probe Russian meddling. Conte said that Italian intelligence officials informed Barr they played no role in the events leading up to the Russia investigation. Australian Foreign Minister Marise Payne defended Australia's ambassador to the US' offer to assist in Barr's review, instead of waiting for help to be requested. She asserted Australia would do the same thing for other Five Eyes partners.

DHS Warns Of Russian Interference Plans In 2020 Elections.

Yahoo! News (10/24, 12.82M) reports that, according to an unclassified intelligence assessment obtained by Yahoo News, "US government efforts to prevent Russia from conducting influence operations directed at American audiences have largely failed, and Moscow is continuing its attempts to influence the American political system by exacerbating social divisions, with a particular focus on the upcoming 2020 presidential elections." A recent intelligence assessment from the Department of Homeland Security's Cyber Mission Center says "Russian influence actors almost certainly will continue to target US audiences with influence activities that seek to advance Russian interests, and probably view the 2020 presidential election as a key opportunity to do so." The intelligence assessment, "which cites DHS monitoring, classified reporting and open source information, says that Russia has continued through this year to 'engage in influence activities intended to cultivate relationships with US social media users, despite consequences of sanctions, social media account take-downs, and diplomatic overtures...”

Forbes (10/24, 9.71M) reports in a video that Cyber security firm Checkpoint “released a new report detailing Russia’s massive investments in large scale espionage capabilities.”

Russia Dismisses Hacking Reports As “Unsavoury.”

Reuters (10/24) reports Moscow on Thursday “dismissed media reports that Russian hackers piggybacked on an Iranian cyber-espionage operation to attack government and industry organizations in dozens of countries as an ‘unsavoury’ interpretation of a security report.” British security officials have “said the Russian group, known as ‘Turla’ and accused by Estonian and Czech authorities of operating on behalf of Russia’s FSB security service, has used Iranian tools and computer infrastructure to successfully hack in to organizations in at least 20 different countries over the last 18 months.” A spokesman for the Russian embassy in the UK said on the mission’s website, referring to the media reports, “These publications are an unsavoury interpretation of a concise report of the British National Cyber Security Centre and the American National Security Agency.”

Russia Will Test Its Ability To Disconnect From The Internet.

Defense One (10/24, Tucker, 2K) reports the Russian government announced Monday that Russia will test “its Internal RuNet network to see whether the country can function without the global Internet.” The tests will begin “after November 1, recur at least annually, and possibly more frequently.” It’s the latest move “in a series of technical and policy steps intended to allow the Russian government to cut its citizens off from the rest of the world.”

CDM Codification Bill Sails Through House Homeland Security Committee.

MeriTalk (10/24) reports the Advancing Cybersecurity Diagnostics and Mitigation Act, H.R. 4237, “was unanimously approved by the House Homeland Security Committee on October 23.” The bill – co-sponsored by Reps. John Ratcliffe (R-TX) and Ro Khanna (D-CA) – “would ‘advance and modernize’ DHS’ Continuous Diagnostics and Mitigation (CDM) program by not only codifying the CDM program into law, but also expanding the program’s capabilities and resources to additional Federal agencies and state and local governments.”

Huawei Spans Much Of The Globe Despite US Efforts To Ban It.

NPR (10/24, Cheng, 3.12M) reports the US government “doesn’t want the Chinese technology giant Huawei to feel welcome almost anywhere.” In the past year, the US had the company’s chief financial officer” detained in Canada and temporarily cut off its access to American suppliers, endangering Huawei’s ambitions to roll out the next generation of wireless networks around the world.” The Trump Administration now “is seeking a global ban of Huawei’s 5G equipment.” It has even threatened “to stop intelligence sharing with key allies such as Germany if they don’t fall in line.” But Germany’s government has “pointedly resisted the pressure, and it is not alone.” Much of Europe, Africa, the Middle East and the Americas “will continue to set up 5G using at least some Huawei equipment.” Some countries have “directly pushed back against American pressure, declaring it their sovereign choice.”

Reuters (10/24) reports the industry minister was quoted as “saying on Thursday that the Czech Republic is likely to follow the approach of Germany and other neighboring countries in addressing issues related to Huawei while building 5G networks.” The Czech cyber security watchdog NUKIB “warned last December of potential risks from using Huawei technology, which raised questions over the role it can play in building next-generation 5G mobile networks after a frequencies tender next year.” It comes “as the US has led a campaign to convince allies to ban the firm from future networks.” Germany this month “finalized rules for the build-out of 5G networks that will not exclude Huawei.”

Study Finds Cyberespionage Campaign Targets UN Agencies.

The AP (10/24, Bajak) reports a cybersecurity firm found that a coordinated cyberespionage campaign “using phishing to harvest passwords from mobile phones and computers has targeted UN relief agencies, the International Red Cross and other non-governmental organizations groups for the past 10 months.” The San Francisco-based security company Lookout s“aid it doesn’t know who is behind the campaign, which was still active Thursday.” It added that “there are indications some of its targets may have been members of the international community in North Korea.” Among the targets “were UNICEF, the UN World Food Program, the UN Development Program, the International Federation of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.” Also targeted “were think tanks and research organizations including The United States Institute of Peace, the Heritage Foundation, the Social Science Research Council, the East-West Center and the University of San Diego.”

Study Finds NYC Companies Need More Cybersecurity Workers.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, King, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a survey of business executives indicates New York City businesses intend to expand hiring of tech talent next year, particularly workers with cybersecurity expertise. Eighty-five percent of respondents stated they planned to increase tech hiring in 2020, with more than half planning to hike their tech hires by 20 percent or more compared with this year. Executives were confident New York City had the appropriate talent pool, with 87 percent saying they are confident they will be able to find employees with the tech skills their companies need.

Agencies Discuss Bringing AI Into The Federal Technology Fold.

Federal Computer Week (10/24, Rockwell, 263K) reports Gil Alterovitz, director of artificial intelligence at the Department of Veterans Affairs, "said at ATARC's October 24 Federal Artificial Intelligence And Data Analytics Summit that federal data analytics and automation efforts are still getting organized around a larger new paradigm." Todd Myers, automation lead at the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency, "said the government should look to companies like Uber and Amazon for models of how to use data to advance their missions." Myers said, "These companies are successful, and the government will be successful when we break down the organizational silos of units that may working on their own data analytics and data sets. The days of separate business units and organizations going off and doing their own thing, I think are long gone. I think the federal government is leaning hard and fast in changing that approach."

The Navy's Plan To Stop Being "Woefully Behind" In Cyber.

Fifth Domain Cyber (10/24, Pomerleau) reports Navy Secretary Richard Spencer "was blunt: the service is struggling to beat back threats to cybersecurity and the supply chain." Spencer said October 23 at the Brookings Institution, "We are woefully behind." Spencer "said the service has a plan to improve and pointed to the newly established position of special assistant/chief information officer filled by Aaron Weis." That job has four directorates "aimed at modernizing the service for a digital age and keeping the Navy sharp against top cyber threats." Moreover, Spencer "said his thinking and level of engagement on cyber has evolved in the last year." He said, "I need to fight to get off the pier. I might not be able to start the ship. I might not be able to get fuel to the ship."

WPost Urges Protections Against False-Flag Cyberattacks.

The Washington Post (10/24, 14.2M) editorializes that that "false-flag operations are becoming more common for nation-states, and more sophisticated." It argues that while President Trump has "made a mess of this country's deterrence capabilities by pandering to Russian President Vladimir Putin instead of standing up to him...strengthening our ability to accurately attribute attacks is as challenging as it is essential. Strengthening societal resistance to division and distortion may prove even more essential — and even more challenging."

Federal Reserve

Trump Says Fed Must Lower Rates And "Stimulate."

President Trump tweeted Thursday morning, "The Federal Reserve is derelict in its duties if it doesn't lower the Rate and even, ideally, stimulate. Take a look around the World at our competitors. Germany and others are actually GETTING PAID to borrow money. Fed was way too fast to raise, and way too slow to cut!" Fox Business (10/24, 1.73M) and The Hill (10/24, Lane, 2.98M) report on this story.

New York Fed Boosts Overnight Borrowing Cash Injections.

Reuters (10/24, Marte) reports, "The Federal Reserve Bank of New York is boosting the size of the cash injections it can make into overnight borrowing markets." The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the New York Fed will offer at least $120 billion in daily operations in the repurchase agreements market, up from $75 billion.

HousingWire (10/24, Ramirez, 23K) reports, "The Federal Reserve will now be increasing its liquidity injections in the overnight lending markets. Instead of its current $75 billion, repo operation offerings will increase to $120 billion as the central bank works to keep markets operating within its target range, according to an article (10/23, Cox, 3.62M) by Jeff Cox for CNBC." Wells Fargo Securities Global Head of Rate Strategy Mike Schumacher said, "It's just more evidence the Fed will not back off as year-end gets closer. The Fed wants to take out more insurance. You had repo pick up last week. That might not have gone over too well."

In a separate report, Reuters (10/24, Brettell) says the turmoil "that has plagued crucial overnight lending markets during the past few weeks is likely to flare back up heading into year-end, although measures taken by the Federal Reserve to provide liquidity means the worst of the strains are probably over." While the Fed's recent repo market moves have "helped stabilize the market," the report says "a jump in funding costs last week show that further bouts of volatility are likely to re-emerge," given that banks "and other large investors typically reduce risk-taking as they close their books for year-end, with fewer funds being made available for loans."

Deeper Slump In Global Growth "Still More Likely" Despite Central Banks' Monetary Easing.

Reuters (10/25, Sarkar, Karunakar) reports, "A steeper decline in global economic growth still more likely than a synchronized recovery, even as multiple central banks dole out rounds of monetary easing, according to economists polled by Reuters in recent weeks." The report says, "While a reprieve from escalating U.S.-China trade tensions has pushed stocks back near record highs, a record $17 trillion of bonds have negative yields and a key market signal of U.S. recession is still flashing red." Additionally, "Growth and inflation forecasts for most major economies appear to be on the wane or at best holding at historically modest rates, according to Reuters polls of over 500 forecasters from around the world taken this month."

Smith: Constrained Fed Intends To Pause Rate Changes Following Expected Cut.

In her Financial Times (10/24, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) column, Colby Smith says the Fed has less flexibility on monetary policy than it would like, even as it prepares investors for a pause after an expected rate cut next week.

Opinion: We Should Worry About Fed's Adoption Of SOFR.

Writing for Foreign Policy (10/24, Moran, 340K), Michael Moran argues that the world "should be worried about the Fed's decision to adopt SOFR." With the economy slowing and volatility in the repo market, there is risk of a "serious credit crunch in the bond market and declines in yields." According to Moran, "switching rates is not as simple as it might seem. Besides the crucial role the rate plays in steadying global finance in periods of turmoil, it also governs the terms of trillions of dollars' worth of loans globally, with LIBOR referred to by name in most of these contracts. A sudden, uncoordinated dumping of LIBOR, then, could precipitate a financial disaster, what the New York Fed's Held warned would be 'a DEFCON 1 litigation event if ever I've seen one.' Global credit markets could freeze up, some have surmised, as they did in the wake of Lehman Brothers' collapse in 2008."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

Senate Report Finds Federal Agencies Aware Of Fake Comments On Proposed Rules.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Grimaldi, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a bipartisan Senate report issued Thursday found that federal agencies do little or nothing about fraudulent comments made on proposed regulations. The Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations report said agencies didn't act in even the most egregious instances, including where people's identities were stolen and submitted with comments they didn't write. The CFPB, among other agencies, told investigators it was aware of fake comments on its rules but took little action to address them, according to the report.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

US Regulators Join Global Financial Innovation Network.

American Banker (10/24, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, and the Securities and Exchange Commission on Thursday announced they had joined the Global Financial Innovation Network, "which consists of nearly 50 other international agencies trying to collaborate on the regulation of financial technology." In a joint statement, the four financial regulators said their membership in GFIN was part of an effort "to enhance regulatory clarity and understanding for all stakeholders and promote early identification of emerging regulatory opportunities, challenges, and risks."

Bureau of Public Debt

Treasury Will Auction $87B In Securities.

The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Treasury Department plans to auction securities worth $87 billion next week.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Donald Trump's 'Very Special' Victory In Syria." The New York Times (10/24, 18.61M) editorializes that in announcing a "permanent" cease-fire along the Turkish-Syrian border on Wednesday, President Trump declared that "this was an outcome created by us, the United States, and nobody else." The Times says that "in effect, Mr. Trump was blithely taking full credit for ending a brutal battle he had a hand in starting and claiming a significant feat when in fact the betrayal of the Kurds and the brusque, thoughtless American withdrawal undermined American credibility and was a major victory for Presidents Vladimir Putin of Russia and Bashar al-Assad, the butcher of Syria."

Washington Post.

"Republicans Are Wrong On Process, Too." Weighing in on a GOP Senate resolution criticizing the House's impeachment inquiry, the Washington Post (10/24, 14.2M) editorializes this morning, "There is an old Washington saying that if you're arguing about process, you're losing. A follow-on maxim might be: If you are wrong on process, too, you must really be in trouble." The Post adds, however, that "holding a vote" in the House "would add legitimacy, and, more to the point, the sooner House investigators move from closed hearings to open ones, the better. ... Of course, all of this could happen sooner if the Trump administration were not stonewalling."

"False-Flag Cyberattacks Are A Growing Threat. We Must Strengthen Our Defenses." The Washington Post (10/24, 14.2M) editorializes that that "false-flag operations are becoming more common for nation-states, and more sophisticated." It argues that while President Trump has "made a mess of this country's deterrence capabilities by pandering to Russian President Vladimir Putin instead of standing up to him...strengthening our ability to accurately attribute attacks is as challenging as it is essential. Strengthening societal resistance to division and distortion may prove even more essential — and even more challenging."

"There's Still Time For Bolivia's President To Right The Pat To Democracy." Bolivian President Evo Morales declared himself winner of the country's presidential election on Thursday, and the Washington Post (10/24, 14.2M) editorializes that "allowing a runoff, as the [Organization of American States] recommended, is the option Mr. Morales would take if he does not, in fact, want to be seen as what the opposition calls him: a 'dictator.' There is still time for Bolivia's president to step back from the brink."

Wall Street Journal.

"Bonfire Of The Philanthropists." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that liberal activists are stigmatizing and banishing rich philanthropists who support America's great cultural institutions. The Journal says many philanthropists are only being targeted because they are rich.

"Mayor Pete's Supreme Pivot." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg was pushed into prominence in part through his proposal to pack the Supreme Court in order to move a progressive agenda forward. However, recently Buttigieg has been sounding a more moderate tone, citing Justice Anthony Kennedy and Justice David Souter as examples of additions who could depoliticize the court. The Journal concludes that he should clarify what he means by Supreme Court reform.

"Trump's Gift To California." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Trump Administration has revised the smelt and salmon biological opinions in a way that will allow pumping of groundwater to be adjusted in California. The Journal says environmentalists are angered but the move will benefit rural communities in the state.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Conan O'Brien: "The presidential race is still rolling along. You know, things are actually – the field has narrowed a little bit. Yeah. Ohio Congressman Tim Ryan has dropped out of the presidential race. Yeah, in a related story, Tim Ryan was apparently in the presidential race."

Conan O'Brien: "Mike Pence ripped into the NBA for acting like a subsidiary of China. The spokesperson of the league said China is nothing like the NBA. They have a one-child policy."

Stephen Colbert: "Late today, we learned that 'Trump will be attending the World Series on Sunday.' Of course, keep in mind, we don't know for sure if it will last that long – Trump's presidency, I mean."

Stephen Colbert: "Yesterday, the President gave a speech at an energy convention in Pennsylvania and focused on the technology of the future: 'Wall.' ... That's right, a border wall in Colorado. Once they're done with that, they're building a naval base in Idaho."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump wishes the Democrats were kidding about impeachment, because it's not easy for Republicans to defend Trump these days. We have the transcript of the phone call where Trump pressures Ukraine to investigate Biden. Then Trump admitted it on camera. Then Mulvaney admitted to quid pro quo on camera. So, left with nothing else, yesterday, House Republicans stormed the impeachment hearings. That is a large herd of white men. By the way, a herd of white men is called 'a J. Crew.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Florida Rep. Matt Gaetz saying he loved Trump and 'might never love another President again'] "Wow, that's quite a love story. They're like Romeo and Juliet, except everyone else wants to kill themselves."

Stephen Colbert: "But even the Republican sham argument that the whole thing's a sham might be about to crumble, because House Democrats plan to make the impeachment probe public as soon as mid-November. Just in time to ruin Thanksgiving. 'Can you pass the Turkey?' 'Trump was right about Turkey! And Ukraine! Witch hunt! You want gravy with your Honey Baked Scam?'"

Stephen Colbert: "I think I know which Turkey Trump is going to pardon this year."

Stephen Colbert: "Giuliani is being investigated for some shady business dealings in Ukraine, and as a result, we've just learned that Giuliani is looking for a defense attorney. Rudy, if you're looking for a good one, don't look in a mirror."

Stephen Colbert: "Good news for everybody out there who's so high they can't remember the beginning of this sentence. Because, earlier today, presidential candidate Bernie Sanders unveiled his plan to legalize marijuana! That's right. 'Bernie' and 'marijuana,' two of the easiest cheer-lines in show business. In honor of his new policy, Bernie also unveiled his new slogan: 'Feel the Bern, and hold it in until you start coughing.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Fittingly, Bernie's proposal dropped at precisely 4:20 p.m."

Jimmy Fallon: "Hey, before we get started, I just want to give a special shout-out to all of our viewers watching from the Colorado/Mexico border."

Jimmy Fallon: "You hear about this? During a speech in Pittsburgh yesterday, President Trump said that he's building sections of the border wall, but I think he got confused exactly where our border is. ... By the time Trump is done building all these walls, the country's going to look like 50 giant cubicles."

Jimmy Fallon: "Then Trump announced our Coast Guard would be patrolling the ports of Nebraska. So that's good."

Jimmy Fallon: "But Trump addressed his comments in a tweet and said, 'Kiddingly, we're building a wall in Colorado then stated, we're not building a wall in Kansas, but they get the benefit of the wall we're building on the border referred to people in the very packed auditorium from Colorado and Kansas getting the benefit of the border wall.' Well, that clears it up. There you go. Forget immigrants, I think we need to deport Trump's English teacher."

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, today at the White House, Trump participated in a ceremony in honor of the Hindu holiday, Dawali. Things got off to a rough start when Trump told everyone, 'We're going to build Dawali in Colorado.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Some 2020 news: Pete Buttigieg said that he used marijuana a handful of times, and it was back when he was still growing up. Still growing up? The guy is barely old enough to see the 'Joker' movie on his own."

James Corden: "President Trump gave an update on his ongoing border wall project. Speaking at a conference in Pennsylvania yesterday, he shared some interesting news about the location of the wall. ... I can't get over the fact that Trump doesn't know where Colorado is. It does not share a border with Mexico. Trump wants to build a wall in Colorado. Even worse, he's going to make New Mexico pay for it."

James Corden: "I've got to say, here is what I will say: It is about time. I am sick of all these people from Colorado stealing our jobs. Colorado has legal weed, delicious craft breweries, some of the best skiing in the country. This will be the first time Americans are trying to get over that wall into Colorado."

James Corden: "We have some impeachment news. Senate Republicans are now attempting to push back against the House inquiry. They're criticizing the process for being, quote, 'closed door' and 'illegitimate.' And I agree. Let's open the door and legitimately impeach him once and for all. Closed door, open door."

James Corden: "Now as you know, Donald Trump repeatedly referred to the impeachment inquiry as a witch-hunt. The Trump campaign just announced that it will host an actual Halloween witch-hunt theme party later this month. There will be costumes, candy and prominent members of the Trump campaign. Wow. It sounds like fun. It's a Trump campaign Halloween party. So instead of candy, they should just be handing out subpoenas. 'One for you. One for-- hey, just one each, guys, one subpoena for everybody.'"

Seth Meyers: "Congressman Tim Ryan announced this afternoon that he is dropping out of the presidential race, an announcement that sent shock waves through the rest of the elevator."

Seth Meyers: "Sen. Amy Klobuchar has released a new campaign ad calling President Trump a quote, 'whiner in the White House,' and Trump will have a great comeback as soon as he finds something that rhymes with 'Klobuchar.'"

Seth Meyers: "According to new survey, 99 percent of white evangelicals oppose impeaching President Trump. 'Jesus,' said Jesus. 'What does this guy got to do?'"

Seth Meyers: "Mayor Pete Buttigieg yesterday toured a legal marijuana dispensary in Las Vegas, which was exciting for Buttigieg because that means his fake ID worked."

Treasury in the News

Warren Sends Letter To Mnuchin On Repo Market Turmoil.

Bloomberg (10/22, Barrett, Harris, 4.73M) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) on Friday "sent a letter to the Treasury" in which she warned Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "not to use the incident as a rationale for weakening post-financial crisis regulations." Warren "sought Mnuchin's views on what triggered the spike in rates for repurchase agreements and expressed concern about potential costs to businesses and consumers if strains persist." Warren "also set herself up for another fight with Wall Street, citing a Reuters article (9/18, Johnson, Henry) reporting that large banks were using the repo-market chaos to pressure the Federal Reserve to weaken liquidity rules 'they have long despised,'" and "said she's concerned the Financial Stability Oversight Council, whose chair is Mnuchin, might support those efforts."

CNBC (10/22, Cox, 3.62M) reports on its website that Warren, in the letter, said "These rules were designed to ensure that banks have enough cash on hand to meet their obligations in the event of another market crash." She added, "Banks are reporting profits at record levels, and it would be painfully ironic if unexplained chaos in a small corner of the banking market became an excuse to further loosen rules that protect the economy from these types of risks." Warren said she does "not question the actions of the New York Fed, but I write to seek clarity on why they were necessary, and the implications of the cause of the spikes." The report says Warren wants answers to these questions by November 1.

American Banker (10/22, Subscription Publication, 31K), MarketWatch (10/22, Robb, 1.67M), Business Insider (10/22, Winck, 3.67M), and Breitbart (10/22, 673K) also report on this story.

Mnuchin: Facebook's Plans To Launch Libra Cryptocurrency In 2020 "Premature."

Reuters (10/22, Schroeder) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said Tuesday that he has told Facebook that its efforts to launch a cryptocurrency, Libra, by mid-2020 are 'premature.'" Mnuchin, in testimony given to the House Financial Services Committee, "said the project still faces several 'fundamental issues' that must be addressed before any launch, including how it would prevent money laundering and other illicit activity." American Banker (10/22, Adler, Subscription Publication, 31K) also reports this story.

In a Bloomberg TV (10/22, 4.73M) segment, Bloomberg Technology's Kurt Wagner said Mnuchin's characterization "is not a shock to me," given that "one of the biggest questions we have had all along which is who is actually going to regulate this thing? Who is ultimately going to be in charge when Libra exists and people are converting their US dollar or their euros into libra?" Wagner said that "until we figure out who is going to make those rules, it is going to be more of the same."

Zuckerberg: Libra Will Extend America's "Financial Leadership." AFP (10/22, Lever) reports Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg will deliver prepared remarks to Congress on Wednesday, which were released a day early. Zuckerberg, in the remarks, said, "Facebook's proposed digital coin Libra would 'extend America's financial leadership' while helping cash-strapped people around the world." Zuckerberg also said, "While we debate these issues, the rest of the world isn't waiting. China is moving quickly to launch similar ideas in the coming months." He added, "Libra will be backed mostly by dollars and I believe it will extend America's financial leadership as well as our democratic values and oversight around the world. If America doesn't innovate, our financial leadership is not guaranteed." Barron's (10/22, Walsh, 1.07M) and American Banker (10/22, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) also report.

Mnuchin, Kushner To Attend “Davos In The Desert.”

The New York Times (10/22, Rappeport, Haberman, 18.61M) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and White House senior adviser Jared Kushner “will attend a high-profile investment conference in Saudi Arabia next week, a year after the United States shunned the gathering amid backlash surrounding the killing of a dissident Saudi journalist.” Other who will attend include “Brian H. Hook, the State Department’s special envoy overseeing Iran policy and Avi Berkowitz, an aide to Mr. Kushner.” The Times says Mnuchin “did not attend last year’s conference,” but “still traveled to Riyadh and met with” Crown Prince Mohammed Bin Salman. Reuters (10/22, Gardner, Timmons) Bloomberg (10/22, Jacobs, Wadhams, 4.73M), The Hill (10/22, Samuels, 2.98M), and Business Insider (10/22, Bostock, 3.67M) also report on this story.

Trump Reportedly Considering Mnuchin, Conway To Replace Mulvaney As WH Chief Of Staff.

Bloomberg (10/22, Mohsin, Jacobs, 4.73M) reports President Trump “has for weeks been privately testing the idea of replacing his chief of staff, Mick Mulvaney, who’s swiftly fallen out of favor with some of the president’s allies after high-profile stumbles handling the House impeachment inquiry.” The report says Trump, “about a month ago...said to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin in front of a roomful of staff: You have such great ideas, why don’t you be my chief?”

The Daily Beast (10/22, Arciga, 1.39M) reports Trump “reportedly made similar remarks about Deputy Chief of Staff Chris Liddell.” However, “One official also said Mnuchin is not under formal consideration for the role, as his departure from the department could disturb markets, and investors consider him to be a pillar of stability in the administration.” The Hill (10/22, Coleman, 2.98M) also reports on this story.

Former Aide Says Mattis Felt “Iced Out” By Trump.

Politico (10/22, Bender, 4.29M) reports former Defense Secretary Jim Mattis, “‘iced out’ and blindsided by presidential decisions he disagreed with, grew increasingly wary of President Donald Trump’s leadership, even losing his cool in private meetings and plotting to quit nearly half a year before he finally resigned, according to a new book by a close aide,” Guy Snodgrass. The book will tell of a “meeting Mattis hosted with Trump’s refashioned team in May 2018, including” National Security Advisor John “Bolton, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and new economic adviser Larry Kudlow” that “uncovered the growing rifts and Mattis’ diminished role in the administration.” The report adds that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin was “also on hand” for a meeting at which Snodgrass, who was present, writes, “I watched as Pompeo, Mnuchin, and Bolton — peers within the administration — all cut Mattis off midsentence at various times.”

Mnuchin To Host G7 Finance Ministers’ 2020 Meeting In Philadelphia.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/22, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “will host the Group of Seven finance ministers’ meeting in Philadelphia next year, according to people familiar with the matter.”

Investors Slow To Take Advantage Of Opportunity-Zone Tax Break.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Simon, Grant, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the tax break for “opportunity zones” in the 2017 federal tax bill that were intended to spark economic development in distressed communities have gone under-utilized compared to the heady expectations for the program. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin last fall had predicted that private capital investors would bring over $100 billion to these zones.

House Passes Bill Requiring Disclosure Of True Owners.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Parker, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the US House of Representatives on Tuesday passed a bill, the Corporate Transparency Act, that would require shell companies to disclose their true owners. Under the bill, most types of companies would have to disclose their true owners to the Treasury Department’s Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN).

The Hill (10/22, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports companies would “have to submit annual filings with FinCEN listing their current true owners and any changes to ownership,” and there “would be penalties for people who intentionally submit fraudulent or incomplete information.” The disclosure requirement do not apply to companies with “more than 20 employees and $5 million in gross receipts because these companies are less likely to be anonymous shell companies.” The bill also makes “major updates to the Bank Secrecy Act for the first time since 2001.”

Chertoff: Shell Companies Threaten National Security. In an op-ed for The Hill (10/22, 2.98M), former Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff argues that America’s “lax regulatory policies mean that the U.S. is unwittingly complicit in the spread of the corruption that is an important factor in the global decline of democracy.” Chertoff says, “Anonymous companies have become the vehicle of choice for terrorists and other criminals to hide corrupt cash.” He adds that passing the bill into law “would bolster the sanctity of our financial system and strengthen American security. It also would strengthen democracy by checking one of the techniques employed by autocracies such as Russia and Iran to expand their global reach.”

Hill: Don’t Add To Small Business’ Burdens. In a contrasting op-ed for The Hill (10/22, 2.98M), Rep. French Hill (R-AR) argues that while the Corporate Transparency Act “has a laudable goal,” it also “carries unintended consequences that could ultimately put innocent mom-and-pop business owners in jail.” Hill writes that “there is a smarter path forward, reflected in my legislation that creates a better working solution for all parties involved.” Hill’s legislation “would direct the Treasury Department to create a new rule to tie beneficial ownership information collection to the regular, well-understood IRS tax filing regime.”

Senate Democrats Force Vote To Overturn Trump Tax Rule.

NJ News (10/22, Salant, 1.72M) reports Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer “said Tuesday that he will force a vote to reject the Treasury Department ruling that basically prevented efforts to set up municipal charitable funds for homeowners to pay into in lieu of property taxes” and “severely limited any benefit to taxpayers for contributing to charitable funds.” The IRS “had for years approved such charitable accounts to allow taxpayer subsidies for private and religious schools, but Trump administration officials, in an action the Treasury inspector general for tax administration called a departure from normal procedure, inserted themselves into the debate over municipal charitable funds.”

Buchanan: Trump’s Two New Executive Orders Will Hold Bureaucracy Accountable, “Shape Up” Treasury.

In an op-ed for The Hill (10/22, 2.98M), former Treasury Secretary Bay Buchanan writes that President Trump “signed two executive orders” that “will prohibit government bureaucrats from enforcing rules that aren’t public” and “remove the teeth from guidance documents that haven’t gone through the regulatory approval process, all while giving Americans power to ensure that unfair or incorrect guidance is withdrawn.” Buchanan argues the “new accountability measures are long overdue,” and that no agency “will benefit as much as the Treasury Department, which imposed more net costs than any other agency in Fiscal Year 2019.”

Trump Draws Rebukes After Comparing Impeachment Process To A “Lynching.”

President Trump tweeted yesterday, “So some day, if a Democrat becomes President and the Republicans win the House, even by a tiny margin, they can impeach the President, without due process or fairness or any legal rights. All Republicans must remember what they are witnessing here – a lynching. But we will WIN!” Trump’s reference to “a lynching” generated widespread outrage, with biting criticism from minority lawmakers and even Republican allies of Trump. The story received extensive coverage, almost universally unfavorable. Encapsulating the tone of the reporting, Politico (10/22, Forgey, 4.29M) says that “the invocation of ‘lynching’ to characterize a process explicitly sanctioned by the Constitution marked a new, racially insensitive show of malice by the president toward lawmakers seeking to remove him from office.”

All three major network newscasts devoted segments to the story. The CBS Evening News (10/22, story 2, 2:08, Jiang, 4.4M) reported “Trump has made many remarks considered racist by some” in the past, and that yesterday “Republican leaders could not defend... Trump’s tweet.” House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy was shown saying, “That’s not the language I would use.” CBS also reported “a spokesman for the President tried to massage the message,” and showed White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley telling reporters, “What he’s explaining clearly is the way he’s been treated by the media since he announced for President.” However, said CBS, “Trump made no mention of the media in his post.” Reuters (10/22, Zengerle, Cowan) quotes Gidley as saying, “The president was clearly articulating the way he feels and the way you guys have treated him from day one.” The Washington Examiner (10/22, Brest, 448K) points out Gidley also said, “What he was trying to point out, clearly, was that he has been attacked relentlessly by the mainstream media without cause, without evidence, since the day he took over in this office.” NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 2, 1:45, Alexander, 6.35M) showed Gidley adding, “The President is not comparing what happened to him with one of our darkest moments in American history. ... People are upset about President Trump’s words all of the time, but what you can’t argue with are the results he has put forth for the African American community.”

ABC World News Tonight (10/22, story 2, Muir, 6.89M) referred to “Trump igniting a new firestorm” with his “angry tweet,” and added (Karl), “He’s called it witch hunt, a coup, a fraud, and a scam,” but on Tuesday he “used a new epithet...with violent racial overtones.” Congressional Black Caucus Chair Karen Bass was shown saying, “Every time his back is against the wall, he throws out a racial bomb. But how dare he compare our constitutional obligation for oversight to a hate crime.” Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC), “the Senate’s only African-American Republican, said he didn’t think the President’s use of the term was racially charged,” but he said, “I get his absolute rejection of the process. I wouldn’t use the word lynching.” Senate Majority Leader McConnell, meanwhile, was shown saying, “Given the history in our country, I would not compare this to a lynching. That was an unfortunate choice of words.” Breitbart (10/22, Caplan, 673K) notes McConnell also said, “It is an unfair process. ... A better way to characterize it would be to call it an unfair process and inconsistent with the kinds of procedural safeguards that are routinely provided for people in this situation, either in court or in an impeachment process in our country.”

NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 2, 1:45, Alexander, 6.35M) showed Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee (D-TX) saying, “It is very painful, and it is a distraction that America should not accept or tolerate,” and Rep. James Clyburn (D-SC), the House Majority Whip, stating, “He compared the constitutional process to something like lynching is far beneath the Office of the President of the United States.” USA Today (10/22, Jackson, 10.31M) notes Rep. Bobby Rush (D-IL) wrote on Twitter, “What the hell is wrong with you? Do you know how many people who look like me have been lynched, since the inception of this country, by people who look like you. Delete this tweet.”

The Dallas Morning News (10/22, Gillman, 946K) reports "Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, a Dallas Democrat who chairs the House science committee, said she was 'troubled' by Trump's comment," and "recalled the 1916 lynching in her hometown, Waco, in which a black field hand was lynched after the murder of a white farmer's wife. The incident known as the Waco Horror galvanized national sentiment to end such attacks." Said Johnson, "I lived in a city where one of the most famous lynching incidents in U.S. history happened. Mr. President, you're no victim. ... Stop trying to use this racist language to try to incite violence and distract the American people from the real truth."

To the Daily Beast (10/22, Obeidallah, 1.39M), Trump "took his embrace of victimhood to a new low Tuesday morning when he equated the House impeachment inquiry with a 'lynching' in a desperate plea to his base to defend him by attacking basic standards of decency." His choice of words "was stunning, but not surprising, coming from our bigoted conspiracist in chief." The AP (10/22, Superville) reports the President "triggered outrage" Tuesday, CQ Roll Call (10/22, Bennett, 154K) that he conjured "memories of racially motivated murders" and drew "an immediate bipartisan backlash," The Hill (10/22, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) that it sparked "a wave of outrage," and the Washington Post (10/22, Itkowitz, 14.2M) that he "elicited immediate rebukes Tuesday from Democrats and several Republicans." Likewise, the New York Times (10/22, Sullivan, 18.61M) says "lynching" is "a remarkable term for the president to use to describe a legal process laid out in the Constitution." Trump "regularly uses his Twitter feed to make hyperbolic declarations, but he has not used the term 'lynching' in a tweet since 2015." Vanity Fair (10/22, Levin, 9.08M) reports the President's use of the term is "clearly an escalation" and "a deeply unfortunate one."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes Trump's use of the term "lynching" as insensitive as well as counterproductive, in that it puts his defenders in the impeachment fight in a politically untenable position. Along those lines, CNN White House correspondent Kaitlan Collins said on CNN's The Lead (10/22, 926K) that Republicans are "frustrated with the President using this word because now they're having to defend that instead of attacking Democrats for what they say is an unfair impeachment inquiry."

Yahoo! News (10/22, Stableford, 12.82M) recalls that "in February, the Senate passed a bipartisan bill that would make lynching a federal crime." The Justice for Victims of Lynching Act, "which was led by African-American Sens. Kamala Harris and Tim Scott, has yet to be voted on in the House." The New York Post (10/22, Sheehy, 4.57M) reports, meanwhile, that "attempts over the years to compare the term to anything else have been swiftly met with vociferous protests, particularly from the nation's African American community." Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, for example, "was criticized by some people for using the term in 1991 to describe his US Senate confirmation hearing at the time, when he was grilled about sexual misconduct allegations involving lawyer Anita Hill." Said Thomas, "From my standpoint as a black American, as far as I'm concerned, it is a high-tech lynching for uppity blacks who in any way deign to think for themselves, to do for themselves, to have different ideas, and it is a message that unless you kowtow to an old order, this is what will happen to you. ... You will be lynched, destroyed, caricatured by a committee of the US – US Senate – rather than hung from a tree."

Democrats, Including Biden, Referred To GOP Impeachment Of Clinton As A "Lynching." The Daily Caller (10/22, Olohan, 716K) reports "Democrats compared former President Bill Clinton's impeachment to lynching as they debated whether to impeach him in 1998." The DC adds, for example, that "Democratic Illinois Rep. Danny K. Davis condemned the impeachment trial as 'a lynching,' and former Democratic Rhode Island Rep. Patrick J. Kennedy called it 'a political lynching.' ... Former Democratic Michigan Rep. John Conyers Jr. said that he was seeing a 'Republican coup d'etat' – a phrase that Democratic Reps. Jerrold Nadler of New York and Maxine Waters of California both used as well."

On its website, the Washington Post (10/22, Rieger, 14.2M) similarly reports that by yesterday afternoon, "Trump allies were pointing out that variations of that word were invoked several times by House Democrats to describe the impeachment proceedings against...Clinton in 1998." The Post adds "at least five House Democrats talked about a 'lynching' or 'lynch mob' as pertaining to Clinton, according to a Fix review." Yesterday, Democratic Reps. Danny Davis (IL) and Gregory Meeks (NY) blasted Trump's use of the term, but in 1998 both of them "called the Clinton impeachment proceedings a 'lynching' on the House floor the day before the president was impeached." The Post also reports "then-Rep. Charles B. Rangel (D-NY) described what he called a 'lynch mob mentality, that says this man has to go' during a floor speech the same day."

Business Insider (10/23, Relman, 3.67M) reports that also yesterday, "former Vice President Joe Biden condemned...Trump's use of the term 'lynching' to describe the House's impeachment inquiry." However, he "used the same term back in 1998 to describe former...Clinton's impeachment," as shown by "newly-released video from CNN's Andrew Kaczynski and a transcript seen by Insider." Biden said in 1998, "History is going to question whether or not this was just a partisan lynching or whether or not it was something that in fact met the standard, the very high bar that was set by the founders as to what constituted an impeachable offense." The Insider adds "Biden's campaign did not respond immediately to a request for comment." The Washington Times (10/22, Morton, 492K), among other news outlets, also notes Biden's 1998 comments.

Graham: "This Is A Lynching." Amid bipartisan criticism of Trump's choice of words, at least one high-profile Republican came to the President's defense. ABC World News Tonight (10/22, story 2, Muir, 6.89M) showed Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) saying, "This is a lynching, in every sense. This is un-American." NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 2, 1.45, Alexander, 6.35M) further showed Graham saying, "I've never seen a situation in my lifetime as a lawyer where somebody is accused of a major misconduct who cannot confront the accuser, call witnesses on their behalf, and have the discussion in the light of day so the public can judge." The AP (10/22, Superville) also reports that Graham "said Trump's description was 'pretty well accurate,'" and "called the impeachment effort a 'sham' and a 'joke' because the president does not know the identity of his accuser, and the process is playing out in private."

The Hill (10/22, Bolton, 2.98M) notes Graham also said, "I think lynching is being seen as somebody taking the law in their own hands and out to get somebody for no good reason." Asked whether "he could understand why African Americans would be offended by the comparison, Graham stood his ground," saying, "Yes, African Americans have [been] lynched. Other people have been lynched throughout history. What does lynching mean? That a mob grabs you, they don't give you a chance to defend yourself, they don't tell you what happened to you, they just destroy you. That's exactly what's happening in the United States House of Representatives right now."

USA Today (10/22, Cummings, 10.31M) reports "Jaime Harrison, an African American Democrat challenging Graham for his seat, has called on the GOP senator to learn more about the history of lynching in South Carolina by joining him as a new museum on African American history breaks ground." Harrison "wrote in a campaign email that Graham's comments were 'invoking our hate-filled past to defend... Trump.'"

Susan Rice: Graham "A Piece Of S[]t." The Hill (10/22, Bowden, 2.98M) reports that "Susan Rice, who served as national security adviser during the Obama administration, referred to...Graham...as a 'piece of s[]t' during the taping of an episode of the 'Pod Save the World' podcast this week." During a discussion of the Benghazi controversy, Rice said of Graham, "He's been a piece of s[]t. ... He's a piece of s[]t."

CBS Reports On 73-Year-Old Unsolved Lynching Case. The CBS Evening News (10/22, story 6, 2:42, O'Donnell, 4.4M) reported last night, "as a political firestorm rages over the President's use of the word 'lynching,' we look at a real lynching, unsolved after 73 years." CBS (Strassmann) added, "Infamy lingers 50 miles east of Atlanta, where this lonely country road leads to the Moores Ford Bridge. Civil Rights activist Tyrone Brooks showed us where the four lynching victims are buried. George Dorsey, a World War II veteran, and his wife, May. And Roger and Dorothy Malcolm. ... Georgia's governor at the time said 15-20 members of the mob members are known by name, but a grand jury indicted no one."

Durham Probe Now Includes Brennan, Clapper, Strzok, Steele.

The Washington Examiner (10/22, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that US Attorney John Durham's "secretive...inquiry into the Trump-Russia investigation's origins now includes former CIA Director John Brennan, former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper, former FBI special agent Peter Strzok, and British ex-spy Christopher Steele." While Durham "has taken overseas fact-finding trips," the Examiner says his "focus on the actions taken by specific individuals makes his mission look like it could transform into a criminal investigation." Brennan told NBC News that "he didn't know what the inquiry's legal basis was," and called Durham's actions "bizarre."

In a report on its website, Fox News (10/22, Re, 27.59M) cites "sources" who said that Durham's investigation "has expanded based on new evidence uncovered during a recent trip to Rome with Attorney General Bill Barr." According to the sources, Durham was "very interested" to question Brennan and Clapper, who Fox says, "were at the helm when the unverified and largely discredited Steele dossier...was used to justify a secret surveillance warrant against former Trump adviser Carter Page."

According to Politico (10/22, Bertrand, Lippman, 4.29M), President Trump's "obsession" with Brennan "could be on a collision course" with the probe as Barr "takes a more hands-on approach to examining the intelligence community's actions in 2016." Politico says Trump "has become 'obsessed' with Brennan, who frequently gets under the president's skin by publicly questioning his mental acuity and fitness for office, according to a former White House official." The official said "it was always, 'he's an idiot, he's a crook, we ought to investigate him.'"

Powell Provides "Insider's Narrative" Of Flynn Case. The Washington Times (10/22, Scarborough, 492K) reports that an "insider's narrative on the travails of retired Army Lt. Gen. Michael Flynn has been filed in federal court amid a battle over access to multiple pieces of evidence." According to the narrative, which Flynn's attorney Sidney Powell described in a letter to Attorney General Barr in June, says Flynn, who was "convicted of lying to the FBI, had to sell his home to pay legal bills." Prosecutors "threatened to go after his son and business partner, Michael Flynn Jr., unless he cooperated." Powell "accused the government of withholding exculpatory evidence that would show prosecutors violated U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan's order." In his response, Special Assistant US Attorney Brandon L. Van Grack "said the government owns no such exculpatory" material and accused Powell of advocating "conspiracy theories." In the reply, Grack "chose to include an attachment: the June 6 Powell letter to Mr. Barr."

Pence: "No Historical Basis" For Democrats' Impeachment Inquiry.

Vice President Pence said Fox News The Ingraham Angle (10/22), "It has been three years of endless investigations and a partisan attempt to overturn the results of the 2016 election. I think the American people have had enough." Pence added, "We are going to be out there telling the truth about this President's record and we are going to be telling the truth about this partisan impeachment. There is no historical basis for what the Democrats in Congress are doing in this so-called impeachment inquiry."

Acosta: Trump Allies Telling Him He Is Likely To Be Impeached. White House correspondent Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (10/22, 971K), "The President's allies are telling him to accept the likelihood he'll be impeached as a new CNN poll finds 50 percent saying Mr. Trump should be thrown out of office – all part of a steady trend toward supporting impeachment."

Trump, Pence Praise House Republicans For Voting To Censure Schiff.

In a tweet Tuesday morning, President Trump praised House Republicans for their support on Monday evening's unsuccessful vote to censure House Intelligence Chairman Schiff. Trump wrote, "Thank you Republicans. 185 out of 185 present voted for 'US' last night. Really good!"

Vice President Pence said on Fox News The Ingraham Angle (10/22), "I will tell you that the President and I were very encouraged to see every single Republican yesterday vote against the motion to table a censure against Adam Schiff. I think in the days ahead, you're going to continue to see almost every Republican in Congress join the millions of Americans who want to see an end to these endless investigations. They want to call out this partisan investigation for what it is."

Stefanik Criticizes "Unprecedented" Limits On Access To Impeachment Inquiry Transcripts. CQ Roll Call (10/22, Tully-Mcmanus, 154K) reports that Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-NY), a member of the House Intelligence Committee, criticized "limitations on access to impeachment inquiry transcripts for committee members" as "unprecedented." According to Stefanik, members of the panel "were notified this week that the panels would print only one copy of a transcript for every member of Congress to view." She said, "And you would have to read it with a member of Democratic staff. That is unprecedented and unfair. ... Americans should know that their member of Congress has had no access to any of the transcripts."

WTimes: Senate Republicans "Refusing To Abandon" Trump.

The Washington Times (10/22, Lovelace, Howell, 492K) reports that GOP senators "are refusing to abandon" the President, "saying he might step over the line at times but it's no reason to toss him out of office if House Democrats follow through with impeachment." Their "reluctance to ditch the president...underscores the tall task facing Democratic impeachment hawks who want Mr. Trump removed from office before the 2020 election."

However, the Daily Caller (10/22, Caruso, Rodgers, 716K) reports that when it contacted all 53 Republican Senate offices Monday and Tuesday to ask if senators would rule out removing Trump from office, "most...refused to rule [it] out." Seven "explicitly rejected impeachment in their statement." The Daily Caller adds that "Senate Republicans do not appear to be concerned about House Democrats' ongoing efforts to impeach Trump, with many saying even if the House were to move forward with impeachment, that there is no way the Senate would vote to impeach the president."

Graham Resolution Would Condemn House Impeachment Inquiry. Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) said on Fox News' Hannity (10/22, 535K) that he has offered a resolution to put the Senate "on record condemning the House for the future of the presidency. We cannot allow future presidents and this President to be impeached based on an inquiry in the House that's never been voted upon, that does not allow the President the witness against him, call witnesses on his behalf and cross-examine people who are accusing him of misdeeds. All I'm asking is give Donald Trump the same rights as Richard Nixon and Bill Clinton had when it comes to impeachment. I'm insisting that Donald Trump be given the same rights every American has if you're giving a parking ticket, to confront the witnesses against you, can't be based on hearsay, and here's the point of resolution. Any impeachment vote based on this process, to me, is illegitimate, is unconstitutional, and should be dismissed in Senate without a trial."

McConnell Denies Telling Trump Call With Zelensky Was "Innocent." The Washington Examiner (10/22, Ferrechio, 448K) reports that Senate Majority Leader McConnell "disputed" the President's claim earlier this month that he told him his call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky was "the most innocent phone call" he had read. Asked about Trump's assertion on Tuesday, McConnell told reporters, "We've not had any conversations on that subject." Asked if Trump was lying, McConnell said, "You'll have to ask him. ... I don't recall any conversations with the president about that phone call."

WTimes Analysis: Pelosi, Democrats Have Approved More Subpoenas Than Laws.

The Washington Times (10/22, Dinan, Muñoz, 492K) reports in an analysis that "House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and her Democratic majority have approved more subpoenas to investigate President Trump than they have written laws." Tuesday's subpoena "to former Ambassador William Taylor marked the 56th that has been publicly acknowledged and aimed at Mr. Trump and his team. That is 10 more than the 46 House bills that have become law this year." While the number is "far from a subpoena record," it is "complicating Mrs. Pelosi's attempt to portray her troops as focused on their agenda."

Bannon To Host Radio Show On Impeachment.

Politico (10/22, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's former chief strategist Steve Bannon "is starting a daily radio show and podcast about impeachment that will provide a platform for conservatives to share news and strategize." The show, called "War Room: Impeachment," will "air daily at 9 a.m. on six conservative talk radio stations in Virginia and Florida." Bannon "told POLITICO that the audience would be political operatives in Washington, as well as conservative grassroots activists across the country." Bannon added that "he will aim to break news and make the show an outlet for people to leak information related impeachment."

Media Analyses: Taylor Testimony Undercuts Trump's Claim There Was No Quid Pro Quo With Ukraine.

Media reports on the testimony of Bill Taylor, the top US diplomat in Ukraine, before the committees leading the House impeachment inquiry are almost universally negative. Taylor's testimony is described as "damaging" and "damning," as most reports say he directly contradicted claims from President Trump and Republicans that there was no quid pro quo of aid for Ukraine in exchange for an investigation of former Vice President Biden and his son, Hunter.

Nancy Cordes said in the lead story for the CBS Evening News (10/22, lead story, 3:31, O'Donnell, 4.4M) that Taylor described "in great detail...exactly the quid pro quo that the President had been denying," while NBC Nightly News (10/22, lead story, 1:37, Holt, 6.35M) reported in its lead story that Trump's "off-repeated impeachment defense that there was no quid pro quo may have crumbled...under the weight" of Taylor's "explosive testimony." NBC (Alexander) added that the testimony "directly contradict[ed] the President's repeated claims there was no quid pro quo." David Muir said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (10/22, lead story, 3:49, Muir, 6.89M) that Democrats are calling it "the most damaging testimony yet in the impeachment inquiry." Muir added that "some Republicans [are] concerned tonight, too." In a separate story, NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 2, 1:45, Alexander, 6.35M) reported that "the White House said that Taylor's testimony was, quote, more triple hearsay and selective leaks."

Reuters (10/22, Zengerle, Landay) reports that Taylor "testified he was told by Gordon Sondland, the US envoy to the European Union, that Trump had made the release of the withheld aid contingent on Kiev making public declarations that it would investigate domestic political rival Joe Biden and his son Hunter Biden as well as an issue relating to the 2016 election." Reuters says Taylor told House investigators, "During that phone call, Ambassador Sondland told me that President Trump had told him that he wants President Zelenskyy to state publicly that Ukraine will investigate Burisma and alleged Ukrainian interference in the 2016 election." USA Today (10/22, Wu, Jansen, 10.31M) says Taylor "told the lawmakers that he was 'alarmed' by the linking of aid to investigations of Trump's Democratic rival." USA Today adds that Taylor "described two channels of diplomacy between the US and Ukraine, with him in the regular channel and the irregular channel guided by Trump's personal lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, which sought the investigation."

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Ballhaus, Andrews, Hughes, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that according to Taylor's testimony, while Trump told officials he was not seeking a quid pro quo, he essentially outlined a trade of US aid for the investigations. A New York Times (10/22, Baker, 18.61M) analysis says Taylor's testimony was "by far the most damning account yet to become public in the House impeachment inquiry," while a Washington Post (10/22, Balz, 14.2M) analysis says Taylor's testimony "directly contradicts the president." The Post adds, "If there is a contrary version of events, the president is now under pressure to present it."

Bloomberg (10/22, House, 4.73M) says Taylor's account "offers what may be the most damaging revelations so far on the events that have spawned a House impeachment investigation. It directly contradicts Trump's assertions that there was no 'quid pro quo' behind his July 25 phone conversation with Zelenskyy." Similarly, the Washington Post (10/22, Gearan, Wagner, 14.2M) says Taylor's recollections "undermined the repeated statements of the president and the depositions of other administration officials, with the potential to reset the House impeachment probe of Trump."

The AP (10/22, Mascaro) reports Taylor "provid[ed] lawmakers with a detailed new account of the quid pro quo central to the impeachment probe," and that "some Democrats" said the testimony "established a 'direct line' to the quid pro quo at the center of the impeachment probe." The New York Times (10/22, Shear, Fandos, 18.61M) reports that "by Democrats' account, Mr. Taylor's testimony provided the most extensive picture yet of the scope of the president's effort to pressure Ukraine and the players who were involved in the effort on Mr. Trump's behalf."

Citing "sources in the room for the testimony," Politico (10/22, Desiderio, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that Taylor "prompted sighs and gasps when he read a lengthy 15-page opening statement." Politico adds that Rep. Stephen Lynch (D-MA) "characterized the testimony as a 'sea change' that 'could accelerate' the impeachment inquiry." The Los Angeles Times (10/22, Haberkorn, Stokols, 4.64M) reports that Taylor "is now seen by many as a witness who could be invited to return to testify in a public setting."

Nunes, McCarthy Say Ratcliffe "Destroyed" Taylor. On the other hand, the Washington Examiner (10/22, Chaitin, 448K) reports that Rep. Devin Nunes, the top Republican on the House Intelligence Committee said on Fox News' Hannity that Rep. John Ratcliffe (R-TX) "destroyed" Taylor. Nunes "said leaks that led to headlines about how the diplomat said President Trump tied security aid for Ukraine to investigations into the Biden family are misleading." He said, "The truth is, in two minutes, John Ratcliffe destroyed this witness. There is no quid pro quo."

House Minority Leader McCarthy said on Fox News The Ingraham Angle (10/22), "Adam Schiff won't let us talk about what happened, but I am hearing...in 90 seconds, we have John Ratcliffe destroy Taylor's whole argument. We can't really talk about it, but what we are finding is just his questioning in 90 seconds refuted everything of what Adam Schiff leaves out there. There is no quid pro quo."

The New York Times (10/22, Shear, Fandos, 18.61M) also reports that Republicans "accused Democrats of exaggerating, but they declined to share details of the testimony." Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) said, "I don't know that any of us, if we are being intellectually honest, are hearing revelations that we were not aware of. ... The bottom line is no one has yet to make the case for why the aid was withheld or even if the Ukrainians knew about it."

On Fox News' Hannity (10/22, 535K), Sean Hannity decried the impeachment inquiry as a "Soviet-style impeachment coup attempt," as "an unprecedented, unconstitutional attempt to nullify the will of the American people. The whole process is more corrupt, lacking all due process, all constitutionality and constitutional protections. It is based on utter and complete nonsense, zero violation of any law by the President. All the President is really guilty of is faithfully executing the laws of this land and fulfilling his constitutional duty."

However, most commentary, is decidedly negative toward the President. For example, national security and legal analyst Susan Hennessey said on CNN's Situation Room (10/22, 997K), "What Bill Taylor is describing here and throughout this 15 pages of astonishing testimony, he is describing a quid pro quo." Hennessey added, "I think it is clearly a quid pro quo by the ordinary definition and yes, it is not just impeachable, it is something that the President of the United States should be both impeached, convicted, and removed. This is one of the most astonishing abuses of presidential authority we have ever seen."

Dana Milbank writes in the Washington Post (10/22, 14.2M) that Taylor "delivered words that could end a presidency." Milbank adds that ahead of Taylor's testimony, "Trump created a diversion," with a tweet in which he referred to the inquiry as a "lynching." While the "grotesque provocation...worked, for a bit," in the end, "no amount of distraction could counter what was happening" in the hearing. In an editorial, USA Today (10/22, 10.31M) calls Taylor's testimony "possibly [the] most significant breach" in the "wall of defiance" the White House has attempted to erect against the investigation.

Jake Tapper said on CNN's The Lead (10/22, 926K), "To the average American voter out there who is thinking if this is not impeachable or if this is accepted, let's put it that way, what does the United States look like in a future where it is okay for the President, or the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee or the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to use his power and taxpayer dollars policy to push foreign governments to do things like that. What does that look like?"

A Washington Post (10/22, 14.2M) editorial says Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "one of President Trump's most ardent defenders in the Ukraine affair," recently said that "if you could show me that, you know, Trump was actually engaging in a quid pro quo, outside the phone call, that would be very disturbing." The Post argues that as "a lawyer and former military prosecutor," Graham "surely can recognize this corrupt campaign for what it is. The question is whether he, and other Republicans, have the moral courage to do so."

Former USAID Officials Voice Support For State Officials Testifying In Impeachment Inquiry. The Washington Post (10/22, Morello, 14.2M) reports that more than 200 former USAID officials have signed a letter "in support of their State Department colleagues who have been called to testify before House investigators handling the impeachment inquiry of President Trump." The letter, which was released Tuesday, reads, "Together, we spent our careers working to represent the policies and values of the United States. ... We are angered at the treatment of dedicated, experienced, and wise public servants like Ambassador Marie Yovanovitch; and we are distraught at the dangers inherent in the President's cavalier (and quite possibly corrupt) approach to making foreign policy on impulse and personal interest rather than in response to national security concerns."

Reuters/Ipsos Poll: Support For Impeachment Surged Among Independents.

Reuters (10/23, Kahn) reports that a Reuters/Ipsos poll released on Tuesday found that support for impeaching the President "surged among political independents and rose by three percentage points overall since last week." According to the poll, "46% of Americans said they supported impeachment and 40% said they opposed it." While "support for impeachment was relatively steady among Republicans and Democrats over the past week," it "surged among independents." In the most recent poll, 45% of independents said "they supported impeachment and 32% said they opposed it, the strongest level of support recorded in more than a year. A little more than 1 in 3 independents had said they were in favor of impeachment in more than a dozen previous Reuters/Ipsos polls since June 2018."

Hungary Denies Orban "Soured" Trump On Ukraine.

The Washington Times (10/22, Boyer, 492K) reports Hungary has "rejected news reports" that Prime Minister Viktor Orban "denigrated Ukraine in conversations with President Trump, injecting the central European nation into the impeachment drama." Zoltan Kovacs, a spokesman for the government, said Orban did not "sour" Trump on Ukraine and called the allegations "preposterous." Said Kovacs, "This is how the fake news factory works."

US Ambassador's Closeness To Orban Draws Scrutiny. The New York Times (10/22, Apuzzo, Novak, 18.61M) reports that for "the annual Independence Day celebration at the United States Embassy in Budapest" this year US Ambassador David Cornstein "spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on a blowout gala for 800 guests," and "flew in the singer Paul Anka from California." The Times says the "guest of honor" was Prime Minister Viktor Orban, who the Times claims "has curtailed the very freedoms the event was meant to highlight." The Times says Cornstein called Orban "the perfect partner" and "a very, very strong and good leader." According to the Times, "For many in the room, it was a bewildering spectacle," but "it was just another demonstration of Mr. Cornstein's pattern of emboldening Mr. Orban." The Times says Cornstein has "assiduously courted Mr. Orban, giving the Hungarian leader unexpected influence in the Trump administration."

Intel Experts Say Russia Could Use Gabbard Campaign To Interfere In Election Without Her Help.

The Washington Post (10/22, Scott, 14.2M) reports that while some of Rep. Tulsi Gabbard's (D-HI) fellow Democratic presidential candidates have spoken out in her defense following Hillary Clinton's allegation that she is "a Russian asset," none have responded to "the possibility of Gabbard launching a third-party candidacy that would get a boost from Russia, including via a disinformation campaign that would cause harm to Democrats' chances in the 2020 presidential election." Clinton, the Post adds, "was explicitly stating what some on the left, as well as in the foreign policy world, have been suggesting for quite some time. ... Some have argued that Gabbard doesn't have to be proactively working with Russia for that government to be using her campaign to interfere in the 2020 election." The Post says that "experts in the field of Russian interference view manipulations of Gabbard's campaign as potentially harmful to the 2020 election in ways that are similar to the previous election."

Holman W. Jenkins, Jr. writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that in the wake of Clinton's comments, some pundits have sought to revive the Trump-Russia collusion narrative. Jenkins refutes what he describes as the Trump-Russia conspiracy theory and urges Democrats to silence Clinton before she costs the party another presidential election.

Biggs: Trump Justified In Keeping Officials From Testifying In Schiff's Secret Hearings.

House Freedom Caucus Chairman Rep. Andy Biggs (R-AZ) writes in an op-ed for USA Today (10/22, 10.31M) that House Intelligence Chairman Schiff is conducting impeachment inquiry hearings in "an underground bunker, where the media, the public and even most members of Congress could not hear or see testimony. He lied to the American people about his committee's contacts with the so-called whistleblower. And he is concocting a narrative that could land him the Democrats' long-desired, political grand prize: the impeachment of President Donald J. Trump." Biggs decries what he describes as "Schiff's Soviet-style antics," and argues that President Trump "is well within his right to restrict members of his administration from testifying before Schiff's secret tribunal until Pelosi formalizes the process by a vote of the whole House. All Americans should demand that Schiff adhere to American values of due process, truth and transparency."

Law School Teachers Say Trump Can't Assert Executive Privilege Over Diplomatic Communications.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Jean Galbraith, a professor at the University of Pennsylvania Law School, and Michel Paradis, a lecturer at Columbia Law School, argue against the White House's assertion of executive privilege to withhold diplomacy-related communications from the House impeachment inquiry. They write that Congress is entitled to see the communications if they might contain evidence of impeachable conduct.

Former Russian Official: Impeaching Trump Will Show World "Moral Principles Still Matter."

In an op-ed for the New York Times (10/22, 18.61M), Andrei V. Kozyrev, who was the foreign minister of Russia from 1991 to 1996, writes that Russia "likes seeing President Trump in the White House in part because it provides the Kremlin a chance to point to the ugly side of American politics – to say, just as they did with Mr. Nixon, look how sordid, how hypocritical." Kozyrev argues that "if Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike, act to remove this president, a new powerful message would be sent to governments and people around the globe, just like the one that went out in 1974: Moral principles still matter in American politics and policy. And the future still belongs to moral truth and to those who embrace it."

Pence: Cease-Fire In Syria Holding, US Looking For "Safe Zone."

The Washington Times (10/22, Boyer, 492K) reports Vice President Pence said Tuesday night that the ceasefire in northern Syria "has held, and the US is now working with Turkey and Kurdish forces to establish 'a permanent ceasefire' with the hope of establishing a safe zone between Turkey and Kurds living in Syria." Speaking at a Heritage Foundation gala, Pence said, "Earlier today, we received word from the Syrian Defense Forces commander that all of their military forces have withdrawn from the safe zone under Turkish military control. And before I came here our team was continuing to communicate with both sides in the hope that a permanent ceasefire could soon take hold. Those discussions are ongoing."

In an interview with Fox News The Ingraham Angle (10/22), Pence said, "Apart from limited scimmages and fighting, the cease-fire has been holding and it continues to hold today. It's all a result of the leadership President Trump provided here. The President made it very clear when Turkish forces entered Syria that Turkish military action there was unacceptable. He sent a clear message to President Erdogan to pull back. He sent strong sanctions and sent me and Secretary Pompeo there for one mission and that was to end the violence."

President Trump yesterday tweeted, "Good news seems to be happening with respect to Turkey, Syria and the Middle East. Further reports to come later!"

American Christian Groups Defend Trump's Decision To Withdraw Troops. The Hill (10/22, Kelly, 2.98M) reports that "US evangelical and Christian groups are standing behind President Trump despite their opposition to his decision to withdraw US troops from northern Syria, which they see as putting Syrian Christian and religious minorities under threat from Turkish-backed Islamist forces and a potential ISIS resurgence." Rev. Franklin Graham told The Hill, "My support is behind the president ... I just have to trust and believe that he's made the right decision on behalf of the American people."

Jeffrey Not Consulted Before Troop Withdrawal. The Washington Times (10/22, Meier, 492K) reports President Trump's special representative for the global coalition to defeat ISIS, Ambassador James Jeffrey, told a Senate panel Tuesday that he was not consulted prior to the Administration's announcement to withdraw US forces from northern Syria. Jeffrey told a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing Tuesday that he "was not personally consulted before" the Pentagon was ordered to move forces out of the region.

Trump Authorizes $4.5 Million In Aid To Syria's "White Helmets."

The Washington Times (10/22, Howell, 492K) reports President Trump "authorized $4.5 million in direct support Tuesday to the Syrian Civilian Defense, the white-helmeted volunteers who offer medical assistance and conduct search-and-rescue missions" in Syria. White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham said, "The United States encourages our allies and partners to join us in our support for the SCD and in our efforts to protect civilians, religious and ethnic minorities, and other innocent victims of the Syrian conflict."

Media Analyses: Putin Steps Into Syrian Power Vacuum Caused By US Withdrawal.

The deal reached by Russian President Vladimir Putin and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan to jointly drive Kurdish fighters 19 miles back from the Syria-Turkey border is being cast as confirmation that President Trump's decision to withdraw nearly all US forces from the region, and thereby allow Turkey to invade, has given Putin the power to control the future of Syria. The New York Times (10/22, Troianovski, Kingsley, 18.61M) says of Putin: "His jets patrol Syrian skies. His military is expanding operations at the main naval base in Syria. He is forging closer ties to Turkey. He and his Syrian allies are moving into territory vacated by the United States." On NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 4, 1:20, Holt, 6.35M), Richard Engel said "Putin tonight became the new king maker in Syria," and the CBS Evening News (10/22, story 3, 1:50, O'Donnell, 4.4M) said, "As the US watched from the sidelines today, Russia's Vladimir Putin emerged as the key power player in Syria."

Reuters (10/22, Korsunskaya, Pamuk) reports the deal "endorses the return of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's forces to the border alongside Russian troops, replacing the Americans who had patrolled the region for years with their former Kurdish allies." According to Reuters, Russia is "a close ally of Assad," while Turkey "has backed rebels seeking to oust Assad during Syria's more than eight-year-long civil war." To the AP (10/22, Fraser, Isachenkov), the deal "cement[s] the two countries' power in Syria in the wake of...Trump's abrupt withdrawal of US forces."

Likewise, the Washington Post (10/22, Fahim, Dadouch, 14.2M) says the deal "cemented Russia's role as Syria's central power broker, at a moment when the influence of the United States in the region is dissipating." Russia has "agreed...to help remove Syrian Kurdish fighters from a large swath of Turkey's southern border, giving its blessing to a Turkish military operation against a Kurdish-led force that had allied with the United States." The deal that was reached by Erdogan and Putin at a meeting in Sochi, Russia, "addressed several of Turkey's core security demands, including the establishment of a 'safe zone' that would push the Kurdish-led force back from its frontier."

According to the New York Times (10/22, Troianovski, Kingsley, 18.61M), the deal is "a victory for" Putin, but says Erdogan also "got most of what he wanted," including "a buffer zone free of a militia that Turkey regards as a terrorist threat." However, the Times adds that it "came at the expense of sharing control of the area with Mr. Putin and the Syrian president, Bashar al-Assad, whose rule Mr. Erdogan has long opposed." Putin is quoted as saying, "Only if Syria's sovereignty and territorial integrity is respected can a long-lasting and solid stabilization in Syria be achieved. ... It is important that our Turkish partners share this approach." USA Today (10/22, Shesgreen, 10.31M) and the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Gauthier-Villars, Simmons, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the deal.

Bloomberg (10/22, 4.73M) reports Erdogan "said Russian forces would help evict the so-called YPG fighters from areas outside the 120-km corridor where Turkish forces are operating." Bloomberg says the YPG, "which fought for years alongside US forces to defeat Islamic State before...Trump ordered an American withdrawal, say they pose no threat to Turkey and only want to safeguard Syria's Kurds." Reuters (10/22) reports Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said that "the Kurdish YPG militia would pull back 30 km (19 miles) from the Syrian border."

However, Reuters (10/22) reports Assad yesterday "denounced Turkey's leader as a thief for attacking the northeast of his country and reiterated a pledge to retake all areas lost to Damascus in years of civil war." According to Reuters, Assad "made the remarks as he made a rare visit to a frontline of Syria's conflict, touring an area in war-torn northwestern Idlib province close to the last major bastion of Turkey-backed rebel forces." Assad is quoted as saying, "Erdogan is a thief and is now stealing our land."

The AP (10/22, Fraser, Isachenkov) reports that "for the Kurds, a Turkish takeover would mean the crushing of the self-rule they have carved out in the northeast amid Syria's civil war." ABC World News Tonight (10/22, story 7, 1:35, Muir, 6.89M) reported, "Kurdish forces say they've already withdrawn from large parts of northern Syria, although this deal is an even bigger concession," but "many people...feel in order to save lives, they really don't have much choice."

McConnell Warns Against Turkey Sanctions That Could "Drive A NATO Ally Into The Arms Of The Russians." The AP (10/22) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell yesterday introduced legislation "denouncing Turkey's invasion of northern Syria and gently prodding" President Trump to "halt his withdrawal of US troops from the embattled country." However, McConnell also "said lawmakers should refrain from imposing sanctions on Turkey for now, saying, 'We don't want to further drive a NATO ally into the arms of the Russians.'" According to the AP, "That puts him into conflict with the Democratic-led House, where a vote on a sanctions measure is planned for next week."

Iraqi Military Says US Troops Withdrawing From Syria Cannot Stay In Iraq.

Reuters (10/22, Rasheed, Ali) reports the Iraqi military said Tuesday US troops that have "crossed into Iraq as part of a pull-out from Syria do not have permission to stay and can only be there in transit." According to Reuters, "The Iraqi military statement contradicted the Pentagon's announcement that all of the nearly 1,000 troops withdrawing from northern Syria are expected to move to western Iraq to continue the campaign against Islamic State militants and to help defend Iraq." However, Defense Secretary Esper says the Pentagon "aimed eventually to bring the troops withdrawing from Syria back to the United States." Esper is quoted as saying, "The aim isn't to stay in Iraq interminably, the aim is to pull our soldiers out and eventually get them back home."

The AP (10/22) reports Esper said he "plans to talk to Iraqi leaders to work out details about the US plan to send American troops withdrawing from Syria to Iraq, adding that the US has no plans to have those troops stay in Iraq 'interminably.'" The AP notes that the US "currently has more than 5,000 American forces in Iraq."

Esper said in an interview with CNN International's Amanpour (10/22), "We're conducting a phased withdrawal, a deliberate phased withdrawal, from northeast Syria. It began with what we call phase one which was in the immediate zone of attack. Now we are under phase two, which is from the northeast corridor, if you will. Eventually we have other phases that will draw the forces out. We'll temporarily reposition in Iraq pursuant to bringing the troops home. And so it's just one part of a continuing phase but eventually those troops are going to come home." Asked if any troops will remain in Syria, Esper said, "Well, right now the President has authorized that some would stay in the southern part of Syria...and we are looking at maybe keeping some additional forces to ensure that we deny ISIS and others access to these key oilfields, also, in the middle part of the country, if you will."

CBP's Perez: 450 Miles Of New Border Wall Will Be Built By End Of 2020.

On Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/22, 831K), Steve Doocy said President Trump is "keeping his promise to secure our southern border with 74 miles of new wall built and another 159 miles under construction." Customs and Border Protection Deputy Commissioner Robert Perez said the pace of border wall building is "exceptional." Perez went on to say, "We're only accelerating those numbers. ... We're putting new, enduring capability in strategic priority locations throughout the entirety of the southern border from California all the way down to Texas. It's a border wall system as we mentioned before. Not just the infrastructure itself, but technology embedded into the wall, infrastructure as well surrounding the wall, roads, lighting." Perez added, "We expect that by the end of next year we will have constructed...over 450 miles of new border wall along that southern border."

ICE Official: Los Angeles' Sanctuary Policy Releases 100 Criminals Per Day.

The Washington Times (10/22, Dinan, 492K) reports California's sanctuary city policies "are causing as many as 100 illegal immigrants with criminal records to be released out into the communities every day in the Los Angeles area alone, a top ICE official told Congress on Tuesday." Timothy S. Robbins, Acting Executive Associate ICE Director, "said that's just one city in a state where sanctuary policies are now a law state wide." Robbins "said before the law took effect in 2018 the Los Angeles area turned over 75 to 100 criminal aliens each day," but now "gets fewer than five."

Former US Ambassador to the UN Human Rights Commission, Ken Blackwell, writes in The Hill (10/22, 2.98M) that "it is time for even the most liberal of citizens residing in sanctuary areas to publicly challenge this deadly doctrine that elevates criminal illegal immigrants over legal residents and could bring anarchy to our doorsteps."

ICE Cancels Fines On Illegal Immigrants In Churches.

The Washington Times (10/22, Dinan, 492K) reports ICE has "canceled the fines of up to $500,000 it had tried to levy on some illegal immigrants who are living in protection in churches." ICE had "fired off notices to a number of migrants earlier this year telling them they owed massive fines for defying deportation orders." Amid "an outcry from the migrants, and mocking from immigrant-rights advocates, ICE relented." In a statement, ICE said, "Following consideration of matters you forwarded for ICE review, and in the exercise of discretion under applicable regulations, ICE hereby withdraws the Notice of Intention to Fine."

Anonymous Anti-Trump Administration Official Has Book Coming Out.

Jake Tapper of CNN (10/22, 83.16M) reported this afternoon that "the anonymous senior Trump administration official whose 2018 New York Times op-ed was called treasonous by President Donald Trump has written a new book about Trump titled 'A Warning' that will be published next month." Tapper added "the author will remain anonymous, and sources familiar with the book" say "elaborate precautions have been taken to protect the author's identity." Tapper also says that "when asked for comment, Matt Latimer, cofounder of Javelin, told CNN that the author was not doing it for the money." Latimer is quoted as saying, "The Author of A WARNING refused the chance at a seven figure advance and intends to donate a substantial amount of any royalties to the White House Correspondents Association and other organizations that fight for a free press that seeks the truth." The AP (10/22) also reports that "according to the publisher, the author accepted no advance and will donate a portion of royalties to nonprofits that focus on accountability and 'standing up' for truth in oppressive countries."

The Washington Times (10/22, Boyer, 492K) recalls that in his "anonymous op-ed...the author declared, 'I am part of the resistance inside the Trump administration,'" and "described Mr. Trump's leadership as 'petty' and criticized his 'impulsiveness' that resulted in decisions that later had to be reversed." The Los Angeles Times (10/22, Díaz, 4.64M) reports "the author also claimed that members of Trump's Cabinet were concerned enough about his 'instability' that they discussed invoking the 25th Amendment to begin a complex process to remove him from office."

NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 3, 1:29, Mitchell, 6.35M) said last night, "From the shadows, the voice of anonymous," now "expanding" his "slashing critique in a book." ABC World News Tonight (10/22, story 3, 0:39, Karl, 6.89M) reported, "As you recall," the piece "described a quiet resistance within the Trump Administration and said, quote, 'I work for the President, but like-minded colleagues and I have vowed to thwart parts of his agenda and his worst inclinations.'" In response, the New York Post (10/22, Moore, 4.57M) recounts, "Trump accused the writer of treason and ordered the Times to hand in 'the GUTLESS anonymous person.'" The Washington Post (10/22, Rucker, 14.2M) reports the author's name "was known to the Times but identified by the Times only as a senior official in the Trump administration."

The Washington Examiner (10/22, McGhee, 448K) predicts, at any rate, that "the book will also have little effect outside the Beltway echo chamber," and though "it might dominate a news cycle or two, but practically, it will change nothing."

Miller: Federal Bureaucrats' Leaks To Reporters "Mortal Threat" To Democracy. The Washington Examiner (10/22, Bedard, 448K) reports, "Anonymous efforts by anti-Trump federal bureaucrats to thwart the White House agenda through leaks and complaints to friendly reporters and congressional allies are a 'mortal threat' to democracy and the 2016 election results, according to a top administration official." White House senior adviser Stephen Miller told the Times in an interview, "This is a mortal threat to the American system of government." Miller called inside attacks a "very grave threat," and explained it this way: "It is best understood as career federal employees that believe they are under no obligation to honor, respect, or abide by the results of a democratic election. Their view is, 'If I agree with what voters choose, then I'll do what they choose. If I disagree with what voters choose, then I won't, and I'll continue doing my own thing. So basically it's heads I win, tails you lose.'"

Esper Recuses Himself From Decision On JEDI Contract.

The Washington Times (10/22, Wolfgang, 492K) reports Defense Secretary Esper "will not make the final decision on the Pentagon's high-stakes $10 billion cloud-computing contract because of conflicts of interest, officials said Tuesday." According to "Defense Department officials...Deputy Defense Secretary David L. Norquist will make the call on the Joint Enterprise Defense Infrastructure (JEDI) contract, adding another layer of intrigue to a process that's sparked controversy inside the Pentagon and on Capitol Hill." The Washington Post (10/22, Gregg, 14.2M) says Esper "recused himself from" the "high-profile review of the Pentagon's controversial JEDI cloud computing infrastructure because his son is employed with one of the contract's initial bidders, a Defense Department spokesman said Tuesday."

The New York Times (10/22, Cooper, 18.61M) reports "the decision removes Mr. Esper from a fierce lobbying battle between Amazon Web Services, the dominant player in the field of cloud computing, and Oracle." President Trump "has weighed in over the 10-year contract to transform the military's computing systems, making clear his own hostility toward Amazon and its founder, Jeff Bezos."

WPost Analysis: "Industry Veterans Dominate Trump's Inaugural PCAST."

The Washington Post (10/22, Guarino, 14.2M) reports "President Trump revived the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology on Tuesday after nearly two years without it." Trump's science adviser, Kelvin Droegemeier, "who will chair the council," said in a statement, "Under this administration, science and technology in America continues to advance by leaps and bounds. ... PCAST will be critical to our continued efforts, with each member bringing a unique expert perspective to the table." The Post adds that "typically, academic members of a PCAST outnumber its industry scientists," as was the case "for the councils under George H.W. Bush, Bill Clinton and Barack Obama." However, "industry veterans dominate Trump's inaugural PCAST, as they did under George W. Bush. Only one of Trump's seven new PCAST members works in academia. Two members do not have doctoral degrees."

Sources: White House Trade Adviser Shaw To Leave Post Friday.

Reuters (10/22, Mason) reports President Trump's G7 and trade adviser, Kelly Ann Shaw, is leaving the Administration "for a position in the private sector, White House officials said on Tuesday, marking the departure of one of the most senior women on the president's economic team." Shaw, who succeeded Clete Willems as deputy assistant to the president for international economic affairs and deputy director of the National Economic Council earlier this year, will leave her post Friday.

STAT Analysis: Ex-Pharma Lobbyist Defies Expectations After Joining Trump's White House.

Over a "remarkable two-year span," Joe Grogan has gone from "from lobbyist for the pharmaceutical giant Gilead Sciences, to White House budget adviser, to director of the president's Domestic Policy Council," STAT (10/22, Facher, 24K) reports. Despite working as a lobbyist for a major pharma company, Grogan has "confounded the expectation that he would shill for industry," including advocating for the Trump Administration's "international prince index" model and supporting Trump's plan to import prescription drugs from Canada. STAT cites "interviews with eight current and former Trump administration health officials and an array of conservative lobbyists," who say Grogan's "chaotic ascent to the White House's highest ranks...is defined more by feud than by policy triumph – and on drug pricing in particular, his track record consists more of blocking others' policies than advancing new ones."

Nielsen Says She Left DHS Post Because "Saying No" Wasn't Enough.

USA Today (10/22, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports former DHS Secretary Nielsen said Tuesday she left her post after "it became clear that saying no and refusing to do it myself was not going to be enough" regarding some policies. When pressed in an interview on whether she regretted signing the memo that resulted in family separations, Nielsen said, "I don't regret enforcing the law because I took an oath to do that, as did everybody at the Department of Homeland Security." She added, "What I regret is that that information flow and coordination to quickly reunite the families was clearly not in place." She added that it's the reason why "the practice was stopped through an executive order."

Trump, Pence Urge Pelosi To Schedule Vote On USMCA.

Reuters (10/22) reports President Trump yesterday "criticized" House Speaker Pelosi "for not bringing his administration's re-negotiated trade deal with neighboring Mexico and Canada up for a vote in Congress." Trump tweeted, "Can't believe that Nervous Nancy Pelosi isn't moving faster on USMCA. Her people want it, they don't know why she isn't putting it up for a bipartisan vote. Taking too long!" Reuters says the United States, Mexico, Canada Agreement "must win approval in a divided Congress where Pelosi's fellow Democrats control the House and have said they have concerns over the agreement, including its labor and enforcement provisions." The Administration has "been pressing for a House vote before the end of November, although a key US labor leader earlier this month said it would fail if it was voted on before the Thanksgiving holiday on Nov. 28."

Vice President Pence said Fox News The Ingraham Angle (10/22), "Since President Clinton signed NAFTA into law, we saw literally tens of thousands of factories close in the country and move south of the border in Mexico. President Trump said we can do better and he sat down and he drove a hard bargain with Canada and with Mexico." Asked why House Speaker Pelosi is delaying a vote, Pence said, "Politics is the only thing that that explains the delay. President Trump inked this deal with Mexico and Canada a year ago. It has been sitting on Speaker Nancy Pelosi's desk."

Warner: Trump Has Right Idea Confronting China.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/22, Piro, 78K) reports Sen. Mark Warner (D-VA) "backed" President Trump's confrontation of China over its trade practices and "criticized American companies for sacrificing 'their values' to appease the communist regime." Warner "told CNBC Tuesday that he supports the president for confronting the Chinese regime over its trade practices, but was critical about how Trump has handled the dispute." Said Warner, "I think the mission is right. I don't find a lot of places where I agree with Donald Trump. I think the missed opportunity would be to have rallied the world and go to China and say, 'You're a great nation and you're one of the leading economic powers in the 21st century, but you got to play by the same set of rules.'"

US Companies Increase Borrowing For Capital Investments As Confidence Index Declines.

Reuters (10/22) reports the Equipment Leasing and Finance Association (ELFA) on Tuesday said that "US companies' borrowing to spend on capital investments rose 18% in September from a year earlier" to "$10 billion in new loans, leases and lines of credit last month, up from $8.5 billion a year earlier." Reuters also reports the Equipment Leasing & Finance Foundation's "monthly confidence index in October is 51.4, down from September's 54.7."

Trump Touts White House Opportunity Zone In South Carolina.

President Trump tweeted "Great Job Tim!" in retweeting a White House post saying, "In @SenatorTimScott's home state of South Carolina, a $54 million tech corridor is finally becoming a reality because of the White House's Opportunity Zones initiative. For the first time, countless communities are being shown that they can compete."

Workers From Closed GM Factories To Urge UAW Members To Oppose Agreement.

The AP (10/22, Krisher) reports that "workers at three shuttered General Motors factories that didn't get new products under the tentative contract agreement reached last week between GM and the United Auto Workers," are planning to argue against the agreement which UAW members are to vote on this week. They make up "about 2,000" of the "49,000 union members" who will be voting. Most have transferred to other GM factories "so they have a presence at just about all of the automaker's plants."

Difficulties Seeking Employment For Military Spouses Seen As Threat To Retention.

The Washington Times (10/22, Glenn, 492K) reports, "The difficulties military spouses face finding good-paying jobs are fast becoming...a national security issue, one that is undermining the military's ability to recruit and retain personnel." That's according to "a panel at the Brookings Institution on Monday that featured some high-level expertise: Holly Petraeus, the wife of former CIA director and retired four-star Army Gen. David H. Petraeus." According to the US Chamber of Commerce, "the unemployment rate among military spouses was 16%," and "military spouses also earn almost 27% less in wage and salary income than their nonmilitary peers." In addition, "about a third of military spouses aren't living in the same location as the service member to whom they are married." Mrs. Petraeus described her experience of taking entry-level positions for a time and then "remained out of the formal workforce for more than 20 years."

S&P's "Modest Gains" Lost After UK Parliament Rejected Government's Timetable For Brexit.

Reuters (10/22, Joyner) reports the S&P 500 "gave up modest gains on Tuesday from earlier in the session after British lawmakers rejected the government's proposed timetable for passing legislation to ratify its deal to exit the European Union." Stocks had been "mixed amid split corporate earnings reports" with "upbeat forecasts from Procter & Gamble Co and United Technologies Corp" and "disappointing results from McDonald's Corp and Travelers Cos Inc." Reuters also reports that over 80% "of the 98 S&P 500 companies that have reported results so far...have beaten Wall Street estimates." Meanwhile, "The Dow held on to slight gains."

Small Lot Trades Reach Nearly Half Of All Trades. The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Osipovich, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the percentage of trades in lots smaller than 100 shares has grown to about half (48.9%) of all trades, its highest level ever, and is attributed to the rise in stocks trading at high prices. The Journal adds that in the 20th century stocks frequently split if their price rose much beyond $35. At present, five S&P 500 stocks trade at over $1,000 per share.

Facebook Spent $12.3 Million In First Nine Months Of 2019 Lobbying Federal Government.

CQ Roll Call (10/22, Ackley, 154K) reports, "Facebook is on pace to spend more on federal lobbying this year than ever before," as, according to its reports, it "spent $12.3 million to lobby the federal government in the first nine months of the year," in comparison to the $12.6 million it spent in all of 2018. On Wednesday, Facebook Founder and CEO Mark Zuckerberg will appear before the House Financial Services Committee. It is now among "the top 10 biggest clients in Washington, D.C." Roll Call adds, "The only other tech company among the top tier for 2019 is Amazon," while "Google's spending on federal lobbying, $9.1 million so far this year, has declined."

Zuckerberg Says Facebook Might Have Changed Iraq War. The Washington Post (10/22, Horton, 14.2M) reports Facebook founder and CEO Mark Zuckerberg, speaking at Georgetown University "at one point suggest[ed] the social network could have stopped" the Iraq war in 2003. Zuckerberg said, "I remember feeling that if more people had a voice to share their experiences, maybe things would have gone differently." He added, "Those early years shaped my belief that giving everyone a voice empowers the powerless and pushes society to be better over time." Rep. Ruben Gallego (D-AZ) said, "He's rewriting history so it gives him an excuse to regulate himself." He added, "It's false. It's completely false." Gallego "claims to be one of the first 2,000 users of Facebook." According to Gallego, "none of the features allowed users to communicate, organize or debate something like the Iraq War."

Facebook Willing To Delay Launch Of Libra Until All US Regulatory Concerns Are Satisfied. Politico (10/22, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports, "Zuckerberg will tell House lawmakers Wednesday that he's willing to postpone the launch of the controversial digital currency that the social media giant is spearheading, amid growing pushback from policymakers around the world." According to prepared remarks, Zuckerberg is expected to say, "We want to be clear: Facebook will not be a part of launching the Libra payments system anywhere in the world unless all U.S. regulators approve it. And we support Libra delaying its launch until it has fully addressed U.S. regulatory concerns."

The New York Times (10/22, Isaac, Kang, Popper, 18.61M) reports Zuckerberg is expected to say, "I believe this is something that needs to get built, but I understand we're not the ideal messenger right now." He is to add, "I know some people wonder whether we can be trusted to build payment services that protect consumers." He is also "expected to promote the benefits of Libra."

Carnegie Fellow Warns Of National Security Risks In Breaking Up Big Tech. Jon Bateman, a fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), that antitrust actions against large technology firms are becoming increasingly popular. He warns that doing so poses some risk to US national security, as only Amazon and Microsoft have been deemed capable of operating a military-grade cloud computing service. Large tech companies are also useful in collecting intelligence because they are used worldwide. Still, Bateman says that these companies have also taken actions that are counter to US security and avoided accountability with respect to terrorist groups which use their networks and with respect to China. Bateman concludes that any response should be carefully developed to deal with a specific problem rather than simply size.

Amazon Failing To Take Customers From Discount Retailers.

The Motley Fool (10/22, Sun, 1.22M) reports on Amazon's efforts to reach low-income customers, which, so far, appear to have had little effect on "discount retailers like Dollar Tree and Dollar General" which have "flourished and continued opening new stores." Amazon has "offered a 45% discount on Prime memberships for shoppers on welfare or food stamps" or Medicaid, and has "launched a '$10-and-under' selection of products with free shipping for both Prime and non-Prime members." The Fool adds, "Amazon is clearly struggling to crack that market," as, "dollar stores are still gaining shoppers and increasing their store counts."

New York AG Takes Exxon To Court For "Climate Fraud."

The Washington Times (10/22, Richardson, 492K) reports, "After four years and three attorneys general, New York finally brought ExxonMobil to court Tuesday on charges of 'climate fraud.'" The Times says the case may "decide whether the sputtering 'Exxon knew' campaign still has something in the tank — or if that vehicle has run out of gas." In the case, New York Attorney General Letitia James charges "that Exxon defrauded investors in violation of the state's Martin Act by keeping two sets of numbers to assess the impact of climate regulations, while Exxon insists there was nothing remarkable about the separate cost metrics." Former Exxon CEO Rex Tillerson may testify.

Boeing Chief Of Commercial Airplanes Removed.

The CBS Evening News (10/22, story 4, 0:21, O'Donnell, 4.4M) reported that "a shake-up in the top ranks at Boeing. Kevin McAllister, the man in charge of returning the troubled 737 MAX to service, is out." The New York Times (10/22, Gelles, Kitroeff, 18.61M) reports on Tuesday, Boeing announced that McAllister, the "executive in charge of commercial airplanes is leaving." The Times comments, "He is the most senior official to depart as the airline maker struggles to contain the crisis following the crashes of two 737 Max jets that killed 346 people." McAllister "had been at the center of the company's efforts to fix the automated system that contributed to the two crashes and return the plane to service." The Times also reports, "Stanley A. Deal, the head of global services for Boeing, will replace Mr. McAllister."

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Tangel, Cameron, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) similarly reports McAllister is the first significant executive to depart since the Max crashes, but adds that other Boeing airplanes had encountered problems under McAllister's leadership.

WeWork Board Approves SoftBank Takeover Bid.

NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 12, 0:20, Holt, 6.35M) reported, "Once a rising star of Silicon Valley, WeWork is now suddenly in decline. The office sharing company's new financial lifeline giving its controversial co-founder Adam Newman a $1.7 billion payout to step down while the troubled company is reportedly planning massive layoffs."

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Farrell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports SoftBank Group Corp.'s takeover bid has been approved by WeWork's board. Under the agreement, WeWork is to be valued around $8 billion, rather less than SoftBank's January valuation of WeWork at $47 billion. SoftBank will purchase about $1 billion in stock from the company's founder and CEO. Overall, SoftBank will spend about $3 billion for the purchase of stock and for other purposes.

Nike CEO To Step Down At Beginning Of Next Year.

The New York Times (10/22, Times, 18.61M) reports Nike CEO Mark Parker will "step down at the beginning of next year" the company has announced. Board member John Donahoe, currently CEO of ServiceNow, will replace Parker, who "will become executive chairman." The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Safdar, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Parker has been CEO since 2006.

Chicago Police Superintendent Will Not Attend President's Speech.

The AP (10/22, Press) reports, "Chicago Police Superintendent Eddie Johnson says he will not attend President Donald Trump's planned speech next week at the International Chiefs of Police Conference" in Chicago. Police spokesman Anthony Guglielmi said that "Johnson will attend various events at the conference but has no interest in hearing what Trump has to say." The AP says, "The superintendent's snub of the speech is the latest chapter in a contentious relationship Trump has had with the city for years."

Boy Wounded In California School Shooting.

NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 6, 0:20, Holt, 6.35M) reported, "There were some anxious moments today at a high school in Santa Rosa, California after a gunman shot and wounded a 17-year-old boy outside the school. That school and two others were placed on lockdown as a manhunt was launched for the shooter. Police arrested a suspect and possible accomplice a short time later."

The CBS Evening News (10/22, story 8, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.4M) reported, "A suspected gunman is under arrest tonight after a school shooting in California. The 17-year-old is charged with shooting a fellow student, then ditching his gun and returning to class at Ridgway High School in northern California. The injured student is in stable condition."

ABC World News Tonight (10/22, story 5, 1:10, Muir, 6.89M) reported, "Two high schools...and a community college immediately put on lockdown. Armed police searching the campus, taking a potential suspect into custody." ABC (Reeve) added, "Tonight, an all too familiar scene. Students evacuating a school, hands on their heads. Heavily-armed police descending on Ridgway High School in Santa Rosa, California, after a suspect reportedly opened fire outside the campus, hitting one teenager in the abdomen. Then running into the school. Choppers overhead, two high schools and a nearby junior college locked down as officers searched the school and surrounding area for the suspect. The suspect captured in a classroom. Led out of the school in handcuffs."

Azar: Trump Is "Running" ACA Better Than Obama Did.

According to the New York Times (10/22, Goodnough, 18.61M), "Nearly three years into President Trump's aggressive efforts to undermine the Affordable Care Act, prices for the most popular type of health insurance plan offered through the health law's federal marketplace will actually drop next year, and the number of insurers offering plans will go up." Administration officials "credited Mr. Trump with the resiliency of the law even as they echoed his contempt for it." HHS Secretary Azar is quoted as saying, "The A.C.A. simply doesn't work and is still unaffordable for far too many. But until Congress gets around to replacing it, President Trump will do what he can to fix the problems created by this system for millions of Americans."

The Washington Post (10/22, Goldstein, 14.2M) says "the average price tag for the most common type of health insurance...will drop by about 4 percent for next year, extending a reversal of steep rate increases that daunted HealthCare.gov in its early years." In addition, "Just 12 percent of ACA customers live in counties that will have only one insurer in the marketplace...compared with almost 30 percent for 2018, and more than two-thirds will have a choice of at least three companies." The Post adds that the "brightening scenario...creates awkward conflicting messages for senior Trump administration officials." Azar and Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Administrator Seema Verma on Tuesday "persisted in tarring the system...as unwieldy, unaffordable for too many and in need of replacement," but "also credited...Trump's guidance for making the law's insurance exchanges work better." Azar told reporters, "The president who was supposedly trying to sabotage the law has been better at running it than the guy who wrote the law."

The AP (10/22, Alonso) reports that "independent experts" do "credit the Trump administration for working with a dozen states to approve waivers that can bring down premiums by setting up a backstop system to pay bills from the costliest patients. However, experts say the original design of the law's subsidies is probably the major stabilizing force." Politico (10/22, Goldberg, 4.29M) reports the Administration, "which has sought to take credit for stabilizing the law's marketplaces while also expanding access to cheaper and skimpier alternatives, said 20 more insurance plans will be available when enrollment in 2020 coverage opens next week." However, according to Politico, "Obamacare supporters have said the improving marketplaces are largely a sign of the law's maturing, and that the Trump administration has taken steps to undermine the law."

Ninth Circuit Blocks Religious Exemption To Obamacare Birth Control Mandate.

The Washington Times (10/22, Miller, 492K) reports that the 9th US Circuit Court of Appeals on Tuesday "stopped the Trump administration from allowing employers with religious objections to opt out of Obama-era requirements that health insurance pay for birth control." The order "resulted from a lawsuit filed by 14 state attorneys general that challenged the Trump administration's policy allowing employers to claim a moral or religious objection to covering birth control."

Progressives Unhappy With Pelosi's Prescription Drug Bill.

Politico (10/22, Ferris, Caygle, 4.29M) reports that "an internal debate over Speaker Nancy Pelosi's signature drug pricing bill broke out into a heated back-and-forth Tuesday as several key Democrats complained that the legislation did not go far enough to appease progressives." According to Politico, "Multiple Democrats...cautioned in a private caucus meeting that the current draft of the legislation could fall short of the party's promise to authorize Medicare to negotiate prescription drug costs." Politico says the "tense" meeting "underscores the challenge for House Democratic leaders to swiftly pass the landmark health bill without exposing lingering divisions between the caucus' left and moderate flanks." Politico adds that Pelosi's bill, "which is already broadly backed within the caucus, could reach the floor as soon as next week."

Group Says Warren Will Need Middle Class Tax Hike To Pay For Health Plan.

The Washington Times (10/22, Dinan, 492K) reports that the "nonpartisan budget watchdog" the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget said Tuesday that Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Elizabeth Warren (MA) "will have to raise taxes on middle-class families to fund her health care plans...countering her claims – but those families could still come out ahead, depending on how the system is restructured." The group "said it crunched the numbers on a few different types of Medicare for All proposals, and found that all of them would require tax hikes going well beyond the wealthy." However, it "said it's possible that with savings in health care costs – not having to pay premiums and out-of-pocket expenses – those on the lower end could end up saving more than they pay in higher taxes."

Drop In Children In Medicaid, CHIP Programs Prompts Multiple Interpretations.

The New York Times (10/22, Goodnough, Sanger-Katz, 18.61M) reports that "more than a million children disappeared from the rolls of the two main state-federal health programs for lower-income children, Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program, between December 2017 and June." According to the Times, while "some state and federal officials have portrayed the drop – 3 percent of enrolled children – as a success story, arguing that more Americans are getting coverage from employers in an improving economy," there is "growing evidence that administrative changes aimed at fighting fraud and waste – and rising fears of deportation in immigrant communities – are pushing large numbers of children out of the programs, and that many of them are now going without coverage." The Times says "the number of children in the United States without any kind of insurance rose by more than 400,000 between 2016 and 2018 after decades of progress toward universal coverage for children."

FreedomWorks Cites Healthcare Issues For Record Lobbying Spending.

CQ Roll Call (10/22, Ackley, 154K) reports that FreedomWorks "disclosed spending more than $2.7 million" from July 1 to September 30 on federal lobbying campaigns, the most the conservative group has "ever has reported shelling out." Last year, the group "disclosed spending nearly $1.9 million on lobbying for the entire 12 months, according to lobbying reports. In just the period from July 1 through Sept. 30 of this year, FreedomWorks disclosed spending $2.7 million, the group disclosed in its third-quarter lobbying report filed to the clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate." According to FreedomWorks' vice president of legislative affairs, opposition to healthcare proposals like "Medicare for All" and Democratic prescription drug bill accounted for much of the work.

Up To One-Third Of Emergency Medical Services In Rural Areas In Danger Of Closing.

NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 9, 2:21, Holt, 6.35M) reported, "Now to a crisis impacting a lot of Americans. What if you call 911 and nobody responds? Some 57 million people at risk of losing vital emergency medical services." NBC (Torres) added, "Across the US, a shortage of volunteer EMTs is putting the services on the verge of collapse." NBC also reported, "Experts now warn that close to 1/3 of all rural medical services are in immediate danger of closing down." NBC added, "Most states don't fund these services. In 39 states, EMS is not considered an essential service like police and fire."

House Committee Releases Documents Regarding ED's Granting Loans To Students At Ineligible Schools.

The Washington Post (10/22, Douglas-Gabriel, 14.2M) reports the House Education and Labor Committee has released documents it says "shows the Education Department provided $10.7 million in federal loans and grants to students at the Illinois Institute of Art and the Art Institute of Colorado even though officials knew the for-profit colleges were not accredited and ineligible to receive such aid." Committee Chairman Robert C. "Bobby" Scott (D-VA) "is threatening to subpoena Education Secretary Betsy DeVos for more documents related to the department's role" with respect to Dream Center' which purchased the schools in 2016. In January 2018, the schools' accreditor downgraded their status to "preaccredited" and "issued a public notice...and instructed Dream Center to inform students," which it did not do. The Post adds, "Students kept enrolling, and the Education Department kept giving them federal loans, despite the schools' ineligibility."

Seattle Public Schools To Incorporate Ethnic Studies Into Math.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/22, Piro, 78K) reports on the Seattle Public Schools adoption of a Math Ethnic Studies Framework, which "would infuse math courses with elements of social justice, including studying how math has been 'appropriated by Western culture' and is used to 'oppress and marginalize people and communities of color.'" The Free Beacon adds, "Tracy Castro-Gill, the school district's ethnic studies director, said the proposal's priority is getting minority students more involved in studying mathematics." The framework "is part of a wider effort to infuse social justice into all aspects of school curricula."

Grand Jury Adds Conspiracy Charge In College Admissions Case.

NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 5, 1:38, Holt, 6.35M) reported, "The legal trouble facing one of the biggest names in the college entrance cheating scandal has taken a turn for the worse. Actress Lori Loughlin has been hit with another felony charge, along with other parents." NBC (Almaguer) added, "A federal grand jury in Boston has leveled a new charge of conspiracy to commit bribery against actress Lori Loughlin, her fashion designer husband, Massimo Giannulli, and nine other parents entangled in the college admissions scandal. Now facing more prison time if convicted, the additional charge comes as the group of wealthy and privileged parents refuse to plead guilty, as four others did Monday."

The CBS Evening News (10/22, story 5, 1:31, O'Donnell, 4.4M) reported, "Loughlin and her husband... were determined to fight the charges," while "fourteen pleaded guilty early on to avoid additional charges of money laundering." Loughlin and Giannulli "are accused of paying half a million dollars to guarantee their two daughters' admission to USC. The university now confirms both daughters are no longer enrolled." ABC World News Tonight (10/22, story 8, 1:36, Muir, 6.89M) said, "Any of these defendants could make a deal right up until trial. None of these cases are scheduled yet, so they still have time."

Second Circuit To Hear Trump Suit To Block Vance Subpoena For His Tax Returns Today.

In a profile of Manhattan district Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr., the Washington Post (10/21, Marimow, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports that he has "said he views the office as a sometimes partner – or backstop – to federal law enforcement." Vance "stepped in" after "federal prosecutors shut down their investigation into hush-money payments made before the 2016 presidential election" following the conviction last year of President Trump's former lawyer Michael Cohen. As part of that investigation, Vance "is now seeking Trump's tax returns," putting him "at the forefront of efforts to scrutinize the president's financial dealings." Today, the US Court of Appeals for the 2nd Circuit will hear Trump's lawsuit "seeking to stop Vance's subpoena for eight years of the president's tax returns."

Trump Organization Removes Trump Name From New York Ice Rinks.

The Washington Post (10/22, Bump, Farenthold, 14.2M) reports that "at two of President Trump's oldest businesses – a pair of ice rinks in Central Park, which Trump has run since the 1980s – Trump Organization employees did something unusual in the past few weeks. They started removing the Trump name." Trump's company "still runs" the two ice rinks.

Omar Denounces North Dakota Lawmaker For Debunked Photo Purporting She's A Terrorist.

The AP (10/22, Karnowski, MacPherson) reports Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) yesterday "condemned a Republican state senator from North Dakota who posted a long-debunked photo on his Facebook page that purports to show the Minnesota Democrat holding a weapon at an al-Qaida training camp." Omar "blasted state Sen. Oley Larsen's post, which also led to calls Tuesday from the Senate's top Republican and GOP Gov. Doug Burgum to apologize and relinquish a state Senate leadership position." Omar wrote on Twitter, "This is pure propoganda designed to stir up hate and violence coming from a GOP state rep. Facebook's unwillingness to crack down on hate speech and misinformation is not just threatening my life, but our democracy." The Grand Forks \(ND\) Herald (10/22, Port, 116K) originally reported on Larsen's post on Monday, and said "the photo is not of Omar. It's an Associated Press photo of military training camps in Mogadishu" taken in 1978.

White House Won't Renew NYTimes, WPost Subscriptions.

Politico (10/22, Calderone, 4.29M) reports that the White House said Tuesday that it will not renew subscriptions to The New York Times and The Washington Post. The move comes after President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' "Hannity" Monday evening that the Times is "a fake newspaper" and "we don't even want it in the White House anymore." Trump added, "We're going to probably terminate that and The Washington Post. ... They're fake." Politico adds that the comments "were interpreted by journalists on Twitter as meaning canceling paper subscriptions, rather than kicking reporters out of the White House." White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham confirmed that Trump was referring to the subscriptions, "which we won't be renewing." The Washington Times (10/22, Vogt, 492K) also reports on Trump's comments about the two newspapers in Monday's interview.

Ivanka Trump Discusses Paid Family Leave With Reddit Co-Founder At White House.

Bloomberg (10/22, Sink, 4.73M) reports Ivanka Trump "met with Reddit Inc. co-founder Alexis Ohanian at the White House Tuesday" as part of his effort to promote "to promote paid family leave." Ohanian "has said previously that he was drawn to the effort after the birth of his daughter, Alexis Olympia, in 2017," after which his wife, Serena Williams, "nearly died from medical complications related to the birth, and was confined to bed for some six weeks." Ivanka said in a statement, "I applaud Mr. Ohanian's advocacy for Paid Family Leave, for both mothers and fathers, an issue that has been of utmost importance to me and this administration."

Donor To Democrats, Trump Inauguration To Plead Guilty In Lobbying Scheme.

The Washington Post (10/22, Barrett, 14.2M) reports court documents filed in Los Angeles Tuesday show that Imaad Shah Zuberi, "a wealthy donor to President Trump's inaugural committee has agreed to plead guilty to charges he engaged in a multimillion-dollar lobbying scheme in which he arranged illegal campaign donations, concealed from the government the truth about his work and cheated on his taxes." According to the documents, Zuberi "plans to plead guilty to three charges covering five years of alleged crimes – a period when he was a prolific donor to Democratic candidates." The plea deal "does not cover a separate investigation in New York into Trump's inaugural committee." The Post says Zuberi, "came under intensifying scrutiny from investigators after the longtime donor to Democrats gave $900,000 to the president's inaugural committee and $100,000 to help pay off lingering debt from the 2016 Republican National Convention."

The New York Times (10/22, Vogel, 18.61M) says that while the charges against Zuberi "are not related to his donations to support Mr. Trump," if he "cooperated with prosecutors, it could have ripple effects into other investigations into contributions to Mr. Trump's inauguration, including of whether foreigners illegally funneled money to it in hopes of buying influence over American policy."

Memoir By Spiritual Adviser To Trump Draws Praise, Criticism From Evangelicals.

The Washington Times (10/22, Vondracek, 492K) reports, "A memoir by President Trump's spiritual adviser Paula White-Cain has drawn praise and derision from evangelicals, revealing division within Mr. Trump's base over the credibility of his Christian mentor." The book, "Something Greater" describes her life from "her conversion at 18 to her life as a Florida megachurch televangelist," and "details her first phone call with Mr. Trump and her mentorship, which culminated with her official invocation at the president's inauguration." The Times says the book has been boosted by the Rev. Franklin Graham, "and megachurch pastors/authors T.D. Jakes and Greg Laurie," but, the Times adds, "negative reaction to Ms. White-Cain's memoir has emerged almost as fast as the positive."

USDA IG Launches Probe Of Department's Handling Of Climate Science.

Politico (10/22, Evich, 4.29M) reports that the Agriculture Department's Office of the Inspector General has launched an investigation into the Department's "handling of climate science and communication after a series of POLITICO reports found that the department has been routinely burying its work on climate change, even as farmers and ranchers are increasingly dealing with its harmful effects." The move comes after "more than a dozen top Senate Democrats – including Senate Agriculture ranking member Debbie Stabenow (Mich.), Mazie Hirono (Hawaii), Patrick Leahy (Vt.), and Rep. Chellie Pingree (D-Maine) – formally asked IG to investigate in June, citing a POLITICO investigation that showed the USDA was broadly failing to disseminate its own climate science findings." Politico adds that the IG investigation "will examine whether any changes in policy or processes affected the publication of science or the communication of any research results. It will also look at changes in resources and staffing levels, suggesting that the probe could be quite broad."

Administration Moves To Weaken Protections For Delta Smelt.

The New York Times (10/22, Davenport, 18.61M) reports that the Administration has "moved to weaken protections" for the delta smelt, "a threatened California fish, a change that would allow large amounts of water to be diverted from the San Francisco Bay Delta to irrigate arid farmland and could harm the region's fragile ecosystem." The Times says the "biological opinion," which was released jointly Tuesday by the Interior and Commerce Departments, "reverses scientific findings made a decade ago, which granted Endangered Species Act protections for certain types of West Coast salmon and the smelt." The Times adds that the move is "a major victory for a wealthy group of California farmers that had lobbied to weaken protections on the fish."

Zogby Poll: Trump Tied With Warren, Leads Other Democratic Contenders.

The Washington Examiner (10/22, Bedard, 448K) reports, "Despite shrinking approval ratings, President Trump has expanded his base to include union workers, Hispanics, suburban and urban voters, and is ahead or tied with all the leading Democratic presidential candidates, according to a" Zogby Analytics survey of 887 US likely voters, taken Oct. 1-3. In hypothetical 2020 matchups, the poll shows Trump and Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) tied at 45%, while the President leads the other Democrats, besting ex-Vice President Joe Biden 47%-45%, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) 46%-44%, Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) 47%-41%, and South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg 49%-38%.

Florida Poll: Trump Trails Biden And Warren. The Hill (10/22, Klar, 2.98M) reports that a University of North Florida poll of 669 Florida voters, taken Oct. 14-20, shows Trump trailing Biden and Warren in hypothetical 2020 matchups. According to the poll, Biden leads Trump 48%-43%, while Warren tops the President 46%-43%. In other matchups, Trump prevails, topping Harris 44%-41% and edging Buttigieg 43%-42%, the poll shows. The Hill says, "No other Democratic candidates appear to have been polled against Trump in a general election mock-up. Pollsters also tested the top two Democrats against [Vice President] Pence as the House continues an impeachment inquiry into Trump.” In those matchups, Biden bests Pence 49%-38% and Warren tops the Vice President 46%-40%.

Trump Tweets He Has “95% Approval Rating In The Republican Party.” In a Wednesday morning tweet, President Trump wrote, “95% Approval Rating in the Republican Party. Thank you!”

WSJournal Analysis: Amid Impeachment Push, Trump Using Rallies To Fire Up Base. The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Bender, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that amid the ongoing impeachment probe, President Trump is using campaign rallies to directly address supporters and keep his base fired up ahead of the 2020 election. Trump campaign Communications Director Tim Murtaugh told the Journal, “Rallies were always an integral, main part of the campaign strategy, but now it makes communicating with people directly that much more important. It’s also important for the president’s supporters to see him out there fighting.”

Hill/HarrisX Poll: Biden 27%; Warren 19%; Sanders 14%; Buttigieg 6%; Harris 5%.

The Hill (10/22, Bonn, 2.98M) reports on a Hill-HarrisX poll of 440 Democrat and Democrat-leaning independent voters, taken Oct. 21-22, that shows Biden leading the race for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination with 27%, followed by Warren at 19%, Sanders at 14%, Buttigieg at 6%, and Harris at 5%; no other contender tops 3%. Warren’s support is up four points “from an Oct. 6-7 poll conducted before last week’s Democratic debate,” while Sanders saw a three-point drop in his support from the previous survey.

Emerson Poll: Biden 27%; Sanders 25%; Warren 21%; Buttigieg 6%; Harris 5%.

The Hill (10/22, Bowden, 2.98M) reports on an Emerson College poll of 430 Democratic voters, taken Oct. 18-21, that shows Biden leading with 27%, followed by Sanders at 25%, Warren at 21%, Buttigieg at 6%, and Harris at 5%; no other contender tops 4%.

NYTimes, WPost Analyses: Democrats Fret Over Primary Field’s Ability To Defeat Trump.

The New York Times (10/22, Martin, 18.61M) reports, “With doubts rising about” former Vice President Biden’s “ability to finance a multistate primary campaign, persistent questions about” Sen. Elizabeth Warren’s (D-MA) “viability in the general election and skepticism” about whether South Mayor Pete Buttigieg “can broaden his appeal beyond white voters, Democratic leaders are engaging in a familiar rite: fretting about who is” running for president “and longing for a white knight to enter the contest at the last minute. It is a regular, if not quite quadrennial, tradition for a party that can be fatalistic about its prospects and recalls similar Maalox moments Democrats endured in 1992, 2004 and in” 2016. However, “the mood of alarm is even more intense because of the party’s hunger to defeat President Trump and...their impatience with finding Mr. or Mrs. Right among the current crop of candidates.”

Similarly, the Washington Post (10/22, Linskey, Viser, 14.2M) reports that initially, the Democrats’ “massive field was hailed as the most diverse in history, with candidates who spanned the ideological spectrum and offered enough in a broad buffet of options to excite any voter.” Now, however, “another emotion is rising: anxiety. Party leaders and activists are citing weakness in all of the leading” candidates, with Biden having “been forced on the defensive about his family’s ethics,” performing “haltingly in debates and set[ting] off alarms with his poor fundraising. They also fret that the two other top-ranking” contenders, Warren and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), “are too liberal to win a general election. Other candidates have had moments to shine, but none yet have fully transformed that into anything approaching momentum.”

Breitbart: Hillary Clinton Post Of Beyoncé Quote Sparks Talk Of 2020 Bid.

Breitbart (10/22, Bleau, 673K) reports that Hillary Clinton on Tuesday created “more 2020 buzz after posting a quote from pop megastar Beyoncé about the need to take power, praising the sentiment and adding, ‘Beyoncé speaks the truth.’” Clinton “posted the quote from” Beyoncé “on Instagram on Tuesday. It read, ‘Power’s not given to you. You have to take it.’” @Beyonce speaks the truth,’ Clinton wrote as her caption alongside the hashtag #GutsyWomen – an homage to her latest children’s book.” Breitbart said Clinton’s move “fueled speculation surrounding the possibility of a 2020 run.”

Washington Examiner’s Adams Rips NYTimes’ Praise For Clinton’s “Bitter Online Trolling.” Writing for the Washington Examiner (10/22, 448K), Becket Adams highlights a recent edition of the New York Times On Politics newsletter, which he says serves as “a good example of what people mean when they say there is a media echo chamber.” Adams says the piece offers “praise for Hillary Clinton’s headlong descent into bitter online trolling. You would have to live in an alternate universe, or at least surround yourself with solely like-minded colleagues and peers, to believe Clinton is now ‘living her best life,’ as the” piece “declared this week. Clinton’s post-2016 public career has mostly involved her crisscrossing the country blaming everyone except herself for her defeat.”

For Some Black South Carolina Voters In Buttigieg Focus Groups, His Being Gay “A Barrier.”

McClatchy (10/23, Catanese, 19K) reports, “Internal focus groups conducted by [South Bend Mayor] Pete Buttigieg’s presidential campaign this summer reveal a key reason why he is struggling with black American voters: some see his sexuality as a problem. The 21-page report, conducted by the Benenson Strategy Group with black Democratic South Carolina voters in mid-July...found that ‘being gay was a barrier for these voters, particularly for the men who seemed deeply uncomfortable even discussing it. ... (T)heir preference is for his sexuality to not be front and center.” McClatchy adds that Buttigieg “is openly gay and married to his husband, Chasten.”

Tennessee County Officials Distance Themselves From Commissioner Who Called Buttigieg A Slur. The Knoxville \(TN\)

News Sentinel (10/22, Whetstone, Dorman, 307K) reports, "County officials in Tennessee moved swiftly Tuesday to distance themselves from a commissioner who used a homophobic slur to describe...Buttigieg during a public meeting. Commissioner Warren Hurst, who's held his seat for 33 years, made the remark ahead of a vote on a gun measure at Monday night's Sevier County commission meeting" while railing "against the national Democratic Party." The story says, "The county has since received a flood of criticism, including some calls for a tourism boycott of," among other things, "Gatlinburg and Pigeon Forge, which host dozens of tourist attractions, including Dollywood."

Ocasio-Cortez Backs Democratic Rep. Cuellar's Liberal Primary Challenger.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/22, Anderson, 78K) reports that Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "has endorsed another liberal challenger looking to unseat an incumbent House Democrat backed by party leadership." Ocasio-Cortez backed Democratic immigration attorney Jessica Cisneros in her primary challenge to Rep. Henry Cuellar (D-TX). Cisneros also has the backing of "Justice Democrats, the same progressive group that backed Ocasio-Cortez and Rep. Ilhan Omar (D., Minn.) in 2018. Ocasio-Cortez's endorsement marks another act of defiance toward Democratic leadership," as Speaker Pelosi and Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee chief Cheri Bustos (D-IL) are backing Cuellar.

Embattled GOP Texas House Speaker Bonnen Won't Seek Reelection.

The New York Times (10/22, Montgomery, 18.61M) reports, "With the fallout from a secretly recorded meeting with a conservative activist plunging him deeper into scandal," GOP Texas state House Speaker Dennis Bonnen on Tuesday announced "that he would not seek reelection to the leadership post or in his district. Though many inside the party had been pressuring him to step" down, Bonnen's decision "tipped Texas Republicans into further uncertainty ahead of the 2020 elections." His "announcement came just over a week after the release of a recording of a June 12 meeting," in which "Bonnen offered to provide Michael Quinn Sullivan, the leader of Empower Texans, with long-sought press credentials to the House floor in exchange for help from Mr. Sullivan in working to defeat 10 moderate Republicans whom the speaker perceived to be out of step with his conservative agenda."

FEC's Hunter Faults Chair, Urges Naming New Slate Of Commissioners.

Caroline Hunter, member of the United States Federal Election Commission, writes in Politico Magazine (10/22, 4.24M) criticizing FEC chairwoman Ellen Weintraub for "rushing around giving interviews, tweeting and generally weighing in on a whole host of topics both within and outside of the FEC's area of expertise." Hunter says "Weintraub's tweets and interviews...are harming the legitimacy of" the FEC, because they "indicate that she has prematurely judged matters that could come before the FEC, and that she radically rejects any legal perspective other than her own." In addition, "she risks misleading the public about what the FEC does and what campaign finance law really says." Hunter criticizes Weintraub for her public criticism of the President and for "inflammatory public statements and inappropriate tactics" that "risk delegitimizing the FEC by reducing the public's trust in it to act fairly." Hunter suggests "Congress and the president...take a hard look at replacing" the sitting commissioners "and starting fresh."

WPost Analysis: High Court's Gerrymandering Rulings Resulting In Tougher Abortion Laws.

A Washington Post (10/22, Thebault, 14.2M) analysis reports on the impact the Supreme Court's "stance that federal judges have no power to stop partisan gerrymandering" could have on state abortion laws. According to "experts," the "age-old practice of hyperpartisan redistricting...has led to more-extreme laws countrywide – none more visible this year than those dealing with abortion." The Post adds that "to really grasp the impact that gerrymandering has had on abortion laws, you have to look back to 2010, said Dan Vicuña, the national redistricting manager at voting rights watchdog group Common Cause." That year, "Republicans set out to win control of as many statehouses as possible, which gave them power to redraw state and congressional districts after the census." Vicuña said, "Republicans took over tons of state legislatures, and they were interested in gerrymandering." He added that since then, "the number of abortion bans passed at the state level has exploded."

Tapper Suggests Hawley Is An Anti-Semite.

The Federalist (10/22, Clark, 126K) reports that CNN's Jake Tapper "insinuated in a tweet" that comments by Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) were anti-Semitic. Tapper wrote, "In which [Josh Hawley] calls a Jewish journalist a 'smug, rich liberal elitist.'" Tapper's tweet came after Hawley "tweeted our his disdain" for a piece by Washington Post opinion writer Greg Sargent titled, "The White House didn't like my agency's research. So it sent us to Missouri." Hawley tweeted, "I assume this is a parody, right? DC bureaucrats aren't actually saying out loud that moving to Missouri is ... punishment, are they? Because surely nobody could be that condescending & elitist." Sargent responded, "What's really 'condescending' here is the sort of smarmy, smirking contempt for people's intelligence that [Josh Hawley] is displaying. Coming from a leading intellectual light of the new 'conservative nationalism,' this unmasks the phony pastoral posturing that lies at its core." Hawley replied, "Only a smug, rich liberal elitist would say that defending your home is 'phony pastoral posturing,' whatever that means."

Freshman Hill Denies Relationship With Aide, Blames "Abusive Husband."

Politico (10/22, Bresnahan, Caygle, 4.29M) reports "freshman Democratic Rep. Katie Hill (Calif.) is denying allegations that she had an improper relationship with a congressional staffer, and blamed the controversy on an 'abusive husband' that she is in the midst of divorcing." According to "multiple Democratic sources," Hill "has reached out to Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer (D-Md.) to deny the allegations." Hill told Politico, "The fact is I am going through a divorce from an abusive husband who seems determined to try to humiliate me. ... I am disgusted that my opponents would seek to exploit such a private matter for political gain."

The Washington Examiner (10/22, Ferrechio, 448K) points out "a reporter asked...Hoyer about the matter, and the Maryland Democrat said he had 'no comment.'" Hill "stands accused of having an extramarital affair with a former campaign staffer in her congressional bid, as well as her current legislative director, RedState reported Friday. The campaign staff member is a woman, and the congressional office employee is a man." The Examiner adds "an explicit photo of Hill, first published by RedState on Friday, shows a naked Hill, 32, sitting on a chair and combing the hair of a fully clothed woman kneeling in front of her." The New York Times (10/22, Stolberg, 18.61M) indicates "members of Congress are barred by House rules from engaging in sexual relationships with their aides, but the rules do not cover campaign staff." Hill "said the photograph, which appears to show the congresswoman seated and brushing the hair of another woman, was the subject of a police investigation." Said Hill, "Intimate photos of me and another individual were published by Republican operatives on the internet without my consent."

The Washington Post (10/22, Lee, 14.2M) reports "the RedState article also alleged that Hill and her husband had been in a consensual relationship with a third person, a female campaign staffer in her 20s. The article included texts and intimate photos that it said included Hill and the staffer."

WPost's Hesse: Strange That Romney Used Secret Twitter Account.

Columnist Monica Hesse writes in the Washington Post (10/22, 14.2M) "Style" section that the "oddest aspect of Mitt Romney's secret Twitter account was the fact that it existed at all — that a genuinely powerful man with the time-honored platform of a US Senate seat and a well-established brand as the 2012 GOP presidential nominee had chosen to become a lurker in order to communicate his positions." Hesse questions, "Why would he act as though talking about politics was a subversive act that required a deep cover? Why would Mitt Romney need a shadow account to speak truth to power?" She concludes that the "sad conclusion to be reached from this account's existence isn't that it came from a place of vanity, but that it came from a place of perceived powerlessness."

Carter Fractures Pelvis In Fall.

NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 10, 0:15, Holt, 6.35M) reported, "Former President Jimmy Carter is hospitalized tonight after another health scare. The 95-year-old fractured his pelvis after falling at his Georgia home."

The CBS Evening News (10/22, story 9, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.4M) reported, "Former President Jimmy Carter is recovering tonight. He fell at home last night, and he fractured his pelvis. ... Carter is 95 and the oldest living former President in US history."

WSJournal: California Gas Prices Are Higher Because Of State Policies.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), in an editorial, says that California Gov. Gavin Newsom has asked Attorney General Xavier Becerra to look into why oil companies charge higher gasoline prices than in other states. The Journal says the higher cost is due to state policies requiring special formulations of gasoline, cap-and-trade, and higher state gas taxes, which the Journal says are about $0.77 higher than the national average. The state Energy Commission in an earlier investigation found no unlawful actions to explain the higher prices. The Journal also says that prices are higher because California has higher taxes generally and because the state has a higher minimum wage. The Journal urges Californians to recognize that higher prices are due to the policies enacted by Democrats in the state Capitol.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 42.4%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 42.4%, and his disapproval at 53.6%. The President's job approval is up 0.4 since yesterday; his disapproval is down by 1.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (10/17-10/21) finds Trump's approval at 45%, with 52% disapproving.

An Emerson poll of 1,000 "registered voters" (10/18-10/21) shows Trump's approval at 43%, and his disapproval at 51%.

A CNN survey of 892 "registered voters" (10/17-10/20), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 42%, and his disapproval at 57%.

World's Top Economists Say Trump's Trade War Hurting Global Growth.

NBC News (10/22, 6.14M) reports, "Globally prominent economic minds are raising alarms about global financial security, saying that President Donald Trump's trade war with China and his protectionist policies are creating a drag on growth that is hurting economies around the world." At the IMF's recent meeting in Washington, "trade tensions emerged as a chief concern, with the organization's World Economic Outlook showing that trade practices already are causing growth to decelerate." Peterson Institute for International Economics Senior Fellow Nicolas Véron said, "The U.S.-China escalation is the big story of the moment and there's no resolution in sight." Moody's Analytics chief economist Mark Zandi "said the trade war has shaved half a percentage point off global GDP growth and cost the U.S. 375,000 jobs."

Lebanon's Banks Remain Closed As Crisis Rages.

Reuters (10/22, Francis, Perry) reports, "Lebanon's banks will remain closed for a fifth working day amid uncertainty over how Prime Minister Saad al-Hariri plans to extract billions of dollars from the financial sector to help ease an economic crisis that has ignited national protests." The moves Hariri announced on Monday "included the symbolic halving of the salaries of ministers and lawmakers, as well as steps toward implementing long-delayed measures vital to fixing the finances of the heavily indebted state." However, Reuters interviewed five bankers who "said details of the measures had not been explained to them and they were awaiting the return of central bank governor Riad Salameh from Washington, where he has been attending IMF and World Bank meetings, to shed light."

In an analysis, the Washington Post (10/22, Baumann, 14.2M) explains how the crisis came about, saying that previous governments' "economic and political choices have led to an increasingly untenable situation for which the country's political class has few answers. The benefits of unsustainable government borrowing has fed a narrow class of elites without addressing growing poverty, while the tax system further entrenched inequality." The Lebanese government "has failed to address such large-scale issues as the widespread corruption, recent forest fires and a looming currency crisis. And protesters are expressing that they're no longer willing to stand by."

IMF Issues Warning About Rising Inequality Among Nations' Regions.

NPR (10/22, Rosalsky, 3.12M) reports that IMF Research Department head Gita Gopinath presented a study that "looked at regional economic performance within 20 advanced countries across the industrialized world over the last few decades." The study's "authors find that after a long period of catching up to the rest of their countries, poorer regions began lagging behind in the 1980s." The authors "estimate it's about a fifth of all the regions in their sample." While the study found that "leading regions tend to be urban, educated, and specialized in services, like technology, finance, law, design, and hospitality," it also found that "lagging regions tend to be rural, less educated, and specialized in old-school occupations such as those in agriculture, mining, manufacturing, and construction."

Brazil Passes Long-Awaited Pension Reform.

The Financial Times (10/22, Schipani, Harris, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports Brazil has passed a long-delayed reform of its pension system, in a big victory for President Jair Bolsonaro.

Johnson Loses Scheduling Vote; Brexit Likely To Be Delayed For Third Time.

According to Reuters (10/22, James, Maclellan, Piper), "Britain's departure from the European Union was thrown into chaos on Tuesday after parliament rejected Prime Minister Boris Johnson's extremely tight timetable for ratifying his exit deal." Parliament "voted 322 to 308 against the so-called Programme Motion which set out a three-day schedule to rush his deal through the House of Commons." However, "Earlier, lawmakers voted 329 to 299 in favour of the second reading of his 115-page Withdrawal Agreement Bill, a significant boost for Johnson just five days after he struck a last-minute deal with the EU." Reuters says Johnson "had warned parliament that if it defeated him on the timetable and forced a delay until January then he would abandon his attempt to ratify the deal and push for an election instead under the slogan of 'Get Brexit Done.'"

The AP (10/22, Lawless, Kirka) says the votes "effectively guarantees" Brexit "won't happen on the scheduled date of Oct. 31." Elsewhere yesterday, European Council President Donald Tusk "said...EU leaders 'will decide in coming days' whether to grant Britain that extension – what would be the third." The Washington Post (10/22, Booth, Adam, 14.2M) reports that Johnson "warned Britons that the government would immediately step up preparations to leave the European Union with no deal at the end of October." However, according to the Post, "that could be a bluff." The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Colchester, Douglas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), New York Times (10/22, Landler, Castle, 18.61M) and Bloomberg (10/22, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover the day's votes.

UK Police To Travel To US To Interview Diplomat's Wife Involved In Fatal Crash.

The New York Times (10/22, Magra, 18.61M) reports that police officers from Britain who are "investigating a crash that killed a teenage motorcyclist...in August will travel to the United States to interview the American suspect who claimed diplomatic immunity and fled the country shortly after the accident." According to the Times, Anne Sacoolas "is the wife of an American diplomat who worked at a Royal Air Force base," and "as such, she was entitled to immunity under a 1995 treaty between Britain and the United States, Britain's foreign secretary, Dominic Raab, told Parliament on Monday." Sacoolas "is suspected of being the driver of a car that the police say was traveling on the wrong side of the road when it collided with a motorcycle ridden by Harry Dunn, 19, on Aug. 27."

The Washington Post (10/22, Hassan, 14.2M) says Sacoolas "will be questioned under the British equivalent of Miranda rights, allowing her the right to refuse to answer any questions and the warning that anything she does say could be used at trial." According to the Post, "Though first cooperating with police, Sacoolas, who is the wife of a U.S. government official, claimed diplomatic immunity under international law and returned to the United States – despite telling police she had no plans to do so."

Bipartisan Supporters Of Hong Kong Legislation Want Senate Vote This Week.

Bloomberg (10/22, 4.73M) reports that both Republicans and Democrats in the Senate are "keeping up pressure for a swift vote on legislation to show support for pro-democracy protesters in Hong Kong by requiring annual reviews of whether the city is sufficiently autonomous from Beijing to justify its special trading status with the U.S." Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX), a sponsor of the Hong Kong Human Rights and Democracy Act, said today he would like a vote this week. Sen. Ben Cardin (D-MD), another sponsor, "said Senate leaders are considering using a unanimous-consent vote to pass the legislation and that Republican supporters are checking with their colleagues for any signs of opposition." Bloomberg reports that last week, the House "passed a slightly different measure that would have to be reconciled with the Senate bill."

Reuters Analysis: Gantz Has "No Clear Path" To Assembling Coalition Israeli Government.

Reuters (10/22) reports that today, Israeli President Reuven Rivlin "will...task centrist politician Benny Gantz with trying to form the next coalition government after Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu failed." A second Reuters (10/22, Heller) reports says Gantz "also has no clear path to success." According to Reuters, Gantz has "said he wants a 'liberal' government, shorthand for one that does not include Netanyahu's religious partners," but "as things stand now, he has the endorsement of 54 lawmakers, seven short of a parliamentary majority." In addition, "10 of the those 54 legislators belong to a four-party Arab alliance," and "no party drawn from Israel's 21% Arab minority has ever been invited to join an Israeli government or has sought to serve in one."

A New York Times (10/22, Halbfinger, 18.61M) analysis says Gantz "will now take his turn at trying to form a government, but experts say he has even less of a chance to do so than" Netanyahu. The Times suggests that a "third round of elections could be ahead." Meanwhile, a new poll released Tuesday "showed that most Israelis would like to replace" the current multiparty parliamentary system with a two-party system.

Catalan President Hopes November Election Will Boost Independence Drive.

Reuters (10/22, Faus) reports, "Catalonia's secessionist movement aims to get over 50% of the region's vote in a Nov. 10 Spanish election after mass protests over the jailing of nine separatists, which would strengthen its push for independence, the regional government head told Reuters on Tuesday." Quim Torra told Reuters in an interview, "It's obvious that the goal is to surpass the 50% (of support for pro-independence parties) and, if possible, in the next Spanish parliamentary (elections)," calling the independence process "irreversible."

Media Analyses: Trudeau Will Have To Rely On Progressive NDP To Govern.

The AP (10/22) reports Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "won a second term in a stronger-than-expected showing in Canada's national elections, claiming a 'clear mandate' Tuesday despite a Parliament and nation increasingly fractured along regional lines." Trudeau's Liberal Party "took the most seats in Parliament but lost its majority in Monday's balloting," which "means it will have to rely on an opposition party to pass legislation." According to the AP, "With results still trickling in, the Liberals had 157 seats – 13 short of the 170 needed for a majority in the 338-seat House of Commons – while the Conservatives had 121." Reuters (10/22, Ljunggren) says Trudeau "looks set to govern with support from the left-leaning New Democratic Party, which also lost seats but managed to do well enough to hold the balance of power. Together, the parties would control a comfortable majority of 181 seats."

The New York Times (10/22, 18.61M) editorializes that "a humbled" Trudeau "survived" this weekend's election, but lost his parliamentary majority and the popular vote. The Times writes, "Let us hope that Mr. Trudeau returns to office chastened and wiser." On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says voters delivered a rebuke while letting Trudeau hold onto power but with a minority government.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/22, 14.2M) says that while Trudeau "will now have to govern with other, smaller parties, this was an unexpectedly strong result" considering that "during his campaign, he admitted that he had worn blackface and brownface on several occasions, and Canada's former attorney general accused him of unduly pressuring her to end a prosecution."

US, OAS Raise Concerns About Vote Counting In Bolivia's Presidential Election.

Reuters (10/22, Taj) reports the Organization of American States, "Bolivia's election observer, will convene a special meeting on Wednesday after a disputed presidential vote showed President Evo Morales would win outright, which sparked angry protests around the South American nation." The OAS "raised concerns after an official rapid count of votes gave Morales, a leftist in power since 2006, a 10-point lead over rival Carlos Mesa," which "would allow Morales to avoid a risky second round."

The Washington Post (10/22, Faiola, 14.2M) reports that Michael Kozak, Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere affairs, tweeted: "The U.S. rejects the Electoral Tribunal's attempts to subvert #Bolivia's democracy by delaying the vote count & taking actions that undermine the credibility of Bolivia's elections." According to the Post, "Critics warned that the election was in danger of losing legitimacy, violent protests erupted in several Bolivian cities, and the country was at risk of being seen as exactly what it has insisted it is not: Another Venezuela."

NYTimes Calls On Chile To Spread Wealth More Evenly.

The New York Times (10/22, 18.61M) editorializes that amid growing protests spurred by economic inequality, "the obvious path for Chile is for the government to spend more money improving the quality of life for a vast majority of Chileans." The Times notes that Andrónico Luksic Craig, chairman of the industrial conglomerate Quíñenco, "wrote on Saturday on Twitter that he was ready to pay higher taxes. 'There is no magic,' he wrote — no alternative to simply spreading the wealth more evenly." The Times argues, "It is time for the Chilean government to acknowledge that reality, too."

Calabria Open To Wiping Out GSE Shareholders If Necessary; Mnuchin Leaves Receivership On The Table.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/22, Dexheimer, 4.73M) reports FHFA Director Mark Calabria, "facing scrutiny from Democrats about whether freeing Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac from government control "might enrich hedge funds, said he would be willing to wipe out shareholders of the mortgage giants if circumstances called for it." At Tuesday's House Financial Services Committee hearing, Calabria "said that while it isn't his objective to wipe out or enrich shareholders, he will do what's needed to ensure taxpayers don't have to bail out the companies again." Also testifying was Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, who "reiterated Tuesday that it's 'by far' his preference to work with Congress on an overhaul of Fannie and Freddie. Mnuchin and Calabria both said during the hearing that no decision has been made on how exactly Fannie and Freddie might be released." Mnuchin left the option of receivership "on the table," and Calabria "wouldn't commit to supporting recap and release, adding that he opposes releasing Fannie and Freddie if they end up operating in the same way as they did before the 2008 crisis."

HousingWire (10/22, 23K) reports Calabria said, "I'm on the record as saying in 2008 what we should have done is wipe out the shareholders." However, according to HousingWire, Calabria "said ...his mandate now is to put the companies on firm footing and release them from conservatorship or, if warranted, put them into receivership — and he made clear his intent was the former."

Calabria: GSEs Would Fail In Downturn. MarketWatch (10/22, Passy, 1.67M) reports Calabria also "frequently noted that Fannie and Freddie were operating at leverage ratios of 500 to 1, while most major banks are only allowed to maintain leverage ratios of 10 to 1." He said, "Even if every single loan Fannie and Freddie made were pristine, they would still fail at that level of leverage" in the event of a downturn. Fox Business (10/22, O'Halloran, 1.73M) reports Calabria said, "Let me be absolutely crystal clear, Fannie and Freddie will fail in a downturn. ... Our housing market and the economy is strong, this is the time to do it. I fear that if we don't do it now we won't be able to make these reforms in times of stress."

Calabria Committed To Preventing "Charter Creep." American Banker (10/22, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Calabria "also hinted at a future rulemaking intended to shrink Fannie and Freddie's footprints," and he "anticipates rulemaking to prevent charter creep." Calabria said that the FHFA "will be setting up a rulemaking to have a very clear process to make sure the GSEs stay within their charters."

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/22, Yang, Subscription Publication) reports, "The Main Street GSE Reform Coalition Tuesday morning outlined its principles for government-sponsored enterprise reform. Among other things, the coalition — comprised of affordable housing advocates, civil rights organizations, small and mid-sized lenders, and homebuilders — said it remains concerned about any move to shrink the footprint of the GSEs or drive up the cost of credit."

Calabria: Red Tape Is Hindering Housing Affordability. DS News (10/22, Albanese) reports Calabria also discussed housing affordability. He said, "Too many Americans lack what each of us deserves: an affordable place to call home, whether it is rented or owned." Calling housing affordability a "national problem" that has local roots, Calabria pointed to zoning and land-use restrictions, environmental regulations, building codes, and permitting requirements, blaming them for "disproportionately hurt[ing] low-income Americans." According to Calabria, "Our affordability problems will not be solved until local governments remove these impediments that limit the supply of affordable housing in their communities. Our housing finance system also has a role to play. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac exist to ensure mortgage credit availability through the economic cycle."

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg Law (10/22, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports HFSC Chairwoman Maxine Waters criticized the Administration's GSE reform plan, claiming that it would create turmoil because Congress has not created an explicit guarantee for the GSEs' MBS. Providing similar coverage of the hearing are Seeking Alpha (10/22, 512K), WHNT-TV Huntsville, AL (10/22, 192K), and a paywalled piece from Bloomberg Law (10/22, Subscription Publication, 4K).

The Credit Union National Association (10/22) wrote in a letter sent for the hearing's record, "A robust, smoothly functioning national housing finance system with an efficient, effective and fair secondary market that provides equal access to lenders of all sizes is a key concern for credit unions and the members they serve. Credit unions are a small, but increasingly important, source for average working Americans to obtain safe, affordable mortgages."

GSE Credit Quality Improved In Q3.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/22, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "The credit quality of loans delivered into Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac mortgage-backed securities generally strengthened in the third quarter." Mortgages with low credit scores and high LTV ratios "represented a smaller share of the government-sponsored enterprises' business, although overall volume was up across the board. As in previous quarters, the biggest clumps of GSE business were in low-risk categories." According to IMF, "Some 7.27% of Fannie/Freddie purchase loans fell in the highest-risk category, having credit scores below 700 and LTV ratios over 80%. Although the sheer volume of such loans delivered to the GSEs was up 23.3% from the previous quarter, the risk distribution was down from 7.68% in the prior period. The risk categories used in this analysis were designed several years ago by the Federal Housing Finance Agency, and they exclude FICO scores below 620 and LTV ratios over 97%.”

JPM Sponsors Its First Synthetic CRT Transaction Since The Financial Crisis.

Asset Securitization Report (10/22, Hintze) reports, "JPMorgan is turning to the credit-risk transfer securitization model in a new $757.2 million securitization of prime-quality residential mortgages that it will retain on its books. According to Fitch Ratings, Chase Mortgage Reference Notes 2019-CL1 is Chase's first synthetic credit-linked note transaction, although it follows in the footsteps of two earlier post-crisis deals sponsored by Chase aimed at reinvigorating the private-label residential mortgage-backed securities market." ASR says that the transaction is "similar to the GSE credit-risk transfer platforms – Fannie Mae's Connecticut Avenue Series and Freddie Mac's Structured Agency Credit Risk program – JPMorgan will make payments on the CL1 transaction to the note holders based on the interest rate on the CL1 notes and principal payments are determined based on the actual principal payments received and performance of the reference pool."

Hunt Provides $6M Freddie Mac SBL Financing For Aurora, CO Apartment Refi.

According to Multifamily Biz (10/22), Hunt Real Estate Capital "announced...it provided a Freddie Mac Small Balance Loan in the amount of $5.86 million to refinance a multifamily property located in Aurora, Colorado." Fitz Apartments is "a 46-unit multifamily property" that contains "14 one-bedroom units and 32 two-bedroom units."

Housing Finance Industry Backs Proposed Change To FDIC Disclosure Requirement; Some Investors Oppose The Move.

According to National Mortgage News (10/22, Sinnock), "The housing finance industry supports a proposed rule revision that would exempt banks regulated by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. from an RMBS disclosure requirement, but some investors oppose the move." The proposal would address a "discrepancy" between the SEC's rules and those of the FDIC "related to whether private placements are exempt from the SEC's Reg AB disclosure requirements. Private placements have an exemption under the SEC's rules, but not under the FDIC's. This imposes a disclosure requirement on depositories that nonbanks don't have." According to NMN, "The Housing Policy Council, JPMorgan Chase, the Mortgage Bankers Association and the American Bankers Association all support changing this aspect of the FDIC's Securitization Safe Harbor rule."

Veterans Affairs Department Reportedly Taking Lenders To Task Over Potential IRRRL Abuses.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/21, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "Even though legislation was signed into law earlier this year to curb abuses tied to streamlined refinances of VA loans, some lenders apparently didn't get the message – and now the Veterans Administration is taking action." Earlier this month, the VA reportedly "held a teleconference with roughly 10 lenders" that administrators claimed had "two main deficiencies: The refis they're currently funding are not properly seasoned and there are mistakes on the refi calculations." According to IMF, although it is "unclear which lenders were on the call," UWM and NewDay USA "said they were not participants." Collingwood VP Stephanie Schader said, "The VA has started to contact lenders regarding recent refinances that may be ineligible for guarantee."

CFPB Mortgage Complaints Declined In Q3.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/22, Yang, Subscription Publication) reports, "Public complaints filed with the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau regarding home mortgages declined in almost every category except in the area of applications." Total mortgage complaints "fell 7.2% to 5,375 from the second to the third quarter of 2019. Complaints have nearly halved from the third quarter of 2016. Criticisms about servicing fell 9.9% on a sequential basis, followed by loan modifications (8.4%) and closings (1.6%). But when it came to applications, gripes increased 9.6% from the second to the third quarter." Servicing continued to draw the majority of the mortgage complaints. Wells Fargo Bank "drew the most gripes, with Mr. Cooper and Ocwen Financial finishing second and third respectively."

HUD Secretary: HECM Program's Changes Have Been Beneficial, But More Reforms Are Needed.

Reverse Mortgage Daily (10/22, Clow, 43K) reports that in testimony before the House Financial Services Committee on Tuesday, HUD Secretary Carson "reiterated...his and the department's commitment to addressing the financial viability of the Home Equity Conversion Mortgage (HECM) program, stating recent program changes have been 'directionally positive.'" According to RMD, "Appearing alongside Secretary of the Treasury Steven Mnuchin and Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) Director Dr. Mark Calabria, Carson's statement detailed many of the recent issues faced by the HECM program and reiterated recent proposals by the Trump Administration to shore up the program's finances within the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund (MMIF)." Carson said in a written statement that HUD "recommends Congress reform the loan limit structure in the HECM program to reflect variation in local housing markets and regional economies." Second, Carson said that HUD "proposes Congress set a separate HECM capital reserve ratio and remove HECMs as obligations to the MMIF." And third, HUD proposes that FHA should eliminate HECM-to-HECM refis, because "these transactions result in greater appraisal inflation, increasing program costs, and negatively impacting GNMA-guaranteed HECM MBS (HMBS) due to quick 'churn' in pool participations," Carson said.

Carson Defends Puerto Rico Hurricane Funding Delay. NBC News (10/22, 6.14M) reports HUD Secretary Carson also "defended his agency for knowingly missing a legally required deadline that would have kicked off a monthlong process to help Puerto Rico get billions in federal housing funds Congress allocated after Hurricane Maria devastated the island in 2017." Carson said that he would not "put an unprecedented amount of money without the appropriate controls" in "a jurisdiction in which there are three changes of government within a month" and "has historically had difficulty with financial management."

CUNA, FASB Announce December 19 Webinar Regarding CECL Implementation.

The Credit Union National Association (10/22) announced that it will "partner with the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) for a Dec. 19 webinar on the current expected credit loss (CECL) standard, one of several CECL implementation workshops hosted by credit union organizations. FASB recently approved delaying CECL implementation for credit unions to January 2023."

NAR: Existing-Home Sales Fell In September, Missing Expectations.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Kusisto, Torry, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the National Association of Realtors announced that existing-home sales fell 2.2% in September from the prior month, declining to a seasonally adjusted rate of 5.38 million. According to The Journal, the drop followed two consecutive months in which sales rose. The median sales price for existing homes in September was $272,100, up just under six percent from September 2018. This marked the strongest rate of appreciation since January 2018.

Reuters (10/22, Dunsmuir) reports sales fell more than economists had predicted. Economists polled by Reuters "had forecast existing home sales declining 0.7% to 5.45 million units." Although mortgage rates are still historically low, with Freddie Mac reporting the 30-year FRM average fell more than 125 basis points since its peak last November, the rate of home price gains is outpacing wage growth.

HousingWire (10/22, Lloyd, 23K) reports NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun said, "We must continue to beat the drum for more inventory. Home prices are rising too rapidly because of the housing shortage, and this lack of inventory is preventing home sales growth potential."

Bloomberg (10/22, Pickert, 4.73M) reports, "At the current pace, it would take 4.1 months to sell all the homes on the market, compared with four months in August; Realtors see anything below five months of supply as a sign of a tight market." First-time buyers made up a third of September's sales, "up from 31 percent the previous month."

National Mortgage Professional (10/22, Hall) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "Existing-home sales declined in September, but are running more than seven percent ahead of last year's sales pace, led by an almost 10 percent gain in the South. Home sales still remain constrained by a lack of inventory, with only 4.1 months of supply at the end of last month. The combination of a strong job market and low mortgage rates continue to support housing demand as 2019 comes to a close. Buyer interest is particularly robust among first-time homebuyers, who made up a third of sales last month. Millennials' interest in homeownership is strong, and should continue to support home sales growth heading into next year, given the low rate environment and still favorable economic conditions."

With Mortgage Rates Low, Pulte Boosts Its Annual Home Sales Forecast.

Reuters (10/22) reports US homebuilder PulteGroup "raised its full-year forecast for home sales on Tuesday, after it posted a better-than-expected quarterly profit as lower mortgage rates boosted demand." CEO Ryan Marshall said, "Given a broadly favorable macroeconomic backdrop and expectations for interest rates to remain low, we see the opportunity for housing demand to continue moving higher over time." According to Reuters, "The 30-year fixed mortgage rate has dropped more than 125 basis points since last November's peak to an average of 3.69%, according to data from mortgage finance agency Freddie Mac. Marshall added that he expects a modest expansion in purchase of homes by first-time buyers through 2020 and beyond." Now, Pulte "expects home sales of between 23,000 and 23,200 homes for 2019, up from a previous forecast of 22,300 to 22,800 homes. It sold 6,186 homes in the quarter, 2.6% higher than last year."

Redfin: Buyers And Sellers Feel They Have Been Hurt By Home Price Gains.

National Mortgage Professional (10/22, Hall) reports that a "new survey conducted by Redfin" found that "both homebuyers and sellers have seen their lives turn for the worse because of rising house prices." NMP says, "In a survey conducted in June of 3,000 individuals who either bought or sold a primary residence in the last year or plan to in the next 12 months, Redfin found 46 percent of respondents complaining that rising home prices over the past decade have made their life worse, while 16 percent believed rising home prices made their life better". In addition, "buyers who purchased their residences at the bottom of the market in 2012 have collectively earned $203 billion in home equity while current first-time homebuyers are challenged to find affordable homeownership options at today's prices."

Facebook Pledges $1B To Create Affordable Housing In California.

The New York Times (10/22, Dougherty, 18.61M) reports, "Facebook said on Tuesday it would give $1 billion in a package of grants, loans and land toward easing California's severe housing crunch by building an estimated 20,000 new housing units for middle- and lower-income households." HousingWire (10/22, Ramirez, 23K) reports California Governor Gavin Newsom (D) said, "Access to more affordable housing for all families is key to addressing economic inequality and restoring social mobility in California and beyond. State government cannot solve housing affordability alone, we need others to join Facebook in stepping up – progress requires partnership with the private sector and philanthropy to change the status quo and address the cost crisis our state is facing. Public-private partnerships around excess land is an important component in moving us forward."

Companies Pushed To Prepare For SOFR And Other Benchmarks As Libor's Demise Approaches.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Maurer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports companies are being urged by regulators and analysts to accelerate their preparations to transition away from Libor. While several banks and regulators having decided back in 2017 to utilize SOFR as a replacement, companies are being advised to make preparations for using multiple other reference rates. According to Ernst & Young partner Jeff Vitali, flexibility will be key in achieving a gradual migration to SOFR reference rate. GTreasury VP Peter Seward said that when it comes to accounting standards, companies tend to procrastinate, waiting for banks and vendors to prepare for the transition. An executive from Chatham Financial Corp. said that incorporating SOFR could cause lengthy wait times for companies to develop liquidity.

Analysis: Housing Market Continues "Humming Along."

In an analysis piece for CNN (10/22, 83.16M), digital correspondent Paul R. Le Monica says, "Despite a recent drop in retail sales, softer business spending and a slowdown in job growth, the housing market keeps humming along. That's good news for a US economy that may need housing to keep the current recovery alive." According to CNN, "Low mortgage rates are helping to convince some renters, particularly younger millennials looking to start families, to take the plunge and buy homes. The average rate for a 30-year fixed mortgage is now just 3.69% according to mortgage financing company Freddie Mac. That's down from about 4.5% at the start of 2019 and a multi-year peak of 4.94% last November." Although the trade war with China could bring down the housing market, so far, "consumers are largely shrugging off the threat of more tariffs and other geopolitical uncertainties that have occasionally rattled investors this year. They continue to buy houses as well as home improvement goods to spruce them up."

Dollar Holds Onto Gains.

Reuters (10/23, White) reports that on Wednesday, the "dollar index against a basket of six major currencies stood at 97.545, holding on to a 0.2% gain posted on Tuesday." The US currency "fell 0.15% to 108.32 yen."

Gold Edges Higher.

Reuters \(IND\) (10/22, Lahiri) reports, "Gold prices were largely unchanged on Wednesday, as investors awaited more clarity on the Brexit issue and the US-China trade war, but a rally in the bond markets provided modest support to the bullion." Spot gold "was up 0.1 % at $1,489.07 per ounce as of 0254 GMT," while US gold futures "rose 0.3% to $1,492.20 per ounce."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (10/23, Samanta) reports, "Oil fell on Wednesday after climbing over 1% in the previous session as US industry data showed a bigger-than-expected build in crude stocks, but the possibility of deeper output cuts from OPEC and its allies prevented a further decline." Brent crude futures "dropped 23 cents, or 0.39%, to $59.47 a barrel by 0652 GMT on Wednesday." West Texas Intermediate crude futures "for December delivery, the new front-month contract, fell 32 cents, or 0.59%, to $54.16 per barrel."

FBI Asks For Public's Help In Curbing Internet Crime.

WBBJ-TV Jackson, TN (10/22) reports from Jackson, Tennessee, "According to the FBI, Americans lose billions of dollars to Internet crimes every year, and now the FBI wants to work with you to stay ahead of it. 'We do everything we can to get the word out on how to be safe. But inevitably, we are dealing with some pretty sophisticated criminals and bad guys,' Assistant Special Agent-in-Charge Jeremy Baker of the FBI Memphis Division said. 'Sometimes we even see some foreign countries that hire people to get into organizations' systems and individuals' computers.' 'The public sector, the government, the FBI, we partner with private sector companies, organizations, enterprises,' Baker said."

NSA Reports Russia-Linked Group Likely Used Iranian Hacking Tools.

Bloomberg (10/22, Sebenius, 4.73M) reports a Russia-linked group "is believed to have utilized Iranian tools to conduct cyber attacks against dozens of countries, in an apparent effort to mask their identities, according to joint advisories by the US and the UK." The group, known as Turla, "used tools from suspected Iran-based hacking groups and deployed them against old and new targets." According to NSA and the UK's National Cyber Security Centre, "which released the advisories on Monday, in order to acquire the tools, Turla 'comprised the suspected Iran-based hacking groups themselves.'" The agencies said, "The original owners of the tools 'were almost certainly not aware of, or complicit with, Turla's use of their implants.'" NextGov (10/22) reports authorities "said the Nautilus and Neuron tools had 'very likely' originated in Iran, but Turla had acquired both tools by early 2018." The group initially "used the malware in combination with one of its own toolkits, called Snake, but eventually began targeting victims with the tools directly." According to the release, Turla worked "to gain further access to targets by scouring their networks for backdoors that had been inserted by Iranian hackers."

Democrats Offer Cybersecurity Bill For "Internet Of Things."

The Hill (10/22, Miller, 2.98M) reports Democratic lawmakers in the House and Senate on Tuesday "introduced legislation to increase the security of internet-connected devices." The Cyber Shield Act, sponsored by Sen. Ed Markey (D-MA) and Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA), "would establish an 'advisory committee' comprised of cyber experts from government, industry and academia to create 'cyber benchmarks' for internet-connected devices, also known as Internet of Things (IoT) devices." IOT devices "can then be built by manufacturers to meet these security standards, and be given a 'Cyber Shield' label to show consumers they meet these benchmarks." Markey "said in a statement that 'the IoT will also stand for the Internet of Threats until we put in place appropriate cybersecurity safeguards.'"

Facebook Ramps Up Cybersecurity Protections For Elected Officials.

The Washington Post (10/22, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that Facebook "will ramp up cybersecurity protections for elected officials, candidates and their staffs to protect them from targeted attacks by Russia and other adversaries." The protections "are part of a series of changes to combat hacking and disinformation threats to the 2020 US elections." The Facebook Protect program "will require participating campaigns to use two-factor authentication to access accounts – such as an SMS code in addition to a password." The company will also "boost its own monitoring of those accounts for suspicious activity and alert campaigns about login attempts from unusual locations or devices." Federal and state government agencies and political party committees "will also qualify for the program."

UK Cyber-Centre Targets Payment Card Fraud.

BBC News Online (UK) (10/23, 1.02M) reports Britain's cyber-defence centre "has thwarted more than one million cases of suspected payment card fraud in the last year, its annual review reveals." The National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC) "said a dedicated anti-fraud effort stopped the cards being abused." It said it had "stopped more than 1,800 cyber-attacks aimed at UK citizens and businesses in its first three years." Hostile nation states "were behind a 'significant' number of the incidents it tackled, it added." The figures were revealed "in a report which sets out how the NCSC acts to protect the public." In the last year it "said it had run Operation Haulster that sought to uncover which payment cards were being targeted by online fraudsters." The operation told banks "about potential targets so they could prevent future attacks or spot when cards were being abused."

EU Draft Report Says Swift Roll-Out Of 5G Is Key To Competitiveness.

Reuters (10/22) reports the European Union should become "the leading market for deployment of 5G mobile networks and its developments because it is key for enhancing the bloc's competitiveness, according to draft presidency conclusions seen by Reuters." The changes that 5G "brings to mobile networks, devices and applications, 'make it is necessary for the EU and the member states to pay particular attention to ensuring the cybersecurity of these networks and new services,' but 'a swift roll-out of 5G networks is key for enhancing the competitiveness of the EU and requires a common approach' in an increasingly connected world." Without naming Chinese telecoms equipment market leader Huawei Technologies, "the draft conclusions recommend to promote European technological sovereignty and put in place 'robust' security standards and measures for all relevant manufacturers and service providers, across the entire lifecycle of 5G networks."

China Intensifies Hacking To Track Its Minorities.

The New York Times (10/22, Perlroth, Conger, Mozur, 18.61M) reports China's state-sponsored hackers "have drastically changed how they operate over the last three years, substituting selectivity for what had been a scattershot approach to their targets and showing a new determination by Beijing to push its surveillance state beyond its borders." Security researchers and intelligence officials said that the government has poured "considerable resources into the change, which is part of a reorganization of the national People's Liberation Army that President Xi Jinping initiated in 2016." China's hackers have since "built up a new arsenal of techniques, such as elaborate hacks of iPhone and Android software, pushing them beyond email attacks and the other, more basic tactics that they had previously employed." The researchers "said that the primary targets for these more sophisticated attacks: China's ethnic minorities and their diaspora in other countries."

Iranian Hackers Breached Computers Of US Satellite Industry.

The Daily Beast (10/22, 1.39M) reports Iranian hackers “breached computers of the American satellite technology industry with help from a fake website and an unsuspecting college professor.” Court documents obtained by The Daily Beast “show that the FBI believes Iranian hackers going by the nicknames MRSCO and N3O may have been involved in the attempted breaches.” The hackers, “members of a long-running Iranian hacker collective known as the ‘Iranian Dark Coders Team,’ have become known for defacing websites with pro-Iranian and Hezbollah propaganda, hacking gas-station pump terminals online, and attacking an Israeli credit-card company over the past seven years.” Agents pulled the registration information “for the bait website and found that the hackers had tried to impersonate an employee of the commercial satellite imagery firm DigitalGlobe when creating the site in order to make the software downloads appear genuine.”

OFAC Determines Russian Gas Company’s Tankers Not Under Sanctions.

The Financial Times (10/22, Foy, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports that Novatek, a Russian gas company, has received approval to continue utilizing several ice-class tankers following OFAC's decision that the tankers' owner would no longer be under sanctions.

Federal Reserve

Wall Street Grows Anxious Over Fed’s Repo Market Actions.

CNBC (10/22, Cox, 3.62M) reports, “Wall Street is getting worried that the Federal Reserve's aggressive efforts to control short-term borrowing rates have run into some potholes, with more danger ahead.” The Fed “has been working feverishly to address issues that popped up more than a month ago in the repo market, the overnight lending place where banks go to borrow money from each other.” Though “the effort has worked fairly well so far – rates rose last week, though not nearly as much as in mid-September – finance professionals fear that the market problems are not fixed and funding issues can happen again.” JPMorganChase fixed income analysts wrote in a note that, “With year-end coming up, this is all likely to get much worse, in our view, before it gets better.”

BoA’s Cabana: Fed Should Do More To Calm Markets After Repo Market “Crisis.” MarketWatch (10/22, Oh, 1.67M) reports Bank of America Merrill Lynch Head of US Short Rates Strategy Mark Cabana “was warning of the emerging strains in short-term U.S. money markets as early as last year, well before daily funding markets seized up last month and forced the Federal Reserve to dust off tools it hadn’t used since the 2008 financial crisis.” Cabana, in an interview with MarketWatch on Monday, “said the central bank has been working hard to avoid further funding stresses, but believes the Fed could do more to help assuage the frayed nerves of market participants after September’s repo market crisis when overnight lending rates surged to a peak of 10%, according to some estimates.” Cabana added, “That’s the crux. We are talking about the core of central banking. There were a couple of days when the Fed lost control, and they have now taken steps to regain that.”

NY Fed Injects $99.9B Through Repo Market. The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the NY Fed added $99.9 billion to the financial system through the repo market on Tuesday.

Judge Finds OCC Unable To Issue Fintech Charter.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Hayashi, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a New York federal judge on Monday ruled that the OCC doesn’t have the authority to issue national banking charters to fintech companies. The ruling comes after a federal district court in Washington, D.C. last month dismissed a challenge to the OCC’s fintech charter by the Conference of State Bank Supervisors. The ABA Banking Journal (10/22) reports, “After Judge Victor Marrero declined to dismiss the case, holding that the National Bank Act does not permit the OCC to grant national bank charters to non-depository institutions without a statutory exception, he issued a judgment requested by the New York Department of Financial Services that vacated on a nationwide basis the OCC regulation permitting these charters.”

American Banker (10/22, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports NYDFS head Linda Lacewell “said the ruling reinforces state regulators’ authority to oversee fintech companies.” She said, “We believe strongly that states are the best regulators when it comes to issues of consumer protection.” Meanwhile, former Comptroller of the Currency Thomas Curry “said the court decision at least gets fintech firms closer to some certainty about what options are available to them under the law.” But fintechs “are still under a regulatory cloud, he said.”

Waters, Brown Condemn Volcker Revisions.

DS News (10/22, Albanese) reports House Financial Service Committee Chair Maxine Waters (D-CA) and Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) sent a letter to the heads of the OCC, the Fed, the FDIC, the CFTC, and the SEC condemning recent regulatory rollbacks and requesting more information about the changes to the Volcker Rule. The lawmakers wrote, “In short, the 2019 rule is simply a giveaway to Wall Street banks that puts taxpayer-backed banks at risk. We believe the changes to the Volcker Rule and other regulatory changes proposed and implemented by your agencies threaten the stability of the financial system.” They added that the latest changes to Volcker “open the door to the very risky, speculative activities that Congress sought to prohibit.”

US Bank Cuts Thousand Of Branch Jobs.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Prang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports US Bancorp is eliminating the positions of assistant branch manager and teller coordinator at its roughly 2,800 branches across the country. A spokesperson for the bank said the cuts would affect less than 2% of its workforce. In the spring, US Bank said it would close between 10% and 15% of its branches by the end of 2021. The announcement came after the OCC lifted a consent order over alleged anti-money-laundering deficiencies at the bank.

Chase Adds To Retail Team Ahead Of First Pittsburgh Branch's Opening.

The Pittsburgh Business Times (10/22, Tascarella, 835K) reports that as JPMorgan Chase prepares "for the grand opening of its first Pittsburgh branch on Friday, the bank continues to add to its retail leadership team." Chase appointed Wayne Randall as "executive director, Chase Wealth Management for the greater Pittsburgh area," and hired Cyndi Costa "as business development manager." Chase "has not said how many branches it will open in southwestern Pennsylvania – so far, 10 applications have been submitted to the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, of which Chase has confirmed seven."

Wells Fargo's Scharf Says Regulatory Issues Are Top Priority.

Financial Planning (10/22, Peralta) reports Wells Fargo's new CEO Charlie Scharf "took over Monday with a fairly straightforward mandate: Finish what three predecessors couldn't." In a firm-wide memo, Scharf said the bank will put "all available resources" toward building out operations, improving risk and control functions, and making harmed customers whole. Wells Fargo "has 14 outstanding consent orders with its regulators," including a growth cap from the Fed and an order from the OCC requiring wholesale changes to governance and risk management. "Our priorities today are clear: Remediate all regulatory and control issues in the company and serve our customers every day with the highest operational and ethical standards," Scharf said Monday in his memo.

Columbia Financial, Stewardship Financial Receive Reg Approval For Merger.

The ABF Journal (10/22) reports, "Columbia Financial, the holding company for Columbia Bank, and Stewardship Financial have received the requisite regulatory approvals" from the Fed Board, the OCC, and the New Jersey Department of Banking and Insurance "to complete the Columbia's acquisition of Stewardship and the related merger of Atlantic Stewardship Bank with and into Columbia Bank."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Justin Trudeau, Humbled, Gets A Second Chance." The New York Times (10/22, 18.61M) editorializes that "a humbled" Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "survived" this weekend's election, but lost his parliamentary majority and the popular vote. The Times writes, "Let us hope that Mr. Trudeau returns to office chastened and wiser."

"Chile Learns The Price Of Economic Inequality." The New York Times (10/22, 18.61M) editorializes that amid growing protests spurred by economic inequality, "the obvious path for Chile is for the government to spend more money improving the quality of life for a vast majority of Chileans." The Times notes that Andrónico Luksic Craig, chairman of the industrial conglomerate Quiñenco, "wrote on Saturday on Twitter that he was ready to pay higher taxes. 'There is no magic,' he wrote — no alternative to simply spreading the wealth more evenly." The Times argues, "It is time for the Chilean government to acknowledge that reality, too."

Washington Post.

"Canada's Election Results Are A Victory For The Planet." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/22, 14.2M) says that while Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "will now have to govern with other, smaller parties, this was an unexpectedly strong result" considering that "during his campaign, he admitted that he had worn blackface and brownface on several occasions, and Canada's former attorney general accused him of unduly pressuring her to end a prosecution."

"Here's The Quid Pro Quo Proof, Lindsey Graham." A Washington Post (10/22, 14.2M) editorial says Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "one of President Trump's most ardent defenders in the Ukraine affair," recently said that "if you could show me that, you know, Trump was actually engaging in a quid pro quo, outside the phone call, that would be very disturbing." The Post argues that as "a lawyer and former military prosecutor," Graham "surely can recognize this corrupt campaign for what it is. The question is whether he, and other Republicans, have the moral courage to do so."

Wall Street Journal.

"California's Gasoline Panic." The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) in an editorial says that California Gov. Gavin Newsom has asked Attorney General Xavier Becerra to look into why oil companies charge higher gasoline prices than in other states. The Journal says the higher cost is due to state policies requiring special formulations of gasoline, cap-and-trade, and higher state gas taxes, which the Journal says are about $0.77 higher than the national average. The state Energy Commission in an earlier investigation found no unlawful actions to explain the higher prices. The Journal also says that prices are higher because California has higher taxes generally and because the state has a higher minimum wage. The Journal urges Californians to recognize that higher prices are due to the policies enacted by Democrats in the state Capitol.

"Donald Trump's 'Lynching.'" In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes President

Trump's use of the term "lynching" as insensitive as well as counterproductive, in that it puts his defenders in the impeachment fight in a politically untenable position.

"Canadians Humble Trudeau." On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says voters delivered a rebuke while letting Prime Minister Justin Trudeau hold onto power but with a minority government.

Last LaughsLate Night Political Humor.

Jim Jeffries: "But first, the impeachment inquiry into President Trump revolves around Trump using his office to dig up political dirt on Joe Biden, based on a debunked conspiracy theory. And it's not the only conspiracy theory spread by this President. ... Trump is so good at spreading conspiracy theories, he even convinced Melania that she's not the real Melania."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, folks, it is important, I believe, to admit when you're wrong. We talk a lot about how Donald Trump is this corrupt guy who deserves to be dragged out of office kicking and screaming. But when I'm wrong, I'll be sure to let you know. Not tonight. Because we just learned this after he's just awful. Today, we got a firsthand witness to Trump going Ukraine in the membrane: Former US ambassador to Ukraine and man whose eyebrows are testifying separately, Bill Taylor."

Stephen Colbert: "Taylor was the diplomat who exchanged text messages with Trump conspirator, US Ambassador to the EU...Gordon Sondland. ... Holding up military aid for political gain seemed kind of fishy to Taylor, but the Ambassador tried to assure him it was completely normal. Quoth Taylor, 'Sondland tried to explain to me that President Trump is a businessman. When a businessman is about to sign a check to someone who owes him something, he said, the businessman asks that person to pay up before signing the check.' Well, that's a ridiculous analogy. When he was a businessman, Donald Trump never paid anyone."

Jimmy Fallon: "Earlier tonight, ABC aired the classic Halloween special, 'It's The Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown.' They actually updated it a bit. At the end of this version, the Great Pumpkin gets impeached."

Jimmy Fallon: "The impeachment inquiry is in full swing, and I heard that today actually marks the one-month anniversary of the impeachment. Yeah, when he heard that, Trump was like, 'I can't believe nobody got me a present. Not even a card from Pierre Delecto?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Now Democrats say the impeachment might take longer than expected because each witness keeps providing even more leads. So basically, Trump's legal strategy is to commit so many crimes, they can never finish the investigation."

Jimmy Fallon: "And today, the top official from the US embassy in Ukraine testified, and one congressman called it his 'most disturbing day in congress.' And that's counting the day Mitch McConnell walked out of the sauna without a towel."

Jimmy Fallon: "Now a new report claims Vladimir Putin is the one who convinced Trump that Ukraine was corrupt. You can tell Putin has a lot of influence over Trump, because he also convinced him to trade all of his Halloween Milky Ways for a roll of Necco Wafers."

Jimmy Fallon: "And now some 2020 news. There is a new poll out in Iowa that shows Joe Biden and Elizabeth Warren are nearly tied in the race, with Pete Buttigieg not far behind. Pretty interesting poll. Take a look. Eighteen percent of people said, 'I support Biden.' Seventeen percent said, 'I support Warren.' Thirteen percent said, 'I support Buttigieg.' Thirty-two percent said, 'I'm still undecided.' Twenty-four percent said, 'Seriously, the election has been going on for months.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, in a new interview Trump said he doesn't want copies of 'The New York Times' or 'The Washington Post' in the White House. Oh, no, Trump only keeps one newspaper in the White House, and that he uses to train Rudy Giuliani."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well if things aren't crazy enough, last night Trump apparently retweeted an account called, this is real, DJ Trump's Butt. When I saw it, my first thought was, 'Wow, Mitt Romney really, really likes coming up with new Twitter accounts.'"

James Corden: "It was a big day in the impeachment inquiry on Capitol Hill. But congressional Democrats are now saying that the inquiry is going to take longer than they originally thought, mostly because they keep finding more and more witnesses with key information. The lesson here is if you're going to commit high crimes and misdemeanors, commit so many of them that congress gets absolutely buried in paperwork."

James Corden: "House Democrats originally thought they could hold an impeachment vote as early as October, but now it might extend into Christmas. An impeachment vote in December? It really is the most wonderful time of the year. In fact, The Hallmark Channel has already jumped on it with yet another new holiday movie, 'Impeachment In A Pear Tree.'"

James Corden: "Meanwhile, President Trump once again took to Twitter to lash out against the entire proceedings. But instead of calling it a 'witch hunt,' like he normally does, today he called it, 'a lynching.' And it's only Tuesday. Now that is a very loaded word in this country. At this rate, Trump's going to lose all three of his black supporters."

James Corden: "In other presidential news, Donald Trump retweeted a Twitter account that parodies and this is true, his own butt. Yesterday, the President shared a tweet from '@djtrumpsbutt,' not realizing it was a joke account. ... Although Trump should have known it was a parody account because the bio says, and this is real, 'I am Donald Trump's butt. Whatever he says, it's really me that's saying it. Follow me, or I will nuke you! #PutinPower, #MAGA.' Are we absolutely sure this isn't just another one of Mitt Romney's fake accounts? This sounds exactly like the kind of bio Pierre Delecto would write."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump was widely condemned on social media this morning after he claimed Democrats are treating impeachment proceedings like a lynching. When asked about the criticism, Trump said, 'Wow, now I know how Jesus felt on the cross.'"

Seth Meyers: "After President Trump this morning compared impeachment proceedings to a lynching, Senator Lindsey Graham defended Trump, saying, quote, 'This is a lynching in every sense.' And if there's one word Lindsey Graham shouldn't be using, it's 'sense.'"

Seth Meyers: "Donald Trump, Jr participated in a ribbon cutting ceremony for a new plaza in Arizona, which was named in his honor. That's right, 'Greasy Dingus Plaza' is officially open for business."

Trump Lauds Talks With China While Beijing Presses WTO Case Against US.

Reuters (10/21, Holland, Brice) reports President Trump "on Monday said efforts to end a U.S. trade war with China were going well as the world's two largest economies continued to battle over trade and politics across the world despite heralding a long-awaited truce this month." Trump, in remarks to reporters before a Cabinet meeting, said, "The deal with China's coming along very well. They want to make a deal. They sort of have to make a deal ... because their supply chain is going down the tubes." USTR Robert Lighthizer "told reporters...deputy-level meetings took place on Monday, and he and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin would speak with their counterparts on Friday."

Kudlow: Talks Are Moving In The Right Direction, Could Remove December Tariffs. Fox Business (10/21, Garber, 1.73M) reports on its website that National Economic Council Director Larry Kudlow said the talks are moving in the right direction. Kudlow said, "We've made a lot of progress. I think we're very close on opening financial services and the currency stability deal, which is essentially is an IMF deal. I think the agriculture, they started buying farm products, as you know, $40 [billion] to $50 billion worth." Kudlow added, "If the talks go well on phase one, there is a chance we can get those December tariffs off."

Mnuchin, Kushner To Attend Saudi Investment Conference One Year After Khashoggi Killing.

Quartz (10/21, Rohrlich, 368K) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "and presidential son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner plan to attend this year's 'Davos in the Desert,' a Saudi Arabian economic conference the US and many others skipped last year after Saudi security agents murdered Washington Post contributor Jamal Khashoggi." Mnuchin and Kushner "will be there even though little has been done to prosecute those responsible for the murder." According to a recent Human Rights Watch (HRW) statement, "the Saudis have not seriously investigated the crime and have, in fact, 'obstructed meaningful accountability for Khashoggi's murder.'" The Saudi government has "refused to cooperate with an investigation led by the UN special rapporteur for extrajudicial killings," according to HRW, and "Saudi authorities continue their 'sweeping campaign of repression against dissidents and activists.'"

HuffPost (10/21, Blumberg, 1.67M) also reports on this story.

Facebook Continues Cryptocurrency Effort.

The New York Times (10/21, Kang, Popper, 18.61M) reports, "Facebook's ambitious plan to create a cryptocurrency that would replace traditional money all over the world appears to be on life support." But, adds the Times, Facebook "isn't backing down," and its "executives fanned out in the capital last week to court lawmakers and regulators to the cryptocurrency project, called Libra." CEO Zuckerberg "is expected to testify about Libra at a hearing held by the House Financial Services Committee." The Times says the "basic description that Facebook did put forward was enough to bring out the knives from politicians and regulators all over the world," including "President Trump and his Treasury secretary, Steven Mnuchin," who "harshly criticized Libra, as did politicians from both parties."

Exxon Says Government Interpreted Ukraine Sanctions Rules Too Broadly.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/21, Larson, 4.73M) reports, "Exxon Mobil Corp.'s clash with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin is escalating in a Texas court with the energy giant claiming government interpretation of sanctions regulations is too broad."

Trump Administration Renews 3-Mont License For Chevron In Venezuela.

Reuters (10/21, Brice, Gardner) reports the US Treasury Department on Monday "renewed a license allowing Chevron, the last US operating company in Venezuela to continue operating in the country for another three months through Jan. 22, 2020." The Treasury Department "said the license does not authorize transactions related to shipments of diluents, which Venezuela uses to thin its heavy oil for consumption."

Former Chevron Executive Seeks $500M For Post-Sanctions Venezuela. Reuters (10/21, Hiller) reports the former chief of Chevron Corp's Latin American operations "is moving to raise $500 million from big financial firms to invest in Venezuela once US sanctions are eventually lifted, confident that political change will come and that foreign investment will be needed to boost sagging oil output." Amos Global Energy LLC, an oil and gas firm started by former Chevron executive Ali Moshiri, "begins a road show to raise funding next month, seeking five big investors to put in $100 million each." Amos Global, which includes Moshiri and two co-founders, "also is researching Venezuela public debt holders for another fund that would be even larger."

Refiner Nynas To Suspend Imports Of Venezuelan Oil Due To Sanctions. Reuters (10/21, Parraga) reports European refiner Nynas AB said on Monday it "will suspend imports of Venezuelan crude following changes to a license allowing it to operate under US sanctions, adding it was looking to shift to alternative sources of oil." Nynas, owned by Venezuela's state-run PDVSA and Finland's Neste Oil, "operates specialty refineries in Sweden, Germany and England mostly for asphalt production." In January, the refiner "received a license from the US allowing it to operate under sanctions imposed on its parent company, PDVSA." But the Treasury Department last week "introduced changes to the permit effective immediately." The modified version of license GL 13D, "which allows Nynas to operate through April 2020, said it does not authorize any transactions or dealings related to the purchase or acquisition of Venezuelan-origin petroleum or petroleum products, directly or indirectly, by Nynas or any of its subsidiaries."

Venezuela May Have Funds To Make Payment To Keep Control Of Citgo. The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Scurria, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Venezuela government will be able to make a payment to bondholders next week, sidestepping a potential $913 million debt default that risked costing control of Citgo. Andrew Rosenberg, who represents creditors with collateral rights over Citgo, said he thinks Venezuela's opposition leaders have sufficient funds to make the payment on bonds. The upcoming payment has the opposition government scrambling. After assuming control of Citgo in February, opposition leaders now risk losing control of the company.

Trump Attorneys, Manhattan DA Strike Deal That Could Fast Track Tax Return Fight To High Court.

Politico (10/21, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's attorneys and lawyers for Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr.'s office have struck an agreement that could result in the fight over access to Trump's tax returns being "fast-tracked to the Supreme Court in time for a decision before next fall's election." Trump's attorneys have agreed "that if they lose a court battle scheduled for argument at the New York-based 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals on Wednesday, they will take no more than 10 days to petition the Supreme Court to hear the case." They also agreed that if Trump appeals to the Supreme Court, "he will ask the justices to hear the case in its current term." In exchange, the prosecutors "agreed to hold off trying to enforce a grand jury subpoena issued to one of Trump's accounting firms in August." The report mentions the currently pending lawsuit filed in July against the Treasury Department and the IRS by the House Ways and Means committee "over their refusal to comply with a formal committee demand and subpoena for Trump's tax returns and returns filed by Trump businesses."

Court Affirms US Seizure Of Sanctions-Evading North Korean Cargo Ship.

Fox News (10/21, Casiano, 27.59M) reports on its website, "Justice Department officials on Monday announced the forfeiture of a North Korean ship used to sell coal and haul heavy machinery – a violation of economic sanctions imposed on the regime of Kim Jong Un." Between Nov 2016 and April 2018, the ship known as "'Wise Honest' was used by the Korea Songi Shipping Company, an affiliate of Korea Songi General Trading Corporation, to export coal to other nations." The "17,000-ton Handysize bulk carrier...was seized by the U.S. last year after it had been detained in Indonesia while transporting a large amount of coal." The Treasury Department "determined in June 2017 that the Korea Songi General Trading Corporation was a subordinate of the Korean People's Army." Behind a paywall, Law360 (10/21, Subscription Publication, 8K) also reports on this story.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 42%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 42%, and his disapproval at 54.8%. The President's job approval is down 0.6 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.7.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (10/16-10/20) finds Trump's approval at 45%, with 53% disapproving.

Trump Urges GOP To "Get Tougher And Fight" Impeachment Push By "Vicious" Democrats.

Largely unfavorable media coverage of the President's comments yesterday describes him as casting his impeachment by the Democratic-led House as a foregone conclusion – and calling on Republicans to fight back. In a quote highlighted throughout the reporting, Trump said, "The Republicans have to get tougher and fight. We have some that are great fighters, but they have to get tougher and fight, because the Democrats are trying to hurt the Republican Party before the election." On CNN's The Lead (10/21, 944K), Jake Tapper described Trump as "floating a lot of nonsense and fact-free statements," and the Los Angeles Times (10/21, Diaz, Stokols, 4.64M) reports that he "held forth for 71 minutes...during what was ostensibly a Cabinet meeting but ended up being a familiar torrent of grievance, defensiveness and bold statements."

Reuters (10/21, Holland, Zengerle) says the President "exhorted fellow Republicans to get tougher and fight for him," and adds that "asked if it is a foregone conclusion that House Democrats will vote to impeach him, Trump said that 'they're not going to beat me in the election, so of course they want to impeach.'" Trump continued, "They want to do it as quick as possible. And that's pretty much the story." The Washington Times (10/21, Boyer, 492K) also reports Trump "Trump spoke of his impeachment with an air of inevitability Monday as he and top advisers tried mostly in vain to focus the conversation in Washington on the strong US economy and campaign promises kept."

To ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 4, 2:45, Vega, 7.23M), meanwhile, "with impeachment pressure mounting" the President "lashed out at fellow Republicans," though he stated "he's not worried his party will turn on him." Trump was shown saying, "I think I have great Republican support." White House correspondent Kaitlan Collins said on CNN's Situation Room (10/21, 1.14M) that "for the second day in a row, the President's anger with his own party was on full display," and the New York Times (10/21, Shear, 18.61M) describes Trump as "increasingly embittered" as he "complained on Monday that Republicans were not united enough in defending him against what he called 'vicious' adversaries bent on removing him." Trump "lashed out" at Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT), "the only member of his party who has signaled he may be open to impeaching" him.

NBC Nightly News (10/21, story 3, 2:01, Jackson, 6.37M) showed Romney saying, "Holding up funds to a foreign nation, particularly to one that's under military threat, in order to fulfill a political purpose is a real problem." NBC added that "criticism prompting this presidential praise for Democrats." Trump was shown saying, "I think they're lousy politicians. Two things they have: They are vicious, and they stick together. They don't have Mitt Romney in their midst." The New York Post (10/21, Moore, 4.57M) reports "it was revealed on Monday that Romney used a private Twitter account and the moniker Pierre Delecto to lurk online and criticize the president." ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 9, 0:24, Muir, 7.23M) said, however, that "Delecto" tweeted "only a few times, most often to correct press reports about" Romney.

The CBS Evening News (10/21, story 3, 2:45, Garrett, 4.44M), meanwhile, described Trump as "fearing Republican defections," and "declaring the House impeachment inquiry a Democratic hit job designed to block his reelection." CBS added "even staunch supporter Lindsey Graham of South Carolina said he would be open to impeachment if the President committed a crime." The Hill (10/21, Samuels, 2.98M) recounts that "asked later to elaborate on his desire to see Republicans get tougher, Trump said he felt Democrats were 'vicious.'" Said Trump, "I think the Democrats fight dirty. I think the Democrat are lousy politicians with lousy policy," and the "so-called 'Never Trump' Republicans 'might be worse than the Democrats.'" The President added, "The good news is they're dying off fast."

Fox News (10/21, Singman, 27.59M) reports Trump also said yesterday, "I think these people, it's terrible what they're doing – Pelosi, Shifty Schiff, Schumer – these people are trying to destroy the country," Trump said. "It's a very bad thing that they're doing. ... They want to impeach me because it's the only way they're gonna win. ... It's so illegitimate. It cannot be the way our great founders meant this to be." ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 4, 2:45, Vega, 7.23M) showed Trump saying, "The President of the United States should be allowed to run the country, not have to focus on this kind of crap."

Townhall (10/21, O'Brien, 177K) reports that Trump went on to argue that "the whistleblower" at the heart complaints about Trump "'gave a false account' of his phone call. There's allegedly a 'second' whistleblower, with just as dubious an account," Trump added, "yet, the media and the Democrats treat whistleblowers 'like angels.'" Trump also observed, "They have a whistleblower, who disappeared. ... They're interviewing ambassadors I've never even heard of." USA Today (10/21, Jackson, Subramanian, Collins, 10.31M) recounts that "an angry" Trump also "called...for the identification of the government whistleblower who made the first accusations against him," asking, "Do we have to protect somebody that gave a totally false account of my conversation? ... I don't know. You tell me."

Politico (10/21, Everett, 4.29M) reports that reacting to those words, Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer wrote a letter "asking the intelligence community what is being done to protect the source from harm." Wrote Schumer, "In light of the President's ill-advised statements, his lack of respect for the rule of law and his well-documented habit of condoning violence by his supporters, I am concerned that he may disclose the whistleblower's identity or cause it to be disclosed by others in the administration."

The Washington Post (10/21, Wagner, Shammas, 14.2M) points out, meanwhile, that Trump's comments came as Speaker Pelosi "distributed a 'fact sheet' outlining what her office called a gross abuse of presidential power, including a 'shakedown,' 'pressure campaign' and 'cover up.'" The Washington Times (10/21, Muñoz, 492K) reports the Democratic document "selects a handful of quotes about the 'favor' Mr. Trump referred to in the transcript he released last month of his July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky." The fact sheet also "highlights that Vice President Mike Pence and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo are both 'entangled' in the allegations, accusing them of doing nothing to stop the administration from holding up military aid for Ukraine."

Trump reiterated his message last night in an interview with Fox News' Hannity (10/21, 535K), saying, "I think that the Democrats are not good politicians. I think they have lousy policy. ... But you don't have the Mitt Romney's of the world. You don't have people that will go against the party. They stick together. I respect that. The other thing is they are vicious. There are much more vicious. We would never do a thing like this."

McConnell Slams "Three-Year-Old Impeachment Parade," "Obsession With Overturning" 2016 Election. The Washington Times (10/21, Lovelace, 492K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell yesterday "blasted his Democratic colleagues' 'three-year-old impeachment parade' getting in the way of the legislative business of Congress." McConnell said on the Senate floor, "Unfortunately, the only thing that seems to really inspire House Democrats these days is their obsession with overturning the results of the 2016 election."

Trump Touts New Book On "Greatest Witch Hunt In Political History." The President also tweeted yesterday, "Great new book by wonderful and very street smart author Dan Bongino, EXONERATED, THE FAILED TAKEDOWN OF PRESIDENT DONALD TRUMP BY THE SWAMP. Dan hits all of the crooked points of the greatest Witch Hunt in political history. Nevertheless, the Scam continues!"

WPost Report: "Congressional Allies" Concerned About Trump's Impeachment Strategy. The Washington Post (10/21, Olorunnipa, Costa, 14.2M) reports that "behind the scenes, Trump's erratic and bombastic behavior is causing growing alarm among Republican lawmakers, donors and advisers who have called for a more disciplined impeachment response from the White House." While "administration officials Monday played down GOP anxiety...congressional allies said they remain uneasy about the president's freewheeling style amid multiple investigative and political threats – and said they are making that clear to the president, who remains confident in his abilities." The Post adds "Trump continues to spearhead his own impeachment defense, which lacks a coherent theme or a streamlined messaging campaign."

Chait: Death Of Pesci's "Casino" Character Gives Clues To End Of Trump Presidency. Writing for the Daily Intelligencer (NY) (10/21, 1.1M), Jonathan Chait says that "if you have seen...Casino, the fate of Joe Pesci's character gives a fairly good sense of how...Trump might eventually be...removed." To Chait, that "prospect is no longer a fantasy." While Romney "is the only Republican senator making a case for conviction...a 'very well-connected Republican in Washington' estimated to Chris Wallace that there is a 20 percent chance the Senate votes for removal." Chait adds that "in Casino, the bosses accepted a lot of erratic and risky behavior from Nicky Santoro because he was ultimately a useful ally" even though "he was a violent criminal – they were violent criminals, too." However, "they eventually decided that his flamboyant and uncontrollable behavior put their whole racket at risk." While "the Republican Establishment doesn't have hit men...it does have a constitutional process at its disposal."

DOJ Officials Say Durham Has Found "Something Significant."

NBC News (10/19, Dilanian, 6.14M) cites "multiple current and former officials," who said the review into the origins of the Russia investigation being conducted by US Attorney John Durham "has expanded significantly amid concerns about whether the probe has any legal or factual basis." Durham "has expressed his intent to interview a number of current and former intelligence officials involved in examining Russia's effort to interfere in the 2016 presidential election, including former CIA Director John Brennan and former director of national intelligence James Clapper, Brennan told NBC News." In addition he has "requested to talk to CIA analysts involved in the intelligence assessment of Russia's activities." NBC says that according to DOJ officials, "Durham has found something significant, and that critics should be careful." The Daily Caller (10/21, Ross, 716K) says Brennan "has fiercely defended the investigation of the Trump campaign. He is also questioning the legal basis for the Durham probe, which he called 'bizarre.'" Brennan told NBC News, "I don't know what the legal basis for this is. ... I'm very comfortable with everything I was involved in." Citing the NBC report, Breitbart (10/21, Mora, 673K) reports that Attorney General Barr "has significantly expanded a review into the origins of the Russian collusion hoax investigation."

The Washington Examiner (10/21, Chaitin, 448K) says Durham's investigation has "created 'unease' at the CIA, according to a reporter who has followed its progress." According to Ken Dilanian, concern "over what investigators are seeking and whether the inquiry has become a criminal investigation has prompted some CIA analysts who played a role in the intelligence assessment of Russia's activities during the 2016 campaign to hire lawyers." Dilanian told MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/21, 1.04M) Monday, "It's not clear where he's going with this, but a lot of people are very rattled. Those CIA analysts I mentioned had to hire their own lawyers because no one's sure whether this is a criminal investigation or not. And if it is a criminal investigation, what is the allegation of wrongdoing? No one I talked to can answer that."

DOJ IG Report On FISA Abuses Still In "Declassification Process." Fox News (10/21, Singman, 27.59M) reports on its website that there has been speculation for weeks that "the long-awaited review of alleged surveillance abuses by the Department of Justice and the FBI during the investigation into Russia's purported meddling in the 2016 presidential election could drop any day." The "highly anticipated report" from Inspector General Michael Horowitz "will likely spark new congressional investigations and deliver critical information to other federal reviews probing allegations of abuse by the Justice Department and the FBI." Horowitz "submitted a draft of his report to Attorney General Bill Barr, who was reviewing the document – fueling the belief that the public release was coming soon. But a Justice Department official told Fox News last week that the report is still in the declassification process."

Federalist's Skurk: Vanity Fair's Frank Shows "Healthy Skepticism" About Russia Investigation. Krystina Skurk writes in a piece for The Federalist (10/21, 126K) that Vanity Fair writer T.A. Frank "does not hide his political distaste for" President Trump, but his "writings on the Russia investigation demonstrate a healthy skepticism that is lacking in much of mainstream journalism today." Skurk adds that Frank's "recent piece 'What George Papadopoulos Taught me About Trump's Counter-Theory of Collusion' demonstrates this perfectly." In it, Frank "comes to drastically different conclusions than conservatives might. He readily criticizes Trump for trying to dredge up dirt on Joe Biden and mocks Rudy Giuliani's quest, but also defends Attorney General William Barr and the president for wanting to get to the bottom of Ukraine's role in the 2016 election." Skurk says Frank "strikes a sensible middle ground in a time where such territory has often been abandoned by both left and right."

Referring To Steele Dossier, Trump Says He Is Obligated To Investigate Corruption.

Townhall (10/21, Baumann, 177K) reports that President Trump said in an interview with Fox News' Hannity Monday that "he has an obligation to investigate corruption." Trump was referring to "the Steele dossier that launched Special Counsel Robert Mueller's two year investigation into alleged collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia." He said, "When you look at what is going on, and then you see all of this horrible stuff, and then you hear about Ukraine. You have been hearing about it. I heard Clinton was involved. I heard they got somebody who wrote the fake dossier. Was it out of Ukraine? ... Because you know what, we are investigating corruption. And I actually heard Gregg Jarrett and numerous people the other day say come I have an obligation to do it [investigate]. That is not a question, can I do it or don't I do it? We have an obligation to investigate corruption. ... That's what it was. In my opinion, that is what it was is corruption and if Ukraine would know something about the 2016 election, you have to give that information. I hope they would give the information and everybody agrees with me 100 percent."

Trump Defends Gabbard, Says Clinton's Charge Shows Russia Issue A "Sham."

The AP (10/21) reports that during a cabinet meeting yesterday, President Trump "attack[ed] Hillary Clinton for suggesting Democratic presidential candidate Rep. Tulsi Gabbard is a Russian agent." Trump said of Gabbard, "She's not a Russian agent." The AP says Clinton "appeared to call Gabbard 'the favorite of the Russians' in a recent interview." Trump "says he thinks Clinton's attack boosts Gabbard and his own political chances, claiming it shows concerns about Russian interference are just a 'sham.'"

The New York Post (10/21, Fredericks, 4.57M) quotes Trump as saying, "They're trying to make other people into Russian agents, Russian assets," and Politico (10/21, Forgey, 4.29M) as saying Clinton is "accusing everyone of being a Russian agent." Trump added, "These people are sick. There's something wrong with them." Politico adds Gabbard is "the subject of widespread skepticism within the party for her support among fringe conservatives and frequent mentions in Russian media and propaganda." However, "there exists no public documentation to substantiate assertions regarding the Kremlin's backing of Gabbard's campaign, and some Democrats have dismissed Clinton's interview as a distraction amid a heated primary battle."

Trump said in an interview with Fox News' Hannity (10/21, 535K), "You have Hillary Clinton saying, two days ago, Tulsi Gabbard is a Russian asset and that Jill Stein is a Russian agent. And I said, 'Wait a minute it took me two-and-a-half years. I wish you would have said that earlier,' because people would have realized she's crazy. She's crazy."

Sanders Praises Gabbard, Calls Clinton Charge "Outrageous." USA Today (10/21, Santucci, 10.31M) reports "Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders has added his name to the list of lawmakers defending...Gabbard, after...Clinton made reference to Russians 'grooming' her." Sanders tweeted, "Tulsi Gabbard has put her life on the line to defend this country. ... People can disagree on issues, but it is outrageous for anyone to suggest that Tulsi is a foreign asset."

The Daily Caller (10/21, Ross, 716K) indicates "allegations that Gabbard is a Russian asset have picked up steam in recent weeks as some establishment Democrats have expressed concern that she will run a third-party campaign that could draw votes from the eventual Democratic nominee." The New York Times "published an article on Oct. 12 airing some of those concerns," and "on Oct. 15, CNN commentator Bakari Sellers called Gabbard a 'puppet' for the Russian government."

Trump: Payments To Hunter Biden Should Be Investigated.

President Trump was asked in an interview with Fox News' Hannity (10/21, 535K) about the money paid to Hunter Biden. Trump said, "In my opinion, it is a payoff. Why else would it be? Hunter Biden with no experience. I hear the numbers are 168,000 a month and I heard they got a $3 million payment in all of those. Okay? And that is corruption. That is something that has to be investigated." Trump said, "If that were my sons that took this $168,000 from this very questionable energy company" it "would be the biggest story of this century."

Trump Says Impeachment Would Be Good For Republicans.

President Trump said in an interview with Fox News' Hannity (10/21, 535K), "Everybody tells me it will be great for us as a Republican Party if they actually impeach me because the 40 seats and there are many more than the 32. It is 40, 45 seats where I won or did really well or very close that those people will get hammered, meaning running in Congress. So I don't know if that is true or not. I do say this and I can see it because, I mean, look at our fundraising. Money has never come in like this. Look at my poll numbers have been the highest."

Poll: Majority In Six Swing States Support Inquiry, Oppose Trump's Removal From Office. The New York Times (10/21, Cohn, 18.61M) reports that a new Times/Siena College survey found that "voters in the states likeliest to decide the 2020 presidential election support the impeachment inquiry that House Democrats began last month, but a majority still opposes impeaching President Trump and removing him from office." In Pennsylvania, Florida, Michigan, Wisconsin, North Carolina and Arizona, "the six closest states carried by the president in 2016, registered voters support the impeachment inquiry by a five-point margin, 50 percent to 45 percent. The same voters oppose impeaching Mr. Trump and removing him from office, 53 percent to 43 percent." The Times adds, "Support for the impeachment inquiry is largely consistent with recent national surveys, which show registered voters backing the inquiry by an average of nine points over the last three weeks, or a margin four points higher than the one in the Times/Siena poll."

Poll: Evangelicals, Fox News Viewers Remain Nearly Unanimous In Opposing Impeachment. According to the New York Times (10/21, Peters, 18.61M), "A new survey of the country's cultural and political landscape found that support for impeaching and removing President Trump from office is rising among most Americans, but that Republicans remain almost unanimously opposed, leaving Mr. Trump with a loyal but shrinking core of supporters." The Times says the data from the Public Religion Research Institute "also pointed to striking divisions among Republicans themselves, with white evangelical Christians and those who regularly get their information from Fox News forming a distinct and exceedingly devoted base of support for the president." The Times reports that "ninety-nine percent of white evangelicals and 98 percent of Republicans who rely on Fox News as their primary news source do not believe Mr. Trump should be impeached and removed, the survey found, compared with 94 percent of Republicans over all."

GOP Lawmakers Write To Zucker Over CNN's Refusal To Air Trump Ads.

The Daily Caller (10/21, Rodgers, 716K) reports that a group of Republican congressmen have written to CNN President Jeff Zucker concerning the network's refusal to air President Trump's campaign ads. Rep. Jeff Duncan (R-SC) spearheaded the letter, which was also signed by GOP Reps. Mark Meadows (NC), Louie Gohmert (TX), Rep. Ralph Norman (SC), Rep. Paul Gosar (AZ), Rep. Randy Weber (TX), Rep. Russ Fulcher (ID), Rep. Bradley Byrne (AL), and Greg Steube (FL). The lawmakers "believe CNN could be breaking the law by not airing Trump's campaign ads" They argue in the letter "that CNN's decision goes beyond First Amendment protections and that is in violation of the Constitution." The letter conclude, "We urge you to correct this flagrant violation with all due haste and allow the paid Trump Campaign advertisements to return to your airwaves immediately."

CNN's Toobin Says He Regrets Covering Clinton Email Story. Fox News (10/21, Flood, 27.59M) reports that CNN chief legal analyst Jeffrey Toobin has apologized "for covering former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server after a probe revealed dozens of people were responsible for hundreds of security violations, which Toobin described as 'no big deal.'" A State Department report "summarized a review of the handling of classified information relating to Clinton's private email server. The report reflected only approximately 30,000 emails that the State Department was able to physically review and found 38 individuals were responsible for 91 violations." Toobin "is sorry he ever bothered covering the story." He tweeted, "Note the mostly buried news that State Dept closed @HillaryClinton email probe with this verdict: no big deal. As a journalist, I regret my role in blowing this story out of proportion."

A New York Times (10/21, 18.61M) editorial says Trump raised the question, "What about her emails," like "a red flag for three years, as candidate and president, casting doubts on how Hillary Clinton used a private email server to communicate with her staff and others while she was secretary of state." However, despite his "professed concern about the integrity of government communications, his administration doesn't seem to take it too seriously." The Times cites Ivanka Trump and her husband, Jared Kushner's use of "the messaging service WhatsApp for official – possibly classified – White House business," as well Education Secretary DeVos' use of "a personal email account for some government business," and argues that "the Trump administration's widespread use of personal accounts for government work raises the unavoidable question: What about those emails?"

House GOP Effort To Censure Schiff Fails Along Party Lines.

In a tweet (10/21, 16.75M) Monday, President Trump called on the House to censure House Intelligence Committee Chairman Schiff. Trump wrote, "Censure (at least) Corrupt Adam Schiff! After what he got caught doing, any pol who does not so vote cannot be honest....are you listening Dems?"

The Washington Post (10/21, Wagner, Shammass, 14.2M) reports that a Republican effort to censure Schiff "failed Monday, with the House voting along party lines to block a floor vote on the measure." The Washington Times (10/21, Muñoz, 492K) reports that while the censure resolution had "more than 170 co-sponsors, Republicans failed to crack into the Democratic majority firewall. The resolution was tabled — and effectively killed — on a 218-185 vote." USA Today (10/21, Behrmann, 10.31M) also reports on the vote.

In a story posted before the vote, the New York Post (10/21, Hicks, 4.57M) said the censure resolution, introduced by House Freedom Caucus Chairman Rep. Andy Biggs (R-AZ) claimed that Schiff "manufactured a false retelling" of Trump's telephone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky. The resolution said, "His egregiously false and fabricated retelling had no relationship to the call itself." Dana Milbank writes in the Washington Post (10/21, Milbank, 14.2M) that while Democrats "quickly tabled the resolution in a party-line vote," it "was an instructive exercise, for it represented the essence of the Republican anti-impeachment strategy." Because "there is no good defense of Trump on the merits in the Ukraine dirt-for-dollars scandal," Republicans "complain about process: Schiff is unfair! The proceedings are too secretive! Democrats are ignoring precedents!"

Guy Benson writes on Townhall (10/21, Benson, 177K) that "all nine GOP members of the House Intelligence Committee sent a scathing letter to" Schiff on Friday, "accusing him of withholding pertinent information and conducting impeachment-related business in a 'highly irregular manner.'" Benson says the letter "is an escalation of longstanding resentments and frustrated accusations leveled against Schiff, whose dishonesty and partisanship have marred his tenure as the leader of this key panel."

After Monday's vote, President Trump re-tweeted a post from House Republican Conference Chair Cheney which said, "Today's move by House Democrats to block a vote on a resolution censuring Adam Schiff makes them complicit in his repeated and intentional attempts to deceive the American people in a broader effort to attack President Donald Trump." Trump wrote, "Thank you Liz. Shows great Republican support!"

Earlier Monday, Trump also retweeted a post from former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, which said, "Nancy Pelosi and Adam Schiff have both become embarrassingly dishonest. They, along with the rest of the House Democrats, have desperately been trying to manufacture something since the day after President Trump was elected."

Rep. Ted Deutch (D-FL) said on CNN's Situation Room (10/21, 1.14M) that the censure vote is "not appropriate. What would be appropriate would be for my Republican colleagues to do two things. ... One, is to answer the question whether they think it is appropriate for the President of the United States to use his office to pressure a foreign government for political gain, to ask them to interfere in our elections. That's number one. And second, perhaps to go to the White House and tell the President that if he really thought that he did nothing wrong, if he really thought that he had nothing to hide, then they would stop stonewalling Congress and try to prevent people from coming up here to speak with us. That is where their focus ought to be."

Rep. Anthony Brown (D-MD) said on CNN's Situation Room (10/21, 1.05M), "To censure Adam Schiff makes no sense whatsoever."

He has conducted the hearings while in secret, right, closed hearings because of the nature of the material. It is classified. It is sensitive. He has given Republicans and Democrats alike equal access to witnesses, to what documents that we have. Unlimited opportunities to ask questions. So, the idea that you're going to censure Adam Schiff on the floor of the United States House of Representatives because he's doing his job, going to the truth for the American people is ridiculous."

Trump, Pompeo Defend Call With Zelensky.

President Trump was asked in an interview with Fox News' Hannity (10/21, 535K) about his call with Ukrainian President Zelensky. Trump said, "We are looking at the 2016 election, which was a disaster. We went through hell, my Administration. ... They found no collusion, no nothing, and they went through hell. There was a server, the DNC server that had never went to the FBI. The FBI didn't take it. It was taken by somebody – I guess it was CrowdStrike, that's what I have heard. That is not for an election going into the future. That is for a past election that was a catastrophe. And it was a very unfair situation. After two and a half years of two years, they found no collusion, no nothing."

Secretary of State Pompeo said in an interview with CNBC (10/21, 207K), "I was on the call. I'm on lots of calls with the President of the United States. I know precisely what it was we were working on in Ukraine. We were trying to reduce corruption. We were very focused on making sure that we provided the defensive weapons system that they needed to defend themselves against Vladimir Putin's incursion." Asked if the call was "the norm, and not the exception," Pompeo said, "As recently as yesterday, I had a foreign leader call me, seeking to apply pressure to the United States to get us to act in a way that was consistent with what they were trying to do. It's the nature of politics, of power, of foreign interactions, each country trying to act to deliver for its own people. That's what sovereign leaders are hired to do, brought onboard to do."

WPost: Ukraine Needs US Help. The Washington Post (10/21, 14.2M) says in editorial that Ukraine's leadership "badly needs help from the United States, which has been its closest ally in resisting Russia's aggression and pursuing needed reforms," but "senior U.S. officials are nowhere to be seen in Kyiv – thanks to the destruction of U.S. diplomacy there by President Trump and his personal lawyer, Rudolph W. Giuliani." As a result, Zelensky is left "to the mercies of [Russian President Vladimir] Putin, who seeks the de facto dismemberment of Ukraine as the price for a peace settlement, and French President Emmanuel Macron, who has made clear he would like to lift the European Union sanctions against Russia."

Reports: Putin, Orban Contributed To Trump's Negative View Of Ukraine.

The Washington Post (10/21, Miller, Jaffe, Hudson, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports that according to "current and former US officials," President Trump's "effort to pressure Ukraine for information he could use against political rivals came as he was being urged to adopt a hostile view of that country by its regional adversaries, including Russian President Vladimir Putin." The officials said "Trump's conversations with Putin, Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban and others reinforced his perception of Ukraine as a hopelessly corrupt country – one that Trump now also appears to believe sought to undermine him in the 2016 US election." While Putin and Orban "specifically encouraged Trump to see Ukraine as a potential source of damaging information about Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden, nor did they describe Kyiv as complicit in an unsubstantiated 2016 election conspiracy theory," their "disparaging depictions of Ukraine reinforced Trump's perceptions of the country."

The New York Times (10/22, Baker, Fandos, 18.61M) reports that "just 10 days before a key meeting on Ukraine, President Trump met, over the objections of his national security adviser, with...Orban...and heard a sharp assessment that bolstered his hostility toward the country, according to several people informed about the situation." Trump's conversation with Orban on May 13 "exposed him to a harsh indictment of Ukraine at a time when his personal lawyer was pressing the new government in Kiev to provide damaging information about Democrats."

House Panels Set To Hear From Diplomats Tied To Ukraine Controversy.

Politico (10/21, 4.29M) reports that "a slew of depositions scheduled for this week as part of the House's impeachment inquiry have been postponed as lawmakers mourn the late Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-Md.)." However, "the three House committees leading the inquiry are still set to hear from two key witnesses this week. On Tuesday, William Taylor, the top American diplomat in Ukraine, is expected to testify; and on Wednesday, Laura Cooper, who oversees Ukraine- and Russia-related issues at the Pentagon, is slated to appear." According to Politico, Taylor "has emerged as a central figure in the impeachment inquiry" because "in a series of text messages provided to impeachment investigators, Taylor wrote: 'I think it's crazy to withhold security assistance for help with a political campaign.'" An AP (10/21, Berry) analysis says Taylor "has emerged as an unlikely hero in the impeachment inquiry." Taylor "was drawn into a Trump administration effort to leverage U.S. military aid for Ukraine, an effort Taylor believed was improper and tried to stop."

The Washington Post (10/21, Wagner, Shammas, 14.2M) reports that the House panels "were expected to hear from Ambassador Philip Reeker, acting assistant secretary for European and Eurasian affairs, and Michael Duffey, associate director of national security programs at the Office of Management and Budget – but those depositions will no longer take place Wednesday."

CQ Roll Call (10/21, Staff, 154K) reports that acting OMB Director Vought "said Monday that he won't be testifying this week as part of the House's impeachment inquiry into President Donald Trump." Vought tweeted, "I saw some Fake News over the weekend to correct. As the WH letter made clear two weeks ago, OMB officials – myself and Mike Duffey – will not be complying with deposition requests this week."

#shamprocess." Vought and Duffey "have been called by the three committees conducting the investigation about the decision to hold up $400 million in military aid for Ukraine that is at the center of the investigation."

Mulvaney, Sondland Respond To Bolton's Criticism Of Ukraine Controversy.

The Washington Examiner (10/21, Gehrke, 448K) reports that Administration officials "took aim" at former National Security Adviser John Bolton in the wake of reports that he "regarded the Ukraine controversy as a major scandal." Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney said Sunday, "John Bolton never complained to me about it. ... No one at NSC ever complained to me about anything that was going on." US Ambassador to the European Union Gordon Sondland told House investigators, "If Ambassador Bolton, Dr. [former NSC aide Fiona] Hill, or others harbored any misgivings about the propriety of what we were doing, they never shared those misgivings with me, then or later. ... Neither Ambassador Bolton, Dr. Hill, nor anyone else on the NSC staff ever expressed any concerns to me about our efforts, any complaints about coordination between State and the NSC, or, most importantly, any concerns that we were acting improperly."

Impeachment Inquiry Could Take Longer Than Some House Democrats Planned.

In a story that was the lead on the Drudge Report Monday evening, CNN (10/21, Raju, Herb, 83.16M) reports on its website that "House Democrats are facing a time crunch to quickly wrap up" their impeachment inquiry, "prompting growing expectations that votes on impeaching Trump could slip closer to the end of the year." While some Democrats had hoped the probe "could conclude swiftly, with a potential vote to impeach Trump by Thanksgiving," that "has proven to be more complicated than it initially seemed, according to multiple Democratic lawmakers and sources. The reason: Each witness has so far provided more leads for investigators to chase down, including new names to potentially interview or seek documents from." CNN adds that the challenge facing Democrats is that they "want to conduct a thorough investigation, but prolonging the probe will continue to consume Washington – and risks bumping into the presidential election season if proceedings drag into the new year."

NYTimes' Goldberg Calls For Protests In Favor Of Impeachment.

Michelle Goldberg writes in the New York Times (10/21, Goldberg, 18.61M) writes that "as Donald Trump's sneering lawlessness and stupefying corruption continue to escalate, it's confounding, at least to me, that Americans aren't taking to the streets en masse." Goldberg argues that when the House "votes to send articles of impeachment to the Senate, there needs to be a public groundswell to force the Senate majority leader, Mitch McConnell, to allow a thorough and transparent trial. Then, assuming the evidence is as compelling as it seems, there should be mass nonviolent action calling for Trump's removal."

"Numerous Sources": Cipollone "Vying Aggressively For Mulvaney's Job."

At the tail end of a segment on the impeachment inquiry debate, the CBS Evening News (10/21, story 3, 2:45, Garrett, 4.44M) reported on whether the President is mulling a replacement for Acting White House Chief of Staff, saying, "there is an internal power struggle going on," with "numerous sources" indicating "White House counsel Pat Cipollone is vying aggressively for Mulvaney's job, and Mulvaney allies acknowledge he's facing the most turbulent waters of his tenure as acting chief of staff." However, "they say his knowledge of congressional politics, budget and regulations give him an advantage, at least for now. ... My sources tell me the President might in the end decide to keep both men where they are to minimize West Wing turmoil and maximize supervision."

White House correspondent Boris Sanchez, meanwhile, said on CNN's The Lead (10/21, 944K), "One source close to Mulvaney says that after ten months on the job, the former congressman is searching for an exit, though he publicly he denies it."

Politico (10/21, Everett, Levine, 4.29M) reports, "Fighting for...[President] Trump is one thing. But Republicans aren't eager to defend a struggling White House acting chief of staff they've never really loved." Mulvaney's "two stumbling public appearances over the past week have deepened the president's Ukraine scandal, undercut a chief GOP talking point and left the party stunned and frustrated as Republican lawmakers look to hold off Democrats' impeachment drive."

In an "Editorial Observer" piece for the New York Times (10/21, 18.61M), Michelle Cottle asks, "Seriously, does anyone think Sarah Huckabee Sanders, in her turn as Mr. Trump's chief spinner, would have been goaded into admitting a presidential quid pro quo and then admonish everyone for being naïve about that sort of thing? Of course not. ... Here we see a concrete downside to the White House's slapdash approach to staffing, its disdain for professionalism and this president's conviction that, because he's such a communications whiz, he doesn't need a message team backing him up."

Trump Aides Rule Out Cuccinelli, Morgan For DHS Post.

Politico (10/21, Kumar, Lippman, 4.29M) reports President Trump "has been notified by his staff that he can't select two popular figures — Ken Cuccinelli and Mark Morgan — to serve as an acting secretary of Homeland Security because a federal law governing agency succession makes them ineligible." Instead, White House director of personnel Sean Doocey has given Trump "a list of other officials to consider as acting secretary, including DHS assistant secretary Chad Wolf and Transportation Security Administration chief David Pekoske, according to three people familiar with the conversation." According to Politico, the move "has infuriated immigration hawks inside and outside the administration who had been lobbying for Cuccinelli to fill the role and now fear Trump will tap Wolf, a former chief of staff to ousted DHS Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen."

Under the headline "Trump Running Out Of Options For Homeland Security Secretary," the New York Times (10/21, Kanno-Youngs, Haberman, 18.61M) reports Christopher C. Krebs, the director of the Department's cybersecurity agency, "has also been floated as a temporary replacement for Mr. McAleenan but has no interest, administration officials said."

Grisham Responds To Criticism From CNN's Cooper: "We Are Human Beings."

The Washington Times (10/21, Chasmar, 492K) reports White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham on Sunday responded to Anderson Cooper's brutal segment comparing her to novelist John Grisham, saying CNN has "lost sight of the fact" that Trump officials are "human beings." In a recent segment, CNN host Anderson Cooper "mocked" Grisham's "bravery" for her recent interview with "Fox & Friends," saying she "apparently got a brief furlough from West Wing witness protection" to "check-in with her supervisors" at Fox News. In an email statement to Business Insider, Grisham said, "I think CNN has lost sight of the fact that we are human beings. Just as Anderson Cooper has a job to do, working for a company he is proud of, so do I. I also imagine he has a personal life, where he has to juggle quite a bit — and the same goes for me."

Diplomats Report All-Time Low In Morale At State Under Trump.

The Hill (10/21, Wilson, 2.98M) reports the Administration's "perennial push for steep budget cuts, an exodus of senior staffers with decades of experience and constant allegations that agency employees represent a deep state has sent morale at the State Department to an unprecedented low." In addition, President Trump "has fired a senior diplomat after a whisper campaign mounted by his personal lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, and abandoned steadfast allies in the Middle East to fend for themselves on the battlefield at the behest" of Turkey. Both current and former diplomats "say the weight of those events is taking a startling and measurable toll on American foreign relations," and are "increasingly concerned that the White House and senior State Department leadership do not have their backs."

Perry To Resign On December 1.

Reuters (10/21) reports the Department of Energy announced Monday that Secretary Perry "intends to step down on Dec. 1."

Former Aide Details Tensions Between Trump, Mattis.

In a piece for Politico Magazine (10/21, 4.24M) adapted from his book "Holding the Line: Inside Trump's Pentagon With Secretary Mattis," Guy Snodgrass, former chief speechwriter for Defense Secretary Jim Mattis, writes, "Long before real planning for it began, and long before the first news stories about it, those of us in the top levels of the Pentagon heard President Donald Trump demand the military parade he would eventually get. The bizarre request was one of the first signs I had of the enormous rift between my boss at the time, Defense Secretary James Mattis, and the president." Snodgrass stresses that "Mattis did not think Trump was a raving lunatic, as some were trying to portray the president. In fact, Mattis had made a point of noting to us that America elected Trump for a reason. That the president had tremendous political skills, a sharp intuition and a formidable business career. Those qualities deserved respect."

GAO: Federal Land Employees Threatened Or Assaulted 360 Times In Recent Years.

The Washington Post (10/18, Davidson, 14.2M) says a report released Monday "indicates at least 360 threats and assaults against employees of four agencies" — the Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), the Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Park Service — from fiscal 2013 through 2017. The FBI investigated "under 100" of these "as domestic terrorism cases, a Government Accountability Office (GAO) report said, using a vague, unexplained number that could be anything from zero to 99." The post says the "count of 360 is probably an underestimate and does not fully convey the severity of the problem" as incidents reported to state and local authorities "are not included in the tally." More troubling, the Post says, "employees told GAO they don't always report threats, because they are 'part of the job,' or a 'common occurrence' even while off-duty."

Trump Slams "Crazy" Democrats, Says He Would Have Hosted G-7 At His Resort For Free.

The President took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Doral in Miami would have been the best place to hold the G-7, and free, but too much heat from the Do Nothing Radical Left Democrats & their Partner, the Fake News Media! I'm surprised that they allow me to give up my $400,000 Plus Presidential Salary! We'll find someplace else!" Later yesterday, the New York Post (10/21, Moore, 4.57M) reports, Trump "continued to rail about having to remove his Doral golf resort as host of the G-7 gathering of world leaders" during a cabinet meeting at the White House, "saying he 'would have done it for free.'" Added Trump, "I own a property in Florida. I would have given it for nothing," but "the Democrats went crazy, even though I would have done it for free. ... It would have been the best G-7 ever."

Instead, the AP (10/21, Colvin, Condon) reports, Trump predicted the summit "will end up costing taxpayers 'a fortune.'" The President "brushed aside the criticism that hosting the summit would have been one big promotion for his brand," saying, "You don't think I get enough promotion? I get more promotion than any human being that's ever lived." ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 4, 2:45, Vega, 7.23M) reported the President appeared "clearly frustrated," and Politico (10/21, Marshall, 4.29M) recounts that as he took questions from reporters, Trump mused, "You people with this phony emoluments clause."

Axios (10/21, Basu, 521K) quotes Trump as further stating, "I don't know if you know it – George Washington, he ran his business simultaneously while he was president. There weren't too many really rich presidents, but there were a few. They ran their business. Hey, Obama made a deal for a book. Is that running a business? I'm sure he didn't even discuss it while he was president. Yeah, yeah. He has a deal with Netflix. When did they start talking about that? That's only a couple of examples." The New York Times (10/21, Karni, 18.61M) says Trump "compared himself to George Washington, who he said operated a business while he was president."

To USA Today (10/21, Collins, Jackson, Subramanian, 10.31M), Trump "dismissed as 'phony' a section of the Constitution that bars federal office holders from accepting gifts from foreign governments." The Washington Times (10/21, Howell, 492K) reports "the clause is written in Article I, Section 9 of the Constitution," and The Hill (10/21, Samuels, 2.98M) that it "prohibits elected federal officials from receiving gifts or contributions from foreign governments." Trump, adds The Hill, "has repeatedly claimed the presidency has cost him billions of dollars."

The Washington Examiner (10/21, Yilek, 448K) says, meanwhile, that Trump "has blamed Democrats and the media for his walk back, but both Republicans and Democrats expressed concern over the use of the resort for the G-7." Along those lines, NBC Nightly News (10/21, story 3, 2:01, Jackson, 6.37M) said it "has learned the President late Saturday suddenly reversed himself after hearing from a group of House Republicans huddled at Camp David. Two sources in the room say those moderates made it clear the President should change course, which he did, begrudgingly."

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) said on Fox News' Special Report (10/21, 1.53M), "There is no way they didn't know it would be controversial. So, you almost wonder if they didn't do it – the President likes to poke the media. He likes to poke outrage in his opponents. They had to have known that. I have two thoughts about it. ... I think it would be wonderful for Florida to have the G7, especially south Florida. It would be a great thing for our community. I think we would be a very good host. The flip side of it is, I recognize that people are going to look at it and say, in the middle of everything that's going on, why would you do that? It actually undermines your corruption argument that you've been making about [Joe] Biden and so forth. I thought it would have been great for Florida, but I recognize the complications that it came with."

The Miami Herald (10/21, Chambers, 1.09M) reports "a dozen other destinations, including North Carolina and California, that were originally under consideration" to host the summit "may no longer be available," and "White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham acknowledged Monday that Camp David may be selected, even though it wasn't the first choice." Said Grisham, "That's just always an option. ... It wasn't ideal before, but it has been used before."

Politico Report: Hoover, JFK Also Declined Presidential Salary. Politico (10/21, Marshall, 4.29M) reports Trump "didn't have his historical facts straight when saying no other commander in chief gave up their presidential paycheck." Herbert Hoover "was the first American executive-in-chief to refuse a salary," and John F. Kennedy did the same. Politico adds "Trump has made a show of giving away his paycheck, donating his salary to the National Parks Service, the Department of Education, the Veterans Administration, the Small Business Administration, the Surgeon General's office and the Department of Agriculture."

CAIR, SPLC Call On Mar-A-Lago To Cancel ACT For America Event.

The Washington Times (10/21, Richardson, 492K) reports that less than two weeks after the "leftist groups" the Council on American-Islamic Relations and the Southern Poverty Law Center "pressured Mar-a-Lago to cancel a booking for an ACT for America gala featuring conservative pundit Michelle Malkin, the resort has come under pressure to scrap the annual banquet of the Center for Security Policy, another conservative national security organization listed by the SPLC as a 'hate group.'" CAIR government affairs director Robert McCaw said in a statement, "The Trump Organization made the right decision to cancel a previous event hosted by an anti-Muslim hate group, and we call them to do so again." McCaw added that President Trump "should not profit from a group that makes its money by demonizing an entire faith."

Esper: Some US Troops May Remain In Syria To Secure Oil Fields.

Coverage of Defense Secretary Esper's announcement Monday that US troops may remain in Syria presents it as an indication that President Trump will fail to make good on his pledge to withdraw US forces from the country. The AP (10/21, Baldor) reports that Esper said the US "may leave some forces in Syria to secure oil fields and make sure they don't fall into the hands of a resurgent Islamic State...even though" Trump "has insisted he is pulling troops out of the country and getting out of 'endless wars.'"

The Washington Post (10/21, Fahim, George, 14.2M) reports that Esper "said the purpose of the residual force would be to 'deny access, specifically revenue to ISIS and any other groups that might want to seek that revenue to enable their own malign activities.'" Esper said the proposal to keep troops in Syria "in some cities" has not yet been presented to Trump, but the Post cites "a US official said with knowledge of operations in Syria," who said the plan "was intended to deter not only the Islamic State from profiting from the oil...but also Syria's government."

The AP (10/21, Baldor) reports that Esper "said the plan was still in the discussion phase and had not yet been presented to Trump, who has repeatedly said the Islamic State has been defeated." According to the AP, Esper "emphasized that the proposal to leave a small number of troops in eastern Syria was intended to give the president 'maneuver room' and wasn't final." Esper is quoted as saying, "There has been a discussion about possibly doing it. ... There has been no decision with regard to numbers or anything like that." The Washington Post (10/21, Fahim, George, 14.2M), however, is reporting that "the proposal to continue securing oil fields in Syria, indefinitely, could rely on a force of about 200 US troops in eastern Syria." ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 5, 2:00, Muir, 7.23M) likewise reported that "between 200 to 300 could go to eastern Syria to protect those oil interests.”

The CBS Evening News (10/21, story 4, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.44M) reported, “This shift comes after the President’s plan to withdraw all American forces was criticized by Democrats and Republicans.” Reuters (10/21) reports that at a White House Cabinet meeting on Monday, Trump “said he did not want to leave any American troops in Syria,” but “a small number of US troops would stay ‘in a little different section to secure the oil,’ as well as in ‘a totally different section of Syria near Jordan and close to Israel.” Trump added, “Ultimately, we’re bringing them home.” The Hill (10/21, Chalfant, 2.98M) quotes Trump as saying, “I don’t want to leave any troops there. That’s very dangerous territory. I don’t think it’s necessary other than we secure the oil. It’s a little different section, but we need to secure the oil.”

USA Today (10/21, Shesgreen, Jackson, 10.31M) reports Trump also said, “I’m trying to get out of wars. We may have to get in wars, too.” To Politico (10/21, Forgey, 4.29M), Trump “offered a confusing description of his foreign policy priorities as commander in chief — insisting that he was working to bring home American soldiers while warning the US may soon enter into new military conflicts.”

In an interview last night with Fox News’ Hannity (10/21, 535K), the President said US soldiers were “supposed to be in Syria for 30 days. Now, one thing about Syria, when I took over, ISIS was all over the place. You know that better than anybody. Two and a half years ago. I went in and when I started I got rid of that while thing. All of those prisoners and most, they were captured under Trump. We killed many, many ISIS fighters. You know, you hate to talk about death. ... We took 100 percent of the caliphate. ... But you know what, it is now time to bring our soldiers home.”

The New York Times (10/21, Hubbard, Kingsley, 18.61M) reports that though Trump as characterized the withdrawal of “most American troops from Syria” as “bringing troops home...Esper said on Sunday that most forces would be redeployed to western Iraq, where they would continue operations against the Islamic State.”

In fact, Reuters (10/21, Omar, Ali) reports that US troops are already “crossing into Iraq as part of a broader withdrawal from Syria ordered by” Trump. According to Reuters, “More than 100 vehicles crossed the border into Iraq early on Monday from the northeast tip of Syria.”

Calling the images “one of the lowest moments of America’s reputation in the Middle East in years,” Richard Engel reported on NBC Nightly News (10/21, story 4, 1:50, Holt, 6.37M), Kurdish civilians on Monday threw “potatoes and yell[ed] insults at American troops ordered out of Syria. At another location, Kurds holding signs for US troops saying, ‘Tell your children Kurdish children are dying, and we did nothing to protect them.’”

The CBS Evening News (10/21, story 4, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.44M) and ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 5, 2:00, Muir, 7.23M) also briefly reported the protests, while the AP (10/21) says the images “encapsulated the Kurds’ feelings of betrayal and add[ing] a new indignity to a US withdrawal that has been rushed and saw several close brushes with Turkish-backed forces.”

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) said on Fox News’ Special Report (10/21, 1.53M), “What I’ve heard is, we are not really leaving the Middle East. We are just relocating them over into Iraq. From Iraq, they are going to be conducting some of the same operations. I saw a media report that we may leave some troops behind at some of these oil fields. You know why? If we do that, it’s because the Iranians are trying to get their hands on those oil fields, because it means revenue. They can recoup all that money they spent in propping up Assad. Again, ultimately, we are not going to be there forever, but if you were going to begin the process of diminishing our presence, it should have been done with some planning, not simply sort of a one phone call thing. That is, as much is anything else, part of this problem.”

Sen. Chris Murphy (D-CT) said on CNN’s The Lead (10/21, 1.01M), “The President has dramatically increased the number of American troops that are in the Middle East, so nobody should get away with him trying to pretend that he is the great military withdrawer from the region. In fact, we have thousands more troops in the Middle East, many of them guarding Saudi Arabia, than we did before the President took office.”

The New York Times (10/21, Gibbons-Neff, Schmitt, 18.61M) similarly reports that under Trump, “there are now more troops in the Middle East than when he took office, and he has continued the mission for tens of thousands of others far from the wars of 9/11.”

Trump: Cease-Fire Holding In Northern Syria.

The Washington Times (10/21, Howell, 492K) reports President Trump said Monday the cease-fire along the Turkey-Syria border is “holding.” Speaking at a Cabinet meeting, Trump said, “We’re having very good news coming out. The cease-fire’s holding.”

Pompeo: Trump “Fully Prepared” To Take Military Action If Needed. Secretary of State Pompeo, asked in an interview with CNBC’s Closing Bell (10/21, 207K) what could prompt US military action in Syria, said, “I never get out in front of the President’s decision about whether to take the awesome undertaking of using America’s military might to protection American interests. But, the world should know...where we see American interests at stake or fundamental norms that need to be enforced, we’ll use all the powers that we have.” Pompeo added, “We prefer peace to war. But in the event that kinetic action or military action is needed you should know that President Trump is fully prepared to undertake that action.” Breitbart (10/21, Caplan, 673K) reports Pompeo’s remarks.

Graham Softens Criticism Of Trump’s Syria Policy. USA Today (10/21, Cummings, 10.31M) reports that “until recently, Sen. Lindsey Graham had been one the most outspoken critics of President Donald Trump’s decision to pull US troops out of Syria,” but, after speaking with the President on Saturday, “he said he had changed his mind.” On Sunday, Graham told Fox News that he planned to “withhold judgment” on Syria “until it’s all in.”

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Hasn’t Received Anything In Exchange For Withdrawals. Peter Baker writes in an analysis for the New York Times (10/21, Baker, 18.61M) that “the Taliban have wanted the United States to pull troops out of Afghanistan, Turkey has wanted the Americans out of northern Syria and North Korea has wanted them to at least stop military exercises with South Korea." Baker writes that the President has "to some extent at least obliged all three — but without getting much of anything in return." He adds that "for a president who has repeatedly promised to end the 'endless wars,' the decisions reflect a broader conviction that bringing troops home — or at least moving them out of hot spots — is more important than haggling for advantage."

NYTimes Report: SDF Enlisted ISIS Prisoners To Fight With Them. The New York Times (10/21, Kirkpatrick, Schmitt, 18.61M) reports that "American forces and their Kurdish-led partners in Syria had been conducting as many as a dozen counterterrorism missions a day against Islamic State militants," but "that has stopped." Those "same partners, the Syrian Democratic Forces, had also been quietly releasing some Islamic State prisoners and incorporating them into their ranks, in part as a way to keep them under watch." According to the Times, "That, too, is now in jeopardy."

Turkish And Syrian Officials Reportedly In Talks To Avert Direct Conflict. Reuters (10/21, Coskun) reports that Turkish officials are "holding covert contacts with Syria's government to avert direct conflict in northeast Syria where both sides have deployed their armies...despite Ankara's long-standing hostility to President Bashar al-Assad." Reuters points out that Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan "backs rebels who fought to topple Assad during Syria's eight-year civil war," and has "described Assad as a terrorist." Nevertheless, "Warily, the two sides have set up channels of communication, both direct military and intelligence contacts and indirect messages through Russia, to reduce the risk of confrontation."

Macron Backs Ceasefire Extension In Call To Putin. Reuters (10/21) reports French President Emmanuel Macron told Russian President Vladimir Putin on Monday that it is "important to extend the ceasefire in northeast Syria," and "also said he expected tensions in northeast Syria to be resolved through diplomatic ways."

Official: Iraqis "Facing Threat Of War" Amid Turmoil In Syria.

The Washington Post (10/21, Ryan, 14.2M) reports Fuad Hussein, Iraq's deputy prime minister and finance minister, "said Monday that his government was concerned the recent events in Syria could lead to dangerous militants entering Iraq and eroding its fragile security." Speaking to reporters during a visit to Washington, Hussein "said militant cells remained in some parts of Iraq even after the Islamic State militant group had been deprived of its ability to hold territory." Said Hussein, "Once again with this action I am afraid that we are going to give rebirth to ISIS."

Stocks Finish Higher On Trade Optimism, With S&P Nearing New Record.

Reuters (10/21, Joyner) reports "the benchmark S&P 500 stock index rose within striking distance of a record high on Monday as further signs of progress toward resolution of the US-China trade war boosted shares in sectors sensitive to trade and the global economy." The President "continued to strike optimistic tones, while White House adviser Larry Kudlow said tariffs on Chinese goods scheduled for December could be withdrawn if talks go well." The Dow "rose 57.44 points, or 0.21%, to 26,827.64, the S&P 500 gained 20.52 points, or 0.69%, to 3,006.72 and the Nasdaq Composite added 73.44 points, or 0.91%, to 8,162.99."

Pence Promotes USMCA, Blasts Biden In Visit To Pennsylvania.

The Wilkes-Barre \(PA\) Citizens' Voice (10/21, Kalinowski, 149K) reports Vice President Pence yesterday "visited a Duryea glass manufacturing facility to tout a Trump administration-backed trade deal and urged Northeast Pennsylvania residents to pressure Democrats in Congress to pass the deal." Pence also "took a jab at his predecessor and Democrat presidential candidate, Joe Biden, who earlier in the day criticized Trump's support for the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement by saying 'Pennsylvanians will not be fooled.'" Said Pence, "Joe, Pennsylvanians will not be fooled. They know the USMCA is a win for Pennsylvania and a win for America. It's time you got on board." Pence "further blasted Biden, saying during his time as vice president under Barack Obama, the country lost tens of thousands of manufacturing jobs that the Obama administration claimed would never come back." In contrast, "Pence said the administration has created 500,000 new manufacturing jobs in the last three years."

The AP (10/21) quotes Pence as also saying, "These days, Democrats are spending all their time on endless investigations and partisan impeachment. But the American people deserve better, and I came to Pennsylvania to say it's time for the Democrats in Congress to put Pennsylvania first." Politico (10/21, Rodriguez, Choi, 4.29M) reports "Pence has spoken at more than 30 events aimed at pressing lawmakers to pass the new trade pact, which still needs to be approved by Congress." House Democrats "are currently negotiating with US Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer in an effort to secure changes to the deal that would allow for Speaker Nancy Pelosi to put it up for a vote."

Earlier Monday, Biden wrote in a statement to the Wilkes-Barre \(PA\) Citizens' Voice (10/21, Kalinowski, 149K), "Donald Trump has talked tough on trade but has nothing to show for it, other than pain for America's families. Mike Pence has been his complicit sidekick, propping up Trump's trade wars and slighting hard-working Americans in Luzerne County and across the country." Biden added, "I know Pennsylvania, and Pennsylvanians will not be fooled by Pence's blind promotion of Trump's irresponsible trade wars. They understand that it is their workers, farmers, and manufacturers who are paying the price and feeling the pain."

Bloomberg Analysis: Barr Playing Key Role In Investigating Tech Firms.

Bloomberg (10/21, McLaughlin, Strohm, 4.73M) reports that after the Justice Department's antitrust chief, Makan Delrahim, "agreed to open probes of Google and Apple Inc., handing over Facebook and Amazon to the Federal Trade Commission," Attorney General Barr "did an end run around the agreement and made a grab for authority over all four tech giants" by announcing "wide-ranging reviews of the top social media, retail, and search platforms." The action "shows the attorney general is taking a direct role in the probes of America's biggest tech companies," and is "delivering on the agenda of President Trump, who's agitated for tech investigations since his election." Bloomberg says "Barr's actions are consistent with his view of an agency whose job is to defend Trump's executive power," according to Donald Ayer, deputy attorney general under George H.W. Bush, but "a Justice Department spokesman denies the tech company probes are politically motivated."

Zuckerberg Says Recommendations To Buttigieg's Campaign Should Not Be Seen As An Endorsement. Bloomberg (10/21, Pager and Wagner, 4.73M) reports Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg "has privately recommended several potential hires to Pete Buttigieg's presidential campaign." He has "sent multiple emails to Mike Schmuhl, Buttigieg's campaign manager, with names of individuals that he might consider hiring, campaign spokesman Chris Meagher confirmed." His wife, Priscilla Chan, "also sent multiple emails to Schmuhl with staff recommendations." Of those recommended two "were hired." Bloomberg adds that Zuckerberg "acknowledged that he and his wife passed along hiring recommendations but said that those actions should not be seen as an endorsement."

Facebook Reveals It Has Blocked Efforts Based In Russia And Iran To Affect Politics. NBC Nightly News (10/21, story 6, 3:21, Holt, 6.37M) reported Facebook is "revealing it has just blocked Russian and Iranian-based efforts on its platforms meant to manipulate the political conversation here and abroad." NBC carries an interview of Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg by Lester Holt. Holt said, "In an exclusive interview, Mark Zuckerberg revealing how foreign actors are already working to influence the 2020 election." Zuckerberg said, "This is a signal that these nation-states intend to be active in the upcoming elections, but it's also, I think, a sign that we've been able to proactively identify them and take them down." Zuckerberg said that in the 2016 campaign, "We were looking for more traditional threats, like hacking, but weren't looking for coordinated information campaigns that now we're aware of."

The New York Times (10/21, Isaac, 18.61M) reports, "Facebook on Monday said it had found and taken down four state-backed disinformation campaigns." According to Facebook, "Three of the campaigns originated in Iran, and one in Russia," and "targeted people in North Africa, Latin America and the United States." The Times says, "Facebook generally takes a hands-off approach toward users sharing false or inaccurate information." Zuckerberg "added that there has been an escalation of sophisticated attacks coming from Iran and China." Facebook "said the disinformation campaigns it removed included content that touched on conflict in the Middle East, racial strife and posts involving" Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) According to the Times, "The posts crossed categories and ideological lines, seemingly with no specific intent other than to foment discord among citizens in multiple countries." Likewise, Reuters (10/21) reports that Ben Nimmo, "a researcher with social media analysis company Graphika who Facebook commissioned, said the flagged accounts shared material that could appeal to Republican and Democratic voters alike."

The AP (10/21) reports Facebook is "stepping up its efforts to ensure it is not used as a tool to interfere in politics and democracies around the world." According to the AP, "The efforts outlined Monday include a special security tool for elected officials and candidates that monitors their accounts for hacking attempts such as login attempts from unusual locations or unverified devices." In addition, Facebook "will also label state-controlled media as such" and "label fact-checks more clearly." The AP says Facebook also announced today that it has "removed four networks of fake, misinformation-spreading accounts based in Russia and Iran" that "sought to disrupt elections in the U.S., North Africa and Latin America."

The Washington Post (10/21, Romm, 14.2M) reports that Facebook says the "Russian-backed accounts...showed some links to the Internet Research Agency and in some cases posed as locals weighing in on political issues in swing states, an indication of the persistence of the tech giant's disinformation problem a year before voters head to the ballot box." According to the Post, the Internet Research Agency "is the Kremlin-backed entity that sowed social and political unrest during the 2016 presidential race."

WPost: Facebook Aiding Candidates In Promoting Lies. The Washington Post (10/21, 14.2M) in an editorial says that Facebook's Zuckerberg's concerns regarding free speech "are well-founded. But they do not...mean that Facebook must publish deliberate and damaging falsehoods in political advertising." The Post says the question is whether Facebook "should allow even the most obviously untruthful content unlimited reach." The Post says that Facebook "should, and does, allow candidates to say pretty much whatever they want in everyday posts," but the Post says that ads are different, as "the site is accepting money to bump up posts in the feeds of carefully targeted groups of users." The Post concludes that the country doesn't "want an Internet where the way to win an election is to fabricate."

Rapinoe Chosen As Face Of Nike-Nordstrom Ad.

The Washington Times (10/21, Vogt, 492K) reports, "Soccer star and frequent Trump critic Megan Rapinoe has been tapped as the face of Nike's latest ad campaign." Rapinoe "will be joined by Binx Walton and John Waters in modeling a shoe collection in a partnership between Nike and Nordstrom."

Louis Vuitton Designer Posts Against Company For Hosting Trump In Texas.

The New York Times (10/21, Friedman, 18.61M) reports, "Nicolas Ghesquière, the artistic director of Louis Vuitton women's wear and one of the designer jewels in the LVMH crown, has spoken out – or posted anyway – to dissociate himself with his company's new association with President Trump," after "Trump cut the ribbon on a spanking-new Louis Vuitton workshop facility in Johnson County, Texas." The Times says, "for many, the fact that Vuitton allowed itself to be a part of the president's mythmaking was, well, collusion." The Times says "it is a pretty radical move for a designer who is among the most known high-fashion creatives in the business to publicly chastise his employer" as Ghesquière did in a post.

Bezos Visits Washington, DC School Computer Science Class Supported By Amazon.

The Washington Post (10/21, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports Jeff Bezos visited Washington's Dunbar High School on Monday and "dropped into" a computer science class and began asking questions of the students. The Post adds, "Amazon is funding computer science classes in more than 2,000 high schools," and "Dunbar, one of 50 participating schools in the Washington metropolitan region, fits the profile of those that Amazon has provided with funding." The school is "94 percent black and 5 percent Hispanic" and "nine percent of students are homeless," while "sixty-five percent of students are considered at-risk." The Post also reports, "the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics projects that by 2020 there will be 1.4 million computer-science-related jobs and only 400,000 computer science graduates with the skills for them."

Boeing Board Faces "Cascade Of Bad News."

The New York Times (10/21, Gelles, Kitroeff, 18.61M) reports on the meeting of Boeing's board on Monday, saying it is facing "a grim reality" and the company is in "the biggest crisis in its 103-year history," because of the crashes of two 737 Max airplanes that "killed 346 people." The Times says "executives and directors spent more than five hours discussing how to manage a worrisome cascade of bad news."

San Jose Proposes Changing PG&E Into A Customer-Owned Utility.

The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Smith, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the city of San Jose is hoping to convert PG&E into a customer-owned utility. San Jose is trying to recruit other cities and counties to support the plan, which would turn PG&E into a nonprofit electric-and-gas cooperative. Mayor Sam Liccardo told the Wall Street Journal it is time for PG&E to be taken in a different direction. If successful, the cooperative would be the largest customer-owned utility in the country.

Paradise Awaits Revival A Year After Camp Fire. The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Ailworth, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on the state of Paradise nearly a year after the Camp Fire ravaged the town. Crews have been busy clearing burned houses, dead trees and scorched car frames, and only 3,000 of the town's 26,000 residents have returned. The Journal says the future of the town rests on how many of its residents do return and invest in rebuilding the community.

WSJournal Editorial Board Member Says PG&E Is A Model Of A Stakeholder Company. Allysia Finley, a member of the Journal's editorial board, writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), about PG&E arguing that while Democratic politicians in California have accused the company of choosing profits over people, the company is actually a model of a company being responsible to stakeholders. Finley adds that the utility operates under the California Public Utilities Commission and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission which regulate the company's prices and may also direct its infrastructure investments. Finley also argues that stakeholders have opposed a plan by PG&E to raise rates in order to boost investment in the electrical grid.

WeWork Board To Consider Takeover Offer From SoftBank.

The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Hoffman, Farrell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the board of WeWork will consider SoftBank Group's offer of a takeover that would help to deal with a cash shortage, but also reduce the company's valuation to around $8 billion. SoftBank would lend the company $5 billion and move a $1.5 billion investment forward, and would also purchase $1 billion in stock from current holders. JPMorgan Chase & Co. is also expected to make an offer.

DNA Collected From Migrants Will Be Included In FBI Database.

The AP (10/21, Long) reports the Administration is "planning to collect DNA samples from asylum-seekers and other migrants detained by immigration officials and will add the information to a massive FBI database used by law enforcement hunting for criminals." DOJ "issued amended regulations that would mandate DNA collection for almost all migrants who cross between official entry points and are held even temporarily." The AP adds "the rules would not apply to legal permanent residents or anyone entering the US legally, and children under 14 are exempt, but it's unclear whether asylum-seekers who come through official crossings will be exempt."

Fox News (10/21, Re, 27.59M) indicates that "this past August, Fox News exclusively reported that a top government watchdog alerted President Trump and Congress that Customs and Border Protection (CBP), through a 'disturbing' pattern of misconduct, had endangered the public for nearly a decade by failing to comply with the law." Yesterday, DOJ "called the move a major step for law enforcement and said DHS would ensure that all federal agencies comply with the law going forward."

NPR (10/21, Rose, 3.12M) says that "in the proposed regulation, [Attorney General] Barr describes the DNA sample as a 'genetic fingerprint' that can uniquely identify a person, 'but they do not disclose the individual's traits, disorders, or dispositions.'" However, "immigrant advocates have denounced the proposal, arguing that collecting genetic information from those crossing the border could have implications for family members residing in the US."

Likewise, Reuters (10/21, Trotta) casts the move as "raising privacy concerns especially for asylum-seekers and minor offenders," and adds it "represents the latest initiative by President Donald Trump's administration to reduce legal and illegal immigration, an issue central to his 2020 re-election campaign." Reuters adds "Trump administration officials have argued that the rule simply restores authority that had been suspended by the Department of Homeland Security under former President Barack Obama and that is authorized under a law passed by Congress in 2005." The Washington Examiner (10/21, Dunleavy, 448K) reports "the bipartisan DNA Fingerprint Act authorized the attorney general, currently...Barr, to order any federal agency to 'collect DNA samples from individuals who are arrested, facing charges, or convicted or from non-United States persons who are detained under the authority of the United States,' but a federal rule in 2008 allowed homeland security to consult with the Justice Department to exempt itself from collecting DNA samples from noncitizen detainees." DOJ "said this new rule would do away with that exemption."

Paul Berated At California Restaurant.

The Washington Times (10/21, Chasmar, 492K) reports that Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) "was berated by a couple of New Yorkers in a California restaurant Friday." Paul and his deputy chief of staff "posted a 24-second clip of the exchange," in which "a man and a woman can be seen confronting the Kentucky Republican about his political leanings." Paul "retweeted the short clip as a defense of President Trump." He wrote, "The left blames incivility on @realDonaldTrump. Watch this video and decide who the rude ones are..."

Krugman: Warren Faces "Health Policy Trap" Over Medicare For All.

Paul Krugman writes in his column for the New York Times (10/21, 18.61M) that the promise by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) to "release a plan explaining how she intends to pay for 'Medicare for all'" may be "a make or break moment for her campaign." Krugman adds, "Warren has made policy seriousness a key aspect of her political persona, so her fogginess on health care really stands out." Krugman also says "the election might...hinge on the support of people who have good private coverage and would be nervous about making a leap into the unknown." He concludes that Warren is facing a test of whether "she can extricate herself from what looks like a health policy trap."

WSJournal: Study Belies Democrats' Argument For Increasing Taxes On The Wealthy.

A Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that while California Democrats have repeatedly increased taxes on the wealthy and argued it has no impact on taxpayer migration or state tax revenue, a new study from Stanford economists Joshua Rauh and Ryan Shyu proves otherwise. The study, which examined how the response of high earners to Prop. 30, a 2012 referendum that raised the top marginal rate to 13.3%, found an increase in the likelihood of wealthy residents leaving the state resulting in a decrease in the expected revenue from the tax increase on high earners.

Police Organization Members Dismiss O'Rourke's Gun Proposals As "Ridiculous."

The Washington Times (10/21, Ernst, 492K) reports former Rep. Beto O'Rourke's (D) "gun control plans" are being called "ridiculous" and "asinine" by members of "police groups" including the National Fraternal Order of Police, the National Sheriffs' Association, and the National Association of Police Organizations. The Time says that O'Rourke "would face widespread dissent among law enforcement personnel in addition to various legal battles."

Two Children Shot In Philadelphia.

The CBS Evening News (10/21, story 5, 1:38, O'Donnell, 4.44M) reported, "Tonight, shock and grief on the streets of Philadelphia. A suspect who shot and killed a two-year-old girl Sunday is still on the loose. It happened less than 24 hours after another child was shot and critically wounded in Philadelphia." CBS (Lenghi) added, "A heartbroken community came out to mourn the death of two-year-old Nicolette Rivera. The toddler was in her living room yesterday afternoon when a gunman targeted the house, shooting through the front door and windows. Her mother and a contractor were wounded." CBS continued, "Rivera's death came less than 24 hours after another tragic shooting Saturday. An 11 month old, shot four times, sitting in the back of a vehicle caught in cross-fire." CBS also reported that Philadelphia "has seen 280 murders this year."

Lott: Mexican Gun Control Laws Are Not Lowering Murder Rate.

John R. Lott Jr. writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) arguing that Mexico has strict gun control, but the country has had 25,890 murders through September of this year, a rate about six times that of the US. Lott adds that Mexicans used to have a right to own guns until the constitution was amended in 1971 and strict gun control measures were passed. He also says that Mexico blames the US for the firearms in the country, but according to Lott murders in Mexico are often committed with weapons that are not available in the US, such as fully-automatic weapons and grenades. Lott further contends that strict gun control laws are associated with higher murder rates.

Warren Proposes Banning For-Profit Charter Schools.

The New York Times (10/21, Goldstein, Kaplan, 18.61M) reports that Sen. Elizabeth Warren, "who speaks frequently about her time as a public-school teacher," yesterday "offered her long-awaited proposal" for education reform, which the Times says is "a characteristically dense white paper that promises to quadruple federal funding for schools that serve low-income students, and to pump tens of billions of new dollars per year into desegregation, special education, bilingual programs and mental health support, while increasing federal oversight of racial and gender discrimination in schools." The Times says "the plan would be paid for by Ms. Warren's signature wealth tax on net worth over $50 million.”

Politico (10/21, Stratford, 4.29M) says Warren “took aim at charter schools.” Her “proposal, which would cost some $800 billion over 10 years, would significantly expand federal support for public education and also fight the ‘corporatization’ and ‘privatization’ of public schools.” Politico adds Warren’s plan “calls for banning for-profit charter schools and ending the main source of federal funding for all types of charter schools.”

Bloomberg (10/21, Egkolfopoulou, 4.73M) reports that Warren “would quadruple US federal funding for public schools over 10 years, to $450 billion, and add $200 billion for students with disabilities. The spending includes $100 billion in ‘Excellence Grants’ over a decade – the equivalent of $1 million for every US school – and $50 billion to improve buildings and other infrastructure.”

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) mocks the price tags of recent proposals by Democratic presidential candidates as unfeasible, focusing on the estimated $800 billion needed to fund Warren’s education plan.

DeVos Thanks AOC For Apparently Endorsing School Choice.

Townhall (10/21, O’Brien, 177K) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY), in campaigning for Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) in Queens, New York, “praised his progressive agenda and his helping to lead a ‘working-class revolution.’” She also “recalled how as a young child in the Bronx, her school options weren’t the best,” so her family “moved into a small house in Westchester County.” In response, “Education Secretary Betsy DeVos thanked AOC for unintentionally making the case for school choice.” DeVos tweeted, “Picking the best school for you is called school choice. Glad your family had an option, @aoc. Now let’s help every child! #EducationFreedom.”

More Parents Plead Guilty In College Admissions Case.

NBC Nightly News (10/21, story 5, 1:29, Holt, 6.37M) reported, “Four more parents have pleaded guilty in the college cheating scandal.” NBC (Almaguer) added, “Facing the pressure of a conviction, today four parents charged in the college admissions scandal reversed course, walking into federal court to change their pleas from not guilty to guilty. With each facing fraud and money laundering charges, the LA Times reports prosecutors turned up the heat, threatening to file an additional bribery charge, which, if convicted, would likely mean more time behind bars.” But, added NBC, “16 parents, including Hollywood celebrity Lori Loughlin and her fashion designer husband, are keeping their pleas of not guilty.”

The CBS Evening News (10/21, story 10, 0:16, O’Donnell, 4.44M) reported, “Douglas Hodge, Manuel and Elizabeth Henriquez, and the heir to the Hot Pockets fortune, Michelle Janavs, pleaded guilty to fraud and money laundering charges. They’ll be sentenced early next year.”

ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 10, 1:15, Muir, 7.23M) reported, “Just today, four parents have now changed their pleas to guilty. It comes amid those images of actress Felicity Huffman, who pleaded guilty herself, now serving her 14-day sentence.” ABC (Pilgrim) added, “Nineteen of 35 parents have pleaded guilty,” but “Lori Loughlin and her husband are still fighting charges they paid $500,000 to pose their daughters as rowing recruits for USC.”

Many HBCUs Facing Financial Collapse.

Delece Smith-Barrow, a senior editor at The Hechinger Report, writes in the New York Times (10/21, 18.61M) that last month, she watched President Trump “receiving repeated applause from a crowd of brown faces,” for “heaping praise on the hundreds gathered there for his remarks at the National H.B.C.U. Week Conference.” Smith-Barrow says that Trump’s claim that his Administration’s “support for historically black colleges and universities has been ‘bigger and better and stronger than any previous administration, by far’ was a characteristic exaggeration.” But, she adds, “the White House has mildly increased investment in H.B.C.U. programming by 14.3 percent.” Even so, Smith-Barrow says that HBCUs are “on the brink of disaster” in part because of declining public investment over the past 20 years. She argues that they “will need to further engage alumni” and concludes, “If the federal government doesn’t issue a rescue mission in the coming decade, it’s a tragic extinction we should be prepared for.”

WPost A1: Facebook Video Exposes Racial Divide At North Carolina High School.

The Washington Post (10/21, A1, Lowery, 14.2M) reports on its front page from Denton, North Carolina that a group of students at South Davidson High, a nearly all-white school, painted a racial slur on a wall. It was quickly painted over by other students, “but a grainy video was soon ricocheting across the Internet, igniting a weeks-long controversy that has exposed raw racial tensions, imperiled the fall football season for dozens of middle school students and sparked a tempestuous debate over whether the incident constitutes a hate crime.”

Trump Jr. Derides Transgender Cyclist’s Effect On Female Athletes.

The New York Post (10/21, Schultz, 4.57M) reports Donald Trump Jr. on Monday “derided a transgender cyclist who won a women’s championship.” Trump Jr. tweeted an article about the cyclist, Rachel McKinnon, “who set a women’s world record but wouldn’t have qualified for the men’s competition.” He wrote, “You can never be woke enough! Sorry to all female athletes who spent their lives mastering their games.”

Drug Companies Reach $260 Million Opioid Settlement.

ABC World News Tonight (10/21, story 14, 0:15, Muir, 7.23M) reported that "hours before a federal trial was set to begin in Cleveland, three drug distributors and a manufacturer have all agreed to paid $260 million to settle claims in two counties in Ohio." The CBS Evening News (10/21, story 6, 0:30, O'Donnell, 4.44M) reported the settlement avoids the "first federal trial in the opioid epidemic." McKesson, Cardinal Health, Amerisource Bergen, and Teva Pharmaceutical reached a settlement with the two counties.

The New York Times (10/21, Hoffman, 18.61M) says the deal, "which is a combination of cash payouts and donations of addiction treatments, could become a model for settlement of thousands of similar cases brought in an attempt to hold the pharmaceutical industry accountable for an epidemic of addiction that has killed hundreds of thousands of Americans."

Likewise, the Washington Post (10/21, A1, Bernstein, Higham, Horwitz, 14.2M) says the agreement "may help guide the next round of negotiating as drug companies and governments that have sued them continue efforts to resolve the remaining legal actions all at once." The Post says the deal also "ratchets up the pressure on plaintiffs and drug companies to reach a global settlement or, some argue, to cut their own deals sooner."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/21, Heisig, 895K) reports that despite the settlement, "the cases drug companies face nationwide are far from over." Opioid manufacturers and distributors are "largely still defending themselves from more than 2,300 other federal lawsuits, along with other cases filed in state courts across the country, despite the settlements reached with Cuyahoga and Summit counties." The AP (10/21, Smyth, Mulvihill) reports says this week's trial "was seen as a critical test case that could have gauged the strength of the opposing sides' arguments." The Wall Street Journal (10/21, A1, Randazzo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the deal.

Increasing Number Of Children Placed In Foster Care Amid Opioid Epidemic.

The CBS Evening News (10/21, story 7, 2:15, O'Donnell, 4.44M) reported on "the forgotten toll" of the opioid crisis: the growing number of children in foster care. CBS (Reynolds) profiled "just a couple of stories" out of the "millions...the painkillers have caused."

Tennessee Doctors Plead Guilty To Overprescribing Opioids.

Fox News (10/21, 27.59M) reports on its website that two Tennessee doctors pleaded guilty last week "to distributing high doses of opioids with no medical legitimacy, the Justice Department announced." Dr. Samuel Mcgaha and Dr. Frank McNiel of Tennessee "each pleaded guilty to one count of unlawful distribution of a controlled substance." Between 2015 and early 2018, Mcgaha and McNiel prescribed a combined total of 271,938 opioid pills, the Justice Department said in a statement.

WPost Analysis: ER Outreach For Opioid Users Off To A Slow Start In DC.

The Washington Post (10/21, Jamison, 14.2M) reports that late last year, D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) announced "a new program to combat an epidemic of fatal opioid...modeled on successful programs across the country." The initiative aimed to reach drug users "where they can regularly be found: in hospital emergency rooms." However, the initiative is "off to a slow start." Since it began operating in late April, the city's program has connected "only a small number of patients with treatment, according to records and interviews with District officials, treatment providers and outreach workers."

Maryland Town Uses Haunted House To Depict Horrors Of Addiction.

The Washington Post (10/21, Dvorak, 14.2M) reports Queen Anne's County on Maryland's Eastern Shore "has one of the nastiest rates of opioid overdoses and deaths in the nation." Eric B. Johnson, the county's emergency management director who has lost four family members to addiction, and other townspeople "have created a huge haunted house. Only, rather than witches and mummies, it's a tableau of the nightmare the entire county is enduring — a journey through drug addiction."

Trump Will Not Participate In Weather Channel's 2020 Climate Change Special.

The Hill (10/21, Klar, 2.98M) reports that President Trump has declined an invitation to appear in "a Weather Channel climate change special airing next month that features Democrats and Republicans looking to challenge the president in 2020." The one-hour special, "2020: Race to Save the Planet," which is set to air Nov. 7, will feature "top Democratic candidates" as well as "all three of Trump's long-shot Republican challengers. But the president, a climate-change skeptic, is not in the lineup although The Weather Channel said it extended Trump an invitation."

The AP (10/21, Bauder) reports that while Trump will not appear in the special, it "won't ignore him or what his administration has been doing, [The Weather Channel's on-air hurricane expert and former director of the National Hurricane Center Rick] Knabb said."

WPost Examines Climate Change's Impact On Coastal Sports Franchises. The Washington Post (10/16, Maese, 14.2M) reports on the potential impact of climate change on sports franchises operating in coastal cities. The Post describes a "cascading series of problems that many teams and leagues operating in coastal cities are just starting to confront: How do you maintain operations in areas vulnerable to climate change? How do you sustain facilities and retain fans? How do you make it all economically viable when threats such as sea level rise are inevitable?" While there has been no formal study, "Allen Hershkowitz, an environment scientist who helped found Sport and Sustainability International, notes that teams and leagues will have to account for the physical impact on the venues but also losses from the disruption of business." According to Hershkowitz, some locations "will be prone to flooding, some to drought and still others to extreme heat...and many will have to make serious adjustments in the years to come."

Earth's Rising Temperature Making Most Sea Turtle Hatchlings Female. The Washington Post (10/21, Paquette, 14.2M) reports that scientists predict that "as the earth gets hotter, turtle hatchlings worldwide are expected to skew dangerously female." On the West African island nation of Cape Verde, 84% "of youngsters are now female, researchers from Britain's University of Exeter found in a July report. Populations in Florida and Australia are also showing dramatic sex imbalances, sparking fears creatures that outlasted dinosaurs are plodding toward extinction." The Post adds that researchers estimate that "if the trend continues at the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's lowest projection...fewer than 1 percent of the country's sea turtles will be born male by the century's end. Higher rises could wipe them out completely."

WSJournal: New York's Exxon Trial Is Part Of Effort To Destroy Oil Companies. A Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says for New York Attorney General Letitia James, this week's trial of Exxon Mobil Corp. in state court over claims the company had hidden evidence of climate harm it knew was true is really about pursuing climate activists' goal of destroying Exxon and other companies in the oil and gas industry. The journal expresses hope that state Judge Barry Ostrager will render judgment based on the law.

Ex-Wife Alleged Judicial Nominee Allegedly Violated Judicial Code Of Conduct.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/21, Johnson, 78K) reports that the ex-wife of Fifth Circuit judicial nominee Halil "Sul" Ozerden "alleged during their divorce proceedings that he instructed her to make a political contribution on his behalf after his confirmation, a violation of the code of conduct for federal judges." Denise Dunaway Ozerden alleged in a 2009 deposition that "shortly after his confirmation to the district court for the Southern District of Mississippi," Halil Ozerden "pressured her to write a check to fellow Mississippian Trent Lott's political action committee." According to FEC records, Dunaway Ozerden made a $1,000 to that committee, the New Republican Majority Fund, in late May 2007, "a month after Ozerden's confirmation to the district court."

Poll: Majority Lack Confidence In Trump's Supreme Court Picks.

USA Today (10/21, Gilbert, Wolf, 10.31M) reports that a "new and wide-ranging national survey" about the Supreme Court by the Marquette University Law School found that "a majority of Americans disapprove of President Donald Trump's handling of appointments to the U.S. Supreme Court and doubt he would pick the 'right kind of person' to fill the next opening on the high court." Asked about "Trump's handling of court appointments, 43% approved and 57% disapproved. ... Asked how much confidence they have that Trump will select the right kind of person if there is another opening on the court, 45% said at least 'some' confidence while 55% said very little or none at all."

The Washington Times (10/21, Dinan, Swoyer, 492K) reports that "an overwhelming majority" of 73% "said Senate Republicans, led by Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, were wrong to refuse to hold a hearing for Judge Merrick Garland, Mr. Obama's pick in 2016 to take the seat left vacant by the death of Justice Antonin Scalia." McConnell "said that should a vacancy arise in 2020, another election year, then he would move to fill it. He said the situation is different this time because the same party controls the White House and the Senate." The poll found that "by a 69-31 split," Americans "agreed that a vacancy should be filled."

Politico Analysis: Trump Poised To Expand Fundraising Lead Over Democrats.

Politico (10/21, 4.29M) reports that President Trump and the Republican National Committee "have raised more than $300 million this year for his reelection – more than any other sitting president in history at this point in the campaign." Politico says that Trump "has nearly twice as much cash on hand – $158 million, between his campaign account and the RNC – as Barack Obama and the Democratic National Committee had at this time in his successful re-election run." Consequently, "Democrats are growing increasingly alarmed by the spending chasm between the two sides – and its implications for the general election. ... And the situation stands to get worse," because "since the start of the year, Trump's campaign operation has run an expensive, far-reaching effort to find new small-dollar donors that is already beginning to pay dividends" having "netted 313,000 new donors." The Washington Examiner (10/21, Pearce, 448K) reports on the Politico story under the headline "Trump's Historic Lead On 2020 Fundraising Is Starting To Rattle Democrats."

RNC Quadruples DNC In September Fundraising. The Daily Caller (10/21, Datoc, 716K) reports that the RNC "raised...four times more than the" DNC did last month. The DNC "raised $6,980,445.71 in September while carrying more than $7,000,000 in debts. The RNC reported $27,324,070.15 in new donations over the same period yet currently carries no outstanding debt."

Politico Magazine Explores What A Second Trump Term Might Entail. Darren Samuelsohn writes in a story for Politico Magazine (10/21, 4.24M) that the news outlet asked a number of political analysts and observers, "What's in store for Washington and the nation if [President] Trump defies the odds to hold onto the White House? 'We will have entered an era of authoritarianism,' warned John Dean, the former Richard Nixon White House lawyer." However, Newt Gingrich, an "outspoken Trump ally," told Politico Magazine, "I don't think Trump will be emboldened. I think Trump will be Trump. I think Trump is emboldened every morning. He goes, 'I'm a billionaire. I've got the White House, Air Force One and Marine One. And I'm commander in chief. What's part two? All these guys who spent three years shooting at me and I'm still in the building and they're not.'" Yet, "even some Trump supporters foresee the chance that Trump might test the boundaries of presidential power with bad results."

USA Today: Trump May Be Boosted By Democrats' Choice Of Nominee. In an editorial, USA Today (10/21, Board, 10.31M) says that ahead of his bid for reelection next year, President Trump appears "vulnerable. He faces an impeachment inquiry in the House. He has the lowest average approval rating in polling history. And his standing among independents is awful, especially for a Republican. In other words, Republicans should be panicking or scouting around for another candidate, or both. But they know they have an ace in the hole: the Democratic Party. To win in 2020, all the Democrats might need is a capable, relatively uncontroversial candidate within shouting distance of the political center." To date, however, "Democratic voters have been gravitating toward candidates who lack some of these qualities."

Our Revolution Chief: Liberal Proposals Needed To Win Back Trump Voters In MI, OH. Joseph Geevarghese, executive director of the liberal group Our Revolution, writes in a USA Today (10/21, 10.31M) op-ed that he recently spoke with "striking workers" in Michigan and Ohio, "all of them former Democrats," who "told me how they voted for Donald Trump in 2016 out of desperation," believing he "would deliver on his promise to keep jobs in America and negotiate good trade deals. Now, they feel betrayed. ... If we want to win back voters in Ohio and Michigan, we need to inspire them with a transformational vision of change, and not incrementalism that they'll again reject as inadequate in this moment of growing inequality." Geevarghese goes on to tout the "Medicare for All" and "Green New Deal" proposals.

Minnesota Poll: Trump Trails Leading Democratic Contenders And Klobuchar.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (10/20, Van Oot, 1.04M) reports that a Star Tribune poll of 800 Minnesota voters, taken Oct. 14-16, shows President Trump trailing "several leading Democratic" presidential hopefuls and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), who hails from the state. According to the poll, Trump trails ex-Vice President Joe Biden (D) and Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) by identical 50%-38% margins; Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) 49%-40%; and Klobuchar 55%-38%.

SurveyUSA Poll: Biden 32%; Warren 22%; Sanders 17%; Harris 7%; Buttigieg 5%.

The Hill (10/21, Bowden, 2.98M) reports on a SurveyUSA poll of 1,071 likely Democratic primary voters, taken Oct. 15-16, that shows Biden leading the race for the 2020 presidential nomination with 32%, followed by Warren at 22%, Sanders at 17%, Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) at 7%, and South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) at 5%; no other contender tops 2%.

Iowa Poll: Biden 18%; Warren 17%; Buttigieg 13%; Sanders 9%.

USA Today (10/21, Page, 10.31M) reports that a Suffolk University/USA Today poll of 500 likely Iowa Democratic caucusgoers, taken Oct. 16-18, shows Biden leading with 18%, followed by Warren at 17%, Buttigieg at 13%, and Sanders at 9%; no other contender tops 3%. USA Today says that Buttigieg "has surged within striking distance of" the frontrunners, while Biden "is faltering in the wake of a debate performance last week that those surveyed saw as disappointing." USA Today adds that in a similar poll taken in June, "Biden led Warren by double digits and Buttigieg trailed at a distant 6%."

In an accompanying analysis of the poll for USA Today (10/21, 10.31M) Suffolk Political Research Center's David Paleologos writes that the results mark "a dramatic turnaround for 37-year-old Buttigieg, who more than doubled his second-tier 6% summer standing. Even more impressive for Buttigieg is how those who watched the CNN/New York Times debate last week would align their support if the caucuses were held today. Among only debate watchers, Buttigieg topped the entire Iowa field with 19%, followed by Biden and Warren (tied at 17%), Sanders (9%), and [Sen. Amy] Klobuchar (6%). Both Buttigieg (39%) and Klobuchar (28%) were seen as debate winners last week."

Politico (10/21, Forgey, 4.29M) reports, "The poll was conducted in the days after the fourth Democratic debate, during which Buttigieg adopted a more aggressive posture and accused Warren of equivocating on the cost of her Medicare For All proposal. Other recent Iowa surveys – including a CBS/YouGov poll conducted before the debate and several statewide polls in September – have also had Buttigieg in either the high single-digits or low double-digits." U.S. News & World Report (10/21, Hagen, 2.4M) reports that Harris "has seen a sharp decline since the June poll, which was conducted after her breakout debate performance. Since then, she has fallen 13 percentage points and is in a tie for sixth place" at 3%. The Hill (10/21, Klar, 2.98M) also reports on the poll.

After Debate Performances, Buttigieg And Klobuchar Seek To Build On Momentum.

Politico (10/21, 4.29M) reports that South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) emerged from "the last Democratic debate with the most precious commodity a presidential candidate can get before the Iowa caucuses: momentum. Now, they're racing to actually crack open what for months has been a three-person race." The pair "each raised more than $1 million in the 24 hours following the debate, a sign that their critiques of progressive leaders Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders during the debate struck a chord. Energetic crowds greeted them in" Iowa "soon after – including voters who said they were looking for alternatives to Joe Biden, the longtime polling leader who has slipped in Iowa over the past month."

The Los Angeles Times (10/21, Mehta, 4.64M) reports, "Just when it looked like the Democratic presidential contest was becoming a two-person race," Buttigieg and Klobuchar – "Midwestern pragmatists" – think "they can still rise by speaking to an unsatisfied slice of the electorate: voters who" view Warren as "too far to the left but think...Biden is yesterday's news." The two "long shots are now trying – with swings through early-voting states, new ads and endorsements, and intensified fundraising efforts – to keep their post-debate sizzle hot and find an opening in the contest that has been shaping up as a showdown between Biden and Warren."

The AP (10/21) reports, "If there's a place where Klobuchar can build momentum from the debate, it's... in Iowa, where her Midwestern roots and pragmatic approach to politics could resonate.” While she “is polling near the bottom of the pack and has struggled to raise money,” Klobuchar’s “debate performance gave her a boost: She raised $1.5 million in the 36 hours following the debate. And post-debate, she launched a frenzied week of campaigning to try to turn that bump into lasting momentum, hitting 10 counties over two days in New Hampshire and 12 over three days in Iowa.”

Under the headline “In Iowa, Amy Klobuchar Gets A Second Look After Debate,” the New York Times (10/21, Gabriel, 18.61M) similarly reports, “Riding a post-debate wave of attention, Ms. Klobuchar blitzed New Hampshire and Iowa last week, attracting new supporters and donors in those two states with early nominating contests. After months stuck in the polling doldrums, Ms. Klobuchar is getting a second look. But she faces several challenges, among them that she is arguing how to win general election swing states but has yet to show how she would win the nomination first.”

California Independents Allowed To Vote In Democrats’ Primary, But Not GOP’s.

The AP (10/21, Press) reports, “California’s more than 5.6 million independent voters will be allowed to vote in the 2020 Democratic presidential primary, but not in the Republican contest, Secretary of State Alex Padilla announced Monday. The two parties have used a similar setup in recent presidential primaries.” The AP adds, “Independent voters...make up roughly 28% of registered California voters. But experts predict they’ll make up just 15% of the Democratic primary electorate because of extra steps they need to take to get a presidential ballot, said Paul Mitchell, who runs the nonpartisan firm Political Data, Inc., which gathers and sells voter data. Rather than skewing more moderate, the independents who will vote in the Democratic contest are likely to be young, more diverse and more progressive than the rest of the electorate, he said.”

Sanders Says He’d Want Ocasio-Cortez To Serve In His Administration.

USA Today (10/21, Santucci, 10.31M) reports Sen. Bernie Sanders says he wants Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) – who this past weekend backed his White House bid – to serve in his Administration, if he’s elected president. In an interview with CBS News, “when Ocasio-Cortez was asked if she’d work in Sanders’ administration should he be elected president, he interjected with a forceful ‘Yes, you would.’” Breitbart (10/21, Key, 673K) also reports on the story.

Inspired By The “Squad,” Progressive Candidates Challenging Centrist House Democrats.

Reuters (10/21, Cornwell) reports that “a half-dozen progressive candidates” across the US are mounting primary challenges to “moderate House Democratic incumbents and are backed by Justice Democrats, the same political action committee that last year helped” boost Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) to her upset of now-former Rep. Joe Crowley (D-NY). Since then, Ocasio-Cortez has emerged as “the face of the ‘Squad,’ freshman Democrats aiming to move the party farther left on issues such as healthcare and climate change. Justice Democrats, set up by former activists from Senator Bernie Sanders’ 2016 presidential campaign, have vowed to expand the group’s ranks in next year’s election.”

In Ad, AL2 GOP Hopeful Taylor Targets “Arrogant Socialists” Like Ocasio-Cortez. The Daily Caller (10/21, Davis, 716K) reports that GOP businesswoman Jessica Taylor on Monday announced a 2020 bid to succeed retiring Rep. Martha Roby (R-AL) in the AL2, releasing “a viral advertisement” targeting Ocasio-Cortez “and her ‘socialist’ squad. ‘Like you, I’m tired of arrogant socialists like AOC who’ve never even run a lemonade stand telling us how we should live in Alabama and that more government is the answer,’ Taylor said” in the spot, adding, “Even though it might trigger a few liberals, I’ll fight to protect life, the Second Amendment, our borders, our military, our families, and President Trump from socialists in the swamp, and I won’t apologize for it.”

MI10 GOP Candidate’s Announcement Video Features Images Of Ocasio-Cortez, Omar, Tlaib. The Detroit News (10/21, Mauger, 825K) reports that retired Air Force Brig. Gen. Doug “Odie” Slocum on Monday entered the 2020 race to succeed retiring Rep. Paul Mitchell (R-MI) in the MI10, joining state Rep. Shane Hernandez in the GOP primary. The Slocum camp’s “launch included a video that focused on his work during the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. Later in the video, Slocum, 57, says the country’s ‘values are under attack again.’ ‘Washington is being overrun by politicians driven by their own self interest that do not represent the values that I fought to protect,’ Slocum says over images of” Reps. Ocasio-Cortez, Ilhan Omar (D-MN), and Rashida Tlaib (D-MI).

Supreme Court Overturns Lower-Court Ruling Against GOP-Drawn Michigan Map.

The Detroit News (10/21, Laing, Burke, 825K) reports the US Supreme Court yesterday “tossed out a lower court ruling that would have forced a substantial redrawing of Michigan’s congressional and state legislative voting maps in a bid to give Republicans less of an edge.” The order “issued Monday was expected after the high court’s June 27 decision that upheld a Republican-drawn congressional map in North Carolina and Democratic-drawn voting lines in Maryland.” The News adds that “in the 5-4 ruling, Chief Justice John Roberts wrote for the conservative majority that gerrymander claims involve ‘political questions beyond the reach of the federal courts.’”

The Detroit Free Press (10/21, Spangler, 1.52M) also says “the decision – which vacated an earlier ruling made by a three-judge panel by the Sixth US Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati – had been widely expected since the Supreme Court decided in June that it would allow state courts to decide questions about political boundary lines rather than ruling on them itself.” Reuters (10/21, Chung) offers a similar analysis, and The Hill (10/21, Neidig, 2.98M) points out that “in their dissent, the four liberal justices accused their colleagues of abdicating the court's responsibility of safeguarding the democratic process." The Washington Examiner (10/21, Quinn, 448K), National Review (10/21, McArdle, 731K) and NBC News (10/21, Williams, 6.14M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

California's Homelessness Problem Sparks Backlash.

The New York Times (10/21, A1, Fuller, Arango, Keene, 18.61M) reports that "record levels of homelessness" in California "have spurred a backlash against those who live on the streets." In San Francisco, residents on one street "recently installed boulders on the sidewalk to deter people from erecting tents and sleeping there. In Los Angeles, homeowners have installed prickly plants for the same purpose." In the Koreatown neighborhood of Los Angeles, "a grass strip between the sidewalk and curb is fenced off with green plastic to keep homeless people away."

Princeton Theological Seminary Pledges $27 Million As Reparations For Its Ties To Slavery.

The New York Times (10/21, Shanahan, 18.61M) reports that the Princeton Theological Seminary "has pledged to spend $27 million on scholarships and other initiatives to address its historical ties to slavery, in what appears to be the biggest effort of its kind." Nicholas Young, president of the Association of Black Seminarians, "criticized the $27 million figure as being well below what the seminary's own accounting indicated should be set aside from its $1 billion endowment to cover reparations-related costs." Young also "said the seminary needed to do more to address how faculty and other leaders had 'used theology to justify the institution of slavery.'"

Omar Living "On And Off" With Married Campaign Aide.

The Daily Mail \(UK\) (10/21, Ashford, 5.27M) reports that Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) is living "a brazen double life involving secret hookups, romantic vacations and talk of marriage to her DC strategist lover." Omar "spent months denying she had split from husband Ahmed Hirsi despite this website revealing she had left their marital home and was having an affair with a campaign aide." While she filed for divorce earlier this month, she "still refuses to acknowledge her relationship with veteran Democratic schmoozer Tim Mynett, 38, whose wife also petitioned for divorce in August. DailyMail.com can now disclose that Omar and Mynett are not only dating, but living together 'on and off' at a secret DC apartment, while plotting romantic vacations to Jamaica and making plans for a long-term future together."

Hunter Biden Agrees To Take Paternity Test In Arkansas Case.

The Washington Examiner (10/21, Bufkin, 448K) reports former Vice President Biden's son Hunter "has said that he will take a paternity test to prove he is not the biological father of a 14-month-old child who lives in Arkansas." Lunden Roberts "maintains that Biden is the biological father of her child and that he has admitted as much to her in private."

WPost Urges McConnell To Support "Risk-Limiting Audits" Of Election Results.

A Washington Post (10/21, 14.2M) editorial calls on Senate Majority Leader McConnell to support legislation that provides incentives for states to switch to risk-limiting audits of election results, which "hand-count a statistically meaningful sample of all votes to determine whether the original tally was correct. The required sample increases as the margin of victory narrows." The Post argues, "Every state or county needs to polish its own version of what experts call the gold standard for election review, and that takes funding." McConnell should support the effort "to protect against Russia and other adversaries' far less friendly reach."

Moody's Report Finds Companies Mostly Fail To Price In Costs Of Climate Change.

Reuters (10/21, Groom) reports that a report from Moody's Investors Service on Monday said, "U.S. and European companies in polluting industries rarely disclose the financial risks they face related to climate change even though a global task force called on them to do so two years ago." The report said, "Though 80 percent of the companies in the Moody's sample said climate change was affecting strategic decisions, just two of the 28 linked their climate projections with an effect on cash flows and balance sheets." Vincent Allilaire, one of the report's authors, in a statement said, "Although companies have made some progress in the level of disclosure they provide, standardised and consistent quantification of the financial impact from climate risks is still in a nascent stage."

Think Tank: BOE Needs More Firepower To Combat Downturns.

Reuters (10/21, Bruce) reports that Positive Money, "a think tank whose work has been endorsed by the opposition Labour Party and others in recent years," on Monday said the Bank of England "should be given more power to steer lending in Britain's economy and influence government spending during a downturn." The think tank "said the BoE and government should create a new credit policy unit so the BoE can influence lending, and the central bank should also be able to outline its expectations for the government's fiscal policy."

FT Analysis: US, Europe Wary Of "Japanification."

In an analysis, the Financial Times (10/21, Harding, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports the US and Europe may be mired in what investors are calling "Japanification," or permanently low interest rates and inflation.

Lebanese Government Unveils Reforms Following Days Of Protests.

Reuters (10/21, Francis, Perry) reports that the government of Lebanon has "approved an emergency reform package...in response to protests over dire economic conditions, but the moves did not go far enough to persuade demonstrators to leave the streets or investors to halt a plunge in its bonds." Reuters says the reforms include "the symbolic halving of the salaries of ministers and lawmakers, as well as moves towards implementing long-delayed measures vital to putting the public finances on a sustainable path." According to Reuters, "Hundreds of thousands of people have flooded the streets since Thursday, furious at a political class they accuse of pushing the economy to the point of collapse."

The Washington Post (10/21, Dadouch, Khattab, 14.2M) reports that Prime Minister Saad Hariri "also said financial advisers will study the privatization of telecommunications, a law will be drafted to return stolen government funds and an anti-corruption committee will be set up." The Post says Hariri's government, "which is struggling with a national debt that is proportionally the third-largest in the world, announced a proposal Thursday to hike the value-added tax and introduce a levy on Internet calls via apps such as WhatsApp." According to the Post, "The Lebanese – already fed up with living in a country that lacks clean water and air, has disintegrating infrastructure and is burdened by graft – revolted."

Argentina's Bondholders Face Heavy Losses.

The Financial Times (10/21, Smith, Politi, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports that holders of Argentinian bonds face heavy losses as the government works to address its $101 billion debt burden following difficult meetings with officials from the IMF.

Trudeau Expected To Form Minority Government With Plurality Of Seats In Parliament.

CBC (CAN) (10/21, Zimonjic, 319K) reports, "CBC News is projecting that Justin Trudeau's Liberals will form a minority government." Politico (10/21, Panetta, Gardner, 4.29M) reports according to CBC and CTV, Trudeau's Liberals are projected to win "a plurality of seats in Parliament."

The AP (10/21, Gillies) reports, "Trudeau appeared set to win a second term," and that he "is one of the few remaining progressive leaders in the world."

The National Post (CAN) (10/21, 75K) at time of reporting is projecting the Liberals with 156 seats to 121 seats for the Conservatives, with 170 needed for a majority. The balance of seats will be held by the separatist Bloc Quebecois with 32, the New Democratic Party with 25, and the Green Party with three.

Trump Congratulates Trudeau. On Twitter, President Trump wrote, "Congratulations to @JustinTrudeau on a wonderful and hard fought victory. Canada is well served. I look forward to working with you toward the betterment of both of our countries!"

Brexit Vote Delayed Until Today.

The New York Times (10/21, Castle, 18.61M) reports British Prime Minister Boris Johnson's "latest showdown with Parliament over Brexit" has been "pushed back 24 hours...after a ruling by John Bercow, the speaker of the House of Commons and a perennial thorn in the British leader's side." The Times reports that Johnson "had hoped to persuade lawmakers to agree on Monday in principle with his revised Brexit agreement, struck with the European Union last week in Brussels, signaling what many hoped would finally resolve an issue that has divided the country and its warring politicians for more than three years." However, Bercow, "harking back to a critical decision he made earlier in the year, ruled that the vote could not go ahead because Parliament had considered the same measure on Saturday and its rules forbid the introduction of the same bill multiple times." Nevertheless, tomorrow, Johnson's government "will effectively introduce the same measure."

The AP (10/21, Lawless and Kirka) reports the Prime Minister's plan "hit another roadblock Monday," and so the "government will now go to its Plan B: get Parliament's backing for his Brexit blueprint by passing the legislation, known as the Withdrawal Agreement Bill."

The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Colchester, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the bill's fate is likely to be decided by just a few votes. The Washington Post (10/21, Adam, Booth, 14.2M), Reuters (10/21, Maclellan, James), Politico Europe (10/21, 8K), and Bloomberg (10/21, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover the delayed Brexit vote.

UK Imposes Abortion, Same-Sex Marriage On Northern Ireland After Assembly Fails To Convene. The Washington Post (10/21, Ferguson, 14.2M) reports, "When the clock struck midnight in Northern Ireland early Tuesday, abortion and same-sex marriage became legal," after being "initiated by lawmakers in London." The Post adds, "The legislation that took effect early Tuesday also paves the way for same-sex couples to marry, starting in February." The Post also says, "opinion polls suggest support for both measures," though both are "a direct result of an amendment passed in the British Parliament," enacted while "the Northern Ireland Assembly has not convened in nearly three years amid a stalemate between pro-British unionists and Irish nationalists."

US Troop Presence In Afghanistan Has Been Reduced To 12,000.

The New York Times (10/21, Gibbons-Neff, Mashal, 18.61M) says the Administration is "already reducing the size" of the US "troop force in Afghanistan despite the lack of a peace deal with the Taliban." In a news conference Monday, "the top American commander in Afghanistan, Gen. Austin S. Miller, confirmed that the size of the American force in the country had already quietly dropped by 2,000 over the last year, down to roughly 12,000." Separately, "Other American and Afghan officials...said that the eventual force size could drop to as low as 8,600 – roughly the size of an initial reduction envisioned in a draft agreement with the Taliban before Mr. Trump halted peace talks last month."

The Washington Post (10/21, George, 14.2M) says that "as the Pentagon has drawn down from nearly 100,000 troops in the country in 2011, Afghanistan has seen the Taliban steadily expand its control and influence." According to the Post, "The Taliban has welcomed Trump's commitment to reduce U.S. troops in Afghanistan." The troop reduction "has the potential to complicate peace talks with the Taliban" because "the US military presence" is "the main sources of leverage for American negotiators." Shaheen, a spokesman for the Taliban's "political office in Doha," is quoted as saying, "We consider the withdrawal of US forces from Afghanistan to be a solution to Afghanistan's problem and it is also in the interest of the American and Afghan people." In Kabul Monday, Defense Secretary Esper said, "General Miller is doing exactly what I asked all our commanders to do when I entered office."

However, Reuters (10/21, Ali) reports Esper also said the US has "a 'longstanding commitment' to Afghan security forces." Esper is quoted as saying, "We have a longstanding commitment to our Afghan partners, we've invested billions upon billions of dollars, both the Afghan people and the American people have sacrificed treasure and the lives of their soldiers." The Daily Caller (10/21, Conklin, 716K) reports that despite the withdrawal, Esper said, "The aim is to still get a peace agreement at some point, a political agreement. That's the best way forward."

Britain Considering Prosecuting ISIS Militants Known As The Beatles.

The Washington Post (10/21, Nakashima, Mekhennet, 14.2M) reports British prosecutors are "reconsidering their opposition to trying a pair of Islamic State members linked to a cell suspected of involvement in the killing of American and British hostages in Syria." The Crown Prosecution Service "has agreed to review its previous decision not to prosecute the men" after the US military took custody of the two, Alexandra Kotey and El Shafee Elsheikh, "almost two weeks ago." A CPS spokesperson told the Post on Monday, "Due to the change in circumstances the CPS are reviewing the evidence in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors."

ISIS Using TikTok To Spread Propaganda Videos.

The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Wells, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports ISIS militants have been posting short propaganda videos to teen-focused social network TikTok. TikTok removed videos flagged to it by the Journal and canceled the accounts responsible.

Trump Says Nuclear Agreement With Russia, China Is Under Discussion.

President Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (10/21, 535K), "I believe we are going to get together with Russia and with China and we are going to work out a nuclear pact so that we don't all continue with this craziness. Right now, we have the most powerful nuclear force in the world. Russia is second and China is third. It is very costly and very dangerous. It is very, very dangerous. And we are discussing with Russia and we are discussing with China. During the recent trade deal with China, I said, we should all get together and work out something, a cap, have a cap. We don't need 10,000 weapons. Have a cap. And I will say, China and Russia in talking about it are very excited about it."

Esper In Saudi Arabia As Military Officials Meet To Discuss Iran Threat.

Reuters (10/21, Ali) reports Defense Secretary Esper arrived in Saudi Arabia on Monday where he is "likely to meet King Salman and Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman on his first trip to the key regional ally since taking office this summer, a visit intended partly to reassure Riyadh over bilateral ties." According to Reuters, "Upon landing in Riyadh, he met the head of U.S. Central Command, which is responsible for military operations in the Middle East and Afghanistan." Reuters says "military officials from Arab countries plus the United States, Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Pakistan and South Korea met in Riyadh on Monday to discuss freedom of navigation and Iranian activities in the region."

Israeli Official In Bahrain For Conference Focused On Iran. Reuters (10/21) reports that a "senior Israeli official attended a maritime security conference in Bahrain on Monday in another sign of Gulf Arab nations and Israel transcending longtime enmities to focus on a perceived common threat from Iran." According to Reuters, Israeli Foreign Ministry official Dana Benvenisti, "head of its counter-terrorism department, attended the Manama gathering in a rare visit by an Israeli official to Bahrain."

Netanyahu Ends Bid To Form New Coalition Government.

Reuters (10/21) reports that Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu today "gave up his effort to form a new government...after failing to secure a majority coalition, creating an opportunity for centrist rival Benny Gantz to replace" him. Netanyahu is quoted as saying, "In the past weeks I made every effort to bring Benny Gantz to the negotiating table, every effort to establish a broad national government, every effort to avoid another election." Netanyahu "said he had been unable to form a government following an election in September, and was returning the mandate back to" Israeli President Reuven Rivlin, who has "said he intends to task Gantz with the job of putting together a new government." However, according to Reuters, Gantz "also has no clear path to a majority, and should he come up short, it would almost certainly lead to another general election, the third since April."

The Washington Post (10/21, Hendrix, 14.2M) also says Gantz's "path to power is far from certain. Israel's complex political system all but ensures that the final outcome is not likely to be clear for weeks and that a third election in less than a year may be required." Likewise, the AP (10/21) reports that Gantz "does not appear to have enough support either."

The AP (10/21, Federman) says Netanyahu "had hoped to form a broad 'unity' government with Gantz, who heads the centrist Blue and White party," but "insisted that his coalition include his traditional allies, a collection of hardline and religious parties, drawing accusations from Gantz that he was not negotiating in good faith." According to the AP, Gantz "has expressed willingness to form a partnership with Likud, but not if Netanyahu continues to lead while he faces such serious legal problems."

The New York Times (10/21, Halbfinger, Kershner, 18.61M) reports Netanyahu "turned 70 on Monday and has been prime minister since 2009." In response, Gantz's party said "Blue and White is determined to form the liberal unity government, led by Benny Gantz, that the people of Israel voted for a month ago."

Warren Would Consider Making US Aid Conditional On End To Settlements. The Washington Examiner (10/21, Lim, 448K) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "issued a warning to Israel if it continues building settlements in the West Bank." Asked about "making U.S. aid conditional on an agreement...to halt construction" of settlements, Warren said, "It is the official policy of the United States of America to support a two-state solution. And if Israel is moving in the opposite direction, everything's on the table."

In Bolivia, Second-Place Candidate, OAS Express Concern About Lack Of Vote Updates.

The New York Times (10/21, Londoño, 18.61M) reports, "Carlos Mesa, the Bolivian presidential candidate who appeared Sunday to have won enough votes to force a runoff with the incumbent Evo Morales, accused the ruling party of foul play on Monday as election officials stopped reporting vote-count updates." Preliminary results, the Times adds, "showed Mr. Morales ahead with 45 percent, while Mr. Mesa was only seven points behind, with about 38 percent." But, on Sunday, "Morales characterized the result as a major victory and did not concede that there would be a second round." In response, the Organization of American States "expressed alarm and called on election officials to explain why they had stopped updating results."

Assange Loses Bid To Delay Extradition Hearing.

Reuters (10/21) reports that a full extradition hearing for WikiLeaks' Julian Assange "will go ahead in February 2020 after [a] London judge...declined a request by his lawyers to delay proceedings by three months." Reuters says Assange "faces 18 counts in the U.S. including conspiring to hack government computers and violating an espionage law."

Freddie Mac CIO Looks To Modernize IT To Boost Quality And Cut Costs.

The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Loten, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Frank Nazzaro, Freddie Mac's Chief Information Officer, said that IT modernization efforts must be carried out securely, with the goal of improving velocity, bringing down costs, and boosting quality through the entire mortgage process. According to Nazzaro, Freddie already has a number of digital initiatives in the works. Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman said that Nazzaro's appointment has arrived at "the right moment to deliver technology solutions that make us faster, smarter and more efficient." Mortgage Professional America (10/21, Mendoza) provides continuing coverage of Nazzaro being named EVP and permanent CIO.

Freddie Mac, Banks Exploring AI-Based Lending.

American Banker (10/21, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that although "most traditional financial institutions have stayed away" from "using artificial intelligence every day in loan decisions," there are "signs that is starting to change." As one example, Freddie Mac is "partnering with ZestFinance on a pilot of AI-based mortgage underwriting software." Meanwhile, "a few banks are actually piloting the use of AI platforms to make lending decisions." LendIt (10/21) links to American Banker's coverage.

Calabria: Housing Supply Shortage Comes Down To "Land, Labor, And Loans."

The Boston Herald (10/21, 410K) reports Boston "taken on a bold initiative to encourage the development of 69,000 new units by 2030 to address help address the region's housing crisis," but FHFA Director Mark Calabria "told the Herald that the housing supply is a nationwide issue and creating an environment that supports housing development comes down to 'land, labor and loans.'" Calabria "said his job is make sure loans are supported." Last month, Calabria "announced he was taking Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac out of conservatorship which he called the last 'unfinished business' of the last recession. He said he is doing so in a manner that will ensure they can withstand downturn in the market."

Separately, The Boston Herald (10/21, Tieman, 410K) reports on Airbnb co-founder Nathan Blecharczyk's $1 million donation to Boston Latin Academy, which came "at a time when his industry is facing strict regulations in the city that could affect his company's bottom line." Federal Housing Finance Agency Director Mark Calabria "said Boston's short-term regulations could have consequences for the housing market." He said, "How will short-term rentals play out in a stressed market? We don't know." According to The Herald, "Calabria said large numbers of investor-owned properties – like the ones Boston's regulations are trying to eradicate – could be a warning sign that a downturn in the housing market could be coming. The number of investors in the housing market has reached 'pre-crisis' levels and is one of several 'red flags' to regulatory agencies that the markets could start to slow."

Pagliara: Ending Net Worth Sweep “Means Less Exposure For Taxpayers.”

Value Walk (10/21, 1K) reports, “The battle over Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac and (9/27, 1K) the net worth sweep has dragged on for many years, but progress toward a resolution is finally being made. It looks like their conservatorship is another step closer to ending, although there is still a long road ahead. Tim Pagliara of CapWealth and Investors Unite told ValueWalk that the Federal Housing Finance Agency’s decision to halt the net worth sweep is an important step in the process.” According to Pagliara, “FHFA’s recent decision to halt the illegal Net Worth Sweep and allow them to rebuild capital means less exposure for taxpayers. It sets the stage for an end to the conservatorship and the adoption of reforms in housing finance. The law gives the Administration considerable authority to implement reforms.”

HUD Senior Housing Program Hit A Record $3.7B In Production This Fiscal Year.

Mortgage Professional America (10/21, Mendoza) reports HUD “announced that its mortgage insurance program for senior housing ended the fiscal year with a record $3.7 billion in loan production. The FHA 232 mortgage insurance program, which finances senior housing properties, closed a total of 288 loans this fiscal year. The program’s loan volume of $3.7 billion, which has an average loan size of $13 million, topped last year’s $3.6 billion.” According to MPA, since it started in 2010, HUD’s LEAN program “has insured over 4,000 loans amounting to $37.6 billion (71% for skilled nursing communities and 27% for assisted living).”

First American: Housing Market Underperformed Its Potential In September.

M Report (10/21, Albanese) reports, “First American Financial Corporation revealed that potential existing-home sales in September were essentially flat, as the seasonally adjusted annualized rate (SAAR) – 0.02% month-over-month decline. The market for potential existing-home sales rose 3.8% year-over-year, but the current SAAR is 18.6% below the pre-recession peak of market potential set in March 2004. Additionally, the market for existing-home sales is underperforming its potential by 0.04%, or an estimated 2,340 (SAAR) sales.” Freddie Mac’s latest survey “revealed that the average 30-year fixed-rate mortgage was 3.69%,” and according to First American Chief Economist Mark Fleming, lower mortgage rates “incentivize homeowners to move as the rate ‘lock-in’ effect fades, which slows or reduces the average tenure of homeowners, and they boost demand by making homes more affordable.”

CoreLogic: Idaho Had Steepest Home Price Growth In The Nation In August.

DS News (10/21, Albanese) says CoreLogic’s Home Price Index indicated that Idaho once again “led the nation in home-price gains” in August, with 11.6% YoY growth. This was “more than triple” the nation’s 3.6% increase. Utah was the state with the second-highest rate of appreciation, at 8%. According to DS News, “CoreLogic states that Idaho’s price growth has been fueled by the nation’s highest job and population growth. Its non-farm annual employment growth of 2.1% in August, higher than the nation’s 1.4% increase and No. 7 among all states.”

Harvard JCHS Report Shows Rising Inequality In Homeownership Trends Among Seniors.

Mortgage News Daily (10/18, Swanson) released the second part of its coverage of a report from Harvard’s Joint Center on Housing Studies regarding America’s aging population, with a focus on homeownership trends. According to MND, “growing inequality” is emerging, and reflecting “a trend toward later retirement.” Homeownership rates “also vary across older age groups,” and “racial and ethnic disparities have widened” in recent years. According to MND, “These inequalities are crucial because homeownership provides greater housing security, predictable housing costs and more opportunity to build wealth than does renting. The median home equity of homeowners over age 65 was $143,500 in 2016, leading to net worth of $319,200. By comparison, a renter of the same age had net worth of $6,700. This disparity holds true for the next younger group as well, even for owners and renters with comparable incomes.”

Realtor.com Looks At Housing Markets Friendliest To Younger Homeowners.

M Report (10/21, Albanese) says Realtor.com examined the top markets for younger homeowners, finding “that Provo, Utah, is the youngest city in America with an average age of 24.7-years-old, despite having the highest average-home price – $305,000 – of any market on the list.” Stillwater, Oklahoma “came in at No. 2 with an average age of 26.6 and a median-home price of $195,000.” According to DS News, “Other markets on the list include: Jacksonville, North Carolina; Manhattan, Kansas; Ames, Iowa; College Station, Texas; Mount Pleasant, Michigan; Athens, Ohio; Statesboro, Georgia; and Lafayette, Indiana.”

Cybercriminals Doing Business On Gaming Chat App Discord.

CBS News (10/21, Patterson, 3.68M) reports, "Cybercriminals have set up shop on Discord, a popular chat application for gamers with more than 250 million active users." According to CBS News, "Hackers have modified many of the app's private groups to function like retail shops that sell illicit products, including stolen credit card numbers, cracked customer accounts for Delta Air Lines and Hilton Hotels, as well as malware that can be used to infect computer networks." Discord, "founded in 2012, does not have a home news feed like Facebook or Twitter. It is built around a network of private and semi-private groups, known as 'servers,' which are created by mostly anonymous users." CBS News "found more than three dozen groups that cybercriminals call 'money servers' on Discord."

US Claims Russian Hackers Use Iranians To Mask Their Identities.

The AP (10/21, McBride) reports the US and the UK "say they have exposed how a group of Russian hackers hijacked the tools of their Iranian counterparts to attack dozens of countries around the world." The so-called Turla group, "also known as Waterbug or Venomous Bear, is widely reported to be associated with Russian actors." The NSA and Britain's National Cyber Security Centre "said Monday that Turla acquired control of the tools and infrastructure of Iranian hacking groups for their attacks in an attempt to mask their identity." The attacks "extracted documents from multiple sectors, including governments, and were mostly carried out in the Middle East." Forbes (10/21, O'Flaherty, 9.71M) reports that, "in total, 35 countries were attacked, including the UK and US, with a 'large cluster' of victims based in the Middle East." Victims included "military establishments, government departments, scientific organizations and universities." Turla used implants" derived from Iranian hackers' previous campaigns, 'Neuron' and 'Nautilus' – which they obtained through compromising the Iran based hackers themselves."

Timeline Of Huawei Ban In The US.

CNET News (10/21, Keane, 1.99M) reports on a full timeline of developments tied to Huawei and US efforts to ban its equipment. The core issue with Huawei "has been concerns about its coziness with the Chinese government and fears that its equipment could be used to spy on other countries and companies." It's the reason why the US "banned companies from using Huawei networking equipment in 2012 and why the company was added to the US Department of Commerce's Bureau of Industry and Security Entity List in May, following an executive order from President Donald Trump effectively banning Huawei from US communications networks." The US offered "a temporary reprieve to companies, allowing them to work with Huawei until August." That reprieve "was then extended to November."

Russia's False Flags In Winter Olympics Cyberattack Herald More Complicated Future.

The Washington Post (10/21, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that Russian hackers "who attacked the 2018 Winter Olympics in PyeongChang, South Korea, didn't want to get caught." So they cloaked their attacks "with a web of false signals and misdirection designed to send investigators looking at China, North Korea and other potential suspects." The ruse "almost worked, too." It took careful sleuthing "by numerous cybersecurity researchers to peel away the 'false flags' to reveal Russia was behind the attack that disrupted the Olympics' Internet and broadcast systems and shut down ticket printing." That's the upshot of Wired reporter Andy Greenberg's "mammoth investigation into the 'Olympic Destroyer' cyberattack, which offers a fascinating inside look at the cat-and-mouse game between increasingly sophisticated Russian hackers and the researchers and US officials seeking to hold them to account."

Opinion: Merkel Chooses Huawei Over US And EU Objections.

In a commentary in Foreign Policy (10/21, 340K), Janka Oertel writes, "Over US and European Union objections, the German government is poised to put in place newly drafted security requirements that do not set clear limits on the Chinese telecommunications firms Huawei and ZTE supplying technology for German 5-G cellular networks." Oertel contends, "Germany's role in this process is critical. The current draft security requirements are made up of technical specifications, with little to no enforcement potential. It places trust in the goodwill of suppliers, without any review or audit mechanisms assessing ownership structure, the transparency of the financing, past misconduct, or the legal framework to which a company is subject." He concludes, "If the German parliament fails to act, it is almost inevitable that Berlin will continue with its haphazard approach, avoiding tough choices, leaving its security and competitiveness at risk, alienating allies, and, most importantly, weakening Europe's overall position regarding China – and the US – in the emerging struggle for technological autonomy."

Czech-Based Avast Target Of Cybersecurity Attack.

Reuters (10/21) reports Czech-based Avast and Czech counterintelligence service BIS "said on Monday they had detected a network attack on the cyber-security company which the BIS suspected of originating in China." Avast said in a blog post "that it found suspicious behavior on its network on September 23 and opened an investigation involving the BIS and Czech police along with an external forensics team." The BIS said in a statement that – with contribution from foreign partners – "it detected a threat to products of Avast, a company founded in the Czech Republic." BIS said in a statement, "Everything from data analysis so far suggests that the attack came from China, with the intention to take control of the popular optimization tool CCleaner, and through that also users' computers." Avast, however, "said it did not know who was behind the attack."

TFI/Sanctions

Turkish Finance Minister Calls Sanctions Threats "Blackmailing."

Reuters (10/21, Erkoyun, Spicer) reports Turkish Finance Minister Berat Albayrak "said on Monday that sanctions threats have become a 'blackmailing' effort, a week after Washington slapped sanctions on some of Turkey's ministers and ministries over Ankara's military incursion in Syria." Albayrak, during "a forum hosted by state broadcaster TRT," said "In the past few weeks Turkey has been subjected to many sanctions threats. Unfortunately economic sanctions have become an element of blackmailing our country." Albayrak added, "Our financial markets have shown a tremendous level of resilience despite...threats of economic sanctions which shows that we have developed immunity against outside shocks as well."

Banker Convicted In US Of Sanctions Evasion Appointed To Lead Turkish Stock Exchange. The AP (10/21) reports Albayrak also announced on Twitter Monday "that a Turkish banker convicted in the United States of helping Iran evade economic sanctions has been appointed head of Turkey's stock exchange." Banker Hakan Atilla, "who was convicted in 2018, was released from prison in July and deported to Turkey." Turkey had "maintained Atilla's innocence throughout the trial and called his conviction a 'scandalous verdict.' The five-week trial strained Turkish-U.S. relations and featured testimony about corruption at the highest levels of the Turkish government."

Federal Reserve

Sumner: Fed Should Continue Forward-Looking Policy, Cut Interest Rates Further.

In an op-ed for The Hill (10/21, Sumner, 2.98M), Bentley University Emeritus Professor of Economics Scott Sumner writes that while "in the past, when an economic shock such as the U.S.-China trade war led to more bearish expectations, the Fed was often too slow to respond," it now "seems to be learning from past mistakes." Sumner argues the Fed "simply relied too much on past economic data, like steering a car by looking in the rearview mirror." However, he says, it "is now relying more heavily on the financial markets as an indicator of the future path of the economy." Sumner says the fact that "many long-term interest rates remain lower than short-term rates, which is traditionally a warning sign of recession," mean that "the Fed cannot rest on its laurels; further interest rate cuts are needed."

Greeley: Facebook's Libra Makes Central Banks Pay Attention To Digital Currencies.

In his Financial Times (10/21, Greeley, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) column, Brendan Greeley writes that Facebook's plan to launch its Libra digital currency, though currently floundering, have scared central bankers into paying attention to notions of digital currency.

NY Fed Injects $58B Into Financial Markets.

The Wall Street Journal (10/21, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the NY Fed added $58.15 billion to the financial system Monday, part of an ongoing effort to help lower volatility in the short-term rate markets.

Financial Regulatory Agencies

Fincen Director: Crypto Firms Can't Skirt AML Compliance.

American Banker (10/21, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports "the head of the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network had a blunt message Monday for fintech firms that offer users anonymity: Anti-money-laundering laws apply to you just like everyone else." Fincen Director Kenneth Blanco said, "The expectation is that you will comply with existing regulation." Blanco's "comments appeared to target cryptocurrency operators and other firms that could enable anonymous users to engage in criminal behavior." Blanco "said an AML program is a prerequisite for any new payments provider trying to get off the ground." He continued, "Your [Bank Secrecy Act] obligations are still going to be there. .. Whether you're stablecoin, centralized, decentralized – [it] doesn't matter. You'll still have to be able to comply."

Continuing Coverage: Supreme Court's CFPB Decision Could Have Implications For FHFA, Other Independent Agencies.

American Banker (10/21, Berry, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Even if the Supreme Court rules a provision regarding the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau is unconstitutional, the agency's rulemakings and enforcement actions likely will not be affected, legal observers said." Manatt, Phelps & Phillips partner Richard Gottlieb said, "Nobody really expects the Supreme Court to render eight years of enforcement and regulatory activity null and void. There's very little chance that the court concludes the provision can't be severed. This case is strictly about the structure of the CFPB." However, according to American Banker, "while the Supreme Court may take a narrow path on the issue, the decision could still have far-reaching implications, affecting other independent agencies – such as the Federal Housing Finance Agency – with similar for-cause provisions." Realtor Magazine (10/21) reports the phrase at issue is a piece of the Dodd-Frank Act "that says the president can fire the CFPB director only 'for cause,' which is defined as 'inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.'"

According to Reason (10/21, Brown, 291K), "Last month the en banc Fifth Circuit decided Collins v. Mnuchin. The majority opinion, by Judge Willett, found that the Federal Housing Finance Agency was unconstitutionally structured. This agency was headed by a single director, who could only be removed 'for cause.' However, the court divided on the remedy. Judge Haynes, joined by...nine other justices, struck down the 'for cause' provision, and severed the remainder of the statute." Providing additional coverage of the CFPB's case and the implications it could have on the FHFA are National Review (10/21, 731K), LexBlog (10/21), and a paywalled piece from Law360 (10/21, Subscription Publication, 8K).

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/21, Yang, Subscription Publication) reports, "In the wake of the Supreme Court deciding to hear a case challenging the constitutionality of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, industry groups are reiterating their calls for a bipartisan commission to replace the current single-director structure of the CFPB. ... Industry groups now say the Supreme Court's move could bring legal clarity to the CFPB's structure, but they argue a sole-director structure will never provide the long-term stability to the industry (and consumers), urging Congress to create a bipartisan, Senate-confirmed commission to lead the bureau." ABA CEO Rob Nichols said, "Regardless of the outcome, we continue to believe that ... a five-member, bipartisan commission – as originally envisioned in drafts of the Dodd-Frank Act – would balance the bureau's needs for independence and accountability, while broadening perspectives on rulemaking and enforcement. It would also provide long-term stability that benefits consumers, financial service providers and the economy."

Trade Group Executives: GSE Reform Efforts Should Be "Thoughtful" And "Balanced."

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (10/21, Subscription Publication, 31K), Mortgage Bankers Association CEO Robert Broeksmit, National Association of Realtors President John Smaby, American Bankers Association Chief Executive Rob Nichols, and National Association of Home Builders CEO Jerry Howard say that as policymakers consider reforms to the country's housing finance system, it is "critical to assess the amount of risk" taxpayers face "through loans insured by the government, and securitized by the government-sponsored enterprises Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." It is also "important to understand the positive changes in the last decade to ensure that the loan features that triggered the 2008 financial crisis – no documentation, teaser rates, exploding adjustable-rate mortgages – have been eradicated from the market." The trade group leaders conclude, "Reforms should be thoughtful and balanced. And that focus must be on ensuring responsible, creditworthy Americans in every community of this country can access the capital needed to secure a mortgage – in good times and bad. That is the role Congress envisioned when the FHA was created and the GSEs were first commissioned. That role remains just as critical, and indispensable, as it has ever been." The ABA Banking Journal (10/21) summarizes the BankThink op-ed.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Court Rules OCC Lacks Power To Create Fintech Charter.

American Banker (10/21, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports "a federal judge dealt a blow to the Office of the Comptroller of Currency's special purpose fintech charter on Monday, ruling that the agency lacked legal power to grant a bank charter to a nonbank entity that wasn't eligible for federal deposit insurance." The proposed charter "was opposed by the Conference of State Bank Supervisors and the New York Department of Financial Services." On Monday, "the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York ruled in favor of the state regulator." Judge Victor Marrero said in his decision that the National Bank Act's "business of banking" clause "unambiguously requires that, absent a statutory provision to the contrary, only depository institutions are eligible to receive national bank charters from the OCC." An OCC spokesperson "left the door open for a possible appeal, saying the agency was 'reviewing the ruling to determine the next steps.'"

Law360 (10/21, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the judgment includes a provision sought by New York's Department of Financial Services that sets aside the OCC's special-purpose chartering regulation for "all fintech applicants seeking a national bank charter that do not accept deposits."

SNL Financial (10/21, Subscription Publication, 3K) also reports.

MidSouth Bank Fined By OCC Over Flood Insurance Rules Before Acquisition.

The Baton Rouge (LA) Advocate (10/21, Mosbrucker, 399K) reports "several days before MidSouth Bank was acquired by Hancock Whitney last month, the Lafayette-based bank was fined by federal regulators over flood insurance rule violations." The Advocate says "MidSouth Bank signed a consent agreement to pay $108,796 as a civil monetary penalty to the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency on Sept. 11 but doesn't admit any wrongdoing as part of the settlement." The bank was allegedly violating two sections of the Flood Disaster Protection Act: "flood insurance requirements before underwriting a loan and notice to home mortgage borrowers about high-risk flood areas." Meanwhile, "details about the MidSouth Bank case were not available and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency declined comment."

OCC Finalizes Changes To OREO Rules.

The ABA Banking Journal (10/21) reports "the OCC is finalizing the first changes in two decades to its regulations on other real estate owned, or OREO." The rule – which is being adopted substantially as proposed in April – "seeks to streamline and clarify OREO rules for national banks, while updating and harmonizing the framework for OREO activities at federal savings associations." Specifically, "the final rule addresses the holding period for OREO, the methods by which institutions may dispose of OREO, applicable appraisal requirements and permissible OREO expenditures and notification requirements." In addition, "the agency is removing outdated capital rules for national banks and federal savings associations, which include provisions related to OREO."

Bill Seeks To Mandate Innovation Offices In Financial Regulation Agencies.

Crowdfund Insider (10/21, Alois) reports Rep. Patrick McHenry (R-NC) "has re-introduced legislation that will mandate innovation offices in the numerous federal agencies that have oversight and influence over innovative financial services firms." The Financial Services Innovation Act of 2019 mandates that ten different federal agencies, including the Comptroller of the Currency, "must create 'Financial Services Innovation Office,' or FSIOs, for Fintechs seeking to pursue a regulated activity." McHenry believes this legislation will "modernize and streamline how innovators interact with regulators." He "said the legislation will equally assist a small community bank or an aspiring Fintech entrepreneur seeking to navigate the byzantine maze of financial regulations."

More Banks Experimenting With AI-Based Lending.

American Banker (10/21, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports "most traditional financial institutions have stayed away" from artificial intelligence, but "there are signs that is starting to change." Among the institutions experimenting with AI are TCF National Bank. EVP of Consumer Lending Rita Carroll said, "No. 1 was the process itself. In traditional underwriting, you have to upload a bunch of pay stubs, provide all sorts of proof of income, proof of other things. What a cumbersome process." TCF "has quarterly meetings with examiners from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency in which it keeps them up to date on the AI lending project." The bank "also communicates with the OCC's Office of Innovation." Carroll said, "In all sincerity they're trying to catch up to understand what exactly is going on." Carroll is "also waiting for regulators to update model validation policies that they released in 2011." She said, "The language and the policies no longer apply."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"But Her Emails..." A New York Times (10/21, 18.61M) editorial says President Trump raised the question, "What about her emails," like "a red flag for three years, as candidate and president, casting doubts on how Hillary Clinton used a private email server to communicate with her staff and others while she was secretary of state." However, despite his "professed concern about the integrity of government communications, his administration doesn't seem to take it too seriously." The Times cites Ivanka Trump and her husband, Jared Kushner's use of "the messaging service WhatsApp for official – possibly classified – White House business," as well Education Secretary DeVos' use of "a personal email account for some government business," and argues that "the Trump administration's widespread use of personal accounts for government work raises the unavoidable question: What about those emails?"

Washington Post.

"Free Speech Doesn't Mean Facebook Must Run Dishonest Ads." The Washington Post (10/21, 14.2M) in an editorial says that Facebook's Zuckerberg's concerns regarding free speech "are well-founded. But they do not...mean that Facebook must publish deliberate and damaging falsehoods in political advertising." The Post says the question is whether Facebook "should allow even the most obviously untruthful content unlimited reach." The Post says that Facebook "should, and does, allow candidates to say pretty much whatever they want in everyday posts," but the Post says that ads are different, as "the site is accepting money to bump up posts in the feeds of carefully targeted groups of users." The Post concludes that the country doesn't "want an Internet where the way to win an election is to fabricate."

"Election Security That Mitch McConnell Should Get Behind." A Washington Post (10/21, 14.2M) editorial calls on Senate Majority Leader McConnell to support legislation that provides incentives for states to switch to risk-limiting audits of election results, which "hand-count a statistically meaningful sample of all votes to determine whether the original tally was correct. The required sample increases as the margin of victory narrows." The Post argues, "Every state or county needs to polish its own version of what experts call the gold standard for election review, and that takes funding." McConnell should support the effort "to protect against Russia and other adversaries' far less friendly reach."

"Ukraine And Zelensky Need Help. U.S. Officials Are Nowhere To Be Found." The Washington Post (10/21, 14.2M) says in editorial that Ukraine's leadership "badly needs help from the United States, which has been its closest ally in resisting Russia's aggression and pursuing needed reforms," but "senior U.S. officials are nowhere to be seen in Kyiv – thanks to the destruction of U.S. diplomacy there by President Trump and his personal lawyer, Rudolph W. Giuliani." As a result, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky is left "to the mercies of [Russian President Vladimir] Putin, who seeks the de facto dismemberment of Ukraine as the price for a peace settlement, and French President Emmanuel Macron, who has made clear he would like to lift the European Union sanctions against Russia."

Wall Street Journal.

“New York’s Climate Show Trial.” A Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says for New York Attorney General Letitia James, this week’s trial of Exxon Mobil Corp. in state court over claims the company had hidden evidence of climate harm it knew was true is really about pursuing climate activists’ goal of destroying Exxon and other companies in the oil and gas industry. The journal expresses hope that state Judge Barry Ostrager will render judgment based on the law.

“Another $800 Billion, Please.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) mocks the price tags of recent proposals by Democratic presidential candidates as unfeasible, focusing on the estimated $800 billion needed to fund Sen. Elizabeth Warren’s education plan.

“California’s Tax-The-Rich Boomerang.” A Wall Street Journal (10/21, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that while California Democrats have repeatedly increased taxes on the wealthy and argued it has no impact on taxpayer migration or state tax revenue, a new study from Stanford economists Joshua Rauh and Ryan Shyu proves otherwise. The study, which examined how the response of high earners to Prop. 30, a 2012 referendum that raised the top marginal rate to 13.3%, found an increase in the likelihood of wealthy residents leaving the state resulting in a decrease in the expected revenue from the tax increase on high earners.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Conan O'Brien: "I feel like the campaign has been going on – don't you have a feeling it's been going on for about four years? But it's starting to heat up. We've narrowed it down to, I think, 600 Democrats."

Conan O'Brien: "White House acting Chief of Staff Mick Mulvaney is in trouble for comments he made about Ukraine. He said, 'Look, I'm just here for a couple of months so I can go on "Dancing With The Stars," so don't listen to a word I say. Just get me to that TV show.'"

Stephen Colbert: "I've been out of the country. Way out of the country. New Zealand. Out of the hemisphere – both of them. I have been as far from the insatiable black hole of news that is Donald Trump as you can get on this planet."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, I've heard there have been some developments over the last 10 days that did not go so well for Donny, but today, at his first cabinet meeting since the impeachment proceedings began, he invited in the ladies and gentlemen of the press and calmly explained that there's nothing for him to be concerned about, for 71 minutes. Seventy-one minutes is not a press conference. That's a one-man show."

Stephen Colbert: "The first thing Trump was just fine with was the firestorm he ignited on Thursday after he announced that the next G-7 summit would be held at the Trump National Doral Golf Resort. ... (As Trump) 'Hey, if I'm going to get impeached anyway, it's bucket-list time.'"

Stephen Colbert: "So Saturday, Trump announced that he would no longer be using Doral for the G-7 ... Even Trump's announcement about not using his resort is a commercial for his resort. (as Trump) 'I would never use the office of the presidency to promote one of my own properties, even the one-of-a-kind, world-famous Trump Doral. You know our motto: It's not just unbelievable, it's unconstitutional.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump saying that he would have used Doral at no cost] "Bull dookie! You've never given anything away for free. For Pete's sake, the Trump Charitable Foundation was shut down by New York state because it was a checkbook to serve your business and political interests. (As Trump) 'I don't run for the cure. The cure runs for me.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Then Trump finally stopped talking about his resort and addressed the most important issue of the day: How great he is. ... You're so good at business. That's why we're not releasing your taxes, right? Because that's why we had them sealed in titanium capsules and fired into the heart of the sun. So people wouldn't be too impressed by them."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, throughout this impeachment inquiry, the company line has been there was no quid pro quo between Trump and Ukraine. First of all, you don't need quid pro quo – it's super-illegal anyway. And second, yeah, quid pro quo. And on Thursday, Mulvaney admitted it. ... Admitting the thing that Trump is being impeached for turned out to be problematic, so later that day, Mulvaney put out a statement saying, 'Let me be clear, there was absolutely no quid pro quo.' But we just saw you repeatedly say there was. It's like if Mick Jagger left stage and immediately released a statement saying, 'Let me be clear, jumping jack flash is not a gas, gas, gas.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Then Mulvaney went on 'Fox News Sunday' and unveiled his bulletproof defense – he never actually said 'quid pro quo.' ... He does realize you don't have to say the crime to be guilty of it, right? To be convicted of homicide, you don't have to stab somebody while saying 'murder, murder, murder, murder!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "We also have Mayor Pete Buttigieg here. It wasn't easy getting Mayor Pete here. First we had to work around his crazy campaign schedule, and then we needed his parents to sign the permission slip."

Jimmy Fallon: "According to a new poll out today, Mayor Pete is surging in Iowa. He just passed Bernie Sanders, is now right behind Joe Biden and Elizabeth Warren, and the thing that sets him apart from those three is that he actually knows how to find that poll on a smartphone."

Jimmy Fallon: "Actually, Mayor Pete actually has something a lot of the other candidates don't: his original teeth."

Jimmy Fallon: "[Mayor Pete]'s really caught on in Iowa. And mostly because voters think he's the only candidate young enough to find his way out of a corn maze."

Jimmy Fallon: "It just came out that Mitt Romney has been using a secret Twitter account where he supported himself, and criticized President Trump and goes by the name, this is real, Pierre Delecto. ... Pierre Delecto sounds like an evil chef at Au bon Pain."

Jimmy Fallon: "Romney's been running the account since 2011. Yep. Pierre Delecto is eight years old and loves Twitter, he's just like the President."

James Corden: "President Trump is coming under intense pressure as the impeachment inquiry continues to ramp up and the news for him seems to be getting worse. According to a new poll, 52 percent of Americans now support removing the President from office. Fifty-two percent. So, roughly the same number of Americans who voted for someone else to be the President in the first place."

James Corden: "The public support for impeachment is at an all-time high. Now if only there had been some sort of sign that Trump's relationships always end in a bitter divorce."

James Corden: "Now, Congress is starting to act on these calls for impeachment. And at least four witnesses are expected to testify before House committees this week. This is like C-SPAN's version of 'Shark Week.'"

James Corden: "Meanwhile, the pressure seems to be getting to Donald Trump, it really does. Because yesterday, he had a bit of trouble even remembering the members of his own cabinet. His Secretary of Defense is a man named Mark Esper, but in a tweet yesterday, Trump referred to him as 'Mark Esperanto.' Now, in Trump's defense, Mark Esperanto is a way cooler name. It is not a surprise that Trump got confused. Every photo that they are in together looks like Trump is struggling to remember his name. ... Instead of 'Esper' he typed 'Esperanto.' But things got even worse, because Trump took a second look at the name 'Esperanto' and immediately threatened to deport him.”

James Corden: “A big revelation about Republican Sen. Mitt Romney came out yesterday. After a report that outed him, Romney had to admit that he uses a secret Twitter account under the name – and I’m not make this up – Pierre Delecto. ... You just know that Pierre Delecto is Romney’s bad boy alter ego who only comes out after he’s had half a can of Diet Coke.”

Seth Meyers: “President Trump this weekend announced he will no longer push to hold an upcoming G7 summit at his golf resort in Florida. Apparently he just found out that ‘G7’ doesn’t mean you get to play seven rounds of golf.”

Seth Meyers: “President Trump will no longer hold the upcoming G7 summit at his golf resort in Florida. Yeah, I guess it is a bad idea to commit an impeachable offense when you’re already being impeached. That would be like stabbing the bailiff at your murder trial.”

Seth Meyers: “House Speaker Nancy Pelosi today distributed a fact sheet outlining what she feels are President Trump’s abuses of power. Even more impressive: getting it down to a sheet.”

Seth Meyers: “Politico has published a new article about the campaign expenses of the top Democratic presidential candidates and found that former Vice President Joe Biden has spent nearly $4,000 on ice cream since July. That would explain all the brain freezes.”

Seth Meyers: “Sen. Mitt Romney admitted last night to having a secret Twitter account in addition to his regular public one. Said Trump, ‘My Twitter account is secret too. Wait, what?! Everyone can – what? They must think I’m a [freaking] lunatic!’”

Seth Meyers: “Sen. Bernie Sanders held a 26,000-person rally this weekend in Queens. The crowd was so huge that Bernie almost had to use a microphone.”

Trump Imposes Sanctions On Turkey Aimed At Stopping Syria Operation.

Amid what media reports are casting as increasing pressure from lawmakers on both sides of the aisle, President Trump yesterday announced a series of measures his Administration will take against Turkey as it continues to operation against Kurds in northern Syria. NBC Nightly News (10/14, lead story, 2:35, Holt, 6.4M) opened its broadcast last night reporting that "the situation on the ground is spiraling out of control tonight as US forces withdraw from Syria. A bloody Turkish assault on the Kurds is escalating," and the President has announced "announcing economic sanctions against Turkey, an effort to slow down the carnage – but the move may come too late."

The Los Angeles Times (10/14, Stokols, Cloud, 4.64M) reports Trump, "facing blowback over his abrupt troop withdrawal from Syria amid reports that Islamic State detainees have escaped in the ensuing chaos," imposed sanctions against Turkey. On Monday afternoon, the President tweeted a statement authorizing what he called a "broad range of consequences" in response to Turkey's failure to "mitigat[e] the humanitarian effects of its invasion." The Washington Times (10/14, Howell, 492K) quotes Trump's statement as saying, "The United States will aggressively use economic sanctions to target those who enable, facilitate and finance these heinous acts in Syria. I am fully prepared to swiftly destroy Turkey's economy if Turkish leaders continue down this dangerous and destructive path."

According to the Washington Post (10/14, Kim, 14.2M) reports the President "did not specify when the sanctions would be leveled against Turkey," but said in a statement that the executive order would empower the Administration to impose penalties against "those who may be involved in serious human rights abuses, obstructing a cease-fire, preventing displaced persons from returning home, forcibly repatriating refugees or threatening the peace, security or stability in Syria." The report mentions that Vice President Pence and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "addressed reporters late in the afternoon and attempted to defend the president from criticism that he essentially gave Erdogan a green light to invade northern Syria during an Oct. 6 phone call." The Hill (10/14, Samuels, 2.98M) reports the order also "leaves open the possibility of the Trump administration imposing additional sanctions on Turkey depending on its actions in Syria moving forward."

The New York Times (10/14, 18.61M) reports Trump "said Monday that he was halting trade negotiations with Turkey and doubling tariffs on imports of Turkish steel as relations between the countries continued to deteriorate." Trump said he was "increasing steel tariffs on Turkey to 50 percent from 25 percent, and warned that additional economic sanctions were coming." To the Washington Examiner (10/14, Gehrke, 448K), "Trump touted multiple kinds of economic punishments for Turkey," and the New York Post (10/14, Fredericks, 4.57M) says he also "repeated his threat that he was 'perfectly willing to swiftly destroy Turkey's economy' unless Turkey's leaders changed course."

Under the headline "As Options Narrow On Syria, Trump Prepares To Drop Sanctions Hammer On Turkey," Reuters (10/13, Ali, Pamuk) reports that "after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on Friday that Trump had authorized "very powerful" new sanctions targeting Turkey, the administration appeared ready to start making good on Trump's threat to obliterate Turkey's economy." An Administration official told Reuters that sanctions were "being worked out at all levels of the government for rollout." In a report on the executive order, NPR (10/15, Neuman, 3.12M) quotes Secretary Mnuchin as saying the US will consider intensifying the sanctions unless Turkey "is willing to embrace a ceasefire, come to the negotiating table and end the violence."

On CNBC's Squawk Box (10/14, 128K), Mnuchin, asked about the status of threatened US sanctions against Turkey, said, "This is obviously an evolving situation. It's complicated. We are monitoring it daily. We'll be having another meeting in the Situation Room this morning with the national security team. We'll be updating the President later today, and we'll be presenting different options. As I've said, the sanctions are ready when the President wants to move forward on them."

On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Trump's foreign policy can be reduced to two tactics – sanctions and tariffs, and on its editorial page, the New York Times (10/14, 18.61M) says "the threat to destroy the Turkish economy was made, as is Mr. Trump's wont, in a tweet that was such a departure from historical presidential pronouncements that it is worth quoting:

'As I have stated strongly before, and just to reiterate, if Turkey does anything that I, in my great and unmatched wisdom, consider to be off limits, I will totally destroy and obliterate the Economy of Turkey (I've done before!).'

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, A1, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports the sanctions come as pressure builds on Capitol Hill for action to punish Turkey. The Hill (10/14, Carney, 2.98M) reports House Speaker Pelosi said Monday that she and Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) "agreed on the need for a resolution overturning President Trump's decision on Syria, as well as additional sanctions against Turkey." Pelosi tweeted, "Pleased to have a conversation with Senator @LindseyGrahamSC this morning. Our first order of business was to agree that we must have a bipartisan, bicameral joint resolution to overturn the President's dangerous decision in Syria immediately." Graham "said that Pelosi supports 'bipartisan sanctions against Turkey's outrages in Syria. She also believes we should show support for Kurdish allies and is concerned about the reemergence of ISIS.'"

Graham, on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/14, 831K), said, "I've been working with Democrat and Republican colleagues to issue sanctions against Turkey, and the blame here is with Turkey. Three weeks ago I met [President Recep Tayyip] Erdoğan at the UN in New York. The 'safe zone' concept to keep Turkey and the Kurds away from each other with an international force was working. A week after that, he basically lied to me, called up President Trump, saying, 'I'm going into Syria,' and rest is history. ... There will be crippling sanctions imposed by the Congress to supplement what President Trump's Administration has done. We'll send a signal to Turkey that is unmistakable in the eyes of Erdoğan and the world. We'll break his economy until he stops the bloodshed."

Chief political analyst Gloria Borger said on CNN's Situation Room (10/14, 708K), "The President is hearing from leading Republicans like Mitch McConnell, Lindsey Graham, his usual allies as well as Democrats, that this is a complete and total disaster. ... I think that he is hearing the message from his Republicans and trying to do a lot of damage control here because if he doesn't get on the bandwagon with his Republicans, they will do it to him and not with him." Chief White House correspondent Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (10/14, 708K), "President Trump is reversing course somewhat on the situation in Syria, announcing he is imposing sanctions on Turkey and leaving some US forces in the region. The question is whether that amount of backpedaling will be enough for lawmakers from both parties who have slammed Mr. Trump's Syria policy."

Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/14, 831K), "I think it's crucially important for the Turks to understand that there is broad bipartisan support here in Washington that they have got to stop this incursion."

Sen. Ben Cardin (D-MD) said on CNN's Situation Room (10/14, 779K), "It was the President, after a conversation with Erdogan, that removed US troops, which gave Turkey the green light to go into an area because the US troops are no longer there. Turkey's our NATO ally and here they are attacking one of our key allies in dealing with the ISIS terrorists. So I really wonder what the President is doing in regards to Turkey. Now he says that he objects to what they're doing, even though he gave a clear message to Erdogan that the US was pulling out of that area. It's inconsistent."

Rep. Ted Deutch (D-FL) said on CNN's New Day (10/14, Camerota, Berman, 455K), "The President made a decision to betray our allies, the Kurds. There's been bipartisan condemnation in Congress and outside of Congress, all across the country for failing to stand with our allies – our allies who have fought so valiantly with us to defeat ISIS. And now we put them at risk, at risk of slaughter. There are 10,000 ISIS fighters who risk going back on the battlefield, which puts Americans at risk as well, and our allies in Europe. And it gives a stronger hand, not only to Erdoğan which is where the focus has been, but it puts Russia at the forefront of what happens in Syria again. It forces the Kurds to strike a deal with Assad, the butcher who's killed over 600,000 people."

Pence To Lead Delegation To Turkey For Cease-Fire Talks. ABC World News Tonight (10/14, lead story, 4:25, Muir, 6.92M) opened its broadcast last night, "President Trump has called Turkey's President Erdoğan and has asked for an immediate cease-fire." In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (10/14, lead story, 3:00, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reported the President "is calling for an immediate halt to Turkey's invasion, and he is sending his Vice President, Mike Pence, and his national security adviser, to Turkey." Pence was shown saying: "The President of the United States called on the President to Turkey to stop the invasion, to enact an immediate ceasefire, and to begin negotiations with Kurdish forces in Syria."

Bloomberg (10/14, Mohsin, Jacobs, Beene, 4.73M) reports Pence, speaking to reporters, said he would lead a delegation to Turkey at President Trump's request in an effort to stop the military advance. Pence "said the US wanted the two sides to negotiate a long-term peace, but he didn't call for Turkey to pull out of Syria." The Vice President said that during a call Monday with Erdoğan, "President Trump made it very clear that the United States is going to continue to take actions against Turkey's economy until they bring the violence to an end. We want an immediate ceasefire and we want to begin negotiations between Turkey and Syrian defense forces."

The Washington Examiner (10/14, Halaschak, 448K) reports Pence told reporters, "President Erdoğan reached out and requested the call, and President Trump communicated to him very clearly that the United States of America wants Turkey to stop the invasion, to implement an immediate ceasefire, and to begin to negotiate with Kurdish forces in Syria to bring an end to the violence."

Pence, the New York Post (10/14, Garger, 4.57M) reports, also warned that the sanctions announced yesterday were only the beginning "unless Turkey is willing to embrace a ceasefire, come to the negotiating table and end the violence."

Erdoğan, meanwhile, writes in today's Wall Street Journal (10/14, Erdoğan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) insists that Turkey's mission in northern Syria is to remove terrorist elements, which he says are preventing Syrian refugees from returning home. Erdoğan says the international community failed to prevent the Syrian crisis from causing regional instability, but calls on them to now help restore peace and stability.

Trump: 1,000 US Troops Will Stay In Mideast To Prevent ISIS Resurgence. The AP (10/14, Press) reports President Trump said Monday that "the roughly 1,000 US troops he has ordered to leave Syria will remain in the Middle East to prevent a resurgence of the Islamic State threat." In a statement, Trump said the troops will "redeploy and remain in the region." Another AP (10/14, Burns), meanwhile, reports US troops "are scrambling for Syria's exits." US officials "were weighing options for the future of a counter-[ISIS] campaign, including the possibility of waging it with a combination of air power and special operations forces based outside of Syria."

On ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 2, 0:55, Muir, 6.92M), Martha Raddatz reported, "There will be a very small contingent of American troops in southern Syria, but they're not really near the ISIS fight. The rest of the American troops, about 1,000, will go to Iraq and be available for anti-ISIS and counterterrorism missions. But without American troops in northern Syria...and now without partners, the Kurds, it makes intelligence gathering for potential missions much more difficult."

David Martin reporters on the CBS Evening News (10/14, story 2, 2:35, O'Donnell, 4.29M) that "with Turkish forces moving south and Russian-backed Syrian units advancing north, 1,000 US troops are caught in the middle, looking for the safest way out. Joint chiefs Chairman General Mark Milley spoke by phone with the Russian chief of staff in an effort to make sure there is no interference with the American withdrawal, which will include equipment as well as troops."

The Washington Times (10/14, Glenn, 492K), meanwhile, reports that Army Secretary Ryan D. McCarthy "offered a pointed reminder to the troops Monday about obeying their commander in chief, amid open grumbling and criticism" over President Trump's decision to pull out of Syria. At the Association of the US Army's annual conference in Washington on Monday, Secretary McCarthy said, "Everybody has opinions in the war of ideas. But, when national policy decisions are made, we salute and move on."

David Sanger of the New York Times (10/14, Sanger, 18.61M) writes, "All the warnings were there. But President Trump's reliance on his instincts, and his relationships, led him to ignore the consequences of a move that has emboldened Russia, Iran and the Islamic State. ... Rarely has a presidential decision resulted so immediately in what his own party leaders have described as disastrous consequences for American allies and interests."

A Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorial says that "until now, it was possible to hope that the damage caused by President Trump's terrible incompetence, ignorance and impulsivity in foreign policy was largely theoretical, and possibly repairable. That is no longer true. The cost of his latest Syria blunder is unfolding before our eyes: Innocent lives lost. US servicemen and women betrayed. Butchering dictators emboldened. Dangerous terrorists set free. A ghastly scene is playing out, and it almost surely will get worse."

Trump: "Let Syria And Assad Protect The Kurds And Fight Turkey." The Hill (10/14, Samuels, 2.98M) reports that in a series of tweets yesterday, the President Trump "said other countries — including China or Russia — should be responsible for protecting the US-allied Kurds in northern Syria amid a groundswell of bipartisan criticism over his decision to pull American forces out of the region." Calling it part of a "daylong series of tweets," the New York Post (10/14, Fredericks, 4.57M) likewise says Trump "continued to defend his decision to withdraw from northern Syria, tweeting that someone else could protect the Kurds, such as Russia, China — or even Napoleon."

First tweeting at 7:40 a.m., Trump wrote, "The same people who got us into the Middle East mess are the people who most want to stay there!" Just after 3:00 p.m., the President favorably shared comments by Katie Pavlich of Townhall, writing, "I offered ISIS prisoners to the European countries from where they came, and was rejected on numerous occasions. They probably figured that the U.S. would bear the tremendous cost as always!" The President next tweeted, "After defeating 100% of the ISIS Caliphate, I largely moved our troops out of Syria. Let Syria and Assad protect the Kurds and fight Turkey for their own land. I said to my Generals, why should we be fighting for Syria and... Assad to protect the land of our enemy? Anyone who wants to assist Syria in protecting the Kurds is good with me, whether it is Russia, China, or Napoleon Bonaparte. I hope they all do great, we are 7,000 miles away!" The Washington Examiner (10/14, Brest, 448K) reports that in another tweet, Trump "accused Fox News anchor Brian Kilmeade of getting 'it all wrong' in regard to his coverage of the recent developments in Syria."

The President took to Twitter again yesterday afternoon, writing, "Some people want the United States to protect the 7,000 mile away Border of Syria, presided over by Bashar al-Assad, our enemy. At the same time, Syria and whoever they chose to help, wants naturally to protect the Kurds. I would much rather focus on our Southern Border which abuts and is part of the United States of America. And by the way, numbers are way down and the WALL is being built!"

In an interview on ABC's This Week (10/13, 5.46M) Sunday, Secretary Mnuchin "said that President Donald Trump is focused on the developing situation in Turkey and that they will be meeting with the National Security Council Sunday, as reports of thousands of displaced citizens and escaped Islamic State fighters emerge," according to a write-up of the interview on ABC's website. Secretary Mnuchin said, "We are ready to go at a moment's notice to put on sanctions. ... These sanctions could be starting small, they could be maximum pressure, which would destroy the Turkish economy." Mnuchin "echoed the president" in the interview, "emphasizing that his goal is to get troops out of Syria and end 'long-standing wars'" and saying, "I think the analogy that everybody's saying is, we're abandoning the Kurds, like the Kurds are these longstanding allies. Our role in Syria was not to defend land for the Kurds in historical issues. Our focus was to defeat ISIS."

Axios (10/14, Allassan, 521K) reports Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) "appeared" to criticize the president's tweets without directly mentioning him," saying, "To those who believe radical Islam is not a threat to our homeland after 9/11 and the rise of ISIS: you are sadly mistaken and ignoring all military advice." Senate Majority Leader McConnell "also did not name Trump directly in a statement he put out on Twitter more than 30 minutes after Trump began tweeting," but said withdrawing American forces in the region "would only make a troubling situation much worse" for the US and its allies in the region.

McConnell, the Washington Times (10/14, Meier, 492K) reports, said he is "gravely concerned" by the US' response to the ongoing offensive in northern Syria, where he said "Turkey's offensive against our Syrian Kurdish partners is jeopardizing years of hard-won progress in the fight against ISIS."

The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 7, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.29M), meanwhile, reported that "many Kurds living in this country are telling us they feel abandoned after the President's decision to pull US forces out of northern Syria." CBS' Manuel Bojorquez "visited the city with the largest concentration of Kurds: Nashville, Tennessee."

EU Nations Ban Arms Sales To Turkey, But Do Not Impose Full Embargo. The AP (10/14, Casert) reports EU nations on Monday "joined France and Germany in banning arms sales to Ankara, a rare move against a NATO ally for many of them. Many EU foreign ministers were looking beyond a strong statement condemning the military operation that has destabilized the whole region and wanted to make sure their move would carry some sting." Reuters (10/14, Emmott) reports they "stopped short of a bloc-wide embargo."

Assad's Troops Quickly Return To Northeastern Syria. Reuters (10/14, Francis, Gumrukcu) reports, "Russia-backed Syrian forces took rapid advantage" of the "abrupt US retreat from Syria on Monday, deploying deep inside Kurdish-held territory south of the Turkish frontier less than 24 hours after Washington announced a full withdrawal." The AP (10/14, Guzel, Mroue) reports Syrian troops "moved into towns and villages in northeastern Syria on Monday, including the flashpoint region of Manbij, setting up a potential clash with Turkish-led forces advancing in the area."

The CBS Evening News (10/14, lead story, 3:00, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reported that "with Turkish forces advancing to a crucial highway in northeast Syria, choking off supplies and escape routes, the Syrian regime moved swiftly to take over the key cities of Kobane, Qamishli, and Al Hasaka." The Washington Post (10/14, Cunningham, Dadouch, Khattab, 14.2M) reports, "The swift Syrian advance was set in motion by President Trump's sudden decision in recent days to withdraw US troops from northeastern Syria, leaving the Kurdish forces long allied with the United States vulnerable to attack from the Turkish military."

A front-page Washington Post (10/14, A1, Englund, 14.2M) analysis says the US "withdrawal from Syria gives Russia an even freer hand in that country. Turkey's invasion of Kurdish areas does not directly threaten Russia's interests. In fact Turkey offered Russians the opportunity to persuade the Kurds to start talks with Assad's government. The mutual recriminations" between the US and Turkey "give Russia even more to build on as it attempts to weaken the Western alliance."

Media Analyses: US-China "Phase 1" Trade Deal Puts Off Thorny Issues For Later.

The AP (10/14, Wiseman, Kolpack, Pitt) reports President Trump "heralded a breakthrough in U.S.-China trade talks, and markets rallied in relief over a de-escalation in tensions between the world's two biggest economies." However, "closer inspection suggests there isn't much substance, at least not yet, to the temporary truce Trump announced Friday at the White House after the U.S. and China wrapped up their 13th round of trade talks." Furthermore, "the negotiators have delayed dealing with the toughest issues for future talks." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said he expected that he and U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer will meet with China's lead negotiator, Vice Premier Liu He, before a November Asia-Pacific summit in Chile. At that gathering, Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping could officially sign off on a phase one agreement."

The Hill (10/14, Lane, Elis, 2.98M) reports that "Trump has been quick to boast about scoring a major victory for 'great patriot farmers & ranchers.'" However, "Washington and Wall Street are reacting with caution to the announcement, following signals from Beijing that it still needs time to finalize the terms and amid criticism that the limited agreement does not touch on many of Trump's top priorities for a broader trade deal." Observers also note that "China has previously retreated from similar promises." Treasury Secretary Mnuchin "has admitted that the deal could still fall apart, but he also downplayed that likelihood."

Axios (10/14, Rabouin, 521K) reports under the headline "Investors Signal They Hate Trump's 'Phase 1' China Trade Deal" that Wall Street "was bursting at the seams with excitement about a trade deal between the U.S. and China – until details of the deal were revealed. ... Comments about the deal from top strategists and money managers suggest many view the agreement as too little, too late," with Goldman Sachs analysts predicting "a 60% chance more tariffs are put in place by the end of the year."

Reuters (10/14, Timmons, Lawder) says Trump "called his Phase 1 trade deal with China 'by far, the greatest and biggest deal ever made,' even though nothing was agreed on paper, and most of the tariffs set upon Chinese goods remain in place. ... Largely unaddressed are the core U.S. complaints about China's state-dominated economic model that gave rise to the trade war in the first place, people familiar with the recent talks said."

Mnuchin: "Substantial Progress" Made In US-China Negotiations. Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said on CNBC's Squawk Box (10/14, 128K), "We made substantial progress last week in the negotiations. We have a fundamental agreement that is subject to documentation. I would describe Phase One as quite substantial. The President has said as soon as we get Phase One complete, we'll move to Phase Two. ... China has agreed on agriculture that they're going to take off tariffs on agriculture and they're going to start purchasing agriculture. They had been in the market, but they'll be stepping that up. ... I have every expectation if there's not a deal those [December] tariffs would go in place, but I expect we'll have a deal."

Oil Prices Fall Amid Skepticism Over US-China Trade Deal. The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Hodari, Wallace, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports oil prices dropped Monday as optimism over last week's progress toward a "phase one" deal faded. Investors in recent weeks have focused on worries that slowing global growth could lower demand for commodities.

Holstein: US Must Formulate Strategy To Counter China's Theft Of Tech Secrets. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), William J. Holstein, author of "The New Art of War: China's Deep Strategy Inside the United States," warns that China's efforts to steal America's technological secrets present a threat to national security, because commercial technology can have military applications. Holstein urges the US to develop a comprehensive plan to fight China's hacking and espionage efforts.

Members Of Facebook's Cryptocurrency Group Sign Governing Document As More Companies Exit.

Fox Business (10/14, De Lea, 1.73M) reports, "The founding members of the Libra Association Charter gathered in Geneva, Switzerland, on Monday to sign a governance structure and to appoint board members to the cryptocurrency organization amid mounting skepticism of the proposed Libra as another company dropped out of the Facebook-initiated project." However, "Booking Holdings became the latest company to pull out of the project," following "Stripe, Mastercard, Visa, eBay and Paypal" who "had already dropped out" on Friday. The report states that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said in July he is 'not comfortable' with Facebook launching Libra, adding the group has 'a lot of work to do before they get us comfortable.'" The Financial Times (10/11, Murphy, Stacey, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), CNBC (10/14, Palmer, 3.62M), Barron's (10/11, Salzman, 1.07M), Business Insider (10/14, Keyes, 3.67M), and Cointelegraph (10/14, Alexandre, 14K) also reported on this story.

In a separate piece on its website, CNBC (10/14, Feiner, 3.62M) reports Secretary Mnuchin in an interview on CNBC's Squawk Box (10/14, 104K) "said he met with Libra representatives on multiple occasions and has been 'very clear ... that if they don't meet ... our money-laundering standards and the standards that we have at [Financial Crimes Enforcement Network] that we would take enforcement actions against them. And I think they realized that they're not ready, they're not up to par. And I assume some of the partners got concerned and dropped out until they meet those standards.'" CoinTelegraph (10/14, Alexandre, 14K) also reported.

Mnuchin Says It Is Up To NBA To Resolve China Impasse.

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said on CNBC's Squawk Box (10/14, 128K), "I think in this case you're dealing with issues of people at the companies, meaning the NBA, the NBA itself, it has processes in China, and this is up for them to work out. It's not for us to dictate what they should be doing but I would hope they work out these issues. ... There's no question there are values and morals that the United States stands for and we try to push around the world. On the other hand, there's different legal and political systems, and we're not looking to change China's legal and political system," because "obviously they have a very different political system than we do."

As Ex-NSC Russia Expert Testifies Behind Closed Doors, Schiff Bars Gaetz From Attending.

Media coverage of Fiona Hill's House testimony largely breaks along ideological lines, with mainstream outlets highlighting how her statements might affect the case against the President and conservative publications focusing on House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff's decision not to allow Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL) to attend the hearing.

The AP (10/14, Balsamo, Jalonick) reports Hill, "a former top National Security Council expert on Russia, was testifying to Congress behind closed doors Monday, the latest former Trump administration official to be subpoenaed as part of the House impeachment inquiry into...Trump." Hill did not comment as she arrived at the Capitol, "but her attorney said she had received a congressional subpoena and would 'comply and answer questions' from lawmakers." The Federalist (10/14, Davis, 126K) points out that it was told by "several officials... they believe" Hill "is one of the unnamed sources for the anti-Trump whistleblower whose August 12 complaint fanned congressional impeachment fires."

Citing "a person familiar with her testimony," the Washington Post (10/14, Demirjian, Harris, Bade, 14.2M) reports Hill "told impeachment investigators on Monday that" Rudy Giuliani "ran a shadow foreign policy in Ukraine that circumvented US officials and career diplomats in order to personally benefit...Trump." Hill also "told lawmakers that she confronted Gordon Sondland, the US ambassador to the European Union, about Giuliani's activities which, she testified, were not coordinated with the officials responsible for carrying out US foreign policy, this person said on the condition of anonymity to disclose details of her deposition." Giuliani "on Monday night said: 'I don't know Fiona and can't figure out what she is talking about,' adding that his contact with Ukrainian officials was set up with the State Department." Said Giuliani, "I reported everything back to them. ... Nothing shadowy about it."

USA Today (10/14, Hayes, Jansen, 10.31M) says Hill "spent more than 10 hours fielding questions from lawmakers on three House committees behind closed doors," and The Hill (10/14, Lillis, Marcos, 2.98M) that she is "the third witness to appear for a closed-door session before the three House committees leading the impeachment inquiry, following former Ukraine special envoy Kurt Volker and former ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch."

Reuters (10/14, Zengerle, Hosenball) indicates that Hill, "who left her White House job shortly before the July 25 call" between President Trump and Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky "but remained on the payroll into August, had advocated a tough US approach on Moscow even as Trump was more accommodating toward Russian President Vladimir Putin." The New York Times (10/14, Baker, 18.61M) says Hill was "prepared to testify that she and other officials objected strenuously to the removal of the ambassador to Ukraine, only to be disregarded."

NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 3, 1:12, Welker, 6.4M) similarly reported on Hill's "critical testimony," and cites "a person familiar with the matter telling NBC News...Hill planned to tell lawmakers that" Giuliani "sidestepped official channels to run a shadow foreign policy in Ukraine." Giuliani "denied that allegation to NBC News." The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 4, 1:56, Cordes, 4.29M) said it "has confirmed the Department of Justice is now examining whether Giuliani violated foreign lobbying rules after two of his Ukraine linked associates were arrested last week." ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 5, 1:58, Bruce, 6.92M) showed Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) saying, "The arrows continue to point in just one direction, which is that a crime was committed." Swalwell said on CNN's Situation Room (10/14, 708K) that Hill's testimony was "incredibly helpful." Swalwell reiterated that "the arrows continue to point in just one direction which is that a crime was committed: extortion, bribery, soliciting campaign help. It was confessed to by the President and there is an active cover-up going on right now."

Politico (10/14, Desiderio, Cheney, 4.29M) also reports Democrats view Hill's "closed-door testimony as critical to their understanding of the extent" to which Giuliani "bypassed official US government channels by pressuring Ukrainian officials to dig up dirt on former Vice President Joe Biden. ... It was unclear if the White House sought to block Hill from testifying, as it has for other former officials who have been summoned before the House this year."

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Ballhaus, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the hearing was delayed for about 45 minutes due to a dispute between Schiff and Gaetz, who is not a member of any of the three committees questioning Hill, over Gaetz's desire to attend. The House parliamentarian ultimately sided with Schiff over Gaetz, described by the New York Post (10/14, Fredericks, 4.57M) as "a Republican and Trump loyalist."

To the Federalist (10/14, Davis, 126K), Schiff "tossed" Gaetz "out of the deposition." The Federalist adds that "according to the Congressional Research Service, formal impeachment proceedings are typically referred to the House Judiciary Committee." Gaetz "sits on that committee; Schiff does not," and "the House has yet to approve a resolution granting broad impeachment investigative authority to any of its committees." The Washington Examiner (10/14, Ferrechio, 448K) says Schiff "ejected" Gaetz from the "closed-door impeachment hearing," and the Washington Times (10/14, Muñoz, 492K) that "speaking to reporters after being ejected," the Florida Republican "argued that since his committee oversees impeachment, he should have been allowed to be a part of depositions related to the ongoing impeachment inquiry."

Breitbart (10/14, Mora, 673K) reports "a frustrated Gaetz aired his disappointment to reporters after being told he was not allowed to sit in on the hearing, venting his anger over what he says are 'selective leaks' by...Schiff," and "questioning why he was not allowed to be present during Hill's testimony." Gaetz "added that the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Rep. Jerry Nadler, D-N.Y., was involved in the impeachment inquiry." Fox News (10/14, O'Reilly, 27.59M) similarly reports on its website that Gaetz, a House Judiciary Committee member, said after leaving, "It's not like I'm on Agriculture. What are the Democrats so afraid?"

Political commentator Mary Katherine Ham said on CNN's The Lead (10/14, 691K) that "a lot of these depositions are happening in private, and little bits are leaked and I do think at a time when people are skeptical of the processes of these things, it would help to have as much of this out in public as possible. Which is one of the reasons I wish they would vote to just go ahead and do an official inquiry and do it that way."

Gaetz Denounces Democratic-Led "Coup." Breitbart (10/14, Mora, 673K) reports Gaetz also "expressed his frustration over being kicked out of Hill's testimony via Twitter," saying, "Chairman Schiff and the radical democrats are now active participants in the coup. To exclude Members of Congress from hearings confirms the American people's suspicions: this is not a legitimate 'impeachment inquiry' – it is a charade."

Schiff Says Secrecy Needed To Keep Trump Or "His Legal Minions" Out Of Loop. The Washington Examiner (10/14, Scarry, 448K) reports that pressed on why he is holding closed-door hearings on CBS's Face the Nation, Schiff said on Sunday, "We want to make sure that we meet the needs of the investigation...and not give the president or his legal minions the opportunity to tailor their testimony and in some cases fabricate testimony to suit their interests." Adds the Examiner, "In other words, Schiff doesn't believe that Trump deserves the chance to confront his accusers – to respond to the full content of every secret hearing hosted by Schiff. Instead, Schiff believes the White House should only be allowed to respond to the selective bits that he and his Democrat colleagues decide to leak."

Democrats Weigh Questioning Bolton. In a story about Hill's closed-door testimony before House lawmakers, the Washington Post (10/14, Demirjian, Harris, Bade, 14.2M) reports that "in a sign the impeachment inquiry is widening, investigators were discussing whether to question John Bolton," the President's "former national security adviser, according to people familiar with the matter. Bolton was Hill's direct superior at the NSC."

The New York Times (10/14, Baker, Fandos, 18.61M) reports that "the effort to pressure Ukraine for political help provoked a heated confrontation inside the White House last summer that so alarmed" Bolton "that he told an aide to alert White House lawyers, House investigators were told on Monday." Bolton "got into a sharp exchange on July 10 with Gordon D. Sondland, the Trump donor turned ambassador to the European Union, who was working with Rudolph W. Giuliani, the president's personal lawyer, to press Ukraine to investigate Democrats, according to three people in the room who heard the testimony." According to "people familiar the testimony," Bolton "instructed...Hill...to notify the chief lawyer for the National Security Council about a rogue effort by Mr. Sondland, Mr. Giuliani and Mick Mulvaney, the acting White House chief of staff, with legal implications." Hill also quoted Bolton as saying, "Giuliani's a hand grenade who's going to blow everybody up."

Republicans Defend Trump On Morning Shows. Several high-profile Capitol Hill Republicans criticized the impeachment inquiry and defended the President Monday morning. Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/14, 831K), "I'm going to send a letter to Nancy Pelosi, signed by as many Republican senators as I can find, to say that the transcript does not represent an impeachable offense. Some are troubled by it. I am not. We give money to Ukraine. We have reason to be concerned about corruption."

We will write a letter to Pelosi: If you will impeach the President based on a phone call, transcript of a phone call, that is a nonstarter in the Senate. Don't destroy the country over that."

House Minority Whip Scalise said on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/14), "It felt like a kangaroo court they set up. They've got a shroud of secrecy. They are making false accusations to try to tar the President. If you look at the facts that have come out, the facts have all said that this is a witch hunt, that the President did nothing wrong. The transcripts – we're talking about whistleblowers. Why do you need a whistleblower when you actually have a transcript of what was said and the two people that were directly on the call, both have said there was nothing wrong? ... So why Adam Schiff continues to hide in secret the Volker testimony, he was starting to leak out some things that were false about it, and everybody else that listened or was participating in the Volker testimony said that Schiff was being disinformative, and frankly the entire thing should be released to the public. What is Adam Schiff trying to hide?"

Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/14, 831K), "I think the only thing consistent about the whole discussion of people threatening Ukrainian aid is everybody seems to be doing this on both sides of it. ... Joe Biden threatened the aid and then three senators wrote a letter to the Ukrainian government and they said if you don't continue investigating Trump and help the Mueller investigation, we may pull back on your aid. So it sounds like everybody and their brother is threatening Ukrainian aid, so we can't have two standards. Democrats get to threaten Ukrainian aid and nothing happens to him. Now they want to impeach a President over this?"

Rep. Rodney Davis (R-IL) said on CNN's New Day (10/14, Camerota, Berman, 494K), "What I'm concerned about is an impeachment inquiry that's moving forward, this denying the President and his Administration due process. If we want to exercise oversight, which is our responsibility in Congress, you don't have to label it an impeachment inquiry if. If you do, I certainly hope that Speaker Pelosi and Leader Hoyer will put a vote on the floor of the House, just like the three other impeachments in our nation's history, to ensure that the American people know where each and every member of congress stands in moving this hearing forward."

Trump: Whistleblower "Must Testify" In "Total Impeachment Scam."

President Trump tweeted yesterday morning, "Adam Schiff now doesn't seem to want the Whistleblower to testify. NO! Must testify to explain why he got my Ukraine conversation sooo wrong, not even close. Did Schiff tell him to do that? We must determine the Whistleblower's identity to determine WHY this was done to the USA. ... Democrat's game was foiled when we caught Schiff fraudulently making up my Ukraine conversation, when I released the exact conversation Transcript, and when Ukrainian President and the Foreign Minister said there was NO PRESSURE, very normal talk! A total Impeachment Scam!"

Trump took to Twitter last night to write, "Shifty Schiff now seems to think they don't need the Whistleblower, who started the whole Scam. The reason is that the Whistleblower has lost all credibility because the story is so far from the facts on the Transcript. Also, the second Whistleblower is no longer even mentioned!"

The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 4, 1:56, Cordes, 4.29M) showed Schiff saying Sunday, "Our primary interest right now is making sure that person is protected. And given that we already have the call record, we don't need the whistleblower, who wasn't on the call, to tell us what took place during the call. We have the best evidence of that."

In Impeachment Inquiry, Democrats Signal They May Go After Pence Next.

USA Today (10/14, Groppe, 10.31M) reports, "If Vice President Mike Pence doesn't comply with House Democrats' request to turn over by Tuesday documents related to the Trump administration's actions on Ukraine, Democrats have said that refusal can be used as evidence to impeach the president." Moreover, "Pence, himself, could also face repercussions," ranging "from a more probable next step – Pence is subpoenaed – to the most extreme route that experts say Democrats are unlikely to pursue: Pence is also impeached." USA Today adds "legal experts expect Pence to be treated like other officials in Democrats' efforts to investigate whether Trump withheld military aid to Ukraine as part of an effort to get the newly-elected president to investigate presidential candidate Joe Biden and his son, Hunter."

Trump Says "Fake News" Will Protect Hunter Biden.

President Trump tweeted Monday, "Wow! Hunter Biden is being forced to leave a Chinese Company. Now watch the Fake News wrap their greasy and very protective arms around him. Only softball questions of him please!"

The AP (10/14, Peoples) reports Hunter Biden, "facing intense scrutiny from [Trump] and his Republican allies," said he will "step down from the board of directors of a Chinese-backed private equity firm at the end of the month." The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 5, 0:21, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reported that Hunter "says that if his father is elected President, he will not take any foreign work to avoid the appearance of impropriety." Citing Trump's tweet, Breitbart (10/14, Spiering, 673K) says the President "marveled" that Biden "stepped down from his role" at the firm.

The Daily Caller (10/14, Kerr, 716K) reports that while Hunter announced that he will resign from the firm's board, "he's still one of the two directors of the company that owns his 10% equity stake in the firm, business records show. The other director holds the role of supervisor at the Chinese firm."

ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 6, 0:29, Muir, 6.92M) reported that Hunter "has given an exclusive interview to our Amy Robach." Breitbart (10/14, Spiering, 673K) says the interview will air Monday. In a tweet criticizing ABC News, Trump said they will "ask softball questions to Sleepy Joe Biden's son, Hunter, like why did Ukraine & China pay you millions when you knew nothing? Payoff?"

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (10/14, 535K), "Is ABC...going to ask some of the basic fundamental questions or give him a softball interview? I don't know. Well they asked the specifics of Biden's work in Ukraine and China? Will they ask specifically what he did for all of this money? What were his actual day-to-day job duties? Will they ask what qualifications he had? Will they ask if his status as the son of America's second most powerful decision-maker was a factor in the sweetheart deal? Why not pick Bain Capital, Goldman Sachs, Deutsche Bank, or any of the other big firms with tons of experience?"

In 2008, Joe Biden Defended Hunter's Job With A Donor. Townhall (10/14, Baumann, 177K) reports that in 2008, "Tom Brokaw grilled Joe Biden about Hunter being hired by MBNA, a credit card company based in Delaware, right out of law school. Biden had received campaign contributions from the company before and was even working on a bill MBNA backed." Joe Biden "did what he does best: defend Hunter and claim that the two incidences are 'coincidental.'" He said, "Absolutely not. My son graduated from Yale Law School. The starting salary in Wall Street is $140,000 a year if you want to be a lawyer. Options he had. ... He came home to work for a bank. Surprise, surprise, number one."

Byrne Calls For Congressional Probe Of Hunter Biden's Business Dealings. The New York Post (10/14, Moore, 4.57M) reports Rep. Bradley Byrne (R-AL) "said Monday he will introduce legislation calling on Congress to begin investigating the business dealings of Hunter Biden while his father, Joe Biden, was vice president." Byrne "said his legislation, which he plans to introduce Tuesday, would call on three House committees – Foreign Affairs, Oversight and Financial Services – to launch probes into the Bidens." Breitbart (10/14, Baker, 673K) says Byrne told Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/14, 831K) Monday, "I'm not asking for a foreign government to investigate him, I want the United States Congress to investigate. ... If the name on here was not Hunter Biden – if it were Donald Trump, Jr. – these investigations would have already started. I want the United States Congress to get to the bottom of this. What did Hunter Biden do? What did Vice President Biden do? What did all of them know? What connection was there between Vice President Biden's position and these business dealings that his son got? I think the American people deserve to know that."

Biden Releases Ethics Proposals. The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Thomas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports former Vice President Joe Biden released a series of ethics proposals Monday as his son Hunter's business dealings are under scrutiny. The package includes tighter lobbying and disclosure laws, as well as legislation that would require all candidates for federal election to disclose 10 years of tax returns. NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 4, 0:38, Holt, 6.4M) reported that the former Vice President "pledged no family members would have West Wing offices in any future administration of his nor would they have conflicting business interest with any foreign entities." The Washington Times (10/14, Miller, 492K) reports that Biden "said new anti-corruption measures were designed to repair the damage wrought by President Trump."

CNN Whistleblower Reveals Network's Anti-Trump "Vendetta," Impeachment Push.

In a story covered by conservative media and largely ignored elsewhere, the Federalist (10/14, Clark, 126K) reports "a CNN whistleblower leaked video showcasing CNN President Jeff Zucker's vendetta against President Trump and obsession with pushing stories of impeachment." The video showed Nick Neville, "a media coordinator at CNN," saying, "Jeff Zucker, basically the president of CNN has a personal vendetta against Trump. ... It's not gonna be positive for Trump. He hates him. He's going to be negative." The whistleblower "identified himself as Cary Poarch, a satellite uplink technician at CNN's Washington, DC bureau." The Federalist adds that "after the release of this video, Poarch announced he saw no other option but to wear a hidden camera and expose the bias of CNN." Townhall (10/14, Vespa, 177K) notes Poarch told Project Veritas, "I decided to wear a hidden camera...to expose the bias running rampant" at the network. Poarch "documented CNN's bias for months; recording undercover footage of numerous long-term employees, some of which talk about...Zucker's anti-Trump agenda."

Fox News (10/14, Flood, 27.59M) also says the recordings "capture CNN employees casually confirming the network's anti-Trump bias and show...Zucker telling top news executives to focus solely on impeachment even at the expense of other important news." Poarch "allegedly recorded "several" of Zucker's conference calls, in which he claims Zucker runs the daily meeting 'with an iron fist' aimed directly at 'hammering Trump' or 'Republicans in general.'"

The Washington Times (10/14, Richardson, 492K) indicates "CNN spokesman Matt Dornic did not deny the identify of network employees featured in the undercover sting by Project Veritas, which has targeted several prominent left-tilting media outlets since Mr. Trump took office, but dismissed the report as unworthy of comment."

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (10/14) that the recordings "indicate Zucker is dictating every detail of CNN's programming and doing so with clearly partisan objectives in mind." Carlson added, "That's the definition of state media. Relentless cheerleading. Relentless never ending shilling for the ruling class."

Trump Wonders Whether Video Could Lead To "Good, Or Even Great, Lawsuit." The President wrote on Twitter last night, "Project Veritas-Obtained Undercover Videos Highlight Jeff Zucker's (@CNN) Campaign To Destroy Trump. Videos Reveal @CNN's BIAS!" @TuckerCarlson @FoxNews Does this sound like a good, or even great, lawsuit?"

Trump Touts New Strassel Book About "Trump Haters" Who Are "Breaking America." In a Monday afternoon tweet, the President also wrote, "Great new book, 'Resistance (At All Costs): How Trump Haters Are Breaking America' out by Kimberley Strassel of the Wall Street Journal. Kim has treated us fairly, and for that I am very appreciative. Check it out today, it is great!"

Trump Highlights Levin Claim Democrats Are Engaging In A "Silent Coup."

In a tweet Monday evening, President Trump highlighted comments by Fox News host Mark Levin on Fox News Life, Liberty & Levin in which he accused Democrats of attempting a "silent coup." Trump wrote, "It doesn't speak for the FULL HOUSE because the FULL HOUSE hasn't spoken. The Democrat Party is pushing this Impeachment. This is a Democrat Party Impeachment, as I have been saying, a silent COUP effort.' @MarkLevinShow"

WPost Analysis: Impeachment Inquiry Exacerbating Trump's Sense Of "Victimization." The Washington Post (10/14, Parker, Rucker, 14.2M) writes in a 2,000-word feature on President Trump's "state of mind" during the House impeachment inquiry, "In the week before the launch of the inquiry, Trump averaged 18 tweets per day. In the two weeks following the launch, that doubled: On average, Trump was tweeting three dozen times a day. ... Staring down impeachment, Trump has seemed to play the role of the nation's Shakespearean monarch. At a rally Thursday night in Minneapolis, Trump boasted about his own fortitude in surviving so many scandals." The Post says "victimization has long been central to Trump's political identity." But his "feelings of oppression and persecution have been especially pronounced during the impeachment crisis."

GOP To Launch Anti-Impeachment Ad Campaign In 31 Democratic House Districts.

McClatchy (10/14, Lightman, 19K) reported yesterday that "Republicans are planning to target Democrats in swing districts with a new round of ads on impeachment this week as lawmakers return from their fall recess." The RNC "will spend $350,000 on a multi-media buy as part of a strategy that includes digital ads, text messages and phone calls starting Tuesday calling on Democratic House members to 'stop the madness.'" McClatchy adds "the effort is primarily targeted at the 31 Democrats in districts President Donald Trump carried in 2016. ... Earlier this month, the party spent about $2 million targeting Democrats, calling for an end to the 'endless investigations' of Trump."

Parscale: Impeachment Push A "Seditious Conspiracy."

On its website, the Washington Post (10/14, Wagner, Shammass, 14.2M) reported "President Trump's reelection campaign manager Brad Parscale on Monday branded the Democrat-led impeachment inquiry a 'seditious conspiracy' and called for the resignation of House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) as another witness testified behind closed doors." The Post adds "Parscale's comments came as House investigators heard from Fiona Hill, the White House's former top Russia adviser."

Trump: Fox News Impeachment Poll "Turned Out To Be Incorrect."

President Trump tweeted Monday afternoon, "The Fox Impeachment poll has turned out to be incorrect. This was announced on Friday. Despite this, the Corrupt New York Times used this poll in one of its stories, no mention of the correction which they knew about full well! 'Fox News Pollster Braun Research Misrepresented Impeachment Poll: Analysis' @NYPost". The tweet was referring to a weekend New York Post report.

WPost Analysis: Sondland Believed Delivering For Trump In Ukraine Would Help Career.

A nearly 3,500-word story in the Washington Post (10/14, Davis, Dawsey, Lee, Birnbaum, 14.2M) reports on US Ambassador to the European Union Gordon Sondland's pursuit of an ambassadorship. While Sondland once said then-candidate Trump "was out of touch with his 'personal beliefs and values on so many levels,'" he "contributed $1 million to Trump's inaugural. And he began calling in political favors...to convince Trump that he could be a team player." The Post says the "lengths to which Sondland would go to impress Trump...have made him a central figure in the congressional impeachment inquiry." The Post cites "current and former U.S. officials and foreign diplomats" who say "Sondland seemed to believe that if he delivered for Trump in Ukraine he could ascend in the ranks of government. A person close to Sondland disputed that notion, but other officials said Sondland had been talked about in the administration as a possible successor to Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross."

Gowdy Not Expected To Join Trump's Legal Team.

The Daily Caller (10/14, Davis, 716K) reports that while President Trump "was thought to have secured [former Rep. Trey] Gowdy's services to help him through the impeachment process," a "New York Times report published Sunday said the arrangement has fallen through." The Times reported, "Now, according to two people familiar with events, Mr. Gowdy is never expected to join the team. And Trump advisers are back to square one, searching for a different lawyer."

Fusion GPS Co-Founders To Defend Steele Dossier In New Book.

The Daily Caller (10/14, Ross, 716K) reports that Fusion GPS co-founders Glenn Simpson and Peter Fritsch are set to publish a book in which they "will defend their work on the infamous Steele dossier." Simpson and Fritsch "will lay out the dirt they gathered on President Donald Trump's alleged links to Russia, and describe their work with Christopher Steele, the former British spy who authored the anti-Trump dossier." The book description on Amazon.com reads, "The never-before-told inside story of the high-stakes, four-year-long investigation into Donald Trump's Russia ties – culminating in the Steele dossier, and sparking the Mueller report – from the founders of political opposition research company Fusion GPS." The book "will hit shelves on Nov. 26."

NYTimes Analysis: Impeachment Probe Different Than Kavanaugh Confirmation Fight.

In an analysis, the New York Times (10/14, Peters, 18.61M) reports that the President's "most relentless defenders" are comparing the impeachment inquiry "to Justice Brett M. Kavanaugh's heated confirmation last fall, which was nearly derailed by allegations of sexual assault." The comparison "may prove useful for Republicans who want to cast the impeachment inquiry as yet another partisan character assassination – and one that will similarly fail." However, the Times says "the two events are, by nature, very different battles." The Times adds that "the White House's response to impeachment has concerned many Republicans, who view it as lacking focus, urgency and coordination," which "suggests that the president and his allies could find it challenging to rally the same kind of unified support that helped them overcome the Democratic opposition to Justice Kavanaugh." In addition, impeachment "will likely serve as a referendum on Mr. Trump's presidency, especially as it centers on allegations from earlier this year – not three decades ago."

Taibbi: Impeachment Would Give Intel Community Veto Power Over Elections.

Breitbart (10/14, Caplan, 673K) reports that in his newsletter, Rolling Stone contributing editor Matt Taibbi "reframes the House Democrats' impeachment inquiry – and its latest development in the arrest of two associates of Rudy Giuliani – as a 'permanent coup' against President Trump playing out more slowly than coups he has experienced firsthand in other nations." Taibbi writes, "The Trump presidency is the first to reveal a full-blown schism between the intelligence community and the White House. ... I don't believe most Americans have thought through what a successful campaign to oust Donald Trump would look like. ... The real problem would be the precedent of a de facto intelligence community veto over elections, using the lunatic spookworld brand of politics that has dominated the last three years of anti-Trump agitation."

White House Says Trump "Strongly Condemns" Violent Parody Video.

The AP (10/14, Colvin) reports the White House says President Trump "has yet to watch a graphically violent parody video that depicts a likeness of him shooting and stabbing opponents and members of the news media, but based on what he's heard, he 'strongly condemns' it." The video "was shown at a meeting of Trump supporters at his Miami resort." White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham tweeted Monday morning, "Re: the video played over the weekend: The @POTUS @realDonaldTrump has not yet seen the video, he will see it shortly, but based upon everything he has heard, he strongly condemns this video."

USA Today (10/14, Santucci, 10.31M) reports the video, which "includes the logo for Trump's 2020 reelection campaign," is of an edited scene from the film "Kingsman: The Secret Service." Trump "as the face of Colin Firth's character enters a 'Church of Fake News' and opens fire on members of the congregation. The churchgoers have various news organizations' logos or the faces of Democratic lawmakers and other critics superimposed onto their bodies." The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Lucey, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Trump campaign spokesman Tim Murtaugh said in a statement that the "video was not produced by the campaign and we do not condone violence."

NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 5, 1:38, Jackson, 6.4M) reported, "It's a video so violent, we can only show a few seconds of it. ... In a graphic scene," Trump "shoots, stabs, and bludgeons, and in one instance lights on fire depictions of his political opponents, like Bernie Sanders and Hillary Clinton, and news organizations like the Washington Post and NBC News." NBC added "the Trump campaign says it did not produce the video, which appears to be based off the movie 'Kingsmen, The Secret Service.'" Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) was shown saying, "It puts lives at risk. It's not who we are as people." Rep. Rodney Davis (D-IL) said, meanwhile, "I think it's a tragedy. I think it should be denounced by the Administration." Trump "has not publicly denounced the clip, despite tweeting more than two dozen times today, including about 'Dancing With The Stars.'"

The Washington Post (10/14, Chiu, 14.2M) reports the video "appeared to be shared to YouTube in 2018 on a channel that posts similar pro-Trump content and has been linked to a meme-maker associated with a website called MemeWorld. The site's creator, a user known by his Internet handle, Carpe Donkum, scored an Oval Office meeting in July with Trump, who reportedly welcomed him as a 'genius.'" The New York Times (10/14, Sullivan, 18.61M) reports event organizer American Priority "said was part of a 'meme exhibit.' The group said the video was not 'approved, seen or sanctioned' by the conference organizers, and it criticized The Times for focusing on the video and not on any of the other events, 'including our panel conversation LITERALLY condemning political violence.'" Axios (10/14, Axios, 521K), the Washington Times (10/14, Boyer, 492K) and New York Post (10/14, Moore, 4.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

WPost Accuses Trump Of Not Issuing "Forceful Denunciation" Of Video. The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorializes that the video depicted Trump "as a mass killer systemically executing members of the news media and his political opponents," and that the President "set the tone for it with language and ideology that encourages hate, disrespect and violence." To the Post, "it is sad but unsurprising that Mr. Trump has issued no rebuke to his supporters and no forceful denunciation of the video itself."

Trump Retweets Cisco Systems CEO's Interview On 5G.

President Trump retweeted a tweet from Fox Business' Maria Bartiromo in which she linked to her interview with Cisco Systems CEO Chuck Robbins on how 5G networks could be active in the US within two to three years.

Talks Continue Between GM, UAW.

The Detroit News (10/14, Thibodeau, Noble, Hall, Howes, 825K) reports "the United Automobile Workers union strike against General Motors Co. entered its 29th day Monday" as "the UAW approved a 10% increase in pay for the 46,000 GM-UAW members out on strike." The UAW has "submitted another counter proposal to GM, which was under review." UAW Vice President Terry Dittes "said the parties would have a tentative agreement if GM accepted it."

The Detroit Free Press (10/14, LaReau, 1.52M) reports that "the UAW has sent a letter to its National General Motors Council summoning union local officers to Detroit on Thursday for a morning meeting at the Marriott downtown," but "a source close to the talks said the parties do not yet have a tentative agreement." According to the article, "the meeting is being billed as an update for the 175 council members on the status of the negotiations." Labor experts says that "the summons at this point in negotiations is highly unusual, but something to take seriously."

Stocks Down Slightly Monday.

Reuters (10/14, Mikolajczak) reports stocks "edged lower on Monday as uncertainties following recent U.S.-China trade negotiations clouded sentiment and investors turned their focus on the third-quarter earnings season, which begins in earnest on Tuesday." Bloomberg (10/13, 4.73M) reports the Dow Jones Industrial Average closed down 29.23 at 26,787.36, while the S&P 500 was down 4.12 to 2,966.15, and the Nasdaq down 8.39 to 8,048.65.

Harley-Davidson Temporarily Stops Electric Motorcycle Production Over Charging Issue.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Tita, Hufford, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Harley-Davidson has stopped manufacturing and shipping its first electric motorcycle, LiveWire, after it discovered a problem related to the vehicle's charging equipment. The company is conducting tests to investigate the issue, but didn't say when it would restart production.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (10/14, Taschler, 632K) reports that "the LiveWire is a piece of Harley-Davidson's overall strategy to attract younger motorcycle riders to its brand and replace aging riders who have helped sustain the brand for a generation." However, "the size of that market remains a question." Harley-Davidson has also been "adding smaller and medium-size bikes to its lineup to try to match up with the changing demographics."

Dam Disaster In Brazil Raises Alarms In US.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, MacDonald, Maher, Mackrael, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a disaster earlier this year in Brazil that involved a dam bursting has raised alarms in the US, where the construction of that type of dam is still allowed, although it is banned in many other parts of the developed world. In Minnesota, a court has suspended permits for the new PolyMet mine, halting construction until it can be advised on an evaluation of the Brazil dam failure. The US Mine Safety and Health Administration said it has met with Brazil's National Mining Agency to discuss the Brazil disaster. A spokeswoman said, "Once the cause of the dam collapse is determined, MSHA will evaluate the findings and how they relate to practices in the United States."

Uber Lays Off 350 In Latest Round Of Cuts.

The New York Times (10/14, Conger, 18.61M) reports, "Uber laid off 350 employees on Monday, in the latest indication that the ride-hailing company is trying to respond to concerns among investors that it is losing too much money." Since July, Uber has "cut more than 1,000 jobs, more than 2 percent of its work force." Monday's cuts, "the third round in recent months, were focused in the autonomous vehicle unit, operations, recruiting and customer support, an Uber spokesman said."

Documents Show Uber Challenging Characterization Of Employment Status Of Drivers. The Washington Post (10/14, Bensinger, 14.2M) reports that "documents and a 2017 deposition related to an Atlanta civil suit, Jessicka Harris v. Uber, viewed by The Washington Post offer a rare glimpse at Uber's strategies for using drivers' status as independent contractors as a legal shield." During the course of a deposition, an Uber executive repeatedly refused to use the term "drivers," instead insisting on calling them "independent, third-party transportation providers." According to the article, "at stake for Uber in its many court battles is the potential for millions in new liabilities if its contract drivers are reclassified as employees, and the company is found to bear greater responsibility for their actions."

Barney's Nearing Sale To Authentic Brands.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Kapner, Chung, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Authentic Brands Group LLC has made a nearly $270 million offer to acquire bankrupt retailer Barneys New York Inc. Under the deal, Authentic Brands would license the Barneys brand to Saks Fifth Avenue, which would operate Barneys.com and create a Barneys store within Saks.

Boeing's New Chairman Said To Have Experience To Pull Company Out Of MAX Crisis.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Tangel, Sider, Gottfried, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Boeing's new chairman David Calhoun has dealt with major corporate crises throughout his career, offering some reassurances to officials at Boeing's customers concerned about the 737 MAX grounding. Business leaders who have worked with Calhoun say his experience and temperament will help Boeing overcome its challenges.

Big Meat Companies Play Catch-up With Plant-Based Meat Alternatives.

The New York Times (10/14, Yaffe-Bellany, 18.61M) reports that after plant-based meat startups introduced “vegetarian food that looks and tastes like meat,” gaining a following with consumers, “a new group of companies has started making meatless meat: the food conglomerates and meat producers that Beyond Meat and Impossible Foods originally set out to disrupt.” In recent months, the article says, “major food companies like Tyson, Smithfield, Perdue, Hormel and Nestlé have rolled out their own meat alternatives, filling supermarket shelves with plant-based burgers, meatballs and chicken nuggets.” According to the Times, “the emergence of these meat companies in the plant-based-protein market has also prompted suspicion and unease among some environmental activists, who worry the companies could co-opt the movement by absorbing smaller start-ups, or simply use plant-based burgers to draw attention away from other environmental misdeeds.”

House Panel, Massachusetts AG Probing Role Of Bots In E-Cigarette Messaging.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, McKinnon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the House Energy and Commerce Committee and Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey are investigating whether social media messages about e-cigarettes posted by bots have been misleading consumers. Japan Tobacco International USA, Juul Labs, and Reynolds American all say they do not use bots in their marketing.

Despite Falling Interest Rates, Lenders Increase Credit Card Rates.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, A1, Andriotis, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that despite falling interest rates, lenders are charging record-high rates on credit cards. Banks have seen their profitability decline from users taking advantage of card rewards programs, so to help offset the hit, banks are charging more for cardholders to borrow.

Johnson & Johnson Facing Many Lawsuits Over Product Safety And Marketing.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, A1, Loftus, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that Johnson & Johnson is facing litigation from more than 100,000 people over the safety and marketing of its products, including opioids, Risperdal (risperidone), baby powder, and others. The article says that the company has been taking many of the cases to court, but has lost many times, sometimes with huge verdicts.

Three US-Based Scholars Win Nobel Economics Prize For Poverty Research.

The AP (10/14, Wiseman) reports, “Two researchers from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a third from Harvard University won the 2019 Nobel Prize in economics on Monday for groundbreaking research into what works and what doesn’t in the fight to reduce global poverty.” MIT’s Abhijit Banerjee and Esther Duflo, and Harvard’s Michael Kremer, were honored. The three winners, “who have worked together, revolutionized developmental economics by pioneering field experiments that generate practical insights into how poor people respond to education, health care and other programs meant to lift them out of poverty.”

The New York Times (10/14, Smialek, 18.61M) reports that they “study problems like education deficiencies and child health scientifically. They break issues into smaller questions, search for evidence about which interventions work to resolve them, and seek practical ways to bring those treatments to scale. ... More than five million Indian children have benefited from effective remedial tutoring thanks to one of their studies,” the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said in announcing the award. The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Hannon, Chopping, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says this marks the second time in five years that the economics prize has been awarded for work in developmental economics.

Confidential Documents Detail How Deutsche Bank Won Business In China.

The New York Times (10/14, Forsythe, Enrich, Stevenson, 18.61M) reports that Deutsche Bank was able to “become a major player in China” through “a brazen campaign to win business...by charming and enriching the country’s political elite,” confidential documents obtained by the German newspaper Süddeutsche Zeitung show. The documents show that the bank’s “troubling behavior in China was far more extensive than the authorities in the United States have publicly alleged. And they show that the bank’s top leadership was warned about the activity but did not stop it.”

Fort Worth Police Officer Resigns After Killing Black Woman In Her Home.

The AP (10/14, Bleiberg) reports, “A white Fort Worth police officer who shot and killed a black woman in her home while responding to a call about an open front door acted inappropriately and resigned before he could be fired,” Police Chief Ed Kraus said Monday. Atatiana Jefferson “was killed in front her of 8-year-old nephew, cut down by a bullet fired through her window early Saturday. Police bodycam video showed that Aaron Dean did not identify himself as an officer and fired a split-second after shouting at the woman to show her hands.”

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram (10/14, Mitchell, 406K) reports Kraus “said a criminal investigation is ongoing and he expects to release an update by Tuesday. The FBI also has been briefed to investigate possible civil rights violations, he said.” Reuters (10/14) reports Kraus told reporters, “Had the officer not resigned, I would have fired him for violations of several policies including our use of force policy, our de-escalation policy and unprofessional conduct.” The CBS Evening News ’s (10/14, story 3, 1:51, O’Donnell, 4.29M) Omar Villafranca reported that Dean “could still face criminal charges.” ABC World News Tonight ’s (10/14, story 3, 2:39, Muir, 6.92M) Marcus Moore reported that Dean is "not cooperating with their investigation."

NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 2, 1:53, Holt, 6.4M) Gabe Gutierrez reported Mayor Betsy Price has "apologized" and "also said the picture police released of this gun found inside the home is irrelevant."

USA Today (10/14, Bacon, 10.31M) reports, "Hours before Kraus spoke Monday, family members held a news conference demanding that the officer be fired and criminally charged. Ashley Carr said her sister was killed by the officer's 'reckless act,' and the federal government should take over the investigation." Jefferson's brother Adarius Carr said, "This man murdered someone. He should be arrested."

The New York Times (10/14, Martinez, Bogel-Burroughs, Mervosh, 18.61M) reports, "Jefferson had been up late playing Xbox with her 8-year-old nephew, who was still in the room when she was shot. ... Two police officers drove to her home after her neighbor called a nonemergency line at 2:23 a.m. Saturday and asked for officers to check on the house because its front and side doors had been open for several hours."

Robinson: Racism Behind Police Shootings. In his column for the Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M), Eugene Robinson asks, "What can a black person do to keep from getting killed by police in this country?" Robinson recounts the individuals who have been shot while "driving-while-black," "running-away-while-black," "walking-while-black," "standing-while-black," and now, "staying-home-while-black." He writes that "far too often, police officers approach situations involving African Americans with racist assumptions." Robinson concludes that "until police departments banish those attitudes, until officers' default assumption is that black Americans are not suspects but citizens, more innocents like Atatiana Jefferson will die."

WPost: Nothing About Forth Worth Shooting Makes Sense Except Race. The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorializes that "nothing computes" about Atatiana Jefferson's "killing except for one thing: She was black, and the officer who killed her, Aaron Dean, was white. And that is an all-too familiar equation." The Post asserts that "innocent African American civilians are gunned down by white police so frequently that it would be willful blindness to deny a pattern."

Cities Urged To Require Independent Investigations Of Police-Involved Deaths. Will Jawando (D), an at-large member of the Montgomery County Council, writes in the Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) that the Montgomery County Council "passed a law that I wrote requiring an independent investigation and full public report in the case of any police-involved death. Fort Worth has no such law. Instead, the mayor of Fort Worth is having the police department conduct the investigation. This risks greatly damaging public trust and obscuring a real understanding of what the officer's motivations were when he fired his weapon — an outcome that would serve neither the police nor the public."

Rise In Violence Worries DC Officials.

The Washington Post (10/14, Hermann, Stein, 14.2M) reports that a high school student died Saturday after being stabbed aboard a Metro train, "the 10th person between the ages of 11 and 17 killed in the District this year." Jaquar McNair's "death came during a week-long surge of violence that has worried city leaders."

Maryland Police Officer Dies After Being Shot.

The Washington Post (10/14, Bui, Duggan, Morse, 14.2M) reports, "An on-duty Montgomery County police officer suffered a fatal gunshot wound Monday in downtown Silver Spring, but the circumstances of the incident remained unclear, authorities said." Acting Montgomery Police Chief Marcus Jones "identified the officer as Thomas J. Bomba, 38, a member of the force for 13 years." He said, "We are treating this as a homicide ... until we have information to suggest otherwise."

California Pushes Back Start Times For Middle, High Schools.

The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 10, 0:19, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reported, "California is now the first state in the country to push back the start of the school day." Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) has "signed a new law that will block the opening bell ringing before 8:00 at public middle schools and 8:30 at high schools." He "pointed to research that shows teenagers benefit from later start times."

Conservative Leaders Push Trump To Pick Cuccinelli To Lead DHS.

The Daily Caller (10/14, Hopkins, 716K) reports, "A group of prominent conservative leaders have signed on to a letter strongly endorsing Ken Cuccinelli to be the next leader of the Department of Homeland Security." A statement released Monday by the Conservative Partnership Institute said, "As acting head of the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS), Cuccinelli has proven himself exceptionally capable of executing the president's agenda on complex and sensitive issues." The letter included the names of more than of "political activists, operatives, former lawmakers, CEOs, and other big names in the conservative sphere."

NYTimes Analysis: Studies Suggest Immigration Can Help Revive Urban Areas.

In an analysis for "The Upshot" of the New York Times (10/14, 18.61M), Emily Badger and Quoctrung Bui write, "President Trump has turned repeatedly throughout his tenure and his re-election campaign to two targets: immigrants whom he has described as 'invading' the country, and American cities he has called out of control." However, "the president's two oft-cited problems have historically been solutions to each other." Studies suggest that "immigration can help address the problems of urban crime and decay that the president has lamented in cities like Chicago and Baltimore." Badger and Bui say that "the president's immigration policies — rooted in the belief that America has run out of room for even legal migrants — threatens the cycle of how cities rejuvenate themselves."

Officials In Washington State Spurn ICE Despite Second Sanctuary City-related Killing.

The Washington Times (10/14, Dinan, 492K) reports, "Prosecutors last week announced a second sanctuary city-related murder case involving an illegal immigrant in the Seattle area, but that has yet to shake local officials who despite the brutality of the slayings say they are not yet ready to begin working with ICE." According to the article, "the latest homicide was particularly vicious, with police saying Carlos Orlando Iraheta-Vega, an MS-13 gang member, bashed his 16-year-old friend's head with a baseball bat." Immigration and Customs Enforcement "says if local authorities had cooperated with them, Mr. Iraheta-Vega — who goes by the name nickname 'Joker' — could have been deported long ago, after an arrest last November." However, "King County refused to notify ICE that Mr. Iraheta-Vega was being released from jail, and instead freed him into the community."

California Expands Rights And Protections Afforded To Immigrants.

The Los Angeles Times (10/14, Willon, 4.64M) reports, "California lawmakers continued the state's expansion of rights and protections this year for immigrants who enter the country illegally, with laws signed by Gov. Gavin Newsom allowing them to serve on government boards and commissions and banning arrests for immigration violations in courthouses across the state." The legislation also "expands California's college student loan program for so-called Dreamers, young immigrants brought to the country illegally as children, to include students seeking graduate degrees at the University of California and California State University schools." The new laws take effect January 1.

Fourteen Police Officers Killed In Ambush In Mexico.

The Washington Post (10/14, Sieff, Martinez, 14.2M) reports, "At least 14 police officers were killed in an ambush in the western Mexican state of Michoacan on Monday, a reflection of the intensifying violence between security forces and criminal groups in one of the country's most volatile regions." Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador "ran for office on promises to address the root causes of organized crime, a strategy he has called 'abrazos, no balazos' — hugs, not bullets." However, "Monday's attack cast more doubt on the effectiveness of his approach." López Obrador "pushed for the creation of a National Guard, aimed at strengthening security in cities with weak local police," but "many have been dispatched to Mexico's southern and northern borders to deter migration to the United States, part of a bilateral plan with the Trump administration."

Trump Urges "Dancing With The Stars" Votes For Spicer.

The AP (10/14, Press) reports President Trump "is trying to influence votes on ABC's 'Dancing with the Stars.' Trump on Monday tweeted that viewers should vote for former White House press secretary Sean Spicer. The president called Spicer a 'good guy' and wrote 'he has always been there for us!'" In response, the former White House Press Secretary tweeted yesterday, "Thank you @POTUS @realDonaldTrump Appreciate all the votes on @DancingABC tonight. Only votes between 8-10pm ET count. Everyone has 20 votes. Text SEAN 10 times to 21523 and vote 10 more at <http://abc.com> #teamsweetnspicey #DWTS #dwts28."

The Los Angeles Times (10/14, Carras, 4.64M) indicates, however, that "Spicer actually exited Trump's staff less than a year into his term amid reports that the president was unhappy with his communications team." At the White House, adds the Times, "Spicer developed a reputation for spinning facts and picking fights with reporters."

Nunberg: Trump Wanted To Release Tax Returns In 2014 To Tout How Little He Paid.

CNN (10/14, Ward, 83.16M) reports that while President Trump is fighting to keep his tax returns private, that effort "is at odds with his own thinking in 2013 and 2014 that releasing them as part of a presidential bid would make him look like a smart businessman who had spent years lowering his taxable income, according to two people with firsthand knowledge of conversations at the time." Former Trump political adviser Sam Nunberg "tells CNN that during a meeting he had with Trump in the summer of 2013 at Trump Tower, the future president said he was comfortable releasing his tax returns and, even, that he thought it would be a good idea." Nunberg "says he convinced Trump to change tack, and told him that federal election rules obliged him to release only a broad financial statement, rather than his full tax returns. Trump liked the idea because he could show how rich he was, says Nunberg."

West Virginia Lawyer Leading National Opioid Civil Litigation Highlighted.

The Washington Post (10/14, Achenbach, 14.2M) provides coverage of small town West Virginia lawyer Paul Farrell, Jr, who is serving as "one of three lead attorneys in the national prescription opioid litigation, the biggest and most complicated civil case in U.S. history." The suit's "plaintiffs argue that the nation's biggest drug companies — manufacturers, distributors and retailers — recklessly peddled opioid painkillers and fueled a wave of addiction." The piece suggests that "the public nuisance strategy he helped craft has the advantage of requiring abatement — meaning the drug companies could be required to pour billions of dollars into communities across the nation that have been devastated by the epidemic." The West Virginia lawyer "represents hundreds of municipalities, having aggressively signed up clients, including Cabell County, of which Huntington is the county seat." Also, Farrell "and the other plaintiffs' attorneys are working on a contingency fee basis, meaning they don't get paid anything if they lose in court."

Woman Granted Clemency For Murder Interviewed.

On NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 7, 3:54, Holt, 5.87M), Lester Holt interviewed Cyntoia Brown Long, "a woman convicted of murder as a teenager and sentenced to life," who was "granted clemency" after fifteen years by "then-Tennessee Governor Bill Haslam." Long spoke about "the groundswell of celebrity support that led to her recent release from prison." Long said, "I feel like it's an honor to actually be a picture of what rehabilitation looks like, of what it looks like when we do give people a second chance."

USA Today Analysis: Pompeo Speech On State's Site Raises Concerns Over Church-State Separation.

USA Today (10/14, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports that the State Department website is promoting a speech Secretary of State Pompeo delivered at the America Association of Church Counselors last week about "Being a Christian Leader." The use of the website to promote the speech "has been met with criticism that it potentially violates the principle of separation of church and state enshrined in the Establishment Clause of the Constitution." Pompeo "touts Christianity throughout the remarks, describing how he applies his faith to his government work, referencing God and the Bible during the entirety of the speech."

McGurn Criticizes Reaction To Barr's Speech At Notre Dame Law. William McGurn writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that critics' reaction to Attorney General Barr's speech last week at Notre Dame's law school, in which he lamented the decline of religion's influence in American life, shows the degree to which secularists will seek to disparage and undermine anyone who disagrees with them.

WSJournal Analysis: Congress Faces Many Tough Issues In Months Ahead.

Under the headline "Congress Returns To Work With Impeachment, Turkey Crowding Legislative Agenda," the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Duehren, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) looks at the House agenda over the next few months, reporting that those two major issues and the onset of the 2020 presidential campaign are adding stress as Congress struggles to reach a funding agreement before the government runs out of funds in November, and as issues like trade and border control continue to be divisive.

Trump Thanks Reid For His Comments On Reelection Chances.

President Trump tweeted Monday morning, "Former Democrat Senator Harry Reid just stated that Donald Trump is very smart, much more popular than people think, is underestimated, and will be hard to beat in the 2020 Election. Thank you Harry, I agree!"

Trump To Attend Chicago Fundraiser Hosted By Cubs Co-Owner.

The Chicago Tribune (10/14, Pearson, Donovan, 2.65M) reports that when President Trump visits Chicago later this month, he will attend "a fundraiser hosted by Chicago Cubs co-owner Todd Ricketts and Republican National Committee Chair Ronna McDaniel." According to an invitation to the Oct. 28 event, there are "three different levels of donations ranging from $2,800 for a lunch ticket, $35,000 per couple donated or raised to earn a photo with the president and $100,000 raised for an exclusive roundtable sit-down with Trump." The Tribune adds that "a source close to the Trump campaign and the Illinois GOP said the event tentatively has been planned for Trump Tower in downtown Chicago."

Supporters Worry Biden Will Lack Resources To Take On Trump.

Reuters (10/14, Oliphant, Hunnicutt) reports former Vice President Biden "is the only Democrat currently fighting a two-front war: one against the other contenders seeking his party's nomination and a second, more brutal one against Republican President Donald Trump." Some of Biden's top supporters worry he "will lack the resources he needs for a sustained conflict." Biden fundraiser John Morgan said that when it comes to battling Trump, Biden is bringing "a knife to a gunfight." Biden, he added, "doesn't need a gun. He needs a bazooka." With "fundraising of $15 million in the year's third quarter," Biden "is facing a juggernaut in the Trump campaign, which had raised $125 million along with the Republican National Committee in the same period." In addition, Biden's fundraising "trails his leading Democratic rivals, U.S. Senators Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders, each of whom raised around $25 million last quarter."

Scaramucci Trying To Recruit Romney For GOP Presidential Run.

The Week (10/14, Krawczyk, 1.94M) reports former White House Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci "has launched a website and line of T-shirts" aimed at persuading Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) to challenge President Trump for the GOP nomination in 2020. Scaramucci told ABC he "has seen an 'overwhelming' response."

Steyer: GOP Victory In 2020 Could Be "The End Of The World."

The Washington Free Beacon (10/14, Matamoros, 78K) reports Democratic presidential candidate Tom Steyer told the Ohio Democratic Party's 2019 State Dinner that a Republican victory in 2020 could mean "the end of the world." Steyer said, "We are in the fight of our lives..."

Everything is on the table in 2020. They think so too, because they think if they lose in 2020 the rules are going to be fair and they're never going to win again. And they're right. If we win in 2020, they're done forever. But it's scary for us, too, because if they win, literally it could be the end of the world."

Facebook's Zuckerberg Reaching Out To Conservative Media.

Politico (10/14, Bertrand, Lippman, 4.29M) reports Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg "has been hosting informal talks and small, off-the-record dinners with conservative journalists, commentators and at least one Republican lawmaker in recent months to discuss issues like free speech and discuss partnerships." Politico calls the dinners, which began in July, "part of Zuckerberg's broader effort to cultivate friends on the right amid outrage" by President Trump and his allies "over alleged 'bias' against conservatives at Facebook and other major social media companies." Conservative media figures including Guy Benson, Brent Bozell, Matt Continetti, Mary Katharine Ham, Ben Shapiro, and Byron York have taken part in the dinners. Zuckerberg also met earlier this year with Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "who insinuated that Facebook had become a monopoly during a congressional hearing last year."

WSJournal: Warren Seeking To Suppress Her Opponents' Facebook Ads. The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues in an editorial that Sen. Elizabeth Warren's (D-MA) professed anger over Facebook's decision that it will not examine politicians' ads for false statements is a bid to suppress ads from her opponents.

PPP Poll Shows Tight General Election Race In Ohio.

A Public Policy Polling (D) survey of 776 Ohio voters, taken October 10-11, shows President Trump trailing a generic Democrat by one point, 48%-47%, in a general election matchup in the state. Trump trails ex-Vice President Joe Biden 48%-46%, is tied at 47% each with both Sens. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), and leads Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) and Mayor Pete Buttigieg by four points – 47%-43% – each.

AP Analysis: Democrats Struggling With New Republican Dominance In Ohio. The AP (10/14, Smyth) reports that as the Democrat presidential candidates prepare to debate in Ohio this week, "they're grappling with whether the new Republican dominance in those industrial and rural pockets has pushed Ohio out of their reach." Some "are contemplating once unheard-of White House victory scenarios that leave out Ohio." The AP adds that although "Ohio was long a bellwether because its population resembled that of the United States as a whole," it "no longer mirrors the nation. It's whiter and slightly older than the national average." Moreover, fewer Ohioans "have a college degree" than the national average, and the state's median household income is "below the national median. Republicans run stronger with those groups."

Ohio Focus Group Finds Swing Voters See Impeachment As A Distraction. Breitbart (10/14, Wong, 673K) reports that "nine out of 11 swing voters" who participated in a focus group in Ohio convened by Axios and Engagious/FPG last week "said impeachment is a distraction from the issues they care most about – wages and unemployment, border security, bringing troops home, and health care costs and access." According to an Axios report, the focus group showed that swing voters are "expressing a range of unease about impeaching President Trump." Those fears "range from impeaching hurting the economy to frustrations that House Democrats are most invested in going after Trump than in helping people." Participants said impeachment made them feel "concerned," "uneasy," "exhausted," "sad that they're [Democrats] so focused on it," and "a big distraction from what we could be doing."

Nussbaum: Undecided Ohio Voters Are Focused On "Bread-And-Butter Issues." In an op-ed for the New York Times (10/14, 18.61M), Karen Nussbaum, founding director of Working America, A.F.L.-C.I.O., that undecided voters in Ohio are "focused on solving the problems plaguing their families right now. Their lives are precarious, and most don't think anyone in politics has their back." Nussbaum writes that "when candidates focus on bread-and-butter issues, they are on the right track."

Nearly One In Five Names On Ohio Voter Purge List Should Not Have Been There. The New York Times (10/14, Casey, 18.61M) reports that Ohio has "some of the country's strictest voting laws," including a "'use-it-or-lose-it' provision that lets officials drop voters seen as inactive." Voting rights advocates argue that "parts of the state are regularly disenfranchised, largely in purges aimed at those who have died or moved away, but which also hit real voters." In a bid to answer those concerns, "a group of elected officials in the state, mostly all moderate Republicans, tried" an experiment under which the government, instead of "purg[ing] the voter rolls behind closed doors as had been done in the past...released the full list of those to be removed this summer, and gave the list to advocacy groups. The groups said they found the list was riddled with errors." In all, "around 40,000 people, nearly one in five names on the list, shouldn't have been on it, the state determined."

CNN Did Not Disclose Warren Questioner At LGBT Forum Was A Maxed-Out Donor.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/14, Griswold, 78K) reports that CNN "failed to disclose" that the questioner who prompted Sen. Elizabeth Warren's (D-MA) "zinger at an LGBT town hall" last week "donated the federal maximum to her 2018 Massachusetts Senate campaign." Morgan Cox, who Chris Cuomo introduced as "the chair of the Human Rights Campaign board of directors" who was part of "a real estate investment firm in Dallas, Texas," asked Warren what she would say if "a supporter approaches you and says, 'Senator, I'm old-fashioned and my faith teaches me that marriage is between one man and one woman.'" Warren said, "Well, I'm going to assume it's a guy who said that and I'm going to say, 'Then just marry one woman. I'm cool with that.' ... Assuming you can find one." According to FEC filings, Cox donated the legal maximum of $2,700 to Warren's Senate primary campaign in 2017, and her general election campaign in 2018.

Firehouse Strategies Polls: Warren Leads Leadoff States, Biden Ahead In South Carolina.

The Hill (10/14, Easley, 2.98M) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "leads former Vice President Joe Biden in Iowa and New Hampshire, but South Bend, Ind., Mayor Pete Buttigieg has surged into contention in the Hawkeye State, according to a new poll." The latest Firehouse Strategies-Optimus survey "finds Warren with a narrow lead in Iowa at 25 percent support, followed by Biden at 22 percent and Buttigieg at 17 percent." Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) is a distant fourth at 5%. Warren's lead "is larger in New Hampshire, where she registers 25 percent support, followed by Biden at 18 percent and Sanders at 9 percent. Still, Biden leads big in South Carolina, where black voters make up more than half of the Democratic primary electorate. Biden comes in at 32 percent, compared to 16 percent for Warren and 8 percent for Sanders."

Warren Leads Democrats With 30% In New Quinnipiac National Poll. Meanwhile, The Hill (10/14, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports in a separate story that a Quinnipiac University poll released Monday shows that Warren "leads pack of Democratic presidential hopefuls but remains only narrowly ahead" of Biden. According to the poll, Warren has "30 percent support among Democratic and Democratic-leaning voters nationally," while Biden "notched 27 percent support in the survey, still within its 5.3 percentage point margin of error." Sanders is "the only other candidate to register double-digit support in the poll," with 11 percent support. The Hill adds that Buttigieg, and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "rounded out the top five with 8 percent and 4 percent support, respectively."

Warren Stressing "Physical Stamina" On Campaign Trail.

The Los Angeles Times (10/14, Hook, 4.64M) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) has been taking steps to show that "her physical stamina belies her age...taking every opportunity to flaunt her fitness. In the now-famous selfie-photo lines that are the capstone of her campaign rallies, Warren stays on her feet for hours greeting voters individually. Opening her rallies, she typically jogs to the podium." All three of the frontrunners for the Democratic presidential nomination are in their 70s, and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) was briefly sidelined due to a heart attack.

NYTimes Analysis: Warren Has Few Endorsements From Democratic Leaders. The New York Times (10/14, Martin, 18.61M) looks at Warren's relative dearth of endorsements by Democratic leaders, writing that "she lacks the support of a single governor, big-city mayor or fellow senator outside Massachusetts." While Warren "is expected to reveal additional support from Democratic officials this week" in conjunction with Tuesday's debate "and the release of her smashing third-quarter financial disclosure," the party establishment has been slow to get behind her. Ex-Sen. Heidi Heitkamp (D-ND) said, "People are concerned about Joe [Biden], but they ask: Is Elizabeth electable? So a lot of people are just keeping their powder dry because they have not decided who can best run against Trump."

Castro Releases List Of Endorsements.

Politico (10/14, McCaskill, 4.29M) reports, "In a bid to make a splash before Tuesday's primary debate," ex-HUD Secretary Julián Castro's presidential campaign "rolled out dozens of endorsements Monday from current and former state and local elected officials, activists, community leaders, party leaders and Latino leaders." Though "only two members of Congress have endorsed Castro for president" – and one of them is his brother Rep. Joaquin Castro (D-TX) – "the latest slate of endorsements includes support from current and former officials from Arizona, New Mexico, Minnesota, Texas and California, and Latino leaders from the Clinton and Obama White Houses and administrations, Nebraska, California, Minnesota and Florida."

Gabbard Says She Will Participate In Tuesday Debate.

The New York Times (10/14, Lerer, 18.61M) reports Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-HI) said Monday that she will participate in Tuesday's Democratic presidential debate "after raising the possibility of boycotting it to protest what she sees as a 'rigging' of the election." Gabbard "had argued that the corporate news media and Democratic National Committee were working together to influence the event."

Associates Say Bloomberg Could Still Enter Presidential Race If Biden Falters.

CNBC (10/14, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports on its website that former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg "might end up running for president, after all." Bloomberg "has indicated to associates in recent weeks that Joe Biden's recent struggles against Sen. Elizabeth Warren are making him rethink his decision to stay out of the 2020 Democratic primary. That's according to people familiar with the discussions who spoke on condition of anonymity." Bloomberg "has signaled he's 'still looking at' running for president, but people close to him say that the only way he could even go down that path is if Biden's fortunes suffer so much that he drops out before or during the early stages of the primary." Last year, Bloomberg said that if he ran, it would be as a Democrat.

Edwards Poll Shows Him With Wide Lead In Louisiana Gubernatorial Race.

The Monroe (LA) News Star (10/14, Hilburn, 64K) reports the campaign of Louisiana Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) "has released an internal poll showing Edwards with a wide lead over Republican Eddie Rispone in an effort to dispel some sentiment the governor faces an uphill battle to win the Nov. 16 runoff election. The survey conducted by ALG Research shows Edwards leading with 52% compared to Rispone at 36%."

Plame Raised Nearly $447K In Q3 For NM3 Race.

The Hill (10/14, Frazin, 2.98M) reports ex-CIA operative Valerie Plame raised $446,749 for her Democratic bid in the open-seat NM3 race, "nearly double her total from the previous filing period. ... The campaign has raised a total of more than $683,000 since Plame announced she was running for Congress in May."

Hunter Seeks Local GOP Endorsement.

The AP (10/14) reports that Rep. Duncan Hunter (R-CA) "is scheduled to appear at a Republican forum in San Diego to seek the endorsement of the local GOP for another term." To get the endorsement, Hunter who is under indictment for "using campaign funds for personal expenses," will "need to overcome challenges from several rival Republicans, including former Rep. Darrell Issa and radio personality Carl DeMaio."

Farrow Book Says National Enquirer Shredded Trump-Related Documents In 2016.

Politico (10/14, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that Ronan Farrow writes in his new book "Catch and Kill: Lies, Spies, and a Conspiracy to Protect Predators" that American Media, Inc. and the National Enquirer "shredded sensitive Donald Trump-related documents that had been held in a top-secret safe right before Trump was elected in 2016." The book alleges that in the first week of November 2016, "Dylan Howard, who was then editor in chief of the National Enquirer, ordered a staff member to 'get everything out of the safe' and that 'we need to get a shredder down there.'"

Farrow: Weinstein Helped Clinton Hurt Sanders. Fox News (10/14, Wulfsohn, 27.59M) reports on its website that according to Farrow's book, "Hillary Clinton's 2016 campaign apparently accepted help from now-disgraced film mogul Harvey Weinstein to hurt rival Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt." Farrow "wrote that Weinstein, who'd been a major fundraiser and longtime donor for the Democrats, was part of the 'brain trust around Hillary Clinton.'" Farrow cited "an email exchange between the movie mogul and the Clinton campaign ahead of the election." Referring to "Sanders' outreach to Latino and African-American voters," Weinstein wrote, "I'm probably telling you what you know already, but that needs to be silenced."

Farrow Says MSNBC President Shared Revealing Image Of Menounos In Staff Meeting. Fox News (10/14, Wulfsohn, 27.59M) reports on its website that according to Farrow's book, MSNBC President Phil Griffin "shared a revealing image of TV personality Maria Menounos during a staff meeting." In his book, Farrow "alleged that four MSNBC colleagues said Griffin" was "known for making lewd and crass remarks in work emails," and in one instance, he "waved" a printed zoomed-in image of Menounos' vagina after a wardrobe malfunction she had while wearing a bikini."

NBC News Denies Farrow's Allegations. The New York Times (10/14, Hsu, 18.61M) reports that NBC News on Monday denied investigative journalist Ronan Farrow's allegations in his new book "Catch and Kill" that "the network tried to conceal complaints about the former 'Today' host Matt Lauer and obstruct Mr. Farrow's reporting into the film mogul Harvey Weinstein." In an "extensive memo" that was sent to NBC News and MSNBC employees, NBC News president Noah Oppenheim wrote, "We have no secrets and nothing to hide." Oppenheim described Farrow's reporting as a "smear" and a "conspiracy theory." Oppenheim wrote, "Farrow's effort to defame NBC News is clearly motivated not by a pursuit of truth, but an ax to grind. ... It is built on a series of distortions, confused timelines and outright inaccuracies."

Cameron: Good Journalists Losing Air Time To Opinion Makers At Fox News.

USA Today (10/14, Jensen, 10.31M) reports that former Fox News reporter Carl Cameron "is voicing his concerns after Shepard Smith shocked by announcing his departure Friday." Cameron told CNN's Reliable Sources Sunday, "There are an awful lot of really good journalists at Fox News Channel. It's just that they're vastly outnumbered by the opinion makers, and the opinion makers are more interested in playing to people's bias than anything else. ... And it makes it very difficult for journalists to actually give people honest facts when the air time is shrinking constantly." Cameron also said that if whoever fills Smith's time slot are "actually news journalists, then that'll be a good sign for the 3:00 hour." But "if it's not, if it's opinion mavens, then that'll be just another big chunk of real journalism that won't exist there."

PG&E Has Restored Power To All Of Its Customers.

The Washington Post (10/14, Wilson, 14.2M) reports that Pacific Gas & Electric, which was "behind last week's intentional power shut-off across Northern and Central California has restored electricity to all of its customers as shifts in weather have lessened the likelihood its equipment will spark wildfires." Power was shut down "in stages last week to nearly 1 million customers in a ring around the Bay Area, from wine country to near the Oregon border, and as far east as several Sierra Nevada counties." The Post says that although PG&E "says the outage might have prevented wildfires in several northern counties...it certainly caused millions of dollars in damage to closed businesses, generator-less households and others in places where the weather never lived up to the predicted conditions."

Author: Rural America Will Stand By Trump.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (10/14, 18.61M), author Robert Leonard writes that "many conservatives" in Iowa "think the 'loony libs' are the ones self-destructing." While "the state of Iowa might be in play in the 2020 election," he adds, "around here, conservative rural America isn't in play and may never be. It will stand by Mr. Trump and will likely never vote for a Democrat."

Three More States, DC Celebrated “Indigenous Peoples Day” Monday.

The AP (10/14, Contreras) reports the District of Columbia, Maine, New Mexico, and Vermont “celebrat[ed] their first Indigenous Peoples Day on Monday as part of a trend to move away from a day honoring Christopher Columbus. ... In all, around 10 states observe some version of Indigenous Peoples Day in October, along with more than 100 U.S. cities.” For his part, President Trump tweeted Monday morning, “Happy Columbus Day!”

WSJournal: Supreme Court Should Find Puerto Rico Oversight Board To Be Constitutional.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that the Supreme Court should find that a financial oversight board established by Congress to oversee Puerto Rico’s fiscal decisions does not violate the Constitution. The Court is being asked to consider whether the appointment of the board’s members must comply with the Constitution’s Appointments Clause. The Journal points to Congress’ plenary authority over territories and long-established precedent that constitutional safeguards such as the Appointments Clause do not apply to territories.

RCP Average Has Trump’s Job Approval At 43.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump’s job approval stands at 43.6%, and his disapproval at 53.5%. The President’s job approval is up 0.1 since yesterday; his disapproval is unchanged.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 “likely voters” (10/9-10/13) finds Trump’s approval at 49%, with 50% disapproving.

A Quinnipiac survey of 1,195 “registered voters” (10/11-10/13), meanwhile, has the President’s job approval at 41%, and his disapproval at 54%.

US Congress Members Push Trump To Keep Russia From Gaining Control Of Citgo.

The Houston Chronicle (10/11, Chapa, 730K) reports that seven members of US Congress, including Sen. Ted Cruz “are asking President Donald Trump to avoid a situation that could put the Houston refining company Citgo in Russian hands.” In 2016, Venezuela’s government used Citgo as collateral to collect a $1.5 billion loan from Russian oil firm Rosneft. Meanwhile, “PDVSA is supposed to make a $915 million bond payment on Oct. 28 but if the Venezuelan company defaults, Cruz and the others fear that could trigger a chain of events that could end with Rosneft owning 49.9 percent of Citgo.” Cruz was joined by “Louisiana Senators Bill Cassidy and John Kennedy; Florida Sen. Marco Rubio; Louisiana congressmen Clay Higgins and Ralph Abraham — and Texas Congresswoman Lizzie Fletcher, a Democrat whose West Houston district includes Citgo’s headquarters.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/11, Scurria, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the upcoming bond payment is an issue for Citgo and for the country’s opposition leaders, who risk losing control of Citgo if PDVSA is unable to make the bond payment.

Controversy Over Draghi’s Legacy Continues At ECB.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/14, Stirling, 4.73M) reports that former ECB President Jean-Claude Trichet “rejoined the fray in support of his successor” Mario Draghi, “extending weeks of controversy that have rocked the Frankfurt institution.” Meanwhile, in a separate paywalled report, Bloomberg (10/13, Groendahl, 4.73M) says several members of the ECB’s Governing Council “are against the ECB buying more bonds, the Austrian central bank Governor Robert Holzmann said.”

Swiss Bank Discovered To Be Venezuelans’ Corruption Payments Go-To Facilitator.

Bloomberg (10/15, Devereux, Smith, 4.73M) reports Geneva-based CBH Compagnie Bancaire Helvetique SA, “a family-owned bank that has grown eightfold since 2006,” has been discovered to be the only bank involved in money transfers involving bribery in Venezuela. Former Venezuelan Financial Crimes chief Zair Mundaray, said, “This is the go-to bank for Venezuelans to hide money. They all banked at CBH.” The report says US prosecutors “are looking into at least five Venezuelans who banked at CBH and are suspected of corruption, two people familiar with the probes said. The bank itself isn’t a target of those investigations, the people said.”

Russia Seeks Rouble Deals To Minimize Exposure To US Pressure.

Under the headline “Russia looks at alternatives to dollar for energy transactions,” The Financial Times (10/13, Seddon, Foy, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports Russian Economy Minister Maxim Oreshkin said in an interview that Russia seeks to reduce its exposure to US pressure by pursuing energy transactions in Russian roubles, rather than US dollars.

BOJ On Course To Shrink Its Bond Holdings For First Time In A Decade.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/14, 4.73M) reports, “The Bank of Japan is on course for a historic turning point that would see its bond holdings shrink next year for the first time in a decade, according to a Bloomberg News analysis.”

WTimes Analysis: Trump's Vow To Bring Troops Home Clashes With Saudi Troop Deployment.

The Washington Times (10/14, Wolfgang, Taylor, 492K) reports, "President Trump has stoked his political base by touting the withdrawal of more than 1,000 U.S. troops from Syria as keeping his 2016 campaign promise to end American involvement in foreign 'forever wars.'" But private analysts say "the Pentagon's near-simultaneous deployment of some 3,000 troops and advanced missiles to Saudi Arabia is likely to trigger an escalation with Iran that could undercut Mr. Trump's determination to get the U.S. military out Middle East entanglements." Administration officials claim that "the goal is to deter, not trigger, a wider clash with Iran." Brian Hook, a special representative for Iran, "said the strategy is to use harsh economic pressure and military assets to entice Iran into talks."

Putin Visiting Saudi Arabia. Reuters (10/14, Astakhova, Kalin) reports Russian President Vladimir Putin "signaled Moscow's growing Middle East clout on Monday on his first visit to Saudi Arabia in over a decade, buoyed by Russian military gains in Syria, strong ties with Riyadh's regional rivals and energy cooperation. ... Russian and Saudi flags lined Riyadh streets ahead of Putin's one-day visit, which includes an evening performance by Russia's Tchaikovsky Symphony Orchestra. He travels to the United Arab Emirates on Tuesday."

USA Today: Saudi Arabia Seems To Have Escaped Real Consequences For Khashoggi's Death. USA Today (10/14, 10.31M) editorializes that the "grisly killing of Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi" last year "doesn't seem to matter anymore." Large financial firms last year boycotted Saudi Arabia's "Davos in the Desert," but "attending this year's extravaganza are executives of JPMorgan Chase, Goldman Sachs and Citigroup, all of them institutions selected to underwrite the kingdom's highly anticipated, partial public offering of its oil company, Aramco, valued $1.5 trillion to $2 trillion." The editorial adds that "it hasn't helped that the Trump administration has all but looked the other way, despite a CIA assessment that the crown prince likely ordered the assassination," and the president "operates as if the murder never happened."

Nazer: Saudi Arabia Making Progress, "Undergoing An Unprecedented Transformation". In an op-ed for USA Today (10/14, 10.31M), Fahad Nazer, the spokesperson for the Royal Embassy of Saudi Arabia, argues that the kingdom has acted appropriately following the death of Jamal Khashoggi, calling it a "crime" that was "a flagrant violation of the kingdom's laws and an egregious affront to our values." Nazer writes that "the kingdom's leadership has publicly taken responsibility for what occurred because it happened under its watch and has implemented concrete measures to ensure that nothing like this happens again." According to Nazer, "the kingdom has dealt with this terrible incident the way any responsible member of the international community would."

Hong Kong Protesters Urge US Congress To Pass Human Rights Bill.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Cherney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports tens of thousands of protesters in Hong Kong waved US flags and played the US national anthem on Monday evening, urging Congress to pass the Hong Kong Human Rights and Democracy Act. The legislation would require the secretary of state to certify Hong Kong's autonomy every year for the city to continue receiving special economic treatment.

Hong Kong Police Say Demonstrators Set Off Bomb Sunday. The AP (10/14, Leicester) reports, "A homemade, remote-controlled bomb intended to 'kill or to harm' riot control officers was detonated as they deployed against renewed violence in Hong Kong over the weekend, police said Monday, in a further escalation of destructive street battles gripping the business hub." The Sunday night explosion "marked the first known use of an explosive device during protests that started in June."

Trump Says He Will "Be Looking Into" Case Of American Charged With Murder In Anguilla.

The AP (10/14) reports President Trump "says he'll 'be looking into' the case of a U.S. financial adviser charged with killing a hotel worker while on a family vacation in Anguilla after the man's wife appeared on the 'Fox & Friends' morning show and urged Trump to intervene." The President tweeted, "Will be looking into the Scott Hapgood case, and the Island of Anguilla. Something looks and sounds very wrong. I know Anguilla will want to see this case be properly and justly resolved! @foxandfriends @SteveDucey @ainsleyhardit". The President tagged Steve Ducey, a self-described "socialist community organizer," rather than Fox host Steve Doocy, in the tweet.

Parents Of UK Teen Killed By Wife Of US Diplomat Call For Justice.

All three networks last night covered the controversy over the death of a UK teen in an auto accident where the driver was the spouse of a US diplomat. NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 6, 2:00, Holt, 5.87M) reported that "the parents of a British teen are now in the US demanding justice for their son killed in a fatal accident." NBC (Park) added, "Charlotte Charles and Tim Dunn's 19-year-old son, Harry, died in a wrong-way crash in August." Anne Sacoolas, the wife of a US diplomat who left the UK claiming immunity, is suspected of driving the car that killed Harry. Sacoolas is now "breaking her silence, saying she's devastated and would like to meet with Mr. Dunn's parents so she can express her deepest sympathies and apologies for this tragic accident. Harry's parents say they will only meet with Sacoolas if she returns to the UK."

ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 7, 1:35, Muir, 6.92M) reported, "Dunn's parents, flying here from England, demanding justice, saying that a written apology from the American woman responsible for their son's death is not enough." Charlotte Charles: "We will still keep fighting. We will do what we can to make sure this doesn't happen to another family." The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 8, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reported that since Dunn's death, "his parents, the British police, and most recently, the British Prime Minister [Boris Johnson], have been calling on Sacoolas...to return" to the UK.

Both Sides Say Brexit Talks Moving Slowly.

The AP (10/14, Lawless, Casert) reports Brexit talks in Brussels "are making slow progress, both sides said Monday as some EU ministers said they could even spill into next week." Meanwhile in London, "Britain dragged out a horse-drawn carriage and a diamond-encrusted crown so the queen could read out the government's post-Brexit plans to Parliament." Reuters (10/14, Faulconbridge, Baczynska) reports Prime Minister Boris Johnson and EU leaders "face a tumultuous week of reckoning that could decide whether the divorce is orderly, acrimonious or delayed yet again."

Clashes In Barcelona After Spanish Supreme Court Sentences Catalan Independence Leaders.

The AP (10/14, Parra, Giles) reports, "Riot police engaged in a running battle with protesters outside Barcelona's airport Monday after Spain's Supreme Court convicted 12 separatist leaders of illegally promoting the wealthy Catalonia region's independence and sentenced nine of them to prison." Police shot "foam bullets and used batons against the thousands of protesters" who converged at the airport "after a pro-independence grassroots group put out the call. ... Police also clashed with angry crowds late Monday night in downtown Barcelona."

The Washington Post (10/14, Rolfe, McAuley, 14.2M) reports, "Catalan officials attacked what they considered harsh sentences, although all 12 defendants were acquitted of the more serious charge of rebellion. They called on the Spanish government to negotiate a different solution." However, "the acting government in Madrid urged respect for the rule of law."

Reuters (10/14, Pinedo, Faus) reports that "the jailed men sent out messages of defiance, urging people to take to the streets." According to the article, "the strength of the protests could be the first indication of how the future looks for the independence struggle, which has so far been largely peaceful."

The New York Times (10/14, Minder, 18.61M) reports that "the verdict came before a repeat national election on Nov. 10. ... It will be Spain's fourth election in four years, highlighting the country's political polarization and fragmentation." The ruling on Monday will have "a direct impact on next month's national election" because the former deputy leader of Catalonia and "five other condemned politicians had planned to run."

The Guardian: "Shocking" Events In Spain Must Not Be Repeated In Scotland. The Guardian \(UK\) (10/14, 4.19M) editorializes that "Catalonia and Scotland are home to Europe's two most developed independence movements, but they have taken, up to now, very different separatist strategies." The editorial says Scottish National Party leader Nicola Sturgeon has been "scrupulous and right to spurn the illegal referendum route embraced by frustrated Catalan nationalists. That unilateralism has now led the Spanish courts to take the shocking course of making political prisoners of nationalist leaders." The Guardian urges both Scotland and Britain to "commit themselves not to go down a similar route, however strong the temptations may seem."

Yellow Vest Protesters Expect Massive Turnout For Anniversary Of Movement.

The Washington Times (10/14, Rosman, 492K) reports France's yellow vest protesters will "officially mark the movement's one-year anniversary" on November 17, at a time when the movement seems to have lost momentum in recent months. According to the article, "public backing for the protesters, strong in the early days, has dropped," and French President Emmanuel Macron's "current approval rating, at 37%, is at its highest level in more than a year." Nevertheless, "yellow vest activists insist their protest is alive and well and reports of its death have been greatly exaggerated." Francois Boulo, a spokesman and organizer for the yellow vest chapter in the western city of Rouen, "said he expects turnout" on November 17 "to be similar to what it was during the height of the movement, when more than 280,000 across the country participated."

Housing

Redfin: Median-Income Black Household Can Afford Only One Quarter Of Homes On The Market.

USA Today (10/15, Davidson, 10.31M) reports, "The median-income black household could afford just 25% of U.S. homes on the market last year, down from 39% in 2012, according to data provided exclusively to USA TODAY by real estate brokerage Redfin and based on the 46 largest markets. By contrast, median-income white households could afford 57% of homes for sale last year, down from 69% seven years ago." Redfin Chief Economist Daryl Fairweather said, "African Americans who haven't been able to buy a home since the recovery began have only seen prices rise further and further out of budget."

NAHB: Price Of Residential Construction Materials Fell In September.

M Report (10/14, Albanese) says the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) "reported that prices paid for materials used in residential construction fell 0.3% in September, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Producer Price Index (PPI). Prices have fallen by an average of 0.1% per month over the last year, and the price of materials used to build homes has increased 1.7% in 2019 – the slowest year-to-date growth through September since 2015." NAHB Chairman Greg Ugalde said, "Removing regulatory barriers that contribute to the increased costs of housing will pave the way to homeownership. Home builders and the residential construction community are committed to working with Congress to ensure homeownership is within reach of hard working families.”

Realtor.com Highlights Top Home-Flipping Markets.

DS News (10/14, Welborn) reports Realtor.com “examined where the highest percentages of home sales are for flipping or renting out,” and found that “real estate investors purchased 7.7% of all homes in the second quarter of 2019, up 0.6% year-over-year, the most speculation the market has seen 2013.” St. Louis was the top destination for flippers and landlords; there, 18.8 percent of sales were investment properties. St. Louis broker Dennis Norman said that today, there are “a lot of investors from California, from Colorado, and even international investors.”

Redwood Trust To Acquire CoreVest For $490M.

HousingWire (10/14, Lane, 23K) reports REIT Redwood Trust is “growing its real estate investor loan business through an acquisition,” announcing Monday that it will acquire CoreVest American Finance Lender (formerly known as Colony American Finance) for $490 million. According to HousingWire, “CoreVest was founded in 2014 and specializes in lending to real estate investors who want to purchase single-family rental homes, townhomes, condos, and small multifamily properties.” National Mortgage Professional (10/14, Hall) provides additional coverage.

Annaly Preps $466M Expanded-Credit MBS.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/14, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports, “Annaly Capital Management is preparing to issue a $465.5 million expanded-credit MBS, the largest EC deal so far from the nation’s largest real estate investment trust. Annaly has issued four other expanded-credit MBS, including two deals this year. The largest was a $463.4 million bond that came to market in July.” According to IMF, “The new transaction differs in a couple of ways from previous issuance by the REIT. Banc of California had been the top contributor to expanded-credit MBS from Annaly but with the new offering, Hanover Community Bank will garner that distinction with a 18.1% share. Banc of California will be second at 11.9%. The investment-property share of loans in EC MBS from Annaly also is increasing: 32.3% of the new deal compared to 12.5% for the April transaction.”

Lender Price Announces Release Of “FLEX Pricer” Non-QM Pricing Platform.

According to Mortgage Professional America (10/14, Smith), “Lender Price, a provider of mortgage-origination and loan-pricing technology, has announced the release of FLEX Pricer, a pricing platform designed for non-QM and non-agency lenders.” The platform “supports all loan types.” However, it is “most effective with non-QM loan products, according to Lender Price.”

According to HousingWire’s (10/14, Lloyd, 23K) latest Mortgage Tech Rundown, “Finastra has partnered with Monotto, a premier tech start-up, to launch two new solutions that are built on the company’s FusionFabric.cloud open development platform.” Meanwhile, “Mortgage technology solutions provider Mace Innovations announced its suite of automation tools are now available through Ellie Mae’s Encompass digital platform.” And lastly, “American Financial Resources announced it has partnered with Finicity to provide its business partners and their borrowers with a faster and more secure way to verify assets and income while originating loans.”

CFPB Could Grant Retroactive QM Status To Loans Without Recent Missed Payments.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/14, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, “Loans that don’t miss payments for a certain period of time should receive qualified mortgage status retroactively, according to feedback received by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. As part of its advanced notice of proposed rulemaking in July, the bureau requested input on making adjustments to QM standards. In the notice, the CFPB said some industry participants had suggested amending the ability-to-repay rule to allow a performing loan that has been on a financial institution’s book for at least two years, or a slightly longer time frame, to automatically convert into a QM.” The CFPB said, “These stakeholders argue that when a loan defaults after performing for two or three years it is not reasonable to conclude that the default was caused by the creditor’s failure to consider the consumer’s ability to repay.”

CFPB Establishing Task Force To Explore Ways To “Harmonize” And “Modernize” Regulations.

Mortgage Orb (10/14, Barnard) reports the CFPB is “establishing a task force that will look for ways to improve and strengthen consumer financial laws and regulations.” According to Mortgage Orb, “The new Taskforce on Federal Consumer Financial Law will examine the existing legal and regulatory environment facing consumers and financial services providers and report its recommendations to Kathy Kraninger, director of the CFPB.” CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger said, “An objective and independent evaluation of our current regulatory framework to identify where there may be gaps or where regulation should be simplified or modernized is needed to help us more effectively carry out our mission of protecting consumers.”

Citing Collins v. Mnuchin, CFPB Argues Against All American Check Cashing's Motion For Judgment On Pleadings.

In a LexBlog (10/14) piece, Co-Practice Leader of Ballard Spahr's Consumer Financial Services Group Alan Kaplinsky says, "All American Check Cashing and the CFPB have submitted letter briefs to the Fifth Circuit regarding what action the court should take in light of the en banc Fifth Circuit's decision in Collins v. Mnuchin that held the FHFA's structure is unconstitutional." According to Kaplinsky, the CFPB, no longer defending its constitutionality in the appellate courts or Supreme Court, "concedes in its letter brief that the structure is unconstitutional." However, the CFPB also "argues that, following the en banc Fifth Circuit's approach in Collins, the proper remedy is to sever the CFPB for-cause removal provision but not grant All American's motion for judgment on the pleadings. It also argues that the panel should allow the enforcement action to proceed because it was ratified by Acting Director Mulvaney and Director Kraninger does not support dismissal of the enforcement action."

As Green Bond Issuance Rises, Regulators Take Aim On "Greenwashing."

In a potentially paywalled Bloomberg (10/14, 4.73M) piece, Lyubov Pronina and Tom Freke provide a rundown of "green bonds," which are described as "a way for issuers to raise money specifically for environmentally friendly projects – such as renewable energy or clean transport – and to be able to boast about it publicly." According to the duo, "Fund managers also like the notes as a way of meeting growing investor demand for sustainable options. The market, which opened slowly more than a decade ago, has boomed in recent years, helping spur development of other socially conscious debt products." The US is "the largest source overall, led by the mortgage giant Fannie Mae and local governments selling notes to finance infrastructure such as sewerage upgrades." However, "Because investors face the challenge of judging whether a note is truly green, regulators are working on standards to help guard against greenwashing – misleading claims about just how good a friend to the environment an issuer is."

Analysis: Repo Volatility Leaves Fed In A Tough Place When It Comes To SOFR.

In a Seeking Alpha (10/14, Dew, 512K) analysis piece, Kurt Dew argues that recent volatility in the repo markets and the Fed's insistence on facilitating a quick transition away from Libor have left the central bank in a bind. According to him, "the introduction of the secured overnight financing rate (SOFR) and the Fed's anointing of SOFR to LIBOR replacement status has predictably caused the broader financial world to elevate the function and importance of repo. Therefore, the Fed must confront a new dimension in monetary policy tactics, the repo's optics. It is not only what the repo does that matters now. It is also what the repo rate seems to do." However, "any return of the New York Fed's open market desk to the active management of repo rates to meet a policy-targeted rate, as the desk did pre-Crisis, will place SOFR in the box of manipulated rates beside LIBOR, knocking the entire SOFR project into a cocked hat."

Analysis: UK Regulators Grow Frustrated With Firms Continuing To Use Libor.

Risk (10/14) Editor-at-Large Helen Bartholomew says that UK regulators are "losing patience with a growing stock of Libor exposures. The Bank of England's Financial Policy Committee last week threatened policy action to more-forcibly detach participants from the discredited rate before the end of 2021, when it could vanish from view." According to Bartholomew, "Participants may be dabbling in regulator-preferred risk-free rates (RFRs) such as Sonia in the UK and SOFR in the US, but there appears to be no let-up in firms writing new Libor contracts despite risks to the benchmark's existence after 2021. The stock of Libor-linked instruments set to mature after the rate's impending death jumped by around 50% to approximately £12 trillion ($15 trillion) between April 2018 and August 2019, according to LCH data."

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (10/9, 1.67M) reports the 10-Year Treasury Yield rose to 1.686 percent.

Dollar Eases Against Yen.

Reuters (UK) (10/15, Uetake) reports, "The dollar hovered below 2-1/2-month highs against the yen on Tuesday, failing to extend recent gains as optimism over trade negotiations between the world's two largest economies and for an orderly British exit from the European Union started to fade." The dollar "eased marginally to 108.31 against the yen," while the euro "was flat at $1.1031 versus the greenback, off Friday's three-week high of $1.1062."

Gold Holds Steady.

Reuters (AF) (10/14, Editorial, 5K) reports, "Gold prices held steady below the $1,500 per ounce level on Tuesday as markets braced for talks between Britain and the European Union that will determine how smooth Britain's departure will be from the trading bloc." Spot gold was "flat at $1,492.83 per ounce, as of 0105 GMT," while US gold futures "were a shade lower at $1,496.90."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (10/15, Peng) reports, "Oil prices fell on Tuesday, after heavy losses in the previous session, as two days of weak Chinese data added to worries about the top crude oil importer's energy demand growth." Brent crude "fell 42 cents, or 0.71%, to $58.93 a barrel by 0720 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude "dropped 44 cents, or 0.82%, to $53.15."

EU Identifies Security Threats Tied To 5G Vendors Like Huawei.

In an exclusive, the Wall Street Journal (10/11, Isaac, Olson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports sources say the EU has discovered several security vulnerabilities tied to foreign telecommunications vendors. The Journal adds US criticism of Huawei Technologies Co. has driven the increased global scrutiny of the Chinese company.

Source: German Security Rulebook Won't Bar Huawei From Supplying 5G Networks. Reuters (10/14) reports a new German "security catalogue," set "to be published this week," won't "exclude Chinese telecoms equipment maker Huawei Technologies from supplying gear for the country's 5G mobile networks, a senior government source said on Monday." The catalog "will confirm Germany's decision to keep a level playing field for suppliers to next-generation telecoms networks, despite calls by the United States to ban Huawei." Meanwhile, German "network operators Deutsche Telekom (DTGn, DE), Vodafone (VOD.L) and Telefonica Deutschland (O2Dn, DE) would be required to identify and apply enhanced security standards to critical network elements, the Handelsblatt daily reported on Monday, citing the draft rulebook."

Huawei India CEO Says Company Would Sign "No Backdoor" Agreement With India. Reuters (10/14, Phartiyal) reports, "China's Huawei Technologies is ready to enter into a 'no backdoor' agreement with India to allay security concerns, the telecom group's local head said on Monday, as the giant South Asian country prepares to launch next generation 5G networks." India "has yet to begin 5G trials and has not taken a decision on allowing or banning Huawei from the test runs amid a U.S.-led push to shut out the Chinese tech and telecoms group." Paraphrasing Huawei India CEO Jay Chen, that the company "is closely engaging with India to clarify its stand on 5G solutions, network security and Chinese intelligence laws." Chen said, "From the very beginning, I have confidence that Indian industry, the India market will welcome Huawei because I have contributed a lot with my unique value. I am ready to sign (a no-backdoor agreement)."

Huawei Fends Off 1M Cyberattacks Per Day. Forbes (10/12, Doffman, 9.71M) reports Huawei "endures around a million cyberattacks per day on its computers and networks – and that's according to its security chief, John Suffolk." As reported in the Japanese press, Suffolk "implied such attacks are focused on IP-theft, which given Huawei leads the world for 5G network innovation and files more patents than any other company in the world, will come as little surprise." That said, the company has also "accused the US government of mounting cyberattacks as part of its concerted campaign against them." In September, Huawei "alleged in the media that US law enforcement has 'threatened, coerced and enticed' existing and former employees, and has executed 'cyberattacks to infiltrate Huawei's intranet and internal information systems.'"

Kansas Attorney To Change Plea In Cyberattack Case.

The AP (10/11) reports from Wichita, Kansas, "A Wichita lawyer accused of plotting a cyberattack on websites with information criticizing his work has told a federal court he intends to change his plea." According to the AP, "A docket notation Friday shows attorney Bradley Pistotnik has a change-of-plea hearing Tuesday." The AP adds, "The move comes two days after his co-defendant, VIRAL Artificial Intelligence co-founder David Dorsett, notified the court of his plea change. Dorsett's hearing is Oct. 21." Both men pleaded not guilty last year to computer fraud and conspiracy. Pistotnik "is also charged with making false statements to the FBI."

US Seizes Website That Allowed Users To Rent, Review Prostitutes.

The Miami Herald (10/11, Cetoute, 1.09M) reports, "A website, owned by a Broward man, that allowed customers to rent, review and message prostitutes has been seized by authorities." According to the Herald, "On Friday, the Oct. 4 seizure of independentgirls.com, an internet forum for escort services and prostitution, was announced by the Southern District of Florida's U.S. Attorney's Office, FBI and Broward County Sheriff's Office." The Herald adds, "The purpose of independentgirls.com was to allow escort agencies and independent escorts to post advertisements for prostitution and create a forum for customers to post reviews of prostitutes for others to read, authorities said." The website "allowed customers paying for sex to buy upgraded accounts where they would be able to read and write prostitute reviews, send private messages to prostitutes and view which prostitutes were currently available. 'The FBI will not tolerate sex trafficking regardless if it is arranged in person or over the Internet,' said George L. Piro, the special agent who heads the FBI's Miami Field Office."

US Charges 18 In Alleged International ATM Skimming Ring.

ZDNet (10/11, Osborne, 299K) reports, "US law enforcement has arrested 18 alleged members of an international ATM criminal ring thought to be responsible for the theft of at least $20 million." According to ZDNet, "On Thursday, the US Department of Justice (DoJ) unsealed an indictment and two superseding indictments revealing charges levied against each individual believed to be part of the scheme." Prosecutors "say the organization used card skimmer equipment on ATMs to harvest the debit card information of unwitting victims." ZDNet adds, "While ATM compromise was centered in the United States, the components and equipment required to create skimmers came from both the US and abroad. Some individuals were tasked in manufacturing the skimmers, whereas others would launder stolen proceeds by passing cash through bank accounts or funnel their criminal gains through properties and businesses."

Analysis Reveals Chinese Propaganda App Has A Backdoor Giving Government Access To 100 Million Phones.

The Washington Post (10/11, Fifield, 14.2M) reports the Chinese Communist Party "appears to have 'superuser' access to all the data on more than 100 million cellphones, owing to a back door in a propaganda app that the government has been promoting aggressively this year." A US funded analysis examined "the code in the app" finding that "it enables authorities to retrieve every message and photo from a user's phone, browse their contacts and Internet history, and activate an audio recorder inside the device." Open Technology Fund's Director of Technology Sarah Aoun said, "The [Chinese Communist Party] essentially has access to over 100 million users' data. ... That's coming from the top of a government that is expanding its surveillance into citizens' day-to-day lives."

BBC News Online (UK) (10/14, 1.02M) reports that, released in February, Study the Great Nation "has become the most downloaded free program in China, thanks to persuasive demands by Chinese authorities that citizens download and install it." The app pushes out "official news and images and encourages people to earn points by reading articles, commenting on them and playing quizzes about China and its leader, Xi Jinping." Use of the app is "mandatory among party officials and civil servants and it is tied to wages in some workplaces."

DHS McAleenan's Departure Prolongs Leadership Crisis In Key Cybersecurity Agency.

The Washington Post (10/14, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that the resignation of acting Department of Homeland Security secretary Kevin McAleenan "over reported conflicts with the White House will prolong a leadership crisis at the government's lead civilian cybersecurity agency." McAleenan, who did not have a significant cybersecurity background, "had been leading the agency since former DHS secretary Kirstjen Nielsen resigned in April." He spoke at a number of cybersecurity events recently and "told reporters during a recent tour of DHS's cybersecurity innovation lab that cybersecurity was one of his top priorities." House Homeland Security Committee Chairman Bennie G. Thompson (D-MS) "slammed Trump for creating 'chaos' at the department and urged the president to find a permanent secretary who will focus on top threats including 'securing our elections.'" Amit Yoran, who used to run DHS's cybersecurity division, however, "was skeptical that McAleenan's departure would harm the department's digital security mission."

Three Alabama Hospitals Accepting Patients Again Following Ransomware Attack.

CNN International (10/11, Andone) reports officials for DCH Health System "told Tuscaloosa News that the company paid the hackers." DCH Health System previously "said in a statement that a decryption key was obtained and that teams are working to restore its systems." CNN reached out to DCH Health System "about the report that it paid the hackers but has not received a response." While the hospitals were able "to provide critical medical care to some patients after the attack was discovered on October 1, non-emergency patients were diverted to other hospitals, DCH Health System said." Staff at the three hospitals – DCH Regional Medical, Northport Medical Center and Fayette Medical Center – "had to use paper instead of digital records when providing care."

House To Vote This Month On Legislation To Counter Foreign Election Interference.

The Hill (10/11, Miller, 2.98M) reports House Majority Leader Hoyer has "announced the House will take up legislation that would require campaigns to report 'illicit offers' of election assistance from foreign governments or individuals to both the FBI and the Federal Election Commission (FEC)." The Hill says the SHIELD Act "is likely to place additional pressure on Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), whom Democrats have targeted on election security."

Senators Seeks Courts' Help In Securing IT Supply Chains.

Federal News Network (10/11, White, 220) reports four Senators "said Congress and the courts need help securing their IT supply chains." In a letter to the White House, they "applaud the work the Federal Acquisition Security Council is doing to shore up supply chains for executive branch agencies." But they say the council and the intelligence community "need to share security information with the legislative and judicial branches." They're "asking the council to draw up a strategic plan to help make that happen."

Opinion: NATO Allies Need To Reach Agreement On Offensive Cyber Operations.

In a commentary in Lawfare (10/14), Max Smeets writes, "Allies do not agree on the appropriate procedures and boundaries for offensive cyber operations. More specifically, there is no agreement on when military cyber organizations can gain access to systems and networks in allied territory to disrupt adversarial activity. As I have argued previously, this issue may end up causing significant loss in allies' trust and confidence. My proposed solution: NATO allies should establish memoranda of understanding on offensive cyber effects operations in systems or networks based in allied territory." He concludes, "While I argue that the NATO memorandum of understanding on offensive cyber operations in systems or networks based in allied territory can greatly help in promoting stability and enhancing confidence among allies, it is not a silver bullet. It can only reduce allied concerns rather than mitigate them."

New Zealand Steps Up Fight Against Extremist Online Content.

Reuters (10/14) reports New Zealand's Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern announced "more funding and support on Monday to target violent extremist content online, just months after an alleged white supremacist livestreamed a massacre at two mosques in Christchurch." World leaders and big tech firms "have endorsed a movement by Ardern called 'Christchurch Call' which aims to establish ethical standards for tech companies and media outlets to avoid amplifying violent extremist content online." Their commitment was tested last week "as social media firms scrambled to scrub footage of a shooting outside a German synagogue that was livestreamed on Amazon's gaming subsidiary Twitch." The Prime Minister "said in a press conference later that the attack in Germany last week was another reminder of the threat of online extremism."

NSA Establishes Futures And Standards Group Within Cybersecurity Directorate.

ExecutiveGov (10/14) reports NSA has formed a new group "within its cybersecurity directorate to help predict and identify cyber vulnerabilities in commercial cyber platforms and help the technology industry improve the security of their products, Defense One reported Friday." The new futures and standards group at NSA "will also provide companies and customers recommendations to facilitate the safe use of products." Anne Neuberger, director of the cybersecurity directorate, said, "Our role is taking the insights we have...whether it's 5G, whether it's quantum system crypto, whether it's distributed ledger, and trying to work to ensure those products are built more secure. And we give advice to users who need different levels of security." Neal Ziring, technical director at the directorate, "said the futures and standards group will look at security concerns related to Chinese-made 5G equipment and advance collaboration with the tech industry before faulty platforms become widely adopted."

Federal Computer Week (10/10, 263K) reports NSA Director Gen. Paul Nakasone "said that the NSA's new cyber directorate wants to bridge gaps between government agencies and the defense industrial base." Nakasone said during an October 9 keynote at the FireEye Cyber Defense Summit in Washington, DC, "NSA's new cybersecurity directorate, which opened for business last week, will give us a laser focus on these challenges." Nakasone named three reasons "behind standing up the cybersecurity directorate, which is headed by Anne Neuberger and stood up October 1: to combat an evolving threat landscape, capitalize on ability to set security standards and make vulnerability assessments, and enhance partnerships with Cyber Command, Homeland Security, FBI and industry." He said, "It's not enough to just generate and share insights and set standards." Instead, he "said that the directorate aims to 'prevent and eradicate cyber threats in national security systems and critical infrastructure,' with an initial focus on the companies that build and maintain defense and weapons infrastructure and accompanying capabilities."

NSA Develops Online Cybersecurity Course To Educate Employees, Private Sector.

Federal News Network (10/11, 220) reports NSA worked with Penn State University, "as part of a broader initiative from the Department of Homeland Security, to develop a free online course to educate people on cybersecurity operations, law and policy." Ann Toomey McKenna, a professor at Penn State's Institute for CyberScience and one of the three professors who wrote the course, said on Agency in Focus: Intelligence Community, "The NSA asked us to design a law course about cyber operations that can be taught to non lawyers, and really no requirement of any technical background or expertise. They wanted a course that can be designed to be taught as a whole comprehensively, or in modules; smaller units of the course could be taken and taught independently. So in a very unusual way we went about this and we created a course designed to be taught in whole or part, and designed to be taught by anyone who might be interested."

TFI/Sanctions

Treasury Department Announces Sanctions Of Two South Sudanese Businessmen.

Reuters (10/11, Brice) reported Friday that the US "imposed sanctions on two South Sudanese businessmen, Ashraf Seed Ahmed Al-Cardinal and Kur Ajing Ater, for their involvement in bribery, kickbacks and procurement fraud with senior government officials, the Treasury Department said on Friday." The report said The Treasury Department "also imposed sanctions on five companies owned or controlled by Al-Cardinal." The Wall Street Journal (10/11, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported that the Administration said the corruption of the sanctioned individuals had fueled the civil war in South Sudan that has claimed an estimated 400,000 lives.

Federal Reserve

Fed To Start Buying $60 Billion of Treasury Bills Monthly Starting Today.

On Friday, Bloomberg (10/11, Miller, Condon, 4.73M) reported the Fed said it would start buying $60 billion of Treasury bills per month from October 15 "to improve its control over the benchmark interest rate it uses to guide monetary policy after turmoil rocked money markets in September." The Fed said in a statement on Friday, that "these actions are purely technical measures to support the effective implementation" of its monetary policy. "In particular, purchases of Treasury bills likely will have little if any impact on the level of longer-term interest rates and broader financial conditions," added the Fed. Earlier in the week, Chairman Jerome Powell emphasized that such a policy would not constitute a new round of QE. MarketWatch (10/11, Robb, 1.67M) also reported.

Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari Impatient With Wall Street Complaints About Repo Market.

In an interview with Axios (10/14, Rabouin, 521K), Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari said he is impatient with the "hubris and stupidity" of bankers. "Honestly, my patience for these market opinions is basically gone," he said. Responding to Wall Street's complaints that the Fed has mismanaged the liquidity crunch in the repo market, Kashkari points out that they could use the Fed's discount window. "They don't like it because they think it makes them look weak," he is quoted as saying. "They don't want to use it so the New York Fed should have run to comfort them more quickly with a new facility... That's called the height of entitlement if ever there was one," he added. Business Insider (10/14, Wink, 3.67M) also highlighted the comments.

Kashkari: Fed Should Evaluate Yield-Curve Control As Potential Tool.

Reuters (10/11, Marte) reported Friday, "Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank President Neel Kashkari on Friday said the U.S. central bank should look into controlling the yield curve as a potential tool for monetary policy, similar to an approach used by the Bank of Japan," in an echo of comments by Fed Chair Jerome Powell earlier last week.

Kaplan: US-China Deal Could Be "Positive Development," Open Mind On Rate Cuts.

Reuters (10/11, Saphir) reported that Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan said at a Friday meeting of the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco that the "freshly inked U.S.-China trade deal could be a 'positive development' for the U.S. economy...but repeated that he'll remain open-minded and watching data closely in the run-up to the Fed's Oct. 29-30 policy meeting." Kaplan said to reporters following the talk, "Some of the recent deceleration in global growth, weakness in manufacturing and weakness in business investment has been due to trade uncertainty, so I think to the extent that there is some moderation in this escalation ...that could be a positive development." However, he added, "we're going to have to wait and see how events unfold."

Rosengren: Fed Must Be Patient In Assessing Rate Cuts.

Reuters (10/11) reports Boston Fed President Eric Rosengren, in remarks Friday at University of Wisconsin-Madison, stressed patience for the Fed in determining whether to further cut interest rates. Rosengren said, "While U.S. consumers have been resilient to date, continued resilience is not guaranteed ... my view is that policymakers can be patient and continue to evaluate incoming data before taking additional action." Rosengren, "who has opposed the U.S. central bank's two interest-rate cuts this year, said the main question was whether consumer spending can continue to offset the negative impact of the Trump administration's trade wars and slowing global growth."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

CFPB Creates Task Force To Study Gaps In Consumer Finance Law.

American Banker (10/11, Berry, Subscription Publication, 31K) reported the CFPB "is creating a task force of outsiders to research and identify potential conflicts and inconsistencies in consumer finance law.” The bureau on Friday announced the seven-member task force will produce research and provide legal analysis on “harmonizing, modernizing, and updating” the enumerated consumer credit laws. “An objective and independent evaluation of our current regulatory framework to identify where there may be gaps or where regulation should be simplified or modernized is needed to help us more effectively carry out our mission of protecting consumers,” CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger said in a press release.

Law360 (10/11, Subscription Publication, 8K) reported the CFPB’s Taskforce on Federal Consumer Financial Law “will study the current state of consumer financial services regulation as it affects industry and consumers, ultimately producing a report outlining potential changes ‘to improve and strengthen consumer financial laws and regulations,’” the bureau said. But some consumer advocates worry the project “could just wind up providing cover for industry-friendly rule changes.”

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Fines Citi $30M Over Handling Of Foreclosed Property.

The Wall Street Journal (10/11, Prang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency has fined Citigroup $30 million, saying the bank repeatedly violated the other real-estate owned statutory holding period on foreclosed real estate.

HousingWire (10/11, Lane, 23K) reported, “Under federal banking regulations, there is a two-year limit on banks maintaining possession of a foreclosed property.” But banks “can apply for an annual exemption” that pushes “their ownership of a property to as much as five years.” After that, the bank “is supposed to sell the property back into the market to prevent available housing inventory from being kept away from would-be homebuyers.” According to the OCC, Citi “violated that rule by holding onto hundreds of foreclosures for longer than the five-year limit.”

American Banker (10/11, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reported that in a press release, the OCC said that Citibank had “deficient processes and controls in the identification and monitoring of the [other real estate owned]...holding period” over the last several years. “In assessing this civil money penalty, the OCC found the bank failed to meet its commitment to implement corrective actions, resulting in additional violations,” the agency said.

Reuters (10/11, Johnson) reported Citi in 2015 “said it lacked adequate processes to effectively monitor the holding period, and committed to developing and taking corrective actions, but it did not do so, the OCC said.” As a result, Citi in South Dakota violated the holding period more than 200 times between 2017 and 2019. A Citi spokesperson on Friday “said the bank did not meet the holding requirement in some instances, but customers were not affected.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Trump Is Making Syria, And The Middle East, More Dangerous.” On its editorial page, the New York Times (10/14, 18.61M) says “the threat to destroy the Turkish economy was made, as is Mr. Trump’s wont, in a tweet that was such a departure from historical presidential pronouncements that it is worth quoting: ‘As I have stated strongly before, and just to reiterate, if Turkey does anything that I, in my great and unmatched wisdom, consider to be off limits, I will totally destroy and obliterate the Economy of Turkey (I’ve done before!).’”

Washington Post.

“Words Have Consequences. Trump Either Doesn’t Know Or Doesn’t Care.” The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorializes that the violent parody video shown at a conference of President Trump supporters at his Miami resort depicted Trump “as a mass killer systemically executing members of the news media and his political opponents,” and that the President “set the tone for it with language and ideology that encourages hate, disrespect and violence.” To the Post, “it is sad but unsurprising that Mr. Trump has issued no rebuke to his supporters and no forceful denunciation of the video itself.”

“Trump’s Blunder In Syria Is Irreparable.” A Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorial is critical of President Trump’s announcement of a series of measures the Administration will take against Turkey for its continued operation against the Kurds in northern Syria, and says that “until now, it was possible to hope that the damage caused by President Trump’s terrible incompetence, ignorance and impulsivity in foreign policy was largely theoretical, and possibly reparable. That is no longer true. The cost of his latest Syria blunder is unfolding before our eyes: Innocent lives lost. US servicemen and women betrayed. Butchering dictators emboldened. Dangerous terrorists set free. A ghastly scene is playing out, and it almost surely will get worse.”

“A Senseless Police Shooting In Fort Worth.” The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorializes that “nothing computes” about Atatiana Jefferson’s “killing except for one thing: She was black, and the officer who killed her, Aaron Dean, was white. And that is an all-too familiar equation.” The Post asserts that “innocent African American civilians are gunned down by white police so frequently that it would be willful blindness to deny a pattern.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump’s Syria Mess.” On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says President Trump’s foreign policy can be reduced to two tactics — sanctions and tariffs, which he says he will impose on Turkey for its operation against the Kurds in northern Syria.

“The Warren-Zuckerberg Clash.” The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues in an editorial that Sen. Elizabeth Warren’s (D-MA) professed anger over Facebook’s decision that it will not examine politicians’ ads for false statements is a bid to suppress ads from her opponents.

“Puerto Rico At The Supreme Court.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that the Supreme Court should find that a financial oversight board established by Congress to oversee Puerto Rico’s fiscal decisions does not violate the Constitution. The Court is being asked to consider whether the appointment of the board’s members must comply with the Constitution’s Appointments Clause. The Journal points to Congress’ plenary authority over territories and long-established precedent that constitutional safeguards such as the Appointments Clause do not apply to territories.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "It's now been three weeks since the Democrats began an official impeachment inquiry into President Trump's dealings with Ukraine, and since then, things haven't only gotten worse for Trump; they've gotten worse for Rudy Giuliani, Trump's personal attorney...because, since the scandal broke, law enforcement has started looking into Rudy's world, and turns out some his acquaintances are really shady. ... This is crazy – Rudy Giuliani has friends? I didn't see that coming. This is random, but do people who look like criminals become criminals, or do people who become criminals start to look like criminals? I genuinely wonder that."

Trevor Noah: "These are the two shadiest-looking dudes I have ever seen. It's almost like, 'Hey, FBI, why did you think these guys are criminals?' 'Uh, basically, we looked at them, and that's how we cracked the case.' Aside from being born with 'resting mugshot' face, probably the biggest flag for these guys is they were buying a one-way ticket out of the country – always suspicious. The only people who buy one-way tickets are criminals and skydivers, that's it."

Trevor Noah: "In a normal administration, the impeachment inquiry would be enough drama, but the Trump presidency is a Black Friday sale. While all this impeachment stuff is tearing America apart, last week he made an abrupt decision to pull troops from Syria."

Trevor Noah: "Donald Trump is the only person who can find a way to make the Middle East more chaotic. The Middle East was already a geopolitical Jenga tower, with everybody trying to figure out the right move, and Trump comes in and says, 'Why don't we move the whole table?'"

Trevor Noah: "Trump justified his decision to pull out of Syria by saying this is part of his larger plan to bring American troops back home. And that makes sense. What doesn't make sense is that home seems to be another country in the Middle East. ... I don't think America has ever rented out its military before. Like, that is a wild thing. He's selling the military and other things. What are the other things? Does anybody ask? Did he, like, sneak Eric into the shipment? He's like, 'You take this and Eric.' 'Dad, why am I--?' 'Shut up, Eric, go now!'"

Trevor Noah: "It's weird that you can rent out America's military. You know what I would do if I was Mexico? I would raise a bunch of money, and then I would hire America's military to do a coup on itself. Yeah, and then the people would just be like, 'Mr. President, our military is taking over the White House!' He'd be like, 'I know, and who's gonna pay for it? Mexico!'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Today, by the way, happens to be Canadian Thanksgiving. So Happy Thanksgiving to our Canadian friends who today gather with their families to focus on what they're thankful for, mainly the fact that Justin Bieber moved away and that Donald Trump is not their President. So Happy Thanksgiving."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Our pumpkin-spice President had a busy Monday. This is his schedule today. This is real. 'Monday. No public events scheduled.' Probably for the best."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Today, Congress heard from Trump's former adviser, Fiona Hill. This is a fun story. The Washington Post said one of the first times Fiona Hill, who was his Russia adviser, met the President, he handed her a memo he'd marked up and told her to go revise it because he assumed she was a secretary. When she seemed confused, he got angry. He seems like a fun boss. He really does."

Jimmy Kimmel: "But make no mistake, the President is melting down like a creamsicle in July. He's threatening to sue Nancy Pelosi and Adam Schiff, which you can't – and not only that, who's he going to get to sue him? All his lawyers are either in jail or going there soon."

Jimmy Kimmel: "He's even feuding with Fox News. According to the New York Times, he called the head of Fox News to complain about what he perceived as unfair coverage of him. He really is the snowiest, flakiest snowflake there ever has been, isn't he? You could ski on Donald Trump."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Impeachment, and Turkey, and Syria, and all manner of hell breaking loose, and this is what the President is working on right now. 'Vote for good guy Sean Spicer tonight on 'Dancing With The Stars.' He has always been there for us.' That might be his greatest abuse of power yet."

Trump Loses NY District Court Decision On Tax Returns, Immediately Appeals.

USA Today (10/7, McCoy, 10.31M) reports President Trump on Monday "lost a federal court battle aimed at keeping a New York prosecutor from examining his tax returns for a criminal investigation when a judge rejected his claim of absolute presidential immunity from criminal investigations." Trump's attorneys immediately appealed the decision to an appellate court, "which responded by blocking an immediate handover of the returns while the appeal is in process." The decision was "a legal victory for Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance," who had "subpoenaed Trump's tax returns for a criminal investigation into hush money payments to two women who allege they had affairs with Trump." The report mentions the House Ways and Means Committee's suit against Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin and IRS Commissioner Charles Rettig which calls for "a federal judge to compel the officials to hand over Trump's returns." Newsweek (10/7, Hutzler, 1.53M), The Daily Caller (10/7, Talcott, 716K), The National Review, (10/7, Hoonhout, 731K) and NPR (10/7, Brown, 3.12M) and also reported on the story.

The Washington Post (10/7, 14.2M) re-ran a November 2018 Bloomberg (11/25, Davison, Harris, 4.73M) analysis which explains "how Trump's tax returns could become public" by delving into the Trump tax returns story, including a reference to the 1924 law "that allows the chairmen of three tax committees in Congress to ask the U.S. Treasury secretary for the returns of any taxpayer." The analysis explains how one of those chairmen, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal (D-MA), is attempting to obtain the tax returns from the Treasury Department. However, it adds, "Republicans say Neal's is a violation of Trump's privacy and not part of legitimate government oversight, with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin warning it amounts to weaponizing the tax code. The Ways and Means Committee sued Mnuchin and IRS Commissioner Charles Rettig in July to force them to surrender the returns."

Commentary: Tax Return The Latest Black Mark On Mnuchin's Treasury Tenure. Slate (10/7, Stahl, 1.58M) reports in its This Is Still Happening feature "in which Slate will attempt to offer an update on Cabinet-level corruption" that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has been implicated in many, many, many scandals – big, medium, and small – since President Donald Trump first nominated" him to be Treasury Secretary. The piece touches on the tax return story, saying that "Mnuchin, fulfilling an earlier promise to defy any such request, responded in May that he would not be furnishing the tax returns as the statute obligated. This came after Mnuchin acknowledged that his department had communicated with the White House about how it should handle the issue."

In his Politico Magazine (10/7, 4.24M) column, Jack Shafer writes that while Trump "has a special talent for powershifting through the gears of the news cycle to blow past whatever current event might threaten his presidency," the recent whistleblower and tax return stories and the pushback from the GOP on Trump's actions in Syria demonstrate that "suddenly Trump's best-defense-is-a-good-offense talents are no longer sufficient to fend off the damage." Shafer references the IRS whistleblower who "has filed a complaint alleging that a political appointee at the Treasury Department attempted to interfere with the annual audit of the president or vice president's tax returns."

US-China Trade Talks Set To Resume Thursday.

The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Zumbun, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that long-frozen trade talks between the US and China are set to resume this week amid signs of a potential thaw as Chinese begins buying US soybeans again. However, Reuters (10/7, Lawder) reports, "prospects for progress in U.S.-China trade talks dimmed on Monday after Washington blacklisted Chinese companies over Beijing's treatment of predominantly Muslim ethnic minorities, and President Donald Trump said a quick trade deal was unlikely." AFP (10/8, Gillison) reports that Trump "said Monday he would prefer to strike a comprehensive trade bargain with China, in comments days before top US and Chinese officials are due to resume trade talks in Washington." Fox News (10/7, Halon, 27.59M) reports on its website that Atlas Organization founder Jonathan Ward "is cautioning against unrealistic expectations as U.S.-China trade deal talks resume this week in Washington." The Hill (10/7, Samuels, 2.98M), Fox Business (10/7, Martin, 1.73M), and behind a paywall Law360 (10/7, Subscription Publication, 8K) reported on this story. Each of these write-ups remarked that the trade talks are scheduled to resume Thursday at a meeting between Vice Premier Liu He and other Chinese officials and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and US Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer.

28 Chinese Entities Added To US Commerce Department's Export Blacklist. The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Zumbun, O'Keeffe, Mauldin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported on Monday, the US added 28 Chinese entities to an export blacklist in light of their role in the repression of Muslim minorities in northwestern China. Targeted entities include video-surveillance and facial-recognition companies Hangzhou Hikvision Digital Technology, Megvii Technology Inc. and SenseTime Group Ltd. They join telecom giant Huawei, added in May. Additional coverage is available from The New York Times (10/7, Swanson, 18.61M), CNBC (10/7, Novet, 3.62M), BNN Bloomberg \(CAN\) (10/7), and The Verge (10/7, 2.05M).

However, the Wall Street Journal (10/7, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in a separate article that US-China trade talks will resume as planned on Thursday, despite the decision to blacklist the Chinese entities.

MSNBC Analysis: Trump's Impeachment Strategy Backfiring As More Whistleblowers Emerge.

In an analysis, Steve Benen of MSNBC (10/7, 7.86M) writes that the President's strategies to weather the impeachment process are "to tear down the whistleblower's credibility and discredit his or her complaint," and to mount "an aggressive and public campaign against" the initial whistleblower which "might discourage others from coming forward." However, Benen says that both strategies have "failed," as "a second whistleblower has come forward with information about President Donald Trump's call with the president of Ukraine, according to attorneys representing that whistleblower and the intelligence official whose earlier complaint set off a series of events that led to an impeachment inquiry." This is in addition to the "Treasury Department's acting inspector general" looking into another whistleblower's complaint regarding "whether the Trump administration acted improperly during its ongoing fight with House Democrats over releasing President Trump's tax returns."

In an analysis, Vox (10/7, Yglesias, 2.27M) lays out the possible ways the impeachment process could end. The analysis concludes with the possibility that, through a series of successions and removals, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin could become president.

Release Of Treasury-Sanctioned Drug-Trafficking Taliban Prisoner Prompts Questions.

The New York Times (10/7, Mashal, 18.61M) reports that a prisoner exchange has been completed in Afghanistan, swapping "11 Taliban prisoners...in return for three Indian engineers after months of negotiations with local Taliban commanders in northern Baghlan province, where the engineers were kidnapped last year." Among the Taliban prisoners was Abdul Rashid Baluch, "who was on the United States Treasury Department's 'Specially Designated Global Terrorist' list and was arrested in a narcotics raid five years ago." The report says "the release of Mr. Baluch, especially if it is tied to the United States peace talks with the Taliban, once again brings to the fore the concern that the American negotiations did not address the complexity of the conflict — and particularly how to consider the Taliban's increasing hold on the massive drug trade in the country." The BBC World News \(UK\) (10/7, 3.28M) also reported on this story.

House Finance Committee To Merge Money Laundering Bills, Send To House Floor.

CQ Roll Call (10/7, Saksa, 154K) reports the Democrats on the House Financial Services Committee intend to merge "a pair of anti-money laundering bills" and send them as one bill "to the House floor soon after Congress returns from recess." One bill, which the committee has already passed, "would update the framework used by federal investigators to combat money laundering." That bill "would beef up staffing at the Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN), encourage more coordination between FinCEN and Justice Department investigators, require the attorney general and Treasury secretary to consider raising the monetary threshold for banks filing suspicious activity reports and update the definition of "coins and currency" to include cryptocurrencies." The other bill would "would curb the use of anonymous shell companies."

Federal Deficit Highest Since 2012, Says CBO.

The Hill (10/7, Elis, 2.98M) reports, "the federal budget deficit for 2019 is estimated at $984 billion, a hefty 4.7 percent of gross domestic product (GDP) and the highest since 2012, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) said on Monday." The CBO has "warned that the nation's debt is on an unsustainable path. Higher levels of debt increase borrowing costs, make it harder for the government to battle economic downturns and increase the share of future spending devoted to paying off interest costs." The report says "the final Treasury Department figures for the fiscal year, which ended on Sept. 30, will be published later this month and could include worse news." The AP (10/7) also reported on this story.

Leading National News

Trump: "'Partisan' Whistleblower Was Very Wrong" About Zelensky Call.

President Trump tweeted Monday morning, "'IG: DECLASSIFIED INFORMATION CONTRADICTS THE WHISTLEBLOWER.'" @foxandfriends But why are people surprised? The 'partisan' Whistleblower was very wrong on what was said on my perfect, 'no pressure,' call with the Ukrainian President. Bring in another Whistleblower from the bench!" The President later tweeted videos of Fox News commentators Tammy Bruce and Steve Hilton discussing impeachment.

The Washington Post (10/7, Kim, Bade, 14.2M) reports on "concerns among constitutional experts and lawmakers that Trump's hostile stance toward congressional oversight is undermining the separation of powers in a way that could have long-term implications for democracy." The Trump White House "is far from the first to clash with Congress's intent on exercising oversight, although experts say this administration's efforts to battle Capitol Hill are unprecedented."

Democrats Consider "Extreme Measures" To Protect Whistleblower's Identity. Norah O'Donnell said in opening the CBS Evening News (10/7, lead story, 2:31, 4.07M), "In a city which leaks like a broken faucet, House Democrats are considering extreme measures to protect the identity of a whistleblower who raised alarms about President Trump possibly pressuring Ukraine to investigate Joe Biden and his son." CBS' Major Garrett: "President Trump again denounced the House impeachment inquiry that continues to ensnare more parts of his Administration." Trump: "It's lucky that I'm the President, because I guess a lot of people couldn't handle it. I sort of thrive on it." Garrett: "A second whistleblower has emerged, this one according to lawyers, with direct knowledge of President Trump's phone call with Ukraine's President. The House Intelligence Committee is considering extreme measures to protect the first whistleblower's identity, such as interviewing the person behind a curtain and obscuring his or her voice." Rep. Raja Krishnamoorthi (D-IL): "We have to take all precautions, because we cannot burn his or her identity." Krishnamoorthi said on CNN's Situation Room (10/7, 708K), "We're kind of in an unusual situation where the President is basically threatening the whistleblower. ... And so this extremely unusual situation unfortunately demands extreme measures."

The Washington Post (10/7, Bade, Miller, Nakashima, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports the steps under consideration "include having the whistleblower testify from a remote location and obscuring the individual's appearance and voice, these officials said." Axios (10/7, Basu, 521K) says Trump "has repeatedly sought to undermine the credibility of the whistleblower whose allegations have helped set off an impeachment inquiry, suggesting on numerous occasions that the whistleblower is sort of a 'spy' or partisan actor and claiming that he deserves to 'meet' his accuser."

The Washington Examiner (10/7, Dunleavy, 448K) reports, "The first Ukraine whistleblower wrote a two-page memo one day after" the phone call between Trump and Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky "detailing secondhand information provided by a White House official [who] described the call as 'crazy,' 'frightening,' and 'completely lacking in substance related to national security,' according to the memo."

Whistleblower's Attorney Representing Second Individual. In the lead story on NBC Nightly News (10/7, lead story, 2:11, Holt, 5.87M), Hallie Jackson reported on "new fallout from the emergence of a second whistleblower, this one with firsthand knowledge of that controversial call in July between President Trump and the leader of Ukraine, according to the attorney for the first whistleblower." On ABC World News Tonight (10/7, story 2, 2:50, Muir, 6.92M), Cecilia Vega reported, "The attorney who represents the original whistleblower is now also representing a second person, a member of the intelligence community who claims to have firsthand information" about the call.

Trump attorney Jay Sekulow said on Fox News' Hannity (10/7, 535K), "They are now talking about a second whistleblower, and my statement on that is, so what? We have already released a transcript. Is it really relevant what some other person who may or may not have heard the conversation thought about it?"

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/7, 831K), House Minority Leader McCarthy said, "All of the world knows more about this phone call" than the first whistleblower did when he filed his complaint based on "hearsay." McCarthy added, "We now have the transcript. Had the Speaker of the House...waited 48 hours, we wouldn't be where we are today and tearing this country apart." Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/7), McCarthy said that in the past, when Congress moved towards impeaching a president, it had "an impeachment inquiry...because it is such an important thing. You are asking to remove" the "democratically...elected" president, and "you should not take lightly."

AP Analysis: White House Plans To "Stall" And "Attack" As Impeachment Defense.

The AP (10/7, Colvin) reports the White House "is finalizing a high-stakes strategy to counter the impeachment threat" against President Trump: "Stall. Obfuscate. Attack. Repeat. Trump aides are honing their approach after two weeks of what allies have described as a listless and unfocused response to the impeachment probe. One expected step" is a letter to House Speaker Pelosi "rejecting the inquiry because Democrats haven't held a vote on the matter and moving to all but cease cooperation with Capitol Hill on key oversight matters."

Politico (10/7, 4.29M) reports, "Some Trump allies believe a war room could serve as a nerve center to coordinate messaging across its administration while protecting [Trump] from what might be released from an agency, or a seemingly obscure official." However, Politico says "White House staffers remain divided on the necessity of such a centralized operation inside the West Wing to coordinate the political and press response to the impeachment inquiry," in part because "no one can decide who should run it, or how it should be structured, and the president continues to prefer to fight by leaning on his own public comments and Twitter feed."

Eugene Robinson writes in his Washington Post (10/7, 14.2M) column, "President Trump's defense against impeachment is bombastic, full of lies and incoherent to the point of lunacy, which is no surprise. Republicans are bedowning themselves to pretend Trump is making sense – and that, sadly, is also no surprise." Robinson says Trump "can cling to the fact that lily-livered Republicans still fear his wrath."

Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (10/7, 14.2M) column that while the Constitution "contains seven articles," President Trump's "version goes to 12. ... Article VIII gives Trump the power to solicit and receive the help of foreign governments in his election. Article IX gives Trump the power to ignore congressional subpoenas and to block witnesses from testifying." Article X gives Attorney General Barr "the power to reach out directly to foreign leaders and intelligence services – without involving the FBI or the Justice Department's international personnel – to solicit information that could help Trump's reelection. Article XI exempts Trump from turning over his tax returns, no matter how many laws or court orders say otherwise. ... And Article XII gives Trump the power to impose extralegal punishments, including the impeachment of Congress.”

House Democrats Seek Information Regarding Suspension Of Aid To Ukraine.

The New York Times (10/7, Fandos, 18.61M) says House Democratic investigators are “trying to unearth communications and other records that might shed light on two enduring mysteries of the United States’ interactions with Ukraine: why the White House decided last summer to abruptly suspend the $391 million aid package, and whether it was connected to contemporaneous efforts” by President Trump and Rudy Giuliani to pressure Ukraine to investigate former Vice President Joe Biden and his son Hunter Biden. The White House “has denied that the aid was being withheld to exert leverage over the Ukrainians, but at least one senior diplomat worried privately that that was precisely what was happening, and the administration has been unwilling to answer questions about the timeline and rationale for the decision.”

The New York Times (10/7, 18.61M) editorializes, “As the Ukraine scandal continues to unfold, there has been much disagreement about whether Mr. Trump withheld nearly $400 million in military aid...in an attempt to bully its government into pursuing investigations that would benefit him politically.” The Times recalls that it “was vocal” in criticizing the “campaign-finance practices of the Clinton era,” but those “seem nearly quaint now. Mr. Trump isn't yet known to be hosting pay-to-play pajama parties or dialing for dollars from his office. He has warped American foreign policy and directed administration officials to put the interests of his re-election campaign above those of American national security.”

Giuliani Denies Effort By Executives, GOP Donors To Steer Ukraine Gas Contracts. The Washington Post (10/7, Wagner, Shammass, 14.2M) says Giuliani on Monday pushed back against an AP report “detailing efforts by business executives and Republican donors to steer Ukrainian gas contracts to companies controlled by Trump allies.” Giuliani wrote, “AP just falsely asserted I was proposing a deal in Ukraine earlier this year, meanwhile the Biden Family gets pass.” The Miami Herald (10/7, Daugherty, Hall, 1.09M) reports South Florida businessmen Igor Fruman and Lev Parnas, who have ties to Giuliani and who “peddled supposedly explosive information from Ukraine about corruption involving Joe Biden and Hillary Clinton,” missed a Monday deadline for documents “and do not plan to appear for depositions scheduled for Thursday and Friday.” Reuters (10/7, Zengerle, Sullivan) also reports.

Perry Says He Did Not Pressure Ukraine To Put Two Americans On Naftogaz Board.

Bloomberg (10/7, Natter, 4.73M) reports Energy Secretary Perry “recommended to the Ukrainian government a former political donor and a Houston oil executive as advisers, an Energy Department official familiar with the matter said Monday.” However, Politico (10/7, Adragna, 4.29M) reports that Perry himself “denied that he pressed the Ukrainian government” to put the two on the board. Perry “acknowledged making the recommendations to Ukraine’s state-owned natural gas company Naftogaz, but said he did so only at the request of that country’s government.” Perry also said he had pressed President Trump to make the July call to Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky “that is at the center of the impeachment inquiry.” Perry said, “Absolutely, I asked the President multiple times, ‘Mr. President, we think it is in the United States’ and in Ukraine’s best interest that you and the President of Ukraine have conversations, that you discuss the options that are there.”

Giuliani Says He Is Preparing Lawsuits Against Key Democrats.

Yahoo! News (10/7, Nazaryan, 12.82M) reports Rudy Giuliani “says he is working with outside lawyers to prepare lawsuits against prominent Democrats” such as House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff and Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-MI). In “several conversations with Yahoo News, Giuliani dismissed at least one critic of such a lawsuit as a ‘nitwit,’ arguing that there were no constitutional constraints on bringing such litigation against sitting members of Congress.”

Barr, Australia’s Dutton Meet In Washington Amid Controversy.

Reuters (10/7, Sullivan) reports Attorney General Barr and Australian Minister for Home Affairs Peter Dutton “met in Washington to begin negotiating an agreement that would enable police to obtain faster access to electronic evidence in the other country.” The two said they “would work to bolster law-enforcement ties as the two countries are separately cooperating on a politically charged probe” regarding the origins of the US inquiry into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election.

Sondland Scheduled To Testify Tuesday.

Politico (10/7, Cheney, 4.29M) says that on Tuesday, the House Intelligence Committee “is slated to hear from” US Ambassador to the EU Gordon Sondland, whose texts with other diplomats “indicated that a White House visit and military aid to Ukraine may have been contingent on” Ukrainian President Zelensky investigating the Bidens. The AP (10/7) says Sondland “has become a key figure in the [impeachment] probe.”

Bloomberg (10/7, 4.73M) reports that George Kent, “the State Department official in Washington who oversees Ukraine policy,” did not testify Monday “as was initially requested.” Marie Yovanovitch, the US Ambassador to Ukraine “from 2016 until Trump recalled her earlier this year,” is “still set to testify on Friday before the Intelligence, Foreign Affairs and Oversight and Reform committees.”

Portman Criticizes Trump’s Actions, But Does Not Back Impeachment.

The Hill (10/7, Carney, 2.98M) reports Sen. Rob Portman (R-OH) “said on Monday that President Trump shouldn’t have asked China or Russia to investigate former Vice President Biden, but stressed that he didn't think the conduct warranted impeachment." Portman told the Columbus Dispatch, "The President should not have raised the Biden issue on that call, period. It's not appropriate for a president to engage a foreign government in an investigation of a political opponent."

WPost Analysis: State Department "Demoralized And Resentful" Under Pompeo.

The Washington Post (10/7, DeYoung, Hudson, Dawsey, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports the State Department workforce "is increasingly demoralized and resentful" under Secretary of State Pompeo's leadership "amid a growing belief that he has subordinated its mission and abandoned colleagues in the service of President Trump's political aims. The 'prevailing mood is low and getting lower, if it can,' said Thomas R. Pickering, a diplomatic dean" who served in diplomatic roles "under six presidents of both parties." State Department officials "strongly supported" allocation of funds to Ukraine, "but there is no indication that Pompeo objected when Trump withheld all of the assistance" while Trump and Rudy Giuliani pressed Ukraine's government to investigate former Vice President Joe Biden and his son. "Most worrisome to the department," the Post says, "is concern that Pompeo did not intervene to protect U.S. diplomats either enlisted by Giuliani to assist his efforts or punished for being insufficiently committed to the cause," according to "more than a dozen current and former officials."

Congressional Aides Say Bidens Could Be Forced To Testify In Senate Trial Of Trump.

The Washington Times (10/7, Dinan, 492K) reports former Vice President Joe Biden and Hunter Biden "could be forced to testify if the Senate ends up holding an impeachment trial of President Trump, say congressional aides." The aides say Biden and the several Democratic senators seeking the Democratic presidential nomination could "be forced to be in D.C. at a critical moment in the presidential campaign" as a trial took place.

The Federalist's Hemingway: Biden's Brother Involved In Ukraine Business Dealings. The Daily Caller (10/7, Olohan, 716K) reports Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist appeared on Fox News' Fox & Friends Monday to discuss "the Biden family's business dealings in Ukraine." Both Hunter Biden and Joe Biden's "brother James Biden have been involved in shady business dealings, Hemingway said." Hemingway said, "It's not just his son. It's also his younger brother James who is involved in some of this as well. There has been a little bit of news coverage about it."

Kremlin Questions Reliability Of WPost Story On Trump-Putin Calls.

Reuters (10/7, Auyezov) reports Russian President Vladimir Putin's office has "dismissed as untrustworthy" a Washington Post report about Putin's telephone conversations with President Trump. The Post reported last Friday that "in one of his first calls with a foreign leader after becoming U.S. president in 2017, Trump had 'fawned' over Putin and apologized for not calling him earlier. In another call, Trump reportedly sought advice from Putin on how to befriend" North Korea's Kim Jong-un. Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters, "We are not sure that this article can be regarded as reliable information."

Trump Signs "Limited" US-Japan Trade Deal.

The AP (10/7, Wiseman) reports that President Trump on Monday signed "a limited trade agreement...with Japan, a deal that would win back benefits American farmers lost when Trump pulled out of a broader Asia-Pacific pact his first week in office." According to the AP, "U.S. farmers have been operating at a disadvantage in Japan since Trump withdrew from the Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement, which had been negotiated by the Obama administration."

Bloomberg (10/7, Sink, Dlouhy, Murray, 4.73M) reports that "the accords on agriculture and digital trade cover about $55 billion worth of commerce between the world's largest- and third-biggest economies." USTR Lighthizer said at a ceremony in the Oval Office alongside Trump. The agreement is a "game changer for our farmers" and ranchers, Trump said at the event.

In an article titled "Where The U.S.-Japan Trade Deal Falls Short Of Trans-Pacific Pact Abandoned By Trump," Reuters (10/7, Lawder) reports "the U.S.-Japan agriculture-centered deal is notable for what it leaves out." The deal "does not include the bulk of products that make up the bilateral trading relationship, notably autos from Japan and aircraft, liquefied propane gas and semiconductor manufacturing equipment from the United States." But on the digital side, the "deal is in line with the new U.S.-Mexico-Canada agreement, regarded as an upgrade from TPP on digital economy issues."

Reuters (10/7) reports that Trump and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe "held a signing ceremony on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly last month after reaching a limited deal."

NYTimes Report: Congress Expected To Ratify USMCA Within Weeks.

The New York Times (10/7, Hulse, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports that "the escalating impeachment drama between Congress and the White House that has all but doomed hopes of most legislative progress this fall has instead enhanced the prospects for approval, within weeks, of one major initiative: a sweeping new trade agreement among the United States, Canada and Mexico." According to the Times, "Top lawmakers in both parties and others closely following the talks said that substantial progress had been made in resolving the sticking points, and that a decisive House vote on the accord to replace the North American Free Trade Agreement could occur before Congress departed for Thanksgiving."

Kudlow Offers Optimistic Take As US-China Trade Talks Resume.

Reuters (10/7, Lawder) reports that in Washington on Monday, US and Chinese deputy trade negotiators "launched a new round of talks...with neither side showing any signs of giving ground." According to Reuters, "About 30 Chinese officials, led by Vice Finance Minister Liao Min, entered the U.S. Trade Representative's office for two days of negotiations, to be followed by the first minister-level trade talks in more than two months." Reuters says "the talks are getting underway about a week before a scheduled increase in U.S. tariffs on $250 billion worth of Chinese goods, to 30% from 25%," which President Trump "has said...will take effect if no progress is made in the negotiations."

NEC Director Kudlow said on Fox News (10/7, 896K), "Recently some of the statements coming out of Beijing have been a little more positive. They've been in the market buying some agriculture commodities from the US – soybeans, pork and wheat and other things. That's a good sign. The mood music, the psychology seems to be a little better. So, let's see what they come up with. We are open to looking at whatever they have for us." Kudlow added that "we will see what our Chinese friends have to offer later in the week. It is possible...that some additional progress will be made with China towards the end of the week."

Politico (10/7, Marshall, 4.29M) reports that Kudlow insisted on Monday that "there would be no connection between...Trump's request that China investigate the Bidens and this week's renewed trade deal talks between the two global superpowers." Kudlow said, "The President's view is there is no linkage between that and the trade talks. ... I guarantee there will be no linkage." Reuters (10/7, Schroeder) says Kudlow also told reporters Monday that while the Trump Administration has "begun studying U.S. investor protections in China...delisting Chinese companies traded on U.S. exchanges 'is not on the table.'" Kudlow is quoted as saying, "The delisting is not on the table. I don't know where that came from. ... What we're looking at, actually, is investor protection, US investor protections...transparency and compliance with a number of laws."

US Farmers Hope For Continued Sales To China As Trade Negotiators Come To Washington. The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Zumbun, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a Chinese trade delegation is returning to Washington, a possible sign of a thawing of tensions between the two sides. The visit comes on the heels of some of the largest purchases of US agricultural products by the Chinese in over a year. US Soybean Export Council CEO Jim Sutter said, "Soybeans are a barometer for how the whole thing is going. ... I think we're just now building up momentum again." Still, the Journal reports, US farmers will need sustained purchases by Chinese buyers going forward if they are to recover from the slump in exports that has lasted more than a year.

US Blacklists 28 Chinese Entities Over Human Rights Violations.

The New York Times (10/7, Swanson, 18.61M) reports the Administration "said Monday that it had added 28 Chinese organizations to a United States blacklist, effectively blocking those entities from purchasing American products." The 28 entities have "all been implicated in human rights violations and abuses in China's campaign targeting Uighurs and other predominantly Muslim minorities in the autonomous region of Xinjiang, according to a Commerce Department filing."

Bloomberg (10/7, Donnan, Leonard, 4.73M) reports "the companies include two video surveillance companies – Hangzhou Hikvision Digital Technology Co. and Zhejiang Dahua Technology Co. – that by some accounts control as much as a third of the global market for video surveillance and have cameras all over the world." According to the article, "the blacklisting of these firms has been long in the making and national security advisers for months have been pushing for the president to move forward on the plan." However, "the timing is highly provocative, coming just days before China's Vice Premier Liu He is scheduled to arrive in Washington for high-stakes trade talks being watched by financial markets around the world."

Reuters (10/7, Shepardson) reports US officials "said the announcement was not tied to this week's resumption of trade talks with China."

US Inserting Legal Protections For Tech Companies Into Trade Deals.

The New York Times (10/7, McCabe, Swanson, 18.61M) reports the Administration has "begun inserting legal protections into recent trade agreements that shield online platforms like Facebook, Twitter and YouTube from lawsuits, a move that could help lock in America's tech-friendly regulations around the world even as they are being newly questioned at home." The protections have recently been included in the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement and an accord with Japan that President Trump signed on Monday. American negotiators have proposed working in "the language in other prospective deals, including with the European Union, Britain and members of the World Trade Organization."

First Lady Keeps Up Busy Schedule Despite Impeachment Imbroglio.

The Washington Post (10/7, Yuan, 14.2M) reports under the headline "Melania Trump Seems Unfazed By Her Husband's Possible Impeachment" that "from the looks of [the First Lady's] unusually packed schedule, you'd never guess that a member of her immediate family is facing an impeachment inquiry." She made an appearance at Drug Enforcement Administration headquarters Monday to promote her Be Best campaign in just the latest "time in the past two weeks...that the first lady has put herself in the spotlight while seeming to ignore any of the chaos surrounding her husband."

First Lady Decries Marketing Of E-Cigarettes To Children.

The AP (10/7, Superville) reports that First Lady Melania Trump said Monday that “companies ‘must stop’ marketing e-cigarettes to children, saying they are addictive and dangerous.” The First Lady is quoted as saying, “It is important to me that we all work to educate children and families about the dangers associated with this habit. ... Marketing this addictive product to children must stop.”

Massachusetts Reports Its First Vaping Death. ABC World News Tonight (10/7, story 10, 0:12, Muir, 6.57M) reported that Massachusetts has reported “its first vaping-related death. A patient in her 60s dying from a severe lung condition linked to e-cigarettes.”

Kroger, Walgreens To Stop Selling E-Cigarettes. Reuters (10/7, Balu, Naidu) reports that Kroger Co. and Walgreens Boots Alliance Inc. have announced they will “stop selling e-cigarettes at their stores, amid heightened regulatory scrutiny of the product and reports of lung disease and some deaths linked to vaping.”

Two School Districts Sue Juul. The New York Times (10/7, Hassan, 18.61M) reports that two school districts have filed suit against e-cigarette manufacturer Juul, “accusing it of endangering students and forcing educators to divert time and money to fight an epidemic of nicotine addiction.” The St. Charles, Missouri and Olathe, Kansas school districts “say Juul explicitly marketed its products to youths, leaving schools to shoulder the costs of stopping students from vaping, disciplining them when they break school rules and providing support services when they become addicted.”

Experts: FAA Has Not Addressed Fire Danger Posed By Vaping Devices On Planes. The Washington Post (10/7, Laris, 14.2M) reports that US passengers “bring an estimated 2.3 billion electronic devices on planes each year, and safety experts say federal regulators have struggled to keep up with the deluge, often deferring to airlines to manage potential dangers.” According to an FAA database, “e-cigarettes and the rechargeable lithium-ion batteries that power them have caused smoke or fire incidents on planes or at airports more than 30 times in three years.” A Post analysis of the FAA data found that “in addition to the e-cigarette incidents, the FAA recorded more than 65 other cases of smoking, sparking and flaming lithium-ion batteries in laptops, tablets, phones and other devices, including power packs, drill batteries and rechargeable socks.” The Post adds, “Some advocates – and even some inside the airline industry – say federal regulators have not been aggressive enough in addressing the risks.”

WSJournal Praises Nobel Winners’ Research.

The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that the 2019 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine, which was awarded to Americans William Kaelin Jr. and Gregg Semenza and Sir Peter Ratcliffe of Britain for their research into how cells adapt when oxygen levels are decreased is an example of how better insights into human physiology is improving medicine.

Volker Leaving McCain Institute.

The AP (10/7) reports that Kurt Volker, the Trump Administration’s former special envoy to Ukraine, said he is resigning from his post as the director of the McCain Institute at Arizona State University. Politico (10/7, 4.29M) reports that Volker “resigned from his role at the State Department a little over a week ago, and his resignation as the head of the D.C.-based think tank came days after he appeared as Democrats’ first witness in their widening impeachment probe, turning over damaging text messages that appeared to undermine...Trump’s claims that he did not seek to pressure Ukraine into investigating his political opponents.”

Trump Touts Economic Numbers.

President Trump tweeted on Monday, “‘Incomes much higher under Trump than Bush, Obama.’ @foxandfriends And almost everything else is better also (except I am driving the Deep State, and the Radical Left, Do Nothing Democrats, CRAZY)!”

Trump continued on Twitter, “Heritage Foundation ‘These numbers are blockbusters. Just since Donald Trump took office, Median Family Incomrs are up over $4,100. In 8 years under President Obama, they only went up $1000. In one third the time, President Trump has increased incomes 4 times as much, and that ... (10/7, 16.75M) doesn’t even include the almost $2000 that the families got from the Trump Tax Cut.’ Stephen Moore, Freedomworks That means $5000 to $6000 more in disposable yearly income that Americans have right now because of President Trump!”

Powell Stresses Fed’s Independence, Pushing Back Against Trump’s Pressure.

The AP (10/7, Smith) reports Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell on Monday “stressed the importance of an independent central bank ‘absolutely free’ from politics in the wake of increasing pressure from President Donald Trump urging the central bank to lower interest rates.” Powell addressed “a crowd of hundreds in Salt Lake City at the premiere of a documentary about former Federal Reserve Chairman Marriner Eccles, a Utah resident before he died.” Powell did not refer to Trump “by name in his brief remarks in Utah but highlighted Eccles’ work to safeguard the central bank from outside influence.” He said, “Perhaps most importantly from my perspective as Fed Chair, he is responsible more than any other person for the fact that the United States today has an independent central bank – a central bank able to make decisions in the long-term best interest of the economy, without regard to the political pressures of the moment.”

Politico (10/7, Guida, 4.29M) reports Powell said, “I leave you with this statement from Marriner, inscribed on a plaque in the Eccles Building: ‘The management of the central bank must be absolutely free from the dangers of control by politics and by private interests, singly or combined.’”

Kudlow Predicts Fed Will Cut Rates One Or Two More Times. NEC Director Kudlow was asked on Fox News (10/7, 896K)

about the possibility of an interest rate cut at the end of the month. Kudlow said, "The markets are signaling the Fed will cut their target rate at least one more time and probably two more times. That is a view we hold, and the President has been very clear on that. Let's get rid of any obstacles to economic growth, okay? I can't control Europe, I can't control other parts of the world. Our own central bank, however, could give us an insurance policy and remove an obstacle to growth. I think they will. The markets are signaling that. And of course, the markets are always right."

Stocks Fall As Trade Talks Loom.

Reuters (10/7, Valetkevitch) reports stocks pulled back on Monday as "reports on the U.S.-China trade front kept investors cautious ahead of scheduled talks later in the week." The Dow Jones Industrial Average dropped 96.65 points to 26,477.07, the S&P 500 fell 13.38 points to 2,938.63, and the Nasdaq lost 26.18 points to 7,956.29.

GM-UAW Talks Hit Wall.

The Detroit News (10/7, Thibodeau, 825K) reports General Motors and the United Auto Workers union on Monday "entered the fourth week of contract negotiations since the union began a national strike against the automaker 22 days ago." Already "the longest national strike of an automaker in decades," it is "likely to stretch on judging by communication from both the UAW and GM over the weekend." The AP (10/7, Krisher) reports contract talks have "taken a turn for the worse, hitting a big snag over product commitments for U.S. factories, a union official wrote in an email to members." The letter from UAW Vice President Terry Dittes "says the union presented a proposal to the company Saturday." Dittes "said GM responded Sunday morning by reverting back to an offer that had been rejected and made few changes." GM's "proposal did nothing to address a host of items, Dittes wrote, specifying job security for members during the term of the four-year contract."

Strike Expected To Delay Production Of GM's 2020 Corvette Stingray. The Detroit Free Press (10/7, LaReau, 1.52M) reports GM's "much-anticipated Chevrolet 2020 Corvette Stingray will be delayed going to market because of the UAW strike, the Free Press has learned." According to the article, "two people familiar with GM's production plans said the automaker will have to delay the production and launch of eighth-generation Corvette as it works to catch up on production of the current model and retool the plant to prepare to build the new model. Neither of those two things can happen as scheduled because of the strike."

GE Freezes Pension Benefits For 20,000 Workers.

The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Gryta, Kellaher, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports General Electric said it will freeze pension plan benefits for about 20,000 US workers and offer pension buyouts to 100,000 former employees in an effort to cut its debt. GE said the moves would slash its pension deficit by up to $8 billion and its net debt by up to $6 billion.

Whistleblower Says Ethiopian Airlines Went Into Records After Max Crash.

The AP (10/7, Condon) reports, "Ethiopian Airlines' former chief engineer says in a whistleblower complaint filed with regulators that the carrier went into the maintenance records on a Boeing 737 Max jet a day after it crashed this year, a breach he contends was part of a pattern of corruption that included fabricating documents, signing off on shoddy repairs and even beating those who got out of line." Yonas Yeshanew, "who resigned this summer and is seeking asylum in the U.S., said that while it is unclear what, if anything, in the records was altered, the decision to go into them at all when they should have been sealed reflects a government-owned airline with few boundaries and plenty to hide." Yeshanew's criticism of Ethiopian's maintenance practices, "backed by three other former employees who spoke to AP, makes him the latest voice urging investigators to take a closer look at potential human factors in the Max saga and not just focus on Boeing's faulty anti-stall system."

Boeing Sued by Southwest Airlines Pilots On Lost Pay From Max Grounding. Bloomberg (10/7, Schlangenstein, 4.73M) reports the union for Southwest Airlines pilots sued Boeing, "saying the manufacturer rushed output of the 737 Max jet to stay competitive, withholding key information about a feature that contributed to two fatal crashes within five months." The suit said, "Boeing made a calculated decision to rush a re-engined aircraft to market to secure its single-aisle market share and prioritize its bottom line." The union "said it's seeking at least $115 million for damages sustained through the end of this year, primarily for lost pay and legal expenses."

Media Analyses: Trump Warns Turkey About Syria Incursion After Withdrawing US Troops.

Media reports cast President Trump's warning Monday afternoon to Turkey about overstepping in Syria as it prepares to invade the country as a response to widespread criticism – even from his Republican allies – of his decision earlier in the day to withdraw US troops from northern Syria.

In an article representative of the coverage, the New York Times (10/7, Baker, Jakes, 18.61M) reports that Trump, "defending his decision to clear the way for a Turkish military operation against America's Kurdish allies in northern Syria," said "it was 'time for us to get out' and let others 'figure the situation out.' But after Republican allies condemned the move, he pivoted sharply and said he would restrain Turkey." According to the Times, "The herky-jerky policy pronouncements kept supporters, foreign leaders, military officers and his own aides off balance as they tried to interpret Mr. Trump's meaning and anticipate its consequences."

Other media outlets also cast the Administration as sending conflicting messages Monday. The AP (10/7, BALDOR), for example, reports that Trump, "facing unusually wide criticism...sent out strong but conflicting signals on the 'endless war' in Syria." Trump first "declared US troops would step aside for an expected Turkish attack on Kurds who have fought alongside Americans for years but then threatened to destroy the Turks' economy if they went too far." The AP notes that "even Trump's staunchest Republican allies expressed outrage at the prospect of abandoning Syrian Kurds who had fought the Islamic State group with US troops." The "strong pushback on Capitol Hill...prompted Trump to recast his decision but with renewed bombast, portraying it as a threat to strangle Turkey if it carries out its announced intent to invade."

USA Today (10/7, Fritze, Jackson, 10.31M) too says "Trump defended a plan to move US troops out of Northern Syria" amid "a backlash Monday from GOP lawmakers." The Daily Caller (10/7, Caruso, 716K) says that during a press conference Monday afternoon, the President "emotionally describ[ed] how he has to write letters to the families of fallen soldiers." Said Trump, "It's time to come back home. But I can understand the other side of it, but if you go by the other side that means we should never, ever come home. We should never, ever come home and you know, I have to sign letters often to parents of young soldiers that were killed and it's the hardest thing I have to do in this job. I hate it. I hate it." The Washington Times (10/7, Howell, 492K) also reports the remarks, while the Washington Post (10/7, Sonmez, 14.2M) and USA Today (10/7, Jackson, 10.31M) report he also touted what he called his "great and unmatched wisdom" on the matter.

To Reuters (10/7, Pamuk, Butler), Trump's "harsh attack" on Turkey "seemed to be aimed at placating critics who accused him of abandoning the Syrian Kurds by pulling out US forces." To Bloomberg (10/7, Wingrove, Carey, 4.73M), Trump "appeared to backpedal after giving Turkey a green light to attack US-allied Kurdish forces in northern Syria."

In fact, US News & World Report (10/7, Shinkman, 2.4M) reports that a "senior administration official on an organized call with reporters appeared to contradict...Trump...late Monday, refuting interpretations of his statements from earlier in the day that prompted broad outrage from supporters and opponents alike." The official insisted that "the US is not removing its forces from Syria," but instead is relocating "roughly 50 special operations troops in northern Syria" to "a different part of the country." To US News, that "assertion, however, appears to conflict with a flurry of tweets the president issued Monday." Trump, for example, tweeted, "It is time for us to get out of these ridiculous Endless Wars, many of them tribal, and bring our soldiers home."

Axios (10/7, Lawler, 521K) too says "a senior administration official told reporters on a call Monday evening that Trump will withdraw the 50-100 special forces troops currently operating near the Turkey-Syria border, but is not pulling the US out of Syria entirely." The senior Administration official said Trump had determined Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan was "set on undertaking an operation in northern Syria" after months of threats and didn't want US troops to come under fire. The Washington Post (10/7, Ryan, Fahim, Dadouch, Deyoung, 14.2M) also reports that in his series of early morning tweets, the President "suggested that the United States was shouldering too much of the burden – and the cost – of fighting the Islamic State."

Calling it a "major shift in United States military policy in Syria," the New York Times (10/7, Schmitt, Haberman, Wong, 18.61M) says Trump's decision "goes against the recommendations of top officials in the Pentagon and the State Department who have sought to keep a small troop presence in northeast Syria to continue operations against the Islamic State, or ISIS, and to act as a critical counterweight to Iran and Russia." The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Nissenbaum, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also refers to a major shift in US policy.

The CBS Evening News (10/7, story 2, 2:40, O'Donnell, 4.29M) referred to it as a "surprise development" and Politico (10/7, Morgan, 4.29M) reports the decision by the President "took the Pentagon and the government's Syria point man by surprise -- and the decision defied the current thinking of President Donald Trump's national security leaders." According to Politico, the White House announcement late Sunday "upended military and State Department plans to deter a Turkish offensive," and "bucked views by top officials that the Turks' threat of an incursion against the Kurds was a bluff."

Jennifer Griffin said on Fox News Special Report (10/7, 1.53M), "The news was met with disappointment at the Pentagon. Officials who say they were blindsided call it a betrayal of a key ally that helped destroy ISIS." Barbara Starr said on CNN's The Lead (10/7, 685K), "There is deep concern here at the Pentagon on what will happen to the Kurds now and the extent to which the US military will once again be seen as deserting a vital ally at a critical time."

In an exclusive, Newsweek (10/7, LaPorta, 1.53M) quotes a "National Security Council source" as saying Trump got "rolled" during a phone call Sunday afternoon with Erdoğan. Trump, the official added, "was definitely out-negotiated and only endorsed the troop withdraw to make it look like we are getting something – but we are not getting something. The US national security has entered a state of increased danger for decades to come because the President has no spine and that's the bottom line."

Breitbart (10/7, Pollak, 673K), meanwhile, says the "change in US policy in Syria that triggered a media storm on Monday involves the redeployment of fewer than 25 troops from the Turkish border to elsewhere in Syria, a State Department official was quoted as saying." The Times of Israel quotes a "senior State Department official" as saying the US has pulled back a "very small number" of troops from areas along the Turkish border, and that have been moved only a "very short distance."

Bipartisan opposition to the move is widely reported. The CBS Evening News (10/7, story 2, 2:40, O'Donnell, 4.29M) said "the Democratic House Speaker and the Republican Senate Majority Leader rarely agree on anything, but tonight they are both speaking out against the President's plan." Reuters (10/7, Brice, Heavey, Chiacu) likewise calls it "a rare show of bipartisanship," and the Washington Times (10/7, Meier, 492K) refers to "a move rarely seen on Capitol Hill." Politico (10/7, Everett, 4.29M) reports, "From steadfast GOP allies and liberal Democrats...the blowback to Trump is coming from all angles, suggesting a real bipartisan pressure campaign that could force the president to reverse himself."

NBC Nightly News (10/7, story 3, 2:15, Holt, 6.4M) said the President "is facing sharp criticism for his plan...even sparking backlash from some of the President's allies," who are "calling it catastrophic and a grave mistake." ABC World News Tonight (10/7, lead story, 4:15, Muir, 6.57M) – the only network to lead with the story last night – reported "the President's move [is] sparking anger on Capitol Hill, including from some of the President's strongest supporters. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell saying, 'It would increase the risk that ISIS and other terrorist groups regroup.' Sen. Lindsey Graham calling Trump's decision 'irresponsible.'"

The Daily Caller (10/7, 716K) quotes Graham as saying yesterday on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/7, 831K), "This impulsive decision by the President has undone all the gains we've made, thrown the region into further chaos, Iran is licking their chops. ... If I'm an ISIS fighter I have got a second lease on life." Graham added, "To Turkey, you've destroyed the relationship, what little you had, with the US Congress, and I will do everything I can to sanction Turkey's military and their economy if they step one foot into Syria."

In what the Washington Post (10/7, Olorunnipa, 14.2M) calls "a rare public split with Trump," McConnell "said that a supermajority in the Senate disagreed with the president's abrupt withdrawal announcement, raising the specter of veto-proof action to oppose the decision." The AP (10/7, Peoples) reports McConnell warned that "an early US withdrawal 'would only benefit Russia, Iran' and Syrian President Bashar Assad," and also "would make it easier for ISIS to rebuild."

The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Wise, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) said the President was right to want to bring US troops home, but it would be "DISGRACEFUL if we sat idly by while Turkey slaughters the Kurds." Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) tweeted that it would be a "grave mistake" for the Administration to withdraw from Syria.

Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) told Politico (10/7, 4.29M), "This is a terribly unwise decision by the President to abandon our Kurdish allies, who have been our major partner in the fight against the Islamic State." Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) "also denounced the maneuver as 'a betrayal' which communicates to allies abroad that the U.S. is an unreliable partner." And Sen. Ben Sasse (R-NE) "warned the administration's 'bad decision will likely result in the slaughter of allies who fought with us, including women and children.'"

Rep. Adam Kinzinger (R-IL), asked on Fox News' The Story (10/7) how long it will take the Turks to invade, said, "I don't think it is going to take very long. We already hearing these reports of air strikes. It depends when they Kurds abandon these ISIS fighters. Think about if 10,000 ISIS fighters get released. The President keeps saying we have won this war against ISIS. We certainly have not won the war against ISIS." Kinzinger said on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (10/7, 743K) that "the President has to lead. That's where a lot of times when people look at public opinion polls, it's America's knee-jerk reaction to want to get out of any war. I understand that because they have to have leaders that explain why we're doing it." Bloomberg (10/7, Dennis, 4.73M), the Washington Examiner (10/7, Ferrechio, 448K), and the Daily Caller (10/7, Rodgers, 716K), among other news outlets, also report the reaction from Republican lawmakers.

On its editorial page, the New York Times (10/7, 18.61M) writes Trump "may walk his own decision back once again, in part or in whole. But what ally could look at the United States now and see a stalwart partner – and what foe could look at it and fear a determined adversary?"

A Washington Post (10/7, 14.2M) editorial says the White House statement announcing Trump's decision and his tweets that followed it "reflected a stunning ignorance of the situation on the ground," and a Wall Street Journal (10/7, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial warns that the withdrawal could jeopardize the gains made against ISIS.

Lionel Beehner, an assistant professor and Director of Research at West Point's Modern War Institute, writes in USA Today (10/7, 10.31M) that "the real fear is not that nobody will partner with us going forward. It's Washington's lack of a coherent strategy in Syria, going back to President Barack Obama. Syria is what happens when wars are left to fester and the fighting is outsourced to dubious groups."

Max Boot writes in his Washington Post (10/7, 14.2M) column, "Normally, a president facing impeachment argues that those proceedings are a grave distraction from his weighty foreign policy responsibilities, and that national security will suffer as a result. In President Trump's case, a distraction is a good thing, because when he focuses spastically and sporadically on foreign policy, he usually makes the situation far worse."

Kurds Accuse Trump Of "Stab In The Back." The AP (10/7, Mroue) reports that for Syria's Kurds, the Administration's "abrupt pull-back from positions in northeast Syria carries a sharp sting, reviving the community's memories over being abandoned in the past by the Americans and other international allies." The Washington Times (10/7, Wolfgang, 492K) reports Kurdish forces "accused President Trump of a 'stab in the back' on Monday hours after the White House announced US troops would vacate the area, giving a green light to Turkey to begin a long-awaited military operation against the group." a spokesman for the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) said, "There were assurances from the United States of America that it would not allow any Turkish military operations against the region. But the [President's] statement today was a surprise and we can say that it is a stab in the back for the SDF." On the CBS Evening News (10/7, story 3, 1:24, O'Donnell, 4.07M), Holly Williams said she spoke with SDF officials, who "told us they feel betrayed by the US. They are clearly very angry."

The New York Times (10/7, Hubbard, 18.61M) reports that "in addition to betraying the militia, the Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces, analysts said, the move could empower Turkey" and "create a void in the region that could benefit President Bashar al-Assad of Syria, Russia, Iran and the Islamic State."

Haley, McGurk Criticize Trump For Abandoning Kurds. Bloomberg (10/7, 4.73M) reports that Trump's decision "came after the biggest opponents to Trump's troop withdrawal demands in the past had left his orbit," former Defense Secretary James Mattis and former National Security Advisor John Bolton, who had "both...sought security guarantees for the US-allied Kurdish fighters, who did much of the heavy work to fight Islamic State." Bloomberg says former UN Ambassador Nikki Haley wrote, "The Kurds were instrumental in our successful fight against ISIS in Syria. Leaving them to die is a big mistake." Likewise, former US special envoy for Syria, Brett McGurk, "blasted the president's decision, saying the president 'blusters and then leaves our allies exposed when adversaries call his bluff or he confronts a hard phone call.'" The Washington Post (10/7, Blake, 14.2M) reports McGurk "took the occasion to not just criticize Trump's immediate decision; he used it to cast a picture of a president who makes rash life-or-death decisions without the appropriate amount of thought."

European Officials Also Criticize Move. The Washington Post (10/7, McAuley, Noack, 14.2M) reports that many European officials "were angered and taken aback...by the Trump administration's abrupt decision to withdraw US troops from the Syrian-Turkish border." In a statement, the French Foreign Ministry said, "Any unilateral action could have significant humanitarian consequences and would not provide the conditions for the safe and voluntary return of refugees to their areas of origin. It would undermine the stability of this region and our direct efforts on the ground." The Post says Norbert Röttgen, "head of the foreign affairs committee in the German parliament, was more direct," saying the US "troop withdrawal from northern Syria constitutes another abrupt and destabilizing foreign policy move by the United States."

Reuters (10/7) reports that French officials "have said in the past that a US withdrawal would force Paris to also draw back its troops and after a similar announcement by Trump in January, French President Emmanuel Macron had claimed he had convinced Trump to change his mind." Bloomberg (10/7, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also covers the reaction from France.

Pat Robertson "Absolutely Appalled" By Trump's Decision. The Hill (10/7, Coleman, 2.98M) reports Pat Robertson said Monday he is "absolutely appalled" by President Trump's decision to withdraw US troops from Syria. On his show "700 Club," Robertson said, "I am absolutely appalled that the United States is going to betray those Democratic forces in northern Syria, that we possibly are going to allow the Turkish to come in against the Kurds. The President of the United States is in danger of losing the mandate of Heaven if he permits this to happen." The Washington Examiner (10/7, Halaschak, 448K) reports Robertson also called Erdoğan a "thug."

Ohio Governor's Gun Proposal Leaves Out "Red Flag" Law.

USA Today (10/7, Balmert, Borchardt, 223K) reports Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine (R) "won't ask the Republican-controlled state Legislature for a 'red flag' law or mandatory background checks on private gun sales." Those were measures DeWine "proposed two months ago, days after a mass shooting in Dayton that left 10 people dead and 27 injured." But on Monday, DeWine "retreated from those proposals, opting instead for legislation he said lawmakers and Second Amendment advocates might support – or at least not tank immediately."

DeVos Could Be Sanctioned Over Student Debt Collection.

Bloomberg (10/7, Rosenblatt, 4.73M) reports Education Secretary DeVos "faces potential sanctions or a finding she's in contempt of court for continuing to collect on the debt of former students at bankrupt Corinthian Colleges Inc., going so far as seizing their tax refunds and wages." US Magistrate Judge Sallie Kim on Monday "said she was 'astounded' that the department violated her June order to stop collecting the debts from students, who had been promised refunds of their tuition." Saying she was "not sure if this is contempt or sanctions," Kim said that "at best it is gross negligence, at worst it's an intentional flouting of my order." She "ordered both sides to file arguments this month to assist in her final ruling on whether DeVos is in contempt."

Perry Denies Planning Imminent Departure.

Reuters (10/7, Sytas) reports that Energy Secretary Perry said Monday that "he had no plans to resign now or next month, denying a report that he was expected to announce his resignation in November." Perry is quoted as saying, "I'm here, I'm serving. ... They've been writing the story for at least nine months now. One of these days they will probably get it right, but it's not today, it's not tomorrow, it's not next month." Also reporting is Bloomberg (10/7, Seputyte, 4.73M).

Politico Report: Chao Met With Kentucky Officials Far More Than Those From Any Other State.

Politico (10/7, 4.29M) reports that "in her first 14 months as Transportation secretary, Elaine Chao met with officials from Kentucky, which her husband Mitch McConnell represents in the Senate, vastly more often than those from any other state." According to Politico, "25 percent of Chao's scheduled meetings with local officials of any state from January 2017 to March 2018 were with Kentuckians, who make up only about 1.3 percent of the U.S. population. The next closest were Indiana and Georgia, with 6 percent of meetings each, according to Chao's calendar records, the only ones that have been made public." Politico says that "at least five of Chao's 18 meetings with local Kentuckians were requested in emails from McConnell staffers."

Administration Orders Agencies To Limit Unions In Federal Workplace.

The Washington Post (10/7, Yoder, 14.2M) reports, "Federal agencies have been told to carry out Trump administration directives aimed at restricting the role of unions in the federal workplace and giving agencies the maximum discretion in taking disciplinary actions against employees, now that a court ban against many of those policies has been lifted." The Office of Personnel Management said in a memo issued Friday that the policies "are in full force and effect," and agencies should "ensure that they are fully compliant with all requirements or are taking steps to become compliant with requirements at the soonest feasible opportunity." The memo "came just several days after a court lifted a year-long injunction in an union-sponsored lawsuit against three executive orders issued in May 2018."

Baker: FBI Needs Strong Leadership That Barr Provides.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/7, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Thomas J. Baker, a retired FBI special agent and legal attaché, defends Attorney General Barr from recent attacks by Democrats and the media, arguing that Barr has the experience and character to be a strong leader for the FBI. Laying out the argument that Barr can restore the FBI's reputation, Baker points to Barr's history of not shrinking from tough decisions and making the correct call.

Trump Jr. Rallies Support For GOP Hopefuls During Lafayette Visit.

The AP (10/7) reports that Donald Trump Jr. "told hundreds of Republicans assembled Monday in Lafayette to vote for either" Rep. Ralph Abraham (R-LA) or Republican businessman Eddie Rispone in the Oct. 12 primary election, instead of Louisiana Gov. John Bel Edwards (D). The GOP hopefuls "appeared at the rally and touted their support of [President] Trump." The Monroe (LA) News Star (10/7, Hilburn, 64K) reports that Trump Jr. "was an enthusiastic warm-up act for President Donald Trump, who is traveling to Lake Charles Friday night on the eve of the Oct. 12 primary to rally Republicans." The GOP is hoping it "can turn out enough support to hold Edwards below 50% and force a Nov. 16 runoff." Said Trump Jr., "The status quo sucks right now. If you guys don't turn out you get a Democratic governor to keep these failed policies."

The Baton Rouge (LA) Advocate (10/7, Karlin, 399K) reports that over the past week, "Republicans have brought out their big guns to try to keep" Edwards "from winning reelection by garnering more than 50% of the vote Saturday, thereby forcing him into a runoff election with one of two major GOP opponents. President Donald Trump attacked the governor on Twitter before announcing Sunday he will visit Lake Charles the day before the election to rally support for" the GOP challengers – an appearance "bookend[ing] visits by Vice President Mike Pence, who rallied with the two candidates Saturday in New Orleans, and... Trump Jr., who stumped at the Cajundome in Lafayette on Monday."

Louisiana Gubernatorial Poll: Edwards 45%; Rispone 22%; Abraham 17%. In an online article, WAFB-TV Baton Rouge, LA (10/7, 32K) reports that a Mason-Dixon Polling and Strategies survey of 625 Louisiana likely voters, taken Oct. 1-4, shows Edwards leading the Oct. 12 all-party primary with 45 percent, followed by Rispone at 22 percent, and Abraham at 17 percent; 10 percent were undecided and 6 percent backed another candidate. If no candidate tops 50 percent in the primary election, the top two vote-getters will advance to a Nov. 16 runoff. The poll was commissioned by "the six Louisiana Gray Television stations." The Hill (10/7, Coleman, 2.98M) reports that the survey "found respondents supported" Edwards "in both theoretical run-off elections against the two GOP candidates, receiving 51 percent against Rispone and 53 percent against Abraham."

Federal Judge Dismisses Trump's Broad Claims To Immunity, Orders Tax Returns Released.

NBC Nightly News (10/7, story 2, 0:14, Holt, 5.87M) reported President Trump on Monday "lost a court battle to keep his tax returns secret, with the judge tossing out a suit to keep them from the Manhattan district attorney." The AP (10/7, Neumeister) reports that US District Judge Victor Marrero on Monday "ruled that New York City prosecutors can see" Trump's tax returns "for an investigation into such matters as the payment of hush money to porn star Stormy Daniels and a Playboy centerfold." According to the AP, Marrero "emphatically rejected Trump's attempt to keep his financial records under wraps, calling the president's broad claim of immunity from all criminal proceedings 'extraordinary' and 'an overreach of executive power' at odds with the Constitution." However, the AP adds that "for now, at least, the tax returns remain beyond the reach of prosecutors" because the President's defense team appealed the judge's ruling to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, "which put the matter on hold while it considers the case on an expedited basis."

Politico (10/7, 4.29M) says Marrero "issued a sharp rejection of longstanding Department of Justice opinions that say a president cannot be indicted or criminally prosecuted while in office, calling their conclusions 'not warranted' or backed up by the authority of the courts. ... 'The notion of ... presidential immunity from judicial process that the President here invokes, unqualified and boundless in its reach described above, cuts against the grain of these Constitutional precedents,' wrote Marrero, an appointee of President Bill Clinton in 1999."

USA Today (10/7, McCoy, 10.31M) reports "Marrero ruled that Trump would not suffer irreparable harm and was unlikely to succeed on the merits of his legal arguments, so the judge denied Trump's motions for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction as he dismissed the subpoena challenge." After Marrero's ruling was announced, Trump tweeted, "The Radical Left Democrats have failed on all fronts, so now they are pushing local New York City and State Democrat prosecutors to go get President Trump. A thing like this has never happened to any President before. Not even close!"

The Washington Post (10/7, Fahrenthold, Marimow, 14.2M) reports that Jay Sekulow, one of the President's lawyers, "struck a more positive tone," writing, "We are very pleased that the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has issued a stay of the subpoena." The New York Times (10/7, Rashbaum, Weiser, 18.61M) says "the case has pitted the Manhattan district attorney, Cyrus R. Vance Jr., against the president and his Justice Department and raised a host of issues that have not been tested in the courts." According to the Times, the Constitution "does not explicitly say whether presidents can be charged with a crime while in office, and the Supreme Court has not ruled on the issue."

Reuters (10/7, Stempel) reports that Vance, "a Democrat, had subpoenaed personal and corporate tax returns from 2011 to 2018 and other records from Trump's longtime accounting firm Mazars USA." According to Reuters, the subpoena is "part of Vance's criminal probe into the Republican president and his family business." Reuters says Vance "issued the subpoena four weeks after issuing another subpoena to the Trump Organization for records of hush money payments, including to two women prior to the 2016 election who said they had sexual relationships with Trump, which he denies." Bloomberg (10/7, 4.73M) also covers Monday's developments.

Sekulow said on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (10/7, 723K) that this is "a win because the US court of Appeals for the Second Circuit immediately, literally within about ten minutes of us filing the application for stay granted it and note – and I am reading from the opinion – 'the unique issues raised by this appeal' because it's the constitutional issues we raised here. I want to say something here. ... There are 5,000 DA and assistant district attorneys throughout the United States. Can you imagine if the President of the United States was subject to individual investigations by DAs for whatever reason they so choose? The Founders were concerned about that. They didn't want local magistrates impact the President's role under Article II, not only commander in chief but chief executive of the United States and the unique constitutional role the President plays in our constitutional structure."

Trump Organization Cancels Event Planned By Anti-Muslim Group At Mar-A-Lago.

The Washington Post (10/7, Fahrenthold, 14.2M) reports, "An anti-Muslim group that had been planning a gala at President Trump's Mar-a-Lago Club in Florida said Monday that the Trump Organization had abruptly canceled the event." The group, ACT for America, released "a statement saying Trump's company had 'caved to the Left's bullying tactics' in canceling its Nov. 7 dinner gala." In the statement, ACT founder Brigitte Gabriel "sought to blame the Trump Organization's legal department – but not Trump, who still owns the company, or his sons, who now run it." According to the article, the "event appeared to be an example of a long-term trend at Mar-a-Lago." The Post says that as a result of Trump's "divisive presidency," many "longtime banquet clients, including charities such as the American Red Cross," have withdrawn from holding events.

Trump Congratulates FCC's Pai On Net Neutrality Court Win.

President Trump on Monday touted the Administration's victory last week in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals on net neutrality. Trump tweeted, "We just WON the big court case on Net Neutrality Rules! A great win for the future and speed of the internet. Will lead to many big things including 5G. Congratulations to the FCC and its Chairman, Ajit Pai!"

Trump Congratulates Vikings QB Cousins Ahead Of Minnesota Rally.

The Hill (10/7, Coleman, 2.98M) reports that a spokesman for the Minnesota Vikings told CBS News that ahead of his rally in the state later this week President Trump congratulated Vikings quarterback Kirk Cousins over the phone for the team's win Sunday. The spokesman said Trump called Cousins to "briefly congratulate him and the Vikings on the win in New York." Trump will travel to Minnesota "for a campaign rally scheduled for Thursday night. Cousins will not be attending the rally, according to CBS, though the subject did come up in his call with Trump."

Maloney Cites Bronchitis After Becoming Faint At Event.

The AP (10/7, Press) reports that Rep. Carolyn Maloney (D-NY) is attributing "a medical problem she experienced during a public event" to her recovery from bronchitis. In a statement Monday, the lawmaker said she began to feel faint and "out of an abundance of caution, sought medical attention." Maloney said she "probably should have stayed home," and that "after some rest and chicken soup" she looks forward to getting back to work.

Omar Files For Divorce.

The AP (10/7, Forliti) reports that Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) has filed for divorce from her husband, Ahmed Hirisi, "citing an 'irretrievable breakdown' of her marriage." The divorce petition, which Omar filed Friday in Hennepin County District Court, "does not elaborate on what caused the marriage to break down. It comes more than a month after a Washington, D.C., woman accused Omar of having an affair with her husband."

Thomas Misses First Day Of New SCOTUS Term Due To Illness.

Reuters (10/7, Hurley, Chung) reports that the Supreme Court on Monday "kicked off its new nine-month term with a flurry of activity," but "with conservative Justice Clarence Thomas absent due to an unspecified illness." Chief Justice John Roberts said from the bench that Thomas was "indisposed" due to illness but would still participate in deciding the three cases."

Jan Crawford said on the CBS Evening News (10/7, story 6, 1:35, O'Donnell, 4.07M) that in its new term, the High Court is "taking every hot-button issue that's out there. You have gay rights, abortion, immigration, gun rights, and they are going to jump right into it starting tomorrow with a case that really looks at whether or not federal civil rights law protects gays, lesbian, transgender people from discrimination in employment." In this term, the Court will also "look at abortion, and whether or not states can put more regulations on abortion clinics." In addition, the Justices are "going to have a case that looks at President Trump's efforts to try to end that Obama-era program called the Dreamer Program that was designed to protect people who came to this country illegally as children," and they "will look at whether states can put a lot of restrictions on people's ability to who have legally owned firearms to take them outside your homes."

SCOTUS Throws Out Challenge To GOP-Drawn Congressional Maps In Ohio.

Reuters (10/7, Hurley) reports that the Supreme Court on Monday threw out a challenge to GOP-drawn congressional districts in Ohio. Democrats argued that the districts "were drawn to unlawfully diminish their political clout." the high Court's more comes after "a major ruling by the justices in June that foreclosed such lawsuits." In June, the Court "dealt a major blow to election reformers by saying...that federal courts have no role to play in reining in electoral map manipulation by politicians aimed at entrenching one party in power." In the wake of that ruling, the Ohio challengers had "little option but to concede defeat."

Supreme Court Hears Arguments On Insanity Defense.

The New York Times (10/7, Liptak, 18.61M) reports that the Supreme Court heard arguments Monday on "whether states may abolish the insanity defense." James Kahler "was sentenced to death in 2011 for killing four family members" in Kansas, "but his lawyers said he had severe depression that made it impossible for him to understand reality or to distinguish right from wrong." The state "eliminated the insanity defense about two decades ago, so he was barred from raising the defense that he had been mentally ill." Kahler's attorney, Sarah Schrup, "said that was a radical departure from American legal traditions."

USA Today (10/7, Wolf, 10.31M) says that while "only three other states – Idaho, Montana and Utah – have eliminated the insanity defense," Justice Elena Kagan "opined that Kahler likely would not have been found insane anywhere." Nonetheless, Kagan "and other justices noted that throughout history, prosecutors have needed to prove more than intent to overcome mental health defenses." Justice Stephen Breyer "said Kansas' standard would treat two defendants differently: 'The first defendant thinks that Smith is a dog. The second defendant knows it's a person but thinks the dog told him to do it. ... What's the difference? ... They are both crazy.'" Chief Justice John Roberts "implied that states should not be too free to grant claims of insanity."

High Court Won't Hear Case On Impeachment Of West Virginia Justices.

The AP (10/7, Raby) reports that the Supreme Court said Monday it will not intervene in a lower court decision "that derailed the impeachment trials of three West Virginia Supreme Court justices accused of corruption." West Virginia's highest court "ruled last year that prosecuting then-state Supreme Court Chief Justice Margaret Workman in the state Senate would violate the state constitution's separation of powers clause." The ruling was applied "to also halt impeachment proceedings against two other justices who have since left the court: Robin Davis and Allen Loughry." Workman argued that "the charge was invalid because it was based upon alleged violations of the West Virginia Code of Judicial Conduct, which is constitutionally regulated by the Supreme Court."

SCOTUS Keeps NYC Gun Case On Its Calendar.

In what Bloomberg (10/7, Stohr, 4.73M) casts as "at least a temporary win for gun-rights advocates," the Supreme Court will keep a Second Amendment case on its calendar even though "New York City loosened the gun-transportation restrictions at the center of the fight." While the Court "rejected the city's request to dismiss a challenge to the rules as moot," it "said in a two-sentence order that it will revisit the issue during arguments, scheduled for Dec. 2." Bloomberg adds that gun rights groups hope the court "will use the case to bolster the constitutional right to bear arms."

Carter Gets 14 Stitches After Falling At Home.

The CBS Evening News (10/7, story 11, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.07M) reported that former President Jimmy Carter and former First Lady Rosalynn Carter appeared Monday "at a Habitat for Humanity event in Nashville one day after he took a nasty fall at home in Georgia. A black eye and 14 stitches were visible beneath his hat. Mr. Carter turned 95 last week, the first President to reach that milestone." NBC Nightly News (10/7, story 13, 1:16, Holt, 5.87M) also reported on Carter's appearance at the Nashville event, as did ABC World News Tonight (10/7, story 11, 0:14, Muir, 6.92M).

WPost: Lawmakers Should Pass Explicit Employment Protection For LGBT People.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/7, Board, 14.2M) says the Supreme Court on Tuesday "will hear oral arguments in three cases testing whether federal law bars employers from discriminating against LGBT people based on their sexual orientation or gender identity." The Post argues that "nothing the court does or declines to do affects Congress's responsibility. If lawmakers finally approved explicit employment protections for LGBT people, the extension of those protections would gain more democratic legitimacy."

A Wall Street Journal (10/7, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says the Court should not focus on whether discrimination against gay and transgender people is legally or morally acceptable but whether the courts are the place for the issue to be decided. The Journal argues that matter should be left to the people and their elected representatives.

In Tweet, Trump Promotes Video Touting His 2016 Win And 2020 Bid For Reelection.

In a Monday tweet, President Trump promoted campaign video touting his 2016 win and his coming bid for reelection. The video features clips of the President speaking at a rally and Wisconsin voters lauding Trump.

Trump Camp Hails GOP Rule Changes Aimed At Avoiding Delegate Fight At 2020 Convention.

Reuters (10/7, Gibson, Holland) reports that President Trump's reelection campaign on Monday offered details on "efforts to change [GOP] rules across the country to reduce the potential for opposition to the president at the 2020 nominating convention. Three Trump campaign senior officials told reporters on a call on Monday they have worked with state parties to make it harder for Republican primary opponents to influence the selection of the delegates to the convention." Though "a small convention rebellion would be unlikely to dislodge Trump as the Republican nominee, the optics could be damaging for" him. Reuters adds, "In some states, the primary vote has been canceled entirely and party officials will select pro-Trump delegates. In other states, new rules backed by Trump's campaign will make it harder for primary opponents who garner a small percentage of the vote to influence delegate selection."

The Washington Times (10/7, Howell, 492K) reports that Trump's campaign "boasted Monday it's worked behind the scenes to bind state-by-state delegates to the president, saying they want the GOP convention in North Carolina to be a 'four-day television commercial' for reelection and not a debate among party activists. Campaign officials...chafed at suggestions the effort was designed to stamp out a trio of primary challengers, arguing they pose little threat and that GOP support for...Trump is at a historic high. 'The rules of the party now reflect adequately the will of the voters in the president's party,' a campaign official said. 'This is not being done from a position of weakness.'" The officials "said under 2016 rules...a candidate who received only 6% of the GOP vote in Massachusetts could have amassed nearly 25%, or 10 out of 41, delegates. Now 'that will no longer be the case,' a campaign official said, because the state decided to dole out its delegates more proportionately."

The New York Post (10/7, Schultz, 4.57M) reports that the Trump camp also "credited" Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D-NY) "for creating a smoother path for his reelection. The campaign touted election changes in 37 states that will allow...Trump to have his preferred delegates seated at the Republican National Convention in 2020. The campaign mentioned a change in a New York law twice as an example of good news for Team Trump. 'New York is a big one,' a Trump campaign official told reporters. 'Governor Cuomo signed into law Senate Bill 6374, which eliminated congressional district caucuses on the Republican side and implemented a campaign-submitted slate as the method of delegate selection.'" The Trump camp "said the law will help the president by ensuring a more efficient process and allowing Trump to get his slate of delegates to the floor." The Washington Examiner (10/7, Lim, 448K) also reports on the story.

NYTimes Examines Current Stances Of Erie County, PA Voters Who Backed Obama And Then Trump.

The New York Times (10/7, Gabriel, 18.61M) runs a piece focusing on voters in Erie County, Pennsylvania, who supported President Obama in 2012 and President Trump in 2020, saying that the "area's flip from blue to red was a microcosm of how Mr. Trump pulled off narrow victories in" Pennsylvania "as well as in Michigan and Wisconsin. In interviews in Erie last month, before the impeachment inquiry began, many of the Trump voters from 2016 were either supportive of the president or unpersuaded by the Democratic alternatives. But reached by phone after the inquiry was announced, some of these voters had changed their minds. Outright conversions" away from Trump, "while still rare, were reflected in an uptick of support for impeachment by independent voters in recent national polls."

IDP-TIPP Poll: Warren 27%; Biden 26%; Sanders 10%; Buttigieg 7%.

Investor's Business Daily (10/7, Graham, 756K) reports that an IBD/TIPP poll of 341 Democrats and Democrat-leaning independents, taken Sept. 26-Oct. 3, shows Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) leading the race for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination with 27%, followed by ex-Vice President Joe Biden at 26%, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) at 10%, and South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 7%; no other contender tops 3%. The article adds, "Last month's poll had shown support for Warren jumping to 24% from 17%. Meanwhile, Biden's support saw further erosion, after slipping to 28% in September from 30% in August."

AP Analysis: Warren Trying To Drum Up Support Conservative Areas.

The AP (10/7, Weissert) reports that Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "has proven she's popular in Democratic strongholds," but she "is also frequently hitting places where she might be less welcome," such as Carson City, Nevada, "a conservative area with a proud cowboy streak that's a seven-hour drive from the glitz of Democrat-friendly Las Vegas." Those visits "test whether the progressive message that has fueled Warren's rise can resonate in all regions. It's an important hurdle for Warren to clear to prove that, if she were to become the Democratic nominee, she could win back voters in areas that sided with President Donald Trump in 2016."

Records Contradict Warren's Claim Of Getting Fired From Teaching Job Due To Being Pregnant. The Washington Free Beacon (10/7, Anderson, 78K) reports the Riverdale, New Jersey Board of Education "approved a second-year teaching contract for a young Elizabeth Warren, documents show, contradicting [her] repeated claims that she was asked not to return to teaching after a single year because she was 'visibly pregnant.' Minutes of an April 21, 1971, Riverdale Board of Education meeting obtained by the Washington Free Beacon show that the board voted unanimously on a motion to extend Warren a '2nd year' contract for a two-days-per-week teaching job," which was "similar to the one she held the previous year, her first year of teaching. Minutes from a board meeting held two months later, on June 16, 1971, indicate that Warren's resignation was 'accepted with regret.'"

The Washington Examiner (10/7, Gage, 448K) reports that Warren "has claimed repeatedly that she was fired from her part-time teaching job after a year for being pregnant. 'By the end of the first year, I was visibly pregnant, and the principal did what principals did in those days: wish me luck and hire someone else for the job,' she said at a town hall."

Financial Analysts: A Warren Presidency Would Be Bad For US Stocks. According to an analysis from Bloomberg (10/7, Maranz, 4.73M), "the stock market has already started to reflect the ramifications of" Warren possibly winning the 2020 race for president. Bloomberg says analysts are "flagging the senator's rising influence ahead of bank earnings reports, which kick off next week, and noting that the possibility of impeaching President Trump has pulled forward some risk." Jaret Seiberg of Cowen told Bloomberg that "even if [Warren] fails to secure the nomination, she 'will control financial policy in any Democratic administration,' which is 'negative for big banks, private equity, payday lenders, debt collectors and servicers.'" Bloomberg adds that Lori Calvasina of RBC says "a Warren win, along with Democrats taking complete control of Congress, would be 'extremely challenging for stocks,'" and would leave "US equity investors with few safe havens."

Warren Corruption Plan Would Allow For Probe Of Trump's Sister, Kavanaugh. In a separate article, Bloomberg (10/7, 4.73M) reports that Warren unveiled "a new anti-corruption proposal Monday that could, if enacted, re-start a probe into the judicial behavior of...Trump's sister, a former federal appeals court judge." Warren's plan "would allow investigations into judicial misconduct to continue after a judge resigns or gets elevated to the Supreme Court, meaning it would affect Maryanne Trump Barry, who quit her spot on the US Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in 2019 amid a probe of whether she'd engaged in tax fraud with her siblings."

The Boston Globe (10/7, Wangman, 972K) reports, "Currently, when a judge retires or is elevated to the Supreme Court, any investigations into their conduct are stopped. Retired judges are not subject to judicial conduct rules, and Supreme Court justices don't have an adopted, written code of ethics they have to abide by. The Supreme Court is the only court in the country without an adopted, written code of ethics." The Globe adds, "Under the current system, 83 ethics complaints that had been made against [Supreme Court Justice Brett] Kavanaugh were tossed away because he was elevated to the nation's highest court. There is no existing procedure to file new complaints. Warren's plan would allow for an investigation to be reopened into sexual misconduct allegations against Kavanaugh, as well as into the alleged wrongdoing of several retired judges."

In an online article, Fox Business (10/7, Fordham, 1.73M) reports that Warren "proposed banning federal judges from owning or trading individual stocks as part of a broader plan to 'restore' trust in the judiciary. 'It's time to ensure that judges do not hear cases where they have conflicts of interests, strengthen our nation's ethics rules for judges, and ensure accountability for judges who violate these rules,' Warren wrote."

Media Analyses: Heart Attack Raises Questions About Sanders' Campaign.

Several reports and analyses in the latest news cycle focus on the health of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), who suffered a heart attack last week. In a brief segment, the CBS Evening News (10/7, story 12, 0:13, O'Donnell, 4.07M) reported that Sanders "and his wife Jane took a walk in the rain [Monday] in Burlington, Vermont. Sanders suffered a heart attack last week and had two stents inserted into an artery." The Washington Post (10/7, Sullivan, Janes, 14.2M) reports, "Prominent friends and supporters of [Sanders] say he should cut back on his relentless campaign pace and speak openly about his recent heart attack when he returns to the campaign trail, urging a shift toward a more personal and less hectic campaign than he has" been running. The remarks "reflect what supporters describe as a deeply personal decision with big implications for Sanders's candidacy: how the 78-year-old democratic socialist, viewed by many of his backers as the leader of a movement, should proceed following a health scare that has sidelined him for days and raised questions about whether he can – or should – maintain the punishing demands of a presidential campaign."

Politico (10/7, Otterbein, Siders, 4.29M) reports that in the wake of his heart attack, "Sanders and his campaign are laboring to contain the cloud of uncertainty that's formed over his candidacy. According to interviews with Sanders' aides and surrogates, they're betting that his performance at next week's debate and on the campaign trail will show he still has the stamina to run for and serve as president. ... Throughout the Democratic Party, however, insiders and strategists are openly questioning the effect his heart attack would have on his bid for the White House – and on the primary as a whole. Sanders' team is also coming under fire from some journalists and Democrats for not announcing earlier that he suffered a heart attack."

In a news analysis for the New York Times (10/7, 18.61M), Lawrence Altman – "one of the few full-fledged medical doctors working as a daily newspaper reporter" – writes that Sanders "is certainly not the first candidate whose presidential campaign was disrupted by a medical emergency." Even so, his "case is unusual in many respects: He is a leading candidate recovering from a heart attack at age 78 who must compete in an intensely competitive primary while also holding down a demanding job as senator." Altman adds, "Over the long term...older patients are at higher risk of recurrent cardiac events after a heart attack," said Dr. Christopher P. Cannon, a cardiologist at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. "But Mr. Sanders appears to have few cardiac risk factors like high blood pressure and diabetes."

Under the headline "Sanders's Heart Attack Brings Age To 2020 Forefront," the Wall Street Journal (10/7, Parti, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Sanders' heart attack has drawn attention to the fact that he is 78, ex-Vice President Joe Biden is 76, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) is 70, and President Trump is 73.

In Wake Of Heart Attack, Sanders Won't Take Part In Thursday's LGBTQ Town Hall. USA Today (10/7, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports, "After suffering a heart attack last week," Sanders won't take part "in a televised LGBTQ town hall on Thursday." Sanders Deputy Campaign Manager Arianna Jones is quoted as saying, "Sen. Sanders is feeling great after his operation, but is trying to prioritize which events are the best fit in his schedule at this time."

Sanders Takes Aim At Corporate Sponsorship Of National Party Conventions. Politico (10/7, Otterbein, 4.29M) reports that Sanders is out with "a plan...aimed at ending the influence of corporate cash in politics, including at the 2020 Democratic National Convention." According to Politico, Sanders "pledges to put a stop to all corporate PAC contributions to the convention if he wins the Democratic Party's presidential nomination." Politico says Sanders' plan "states that corporate lobbyists 'were everywhere and filled the VIP suites' at the convention, adding that 'this type of corporate sponsorship is a corrupting influence and must end if politicians are going to represent the American people.'"

Bloomberg (10/7, Litvan, 4.73M) reports that Sanders, "recovering in Vermont after a heart attack last week, is proposing an election-financing system entirely funded by the taxpayers. The ban on corporate donations would also apply to national party conventions and to presidential inaugural activities. Individual donations to those events would be capped at $500." On its website, CNN (10/7, Grayer, Nobles, 83.16M) reports, "The tough stance by Sanders sets the stage for a potential showdown with the" DNC "and threatens to completely upend the way the made for television nominating contests are produced. The conventions, no longer a substantive deliberation by party delegates to pick a nominee, have largely become scripted coronations in glitzy sports arenas. The events, by both parties, are heavily funded by large corporations who may contribute limitlessly to the production because it falls under a soft money designation in the Federal Election code."

HuffPost (10/7, Marans, 1.67M) reports that Sanders' plan "to 'get corporate money out of politics'...would, among other things, ensure public financing of federal elections, create a new federal elections oversight board, prohibit advertising during presidential primary debates, and enact a lifetime lobbying ban for former members of Congress and top staffers. But replacing corporations' sponsorship of the Democratic National Convention with a public financing system is both the most ambitious and the most controversial element of Sanders' proposal." In an online article, Fox News (10/7, Steinhauser, 27.59M) reports, "The Sanders campaign – in an email announcing the proposal – noted that 17 corporate donors funded three-quarters of the 2016 Democratic National Convention, with companies including AT&T, Microsoft and Chevron donating millions of dollars."

Harris Proposes Six Months Of Paid Family Leave For US Workers.

The Des Moines (IA) Register (10/7, Jett, 404K) reports that Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA), visiting an elementary school in Des Moines, Iowa on Monday, "unveiled a plan to guarantee paid family and medical leave. Harris' 'Children's Agenda' calls for a six-month benefit for the birth, adoption or fostering of a new child. The plan would apply to full-time workers, part-time workers, domestic workers and independent contractors." The Register says, "In addition to an increase in time off, Harris' plan expands the definition of family members," allowing "close friends and neighbors to apply for the benefit."

Reuters (10/7, Bernstein) reports, "US workers have the right under current law to up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave to care for new babies or help ill family members, but Harris' plan would enlarge those protections. ... Under her plan, workers could receive paid leave to care for medical and non-medical needs when a child or dependent has been a victim of domestic violence, harassment, sexual assault or stalking. It defines as family members not just children but parents, grandparents, siblings, in-laws and 'chosen family,' people who may not be related by blood but consider themselves to be family nonetheless."

Politico (10/7, Kullgren, 4.29M) reports that Harris' "paid leave plan would be funded by new payroll taxes on employers and employees in addition to unspecified 'general revenues.' The federal government's portion would be funded through fines on corporations that fail to narrow their gender-based pay gaps. Harris estimates the fines would total $180 billion in the first decade and diminish over time. It would also be funded through tax increases on large corporations." Vox (10/7, Campbell, 2.27M) headlines its report "Kamala Harris's New Paid Family Leave Plan Is The Most Generous Yet." On its website, CNN (10/7, Duster, 83.16M) also reports on the story.

Klobuchar Raised $4.8M In Third Quarter.

The AP (10/7, Burnett) reports that Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) on Monday said "that she raised $4.8 million in the third quarter for her 2020 presidential campaign, a total that places" her "in the middle of the Democratic field in fundraising for the third straight quarter." The AP says Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) led the field of Democratic White House hopefuls by raising "$25.3 million last quarter," while Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) trailed closely behind, after raising "$24.6 million" during the period. Politico (10/7, Severns, 4.29M) reports that Klobuchar's Q3 figure topped her "haul from the previous quarter by $1 million," and "it is likely enough to keep" her "campaign functioning as she attempts to secure more support."

Pence To Target House Democrats On Impeachment In Districts Carried By Trump.

Politico (10/7, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports that Vice President Pence is set to "embark on a national tour of congressional districts represented by Democrats who've come out in support of" impeaching President Trump. Politico says, "Each of the districts on Pence's itinerary were won by Trump in 2016, making them potent targets for Republicans." On Wednesday, Pence "will travel...to the southwest Iowa district of Rep. Cindy Axne, and Thursday he's slated to visit the suburban Twin Cities district of another freshman Democrat, Minnesota Rep. Angie Craig." Pence "is then scheduled to barnstorm an array of battleground districts, including those held by" Reps. Elissa Slotkin (D-MI) and Abigail Spanberger (D-VA). Politico adds that "at each stop, Pence is expected to paint Democrats as being more focused on destroying the president than on solving the problems of their constituents."

Internal NRCC Poll Shows Impeachment Edge For GOP In Battleground Districts. The Hill (10/7, Brufke, 2.98M) reports that House Republicans were briefed Monday during a call led by House Minority Leader McCarthy "on a new poll taken [for] the" National Republican Congressional Committee "that showed 68 percent of voters see impeachment as being politically motivated." The Hill says, "A memo...on the poll, which" was conducted by Public Opinion Strategies Oct. 1-3 and "surveyed voters in 95 battleground districts, said that an anti-impeachment GOP candidate 'who wants voters to decide the fate of the president in the next election' gets 50 percent support, compared to 42 percent for a pro-impeachment Democrat. ... In Republican-held districts, the advantage was 53 percent to 40 percent, according to the poll, while the advantage was 47 percent to 43 percent in Democratic districts."

Woman Boards Flight Without ID Or Boarding Pass.

NBC Nightly News (10/7, story 11, 1:20, Holt, 5.87M) reported that "a woman with no ticket and no ID managed to make it all the way to a seat on a Delta flight before being caught." NBC's Gadi Schwartz reported, "Eventually, the woman identified as Sylvia Rictor was escorted off by police." Schwartz added, "the TSA says she was screened, but are still investigating how she made it past agents checking IDs and the ticket agent at the gate."

In another incident, ABC World News Tonight (10/7, story 3, 1:21, Muir, 6.92M) reported that a passenger in Miami was detained after "bypassing the gate agent." ABC's David Kerley said, "It's unclear what the motive was for either person, and whether either of them will be charged with a crime."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 43.4%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 43.4%, and his disapproval at 53.9%. The President's job approval is down 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is up 0.2 since yesterday.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (10/2-10/6) finds Trump's approval at 47%, with 51% disapproving.

Financial International News

Critics Accuse IMF Of "Reckless Lending" To Financially Troubled States.

The Guardian \(UK\) (10/7, Elliott, 4.19M) reports, "debt campaigners have accused the International Monetary Fund of encouraging reckless lending by extending $93bn (£75bn) of loans to 18 financially troubled countries without a debt restructuring programme first." The Jubilee Debt Campaign (JDC) said, "in advance of the IMF's annual meeting in Washington next week," that "the Fund was breaking its own rules by providing financial support without ensuring that the debt burden was sustainable." The JDC said the IMF "was creating a moral hazard because lenders knew that they would be bailed out no matter how risky their loans might be."

Blackstone CEO: Europe Needs Fiscal Stimulus.

CNBC (10/7, Smith, 3.62M) reports on its website that Blackstone CEO Stephen Schwarzman "warned...the euro zone economy risks entering a period of prolonged economic stagnation similar to that experienced in Japan unless governments provide fiscal stimulus." Schwarzman's comments echo "criticism from various top European banking executives, most recently Société Générale CEO Frederic Oudéa, of the European Central Bank's (ECB) negative interest rate environment." He further "argued that the euro zone economy was reaching a point where fiscal stimulus would be necessary, particularly in Germany" in the face of negative interest rates on the continent.

Draghi Departs The ECB Amid Criticism.

Behind a paywall, Marcus Ashworth writes in a Bloomberg (10/7, 4.73M) op-ed that departing ECB President Mario Draghi is leaving a "toxic ECB legacy for bankers" thanks to his strong monetary policy.

World Bank President: Global Growth May Disappoint.

The Financial Times (10/7, Politi, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports that World Bank President David Malpass is warning that global growth may fall short of the Bank's earlier June prediction of 2.6 percent.

US Considering Offering Credit To Huawei 5G Rivals In Europe.

Under the headline "US Pushes For Western Rival To Huawei," the Financial Times (10/7, Stacey, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports two unnamed US officials said the Administration was considering issuing credit to Nokia and Ericsson so they can match Huawei's generous financing terms. The White House had no comment.

CFGFS Study Defends Unconventional Monetary Policy Tools.

Reuters (10/7) reports a study from the Committee on the Global Financial System Committee (CGFS) has "defended the use of crisis-fighting tools such as negative interest rates and large-scale asset purchases, saying the benefits have outweighed the side effects." Philip Lowe, CGFS chair and Governor of the Reserve Bank of Australia, is quoted as saying, "On balance, unconventional monetary policy tools (UMPTs) helped the central banks that used them address the circumstances presented by the crisis and the ensuing economic downturn."

ECB: Maturing Business Cycle Poses Risk To Eurozone Banks.

Reuters (10/7) reports, "Eurozone banks face increased profitability challenges as the economic cycle matures and a prolonged period of low rates chips away at margins, the European Central Bank said on Monday, outlining key risks for the sector in the coming year." The ECB said, "The three most prominent risk drivers expected to affect the euro area banking system over the next three years are: economic, political and debt sustainability challenges in the euro area; business model sustainability; and cybercrime and IT deficiencies."

Trump Warns China That Doing Something “Bad” In Hong Kong Will Hurt Trade Talks.

Bloomberg (10/7, Dlouhy, 4.73M) reports that President Trump “warned” Monday that if China does anything “bad” to suppress protests in Hong Kong, it would have a negative impact on trade negotiations with the US. Speaking to reporters at the White House, Trump said, “They have to do that in a peaceful manner.”

The AP (10/7, Ng) reports that “groups of hard-line protesters took to the streets” of Hong Kong “in continued violence since the government banned face masks at rallies, pushing the semi-autonomous Chinese territory into deeper crisis.” Riot police “fired tear gas, charged at crowds and took position on streets,” and “a number of protesters were detained.”

The New York Times (10/7, Yu, May, Ives, 18.61M) says a “confrontational core of Hong Kong’s antigovernment protesters have acted with greater ferocity in recent weeks.” While the protests had been “largely peaceful” for months, “violence now regularly overshadows events.” According to the Times, “hard-line protesters see themselves as being forced to mete out justice in a system that lacks accountability and in the face of a government they deem unresponsive.” But critics say “these protesters are crossing the line by playing the role of vigilantes to punish those they consider their foes.”

NBA Manager’s Tweet Sparks Outrage In China. The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Areddy, Wernau, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a Friday tweet by Houston Rockets general manager Daryl Morey in support of protesters in Hong Kong has sparked outrage in China. While the tweet was quickly removed and the NBA expressed regret that Chinese fans were offended, the Rockets were essentially banned from China’s official broadcast channels and their merchandise was removed from online retailers, endangering millions of dollars in revenue and sponsorships.

Meanwhile, the NBA’s apologies to China in the wake of Morey’s tweet drew fire from Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO), the Daily Caller (10/7, White, 716K) reports. Hawley on Monday “criticized the league for not standing up for employees who pushback against what the Republican thinks is Chinese aggression.” In a letter to NBA Commissioner Adam Silver, Hawley wrote, “I write today to express my disgust about the position of the National Basketball Association (NBA) with respect to Hong Kong and the freedom of the Chinese people.” Jim Axelrod said on the CBS Evening News (10/7, story 9, 1:53, O’Donnell, 4.29M) that Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) “said the NBA’s retreat is shameful” and ex-Rep. Beto O’Rourke (D-TX) “called it an embarrassment.” Jeff Bennett said on NBC Nightly News (10/7, story 7, 1:45, Holt, 6.4M) that while “some Republicans [were] quick to condemn the NBA,” they “stay[ed] silent about President Trump’s latest overture to the Communist regime.”

A Washington Post (10/7, Board, 14.2M) editorial is also critical of the NBA’s actions. The Post says that after the Chinese Consulate in Houston declared it was “deeply shocked” by Morey’s comments, the league “pathetically...capitulated, essentially importing to the United States China’s denial of free speech.” The New York Times (10/7, Board, 18.61M) says in an editorial that the NBA “is besotted by the opportunity to make money in China’s expanding market. And the league once again made clear it is willing to obey China’s rules to preserve that chance.”

Iran To Sue US In ICJ Over Breach Of Nuclear Deal.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/7, Kredo, 78K) reports that Iran’s vice president for legal affairs, Laya Joneidi, announced Monday that Iran is preparing to sue the US in the International Court of Justice over President Trump’s decision to abandon the nuclear deal and reapply sanctions on Tehran. Iran’s state-controlled press reported that Joneidi said Iran will bring the charges and seek monetary damages from the US “breach of the nuclear deal.”

North Korea Urges UN Security Council Not To Raise Issue Of Missile Tests.

Reuters (10/7, Nichols) reports that the North Korean government “warned the United States, Britain, France and Germany...that raising the issue of Pyongyang’s missile tests at the United Nations Security Council would ‘further urge our desire to defend our sovereignty.’” The Security Council is “due to meet behind closed doors on Tuesday after North Korea said it had test-fired a new submarine-launched ballistic missile last week.” Speaking to reporters at Pyongyang’s UN mission, North Korea’s UN Ambassador Kim Song said, “We know well that the United States is behind impure moves of the UK, France and Germany. ... The United States and its followers should bear in mind that if they raise the issue of our self-defensive measures at the U.N. Security Council meeting in this moment, it will further urge our desire to defend our sovereignty.”

Britain, EU Reportedly Remain Far Apart On Brexit Deal.

The AP (10/7) reports that the British government and the EU remain “poles apart...on a potential Brexit deal.” While the Dutch government is calling on the British government to offer “more realism and clarity,” and British Prime Minister Boris Johnson is “insisting that the bloc must soften its stance.” In a separate story, the AP (10/7) says that “the last scheduled opportunity to reach a deal is Oct. 17-18, when all 28 EU leaders, including Johnson, are due to meet in Brussels.” French President Emmanuel Macron “has said the EU will decide by the end of this week whether a deal is possible, or whether the two sides should buckle up for a rocky no-deal departure.”

Johnson Calls For Return Of US Diplomat’s Wife Linked To Auto Fatality. The CBS Evening News (10/7, story 4, 2:12, O’Donnell, 4.07M) reported that Johnson “is calling on the wife of an American diplomat to return to England to face charges in a deadly crash.” Johnson “says if she refuses he will personally call President Trump.” Politico Europe (10/7, 8K) reports that teenager Harry Dunn was killed "when his motorbike collided with a car...on August 27," and subsequently a "U.S. diplomat's wife, named as Anne Sacoolas, left the U.K. despite telling police she had no plans to." Johnson said, "I do not think that it can be right to use the process of diplomatic immunity for this type of purpose. And I hope that Anne Sacoolas will come back and will engage properly with the processes of law as they are carried out in this country." Reuters (10/7, Holden) quotes Johnson as saying, "If we can't resolve it, then of course I will be raising it myself personally with the White House." The Washington Post (10/7, Flynn, Hassan, 14.2M) reports that "in an emotional plea on Saturday, Dunn's parents begged President Trump to intervene and to send Sacoolas back to Britain."

Ian Pannell reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/7, story 7, 1:29, Muir, 6.57M) that the British Foreign Secretary called Secretary of State Pompeo and "urg[ed] him to reconsider. But so far, the US State Department showing no sign of budging."

The New York Times (10/7, Magra, 18.61M) says Johnson's statement "aggravated tensions in a trans-Atlantic relationship that started fraying after Mr. Trump feuded publicly with other British officials and denounced Britain's ambassador to Washington, forcing him to give up his post." NBC Nightly News (10/7, story 6, 1:34, Holt, 6.4M) also reported on the case.

US Businesswoman Declines To Answer Whether She Had An Affair With Johnson. The Washington Post (10/7, Booth, 14.2M) reports that American businesswoman and former model Jennifer Arcuri, "who is at the center of inquiries dogging" Johnson, "declined to answer – nine times – whether she had an affair with Boris Johnson while he served as mayor of London." The story has been getting headlines in the UK "because Arcuri won sponsorship and grants from the British government while she was Johnson's friend." Arcuri told ITV's "Good Morning Britain" that "when Johnson was mayor, he visited her apartment" a "handful of times." She was "asked multiple times by the morning show host whether she had a romantic relationship with Johnson" but "declined to answer," saying, "Because the press have made me this objectified ex-model pole dancer, I am really not going to answer that question. I am not going to be putting myself in a position for you to weaponize my answer."

Rubio: US Has No Role In Deciding Who Leads Haiti.

The Miami Herald (10/7, Charles, 1.09M) reports that "as Haiti entered a fourth week of paralysis over demands for President Jovenel Moïse to step down," on Monday, Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) "said the U.S. has no role to play in the deepening crisis spurred by recurring fuel shortages and allegations of graft and mismanagement of the economy by Moïse." Rubio said, "My interest in Haiti has always been that it has democracy and elections and rule of law and I will continue to support it in those endeavors. Who they choose as their leader is up to the processes that they run internally. ... We don't have a role to play in who resigns and who stays on."

Huntsman: US Should Foster Positive Relations With Russia.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/7, Huntsman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Jon Huntsman, who stepped down as US Ambassador to Russia last week, argues that eventually Russian President Vladimir Putin will be out of power and rather than cutting itself off from Russia, the US needs to foster positive relationships with those who will run the country when he is gone.

Iraqi Prime Minister Orders Army To Exit Sadr City After Dozens Killed.

The CBS Evening News (10/7, story 5, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.07M) reported on what it called "a serious crisis in Iraq," where "the government is trying to get handle on protests that have been growing more violent by the day." Reuters (10/7, Davison, Rasheed) reports yesterday "at least 15 people were killed in clashes between Iraqi security forces and protesters in Baghdad's Sadr City district overnight as violence from a week-long nationwide uprising swept through the vast, poor swathe of the capital for the first time." To Reuters, "the spread of the violence into Sadr City...poses a new security challenge," because "unrest is historically difficult to put down" in the "volatile district where about a third of Baghdad's 8 million people live."

The AP (10/7) reports Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi on Monday "ordered the army...to withdraw from Sadr City...putting the police back in charge of security in a Baghdad neighborhood where dozens of people were killed or wounded at protests over the weekend." The AP says Mahdi's order "appears aimed at calming tensions in Sadr City."

The Washington Post (10/7, Loveluck, Salim, 14.2M), meanwhile, reports Iraq's military "acknowledged Monday that security forces have used 'excessive force' to quash anti-government demonstrations while journalists described growing efforts to suppress reporting on the deadly violence." In a televised speech, Iraqi President Barham Salih "condemned 'unacceptable' attacks on both protesters and the media, and he urged security forces to preserve the rights of all Iraqis."

Major Opium Trafficker Among 11 Taliban Commanders Released From Prison.

The New York Times (10/7, Mashal, 18.61M) reports that according to Taliban officials, "eleven Taliban commanders have been released from a high-security prison in Afghanistan," in "an apparent deal that included a prominent regional leader caught five years ago personally escorting a shipment of nearly a ton of opium." The Times says a "senior Afghan official" said the Taliban prisoners "had been released in return for three Indian engineers after months of negotiations with local Taliban commanders in northern Baghlan province, where the engineers were kidnapped last year." While "the release of prisoners in itself was not unusual," what has "drawn attention to this latest release is the notoriety of one Taliban figure in particular: Abdul Rashid Baluch, who was...arrested in a narcotics raid five years ago." Baluch "was a Taliban shadow governor...when he was caught with a huge shipment of opium."

Fannie Mae Survey Shows Consumer Confidence Declined In September, Even As Affordability Improved.

CNBC (10/7, Olick, 3.62M) reports, "Lower mortgage rates are making buying a home slightly more affordable, but financial concerns are outweighing that benefit and lowering overall confidence in housing." According to "a monthly survey from Fannie Mae," consumer sentiment regarding housing fell in September. While "more respondents think now is both a good time to buy and sell a home, there was a much larger drop in the share of those who said they were not concerned about losing their jobs." According to CNBC, "It was the second straight month that the component of the survey fell." In a televised segment, CNBC's Diana Olick reported on Fannie's HPSI. The one-minute video was carried by Mortgage News Daily (10/7).

National Mortgage News (10/7, Tarkazikis) reports, "After hitting an all-time high in August, Fannie's Home Purchase Sentiment Index (measuring consumer housing confidence) declined 2.3 percentage points to a reading of 91.5 in September. The decline can be attributed to an 8-percentage point drop in the share of those secure in not losing their job, and a decrease of 7 percentage points among those expecting home prices to grow. The share of consumers anticipating a decline in mortgage rates also fell 6 percentage points."

HousingWire (10/7, Lloyd, 23K) reports Fannie Mae Chief Economist Doug Duncan said, "Consumer sentiment remains relatively strong overall, though uncertainty about the economy and individual financial circumstances appear to be weighing on housing market attitudes a bit more than a month ago. Views about the direction of the economy held relatively steady, and the share of respondents who say it's a good time to buy or sell a home rose slightly." Of the state of the broader economy, Duncan said, "Consumers who are pessimistic about current housing market conditions are more likely to cite unfavorable economic conditions than the prior month. Job confidence remains high but still well shy of its July reading." Providing additional coverage of Fannie Mae's HPSI are National Mortgage Professional (10/7, Hall), Mortgage Orb (10/7, Barnard), Builder (10/7, 1K), UPI (10/7, Sakelaris), and MarketBeat (10/7, 63K).

Continuing Coverage: Black Knight Reports Affordability Improved In September. DS News (10/7, Albanese) reports the decline in homebuyer sentiment came even as Black Knight's September Mortgage Monitor Report showed that "it now requires just 20.7% of the national median income to make monthly principal and interest payments on an average-priced home." According to DS News, "This is the second lowest payment-to-income in 20 months. The report says the average 30-year interest rate at 3.64% has been a key factor, and that home affordability hit a 32-month high in September. According to the report, the $1,122 in monthly P&I required to purchase an average-priced home is 10% lower than in November when interest rates closed in on 5%. Home prices, however, have risen more than 4% since that point."

HousingWire (10/7, Lloyd, 23K) reports Black Knight's Ben Graboske said, "Back in November 2018, we were reporting on home affordability hitting a nine-year low. Interest rates were nearing 5%, pushing the share of national median income required to make the P&I payments on the purchase of the average-priced home to 23.7%. While still below long-term averages, that made housing the least affordable it had been since 2009, spurring a noticeable and extended slowdown in home price growth. ... The payment-to-income ratio is now 20.7%, which is the second-lowest it has been in 20 months, behind only August of this year, and about 4.5% below the long-term, pre-crisis norm. To help quantify the boost this has given to homebuyers, consider that today's prevailing 30-year rate has cut the monthly P&I payment to purchase the average-priced home by 10% – about $124 per month – from November."

National Mortgage News (10/7) reports Graboske added, "Put another way, the decline in rates since November has been enough to boost buying power by $46,000 while keeping monthly P&I payments the same." NMN says that housing affordability "could continue to increase in the fall months, according to Black Knight." Providing similar coverage of Black Knight's report are Mortgage News Daily (10/7, Swanson), National Mortgage Professional (10/7, Hall), Mortgage Orb (10/7, Barnard), and Mortgage Professional America (10/7, Randall).

Trade War Escalation Could Harm US Housing Market.

HousingWire (10/7, Howley, 23K) reports that an escalation in the US-China trade war could harm the US housing market, as China is "the biggest foreign owner of Uncle Sam's debt and the biggest foreign buyer of US mortgage bonds." According to HousingWire, "In July alone, China's net purchases of agency bonds totaled $14 billion, meaning purchases minus sales of securities issued by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae. That was more than a third of all foreign net purchases for the month." China could "stop purchasing agency MBS," thereby denting demand and putting pressure on mortgage rates to climb. Alternatively, should China opt for a more drastic and destabilizing approach, it could dump its holdings of US Treasuries. However, some experts believe this is less likely, as "it wouldn't be in China's best interest to destabilize the world's economy."

GSEs Securitized A "Post-Crisis Record" $317B Single-Family Mortgages In Q3.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/7, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "Soaring origination volume in the third quarter may have spurred more small lenders to deliver loans directly to the government-sponsored enterprises, rather than uploading to aggregators." Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac "securitized a post-crisis record of $317.35 billion of single-family mortgages during the third quarter. Their mortgage-backed securities issuance was up 45.5% from the previous three-month period." According to IMF, "The GSE market was firing on all cylinders: purchase-loan volume ratcheted up 30.3% from the second quarter and refinance business soared 67.7%. Only six of the top 100 GSE sellers delivered fewer loans in the third quarter than in the second. Smaller shops appeared to gain ground, though the GSE market remained heavily dominated by large lenders."

SOFR-Linked Issuance Projected To Keep Growing.

Bond Buyer (10/7, Barnett) reports SOFR-linked issuance "has increased rapidly since the start of the year, according to a report from TD Securities' Public Finance Department. SOFR issuance is at about $265 billion since the beginning of 2019. While it is far less than the $81 billion of LIBOR issuance so far this year, it is far higher than the $36 billion issued in all of 2018." According to TD, "SOFR issuance should accelerate further as the Federal Housing Finance Agency (the regulator of FHLB) has mandated that the FHLBs stop using LIBOR. By the end of 2019 the FHLBs must stop purchasing investments that reference LIBOR and mature after December 31, 2021 and should, by March 31, 2020, no longer enter into new financial assets, liabilities and derivatives that reference LIBOR and mature after Dec. 31, 2021." TD added, "The sharp increase in government repurchase agreement rates (repo) occurred as cash left the financial system which forced a sharp increase in the cost of funds. The Fed subsequently stepped in with temporary repo operations and we look for the Fed to announce Treasury purchases in October in order to add reserves to the system (and prevent this situation from reoccurring in the future.)"

Opportunity Insights, Freddie Mac Research Focuses On Affordable Rental Housing In Opportunity Areas.

Novogradac & Company LLP (10/7) says that a "new release from Opportunity Insights concludes that some low-income families do want to move to higher opportunity areas and emphasizes that structural barriers are what prevent them from doing so. One such barrier is lack of affordable housing. According to Freddie Mac's Affordable Housing in High Opportunity Areas research, 6 percent of subsidized homes are located within high opportunity areas, as defined by Freddie Mac, which was slightly different from the Opportunity Insights study." According to Novogradac, "In recent years, housing finance agencies have begun to recognize the importance of placing LIHTC properties in high opportunity areas, and have been implementing changes in their qualified allocation plans (QAPs) to highlight this importance."

Realtor Releases An "Essential Guide To iBuying."

In a 2,200-word piece, Realtor (10/7, 25.12M) provides what it calls an "essential guide to iBuying," highlighting the initiatives of companies including Offerpad, Knock, Keller Williams, and Coldwell Banker. Realtor also discusses the pros and cons of turning to an iBuyer for three different types of customers: those who need to sell their home quickly and use "traditional iBuying," those who "trade in" to buy and sell at the same time, and those who want "bridge financing" to allow them to buy and sell at the same time while maximizing profit. According to Realtor, "iBuyers and instant offers can present many advantages to home sellers: Speed. According to recent realtor.com data, the median home spends 58 days on the market from the time it's listed until the owner hands over the keys. Selling to an iBuyer is a much faster process that can happen in a handful of days." Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater compared iBuying to selling a car to CarMax. He explained, "It's a way to dispose of your asset very quickly. Prior to CarMax, you had to shop around to sell your car. Now, in a similar way, iBuying allows you to quickly sell your home without going through the grueling process of trying to find a buyer."

GSEs' Initiatives Promote Diversity And Inclusion As Industry Continues To Evolve.

M Report (10/7, Albanese) reports that although women's labor force participation has risen in recent years, their "lack of representation in executive roles" remains a "constant challenge." In the mortgage industry, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have shown a commitment to fostering diversity throughout their organizations. According to Fannie Mae SVP Nancy Jardini, over half of the GSE's employees are minorities, and nearly half of its employees are women. M Report says, "Freddie Mac is also driving initiatives towards equality by building an infrastructure that supports a culture where all people can do their best work." Freddie Mac Chief HR Officer and Chief Diversity Officer Jacqueline Welch said, "One way we do this is by diversifying our talent pipeline – widening our talent pools and investing time and money with targeted partners to increase the representation of underrepresented groups." Freddie Mac's partnership with iReLaunch was cited as one initiative designed to help women and men navigate their way back into the workplace. Welch also said, "At Freddie Mac, we've done away with the practice of asking for salary history at all the locations where we do business. The salary history question is no longer part of our online employment application, and we have upskilled our talent acquisition advisors and hiring managers accordingly. Further, we deemphasize the current compensation for internal candidates."

A Year After Hurricane Michael, Florida Is Still Recovering.

DS News (10/7, Welborn) reports that a year after Hurricane Michael, Florida is "still trying to recover," with "many homeowners still displaced." Panama City city manager Mark McQueen said that the "most acute impact" on his community is its housing stock. DS News reports that in a move to assist recovery, HUD announced that its Section 203(k) loan program "allows homeowners who have damaged houses to finance the rehabilitation of their existing single-family home."

NAHB Chairman: WPost Article On Government's Exposure To Risky Mortgages Was "Incorrect."

In a letter to the editor appearing in The Washington Post (10/7, 14.2M), NAHB Chairman Greg Ugalde says, "The Oct. 3 front-page article

'Government exposure to risky housing debt swells,' which claimed that 'the federal government has dramatically expanded its exposure to risky mortgages,' was incorrect and falsely implied another housing bust is looming. The article's premise is based entirely on the flawed notion that the ratio of debt to income (DTI) is a foolproof predictor of mortgage default." According to Ugalde, "Research from the Urban Institute shows DTI to be a highly unreliable predictor of mortgage default. While lenders consider DTI in meeting new ability to pay mandates, they also evaluate employment history, credit scores, liquid reserves and residual income. Since the Great Recession, risky mortgage products have been purged, and Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and the Federal Housing Administration have taken significant additional steps to reduce risk in their programs. Fannie and Freddie have been transferring mortgage-loan risk to private investors on a large portion of their guaranteed loans and have a complex system that requires increased fees on loans with higher-risk features. The FHA has increased scrutiny on higher DTI applications."

Opinion: Regulatory Simplicity – Not More GSEs – Is What Our Housing Finance System Needs.

The Brookings Institution's (10/7) Peter Conti-Brown argues against creating more guarantors to compete with Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. According to him, this would do nothing to "solve a problem like Fannie and Freddie." Conti-Brown says that "one of the most enduring changes of the New Deal Era was to mostly eliminate the confusion that these twelve GSEs had created. The Federal Reserve Banks are still with us, but Congress centralized monetary policy into a federal agency, the Federal Open Market Committee, and made it so that the nation's monetary policy could speak with one voice." Conti-Brown's message: "Simplify, Simplify, Simplify." He concludes, "Creating a more institutionally complex financial regulatory system and extending the reach of federal guarantees into the market place are not the answer. We need more regulatory simplicity, not less; we need less government guarantees to private market initiatives, not more."

Analysis: Case Against Ocwen Highlights Uncertainty Of CFPB's Future.

Writing for Reuters (10/7, Frankel), Alison Frankel says, "Last month, after the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau filed a brief at the U.S. Supreme Court arguing that its own director was appointed under an unconstitutional provision, I predicted that the bureau's abandonment of its longstanding defense of its own constitutionality was going to affect the CFPB's entire mission. Now we're beginning to see the first ripples from the CFPB's new position." According to Frankel, the CFPB's "sweeping case against the mortgage servicer Ocwen should set off alarm bells" as the Supreme Court considers weighing in on the constitutionality of the agency. Both a payday lender in "last week's Supreme Court petition and Ocwen in the motion for reconsideration argued that the Supreme Court would itself be violating separation-of-powers doctrine if it were simply to sever the appointment provision of the Consumer Financial Protection Act." However, the 5th Circuit "ruled just last month in Collins v. Federal Housing Finance Agency (2019 WL 4233612) that the cure for a statute that unconstitutionally insulates the head of a federal agency is severance of the flawed appointment provision – not invalidation of all actions by the improperly-appointed director."

Bradford: FHFA Seeks Out A Financial Advisor To Facilitate GSEs Exiting Conservatorship.

In a Seeking Alpha (10/7, 512K) piece, GSE shareholder Glen Bradford says that the FHFA is seeking out a Financial Advisor "that will come up with a full range of options that will help structure an end to the conservatorships. Note that the companies are now retaining capital. This takes receivership off the table. FHFA may hire a Financial Advisor as soon as late this month. Calabria Talks With Thomas Vartanian October 10th." Bradford says, "After 11 years of GSE critics running the show to keep these companies under their thumb, their regulator is now working hard in the spirit of the law to do its duties to make them safe and sound and their lack of capital is what is said to be why they were placed into conservatorship so their abundance of capital is going to be what gets them out of it, paraphrasing Mark Calabria."

Continuing Coverage: FHFA Seeks Financial Advisor To Help With GSE Recap-And-Release.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/7, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports the FHFA on Friday "published notice of its intent to hire a contractor to assist in the government's effort to recapitalize and release Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac from conservatorship. According to the filing, the regulator/conservator is seeking an advisory firm 'to provide financial institutions, capital markets and restructuring expertise, analysis, and advisory services regarding the preparation of the Roadmap (Phase I) and, if necessary, the implementation and on-going monitoring of the Roadmap (Phase II).'" According to IMF, "Roadmap is the phrase the FHFA uses to describe its options in setting the two free. In early September, the Treasury Department released its plan to end the conservatorships, calling for both legislative and administrative reforms." The FHFA said in the notice that the roadmap "must consider a variety of options with regard to business and capital structures, market impacts and timing, and available capital raising alternatives, among other things. The Roadmap will require on-going implementation support and monitoring to assure its eventual success." The agency also reportedly "makes it clear that only firms with experience and knowledge in the arena of housing finance will be considered."

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/7, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "In his blog postings over the past few years, former Fannie Mae executive Bill Maloni (he retired from the GSE prior to the meltdown of 2008) has made it clear that he's no fan of President Trump. But in a new column, he points out that in at least one policy area, the Trump administration deserves kudos: 'I also have to acknowledge that the Trump administration has done more to free Fannie and Freddie from conservatorship than eight years of President Obama.'"

Puerto Rico Recovery

Puerto Rico Finally Sees Light At End Of Its Debt Tunnel.

In a Washington Post (10/4, Skeel, 14.2M) op-ed, University of Pennsylvania corporate law professor and Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico member David Skeel writes that the board "broke a two-year logjam" when it "insist[ed] that more than $6 billion of" Puerto Rico's "debt should be declared null and void," "opening a path to a new restructuring proposal filed on Sept. 27 that could help solve Puerto Rico's debt crisis."

This comes as Reuters (10/7) reports, "The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday declined to take up a dispute over the assets of Puerto Rico's largest public sector pension fund even as the U.S. Caribbean island territory's bankruptcy enters a major new phase." However, the Financial Oversight and Management Board of Puerto Rico "said the decision will not affect the proposed plan of adjustment it filed in federal court on Sept. 27 for the bankrupt island's core government debt, which includes an unfunded pension liability of more than $50 billion."

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (10/7, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 1.546 percent.

Dollar Edges Down.

Reuters (10/8, Chatterjee) reports, "The dollar was broadly on the back foot on Tuesday with the New Zealand dollar leading gainers against the greenback as a broad rally in Asian equities spilled over into currency markets." Against a basket of rival currencies, the dollar "dipped 0.1% to 98.91 after posting its biggest single-day rise in a week in the previous session." Meanwhile, the euro "rose 0.1% to $1.09815 but remained within sight of a more than a two-year low of $1.08790 hit last week."

Gold Falls.

Reuters (10/8, Namboothiri) reports, "Gold prices slipped to a near one-week low on Tuesday, declining for a third straight session, weighed down by a firmer dollar ahead of the upcoming trade talks between China and the United States." Spot gold "was down 0.3% at $1,489.32 per ounce, as of 0627 GMT," while US gold futures "fell 0.6% to $1,494.60 per ounce."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (IND) (10/8, Tan) reports, "Oil prices rose on Tuesday as unrest in crude producers Iraq and Ecuador raised supply concerns and demand worries were put on hold as investors awaited the outcome of US-China trade talks this week." Brent crude "rose 44 cents, or 0.8%, to $58.79 a barrel by 0652 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude "was at $53.17, up 42 cents, or 0.8%."

Cybersecurity

FBI Issues Warning About Cyber Attacks That Bypass Multi-Factor Authentication.

ZDNet (10/7, Cimpanu, 299K) reports that the FBI "sent last month a security advisory to private industry partners about the rising threat of attacks against organizations and their employees that can bypass multi-factor authentication (MFA) solutions. 'The FBI has observed cyber actors circumventing multi-factor authentication through common social engineering and technical attacks,' the FBI wrote in a Private Industry Notification (PIN) sent out on September 17. Past incidents of MFA bypasses." ZDNet adds, "While nowadays there are multiple ways of bypassing MFA protections, the FBI alert specifically warned about SIM swapping, vulnerabilities in online pages handling MFA operations, and the use of transparent proxies like Muraen and NecroBrowser," and "to get the point across, the FBI listed recent incidents where hackers had used these techniques to bypass MFA and steal money from companies and regular users alike."

Forbes (10/7, Doffman, 9.71M) reports, "Even though companies worldwide are struggling to protect systems and data from incessant waves of business email compromise attacks—with losses doubling year-on-year to $26 billion, the latest warning from the FBI still comes as a surprise." According to Forbes, "One of the primary defences against such cyber attacks is multi-factor authentication (MFA), the use of a secondary token or one-time code to assure the identity of staff," but "the FBI has now warned that it 'has observed cyber actors circumventing multi-factor authentication through common social engineering and technical attacks.'"

Protection From Ransomware Attacks Isn't As Simple As Insurance.

NextGov (10/7, Noble) reports local governments confronting "ransomware attacks are increasingly turning to insurance to protect them if hackers successfully take control of a city's computer system." Experts warn, however, that local governments "may not be getting the level of protection they need through basic policies." And when insurance companies "opt to pay ransoms, rather than cover the (sometimes exorbitant) cost to recover data, they make local governments a bigger target for hackers." Larger cities may purchase "their own individual plans, like Houston did in 2018 when it paid close to $500,000 for a $30 million plan that would cover emergency response to cybersecurity breaches and losses associated with a cyberattack." In contrast, many smaller municipalities "receive coverage through pooled plans, such as those offered by associations." Experts "say if local governments are looking into insurance coverage, they should also be thinking about how they plan to strengthen their cybersecurity policies.”

Alabama Health System Paid Ransomware Attackers.

Ars Technica (10/7, 1.36M) reports three Alabama hospitals have paid “a ransomware demand to the criminals who waged a crippling malware attack that’s forcing the hospitals to turn away all but the most critical patients.” Ransomware shut down “the hospitals’ computer systems and prevented staff from following many normal procedures.” Officials have been “diverting non-critical patients to nearby hospitals and have warned that emergency patients may also be relocated once they are stabilized.” An updated post on Saturday “said the diversion procedure remained in place.” Over the weekend, the Tuscaloosa News “said DCH officials made a payment to the people responsible for the ransomware attack.” The report didn’t say “how much officials paid.” Saturday’s statement from DCH officials “said they have obtained a decryption key but didn’t say how they obtained it.”

FierceHealthcare (10/7, Landi, 146K) reports Alabama-based DCH Health System “made a payment to hackers behind a ransomware attack that disrupted operations at three hospitals in the past week.” Organization officials said in a statement posted on the health system’s website October 5, “In collaboration with law enforcement and independent IT security experts, health system officials said they began a methodical process of system restoration. We have been using our own DCH backup files to rebuild certain system components, and we have obtained a decryption key from the attacker to restore access to locked systems.” Security firm Emsisoft in a recent report found that, “in the first nine months of 2019, at least 621 government entities, healthcare service providers, school districts, colleges and universities were affected by ransomware.”

Microsoft Reveals Iran Hacking Efforts Against Presidential Campaigns.

Politico (10/7, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that Microsoft’s announcement late last week that Tehran-linked hackers “targeted the emails of a presidential campaign, current and former US government officials, political journalists and prominent Iranians was swiftly followed by two stories confirming the campaign in question was President Trump’s.” Trump’s campaign “said it had no evidence that its ‘campaign infrastructure was targeted,’ although it didn’t specifically name email as part of that infrastructure, and at any rate, it’s hard to imagine its email and/or infrastructure had never been targeted.” The significance of the news, “such as it is – only four of the 241 targeted accounts were breached, and none of them were the presidential campaign, Microsoft said – is that it might confirm US warnings about Iran’s desire to meddle in the 2020 race, as well as warnings that election interference could target both sides during the next presidential contest.”

CISA Warns Of New Cyber Attack Similar To “WannaCry.”

ExecutiveGov (10/7, Rivers) reports that, according to TechCrunch, Jeanette Manfra, assistant director for cybersecurity at the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, has “said that it’s unlikely that the agency could prevent a massive cyberattack similar to WannaCry in 2017.” Manfra “told attendees at a TechCrunch event in San Francisco that the rapid transmission of WannaCry attacks would make it difficult for the Department of Homeland Security component to protect thousands of systems.” She said, “Updating your patches would have prevented a fair amount of people from being a victim.” Marcus Hutchins, a security researcher and malware reverse engineer, “previously developed a “kill switch” intended to prevent the attack from spreading.” WannaCry was reportedly executed “by hackers associated with North Korea who used tools from NSA.” Recently, DHS issued “a warning for a similar attack known as BlueKeep, which has wormable properties and has the capacity to impact millions of devices connected to the Internet.”

Small Companies Increasingly Targeted By Cybercriminals.

AP (10/7, Rosenberg) reports an annual survey of companies released by the Ponemon Institute, which researches data protection, and Keeper Security, a manufacturer of password protection software, found that, “while small and mid-sized businesses are increasingly targets for cybercriminals, companies are struggling to devote enough resources to protect their technology from attack.” The survey “found that 76 percent of the 592 US companies surveyed had experienced a cyberattack in the previous 12 months.” That was up “from 70 percent in a survey in 2018, and 63 percent in a 2017 survey.” The most common attacks “were phishing and social engineering scams, cited by 57 percent of companies.” These are invasions that “target unsuspecting computer, smartphone and tablet users with realistic-looking emails; if a user clicks on a link or attachment in the email, malicious software is downloaded onto the device.” Forty-four percent of companies reported an attack that “came via a website.”

Opinion: The Standard Cybersecurity Model Is Broken.

In a column in Forbes (10/7, 9.71M), Tony Bradley writes, “By virtually any objective measurement, the traditional model of cybersecurity has failed. It doesn’t make any sense to simply continue pouring money into the next point solution and hope things will turn out differently. It’s time for organizations to recognize that the technology ecosystem and the threat landscape have evolved, and that a new approach is necessary for more effective cybersecurity.” Bradley contends, “The way companies approach cybersecurity is literally insane – at least according to the popular quote attributed to Albert Einstein: ‘The definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results.’”

Financial Reform

Poll: Majority Of Democratic, Republican Voters Want More Wall Street Regulations.

Newsweek (10/7, 1.53M) reports, "A majority of Democrat, Republican and independent voters support increased regulations on Wall Street and financial institutions, a new poll showed." Almost nine out of 10 US voters of all political affiliations "said it is important to enforce current government regulations on financial companies, citing fears stemming from the 2008 financial crisis and Great Recession, the data showed." Ninety-one percent of Democrats in the early voting states Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada, and South Carolina "said it's important to regulate Wall Street firms and behavior," while 60 percent of Republicans "said they support more government regulation of US financial companies."

TFI/Sanctions

Energy Companies Look To Remain In Venezuela Despite Challenges.

The Houston Chronicle (10/7, Chapa, 730K) reports businesses would seemingly feel a desire to leave Venezuela amid "frequent power outages, theft of equipment, a political tug-of-war and billions of dollars in losses." However, "energy companies with headquarters or major operations in Houston — including the oil major Chevron and oilfield services firms Schlumberger, Halliburton, Baker Hughes and Weatherford — are instead scrambling to stay in the crisis-ridden South American country, pressing the Trump administration to renew waivers from U.S. sanctions that expire in about three weeks and allow them to continue operating there." Chevron President of Exploration and Production in Africa and Latin America Clay Neff "said his company intends to stay in Venezuela, despite a recent second quarter loss of $21 million for its operations there." Neff said, "If Chevron is forced to leave Venezuela, non-U.S. companies will fill the void and oil production will continue."

GOP Senators Explore Possible Turkey Sanctions.

The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Wise, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that President Trump's decision to withdraw US troops from Syria has led some Republican Senators to explore a possible bipartisan vote for sanctions against Turkey.

Federal Reserve

Fed's Powell Stresses Independence In Speech Introducing Film.

Politico (10/7, Guida, 4.29M) reports in a short speech on Monday, Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell "obliquely" pushed back against President Trump's pressure to cut interest rates. Introducing a film on former Chairman Marriner Eccles, Powell praised Eccles, saying, "Perhaps most importantly from my perspective as Fed Chair, he is responsible more than any other person for the fact that the United States today has an independent central bank — a central bank able to make decisions in the long-term best interest of the economy, without regard to the political pressures of the moment." The AP (10/7, Smith) adds, however, that Powell "did not mention Trump by name." The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Fed's Kashkari Supports Further Rate Cuts.

Reuters (10/7, Dunsmuir) reports Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank President Neel Kashkari on Monday argued the Fed should continue to cut interest rates to offset economic risks such as slowing business investment and a slowing global economy. Said Kashkari, "My message is clear: we should be supporting the economy, not tapping the brakes on the economy so I want to look at the data over the next few months but so far I am happy that we're cutting interest rates." He added, "How much more do we have to cut? I don't know yet." Among other media reporting are Bloomberg (10/7, Boesler, 4.73M) and The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M).

Trump: US Economy Entitled To A "Substantial" Rate Cut.

Reuters (10/7, Mason) reports President Trump "said on Monday he wanted to see the U.S. Federal Reserve enact a 'substantial' cut in interest rates because of the lack of inflation in the United States." Trump said, "We'd like to see an interest rate cut, a very substantial one. We have no inflation. If anything it's going below the number, so therefore we're entitled to an interest rate cut. I hope the Fed does that."

NY Fed Injects $47B Into Financial System Through Repo Market.

The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Barba, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the NY Fed injected $47 billion into the financial system through the repo market on Monday.

BIS Report: Central Bank Stimulus Negatively Impacting Financial Markets.

The Financial Times (10/7, Arnold, Greeley, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports that the Bank for International Settlements finds that the unprecedented growth of central banks' balance sheets following the financial crisis has negatively impacted the function of the financial markets.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Otting Discusses CRA, Receives “Community Spirit Excellence Award.”

Texas Bankers Association (10/7) reports Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting on Monday discussed the importance of modernizing the Community Reinvestment Act's regulatory framework in remarks at National Asian American Coalition's 16th Annual Economic Development Conference. Otting said, "My experiences this summer and the preponderance of feedback we have heard reemphasizes the opportunity we have to encourage more CRA activity where it is needed most by modernizing the rules to clarify what counts, update where CRA activity counts, evaluate CRA performance more objectively, and make reporting more timely and transparent." During the conference, Otting was honored "with the inaugural Robert Gnaizda 'Community Spirit Excellence Award' for his enduring commitment and work to support the diverse communities of California."

OCC Restructures Legal Department, Making Attorneys More Generalists.
