Behind a paywall, Bloomberg Law (10/7, Nancarrow, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports the OCC "is looking to its past in restructuring its legal department." In recent months, the agency "has eliminated divisions in place since the 1980s that saw its lawyers specialize on discrete issues like community and consumer lending, writing rules or securities practices. Instead, the OCC will have a broad Bank Advisory group inside its Law Department, and attorneys will become more generalists than they had been." Supporters of the restructuring "say that it will allow the OCC's lawyers to answer questions from its bank examiners more quickly."

OCC's Maryann Kennedy Highlighted In Most Powerful Women Gala Roundup.

Highlighting its "2019 Most Powerful Women Gala," American Banker (10/7, Witkowski, Alix, Subscription Publication, 31K) says the main theme was "Lift as you rise." In a recent BankThink article, Maryann Kennedy "dishe[d] about the good and the bad during her 30-year stint at the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency." The Senior Deputy Comptroller for Large Bank Supervision wrote, "Walking into a male-dominated boardroom as a young female examiner sometimes made delivering bad news more difficult for me. ... I recall one experience in which the male board members at a rural Pennsylvania bank referred to me in the third person as 'that girl' when I discussed their deteriorating asset quality." Kennedy's message to banks now is to not get complacent about risk management or credit quality.

SCOTUS Refuses To Review Citizens Bank Overdraft Fee Suit.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (10/7, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, "The US Supreme Court on Monday refused to review a split First Circuit decision affirming the dismissal of a proposed class action alleging Citizens Bank NA's flat overdraft fees violate usury laws, declining a request to clarify what constitutes 'interest' under the National Bank Act." Bank customer Barbara Fawcett filed a petition for a writ of certiorari in September, "argu[ing] the circuit majority reached its decision by improperly deferring to a 2007 interpretive letter from the Office of the Comptroller, without first resolving whether the relevant terms in the NBA are ambiguous." In response, Citizens Bank "argued that the Farrell ruling ignored the OCC's interpretive letter and is at odds with a number of other courts that have weighed in since."

CBA CEO: CRA Reforms Should Allow Banks To Invest Outside Branch Network.

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (10/7, Subscription Publication, 31K), Richard Hunt, President and CEO of the Consumer Bankers Association, says that a modernized regulatory scheme for the Community Reinvestment Act "must account for ever-changing customer preferences and digital advancements." The "most visible investment in a community is the branch," but the role of branches "has significantly changed since CRA regulations were amended in 1995." Hunt writes, "Allowing banks the flexibility to invest in CRA activities outside of their branch network will result in more dynamic and impactful CRA activity to the communities that need it most." The CRA "also needs to be more transparent to allow banks to know which investments count before making the investment." With OCC-chartered institutions accounting "for more than two-thirds of the CRA investments made nationally," it is "only natural for them to take the lead." While it is less clear whether the Fed will be part of the effort, "ensuring a unified front from the OCC, FDIC and Fed would prevent competing CRA regimes, which reduces clarity, transparency and ultimately, the effectiveness of CRA investments."

Opinion: Regulatory Simplicity, Not More GSEs, Is What Housing Finance System Needs.

The Brookings Institution's (10/7) Peter Conti-Brown argues against giving the FHFA chartering authority similar to that of the OCC, allowing for the creation of more guarantors to compete with Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. According to him, this would do nothing to "solve a problem like Fannie and Freddie." Conti-Brown says that "one of the most enduring changes of the New Deal Era was to mostly eliminate the confusion that these twelve GSEs had created. The Federal Reserve Banks are still with us, but Congress centralized monetary policy into a federal agency, the Federal Open Market Committee, and made it so that the nation's monetary policy could speak with one voice." Conti-Brown's message: "Simplify, Simplify, Simplify." He concludes, "Creating a more institutionally complex financial regulatory system and extending the reach of federal guarantees into the market place are not the answer. We need more regulatory simplicity, not less; we need less government guarantees to private market initiatives, not more."

Alaskan Civil Rights Activist To Be First Alaskan Native On US Currency.

CNN (10/7, Wolfe, Ries, 83.16M) reports on its website, "Elizabeth Peratrovich, a civil rights activist and member of the Tlingit Nation, will become the first Alaskan Native to appear on US currency." Peratrovich "was a key figure in the passing of the country's first anti-discrimination law, the Anti-Discrimination Act of 1945, which prohibited discrimination based on race in Alaska," and "also served as the Grand President of the Alaska Native Sisterhood." United States Mint Chief Administrative Officer Patrick Hernandez, speaking as he unveiled the coin "during the Alaska Native Brothers and Alaska Native Sisters Convention at Alaska Pacific University on Saturday," said the coin "will be a lasting tribute to Elizabeth Peratrovich and her relentless efforts to tear down the wall of discrimination against Alaskan Natives."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"When It Come To China, Silence Is Golden." The New York Times (10/7, Board, 18.61M) says in an editorial that the NBA's apology for Houston Rockets general manager Daryl Morey's tweet "is besotted by the opportunity to make money in China's expanding market. And the league once again made clear it is willing to obey China's rules to preserve that chance."

"Does Donald Trump Know What His Syria Policy Is?" On its editorial page, the New York Times (10/7, 18.61M) writes that President Trump "may walk his own decision [to withdraw troops from Syria] back once again, in part or in whole. But what ally could look at the United States now and see a stalwart partner — and what foe could look at it and fear a determined adversary?"

"Remember When Bill Clinton Was Accused Of Trading White House Access For Political Favors?" In an editorial, the New York Times (10/7, 18.61M) writes, "As the Ukraine scandal continues to unfold, there has been much disagreement about whether Mr. Trump withheld nearly $400 million in military aid...in an attempt to bully its government into pursuing investigations that would benefit him politically." The Times recalls that it "was vocal" in criticizing the "campaign-finance practices of the Clinton era," but those "seem nearly quaint now. Mr. Trump isn't yet known to be hosting pay-to-play pajama parties or dialing for dollars from his office. He has warped American foreign policy and directed administration officials to put the interests of his re-election campaign above those of American national security."

Washington Post.

"The Supreme Court's Case On LGBT Discrimination Shouldn't Be A Close Call." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/7, Board, 14.2M) says the Supreme Court on Tuesday "will hear oral arguments in three cases testing whether federal law bars employers from discriminating against LGBT people based on their sexual orientation or gender identity." The Post argues that "nothing the court does or declines to do affects Congress's responsibility. If lawmakers finally approved explicit employment protections for LGBT people, the extension of those protections would gain more democratic legitimacy."

"The Day The NBA Fluttered Before China." A Washington Post (10/7, Board, 14.2M) editorial is also critical of the NBA's actions of apologizing for Houston Rockets general manager Daryl Morey's tweet that supported Hong Kong protesters. The Post says that after the Chinese Consulate in Houston declared it was "deeply shocked" by Morey's comments, the league "pathetically...capitulated, essentially importing to the United States China's denial of free speech."

"Trump's Syria Decision Reflects His Stunning Ignorance Of The Situation." A Washington Post (10/7, 14.2M) editorial says the White House statement announcing President Trump's decision to withdraw from Syria and his tweets that followed it "reflected a stunning ignorance of the situation on the ground,"

Wall Street Journal.

"With Friends Like The U.S." A Wall Street Journal (10/7, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial warns that the withdrawal of US troops from Syria could jeopardize the gains made against ISIS.

"Got Oxygen?" The Wall Street Journal (10/7, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that the 2019 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine, which was awarded to Americans William Kaelin Jr. and Gregg Semenza and Sir Peter Ratcliffe of Britain for their research into how cells adapt when oxygen levels are decreased is an example of how better insights into human physiology is improving medicine.

"The Supreme Court's Sex Debate." A Wall Street Journal (10/7, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says the Court should not focus on whether discrimination against gay and transgender people is legally or morally acceptable but whether the courts are the place for the issue to be decided. The Journal argues that matter should be left to the people and their elected representatives.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Over the last few days, the impeachment case against Donald Trump has seen a number of big developments. A second whistleblower stepped forward, damning text messages from American diplomats were released, and Rudy Giuliani was caught going through Joe Biden's trash. Yeah, he wasn't looking for dirt, he was just hungry."

Trevor Noah: "Now, if you were facing the biggest crisis of your presidency, what would you do? Probably lay low and focus on putting out this fire? But you see, you're not Donald Trump, because if you were Donald Trump, you would start a whole new fire. ... At 11:00 p.m. last night, President Trump announced that the US would be pulling its troops out of a key part of the Syria. Even crazier is he didn't tell the Pentagon. Yeah, they were blindsided. That's like not telling NASA you're going to blow up the moon. That's their thing. Like, 'Sir, we have a situation. It appears the moon has exploded.' He would be like, 'Yeah, that was me. Consider the werewolf problem solved.'"

Trevor Noah: "I know there's a lot going on there, but the main takeaway is that Trump's decision has now put America's Kurdish allies in danger. After a move like this, you can't blame America's allies thinking America's word ain't worth [anything]. Like AppleCare claims they'll protect you, but says, 'Sorry, this doesn't cover broken screens.' 'What do you mean? The whole thing is a screen!' That's the whole thing, the phone is a screen!"

Trevor Noah: [On Trump tweeting about his "great unmatched wisdom"] "So everyone from 'Fox & Friends' to Neck Flaps & Friends have spoken out against Trump's military moves, and in response, Trump tweeted earlier today, 'Relax, I got this.' ... Before you judge Trump, he is technically correct – there is nobody who matches his wisdom. He is correct! I mean, no other person had the wisdom to stare directly into a solar eclipse."

Trevor Noah: "So if you're a member of the Kurdish forces, now you're probably a little nervous, because you've got ISIS coming from one side, and Turkey coming from the other, and you're probably wondering if there's any way to get Trump back on your side. I do think there is one option: Kurdish forces, phone Trump, and you need to tell him you have dirt on Joe Biden, but if he wants it, he's going to have to give you military aid, or as I like to call it, a Kurd pro quo."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Thank you for joining us here in Hollywood, where I'm sure a lot of people are very busy monitoring the events in Washington for a future multipart docudrama starring Nick Nolte as Donald Trump. Between Trump and 'The Joker,' it was quite a weekend for villains in a lot of makeup."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We learned yesterday that a second whistle has blown. This one reportedly has firsthand information about the President's call to Ukraine. ... But Trump says his repeated and public requests for Ukraine and China and maybe others to dig up dirt on his number one opponent, Joe Biden, have nothing to do with politics and everything to do with his never-ending crusade against corruption. ... But the story, it seems to get worse for Trump by the hour. He swears up and down there's no quid pro quo with Ukraine. ... But text messages, including this exchange between Kurt Volker, who was his former special envoy for Ukraine, and one of President Zelensky's top aides, suggests otherwise. ... If that gun isn't smoking, it's vaping like a mother right now."

Jimmy Kimmel: "And now the fall guy for this mess, or at least one of them anyway, could be Trump's Secretary of Energy, Rick Perry, who is rumored to be on the way out after Trump reportedly said the only reason he made the call is because Rick Perry put him up to it. Rick Perry said today that while he absolutely asked Trump multiple times to call the President of Ukraine, it was only to talk about energy, not about the Bidens. But somehow, Trump blames him for this. Basically, his position is, 'The call was perfect, I did nothing wrong, and stupid Rick Perry is the one who made me do it. All the best people.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "To recap, we now have two whistleblowers. We have a transcript of the phone call, a bunch of highly incriminating text messages. And not only did Trump do it privately with Ukraine, he asked China to do it on television. If this was 'Judge Judy,' he'd be out before the first mesothelioma commercial."

Jimmy Kimmel: "And then while every head in Washington is spinning, Trump pulled another doozy last night, when the White House announced that the President after another phone call with another unsavory foreign leader will pull all US troops out of Syria. This is a big deal because removing American troops will allow Turkey to go in and attack our Kurdish allies, which would be a big boost for ISIS. ... But Trump, I think he may have swapped the Adderall for airplane glue this afternoon because he tweeted back, 'As I have stated strongly before and just to reiterate, if Turkey does anything that I, in my great and unmatched wisdom, consider to be off limits, I will totally destroy and obliterate the economy of Turkey. I've done before.' That's right. One step out of line, he will run Turkey into the ground like it was one of his casinos in Atlantic City."

Jimmy Kimmel: "In his great and unmatched wisdom. 'In my great and unmatched wisdom.' He's talking now like the Wizard of Oz."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We found out today that we may finally get to see Trump's taxes. A federal judge has rejected the President's bizarre claim that he is immune from criminal investigation and therefore does not have to turn over his tax records. ... And by the way, this investigation is related to the payments Trump made during the campaign to Stormy Daniels and that 'Playboy' playmate. Which, how crazy is this presidency that we forgot about that?"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The Second Circuit Court of Appeals granted a last-minute stay of the ruling, which means this might not happen for a while, but I love the irony that we're going to release Trump's tax returns without his consent. We're just going to grab them by the subpoena and see what happens."

Jimmy Kimmel: "His team now is trying to convince themselves and anyone dumb enough to believe it that all this impeachment stuff is good, not bad, for his re-election prospects. His acting Chief of Staff, Mick Mulvaney, has been telling staffers that if the President gets impeached, he could win 45 states in 2020. Which I don't think he could name 45 states in 2020."

Jimmy Kimmel: "But I'm not sure the President agrees with that. He had a call with House Republicans over the weekend where he said, among other things, impeachment would be bad for his resume. Which, Trump worrying about his resume is like R. Kelly worrying about his Uber rating. It doesn't make a difference."

Stephen Colbert: "I have a simple but extremely important question – can we take away Donald Trump's phone? ... 'Cause everything he does with his phone is bad. ... Here's how his phone makes things worse – yesterday, after a phone call between Trump and Turkish strongman Recep Erdogan, the President announced that the US is withdrawing troops from northern Syria posts, leaving Kurdish allies to face Turkey. This is a complete betrayal of the Kurdish fighters who helped the US defeat ISIS, and there's only one way out of this: Kurds, you've got 24 hours to dig up dirt on Joe Biden."

Stephen Colbert: "People on both sides of the aisle unloaded on Trump for this betrayal. So Trump went on Twitter and went full twit, saying that though he's pulling out of Syria, 'We will be focused on the big picture, knowing we can always go back and blast!' (As Trump) 'We can go back and blast! We can also bring the boom-booms, the blammo, and if all else fails, multiple kabloobies.'"

Stephen Colbert: "But, in defending his actions, he saved the best for worst, 'As I have stated strongly before, and just to reiterate, if Turkey does anything that I, in my great and unmatched wisdom, consider to be off limits, I will totally destroy and obliterate the economy of Turkey – I've done before!' ... Wow, he's gone full God-emperor. (As Trump) 'It is I, Donald the Great, of unmatched wisdom and infinite wives, destroyer of casinos, conqueror of 10-piece McNuggets, scourge of Chrissy Tiegen, defeated only once in battle by my eternal nemesis: Umbrella.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump asking China to investigate the Bidens] "Just standing out there and bluntly asking China for election help is a tough one for Republicans to spin, but they came up with a terrible excuse, that Trump was joking about China investigating the Bidens. I just want to point out that I tell jokes for a living, and successful or not, rarely do people I work with have to go on Sunday news shows to explain that I was joking."

Jimmy Fallon: "Today, a federal judge ordered President Trump to turn over eight years of his tax returns. I'm not saying it's bad, but right now, Trump's accountant is climbing over his border wall into Mexico."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, people are still talking about the impeachment. I saw that Trump said it's a bad thing to have on his resume. The only thing worse than having impeachment on your resume, is having Rudy Giuliani as your only reference."

Jimmy Fallon: "I kind of like the idea of Trump even having a resume, though I'm pretty sure under skills, all it would say is, 'can type over 50 tweets per minute.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump's never even really needed a resume. The only one he's ever made is a note to his dad which said, 'I your son, me want job.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "But Trump caused more controversy today when he announced a new Middle East policy. There's some pretty crazy tweets about it, too. In one, he said, 'If Turkey does anything that I, in my great and unmatched wisdom, consider to be off limits, I will destroy and obliterate the economy of Turkey, I've done before.' And Trump said, 'And if Turkey really acts up, I won't pardon them on Thanksgiving.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump reportedly told House Republicans on a private call yesterday that impeachment is a quote, 'bad thing to have on your resume.' Dude, do you really think your next job's gonna require a resume? 'Wow, it says here you were President of the United States. We really like the see that kind of ambition at Kinko's.'"

Seth Meyers: "Lawyers for the whistleblower responsible for the initial complaint about President Trump's contact with Ukraine revealed this weekend that they are now representing multiple clients raising issue with the call. Okay, how many people were on this call? This thing is starting to sound like an AOL chat room. 'Hello, age, sex, location, and dirt on Joe Biden.'"

James Corden: "We have some big news to report. Earlier today, President Trump was ordered to turn over eight years of personal and corporate tax returns to the Manhattan district attorney. Yes, I know, big news. I cannot wait to see them and then pretend to understand them."

James Corden: "White House staffers were stunned by this order today. In fact, it was all anyone was talking about around the office paper shredder."

James Corden: "Yeah, according to the judge, quote, 'Presidents are not above the law.' Yeah, and when he heard this, Trump was like, 'Pffft. For real? That's the only reason I took this stupid job!' But then here's the thing: Trump immediately requested an emergency delay. And can you believe this, he was granted one by an appeals court. When I heard this, I was like, 'Pffft, he did what? You granted him what? I thought we had him this time.' ... The DA and the Trump's tax returns are the legal system's Ross and Rachel. Will they, won they, can there be any more tension?"

James Corden: "But Trump has other things on his mind as well. Earlier today, the President tweeted a threat to the government of Turkey in which he referred to his, quote, 'great and unmatched wisdom.' And people were very quick to point out that this made Trump sound like the wizard from 'The Wizard of Oz.' If only we could pay no attention to the man behind the curtain."

James Corden: "You haven't seen the movie in a while. The Wizard of Oz was a conman who only pretended to be a wizard because he had run out of money. But to be fair, unlike Trump, he did actually pay his taxes."

Second Whistleblower Alleges Political Interference At IRS In Trump, Pence Tax Return Audits.

The Washington Post (10/3, Stein, Hamburger, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports that an IRS official “has filed a whistleblower complaint reporting that he was told that at least one Treasury Department political appointee attempted to improperly interfere with the annual audit of the president’s or vice president’s tax returns.” The complaint comes “amid the escalating legal battle between the Treasury Department and House Democrats over the release of President Trump’s tax returns.” Part of that dispute “is over how the IRS conducts its annual audit of the president’s and vice president’s tax returns,” a process that is “supposed to be walled off from political appointees and interference.”

The New York Times (10/3, Rappeport, 18.61M) reports the whistleblower “came forward to Congress in July with the complaint. ... Additional details about the specific allegations in the complaint remained unclear, including when the reported activity took place.” In August, House Ways and Means Chairman Richard Neal informed Treasury Secretary Mnuchin about the whistleblower. Mnuchin, “in a letter of response to Mr. Neal on Aug. 13, said he referred the matter to the Treasury Department’s inspector general for tax administration.”

Forbes (10/3, Klebnikov, 9.71M) lists the numerous ways Democrats are “trying to get Trump’s tax returns released,” including subpoenas sent by House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal (D-MA) “to the Treasury Department and IRS earlier this year seeking six years of Trump’s federal tax returns.”

CNN (10/3, Kelly, 83.16M), Breitbart (10/3, 673K), Slate (10/3, Olmstead, 1.58M), The Hill (10/3, Jagoda, 2.98M), The Week (10/3, 1.94M), The Daily Mail \(UK\) (10/3, 5.27M), Business Insider (10/3, Sheth, Porter, 3.67M), and, behind a paywall, Law360 (10/3, Subscription Publication, 8K) also reported on the story.

GAO Report Highlights Challenges Of Assessing Impact Of Sanctions.

The Washington Post (10/3, Taylor, 14.2M) reports the Trump Administration has made sanctions “a key part of its foreign policy arsenal, placing enormous economic pressure on nations like North Korea and Iran in a bid to force concessions in negotiations with the US.” A new report released by a government watchdog this week “found that although the agencies that implement sanctions track their economic impact, they do not measure whether the sanctions achieve their aim in forcing a target to change its behavior.” Officials from the Treasury, State and Commerce departments “told researchers from the GAO that there were several difficulties in assessing whether they are achieving their aims, including the shifting nature of foreign policy goals and the difficulty in isolating the effects of sanctions.” The report “appears to contradict statements made by Trump and other high-level officials.” The GAO “found that Treasury, State and Commerce used analysis from the intelligence community to estimate the effect of the economic effect of sanctions.” Officials “suggested that a variety of factors made accurately gauging the effectiveness of a sanction a difficult task.”

Daniel R. Depetris writes in The National Interest (10/3, 81K) that “although the State, Treasury, and Commerce Departments all assess the effectiveness of sanctions in the course of their work, none of them are apparently required by law or regulation to determine a simple but straightforward question: are sanctions actually helping the United States accomplish its foreign policy objectives?” He writes that “Washington continues to apply all manner of sanctions despite fully understanding whether any of them will actually have a long-term policy impact.” Depetris continues, “To call this troubling would be the understatement of the day. It is downright ludicrous and needs to be changed immediately.”

Treasury Dept. Audit Finds Car Buyers Improperly Claimed $70 Million In EV Tax Credits.

Bloomberg (10/3, Beene, 4.73M) reports the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA) said in an audit released Thursday that tens of thousands of car buyers improperly claimed $70 million in electric vehicle tax credits using ineligible vehicles during a five-year period ending in the 2018 processing year. Details "about how taxpayers improperly claimed the credits were mostly redacted, though the audit found that the Internal Revenue Service lacks an effective process to prevent improper claims under the program, which awards as much as $7,500 for electric-car buyers." The TIGTA "made four recommendations to the IRS, which agreed with the findings." According to a summary of the audit, the IRS is planning to start a program to recover the improperly claimed credits.

Trump Amplifies Unproven China-Biden Story.

The AP (10/3, Braun) reports that President Trump "is seizing on unsubstantiated claims promoted by political allies as he seeks a foreign government's help finding dirt on Democratic political rival Joe Biden." The "claims about a $1.5 billion-dollar business deal in China" involving the former VP's son Hunter first came from "conservative researcher Peter Schweizer." Senate Finance Committee Chairman Grassley last August "asked Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to investigate Hunter Biden's business activities in China." The Treasury Department "has said it's reviewing Grassley's request."

Business Insider (10/4, Sheth, Frias, 3.67M) reports that Trump "mentioned former Vice President Joe Biden in a June phone call with Chinese President Xi Jinping," per a report from CNN on Thursday. The report says "Trump brought up Biden's political prospects...as well as those of Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, who by that time had started surging in the polls." Trump "also reportedly told Xi he would stay mum on the raging protests in Hong Kong as China and the US discussed trade."

The New York Times (10/3, Baker, Sullivan, 18.61M) reports that Trump told reporters outside the White House on Thursday, "China should start an investigation into the Bidens, because what happened in China is just about as bad as what happened with Ukraine." According to the Times, "The president's call for Chinese intervention means that Mr. Trump and his attorney general have solicited assistance in discrediting the president's political opponents from Ukraine, Australia, Italy and, according to one report, Britain." The Times says the President's remarks amounted to "an extraordinary request to a foreign power for help that could benefit him in next year's election."

Politico Analysis: Trump's China-Biden Remarks Could Impact Trade Talks. Politico (10/3, Behsudi, 4.29M) reports that Trump's request for China to investigate Biden "exposes his long-running negotiations with the world's No. 2 economy to new scrutiny and could cast a political shadow over the results." The President's comments "came moments after Trump said the U.S. has 'a lot of options' to get Beijing to bend to its will in the trade talks." Senate Finance Committee ranking member Ron Wyden (D-OR) "called on the White House, Treasury Department and the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative to explain whether the Biden issue had actually been raised in the context of trade talks and to produce any relevant documents."

Former Treasury Official: EU, US Officials Pushed Ukraine To Axe Prosecutor Months Before Biden. The Financial Times (10/3, Politi, Sevastopulo, Peel, Olearchyk, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports that a former Treasury official says European and US officials were pushing for the Ukrainian government to fire Viktor Shokin months before Biden intervened personally.

Private Equity On War Footing To Protect Lucrative Tax Breaks.

Bloomberg (10/3, Perlberg, Bain, 4.73M) reports that the private equity industry that "reshaped the American economy now appears to be heading into an even bigger war to preserve the generous tax breaks and loose oversight" it has enjoyed and at which presidential candidate Sen. Elizabeth Warren has taken direct aim. This follows the industry having "leveraged its influence" in the run-up to passage of the GOP's federal tax code overhaul to "protect the wildly lucrative tax break that's helped mint more billionaires than almost any other industry." During that period, "Jonathan Gray, the No. 2 at Blackstone Group Inc. who's famous for devising the $26 billion takeover of the Hilton hotel chain...quietly" met "with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and top economic advisers...as lobbyists worked toward a compromise that would keep the tax benefit alive."

Strauss: 40 Years Of GOP Tax Cuts Have Only Increased Debt, Inequality.

In a USA Today (10/3, 10.31M) op-ed, Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs visiting professor Steven Strauss writes, "Republicans have fervently claimed lower taxes will unleash the 'makers' – incentivizing them to work harder and invest more, thereby trickling down to benefit ordinary Americans." Instead, he says, "the national debt is at a record high, and the gap between the richest and the poorest U.S. households is now the largest it has been in the 52 years the Census Bureau has been tracking it." Most recently, "Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin claimed that the GOP's 2017 tax cut would not only pay for itself, but would actually reduce the federal deficit by $1 trillion." However, "the 2017 tax cut isn't paying for itself with higher tax revenue, and it's projected to add $1.5 trillion to our national debt over the next 10 years."

Administration Facing Challenge With Citgo Bond Payment.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Scurria, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Trump Administration is facing a key test in its approach to Citgo in the more than $900 million in payments due October 28 on bonds backed by a controlling stake in the company. The Journal says the upcoming payment is a problem for Venezuela's opposition leaders, who took effective control of Citgo in January. Sources say Citgo has been asking the US Treasury Department for a change in the current sanctions program that would keep bondholders at bay.

Fox's Wallace Dinged CNN's Tapper In 2017 Email Exchange With Treasury Spokesman.

The Hollywood Reporter (10/3, Barr, 1.89M) reports that Fox News Sunday anchor Chris Wallace "once dinged Jake Tapper's question to Steven Mnuchin as 'fake news,'" according to "a late 2017 email obtained through a FOIA request." Wallace reportedly "fired off an email to then-Treasury spokesperson Tony Sayegh" asking, "was the first question Tapper asked the secretary about the special counsel [Mueller]?" After Sayegh confirmed that it was, Wallace responded, "As much as I hate the expression 'fake news' – this is a perfect example of it – especially on the week the country gets a massive overhaul of the tax code."

US Sanctions Squeezing Hezbollah.

The AP (10/3, Mroue) reports, "The conflict between Iran and the U.S. that has created tensions throughout much of the Middle East is now also being felt in Lebanon, where Washington has slapped sanctions on the Iran-backed Hezbollah and warned they could soon expand to its allies, further deepening the tiny Arab country's economic crisis." The piece explains the Trump Administration has intensified sanctions on Hezbollah and "institutions linked to it to unprecedented levels, targeting lawmakers for the first time as well as a local bank that Washington claims has ties to the group." Last month, top US officials visited Beirut and "warned the sanctions will increase to deprive Hezbollah of its sources of income." Treasury undersecretary for terrorism and financial intelligence Sigal Mandelker said in the UAE last month, "We have taken more actions recently against Hezbollah than in the history of our counterterrorism program." Mandelker "said Washington is confident the Lebanese government and the central bank will 'do the right thing here in making sure that Hezbollah can no longer have access to funds at the bank.'" Treasury Assistant Secretary for Terrorist Financing Marshall Billingslea "visited Lebanon last week and a U.S. Embassy statement said he would 'encourage Lebanon to take the necessary steps to maintain distance from Hezbollah and other malign actors attempting to destabilize Lebanon and its institutions.'" He told local media that Treasury was posting a $10 million reward for anyone who provides "valuable information on Hezbollah's finances," and that the main goal of the Treasury "was to deprive Hezbollah of all financial support, whether from Iran or through any other means."

Continuing Coverage: FHFA Allows GSEs To Retain $45B In Capital Reserves.

Mortgage Professional America (10/3, Smith) reports, "In a first step toward the Trump administration's plan for housing finance reform, the Treasury and the Federal Housing Finance Agency have announced that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will be allowed to keep more of their earnings." Fannie "will be permitted to retain capital reserves of $25 billion," while Freddie "will be allowed to retain reserves of $20 million." Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said, "These modifications are an important step toward implementing Treasury's recommended reforms that will define a limited role for the federal government in the housing finance system and protect taxpayers against future bailouts." FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "The enterprises are leveraged nearly 1,000 to one, ensuring they would fail during an economic downturn – exposing taxpayers to risk once again. This letter agreement between Treasury and FHFA, which allows the enterprises to retain capital of up to $45 billion combined, is an important milestone on the path to reform."

HousingWire (10/3, Lane, 23K) reports, "When the federal government announced earlier this week that it would allow Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to rebuild a portion of their capital reserves to a total of $45 billion combined as part of a plan to exit conservatorship, the message was clear: The government-sponsored enterprises are back and they're not likely to go away any time soon." According to HousingWire, this was a "dramatic reversal from where things stood just a few years ago, when the prevailing sentiment in Washington, D.C. was how to get rid of the GSEs, once and for all." The GSEs now "appear primed to exit conservatorship on stable footing with healthy financial backing and reformed operations." With Calabria "and other officials in the fold, the Trump administration took basically the opposite approach of its predecessors on GSE reform, in both words and actions." Mnuchin, "for example, said the Trump administration was committed to ending the GSE conservatorship, a sentiment echoed by Calabria." The piece also notes Mnuchin's comments this week.

Continuing Coverage: Bove Says Sweep Hasn't Really Been Eliminated. Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/3, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports that in lieu of the Net Worth Sweep, Treasury "will see its 'liquidation preference' for the Fannie/Freddie senior preferred it owns increased. In other words, what Treasury gives up on the front-end, it gains on the back-end." Odeon Capital Analyst Richard Bove concluded that "the net worth sweep has not been eliminated." In a note to clients on Wednesday, he said, "What has been changed is how the accountants will deal with it. It is my view, they will still deduct the net worth sweep dividend from net income when calculating earnings per share for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac but they will not deduct it from the company's net worth. This will allow net worth to be shown as having increased despite the fact that it has not in real terms."

Treasury To Auction Off $193B In Debt.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Treasury Department next week will conduct an auction of $193 billion worth of securities, made up of $108 billion worth of new debt and $85 billion of previously sold debt.

Leading National News

Trump Confirms Chinese Delegation Coming Next Week For More Trade Talks.

Reuters (10/3) reports President Trump said yesterday that "a delegation from China would come to the United States next week for more trade talks." Trump is quoted as saying, "China's coming in next week. We're going to have a meeting with them. We'll see. But we're doing very well. ... I have a lot of options on China. But if they don't do what we want, we have tremendous power."

WSJournal Pleased By Courts' Decisions On California, New York Tax Laws.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that just this week, courts overruled New York on its 2017 tax reform and California on its law requiring presidential candidates to disclose their income tax returns to appear on the state's primary ballot. The Journal says courts rightly ruled that the states' actions were political in nature, not sound or constitutional policy.

Navarro: WTO Airbus Ruling Should Not Spark "Tit-For-Tat Retaliation."

Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/3), White House trade adviser Peter Navarro commented on the World Trade Organization's ruling allowing the US to impose tariffs on European exports in retaliation for subsidies provided to Airbus by the European Union. Navarro said it was a "great victory for the Trump Administration." Navarro added, "Basically, we have an aircraft manufacturer in Airbus that would not exist except for the fact of subsidies from Europe. It's been a 15-year battle that cost this country thousands of jobs and Boeing hundreds of aircrafts not sold." Navarro went on to say that "there is going to be no tit-for-tat retaliation," and "there should be no fears of that." According to Navarro, "Under the rules of the WTO, which we are complying with here, we get to do this, and they should not do anything back, this is all good for America, and is particularly going to help our agriculture sector."

EU, US Officials Say They Want Negotiated Settlement. Reuters (10/3, Holton) reports on Twitter yesterday, President Trump "hailed a 'nice victory'...after the United States got the green light to place tariffs on European Union goods in a row over EU aircraft subsidies." Reuters says the WTO decision "gave the United States the go-ahead to impose tariffs on $7.5 billion worth of EU goods annually in the long-running case."

Bloomberg (10/3, 4.73M) reports European Trade Commissioner Cecilia Malmstrom said Thursday that the EU "hasn't given up hope of reaching a deal with the US that would avoid an escalation of the sides' trade dispute over Airbus subsidies." Said Malmstrom, "Until the American tariffs take effect, we haven't given up" on the idea of reaching a "negotiated solution. ... We are looking at all options and we are discussing that with member states."

The AP (10/3, Cook, Hatton) says the EU is "expecting a similar case involving US subsidies for Boeing to go in its favor, with a ruling due in coming months." European Commission spokesman Daniel Rosario warned, "If the US imposes countermeasures it will be pushing the EU into a situation where we will have to do the same."

Bloomberg (10/3, 4.73M) reports separately that the Administration "has requested the WTO meet Oct. 14 to formally authorize the tariffs, and the duties would then take effect Oct. 18." A "senior US trade official" tells Bloomberg that "the goal of the Trump administration in imposing retaliatory duties is to persuade the European Union to reach a negotiated settlement."

The New York Times (10/3, Swanson, 18.61M) reports that "many trade experts argue that the United States is justified in imposing the tariffs. ... But the tariffs will still weigh heavily on some American companies and households – including consumers at the grocery store, major United States airlines, liquor importers, specialty wine shops and some manufacturers."

In New Delhi, Ross Criticizes India's Protectionist Policies.

Reuters (10/3, Dasgupta) reports that in New Delhi on Thursday, Commerce Secretary Ross said India is "among the world's most protectionist countries but the United States is trying to negotiate a limited trade deal with the South Asian nation to resolve their differences." According to Reuters, the US and India "have been locked in trade disputes for months that have led to tit-for-tat tariffs." The Administration "has been concerned about Indian policies that mandate foreign firms to store more data locally, restrict the way US e-commerce giants operate and impose price caps on medical devices." Ross is quoted as saying, "All that we are looking for is to level the playing field. ... The US is the least protectionist country of the major powers. India is, if not the most protectionist, certainly one of the most protectionist."

Citi's Corbat Urges Fellow Leaders To Promote Equal Pay For Women.

American Banker (10/3, Berry, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Citigroup CEO Michael Corbat "urged fellow chief executives and other senior leaders to join efforts to promote equal pay for woman in all industries." Speaking at American Banker's Most Powerful Women in Banking and Finance gala Thursday, Corbat "said that unconscious bias has contributed to inequality in the workplace despite a decades-long effort by many companies to promote women." He told the audience of about 800 bankers, "Men, we have been part of the problem, so we have to be part of the solution." Citi "became the first US company to release unadjusted median pay-gap data," publishing earlier this year "a study that found female employees earn 29% less than the median pay of male employees, on an unadjusted basis." Corbat on Thursday also warned against unconscious bias and encouraged bankers to continue to mentor and promote women.

American Banker (10/3, Subscription Publication, 31K) also reports Corbat's speech in video.

Barr Warns SEC Against "Piling On" In Corporate Cases.

The Washington Times (10/3, Mordock, 492K) reports Attorney General Barr, speaking at the Securities and Exchange Commission, "warned regulators Thursday against imposing excessive punishments on corporate offenders because it could hurt investors." Barr said, "During parallel investigations, our agencies should ensure that we remain mindful of – and properly account for – the collateral consequences that our matters can sometimes have." The speech, in which Barr said "authorities must avoid 'piling on' in corporate cases," was his "first public appearance since he was named in a transcript released last week of President Trump's phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky."

Krugman: Trump Inducing Economic Slump.

In a New York Times (10/3, 18.61M) column headlined "Here Comes The Trump Slump," Paul Krugman writes that President Trump "may well be the first president of modern times to preside over a slump that can be directly attributed to his own policies, rather than bad luck." While several other recent presidents "were just unlucky to preside over slumps," Krugman says Trump "has done this to himself, largely by choosing to wage a trade war he insisted would be 'good, and easy to win.'"

FTC Seeks Sales And Ad Data From E-Cigarette Companies.

Reuters (10/3) reports that the Federal Trade Commission "has ordered a half-dozen e-cigarette companies to turn over sales and advertising data...in the first sign of a likely probe into their marketing practices." According to Reuters, "The order was sent to JUUL Labs Inc, RJ Reynolds Vapor Company, Fontem US Inc, Logic Technology Development LLC, Nu Mark LLC and NJOY LLC." Reuters points out that "the FTC order comes a week after a U.S. House panel asked Fontem Ventures, Reynolds American, NJOY, and Japan Tobacco, which owns Logic, to stop all advertising of their products in the United States. Juul had said the same day that it would pull its ads."

CDC: Nearly 1,100 Cases Of Vaping-Related Illnesses. The CBS Evening News (10/3, lead story, 3:20, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported the CDC said Thursday that "nearly 1,100 cases of lung illnesses related and linked to vaping have now been reported in the US. That is a jump of 275 cases since last week. Nineteen patients have died in 16 states, including two new deaths reported [Thursday] in Delaware and Connecticut." ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 10, 0:25, Muir, 5.76M) briefly covered the CDC report.

In a related story, John Torres reported on NBC Nightly News (10/3, story 13, 0:50, Holt, 6.07M), "New research from the Mayo Clinic found that some patients actually suffered toxic chemical burns to their lungs and airways as if being exposed to a chemical spill. But they still haven't identified exactly what chemicals are to blame."

Amazon, Disney At Odds Over Streaming Video.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Mattioli, Patel, Haggin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Amazon and Disney are in a disagreement over carrying Disney content on Fire TV devices. Amazon wants to control a substantial portion of the ad space on Disney apps, and Disney has resisted. Fire TV currently has no deal in place to carry the Disney+ streaming video service that will debut next month.

Trump Vows To Protect Medicare From "Maniac" Democrats, "Socialism."

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Today at The Villages in Florida, it was my great honor to sign an Executive Order on protecting and improving Medicare for our Nation's Seniors. Today's action is only the latest of many important steps we are taking to dramatically improve healthcare for the American People!" Trump also tweeted, "Great time at The Villages in Florida today. Sorry we couldn't get everybody in. I will be back soon!" Coverage of President's speech casts it as part of an effort to position himself in front of senior citizens as a defender of Medicare – and to paint the "Medicare for all" proposals adopted by some Democratic presidential candidates as "socialism." The Villages \(FL\) News (10/3, Croom, 10K) reports Trump "wowed" his "highly favorable Villages audience" and "promised to do whatever it takes to protect Medicare and overall healthcare for seniors." He "promised to protect Medicare for seniors and signed an executive order designed to strengthen the program," even as he "referred to Democrats in Congress and those who hope to run against him in 2020 as 'maniacs' who want to take away Medicare." The News adds Trump "promised to protect the program...from socialist destruction," and WFTV-TV Orlando, FL (10/3, 5:03 p.m. EDT, 45K) showed him saying, "As long as I am President, no one will lay a hand on your Medicare benefits." The Miami Herald (10/3, Smiley, 1.09M) similarly indicates Trump "basked in the sunny glow of The Villages, a massive Central Florida retirement community where the president can do almost no wrong."

WESH-TV Orlando, FL (10/3, 4:00 p.m. EDT, 19K) reported Trump "was joined on stage by Gov. Ron DeSantis and people with real-life examples of why the President's Medicare plan is the best for our country," and WINK-TV Fort Myers (FL)'s WINK News (10/3, 5:05 p.m. EDT, 23K) that Trump "is taking big steps to protect Medicare. Four and a half million Floridians depend on it. That's why he came to Florida to sign an executive order." Trump was shown saying, "We are making your Medicare even better and we're not letting anyone – it will never be taken away from you." WWSB-TV Sarasota, FL (10/3, 4:00 p.m. EDT, 5K) pointed out that Trump said "that Medicare is under threat like never before," and that his Administration "says its plans will focus heavily on providing new affordable healthcare options for our seniors." The President said "this new plan will strengthen the Medicare Advantage, which is an alternative to Medicare offered by private insurers, and covers about 22 million Americans. The proposal also seeks to offer more affordable plan options, expand the range of services that can be offered on the private plans and will aim to lower cost for seniors by pushing for procedures to be done in a hospital. ... The Trump Administration says this new plan is a vast contrast from the Democrats' Medicare for All plan. They say that is just way too expensive and will result in Medicare for none."

The Orlando \(FL\) Sentinel (10/3, Lemongello, 536K) reports the executive order was "titled 'Protecting and Improving Medicare for Our Nation's Seniors,'" a change from "the one it was given a few days ago, 'Protecting Medicare from Socialist Destruction.'" The Tampa Bay

\(FL\) Times (10/3, Mahoney, 742K) says "White House officials didn't explain why the name of the event had been changed." The Orlando \(FL\) Sentinel (10/3, Lemongello, 536K) says it was Trump's "first large event before a friendly crowd since Congress began impeachment hearings last week," and that "he couldn't resist attacking his political opponents, despite the event being billed as non-political." Said Trump, "These people on the other side, these people are crazy, by the way. ... They want to take it away, give you lousy health care. As long as I'm president, no one will lay a hand on your Medicare benefits." To the Washington Post (10/3, Goldstein, 14.2M), at any rate, "Trump's broader goal was to portray himself as the defender of popular aspects of the nation's health-care system and vilify Democrats as socialists determined to tear them down." The President, adds the Post, claimed "'maniac' Democrats would rip away their health care, decimate their retirement accounts and prioritize undocumented immigrants over US citizens." USA Today (10/3, Subramanian, Jackson, Fritze, 10.31M) quotes Trump as saying, "A nation must put its citizens first. ... I will never allow these politicians to steal your health care and give it to illegal aliens." The Hill (10/3, Sullivan, 2.98M) says the President also told the crowd, "They want to raid Medicare to fund a thing called socialism."

The AP (10/3, Freking, Alonso-Zaldivar) says the President "accused Democrats of an all-out attempt to 'totally obliterate Medicare' and portrayed himself as the program's defender." Trump "skipped past his own proposals for Medicare budget cuts, and he ignored the fact that no Democrat is proposing to take coverage or benefits away from seniors." The AP also asserts that the President was "trying to turn attention away from House Democrats' impeachment inquiry and focus on pocket-book issues instead." The New York Times (10/3, Karni, Goodnough, 18.61M) reports Trump pitched his Medicare ideas as "as the responsible alternative to the 'Medicare for all' policies supported by some of his Democratic political opponents." Reuters (10/3, Mason) reports the plans backed by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "effectively eliminat[es] private insurance," and adds Trump "referred to such proposals as socialist and pledged to prevent them from coming to fruition." The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Armour, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) points out that Warren has endorsed Sanders' plan, and quotes Trump as saying, "Almost every major Democrat in Washington has backed a massive government health-care takeover that would totally obliterate Medicare."

Politico (10/3, Rouben, 4.29M) similarly reports the President issued an executive order "expanding private Medicare Advantage plans," and "contrast[ed] his health care vision with Democrats' calls for a greater government role in health care." Trump "set out key themes of his reelection pitch, promising to defend a private insurance system that Democrats have sought to constrain and even eliminate in favor of government-run coverage." To Politico, Trump "attempted to position himself as a defender of seniors' health care."

USA Today (10/3, Subramanian, Jackson, Fritze, 10.31M) reports "the crowd began chanting 'four more years' on more than one occasion," and recounts that "at one point, a man shouted 'lock her up,' a chant directed at Trump's 2016 political rival Hillary Clinton." Trump "joked that the media would attack him if he didn't 'admonish' the man's comments. 'Stand up please,' Trump said mockingly to the audience member. 'I admonish you.'"

CNBC (10/3, Lovelace, 3.62M) reports on its website that "shortly after Trump's speech," HHS Secretary Azar said the President has "directed HHS to take a number of specific, significant steps that will meaningfully improve the financing of Medicare, advance the care American seniors receive from their doctors, and improve the health they enjoy." Azar "said those steps including lowering costs in Medicare Advantage, allowing those beneficiaries to create savings accounts and accelerating access to the latest medical technologies after being approved by regulators." Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/3) earlier Thursday, Azar previewed President Trump's speech and said "the core problem with 'Medicare for all' is it's really dependent on getting rid of private insurance. And what President Trump's fighting for is personalized, patient-centric care that puts you in control and treats you like a human being and not like a number. What could treat you more like a number than of government-run healthcare that undermines Medicare for seniors, reduces access to doctors and hospitals, creates a two-tier system of healthcare as the best doctors and hospitals flee from the system?"

The Washington Examiner (10/3, Leonard, 448K) reports, meanwhile, that Joe Grogan, head of the White House's Domestic Policy Council, said on a phone call with reporters, "This President has been focusing on health issues that other administrations have been ignoring for decades."

Trump Suggests Efforts To Lower Drug Costs Led Pharma To Fund Impeachment Drive. Politico (10/3, Karlin-Smith, Oweremohle, 4.29M) reports Trump "charged Thursday without evidence that the pharmaceutical industry was behind House Democrats' impeachment proceedings, suggesting it was payback for his administration's effort to lower drug costs." Said Trump, "Lowering the cost of prescription drugs, taking on the pharmaceutical companies, you think that's easy, it's not easy. It's not easy. ... I wouldn't be surprised if the hoax didn't come a little bit from some of the people that we're taking on." Trump added, "They're very powerful, they spend a lot of money, spend I think more money than any other group in the world actually in terms of lobbying and lobbying abilities. And I wouldn't be surprised if some of the nonsense that we all have to go through, but that I go through, wouldn't be surprised if it was from some of these industries like pharmaceuticals that we take on." Trump, adds Politico, "presented no evidence supporting the claim."

Trump Accuses Bidens Of Corruption In Ukraine And China, Urges Both Countries To Investigate.

Mainstream media coverage of President Trump's remarks yesterday about a potential Chinese investigation of Hunter Biden's business dealings in that country portrays them as further evidence that he is willing to seek help from foreign governments to weaken his political opponents. Encapsulating the tenor of the mainstream media coverage, USA Today (10/3, Fritze, Jackson, 10.31M) reports Trump's remarks "stunned legal observers, quieted many of his 'allies and provided ammunition to Democrats," and the Washington Post (10/3, Rucker, Bade, Itkowitz, 14.2M) that the President "seemed to make a mockery of the charge that he abused the power of his office by pressing his Ukrainian counterpart to examine unfounded allegations of corruption by Biden and his son Hunter." Politico (10/3, Calderone, 4.29M) laments, meanwhile, that the story "gave major air time to the innuendo the president and his allies have been trying to spread about Hunter Biden's links to a company funded by a Chinese investor." In fact, "while the substance of news reports focused on the brazenness of the president's publicly calling on foreign governments to investigate a rival, their headlines and chyrons often communicated a simpler message: 'Trump: Ukraine & China Should Investigate Joe Biden and Son,' as CNN put it."

Last night, Trump defended his comments, writing on Twitter, "As the President of the United States, I have an absolute right, perhaps even a duty, to investigate, or have investigated, CORRUPTION, and that would include asking, or suggesting, other Countries to help us out! ... This isn't about a Campaign, this is about Corruption on a massive scale!" Trump also tweeted, "We are simultaneously fighting the Fake News Media and their partner, the Democrat Party. Always tough to beat the 'Press,' but people are beginning to see how totally CORRUPT they are, and it makes our job a whole lot easier!"

All three major network newscasts covered the story last night. ABC World News Tonight (10/3, lead story, 3:05, Karl, 5.76M), which led with it, said "Trump asked yet another foreign country to investigate his potential 2020 rival," and that he "isn't even denying the central allegation against him, he's just insisting that asking a foreign government to investigate a political rival is entirely proper." Also in its lead segment, NBC Nightly News (10/3, lead story, 2:35, Holt, 6.07M) indicated that "Trump, who often doubles down on controversial statements, this time may have doubled down on more impeachment trouble for himself, stunningly and publicly." NBC (Alexander) recounted that "asked what he hoped Ukraine's president would do about the Bidens, following their call," Trump replied, "Well, I would think that if they were honest about it, they'd start a major investigation into the Bidens. It's a very simple answer. They should investigate the Bidens. By the way, likewise, China should start an investigation into the Bidens because what happened in China is just about as bad as what happened with Ukraine. So, I would say that President Zelensky, if it were me, I would recommend that they start an investigation into the Bidens, because nobody has any doubt that they weren't crooked."

The CBS Evening News (10/3, story 2, 2:30, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported, meanwhile, that Trump did "something that stunned everyone watching," and added (Jiang) that he "claims Hunter Biden profited in Ukraine and China because of his father's position as Vice President" though "there is no evidence of wrongdoing." Along those lines, the Washington Times (10/3, Howell, 492K) notes "Trump says Hunter Biden traded on his father's position to foster business ties in Ukraine and elsewhere around the globe," and has "also pointed to Hunter Biden's trip to China with the former vice president in 2013, after which Hunter Biden became involved with an investment fund that did business with the Bank of China."

The AP (10/3) reports, meanwhile, that "Trump has sought, without evidence, to implicate Biden and his son Hunter in the kind of corruption that has long plagued Ukraine." The Federalist (10/3, Marcus, 126K) offers a different perspective, stating, "We know that Hunter Biden took an extremely lucrative job from a Ukrainian energy concern for which he had no relevant experience. Is it really so strange for Americans to want to know if what he was really offering was access to the vice president? ... Likewise we know that Hunter Biden traveled to China with his father on Air Force Two in 2013, and that during that trip he met with a Chinese banker, and 10 days after the trip the Chinese granted a license for a new fund on which Hunter was a board member."

Townhall (10/3, Pavlich, 177K) quotes Trump as saying, "I'm sure that President Xi does not like being under that kind of scrutiny where billions of dollars is taken out of his country by a guy [Hunter Biden] that just got kicked out of the Navy. He got kicked out of the Navy, all of a sudden he's getting billions of dollars. You know what they call that? They call that a pay off. ... I think [Joe] Biden is going down and I think his whole situation, because now you may very well find that there are many other countries that they scammed, just like they scammed China and Ukraine. And basically who are they really scamming? The USA. And it's not good. And that's probably why China for so many years has had a sweetheart deal where China rips off the USA because they deal with people like Biden where they give the son a billion and a half dollars, and that's probably why China has such a sweetheart deal that for so many years they've been ripping off our country." Breitbart (10/3, Spiering, 673K) reports, meanwhile, that "Hunter Biden's financial firm scored a $1.5 billion investment deal with the Bank of China just days after he traveled with his father for a visit to the country in 2013." Breitbart also reports "attorneys for Hunter Biden confirmed in June to ABC News that Biden remains in his position despite questions about his role at a Chinese investment fund."

The Los Angeles Times (10/3, Bierman, Megerian, Diaz, 4.64M), however, casts Trump as "potentially adding a dramatic new risk for the White House," as "unlike Trump's then-private appeal in July for Ukraine to dig up dirt on his domestic political opponents, the crux of the House Democrats' investigation so far, Trump publicly solicited China's help Thursday in front of TV cameras on the south portico of the White House." Moreover, "in both cases the president smeared Biden...with a stew of unsubstantiated or false allegations of corruption," as "no evidence has emerged of any wrongdoing by the former vice president or his son." The AP (10/3, Miller, Colvin) reports that "by publicly egging China on to investigate a Democratic political rival, Trump affirmed the approach he made in private to Ukraine's president that has led to the impeachment investigation by the House," and Politico (10/3, Oprysko, 4.29M) that he was "boldly engaging on national television in activity similar to the allegations at the heart of Democrats' rapidly intensifying impeachment probe."

Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (10/3, 647K) that "it is hard to look past what was a remarkable moment, one for the history books, as...Trump stood on the grounds of the White House and called for interference in the 2020 election." Jake Tapper further lamented on CNN's The Lead (10/3, 623K), "The reaction from Republican lawmakers to further evidence that...Trump is clearly using his office to push foreign governments to investigate his domestic political rivals either" is either to defend his "conduct or the faint sound of crickets chirping."

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (10/3, Beck, 632K) reports Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) "said Thursday there's nothing improper about...Trump's call on Chinese officials to investigate his top political rival in his 2020 re-election bid." Said Johnson, "I want to find out what happened during 2016. ... If there's potential criminal activity, the President of the United States is our chief law enforcement officer. We have proper agreements with countries to investigate potential crimes so I don't think there's anything improper about doing that."

To the New York Times (10/3, Baker, Sullivan, 18.61M), however, the President's remarks amounted to "an extraordinary request to a foreign power for help that could benefit him in next year's election," and to Reuters (10/3, Rampton, Zengerle) he "again invited foreign interference in a US presidential election." CQ Roll Call (10/3, Bennett, 154K) says "Trump continues to press foreign leaders to investigate one of his top political rivals," and the Wall Street Journal (10/3, Ballhaus, Thomas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, runs a similar report this morning.

The Hill (10/3, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) indicates "the Biden campaign issued a statement decrying Trump's remarks as 'a grotesque choice of lies over truth and self over country,' and likening them to his comments during the 2016 election in which he suggested Russia try and find Hillary Clinton's missing emails." The Hill (10/3, Lillis, 2.98M) also reports House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff on Thursday "blasted...Trump for asking China and Ukraine to investigate former Vice President Joe Biden, calling it a 'fundamental breach' of presidential decorum and a threat to national security."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/3, 14.2M) argues, "That a request for a foreign investigation of a US citizen would come directly from the president, in the absence of any legitimate US probe, is a blatant violation of that citizen's rights and of the US rule of law." Moreover, "that Mr. Trump does it in front of television cameras makes it no less egregious: In doing so, he is attempting to normalize what should be utterly unacceptable presidential behavior." The New York Times (10/3, 18.61M) editorializes, meanwhile, that while yesterday's comments "might seem self-defeating – 'self-impeaching,' even," Trump "is a master at what a former New York senator, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, called defining deviancy down. One baldfaced presidential lie, once exposed, is an outrage; a thousand such lies is a statistic." The Times adds, "If Mr. Trump has evidence of possible corruption overseas, his counsel should relay it to the Department of Justice and let the FBI do its job, in coordination with its foreign counterparts."

Along those lines, Rep. Ro Khanna (D-CA) said on CNN's Situation Room (10/3, 647K), "The President is being brazen. He is basically saying that he's trying to normalize this behavior and saying it's perfectly appropriate. It's as if someone is accused of robbing a bank, goes on television and says I'm going to continue to rob banks and you're not going to be able to do anything because I've got a lot of money in my campaign account and my poll numbers are good. When are people like Sen. Mitt Romney going to speak up and say, 'Enough is enough. This is about our constitutional democracy.' We need some profiles of courage who are Republicans who are going to stand up against this President."

Rep. Jimmy Gomez (D-CA) said on CNN's Situation Room (10/3, 696K) that Trump "should never have asked China to interfere and investigate Joe Biden in order to win the 2020 election. It is always done in this context, right? There's always something outstanding. ... Right now, this Administration is going into trade negotiations with China. China is suffering because of this trade war. So are our farmers. So are people in the United States. But what kind of incentive, what kind of pressure is this going to put on China...when this trade war is costing them billions and billions of dollars? So the President is abusing his office and trying to put pressure on foreign governments to interfere in our election and that...is at the core of why we're conducting the inquiry. That's why a lot of people think he should be removed from office."

Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) said on CNN's The Lead (10/3, 665K), "Clearly, the guy hasn't figured out that when you solicit the help of a foreign government to interfere in the election of the President of the United States, you may be impeached. It is extraordinary. And I will tell you, I'm calling on the White House to actually release whatever transcripts, whatever recordings, whatever notes there are about Donald Trump's previous conversations with Xi because we need to know what he has now said in private conversations because we obviously know what he's saying in public. And, clearly, he doesn't get it, which is that the commander in chief of the United States, the President of the United States should not be in the business of working with foreign leaders against our democracy."

Shokin Says US Ambassador Asked Him To Lay Off Biden; Shokin's Replacement Says Hunter Received "Millions." Fox News (10/3, Singman, 27.59M) reports on its website that "a batch of newly released documents, including court filings as well as notes from interviews conducted by Rudy Giuliani, have put the spotlight back on Biden family dealings in Ukraine." Among the documents "are notes from an interview ...Giuliani conducted with fired Ukrainian prosecutor Viktor Shokin earlier this year, in which he claimed he was told by former US Ambassador to Ukraine Geoffrey R. Pyatt to back off an investigation involving that firm, Burisma Holdings, and its founder." Shokin also "claimed that former Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko told him he should not investigate Burisma, 'as it was not in the interest of Joe and/or Hunter Biden.'" Poroshenko has "told reporters that Biden never asked him to open or close any cases," but "Fox News has obtained notes from another interview Giuliani conducted --with Yuriy Lutsenko, the former Ukrainian prosecutor who replaced Shokin and eventually closed the Burisma probe." Lutsenko said he "believes Mr. Viktor Shokin ... is honest," and that he "believes Hunter Biden received millions of dollars in compensation from Burisma." USA Today (10/3, Santucci, 10.31M) reports, meanwhile, that Shokin "was considered by the United States, European diplomats and other international groups to be ineffective at rooting out corruption in Ukraine," and that "there is no credible evidence for the assertion that the ouster of the prosecutor was intended to benefit Hunter Biden."

Member Of Trump 2020 Advisory Board: Impeachment Drive A "Coup" Attempt. Jenna Ellis Rives, an author, constitutional law attorney and member of the Donald Trump 2020 advisory board, writes in The Hill (10/3, 2.98M), "The impeachment narrative pushed by House Democrats needs to be called exactly what it is, which is a political coup," as "contrary to what Speaker Nancy Pelosi, [House Intelligence] Chairman Adam Schiff, and progressive left wingers would have you believe, the United States still does have an objective rule of law, and the Constitution is not merely a guideline subject to interpretation and application at the whim of a power grab." Rivers adds that

"regardless of whether you are a Republican, a Democrat, an independent, or anything else, it should concern all of us that the rule of law is being tossed out in favor of an open coup designed to undermine a free and fair election in the United States." Rives also writes that "sheer partisan hatred of an American president by the opposition party is not and has never been a sufficient legal or constitutional basis for impeachment." The President shared the article on Twitter, writing, "Thank you @JennaEllisRives, really well done!"

Pence: Americans Have Right To Know If Biden Family "Profited From His Position" As VP.

The Washington Post (10/3, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that in Arizona on Thursday, Vice President Pence "defended Trump when he was asked to respond to the president calling for China to investigate Biden and his family." Pence is quoted as saying, "I think the American people have a right to know if the vice president of the United States or his family profited from his position as vice president in the last administration. That's about looking backwards and understanding what really happened."

The Arizona Republic (10/3, Sanchez, 869K) indicates Pence also said that "when he met last month with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky at the request of Trump, they spoke of the lack of support from European partners against Russian aggression and 'real issues of corruption in Ukraine.'" Pence also "lashed out against Democrats in the House of Representatives who have launched an impeachment inquiry to examine the extent of Trump's dealings with Ukraine," saying, "This is just more of the same of what we've seen from Democrats over the last two and a half years. ... These endless investigations should end in Washington, D.C." The Hill (10/3, Samuels, 2.98M) quotes Pence as further stating, "One of the main reasons we were elected to Washington, D.C., was to drain the swamp."

The New York Times (10/3, Crowley, Haberman, 18.61M) also reports Pence's comments under the headline "Pence Makes Clear There Is No Daylight Between Him And Trump." Pence, says the Times, "backed up his boss without apology, saying that Mr. Trump was making good on his campaign pledge to 'drain the swamp.'"

CNN Anchor: Pence "Lying." The Washington Examiner (10/3, Brest, 448K) reports that on CNN Thursday, anchor Brianna Keilar "accused...Pence of lying about former Vice President Joe Biden and his son Hunter's connections with Ukraine." Her comments came after Pence told reporters that the relationship between Biden and Ukraine is "worth looking into." Keilar, "who had Dana Bash and Chris Cillizza on with her to discuss Pence's remarks," said Pence was there in "discomfort." Bash claimed Pence would "probably rather be having a root canal." Keilar continued, "Pence is – and I know, and you know, and we all know for having covered Pence for so long – that Pence is lying, and that he knows that he is, because he says that the President was raising issues that were appropriate. I do not believe that Mike Pence believes the President, in his heart of hearts or even, you know, just superficially believes that what the President was saying was appropriate."

House Investigators Release Texts Suggesting Link Between Biden Probe, Trump-Zelensky Summit.

The Washington Post (10/4, Hudson, 14.2M) reports, "House investigators released numerous text messages late Thursday night illustrating how senior State Department officials coordinated" with Rudy Giuliani and Andrey Yermak, a top aide to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, "to leverage a potential summit" between President Trump and Zelensky "on a promise from the Ukrainians to investigate the 2016 U.S. election and an energy company that employed the son of 2020 Democratic candidate Joe Biden." The texts, provided to investigators by ex-US special envoy Kurt Volker "during a nearly 10-hour deposition Thursday, reveal that officials felt Trump would not agree to meet with [Zelensky] unless Zelensky promised to launch the investigations – and did so publicly." The texts do not mention Biden by name, but "congressional Democrats leading an impeachment inquiry are pointing to them as clear evidence that Trump conditioned normal bilateral relations with Ukraine on that country first agreeing 'to launch politically motivated investigations,' top Democrats said in statement Thursday night."

USA Today (10/4, King, Shesgreen, Wu, 10.31M) says the texts "paint a picture of American foreign policy decisions being driven by Trump's domestic political concerns and an ad-hoc agenda crafted by" Giuliani. Volker wrote to Yermak on July 25, just before Trump and Zelensky spoke by phone, "Heard from the White House – assuming President Z convinces trump he will investigate/get to the bottom of what happened in 2016, we will nail down a date for visit to Washington. Good luck!" A week earlier, Volker wrote to two other US diplomats, "Most imp't is for Zelensky to say that he will help with investigation."

CNN (10/4, Herb, Leblanc, 83.16M) says on its website that the text messages "add a new layer of detail to the whistleblower complaint that prompted the impeachment inquiry, which alleged that Trump had urged the Ukrainian government to dig up dirt" on Biden. The AP (10/4), Reuters (10/4, Zengerle), and The Hill (10/4, 2.98M) also report.

CNN Refuses To Air Trump Campaign Ads Accusing Bidens Of Corruption, Calling Impeachment A "Coup."

The Washington Times (10/3, Chasmar, 492K) reports "CNN is refusing to air a new Trump reelection campaign ad that attacks the network's prime-time anchors Don Lemon and Chris Cuomo as 'lapdogs' for the Democratic Party." The ad, "titled 'Biden Corruption,' highlights the controversy surrounding" the former vice president "and his son Hunter Biden's business dealings in Ukraine." Said the narrator, "Joe Biden promised Ukraine $1 billion if they fired the prosecutor investigating his son's company. ... But when President Trump asks Ukraine to investigate corruption, the Democrats want to impeach him. ... And their media lapdogs fall in line." The latter comment is heard "over footage of Mr. Lemon, Mr. Cuomo, CNN reporter Jim Acosta, and MSNBC host Rachel Maddow." The narrator concludes, "They lost the election. Now they want to steal this one. Don't let them." A "network spokesperson" told the Daily Beast (10/3, Kirell, 1.39M), "CNN is rejecting the ad, as it does not meet our advertising standards. ... Specifically, in addition to disparaging CNN and its journalists, the ad makes assertions that have been proven demonstrably false by various news outlets, including CNN."

Townhall (10/3, Pavlich, 177K) reports Trump 2020 Communications Director Tim Murtaugh responded in a statement, saying, "CNN spends all day protecting Joe Biden in their programming, so it's not surprising that they're shielding him from truthful advertising too, and then talking to other media outlets about it. ... Our ad is entirely accurate and was reviewed by counsel, and CNN wouldn't even describe to us what they found objectionable. This isn't a cable news channel anymore, it's a Democrat public relations firm."

The New York Times (10/3, Grynbaum, Hsu, 18.61M) reports CNN also refused to air an ad "deriding the House Democrats' impeachment inquiry – one of which deemed the effort 'nothing short of a coup,'" arguing it "contained inaccuracies and unfairly attacked the network's journalists." The Times adds "it is unusual but not unprecedented for television networks to reject a political advertisement from a presidential campaign," and that "the move by CNN is likely to inflame longstanding tensions between the news network and the president, who denounced CNN staff members as 'corrupt people' during a White House news conference on Wednesday and criticized the network again on Thursday."

Biden Campaign Warns Fox Not To Run Ad. Politico (10/3, Calderone, 4.29M) reports "Biden's presidential campaign is urging Fox News not to run a Trump 2020 campaign advertisement it claims 'spreads false, definitively debunked conspiracy theories.'" Biden campaign manager Greg Schultz wrote, "Though the Trump campaign is prepared to fabricate outright lies, your station's airwaves should not be used to disseminate them. ... We are putting you on notice about the absolute falsity of the advertisement's claims, and we expect that you will reject it. Please consider this letter a standing request that you reject any advertisement containing similar claims, regardless whether the Trump campaign or a third-party group seeks to place it."

Trump Campaign Ready "Avalanche" Of Anti-Biden Ads In Early Primary States. Politico (10/3, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports "Trump's reelection campaign is preparing an avalanche of TV ads targeting...Biden in early primary states – its most aggressive step yet to meddle in the Democratic nomination contest." Politico adds that "starting this weekend, the reelection effort will air over $1 million in anti-Biden commercials in Iowa, South Carolina, New Hampshire and Nevada, according to two people familiar with the move." The ads "focus on Trump's claim that the former vice president and his son engaged in corruption in Ukraine." The Trump campaign "had already announced an $8 million national TV buy centered on impeachment and the Ukrainian matter. Of that total, slightly over $1 million will now be directed to the four early voting states, where Biden is locked in a competitive battle for the Democratic nomination."

DNC Asks Facebook To Stop Running Trump Ad On Biden, Ukraine. The Washington Times (10/3, Blake, 492K) reports the DNC "pressed Facebook to pull an ad purchased by...Trump's reelection campaign as it ramped up its attacks Wednesday against...Biden." The Hill (10/3, Easley, 2.98M) quotes Daniel Wessel, the DNC's deputy war room director, as saying, "Yes, any false ad should be fact-checked and removed, including this one. ... Facebook owes that to its users."

Parscale: Trump's Small-Dollar Donations Show Impeachment Is Backfiring On Democrats. In an op-ed for Real Clear Politics (10/3, 825K), Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale says it is "clear that the Democrats have made one of the first great political blunders of the 21st century by trying to impeach the president of the United States based on a half-understood rumor." Parscale argues that based on "the groundswell of small-dollar donations" flowing into the Trump campaign's coffers, Democrats "are going to pay a terrible price for indulging the demands of their radical base." The RNC and the Trump campaign, he adds, "raked in a $13 million haul within 36 hours of House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's embarrassingly vague announcement of a 'formal impeachment inquiry.'" Trump tweeted Parscale's op-ed Thursday afternoon.

Earlier in the day, Trump tweeted, "95% Approval Rating in the Republican Party, and record setting fundraising that has taken place over the past two weeks. Thank you!"

Trump Mocks Democrats As "Maniacs," Says Impeachment Is About Hurting Him In 2020.

The Hill (10/3, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports that during a visit to Florida yesterday, "President Trump decried his 2020 foes as 'maniacs' and the impeachment inquiry as 'crap' on Thursday, departing from a speech on health care to rip into his political opponents." Said Trump, "The last Administration, frankly, was moderate compared to the maniacs that you are hearing from today." Trump also accused Democrats "of launching formal impeachment proceedings in order to bruise him ahead of the election," and "when the crowd of supporters began to chant 'four more years!' Trump encouraged them." Added Trump, "If you want to drive them crazy, just say eight more years, or 12 more years. Or 16. Sixteen would do it good. You'd really drive them into the loony bin. ... That's why they do the impeachment crap – because they know they can't beat us fairly. That's the only reason they are doing it. They can't win."

Trump On CNN: "We Ought To Start Our Own Network" With "Real News." Politico (10/3, Seddiq, 4.29M) reports Trump also "proposed starting a news network to counter one of his favorite media targets," CNN. Said Trump, "We ought to start our own network and put some real news out there, because they are so bad for our country. ... We're looking at that. We should do something about it, too. ... Put some really talented people and get a real voice out there, not a voice that's fake."

Trump Tweets Ad Saying "The Swamp Is Trying To Take Him Out." In a pinned tweet late Thursday afternoon, President Trump posted an ad from his campaign that says, in part, "They couldn't defeat him, so now the swamp is trying to take him out." The ad goes on to say, "The swamp hates him, but Mr. Nice Guy won't cut it. It takes a tough guy to change Washington. It takes Donald Trump."

Trump Says McConnell Has Told Him He Sees No Problem With Zelensky Call.

McClatchy (10/3, Clark, 19K) reports the President told reporters yesterday that Senate Majority Leader McConnell "has told him he sees no problem with the phone call to the Ukraine president that is the center of an impeachment inquiry." Trump said "the Kentucky Republican considers Trump's July 25 call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky 'the most innocent phone call' that he's read." Added Trump, "Anybody that reads it says the same thing. ... And the only people that don't understand it is when they look at the false, fabricated, fraudulent statement made by Shifty Schiff."

Ukrainian Officials Did Not Find Out US Aid Was Held Up Until One Month After Trump-Zelensky Call.

BuzzFeed News (10/3, Miller) reports that "when Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky spoke with President Donald Trump in the now-infamous July 25 phone call, he believed $391 million worth of military aid was already on its way to Kiev, two Ukrainian officials and a US official told BuzzFeed News." In fact, "the Ukrainian government didn't know it was being held up in Washington by Trump, according to the two Ukrainian officials," and "nearly a month after the call – which Zelensky has since described as 'good' and Trump has called 'perfect' – the Ukrainian government was left stumped when they received word that the aid had in fact been suspended." Ukraine "finally learned about the holdup in late August, nearly a month after the call, according to Olena Zerkal, the deputy foreign minister who was acting minister at the time of the call." Trump had told Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney "to freeze the aid back in mid-July, according to a Washington Post report last week," and "the decision had reportedly been communicated by the US Office of Management and Budget to State and Defense department officials on July 18 – a week before the phone call with Zelensky." The Federalist (10/3, Davidson, 126K) points out the story "contradicts the Democratic narrative that Trump was engaging in an insidious quid pro quo by withholding military aid from Ukraine to compel them to investigate former vice president and 2020 Democratic contender Joe Biden, among other requests."

The Federalist (10/3, Marcus, 126K) also reports, "Long gone now are allegations of any quid pro quo with Zelensky. That ship sailed when the transcript of Trump's call with the Ukrainian leader offered no evidence that the president was offering military aid as a carrot, which was the initial allegation."

State Department Approves Missile Sale To Ukraine Referenced In Call. Reuters (10/3, Brice) reports the State Department "has approved the sale of 150 Raytheon Co Javelin missiles and related equipment worth up to $39.2 million to Ukraine, the Defense Department said in a statement on Thursday." Reuters adds "the type of missiles was mentioned in a July 25 call between...Trump and...Zelenskiy that has prompted a congressional impeachment inquiry against Trump." USA Today (10/3, Shesgreen, 10.31M) says the announcement came "amid the swirl of impeachment proceedings against...Trump over his dealings with Ukraine's president."

The AP (10/3) reports "Air Force Gen. Tod Wolters, the Supreme Allied Commander, told Pentagon reporters on Thursday that he believes that the US should send more Javelins to Ukraine beyond those already in the pipeline." Wolters "said the Javelins, which are manufactured in a joint venture by Raytheon and Lockheed Martin, and the military training teams that deploy with them allow Ukraine to better protect itself."

White House To Tell Pelosi It May Not Cooperate With Probe Until House Formally Votes On It.

Axios (10/3, Treene, Talev, 521K) reports "the White House is planning to send Speaker Nancy Pelosi a letter as soon as Friday arguing that President Trump and his team can ignore lawmakers' demands until she holds a full House vote formally approving an impeachment inquiry. 2 sources familiar with the letter tell Axios." Axios adds that "by putting in writing the case that Trump and his supporters have been making verbally for days, the White House is preparing for a court fight and arguing to the public that its resistance to Congress' requests is justified." Trump "wants to force House Democrats in vulnerable races to be on the record if they favor pursuing impeachment, these sources tell us." The Daily Caller (10/3, Kruta, 716K) says "the letter will also echo the sentiment of Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, who accused House Democrats of attempting to 'bully' the State Department officials by demanding that they appear on short notice without providing official subpoenas or allowing them adequate time to prepare."

The Washington Times (10/3, Dinan, 492K) reports, meanwhile, that "Pelosi's declaration of an impeachment inquiry is barely a week old, and it's already running into serious challenges on the legal front." The Times adds "a top Republican told a federal judge Thursday that Mrs. Pelosi's move is only words and carries no real weight. It can't, for example, unlock secret grand jury information," said Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA), the ranking member on the House Judiciary Committee. The Times adds "Congress' own legal team at the Congressional Research Service said Mrs. Pelosi is treading new ground in pursuing an impeachment without getting the entire House on record and laying out clear rules of the road."

McCarthy Slams Lack Of Transparency, Standards In Impeachment Inquiry. House Minority Leader McCarthy yesterday took to Twitter to write, "I've written to Speaker Pelosi to halt the impeachment inquiry until we can receive public answers to the following questions. Given the enormity of the question at hand – impeaching a duly elected president – the American public deserves fairness and transparency." CQ Roll Call (10/3, McPherson, 154K) notes McCarthy wrote in his letter, "Unfortunately, you have given no clear indication as to how your impeachment inquiry will proceed – including whether key historical precedents or basic standards of due process will be observed. ... In addition, the swiftness and recklessness with which you have proceeded has already resulted in committee chairs attempting to limit minority participation in scheduled interviews, calling into question the integrity of such an inquiry." McCarthy "posed 10 questions to Pelosi in the letter about the process," including "whether she'll hold a vote of the full House to authorize the inquiry, whether the minority will be granted subpoena power, and whether subpoenas will be subject to a committee vote upon request of the chairman or ranking member." The Washington Times (10/3, Dinan, 492K) says McCarthy wrote Pelosi must also "decide what role Mr. Trump's legal team will have in attending hearings, cross-examining witnesses or gaining access to evidence."

The President reacted to McCarthy's letter on Twitter, writing, "Leader McCarthy, we look forward to you soon becoming Speaker of the House. The Do Nothing Dems don't have a chance!"

Pelosi Pushes Back Against Holding Full House Vote On Impeachment Inquiry. CQ Roll Call (10/3, McPherson, 154K) reports "Pelosi sent McCarthy a response Thursday afternoon that only addressed one of his process questions." Said Pelosi, "The existing rules of the House provide House committees with full authority to conduct investigations for all matters under their jurisdiction, including impeachment investigations. ... There is no requirement under the Constitution, under House Rules, or House precedent that the whole House vote before proceeding with an impeachment inquiry." Pelosi "had expressed the same view when asked on ABC's 'Good Morning America' why she's not taking that step." The Washington Examiner (10/3, Ferrechio, 448K) says Pelosi also wrote, "We hope you and other Republicans share our commitment to following the facts, upholding the Constitution, protecting our national security, and defending the integrity of our elections at such a serious moment in our nation's history."

On ABC, the Washington Free Beacon (10/3, Kugle, 78K) reports, "George Stephanopoulos asked Pelosi if Congress had reached a 'point of no return,' and if an impeachment vote is 'inevitable.'" Pelosi replied, "I don't think so. ... No, we just go forward and follow the facts. There are some people who say 'why are you calling for an inquiry? You should just call to impeach.' I don't think that would be fair and it isn't worthy of the Constitution."

Pelosi: Impeachment Doesn't Require "Too Much Inquiry." The Miami Herald (10/3, Ocasio, Daughterty, 1.09M) reports that in Florida yesterday, Pelosi said "the congressional probe wouldn't 'need too much inquiry.'" Said Pelosi, "The President has confessed to his violation of his oath of office, and right there, there it is. So it doesn't need too much inquiry."

White House Considers Targeting Moderate Democrats In GOP Districts To Stop Impeachment. The Washington Post (10/3, Bade, Dawsey, 14.2M) describes White House officials as "intent on stopping the House from impeaching President Trump" and says they are "considering appealing to moderate Democrats in Republican districts to stand with the president." The effort "would target some of the 31 Democrats from congressional districts Trump won in 2016, many of whom ran on rebuilding infrastructure, improving trade deals and lowering the cost of prescription drugs, according to multiple officials familiar with the strategy." It "would be based on these Democrats' 2018 election promises to work with the president – accompanied with a warning that impeachment would hamper possible legislative victories." The Post adds, "Democratic leaders dismissed the notion that the White House could win over moderates with policy promises." Pelosi "has said that her caucus is more than willing to work with the president while they continue investigating him."

Pelosi told ABC's Good Morning America (10/3, 3.38M) Thursday that she is willing to work with Trump to lower the cost of prescription drugs and pass the US-Mexico-Canada trade agreement despite the ongoing House impeachment inquiry. Pelosi said, "It's up to him. That was our pledge during the campaign for the people. We would lower the costs of prescription drugs. I think the President wants to do that, so I hope that he would cooperate. He does want the US-Mexico-Canada free trade agreement. So do we."

NRCC Poll: 66% In GOP-Held Battleground Districts Say Democrats Are Too Obsessed With Impeachment. Breitbart editor-at-large John Nolte writes in Breitbart (10/3, 673K) that NRCC polling "shows impeachment is backfiring bigly in battleground districts." According to the NRCC poll, in battleground congressional districts, "Two-thirds (63%) of voters in NRCC target seats and 66% of voters in Republican-held battleground seats agree that Democrats in Congress are too obsessed with impeaching the President[.]" Nolte adds that "the NRCC numbers align with the polls we are seeing from the media, polls that once again show nothing more than the Democrats consolidating their base of support on the issue."

Grassley, Johnson Urge ICIg To Probe Leaks Of Classified Info From Whistleblower Complaint.

The Daily Caller (10/3, Ross, 716K) reports that Sens. Charles Grassley (R-IA) and Ron Johnson (R-WI) have written to Michael Atkinson, the intelligence community inspector general, to ask "whether he is investigating leaks of classified details of the whistleblower complaint against President Donald Trump, as well as leaks for news stories published about the Trump-Russia investigation." The senators "noted that classified information about a CIA whistleblower's complaint over a July 25 phone call between Trump and Ukraine's president leaked to the media in the weeks before the complaint was released." The Daily Caller adds "details of the complaint leaked out drip by drip to the press soon after" House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff "began discussing the mysterious complaint." The Federalist (10/3, Clark, 126K) says that "according to Grassley and Johnson, the ICIg has neither confirmed nor denied the existence of an investigation into the leaks," and the senators "believe the IC should be just as transparent as the White House in releasing information regarding the whistleblower complaint."

Breitbart Analysis: Whistleblower Rules Did Not Change, But Form Did. In an analysis, Breitbart (10/3, Pollak, 673K) fact checks the claim that the President "lied when he said that the intelligence community changed the whistleblower rules to allow people to submit second-hand information." Breitbart declares the claim "false" because "even if the rules did not change, the online form did change to remove a first-hand information requirement – apparently to justify the complaint against Trump." Breitbart adds, "Trump thought – as others did – that meant the 'rules' had changed, but they probably had not. And it may not have mattered anyway, because the 'whistleblower' used the old form to submit the complaint."

CNN's Tapper: Whistleblower A Registered Democrat. Jake Tapper said on CNN's The Lead (10/3, 665K), "A source familiar with the whistleblower investigation tells me that the political bias referred to by the intelligence community Inspector General is that the whistleblower is a registered Democrat. That is the bias. The IG acknowledged the bias in his statement, though he said that didn't change the facts of the whistleblower complaint."

House Republicans Will Force Vote To Condemn Schiff.

In what Politico (10/3, Zanona, Everett, 4.29M) describes as "their most aggressive offensive yet as the GOP fumbles for a strategy to bear back impeachment efforts," House Republicans "will force a vote to formally condemn Rep. Adam Schiff when they return from recess." Politico says the move, which is "largely symbolic" since it will not be approved by the Democrat-controlled House, has the backing of "the House's highest-ranking Republicans and some of President Donald Trump's close allies on Capitol Hill": House Minority Leader McCarthy and House Minority Whip Scalise.

Townhall: Pelosi "Falsely" Claims Schiff's Interpretation Of Trump-Zelensky Call Was Real. Townhall (10/3, Barkoukis, 177K) reports that in an interview with ABC's Good Morning America (10/3, 3.38M) Thursday, House Speaker Pelosi "falsely claimed" that House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff's "fabrication of the transcript between President Trump and Ukrainian President Zelensky was actually real." Asked by George Stephanopoulos, if it was right for Schiff "to have that dramatic interpretation of the president's transcript of the phone call," Pelosi said, "I want the American people to know what that phone call was about. I want them to hear, it. So yeah it's fair. ... It's sad, but it's using the President's own words." Reminded that "those weren't the president's words, it was an interpretation of the president's words. They're saying he made this up," Pelosi said, "He did not make it up."

Trump cited Pelosi's comments in a tweet Thursday night and questioned whether he should sue her. Trump wrote, "Nancy Pelosi today, on @GMA, actually said that Adam Schiffy Schiff didn't fabricate my words in a major speech before Congress. She either had no idea what she was saying, in other words lost it, or she lied. Even Clinton lover @GStephanopoulos strongly called her out. Sue her?"

Schiff's Handling Of Whistleblower Complaint Draws Criticism. The New York Post (10/3, Schwab, Garger, 4.57M) says Schiff is facing growing criticism over "his handling of the whistleblower complaint – and how he's conducting the Trump impeachment inquiry." Schiff "was ripped Wednesday over the closed-door testimony of former US envoy for Ukraine Kurt Volker." Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) "stormed out of the hours-long deposition and told reporters that Schiff wanted to limit certain members from questioning Volker." Said Jordan, "If this is how Mr. Schiff is going to conduct these types of interviews in the future...that's a concern." The Post adds that on Wednesday, "Schiff was ripped by liberal commentator Sam Stein for not disclosing that he was aware of the complaint before it was filed."

Kimberley Strassel writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that Schiff's handling of the whistleblower complaint raises questions about the legitimacy of the impeachment inquiry.

Trump: "Lowlife" Schiff Should Resign. Thursday morning, President Trump re-tweeted a post from Breitbart's Kristina Wong, which said, "@RepMattGaetz Recalls When Adam Schiff Sought Nude Pictures of Trump from Prankster He Thought Was a Ukrainian Official <http://bit.ly/2nGDyBX> via @BreitbartNews." Trump wrote, "Schiff is a lowlife who should resign (at least!)."

Trump also tweeted the results of an unscientific Breitbart News online poll showing that 98.4 percent of respondents said Schiff should "resign and be investigated," while 1.6 percent said he should not.

Durham Investigation Examines Other Countries' Roles In Aiding Clinton Campaign.

The Washington Times (10/3, Scarborough, 492K) reports that Attorney General Barr's investigation "into the origins of the Trump-Russia saga is taking investigators to Australia, Ukraine, Italy and the United Kingdom to examine spies and their Trump targets." While some news reports have characterized the probe as "an investigation into the 22-month Robert Mueller inquiry," Barr appointed US Attorney John Durham "to look at something Mr. Mueller ignored: How extensive was FBI spying on the Trump campaign, was it justified and what help did Hillary Clinton's people obtain from foreign governments?"

Ambassador Confirms Australia Is Assisting Barr's Probe Of Alleged Campaign Surveillance. Politico (10/3, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that Joe Hockey, Australia's Ambassador to the US, confirmed to Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) that the Australian government is assisting Barr's "investigation of foreign interference in the 2016 election – but disputed the lawmaker's reference to an Australian diplomat involved in the Russia probe's origins." Hockey "wrote that the Australian government 'is cooperating' with Barr's inquiry and has 'been public about our willingness to cooperate.'" However, Hockey added, "In your letter you made mention of the role of an Australian diplomat. We reject your characterisation of his role."

A Washington Post (10/3, Taylor, 14.2M) analysis says, "From Britain to Australia, Japan to Saudi Arabia, foreign leaders who decided to gamble on America's unpredictable leader are probably wondering whether they made a losing bet." The "scandal over Trump's private conversation with Zelensky has sparked further scrutiny of interactions between the Trump administration and other Trump-friendly foreign allies." According to the Post, "Appearing subservient to such an unpopular figure carries real political risk for any foreign ally – particularly in Britain, Australia and Italy, where the governments are already struggling with their own instability and questions of legitimacy."

NYTimes Analysis: No Evidence To Support Trump's CrowdStrike Allegations. A New York Times (10/3, Shane, 18.61M) analysis reports on President Trump's focus on the California cybersecurity company CrowdStrike. The Times says that during an April 2017 interview with The AP, Trump discussed the company, saying, "I heard it's owned by a very rich Ukrainian; that's what I heard." In his July call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, Trump "was still holding on to this false conspiracy theory" and he "added one novel detail:

"The server, they say Ukraine has it." The Times says this "may have appealed to Mr. Trump because it undercut a well-established fact that he has resented and resisted for three years: The Russian government interfered in the 2016 election to help him win." However, "there is no evidence to support the president's vague suggestion that Ukraine, not Russia, might be responsible for the hacking, or that CrowdStrike somehow connived in it."

GOP Lawmakers Say Volker's Testimony Did Not Advance Democrats' Impeachment Narrative.

Republican lawmakers on Thursday downplayed the closed-door testimony of former US special envoy for Ukraine Kurt Volker. Chief intelligence correspondent Catherine Herridge said on Fox News Special Report (10/3, 1.53M) that during a break in Wednesday's testimony, "Republicans said Volker's testimony was a bust." The Washington Times (10/3, Muñoz, Mordock, 492K) says that Republicans emerging from the hearing say it "has been a bust for Democrats," and USA Today (10/4, King, Shesgreen, Wu, 10.31M) says Republicans "characterized the proceedings as a sham that did little to provide Democrats any ammunition to impeach Trump."

The Washington Examiner (10/3, Ferrechio, 448K) reports that House Republicans said Volker's testimony "does not support allegations against President Trump that Democrats are using to launch an impeachment inquiry." Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH), who the Examiner describes as "a staunch supporter of Trump," said, "He has said nothing that coincides what the Democrats are saying with their whole impeachment narrative." Jordan, who "declined to talk specifically about Volker's deposition," said, "Not one thing he has said comports with any of the Democrats' impeachment narrative. Not one thing." Jordan said on Fox News' Hannity (10/3, 535K), "I hope every American gets a chance to read what took place in that room today because when they do, they will see there's no quid pro quo." Jordan tweeted Thursday night, "The facts we learned today from Ambassador Volker undercut the salacious narrative that @RepAdamSchiff is using to sell his impeachment ambitions. We hope the American people get to read the transcript of today's testimony and see the truth."

Rep. Scott Perry (R-PA) said on Fox News' The Story (10/3), "I would call Ambassador Volker the star witness named in the so-called whistleblower report, and everything he said unsubstantiated this claim of a quid pro quo. There was just absolutely nothing there. ... Nine and a half hours of essentially just tearing down the narrative of Speaker Pelosi and the impeachment narrative regarding the President and Ukraine."

President Trump tweeted a video of Rep. Lee Zeldin (R-NY) speaking to reporters outside the hearing. Trump wrote, "...blowing MASSIVE holes inside of the theory, the narrative, that Chairman Schiff has been providing to the public." @RepLeeZeldin"

On ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 2, 2:20, Muir, 5.76M), Mary Bruce said Volker "hand[ed] over text messages that show State Department officials debating whether Trump was withholding nearly $400 million in military aid to pressure Ukraine for his own political benefit."

Nancy Cordes said on the CBS Evening News (10/3, story 4, 2:10, O'Donnell, 4.13M) that in the text messages, "a top diplomat at the US embassy in Ukraine," wrote, "I think it's crazy to withhold security assistance for help with a political campaign." Cordes added that "the US Ambassador to the EU, who is a former Trump donor," replied, "Bill, I believe you are incorrect about President Trump's intentions. The President has been crystal clear: No quid pro quos of any kind." Breitbart (10/3, Caplan, 673K) reports that the texts provided by Volker "show Gordon Sondland, the United States Ambassador to the European Union, defended President Donald Trump's July 25 telephone call with the leader of Ukraine, affirming the president has said 'no quid pro quo of any kind' took place between the heads of state."

The AP (10/3, Tukcer, Mascaro) report says Volker told lawmakers "that he wasn't personally involved in President Donald Trump's effort to have that country's leaders investigate Joe Biden's family and said he warned Ukrainians to steer clear of American politics." According to Politico (10/3, 4.29M), Volker "connect[ed] Ukrainian officials with Trump personal attorney Rudy Giuliani, who had spent months trying to persuade the country to look at" the Bidens. The Washington Post (10/4, Hudson, 14.2M) reports that Volker testified that he warned Giuliani that he was "receiving untrustworthy information from Ukrainian political figures about" Joe and Hunter Biden.

Rep. Ro Khanna (D-CA) was asked on CNN's Situation Room (10/3, 647K) about the report that Volker told lawmakers he told Giuliani that the information on he was receiving on the Bidens was unreliable. Khanna said, "It's deeply concerning. Obviously, the person who is the foreign policy expert, who understands the US-Ukraine relationship, clearly said that the information and smears against Vice President Biden had no basis in fact. And yet we see Rudy Giuliani continuing to spread those smears, handing them over to the State Department, pushing a narrative that was false."

NBC Nightly News (10/3, story 2, 0:35, Alexander, 6.07M) reported that Giuliani "tells NBC News that he does not remember Volker giving him that warning." Giuliani said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (10/3), "If Volker had said to me that my sources were incredible or wrong, any of them, I would have immediately said, 'Did you do an investigation,' because I really wanted them to."

Sondland, Volker Pushed Ukraine To Commit To Investigations. The New York Times (10/3, Fandos, Barnes, 18.61M) says former US special envoy for Ukraine Kurt Volker "has not been accused of directly taking part in Mr. Trump's pressure campaign on Ukraine." But another report from the New York Times (10/3, Vogel, Schmidt, 18.61M) cites "three people who have been briefed" on the matter, who said [Sondland] and Volker "helped draft a statement" for Ukraine's president in August "that would have committed Ukraine to pursuing investigations sought by Mr. Trump into his political rivals." While "the Ukrainians never released" the statement, "if they had, Mr. Trump's aides would have effectively pressured a foreign government to give credence to allegations intended to undercut one of the Democratic Party's leading 2020 president candidates...without leaving Mr. Trump's fingerprints on it." The Times cites Sondland and Volker's work on the statement as "new evidence of how Mr. Trump's fixation with conspiracy theories linked to Ukraine began driving senior diplomats to bend American foreign policy to the president's political agenda in the weeks after a July 25 call between the two leaders."

Trump Ordered Yovanovitch's Ouster After Complaints From Giuliani, Others. The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Ballhaus, Bender, Salama, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that President Trump ordered the removal of US Ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch amid complaints from allies outside the Administration, including his attorney Rudy Giuliani.

Citing the Journal report, Axios (10/3, Basu, 521K) reports that Giuliani told the Journal that he considered Yovanovitch "to be an obstacle to his efforts to push Ukraine to investigate Joe Biden, and that he informed President Trump of his concerns shortly before she was abruptly recalled in May 2019." Axios adds that Giuliani "also told the Journal that he provided Secretary of State Mike Pompeo with documents about Yovanovitch's alleged 'closeness' to Biden, and that Pompeo told him he would investigate."

Lawmakers To Hear From Intelligence Community IG Today.

David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 3, 0:25, 5.76M) that the intelligence community's Inspector General will testify before lawmakers Friday. ABC's Mary Bruce added that lawmakers "are going to press him on how and why he determined that the whistleblower complaint was 'credible', and of urgent concern. And they will likely want to know who he spoke with inside the Trump Administration to make that conclusion."

Roll Call Analysis: Democrats' Use Of "Adverse Impact" Concept Cold Backfire.

In an analysis, CQ Roll Call (10/3, Ruger, 154K) reports that House Democrats' use of the legal concept of "adverse interference" to "help speed through an impeachment inquiry and pin wrongdoing on the Trump administration" might "create weaknesses in their case farther down the path to removing President Donald Trump from office." The concept "usually plays out in civil lawsuits if one of the parties withholds some evidence, such as if they refuse to testify or if they destroy documents." While "adverse interference" is "a simple way for House Democrats to avoid" the "slow-moving court fights to enforce subpoenas," and "give Democrats ammunition to include an article of impeachment about the Trump administration's obstruction of the House's inquiry," it "could also be a pitfall." Public opinion may not "go along with it," and "it probably won't go over well with Republican senators who would vote on the articles of impeachment, either."

House Panels Have Drafted Subpoenas For White House Documents. Norah O'Donnell said on the CBS Evening News (10/3, story 3, 0:35, 4.13M) that the White House is facing a Friday deadline "to turn over documents." However, Weijia Jiang added that it "is highly unlikely to happen. In fact, three House committees have already drafted a subpoena to demand those documents linked to Ukraine, anticipating the White House will miss [the] deadline. President Trump himself said he will comply with the subpoenas and he always does. But, we have seen time and time again his legal team block information from Congress."

Media Analyses: Ukraine Probe Could Undermine Pompeo's Authority At State.

In an analysis, Politico (10/3, Toosi, 4.29M) says that while Secretary of State Pompeo has been "described as the most powerful person in the president's Cabinet," his "ascent has come with a cost: Pompeo is now at the center of the Ukraine-related impeachment storm consuming Trump. Democrats accuse him of witness intimidation, diplomats feel as if he's betrayed them, and investigators are wondering if he's misled them." Politico says Pompeo "appears intent on sticking to the strategy he adopted from Day One: Defend the president and downplay any differences you may have with him, even if it undermines your own department." But, his "handling of the Ukraine controversy is made more complicated by the role of Rudy Giuliani, the president's personal lawyer, who has repeatedly insisted that the State Department, including the secretary, was aware of his activities and even had requested them."

The Washington Times (10/3, Taylor, 492K) says that while "some analysts say Mr. Pompeo is savvy enough to weather any politically charged storm, several current and former State Department officials have expressed concerns over the extent to which his role in Mr. Trump's fateful July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky... could undercut his authority at the department he heads."

AP Spotlights House Republicans Critical Of Trump.

The AP (10/3) reports that "there's a small and growing number of Republicans who want the Democratic-run House investigation of President Donald Trump to proceed." However, the AP says "the handful of lawmakers who say they're 'troubled' or concerned by the allegations account for a small fraction of the 197 House Republicans." According to the AP, among those critical of the President are Reps. Mark Amodei (R-NV), Don Bacon (R-NE), Jaime Herrera Beutler (R-WA), Adam Kinzinger (R-IL), and Fred Upton (R-MI).

Napolitano: Trump Call With Zelensky Was Criminal And Impeachable. USA Today (10/3, Cummings, 10.31M) reports that in an op-ed published Thursday on Fox News' website, senior judicial analyst Andrew Napolitano said "that the summary released by the White House of a July 25 phone call between President Donald Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky" showed "both criminal and impeachable behavior" by Trump. Napolitano wrote, "The criminal behavior to which Trump has admitted is much more grave than anything alleged or unearthed by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, and much of what Mueller revealed was impeachable." Napolitano also "expressed shock that Trump would try to engage a country to interfere in the 2020 election immediately after Mueller's investigation." He wrote, "Now he has attempted in one phone call to bring the Ukrainian government into the 2020 election! Does he understand the laws he has sworn to uphold? ... It was to remedy just such reckless, constitutionally destructive behavior that impeachment was intended."

White House Reconstruction Of Trump-Zelensky Call Continues To Draw Scrutiny. The Washington Post (10/3, Leonnig, Timberg, Harwell, 14.2M) reports that Trump said Wednesday that the call with Zelensky was transcribed "word-for-word, comma-for-comma," which the Post describes as "an assertion that fueled growing questions about the nature and completeness of an official memorandum about the call released by the White House last week." According to the Post, White House officials "previously had portrayed the document as not a verbatim transcription but rather a summary that closely tracked the words the president used in his July 25 call with Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky." The Post goes on to report that "current and former U.S. officials studying the document pointed to several elements that, they say, indicate that the document may have been handled in an unusual way. Those include the use of ellipses – punctuation indicating that information has been deleted for clarity or other reasons – that traditionally have not appeared in summaries of presidential calls with foreign leaders." Reuters (10/3) reports that the Pentagon said Thursday that "no one from the U.S. Defense Department was listening to a July phone conversation between" Trump and Zelensky.

Some Conservatives See A Political Threat To Trump In Ukraine Probe. The Daily Caller (10/3, Hasson, 716K) reports that some conservatives see President Trump's "pressure on Ukraine to investigate the business dealings of former Vice President Joe Biden's son" as "more politically damaging to Trump than special counsel Robert Mueller's Russia investigation." These conservatives "see the issue as a real political threat to the president, in part because of the president's decision to release the transcript of his conversation with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky," which "definitively showed that Trump requested the Ukrainians investigate Hunter Biden."

WPost Analysis: GOP Trump Critics Face "Viral Attacks" From Defenders. The Washington Post (10/3, A1, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports on its front page on what is expected to be a barrage of "viral attacks likely to be unleashed on GOP lawmakers if they buck their president during an impeachment showdown that Trump has denounced as a coup." The Post says "holding the line on impeachment, particularly by pressuring Republicans to remain in lockstep behind Trump, has quickly become the core mission of a squadron of pro-Trump television personalities, talk radio hosts, conservative blogs, fringe Facebook groups and Twitter accounts. Together, these voices form an alternative worldview, built on hostility to mainstream media and capable of shaping the information consumed by core Republican voters."

FEC Chair Reposts Memorandum On Foreign Assistance In US Campaigns.

USA Today (10/3, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports that FEC Chairwoman Ellen Weintraub "reminded candidates that asking for help from foreign governments is illegal in an apparent subtweet of President Donald Trump" The tweet "came after Trump exclaimed that China should investigate former vice president Joe Biden, despite already being in the middle of an impeachment inquiry after asking Ukraine for the same thing." After Trump made the comment, Weintraub tweeted, "Is this thing on" and reposted "her original scathing memorandum from June, accompanied with the microphone emoji." In it, she wrote, "Let me make something 100% clear to the American public or anyone running for public office. It is illegal to solicit, accept, or receive anything of value from a foreign national in connection with a U.S. election."

WPost Report: Trump Did Propose Border Moat, Shooting Migrants.

In a report posted online at 8 a.m. yesterday morning, the Washington Post (10/3, Miroff, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports it has confirmed that President Trump "told aides last year he wanted US forces with bayonets to block people from crossing into the United States across the Mexico border." Citing "current and former administration officials involved in those discussions," the Post says Trump "also suggested the excavation of a border trench, or moat, that could be stocked with dangerous reptiles." It notes the New York Times reported Tuesday that Trump suggested building a moat, "along with his suggestion that US forces could open fire on migrants...potentially shooting at their legs to wound but not kill them." The Post says the President "denied those claims," but adds that it "independently confirmed that the president did, in fact, say those things during border security meetings, including at moments when he demanded the wholesale closure of the Mexico border and appeared prepared to enforce the decree with violence."

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday morning to again deny the reports, writing, "Fake News, just like the snakes and gators in the moat. The Media is deranged, they have lost their minds!"

ACLU Files Suit Seeking Damages For Separated Immigrant Families.

The AP (10/3, Galvan) reports the ACLU filed a federal lawsuit Thursday seeking "potentially millions of dollars in damages on behalf of thousands of immigrant families who were separated from their children at the US-Mexico border." The ACLU and "other attorneys filed a lawsuit in Tucson against past and present Trump administration officials, alleging the government violated immigrants' rights and deeply traumatized an estimated 4,000 children who were taken from their parents after crossing the border illegally." The AP notes that the ACLU is seeking class action status, "meaning if it wins, thousands of families who are not plaintiffs can also be compensated." The Washington Times (10/3, Dinan, 492K) reports the suit "seeks compensatory and punitive damages," and "also seeks to establish a new fund to pay for future mental health care for families who faced separation."

Contractor Being Paid To Keep Migrant Shelter Open That Has Been Empty Since August.

The AP (10/3) reports that "sheltering migrant children has become a growing business for" Comprehensive Health Services, a "Florida-based government contractor, as the number of minors in government custody has swollen to record levels over the past two years." The AP says "so far, the only private company caring for migrant children is CHS, owned by beltway contractor Caliburn International Corp.," and adds that "even as the number of children has declined, the company's government funding for their care has continued to flow," which the AP says is "partly because CHS is still staffing a large Florida facility with 2,000 workers even though the last children left in August."

According to the AP, the Administration says CHS is "keeping the Florida shelter on standby in case they need to quickly provide beds for more migrant teens, and that they're focused on the quality of care contractors can provide, not about who profits from the work."

Cook Says There Should Be No Limits On How Many Immigrants Apple Can Hire.

Reuters (10/3) reports Apple CEO Tim Cook said Thursday that he is "against any ceiling on the hiring of qualified migrants." Cook is quoted as saying, "We at Apple want to remove ceilings imposed on the number of qualified migrants that can be hired."

Virginia Sheriff Questions Fairfax Officer's Suspension Over ICE Cooperation.

The Washington Times (10/3, Dinan, 492K) reports that a "sheriff in a nearby Virginia county is questioning Fairfax County's decision to suspend a police officer who cooperated in holding an illegal immigrant with an outstanding warrant for pickup by ICE." The suspension has been reversed, but Culpeper County Sheriff Scott Jenkins told the Times on Thursday "he understands police departments need to adhere to the policies set by their elected officials, but he said that didn't need to include suspending the officer involved." Said Sheriff Jenkins, "I think it sends a very poor message to the officers are far as them doing their job on the street every day and trying to do the right thing and acted within reason, a common sense approach, where another law enforcement agency is asking to detain a person for a very short time."

Migrant Caught Crossing Border Using Ultralight Aircraft.

The Washington Times (10/3, Dinan, 492K) reports Border Patrol agents apprehended a migrant last weekend "after he crossed the border into Arizona using an ultralight aircraft, in yet another way technology is changing the face of illegal migration." According to the Times, "the Mexican pilot was detected crossing late Sunday night by Customs and Border Protection's Air and Marine Operations near Nogales." Border Patrol agents then "tracked the aircraft for nearly an hour, until it made an apparent crash landing."

Immigrant Activist: ICE Raids Created Massive Legal Need In Mississippi.

Amelia McGowan, Director of the Mississippi College School of Law Immigration Clinic, writes in a USA Today (10/3, 10.31M) op-ed that a recent ICE raid that netted nearly 700 illegal immigrants working at poultry plants "created legal need far beyond what I and the few other immigration lawyers in Mississippi could take on ourselves." She adds that "dozens of other Mississippi lawyers are among the 500 lawyers across the nation who have already volunteered to provide legal support," but "we still need support in Mississippi, whether it's providing legal assistance, donating to legal funds, or calling your representatives, not only to aid those detained in the raids but to help prevent another, even bigger, one."

Cato Scholars: Walmart, Rivals Taking Steps To Lower Healthcare Costs.

In a Wall Street Journal (10/3, Silver, Hyman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, Cato Institute adjunct scholars David Hyman and Charles Silver laud the opening of Walmart's first Health Center this month in Dallas, Georgia, offering low-cost primary health services. They write that while political figures debate medical costs, Walmart and rivals like CVS and Walgreens are taking action.

LAPD Declines To Say Who Authorized Anti-Breitbart Tweets.

Breitbart (10/3, Ng, 673K) reports that "top brass at the Los Angeles Police Department is refusing to explain who authorized a series of false smears against Breitbart News over the weekend, declining and ignoring requests to speak on the record with police management who publicly maligned Breitbart in a series of tweets." According to Breitbart, the LAPD "published the false statements starting early Saturday, bowing to pressure from left-wing Daily Beast editor-in-chief Noah Shachtman, who sent a tweet earlier that day demanding to know why an LAPD recruitment banner ad was appearing on Breitbart." In response, the LAPD "said it is launching an investigation into how the ad appeared on Breitbart so that it will never happen again," tweeting, "We take matters like this very seriously, and have begun an initial inquiry into the matter and to determine its validity, as well as what future steps can and will be taken to avoid this situation occurring in the future." Breitbart says it "reached out to the LAPD through multiple channels...requesting to speak with top police officials. ... It remains unclear who wrote the LAPD tweets over the weekend that smeared Breitbart."

MGM Reaches $800M Settlement With Victims Of Las Vegas Massacre.

ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 9, 0:20, Muir, 5.76M) reported on what it called "a massive settlement" for the victims of the "worst mass shooting in modern American history. Fifty-eight people were killed, hundreds wounded in Las Vegas when Stephen Paddock opened fire from the 32nd floor of Mandalay Bay Resort two years ago." The CBS Evening News (10/3, story 7, 1:40, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported, "MGM Resorts International has agreed to pay up to $800 million to the victims." CBS (Villarreal) added, "The settlement potentially covers more than 4,400 family members and victims who attended the country music festival."

The Washington Post (10/3, Berman, 14.2M) reports the settlement "does not include an admission of liability on the part of MGM, the company said Thursday," and the Wall Street Journal (10/3, Sayre, Elinson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports MGM said its insurers will fund the settlement with a minimum of $735 million, adding that it has $751 million of insurance coverage. According to the New York Times (10/3, Oppel, 18.61M), the "next step for the plaintiffs will be to have their cases examined by an independent claims administrator, who will need to be approved by a judge." NBC Nightly News (10/3, story 7, 0:20, Holt, 6.07M), among other news outlets, also briefly reported the settlement.

New York AG Sues Student Loan Company Over Debt Forgiveness Program.

The Washington Post (10/3, Douglas-Gabriel, 14.2M) reports New York Attorney General Letitia James has sued Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency, "a student-loan-servicing company, alleging widespread mismanagement of a loan forgiveness program for public servants." James says the company, "which also operates under the name FedLoan Servicing, of haphazardly handling a federal program that encourages college graduates to enter fields serving the public good with the promise of having their student debt canceled."

Some College Admissions Scandal Defendants Building Cases For Leniency.

The New York Times (10/3, Taylor, 18.61M) reports, "Sentencing has begun for parents who have pleaded guilty to using their wealth to boost their children's chances" of getting into college, and "now some of those parents are using their resources to boost their own chances of getting a lenient sentence, by marshaling the best possible experts and the best possible arguments." One parent "has hired a consultant to tell his life story," while others "have obtained letters from doctors and submitted them under sea" or "have pointed to the losses they have already suffered" to make a case for lesser punishments.

WSJournal: Court's Harvard Ruling Approves Racial Discrimination.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that in a ruling this week, a federal judge essentially said Harvard may discriminate against Asian-American applicants in the name of racial diversity. The Journal says this contradicts both the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the 14th Amendment, and says it may fall to the Supreme Court to resolve.

Barr, Australian And UK Counterparts Will Ask Facebook To Create Encryption "Back Door."

The New York Times (10/3, Barnes, Benner, Isaac, 18.61M) reports Attorney General Barr will press Facebook on Friday "to create a so-called back door to its end-to-end encryption on WhatsApp and other messaging platforms" in order to give investigators "access to now-secret communications, including from terrorists and other criminals as well as whistle-blowers, journalists and others." Barr and his Australian and British counterparts argue in a joint letter to Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg that law enforcement "needs a way to break encryption to fight terrorism, international organized crime and child exploitations." The Wall Street Journal (10/3, McMillan, Horwitz, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the DOJ has pushed Congress for legislative action to force such a change, but there has been little indication that lawmakers from either party are interested in pursuing it.

WSJournal: Study Provides More Evidence Of Charter Schools' Success.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights a study of 21 urban school districts by the Thomas B. Fordham Institute as the latest indicator that charter schools are improving education for some of the most at-risk students.

WPost Supports New California Law In College Athlete Endorsement Pay.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/3, 14.2M) sides with the state of California regarding its new law "to allow college athletes to earn money from endorsements. ...The Fair Pay to Play Act, the first of its kind in the country, challenges long-standing rules that bar students on athletic scholarships from being paid beyond the value of their scholarship." The Post says the "apoplectic" National Collegiate Athletic Association has until 2023 – when the law will take effect – "to devise its own solution."

Sources: Perry To Resign Next Month.

Politico (10/3, Lefebvre, Meyer, 4.29M) reports Energy Secretary Perry is "expected to announce his resignation from the administration by the end of November, according to three people familiar with his plans." Perry, it says, "has largely avoided the controversies that felled others in the administration," but "his travels to Ukraine lately have embroiled him in the impeachment inquiry engulfing Trump and his inner circle, even though two of the people called the scandal unrelated to Perry's departure." Sources said Deputy Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette is expected to replace Perry.

Manhattan DA Pushed Back Against DOJ In Fight For Trump Tax Returns.

The AP (10/3, Mustian) reports Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus R. Vance Jr. "pushed back against the US Justice Department on Thursday" in a legal battle over President Trump's tax returns, saying local efforts to investigate the President's finances should be "free from federal interference." A day after federal prosecutors asked for a delay, Vance "filed court papers saying the Justice Department is supporting Trump's efforts to run out the clock on certain statutes of limitation that could affect a state grand jury investigation."

Politico (10/3, Eckert, 4.29M) quotes Vance's Thursday court filing as saying Trump's "only goal in this litigation, now supported by the Justice Department itself, is to obtain as much delay as possible, through litigation, stays and appeals. If delays are achieved, to the frustration of the New York state inquiry, [Trump] will win."

Doctor Gets 40 Years In Prison For Illegal Opioid Prescriptions.

The New York Post (10/3, Miller, 4.57M) reports "drug-dealing Virginia doctor" Joel Smithers, "who illegally prescribed 500,000 opioid pills to patients over a two-year period," has been sentenced to 40 years in prison and ordered to pay a $86,000 fine. Smithers "was convicted in May on 861 federal drug charges, including 859 counts of illegally prescribing controlled substances to every patient" in his practice. ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 13, 0:25, Muir, 5.76M) briefly reported on the sentence.

Waters: Trump "Setting Some Of Us To Be Killed."

The Washington Times (10/3, Chasmar, 492K) reports Rep. Maxine Waters (D-CA) "said Wednesday that President Trump's verbal attacks are putting Democrats in danger and that she's had to hire round-the-clock security due to death threats." Waters "told MSNBC that she can't go to public places like the grocery store without a security guard due to threats she's received since the president's been in office." Said Waters, "He is setting some of us up to be killed. I have death threats constantly. There are a number of people who have been convicted for threatening to kill me."

Administration Reportedly Set To Announce Biofuels Deal.

Reuters (10/3, Kelly, Pamuk) reports the Administration is "expected to announce by Friday details of a U.S. biofuels policy deal to help farmers angry over waivers granted to refiners exempting them from using corn-based ethanol and other biofuels." The White House "has held weeks of discussions with farm- and oil-state senators and executives at oil refiners and officials at biofuels producers." According to Reuters, in August, President Trump "promised a 'giant package' related to ethanol, after his administration angered the powerful corn lobby by granting 31 oil refineries exemptions to their biofuel blending mandates under the Renewable Fuel Standard."

Experts Say Trump's Actions Against California "Send A Message" To Other States.

The New York Times (10/3, Davenport, 18.61M) reports, "President Trump's political feud with California has spread collateral damage across more than a dozen other states, which have seen their regulatory authority curtailed and their autonomy threatened" by the Administration. Legal experts told the Times that the Administration's actions "amount to a novel weaponizing of environmental laws intended not only to undermine California's liberal government but to send a message to other states that might defy Mr. Trump."

EPA Prevented Scientists From Speaking At Climate Change Conference In 2017.

The New York Times (10/3, Friedman, 18.61M) reports that in October 2017, the EPA prohibited scientists from speaking at a conference on climate change, according to a New York University report released Thursday. The study "follows reports that [Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney] pressured the commerce secretary to rebuke weather forecasters who appeared to contradict the president after he erroneously claimed a recent hurricane could affect Alabama."

In Twitter Exchange, Trump Calls Ocasio-Cortez "Wack Job," She Calls Him "A Criminal."

The New York Post (10/3, Feuerherd, 4.57M) reports President Trump, Donald Trump Jr., and Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "engaged in some Twitter crossfire on Thursday night, with the president calling the congresswoman a 'Wack Job' and her responding that he's 'a criminal.' The politics-as-usual online sniping kicked off when Trump retweeted a message" from his son "commenting on an apparently unhinged woman at an AOC town hall event in Queens Thursday night."

Ocasio-Cortez To Appear In Court To Explain Twitter Blocking.

The New York Post (10/3, Denney, Bowden, 4.57M) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) will appear in federal court in Brooklyn next month "to explain to a judge why she blocks people on Twitter." Ocasio-Cortez will testify "as part of an ongoing lawsuit brought by ex-Brooklyn Assemblyman Dov Hikind, who claims the Democratic darling wrongfully blocked him on Twitter because of his 'criticism' of her."

Supreme Court Will Consider Whether Firing Employees For Being LGBTQ Is Legal.

The Washington Post (10/3, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the Supreme Court will take up "a blockbuster question at the start of its new term: Is it legal to fire someone for being gay or transgender?" Three related cases "will be argued Tuesday" in "one of the most consequential issues of the term, with more than 70 friend-of-the-court briefs dividing states, religious orders and members of Congress."

NRA's LaPierre Reportedly Resisted Endorsing Trump In 2016.

The Washington Post (10/3, Reinhard, 14.2M) reports that "the longtime public relations agency for the National Rifle Association claimed in a new court filing this week that NRA chief executive Wayne LaPierre 'bristled' at the group's early endorsement of Donald Trump in 2016, thought the real estate developer would lose the election and referred to his administration as the 'Trump slump.' ... The assertions are the latest claims in a brutal legal brawl between the NRA and Ackerman McQueen, its now-estranged PR firm, and emerge at a delicate moment for both the gun rights lobby and the White House." The Post adds that "the allegations of LaPierre's skeptical views toward Trump are the most recent salvo by the Oklahoma City-based PR agency Ackerman McQueen, which the NRA recently accused of continuing to tout its work for the gun group, despite the severing of their decades-long relationship."

Woodward Heckled At Event With Authors Of Book On Weinstein Allegations.

The Washington Post (10/3, Bonos, Yahr, 14.2M) reports that the Post's Bob Woodward was booed and heckled at a Wednesday event at Sixth & I, "a popular Washington event space that frequently hosts book talks with high-profile authors." Woodward was doing an on-stage interview with Jodi Kantor and Megan Twohey "about their best-selling book, 'She Said,' a deep dive into their investigation of sexual assault and harassment allegations against Hollywood mogul Harvey Weinstein," and audience members reportedly grew frustrated with Woodward's frequent interrupting of the authors' answers as well as some of his questions. The New York Times (10/3, Tracy, 18.61M) reports Woodward "posed questions that, to many attendees, suggested a lack of understanding of sexual assault and workplace harassment."

Former Assistant Sues De Niro, Alleging Gender Discrimination.

Linsey Davis reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 12, 1:35, Muir, 5.76M) that Graham Chase Robinson, "a former assistant for Robert De Niro, is fighting back with a $12 million lawsuit against the Oscar-winning actor, alleging gender discrimination. ... In her lawsuit, Robinson alleges the actor would ask her to scratch his back and button his shirt even as she rose through the ranks of his production company. ... The lawsuit comes more than a month after De Niro's company sued Robinson for $6 million, claiming Robinson rang up hundreds of thousands of dollars of personal expenses on a company card and spent astronomical amounts of time binge-watching Netflix during business hours." The CBS Evening News (10/3, story 9, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.13M) had a brief report.

Army Investigating Mishap During Mississippi Parachuting Exercise.

The CBS Evening News (10/3, story 10, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported, "The Army is investigating how nearly 90 parachuting soldiers were apparently blown off course and into trees last night during a training exercise in Mississippi. Nineteen were sent to hospitals, including a soldier who suffered a broken back. All of them are expected to recover."

Trump Camp Launching $1M Ad Campaign In Early States Hitting Biden On Ukraine Controversy.

Politico (10/3, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's reelection campaign "is preparing an avalanche of TV ads targeting Joe Biden in early primary states – its most aggressive step yet to meddle in the Democratic nomination contest. Starting this weekend, the reelection effort will air over $1 million in anti-Biden commercials in Iowa, South Carolina, New Hampshire and Nevada, according to two people familiar with the move. The spots focus on Trump's claim that Biden "and his son engaged in corruption in Ukraine. ... 'Joe Biden promised Ukraine $1 billion if they fired the prosecutor investigating his son's company,' says the ad, titled 'Biden corruption.' 'Voters should know about the self-dealing, influence-peddling Bidens as the campaign season progresses,' said Tim Murtaugh, a Trump 2020 spokesman."

Biden Camp Spending $6M On Ad Campaign In Four Lead-Off States. The AP (10/3, Barrow) reports that ex-Vice President Joe Biden "is committing to $6 million worth of television and digital advertising in the first four states on the 2020 election-year calendar. It's the latest demonstration of an increasingly aggressive campaign as he tries to hold his place as the party's top challenger to President Donald Trump." The move comes as Biden "steps up his counterattacks after disclosures about Trump's effort to use the Ukrainian government to try to tarnish" him. While Biden leads "most national Democratic primary polls," Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "gained ground throughout the summer and pulled even or surpassed Biden in some recent Iowa and New Hampshire surveys. Warren recently announced a $10 million advertising commitment in the early states of Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina, where Biden is now focusing his ad buys."

The Hill (10/3, Axelrod, 2.98M) reports that Biden's "campaign said in a press release it will dedicate its resources to prime-time advertising on traditional television airwaves and digital platforms such as YouTube, Hulu and news- and sports-streaming services. The ads will air in Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina and will 'drive Vice President Biden's core messages, mobilize supporters and volunteers, and build the campaign's grassroots fundraising operation.'"

Team Biden Banking On Super Tuesday As He Loses Support In Early States. Politico (10/3, 4.29M) reports that Biden's campaign is "ramping up its investment in Super Tuesday states, anticipating a Democratic race that narrows to two candidates by early March." Politico says "the increase in staffing across the 14 states that will vote March 3 comes as Biden's polling figures have declined and those of Warren "have surged, particularly in states like Iowa and New Hampshire where she's heavily invested in field organization." Biden's campaign is "still counting on strong finishes in the four early nominating states. But in the event of weaker-than-expected performances, a built-out Super Tuesday organization would provide a fail-safe for Biden." Politico says "many of the states on the Super Tuesday map – which includes a handful of Southern and Border states – play to his strengths among African-American voters and more moderate Democrats."

Biden Raises $15.2M In Q3, Trailing Totals Of Sanders, Buttigieg. The AP (10/3, Slodysko) reports that Biden "raised $15.2 million for his presidential campaign" in the third quarter of this year – "a middling amount for one of the top-polling candidates in the Democratic primary" that "lags behind what Bernie Sanders raised by more than $10 million." The AP adds that South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg "also bested Biden during the third fundraising quarter, announcing this week that he raised $19.1 million." The Washington Post

(10/3, Sonmez, Lee, 14.2M) reports that Biden "revealed his campaign's latest numbers at a private fundraiser in Palo Alto, Calif., Thursday afternoon," telling "donors that 'we raised, this last quarter, $15 million – in the middle of summer.' He added that his campaign had received 'well over half a million contributions,' although it was not immediately clear whether the number was a reference to total donations or those received during the third quarter of the year."

Politico (10/3, Severns, 4.29M) reports that Biden's Q3 haul is "$7 million less than his own campaign raised during the previous fundraising quarter." Politico adds, "Biden's summer fundraising slump points to his campaign's current reliance on...wealthy donors. Sanders and Buttigieg have both built large bases of donors online." Reuters (10/3) quotes Biden as saying during Thursday's fundraising event in California, "We haven't raised what a lot of people have – we got started way later than everybody else – but we've raised, this last quarter, $15 million, in the middle of summer." In an online article, CNN (10/3, Saenz, 83.16M) reports that Biden's Q3 total "is higher than the $11.6 million raised by California Sen. Kamala Harris, the $10 million raised by businessman Andrew Yang, and the $6 million brought in by New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker. Author Marianne Williamson raised $3 million and Colorado Sen. Michael Bennet raised $2.1 million last quarter." The Hill (10/3, Greenwood, 2.98M) and the Washington Times (10/3, Sherfinski, 492K) also report on the story.

Ohio Poll: Trump Trails Biden, Sanders, Warren In Hypothetical Matchups.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/3, Richardson, 895K) reports that an Emerson College poll of 837 Ohio voters, taken Sept. 29-Oct. 2, shows President Trump trailing three Democratic presidential candidates in hypothetical 2020 general election matchups. According to the poll, Trump trails ex-Vice President Joe Biden 53%-47%, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) 53%-47%, and Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) 52%-48%.

In the smaller sample of 353 Ohio Democratic voters, the poll shows Biden leading the race for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination with 29%, followed by Sanders at 27%, Warren at 21%, Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) at 7%, and South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 5%; no other contender tops 3%.

Warren's Electability A Subject Of Debate Among Political Operatives.

McClatchy (10/3, Roarty, 19K) reports, "Everyone in politics – Republicans and Democrats alike – is asking the same pressing question: Just how electable is Elizabeth Warren against President Donald Trump?" McClatchy adds that "Warren's electability has become something of a Rorschach test for political operatives. Some see an uber-liberal" lawmaker "with a weak electoral track record, while others see the Democratic Party's most talented campaigner who can tap into the country's populist energy like few others."

GOP Decries Reno Airport's Planned Probe Of Pro-Trump Protest Of Warren. The Reno (NV) Gazette-Journal (10/3, Dehaven, 183K) reports, "Republicans are firing back after authorities in Nevada said they would investigate a protest staged at Reno-Tahoe International Airport. Airport officials were quick to apologize on Wednesday after roughly a dozen protesters confronted...Warren" as she was "on her way to a scheduled campaign appearance in Carson City. Officials said in a tweet that the airport wasn't properly notified of the protest and that its attorneys planned to investigate the incident, which quickly went viral thanks to a video posted on Twitter by Nevada Republican Party Chairman Michael McDonald. GOP operatives immediately cried foul," asserting "the airport launched no such investigation, and failed to apologize, after" then-Sen. Dean Heller (R-NV) "faced down Democratic protesters at the airport last year."

Warren Releases Plan Meant To Benefit Unions. Reuters (10/3, Bernstein) reports that Warren wants to "make it easier for employees to join unions and make rideshare drivers and other gig economy workers eligible for overtime, the latest effort by a Democrat to court the country's deep-pocketed labor unions." Reuters says Warren's plan was "released Thursday in advance of an appearance before a labor group in Los Angeles." Reuters adds that "in her plan, Warren pledged to increase protections for home healthcare workers, a growing segment of the workforce, as well as immigrant employees who are undocumented." Warren would also "roll back Trump-era restrictions on the power of unions representing federal workers and work to restore public employee bargaining rights that have been reduced in several states."

Politico (10/3, 4.29M) reports, "Warren's proposal would extend federal labor and worker safety protections to farm and domestic workers, who are not covered by federal labor laws; bolster collective bargaining rights; increase the hourly minimum wage; and extend overtime eligibility to more workers. Much of her plan describes legislative proposals that she and other Democrats have introduced already in Congress." Bloomberg (10/3, Eidelson, 4.73M) also reports on the story.

Sanders Campaign Says He Will Participate In October 15 Debate.

The AP (10/3) reports that Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) is still in a hospital in Nevada "because of a blocked artery in his heart," but his campaign says he will "participate in the next Democratic presidential debate" on October 15. The New York Times (10/3, Ember, 18.61M) reports that the Sanders campaign has "declined to say whether [he] suffered a heart attack," and "did not specify whether Mr. Sanders, 78, would be discharged sooner than the weekend and remain in Las Vegas before returning home." Reuters (10/3, Whitesides) reports that "the halt to the Sanders campaign came the day after he reported a $25.3 million fundraising haul for the third quarter, the biggest quarterly performance by any Democratic candidate in the race so far."

In a brief segment, NBC Nightly News (10/3, story 12, 0:20, Holt, 6.07M) reported that Sanders' "wife says the 78-year-old presidential candidate should be able to return home by the end of the weekend and plans to take part in the next Democratic debate, 12 days from now." ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 11, 0:15, Muir, 5.76M) briefly reported, "His wife Jane tonight reporting that Sanders is up and about and cracking jokes." The Hill (10/3, Johnson, 2.98M) reports that Sanders "used his medical procedure Tuesday to push his 'Medicare for All' plan. A day after having surgery," Sanders "tweeted, 'Thanks for all the well wishes. I'm feeling good. I'm fortunate to have good health care and great doctors and nurses helping me to recover.' 'None of us know when a medical emergency might affect us,' Sanders continued. 'And no one should fear going bankrupt if it occurs. Medicare for All!'" In an online article, CNN (10/3, Krieg, Nobles, 83.16M) also reports on the story.

NYTimes Analysis: Buttigieg Banking Heavily On Strong Showing In Iowa.

The New York Times (10/3, Gabriel, 18.61M) reports, "Boasting a huge financial war chest but struggling in the polls, [South Bend Mayor Pete] Buttigieg is now staking his presidential candidacy on Iowa, and particularly on connecting with rural white voters who want to talk about personal concerns more than impeachment. In doing so, Mr. Buttigieg is also trying to show how Democrats can win back counties that flipped from Barack Obama to Donald Trump in 2016 – there are more of them in Iowa than any other state – by focusing, he said, on 'the things that are going to affect folks' lives in a concrete way.'" The Times adds that Buttigieg thinks "he has a shot at trying to organize his way to a top-tier finish in the Iowa caucuses on Feb. 3," and is consequently spending heavily on "a gold-plated ground game in" the state.

WTimes Profiles Struggling Democratic Presidential Hopeful Bennet.

The Washington Times (10/3, Richardson, 492K) profiles Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Michael Bennet (D-CO). The Times says he has had "a charmed political career – until now. After jumping into the Democratic presidential primary race in May," Bennet "is scraping the bottom of the field, failing to qualify for the September and October debates while raising just $2.1 million in the third quarter. Even so, Mr. Bennet vowed this week to stay in the race at least through the Feb. 11 New Hampshire primary." Before going on to examine the Democrat's resume, the Times says that "Bennet's political rise may be attributed to a heady mix of persistence, purpose and privilege."

WPost Analysis: Democrats Criticize Trump's Executive Orders While Vowing Their Own.

The Washington Post (10/3, Janes, 14.2M) reports that as the Democratic White House hopefuls "offer plan after plan, many are promising single-handed presidential action – rather than new laws that must be pushed through a sluggish Congress – to combat the nation's big problems. That trend was particularly evident at a gun safety forum in Las Vegas Wednesday, where almost every candidate who spoke has promised some kind of executive action to bolster gun control." The Post adds, "The unilateral approach in some ways echoes President Trump's strategy, even as Democrats increasingly label him an authoritarian. The Democrats' policies would not amplify presidential power to the extent that Trump has sought to, but they do reflect a more president-centric approach to governing, a feature that's become central to Trump's tenure."

Democrat Matt Lieberman, Son Of Ex-Senator, Announces Georgia Senate Bid.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/3, Bluestein, 895K) reports that entrepreneur Matt Lieberman, son of ex-Sen. Joseph Lieberman (I-CT), on Thursday "became the first Democrat" to launch a 2020 bid to succeed retiring Sen. Johnny Isakson (R-GA), who is stepping down at the end of this year due to health issues. In an interview, Lieberman "said he will advocate for new gun restrictions, push for the impeachment of President Donald Trump, back abortion rights and support a 'public option,' which would make a government healthcare plan available as an alternative to private insurance." Gov. Brian Kemp (R) will appoint a successor to Isakson, and a special election will be held next year to fill out the Senator's remaining term. Politico (10/3, 4.29M) and the Washington Post (10/3, Iati, 14.2M) also report on the story.

WPost Backs Three Democrats In Northern Virginia Commonwealth Attorney Races.

The Washington Post (10/3, 14.2M) endorses three Democrats – Amy Ashworth, Buta Biberaj, and Steve Descano – in November races for commonwealth attorney in Northern Virginia.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 43.2%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 43.2%, and his disapproval at 53.5%. The President's job approval is down 0.1 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (9/30-10/2) finds Trump's approval at 47%, with 52% disapproving.

Japan Finance Minister Dismisses Need For Stimulus After Tax Hike.

Reuters (10/4, Kajimoto) reports Japan's finance minister on Friday "dismissed the need to boost fiscal stimulus to counter the impact of a national sales tax hike, despite expectations the government and the Bank of Japan may act to reduce pressure on the world's third largest economy." The piece notes the government introduced a rise in the sales tax to 10% from 8% on Tuesday, "a move that is seen as critical for fixing the country's tattered finances. But there are fears the higher tax could hurt consumer spending and tip the economy into recession." Finance minister Taro Aso told reporters "he saw no big confusion among retailers and shoppers over the tax hike as corporate earnings and household incomes were solid." Bloomberg (10/3, 4.73M) also covers the topic.

Analysts: Europe Will See More Economic “Pain” If US Limits Investment In China.

CNBC (10/3, Meredith, 3.62M) reports Europe “would be vulnerable to even more economic ‘pain’ if the Trump administration decided to press ahead with U.S. investment curbs against China, analysts told CNBC.” The piece notes that media outlets “recently reported that the White House was looking into limiting investment ties between the world’s two largest economies.” Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Greg Shuang “told reporters earlier this week that any delisting moves would ‘harm the interests of Chinese and American companies and people, create turmoil in financial markets, and endanger global trade and economic growth.’”

New IMF Head Vows Discusses Her Commitment To Deal With Global Economic Challenges.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Pancevski, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports new IMF head Kristalina Georgieva said it was her experience seeing food shortages and widespread poverty caused by bad policies in her native Bulgaria drove her to pursue a career in international institutions. “At a time when there is more skepticism about our work, the very best way for multilateral organizations to prove that multilateralism works is by delivering,” Georgieva said. She also explained, “We recognize that the global economy continues to disappoint. The unpredictability of trade disputes, capital flow volatility, Brexit and conflict and natural disasters are able to cause massive economic disruptions.”

The Economist Looks At Greek Debt Crisis 10 Years Later.

The Economist (10/3, 2.36M) examines the Greek debt crisis ten years after it began, explaining that now the new prime minister, Kyriakos Mitsotakis, is “trying to get Greece back on its feet. Though the economy has begun expanding again, growth is lacklustre and output is nearly a quarter below its level in 2007.” The Economist says “the time has come to stop pretending and settle Greece’s finances once and for all.”

Citi Among Banks Hit With Combined $1.4B Penalty By Nigerian Central Bank.

Bloomberg (10/3, Osa-Brown, Onu, Soto, 4.73M) reports Citigroup is one of two banks that “got the stiffest penalties of a dozen lenders punished by Nigeria’s central bank for failing to meet a target to provide more credit.” A combined sanction of $1.4 billion was imposed on the 12 lenders. The sanctions “come three months after the central bank gave lenders until Sept. 30 to use 60% of their deposits for loans, or hand half of the shortfall over to the central bank without earning any interest.”

French FM: US And Iran Have One Month To Avert Escalation.

Reuters (10/3) reports that French Foreign Minister Jean-Yves Le Drian told the French parliament Thursday that the US and Iran “have one month to get to the negotiating table...suggesting that Tehran’s plan to increase its nuclear activities in November would spark renewed tension in the region.” President Emmanuel Macron “attempted, but failed to broker talks between” President Trump and Iranian President Hassan Rouhani at the United Nations in New York last week. Le Drian is quoted as saying, “We consider that these initiatives, which didn’t succeed, are still on the table and it is up to Iran and the United States to seize (them) in a relatively short amount of time because Iran has announced new measures to reduce its commitments to the Vienna accord in November.”

North Korea Says It Successfully Tested New Submarine-Launched Ballistic Missile.

Reuters (10/3, Lee) reports North Korea said Thursday it had “successfully test-fired a new submarine-launched ballistic missile (SLBM) from the sea” ahead of renewed nuclear talks with the United States. To Reuters, Wednesday’s launch “was the most provocative by North Korea since it resumed dialogue with the United States in 2018 and a reminder by Pyongyang of the weapons capability it has been aggressively developing.” The new type of SLBM, called Pukguksong-3, was “fired in vertical mode” in the waters off the eastern city of Wonsan, state news agency KCNA said.

Employee Kills Four At Police Headquarters In Paris.

Norah O’Donnell reported on the CBS Evening News (10/3, story 6, 1:20, 4.13M) on a Thursday attack “inside police headquarters” in Paris. Four people “were stabbed to death by a civilian employee. Imtiaz Tyab is in Paris where investigators are trying to figure out why the attacker suddenly snapped.” Kelly Cobiella reported on NBC Nightly News (10/3, story 8, 1:20, Holt, 6.07M) that police say Tyab “stabbed two officers in his office and two more victims in a stairwell. France’s Interior Minister said the suspect worked at police headquarters in IT for 16 years.” He was shot by police in the courtyard of the building.

Reuters (10/3, Carraud, De Clercq) reports, “French broadcaster BFM TV said the attacker had converted to Islam 18 months ago.” Reuters adds that French officials “did not say anything about the motive for the attack and they said they were still trying to discover if there was a terrorism link.” The Washington Post (10/3, McAuley, 14.2M) reports that the attacker “served as an employee of the police department’s administrative staff for 20 years.”

The New York Times (10/3, Nossiter, Breeden, Peltier, 18.61M) says “discontent among police officers was already rising before the attack, and the authorities will almost certainly be asked to explain how a man with a knife was able to enter a heavily secured Police Headquarters filled with armed officers and kill four people before finally being brought down." The AP (10/3) reports that the attack "came a day after thousands of officers marched in Paris to protest low wages, long hours and increasing suicides in their ranks." ABC World News Tonight (10/3, story 7, 0:20, Muir, 5.76M) had a brief report.

Trump Taps Grenell As Special Envoy To Serbia-Kosovo Peace Talks.

The Washington Times (10/3, Howell, 492K) reports President Trump late Thursday tapped US Ambassador to Germany Richard Grenell to serve as a special envoy for Serbia-Kosovo peace talks. According to the Times, Grenell will retain his post in Germany "while he leads the US in helping Serbia and Kosovo settle longstanding tensions."

US Officials Worried Turkey Preparing To Launch Incursion Into Syria.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Lubold, Youssef, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that US officials are increasingly concerned Turkey will soon launch a major incursion into northern Syria, triggering clashes with Kurdish fighters. If such an incursion were to take place, the Journal says the Administration would likely remove all US forces from Syria to avoid the conflict.

UN Calls For Dialogue After More Than 31 Iraqis Are Killed During Protests.

The AP (10/3) reports that the United Nations is "calling for dialogue between the Iraqi government and protesters," saying, "We very much regret the loss of life that we have seen over the last few days during the protests." Iraqi security forces "used live ammunition and tear gas during a third day of unrest that has left 31 people dead, most of them protesters." A spokesman said the UN "welcomes the Iraqi prime minister's announcement that he's opened an investigation into the deaths."

According to Reuters (10/3, Rasheed, Hafthi), Iraqi security forces "opened fire on thousands of demonstrators who defied a curfew in Baghdad on Thursday and exchanged fire with gunmen in southern cities" as the protests spread to other cities in southern Iraq. The Washington Post (10/3, Salim, Loveluck, 14.2M) reports the "widening protests have centered on issues that plague everyday life in the oil-rich country, among them corruption, poor services, and unemployment."

Pakistan, Taliban Call For Resumption Of Peace Talks.

The AP (10/3, Ahmed) reports senior Afghan Taliban leaders and Pakistani officials on Thursday called for the resumption of peace talks to end the war in Afghanistan. The appeal, "made during a rare Taliban visit to Islamabad, comes after months-long US-Taliban negotiations collapsed" last month. The AP says the timing of the Taliban visit – "which coincided with that of Washington's special peace envoy for Afghanistan," Zalmay Khalilzad, who was also in Islamabad on Thursday for "consultations" with Pakistani officials – "appears to indicate Pakistan is seeking to help restart the talks."

Suspicion Of Fraud Rise In Afghan Elections As Turnout Soars.

The New York Times (10/3, Mashal, Abed, Rahim, 18.61M) reports that "by early afternoon on Election Day for the president of Afghanistan, officials began to fret" about low voter turnout. The worry, however, "has now turned into suspicion of artificially high turnout. Ballot boxes from several areas that had exceptionally high turnout in the Saturday election, surprising observers, have arrived at the Independent Election Commission's tabulation centers brimming with votes." The Times says that "despite evidence that the election was conducted more cleanly compared with years past," Afghans now "fear a muddled outcome because of fraud, dragging their war-ravaged country into a new crisis."

Hong Kong To Enact Emergency Laws As Protests Continue.

Reuters (10/3, Jim, Tam) reports Hong Kong is "expected to discuss sweeping emergency laws on Friday that would include banning face masks at protests, two sources told Reuters," as the territory "grapples with an escalating cycle of violence." Authorities "have already loosened guidelines on the use of force by police, according to documents seen by Reuters on Thursday." Media reports earlier Thursday "of an expected ban on face masks...sent Hong Kong's stock market up to a one-week high." The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Western, Khan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Chief Executive Carrie Lam called a special meeting of her executive council to propose the ban, which, if agreed, would become law Friday, sources said.

The New York Times (10/3, Mozur, Qiying, 18.61M), meanwhile, reports that umbrellas, "which became an emblem of protests in Hong Kong five years ago when they were used to deflect pepper spray, are now commonly deployed to shield protester activities – and sometimes violence – from the digital eyes of cameras and smartphones."

Cyberattacks Targeting Journalists And Opposition Figures Traced To Egyptian Government.

The New York Times (10/3, Bergman, Walsh, 18.61M) reports that a cybersecurity firm has concluded that "a series of sophisticated cyberattacks targeting Egyptian journalists, academics, lawyers, opposition politicians and human rights activists has been traced to Egyptian government offices." According to the Times, "The attackers installed software on the targets' phones that enabled them to read the victims' files and emails, track their locations, identify who they contacted and when." The Times says "two activists who were targeted by the cyberattack were arrested in a roundup of prominent opposition figures last month as part of Egypt's crackdown on antigovernment protests."

Irish Border Remains Sticking Point As EU Mulls Johnson's Brexit Compromise Plan.

The AP (10/3) reports British Prime Minister Boris Johnson sought Thursday "to build a coalition at home to back his new Brexit approach even as key European leaders declared that the measures he just proposed fall far short of the concessions needed to forge a deal." To the AP, Johnson "offered a strikingly more conciliatory tone...than in his previous tempestuous appearances in the House of Commons, arguing that the changes his government just offered on regulating trade between Ireland and Northern Ireland after Brexit represented a significant compromise."

According to the Washington Post (10/3, Birnbaum, 14.2M), "European policymakers said Thursday that a new Brexit proposal from...Johnson was unworkable, heightening the prospects of a chaotic British departure from the European Union within weeks." The Post says that "although leaders, politicians and negotiators did not dismiss Johnson's plan out of hand, they made clear the current offer would not win support from the 27 countries that need to sign off on any withdrawal deal, and they were downbeat about it serving as the basis for serious negotiations."

Reuters (10/3, Humphries, Baczynska) reports the EU and Ireland yesterday both "said...Johnson's Brexit proposals were unlikely to yield a deal, with Dublin bluntly warning that Britain was heading towards a no-deal exit unless it made more concessions." Irish Prime Minister Leo Varadkar, "who is key to any possible deal, said he did not fully understand how the British proposals might work and that Dublin could not sign up to a treaty that did not safeguard an open Irish-British border." Reuters (10/3) reports separately that Varadkar spoke to European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker and European Council President Donald Tusk yesterday as well.

According to Bloomberg (10/3, 4.73M), Johnson "hasn't ruled out keeping the contentious backstop arrangement for the Irish border, with one crucial condition: that the EU puts a clear time limit on it." Bloomberg says that proposal "is not something that the EU is formally considering, but it has been discussed as a potential back-up option, including by the bloc's power axis of France and Germany, EU officials said earlier this week." However, Bloomberg adds that "persuading the Irish to accept it would still be a considerable stretch."

Pompeo, Pope Discuss Protections For Religious Minorities.

The AP (10/3) reports Secretary of State Pompeo "met privately with Pope Francis and visited his ancestral home in southern Italy" on Thursday. The State Department said in a brief statement that Pompeo's meeting with the pope "focused on promoting religious freedom, particularly protecting vulnerable Christian communities in the Middle East, democracy and human rights." The AP adds, "Afterward, Pompeo made the two-hour drive from Rome to Pacentro, in Italy's Abruzzo region," which is where Pompeo's "paternal grandfather came from." According to the AP, Pompeo "appeared to be seeking some respite from the growing storm back home with his low-key schedule."

Medvedev Visiting Cuba.

Reuters (10/3, Marsh, Golubkova) reports that in Havana yesterday, Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev "kicked off an official two-day visit to Cuba...in a strong show of Russia's support for the communist-run island as it faces escalating pressure from the United States and resulting fuel shortages." According to Reuters, Medvedev "laid a wreath of flowers at the memorial to independence hero Jose Marti on Havana's Revolution Square before meeting with Cuban President Miguel Diaz-Canel and starting official talks." Reuters says Medvedev's visit is "the highest profile Russian tour since that of President Vladimir Putin in 2014."

Canadian Candidates Decline To Take Stance On Quebec's Religious Symbols Ban.

The Washington Post (10/3, Coletta, 14.2M) reports the leaders of Canada's major political parties agree "they oppose Quebec's new ban on public employees wearing hijabs, turbans or yarmulkes on the job," but "they've got no plans to do anything about it." With an election for Parliament less than three weeks away, "Quebec's Bill 21 has become an increasingly uncomfortable topic for the candidates for prime minister." The legislation has "drawn criticism across Canada and among rights advocates worldwide," but it "has support in Quebec, a key battleground in the tight race between Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's Liberals and opposition leader Andrew Scheer's Conservatives."

Canadian Antifa Hit With Backlash Over "Granny-Bullying." The Washington Times (10/3, Richardson, 492K) reports Antifa "took a public-relations hit this week in Canada after activists blocked the path of an elderly woman using a walker as she tried to enter an Ontario college for a talk featuring a conservative politician." The group was "widely denounced over a viral video showing three masked protesters standing in the woman's way Sunday as she slowly tried to cross the street, accompanied by her elderly husband," while the activists shouted, "Nazi scum! Off our streets!"

Freddie Mac: Mortgage Rates Held Steady This Week.

The Washington Post (10/3, Orton, 14.2M) reports, "Mortgage rates barely budged this week despite downward pressure from lackluster economic news." According to "the latest data released Thursday by Freddie Mac," the 30-year FRM average rose from 3.64% to 3.65%, down from 4.71% a year ago. Meanwhile, the 15-year FRM average fell from 3.16% to 3.14%, down from 4.15% a year ago. The 5/1 ARM average "was unchanged at 3.38 percent," down from 4.01 percent a year ago. Bankrate.com "found that nearly three-quarters of the experts it surveyed predict rates will fall in the coming week." The AP (10/3) reports mortgage rates "have been running near historic lows, though average rates for the key 30-year loan showed volatile swings last month," according to Freddie Mac's data.

MarketWatch (10/3, Passy, 1.67M) reports Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "While mortgage rates generally held steady this week, overall mortgage demand remained very strong. As economic growth decelerates, it is clear that low mortgage rates will continue to support the mortgage market and we expect that to persist for the remainder of the year." Also reporting on Freddie's latest rates and Khater's analysis are: National Mortgage News (10/3, McCullom), HousingWire (10/3, Lloyd, 23K), DS News (10/3, Albanese), Builder (10/3, 1K), Seeking Alpha (10/3, Kiesche, 512K), RTT News (10/3), and The AP's (10/3) Business Highlights. Freddie Mac's Guido Boers Wins Society for Hospitality & Foodservice Management's Leadership Award.

Total Food Service (10/4) reports Freddie Mac's Guido Boers won the Society for Hospitality & Foodservice Management's Leadership Award, which "recognizes an individual whose work on behalf of SHFM and the corporate foodservice and workplace hospitality industry has resulted in the demonstration of outstanding leadership qualities."

HUD Awards $43M In Housing Counseling Grants.

National Mortgage Professional (10/3, Hall) reports HUD "has awarded $42.8 million in housing counseling grants to 207 local, regional and national organizations and state housing finance agencies." According to NMP, "Roughly half of the funding recipients are agencies providing counseling to households within designated Opportunity Zones created under the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act. HUD also debuted an Opportunity Zone website (opportunityzones.hud.gov) that includes an interactive map of the 8,764 Opportunity Zones and the federal resources that support the residents in these areas."

Agency MBS Issuance Reaches 11-Year High In Q2 Thanks To Refi Surge.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/3, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "Single-family MBS production from Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae hit $463.68 billion in the third quarter, the largest agency MBS output in nearly 11 years." Ten years prior, in 2Q09, the agencies "pumped out $577.90 billion of single-family MBS in the midst of a historic refinance boom that featured surging Ginnie issuance." According to IMF, "Volume in the agency refi market jumped 65.6% from the second quarter of 2019 to the third. Fannie and Freddie recorded a combined 67.7% increase in refi business, while Ginnie volume was up 60.4% over that period. Purchase mortgages still represented the largest source of agency business, 57.7% in the third quarter, and production was up a solid 26.1% from the previous period."

Urban Land Institute Survey: Economists More Pessimistic On Housing Starts, Price Growth Through 2021.

National Mortgage News (10/3, Finkelstein) reports, "Real estate economists' outlook for single-family housing starts through 2021 weakened compared with six months ago even though they are relatively bullish on the economy, an Urban Land Institute survey found." The "41 economists and analysts from 32 companies" that made up the panel projected "single-family housing starts will decrease by 25,000 to 850,000 in 2019, following a string of increases over the previous seven years. Over the next two years, starts are expected to decline even further to 810,000 in 2020 and 800,000 in 2021." Slowing housing starts "would only exacerbate the for sale inventory shortage that persists in the marketplace. Home price growth is expected to continue to moderate over the next three years, the respondents said."

EMarketer: US Hispanic Homeownership Rate Has Not Yet Rebounded To Its Pre-Crisis High.

DS News (10/3, Welborn) reports, "Hispanic homeownership has not yet bounced back from the Great Recession, according to new data. Using data from Zillow and the July 2019 Census data, eMarketer found that U.S. Hispanic homeownership rate has yet to regain the 50.1% peak it reached in 2007." National Association of Hispanic Real Estate Professionals (NAHREP) President David Acosta said, "Hispanics consistently indicate aspirational goals toward homeownership. At a median age of 29, Hispanics are younger than the overall median US age and are [coming] into their prime home-buying years. With time, opportunity and information, more Hispanics will seek out homeownership as a key opportunity for improving their overall quality of life." According to Acosta, Hispanics are "more likely than non-Hispanics to live in multigenerational households or to otherwise experience homeownership as part of an extended family. Culturally, this factor means that saving for a down payment can be a family affair, which means multiple adults in a household contribute to the household expenses."

NAREB: Black Homeownership Rate Was Lower In Q2 Than It Was When Fair Housing Act Was Signed.

Illinois Realtors (10/3) says, "The percentage of black homeowners saw an annual decrease of one percentage point in the second quarter of 2019, according to the latest report issued by the National Association of Real Estate Brokers (NAREB)." The 40.6 percent homeownership rate in Q2 was "three-tenths of a percent lower than it was when the federal Fair Housing Act was signed in 1968. The finding is one of many contained in the 2019 State of Housing in Black America report, commissioned by NAREB." Additionally, "The 2019 black homeownership rate is 7 percent below its recorded peak of 49.1 percent in 2004, the report states. Also, the 2019 rate shows a 32.5 percentage point gap between blacks and non-Hispanic white homeowners."

HSH.com Calculates Annual Income Needed To Afford A Home In 50 Largest US MSAs.

The New York Times (10/3, Kolomatsky, 18.61M) says that HSH.com's quarterly report can help readers determine if they can afford to buy a home. The report tells readers "how much annual income [they would] need in order to qualify for a mortgage in the 50 largest metropolitan areas in the United States." Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania was the MSA requiring the least annual income ($38,524), while San Jose, California required the highest annual income ($249,885).

Opinion: HUD Proposal Could Lead To Discrimination In AI-Based Lending.

Writing for CNBC (10/3, Rice, Merrill, 3.62M), National Fair Housing Alliance CEO Lisa Rice and ZestFinance CEO Doug Merrill say, "More financial institutions are turning to AI and machine learning algorithms to make underwriting decisions because they use more data and sophisticated math to spot good borrowers who might have been overlooked or are too hard to score using traditionally exclusive methods." Seeking to avoid running afoul of laws prohibiting intentional discrimination or practices that lead to disparate impact, lenders have increasingly turned to AI in recent years. However, according to Rice and Merrill, a HUD proposal "threatens to squash the requirement for fair and transparent AI, and endanger critical legal tools for fighting lending and other forms of discrimination. That would work against the millions of Americans of color who face structural and systemic barriers when they attempt to get mortgages and other loans."

Treasury Yields Fall This Morning.

CNBC (10/4, Smith, 3.62M) reports "at around 4:30 a.m. ET, the yield on the benchmark 10-year Treasury note, which moves inversely to price, was lower at 1.5255%, while the yield on the 30-year Treasury bond also ticked lower to 2.0280%."

Stocks Gained Thursday.

Reuters (10/3, Randewich) reports, "Wall Street stocks climbed on Thursday after data showing U.S. services-sector activity at a three-year low fueled expectations that the Federal Reserve would cut interest rates to stem a wider economic downturn. Microsoft rose 1.2% and Facebook added 2.7%, with the two contributing more than any other companies to the S&P 500's gain." The Dow Jones Industrial Average gained 122.42 points to close at 26,201.04, while the S&P 500 was up 23.02 to 2,910.63. The Nasdaq closed up 87.02 at 7,872.27.

Dollar Steadies.

Reuters (10/4, Chatterjee) reports, "The dollar steadied on Friday before monthly jobs figures as weak manufacturing and services data this week raised concerns the US economy was losing momentum and could potentially under cut the greenback's rally." The dollar index "fell to 98.816, shedding about 0.9% after hitting a 2-1/2-year high this week." Meanwhile, the euro "rose 0.1% to $1.0970, extending its recovery from a near 2-1/2-year low of $1.0879 set on Tuesday."

Gold Rises.

Reuters (10/4, Lahiri) reports, "Gold prices rose for a fourth straight session on Friday, buoyed by safe-haven sentiment after weak US data deepened concerns over economic growth, with eyes now turning to a jobs report that could signal further US rate cuts." Spot gold "was up 0.3% at $1,508.64 an ounce at 0653 GMT," while US gold futures "were flat at $1,514.60."

Oil Climbs.

Reuters (10/4, Khasawneh) reports, "Oil futures were higher ahead of the weekend but remained on track for large weekly losses on fears that slower global economic growth will hurt fuel demand, even as Saudi Arabia said it has fully restored oil output after recent attacks." Brent crude oil futures "rose 12 cents, or 0.2%, to $57.83 a barrel by 0703 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude futures "rose 9 cents, or 0.2%, to $52.54."

Cybersecurity

FBI Issues Warning Of Potential "High-Impact" Ransomware Attacks.

The Hill (10/3, Miller, 2.98M) reports, "The FBI on Wednesday warned U.S. businesses and organizations of the increasing threat posed by ransomware cyberattacks, following several high-profile attacks on government offices and other public entities." The FBI "said the attacks, which involve encrypting a computer before demanding money in return for unlocking it, are 'becoming more targeted, sophisticated, and costly.' 'Since early 2018, the incidence of broad, indiscriminate ransomware campaigns has sharply declined, but the losses from ransomware attacks have increased significantly,' the FBI wrote." The FBI "has issued similar warnings of malicious actors trying to hack into websites seen as more 'secure' and have warned of business email compromises, but this was the first in 2019 highlighting ransomware attacks." Wednesday's warning "follows attacks on more than 20 Texas small towns and other entities, and attacks on multiple school districts in Louisiana that led Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) to declare a statewide emergency.”

Forbes (10/3, Winder, 9.71M) reports, “The FBI’s Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3) last posted a warning about ransomware on September 15, 2016. Then it was urging victims to report ransomware incidents to federal law enforcement to help paint a detailed picture of the threat,” but “the threat landscape revealed has been a constantly changing one.” According to Forbes, “The frequency of attacks has remained relatively consistent, but the nature of them has not. The FBI reports that the incidence of indiscriminate ransomware campaigns, such as evidenced by WannaCry on May 2017, has ‘sharply declined.’ However, losses from ransomware have increased significantly as the attacks become ‘more targeted, sophisticated and costly.’”

ZDNet (10/3, Tung, 299K) reports, “After a spate of ransomware attacks on government organizations, the FBI has come up with a new stance on paying up ransomware demands.” According to ZDNet, The FBI’s Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3) “says it does not advocate paying the ransom. Paying up doesn’t guarantee restored access to data and ‘paying ransoms emboldens criminals to target other organizations and provides an alluring and lucrative enterprise to other criminals.’” But “the FBI says it also understands that executives running businesses that have become crippled by ransomware ‘will evaluate all options to protect their shareholders, employees, and customers.’”

FBI To Monitor Violent Online Threats Linked To “Joker” Premiere.

ABC News (10/3, Margolin, 2.97M) reports, “The FBI has received tips of threatening posts on social media calling for ‘unspecific mass shootings’ linked to the release of the new psychological thriller, ‘Joker,’ starring Oscar-nominated actor Joaquin Phoenix that will hit theaters this Friday, according to a joint intelligence bulletin obtained by ABC News.” According to ABC News, “These threats have been circling online platforms since at least May 2019, but give no information indicating specific or credible threats to particular locations or venues, the bulletin said.” ABC News adds, “Some of the threats did contain references to a primarily online group called the involuntary celibate community, or Incels, and a subset that refers to itself as ‘Clowncels.’” but “the intelligence community doesn’t necessarily regard the group as a whole as a violent one. ‘While many Incels do not engage in violence, some within the community encourage or commit violent acts as retribution for perceived societal wrongdoing against them,’ the bulletin said. ‘Some Incel attackers have claimed inspiration from previous mass shooters.’”

CNN (10/3, Shortell, 83.16M) reports, “Concern from law enforcement has been growing in recent weeks ahead of the movie’s premiere.” The Army “said over the weekend it had warned soldiers at at least one base, in Fort Sill, Oklahoma, about the threats, and the Los Angeles Police Department has said it will have ‘high visibility’ at theaters showing the movie.”

USA Today (10/3, Alexander, Johnson, 10.31M) reports that an unnamed law enforcement official “said the joint FBI and Department of Homeland Security bulletin was issued out of an abundance of caution, as there is no specific or credible threat against a particular venue.”

Trump Maintains Anti-Huawei Push.

In the “Cybersecurity 202” blog for the Washington Post (10/3, 14.2M), Joseph Marks writes, “President Trump took a break from denouncing Democrats’ impeachment investigation during a fiery news conference yesterday to publicly pressure Finnish President Sauli Niinisto to block Huawei from his nation’s 5G networks.” Trump “also praised the Finnish company Nokia, which is competing with the Chinese telecom for 5G wireless contracts, as ‘a great company’ and ‘a global leader in 5G technology.’” Trump’s comments “were among just a few from Trump that didn’t center on the whistleblower and impeachment investigations, and they underscore how critical the administration considers the 5G fight in Europe.” Trump “has banned Huawei from playing any role in U.S. 5G networks, citing concerns the company could be complicit in Beijing spying. U.S. envoys have crisscrossed the globe urging allies to do the same,” but “that effort has had limited success – especially in Europe, which is a vital U.S. military and intelligence partner.”

TFI/Sanctions

Clooney, Prendergast To US: Use Sanctions To Help South Sudan.

In a USA Today (10/3, Clooney, Prendergast, Contributors, 10.31M) op-ed, The Sentry co-founders George Clooney and John Prendergast write that “the U.S. Treasury Department has frozen the U.S. assets and dollar-denominated transactions of entire networks of people and companies complicit in terrorism, nuclear proliferation, drug trafficking and other illicit activity.” They “urge the United States and other governments to investigate and, if appropriate, impose network sanctions on” companies, “along with their business associates, enablers and connected companies,” that profit from their support for “deadly militias that have committed mass atrocities” in South Sudan.

Federal Reserve

Fed Officials Signal Openness To Rate Cuts But Give Few Signals Of Intentions.

Reuters (10/3, Hiller, Marte) reports, “Two Fed policymakers on Thursday signaled they are open to delivering another rate cut after a report showed the growth in the vast U.S. services sector is slowing.” However, Fed Vice Chairman Richard Clarida “gave little away on his own thinking,” saying in New York that the Fed “will act as appropriate to sustain a low unemployment rate and solid growth and stable inflation” in an echo of Fed Chair Jerome Powell’s comments made earlier in 2019.

Bloomberg (10/4, Torres, Greifeld, 4.73M) reports that Clarida, at a forum on Thursday hosted by The Wall Street Journal in New York, said, "The economy is in a good place. The consumer is in good shape, inflation is stable." His comments came "as a slew of weak reports this week signaled that the U.S. economy is slowing, threatening the longest expansion on record." When "asked if the chance of a recession was higher than normal," Clarida responded, "I don't think recession risks are particularly elevated under appropriate monetary policy."

Investors Bet On More 2019 Rate Cuts. In a separate piece, Bloomberg (10/3, Barrett, 4.73M) reports, "investors added to wagers on more action from the Federal Reserve to avert a recession" in light of "a disappointing report on activity in the largest swathe of the U.S. economy." The report showed "U.S. manufacturing sinking further into contraction," deepening investors' "concerns for the nation's growth outlook." The AP (10/3, McDonald) also reported on this story.

A third Bloomberg (10/3, Matthews, 4.73M) piece reports that Powell "is facing greater pressure to make a third-straight reduction in response to weakening data, volatile markets and a continued bashing from President Donald Trump." Powell "told reporters after the central bank's meeting September 18 that the Federal Open Market Committee would decide rates 'meeting-by-meeting,' and further cuts would depend on incoming reports." However, "the outlook has darkened since then, particularly this week."

Behind a paywall, Barron's (10/3, Klein, 1.07M) reports, "The September jobs report may clarify the state of the U.S. economy in light of recent weak data on consumption spending, construction investment, and capital goods manufacturing."

Mester: Low Interest Rates Bring Uncertain Risks. The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Cleveland Fed President Loretta Mester warned Thursday of the risk that low interest rates could produce financial imbalances, and could leave the Fed with few tools to address non-monetary policy issues.

Evans: Fed Maintains Independence In Policymaking. Reuters (10/3) reports Chicago Fed President Charles Evans said on Thursday at a conference in Madrid that the Fed maintains "'a reasonable amount of independence' and is focused on its mandate despite criticism of its policy moves by" President Trump. Evans added that, despite the criticism, "what we need to do is to keep our head down and pay attention to our mandated objective" of boosting employment and managing inflation.

NYTimes Analysis: Fed Expected To Again Cut Rates.

The New York Times (10/3, Smialek, 18.61M) reports under the headline "Another Fed Rate Cut Is Expected After Weak Economic Data" that while "top Federal Reserve officials have said they are open-minded about whether additional interest rate cuts will be necessary" this year, "recent economic data may put that equanimity to the test. ... Data increasingly suggest" that an economic slowdown is "materializing...[and] investors have ramped up their expectations for a rate cut at the Fed's Oct. 29-30 meeting."

NY Fed Injects Another $33.55B Through Repo Market.

The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Barba, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the New York Fed again added money to the financial system through the repo market on Thursday, this time adding $33.55 billion.

Financial Regulatory Agencies

Regulators Call For More Research Into Reasons Why Banks Sell.

American Banker (10/3, Davis, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Fed Governor Michelle Bowman and the FDIC Chair Jelena McWilliams "called this week for more research into the reasons for, and the impact of, bank consolidation." At a St. Louis Fed conference on the future of community banking, Bowman "said Tuesday that how much banks earn...seems to be the main determinant of which ones sell and which ones remain independent." But on Wednesday, Philadelphia Fed President Patrick Harker said banks that "don't have sufficient scale, or don't meet a specific need, are the ones being acquired...because they don't have a compelling story." Meanwhile, McWilliams in an interview Tuesday said regulators should understand why banks sell, particularly when the seller's business model was disrupted. Bowman "also discussed M&A's impact on communities." Citing Community Reinvestment Act evaluations, she "pointed to reduced donations for child care, homeless shelters, scholarship programs and other local needs as well as a decline in community service."

Internal Revenue Service

"Accidental Americans" Face Difficulty Clearing Themselves With The IRS.

CNBC (10/3, Mercado, 3.62M) reports on its website that "thousands of 'accidental Americans' residing in Europe...are finding out that they are subject to tax reporting requirements from the IRS, as well as foreign account filings with the Treasury Department" due to having been born in the US to foreign parents. However, those "individuals who are US citizens because they were born here or because they had at least one parent who is a U.S. citizen...don't identify as such." Since the IRS taxes US citizens no matter where they live, these individuals "must file income, estate and gift tax returns with the IRS." However, doing so can be a difficult process as they must "secure piles of documentation to obtain a Social Security number or Individual Taxpayer Identification Number and begin filing their taxes."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Fed To Finalize Reg Relief For Midsize Banks.

American Banker (10/3, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Fed Board will meet next Thursday "to finalize changes to its enhanced supervision program as well as requirements for institutions to submit wind-down plans." The meeting "will focus on a plan seen as benefiting mostly midsize and regional banks." The new system would ease supervision for midsize banks compared to the largest institutions. The Fed in October proposed a "tiered structure for domestic bank and thrift holding companies with over $100 billion of assets," and in April, the Fed proposed "a similar tiered structure for foreign banks and a reduction in how often firms submit resolution plans." The Fed has proposed some of these changes on its own and some in concert with the OCC and the FDIC.

BB&T, SunTrust Gain Temporary Reprieve From Stress Test Requirements.

The Winston-Salem (NC) Journal (10/3, Craver, 168K) reports BB&T and SunTrust "received Thursday what is likely to be a temporary reprieve from having to comply with federal stress-test requirements." Unrelated to the banks' proposed megadeal, the OCC "said Thursday it is revising the frequency by which certain national banks and federal savings associations are required to conduct stress tests from annual to every two years, beginning in 2020." The big four – JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, Citigroup, and Wells Fargo – would still be required to conduct stress tests annually. The OCC is also "reducing the number of required stress testing scenarios from three to two, as well as making additional technical changes to the stress testing requirements."

Two Miami-Based Community Banks Receive "Outstanding" CRA Evaluations.

Behind a subscriber wall, the South Florida Business Journal (10/3, Portero, Subscription Publication, 855K) reports Miami-based Pacific National Bank and Continental National Bank both received the top rating of "outstanding" in Community Reinvestment Act evaluations released by the OCC October 2. Pacific National received the top rating for "originating a strong number of community development loans and exhibiting excellent responsiveness to credit and community development needs in its assessment area," while Continental National received an outstanding rating for its "excellent distribution of loans in low and moderate-income communities, for lending to businesses of different sizes, and meeting community development needs" during the May 2016 to Dec. 31, 2018 evaluation period.

Analysis: Defaults On Modified Loans Could "Sink" Home Prices.

Writing for MarketWatch (10/3, 1.67M), real estate analyst Keith Jurow says that re-defaults on home mortgage modifications "are a massive problem – and endanger the US mortgage and housing markets." In its Mortgage Metrics Report for the first quarter of 2019, the OCC "noted that 21% of the most recently modified loans had re-defaulted within six months." The OCC's Mortgage Metrics Report reveals "that for the past five years (or longer), roughly 75%-95% of all mortgage modifications have included capitalization of interest arrears, meaning all delinquent interest payments have been added to the outstanding principal."

New York Times.

"Trump, The Self-Impeaching President." The New York Times (10/3, 18.61M) editorializes that while yesterday's comments by the President "might seem self-defeating – 'self-impeaching,' even," Trump "is a master at what a former New York senator, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, called defining deviancy down. One baldfaced presidential lie, once exposed, is an outrage; a thousand such lies is a statistic." The Times adds, "If Mr. Trump has evidence of possible corruption overseas, his counsel should relay it to the Department of Justice and let the FBI do its job, in coordination with its foreign counterparts."

Washington Post.

"California Is Making The NCAA Extremely Angry. Good." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/3, 14.2M) sides with the state of California regarding its new law "to allow college athletes to earn money from endorsements. ... The Fair Pay to Play Act, the first of its kind in the country, challenges long-standing rules that bar students on athletic scholarships from being paid beyond the value of their scholarship." The Post says the "apoplectic" National Collegiate Athletic Association has until 2023 – when the law will take effect – "to devise its own solution."

"Trump Is Now Publicly Abusing His Oath Of Office." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/3, 14.2M) writes, "That a request for a foreign investigation of a US citizen would come directly from the president, in the absence of any legitimate US probe, is a blatant violation of that citizen's rights and of the US rule of law." Moreover, that President Trump "does it in front of television cameras makes it no less egregious: In doing so, he is attempting to normalize what should be utterly unacceptable presidential behavior."

Wall Street Journal.

"Harvard's Legal Discrimination." The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that in a ruling this week, a federal judge essentially said Harvard may discriminate against Asian-American applicants in the name of racial diversity. The Journal says this contradicts both the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the 14th Amendment, and says it may fall to the Supreme Court to resolve.

"Unconstitutional Tax Tricks." The Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that just this week, courts overruled New York on its 2017 tax reform and California on its law requiring presidential candidates to disclose their income tax returns to appear on the state's primary ballot. The Journal says courts rightly ruled that the states' actions were political in nature, not sound or constitutional policy.

“Charter Schools Ace Another Test.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights a study of 21 urban school districts by the Thomas B. Fordham Institute as the latest indicator that charter schools are improving education for some of the most at-risk students.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Yes, your phone calls are innocent, your crowds are the biggest, your hands are the largest. Your face is the orangest. You are the best at everything. Even God is jealous of you, Donald Trump. Trump is roping everyone into this. This could go all the way to the Space Force."

Jimmy Kimmel: "And you know who's been consulting Rudy, giving him advice on Ukraine? Paul Manafort, Trump's former campaign chairman, who's currently in prison for what he did in Ukraine. We're like one news cycle away from Rudy Giuliani unhinging his jaw and swallowing a mongoose on 'Fox and Friends.'"

Stephen Colbert: "You know, the Constitution gives the accused the right to remain silent, and clearly Donald Trump has never read the Constitution."

Stephen Colbert: "Just when you think Trump can't dig himself a deeper hole, he literally reaches China."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump made these comments on his way to Florida, to visit something called 'The Villages,' which is the largest retirement community in the country. I thought that was the US Senate."

Stephen Colbert: "The population of the villages is perfect for Trump: The median age is nearly 71. Or as Trump calls them: 'the youth vote.'"

Stephen Colbert: "They love him down there. In fact, Trump was treated to a golf cart parade."

Stephen Colbert: "The only thing whiter than a golf cart parade would be a mayonnaise water slide."

Stephen Colbert: "Yesterday, the inspector general of the State Department rushed to Capitol Hill for an urgent briefing with the leaders of the House of Representatives. Everyone wondered what could be so urgent. Did he have more transcripts of Trump's phone calls? More incriminating emails from Pompeo? Spoilers for the new season of 'Young Sheldon'?"

Stephen Colbert: "Turns out, none of that. Turns out, the inspector general wanted to give Congress a 'mysterious' packet of Ukraine disinformation that members of Congress described as 'bizarre and confusing.' Which was tough because 'bizarre and confusing' are also the Secret Service code names for Don Jr. and Eric."

Stephen Colbert: "This mystery packet included debunked smears against, among others, Hunter Biden and the former US ambassador to Ukraine. It is an unfathomable mystery who would want to circulate such discredited – and it's Giuliani. Because last night, Rudy admitted it was him to CNN, but it was already pretty obvious considering the packet contained several folders that appeared to have come from a Trump hotel and copies of interview notes bearing the address of Mr. Giuliani's New York office. Oopsa-dummy. That's like if Bruce Wayne's house had a sign that said: 'Welcome to Wayne Manor, home of the Bat Cave.'"

James Corden: "Now he's asking China – I mean, Trump is literally doubling down on the same strategy that launched the impeachment inquiry. He's like, 'Hey, they can't impeach me twice.'"

James Corden: "Trump once publicly called on Russia to investigate Hillary Clinton. Then he asked for Ukraine's help with the Bidens. Now he is asking China. You have to admit it, in his own way, Trump really does bring the world together."

James Corden: "The President is now openly colluding with foreign governments. He doesn't even care about appearances anymore. It's like when a divorced dad goes, 'That's it, from now on, I'm wearing sweat pants every day.'"

James Corden: "Speaking of the President, as you may know he tweeted out a Nickelback meme yesterday, because apparently that's what presidents do nowadays. Overnight, Twitter took down the tweet after receiving a copyright complaint. Nickelback versus Donald Trump. No matter who wins, we all lose."

Jimmy Fallon: "Actually, everything happening in Washington right now feels like a Taylor Swift song. Democrats knew Trump was 'Trouble' when he walked in. Now they have 'Bad Blood' and Nancy Pelosi is like, 'Look What You Made Me Do'."

Jimmy Fallon: "It's crazy. In the middle of being investigated for asking foreign countries for election help, Trump publicly asked foreign countries for election help. That's like chugging a beer while taking a breathalyzer test."

Jimmy Fallon: "But people close to Trump are worried that he's becoming more and more unglued. At this point, the only glued parts of Trump are his teeth and his hair."

Jimmy Fallon: "And everyone's talking about this yesterday, Trump tweeted a video about Joe Biden that featured a Nickelback song, but Nickelback had the video taken down. It's not a good sign for Trump when even Nickelback is like, 'We can't be associated with you.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Today, he gave a speech about healthcare in Florida, and when it was over, Trump swung by the Everglades to grab some alligators for his border moat."

Jimmy Fallon: "Joe Biden made a speech in Nevada and told Trump, 'You're not going to destroy me.' Yeah, then Biden was like, 'I'm letting Elizabeth Warren do that instead.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "In other 2020 news, Beto O'Rourke just posted an Instagram video of himself getting a flu shot. [This is the] first time since the campaign started that we can honestly say Beto's got a shot."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump today publicly suggested that both Ukraine and China should investigate the Biden family. Oh, what happened to doing your crimes in private? Trump's like a mobster who, instead of throwing a body in the trunk, throws it in the passenger seat so he can use the carpool lane."

Seth Meyers: "According to the Washington Post, President Trump has privately suggested that US forces form a human wall to prevent people from crossing the border. I don't want to say the President is a child, but his immigration policy is literally 'Red rover, red rover. Send nobody over.'"

Seth Meyers: "According to a new poll, Sen. Elizabeth Warren is trailing former Vice President Joe Biden in Ohio by two points. But that could change as soon as Biden accidentally calls it Idaho."

Seth Meyers: "CNN announced today it will not air a campaign ad for Trump 2020, though they will keep airing this ad for Trump 20 To Life."

Seth Meyers: "The New York Times has published an article about the advanced age of the top three Democratic candidates entitled, 'Is Age Only A Number Even When You're Running For President?' And this can't be a good sign: All three cut out the article to read later."

Seth Meyers: "Presidential hopeful Sen. Kamala Harris is featured on the new cover of Time magazine. Not to be outdone, Joe Biden is featured on the new cover of Don't Touch."

Trevor Noah: "And I'm so glad that Bernie is still, like, in the mix. This is what I love about him! He's consistent! Most people wouldn't think about other people and their policies in a crisis, but Bernie uses it as an opportunity to reinforce his beliefs. The dude has a heart procedure and his first statement is, 'This is why America needs healthcare!' If Bernie was kidnapped by the Joker, he would be, like, 'This is why we need better healthcare in Gotham! These psychopathic clowns, they need our help!'"

Trevor Noah: "This guy [Trump] is unbelievable. He's already facing impeachment for asking Ukraine to investigate Joe Biden, and now he's like, 'You know what, China? Get on it too! You jump in as well!' Trump may be the only person on Earth who thinks two wrongs do make a right."

Trevor Noah: "Now as the scandal develops, more and more people in Trump's orbit are getting sucked in. First Trump's personal lawyer, then his Secretary of State. I wouldn't be shocked if next week we find out Sean Spicer is a part of this. Be like, 'Yeah, he's been sending secret messages to Ukraine on 'Dancing With The Stars' because that's not dancing, we can all agree. That's full-body Morse code. That's what that is.'"

Trevor Noah: "So Mike Pence likely knew about the phone call, had access to the transcript, and personally told Zelensky he wasn't getting his military aid. I'm not shocked Pence was involved because he does whatever Trump tells him, right? Trump is Homer Simpson, right, and he basically picked Ned Flanders as his VP. If Trump says jump into that volcano, Pence would be like, 'Oakey dokey, sir. I'll do it.'"

Trevor Noah: "When there's a Trump scandal, Mike Pence doesn't know what's going on. He's like every mom watching a movie. 'Is that the bad guy?' 'No, Mom, that's the Pixar lamp. It hasn't started yet.'"

Treasury in the News

Trump: Ukraine Story "Another Witch Hunt," Whistleblower's Source "Close To A Spy."

While conservative news outlets sounded a sympathetic tone, mainstream media reports – including segments on all three major network newscasts – cast the President's comments yesterday about the impeachment drive against him in a sharply unfavorable light. Media analyses were derisive toward Trump's assertion – available in audio obtained by the Los Angeles Times and video published by Bloomberg – that the anonymous whistleblower's source was "close to a spy." Reports also dismissed his criticism of Democrats and Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) as an attempt to distract from the charges against him. The New York Times (9/26, A1, Haberman, 18.61M) reports the President "told a crowd of staff from the United States Mission to the United Nations on Thursday morning that he wants to know who provided information to a whistle-blower about his phone call with the president of Ukraine, saying that whoever did so was 'close to a spy' and that 'in the old days,' spies were dealt with differently." Trump is quoted as saying, "I want to know who's the person who gave the whistle-blower the information because that's close to a spy. You know what we used to do in the old days when we were smart with spies and treason, right? We used to handle it a little differently than we do now."

Though the New York Post (9/26, Fredericks, 4.57M) indicates that after Trump spoke "laughter can be heard in the background," ABC World News Tonight (9/26, story 2, 1:45, Muir, 6.8M) said the comments "shocked some in the room," and added (Moran) that Trump's "thoughts [had] turned violent." Along those lines, USA Today (9/26, Collins, Johnson, 10.31M) notes Schiff called Trump's comments "'a reprehensible invitation to violence' against witnesses in the committee's investigation." Along similar lines, on NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 5, 1:35, Holt, 5.53M), Andrea Mitchell said Trump's comments "could have a chilling effect on future whistleblowers who are going to be afraid to report wrongdoing." NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 2, 2:00, Jackson, 5.53M) also reported "treason is a crime punishable by death," and that the President made "those comments with children in the audience, according to a person briefed on the remarks." NBC further stated that "inside the West Wing there appears to be rising 'anxiety, unease, and concern' as one source close to the White House described the mood." Another source paints "a picture of 'shell-shocked' staffers with growing fears impeachment pressure could trigger erratic and maybe unmanageable behavior from the President."

The CBS Evening News (9/26, story 2, 2:25, Tracy, 4.55M) also said the "the President suggested whoever spoke to the whistleblower...might be a traitor," and also "alluded to punishments, such as imprisonment or execution," and Axios (9/26, Ayesh, 521K) that "Trump has used language to suggest he wants to retaliate against people who don't do what he wants or question his actions," and that "the whistleblower seems to be trying to avoid some of the blowback experienced by past Trump enemies, like former FBI Director James

NBC News (9/26, 6.14M) reports White House officials “were scrambling Thursday to figure out how to counter the renewed Democratic impeachment push, with one source familiar with the situation describing a sense of ‘total panic’ over the past week at the lack of a plan to address the new reality.” The piece says the “lack of a long-term strategic vision has been starkly visible, as when Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin indicated they were not going to release the memo describing Trump’s call with the Ukrainian president — and then 48 hours later feeling that there was no choice but to release the document, according to a source familiar with the situation.”

Meanwhile, in an op-ed in USA Today (9/26, 10.31M), Tom Nichols refers to “Trump’s new impeachable offense,” which “is threatening the life of a CIA officer” — meaning the whistleblower. Jim Sciutto said on CNN (9/26, 1:16 p.m. ET, Keilar, 637K), “The President’s definition of ‘spy’ is, and it’s not just confined to this incident, anybody who provides critical information on him. We’ve heard him use that term before, and we’ve heard him make threats before, although we should say that this is qualitatively different from the Commander-in-Chief to reference, it appears, the death penalty for spies for treason perhaps in a way that he’s done before offhand flippantly, but still serious words to hear coming from the mouth of the Commander-in-Chief.”

The New York Post (9/26, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports that later yesterday, Trump “called Democrats ‘pirates’ for pursuing his impeachment — saying they’re only out to get him because they know they can’t beat him at the ballot box.” Said Trump, “It’s a disgrace to our country. It’s another witch hunt, here we go again. It’s Adam Schiff and his crew making up stories and sitting there like pirates, whatever you want to call them. It really is a disgrace. It’s a terrible thing for our country.” The Washington Times (9/26, Boyer, 492K) describes Trump as “defiant,” and quotes him as saying that “while the new impeachment furor is engulfing Washington, ‘We can’t talk about gun regulation, we can talk about anything because frankly they [Democrats] are so tied up, they’re so screwed up, nothing gets done except when I do it.’”

Reuters (9/26) reports that Trump also said “there should be a way to stop” House Democrats from impeaching him. Reuters quotes Trump as saying, “What... Democrats are doing to this country is a disgrace and it shouldn’t be allowed. There should be a way of stopping it, maybe legally through the courts.” ABC World News Tonight (9/26, story 3, 0:40, Moran, 6.8M) said Trump “can’t stop it in the courts,” but “he can slow it down or even sabotage it in the courts, claiming executive privilege to stop his aides from testifying or preventing documents from being released.” CQ Roll Call (9/26, Bennett, 154K) similarly reports that Trump “struggled to fashion a counter-message” yesterday, and adds that he “did not explain what legal rationale any sitting commander in chief would have to stop an impeachment inquiry,” because “the monarchy-weary authors of the Constitution deemed a mechanism to remove a president over misconduct or an abuse of power so important they included it in the country’s founding document.”

Trump also took to Twitter yesterday to write, “Liddle’ Adam Schiff, who has worked unsuccessfully for 3 years to hurt the Republican Party and President, has just said that the Whistleblower, even though he or she only had second hand information, ‘is credible.’ How can that be with zero info and a known bias. Democrat Scam!” Trump added “Schiff has zero credibility. Another fantasy to hurt the Republican Party!” Trump also tweeted, “A whistleblower with second hand information? Another Fake News Story! See what was said on the very nice, no pressure, call. Another Witch Hunt!” USA Today (9/26, Jackson, Fritze, 10.31M) quotes Trump as further stating yesterday, “Here we go again. ... It’s Adam Schiff and his crew making up stories and sitting there like pious, whatever you want to call them.” Schiff “mocked the complaints,” saying, “I’m always flattered when I’m attacked by someone of the president’s character.” The Hill (9/26, Wise, 2.98M) and Washington Examiner (9/26, Halaschak, 448K), among other news outlets, also run stories on Trump’s comments yesterday.

Sean Hannity, who ran footage of Trump’s entire statement on the Ukraine controversy, said on Fox News’ Hannity (9/26, 9:00 p.m. ET, 535K), “The real story, the real corruption, none of it, zero, has to do with President Trump except that the President is once again a victim of baseless lies, smears, hypocrisy, conspiracy theories. This is not what the lying, corrupt, and at this point despicable, disgusting fake news media is telling you tonight. We have the real story, and that is we have Sleepy Creepy Crazy Joe who has serious explaining to do. ... A quid pro quo, a real quid pro quo and abuse of power and corruption at an extraordinarily high level with a lot of money at stake and a pay to play scheme and a subsequent cover-up. All in an effort that would allow his son to walk away scot-free, very rich and capitalize off of him being the vice president.”

House Minority Whip Scalise said on Fox News’ The Story (9/26, 7:11 p.m. ET, McCallum, 1.32M), “What troubles me most is that Nancy Pelosi, before the transcript was even released of the phone call, said the President broke the law. They raised a specter, said there would be a quid pro quo. They had all of these allegations and then we see the conversation between President Trump and President Zelensky. And there was absolutely no quid pro quo. There was absolutely no high crimes and misdemeanors.”

Rep. Chris Stewart (R-UT) said on CNN’s Cuomo Prime Time (9/26, 9:15 p.m. ET, Cuomo, 841K), “The essence of this report was about the phone call. I mean, anyone can read it. Now they can talk about well, they had concerns about whether it was — what computer it was stored. But you can’t tell me that that’s going to be the essence of an impeachment hearing. It has to be the essence of this phone call. That’s 90-something percent of our concerns.”

Newt Gingrich said on Fox News’ Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/26, 8:27 p.m. ET, Carlson), “From the standpoint of the Democrats, this is a really bad decision. Given our own experience [with the Bill Clinton impeachment], we had a much stronger hand in an independent counsel report that said Clinton was guilty on numerous counts, including felonies. What they are doing now makes no sense at all and I think will probably politically be very damaging.”

Whistleblower A CIA Officer Once Detailed To White House; Trump “Frantically” Seeking His Identity. The New York Times (9/26, Goldman, Schmidt, Barnes, 18.61M) reports “the whistle-blower...is a CIA officer who was detailed to work at the White House at one point, according to three people familiar with his identity." He "has since returned to the CIA, the people said. Little else is known about him." The Wall Street Journal (9/26, A1, Volz, Strobel, Hughes, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports the whistleblower works for the CIA, according to a source.

The Washington Examiner (9/26, Nelson, 448K) reports, meanwhile, that "Trump and his advisers are frantically searching for the identity of the whistleblower," and adds that "among sources close to the White House staff, there was a clear consensus that at least one of the sources likely worked at the National Security Council, given context clues in an Aug. 12 whistleblower complaint released Thursday." The Examiner also reports that "specific names are circulating as suspects for both the whistleblower and the sources, though the Washington Examiner is not printing the names because the officials' responsibility cannot be proven."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' The Story (9/26, 7:02 p.m. ET, McCallum), "The whistleblower is someone who does not have firsthand knowledge of what happened, got that from a few other people. ... It was referred to the [Office of Legal Counsel], which said this is a routine diplomatic phone call between President Trump and the Ukrainian president, it was not an intelligence activity, so the [DOJ] Criminal Division said there was no campaign finance violation, and now the whole world can judge for themselves. The President went and released the whole thing. ... Give me a break, we don't need Ukraine to help beat Joe Biden or any of the rest of them any more than we needed Russia to beat Hillary Clinton."

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/26, 8:00 p.m. ET, 1.59M), "We learned today that the official who filed the so-called whistleblower complaint against the President was a career CIA officer. The official did not agree with the President's foreign policy views, so he felt entitled to veto those views and bring the US government to a standstill, which he did. That is the meat of the story. We know this because the complaint was released today to the public, you can read it if you want. It tells us nothing we didn't already know from a transcript of the phone call. ... Trump mentioned no military aid or quid pro quo. It's hard to see how it's an impeachable offense."

Trump: Zelensky "Said He Was Not Pressured By Me." The President also tweeted yesterday, "The President of Ukraine said that he was NOT pressured by me to do anything wrong. Can't have better testimony than that! As V.P., Biden had his son, on the other hand, take out millions of dollars by strong arming the Ukrainian President. Also looted millions from China. Bad!" The AP (9/26) reports, meanwhile, that Zelensky "says his comments in a conversation with...Trump shouldn't have been publicly released." Said Zelensky, "I think such things, such conversations between heads of independent states, they shouldn't be published." He "also said he's 'not afraid' of the publication and that "no one can pressure me." He said the Biden investigation is just one of "many cases that I talk about with leaders of other countries." Of the Biden probe, he also said, "I don't know the details of this case."

Reporting from the Ukraine, NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 4, 1:30, Holt, 5.53M) also said the country's president "insists he was not pressured by...Trump," and showed him saying, "Nobody pushed me." NBC added that "Ukraine is fighting a war with Russia and is dependent on US military aid. Former officials tell us it's too fragile to be caught up in a fight over...Trump's survival."

The Washington Post (9/26, O'Grady, Noack, 14.2M) recounts that on Wednesday, Zelensky said "Trump was 'absolutely right. Not only 100 percent, but actually 1000 percent'" about his claims of support for the Ukraine, and "he praised Trump and went on to say he met both German Chancellor Angela Merkel and French President Emmanuel Macron and told them: 'They are not working as much as they should work for Ukraine.'" The Post adds "those comments were not well received in Europe."

WPost Analysis: Zelensky Tried To Curry Favor With Trump "Through His Business." The Washington Post (9/26, O'Connell, Fahrenthold, 14.2M) reports, "Buried in the controversy over...Trump's phone call with...Zelensky was an effort by the Ukrainian leader at currying favor with Trump through his business." Zelensky told the President, "Actually, last time I traveled to the United States, I stayed in New York near Central Park, and I stayed at the Trump Tower." To the Post, "Zelensky's comments mark the first known example of an interaction Democrats and government ethics experts warned about when Trump took office: that foreign leaders would try to influence Trump by spending money at his properties and telling him about it." The Post adds "other Ukrainian officials have also patronized Trump properties."

Treasury's Crowley: Impeachment Inquiry Could Feed Market Uncertainty. Fox Business (9/26, Limitone, 1.73M) reports Monica Crowley, an assistant secretary for public affairs at the Treasury Department, said in an interview with Fox Business' Varney & Co. (9/26, 64K) that the "latest impeachment hysteria" will feed into market uncertainty. She stated: "I think are playing a very dangerous game here because this has serious economic and national security implications you might see effects in the market." However, she also said markets have factored in the idea that the Democrats will "stop at nothing" to try to destroy Trump. "The markets realize that the president's opponents are relentless and ... the biggest strength this president brings into his re-election is the strength of the U.S. economy through his very powerful pro-growth economic policies," she said. "He's delivering a booming economy." Newsweek (9/26, 1.53M) also reports on Crowley's comments.

Scott Criticizes Romney, Compares Him To Pelosi. The Daily Caller (9/26, 716K) reports "Republican Utah Sen. Mitt Romney came under fire from one of his Republican colleagues Thursday as Romney continues to raise questions about...Trump's phone call with...Zelensky." Said Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL), "Senator Romney has gone down the same path as the Democrats like Nancy Pelosi. ... He thinks the worst of the president instead of the best, before he ever gets all the facts." Added Scott, "Romney doesn't speak for the Republican Party. He can have his own opinions, and he doesn't speak for all Republican senators." The New York Times (9/26, Martin, 18.61M) says "Republicans have largely rushed to Mr. Trump's defense, or at least tempered their criticism to avoid his furious reprisals," with the exception of Romney. However, according to the Times, "Romney's public statements reflect what many in his party believe privately but are almost uniformly unwilling to say."

Sarah Sanders: Controversy Is Helping Trump And Hurting Biden. Former White House communications director Sarah Sanders, appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/26, 831K), said, "In all seriousness, the idea they thought there would be some type of major bombshell to come out of this is frankly embarrassing for the Democrats. I think that it is one of the dumbest and most ridiculous political moves that we've seen in history. How they have forced impeachment over this issue. The fact is I think this should be looked at as an in-kind contribution to the President's re-election campaign. Because all that is doing is helping fuel his campaign. They're raising more money. They're rallying his base and they're unifying the Republican party in a way that only they can by attacking this President the way they do time and time again. ... I think the big loser in all this process has to be Joe Biden."

David Brooks writes in the New York Times (9/26, 18.61M) that "at the end of this process Trump will probably be acquitted by the Senate. He will declare himself vindicated and victorious in his battle against The Swamp." Brooks adds "people will conclude that Democrats are going ahead with impeachment in an election year because they don't trust the democratic process to yield the right outcome. Democratic elites to voters: We don't trust you. Too many of you are racists!" Moreover, "this is not what the country wants to talk about. Pelosi said she would not proceed with impeachment unless there was a bipartisan groundswell of support. There is no bipartisan groundswell, and yet she's proceeding. According to a Quinnipiac University poll, only 37 percent of Americans support impeachment."

Trump Reportedly Raised Combined $8 Million At Two Fundraisers Wednesday And Thursday. Bloomberg (9/26, 4.73M) reports that Trump "spent the morning in New York, raising money for his re-election campaign." The fundraiser at Cipriani 42nd Street "was expected to raise $3 million for the Trump Victory fund, a joint account benefiting the president's campaign and the Republican National Committee." Bloomberg adds that on Wednesday, Trump "spoke at a fundraiser at the home of hedge fund billionaire John Paulson that was expected to raise $5 million."

Bannon: Impeachment Inquiry Launch "The Shot At Fort Sumter." The Washington Times (9/26, Blake, 492K) reports Stephen K. Bannon "compared the launch of an impeachment inquiry this week to the 'shot at Fort Sumter' that started the Civil War." In comments to the Washington Post published Wednesday, Bannon said, "We have a pre-5 o'clock presidency and a post-5 o'clock presidency. ... Pelosi's announcement to begin a formal process at 5 p.m. was the shot at Fort Sumter. Now you cannot freelance, you cannot go rogue. You have to be disciplined. You have to be high and tight."

Treasury Sanctions Firm For Allegedly Providing Jet Fuel To Russia In Syria.

Reuters (9/26) reports the US on Thursday "imposed sanctions on a firm it said was participating in a scheme to avoid U.S. sanctions while helping provide jet fuel to Russian forces in Syria." The Treasury Department said the sanctioned firm, Maritime Assistance LLC, was operating as a front company for OJSC Sovfracht, which had previously been sanctioned in relation to operations in Ukraine. Treasury also "targeted three individuals it said were tied to Sovfracht," and five ships were designated as "blocked property" of previously sanctioned Russian firm Transpetrochart, "which Washington alleges provides support to Sovfracht."

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the move is designed not only to disrupt fuel deliveries to Syria, but to highlight Russia's military support for the Syrian government.

AFP (9/26) reports Sigal Mandelker, Treasury's undersecretary for counterterrorism, said in a statement, "Assad's despotic regime is under an international spotlight for using chemical weapons and committing atrocities against innocent Syrian civilians and they rely on these types of illicit networks to stay in power."

Pompeo: Syrian Military Dropped Chlorine Gas On Rebels In Idlib In May. The AP (9/26) reports Secretary of State Mike Pompeo on Thursday said the Administration has "concluded that the Syrian government used chemical weapons in an attack in May." Speaking on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly on Thursday, Pompeo said US officials "determined that Syrian President Bashar Assad's government had used chlorine in the attack on opposition forces in Idlib province on May 19."

The New York Times (9/26, Jakes, 18.61M) reports "the May 19 rocket attack by the Syrian government near Latakia Province in northwest Syria wounded several civilians." It was "the latest instance in a long pattern of Assad's chemical weapons attacks that have killed or wounded thousands of Syrians," Pompeo said. The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Gordon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Pompeo said, "The United States will not allow these attacks to go unchallenged. Nor will we tolerate those who chose to conceal these atrocities." However, Pompeo didn't elaborate on what the US response could be.

Unipac Said To Replace Ship Charters After US Sanctions Against COSCO Tanker Units.

Reuters (9/26, Saul, Aizhu) reports China's Unipac has "made replacement bookings for four oil shipments from the Middle East Gulf after the United States imposed sanctions on the tanker subsidiaries of China's COSCO, three shipping sources said on Thursday." According to the sources, Unipac, the "trading arm of Asia's top oil refiner Sinopec, had switched to other tanker owners including China Merchants-owned AMCL after the designation by Washington on Wednesday of two of state-owned COSCO's subsidiaries." One of the sources "said Unipac could seek to book further cargoes from the Middle East Gulf using AMCL's tankers." The Treasury Department said on Wednesday "it was imposing sanctions on five Chinese nationals and six entities that it said had violated Washington's unilateral curbs on Iran."

Reuters (9/26) reports separately that Indian Oil Corp is "examining the impact of U.S. sanctions on its chartering of a crude carrier owned by a subsidiary of China's Cosco Shipping Corporation." IOC told the outlet, "The matter is being examined."

Bloomberg Business (9/26, 4.73M) reports dozens of ships are "now ensnared in the standoff between the U.S. and Iran." The announcements by the Treasury and State departments "left shipbrokers and charterers scrambling to cancel bookings with sanctioned companies and letting provisional charters lapse." The piece says "uncertainty still remains on whether cargoes that have already been loaded onto the vessels of sanctioned firms would be allowed to deliver, or whether they would have to transfer their loads to unsanctioned tankers." However, Bloomberg adds that "not all charterers are immediately responding to the U.S. move to sanction the COSCO subsidiary."

Bloomberg (9/26, 4.73M) also reports on the topic in a separate piece.

White House Has Signaled Support For Pot Banking Bill.

Politico (9/26, Becker, 4.29M) reports in continuing coverage that the House "rather easily passed the bipartisan pot banking bill, H.R. 1595 (116)" and Senate Banking Chairman Mike Crapo (R-ID) is "making noises as if he might follow suit." The piece notes the White House "has sent some good vibes on the cannabis bill, and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin has made it pretty clear, repeatedly, that the current federal system needs to be fixed in a variety of ways."

Saudi Crown Prince Denies Knowledge Of Khashoggi Murder Plot.

The Washington Post (9/26, Mellen, 14.2M) reports Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman said he gets "all the responsibility" for the killing of Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi, "but denied he had any prior knowledge of the plan to murder the journalist, according to a soon to air PBS Frontline documentary." In a trailer for the documentary set to air on Oct. 1, the Crown Prince is quoted as saying, "It happened under my watch. I get all the responsibility because it happened under my watch." Asked how the killing could happen without his knowledge, Crown Prince said, "We have 20 million people. We have 3 million government employees."

NPR (9/26, Booker, 3.12M) also reports, noting Treasury's OFAC "imposed sanctions on 17 Saudi nationals for their role in the killing of Jamal Khashoggi." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said at the time, "The United States continues to diligently work to ascertain all of the facts and will hold accountable each of those we find responsible in order to achieve justice for Khashoggi's fiancée, children, and the family he leaves behind." The piece notes the crown prince "was not one of the Saudi individuals sanctioned by the U.S."

Senators Introduce AML Reform Bill Requiring Disclosure Of True Owner.

American Banker (9/26, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "A bipartisan group of eight senators on Thursday formally introduced a bill to reform anti-money laundering laws that bankers and credit unions have argued are outdated." The bill "would require companies to disclose their true owners" to FinCEN at the time of incorporation. The introduction of the Illicit Cash Act in the Senate "comes after the House Financial Services Committee advanced a similar measure, known as the Corporate Transparency Act, out of committee in June." The Illicit Cash Act was initially supported by Sens. Mark Warner (D-VA), Doug Jones (D-AL), Tom Cotton (R-AR), and Mike Rounds (R-SD), and now has Sens. Bob Menendez (D-NJ), Catherine Cortez Masto (D-NV), John Kennedy (R-LA), and Jerry Moran (R-KS) as additional co-sponsors. Bloomberg Law (9/26, Subscription Publication, 4K) also reports.

Opinion: Jackson Should Remain On $20 Bill.

Under the headline, "Six Reasons To Leave Andrew Jackson On The $20 Bill," Philip Leigh writes in The Hill (9/26, 2.98M) that while the Treasury Department during the Obama Administration "recommended that President Andrew Jackson's portrait on the $20 bill be replaced with one of Harriet Tubman," he believes "Tubman's activities may merit recognition on another bill" but "she should not replace Jackson, whose contributions did far more to shape America's destiny."

Pence Urges Supporters In Indiana To Call On Elected Officials To Pass USMCA.

The Indianapolis Star (9/26, Burris, 633K) reports Vice President Pence visited his home state of Indiana on Thursday "to advocate for the passage of a new trade pact between the United States, Canada and Mexico." Pence addressed "a crowd that included more than 150 supporters and employees at MacAllister Machinery on the city's southeast side, asking them to call Democrats in the Indiana congressional delegation and urge them to pass the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement, which some have dubbed NAFTA 2.0." Pence said, "We've got to get the USMCA done and we've got to get it done this year. We need Congress to act – to act this fall to approve the USMCA. To make that happen, we need your help. Our elected representatives here in Indiana need to hear from all of you."

Kudlow Touts US-Japan Trade Deal.

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/26, 831K), NEC Director Kudlow said the US-Japan trade deal was "one of the best parts of this UN meeting," and credited USTR Lighthizer for securing it. Kudlow added, "By the way it covers agriculture. Our farmers would be able to finally shift stuff to Japan. That always has been a stumbling block. We'll make it easier for them to buy our industrial commodities and our industrial supplies. Probably the best part of it is, e-commerce. Digital trade. Digital services, which has been estimated to be as much as $50 billion. I think the whole package is $55, $56 billion. The digital services piece will be huge because America has as you know pretty strong technology operators. Japan has finally opened the door. It's very similar incidentally to the USMCA digital services, which is a huge breakthrough on there."

Cotton: Deal With Japan May Help Trump Negotiate With China. Appearing on CNBC's Squawk Box (9/26, 80K), Sen. Tom

Cotton (R-AR) said the trade deal announced by President Trump Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe “was a big win for Americans, and Arkansas in particular. We’re very excited about Japan finally lowering barriers on beef, pork and poultry. Also, I think the new US-Japan agreement could be a gold standard for digital goods, the transmission of videos, books, music, what have you, between our two nations. And I actually think the agreement will have the happy effect of putting us now in lockstep with Japan to try to get better trade terms with China. As we put more and more of these trade deals to bed, couple years ago with South Korea, now it’s Japan. Hopefully later this year it will be Mexico and Canada. That brings our focus more intensely on China, which really is the worst culprit in the international trading system.”

China Expected To Boost Purchases Of US Soybeans Next Month.

Citing an “influential Chinese agricultural consultant,” Bloomberg (9/26, 4.73M) reports that China is “likely to increase American soybean purchases during high-level trade talks in the U.S. in October.” Li Qiang, chairman of Shanghai JC Intelligence, says China, “the world’s biggest soybean importer is likely to buy another 1 million to 2 million tons when Vice Premier Liu He visits Washington,” and “if the talks are successful, China could boost shipments to between 30 million and 35 million tons next year.” Bloomberg says China has “already bought about 19 million tons of U.S. soy this year, so the extra purchases would mean the country exceeds its commitment to import about 20 million tons from the U.S.,” and “with the extra purchases, China will be able to meet its supply gap for the rest of the year and some of the 7 million tons in earlier purchases could be stored for state reserves.”

China Seen As Flirting With Using Yuan In Trade War.

Reuters (9/27, Yao, Sin) reports China, “having let the yuan cross the once sacred red line of 7 per dollar, will allow its currency to fall further and may even risk U.S. anger by using it as a bargaining chip in already thorny trade talks, market participants believe.” The piece notes China had “kept the yuan on the strong side of 7 since 2008, so effectively abandoning that trading floor on Aug 5 triggered intense investor activity.” The yuan’s 3.8% decline last month “as a whole was its sharpest monthly fall in 25 years,” and Reuters says that the PBOC’s “attempts this month to smooth the yuan’s weakening suggest the currency’s fluctuations are not entirely unsupervised.” However, the piece adds that “sources within policy circles – as well as financial analysts – do not expect Beijing to hem in the yuan in a defined range this time.”

Lumber Mills Cut Jobs Amid China Trade War.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Hufford, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports US exports of hardwood lumber to China have declined 40 percent this year after China imposed retaliatory tariffs of up to 25 percent on imports of wood products. In response to lower demand and falling prices, lumber mills are cutting jobs and seeking federal assistance.

Reuters Analysis: Downturn In Business Investment Blamed On Trump’s Trade Policies.

Reuters (9/26, Mutikani) reports that according to new data from the Commerce Department, “U.S. business investment contracted more sharply than previously estimated in the second quarter and corporate profit growth was tepid, casting a shadow on an economy that is being stalked by financial market fears of a recession.” According to Reuters, “The downturn in business spending has been blamed on the Trump administration’s nearly 15-month trade war with China.” Reuters adds that last week, Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell said the trade war is “weighing on U.S. investment and exports,” and “discouraged [companies] from investing in their businesses.”

Income Inequality Widens To Highest Level In Decades.

The Washington Post (9/26, Telford, 14.2M) reports, “Last year, income inequality in the United States reached its highest level since the Census Bureau started tracking it in 1967, according to federal data released Thursday.” The gap is “starkest in wealthy coastal areas such as Washington, D.C., New York, Connecticut and California, as well as in areas with widespread poverty, such as Puerto Rico and Louisiana. Equality was highest in Utah, Alaska and Iowa.” Though the gulf “between the richest and poorest expanded, the nation’s median household income topped $63,000 for the first time – though after adjusting for inflation, it’s roughly the same as it was 20 years ago.”

IPO Market Shows Signs Of Cooling As Peloton Falls, Endeavor Cuts Range.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, A1, Prang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that signs of weakness in the market for initial public offerings showed on Thursday, as shares of Peloton Interactive fell on their first day of trading and Endeavor Group Holdings scaled back its planned IPO. Shares of Peloton started trading almost seven percent lower than the $29 price set in the company’s IPO, and it closed down 11.2 percent. Meanwhile, Endeavor lowered its expected IPO range to $26-$27 a share and cut the number of shares it is offering to 15 million.

New York Prosecutors Agree To Delay Enforcement Of Subpoena For Trump Tax Returns.

Reuters (9/26, Pierson) reports, “New York prosecutors have agreed to put on hold their bid to enforce their subpoena” seeking President Trump’s tax returns, according to a court filing on Thursday. The New York Post (9/26, Saul, 4.57M) reports “the agreement states that the parties will wait ‘until 1 p.m. two business days after the Court rules on the pending motions to dismiss and for injunctive relief, or until 1 p.m. on Monday, October 7, 2019, whichever is sooner.’” The Washington Times (9/26, Vogt, 492K) reports Judge Victor Marrero also “gave the Department of Justice until Monday to decide whether they will weigh in on the case."

Wells Fargo Interim CEO Seen As Likely To Keep Job.

The Financial Times (9/26, Armstrong, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports investors believe Wells Fargo interim CEO Allen Parker is increasingly likely to keep the role permanently, given how difficult filling the post has proven to be.

Whistleblower Says White House Tried To "Lock Down" Information About Call.

All three broadcast networks opened their Thursday evening newscasts with coverage of what David Muir on ABC World News Tonight (9/26, lead story, 5:30, 6.8M) called "the whistleblower's complaint at the center of the storm in Washington, the center of this new impeachment inquiry involving President Trump. That complaint now made public tonight, and what it alleges, saying some White House officials tried to cover up the call with the President of Ukraine, trying to conceal the transcript of the call on a separate, highly secure computer system." Muir said Acting DNI Maguire "was in the hot seat" Thursday, "asked why he held onto that complaint for so long. ... He defended his decision today, but he also acknowledged something else: He said the whistleblower did the right thing."

On the CBS Evening News (9/26, lead story, 4:55, 4.55M), Norah O'Donnell called it "an explosive allegation by a government whistleblower that the White House engaged in a cover-up by stashing records of the President's phone call with a foreign leader into a top-secret computer. And in that phone call, President Trump repeatedly urged Ukraine's new President to investigate Joe Biden and his son. According to the complaint, multiple Administration officials told the whistleblower of their concerns." On NBC Nightly News (9/26, lead story, 4:00, Holt, 5.53M), Peter Alexander reported, "In the nine-page complaint, the whistleblower makes a series of bombshell allegations, writing, 'I have received information from multiple US government officials that the President of the United States is using the power of his office to solicit interference from a foreign country in the 2020 US election,' including 'pressuring a foreign country to investigate one of the President's main domestic political rivals.'"

Pamela Brown said on CNN (9/26, 1:11 p.m. ET, Keilar, 637K), "The big point here is there wasn't classified information in the transcript, but it was politically damaging, as we now know, to the President. So the fact that, according to this complaint, White House lawyers reviewed the transcript and thought, 'Well, this is going to make the President look bad,' and then put it in this secured classified system, certainly raises questions and sounds the alarm bells on this."

The AP (9/27, Tucker, Jalonick) reports the "politically explosive complaint" says "White House officials took extraordinary steps to 'lock down' information about [Trump's] summertime phone call with the president of Ukraine, even moving the transcript to a secret computer system." USA Today (9/26, Subramanian, Brook, 10.31M) reports the "bombshell" complaint "alleges White House officials were 'directed' to remove electronic records of the phone conversation from an internal computer system where the material is typically stored."

The Washington Post (9/26, Barrett, Leonnig, 14.2M) reports that the whistleblower alleges that the phone call between Trump and Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky "turned so politically problematic that White House lawyers directed other officials to remove the electronic transcript of the conversation from the computer system where it was stored." The Post adds, "The transcript, the whistleblower alleged, was then loaded onto a separate system meant for classified information. And according to White House officials who informed the whistleblower, that was 'not the first time' a transcript was put there due to concerns about politics rather than national security."

The New York Times (9/26, A1, Baker, 18.61M) reports under the headline "In Ukraine Phone Call, Alarmed Aides Saw Trouble" that soon after the end of Trump's call with Zelensky, "the red flags began to go up" inside the White House. The "alarm among officials who heard the exchange led to an extraordinary effort to keep too many more people from learning about it." Politico (9/26, Cheney, 4.29M) reports the complaint "describes concerns among White House officials that Trump pressured Zelensky to investigate Biden – and that the call was the culmination of a series of events meant to pressure the new Ukrainian president to bend to Trump's will."

The New York Times (9/26, A1, Shear, 18.61M) says in a second report that the complaint "added details to what a reconstructed transcript of the call revealed about the interaction between the two leaders, asserting that government officials, including some at the White House, believed Mr. Trump had abused his power for personal political gain." The President "lashed out, denouncing the whistle-blower and the people who provided him information as treasonous spies and darkly hinting that they should suffer the same punishment the United States 'used to do in the old days when we were smart with spies and treason, right?'" Former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe said on CNN (9/26, 1:55 p.m. ET, Keilar, 635K), "The President is doing exactly what government officials are not supposed to do. He's clearly targeting the person who's filed this complaint that affects him seriously and is kind of laying the marker down that he wants this person's identity and he wants to be able to follow up on this."

Former DNI James Clapper said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/26, 8:55 p.m. ET, Cooper, 757K), "By far, it was the most well-written, well-referenced, well-constructed and most compelling whistleblower complaint I ever saw during my 6 1/2 years as the DNI. It was very well done. It was written at the same quality level as a National Intelligence Estimate, which is kind of the apex of intelligence products, and was written much in the same style as a seasoned, mature, competent intelligence analyst would write. It was very well done."

The Washington Post (9/26, 14.2M) says in an editorial that "the whistleblower complaint released on Thursday adds vital – and damning – context to the rough transcript" of the Trump-Zelensky call. The "carefully constructed complaint shows that this coercion was not limited to one phone call but consisted of a series of acts over time," and "reports that White House officials understood Mr. Trump's behavior to be improper and tried to conceal the wrongdoing. ... Trump's abuse of power had a host of enablers. Congress should hold them all to account."

Fred Fleitz of the Center for Security Policy, a former CIA official, writes in the New York Post (9/26, Fleitz, 4.57M), "The whistleblower makes clear in his complaint that he did not listen to a call in question, nor did he read the transcript – he was told about the call by others. If true, intelligence officers have grossly violated the rules as well as the trust placed on them to protect this sensitive information."

Anderson Cooper said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/26, 8:00 p.m. ET, 756K), "If the allegations of a whistleblower are true, the country is now in a place it has not seen since Watergate. That's how consequential, how historic this day has been, and that's how serious the allegations are in the formal complaint made public today. We should say again at this point they are only allegations, but they certainly paint a damning picture of a President abusing a power of his office for personal gain and abusing it once more to cover it up, allegedly misusing the system designed to guard the country's most sensitive secrets to instead conceal evidence of wrongdoing."

John Dean said on CNN's The Lead (9/26, 3:48 p.m. ET, Tapper, 738K), "I think there is very much a cancer growing on this presidency. There's a malignancy that has spread, that is spreading. We have a President who doesn't seem to even care if this is happening. He has broken every norm that we know of, that are the traditional guardrails for the presidency. He just doesn't seem to care about tradition. I don't think he has any knowledge of the presidency. He has no historical background. So he just plows ahead as if he were still in the real estate business and doing deals with people that he is not really in a position to do those kind of deals today. He has laws he has to obey. He has a Constitution he operates under."

Chris Hayes said on MSNBC's All In (9/26, 8:00 p.m. ET, 1.3M), "We're only three days into this rapidly exploding scandal, but here is what is already clear: The White House knew what President Trump did on his phone call with the Ukrainian President was wrong. They desperately tried to cover it up, and then they got caught. That's it. That's the key sequence of events captured both in the whistleblower complaint released today, in the notes of the call released yesterday, and all the reporting we have seen on this point."

Reuters (9/26, Zengerle, Morgan, Chiacu), Bloomberg (9/26, Sink, 4.73M), and the Washington Examiner (9/26, Chaitin, 448K) also cover the "lock down" allegation.

Pelosi: "This Is A Cover-Up." The AP (9/26) reports that House Speaker Pelosi "read from the declassified complaint, which alleges the White House tried to 'lock down' details of Trump's call with Ukraine's new president after he asked him to investigate Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden. 'This is a cover-up,' she said." Politico (9/26, Ferris, Caygle, 4.29M) reports Pelosi "said Trump's alleged efforts to seek political help from Ukrainian leaders and later bury key documents 'betrayed his oath of office' and threatened national security and elections, hours after the damning complaint was made public Thursday morning. 'We are at a different level of lawlessness that is self-evident to the American people,' Pelosi said."

Reuters (9/26, Cornwell) reports Pelosi "told reporters that a House of Representatives impeachment inquiry launched this week would focus narrowly on the Ukraine episode and that other instances in which the Republican Trump may have abused the power of his office would be considered later." USA Today (9/26, Groppe, Hayes, 10.31M) reports Pelosi said the impeachment inquiry "will proceed under the auspices of the Intelligence Committee, which is 'where this matter is relevant.'" The Los Angeles Times (9/26, Stokols, 4.64M) also covers Pelosi's remarks.

Democrats Criticize Handling Of Whistleblower Complaint. Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) said on CNN (9/26, 1:26 p.m. ET, Keilar, 637K), "This President is showing us who he is. He's got this ruthless recklessness with which the way he speaks that's not only vicious and cruel, but, frankly, it is violative of the standards within our society, within our nation, the decency that should come from the highest office in the land. And he is just continually making it worse for himself the more he opens his mouth. ... We know from the Iran-contra scandal all the way to Richard Nixon's scandals that the cover-up is often crimes within themselves. And so now we have a lot to unravel. There is a lot of dense, dense smoke that indicates to me a blazing inferno, potentially."

Rep. Jason Crow (D-CO) said on CNN's The Lead (9/26, 3:26 p.m. ET, Tapper, 710K), "I was very disturbed last week when these allegations first came to light. Yesterday, when we read the rough notes from the call, I was even more disturbed, and then yet again more shocked today, as not only are there corroborating witnesses, apparently, but this seems to be a broader issue involving potentially the attorney general, Mr. Giuliani, meetings in Madrid between folks at the highest levels in Ukraine."

Rep. Denny Heck (D-WA) said on CNN's OutFront (9/26, 7:08 p.m. ET, Burnett, 750K), "I consider it a crime to solicit a foreign country's interference in our election, and I think the whistleblower complaint indicated that that was what was happening, and the official record of the telephone conversation fairly confirms it. So I do think a crime has been committed."

Rep. Conor Lamb (D-PA) said on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (9/26, 9:36 p.m. ET, Cuomo, 830K), "I think there are a lot of questions raised by this whistleblower complaint. ... The whistleblower talks about speaking to other people in the White House about this separate server, about Giuliani and his role in all this and how it could have affected our policy in Ukraine. And I think I and the American people want answers to all those questions. But this is clearly we're in a different place today than we were last week because of these allegations, and I think that's going to ramp up the urgency behind this investigation a lot, and I support that."

Rep. Tom Malinowski (D-NJ) said on CNN's OutFront (9/26, 7:46 p.m. ET, Burnett, 711K), "We have thousands of troops in Europe who are there in part to deter Russian aggression against Ukraine and Europe. Russian aggression, attacks that are going on right now, and that aid included Javelin missiles which are anti-tank weapons designed to make sure that those Russian tanks cannot invade Ukraine and put our own troops ultimately in jeopardy, and Trump decided for reasons that are otherwise inexplicable to stop that assistance."

Rep. Sean Patrick Maloney (D-NY) said on MSNBC's Hardball (9/26, 7:20 p.m. ET, Matthews, 1.11M), "What it is is presidential extortion and an ongoing cover-up. How come the President didn't know or didn't care? This is the day after he got past Mueller's testimony, and did he think, 'Oh, now that I got rid of that, now I'm done with that, get dirt for another country,' and goes, 'I didn't get caught getting it from Russia'?"

Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-MI) said on CNN (9/26, 1:48 p.m. ET, Keilar, 635K), "I was pretty reticent to jump into anything related to impeachment. I think it's a huge deal and a somber deal for the country. But when I started to learn about this deal with Ukraine and the idea that the President acknowledged [that he] called that president and asked for dirt on an opponent in an American election, that, for me, just crossed a threshold in its seriousness. As national security professional – I'm a former CIA officer and Pentagon official – it just went right to the heart of everything I feel I've been fighting for and swore an oath to do."

Robbins: Trump Critics "Cherry-Picked" Transcript. James Robbins writes in his USA Today (9/26, Robbins, 10.31M) column, "Trump's critics have cherry-picked [the transcript] to highlight the Biden content and twisted it out of context to make the case that the phone call was a criminal shakedown. But it was nothing of the sort." Trump and Zelensky "obviously admire each other. And like Trump, Zelensky is a reformer. ... The Democratic story line is invalid on its face."

Maguire Defends Keeping Report Secret, But Says Whistleblower Acted Properly.

On ABC World News Tonight (9/26, lead story, 5:30, 6.8M), Mary Bruce reported Acting DNI Maguire was "grilled" Thursday about why he "kept the whistleblower's report under wraps for weeks, going first to the White House instead of Congress. Today, he defended that decision. But when pressed, he also defended the whistleblower." Maguire: "I think the whistleblower did the right thing. I think he followed the law every step of the way." House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff: "You don't have any reason to accuse them of disloyalty to our country or suggestion they're beholden to some other country?" Maguire: "Sir, absolutely not."

Nancy Cordes reported on the CBS Evening News (9/26, lead story, 4:55, 4.55M) that Maguire "told Congress the allegations are unprecedented. The pressing questions tonight: Who ordered the phone records to be hidden, and why?" Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA): "The allegation was determined to be urgent and credible by the Inspector General. Is that right?" Maguire: "Yes, it was." Swalwell: "And if there's cover-up activity because the President is working improperly with a foreign government, that could compromise America's secrets. Is that right?" Maguire: "Congressman, there is an allegation of a cover-up."

The Washington Post (9/25, Harris, Demirjian, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports that Maguire told the committee "over three hours of testimony that he consulted about the complaint with officials at the Justice Department and the White House, but was not able to turn over the document until it was resolved whether it contained material protected by executive privilege." The New York Times (9/26, Barnes, Goldman, 18.61M) reports that "senior intelligence officials" described Maguire "as reeling from accusations that he broke the law by keeping the complaint from Congress," and "now finds himself trying to protect his reputation. ... He faced his most public test yet on Thursday when he testified before lawmakers about his refusal to hand over the complaint."

Politico (9/26, Desiderio, Cheney, 4.29M), however, says Maguire "dodged questions about whether he spoke with Trump about the complaint, frustrating lawmakers who sought clarity on why he initially withheld the complaint from Congress." According to Politico, Maguire said "he consulted with the White House counsel's office after the intelligence community's inspector general informed him of an 'urgent' whistleblower complaint involving the president." Politico says that "stunned the panel's Democrats, who grilled Maguire over the Trump administration's argument that the complaint did not fit the legal definition of 'urgent' because Trump is not an employee of the intelligence community." The Washington Times (9/26, Mordock, 492K) reports Maguire "evaded Democrats' questions over whether he discussed a bombshell whistleblower complaint" with the President.

The Daily Caller (9/26, 716K) reports Rep. Chris Stewart (R-UT) "balked" when Schiff "claimed that no one had accused [Maguire] of anything." At the end of his questioning time, Stewart said, "Good luck convincing the American people that this is a dishonorable man sitting here. Good luck convincing the American people that he has done anything. If you think it will score you points, keep going down that road." Schiff "jumped in to offer clarification, adding, 'I would only say, Director, no one has accused you of being a political stooge or dishonorable...'" Stewart replied, "You accused him of breaking the law, Mr. Chairman."

Pence: Democrats Making "Baseless Allegations."

Breitbart (9/26, Wong, 673K) reports "Vice President Mike Pence during a speech Thursday in Indiana slammed Democrats making 'baseless accusations' against President Trump and trying to overturn the 2016 election." Said Pence, "Today we see many Democrats who spent the last two and a half years on baseless accusations and they keep trying to overturn the will of the American people in the last presidential election. ... I'm here to make you a promise: Whatever the Democrats and their allies want to spend their time on, President Donald Trump and I are going to stay focused on the issues that matter most to you – a strong national defense, secure borders, safe streets, and jobs, jobs, jobs. And that's exactly what we've been doing."

Giuliani: "When This Is Over, I Will Be The Hero."

The Atlantic (9/26, Plott, 3.47M) reports that in an interview, Rudy Giuliani said yesterday, "It is impossible that the whistle-blower is a hero and I'm not. And I will be the hero! These morons – when this is over, I will be the hero." Giuliani added, "I'm not acting as a lawyer. I'm acting as someone who has devoted most of his life to straightening out government. ... Anything I did should be praised." The Atlantic adds Giuliani then "unleashed a rant about the Bidens, Hillary Clinton, the Clinton Foundation, Barack Obama, the media, and the 'deep state.'" Axios (9/26, Perano, 521K) also reports Giuliani "doubled down on his claim that allegations against the Bidens are true, adding that the reason his involvement in the complaint is taking precedent in the news is because “the press idolizes Joe Biden and despises Donald Trump.” The Washington Examiner (9/26, Halaschak, 448K) indicates The Atlantic described Giuliani as “very angry,” and the Washington Times (9/26, A1, Boyer, 492K) that “Trump’s use of...his personal attorney...for investigations in Ukraine has infuriated Democrats pushing impeachment.”

The Washington Post (9/26, Sonne, Birnbaum, Helderman, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports “Giuliani decried any scrutiny of his conduct in a long interview Thursday, saying that more attention was finally being paid to the Biden family.” Said Giuliani, “These crooks can go after me all they want. ... They’re not going to find anything.” Giuliani also “said that, in his capacity as Trump’s personal lawyer, he had met with five current and former Ukrainian prosecutors since last year. During those meetings, he said, he obtained information about Hunter Biden and what the former New York mayor has alleged was collusion between Democrats and Ukraine in the 2016 election.” The Wall Street Journal (9/26, A1, Ballhaus, Cullison, Kantchev, Forrest, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also surveys Giuliani’s role in the story in a front-page story titled “Giuliani Sits At The Center Of The Ukraine Controversy.”

On ABC World News Tonight (9/26, story 4, 1:50, Muir, 6.8M), meanwhile, Martha Raddatz reported “the whistleblower says State Department officials, including two ambassadors, had spoken with Giuliani in an attempt to ‘contain damage to US national security’ and that those officials met with the new Ukrainian administration to ‘help Ukrainian leaders understand differing messages they were receiving from official US channels on the one hand and from Mr. Giuliani on the other.’”

The CBS Evening News (9/26, story 4, 2:45, Reid, 4.55M) said “the whistleblower singles out...Giuliani as a central figure in the scandal,” as he “is mentioned 30 times in the complaint, which cites meetings he had with at least seven Ukrainian officials.” The whistleblower, however, “didn’t include a lot of details about [Attorney General] Barr in the complaint,” but “we know Barr played a key role in preventing these allegations from getting to Congress. So this once again raises new questions about whether the Attorney General is acting as the President’s defender or the nation’s top law enforcement official.”

The AP (9/26) reports that Barr “has sought to distance himself from Trump’s conversations with” Zelenskiy, and the Justice Department “insists he was unaware the president had said he would help investigate a political rival.” According to the AP, “In the call, Trump seemingly equates Barr with Giuliani, who has no role in the administration and, in rambling television appearances, is one of Trump’s most vocal defenders.”

Pompeo Defends State Department’s Actions. Reuters (9/26) reports that Secretary of State Pompeo said yesterday “he had not yet fully read the whistleblower complaint...but that he believed the State Department had acted appropriately.” Pompeo said, “To the best of my knowledge and from what I have seen so far, each of the actions that were undertaken by State Department officials was entirely appropriate.” According to Reuters, the complaint “references State Department officials and ambassadors, some by name.” The AP (9/26) reports that Pompeo “did not address claims from...Giuliani...that the State Department instructed him to reach out to Ukrainian officials.”

NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 3, 1:40, Welker, 5.53M) it received a text message from Giuliani, who “says it’s the State Department’s Special Envoy to Ukraine, Kurt Volker, who had reached out to him. ‘As discussed, connecting you here with Andrey Yermak, who is very close to President Zelenskiy, I suggest we schedule a call together.’ The State Department has acknowledged Volker put Giuliani in touch with the top Ukrainian aide, but a spokesperson says Giuliani ‘does not speak on behalf of the US government.’”

Harris Calls For State IG Probe Of Giuliani. The Washington Examiner (9/26, Chaitin, 448K) reports, “Sen. Kamala Harris demanded the State Department inspector general open an investigation into efforts by...Giuliani to urge Ukraine to investigate matters that could be politically beneficial to Trump.”

Giuliani To Launch Podcast. Page Six (9/26, 1.6M) reports on Giuliani’s presence at the Grand Havana Room cigar bar, where according to “a witness,” he held “court with a big crew. Huge smile on his face, laughing. You could literally see CNN and Fox News on the TVs behind him as everything was unfolding.” This “source” told Page Six, “He was announcing to everyone he is launching a new podcast! He was shouting it to the world.” Page Six adds “Rudy is a regular at the members-only cigar bar, and a member of its board.”

Florida Businessmen From Ex-Soviet Union Allegedly Guided Giuliani’s Entrance Into Ukraine Affairs. The Miami Herald (9/26, Nehamas, Hall, Riski, Wieder, 1.09M) reports, “Two South Florida businessmen from the former Soviet Union could find themselves dragged into” an impeachment inquiry targeting Trump “over their political activities in Ukraine. Lev Parnas and Igor Fruman were cited – although not by name – in a government whistleblower complaint released Thursday.” They allegedly “helped introduce...Giuliani...into top Ukrainian political circles, according to widespread media accounts.”

Bernstein: “Sources” Say Barr Preparing “Proof” Of “Deep State Conspiracy.”

The Washington Examiner (9/26, Chaitin, 448K) reports, “Veteran investigative journalist Carl Bernstein said his sources are telling him that Attorney General William Barr is preparing to push a ‘deep state’ conspiracy to protect President Trump.” Appearing on CNN, “the famed Watergate sleuth...said Barr is trying to ‘bring about proof that there is a deep state conspiracy that led to’ special counsel Robert Mueller’s Russia investigation and suggested that this is a story other journalists are chasing.” The Examiner adds “Bernstein appeared to be referencing the Justice Department’s review of the origins of the Russia investigation being led by U.S. Attorney John Durham, examining whether there was any misconduct by Justice Department and FBI officials.”

Bernstein said on CNN (9/26, 2:19 p.m. ET, Baldwin, 696K), “We are seeing both in real time, with the President’s remarks and also through documentary evidence, his corruption. We’re watching, too, an unraveling in front of us, both factually and also temperamentally, in terms of the conduct of the President of the United States. And why? Well, partly because the President of the United States recognizes that there is in this whistleblower’s documents terrible evidence of the President’s corruption.” Bernstein said Attorney General Barr is trying to "bring about proof that there is a deep state conspiracy that led to [the Russia investigation]. ... Barr is trying to deliver – and I have this, as do other reporters from other sources – to deliver evidence that perhaps this has all been a deep state conspiracy just like Donald Trump alleges."

Jordan: Whistleblower's Complaint Is Part Of Ongoing Effort By Intel Community To Oust Trump. On Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/26, 831K), Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) said, "The key is for us all to step back and remember what this is. Go back to 2016. This FBI was so out to get the President, they spied on two American citizens associated with the presidential campaign." Jordan continued, "We should never forget what Chuck Schumer...previewed all of this back on January 23rd, 2017" when he said, "'President-elect trump. If you mess with the intelligence community, they have six ways from Sunday of getting back at you.'" According to Jordan, "We saw it in 2016 with what the FBI did. I think we are seeing it now with this whistleblower. ... That's the context we're in. ... These guys are not going to stop. It doesn't matter about facts or truth."

Whistleblower's Complaint Relies On Report By Soros Group, BuzzFeed. Breitbart (9/26, Klein, 673K) reports, "Sections of a so-called whistleblower's complaint alleging...Trump was 'using the power of his office to solicit interference from a foreign country' in the 2020 presidential race relies upon a self-described investigative journalism organization bankrolled massively by billionaire activist George Soros" in partnership with BuzzFeed. Breitbart adds that "one key section of the so-called whistleblower's document claims that 'multiple US officials told me that Mr. Giuliani had reportedly privately reached out to a variety of other Zelensky advisers, including Chief of Staff Andriy Bohdan and Acting Chairman of the Security Service of Ukraine Ivan Bakanov.'" While "the statement was written in first person – 'multiple U.S. officials told me' – it contains a footnote referencing a report by the Organized Crime and Corruption Reporting Project (OCCRP)." Breitbart adds "the so-called whistleblower's account goes on to rely upon that same OCCRP report on three more occasions."

Contrary To Whistleblower's Complaint, Brechbuhl Was Not On Trump-Zelensky Call.

Christina Ruffini of CBS News tweeted, "Scoop: Senior Govt Official tells @CBSNews Counselor to the State Department Ulrich Brechbuhl was NOT on the @POTUS call with #Zelensky, as the whistle blower complaint states."

Schiff Appeared To Fabricate Quotes Out Of Trump-Zelensky Call During Thursday Hearing.

In a story widely covered by conservative media, the Daily Caller (9/26, 716K) reports that in his opening statement yesterday, House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff (D-CA) "read a portion of a transcript of a telephone conversation between President Donald Trump and his Ukrainian counterpart Thursday...but the congressman largely fabricated the president's words." Schiff "claimed he was reading 'the essence' of the president's words to the committee's witness, Acting Director of National Intelligence, Joseph Maguire." Schiff is quoted as saying, "This is the essence of what the president communicates. We've been very good to your country, very good, no other country has done as much as we have, but you know what, I don't see much reciprocity here. I hear what you want. I have a favor I want from you, though. And I'm going to say this only seven times, so you better listen good." The Daily Caller says Schiff "continued, making it up as he went along," saying, "I want you to make up dirt on my political opponent, understand, lots of it, on this and on that." The Washington Times (9/26, Scarborough, 492K) says Schiff "acknowledged...that he made up parts of the Ukraine phone call transcript when he delivered his opening statement at a much-watched TV hearing with the US top intelligence officer," arguing "his reading was 'part in parody.'" The Times adds he "made the admission only after Rep. Mike Turner, Ohio Republican, called him out." Turner "noted [the] inaccuracies uttered to a large TV audience as Democrats rev up talk of impeachment."

Townhall (9/26, Vespa, 177K), in a piece headlined "Impeachment Circus: Adam Schiff Kicks Off Intelligence Hearing By Making Up Parts Of The Trump-Ukraine Transcript," also "notes Schiff later said this remark was done as a 'parody.' Yeah, whatever you say, sir." The Daily Caller (9/26, 716K) reports that Rep. Brad Wenstrup (R-OH) also "fired back at" Schiff "over his fabricated account." Wenstrup said, "It's a shame that we started off this hearing with fictional remarks. The implication of a conversation that took place between a president and a foreign leader putting words into it that did not exist. They were not in the transcript. ... And I would contend that they were intentionally not clear and the chairman described it as parody and I don't believe this is the time or the place for parody when we are seeking facts."

The Washington Free Beacon (9/26, Rowan, 78K) also reports the story under the headline "Schiff Rewrites Trump's Conversation With Zelensky," while the Washington Examiner (9/26, Rives, 448K) titles its story "Adam Schiff And Democrats Are Twisting Words To Smear Trump." Asks the Examiner, "So why the manipulation? Because the Democrats know their case is weak."

Trey Gowdy said on Fox News' The Story (9/26, 7:21 p.m. ET, McCallum), "You've got to keep in mind, this is the same Schiff that said he had evidence of collusion. He's not making that mistake this time, he's not claiming he's got something he doesn't have, he's just going to make it up and he made it up on national television."

Nunes Recalls Schiff's Efforts To Get Naked Trump Pictures From Ukraine Official. The Washington Times (9/26, Scarborough, 492K) reports "Rep. Devin Nunes took a jab at...Schiff on Thursday by bringing up the time the Democrat thought he was talking to a Ukraine official who could get him Moscow-provided photos of a naked Trump." The Times also reports "the 2017 phone call was a prank by Russian comedians Vladmire Kyzetsov and Alexei Stolyarov who convinced to Mr. Schiff...they could obtain the damning photos." Schiff "thought he was speaking with the chairman of the Ukraine parliament," and said, "I would caution that our Russian friends may be listening to the conversation. ... I'll be in touch with the FBI about this. And we'll make arrangements with your staff. I think it probably would be best to provide these materials both to our committee and to the FBI."

Nunes said on Fox News' Hannity (9/26, 9:32 p.m. ET, Hannity, 1.42M), "The bottom line is this was a sad day for America. You are seeing the destruction of one of America's finest institutions, the US Congress. ... It doesn't make me proud to be in there today, it was really miserable for us to sit there and watch the other side actually fabricate statements that they assigned to the United States President. This is unhinged, and it needs to stop. We look forward to this whole whistleblower coming in to testify, this is going to be interesting as we start to get to the bottom of it, and peel back the onion and I think what you're going to find, it's going to be the same people that were behind the Russia hoax are behind the Ukrainian hoax."

Key Source Denies "Bombshell" ABC Story About Trump-Zelensky Call.

Under the headline "ABC's Bombshell Ukraine Story Falls Apart," the Washington Free Beacon (9/26, 78K) reports "an ABC News report that an adviser to the Ukrainian president said any communication with President Donald Trump had to include discussion of former vice president Joe Biden, published Wednesday night, fell apart within hours." ABC "credited its scoop to Serhiy Leshchenko, a former member of Ukraine's parliament and former adviser to Ukrainian president Volodymyr Zelensky." However, "Leshchenko now disputes the story, denying he told ABC News that discussion of a potential probe into the Biden family's business activity in the country was a precondition for communication with Trump." Leshchenko "rejected the ABC story just hours after it was published, telling Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty's Christopher Miller that he 'DID NOT tell ABC insistence for leaders to discuss Biden probe was precondition for call.'" Leshchenko also "spoke to BBC's Jonah Fisher, who added that the former Ukrainian official learned of 'quid pro quo' rumors 'only from media reports.'" Christopher Miller, a correspondent covering Ukraine, Russia, Belarus for RFERL and a contributor to Politico Europe, The Times and The Atlantic, wrote on Twitter, "Setting record straight: @Leshchenkos confirmed to me what those of us in Kyiv already knew—he is NOT currently an advisor to Ukraine's Zelenskiy & wasn't at time of July 25 call. He said he DID NOT tell ABC insistence for leaders to discuss Biden probe was precondition for call."

ABC News ran the story yesterday the morning on ABC's Good Morning America (9/26, 3.58M), but not on ABC World News Tonight. Conservative News Outlets Bemoan "Blatant Media Lies" About "Non Scandal." Under the headline "Blatant Media Lies About Trump-Ukraine Non-Scandal Are Never-Ending," the Federalist (9/26, Clark, 126K) reports "the entire news cycle this week has revolved around one thing: President Trump's phone call with the president of Ukraine. The problem is, this story sounds all too familiar." The media "propped up a story about Trump-Russia collusion and prolonged a false narrative over the course of three years," but "the 'story' ended with the Mueller report, which proved absolutely no collusion." And "now the mainstream media is running with a new narrative." The Federalist mentions several examples of what it casts as false reporting. Among them, a Washington Post article that read, "Acting director of national intelligence threatened to resign if he couldn't speak freely before Congress on whistleblower complaint." Then, "in the next paragraph, Maguire denies ever having said that."

Under the headline "Dishonesty: Exposing The Media's Utterly Misleading Ukrainian 'Quid Pro Quo' Hype," Guy Benson writes for Townhall (9/26, Benson, 177K) that "far too often, the press has covered the Trump presidency in a foolishly sloppy, agenda-driven, and unprofessionally hostile manner. They've blown big stories, rushed headlong into reckless and embarrassing speculation, and shaded facts to paint Trump and his administration in the worst possible light." While Benson believes Trump "has engaged in seriously problematic conduct vis-a-vis Ukraine," through "a bit of journalistic sleight of hand, too many allegedly unbiased reporters have been presenting deeply misleading 'proof' of a fairly direct quid pro quo to their audiences."

NYTimes Analysis: "Pro-Trump Media" Manipulating Ukraine Story. Citing comments by Mark Levin, Rush Limbaugh and Michael Savage, the New York Times (9/26, Peters, 18.61M) reports "the pro-Trump media has wasted no time constructing their own version of events about Ukraine," one that "omits key facts." However, "the potential political benefit [for Trump] is significant," as "Mr. Limbaugh, Mr. Levin and Sean Hannity have a combined weekly radio audience of nearly 42 million listeners," and "combined with the programming on Fox News and stories from Trump-friendly outlets like Rasmussen Reports, which publishes a daily tracking poll of the president's approval ratings that is typically several percentage points higher than other surveys, the conservative media is wrapping Mr. Trump and his supporters in a security blanket of their own facts, data points and story lines about the Ukraine controversy." The Times adds that "in the world of conservative media, Mr. Trump is a popular, unbeatable figure."

At the end of its broadcast, NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 11, 0:45, Holt, 5.53M) reported, "We're once again witnessing history," and "if history is any guide, this will only get uglier and louder and, yes, further lead to this country's political divide, which makes our challenge more important to listen, to ask, to examine the facts and demand nothing short of the truth. That's what we endeavor to do here every night and will continue to do as the story unfolds."

Vanity Fair: Fox News Shaken By Ukraine Scandal, Hannity Called Allegations "Really Bad." Vanity Fair (9/26, Hamby, 9.08M) reports, "In public, Donald Trump's allies are putting on a brave face, repeating talking points...but in private, there are few who believe that the allegations leveled by an intelligence agency whistle-blower that Trump abused American foreign policy to leverage Ukraine into investigating Joe Biden won't result in considerable damage – if not the complete unraveling of his presidency." The President's "final bulwark is liable to be his first one: Fox News." But "even before the whistle-blower's revelations, Fox was having something of a Trump identity crisis, and that bulwark has been wavering." On Thursday morning, "Sean Hannity told friends the whistle-blower's allegations are 'really bad,' a person briefed on Hannity's conversations" said, and while Fox "has often taken a nothing-to-see-here approach to Trump scandals...impeachment is a different animal." A "Fox staffer" said, "It's management bedlam. This massive thing happened, and no one knows how to cover it."

Morning Consult/Politico, NPR/PBS/Marist Polls Show Rising Support For Impeachment.

Axios (9/26, Perano, 521K) reports, "Public support for impeaching President Trump rose this week after Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) announced that the House would open a formal impeachment inquiry, according to polls from Morning Consult/Politico and NPR/PBS NewsHour/Marist." Axios adds "the lack of public support for impeaching Trump has long been cited by Democratic leadership as the main reason not to open an inquiry," but "the polls show a significant shift in public opinion this week." In the Morning Consult/Politico poll, "43% support impeachment proceedings against Trump, up 7 points from a poll on Sept. 20–22." Meanwhile, in the NPR/PBS NewsHour/Marist Poll "49% support impeachment, up from 39% in April." Politico (9/26, Shepard, 4.29M) says "online interviews for the latest POLITICO/Morning Consult poll began Tuesday night, after Pelosi's announcement, and ran through early Thursday, with nearly all interviews conducted prior to the public release of a complaint from a whistleblower concerned about Trump's conduct in dealing with Ukraine."

Townhall (9/26, Benson, 177K) predicts "Democratic support will almost certainly increase following Pelosi's very public change of heart, but keep an eye on the independents moving forward. That's the most meaningful barometer."

McCarthy Says He Intends To Force Vote On Impeachment Inquiry.

Breitbart (9/26, Boyle, 673K) reports, "House Republican leader Rep. Kevin McCarthy (R-CA) intends to force House Democrats to take another controversial vote by Friday sometime, forcing them on the record on their intent to forcibly impeach President Donald Trump, all as House Speaker Nancy Pelosi continues to refuse to schedule any actual vote formally opening House impeachment proceedings." On Twitter, McCarthy says he intends to force the vote through a "privileged resolution," and added, "If Speaker Pelosi refuses to seek approval of the whole House in the critical decision of impeachment – as is longstanding practice and precedent – I will again give all members the opportunity to go on record so their constituents can know where they stand on this issue."

WSJournal Calls For Vote To Authorize Impeachment Inquiry. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes Speaker Pelosi for announcing an impeachment inquiry without allowing the House to vote on it – as had been the case before any such House actions in US history. The Journal further criticizes the news media for failing to pressure Pelosi to set up such a vote.

Trump Warns Impeachment Could Cause Market "Crash."

CNBC (9/26, Imbert, 3.62M) reports that President Trump yesterday morning "warned in a tweet...that the stock market would melt down if Congress successfully impeached him." Trump wrote on Twitter, "If they actually did this the markets would crash. Do you think it was luck that got us to the best Stock Market and Economy in our history. It wasn't." Politico (9/26, 4.29M) points out that the tweet "included a link to a Wednesday post by the Fox Business Network's Maria Bartiromo, one of his favorite cable news personalities, who tweeted the headline: 'Stocks hit session lows after Pelosi calls for impeachment inquiry.'"

Stocks Finish Lower. Reuters (9/26, Mikolajczak) reports "US stocks slipped on Thursday as the release of a whistleblower report tied to the Democrats' impeachment move against... Trump kept uncertainty high, while trade comments from China's top diplomat helped to limit losses." The Dow "fell 76.26 points, or 0.28%, to 26,894.45, the S&P 500 lost 7 points, or 0.23%, to 2,977.87 and the Nasdaq Composite dropped 46.72 points, or 0.58%, to 8,030.66."

Krugman: Impeachment Good For The Economy. Paul Krugman writes in the New York Times (9/26, 18.61M), "Here's the thing: Since most of what Trump is trying to do is bad for America, whatever paralysis impeachment may induce is all to the good. For Trump has, in effect, been waging a war on competence. ... Impeaching Donald Trump is good for the economy."

Johnson Defends Trump, Says His Concern Is About Leak Of Presidential Conversation.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (9/26, Gilbert, 632K) reports, "Republican Sen. Ron Johnson of Wisconsin said Thursday that while President Donald Trump's critics are 'putting the worst possible construction' on the president's phone call to the leader of Ukraine and impugning 'all kinds of horrible motives to that,' he is not." Johnson, "who chairs the Senate committee on homeland security and has traveled to Ukraine numerous times," said "he 'is not especially concerned right now' about the overall nature of the conversation between Trump and Zelensky." Instead, he "said what deeply concerned him was that the whistleblower complaint about the call was leaked, pushing it out into the public domain." Johnson "said the release of a president's conversation with a foreign leader would damage the ability of future presidents to conduct foreign policy." Said Johnson, "We never should even have known about this. The world would be a better place had we never known about this."

Johnson: If There Is A Secret "Verbatim" Transcript, "I Would Be A Little Upset." Politico (9/26, Everett, 4.29M) reports that Johnson also said yesterday he "has no issues with... Trump's call with... Zelensky. But he does have a problem with the allegation that records of the call were restricted." Johnson is quoted as saying, "I was led to believe [that summary] was all that's available. I would be a little upset to find out there's a completely verbatim one."

Ex-US Ambassador Becomes Lightning Rod In Ukraine Affair.

The New York Times (9/26, Lafraniere, Vogel, Baker, 18.61M) looks at the case of former US Ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch, dismissed by President Trump, who has recently “been vilified in the right-wing news media, denounced by the president’s eldest son as a ‘joker,’ [and] called a Democratic stooge by the president’s personal lawyer. ... Her supposed sin, never backed up by evidence, was that she had shown disloyalty to Mr. Trump, disparaging him behind his back.” She “has now become a sort of heroine to the State Department’s career staff – as well as a cautionary tale to many longtime American diplomats and national security officials. To them, she symbolizes an atmosphere in which dissenting, or even insisting on established procedures, can get them marked as outsiders.”

Reuters (9/26, Cornwell) reports that after spending “all weekend mulling new allegations” against President Trump and beginning to “[sketch] out a response on a flight from New York to Washington” Monday evening, House Speaker Pelosi left her notes on a plane. “‘She wrote the first draft of her speech that she would give Tuesday,’ then left it behind, said a source familiar with what happened. But all was not lost. ‘At least she had organized it in her head,’ the source said.”

WTimes Analysis: Ukraine Scandal Could Aid Warren Against Biden.

The Washington Times (9/26, A1, McLaughlin, 492K) reports New Hampshire Democratic voters are “trying to sort out who is telling the truth” about ex-Vice President Joe Biden and son Hunter Biden’s activities in Ukraine “as they consider their options in the 2020 primary race. ... The political dust-up has created an opening for some of Mr. Biden’s rivals,” especially Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA). GOP strategist Ford O’Connell told the times, “If you are Elizabeth Warren, you have to be giddy. While defending him to the teeth, you’re hoping it sinks him.” Election betting markets predict Warren’s chances of winning the Democratic nomination up more than 12 percent this week, with Biden’s down seven.

Hillary Clinton Says Trump “Knows He’s An Illegitimate President.”

The Washington Post (9/26, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports Hillary Clinton “dismissed President Trump as an ‘illegitimate president’ and suggested that ‘he knows’ that he stole the 2016 presidential election in a CBS News interview to be aired Sunday.” Clinton said, “He knows he’s an illegitimate president. I believe he understands that the many varying tactics they used, from voter suppression and voter purging to hacking to the false stories – he knows that – there were just a bunch of different reasons why the election turned out like it did.”

Tlaib Launches Line Of “Impeach The MF” T-Shirts.

The Detroit Free Press (9/26, Keith, 1.52M) reports, “Rashida Tlaib is taking calls for President Donald Trump’s impeachment to her own T-shirt line with a familiar message: ‘Impeach the MF.’” The Free Press adds “Tlaib’s Thursday T-shirt launch came hours after the public release of a whistleblower report that said the president ‘used the power of his office’ to solicit help from Ukraine in discrediting political rival Joe Biden.”

GM To Pay For Healthcare Benefits Of Striking Workers.

The Detroit News (9/26, Noble, Hall, 825K) reports, “In a reversal, General Motors Co. will continue to pay health-care premiums for striking United Auto Workers members, the Detroit automaker said Thursday, the 11th day of the union’s national strike.” The move came after “the UAW, other labor organizations and Democratic presidential candidates took aim at GM last week when it stopped paying for health care insurance for the 46,000 hourly UAW-GM employees who walked off the job.” Meanwhile, talks “between GM and the UAW resumed Thursday morning with all unsettled issues at the ‘main table,’ and union bargainers signaled their readiness to begin round-the-clock talks as early as Thursday.”

The Detroit Free Press (9/26, LaReau, 1.52M) reports that “the UAW and General Motors are far apart on several key issues that could take a week or more to resolve before a tentative agreement is reached,” according to two people familiar with the talks. The article adds “that also means the strike could last at least two weeks longer if the UAW acts on a plan it is considering to keep members on the picket lines until the GM rank and file votes to ratify the deal, as the Free Press has reported.” However, “other people close to the talks cautioned that breakthroughs can come quickly, speeding a resolution.”

Administration Cuts Refugee Cap Almost In Half.

The New York Times (9/26, Shear, 18.61M) reports the State Department announced Thursday that “President Trump has decided to slash the American refugee program by almost half, deeply cutting the United States’ role in accepting persecuted refugees from most parts of the world.” The Administration said it would accept “18,000 refugees during the next 12 months, down from the current limit of 30,000 and a fraction of the 110,000 President Barack Obama said should be allowed into the United States in 2016.” According to the State Department, the Administration “plans to reserve many of the available 18,000 refugee slots for Iraqis who worked with the United States military, some persecuted people from Central America and small groups of religious minorities and persecuted people.”

Trump Highlights Tweet On Freeing Of “Violent” Immigrants From North Carolina Jails.

In a Thursday tweet, President Trump highlighted a Twitter post by Judicial Watch that read: “Weeks after JW reported that the sheriff of North Carolina's biggest county released numerous violent illegal immigrant criminals from custody, new federal stats reveal that the problem is statewide." Trump said in his tweet promoting that message by Judicial Watch, "That, and many other reasons, is why Republicans will win North Carolina!"

Trump Praises Capito For Her Work On Border Security.

In a Thursday tweet, President Trump applauded Sen. Shelley Moore Capito (R-WV) for her work on border security, writing, "No one has done more behind the scenes for STRONG BORDER SECURITY than @SenCapito. Her bill passed Committee today with $5B for the BORDER WALL. West Virginia is a great State and Shelley gets it done. Keep it up!"

US Immigrant Population Grew At Slowest Rate Since 2008 Last Year.

The New York Times (9/26, Tavernise, 18.61M) reports that according to the Census Bureau's American Community Survey, which was released Thursday, "the US population gained immigrants last year at the slowest pace since 2008," which the Times says is "a notable slowdown that experts said was quite likely linked to a more restrictive approach by the Trump administration. The net increase of immigrants in the American population dropped to about 200,000 people in 2018, a decline of more than 70 percent from the year before, according to William Frey, chief demographer at the Brookings Institution, who conducted the analysis." Frey found that "the largest declines were among people from Latin America and Asia who were not United States citizens."

Under Deal With US, Honduras To Take In Cubans And Nicaraguans.

Reuters (9/26, Palencia) reports Honduran President Juan Orlando Hernandez said Thursday that a migration deal signed Wednesday with the US government "includes a provision for the Central American nation to receive Cubans and Nicaraguans seeking asylum in United States."

Federal Prosecutors To Link Honduran President To Cocaine Ring In Brother's Trial. The New York Times (9/26, Weiser, Malkin, 18.61M) reports that "when a former Honduran congressman goes on trial next week in Manhattan, charged with conspiring to import cocaine into the United States, his older brother will be absent from the courtroom but will loom large over the case. That older brother, Juan Orlando Hernández, is the president of Honduras, and an ally of President Trump on immigration and security." Federal prosecutors are "preparing to present evidence that the Honduran president was a member of the drug trafficking conspiracy his brother was charged in," and that he "used drug money to help win elections in 2013 and 2017."

El Salvador's Bukele: Nation Has To Fix Its Problems.

El Salvadorian President Nayib Bukele said on Fox News' The Story (9/26, 7:41 p.m. ET, McCallum, 1.51M), "We have a problem that we have to fix. In El Salvador, we have been sending migrants to the United States and elsewhere, and now we have almost more than a quarter of the population living abroad, so when you have your people, your own people, fleeing their homes, it's not because they found a job somewhere else because they were going to go study somewhere else, because they wanted to flee because they didn't have economic opportunities or violence or crime, you have something to fix in your country."

New ICE Director In Chicago Criticizes City's Sanctuary Status.

The Chicago Tribune (9/26, Malagón, Pratt, 2.65M) reports Robert Guadian, ICE's newly appointed Chicago field office director, held a news conference Thursday "to underscore what he said are the dangers of local police not cooperating with his agency in so-called sanctuary cities like Chicago." Guadian "said a new nationwide enforcement campaign resulted in 28 people being detained in Illinois this week who will now face deportation proceedings," but the Tribune says it "was not immediately clear if two highly publicized ICE operations in Chicago were part of this effort." He "argued that such sanctuary cities...actually result in more collateral arrests."

Conservative Olson To Represent "Dreamers" In Supreme Court Case.

The New York Times (9/26, Liptak, 18.61M) reports that the so-called "Dreamers" have "gained an unlikely ally in the Supreme Court." Theodore B. Olson, who "argued for robust executive power in senior Justice Department posts under Republican presidents, will face off against lawyers from President Trump's Justice Department in a case over Mr. Trump's efforts to shut down the program that shields some 700,000 young undocumented immigrants from deportation and allows them to work." In an interview, Olson "said he had generally taken a broad view of presidential authority, particularly in the realm of immigration." Said Olson, "Executive power is important, and we respect it. But it has to be done the right way. It has to be done in an orderly fashion so that citizens can understand what is being done and people whose lives have depended on a governmental policy aren't swept away arbitrarily and capriciously. And that's what's happened here."

The Washington Post (9/26, Barnes, 14.2M) reports Olson said Thursday, "We're going to have to win over some conservative members of the court, and so someone who has a background in separation of powers, executive power, on the conservative side of the political spectrum, might help." To the Post, the choice "might have been more surprising had Olson not played a similar role in the legal battle for same-sex marriage."

NTSB Unveils Recommendations After 737 MAX Crashes.

The New York Times (9/26, Kitroeff, 18.61M) reports, "A monthslong federal investigation into Boeing's 737 Max plane has called into question some of the most fundamental assumptions used by manufacturers and regulators when certifying aircraft, and challenged Boeing's repeated assertions that pilots should have been able to easily handle a malfunction on its jet." The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Pasztor, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the National Transportation Safety Board released on Thursday several recommendations to the Federal Aviation Administration following two fatal 737 MAX crashes. NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 8, 1:35, Holt, 5.53M) reported that "many of the changes involve how pilots react to an emergency."

The CBS Evening News (9/26, story 6, 0:35, O'Donnell, 4.55M) reported that "the NTSB found that both Boeing and the FAA overestimated pilots' ability to handle the plane when the MCAS system malfunctioned." The flight control system, "designed to prevent the plane from stalling, misfired in both of those crashes." ABC World News Tonight (9/26, story 8, 0:25, Muir, 6.8M) reported the NTSB said "that pilots were bombarded by multiple alerts and alarms going off as the crashes were unfolding, making an emergency situation even worse." However, "that scenario was never tested when the planes were being certified."

The Washington Post (9/26, Laris, 14.2M) reports that "the NTSB made seven recommendations Thursday to address certification and safety issues, and investigators expect to add more later." Among their recommendations was for the FAA to "guarantee that Boeing has reexamined certain safety assessments for the Max;" "require that similar reassessments and improvements be done on most other passenger planes;" and "notify international authorities that they should consider the same issues."

Reuters (9/26, Shepardson) reports the FAA said in a statement it "will carefully review these and all other recommendations as we continue our review of the proposed changes to the Boeing 737 MAX." Boeing said in a statement it is "committed to working with the FAA in reviewing the NTSB recommendations."

CDC: Number Of Vaping-Related Illnesses Climbs To 805.

NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 6, 1:40, Holt, 5.53M) reported the CDC is "now reporting at least 12 deaths in 805 cases in 46 states and the Virgin Islands." The CBS Evening News (9/26, story 5, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.55M) reported the number of cases is up "more than 50 percent from last week." ABC World News Tonight (9/26, story 6, 1:40, Muir, 6.8M) reported, "Health officials still aren't sure aren't what's getting people sick. ... While they figure it out, they say that anyone concerned should stop vaping, but they also don't want these same consumers returning to smoking."

ADL Identifies 36 More Items, Including "OK" Hand Sign, As Hate Symbols.

The Washington Times (9/26, Richardson, 492K) reports the Anti-Defamation League "announced Thursday the addition of 36 items to its 'Hate on Display' database, including the 'OK' hand symbol; anti-antifa logos, and the 'bowlicut,' bringing the total number of 'calling cards of hate' to 214." According to the article, "many of the symbols and slogans included on the hate list are obviously offensive, such as 'burning Neo-Nazi symbols' and an anti-Semitic drawing called the 'Happy Merchant,' which shows a Jewish man with 'heavily stereotypical facial features' rubbing his hands together." However, "the addition of popular, seemingly innocuous symbols like the 'OK' sign prompted pushback from those who described the ever-growing list of unacceptable images and phrases as an example of the outrage culture run amok."

WPost: Two Years After Killing Of Unarmed Motorist By Park Police, Questions Remain Unanswered.

The Washington Post (9/26, 14.2M) editorializes that it has been two years since US Park Police officers shot and killed an unarmed motorist, but "the FBI has released virtually no information about its investigation into the police shooting." The Post says that there are still "questions that must be answered" in the killing of Bijan Ghaisar: "What threat was so grave that the officers seemingly ignored protocol, and common sense, to shoot an unarmed man multiple times at point-blank range? And why are the FBI and federal prosecutors taking so long?" The Post concludes that the silence from officials is "an affront to the public, which may reasonably wonder if official impunity and coverup are the default instinct by law enforcement officers following a police shooting."

Tropical Storm Karen Expected To Weaken As Lorenzo Strengthens To Category 4.

USA Today (9/26, Lam, 10.31M) reports, "Forecasters predicted the previously uncertain Tropical Storm Karen will dissipate over the weekend, while Lorenzo on Thursday strengthened into a Category 4 Hurricane." Lorenzo could "strengthen into a Category 5 hurricane" and "threaten the Azores in the east-central Atlantic Ocean next week." However, "no storm watches or warnings were in effect Thursday for either storm, according to the National Hurricane Center."

Parent Sentenced To Four Months In Prison In College Admissions Scandal.

The CBS Evening News (9/26, story 9, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.55M) reported, "A California businessman is the latest parent to be sentenced in that college admissions scandal. Stephen Semprevivo was given four months in prison after pleading guilty to fraud and conspiracy."

Semprevivo "paid $400,000 to get his son into Georgetown by posing as a tennis recruit." NBC Nightly News (9/26, story 7, 0:25, Holt, 5.53M) noted Semprevivo is the third parent to be sentenced in the scandal.

Chicago Teachers Union Votes To Authorize Potential Strike.

The Chicago Sun-Times (9/26, 875K) reports Chicago's teachers have "decided their contract demands are worth striking over, voting overwhelmingly to authorize a potential walkout and setting up a contentious showdown with city and school officials the next two weeks." Chicago Teachers Union leaders "said late Thursday that more than 94% of active members voted in favor of a strike."

School Quiz Refers To Trump As "45th President, Republican, Idiot."

The Washington Times (9/26, Morton, 492K) reports that a teacher at a Palm Beach County, Florida middle school gave students "a test that asked them to identify who fits this description: '45th Pres; 2017; Republican; Real Estate businessman; Idiot.'" According to the Times, the fifth descriptor "didn't sit so well with some parents." Cameron Cary, father of a student at Watson B. Duncan Middle School, posted on Twitter a photo his daughter took of the question.

Senate Confirms Scalia As New Labor Secretary.

Axios (9/26, Perano, 521K) reports "the Senate voted 53-44 on Thursday to confirm Eugene Scalia, son of the late Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, as labor secretary." Axios adds "the position was previously filled by acting Secretary Patrick Pizzella after Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta resigned in July amid renewed pushback over his role in Jeffrey Epstein's 2008 plea deal." The AP (9/26, Lardner) indicates "the Senate voted along party lines...to approve Scalia's nomination," as "Democrats said Scalia fought for corporations and against workers and was the wrong candidate for Cabinet post."

CQ Roll Call (9/26, Bocchetti, 154K) quotes Senate Minority Leader as saying yesterday, "This nomination is a real shame. I'd call it a disgrace. ... At a time when the middle class is struggling, to appoint someone like this shows one thing: President [Donald] Trump is no friend of the working people." The Washington Post (9/26, Sonmez, Rosenberg, 14.2M) reports Richard Trumka, the president of the AFL-CIO, "called Scalia a 'lifelong union-buster' and said his nomination goes against Trump's campaign pledge to stand on the side of workers." Trumka also said yesterday that the selection of Scalia by Trump is "insulting, it's dangerous, and workers are not going to forget it."

The Washington Examiner (9/26, Higgins, 448K) recounts "Scalia was one of the attorneys retained by the Chamber of Commerce when it challenged the Labor Department's 2017 'fiduciary rule,' which would have required all advisers managing tax-privileged retirement accounts to act in their clients' best interests, a legal standard that Obama sought to crack down on conflicts of interest." The Chamber's legal team "argued it broadened the definition of fiduciary too far, clashed with existing regulations, and involved a regulatory change that only Congress could approve. A federal court agreed and vacated the rule last year." The New York Times (9/26, Scheiber, 18.61M) says Scalia also "took a leading role opposing a Clinton administration regulation known as the 'ergonomics rule,' which was intended to protect workers against repetitive stress injuries. He dismissed the basis for the rule as 'unreliable science' and contended that labor unions had promoted it in order to 'force companies to give more rest periods, slow the pace of work and then hire more workers (read: dues-paying members).'" Democrats "blocked Mr. Scalia's nomination to serve as the Labor Department's top lawyer in 2001 largely as a result of his efforts to oppose the rule."

Trump Nominates Gaynor To Lead FEMA.

Politico (9/26, Semones, 4.29M) reports the President yesterday "tapped Pete Gaynor, the Federal Emergency Management Agency's acting administrator, to permanently lead the agency." Gaynor "has served as FEMA's acting director since March 2019 after former head Brock Long resigned following a controversy over his personal use of government vehicles."

Senate Confirms Hyten As New Vice Chair Of Joint Chiefs.

The AP (9/26, BALDOR) reports the Senate yesterday "confirmed the nomination of an Air Force general to become the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, largely dismissing an aide's allegations that he had subjected her to unwanted sexual advances." The AP adds "the 75-22 vote to approve Gen. John Hyten as the nation's No. 2 military officer indicates a bit more opposition than most military nominations, which often get near-unanimous Senate support," with "ten of the 22 'no' votes" coming "from female senators, including Sen. Joni Ernst of Iowa, a survivor of sexual assault while in college and the only Republican to vote against him."

The Washington Post (9/26, Ryan, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports "the vote comes at the close of a nomination process overshadowed by allegations of assault from an Army colonel who served as a senior aide to Hyten at STRATCOM." That aide, Kathryn Spletstoser, "has said Hyten made unwanted sexual advances on repeated occasions, an allegation Hyten has denied." The Post adds "an Air Force investigation did not substantiate Spletstoser's charges, and the military did not initiate any disciplinary action."

Army Secretary Confirmed On Voice Vote.

The Washington Times (9/26, Meier, 492K) reports "the Senate on Thursday voted to confirm President Trump's pick to lead the Army, Ryan McCarthy, on a voice vote." McCarthy "served as the undersecretary for the Army since 2017, and was an executive at Lockheed Martin, managing the program integration of the F-35 Joint Strike Fighter program, according to the Pentagon."

Scottish Council Approves Trump Organization Plan To Build 550 Houses.

The Washington Post (9/26, Partlow, 14.2M) reports that "a local council in northeastern Scotland granted approval on Thursday to the Trump Organization to build 550 houses on pastureland and forests in a remote swath of North Sea coastline, a rare victory for the company amid declining fortunes elsewhere for the president's family business." According to the Post, the Aberdeenshire Council "voted 38 to 24 to allow the Trump Organization's residential development to move forward despite vocal opposition from many residents who fear it would crowd the roads and schools of their windswept village."

Parents Protest After Bullied Teen Beaten At California Middle School Dies.

ABC World News Tonight (9/26, story 7, 1:25, Muir, 6.8M) reported, "Outrage is mounting after a deadly incident at a middle school in Southern California. The 13-year-old targeted, died just days later." ABC (Gutman) added, "Tonight, parents protesting after that deadly school beating in Southern California. ... A 13-year-old boy identified only as 'Diego' was pronounced clinically dead Tuesday. The parents saying not enough is being done to protect children."

NIH Awards $945M To Research Addiction And Chronic Pain.

The Washington Post (9/26, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports the National Institutes of Health "awarded nearly $1 billion on Thursday to battle addiction and chronic pain, the largest financial commitment to one program ever by the government's premier biomedical research center." HHS Secretary Azar said, "We have effective tools, such as medication-assisted treatment, but we still need better ways to treat opioid addiction and manage pain in an effective, personalized way." According to the article, "in keeping with NIH's mission, the $945 million provides no direct services to people affected by the opioid epidemic and chronic pain, but will be used to fund research by 375 grantees in 41 states designed to guide future efforts."

Trump To Hold Rally In Minneapolis On October 10.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (9/26, Van Oot, Nelson, 1.04M) reports that President Trump "will return [to] Minnesota for a campaign rally next month, marking the latest volley in his bid to flip Minnesota into the Republican column in a presidential contest for the first time in decades. The rally, scheduled Oct. 10 at Target Center in Minneapolis, will place" Trump "squarely in a Democratic stronghold and the district of" freshman Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN), "a member of the 'squad' of female House Democrats of color with whom he has sparred in recent months. Omar responded to the news Thursday with a statement addressed to Trump," saying that "we will continue to reject you and your campaign of lies and bigotry." State GOP chief Jennifer Carnahan, meanwhile, said, "We are excited for the rally on October 10th and look forward to showing the Democrats how enthusiastic Minnesota Republicans are to send our 10 electoral votes to re-elect President Trump in 2020."

In Tweet, Trump Lauds Senate Appropriations Chairman Shelby.

In a Thursday tweet, President Trump lauded Senate Appropriations Chairman Richard Shelby, saying, "Congratulations to my friend @SenShelby, our powerful Appropriations Chairman, for his hard work on many strong bills that continue to rebuild our military, invest in border security, and many other priorities. Good work and keep fighting, you are winning!"

Circuit Judge Nominee Loses Support Of Second GOP Judiciary Panel Member.

Politico (9/26, Everett, 4.29M) reports that the Senate Judiciary Committee has "shelved the consideration of a nominee for a key circuit judge position after an uprising of conservative opposition." The committee "postponed its vote on Halil Suleyman 'Sul' Ozerden to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals" shortly after Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) informed Republicans he was opposed. Politico says Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) also opposed the nomination. According to Politico, Ozerden is "a friend of" Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney, but "conservatives have been skeptical of his credentials, specifically his ruling in favor of dismissing a challenge to the Affordable Care Act's contraception coverage mandate, which he deemed premature."

The Daily Caller (9/26, 716K) reports that Cruz "grilled Ozerden during his July 17 confirmation hearing, saying Ozerden has few discernible connections to the conservative legal movement." According to the Daily Caller, Ozerden "has also approvingly cited several cases which derive from the Supreme Court's 1992 decision in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, in which a fractured Court upheld the core of Roe v. Wade."

EPA Links California Water-Quality Issues To Homelessness Crisis.

The AP (9/26) reports that the Environmental Protection Agency claims California is "failing to protect its waters from pollution, partly because of a worsening problem with homelessness in large cities such as Los Angeles and San Francisco." EPA Administrator Wheeler "outlined a series of alleged deficiencies in California's compliance with federal clean water laws in a letter to Democratic Gov. Gavin Newsom, demanding a detailed plan for fixing the problems within 30 days." Wheeler wrote, "California needs to fulfill its obligation to protect its water bodies and, more importantly, public health, and it should take this letter as notice that EPA is going to insist that it meets its environmental obligations."

The New York Times (9/26, Friedman, 18.61M) says the EPA is "pressing" President Trump's "complaints about homelessness in California." According to the Times, Trump "has personally intervened to add urban California's problem with homelessness to his litany of complaints." The Washington Post (9/26, Eilperin, Dennis, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports that in his letter, Wheeler "cited multiple instances of California failing to meet federal water-quality standards, attributing this in part to the state's homelessness problem." Wheeler wrote, "The agency is aware of the growing homelessness crisis developing in major California cities, including Los Angeles and San Francisco, and the impact of this crisis on the environment." San Francisco Mayor London Breed (D) said in response, "As I've said before, there are no needles washing out to the bay or ocean from our sewer system, and there is no relationship between homelessness and water quality in San Francisco. It's just not a real issue."

Pentagon: Suicide Rate Among Troops Increased To Highest Level In Five Years.

The Washington Post (9/26, Lamothe, 14.2M) reports the US military's suicide rate among active-duty service members "has climbed over the past five years, according to a Pentagon report released Thursday, as defense officials acknowledged a troubling rise that they said was similar to national trends." USA Today (9/26, Vanden Brook, 10.31M) reports "the rate of suicide among active duty military troops was 24.8 per 100,000 people in 2018," compared to a rate of "18.5 per 100,000" just five years ago. The "overall spike in the rate" was attributed by the Pentagon to "small increases in suicides across all the services."

Female Veterans Advocate Sexually Assaulted At VA Center.

The New York Times (9/26, Steinhauer, 18.61M) reports that a "senior policy adviser on female veterans issues for the House said she was assaulted last week at the V.A. Medical Center in Washington by a man who slammed his body against hers and then pressed himself against her in the center's cafe." The woman, Andrea Goldstein, a "reserve Navy intelligence officer and a lead staff member for the Women Veterans Task Force on the House Veterans Affairs Committee," said in an interview that she was "waiting for a smoothie at a cafe in the busy center" when "a man slammed her below the waist and told her that 'you look like you could use a good time. He pressed his entire body against mine.'" To the Times, the incident "underscores an intractable problem for many V.A. hospitals across the nation as they scramble to provide better health care for the rising number of women in the system."

US Attorney Warns Of Possible Russian Interference In 2020 Elections.

The Washington Post (9/26, Weiner, 14.2M) reports US Attorney G. Zachary Terwilliger, "whose office investigated interference in the 2018 midterm elections, said Thursday he is certain Russia will try to meddle in the upcoming presidential race in similar ways to the past." Speaking at George Mason University's National Security Institute, Terwilliger said, "They're going to do the same thing. They're going to do it. In an open setting like this there's not a lot I can get into, but I think it wouldn't be irresponsible for me to say they're definitely going to try." Terwilliger "said he had heard from an administration official that 'their big concern is deepfakes,' or doctored images and videos," but he was also worried about the "actual physical infrastructure" of election machines.

NYTimes Analysis: NRA Appears To Have Paid For Delegation's Trip To Russia. The New York Times (9/26, Hakim, 18.61M) reports that amid congressional investigation into a trip to Russia "by a delegation of its board members and supporters," the NRA "issued a statement of disavowal." The NRA said it was "repaid last year for expenses associated with the trip. But that payment...was actually the final step in a series of previously unreported transactions that appear to undercut the N.R.A.'s claims." The December 2015 trip was hosted by Maria Butina, "who pleaded guilty last year to taking part in a covert effort to infiltrate American conservative groups," and in the months after the trip, "facing unpaid bills of more than $21,000, N.R.A. officials had one prominent member of the delegation, Pete Brownell, cover costs by writing one check to an N.R.A. account, and another to a company co-owned" by Butina. But in June 2016, the NRA "transferred the combined amount back to Mr. Brownell."

Harvard CAPS/Harris Poll: Biden 28%; Warren 17%; Sanders 16%; Harris 6%.

The Hill (9/26, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports that a Harvard CAPS/Harris national poll of 693 Democratic voters, taken Sept. 22-24, shows ex-Vice President Joe Biden leading the race for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination with 28%, followed by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) at 17%, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) at 16%, and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) at 6%; no other contender tops 3%. The Hill says Biden's support is down four points since a similar poll taken last month, while Warren's support is up four points since then.

Worried Biden Supporters May Form Super PAC To Back His Bid.

The New York Times (9/26, Burns, Martin, 18.61M) reports that backers of ex-Vice President Joe Biden, "concerned about his slipping poll numbers...and an onslaught of attacks from President Trump, are" considering creating "a super PAC supporting Mr. Biden and have held conversations with wealthy donors to gauge their interest in contributing money. Mr. Biden and his campaign aides have said since the start of the race that they would not welcome an outside spending effort on his behalf. ... A spokesman for Mr. Biden on Thursday reiterated that he opposed super PACs and would reject any such group that attempted to support him." Even so, some "former staffers of Mr. Biden and political donors backing his candidacy have held conversations in recent weeks about moving ahead with a super PAC, and said Mr. Trump's furious, and often unsubstantiated, allegations about" Biden "had convinced them it was imperative they act."

Politico Report: Biden's Brother Told Investors Cancer Initiative Could Benefit Them.

Politico (9/26, Schreckinger, 4.29M) reports that Joe Biden's brother, James Biden, "told executives at a healthcare firm that the former vice president's cancer initiative would promote their business." Politico cites "a participant in the conversation, who said the promise came as part of a pitch on behalf of potential investors in the firm." According to Politico, "The allegation is the latest of many times Biden's relatives have invoked the former vice president and his political clout to further their private business dealings," but "it is the first that involves the Biden Cancer Initiative, a project Joe Biden made the centerpiece of his post-White House life following the death of his son Beau." Politico says James Biden "made the promise to executives at Florida-based Integrate Oral Care during a phone call on or around November 8, 2018, according to Michael Frey, CEO of Diverse Medical Management, a health-care firm that is suing James Biden."

Bennet: President And VP's Families Should Not Have Foreign Business Dealings. In an interview Thursday with Politico (9/26, Schneider, 4.29M), Sen. Michael Bennet (D-CO) said "he wouldn't allow his own vice president's children to make foreign business dealings like those made by Hunter Biden, son of former Vice President Joe Biden, as he laid down a warning for Democrats" seeking to impeach President Trump. Said Bennet, "I think it'd be better not to have that kind of an arrangement, and it'd be better not to give speeches to Goldman Sachs. It'd be better for people just to be public servants." Regarding the allegations against Hunter Biden, Bennet "said there is no merit to them 'based on what I know,' calling Trump's focus on it a distraction."

CNBC Report: Some Wall Street Democrats Will Defect To Trump If Warren Is Nominee.

CNBC (9/26, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports on its website that some "Democratic donors on Wall Street and in big business are preparing to sit out the presidential campaign fundraising cycle – or even back" President Trump – should Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) emerge as the party's 2020 presidential nominee. CNBC says it recently "spoke with several high-dollar Democratic donors and fundraisers in the business community and found that this opinion was becoming widely shared as Warren, an outspoken critic of big banks and corporations, gains momentum...in the 2020 race." CNBC says that "the business community's unease about Warren's candidacy has surged in tandem with her campaign's momentum." The article adds that CNBC's Jim Cramer "said earlier this month that he's heard from Wall Street executives that they believe Warren has 'got to be stopped,' and that Warren "later tweeted her response to Cramer's report: 'I'm Elizabeth Warren and I approve this message.'"

The Daily Caller (9/26, 716K) reports that Warren "has been warned that her proposed wealth tax, not to mention her plan to force equity firms to take on the pension obligations and debts of companies they acquired, could make it difficult for her to tap into any resources she might need."

Reuters Analysis: "Diverse Coalition" Of Supporters Behind Warren's Surge. Under the headline "Warren's Liberal Plans Fuel Rise In Democratic Presidential Field," Reuters (9/26, Becker, Kahn) reports on "the diverse coalition that has fueled" Warren's "steady rise in opinion polls since she launched her campaign this year. According to Reuters/Ipsos polling, Warren is the only candidate for the 2020 Democratic nomination to consistently increase her level of support over the past six months." Reuters adds that Warren's "support has surged among a broad group of Democrats and independents: the college educated, high-wage earners making at least $100,000 per year, lower-wage earners making under $50,000 per year, suburban residents, retirees and women. ... Interviews with more than a dozen voters in Iowa" found that "Warren's appeal is both practical and personal. People said they liked her plans aimed at major structural change of the federal government, as well as her sincerity and smarts."

Ex-HHS Chief Price Seeks To Be Appointed As Isakson's Successor.

The AP (9/26) reports that ex-HHS Secretary Tom Price, a former GOP congressman, has applied to be appointed as the successor to Sen. Johnny Isakson (R-GA), who is resigning at the end of this year due to health concerns. Price "has submitted an application to" Gov. Brian Kemp (R-GA), who will appoint Isakson's successor. The AP says that Price's move comes "nearly two years after being ousted from his Cabinet post for excessive travel spending." The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/26, Bluestein, Hallerman, 895K) reports that Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) and GOP Public Service Commissioner Tim Echols are among those who've also applied for the seat, "and many more are expected to join them." The article adds that Price "resigned from his Cabinet post in September 2017 after racking up at least $1 million in travel on private and military jets, a string of taxpayer-funded expenses that drew bipartisan condemnation and infuriated President Donald Trump."

Politico (9/26, Arkin, 4.29M) reports that Price "held a suburban Atlanta seat in Congress, and his resignation to join the Cabinet set off a special election that became the most expensive House race in history. Republicans narrowly held the seat in June 2017, but now-Rep. Lucy McBath flipped the seat blue in November." The Hill (9/26, Rodrigo, 2.98M) reports that Kemp "has launched a website where Republicans who want to be considered for the [Senate seat] may submit their résumés, and more than 200 people have already done so."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.7%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.7%, and his disapproval at 52.5%. The President's approval is down 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (9/23-9/25) finds Trump's approval at 49%, with 49% disapproving.

A Harvard-Harris poll of 2,009 "registered voters" (9/22-9/24) shows Trump's approval at 46%, and his disapproval at 54%.

A Reuters/Ipsos survey of 942 "registered voters" (9/24-9/25), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 42%, and his disapproval at 53%.

BOE Official: Rate Cut "Plausible" If Brexit Uncertainty Persists.

Reuters (9/27, Milliken) reports the Bank of England "may well need to cut interest rates in the likely scenario that high levels of uncertainty over Brexit persist. BoE policymaker Michael Saunders said on Friday in the first clear signal that it is considering a cut." The piece explains that last week, "without directly raising the prospect of cutting interest rates, the Bank of England said Brexit uncertainty and slower world growth were increasingly causing Britain's economy to perform below potential." However, Saunders said northern England that if Britain avoided a no-deal Brexit, "I think it is quite plausible that the next move in Bank Rate would be down rather than up."

Lagarde Facing Challenge Of Smoothing ECB Feathers After Top Official Resigns.

Reuters (9/26, Canepa) reports, "Sabine Lautenschlaeger's shock resignation from the European Central Bank illustrates the deep divisions that Christine Lagarde will have to heal when she takes over next month, with some policymakers in open revolt over a new stimulus package." Lautenschlaeger, Germany's appointee to the ECB's board, announced on Wednesday that she would step down on October 31, a day before Lagarde replaces Mario Draghi as ECB president.

Merkel: Governments Should Ensure ECB Is Not Overburdened.

Reuters (9/26) reports eurozone governments "must reform their economies and use appropriate fiscal policies to ensure that the European Central Bank is not overburdened, German Chancellor Angela Merkel said on Thursday." Speaking at an event in Frankfurt, Merkel "said the central bank's loose monetary policy was perceived differently across the euro zone and that European economies should be moulded to show 'more homogeneous competitiveness.'" Merkel said, "This political task that we have is, of course, not to overburden monetary policy."

IMF Not Saying When Argentina Could Get Final Loan Disbursement.

The AP (9/26) reports the IMF on Thursday refused to say "when it will disburse the last $5.4 billion of a massive loan to Argentina that was originally planned for mid-September." IMF spokesperson Gerry Rice told a news conference that he didn't "have specific information on timing." The piece notes that "talks about the overall $57 billion loan will continue when Argentine authorities attend the Fund's fall meeting next month in Washington." Rice said, "We will move in the discussions as fast as we can, trying to do the best we can for Argentina in every respect."

Central Banks Hawks Growing More Vocal Against Low Rates.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Fairless, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports major central banks have been facing more internal dissent over adding stimulus or have chosen to keep monetary policy unchanged in recent weeks. The piece says this is a shift following a wave of easing earlier in the year amid cooling global growth. Central bank hawks have become more vocal, saying such efforts are not necessary for expanding domestic economies with low unemployment.

In New Ukraine Loan Talks, IMF Presses For Central Bank Independence.

Reuters (9/27, Williams) reports the IMF has "had productive discussions about assisting Ukraine with a new three-year loan program but stressed the need to safeguard central bank independence and financial stability, the IMF said on Friday." The piece explains that, "as it left Ukraine after two weeks of meeting stakeholders, the IMF said discussions on the new program would continue in the coming weeks."

Mexican Economy Minister: Rate Cuts Critical For Reactivating Economic Growth.

Reuters (9/26) reports Mexican Economy Minister Graciela Marquez Colin "said on Thursday that central bank rate cuts will be critical for the reactivation of economic growth." The piece notes that, "speaking to a business conference in New York just as Mexico's central bank announced a 25-basis point cut in its key rate, Marquez Colin said that U.S. Federal Reserve policy decisions are giving Mexico additional room to cut rates."

ABN Amro Latest Bank Being Probed Over Potential Money Laundering.

Bloomberg (9/26, Munsterman, Vergauwen, 4.73M) reports ABN Amro Bank NV "disclosed a criminal probe over alleged failures to check on clients and report suspicious transactions." The Dutch investigation "adds to a series of money-laundering cases that have engulfed lenders, highlighting weaknesses in the region's efforts to fight the flow of illicit funds."

Eurozone Corporate Lending Rises To Post-Crisis High.

Reuters (9/26) reports, "Bank lending to eurozone companies accelerated last month to match a post-crisis high hit last year, in a sign credit kept flowing smoothly in the bloc despite an economic slowdown, data from the European Central Bank showed on Thursday." Corporate loans rose by 4.3 percent year-over-year in August, up from a revised four percent in July and the highest since September 2018.

The Financial Times (9/26, Romei, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports the eurozone lending growth has eased fears of a recession in the region and shows resilience of the domestic sector as export-led sectors continue to decline.

BIS Starts Green Bond Fund.

Bloomberg (9/26, Ward, 4.73M) reports, "The Bank for International Settlements started an open-ended fund for central bank investments in green bonds, it said in a statement." The BIS "said the fund comes in response to growing demand for climate-friendly investments" and should "help institutions incorporate sustainability objectives into the management of their reserves."

China Tells Banks To Distribute Excess Provisions For Bad Loans To Shareholders.

Bloomberg (9/26, 4.73M) reports, "China is telling its banks to distribute excess provisions for soured loans to investors as part of attempts to curb accounting malpractice, sparking a rally in some local financial company stocks." Banks with provisions that exceed 300 percent of their nonperforming-loan balances "would be seen as having 'a tendency to hide their profits' and would need to distribute reserves beyond that amount as dividends, according to draft rules released Thursday by the Ministry of Finance." This is part of Chinese financial regulators' two-year campaign to reduce risks in the country's banking system "by increasing fines on transgressions including inflating deposits, understating bad loans and misusing client funds."

Rouhani Says Iran Seeks "Dialogue" With US, Calls For Lifting Of Sanctions.

The AP (9/26, Lederer, Batrawy) reports at the UN General Assembly yesterday, Iranian President Hassan Rouhani "urged the United States...to 'cease this policy of maximum pressure' in favor of 'dialogue, and logic and reason.'" Rouhani "also again denied that Iran has anything to do with drone and missile strikes against key oil facilities in Saudi Arabia earlier this month that rattled the global oil markets." Said the Iranian leader, "Those who make the allegations must provide the needed proof to back up those allegations."

According to an AP (9/26, Batrawy) analysis, "The limits of Iran's ability to go it alone were on display at the United Nations this week as it engaged in a flurry of diplomatic outreach." The AP says the Iranian government's "fraught history with the US has essentially locked it out of the global financial system, making it difficult to find partners, allies and countries willing or even able to do business with it."

IAEA: Iran Has Committed Further Breaches Of Nuclear Deal. Reuters (9/26, Murphy) reports that, according to the International Atomic Energy Agency, Iran "has committed another breach of its nuclear deal with major powers by enriching uranium with advanced centrifuges. ... 'They are busy at the (Natanz enrichment) facility,' one diplomat said in response to" the IAEA report. According to Reuters, the 2015 nuclear deal "only lets Iran accumulate enriched uranium with just over 5,000 of its first-generation IR-1 centrifuges at Natanz," and "lets Iran use small numbers of more advanced models for research, without producing enriched uranium." Reuters adds that the deal "also caps the amount of enriched uranium Iran can produce and the purity to which it can enrich it, both of which Tehran has already breached, but only incrementally rather than by ramping up the level and amount as quickly as it can."

According to Bloomberg (9/26, 4.73M), the IAEA says "in addition to new advanced centrifuges being fed with uranium at a testing facility at Natanz, Iran is also reconstituting machines and infrastructure that will allow it to ramp up its program even further within a matter of weeks."

Pompeo Asked About Potential Prisoner Swap In Wake Of Iranian's Deportation. Reuters (9/26, Pamuk, Nichols) reports Secretary of State Pompeo on Thursday "declined...to discuss the possibility of a prisoner swap between the United States and Iran following the United States' deportation of an Iranian woman." Pompeo was "asked about the woman, Negar Ghodskani, who pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud and commit offenses against the United States and was sentenced by a federal court to time served, and whether he expected Iran to soon release a detained Princeton University doctoral student." Pompeo replied, "I never talk about sensitive issues as you described there. ... We spent time this week, we spend time nearly every day working to release the Americans and others who are detained wrongfully inside of Iran. We will continue to do that."

State Department Cracks Down On Visits By Iranian Officials. The Washington Times (9/26, Meier, 492K) reports the Administration on Thursday "began restricting senior Iranian government officials and their family members from entering the US." In a statement, Pompeo said, "For years, Iranian officials and their family members have quietly taken advantage of America's freedom and prosperity, including excellent educational, employment, entertainment and cultural opportunities in the United States." Pompeo said senior Iranian officials will not be allowed to travel to the US "while their people suffer."

Rouhani Expects UK Tanker Held In Iran To Be Released. Reuters (9/26, Hafezi) reports Rouhani also said yesterday that "he expected the British-flagged oil tanker Stena Impero, seized by Iran in July, to be released." Speaking to reporters, Rouhani said, "The tanker is going through the final court proceedings. I predict that it will be released."

Iraq Seeks To Rein In Iran-Aligned Militias. The Washington Post (9/26, Loveluck, Salim, 14.2M) reports that "escalating tensions" between the US and Iran "have raised the prospect that Iraq could again become the terrain on which these two powers pursue their shadow war and a staging ground for attacks on American and allied forces in the region." The Post, however, says "recent developments suggest that the government in Baghdad is trying to clip the wings of the powerful Iran-aligned militias operating in Iraq, just as Tehran is looking for its proxies and allies in the Middle East to intensify the pressure on US interests." Iraqi officials are said to be "worried that their country could get sucked into the conflict."

Johnson Says Tempers Need To Calm Amid Brexit Uproar.

Reuters (9/26, Faulconbridge, Piper) reports British Prime Minister Boris Johnson said Thursday that "tempers needed to calm following a vitriolic session in parliament, after critics accused him of using language that had led to threats and abuse against his opponents." To Reuters, Parliament "reached boiling point on Wednesday when Johnson and his opponents engaged in hours of furious argument" over Brexit and "the anger had become so intense that the husband of a lawmaker murdered days before the 2016 EU membership referendum said it could encourage violence unless politicians toned down their rhetoric." Johnson told the BBC, "We do need to bring people together and get this thing done," but declined to apologize for his language. The Washington Post (9/26, Adam, Booth, 14.2M) says Johnson was "rebuked by lawmakers on all sides for his language in a bombastic performance in the House of Commons on Wednesday night," when the prime minister used terms such as "betray," "sabotage" and "surrender" to describe his opponents.

AP Analysis: Johnson Already Preparing For Election After Missed Brexit Deadline. An AP (9/26) analysis says Johnson "has come out fighting after a string of defeats, including a bruising blow from the country's highest court, and while his combative stance is offending some, that may well be the point." According to the AP, Johnson's "strategy appears straightforward: ridicule Parliament as a bunch of weaklings wedded to the European Union and unwilling to follow the people's mandate to pull the country out of the EU." The AP says while Johnson "may not be able to make good on his vow to make Brexit happen on Oct. 31...he has positioned himself for the possible election ahead so that he can blame Parliament – and the EU's supposed intransigence – for keeping Britain inside the bloc."

WTimes Analysis: Few Options Left For US As Taliban Steps Up Attacks.

The Washington Times (9/26, Wolfgang, 492K) reports that the collapse of peace talks with the Taliban "has left the US with few military options as intense fighting resumes, while the near complete lack of public and political support for an influx of ground troops means the Trump administration must search for new ways to put pressure back onto the Taliban." Although the Administration has "promised to increase strikes against Taliban targets after the collapse of diplomatic negotiations this month, private analysts say the US has limited tools at its disposal and has exhausted most military avenues to defeat" the Taliban on the battlefield.

Afghan Forces Regain Control Of Three Districts From Taliban. The New York Times (9/26, Zucchino, Rahim, 18.61M) reports that "in one of the most remote places in Afghanistan, government forces this month managed to achieve something vanishingly rare these days: They clawed back not one but three districts from the Taliban's grip." However, the Times says the "cost was high, and the victory was tenuous."

Pakistani PM Urges Trump To Mediate End To Kashmir Standoff.

Appearing on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/26, 1.05M), Pakistani Prime Minister Imran Khan was asked about President Trump's offer to mediate on the issue of Kashmir. Khan replied, "Definitely. We feel that the US President, head of the most powerful country of the world – the only person actually who could make a difference right now – is President Trump, if he can mediate between us. ... There's a huge humanitarian crisis brewing up. Eight million people have been locked up in Kashmir now for almost 53 days. And so we hope that the US President intervenes."

US Deploys Air Defense Systems, Troops To Saudi Arabia In Wake Of Attack.

The AP (9/26, Baldor) reports the Pentagon announced Thursday that the US "is sending one Patriot missile battery and four ground-based radar systems to Saudi Arabia...in what officials describe as the first steps to help the kingdom protect itself against Iranian attacks." In addition, "two more Patriot batteries and a THAAD missile defense system will be prepared to go later if needed, and the deployment will involve about 200 troops."

Reuters (9/26, Stewart, Ali) say the deployment is "more limited than US officials previously told Reuters was under consideration by the Trump administration following the attack on Saudi Arabia." Reuters previously reported the Pentagon was "considering keeping an aircraft carrier in the Gulf region indefinitely, as speculation mounts that the USS Abraham Lincoln carrier strike group will soon need to wind up its deployment." The New York Times (9/26, Gibbons-Neff, 18.61M) likewise says the "small deployment of defensive military hardware is tepid in comparison to some of the remarks leveled by American officials in the days after the Sept. 14 strikes." The CBS Evening News (9/26, story 8, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.55M) and Washington Times (9/26, Meier, 492K), among other news outlets, also report the announcement.

Egyptian Authorities Tighten Security In Wake Of Protests.

The New York Times (9/26, Yee, Rashwan, 18.61M) reports that "since a handful of surprise protests against President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi flared around Egypt last weekend, the largest since he came to power in 2014, the government has tightened its grip, arresting nearly 2,000 Egyptians, packing Cairo and other protest hot spots with security personnel and blocking news websites." To the Times, it is "a crackdown harsh even by the standards of the Sisi era, when Egyptian jails have swollen with his political opponents, elections are predetermined and the opposition has been all but silenced, making shows of dissent extremely rare." The Times, however, says it is uncertain if the measures will deter a second round of demonstrations called for today.

Israeli Arab Party: Gantz's Policies "Virtually Indistinguishable" From Netanyahu's.

The New York Times (9/26, Gladstone, 18.61M) reports that "an Israeli Arab party that broke with its allies and refused to back Benny Gantz, the former army chief, as Israel's next leader said Thursday that his policies were 'virtually indistinguishable' from those of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu." The party, Balad, was "responding to what its leader described as a torrent of criticism that, by withholding an endorsement of Mr. Gantz, Balad had improved Mr. Netanyahu's prospects for keeping his post as prime minister." In an op-ed in Israel's Haaretz, Balad leader Mtanes Shehadeh said most of that criticism is "unjustified and politically baseless," arguing that an endorsement of Gantz would have "obliged us to stray from the ideological principles that have guided us."

A New York Times (9/26, Kershner, 18.61M) analysis says that "even in a country whose politics are routinely fractious and confusing, many Israelis were scratching their heads on Thursday" after Netanyahu was tapped to assemble a new government, "just a week after an election that appeared to jeopardize his career." In what the Times calls "a remarkable reversal," Netanyahu "had a new lease on political life and the possibility of staying in office despite a looming corruption indictment."

Feith Urges US To Proceed Cautiously On Defense Pact With Israel. Douglas J. Feith, former Undersecretary of Defense for Policy in the George W. Bush Administration, writes in a Wall Street Journal (9/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed that despite their longstanding defense ties, Israel and the US have no defense treaty. While President Trump and Netanyahu have both recently discussed negotiating one, Feith argues that they should proceed cautiously.

State Department Imposes Travel Ban On Castro Family Over Maduro Support.

The AP (9/26) reports Secretary of State Pompeo released a statement Thursday announcing that the Administration is "imposing a travel ban on former Cuban President Raul Castro and his immediate family for human rights abuses." Pompeo said the ban is "in response to 'gross human rights abuses' in Cuba and supporting Venezuelan leader Nicolas Maduro in his crackdown on the opposition." Reuters (9/26, Spetalnick) calls the move "a direct but largely symbolic swipe at Cuba's leadership."

Both Maduro And Guaidó Skip UNGA. The AP (9/26, Olson) reports that "two separate diplomatic delegations represented Venezuela at the UN General Assembly this year, shadowing and circling each other in a fierce fight for international recognition as the country reels from an economic collapse and political uncertainty." One set of diplomats represented the regime of Nicolás Maduro, while the other group represented the government of Interim President Juan Guaidó, "recognized as Venezuela's rightful president by the US and more than 50 other countries." Both men, however, skipped the world gathering. Maduro instead "flew to Moscow for an impromptu visit" with Russian President Vladimir Putin, while "Guaidó's delegation could not enter UN headquarters as Venezuelan delegates." The AP says Venezuela "nonetheless commanded attention," with President Trump "personally hosting one of four high-level meetings on the country's political and humanitarian crisis."

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), meanwhile, editorializes that Maduro's growing isolation in the international community was highlighted this week when 15 Latin American countries joined the US in a resolution invoking the so-called Rio Treaty against his regime.

Trump's Interest In Greenland Driving Up Real-Estate Prices.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Taylor, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports President Trump's comments about buying the island has driven up real-estate prices on Greenland.

Democratic Governors Press For Climate Change Action On Sidelines Of UNGA.

In what the Washington Post (9/26, Morello, 14.2M) calls "a repudiation of the Trump administration's policies on climate change," six governors in the US Climate Alliance have been in New York City this week on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly "conferring with presidents, prime ministers and foreign government officials responsible for climate issues." They have often been "assisted by former US officials who worked on climate policy in the Obama administration and joined nonprofit environmental groups after their positions were eliminated." To the Post, "their mission is to assure other countries that many of America's leaders are still engaged in combating climate change, even if the United States formally drops out of the Paris agreement next year."

Dinerman: US Race To Moon May Benefit Russia.

Space writer Taylor Dinerman argues in a Wall Street Journal (9/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed that the Administration's race to put American astronauts back on the moon by 2024 may end up benefiting Russia. Dinerman notes that Russia is seeking to participate with the US and other nations in a proposed lunar-orbiting station, which he warns would open the way for a permanent Russian base on the moon.

Freddie Mac's Jacqueline Welch Discusses Importance Of Inclusivity.

DS News (9/26, Ojha) reports on the ways Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are fostering diversity and inclusion. Fannie Mae's WERG "hosts events regularly on empowering topics," and Freddie Mac is "reaching out to its vendors and suppliers to extend its D&I initiatives that promote gender equality." DS News reports Freddie Mac is "driving initiatives towards equality by building an infrastructure that supports a culture where all people can do their best work. Giving an example of equity issues related to women and minorities, Jacqueline Welch, Chief HR Officer and Chief Diversity Officer, Freddie Mac said that research showed that on average women and minorities earned less than their white male counterparts. It's the reason the company doesn't ask job candidates for their salary history." Welch said, "This inequity has a cumulative effect throughout one's career. That's why putting candidates in a better position to self-advocate for an equitable salary is so important."

In Surprising Twist, GSE Shareholders Petition To Send Their Case Against FHFA To Supreme Court.

Reuters (9/26, Frankel) reports, "Late Wednesday, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac shareholders who won a ruling earlier this month from the en banc 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that the Federal Housing Finance Agency is unconstitutionally structured filed a surprise petition for U.S. Supreme Court review." The shareholders, seeking to undo "a 2012 deal between FHFA and the Treasury Department that directed all of Fannie and Freddie profits to the government," are "asking the Supreme Court to take up the issue of the FHFA's constitutionality – even though they won on that point at the 5th Circuit." The shareholders decided to make the "admittedly unusual request" because they felt they did not get a complete win out of the 5th Circuit. The court did not invalidate the "net worth sweep" itself, even as it found that the FHFA was unconstitutionally structured. Reuters reports that although CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger now considers the bureau's structure to be unconstitutional, the FHFA, "by contrast, seems to be sticking by its position that its director was constitutionally appointed, according to a Sept. 23 letter to the 8th Circuit."

American Banker (9/26, Lang, Adler, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the GSE investors' petition "adds yet another wrinkle to growing legal questions over the power of independent regulatory agencies." Their petition said, "Congress made no pretense that FHFA and the CFPB would consist of an independent multi-member body of experts dispassionately addressing technical issues bereft of policy judgment. Instead, each agency is helmed by a single director who alone wields the tremendous power of the office without fear of interference by the President."

Freddie Mac: 30-Year FRM Average Fell From 3.73% To 3.64% This Week.

The Washington Post (9/26, Orton, 14.2M) reports that according to "the latest data released Thursday by Freddie Mac," the 30-year FRM average fell from 3.73 to 3.64 percent this week, down from 4.72 percent a year ago. Meanwhile, the 15-year FRM average fell from 3.21 to 3.16 percent, down from 4.16 percent a year ago. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.49 to 3.38 percent, down from 3.97 percent a year ago. The Post says that it has been a "volatile month" for the 30-year FRM. Given "the past month's roller coaster ride, it's difficult to know where mortgage rates are headed." Bankrate.com "found the experts it surveyed were evenly split. Half expected rates to move lower, while the other half predicted they would hold steady in the coming week." The AP (9/26) reports September was "the most volatile month for the key 30-year loan since March."

Khater: Low Rates Are Helping Housing Market Pick Up Steam. MarketWatch (9/26, Passy, 1.67M) reports Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "With both the unemployment rate and mortgage rate below 4% and near historic lows, it is no surprise that the housing market regained momentum with home sales and construction at or near decade highs." Reuters (9/26) reports Khater said, "The fall housing market is poised to continue with steady gains in prices and solid sales activity." Providing similar coverage are National Mortgage News (9/26, McCullom), HousingWire (9/26, Lloyd, 23K), Mortgage Orb (9/26, Barnard), Seeking Alpha (9/26, Kiesche, 512K), and RTT News (9/26).

Maxwell Releases In-Depth Examination Of Role Of GSEs In Popularizing 30-Year FRM, How GSE Reform Could Impact The Product.

Maxwell released the third and final installment of its three-part series, "The 30-Year Fix." This installment "digs into the role GSEs have played throughout history in popularizing the 30-year fixed-rate mortgage and contemplates how GSE reform could impact America's favorite mortgage product," according to Mortgage News Daily's (9/26, Chrisman) Pipeline Press rundown. In Part I, of the three-part series, Maxwell says that it "looked at the history and context of the TYFRM in America and examine why we are so uniquely reliant on it in the United States." In Part 2, Maxwell "looked at mortgage products around the world and considered how and why certain mortgage products are favored in different national economies."

CMBS Market Gets A Shot In The Arm As GSEs Reach Lending Caps.

GlobeSt. (9/26, Borland) reports, "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are having a slow third quarter. When the two agencies hit their lending caps a few weeks ago, there was some uncertainty about extending lending caps. As a result, Fannie and Freddie have pulled back on both pricing and credit terms over the last 6 weeks, creating an opportunity for CMBS players to gain multifamily marketshare." According to George Smith Partners managing director Jonathan Lee, "in order to save their allocation for the year, they are being a lot more conservative on the deals that they do. That is driving a lot of business to CMBS right now." GlobeSt. reports, "At the Fall NMHC meetings, Mark Calabria, FHFA director, announced new lending caps for the agencies of $100 billion per agency for the next five quarter period beginning in fourth quarter 2019 and running through all of 2020. This is a significant increase in lending capacity over 2018. Now, there is some certainty in the agency market that will likely result in strong activity by the yearend."

CoreLogic Places GSE Reform Among The Top Five Forces "Driving Disruption In The Housing Market."

Mortgage Professional America (9/26, Smith) reports, "There are five major forces driving disruption in the housing market in 2019, according to experts at analytics firm CoreLogic." The "major drivers of disruption in the market are: The changing needs of homebuyers; Affordability and housing supply; Cost pressures on lenders; The growing impact of natural disasters; and housing finance reform." CoreLogic's Wade Sands said that "one of the most pressing" unresolved issues in housing finance is "the future of the GSE conservatorship. ... Related to this issue is the impending end of the QM patch, which could have significant consequences for the market share of GSEs and the private mortgage market."

Freddie Mac's Total Mortgage Portfolio Grew An Annualized 12.9% In August.

Seeking Alpha (9/26, Kiesche, 512K) reports Freddie Mac's total mortgage portfolio grew at an "annualized rate of 12.9% in August, bringing its ending balance to $2.28T. Purchases of $65.3B, sales of $3.64B, and liquidations of $37.5B resulted in a net increase of $24.2B during the month. Single-family refinance-loan purchase and guarantee volume was $21.7B in August, representing 42% of the total single-family mortgage portfolio purchases and issuances. Single-family seriously delinquent rate remained flat at 61 basis points; multifamily delinquency rate increased to 4 basis points in August from 3 basis points in July."

MBA: Multifamily Lending Rose To Record High In 2018.

HousingWire (9/26, Ramirez, 23K) reports, "Multifamily continues to soar, rising to an all-time high in 2018 in terms of dollar volume, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association's annual report of the multifamily lending market. Favorable market conditions helped spur a 19% increase in multifamily lending in 2018, according to the MBA's report. ... The $339.2 billion in originated multifamily mortgages went to a variety of investors. By dollar volume, the greatest share went to Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac with 42%." MBA VP Jamie Woodwell said, "Borrowing and lending backed by multifamily rental properties set a new record in 2018, driven by strong property fundamentals, rising property values, low interest rates, and strong demand from both borrowers and lenders. We've seen these trends continue throughout 2019 and expect multifamily borrowing and lending will rise again both this year and next."

CFPB Looks Into APR Issues, Finding Inaccurate Disclosures In Reverse Mortgages.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/26, Yang, Subscription Publication) reports the CFPB has "unearthed inaccurate disclosures in several reverse mortgage transactions, according to a recent supervisory highlights report published on the agency's website." The report "covers findings from examinations completed between December 2018 and March 2019. The observations highlighted are related to automobile loan origination, credit card account management, debt collection, and mortgage originations." The CFPB "examined both forward and reverse mortgage origination activities for compliance with consumer financial protection laws, and in particular identified problems in disclosures tied to reverse mortgage transactions." The CFPB said, "In one or more examinations, examiners observed that creditors were disclosing inaccurate [annual percentage rates] for closed-end reverse mortgages."

KBW: HUD's Reform Plan Unlikely To Significantly Impact FHA Operations In The Near Term.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/26, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "When the Treasury Department earlier this month released its GSE reform blueprint, a Department of Housing and Urban Development document was released at the same time, dealing with the dicey topic of shoring up the FHA program. Among other things, HUD recommends that FHA should strengthen its capital base to protect taxpayers and narrow its footprint to refocus on its core mission of servicing low- to moderate-income families." Keefe, Bruyette & Woods wrote in a new report, "While a smaller FHA footprint would be positive for the private mortgage insurers, KBW analysts think meaningful changes at the FHA in the near term are unlikely, primarily because many of the specific recommendations could end up reducing mortgage access or weakening FHA capital." According to IMF, "The research firm also predicts the role of the FHA could change again after the 2020 presidential election."

GAO: FHA Needs To Better Monitor Reverse Mortgage Servicing.

American Banker (9/26, Sinnock, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "The Federal Housing Administration should more closely monitor reverse mortgage servicers and track related data that would shed light on a rise in defaults, according to a Government Accountability Office report. About 18% of Home Equity Conversion Mortgages were terminated because of defaults in fiscal year 2018. That's significantly higher than in FY2014 when the default share was 2%, the report noted." The GAO report said, "Most HECM defaults are due to borrowers not meeting occupancy requirements or failing to pay property charges, such as property taxes or homeowners insurance. Since 2015, FHA has allowed HECM servicers to put borrowers who are behind on property charges onto repayment plans to help prevent foreclosures, but as of fiscal year-end 2018, only 22% of these borrowers had received this option."

IASB Issues Changes To Hedge Accounting Rules To Ease Burden On Companies Transitioning Away From Libor.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Maurer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the International Accounting Standards Board on Thursday issued changes to its rules governing hedge accounting. The move was an attempt to give relief to companies impacted by reference rate shifts – including the coming transition away from Libor. According to The Journal, the changes are intended to prevent companies from needing to stop hedge accounting over concerns that a lack of information regarding reference rate revamps may hinder their ability to carry out forward-looking analyses, according to the board.

Loan Modifications Being Used As A Reward For Responsible Borrowers To Boost Customer Retention.

In an article titled "Loan Modifications For The Best – Not Distressed – Borrowers," The Wall Street Journal (9/26, McLaughlin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports loan modifications are increasingly being used to help improve customer retention and the experience for existing customers. According to Star One VP of Marketing Joe Fagenstrom, providing loan mods provides members with a loyalty incentive and reduces churn in his company's portfolio.

In Q2, Mortgage Debt Tied To MBS Kept Growing, Albeit More Slowly Than Bank, Thrift And CU Portfolios.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/26, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "The supply of residential home loan debt tied to mortgage-backed securities continued to grow in the second quarter but not as quickly as the portfolios of whole loans held by banks, thrifts and credit unions. Recently released figures from the Federal Reserve put the total home mortgage debt outstanding at $10.917 trillion as June 30. That translates into a 0.3% gain from March 31 and a 2.1% growth rate from a year ago." An IMF analysis "reveals that servicing tied to agency MBS rose 0.7% during the second quarter, more than twice as fast as the overall market. Freddie Mac single-family servicing was the hottest component of the agency market, up 1.5% from March, followed by Ginnie Mae product. Combined, the three agencies accounted for 63.0% of total home mortgage debt outstanding at the end of June."

NAR: Pending Home Sales Rose More Than Expected In August, Thanks To Low Mortgage Rates.

Bloomberg (9/26, Edwards, 4.73M) reports, "Contract signings to purchase previously owned U.S. homes rebounded in August by more than forecast, helped by low mortgage rates and continued household income gains. The National Association of Realtors' index of pending home sales increased 1.6% from the previous month, with the gauge's 107.3 level at the second-highest since the end of 2017, data from the group showed Thursday. The rise compared with the median estimate of economists for a 1% gain and a 2.5% drop in July. Contract signings were up 1.1% year-over-year on an unadjusted basis, the second straight rise." Reuters (9/26, Dunsmuir) reports, "Economists polled by Reuters had forecast pending home sales increasing 0.9% in August." Mortgage News Daily (9/26, Swanson) reports, "Those polled by Econoday had expected pending sales to be anywhere from flat compared to July to a 1.8 percent gain."

The AP (9/26, Sapiro) reports, "The National Association of Realtors said Thursday that its pending home sales index rose 1.6% to 107.3 in August." Pending home sales "are up 2.5% from their pace a year ago. Lower borrowing costs have been slowly boosting buyer demand. Persistently high prices, driven up by a tight supply of available homes, had previously blunted the benefits of low mortgage rates. Demand has fluctuated slightly over the past few months as home prices have risen, with contract activity dipping in July. ... Measured month over month, pending sales rose across all four regions in August, especially in the comparatively expensive West."

CNBC (9/26, Olick, 3.62M) reports, "Regionally, pending home sales in the Northeast rose 1.4% monthly and were 0.7% higher than a year ago. In the Midwest, sales increased 0.6% monthly and were 0.2% higher annually. Sales in the South increased 1.4% monthly and 1.8% annually, and in the West sales jumped 3.1% monthly and were 8.0% higher compared with August 2018. Mortgage rates fell throughout the summer with the deepest dip in August, when these buyers were out applying for loans and signing contracts. The average rate on the 30-year fixed was up around 4.2% in early May but fell to around 3.5% by August, according to Freddie Mac. That gave buyers significantly more purchasing power."

Fox Business (9/26, Henney, 1.73M) reports NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun said, "It is very encouraging that buyers are responding to exceptionally low interest rates. The notable sales slump in the West region over recent years appears to be over. Rising demand will reaccelerate home price appreciation in the absence of more supply." HousingWire (9/26, Lloyd, 23K) reports Yun added, "With interest rates expected to remain low, home sales are forecasted to rise in the coming months and into 2020. Unfortunately, so far in 2019, new home construction is down 2.0%. The hope is that housing starts quickly move into higher gear to meet the higher demand. Moreover, broader economic growth will strengthen from increased housing activity." RTT News (9/26) also reports.

BEA: US Inflation-Adjusted GDP Grew At Annual Rate Of 2% In Q2.

HousingWire (9/26, Lloyd, 23K) reports, "Inflation-adjusted GDP increased at an annual rate of 2% in the second quarter, according to the third estimate from the Bureau of Economic Analysis. In the first quarter of the year, GDP grew at a 3.1% pace. Today's Q2 GDP estimate is based on more complete data than was available for the advance numbers issued last month, when GDP was estimated at the same rate." Real GDP held steady with the last estimate, at 2%. Current-dollar GDP rose from last estimate's 4.6% to a new estimate of 4.7%. Real GDI fell from last estimate's 2.1% to a new estimate of 1.8%. Average of Real GDP and Real GDI fell from last estimate's 2.1% to 1.9%. Gross domestic purchases price index held steady from last estimate's 2.2%. Personal consumption expenditures rose from last estimate's 2.3% to 2.4%.

Tony Morrison CEO: Millennial Buyers Are Driving The Recent Surge In Housing Starts.

CNBC (9/26, Clifford, 3.62M) reports, "The number of new housing starts has surged in recent months, and the trend is being powered in part by an unlikely bunch – millennials, Sheryl Palmer, CEO of homebuilder Taylor Morrison, told CNBC on Thursday." Palmer said consumers are "changing their relationship with homeownership," explaining, "People are feeling good, and their confidence is absolutely showing in the real estate market, and that's not even to mention the demographic tailwinds we have with how the millennials are feeling about buying their first or second house, and certainly the boomers. ... Everyone talks about the millennials like they're just one group of people and they're not buying. We're just not seeing that. In fact, we're finding exactly the opposite: They're quite qualified."

Analysis: Low Mortgage Rates Are Fueling The Rebound In Housing, But Things Could Be Better.

Writing for The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), reporter Justin Lahart says the housing market has improved recently, but given the current state of the overall economy, the improvement is still somewhat underwhelming. NAR's Pending Home Sales Index rebounded in August, and the Commerce Department just reported that new-home sales spiked last month. Last week, the Commerce Department reported that existing-home sales also improved in August. Lahart says lower mortgage rates are driving the housing rebound, with Freddie Mac having reported that the 30-year FRM average fell to 3.49% earlier this month – down from 4.54% a year earlier.

Markets

Dollar Softens.

Reuters (9/27, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar softened on Friday, drifting from multi-week highs against most major currencies as investors cautiously weighed fresh political turmoil in the United States and waited for the next turn in trade negotiations with China." The dollar "was marginally weaker against the safe-haven yen, which traded at 107.70 per dollar, and retreated from a two-year peak touched in Asian morning trade against the euro to steady around $1.0921." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar "was flat near a three-week high on Friday at 99.146."

Gold Holds Steady.

Reuters (UK) (9/27, Lahiri) reports, "Gold prices were little changed on Friday, but the metal was on track for a third weekly fall in four as a strong dollar offset positive impacts of political and trade worries." Spot gold "was steady at $1,506.43 per ounce, as of 0426 GMT, declining 0.7% for the week after a near 2% gain last week." US gold futures "were 0.1% lower at $1,513.7 per ounce."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (9/27, Khasawneh) reports, "Oil prices fell on Friday as economic headwinds revived concerns of slowing global demand growth and a faster-than-expected recovery in Saudi crude oil output eased worries over potential major supply disruptions." Brent crude futures "fell 55 cents, or 0.9%, from the previous session's close to $62.19 a barrel by 0653 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude futures "fell 30 cents, or 0.5%, to $56.11 a barrel."

Senate Approves Temporary Spending Bill, Avoiding Shutdown For Now.

The AP (9/26, Taylor) reports that with an 82-15 vote, the Senate yesterday "passed a temporary government-wide funding bill...that staves off the risk of a government shutdown through Nov. 21." The legislation "would buy additional time for lawmakers to work to unclog a $1.4 trillion bundle of yearly spending bills that is hung up amid fights over President Donald Trump's border wall and abortion." The New York Times (9/26, Cochrane, 18.61M) quotes Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer as saying of the vote, "That's the easy part. The hard part is getting a bipartisan appropriations process back on track."

Politico (9/26, Emma, 4.29M) reports that Senate Appropriations Chairman Richard Shelby (R-AL) "warned earlier in the day...that bipartisan agreement on those bills could elude lawmakers if Congress and the White House aren't able to reach an agreement on border security, including Trump's wall. 'If these conditions are not met, I fear we are moving headlong toward a full-year continuing resolution,' Shelby said." Politico adds that Shelby is "set to meet with Trump on Friday morning to have a 'candid' discussion about the 'realities' of the appropriations process and how to avoid additional continuing resolutions over the next year."

The Washington Post (9/26, Werner, 14.2M) points out that "like last year, when Congress denied Trump some of the money he was seeking for his U.S.-Mexico border wall, border barrier funding remains a major sticking point in budget talks." Senate Democrats "oppose Trump's $5 billion request for the wall and offered an amendment in the Senate Appropriations Committee on Thursday to block the money." However, that amendment did not pass, which means senators "will have to continue negotiating the issue before the short-term spending package expires in November." The Washington Times (9/26, Sherfinski, 492K) and CQ Roll Call (9/26, Shutt, 154K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Cybersecurity

AT&T Redirected Pen-Test Payloads To FBI Tips Portal.

ZDNet (9/26, Cimpanu, 299K) reports, "One of AT&T's websites secretly redirected penetration tests to the FBI's Tips portal, putting security researchers participating in the company's bug bounty program at risk of breaking the law, ZDNet has learned." According to ZDNet, "The secret redirection was found on AT&T's E-rate portal at erate.att.com, used by schools and libraries to get discounts for internet and phone services." Security researcher Nux, "part of the ThugCrowd team, discovered the redirection last week while searching for vulnerabilities in AT&T websites." Nux "wasn't trying to hack AT&T websites but was searching for security flaws, which he could report to the company via its official bug bounty program, and receive a monetary reward," and "instead, the researcher got a nasty surprise when a mundane penetration test triggered an alert in his bug-hunting tools, warning that the target website was attempting to redirect the penetration test to a new URL, which was the FBI's Tips portal."

DHS IG Says Agency Needs Better Grasp Of Its Cyber Workforce.

NextGov (9/26, Corrigan) reports the Homeland Security Inspector General "said Homeland Security Department officials are struggling to assess the strengths and weaknesses of their cybersecurity workforce, and the department is years behind on developing a strategy to bolster that workforce in the years ahead." The department "employed roughly 14,000 cyber personnel as of December 2017." But with digital threats on the rise, The Homeland Security IG reports burdensome legal requirements and far-flung data sources "are hindering the agency's efforts to plan for the workforce's future." Every year, the agency is required "to submit two comprehensive reports on its cyber workforce to Congress – an updated workforce planning strategy and an assessment of its employees' capabilities and skill gaps." However, auditors "said in a report published Wednesday that officials have missed every single reporting deadline since the requirements were enacted in 2015."

Cyber Rules For Self-Driving Cars Stall In Congress.

The Hill (9/26, Miller, 2.98M) reports the issue of cybersecurity "is becoming increasingly important as large car manufacturers ramp up their testing of the vehicles on the road and begin to float ambitious plans to eventually bring them to market." However, those strides come "as lawmakers have failed to make progress on federal cybersecurity standards to protect the vehicles from hacking operations and other malicious cyber incidents." On Capitol Hill, a bipartisan effort "to pass legislation to set cybersecurity and other standards for autonomous vehicles failed during the previous Congress." Lawmakers expressed optimism "they could revive those efforts this year, but objections from a group of Senate Democrats that language in the legislation, the AV START Act, did not do enough to address consumer safety and cybersecurity issues has scuttled those plans."

Hackers Found Voting Machines Throughout US Vulnerable To Attack.

CNN International (9/26, Collier, 83.16M) reports Georgetown professor Matt Blaze, one of the Def Con Voting Village's organizers, said "each of the more than 100 machines the researchers looked at were vulnerable to at least some kind of attack." As in previous years, the Voting Village "collected versions of voting equipment used around the country...and invited all of the more than 35,000 attendees of the Def Con hacker conference...to see what kind of holes they could find." Some of machines "were found to be vulnerable to remote attack and one electronic pollbook had a hidden ethernet cable to connect it to the Internet." Blaze "told CNN that the issue is less that skilled hackers can break into election equipment and more that elections systems as a whole need to both minimize risk and double-check election results with paper ballots after every election." He said, "We know these machines are vulnerable, and what's important is we use machines like those that produce paper ballots that can tolerate the vulnerabilities rather than fail completely because of them. And that means paper ballots and risk-limiting audits."

New York AG Sues Dunkin' Brands Over 2015 Data Breach.

USA Today (9/26, Campbell, 10.31M) reports that New York Attorney General Letitia James "filed a lawsuit Thursday accusing Dunkin' Brands" of "failing to properly protect its customers' accounts, which stored money from 'DD' cards that could be used to purchase goods at the stores." The fast-food chain "failed to notify thousands of customers that their accounts were breached in 2015, leading to tens of thousands of dollars stolen from gift cards," according to the suit. The lawsuit "accuses the chain of violating New York's cybersecurity laws, which require companies to protect customers' data and notify them of any breaches." Dunkin' denies the allegations and says it is cooperating with the investigation.

Iran Checking Cyber Security At Key Energy Sites.

Reuters (9/26) reports the Oil Ministry news agency SHANA "said Iran has launched an inspection of security at its key Gulf oil and gas facilities, including preparedness for cyber attacks following media reports of Washington weighing possible cyber attacks on Tehran." USmedia reports have "said the US is considering possible cyber attacks against Iran after the September 14 attacks on Saudi oil sites which US officials have blamed on Tehran." The Islamic republic "has denied being behind the raids which were claimed by Yemen's Iran-aligned Houthi group." SHANA "said on Wednesday that Pirouz Mousavi, head of the Pars Special Economic Energy Zone (PSEEZ), inspected the area and met senior managers, including those in charge of cyber security and emergency response."

US Navy Plans To Select Cyber Chief Following Critical Audit.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Lubold, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Navy official say the Navy is selecting a new cyber chief in an effort to improve security of military secrets from Chinese hackers and other potential thieves that have targeted naval operations. The newly-created job is tied to efforts to boost cybersecurity in the Navy and among partners in the private sector. It also follows a sharply critical audit that discovered numerous compromises. Officials reportedly intend to name Aarn Weis as the Navy's new CIO.

Hackers Tried To Steal Airbus Secrets Via Contractors.

Reuters (9/26) reports multiple cyberattacks targeted Airbus via its links to the computer networks of its suppliers and contractors, with an apparent aim to acquire "information about engines for the A400M military transport aircraft and A350 airliner." The attacks are suspected of having originated in China.

Forbes (9/26, Doffman, 9.71M) reports the attacks appear to be part of "a persistent campaign – with four hits in the last year – targeting key Airbus suppliers." Sources say what is at risk the "is personnel data as well as intellectual property associated with the company's military and passenger aircraft." This is most likely "broad scale industrial espionage, as China struggles to match technical developments, but clearly for military aviation data to be in the hands of an 'enemy' intelligence agency is not a happy place." The report named "Airbus suppliers Rolls-Royce and Expleo as confirmed targets, as well as 'two other French contractors that AFP was unable to identify.'" None of the parties involved "have offered any detailed comments on the reports at this time."

Google Won't Explain Why It Removed Dozens Of Apps From Major Chinese Developer.

BuzzFeed News (9/26, Silverman) reports Google last week "quietly removed at least 46 apps from the Play store belonging to iHandy, a major Chinese mobile developer, but won't comment on why it took action against the company." The iHandy removals, which had not been previously reported, "are yet another example of Google taking action against a major Chinese app developer, further raising concerns about the ad and privacy practices of Android developers based in that country." iHandy, a Beijing-based company, "filed documents earlier this year to be listed on the Shenzhen Stock Exchange." It describes itself "as 'one of the world's largest mobile application developers' and says it has 180 million monthly active users in more than 200 countries." Google removed "at least 46 iHandy apps, including selfie, security and antivirus, keyboards, horoscopes, emoji, and health apps, from the Android Play store that in total had been downloaded in the aggregate tens of millions of times."

Federal Reserve

New York Fed Awards $50.1B Overnight Repos.

Reuters (9/26) reports the New York Fed on Thursday "awarded $50.1 billion in one-day loans to primary dealers at its overnight repurchase agreement (repo) operation following a term operation where it allotted $60 billion in 14-day loans earlier Thursday." The piece says the amount of bids "from primary dealers at Thursday's overnight repo operation was lower the $91.95 billion submitted on Wednesday." The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Sebastian, Kruger, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports, noting officials said Wednesday that they were increasing the amount of funding available through the repo market after bank requests for cash at offerings on Tuesday and Wednesday exceeded the amount the Fed had offered. Also covering the topic are Axios (9/26, Rabouin, 521K), The Financial Times (9/26, Tran, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and The Financial Times (9/26, Dizard, Subscription Publication, 1.34M).

Paper Argues Trump's Fed Attacks Are Helping To Drive Rate Cuts.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports new research argues President Trump's attacks on the Fed and its interest rate policy are influencing market expectations and, in turn, central bankers' choices central bankers. "We find strong evidence that the consistent pressure applied by President Trump to pursue more expansionary monetary policy is manifested in the market expectations of a lower target rate," the paper said. The piece explains that evidence Fed officials are influenced by market expectations when determining policy "implies that even if President Trump does not directly influence Fed decisions, his political pressure can still affect policy indirectly by changing market expectations regarding the Fed." Bloomberg (9/26, 4.73M) also covers the topic.

Clarida: Inflation Expectations In Line With Fed Mandate.

Reuters (9/26, Saphir) reports US inflation expectations are "currently in line with the central bank's 2% goal, Federal Reserve Vice Chair

Richard Clarida said on Thursday, an indication he does not see a pressing need for new rate cuts to push inflation back up." He said at a San Francisco Fed conference, "I myself do judge that U.S. inflation expectations do reside in a range that I consider consistent with our price stability mandate."

Kaplan Says US Needs More, Not Less, Immigration To Grow Economy.

Reuters (9/26) reports, "Proposals to curb immigration will weigh on economic growth in the United States where the existing workforce is growing more slowly as the population ages, Dallas Federal Reserve president Robert Kaplan said on Thursday." He stated: "If you think you are actually going to cut the number of immigrants and grow GDP, those two things do not go together ... You need to grow the workforce."

Reuters (9/26, Schneider) similarly reports in a separate piece.

Kashkari Says US Economy Needs Lower Rates.

Reuters (9/26) reports Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari argued on Thursday that the central bank "should lower interest rates further because the U.S. economy has not yet fully reached its potential." He said during an event at Montana State University Billings, "I argued for steeper interest rate cuts just because I see no evidence that the U.S. economy is running at capacity or beyond capacity. There's no reason we should have interest rates trying to hold the economy back."

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Kashkari also said that as the Fed mulls its next move on rates, it shouldn't be worried that lower rates will lead to financial instability.

Business Insider (9/26, Heeb, 3.67M) also reports on the topic.

Barkin Points To Political, Trade Risks That Threaten US Economy.

Reuters (9/26) reports the US economy and labor market "continue to be strong but there are 'several headwinds,' particularly uncertainty around trade and politics that affect business confidence," according to Richmond Fed President Thomas Barkin. He told the Risk Management Association in Richmond, Virginia, "I'm particularly concerned about the roller coaster we've been on recently. Between Brexit, the ongoing negotiations with China, tensions in the Middle East and the political headlines...it's been tough for business to feel like they're on solid ground."

Reuters (9/27) reports separately that Barkin also explained "companies are having a hard time finding workers in many parts of the United States and need to offer more incentives to pull them into the economy."

McHenry Wants Fed To Detail Its Cybersecurity Preparations.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Rundle, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Rep. Patrick McHenry (R-NC), the ranking member of the House Financial Services Committee, wants the Fed to be more open about its cybersecurity preparations. This week, he introduced legislation that would compel the Fed to report each year to House and Senate banking committees regarding its cybersecurity strategy. McHenry said in an interview that the legislation would ensure Congress is "read in" on the Fed's countermeasures and cybersecurity readiness.

Big Banks Complicating Fed Repo Efforts.

The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Kruger, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the dominance of large banks trading in the market for short-term cash loans is hindering the Federal Reserve's repurchase efforts. As the Fed has boosted lending in the repo market, it is dependent on a small group of bond dealers to recirculate those funds through the financial system. But those dealers could opt to hold on to the funds for their own needs, increasing the risk that the funds won't flow through the system.

Non-Public Rules Could Explain Why Banks Didn't Step In After Repo Crisis.

Bloomberg (9/26, Condon, 4.73M) reports non-public regulatory requirements imposed on big banks could explain why they "didn't step in as rates on overnight repurchase agreements soared to record highs." Bloomberg says, "As these repo yields spiked well above the rate they earn on Fed deposits, banks were expected by many to inject some of that cash into the overnight repo market and pocket the profit." But according to former senior Fed economist William Nelson, "expectations set within stress tests, resolution plans and bank-examiner expectations" create "a strong preference for cash relative to Treasury securities." If banks "borrowed money to lend into the repo market," that could have "pushed their leverage ratios below hurdles set in their stress tests, or risked triggering higher surcharges imposed on globally systemically important banks by the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

FDIC To Examine Suspicious TX Bank Failure.

American Banker (9/26, Davis, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the FDIC "plans to take a closer look at a Texas bank that failed under suspicious conditions." Regulators closed Enloe State Bank in late May after the Texas Banking Commissioner discovered "insider abuse and fraud by former officers," according to a press release issued at the time. In its failed bank review, the FDIC found that in-depth analysis "is warranted, given the extent of irregular loans and the extraordinarily high estimated loss rate." The failure is estimated to cost the FDIC "$27.6 million, or roughly three-fourths of Enloe's asset size."

IRS Voluntary Tax Compliance Rate Remains At 84%.

Law360 (9/26, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall that the US "tax gap increased in total dollar figures but the voluntary compliance rate, 84%, remained largely unchanged during tax years 2011 through 2013, the Internal Revenue Service announced Thursday."

TIGTA: IRS Meets Firewall Standards, But Has Room For Improvement.

Law360 (9/26, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall, "Despite meeting basic requirements for administering its firewall, the IRS is not performing certain annual reviews, and in rare cases, an unauthorized account has accessed the firewall," the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration said.

Chase Opens First Branch In Albany.

The Albany \(NY\) Business Review (9/26, Diana, Subscription Publication, 829K) reports, "Chase Bank opened its first Albany-area retail branch this month – in Clifton Park – with plans to open up to seven more offices in the next year." Over the last few months, the OCC "has approved four Chase branches for the Albany area – three in Albany County and one in Saratoga County." Chase has also submitted for approval a fifth location in Niskayuna.

US Mint To Honor Challenger's McAuliffe With Silver Dollar Coin.

CNN (9/26, Kim, 83.16M) reports the US Mint will memorialize Christa McAuliffe, "the teacher and astronaut who died in the Challenger disaster in 1986, with a commemorative silver dollar coin." The 37-year-old social studies teacher from New Hampshire was chosen for NASA's "Teacher in Space" program and "was one of the seven crew members aboard the Space Shuttle Challenger when it exploded." The piece says the Christa McAuliffe Commemorative Coin Act of 2019 was "passed by Congress, and the bill will go to the President to be signed into law." The act calls for the Treasury Department to "issue not more than 350,000 $1 silver coins in commemoration of Christa McAuliffe." If President Trump signs the act, the coins "will be minted in 2021 to commemorate the 35th anniversary of the tragedy." Fortune (9/26, 3.91M) also reports.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"The Whistleblower Adds To The Case That Trump Offered Ukraine's President A Quid Pro Quo." The Washington Post (9/26, 14.2M) says in an editorial that "the whistleblower complaint released on Thursday adds vital – and damning – context to the rough transcript" of the phone call between President Trump and Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky. The "carefully constructed complaint shows that this coercion was not limited to one phone call but consisted of a series of acts over time," and "reports that White House officials understood Mr. Trump's behavior to be improper and tried to conceal the wrongdoing. ... Trump's abuse of power had a host of enablers. Congress should hold them all to account."

"Why Did Park Police Officer Kill Bijan Ghaisar?" The Washington Post (9/26, 14.2M) editorializes that it has been two years since US Park Police officers shot and killed an unarmed motorist, but "the FBI has released virtually no information about its investigation into the police shooting." The Post says that there are still "questions that must be answered" in the killing of Bijan Ghaisar: "What threat was so grave that the officers seemingly ignored protocol, and common sense, to shoot an unarmed man multiple times at point-blank range? And why are the FBI and federal prosecutors taking so long?" The Post concludes that the silence from officials is "an affront to the public, which may reasonably wonder if official impunity and coverup are the default instinct by law enforcement officers following a police shooting."

Wall Street Journal.

"Pelosi Ducks An Impeachment Vote." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes House Speaker Pelosi for announcing an impeachment inquiry without allowing the House to vote on it – as had been the case before any such House actions in US history. The Journal further criticizes the news media for failing to pressure Pelosi to set up such a vote.

"Latin America Vs. Maduro." The Wall Street Journal (9/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro's growing isolation in the international community was highlighted this week 15 Latin American countries joined the US in a resolution invoking the so-called Rio Treaty against his regime.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "On another crazy day today, as another episode of the 'Real White Housewives of Orange President' today. I'll tell you something. The news started early this morning and has not let up. What an onslaught. Trying to keep up with all this, I felt like the fattest kid on the dodge ball court all day today."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President's personal lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, is a central figure. Attorney General Barr appears to be involved as well. That's not a whistle. That's an air horn. A wheelbarrow full of trombones."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Another suggestion in the report was that this is not the only time that they've buried records. Of course it's not the only time. He probably does this stuff every day. He'll probably do it again tomorrow. ... Right now he's probably on the phone with Belgium, trying to get the secret to their waffles or something."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We still don't know the identity of this whistle-blower. That will be revealed next week on 'The Masked Singer'."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We did learn from the New York Times that he is a man and he's with the CIA, so when Trump says it was a spy, he's right. It was one of our spies. He really is spinning out. He's getting increasingly sloppy. You'd think the guy with the most famous comb-over would be better with a cover-up."

Jimmy Kimmel: "[Rudy Giuliani] claims the State Department sent him to the Ukraine. They say they didn't. Having Rudy Giuliani be your middleman, it's like asking Bill Cosby to chaperone your date. It's a problem."

Jimmy Kimmel: "But Rudy says when all is said and done, he will be the hero of this story. He will be. He'll be like those heroes you met out on the street today, begging for tips."

Stephen Colbert: "A lot of people are celebrating because Donald Trump is in serious trouble, but Trump has shown over and over again that when he's cornered, he'll fight like that rabid weasel on his head."

Stephen Colbert: "And the Republicans have shown, they'll go along with him no matter what. So this isn't going to be so much light at the end of the tunnel as a long fall down a dark and dirty pit."

Stephen Colbert: "According to the whistleblower, they hid a lot of stuff this way, but some on the right claim the whistleblower shouldn't be trusted because the inspector general who oversaw the report found reason to believe that the whistleblower might not support the re-election of Mr. Trump. Well, yeah! Because he knows he committed a bunch of crimes! It's the same reason you don't invite the guy who tried to kill you to your dinner party."

James Corden: "As you know, the pressure on President Trump has reached an all-time high following a whistle-blower complaint that accused him of using his office for personal gain. This morning, the entire whistle-blower complaint was released to Congress. It alleges that Trump pressured a foreign country to interfere in the upcoming election, which if found to be true...I mean, come on, it's true."

James Corden: "Also, is 'complaint' really the right word to describe the President of the United States potentially violating his oath of office? Like a complaint is when you go, 'Excuse me, I think this salmon is under-cooked.' That's a complaint. Now I know that it is a huge political story, it is. But I still can't get over the fact that the whistle-blower's complaint sounds like it could be the latest pick from Oprah's book club, doesn't it?"

James Corden: "Now perhaps the biggest bombshell to come out of the whistle-blower's complaint is the fact that White House lawyers were so concerned about Trump's phone call with the Ukraine that they hid the transcript in a top secret computer system. They hid Trump's embarrassing communications, which is weird because they know that we could all see his tweets, right?"

James Corden: "Not only did Trump potentially commit an impeachable offense, his team then tried to cover up it. And this is a big deal bust that has only happened about a thousand times during the Trump presidency."

James Corden: "Now again, this all started with a single whistle-blower. And at that point, nobody knows this person's identity. Although there's speculation that he or she is part of the intelligence community. So at the very least, since it involves intelligence, we can rule out all of Trump's kids."

Trevor Noah: "That's right. The whistleblower's complaint has accused the President of soliciting foreign interference in America's election, which is really bad for Trump. What's even worse is that this entire complaint is only nine pages long, which means people might actually read it."

Trevor Noah: "Because you guys don't remember, but that was one of the big problems with Robert Mueller's report. It was, like, 500 pages. No one wants to read 500 pages. 'Give me the secret to eternal life.' 'Five hundred pages.' 'Yeah, I'll just die. Bury me in a gold coffin, I'm fine.'"

Trevor Noah: "According to the whistleblower, Trump refused to speak with Ukraine unless they agreed to play ball and investigate Joe Biden. This must have been confusing because to Ukraine, 'play ball' means soccer. But to Trump, 'play ball' means chasing the meatball that fell out of his sub."

Jimmy Fallon: "Guys, it was an absolute gorgeous day here in New York City. It was not because of the weather, but because President Trump finally went back to Washington."

Jimmy Fallon: "He's been three days in the UN assembly. Trump finally returned to Washington. A little awkward when he got to the Oval Office and saw Mike Pence sitting behind his desk."

Seth Meyers: "According to NBC News, top Trump allies say the White House is privately very worried about the involvement of Rudy Giuliani in President Trump's discussion with Ukraine. Also worried about Rudy? Children who forgot to check under the bed."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump this morning attempted to solidify Republican support in the face of impeachment proceedings, tweeting, 'STICK TOGETHER, PLAY THEIR GAME, AND FIGHT HARD REPUBLICANS. OUR COUNTRY IS AT STAKE!' When he goes all caps, it's got to be something serious like the future of the country or, you know, a meal."

Seth Meyers: "According to CNN, people close to President Trump believe he's in denial about the gravity of impeachment, and also just regular gravity."

Conan O'Brien: "Everybody is talking about the whistleblower's complaint against President Trump. Where is this all going to go? I don't know if you saw this. The Acting Director of National intelligence, Joseph Maguire, said he doesn't know the identity of the whistleblower. Congress will reveal his identity on 'The Masked Singer,' apparently."

Trump Claims Vindication As Analyses Break Along Ideological Lines.

Following the release of the transcript of a conversation between the President and the Ukraine's Volodymyr Zelensky, the President claimed its contents vindicated him – and cast Democratic plans to impeach him as part of a pattern as evidence they are “frozen with hatred and fear.” Trump tweeted, “Will the Democrats apologize after seeing what was said on the call with the Ukrainian President? They should, a perfect call – got them by surprise!” Trump also wrote on Twitter, “The Democrats have been talking about impeaching Donald Trump since before he was inaugurated. @SteveDoocy @foxandfriends And for no reason other than the great success we are having with the Economy, the Military, Vets, Tax and Regulation Cuts, HealthCare, and so much more!” In another post, Trump wrote, “There has been no President in the history of our Country who has been treated so badly as I have. The Democrats are frozen with hatred and fear. They get nothing done. This should never be allowed to happen to another President. Witch Hunt!”

Speaking to reporters later yesterday, USA Today (9/25, Morin, 10.31M) reports, Trump said “in a rhetorical flourish” that Nancy Pelosi is “no longer the speaker of the House.” ABC World News Tonight (9/25, lead story, 4:09, Karl, 7.05M) showed Trump saying of Pelosi, “She’s lost her way, she has been taken over by the radical left.” ABC added, however, that “even as he spoke words of defiance,” Trump “appeared to me to be subdued, a little deflated.” In a similar analysis, the New York Times (9/25, Haberman, Crowley, Rogers, 18.61M) reports “Trump’s mood went from feisty to self-pitying to deflated” yesterday, and “his anger and anxiousness took over his day, aides said.” The President, adds the Post, “appeared so exhausted that he spoke unusually slowly at a rambling news conference meant to sum up his trip at the United Nations.”

NBC Nightly News (9/25, lead story, 4:22, Alexander, 6.11M), meanwhile, describes Trump as “defiant following the White House’s release of this five-page memo detailing his July phone call with...Zelensky.” NBC showed Trump saying, “It’s a joke. Impeachment for that? When you have a wonderful meeting or you have a wonderful phone conversation?” In a separate segment, NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 2, 0:55, Jackson, 6.11M) reported that “publicly, it’s a show of defiance from...Trump, but privately, some of the President’s allies behind the scenes acknowledge much more concern than what you are seeing reflected in front of the cameras.” The CBS Evening News (9/25, lead story, 4:02, Jiang, 4.47M) reported Trump also said, “No push, no pressure, no nothing. It’s all a hoax, folks. It’s all a big hoax.”

The Hill (9/25, Samuels, 2.98M) reports “the bulk of the event was consumed by a rambling 20-minute opening statement in which Trump spring-boarded from topic to topic.” Trump “also invited Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to give brief remarks.” Politico (9/25, Kumar, 4.29M) similarly says Trump “took a break from the questions and asked two of his most loyal aides, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin, who were standing next to him, to say a few words about their work at the U.N.” Fox News (9/25, Re, 27.59M) reports Pompeo and Mnuchin “each discussed progress on trade, including the ongoing trade war with China, as well as Iran policy.” Fox Business (9/25, 1.73M) provides a video clip of Mnuchin’s brief remarks.

Frank Scheck writes in the Hollywood Reporter (9/25, 1.89M) that Trump “delivered his broadsides in a subdued, sulking manner, seeming already defeated by what is going to be a long and involved process. It’s no wonder he had a very uncomfortable-looking Mike Pompeo and Steve Mnuchin onstage with him; they should each have been holding his hand.”

In a separate piece, USA Today (9/25, Fritze, Collins, Subramanian, Jackson, 10.31M) calls Trump’s comments “angry and at times meandering,” while the Los Angeles Times (9/25, Bierman, Megerian, Haberkorn, 4.64M) recounts Trump further “argued on Wednesday that his conversation with Zelensky was portrayed as the ‘call from hell,’ but ‘it turned out to be a nothing call.’” Said the President, “It’s the single greatest witch hunt in American history. ... There was no pressure whatsoever.” The Washington Post (9/25, Nakamura, 14.2M) reports that “during a UN session Wednesday that focused on the corrupt rule of Venezuelan strongman Nicolás Maduro, Trump hijacked the event by responding to shouted questions from reporters about the Ukrainian matter.” Trump said the saga amounts to “the single greatest witch hunt in American history,” and added “that there were ‘a lot of corrupt’ journalists pursuing the story.”

Conservative outlets and commentators largely agreed with Trump, with Breitbart (9/25, Spiering, 673K), for example, running an article titled “Trump Taunts Impeachment Democrats: ‘Got Them By Surprise’ With Transcript Release.” The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial page, meanwhile, argues the transcript shows Trump was telling the truth about the call, and casts the interaction between the two leaders as routine diplomacy. The Journal further states the public will not get behind the Democrats’ drive, which it casts as a misguided and thinly-disguised attempt to undo the 2016 election.

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News’ Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/25, 8:00 p.m. ET), “The same angry news anchors who brought you Stormy Daniels and the Russia hoax now want you to know Big Orange’s days in the White House were finally over.” But “they turned out to be wrong. Actual evidence emerged, and it contradicted what they told us yesterday.”

Sean Hannity said on Fox News’ Hannity (9/25, 9:00 p.m. ET, 535K), “Clearly, they weren’t going to make the mistake of allowing a special counsel like [Robert] Mueller to decide again and disappoint them again after three years. ... We have in this country deep state operatives alive and well, and here is how bad things have gotten in this country today because of this anti-Trump rage psychosis: The President of the United States can’t make a phone call to a foreign leader without getting spied on and stabbed in the back by unelected bureaucrats.”

Kim Strassel of the Wall Street Journal said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/25, 8:07 p.m. ET, Carlson, 1.57M), "We have watched the Democrats for almost three years now run through a complete litany of things that they have wanted to try to impeach Donald Trump on. Everything – Russia hoax, obstruction of justice, Stormy Daniels, taxes, financials. None of it has stuck. At least in each of those they could keep it focused, or claim to keep it focused, on Trump's behavior. Instead, they have now pulled the trigger on the one issue out there that implicates the frontrunner of their own nomination process and is likely to do the most damage to moderate Democrats because the flimsiness of these charges."

Mike Huckabee said on Fox News' The Story (9/25, 7:26 p.m. ET, McCallum, 1.26M), "Trump released the transcript. Why? Because there was nothing that he had to worry about. He didn't put any pressure, there was no quid pro quo. Now we see the Democrats in Congress aren't congresspeople, they are clairvoyants, because they already, in advance of the release of the transcript, decided what was in it."

Rick Santorum said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/25, 8:51 p.m. ET, Cooper, 1.19M), "I just read it again because I thought maybe I missed something. The transcript says 'do me a favor' and he doesn't mention Joe Biden's name. He talks about CrowdStrike. He talks about election meddling. He finishes his thing talking about the Mueller Report and how all this started in Ukraine and I want you to look into this."

Mainstream media coverage of the transcript, meanwhile, generally agrees that it does not show that Trump explicitly threatened to withhold military aid from Ukraine if corruption allegations targeting Joe and Hunter Biden were not investigated. However, mainstream reports also indicate the linkage should be seen as implicit, and that the fact it wasn't overt will not make Democrats any less zealous in seeking the President's impeachment. In fact, says Politico (9/25, Forgey, 4.29M), Democrats "have said a quid pro quo between Trump and Zelensky is not necessary to begin the process of impeaching the president." On ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 4, 0:51, Muir, 7.05M), legal analyst Dan Abrams agreed, saying, "As a legal matter, you don't need a quid pro quo. You just need to be able to prove the person knowingly solicited something of value from a foreign national to try to influence the 2020 election." Moreover, while "it would be a stronger case against the President if there had been a specific statement or demand that linked dollars to help," the "real question is the political one."

On the other hand, on the CBS Evening News (9/25, lead story, 4:02, Jiang, 4.47M), legal analyst Jonathan Turley called Trump's call with Zelensky "grotesque," adding, "I mean, it's not criminal, but it is grossly inappropriate." At any rate, in an editorial, the Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M) calls the transcript "a devastating indictment of the US president," and adds that while "Trump and his amen chorus claimed Wednesday that there was no 'quid pro quo'...the memorandum...strongly suggests otherwise," because "Trump first makes a request for a political investigation in direct answer to Mr. Zelensky's statement that Ukraine wants to buy more US antitank missiles." To the Post, "the integrity of US democracy depends on how Congress and the nation respond." Along the same lines, Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN (9/25, 10:56 a.m. ET, Harlow, 554K), "One of the Republican talking points...is that there was no quid pro quo. But there is very strong evidence that there was a quid pro quo here. ... The Ukrainian president talking about the military aid that he was looking forward to getting from the US government, and then how he was going to spend that money on American weapons. That is the comment that prompts the President to say, 'I would like you to do us a favor,' which is, give me dirt on my political rivals."

Reuters (9/25, Sullivan, Zengerle) reports, meanwhile, that "the details of the July 25 call drew furious reactions from Democrats," and the Washington Post (9/25, Barrett, Zapotosky, Leonnig, Dawsey, 14.2M) that "Democrats say the president's conduct...betrayed his oath of office and endangered national security." In other representative coverage, the AP (9/25) reports that Trump "appears to stop short in the call of any explicit quid pro quo, such as linking Ukraine's help to American military aid or other assistance," and adds that "days before the call, Trump froze nearly $400 million in aid to Ukraine," but "it was not clear from the summary whether Zelensky was aware of that." To the New York Times (9/25, Haberman, Shear, Benner, 18.61M), meanwhile, the transcript shows Trump "urging" Zelensky "to start corruption investigations while stressing the United States' role in military assistance for Kiev." Along similar lines, Walter Shapiro called the transcript in his CQ Roll Call (9/25, 154K) column a "smoking-gun," "chilling," and "the most incriminating White House document since Watergate." Bloomberg (9/25, Strohm, Sink, 4.73M) and the Wall Street Journal (9/25, A1, Ballhaus, Gurman, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, run similar analyses this morning.

Kaitlan Collins said on CNN's The Lead (9/25, 4:01 p.m. ET, Tapper, 810K), "This is not the reaction the White House was expecting. They thought they were going to put out this transcript, it was going to prove that the President didn't say anything inappropriate, tying military aid to the Biden family and potential investigations. And instead, in the President's own words, people can read how not only did he bring up Joe Biden, but he also told the Ukrainian President to be in touch with the US Attorney General and his personal attorney on potential corruption investigations. ... It's essentially having the opposite effect of what the White House thought that it was going to do by releasing this transcript."

Chris Hayes said on MSNBC's All In (9/25, 8:01 p.m. ET, 1.48M), "We still do not know everything. But what we know is much worse than we thought."

Bill Kristol said on CNN's The Lead (9/25, 4:06 p.m. ET, Tapper, 810K), "This was a phone call made by the President of the United States from the Oval Office to a foreign leader two months ago basically trying to get dirt on a political opponent. ... This isn't something that happened in a campaign three years ago, a confusing meeting in Trump Tower, and kind of who knows what Don Jr. told the President. This isn't even the cover-up in 2017 in the kind of chaos of Air Force One and they put out a misleading statement about who knew what."

Biden: "Hard To Avoid The Conclusion That It Is An Impeachable Offense." Biden said on ABC's Jimmy Kimmel Live (9/25, 11:56 p.m. ET, Kimmel, 2.32M), "The idea that someone would call a head of a foreign state, ahead of time withhold significant military aid that's badly needed in order to prevent the Russian separatists who are in Ukraine from taking over Ukraine, and then ask, basically, 'Can you cooperate with Rudy Giuliani, he's coming over' ... It's such a blatant abuse of power that I don't think it can stand. ... Based on the material that they acknowledged today, it seems to me it's awful hard to avoid the conclusion that it is an impeachable offense and a violation of constitutional responsibility. ... I'm confident in the ability of the House and Senate to deal with this. My job is to just go out and beat him."

Ukrainian President: "Nobody Pushed Me" To Investigate Biden. The Washington Post (9/25, Wagner, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports that while seated next to Trump at the United Nations yesterday, Zelensky "told reporters that Trump did not push him to investigate Biden. 'I think you read everything,' he said. 'I think you read [the] text. I'm sorry, but I don't want to be involved to democratic, open elections, elections of USA.'" The Post also reports that Trump has "acknowledged publicly that he asked Zelensky to investigate Biden's son, who served on the board of Burisma, a Ukrainian gas company that came under scrutiny by authorities there." ABC World News Tonight (9/25, lead story, 4:09, Karl, 7.05M) showed Zelensky saying, "I think, and you read it, that nobody pushed me." Trump interjected, "In other words, no pressure."

Reuters (9/25, Mason) also quotes Zelensky as saying, "We had I think good phone call, it was normal, we spoke about many things ... I think, and you read it, that nobody pushed me." To the New York Times (9/25, A1, Baker, 18.61M), "Zelensky told reporters that he wanted to stay out of United States politics but provided a benign interpretation of the July 25 call."

USA Today (9/25, Fritze, Shesgreen, 10.31M) recounts that "as reporters entered the room, the two leaders began by joking about the scandal," with Zelensky saying, "It's better to be on TV than by call." Trump retorted, "He's made me more famous and I've made him more famous."

The Washington Times (9/25, Howell, 492K) reports "Trump and Mr. Zelensky also took swipes at President Obama during the sit-down." Said Trump, "As you remember, you lost Crimea during a prior administration." Zelensky, meanwhile, "said Mr. Trump is welcome to visit Ukraine, saying his predecessor 'didn't find time.'"

The New York Post (9/25, Fredericks, 4.57M) points out Trump also "focused on his 2020 rival Biden and 2016 rival Hillary Clinton," saying, "When Biden's son walks away with millions from Ukraine, he knows nothing and paying millions of dollars that's corruption." Asked whether "he believed that Clinton's missing emails were somewhere in Ukraine, Trump said it was possible and then slammed his 2016 election opponent." Said Trump, "Frankly, I think that one of the great crimes committed is Hillary Clinton deleting 33,000 emails after Congress sent her a subpoena. Think of that."

Ahead of the event, the AP (9/25, Peltz) had reported that "in a TV interview over the weekend, Ukraine's foreign minister denied Zelensky was pressured to investigate Hunter Biden," but "Zelensky's office...declined to comment on the reports."

Politico Report: Barr Sought Transcript's Release, Pompeo And Mnuchin Argued It Set Bad Precedent. Politico (9/25, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that a "senior administration official" said "while it was Trump who made the call on declassifying material in the memo, the White House was split about whether the document should have been released." Politico says Barr "was a major proponent for putting out the transcript," and "was the force behind the scenes agitating for it to come out, said the former official." Politico adds that "others advocating for the memo to be released included White House counsel Pat Cipollone and White House Legislative Affairs Director Eric Ueland." According to Politico, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, as well as officials on the National Security Council, "were far more hesitant about releasing the memo of the conversation," and "worried about the precedent it would set for conversations with other foreign leaders as well as the appropriateness of releasing transcripts."

The Washington Post (9/25, Parker, Dawsey, Rucker, 14.2M) similarly reports two of Trump's "top Cabinet secretaries argued against disclosure, saying it would set a dangerous precedent to share details of a private phone conversation between two world leaders." The piece says officials, including Pompeo and Mnuchin, "vociferously argued against it, and Trump delayed a decision." The two appeared on the Sunday shows "to say it was not appropriate to share private conversations between world leaders, only to have their arguments undermined in real time by the president, who began confirming details of the call and hinting that he would soon share the rough transcript." The Post adds "the helter-skelter way the administration handled the aftermath of the whistleblower complaint could be a harbinger of the coming impeachment fight, with the White House scrambling to respond to a mercurial and frustrated president, who is increasingly sidelining his aides and making decisions based on gut instinct."

Esper Says He Recently Discussed Anti-Corruption Efforts With His Ukrainian Counterpart. Reuters (9/25) reports Defense Secretary Esper yesterday "said...he had told his Ukrainian counterpart in a recent phone call that it was important for Kiev to deal with corruption." According to Reuters, Esper "told reporters he had spoken with his Ukrainian counterpart Andriy Zahorodnyuk a week or two ago, telling him it was important for Ukraine to deal with corruption and that it was an important issue for the U.S. government." Reuters adds that when "asked whether the White House decision to withhold military aid to Ukraine had harmed national security, Esper said, 'I'm not going to get into any of that right now... As I've said on many occasions, I'm trying to keep [the Pentagon] out of politics and obviously that is all the news today.'"

Transcript Release Draws Attention To CrowdStrike's Role In DNC Hack Aftermath. The Washington Post (9/25, Timberg, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports that Trump's "reference to American cybersecurity company CrowdStrike in a July call with Ukraine's president, as revealed in notes released Wednesday, was brief and cryptic. But there are several ways the company could have come to Trump's attention, including for its central role in investigating the Russian hack of Democratic Party computers in 2016." The Post adds, "It was CrowdStrike's role in probing the Russian hack of Democratic National Committee computers – which led to embarrassing revelations that rocked the campaign of Democrat Hillary Clinton – that put the company most squarely in the international political spotlight." The Post also says that "without more context, the exchange between Trump and Zelensky is hard to parse, but Trump has publicly complained before about CrowdStrike's role in the DNC investigation."

Bloomberg (9/25, 4.73M) reports that the transcript shows the President saying, "I would like you to find out what happened with this whole situation with Ukraine, they say CrowdStrike ... I guess you have one of your wealthy people... The server, they say Ukraine has it." Bloomberg adds, "While the meaning of Trump's comments weren't clear, he appears to be referencing a theory that he and some conservative commentators have espoused that CrowdStrike's work is biased in favor of Democrats." Bloomberg further reports Trump "has complained that...CrowdStrike did the analysis of the Democratic National Committee's servers after it was hacked in 2016, rather than a law enforcement agency, namely the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

Before Transcript Release, Christie Said "Do Me A Favor" Language Could Hurt Trump. Political Wire (9/25, 29K) reports Chris Christie, "who rose to prominence as a U.S. Attorney, told ABC News hours before the release of the readout of President Trump's phone call with the Ukraine president that Trump would be in trouble if he used language like 'do me a favor.'" Christie said, "For instance, if he's saying, 'Listen, do me a favor, go investigate Joe Biden,' that's one thing. If he's saying, 'Listen, I'm concerned about corruption, you've just gotten elected. We send hundreds of millions of dollars over there, you need to start looking at this,' for instance, one of the things that occurred was the Hunter Biden situation, that becomes totally different."

White House Accidentally Emailed Ukraine Talking Points To Pelosi, Other Democrats. The New York Times (9/25, Chokshi, 18.61M) reports White House communications staff member Tori Q. Symonds "accidentally sent talking points for allies defending the president to Democratic officials, then tried to 'recall' the memo." The email "laid out guidance for how supporters should publicly discuss" Trump's phone call with Zelensky. The email was accidentally sent to the offices of Pelosi "and other Democratic lawmakers." The Week (9/25, Morrow, 1.94M) has screenshots of the email and the attempted recall.

Rouhani Says US Must "Pay More" For New Deal Even As New Sanctions Are Announced.

The New York Times (9/25, Fassihi, Jakes, 18.61M) reports that the Administration has "announced new economic penalties against Iran's largest oil customer...further squeezing the country as its president told the United Nations he would not negotiate with an 'enemy who uses sanction and poverty as a tool.'" According to the Times, "The actions and statements by both countries appeared to rule out what would be a historic meeting between President Trump and President Hassan Rouhani of Iran at the United Nations, where both leaders were attending the General Assembly." The Times reports that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo "said the additional American sanctions would punish 'certain Chinese entities for knowingly transporting oil from Iran' in defiance of American financial restrictions imposed earlier this year." The Times says China "has been the biggest foreign buyer of Iran's oil," and in 2018, "roughly 6 percent of China's oil imports came from Iran."

Reuters (9/25, Pamuk) reports the Treasury Department announced that it is "placing sanctions on five Chinese nationals and six entities, including two Cosco Shipping Corporation subsidiaries." Reuters (9/25) reports separately that the sanctions "target Cosco Shipping Tanker Co and Cosco Shipping Tanker Seaman and Ship Management Co Ltd but do not apply to the parent company, the notice on the department's website said." They also target China Concord Petroleum Co, Kunlun Shipping Company Ltd, Kunlun Holding Company Ltd and Pegasus 88 Limited, the department said.

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Talley, McBride, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Pompeo said, "Know that we will sanction every violation of sanctionable activity."

CNN (9/25, Gaouette, Hansler, 83.16M) reports Pompeo also said the US was "taking new action to disentangle" Iran's Revolutionary Guard Corps "from the Iranian economy." He said, "The United States will intensify our efforts to educate countries and companies on the risk of doing business with IRGC entities and we will punish them if they persist in defiance of our warnings." Reuters (9/26) reports this morning that China's Foreign Ministry "deplored on Thursday" the sanctions imposed by the US. Ministry spokesman Geng Shuang "made the comments at a daily news briefing in Beijing, adding that China's cooperation with Iran was legitimate and legal."

Yahoo! News (9/25, 12.82M) interviews Treasury Under Secretary for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence Sigal Mandelker, who said, "What we are doing...is denying them the revenue they need to build out their WMD program, to engage in continued funding of terror, to engage in the gross human rights violations that they've engaged in. And we simply cannot ignore that that it is a major part of our pressure campaign." The Financial Times (9/25, Williams, Meyer, Sheppard, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also reports on the sanctions.

The New York Post (9/25, Moore, 4.57M) reports Rouhani "did not fully rule out a diplomatic solution." He said, "This is the message of the Iranian nation: Let's invest on hope toward a better future rather than on war and violence. Let's return to justice, to peace, to law, commitment and promise and finally to the negotiating table." However, Reuters (9/25, Hafezi, Nichols) reports that Rouhani said Wednesday that the United States "must 'pay more' for any agreement that goes beyond the 2015 Iran nuclear deal that Washington abandoned. ... 'Our response to talks under pressure is no,' Rouhani said in a speech to the U.N. even as the United States increased the pressure by sanctioning Chinese firms for dealing in Iranian oil despite U.S. sanctions." Rouhani is quoted as saying, "If you wish more, if you require more, you should give and pay more."

The AP (9/25, Batrawy) reports that Rouhani also "warned world leaders...that security in the energy-rich Persian Gulf could collapse quickly with a 'single blunder,' and he accused the United States of engaging in 'merciless economic terrorism' against his country." Rouhani also charged that the US is "engaging in 'international piracy' against his country by re-imposing economic sanctions after Washington withdrew from the 2015 nuclear deal with world powers."

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Gordon, Norman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in an additional jab at Washington, Rouhani outlined a broad plan to stabilize the Persian Gulf region under which the US military would exit the Middle East, allowing countries in the region to export their oil under security provided by local states. He said, "The security of the region shall be provided when American troops pull out."

The Washington Times (9/25, A1, Taylor, 492K) reports Rouhani's "remarks came hours" after Pompeo "argued in a speech on the sidelines of the General Assembly Wednesday morning that Mr. Rouhani and other Iranian leaders are prone to projecting false narratives about their country at the annual gathering in New York." At an event hosted by United Against Nuclear Iran, Pompeo said, "Too many people listen ... and take their words as relevant or important or material or accurate."

Meanwhile, Thomas A. Shannon Jr. and John B. Bellinger III write in Foreign Policy (9/25, 340K) that sanctioning Iranian foreign minister Javad Zarif "is counterproductive—and so is avoiding conversation." Trump Administration officials "justified sanctioning Zarif...by asserting that he acts as a propagandist for the Iranian regime." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said: "Javad Zarif implements the reckless agenda of Iran's Supreme Leader, and is the regime's primary spokesperson around the world." However, they argue that "even if administration officials disagree strongly with Zarif's message and defense of his country, he still remains Iran's senior diplomat and designated interlocutor with the United States."

Rouhani Says Not Interested In Meeting With Trump Until US Lives Up To 2015 Commitments. In an interview with David Muir on ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 5, 6:37, 7.05M), Iranian President Hassan Rouhani downplayed the effectiveness of sanctions, and said it is "an economic form of terrorism," hurting vulnerable Iranians in "need of medication." When asked if Iran was responsible for the recent attack on Saudi Arabia, Rouhani called it an "unfounded allegation." Rouhani also said no further talks between the US and Iran were necessary until the US lives up to its 2015 commitments.

US Seeking Release Of American Prisoners Held In Iran. Reuters (9/25, Pamuk) reports, "The United States has been reaching out to Iranian officials to discuss the fate of American nationals held in the Islamic republic, a U.S. State Department official said on Wednesday, at a time of heightened tension between the longtime enemies." The official said, "We've been offering, as has [President Trump] to meet with Iranians [over the issue]. We sent a letter earlier this year [that] found its way there."

Trump Says Deal With China Could Come "Sooner Than You Think."

Reuters (9/25, Mason, Nichols, Brunnstrom) reports President Trump on Wednesday said that an agreement with China "could happen sooner than you think." Reuters adds that on Tuesday, Trump had "deliver[ed] a stinging rebuke to China's trade practices at the United Nations General Assembly," and "Wang Yi, China's foreign minister and state councilor, said Beijing would not bow to threats, including on trade."

Politico (9/25, Behsudi, Palmer, 4.29M) reports the "rhetorical divide between the world's two largest economies was in plain view at the United Nations General Assembly meeting this week, providing little indication that a comprehensive trade deal is imminent." The piece notes the two sides are preparing for the "first round of high-level trade talks since a meeting in Shanghai in late July that ended with little progress." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said Monday the talks would be held the week of Oct. 6, and others more specifically expect them to take place Oct. 10-11." Politico adds that the "trade fight escalated dramatically after Mnuchin and U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer returned from Shanghai empty-handed."

Reuters (9/26) reports this morning that China is "in close communication with the United States and is preparing to make progress at trade talks in October, the commerce ministry in Beijing said on Thursday." Chinese firms have "made significant purchases of U.S. soybeans and pork, said ministry spokesman Gao Feng, adding that those purchases were exempt from tariffs."

World Bank's Georgieva Confirmed As New IMF Head.

Reuters (9/25, Shalal, Tsoleva) reports Bulgarian economist Kristalina Georgieva was "confirmed on Wednesday as managing director of the International Monetary Fund, the first person from an emerging-market economy to head the world's crisis lender with its $1 trillion in resources." A politician who grew up in Bulgaria "under Communism, Georgieva built a reputation during her time at the World Bank and the European Commission as a tenacious straight shooter, champion of gender equality and leader in the global fight against climate change." Georgieva will face a number of challenges in her new role, "including a global economic slowdown triggered by escalating trade tensions between the United States and China, and historically high debt levels." She told reporters, "Warning signs are flashing, and we must be ready to be tested." The piece notes that she won support last month from the European Union, "as well as tacit backing from the United States."

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Zumbun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Georgieva said in a statement, "It is a huge responsibility to be at the helm of the IMF at a time when global economic growth continues to disappoint, trade tensions persist, and debt is at historically high levels." The piece notes the US is the largest individual shareholder of the IMF, and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin has quietly supported the fund's major rescue programs. The Journal adds that Georgieva has worked closely with officials from the US Treasury.

Billingslea Nomination To State Post Challenged By Democrats Claiming Incomplete

Information.

CQ Roll Call (9/25, Oswald, 154K) reports Marshall Billingslea's nomination as undersecretary of State for civilian security, democracy and human rights "is in doubt following a difficult Senate Foreign Relations confirmation hearing." CQ adds that Chairman James Risch "broke with a decades-long tradition" by scheduling the hearing despite the opposition of Ranking member Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ) and "all committee Democrats," who said "that they did not have all of the necessary information to question Billingslea, who currently serves as assistant Treasury secretary for terrorist financing." CQ also reports, "It is not clear if Risch will schedule a committee confirmation vote without consent from Menendez."

Professor Says Corporations Should Only Answer To Shareholders.

UCLA professor Lee O. Ohanian writes in The Hill (9/25, 2.98M) that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "recently criticized 181 CEOs of leading corporations, including Apple, Amazon and Walmart, who signed a statement redefining the purpose of a corporation." Ohanian notes Mnuchin "said he wouldn't have signed the new statement, 'because there is no simple answer' regarding the purpose of a corporation." However, he argues "there is a simple answer, one that has worked well since corporations have existed. Corporations answer to their shareholders. Period."

Shelby To Meet With Trump Today Over FY20 Spending Bills.

Bloomberg Tax (9/25) reports Senate Appropriations Chairman Richard Shelby (R-AL) plans to meet with President Trump today to discuss negotiations on fiscal 2020 spending bills. He told reporters that a House impeachment inquiry "could make it more difficult" to compromise on spending, but nobody wants a government shutdown. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Acting White House Chief of Staff Mick Mulvaney "may also attend the meeting, but no other lawmakers, Shelby said."

Administration Bars High-ranking Maduro Loyalists From Coming To The US.

The AP (9/25) reports the Trump Administration is "moving to further isolate Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro by prohibiting high-ranking loyalists from entering the U.S." President Trump "issued a proclamation Wednesday barring top Maduro government and military officials from entry to the U.S." The piece notes the Treasury Department has "already sanctioned and frozen any U.S. assets of many of those who would fall under the no-entry list."

Meanwhile, Reuters (9/25, Guanipa, Parraga) reports Venezuelan state oil company PDVSA "ordered an increase in exports to ally Cuba to ease fuel shortages on the island this month, challenging U.S. sanctions on shipping firms involved in the trade, according to three industry sources and Refinitiv Eikon data."

In addition, Breitbart (9/25, 673K) reports Diosdado Cabello, the "head of the United Socialist Party of Venezuela (PSUV) and U.S.-sanctioned cocaine trafficker, arrived in North Korea on Tuesday seeking to strengthen what North Korean propaganda referred to as the 'militant friendship' between the two dictatorships." The piece notes that the Treasury Department in May "branded Cabello a specially designated person, limiting his potential economic activities in the United States, over his engagement in drug trafficking." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said at the time, "The Venezuelan people suffer under corrupt politicians who tighten their grip on power while lining their own pockets. We are imposing costs on figures like Diosdado Cabello who exploit their official positions to engage in narcotics trafficking, money laundering, embezzlement of state funds, and other corrupt activities. This Administration is committed to holding those accountable who violate the trust of the Venezuelan people, and we will continue to block attempts to abuse the U.S. financial system."

Judge Delays Enforcement Of Subpoena Seeking Trump's Tax Returns.

The AP (9/25) reports that US District Judge Victor Marrero on Wednesday "delayed enforcement of a subpoena seeking" President Trump's tax returns "long enough for federal prosecutors to decide whether to join Trump's fight to prevent his tax returns from being turned over to a grand jury in a criminal probe." According to the AP, lawyers from the office of Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance told Marrero "that Trump's challenge doesn't belong in federal court." The AP says Marrero "was reluctant to rule at all at the hearing, but Carey Dunne, Vance's general counsel, refused to agree to a delay of the subpoena's enforcement against Trump's longtime accountant."

Politico New York (9/25) reports that Marrero "said he would give the Justice Department until Monday to decide whether to intervene in the case, after the U.S. Attorney in New York filed an unusual last minute brief suggesting it might get involved in the dispute." The Washington Post (9/25, Merle, Paul, 14.2M) reports that the Department of Justice "had asked the court to pause the case while it considers whether to join Trump in requesting a preliminary injunction." The Post says Trump is "fighting a grand jury subpoena asking Mazars USA, his longtime accounting firm, to turn over federal and state tax returns from the president and his businesses. The subpoenas are in connection with...Vance's investigation into hush money payments to two women who say they had affairs with Trump." In court on Wednesday, Trump attorney William Consovoy "argued that Vance, a Democrat, was conducting an unlawful criminal investigation of a sitting president."

Neal: Impeachment Inquiry Bolsters Case For Trump Tax Returns. Bloomberg Tax (9/25) reports House Ways and Means Chairman Richard Neal "said House attorneys believe their case to see President Donald Trump's tax returns is bolstered because of the Democrats' impeachment inquiry." He said, "There is no question that the House counsel believes that our case is stronger." The piece notes he filed a lawsuit in July "after the Treasury Department rebuffed a request first, and a subpoena later, for the president's federal tax returns."

Treasury and the IRS have asked a judge to dismiss the lawsuit.”

Trump and Abe Sign Limited Trade Deal; Lighthizer Says Trump Not Planning Auto Tariffs.

The AP (9/25) reports that President Trump announced Wednesday what he termed “the ‘first stage of a phenomenal new trade agreement’ with Japan that will expand market access and eliminate tariffs for agriculture and industrial goods and digital trade.” According to the AP, Trump also “indicated officials were still negotiating toward a bigger deal.” The AP says Trump and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe “signed the agreement on the sidelines of the U.N. General Assembly after months of sometimes contentious negotiations.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Salama, Zumbun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the agreement would result in reduced agricultural tariffs by Japan and reduced industrial tariffs in the US and would also establish new regulations for digital trade. Trump said, “Japanese tariffs will now be significantly lower or eliminated completely on beef, pork, wheat, cheese, corn, wine and so much more.” The USTR said that US tariffs on an array of Japanese industrial products would be reduced and on some agricultural goods.

Reuters (9/25, Mason) reports USTR Lighthizer “said after a signing ceremony...that cars – the biggest source of the $67 billion U.S. trade deficit with Japan – were not covered in the announcement. He said Japan wanted further discussions on this issue.” According to Reuters, Lighthizer “said it was not the U.S. intention to impose so-called Section 232 national security tariffs on Japan and the two sides would work together in good faith, aiming to start talks on phase two of an agreement next April.”

The New York Times (9/25, Swanson, 18.61M) says “it was not immediately clear what protections or new access the United States had offered the Japanese automotive industry, which the Trump administration has pointed to as a major contributor to the American trade deficit in goods with Japan.” According to the Times, “Neither Mr. Trump nor Mr. Abe mentioned the industry in their initial remarks.” The Times says Japan has “insisted on firm assurances that Mr. Trump would not impose tariffs on its cars, as he has threatened in the past, if the two countries proceeded with a trade deal.” Lighthizer said, “At this point, it is certainly not our intention, the president’s intention, to do anything on autos, on 232s, on Japan.”

Nevertheless, Bloomberg (9/25, 4.73M) says Japan “secured only a vague written assurance from the Trump administration not to impose auto tariffs for the time being.” Politico (9/25, Behsudi, 4.29M) reports that “a senior administration official emphasized that the agreement will help producers keep pace with foreign competitors who are increasing sales in Japan now that the 11-nation TPP is in effect,” without the US. The senior Administration official is quoted as saying, “When this agreement enters into force, we will immediately match and have the same tariff treatment as is the case with Canada, Australia, New Zealand, etc.”

WSJournal: Agreement Helps Reverse Problems Of Leaving TPP. The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes in favor of the agreement, saying that it reverses some harm Trump caused by leaving the Trans-Pacific Partnership. The Journal adds that a lack of agreement over motor vehicles is disappointing, and contends it would have been better and easier to have stayed in the TPP.

Chinese Companies Reportedly Set To Increase Purchases Of US Pork.

Bloomberg (9/25, 4.73M) reports that Chinese companies are “preparing to purchase more U.S. pork...as the government battles against domestic shortages and top trade negotiators from both nations plan to meet in Washington next month.” According to Bloomberg, “The volume of the purchases hasn’t been finalized but may be around 100,000 tons, some of which will be for state reserves.” Bloomberg says the pork imports “may be part of China’s efforts to ease tensions with the U.S. as they strive to reach a trade deal,” but “also come at a time when the Asian nation, the world’s biggest pork consumer, desperately needs more of the meat.” Bloomberg reports that China has “already boosted pork imports from the U.S., with July imports at the highest in two years.”

WTO Reportedly Set To Authorize US Tariffs In Retaliation For Airbus Subsidies.

Bloomberg (9/25, 4.73M) reports that the World Trade Organization is set to “authorize the U.S. to impose tariffs on nearly $8 billion of European goods due to illegal state aid provided to aircraft maker Airbus...a move that will likely trigger retaliatory measures from the European Union.” Citing a list published by the US Trade Representative’s office, Bloomberg says “the U.S. duties, which could hit as soon as October,” and “will target planes and parts as well as luxury products, such as wine and spirits like Dom Perignon and Moet & Chandon – and leather goods under labels such as Givenchy and Louis Vuitton.” According to Bloomberg, “The verdict marks the latest chapter in the WTO’s longest-running dispute and will further test transatlantic relations, which have deteriorated under Trump’s ‘America First’ strategy.”

Neal: Democrats Will Continue To Work Toward USMCA Passage Despite Impeachment.

Politico (9/25, Cassella, Rodriguez, 4.29M) reports that Democrats who are “working with” the Trump Administration to try to pass the US-Mexico-Canada Agreement “say they are unbowed in their efforts to try to get a deal done this year, even as the House dives into an impeachment inquiry.” House Ways and Means Chairman Richard Neal, “who leads the nine-member working group negotiating changes to the deal with the Trump administration, said he had one message for the caucus at the meeting: ‘Proceed with optimism.’” Neal is quoted as saying, “There is no reason, based on what happened yesterday, to think that there’s any deterrents that will hold us back.” According to Politico, House Democrats “have been working closely for months” with USTR Lighthizer “to negotiate changes to Trump’s signature deal to replace NAFTA," and "have outlined four main areas where they are seeking stronger language: labor, environment, access to medicines and enforcement."

Atlanta Fed: Business Expectations For Capital Spending Up For Third Straight Month.

Breitbart (9/25, Carney, 673K) reports the Atlanta Federal Reserve Bank's Business Expectations survey found that "business expectations for capital spending over the next twelve months rose in September," for the third month in a row, and "the gauge is at the highest level recorded in the five-year life of the survey." Meanwhile, there was "a sharp decline in expectations for growth in employment," which is attributed to "the tightness of the labor market." Also, "the Survey's Business Uncertainty index" fell "its lowest level since March."

Talks Between GM, UAW "Near Final Phase."

Under the headline "GM Strike Talks Move Near Final Phase," the Detroit Free Press (9/25, LaReau, 1.52M) reports Terry Dittes, vice president for the UAW's GM Department, sent a letter to UAW members Wednesday afternoon that "said UAW negotiators have been working 'countless hours' to reach a tentative contract with GM." He wrote, "All unsettled proposals are now at the Main Table and have been presented to General Motors and we are awaiting their response. This back and forth will continue until negotiations are complete." According to the Free Press, "This means subcommittee work is complete and bargainers are entering the final phase of negotiations. It wasn't clear if Dittes' letter meant negotiators intended to work nonstop or if they would break at some point Wednesday evening."

After reporting on Dittes' letter, the Detroit News (9/25, Noble, 825K) says GM "on Wednesday also took other steps to suggest the walkout may be nearing an end." In a letter to delivery companies that ferry parts between suppliers and GM auto plants, the automaker told the firms to determine "how you are situated capacity wise with both trailer and driver capacity. Will you be able to pick up from where you left off or will you need time to get your drivers and loads in place?" It was the "first such communication to delivery drivers since GM canceled deliveries last week amid the strike."

The AP (9/25, Krisher) reports that "with many replacement part warehouses shut down, dealers are beginning to run short of components to repair cars, trucks and SUVs. And companies that make auto parts are also starting to see work slowdown. Dealer inventory of new vehicles is holding up but starting to get depleted on a few models." The AP adds, "This doesn't even include the restaurants and other businesses around the more than 30 U.S. factories that have been closed due to the strike. And the longer the strike lasts, the worse it will get for everyone."

Future Of Shuttered Lordstown Plant Remains Focus Of GM-UAW Talks. Citing "two people familiar with the talks," Reuters (9/25) reports that General Motors and the UAW "have made progress in talks toward a new labor deal but are grappling with issues over the pay and job security of newer and temporary workers." UAW members at GM plants have been on strike since September 16, and the strike "has cost GM about $100 million a day," according to Reuters. Reuters goes on to report that President Trump "has repeatedly demanded GM find a new vehicle for its now-shuttered assembly plant in Lordstown, Ohio, a key state for him in the 2020 presidential election."

The New York Times (9/25, Boudette, 18.61M) reports that General Motors has "put a seemingly tantalizing offer on the table: It has proposed building a new plant in Ohio to produce batteries for some of the one million electric cars it hopes to sell globally by 2026," which "would be near the Lordstown factory where G.M. stopped making cars in March." According to the Times, "It would create several hundred jobs in the hard-hit region, and give the union a foothold in the industry's coming transition to electric vehicles."

Juul Replaces CEO, Halts US Advertising.

The AP (9/25, Perrone, Chapman) reports, "Juul Labs is halting all U.S. advertising of its e-cigarettes and replacing its CEO amid a nationwide backlash against vaping." Juul "also said Wednesday it won't fight a sweeping ban on flavors proposed by the Trump administration to reverse a surge in underage vaping." According to the AP, "Juul's CEO will be replaced by a senior executive from Altria, the maker of Marlboro cigarettes."

USA Today (9/25, Bomey, 10.31M) reports that "taken together, the developments underscore how Juul is scrambling to preserve its core business, not long after the company was flying high based on targeted marketing and flavored liquids that are now facing a potential federal ban." Observers "expect Juul to emerge from the crisis intact by following a similar playbook used by cigarette companies, which also agreed to advertising restrictions to assuage public concerns."

Philip Morris, Altria End Merger Talks. The Wall Street Journal (9/25, A1, Maloney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that also on Wednesday, Philip Morris International announced the end to its merger talks with Altria Group, after Philip Morris' board became apprehensive over Juul's regulatory hurdles.

CDC Issues Vaping Alert. ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 9, 0:20, Muir, 7.05M) reported the CDC issued an alert Wednesday about vaping. Health officials "say hundreds of new vaping-related lung illnesses have been reported over just the last week, adding to the more than 530 patients already so far."

Tenth Death Linked To Vaping Reported In Georgia. The CBS Evening News (9/25, story 4, 1:42, O'Donnell, 4.47M) reported a vaping-related death, the 10th, was reported in Georgia on Wednesday.

Rhode Island Announces Vaping Ban. NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 6, 1:41, Holt, 6.11M) reported Rhode Island on Wednesday became the latest state "to announce a vaping ban." NBC's Stephanie Gosk added the FDA commissioner is "calling teen vaping an epidemic." FDA Commissioner Norman Sharpless said, "In retrospect, the FDA should have acted sooner. We should have begun regulating these devices sooner."

BofA's Moynihan Says Company Has To "Take A Stand."

Bloomberg (9/25, Nguyen, Everett, 4.73M) reports Bank of America CEO Brian Moynihan on Wednesday "said the company can't just produce profits – it also has to wade into thorny debates." Speaking at the Bloomberg Global Business Forum, Moynihan "said...that the firm needed to act on issues such as gun control, particularly because of the impact on employees who were affected by mass shootings." He said, "You had teammates in every one of those situations that led our team to say we've got to take a stand on something."

JPMorgan's Dimon Echoes Trump On China.

According to Bloomberg (9/25, Wingrove, 4.73M), JPMorgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon "is sounding a bit like Donald Trump on China." Speaking Wednesday at the Bloomberg Global Business Forum in New York, Dimon "said that Trump's trade fight is simply about 'fair' trade, not part of some larger ideological struggle." He said, "Fair means kind of reciprocal." US-China trade needs to be "closer to reciprocal in a way that's good for everybody. I hope we get there. I don't expect it to happen before the election to tell you the truth, but I hope after that we have a fair trade deal," Dimon said. He also echoed Trump in complaining about China's behavior since joining the World Trade Organization.

WSJournal Analysis: Financial System Safer, Yet More Brittle Since Crisis.

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Ip, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that while the US financial system is much safer since the financial crisis, it is also more brittle. Banks are less likely to fail or need to be bailed out, yet the channels that transmit cash and securities between banks, investors, and foreigners regularly clog when faced with stresses they once easily absorbed.

Lawmakers Cite Leveraged Lending, Cybersecurity, Labor Transition As Red Flags.

American Banker (9/25, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports House lawmakers on Wednesday "highlighted trouble spots in the financial system that still keep them awake at night." Among the top issues cited by the House Financial Services Committee "were leveraged lending, cybersecurity and the upcoming transition to a new interest-rate benchmark." Republicans on the subcommittee "struck a different tone and praised regulatory relief measures under the Trump administration," though "several still raised alarm about building risks." They "implored" witnesses Fed Gov. Lael Brainard and OFR Director Dino Falaschetti "to take action to safeguard certain elements of the financial system."

Businessman Contends Latinos Are Key To Growing US Economy.

Sol Trujillo, businessman and chairman of the Latino Donor Collaborative, writes in the Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that the Latino population in the US has a gross domestic product of $2.3 trillion and that it continues to grow more rapidly than the US economy as a whole, which, he contends, is slowing largely due to the slower rate of growth in the labor force, which, he adds, is expected to continue to slow. He likens Latinos to rescuers coming to strengthen the economy with their numbers and labor, and also argues that they are not enough and require reinforcements. Trujillo argues that President Trump's efforts to restrict immigration will harm the economy for many years and that the US instead needs to increase immigration.

Republicans, Minus Romney, Appear To Be Sticking By Trump On Ukraine Controversy.

Republicans appeared to agree with the President on the Ukraine whistleblower controversy, with at least one exception. The Hill (9/25, Carney, 2.98M) reports Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) said Wednesday that the transcript is "deeply troubling." Romney told reporters, "I did read the transcript. It remains troubling in the extreme. It's deeply troubling." Referencing Romney's comments, ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 2, 2:47, Muir, 7.05M) reported that "at least one leading Republican now saying, quote, there is a lot that is really troubling there." ABC also pointed out that "another Republican, Sen. Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania, called the President's conversation with the Ukrainian leader 'inappropriate,' but not impeachable."

Beyond that, said the CBS Evening News (9/25, story 3, 1:20, Garrett, 4.47M), "not only are Republicans following the President's line of defense, that is to say no explicit quid pro quo, they're also arguing that Democrats...have prejudged this affair, assumed the worst, and from their estimation, overshot the truth." CBS added that in "conversations with Republican leaders on the Hill and rank and file members, they feel more confident than they did 48 hours ago." NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 2, 0:55, Jackson, 6.11M) reported, meanwhile, that "one source...close with the President mentioned there is a solid wall of Republican support on Capitol Hill that may help embolden the President moving forward." Jake Tapper said on CNN's The Lead (9/25, 4:00 p.m. ET, 752K), "Many Republican elected officials are today following the White House's lead and acting as if this transcript is somehow exculpatory and that the scandal is not real. That is not accurate. The transcript is not exculpatory, and the scandal is real."

Politico (9/25, Everett, 4.29M) reports, meanwhile, that last night, Senate Majority Leader McConnell "dismissed criticism of the readout of Trump's call with the Ukrainian president and said it is 'laughable to think this is anywhere close to an impeachable offense.'" The Washington Examiner (9/25, Ferrechio, 448K) also reports "Republicans rejected claims by House Democrats that...Trump committed an impeachable offense" in the call. Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) said, "I think the House is so far over their skis on this thing. ... In it's totality, we all kind of looked at it and said, 'There's nothing here.'" Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham remarked, "If this is going to be an impeachment article. ... Not guilty. Don't waste your time." Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC) also weighed in, saying, "The President was talking about the frustrations of corruption. ... Trying to connect the two pieces together to leave the President in an unfavorable position is a tad bit of a stretch."

The CBS Evening News (9/25, story 2, 2:20, O'Donnell, 4.47M) similarly reported "the President's top allies rushed to his defense," and showed House Minority Leader McCarthy saying, "It was a dark day for the rule of law, that a President is going to be held guilty without any proof." Breitbart (9/25, Boyle, 673K) reports that McCarthy "told Breitbart News exclusively on Wednesday that Democrats' decision to launch an official impeachment inquiry is proof they have 'lost their minds' and expects the decision 'will backfire on them in 2020' in key elections."

A letter to the editor of the Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) signed by all 19 Republican members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee makes the case that Russian President Vladimir Putin wants Trump to be impeached, because it would both weaken the US and harm ties between the US and the anti-Russian government in Kiev.

McClatchy (9/25, Dumain, 19K) quotes Graham as further stating, "From my point of view, to impeach any president over a phone call like this would be insane. ... I talked to [Trump] this morning. I told him, 'Mr. President, I applaud you for releasing the transcript.' ... I told him, 'Mr. President, the desire to get you is unending. [Democrats] were calling for your impeachment before they even knew what was in the phone call.'" The New York Post (9/25, Eustachewich, 4.57M) points out Graham also said of Democrats, "You're going down a dangerous road here for the future of the presidency, as well as your own future, but that's up to y'all."

Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA) said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/25, 8:37 p.m. ET, Carlson, 1.5M), "It's been nearly three years of this Russia hoax. Now it's transformed into the Ukrainian hoax. They say a lot of things that always have one thing in common. ... So they will come out of those doors and they will say, 'Well, we have seen some really secret stuff. We can't tell you about it, but just trust us. This is really going to be the time that we're going to catch President Trump with his hands in the cookie jar.'"

Rep. Andy Biggs (R-AZ), who serves on the House Judiciary Committee, writes in USA Today (9/25, 10.31M) that "Democrats are looking for a new impeachment angle after their Russia collusion hoax failed miserably after a two-year investigation." Biggs adds, "First...Trump was forthright from the start that there were conversations with the Ukrainian president. Second, even CNN reports that 'the whistleblower didn't have direct knowledge of the communications,'" and "third, there was no evidence of a quid pro quo, and Ukraine's foreign minister has said that there was no pressure from...Trump on that call." Democrats "irrationally responded to the facts (or lack thereof) by immediately calling for impeachment even before the release of the transcript."

On CNN's OutFront (9/25, 7:30 p.m. ET, 803K), Erin Burnett said, however, "Cracks [are] emerging in the Republican ranks after the transcript showed...Trump repeatedly asking Ukraine's President to investigate his 2020 rival Joe Biden and Biden's son." Under the headline "Cracks Emerge Among Senate Republicans Over Trump Urging Ukrainian Leader To Investigate Biden," the Washington Post (9/25, Costa, 14.2M) reports that "several Senate Republicans were privately stunned...and questioned the White House's judgment after it released" the transcript. The Post adds "three other GOP senators complained privately...that the White House erred by releasing the transcript, arguing that it sets a precedent for future presidents about disclosure of calls with foreign leaders and could be seen as a concession to Democrats."

Graham Seeks Probe Of Hunter Biden's Business Dealings; Johnson Weighing One. The Daily Caller (9/25, 716K) reports that Graham also said yesterday he "wanted to see...a further investigation into Hunter Biden's business dealings in Ukraine." Graham is quoted as saying, "The son of the Vice President was receiving a lot of money from the Ukraine and some of the sources of the funds were under investigation by the prosecutor. ... I think it's appropriate for the President of the United States to suggest you had a corruption problem and the prosecutor that was fired maybe was because he was corrupt or maybe because he was looking at something close to America here."

The Daily Caller (9/25, White, 716K) also reports Johnson "is considering an investigation into...Biden's role in Ukraine when he was still serving in the White House. The Washington Post reported Wednesday, citing unnamed sources." Johnson "told colleagues that he would consider a probe against the former vice president who is now running for president, three people familiar with the conversations told WaPo." The Post "suggests other Republicans in the Senate are being more circumspect about how to approach the matter."

Trump Campaign, RNC Have Raised $5M Since Impeachment Announcement. The Washington Examiner (9/25, Brest, 448K) reports, "The Trump campaign and the Republican National Committee announced that they have raised $5 million in the 24 hours" since House Speaker Pelosi "announced a formal impeachment inquiry into President Trump." Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale wrote on Twitter, "In the 24 hours since news of Nancy Pelosi's impeachment announcement, @realDonaldTrump's campaign & @GOP have BLOWN OUT fundraising! $5 Million combined in 24 hrs. Donors in all 50 states. Huge groundswell of support leading to Trump landslide in 2020!" The President also tweeted, "One of our best fundraising days EVER!"

The New York Times (9/25, Goldmacher, 18.61M) points out that "within three hours of Ms. Pelosi's announcement on Tuesday, Mr. Trump had raised $1 million, and his campaign said on Wednesday it was on pace to collect $3 million in 24 hours." The Times adds that "for the political operatives involved in the 2020 campaign," the impeachment matter "represents a potentially galvanizing moment to pry loose wallets."

GOP Consultant Tied To Romney, McCain: In Secret Vote, 30 GOP Senators Would Drop Trump. The Washington Examiner (9/25, Halaschak, 448K) reports "a longtime adviser to Republicans has claimed that if the tally were held in secret, 30 Republican senators would vote to remove...Trump from office." Mike Murphy, "who has worked as a senior adviser to now-Sen. Mitt Romney and the late Sen. John McCain, appeared Wednesday on MSNBC and said that if the Democratic-led House votes to impeach the president and the Senate acquits him, it could spell political damage the Republican Party in 2020." Murphy said on MSNBC's Andrea Mitchell Reports (9/25, 12:45 p.m. ET, Mitchell, 766K), "One Republican Senator told me if it was a secret vote, 30 Republican Senators would vote to impeach Trump."

Vermont's GOP Governor: Impeachment Inquiry "Appropriate." The AP (9/25) reports, "Vermont's Republican Gov. Phil Scott says Congress has a 'solemn responsibility' to fulfill the role of checks and balances in the impeachment proceedings against...Trump." Scott "said Wednesday that while he believes the inquiry is 'appropriate,' a lot remains unknown surrounding the allegations."

Whistleblower's Report Released To Intelligence Panels Ahead Of Maguire's Testimony.

Axios (9/25, Basu, 521K) reports "the whistleblower complaint at the heart of a controversy involving President Trump and Ukraine has been released to the House and Senate Intelligence committees, lawmakers confirmed Wednesday afternoon." The New York Post (9/25, Feis, 4.57M) says "members of the Senate Intelligence Committee...will now review the confidential tip, though it's not immediately clear how extensively the version they received is redacted." The Los Angeles Times (9/25, Wilber, 4.64M) points out Joseph Maguire, "the nation's highest-ranking intelligence official," is "expected to be grilled over the administration's handling of a still-secret whistleblower's complaint when he appears before Congress on Thursday as the first witness in the Democrats' formal impeachment inquiry."

The New York Times (9/25, A1, Savage, Schmidt, Barnes, 18.61M) reports the whistleblower "raised alarms not only about what the two men said in a phone call, but also about how the White House handled records of the conversation, according to two people briefed on the complaint." He also "identified multiple White House officials as witnesses to potential presidential misconduct who could corroborate the complaint, the people said – adding that the inspector general for the intelligence community, Michael Atkinson, interviewed witnesses."

At any rate, the Washington Times (9/25, Muñoz, 492K) reports, the complaint "appeared to fail to move the needle on how members viewed the situation." Democrats "said it only reaffirmed their position to have an impeachment inquiry," and "Republicans...did not express serious concern." The Washington Examiner (9/25, Halaschak, 448K) indicates, for example, that Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-NY), a "member of the House intelligence Committee, tweeted that she read the complaint and announced that she is against impeachment." Stefanik wrote on Twitter, "I do not support impeachment of President Trump. I have just read the whistleblower complaint made available to House Intelligence Committee Members. I believe strongly in transparency and it should be immediately declassified and made public for the American people to read."

The Washington Examiner (9/25, Halaschak, 448K) reports Sasse "urged all-around caution against quickly jumping to any conclusions, including scolding Democrats for embarking on an impeachment inquiry." Said Sasse, "Everybody in this whole process should slow down. This place is terrible at deliberation. Democrats ought not to be using the word 'impeach' before they have the whistleblower complaint or before they read any of the transcript." Breitbart (9/25, Key, 673K) says Sasse added, "Republicans ought not to be rushing to circle the wagons to say there's no there there when there's obviously lots that's very troubling there."

The AP (9/25, Jalonick) also reports that while "most Republicans were quiet or defended the president as they left the secure rooms," Democrats "who reviewed" the "secret whistleblower complaint...called it 'deeply disturbing' and said it gives them new leads to pursue as they consider impeachment." House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff "said it 'exposed serious wrongdoing' and 'certainly provides information for the committee to follow up with others.'" Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) "told CNN that the whistleblower 'laid out a lot of other documents and witnesses who were subjects in this matter.'" Bloomberg (9/25, House, Dennis, 4.73M), Reuters (9/25, Landay), and The Hill (9/25, Beavers, 2.98M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Nia-Malika Henderson said on CNN's Inside Politics (9/25, 12:30 p.m. ET, King, 562K), "Adam Schiff used the word 'depravity' when talking about that aspect of this. ... I think if you're the Democrats, you think this is very easy to understand. And you see this phone call, Adam Schiff there essentially saying it was much more damaging than he thought it would be when it came out. And you see him using phrases like 'reciprocity,' the effect that there was no reciprocity from the Ukrainians, and then going into the favor."

House Foreign Affairs Chairman Eliot Engel said on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (9/25, 9:01 p.m. ET, Cuomo, 1.24M), "It reminded me of what the country went through under Richard Nixon all over again, brought back ugly and bad memories. We on the Foreign Affairs Committee are requesting documents from the State Department, which is in our jurisdiction, and if we don't get them, we are going to subpoena them on Friday. So we think we'll get much more information than as well. ... You would think that given all the hoopla about Russian interference in the previous presidential election, that the President would be very careful this time around and not use or try to use a foreign leader, but he apparently learned nothing."

House Financial Services Chairwoman Maxine Waters said on MSNBC's All In (9/25, 8:11 p.m. ET, Hayes, 1.48M), "I started a long time ago, right after the President was inaugurated, talking about impeachment and saying that he was dishonorable, he was a con man, we could not trust him. And of course I was way ahead of all this, and nobody really took me seriously, but I also knew that this President was so brazen and so disrespectful of the Constitution that he was going to continue to abuse the presidential power, and so he's done just that."

House Judiciary Committee member Rep. Sylvia Garcia (D-TX) said on CNN (9/25, 3:14 p.m. ET, Baldwin, 686K), "This White House is more about stonewalling and ordering people not to testify, ordering people not to appear, and doing everything they can to cover up some of their activities, that nothing surprises me anymore. ... I would like to see the whistleblower and hear directly from him or her. And I look forward to seeing what the Acting [DNI] does say tomorrow. I hope they don't block him from coming to us."

Rep. Raja Krishnamoorthi (D-IL) said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/25, 8:03 p.m. ET, Cooper, 1.11M), "Most of it should be declassified tonight and it should be shared with the American public. I think transparency is absolutely essential here, but what I can say about the complaint is that it's thorough, it's careful, it's credible, it's consistent, and it raises a lot more questions than it answers. But it's obvious why the Inspector General – who, by the way, was appointed by the Trump Administration – found it to be both urgent and credible enough to pass along to the DNI."

Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) said on CNN's OutFront (9/25, 7:33 p.m. ET, Burnett, 803K), "It's very plain that this is a President who was using his office, abusing his office to try to put pressure someone who really needs America. I've been out there in eastern Ukraine in the region. I've met with their military and I've seen the challenges with the Russian aggression and Russian attacks and them losing fellow soldiers. This is a country that needs our help, and this call, the President used the authority of his office and the power of the presidency not for national security issues and not for economic issues and not to help out an ally, but to try to use his office to get dirt on a political opponent."

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/25, 8:58 p.m. ET, Cooper, 1.19M), "This shouldn't be just about Democrats coming forward. This has to be Republicans as well. We have an obligation to put our country first. We have an obligation to uphold the rule of law and make sure we don't have a President that's selling our nation out to foreign entities and selling them out for his own personal reasons. That's what this is about."

Sen. Jon Tester (D-MT) said on MSNBC's All In (9/25, 8:26 p.m. ET, Hayes, 1.48M), "My belief is that now the Speaker has decided to impeach, they need to make sure it is very, very focused. They need to get to the bottom of the information as promptly as they can. And they need to move. Look, we're dealing with a President who's the king of pivoting out of situations. And we saw it in some of the stuff he did today trying to bring in Vice President Pence – 'take a look at him, don't take a look at me.' He does this stuff all the time. And so I think the folks who are getting to the facts need to have a laser focus, get the information, and be very transparent about the process and let the chips fall where they may."

Whistleblower Complaint Reportedly Declassified, May Be Released Thursday. NBC News (9/26, Helsel, 6.14M) reports on its website that the whistleblower complaint "has been declassified, sources familiar with the matter told NBC News on Wednesday night. The complaint, which the administration initially withheld from Congress, was declassified with what were described as minimal redactions, the sources said, and there is an expectation that it will be released Thursday morning." The Hill (9/25, Beavers, 2.98M) reports that a source "said that while the declassification process is completed, details about the public release of the complaint remain unclear. The complaint is also expected to have some redactions, according to the source."

Whistleblower's Attorney A Biden Donor. The Washington Free Beacon (9/25, Schoffstall, 78K) reports "the lead counsel representing the Ukraine whistleblower donated to Joe Biden's presidential campaign earlier this year, records show." Andrew Bakaj, "founder and managing partner of DC-based law firm Compass Rose Legal Group, is the lead counsel working on behalf of the Ukraine whistleblower." Bakaj "earmarked a $100 donation on April 26 through ActBlue, a fundraising nonprofit that helps facilitate contributions for Democrats, to Biden's presidential campaign, the Federal Election Commission's website shows." Biden "appears to be the only recipient of campaign cash from Bakaj this year." Trump noted the news on Twitter, writing, "Wow! 'Ukraine Whistleblower's lead attorney donated to Biden.' @FreeBeacon."

Gloria Borger said on CNN (9/25, 11:42 a.m. ET, Bolduan, 514K), "Don't forget, you are talking about an Inspector General that is a Trump-appointed inspector general. There are already Republicans claiming that the whistleblower, whomever he or she is, is a partisan. But this Inspector General is a Trump appointment. So they can't say the same thing about that. I think that's a problem."

Despite His Denial, WPost Reporting Acting DNI Threatened To Resign. The Washington Post (9/25, Miller, Harris, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports Acting DNI Maguire "threatened to resign over concerns that the White House might attempt to force him to stonewall Congress when he testifies Thursday about an explosive whistleblower complaint about the president, according to current and former U.S. officials familiar with the matter." According to the Post, Maguire "warned the White House that he was not willing to withhold information from Congress." However, the Post reports that Maguire "denied that he had done so." Axios (9/25, Basu, 521K) reports Maguire "said in a statement Wednesday: 'At no time have I considered resigning my position since assuming this role on Aug. 16, 2019. I have never quit anything in my life, and I am not going to start now.'"

Democrats Wrote Ukrainian Officials Asking Them To Investigate Trump, Linked Request To Aid.

The Federalist (9/25, Justice, 126K) reports, "While Democrats rush toward impeachment over an anonymous whistleblower complaint accusing President Donald Trump of requesting Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky investigate former Vice President Joe Biden, many have ignored the fact that last year, Senate Democrats wrote to Ukraine's prosecutor general asking Ukrainian officials to investigate Trump." The Federalist adds that "in May of 2018, Sens. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., Dick Durbin, D-Ill., and Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., wrote to Ukraine's Prosecutor General Yuriy Lutsenko asking the Ukraine government to keep four investigations open related to the Mueller probe into Russian election interference in the US and indicated that their support for foreign aid to Ukraine could be in jeopardy." Wrote the Senators, "As strong advocates for a robust and close relationship with Ukraine, we believe that our cooperation should extend to such legal matters," and they were "disappointed that some in Kyiv appear to have cast aside these principles in order to avoid the ire of President Trump."

The Washington Times (9/25, Meier, 492K) reports, meanwhile, that "senate Republicans on Wednesday blocked a move by a key foreign policy Democrat," Menendez, "to launch an investigation into the Trump administration's move to freeze nearly $400 million in security aid to Ukraine and forces the State Department to turn over documents related to the 'Ukraine scandal.'"

Only 36% And 37% Support Trump Impeachment In Two New Polls.

The Washington Post (9/25, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that "amid a groundswell of support for impeachment proceedings among House Democrats, a new poll finds a majority of Americans do not favor ousting President Trump from office." A new Quinnipiac University poll finds "thirty-seven percent of voters say that Trump should be impeached and removed from office, while 57 percent say he should not be impeached." The Post adds the poll "shows a stark partisan divide on the question of impeachment. Among Democrats, 73 percent support impeachment, while 21 percent are opposed. Among Republicans, only 4 percent support impeachment, while 95 percent are opposed." USA Today (9/25, Santucci, 10.31M) similarly highlights the "clear partisan divide."

Politico (9/25, Shepard, 4.29M) reports that "a Politico/Morning Consult poll – conducted before House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's announcement on Tuesday that Democrats will pursue an impeachment inquiry – found that a plurality of registered voters still opposed impeachment, with little sign of movement toward supporting such steps. In the poll – conducted Friday through Sunday...36 percent of respondents said they believe Congress should begin impeachment proceedings against Trump." Politico adds, "Support for impeachment is down a tick from 37 percent last week. Nearly half of respondents, 49 percent, said Congress should not begin impeachment proceedings, also down a point from last week."

Pollster John McLaughlin, meanwhile, wrote on Twitter that according to the new McLaughlin & Associates poll, "66-29 huge majority believes the Democrats should work w/ @realDonaldTrump to solve the nations problems rather than impeachment; 58-32 voters believe the Democrats and the WashDC establishment are blocking changes President is trying to make."

The New York Times (9/25, A1, Gabriel, Healy, Tavernise, 18.61M) reports, "While politicians in Washington crowded microphones on Wednesday to condemn or defend Mr. Trump and the prospect of his impeachment, more than two dozen voters across the country were by turns elated and wary, unsure and already exhausted, at the idea of an impeachment investigation that could consume the nation for months." The Times adds "Republican supporters of Mr. Trump, as well as some moderates who had crossed over to vote for him in 2016, were generally unmoved by the possibility that Mr. Trump committed impeachable crimes." The Times also reports that "in interviews with voters on Wednesday, there was no clear or surprising shift in sentiment on impeachment."

Democrats Expected To Narrowly Focus Impeachment On Ukraine.

The Washington Post (9/25, DeBonis, Bade, 14.2M) reports House Speaker Pelosi and top Democrats "agreed in a private meeting Wednesday that they should narrow their impeachment investigation of President Trump to his dealings with the president of Ukraine, according to five Democrats familiar with the conversation." Democrats said the evidence "was incriminating enough – and easy enough for voters to understand – to proceed with their impeachment inquiry and soon. 'Strike while the iron's hot,' said one individual in the meeting, summarizing the sentiment."

The New York Times (9/25, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports that for Pelosi, "the intelligence and national security implications of the latest allegations against Mr. Trump helped turn the tide." According to the Times, Pelosi "saw the latest allegations against Mr. Trump – that he pressured the Ukrainian president to investigate a leading political rival, then worked to bury an intelligence whistle-blower's complaint detailing the effort – as an egregious perversion of the process."

Dan Balz of the Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M) writes, "Pelosi and Trump have circled one another from the moment she retook the gavel after a surge of anti-Trump voters knocked House Republicans out of the majority in the 2018 midterms." On Wednesday morning, Trump tweeted a one-minute video from 1998 of Pelosi criticizing GOP impeachment efforts against then-President Bill Clinton. The Washington Free Beacon (9/25, 78K), in an "exclusive," carries a parody draft of Democrats' articles of impeachment.

The New York Times (9/25, 18.61M) says in an editorial, "Some ask whether it is pointless for the House to launch divisive impeachment proceedings when there's little chance that the Republican-led Senate will vote to convict a president so popular with their party's base. But House Democrats are also giving notice that every lawmaker, regardless of party, should be prepared to take a public stand on whether presidents are free to use their powers to summon foreign assistance for their political campaigns."

Bret Stephens writes in his New York Times (9/25, 18.61M) column, "Prominent Democrats have begun an impeachment process against Donald Trump, based on information that, while potentially devastating, remains arguable and even more incomplete. They do so because they appear to be certain that the full set of facts will vindicate their belief that the president is manifestly guilty of treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanors. But what if the facts don't vindicate that belief?" Karl Rove argues in his Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column that in addition to creating a constitutional crisis, Pelosi's move toward impeachment will not lead to Trump's removal and will only hurt her own party.

Former Acting Solicitor General Neal Katyal writes in the New York Times (9/25, 18.61M) that "an important line of defense" for Trump "is that he did not commit a crime. ... But the potential criminality of the president's conduct is not the full picture. Our founders deliberately drafted the Constitution's impeachment clause to ensure the potential grounds for impeachment would cover more than criminal activity. ... For our founders, the touchstone of presidential unfitness to serve was always abuse of the public trust."

Trump Campaign Sees Impeachment Hurting Democrats. The Wall Street Journal (9/25, A1, Bender, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that the Trump campaign sees impeachment as a net positive for the President, believing that the Democratic effort will fail and that the move will embolden and energize Trump voters.

WPost, Breitbart Tallies Show House Majority Backs Impeachment Inquiry. A tally on the Washington Post website counts 218 Democrats as backing an impeachment inquiry, with 25 already on the record as actually supporting impeachment itself. Breitbart (9/25, Boyle, 673K) puts the count for an inquiry at 231, saying “every single member of the Democrat conference in the House of Representatives who voted on Wednesday went on the record” backing Pelosi’s move.

One Democrat, Rep. Jeff Van Drew (D-NJ), expressed his misgivings on Fox News’ Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/25, 8:13 p.m. ET, Carlson), saying, “I really believe the more that we delve into this, the more time we spend on it especially in a macrolevel, the more we are not going to be able to spend time on these other issues that are important. ... The Senate bills are not going to be going through the House. The House bills aren’t going to be going through the Senate. At the end of the day, I am afraid that all we are going to have a failed impeachment.”

Freshmen Democrats Playing Key Role In Move Toward Impeachment. The New York Times (9/25, Cochrane, Stolberg, 18.61M) looks at the role House Democratic freshmen are playing in the move toward impeachment. While high-profile progressives like Reps. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) and Rashida Tlaib (D-MI) have been outspoken in support of impeachment for months, it is the recent shift of moderates from swing districts toward impeachment that appears to have tipped the balance. The Times writes, “Top Democrats say it is no accident that Ms. Pelosi’s head-spinning turn from opposing an impeachment inquiry to calling for one came less than 24 hours after seven first-term moderates, including military veterans and two former C.I.A. officers, embraced the idea.” The Washington Examiner (9/25, Pickett, 448K) reports Ocasio-Cortez said Wednesday that House Democrats in districts won by Trump in 2016 “should expect to feel pressure from the party’s left flank to ensure they vote for impeachment.”

Democratic Presidential Candidates Back Impeachment, But Try To Stay On Message. The New York Times (9/25, Burns, Stevens, 18.61M) reports Democratic presidential candidates, several of whom had already backed impeachment, were supportive on Wednesday but generally tried to stay away from the topic. Biden, “who held no public events on Wednesday, issued his own statement saying he would be focused ‘not on how Donald Trump abused his power to come after my family, but on how he has turned his back on America’s families.’”

Trump To House GOP: There Must Also Be “Transparency From Joe Biden And His Son Hunter.”

Trump tweeted at 4:17 p.m., “I have informed @GOPLeader Kevin McCarthy and all Republicans in the House that I fully support transparency on so-called whistleblower information but also insist on transparency from Joe Biden and his son Hunter, on the millions of dollars that have been quickly and easily taken out of Ukraine and China. Additionally, I demand transparency from Democrats that went to Ukraine and attempted to force the new President to do things that they wanted under the form of political threat.”

The New York Times (9/25, Lerer, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that when asked this weekend “if he had spoken to his son Hunter about his work in Ukraine, Mr. Biden jabbed his finger repeatedly at the reporter and shot back: ‘Ask the right questions.’ ... A few hours later...the Biden campaign emailed the news media to declare – in bold underlined words – that any story would be ‘misleading’ if it did not state upfront that Mr. Trump’s claims were unsubstantiated.”

Breitbart (9/25, Alic, 673K) reports Hunter Biden’s $83,000 per month salary while serving on the board of Ukrainian oil and gas firm Burisma “is raising questions not only about his role with the company, but also about if he profited from his father’s political influence.” The Washington Examiner (9/25, Simonson, 448K) reports “jobs held by Hunter Biden...have complicated the political life of his father going back at least to 2008.” During then-Sen. Biden’s vice-presidential run, “campaign officials were forced to address questions over Hunter Biden having been hired by credit card company MBNA for consulting work, earning him a $100,000 annual retainer.”

DOJ Dropped Ukraine Inquiry After Less Than A Month.

The Washington Post (9/25, Zapotosky, Barrett, 14.2M) reports Justice Department officials “took less than a month to abandon an inquiry” into President Trump’s communications with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky about investigating former Vice President Joe Biden, “reigniting concerns among Democrats and legal observers that the law enforcement agency is serving as a shield for the commander in chief.” DOJ officials “and career public integrity prosecutors reviewed a rough transcript of the call and verified its authenticity, but – because a case was not opened – took no other steps, such as conducting interviews,” officials said.

The New York Times (9/25, Benner, 18.61M) reports that “when two top intelligence officials asked a Justice Department lawyer whether a whistle-blower’s complaint should be forwarded to Congress” late last month, “they were told no,” and that Attorney General Barr and the DOJ “could handle the criminal referral against the president of the United States.” The Times says Trump “has long said that the attorney general should shield him, the way he believed Robert F. Kennedy protected his brother President John F. Kennedy, and Eric H. Holder Jr. protected President Barack Obama.”

On ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 3, 1:55, Muir, 7.05M), Pierre Thomas reported the DOJ said Barr “learned of the call weeks later and was not involved, saying, ‘The Attorney General has not communicated with Ukraine, nor has he discussed this matter or anything related to Ukraine with Rudy Giuliani.’” USA Today (9/25, Johnson, Jackson, Jansen, Fritze, 10.31M) reports Trump references Barr “at least four times during the call.” But The Hill (9/25, Chalfant, Samuels, 2.98M) reports that the DOJ “released a statement shortly after the White House released the transcript, saying that [Barr], who is also mentioned on the call, was first notified of Trump’s conversation with Zelensky ‘several weeks’ after it took place.” The Washington Times (9/25, Mordock, Dinan, 492K) reports the DOJ Criminal Division “has already investigated" the phone call "and concluded Mr. Trump did not violate campaign finance laws, officials announced Wednesday."

The Washington Times (9/25, A1, Mordock, 492K) reports US Attorney John Durham "is investigating Ukraine's role in potential 2016 election interference, the Justice Department confirmed Wednesday." Earlier this year, Barr tapped Durham "to look into the origins of the FBI probe into alleged links between the Trump campaign and Russia during the 2016 presidential race, an investigation that ultimately gave way to special counsel Robert Mueller's probe."

Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist (9/25, 126K) writes under the headline "DOJ: Bureaucrat's Trump Complaint Was Neither Urgent Nor Needing Congressional Referral" that the DOJ "reviewed a bureaucrat's complaint" about the call "and found it neither urgent nor requiring referral to congressional committees." Breitbart (9/25, Caplan, 673K) headlines its report "DOJ Confirms Reports That Trump-Ukraine 'Whistleblower' Has A Political Bias." The Daily Caller (9/25, Ross, 716K) also has a report.

Media Outlets Examine Giuliani's Role In Dealings With Ukraine.

Several outlets look at the role of President Trump's personal lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, who is not a government employee, in the Ukraine dealings. Kristen Welker reported on NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 3, 1:55, Holt, 6.11M) that Giuliani "suggest[ed] he already knew what was in the White House account between the phone call of the President and the leader of Ukraine before it was made public." The Washington Post (9/25, Hudson, 14.2M) says the details of the call "raise new questions about Giuliani's role, reinforcing the view of some U.S. officials that he operates at the president's behest, often in a closed loop, and occasionally in contravention to the messages of diplomats in Kiev." The New York Times (9/25, A1, Vogel, Barnes, Haberman, Lafranieri, 18.61M) says for Trump, "Ukraine has been an obsession since the 2016 campaign," and "his fixation was only intensified by his hope that he could employ the Ukrainian government to undermine" Biden. Giuliani "has undertaken a nearly yearlong, free-ranging effort to unearth information helpful to Mr. Trump and harmful to Mr. Biden."

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/25, 831K), Giuliani said, "You want to know why I started investigating Ukraine back in November of last year? Because a very significant, distinguished investigator came to me and said the Ukrainians, for a year and a half, have been trying to get to your FBI, information much more significant. There was actually real collusion that involved Ukrainians, but the FBI did everything they could to keep this information away. ... At the core of this is an FBI agent. ... She put all this together. The suspicion was, at the time, she was working for George Soros. The reality is she is now employed by George Soros."

Trump reelection campaign Senior Adviser Lara Trump said on Fox News' The Story (9/25, 7:53 p.m. ET, McCallum, 1.35M), "As far as Rudy Giuliani is concerned, that's between Mr. Giuliani and the President. At the campaign, we are still focused on why people are going to reelect Donald Trump. It's because their life is so much better now. Our focus has always been on the results that this President has produced. It has nothing to do with Ukraine, although it doesn't look very good for Joe Biden and his son."

Eleven Senate Republicans Join Democrats In Voting Against Border Emergency.

Reuters (9/25, Ahmann) reports that the Senate voted Wednesday "for a second time to end the national emergency on the southern border the president declared in February, a move Donald Trump would almost certainly veto if it reached his desk." The vote was 54-41. Reuters adds that Trump, "with his very first veto, struck down a similar measure that had cleared both the House and Senate in March." The Hill (9/25, Carney, 2.98M) reports that Sens. Lamar Alexander (R-TN), Roy Blunt (R-MO), Susan Collins (R-ME), Mike Lee (R-UT), Jerry Moran (R-KS), Lisa Murkowski (R-AK), Rand Paul (R-KY), Rob Portman (R-OH), Mitt Romney (R-UT), Pat Toomey (R-PA), and Roger Wicker (R-MS) "voted to end the president's declaration."

The New York Times (9/25, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports the vote was "a bipartisan rejection of Mr. Trump's bid to build a wall without congressional approval," and was "nearly identical to the result of a vote in March," though Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) "did not vote on Wednesday." Senate Majority Leader McConnell "stressed, as Pentagon officials have done in conversations with lawmakers in recent days, that the funds for the projects were simply delayed, since Congress can replace the money in either the annual defense authorization policy or the must-pass spending bills that allocate funding for the next fiscal year."

The Washington Times (9/25, Dinan, 492K) reports the Senate voted "to rebuke President Trump and cancel his border emergency," and the Times calls it "another legislative black eye for Mr. Trump." The Times adds that McConnell "supported Mr. Trump and said Democrats were creating a false choice between defense spending and border wall money." McConnell said, "The only reason there's any trade-off is that Democrats have refused to work with the President."

Politico (9/25, Levine, 4.29M) reports that "prior to the vote, Senate Democrats accused Republicans of prioritizing Trump over military families. 'A vote for the president today is a vote in favor of cutting money for our military and slashing support for critical military projects in red states as well as blue,'" Senate Minority Leader Schumer said. According to Politico, "Among the states hit by the diversion of military funds are Colorado, Arizona, North Carolina, Texas and South Carolina – all of which have Republican senators up for re-election in 2020." Bloomberg (9/25, 4.73M) also says the vote "could have some political bite for Republicans up for re-election in 2020 who have military installations in their states, including Thom Tillis of North Carolina, Martha McSally of Arizona, Cory Gardner of Colorado and John Cornyn of Texas."

Administration Announces Asylum Agreement With Honduras.

The Washington Post (9/25, Miroff, 14.2M) reports on Wednesday, the Administration "announced a migration deal" with Honduras that would allow the US "to send asylum seekers from the border to Honduras, one of the most violent and unstable nations in the world." The Post says that Honduran President Juan Orlando Hernández "is embroiled in allegations of government corruption and charges that he and others have been operating the nation as a criminal enterprise." The Post also reports that Honduras has "one of the highest murder rates in the world" and "gang wars that have fueled waves of mass migration." The US has also "signed a similar deal with El Salvador, after reaching an accord with the government of Guatemala in July."

New York AG Sues ICE Over Arresting Migrants At State Courthouses.

The Washington Times (9/25, Dinan, 492K) reports on Wednesday, New York Attorney General Letitia James and Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzalez sued ICE, "arguing it is unconstitutional for ICE deportation officers to try to arrest illegal immigrants at state courthouses, and demanding a judge order a halt to the practice." James and Gonzalez "said they've had to cancel important cases and leave potential criminals out on the streets because they couldn't promise migrant witnesses they would be protected."

Groups Request Release Of All LGBTQ Detainees And Anyone With HIV From ICE Detention.

The Washington Post (9/25, Moore, 14.2M) reports, "Several human rights groups on Wednesday demanded" that ICE release "all LGBTQ detainees and anyone with HIV in the agency's custody," contending that the agency "has repeatedly proved incapable of providing adequate medical and mental-health care to them." The Post says, "It is unclear how many LGBTQ people and people with HIV are detained." The groups also requested "an Office of Inspector General investigation into detainee treatment at facilities nationwide." The Post also says the complaint highlights "a number of individual cases." The Post lists the following groups: Familia Trans Queer Liberation Project, AI Otro Lado, Las Americas Immigrant Advocates, Los Angeles LGBT Center, Freedom for Immigrants, Santa Fe Dreamers Project, Southern Poverty Law Center, Immigration Equality, Center for Victims of Torture, National Immigrant Justice Center, and the National Center for Transgender Equality.

Migrants Increasingly Being Smuggled By Drivers Hired Online.

The Washington Times (9/25, A1, Dinan, 492K) reports that drivers who are willing to pick up migrants after they cross the border are being offered jobs and given instructions over WhatsApp or Snapchat and migrants are given "phones and told to follow a GPS map or to dial a scout for instructions to their pickup location on the U.S. side." The Times adds that it "has identified nearly a dozen cases in the past year when Border Patrol agents arrested someone for smuggling and he claimed to have been a Lyft or Uber driver."

Deported Army Veteran Returns For Hearing On Reopening Citizenship Application.

The Chicago Sun-Times (9/25, Ballesteros, 875K) reports on the case of Miguel Perez Jr., an Army veteran and permanent resident who had his residency card revoked, his citizenship application denied, and was deported to Mexico in 2018 over a 2008 conviction for "delivering cocaine." Then Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker granted Perez a pardon, which allowed him on Wednesday to have "met with immigration officials Wednesday to reapply for citizenship." Perez said, "Everything went very well, very positive. It seems like it's going to be a positive outcome." The Sun-Times adds, "Perez legally emigrated to Chicago with his parents in 1989 and grew up on the West Side" and has post-traumatic stress disorder from two tours in Afghanistan.

WPost Criticizes Prosecution Of Migrant Employees.

The Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M) in an editorial argues that recent events "exposed a truth well known to employers and their political patrons nationwide: The system is tougher on employees than on employers, by a lot." In support of that, the Post adds that in the year ending March 30, 2019, "just 11 individuals and no companies were prosecuted" for immigration violations, while "more than 85,000 undocumented immigrants were prosecuted for illegal entry and some 34,000 for illegal reentry." The Post argues, "A more rational immigration system would put the millions of unauthorized migrants already in the country on a path to legal status and expand legal immigration to meet the market's demands." It concludes by regretting that the Administration "has been tacking in the opposite direction."

Cost Of Employer-Provided Family Health Insurance Plan Surpasses $20K Per Year.

The New York Times (9/25, Abelson, 18.61M) reports rising premiums and deductibles are making employer-based health coverage increasingly unaffordable, according to a new analysis from the Kaiser Family Foundation based on a survey. The Times says that "the average premium paid by the employer and the employee for a family plan now tops $20,000 a year, with the worker contributing about $6,000, according to the survey." In addition, "more than a quarter of all covered workers and nearly half of those working for small businesses face an annual deductible of $2,000 or more."

Bloomberg (9/25, Tozzi, 4.73M) reports "employees' costs for health care are rising more quickly than wages or overall economy-wide prices, and the working poor have been particularly hard-hit." Bloomberg adds that "deductibles are rising even faster than premiums, meaning that patients are on the hook for more of their medical costs upfront." The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Mathews, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the average deductible for single coverage went up to $1,655, excluding plans with no deductible at all.

Insurer Agrees To Cover Surprise Medical Bill After Cuomo Intervenes.

The CBS Evening News (9/25, story 9, 0:34, O'Donnell, 4.47M) provided an update to its story aired on Monday "about man who was hit with more than 650,000 in bills after his insurance company denied coverage for his emergency back surgery." CBS says that "after more than a year of appeals, Frank Esposito still owed $220,000," but Oxford United Healthcare has now agreed to "pay that claim." The development came after Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D-NY) saw CBS' broadcast and "he told state officials to look into Esposito's case."

Challenge To Trump Hotel's Liquor License Rejected In DC.

The Washington Post (9/25, Williams, 14.2M) reports, "The District's alcohol licensing board has dismissed a challenge to the renewal of a liquor license at the Trump hotel in downtown Washington by a group that said the president lacked the good character required in the statute." The District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board "ruled Wednesday that the group of eight people lacked the standing to challenge the renewal because at least five people did not live or own property in the city, the ruling stated." Joshua A. Levy, the attorney representing the complainants, urged residents to "come forward to urge the liquor board to reach the merits of this complaint."

Employee At DC City Office Arrested With Fentanyl.

The Washington Post (9/25, Weiner, 14.2M) reports Darrell Pope, an employee at the District of Columbia Department of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs, "is accused of selling heroin and fentanyl just outside his office." Pope was allegedly "involved with drug dealers based in Woodbridge, Va." In execution of a search warrant on Tuesday at DCRA, federal agents "detained Pope outside the office and searched him, finding 30 grams of what appeared to be fentanyl." The Post adds that according to the FBI, "Pope admitted" that Ronald Gorham, 61, of Washington, "was his regular supplier."

Trump Touts Book About "Collusion."

The President tweeted at 7:14 a.m. Wednesday, "Great new book by the brilliant Andrew McCarthy, BALL OF COLLUSION, THE PLOT TO RIG AN ELECTION AND DESTROY A PRESIDENCY. Get it, and some other great new books which I will soon be recommending. They tell you about the Crooked Pols and the Witch Hunt that has now been exposed!"

Bannon Among Potential Witnesses At Stone Trial.

Politico (9/25, Samuelsohn, 4.29M) reports that the coming trial of Roger Stone in November, which Politico says "was already shaping up to be a true Washington spectacle," has now "got even more interesting," as Stone attorney Bruce Rogow "signaled there could be a big showdown on the witness stand with former Trump campaign manager Steve Bannon." Rogow also mentioned "three others who were already known as potential witnesses – former Trump campaign deputy Rick Gates, radio host Randy Credico and conservative author Jerome Corsi."

Bloomberg (9/25, 4.73M) reports that US District Judge Amy Berman Jackson "got the Stone case because she's also assigned to the case that Special Counsel Robert Mueller brought against 12 Russian military intelligence agents for that hack." However, Bloomberg says Jackson "refused to allow Stone's lawyers to relate the two prosecutions during a hearing Wednesday on what rules will govern the evidence each side can present at trial in November. 'This indictment does not charge Roger Stone with conspiracy related to the hacking or anything else,' the judge said."

FTC Reportedly Sought To Serve Bannon With Subpoena In Cambridge Analytica Investigation. Politico (9/25, Scola, 4.29M) reports, "The Federal Trade Commission unsuccessfully tried to serve a civil subpoena Wednesday on Steve Bannon...over his role in the Cambridge Analytica data scandal that recently resulted in a $5 billion fine for Facebook." The FTC is seeking to determine whether he "engaged in 'deceptive or unfair' use of data gleaned from Facebook." The FTC has sued Cambridge Analytica, "alleging that it deceived Facebook users by harvesting their information without their consent." Politico adds, "Bannon played an early role in getting Cambridge Analytica off the ground and served on the firm's board."

WPost Calls For End Of Case Against McCabe.

The Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M), in an editorial, argues that the case of former FBI official Andrew McCabe "does not warrant prosecution," and suggests that he is being prosecuted "perhaps" because "President Trump has routinely and publicly excoriated him – more than 50 times." The Post adds that McCabe "already paid a stiff price" having been "terminated in a particularly nasty fashion – just hours before he would have qualified for his pension." The Post concludes, "If the case against Mr. McCabe is still active, it should end."

Senate Panel Held Confirmation Hearings For Five Judicial Nominees Wednesday.

The Daily Caller (9/25, Daley, 716K) reports on Wednesday, "the Senate Judiciary Committee convened confirmation hearings for five judicial nominees," including "two appeals court nominees and three trial court nominees." The Daily Caller adds, "Sarah Pitlyk, a trial court nominee who litigated for pro-life groups and clerked for Justice Brett Kavanaugh, bore the brunt of Democratic criticism" though the "orderly proceedings were mostly uneventful." Other nominees were "appeals court nominees Danielle Hunsaker and William Nardini and trial court nominees Jodi Dishman," Daniel Traynor, and Pitlyk, who is "a nominee for the federal trial court in eastern Missouri."

California Leads 17 States In Suit Against Administration Over Endangered Species Rules Changes.

USA Today (9/25, Rice, 10.31M) reports a coalition of 17 states, the District of Columbia, and New York City, led by California Attorney General Xavier Becerra sued the Administration "to block a significant rollback of the Endangered Species Act." USA Today also calls it "a major overhaul to the Endangered Species Act" which "ended blanket protections for animals newly deemed threatened and allowed federal authorities for the first time to take into account the economic cost of protecting a particular species." USA Today adds that the Endangered Species Act "has saved 99% of listed species from extinction." USA Today also reports that Commerce Secretary Ross said the changes will reduce "the regulatory burden" while not affecting conservation.

Murkowski: Tongass Would Enjoy Protections Even If "Roadless Rule" Is Lifted.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M), Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski welcomes "news that President Trump might seek to exempt Alaska's Tongass National Forest from the Clinton-era 'roadless rule,' opening up more of the region to potential development." Murkowski writes that even under an exemption, the forest will remain rich in wildlife because "protecting the unique roadless values within the Tongass has long been a priority in southeast Alaska and nationally." Furthermore, "new projects in areas where development is allowed would still have to secure all relevant federal approvals, including compliance with the Tongass Land and Resource Management Plan, the National Environmental Policy Act and other applicable laws such as the Clean Water Act."

Acting Army Secretary Proposes Changes To Eligibility For Burial At Arlington.

The Washington Times (9/25, Vondracek, 492K) reports on Wednesday, Acting Army Secretary Ryan McCarthy proposed new eligibility requirements for burial at Arlington National Cemetery, as "the Army estimates the cemetery will run out of space in the 2050s if no changes are made." Under the proposed changes eligibility would be limited to "Medal of Honor recipients, former prisoners of war, personnel killed in action, recipients of awards for valor, veterans who matriculate to high-ranking government posts, presidents and vice presidents." Others veterans could be cremated and interred above ground. Under current rules, "about 22 million living service members and veterans are eligible for burial at Arlington," while "only 95,000 burial spaces remain" to be expanded by 37 additional "acres of burial space."

Cindy McCain Bemoans Current State Of GOP.

The Washington Post (9/25, Bellware, 14.2M) reports that Cindy McCain, the widow of the late Sen. John McCain (R-AZ), "is voicing a dim view of some of the ways the Republican Party is doing business in 2019. Asked to size up the political landscape heading into the 2020 election during an episode of Politico's 'Women Rule' podcast that was released Wednesday," she "pointed to the local GOP in Arizona and assessed that 'it's not functioning well' and excludes people who aren't 'walking the line.' 'That's just not right,' McCain said. 'That's not the party my husband and I belonged to.'"

Franken To Host Weekly Show On SiriusXM Radio.

The AP (9/25, Bauder) reports that ex-Sen. Al Franken (D-MN), "who resigned... in 2017 amid sexual misconduct charges, will re-emerge into the public sphere on Saturday when he starts a new weekly radio show on the SiriusXM satellite service." The AP says that Franken "is perhaps the most prominent public figure felled by the #MeToo movement to step back into public life. He said he has no plans to return to politics." Franken told the AP, "I miss the Senate a lot but I'm not there so I want to be a voice."

The New York Times (9/25, Sisario, 18.61M) reports that Franken "resigned from the Senate...under pressure from fellow Democrats after multiple women accused him of unwanted sexual advances." He "had stayed out of the public eye since his resignation from the Senate, which he joined in 2009. His resurfacing began in July, with a profile in The New Yorker. The article, by Jane Mayer, cast doubts on some of the accusations against Mr. Franken, and reported that many of the lawmakers who had demanded his resignation now believed he had been forced out too hastily."

Cuomo, Longtime Girlfriend Lee Have Split Up.

The New York Times (9/25, McKinley, 18.61M) reports, "After more than a decade" as a couple, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "and his longtime girlfriend, Sandra Lee, announced on Wednesday that they are ending their relationship. The two confirmed the split in a statement. 'Over the recent past, we have realized that our lives have gone in different directions and our romantic relationship has turned into a deep friendship,' Mr. Cuomo and Ms. Lee, a Food Network personality and author, said."

Quinnipiac Poll: Warren 27%; Biden 25%; Sanders 16%; Buttigieg 7%.

Politico (9/25, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that a Quinnipiac University national poll of 561 Democratic and Democratic-leaning independent voters, taken Sept. 19-23, shows Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) leading the race for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination with 27%, followed by ex-Vice President Joe Biden at 25%, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) at 16%, and South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 7%; no other contender tops 3%. Politico says that while Warren's "edge falls within the survey's margin of error, Biden's formidable lead over the rest of the field has crumbled since the last Quinnipiac national poll in August, which showed him" at 32% and Warren at 19%. USA Today (9/25, Morin, 10.31M) reports that the latest Quinnipiac survey “follows several early state” polls “where Warren has jumped ahead of Biden.” She “is numerically ahead in Iowa and New Hampshire, and is closing in on Biden in Nevada. In all of the polls, Warren and Biden are within the margin of error.”

In an online article, CNN (9/25, Cole, 83.16M) reports that the Quinnipiac “poll reflects a tightening Democratic race as well as Warren’s increasing consolidation of the progressive vote and making inroads among black voters. Her support among that crucial demographic bloc has climbed dramatically in recent months, from 4% in July to 8% in August to 19% now. Biden’s support among black voters, meanwhile, has dipped from 53% to 40% over the same time. The numbers signal a potential softening in a key base for Biden’s campaign, as well as an ability for Warren to grow support beyond white college-educated liberals.” The Hill (9/25, Frazin, 2.98M) and Reuters (9/25, Lewis) also report on the results of the Quinnipiac poll.

Economist-YouGov Poll: Biden 25%; Warren 25%; Sanders 16%; Buttigieg 7%; Harris 6%. The Hill (9/25, Klar, 2.98M) reports that an Economist-YouGov national poll of 608 Democratic voters, taken Sept. 22-24, shows Biden and Warren tied at 25%, followed by Sanders at 16%, Buttigieg at 7%, and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) at 6%; no other contender tops 2%. The Hill says that Biden’s support remained at the same level as “in last week’s poll, but it’s a 6-point jump for Warren.”

California Poll: Warren 29%; Biden 20%; Sanders 19%; Harris 8%; Buttigieg 6%. The Los Angeles Times (9/25, Lauter, 4.64M) reports that a UC Berkeley Institute of Governmental Studies poll of 2,272 likely California Democratic primary voters, taken Sept. 13-18, shows Warren leading with 29%, followed by Biden at 20%, Sanders at 19%, Harris at 8%, and Buttigieg at 6%; no other contender tops 3%. The poll was commissioned by the Times. The article says that Warren’s support is up 11 points since a similar poll taken in June, while Biden and Sanders posted numbers similar to the findings in that June survey. The Times adds that Harris’ “support in the poll is down from 13% in June.”

The Hill (9/25, Rodrigo, 2.98M) reports that Warren “also held a commanding lead when respondents were asked what candidate they giving at least some consideration to backing, 22 points ahead of any other White House hopeful at 68 percent.” Warren also led among white non-Latino likely voters, “but trailed both Biden and Sanders by double digits among Latino respondents. Biden was the top choice of 32 percent of African American respondents, leading that demographic. Warren has struggled to connect with black voters so far this primary cycle, but managed to place second, with 24 percent support.”

Maryland Poll: Biden 33%; Warren 21%; Sanders 10%; Harris 6%; Buttigieg 5%. The Hill (9/25, Frazin, 2.98M) reports that a Goucher College poll of 300 likely Maryland Democratic voters, taken Sept. 13-19, shows Biden leading with 33%, followed by Warren at 21%, Sanders at 10%, Harris at 6%, and Buttigieg at 5%.

Missouri Poll: Biden 34%; Warren 22%; Sanders 14%; Buttigieg 10%; Harris 9%. The Missouri Times (9/25, Schallhorn) reports that a Show Me Victories poll of 400 likely Missouri Democratic voters, taken Sept. 13-16, shows Biden leading with 34%, followed by Warren at 22%, Sanders at 14%, Buttigieg at 10%, and Harris at 9%; no other contender tops 4%.

Media Analyses: Surging Warren Now Shares Frontrunner Status With Biden.

On NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 5, 1:21, 6.11M), Lester Holt reported, “There is a shakeup among the Democrats trying to replace President Trump. New polls show [Sen] Elizabeth Warren catching up to [ex-Vice President] Joe Biden, who had been the front-runner.” NBC’s Garrett Haake added, “From one Democratic front-runner to two. The signs of an Elizabeth Warren surge on the campaign trail, now unmistakable. First came the massive crowds at rallies coast-to-coast. Now, new polls showing Warren in a razor-tight race with Joe Biden. Warren now posting narrow leads in polls of critical early states – Iowa, New Hampshire – and nationally, though within the margin of error. In each poll, Warren, Biden and [Sen.] Bernie Sanders leaving the rest of the field behind.”

Under the headline “Biden Nosedives In Early-State Polls,” Politico (9/25, Caputo, 4.29M) reports that Biden, “once the dominant front-runner in the Democratic” presidential race, “is now marginally trailing...Warren in the first caucus state of Iowa and the first primary state of New Hampshire.” Politico says that Biden’s “South Carolina firewall shows signs of cracking and he’s losing his once-overwhelming lead in Florida.” Politico adds that Biden has led President Trump “in general election matchups in every major poll conducted this year. But the downward trend in Biden’s primary election top-line numbers and favorability ratings...suggests several bruising months have taken a toll.”

The Washington Times (9/25, A1, McLaughlin, 492K) says that Warren “is winning the next-door-neighbor battle in New Hampshire, where the Massachusetts Democrat has climbed to the top of the pack in the 2020 primary race, wresting the far-left mantle away from...Sanders of Vermont.” The Times reports, “Activists say it is a testament to the strong ground game Ms. Warren has established in the state, her ability to connect with voters on a personal level and the lengthy list of policy ideas that have been embodied by her slogan, ‘I have a plan for that.’” The Times adds, “The Warren bounce comes at the expense of Mr. Biden, whose aura of electability is eroding, and Mr. Sanders, who is failing to re-create the magic of 2016 when he finished in a statistical tie with Hillary Clinton in Iowa and easily defeated her in New Hampshire.”

Issa Expected To Challenge Indicted GOP Rep. Hunter.

The San Diego Union-Tribune (9/25, Clark, 755K) reports that ex-Rep. Darrell Issa (R-CA) “appears to be on the verge of formally announcing” a 2020 challenge to indicted Rep. Duncan Hunter (R-CA) in CA50. Issa “has scheduled a press conference for Thursday morning...in El Cajon,” California, where he’s expected to announce his bid. Issa, who opted against seeking reelection last year in the CA49, “recently said he would run” in CA50 “if his appointment to a Trump administration trade position was not approved soon. Last week, after his confirmation to the trade post stalled again at the request of" Sen. Bob Menendez (D-NJ), "Issa told the San Diego Union-Tribune he expected his confirmation would never fairly be allowed to go to a vote."

Politico (9/25, White, 4.29M) reports that Issa "will" enter the race, "a source confirmed, setting up a GOP heavyweight clash over one of the state's few remaining Republican districts." Politico says Hunter "was indicted in August 2018 for misusing federal campaign funds – charges that contributed to a shrinking margin of victory last November, just 3 points, in a district President Donald Trump carried by 15 points in 2016." Politico adds that "Hunter has not stepped aside despite being bounced from his House committee assignments while awaiting trial early next year."

The New York Times (9/25, Edmondson, 18.61M) reports that Hunter "and his wife, Margaret, are accused of spending more than $250,000 in campaign funds on personal expenses – including a vacation to Italy, fast food runs and plane tickets for a pet rabbit – and then lying to the Federal Election Commission." The Times adds that Issa "is just the latest Republican planning to challenge Mr. Hunter as California conservatives fear that the incumbent lawmaker will be convicted. Five other candidates, including" ex-San Diego City Councilman Carl DeMaio, "who hosts a conservative radio talk show and is openly gay, have thrown their hats in the ring, though three of those candidates are expected to appear in support" of Issa. CQ Roll Call (9/25, Connolly, 154K) reports Inside Elections with Nathan L. Gonzales rates CA50 "Leans Republican." The Hill (9/25, Greenwood, 2.98M) also reports on the story.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.9%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.9%, and his disapproval at 52.3%. The President's approval is down 0.4 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (9/22-9/24) finds Trump's approval at 51%, with 47% disapproving.

An Economist/YouGov poll of 1,198 "registered voters" (9/22-9/24) shows Trump with a 44% approval rating and 52% disapproval.

A Quinipiac survey of 1,337 "registered voters" (9/19-9/23), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 40%, and his disapproval at 55%.

WSJournal Analysis: Deficit Spending To Blame For Argentina's Economic Crises.

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Perez, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Argentina is facing another economic crisis, a recurrent problem in the nation's history, with hard currency in short supply, inflation rising, and growth contracting. The Journal says the issue is fiscal restraint: Argentina keeps spending more than it brings in through taxes, and its huge fiscal deficit leads it to print and borrow more.

Reuters (9/25) reports presidential front-runner Alberto Fernandez "would seek 'friendly' negotiations with the country's creditors if elected next month, a senior adviser told local news station C5N on Wednesday." The country, which will hold a general vote on October 27, "has been teetering on the edge of default since a sharp market crash in August, when Fernandez won a landslide victory in a primary against market-friendly incumbent Mauricio Macri."

The Financial Times (9/25, Mander, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports traders and investors are sounding the alarm over a growing gap between Argentina's official and parallel exchange rates.

Bloomberg (9/25, 4.73M) also covers the topic.

German Authorities Raid Deutsche Bank HQ Over Danske Money-Laundering Scandal.

Reuters (9/25) reports, "German authorities have raided Deutsche Bank's Frankfurt headquarters in search of information related to Danske Bank and a money laundering scandal, Frankfurt prosecutors said on Wednesday." They are investigating whether Deutsche Bank "facilitated money laundering and whether it failed to alert authorities about suspicious transactions quickly enough, the prosecutors said."

Former Head Of Danske Bank In Estonia Found Dead.

Bloomberg (9/25, Ummelas, 4.73M) reports the former head of Danske Bank's Estonian branch, at the center of a $220 billion money-laundering scandal, "was found dead after disappearing from his home on Monday." Aivar Rehe, who was CEO of the branch until he left in 2015, "had been reported missing from his home in greater Tallinn." His "body was found near his home, the police said in a statement on Wednesday."

The New York Times (9/25, Ewing, 18.61M) reports Rehe's death was an apparent suicide, the Estonian police said. The police will not investigate Rehe's death further, according to a police statement. Rehe "was not considered a suspect in the criminal investigation, a spokeswoman for Estonian prosecutors said." However, he "supervised the bank from 2006 to 2015, and from 2007 to 2015 there were 'major deficiencies in controls and governance that made it possible to use Danske Bank's branch in Estonia for criminal activities such as money laundering,' the bank said in a 2017 statement."

EU Official: European Economy Facing Increased Risks From Brexit, Trade Tensions.

Reuters (9/26) reports EU economic growth is "slowing down as the bloc faces increasing risks from global trade tensions and the unclear outcome of Brexit, the EU's top economic commissioner Valdis Dombrovskis said on Thursday." He told a Brussels conference, "Growth is slowing down and risks are mounting. Trade and geopolitical tensions translate into elevated and lasting uncertainty and the possibility of a disruptive Brexit remains real."

Modi's Tax Cut Seen As Unlikely To Lead To Indian Jobs Bonanza.

Reuters (9/25, Ulmer, Ahmed) reports, "With one eye on flagging demand, businesses in India are likely to bank the government's $20.4 billion corporate tax windfall rather than unleash the investments that Prime Minister Narendra Modi hopes will create millions of jobs and revive the economy." The piece says the tax cuts "came as a surprise to investors, many of whom had been complaining that Modi's government was not listening to their pleas for action on the economy." However, economists argue that while the tax rate cut "brings the cost of doing business in India into line with its main Asian rivals, the government giveaway will do little to fix the lack of spending power."

ECB's Lautenschlaeger Resigns After Questioning Stimulus.

The AP (9/25, McHugh) reports Sabine Lautenschlaeger, a member of the ECB's top leadership, "has resigned after publicly questioning the need for the bank's stimulus efforts, shaking up the institutions' top executive body amid public criticism of its policies by some of its own policymakers." Her resignation comes "amid criticism in her native Germany of the stimulus program decided by the bank under President Mario Draghi, who is to be succeeded by former IMF head Christine Lagarde Nov. 1." The piece explains the central bank "sad in a statement on Wednesday that Lautenschlaeger would leave her post on the bank's six-member executive board at the end of the month, more than two years before the end of her eight-year term."

Trump Meets With Venezuelan Opposition At UN.

The AP (9/25) reports that President Trump "showed his support for the Venezuelan opposition...as he met with its delegation to the U.N. General Assembly" on Wednesday "instead of the official government delegation and called for an end to the 'horrible and brutal oppression' of President Nicolas Maduro." The AP says Trump "has pointedly refused to rule out a U.S. military intervention in Venezuela, but he said at the meeting on the sidelines of the annual gathering that his first objective is to help secure a peaceful political transition from Maduro" to Interim President Juan Guaidó. The AP adds that Trump "met with the opposition representatives, who have presented themselves as the 'legitimate' delegation, though the U.N. and other nations still recognize the Maduro government and its delegation."

Reuters (9/25, Cohen) reports Trump's meeting on the sidelines was "part of the administration's efforts to keep Venezuela 'high on the international agenda,' a senior U.S. State Department official said on Monday, pushing back on perceptions that U.S. commitment to Venezuela was waning." Argentine Foreign Minister Jorge Faurie told reporters after attending the meeting, "The fact that the President of the United States has convened so many others to hear their opinion is truly fundamental in this fight for Venezuela to return to democracy."

Spain's Leader Critical Of Trump's Leadership In Global Affairs.

The Washington Post (9/25, Tharoor, 14.2M) reports that President Trump and Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro "hailed national sovereignty above all else" in their addresses before the United Nations, but "other world leaders are amused by such rhetoric." In an interview, "center-left Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez lamented the effect of Trump's leadership on the world stage." Sánchez took shots at Trump's environmental stance, his "confrontation with Iran," and "Trump's protectionist rhetoric on trade, particularly the administration's decision to cast European partners as national security threats as a way to slap tariffs on some of their exports." But one thing he accepted is "the need for Europe to chart its own path on the world stage and move away from decades of sheltering under the umbrella of an American superpower."

Esper Pressing For New Policy To Lower Civilian Casualties.

The Washington Times (9/25, Wolfgang, 492K) reports, "The Pentagon reportedly is crafting a major new policy designed to cut down on civilian casualties resulting from U.S. military operations and will specifically address the growing trend of innocent deaths caused by allies who have bought U.S. weapons." Defense Secretary Esper is "spearheading the review, Breaking Defense reported Wednesday, and is expected to recommend changes next year." Pentagon spokesperson Cmdr. Candice Tresch said, "Secretary Esper fully supports the effort to evaluate and – where possible – improve our ability to minimize civilian harm in our military operations, and to be transparent when civilian casualties do occur."

UK Parliament Returns With Brexit Deadline Just Over A Month Away.

The AP (9/25) reports that British lawmakers returned to the House of Commons on Wednesday, "venting their pent-up anger over Prime Minister Boris Johnson's failed attempt to suspend Parliament and warning that democracy itself is under threat from the government." The AP says "senior officials in Johnson's government sparred with lawmakers of all parties on their first day back after Britain's Supreme Court decision declared that the prime minister's move to suspend the body for five weeks was illegal because it thwarted debate over Brexit." According to the AP, Parliament "has passed a law requiring him to seek a Brexit extension if there is no deal, but Johnson has said he won't do that under any circumstances," and "has begun to position himself as the champion of the people facing a recalcitrant establishment bent on frustrating the 2016 Brexit vote.”

The New York Times (9/25, Pérez-Peña, Mueller, Castle, Specia, Yeginsu, 18.61M) reports that Johnson on Wednesday “defended his attempt to suspend Parliament in the critical weeks ahead of Britain’s deadline to leave the European Union, accusing lawmakers of ‘sabotaging’ Brexit talks and saying the Supreme Court was wrong to rule his actions unlawful.” The Washington Post (9/25, Booth, Adam, 14.2M) reports that opposition lawmakers are “planning to deny Johnson an early election, while forcing him to fail in his promise to leave the European Union by the end of October.” Reuters (9/25, Piper, James) reports Geoffrey Cox, Britain’s attorney-general, said on Wednesday that Parliament “was a disgrace and the prime minister’s opponents were cowards for avoiding an election and trying to block Brexit. ‘This parliament is a dead parliament. It should no longer sit,’ Cox told the House of Commons. ‘This parliament should have the courage to face the electorate. But it won’t.’”

Netanyahu Tapped To Form New Israeli Government.

Reuters (9/25) reports that Israeli President Reuven Rivlin on Wednesday “tasked” Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu “with assembling a new government after power-sharing talks with his strongest rival, Benny Gantz, failed following an inconclusive election.” However, Reuters says Netanyahu “still has no clear path to a fifth term after emerging from the Sept. 17 ballot, the second this year, short of a parliamentary majority.” Netanyahu “will have 28 days to form a coalition and can ask Rivlin for a two-week extension if necessary.”

The Washington Post (9/25, Hendrix, Eglash, 14.2M) reports that Rivlin’s “decision to offer Netanyahu the first go at forming a government comes after the final results from last week’s election raised his Likud party’s count from 31 seats in Israel’s 120-seat parliament, the Knesset, a single seat behind” Blue and White. The Post says Rivlin “decided to act after three days of negotiations and two meetings between Gantz and Netanyahu failed to produce a deal.”

The New York Times (9/25, Kershner, 18.61M) reports that a “major sticking point in reaching a unity agreement will be who would serve first as prime minister in any rotation arrangement.” The New York Times (9/25, Kershner, 18.61M) reports that Netanyahu “also faces possible indictments in three corruption cases, and a special hearing with the attorney general has been scheduled for next Wednesday.”

The AP (9/25, Federman) reports, “Netanyahu now has 28 days to form a coalition, and Rivlin having discretion to give him an additional 14 days to do so.” The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Schwartz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports if Netanyahu falls short, Rivlin can give another member of the Knesset the opportunity to do so. If that fails, Israel could hold new elections.

WSJournal: Israel’s Political Chaos Is Democracy At Work. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) draws some lessons from Israel’s political uncertainty, observing that Israelis have moved to the right on security, and Israeli Arabs are engaging more in the country’s democratic system. The Journal finds it a small comfort that the situation in Israel, which mirrors the chaos in the US and the UK, shows that democratic systems are striving to reach a consensus across political divisions.

Hadley, Flournoy: US Should Resume Afghan Peace Talks.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M), Stephen Hadley, a former national security adviser during the George W. Bush Administration, and Michèle Flournoy, who served as Undersecretary of Defense for Policy during the Obama Administration, argue that despite President Trump’s decision “to call off peace talks with the Taliban...a political settlement of the Afghanistan conflict remains the best way to protect U.S. national security interests and prevent terrorist attacks from originating in the region.” They argue that “peace negotiations leading to an inclusive political settlement are the only way that the United States can achieve its core objective of preventing Afghanistan from once again becoming a haven for international terrorists, honor the service and sacrifice of our troops, and help bring an end to four decades of war and suffering in Afghanistan.”

NYTimes Analysis: China Pressures Islamic Countries To Be Silent On Plight Of Its Muslims.

The New York Times (9/25, Perlez, 18.61M) reports that when Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan visited China this summer, despite having “stridently promoted Islamic values in his overwhelmingly Muslim country,” he was “largely silent on the incarceration of more than one million Turkic Muslims in China’s western region of Xinjiang, and the forced assimilation of millions more.” According to the Times, “It was an about-face from a decade ago, when he said the Uighurs there suffered from, ‘simply put, genocide’ at the hands of the Chinese government.” The Times says the Chinese government, “backed by its diplomatic and economic might...has largely succeeded in quashing criticism,” and Chinese officials have “convinced countries to support Beijing publicly on the issue, most notably Muslim ones in Africa, Asia and the Middle East.”

UN Report Says World’s Oceans Under Severe Strain From Climate Change.

According to the New York Times (9/25, Plumer, 18.61M), a new UN report warns “earth’s oceans are under severe strain from climate change...threatening everything from the ability to harvest seafood to the well-being of hundreds of millions of people living along the coasts.” And if “humans keep pumping greenhouse gases into the atmosphere at an increasing rate, the risks to human food security and coastal communities will increase sharply.” A continuing increase in fossil-fuel emissions could cut the world’s fish population by a quarter by the end of the century, which “would have sweeping implications for global food security: Fish and seafood provide about 17 percent of the world’s animal protein, and millions of people worldwide depend on fishing economies for their livelihoods.”

The CBS Evening News (9/25, story 6, 2:41, O'Donnell, 4.47M) reported that the UN report "warns the harshest consequences may be on low-lying coasts, where almost 700 million people live." CBS' Mireya Villarreal looked "at the potential impact on South Florida," home to more than six million people. Villarreal said Miami Beach is taking the threat seriously, "raising street level, installing 80 new pumps, and fortifying its seawall."

Chang: Hong Kong Could Be Catalyst For Communism's Collapse.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Gordon G. Chang, author of "The Coming Collapse of China," argues that Hong Kong's protest, now in its 16th week, has the potential to topple China's Communist regime. Chang observes that the protester's demands have expanded in scope, and their boldness could inspire residents on the mainland and Taiwan to resist Beijing.

New Home Sales Up More Than Expected In August.

Reuters (9/25, Mutikani) reports on Wednesday, the Commerce Department reported that new home sales were up 7.1 percent in August "to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 713,000 units," which Reuters said was "more than expected" and attributed the growth to "lower mortgage rates." The report "added to solid reports on August retail sales, industrial production, housing starts and home resales." According to Reuters, economists polled expected a 3.5 percent increase to 660,000 units.

Breitbart (9/25, Carney, 673K) reports sales of new homes "soared much higher than expected in August and sales data for the previous two months were revised upwards as well." Breitbart adds that the three-month moving average "climbed to 703,000, the fastest pace in nearly 12 years," and "compared with a year ago, sales were up 18 percent."

Freddie Mac's Yvette Gilmore Receives Five Star Community Leadership Award.

DS News (9/25, Welborn) reports Freddie Mac VP of Single-Family Servicer Relationship and Performance Management Yvette Gilmore received the Five Star Community Leadership award. Gilmore said, "I'm proud of how we come together as an industry in times of financial crisis, disaster – all of those things that America's families depend on us to assure for them. They may not know who we are, but they depend on us when they need us the most." Gilmore added, "Please know that I will continue to work my hardest to be an advocate for women – all women. All the time. In all points in their career."

GOP White House Seems OK With Explicit Guarantee For Agency MBS.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/25, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "Earlier this month, when the Treasury Department unveiled its long-anticipated plan to reform the nation's housing-finance system, the agency caught some market watchers off guard with its tacit approval of an explicit government guarantee on agency-quality MBS. The reason: For decades, the concept of Uncle Sam placing an explicit – as opposed to implicit – backing on MBS was anathema to most Republicans because such a maneuver would, in theory, add to the government's liabilities." GSE investor Gary Hindes said, "The rating services would go nuts." According to IMF, "In other words, Fitch, Moody's and Standard & Poor's might look sideways on the federal government adding to its already-sizeable financial obligations." However, "according to interviews conducted" by IMF, "an explicit MBS guarantee isn't such a crazy idea after all. As some pointed out – and as Treasury noted in its blueprint – the explicit guarantee would be paid by the g-fees each lender pays to the guarantor, in this case, Fannie and Freddie. In essence, it would be a pay-as-you-go system."

FHFA: GSE Delinquencies Fell In Q2.

The ABA Banking Journal (9/25) reports, "The number of homes backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac that are 60 or more days past due fell from 1.03% to 1% at the end of the second quarter of 2019, according to the Federal Housing Finance Agency's foreclosure prevention report released today." Seriously delinquent loans "fell to 0.67% of Fannie and Freddie's mortgage loan portfolio in the second quarter. By comparison, 3.43% of Federal Housing Administration loans were seriously delinquent and 1.95% of all loans were." The FHFA's report "also documented the GSEs' efforts to prevent foreclosures, with 31,757 modifications or other actions completed in the second quarter and more than 4.4 million since the conservatorships began."

MBA COO Discusses Inclusivity, mPower, And How A Mentor At Freddie Mac Inspired Her.

M Report (9/25, Albanese) interviewed MBA COO Marcia Davies, who discussed how she strides the mortgage industry has made toward inclusivity. She also outlined MBA's mPower program, which M Report says "provides women a platform to strengthen their networks and achieve professional growth and development as they rise through the ranks of the mortgage industry." Davies "told M Report that she encountered one of her greatest mentors while working at Freddie Mac," where she spent 21 years of her career. According to M Report, "A colleague took a chance on her, forcing her out of her comfort zone and challenging her with running a different department." Davies "added that her ability to achieve where she wasn't sure she could provided her a springboard of confidence that eventually allowed her to lead different areas within Freddie Mac."

Freddie Mac Workshop On Helping Renters Become Homeowners Scheduled For Oct. 5.

The Downey \(CA\) Patriot (9/25, 73K) reports, "A free workshop designed to help renters understand the importance of credit and create a path toward homeownership is set for Saturday, Oct. 5, at the Embassy Suites" in Downey, California. The workshop "includes guest speakers from Freddie Mac, the government-owned enterprise chartered by Congress in 1970 to keep money flowing to mortgage lenders in support of homeownership and rental housing."

Boltansky: Legislative GSE Reform Was "Already Effectively Dead" Before Impeachment Push.

MarketWatch (9/25, Reklaitis, 1.67M) reports that according to Compass Point analyst Isaac Boltansky, the impeachment inquiry launched by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Tuesday "is likely to either delay, complicate or sink the remainder of the legislative agenda," and "the odds of this Congress securing numerous legislative victories in advance of the [2020] election were already laughably low." Boltansky said that "legislative efforts" including "gun legislation, GSE reform and infrastructure" were "already effectively dead and this development will not change that fact."

PACE Financing Is On The Rise In Florida.

Florida Trend (9/25, 34K) reports PACE financing is "starting to take off in Florida." Today, "an estimated 150 local governments in Florida have PACE programs, all run by private, thirdparty administrators." According to Erin Deady, a Delray Beach-based environmental law attorney, "Over 50% of the state's population is served by one or more PACE programs." Florida Trend reports the Florida PACE surge gave the program a second wind: "In 2010, Harvard Business Review named PACE a "breakthrough idea," along with telemedicine kiosks and the creation of a national R&D lab focused on economic stability and prosperity. That same year, however, the Federal Housing and Finance Agency (FHFA), which regulates Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, raised concerns about the seniority of PACE liens over mortgages. Like other special assessments, PACE liens get paid first in the event of a mortgage default. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac stopped buying PACE-encumbered mortgages. PACE program administrators across the U.S. suspended residential lending, and news reports declared PACE all but dead."

MBA: Mortgage Applications Fall As Rates Tick Up.

National Mortgage News (9/25, McCullom) reports, "The recent spike in mortgage interest rates reduced home purchase application activity last week, contributing to a 10.1% decline in total activity, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association. The MBA's Weekly Mortgage Applications Survey for the week ending Sept. 20 found that the Refinance Index decreased 15% from the previous week, but remained 104% higher than the same week one year ago." The seasonally-adjusted Purchase Index fell 3% from the prior week, while the unadjusted Purchase Index fell 4%.

HousingWire (9/25, Lloyd, 23K) reports the refinance share fell from 57.9% to 54.9%. The ARM share rose to 5.1% of total applications. The FHA share rose from 10.9% to 11.4%, while the VA share rose from 12.7% to 13.1%. The average rate for conforming 30-year FRMs rose from 4.01% to 4.02%, while the average rate for jumbos fell from 4.01% to 4%. The 15-year FRM average rose from 3.42% to 3.46%. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.54% to 3.39%. Mortgage News Daily (9/25, Swanson) reports, "The average size of a loan was $321,500 and purchase loans averaged $329,400."

National Mortgage Professional (9/25, Hall) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "Treasury yields trended downward over the course of last week, as the Federal Reserve meeting highlighted the elevated uncertainty in the economic outlook. However, despite falling yields, mortgage rates ticked up again and have risen 20 basis points over the past two weeks. The increase in rates led to fewer refinances, and activity has now dropped 17 percent over the last two weeks. Purchase applications also decreased, likely related to the two-week jump in rates, but still remained nine percent higher than last year. The recent data on increased existing-home sales and new residential construction points to the underlying strength in the purchase market this fall."

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/25, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports Finance of America Mortgage President Bill Dallas commented, "This is one of the more interesting times in mortgage history. Interest rates have potentially bottomed, or not, so refinance applications are in the wind. Purchases continue to grow nicely, but as a percentage of total volume, are clearly down."

Fitch: Lower Rates Could Help CMBS.

National Mortgage News (9/25, Sinnock) says, "The recent run of lower interest rates may bode well for today's commercial mortgage-backed securities, unless it's undermined by an increase in leverage, according to a new Fitch Ratings report." Fitch Managing Directors Eric Rothfeld and Huxley Somerville wrote, "Today's historically low interest rate environment will benefit CMBS performance only if CMBS lenders maintain recent leverage metrics. Debt service coverage ratios will improve with lower coupons, all else being held equal. However, an increase in leverage, leaving DSCRs at their recent levels, would make the loans more susceptible to refinance risk at maturity due to the increased debt. ... Close to 100% of loans in recent CMBS transactions presented to Fitch have mortgage rates below 5%, indicating that it is not solely higher-quality assets benefiting from the lower coupon environment. Some of the lowest-risk loans have rates below 3%."

Trepp: CMBS Delinquency Rate Fell To A New Low In August. National Real Estate Investor (9/25, Misonzhnik, 131K) reports,

"The U.S. 30+ days CMBS delinquency rate fell again in August, from its new cycle low in July. The all-property 30+ days delinquency rate reached another post-crisis low of 2.54 percent, according to Trepp LLC, representing an 8 basis points decrease from the month prior. The rate was also down 110 basis points compared to August of 2018."

Non-QM MBS Performance Strong As Investor Interest Picks Up.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/25, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports, "More than 130 investors are actively buying MBS collateralized by non-qualified mortgages, according to Pratik Gupta, an executive director at Nomura Securities. The sector was a hot topic this week at the ABS East conference in Miami, an event hosted by Information Management Network. Gupta said losses on non-QM MBS have been minimal. Among the thousands of loans securitized since 2014, just 94 have been liquidated and only seven of those have taken a loss, said the Wall Street official." Gupta said, "The exceptional performance speaks to underwriting standards." According to IMF, however, "questions remain regarding how large the non-QM market can grow. The sector is nowhere near the size of the market for non-agency MBS that existed before the financial crisis. And some large investors are avoiding new non-agency MBS until stronger protections are established for investors."

Study: First-Time Homebuyers Feel Unprepared, Worry About Affordability.

HousingWire (9/25, 23K) reports, "Although homebuying is a sign of independence and a big step in many people's lives, a new report from Framework shows that homebuyers wish they were better educated about the process before embarking on their real estate journey. The study found that only 41% of first-time homebuyers felt they were well prepared for the homebuying process, while 55% said they felt they wished they had an independent advocate to coach them through the process of homebuying and homeownership." The study also "found that 54% of recent first-time homebuyers and 62% of prospective first-time homebuyers said they wished they looked for a house sooner rather than later." Of those surveyed, "almost half of first-time homebuyers even said that they think that the homebuying process is 'rigged' against the buyer." National Mortgage News (9/25) reports, "Worry about affording homeownership was 13 percentage points lower for recent first-time buyers than prospective buyers (44% vs. 57% respectively). And only 36% of recent first-time buyers think they made costly mistakes during the process compared with the 44% of prospective buyers that feared doing so."

LendingTree: White Americans Own Disproportionately Large Share Of Homes In Large US Metros.

National Mortgage Professional (9/25, Hall) reports, "When it comes to measuring homeownership patterns along racial demographic lines, white Americans own a disproportionately large percentage of homes in all of the nation's 50 largest metros, according to new data released by LendingTree." LendingTree found that white Americans "accounted for an average of 59 percent of the population" in the metro areas it tracked, but they own "approximately 73 percent of the owner-occupied homes in these markets." LendingTree Chief Economist Tendayi Kapfudz said, "Ultimately, it appears as most, if not all, of the advantages afforded to white Americans on the whole are the result of numerous social factors that have historically made it more accessible for white Americans to gain meaningful employment, higher levels of wealth and access to credit." Mortgage Professional America (9/26, Randall) also reports.

Analysis: GSEs Will Ultimately Be Treated Like Other Entities Were In The Wake Of The Crisis.

In a Seeking Alpha (9/25, Street, 512K) analysis piece, contributor The Other Street provides some follow-up thoughts on their September 13 piece (9/13, Street, 512K) outlining the 5th Circuit's ruling on the FHFA's constitutionality and what it might mean for the Administration's GSE reform efforts. According to the new analysis, FHFA Director Mark Calabria "knew Bloomberg was out to catch him," and while "his focus was, rightly so, on the need for seed equity in order to be able to go to market, no question was asked about the potential shareholders' remedies from the 5th Circuit. ... Whichever way Treasury wants to cut it, in the end, Fannie and Freddie cannot be treated differently than the other entities involved in the 2008 crisis. Common sense oblige, backed up by Court's opinion, and if need be, by the TARP-enabling legislation. One could counter that HERA, aka the Housing and Economic Recovery Act, too was an Act of Congress. It was. The only problem, the FHFA it created was unconstitutional. How could that happen, I don't know, but it did. The fact is, Fannie and Freddie's $187 billion were fully repaid by Q4, 2013." Current Industry carried this piece.

Treasury Yields Drop Following Weak Consumer Confidence Data.

CNBC (9/26, Smith, 3.62M) reports US government debt prices "rose Thursday morning, pushing yields lower, after a key consumer confidence index for September slipped to a three-month low." At around 3:15 a.m. ET, the yield on the benchmark 10-year Treasury note was "down at around 1.7147%, while the yield on the 30-year Treasury bond was down at 2.1602%."

Stocks' Gains Attributed To Trump's Remarks On Potential Trade Deal With China.

Reuters (9/25, Shankar, Warrick) reports that US stock indices had their "best day in two weeks" Wednesday after Trump "said a trade deal with China could happen sooner than expected." According to Reuters, "Trump's comments were in contrast to his harsh rhetoric on Tuesday on the trade dispute, which rattled global stock markets on Wednesday." The AP (9/25) also credits Trump's "remarks...indicating a trade deal with China could happen soon" for having "put investors in a buying mood." According to the AP, "The market...climbed into positive territory after Trump, speaking to reporters at the United Nations, said China wants 'to make a deal very badly,' adding that 'it could happen sooner than you think.'" The AP says Trump "did not elaborate," but notes that "talks between top-level officials aimed at resolving the costly trade war are expected to take place next month."

Dollar Holds Gains.

Reuters (9/26, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar found broad support on Thursday as investors welcomed US President Donald Trump's hints of progress toward a trade deal with China and discounted the prospect of an impeachment probe making much headway in the short term." The dollar index against a basket of currencies "posted its sharpest daily gain in three months overnight and held steady in Asian trade" around 98.959. The dollar "also held gains on the euro and pound, steadying near two-week highs." A euro "bought $1.0951 at 0105 GMT," while the yen "steadied at 107.71 per dollar."

Gold Inches Higher.

Reuters (9/26) reports, "Gold prices inched higher on Thursday as investors resorted to bargain hunting after a sharp drop in the previous session, although a firm dollar limited the gains." Spot gold "was up 0.3% at $1,508.61 per ounce, as of 0126 GMT," while US gold futures "were up 0.2% at $1,515.9 per ounce."

Oil Holds Steady.

Reuters \(CAN\) (9/26, Khasawneh) reports, "Oil prices were steady on Thursday after falling the previous two sessions on industry concerns about rising supplies and signs of slowing demand." Brent crude futures "were at $62.36 a barrel, down 3 cents, or 0.05%, from the previous close, by 0555 GMT." West Texas Intermediate crude futures "were 2 cents lower, or 0.04%, to $56.47 a barrel."

Cybersecurity

FBI Probing Ransomware Attack On Virginia County's Schools.

WJHL-TV Johnson City, TN (9/25, 90K) reports from Smyth County, Virginia, "The Smyth County Public Schools are working with the FBI after four servers and some workstations were targeted by ransomware." WJHL-TV adds, "According to Technology Director Terry Hawthorne, at some point over the weekend, ransomware was installed to four servers and a few work stations at the central office." Hawthorne "told News Channel 11 that when employees arrived at work Monday, a message popped up with information to contact in order to pay to get back on the computers." The Smyth County Public Schools "has cyber insurance," and "Hawthorne said the company was immediately contacted to help them," and "they, in turn, contacted the FBI to help investigate."

Georgia State Patrol Working On Computer Fix After Cyber Attack.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/25, Sharpe, 895K) reports, "Three months after hackers struck, the Georgia Department of Public Safety has 50 workers trying to mitigate the damage to its computer system and regain access to records." The department "has under its umbrella Georgia State Patrol, Georgia Capitol Police and the Motor Carrier Compliance Division, making the hack easily one of consequential in the state since such crimes have been on the rise in the past few years." According to the AJC, "The headaches caused by the July 26 ransomware attack are most conspicuous at the Georgia State Patrol. Troopers watch over highways and interstates in every corner of the state, writing traffic tickets, arresting fugitives and stopping drunk drivers." GSP, "which has 360,000 cases involving tickets or arrests each year, can't access its computer system or the digital records it holds," and "that has forced troopers to revert to paper and anyone needing documents from the agency to wait. Records from several days are simply lost."

Experts Say $250M Not Sufficient To Protect 2020 Elections From Outside Interference.

The New York Times (9/25, Wines, 18.61M) reports that, if the Senate approves "a recent committee decision to spend $250 million more to protect the 2020 elections from outside interference, Congress will have devoted at least $630 million toward that goal since Russia sought to influence the last presidential election." Experts "say it sounds like a lot until the realization that a single state, Pennsylvania, plans to spend at least $125 million to upgrade its voting machines." And that expense addresses "just one vulnerability in an elections system whose security procedures...can be even creakier than its voting machines." the Director of the Election Reform Program at the Brennan Center for Justice Lawrence Norden said in an email, "Two hundred and fifty million dollars across over 8,000 election jurisdictions doesn't come close to paying for these things in a single year, let alone for elections beyond 2020." The Brennan Center has "estimated that state and local agencies would need nearly $2.2 billion over the next five years to adequately shield elections from tampering."

Senate Subcommittees Take Action On Cyber Funding.

Politico (9/25, Starks, 4.29M) reports in its cybersecurity column that Senate appropriators Tuesday "advanced two fiscal 2020 bills that pay for a trio of agencies with significant cybersecurity accounts." The Homeland Security subcommittee "approved the DHS funding measure, which would dedicate $2 billion to CISA, $350 million more than the president's budget requested, according to a panel summary." Within that amount, $1 billion "is for cybersecurity specifically." The bill includes $117 million "to eliminate a backlog of vulnerability assessments." The Coast Guard "would also get money for cybersecurity enhancements, but the summary didn't specify how much." Elsewhere Tuesday, the Commerce-Justice-Science Subcommittee "touted investments in cyber funding for the FBI and NIST, as well as money for US Attorneys to combat cybercrime and intrusions."

White House Blocking Congress From Auditing Its Offensive Hacking Strategy.

The Washington Post (9/25, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that the Trump Administration is blocking Congress "from auditing a secret hacking policy it has already used for cyberattacks on Russia and Iran – stonewalling that lawmakers say raises the risks of a dangerous misfire that could make cyberspace less secure." The policy "has been withheld for more than a year from lawmakers – even those who regularly review classified material." Lawmakers from both parties "are concerned the Trump Administration could plunge the country into a cyberwar without congressional approval or oversight, or at the very least, provoke retaliation that causes serious damage at home." Rep. Jim Langevin (D-RI) said, "Congress needs to understand what that guidance is so we can ensure we are properly understanding how far this goes and what the parameters are. We need to...do our job and make sure the government is properly executing these authorities."

Idaho Residents Report Losses After Pocatello City System Hacked.

The AP (9/25) reports several Pocatello residents "say they've had unauthorized funds taken from their bank accounts after the city's billing system was hacked." The Idaho State Journal reports Pocatello police "say several people who pay their municipal utility bills online with a debit or credit card have reported losses ranging from $30 to thousands of dollars." Pocatello city spokesman Logan McDougall "says the city is working with its billing system vendor, Click2Gov, to investigate the matter." Police Sgt. Brian McClure "says police discovered the security breach when they noticed similar unauthorized payments from California while investigating some fraud cases." City officials "won't release details of the timeline of the hack, citing the ongoing investigation." In a prepared statement city officials "said they are working with the contractor and cybersecurity experts to determine the scope of the hack."

Opinion: Every Part Of The Supply Chain Can Be Attacked.

In an op-ed in the New York Times (9/25, 18.61M), Harvard Kennedy School lecturer Bruce Schneier writes, "The US government's continuing disagreement with the Chinese company Huawei underscores a much larger problem with computer technologies in general: We have no choice but to trust them completely, and it's impossible to verify that they're trustworthy. Solving this problem – which is increasingly a national security issue – will require us to both make major policy changes and invent new technologies." He contends, "Policy solutions involve forcing companies to open their technical details to inspection, including the source code of their products and the designs of their hardware. Huawei and Kaspersky have offered this sort of openness as a way to demonstrate that they are trustworthy. This is not a worthless gesture, and it helps, but it's not nearly enough. Too many back doors can evade this kind of inspection." He adds, "The other solution is to build a secure system, even though any of its parts can be subverted. This is what the former Deputy Director of National Intelligence Sue Gordon meant in April when she said about 5G, 'You have to presume a dirty network.' Or more precisely, can we solve this by building trustworthy systems out of untrustworthy parts?" He concludes, "Critically, these systems must be as secure as we can make them."

Former Senior DHS Officials Advocate For Consensus-Based Approach To 5G Development.

Government Computer News (9/25, Rockwell) reports three former top Department of Homeland Security officials say "a slower, consensus-based approach to 5G development would be a better option than adopting low-cost, available technology from Chinese manufacturer Huawei." In a September 24 teleconference with reporters, former DHS Secretary Tom Ridge, Nate Snyder, a former DHS senior counterterrorism official in the Obama Administration, and Chris Cummiskey, former DHS undersecretary for management, "voiced their growing concerns about a 5G supply chain based on Huawei, which they said poses a threat to telecommunications infrastructure." Ridge said, "Huawei is state owned and state controlled. China's economic espionage and backing the 2015 hack of the US Office of Personnel Management show the Chinese government has no qualms about stealing critical US data through nefarious sources." All three of the former DHS officials "advocated for more federal and private-sector investment to develop 5G hardware and software and a more standardized, open source-based approach to 5G technology."

Financial Reform

House Passes Pot Banking Bill.

The AP (9/25, Johnson) reports the US House has passed legislation that would allow marijuana "businesses legitimately operating under state laws to access loans, lines of credit and other banking services, while sheltering financial institutions from prosecution for handling marijuana-linked money." The SAFE Banking Act garnered "near-unanimous support from Democrats and nearly half of Republicans" in the House, but its "prospects in the Senate are uncertain."

Reuters (9/25, Schroeder) reports the bill “clarifies that proceeds from legitimate cannabis businesses would not be considered illegal, and directs federal regulators to write up rules for how they would supervise such banking activity.” Senate Banking Chairman Mike Crapo “has said he wants to consider similar legislation in the coming months, but it is not clear if the full Senate will vote on such a measure, analysts say.”

American Banker (9/25, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Crapo “told reporters Wednesday that holding a committee vote on some sort of cannabis banking legislation is on his radar.” He said, “I’d like to do it as soon as we can...but I can’t put a specific time.” To build more support for the measure, sponsor Rep. Ed Perlmutter (D-CO) last week added language “to include protections for industrial hemp businesses” as well as “language formally ending Operation Choke Point.” Crapo said these changes are an improvement to the bill: “I think those were both improvements and I think that there are several other issues that we need to look at,” such as “making sure that interstate commerce aspects of all of this are set up properly, looking at the question of legacy cash and avoiding money laundering in terms of how you move all of the legacy cash into the system, and the questions of safety and health that have been raised in terms of just how we address the banking side of the issue.”

Bloomberg (9/25, Dexheimer, 4.73M) reports that even if the SAFE Banking Act passes the Senate and is signed into law by President Donald Trump, “the new safeguards aren’t likely to draw big banks into pot banking, according to Cowen analyst Jaret Seiberg.” In a note before the House vote, Seiberg wrote, “This is not a total victory. The biggest banks that operate across state lines will still worry that cannabis is still illegal at the federal level.”

Politico (9/25, Warmbrodt, Fertig, 4.29M), The Hill (9/25, Lane, 2.98M), and Fox Business (9/25, Schott, 1.73M) also report.

Cuban-American Sues Airlines For “Trafficking” In Havana Airport.

Reuters (9/25, Marsh) reports, “A Miami-based law firm filed a lawsuit on Wednesday on behalf of a Cuban-American who claims to be the rightful owner of Havana’s international airport against American Airlines and the Latam Airlines Group for ‘trafficking’ in the property he says the Cuban government stole.” The piece explains that the case is “one of a slew filed in U.S. courts since the Trump administration in May implemented a long-dormant and controversial law allowing U.S. citizens to sue foreign firms and Cuban entities over their use of properties expropriated after Cuba’s 1959 revolution.” The piece notes that the Treasury Department on Tuesday “imposed sanctions on four maritime firms and vessels transporting Venezuelan oil to Cuba, amid an acute fuel scarcity in the island.” NBC News (9/25, 6.14M) also reports.

Federal Reserve

Bullard Doesn’t Expect Trump Impeachment Inquiry To Impact Fed Policy.

Reuters (9/25) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard “said on Wednesday he does not expect the impeachment inquiry into President Donald Trump to affect how the Fed conducts monetary policy.” He told CNBC in an interview “that Fed officials are used to dealing with political uncertainty as a backdrop to policy deliberations. ‘This doesn’t sound all that different to me,’ he said.” The piece notes Bullard also “reiterated his view that the Fed’s target rate should be reduced by an additional quarter of a percentage point by the end of this year.”

MarketWatch (9/25, Robb, 1.67M) reports regarding the impeachment inquiry, Bullard said, “Viewing it from a distance, this just sounds like more investigation to me...I expect that investors will just have to take on board that there will be a certain amount of political uncertainty going forward until we get to the 2020 election.”

Evans: Two Rate Cuts Have Fed “Well-positioned.”

Reuters (9/25) reports Chicago Fed President Charles Evans “said on Wednesday he backed the Fed’s two recent rate cuts but feels the central bank is now ‘well-positioned’ to see how economic data evolves.” He said, “A couple of rate cuts seemed useful,” to further the central bank’s 2 percent inflation goal and protect against risks of a slowdown. The piece notes that in comments to a suburban Rotary Club in Chicago, Evans “delivered an optimistic view of the U.S. economy, with growth still slightly above trend, and a strong outlook for consumers who are benefiting from low unemployment and wage gains that are solid but not ‘outrageously’ so.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Raice, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Evans said Wednesday he didn’t expect more rate cuts this year but was open to the possibility they may be necessary. “I think we’re in a good place in terms of the rate setting,” he told reporters, adding, “I’m open-minded to additional action if that’s how the discussion goes...I’m sympathetic” to more rate cuts.

Reuters (9/25) reports separately Evans also “said on Wednesday that the Fed may be able to avoid future repo market problems simply by increasing its balance sheet rather than setting up new market tools.”

Kaplan: Global Economy “Fragile” But US Will “Skate Through.”

Reuters (9/26) reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan said the global economy is going through a “fragile” period, but the odds of a US recession over the next year are still “relatively low.” He stated: “Global growth is decelerating ... We are in this tenuous period,” but the US “can skate through this” without a downturn given strong consumer spending and a strong job market.” He told the Dallas Business Club, “If the consumer stays strong, we are not going to have a recession.”

New York Fed Increases Size Of Repurchase Operations For Thursday.

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Kruger, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the New York Fed said Wednesday it would expand the size of repurchasing operations for Thursday. The Fed said it will raise the amount of overnight cash loans to $100 billion from $75 billion, and double the size of two-week offerings to $60 billion. The Financial Times (9/25, Wells, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), Bloomberg Opinion (9/25), and The Week (9/25, 1.94M) also cover the topic.

Senators Divided On Fed's Payments System.

American Banker (9/25, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that at a hearing Wednesday, Senate Banking Committee Chairman Mike Crapo (R-ID) noted big banks' concerns with the Fed's proposed real-time payments system, FedNow, which is set to launch by 2024. Some banks "have raised concerns about the Fed's analysis and process, the cost and amount of time it would take to develop its own real-time payment system, its prospects for achieving interoperability, inherent conflicts of the Fed operating its own system and its prospects for negatively affecting existing real-time payment systems," Crapo said in his opening remarks. Sen. Pat Toomey (R-PA) said Congress should consider stepping in to try to block FedNow's launch, highlighting concerns about how the service would be priced and whether it would operate alongside private-sector alternatives. But Democrats on the committee "largely supported the Fed's effort, saying it will increase competition and create a level playing field for small and large banks."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

CFPB Names New Enforcement Chief.

Reuters (9/25, Johnson) reports the CFPB on Wednesday "announced new hires at the agency, including a former state regulator to serve as new permanent chief of its enforcement office." Bryan Schneider, former head of the Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation, "will serve as the associate director of the agency's Division of Supervision, Enforcement and Fair Lending." Other key positions, "including the assistant director of research, the chief data officer and a deputy chief of staff" were also named on Wednesday.

Georgetown Professor: Regulators' "Valid-When-Made" Reasoning Is "Wrong."

Behind a paywall, Law360 (9/25, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports that in an amicus brief filed Tuesday in Colorado federal court, Georgetown Law professor Adam Levitin said the "valid-when-made" doctrine has been challenged as "not valid, but made-up." Levitin "slammed arguments made by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in their own amicus, saying the reasoning put forward by the regulators is 'wrong' and that the existence of a 'valid-when-made' doctrine should be a matter for Congress, not the courts." He wrote, "[The OCC and FDIC] rely entirely and improperly on out-of-context and even misleadingly edited quotations from older cases to support the doctrine's claimed antiquity."

Bill Would Create Standardized Financial Regulatory Reporting.

Pensions & Investments (9/25, Bradford) reports Reps. Carolyn Maloney (D-NY) and Patrick McHenry (R-NC) on Tuesday reintroduced "legislation that would make information collected by financial regulators more uniform and searchable." The Financial Transparency Act "calls for the Treasury secretary to create uniform, machine-readable data standards for information reported to financial regulatory agencies," including the OCC, the Fed, the FDIC, the CFPB, the SEC, the CFTC, the NCUA, and the FHFA. The article notes, "Similar legislation has been introduced in previous sessions of Congress with no further action, but supporters are encouraged that it is now being backed by senior members" of the House Financial Services Committee. Regtech, "the concept of applying data standards to financial regulatory information," could mean "a more efficient regulatory oversight system that can effectively identify and address bad actors," said Nick Hart, CEO of the Data Coalition.

Mr. Cooper COO Receives Five Star Lifetime Achievement Award.

DS News (9/25, Ojha) profiles Mr. Cooper COO Tony Ebers, examining his leadership philosophy, his career path, and his assessment of the state of the mortgage industry today, as well as where it is heading in the future. DS News says the "passion" of Ebers, the recipient of Five Star's 2019 Lifetime Achievement Award, "to do the right thing has been noticed across the industry." Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting said, "Tony Ebers is a person who is always all in. Tony sets his mission and goals, and then executes to success. If there's a hill to be taken, he was always front and center leading the charge. Tony is one of the US experts on residential mortgaging and servicing, and he uses his talents and skills to make homeownership available and affordable for all Americans."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Nancy Pelosi Is Sending A Message." The New York Times (9/25, 18.61M) says in an editorial, "Some ask whether it is pointless for the House to launch divisive impeachment proceedings when there's little chance that the Republican-led Senate will vote to convict a president so popular with their party's base. But House Democrats are also giving notice that every lawmaker, regardless of party, should be prepared to take a public stand on whether presidents are free to use their powers to summon foreign assistance for their political campaigns."

Washington Post.

"The Trump-Zelensky Readout Is A Devastating Indictment Of Our President." In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M) calls the transcript released by the White House of President Trump's call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky "a devastating indictment of the US president," and adds that while "Trump and his amen chorus claimed Wednesday that there was no 'quid pro quo'...the memorandum...strongly suggests otherwise," because "Trump first makes a request for a political investigation in direct answer to Mr. Zelensky's statement that Ukraine wants to buy more US antitank missiles." To the Post, "the integrity of US democracy depends on how Congress and the nation respond."

"Federal Agents Are Enforcing E-Verify Against Employees – But Not Businesses." The Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M) in an editorial argues that recent events "exposed a truth well known to employers and their political patrons nationwide: The [immigration] system is tougher on employees than on employers, by a lot." In support of that, the Post adds that in the year ending March 30, 2019, "just 11 individuals and no companies were prosecuted" for immigration violations, while "more than 85,000 undocumented immigrants were prosecuted for illegal entry and some 34,000 for illegal reentry." The Post argues, "A more rational immigration system would put the millions of unauthorized migrants already in the country on a path to legal status and expand legal immigration to meet the market's demands." It concludes by regretting that the Administration "has been tacking in the opposite direction."

"Andrew McCabe Has Been Punished Enough." In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/25, 14.2M) argues that the case of former FBI official Andrew McCabe "does not warrant prosecution," and suggests that he is being prosecuted "perhaps" because "President Trump has routinely and publicly excoriated him – more than 50 times." The Post adds that McCabe "already paid a stiff price" having been "terminated in a particularly nasty fashion – just hours before he would have qualified for his pension." The Post concludes, "If the case against Mr. McCabe is still active, it should end."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Ukraine Transcript Fizzle." The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial page argues the transcript released by the White House of President Trump's call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky shows Trump was telling the truth about the call, and casts the interaction between the two leaders as routine diplomacy. The Journal further states the public will not get behind the Democrats' drive, which it casts as a misguided and thinly-disguised attempt to undo the 2016 election.

"Trump's Japanese Trade Judo." The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes in favor of the US-Japan trade agreement, saying that it reverses some harm Trump caused by leaving the Trans-Pacific Partnership. The Journal adds that a lack of agreement over motor vehicles is disappointing, and contends it would have been better and easier to have stayed in the TPP.

"Netanyahu Holds On." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) draws some lessons from Israel's political uncertainty, observing that Israelis have moved to the right on security, and Israeli Arabs are engaging more in the country's democratic system. The Journal finds it a small comfort that the situation in Israel, which mirrors the chaos in the US and the UK, shows that democratic systems are striving to reach a consensus across political divisions.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Sam Bee: "Trump's phone call to the Ukrainian President happened the day after Robert Mueller testified to Congress. It's like if OJ Simpson stepped out of the court the moment after his acquittal and immediately murdered two people."

Sam Bee: "Trump's call to Ukraine's President is especially crazy because before Zelensky was sworn into office in May, he was in a sitcom about a random dude becoming President of Ukraine. So it was basically a conversation with someone who started his political career by pretending to be president, and another who started his political career by pretending to be successful."

Sam Bee: "Make no mistake, it is bad that the President is offering to be friends with benefits with any country that investigates his rivals. The fact he's done it more than once means it's not just horrifying, it's a pattern, and it will happen again, sort of like his affairs."

Conan O'Brien: "It's a big thing. Impeachment proceedings going on. This is history. President Trump is in hot water for asking the leader of Ukraine to look up dirt on Joe Biden. Now, for you history buffs out there, get this: No one's asked a foreign government to interfere in a US election since way back in 2016. I don't even remember."

Conan O'Brien: "According to polls, 59 percent of Americans do not want President Trump removed from office. Fifty-nine percent. Yes. That's a group made of up of Republicans and comedy writers."

Trevor Noah: "When we left off last night, the Democratic announcement of an impeachment inquiry had Trump up against the ropes. So in response, Trump said that he would release a transcript of the phone call he had with Ukraine's President, and Trump claimed that this transcript would prove that he is so innocent, the most innocent person. But now we have all seen the transcript, and I'm starting to wonder if Trump even read it."

Trevor Noah: "Yes, the transcript of the call is out. And not only did Trump definitely ask the President of the Ukraine to work with his personal lawyer/vampire henchman to investigate Joe Biden, he also tried to rope in the United States Attorney General. And if that happens, that is a big deal. Because a President can't go around using the Justice Department as his personal task rabbit. That is not allowed. It is the same way if an employee at Domino's would get into trouble for drying his laundry in the pizza oven."

Trevor Noah: "And you might be wondering, 'If this phone call is so damning, why did Trump even release the transcript? Only an idiot would do that!' Exactly."

Trevor Noah: "And if you are thinking, 'Wait, how do we even know exactly what Trump said on that call to a foreign leader?' Well, apparently all calls in the White House are recorded for quality assurance purposes. ... The software that monitors the President's calls writes it down, and then someone checks it. Can I say, I feel so bad for whatever voice recognition software has to try and make sense of what Donald Trump is saying. Because you realize, that computer is programmed to recognize normal human speech patterns, not the Donald."

Trevor Noah: [On Trump saying there was no quid pro quo] "That's right, folks there is no quid pro quo. Because I would never speak Latin on my calls."

Jimmy Kimmel: "One day after the Speaker of the House started a formal impeachment inquiry into the actions of our orange Julius Caesar, the White House fired back and countered with a summarized transcript of the President's call with the President of Ukraine. This is if OJ told Chris Darden, 'Hey, you found my glove!'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Of course, the President was on the defensive today, lashing out at the media and claiming he didn't pressure anybody to do anything. ... He really thinks we're idiots. By the way, we are idiots who elected an idiot to run our country."

Jimmy Kimmel: "People like Lindsey Graham are arguing that that transcript exonerates Trump. He called it a 'nothing burger,' which made the President happy and hungry. By the way, when you hear someone call something a 'nothing burger,' you can be damn sure there's something in that burger."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Donald Trump can't help himself. He's been doing business like this forever. He's a sneaky, ham-handed racketeer. Sharking people down is what he does. He thinks he's Tony Soprano. And in a lot of ways, he is Tony Soprano. They're both overweight mouth-breathers who are disappointed with their sons. But Tony Soprano, at least he knew when his conversations were being recorded, and that he should avoid saying illegal things. If Tony Soprano ran the mob like this, he wouldn't have made it past episode three."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Either Donald Trump knows what he's doing is wrong and does it anyway, or he doesn't know what he's doing is wrong, which I think might be worse. I think he wants to admit he colluded with a foreign power. He's proud of it. He doesn't understand what all the commotion is about. He would do it again. He's Jack Nicholson in 'A Few Good Men,' although in this story, there are no good men. It's all bad men."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Everything is lies. The only true thing that Donald Trump ever said was he could stand in the middle of Fifth Avenue and shoot someone, and he wouldn't lose any voters. At the time, I thought that was a ridiculous statement, but now, I think he's right. If Trump pulled out a gun and fired point-blank at, like, that naked cowboy who walks around Times Square with the guitar, Lindsey Graham would say 'Great shot,' Kevin McCarthy would say 'Reminds me of John Wayne,' and Mike Pence would say 'Giddy-up, we're going for a ride.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "What if the whistleblower who shows up tomorrow morning at 6:00 a.m. turns out to be Mike Pence? Wouldn't that be the best? 'I've had enough of your abuse, Donald. Get your stuff. Mother and I are moving into the White House.'"

Stephen Colbert: "This morning, the Administration, for some reason, released the official notes of Trump's phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky. ... And these notes that they released of this phone call make Trump look – and I don't want to get too technical – bad. ... (As Trump) 'I scratch your back. You help me bury Joe Biden's political career in a shallow grave in the woods down by the dump.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Now, the attorney general that Trump mentioned is our Attorney General. Several times in the phone call, he said he would have William Barr call Zelensky to help Ukraine dig up dirt on Trump's political enemies. But today, Barr denied involvement in Trump's smear campaign against Biden. Hey, what's the matter, Billy? Don't you trust your old buddy Don? He'll protect you the same way he protected his other friends: Paul Manafort and Michael Cohen. They both get free clothes, comfy beds, and magic toilets that make wine."

Stephen Colbert: "And when Trump told Zelensky that Giuliani would also be in touch, he told the most outrageous lie of all: 'Mr. Giuliani is a highly respected man.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Now, Trump's defense has not been exactly well-organized today. This morning, a Politico reporter tweeted: 'Hmmm, the White House just sent its talking points on Ukraine to House Democrats.' But almost immediately after sending the Dems their insider communication strategy, sources say the White House just sent a follow-up to recall the email. House Democrats responded with their own email: 'LOL, sorry, no backsies. Im-peach.'"

Stephen Colbert: "The White House's talking points are about what you would expect, with claims like, 'What the President actually talked about was entirely proper.' And, 'this is just another example of the deep state, the media, and Democrats damaging our national security for political gain.' And, 'the transcript clearly shows there was no quid pro quo.' Yes, all he did was suggest no more military aid unless they investigated Biden. That's just quid pro Joe."

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump stating Pelosi is no longer Speaker of the House, as far as he is concerned] "What? Wait. What, I just-- it's that easy? Well, in that case, Donald Trump, as far as I'm concerned, unfortunately, is no longer President of the United States."

Jimmy Fallon: "The big news today, Trump released the transcript of his phone call with the President of Ukraine. ... Later in the transcript, there was a pretty damaging part where Trump talks about Biden's son. When Trump saw that part, he said, 'That can't be my transcript. It looks nothing like my handwriting.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "You can tell Trump is running out of explanations. Today, he was like, 'It's not me on the transcript, it's Alec Baldwin.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Now a lot of Democrats have come out to show their support for the impeachment of Trump. You could tell they're onboard because Nancy Pelosi crowd-surfed her way into the office today."

Jimmy Fallon: "A lot of people are calling the transcript a smoking gun, which explains why today Trump said, 'Okay, now I'm ready for gun control.'"

James Corden: "This morning, the White House finally released the transcript of the troubling phone call between President Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky. As you know, this is the call that has Democrats formally looking into impeaching the President. Some of the transcript is a little hard to follow, because Zelensky's English isn't very good and, well, Trump's is even worse."

James Corden: "In the transcripts, Trump directly asks the Ukrainian President to, quote, 'do us a favor.' Do us a favor. A favor is when you ask your neighbor to watch your cat for the weekend, not interfere with an election, because that favor was for Ukraine to dig up dirt on Joe Biden's son. Trump is denying that this is a case of quid pro quo, but I'm pretty sure that's because Trump thinks that 'quid pro quo' is that game that they play in 'Harry Potter.'"

James Corden: "Trump supporters are saying the President didn't coerce or threaten the Ukrainian President, but according to the transcript, he did say that he was sending Rudy Giuliani over there. ... If sending him isn't a threat, I don't know what is."

Seth Meyers: "Following House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's announcement of impeachment proceedings against President Trump, Trump tweeted this morning that there is, quote, 'no President in the history of our country who has been treated so badly as I have.' Even more amazing, he tweeted it from the Abraham Lincoln Room in the John F. Kennedy Library."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump today released a transcript of the controversial phone call between him and the President of Ukraine, which seemed to include some incriminating information, and man, that is not good. It's like when someone has a face tattoo that says, 'Hail Satan.' If that's what you're showing people, what are you hiding?"

Seth Meyers: "According to the call transcript released this morning, President Trump told the President of Ukraine, quote, 'The United States has been very, very good to Ukraine. I wouldn't say that it's reciprocal, necessarily, because things are happening that are not good, but the United States has been very, very good to Ukraine.' Good Lord, Trump is the worst criminal. He's like a character from 'The Sopranos' who everyone knows is only gonna last one episode."

Seth Meyers: "Rudy Giuliani appeared on Fox News last night to respond to the launch of impeachment proceedings against President Trump and got into a heated argument with a fellow panelist before shouting at him, quote, 'Shut up, moron.' Wow. I mean, strong words from someone who literally married his second cousin. Yeah, that's how awful he is – we all forgot he married a family member. Anyone else on Earth you'd be like, 'Oh, yeah. There goes the guy who exchanged wedding vows with a relative.' But with Rudy, you're like, 'Oh, yeah.'"

Treasury in the News

Trump Boosts Sanctions On Iran As Pompeo Calls Saudi Bombing “An Act Of War.”

President Trump tweeted Wednesday morning, “I have just instructed the Secretary of the Treasury to substantially increase Sanctions on the country of Iran!”

Reuters (9/18, Mason, Kalin) reports Trump said there are “many options short of war with Iran after U.S. ally Saudi Arabia displayed remnants of drones and missiles it said were used in a crippling attack on its oil sites that was ‘unquestionably sponsored’ by Tehran.” CNBC (9/18, Macias, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports “it was not immediately clear what steps the president directed Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to take. Asked about the sanctions later Wednesday during stops in California, the president told reporters he would announce details over the next 48 hours.” The Washington Post (9/18, Wagner, 14.2M) similarly says, “It was not immediately clear what the increase in sanctions might entail.”

Politico (9/18, Forgey, 4.29M) reports the additional sanctions are “the administration’s first official, public response to the weekend drone strike...which Trump had shown reluctance to blame squarely on Tehran.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Talley, Salama, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Treasury’s options include exposing the covert Iranian networks that have enabled the country to continue selling oil on the black market, as well as those buying and transporting it. With officials and analysts saying China and Syria are the primary destinations for the oil, companies and people involved could be potential targets of Treasury’s next package of sanctions. The Journal goes on to detail other options for the Administration to ramp up pressure on Iran.

CNBC (9/18, Macias, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports “Russia’s Foreign Ministry slammed” the decision. Russia called the sanctions “destructive” and added that they “will not solve anything.” Also covering Trump’s tweet are The Hill (9/18, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M), USA Today (9/18, Jackson, Shesgreen, Brook, 10.31M), The Los Angeles Times (9/18, 4.64M), NBC News (9/18, 6.14M), National Review (9/18, 731K), The Financial Times (9/18, Politi, Sevastopulo, Omran, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), The New York Post (9/18, Moore, 4.57M), Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M), Fox News (9/18, Chakraborty, 27.59M), MarketWatch (9/18, Schroeder, 1.67M), and Law360 (9/18, Subscription Publication, 8K).

In the lead story on the CBS Evening News (9/18, lead story, 2:49, 4.12M), Norah O’Donnell reported Secretary of State Mike Pompeo called the attack on Saudi oil facilities “an act of war” Wednesday. O’Donnell reported US officials say “they know who approved the attack and where it was launched from. The Saudis presented evidence they say proves Iran did it. President Trump vowed to hit Iran with even tougher economic sanctions, but stopped short of approving a military response.”

On NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 2, 1:44, 5.99M), Lester Holt reported on “new fallout after the attack on those Saudi oil fields. [Pompeo] calling it ‘an act of war’ by Iran, and Saudi Arabia showcasing what it says is the evidence.” NBC’s Andrea Mitchell: “Saudi Arabia [is] showing the world what it says is evidence Iran launched the attacks on the Saudi oil fields. ... Trump’s response today: More economic sanctions against Iran, but not military action.” Trump: “There are options a lot less than that, and we’ll see. We’re in a very powerful position. Right now, we’re in a very, very powerful position.” Mitchell: “But sanctions alone are not tough enough for the President’s top Senate ally.” Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC): “If they don’t pay a price for bombing a neighbor’s oil field, then all hell is going to break out in the Mideast.” The Hill (9/18, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports Trump responded to Graham’s criticism, saying, “Ask Lindsey how did going into the Middle East, how did that work out? And how did going into Iraq work out? So, we have a disagreement on that. And we have plenty of time to do some dastardly things.” The Hill (9/18, Carney, 2.98M) and The New York Post (9/18, Fredericks, 4.57M) also report.

On ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 4, 2:39, Muir, 6.69M), Cecilia Vega reported, “With tensions rising after that attack on key Saudi oil facilities, today President Trump announced he was slapping stiff new sanctions on Iran, but stopped short of a military response. ... Trump has wavered. First, threatening that the United States is ‘locked and loaded,’ then taking a softer tone.” Trump: “I don’t want war with anybody. I’m somebody that would like to not have war.”

Margaret Brennan said on the CBS Evening News (9/18, story 2, 1:31, O’Donnell, 4.12M), “Because the President’s red line was not crossed – there were no American lives lost here – he hasn’t necessarily boxed himself in to military action. Frankly, the diplomats are still trying to figure out what comes next, and they’re just buying time. We do know the Trump Administration right now is looking at blocking some Iranian officials from visiting the UN in New York next week. They’re also considering some additional sanctions here. But the major focus is on building an airtight case to make to the public that it was Iran behind this attack.”

CQ Roll Call (9/18, Bennett, 154K) says Trump “vaguely suggest[ed] Iran attacked the oil facilities” without “feeling ready to say it in his characteristic blunt manner.”

The Washington Post (9/18, Wagner, Fahim, Schemm, 14.2M) reports Pompeo went further in remarks en route to Saudi Arabia in which he “decried the weekend attacks on the Saudi oil industry as an ‘act of war.’” Pompeo said, “This was an Iranian attack. ... It didn’t come from the Houthis.” After his arrival, Pompeo “met with Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman for 40 minutes.” According to the Post, Trump “demurred when asked whether he agreed with Pompeo that the attacks in Saudi Arabia constituted an act of war. ‘He spoke to me a little while ago, and we’ll have an announcement,’ Trump said.” The New York Times (9/18, Pérez-Peña, Wong, 18.61M) says Pompeo’s words “were the strongest so far from any American official regarding the attack on Saturday,” and “raised fears that tensions between Iran and the United States over Iran’s nuclear program and other issues could escalate into a new war.”

Pompeo tweeted, “Met with #Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman today to discuss the unprecedented attacks against Saudi Arabia’s oil infrastructure. The U.S. stands with #SaudiArabia and supports its right to defend itself. The Iranian regime’s threatening behavior will not be tolerated.”

The AP (9/18, Gambrell, Batrawy, Abuelgasim) reports Saudi military spokesman Col. Turki al-Malki said the attack on Saturday was “launched from the north and was unquestionably sponsored by Iran.” Al-Maliki said, “This attack did not originate from Yemen, despite Iran’s best effort to make it appear so.” However, the AP says al-Malki “stopped short of accusing Iran of actually firing the weapons itself or launching them from Iranian territory.” According to Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M), “The Saudi defense official’s comments, and moves by the U.S., suggested the two allies were also working to deescalate tensions in the region.” The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Jones, Arabia, Malsin, Said, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) headlines its report “Saudi Arabia Implicates Iran In Oil Attacks.”

Senate Foreign Relations Committee ranking member Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ) said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/18, 769K), “There are a series of reports that suggest that Iran was involved in the attack. But I don’t have any specific information, because we haven’t had any briefings. ... It seems to me that if the published reports are that, in fact, Iran was either at the center of the creating the attack or even may have been launched from its territory, that this is a moment to galvanize the world, to bring the information, to show the proof at the UN Security Council, to get a Security Council resolution.”

Sen. Chris Murphy (D-CT) said on CNN’s The Lead (9/18, 706K), “This idea that the Administration has that we have some secret defense treaty with Saudi Arabia, I think is really dangerous. Ultimately, this was not an attack on the United States. This was an attack on Saudi oil assets, and this Administration is acting as if we are the security guarantor for all of our friends and allies in the Middle East. That is never how we have conducted our business, in part because we know that when the United States gets military involved in the Middle East, more things go wrong than go right.”

Rep. Adam Kinzinger (R-IL) said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/18, 769K), “I hope there is some kind of a response. There’s any number of proportional responses that will work. But what’s obvious here, all you have to do is look through the beginning of – basically since 1979 to today, but especially recently – Iran is going to keep doing things like this. It’s like a bully. You know, they’ll flick your ear until you punch them. And that’s where we’re at right now.”

Rep. Chip Roy (R-TX) tweeted, “We must have a clear mission. As tensions mount with Iran, as we have a 20,000 person footprint in the Middle East now, we owe it to our men & women in uniform to know what we are doing and under what authority.”

Rep. Jennifer Wexton (D-VA) tweeted, “The Saudi Government murders political dissidents and, according to the UN, has engaged in war crimes against civilians and children in Yemen.” She included video of what she called “@SecPompeo laughing with their Crown Prince, who ordered the murder and dismemberment of WaPo journalist, Jamal Khashoggi.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Trump’s sanctions are unlikely to alter Tehran’s future actions, as Trump has indicated he is reluctant to go further. Max Boot of the Washington Post tweeted, “Iran is practically daring Trump to retaliate – but having goaded Iran into the latest aggression, he is incapable of formulating an effective response. And how can he? Trump doesn’t listen to his own aides and gets rid of those who disagree with him.” The Washington Times (9/18, Wolfgang, 492K) also covers the Administration response.

Houthis Threaten UAE. Reuters (9/18) reports Houthi militants warned that they have “identified dozens of sites in the United Arab Emirates as possible targets, in an attempt to underscore its military clout following a weekend attack it claims to have carried out on Saudi oil facilities.” Spokesman Yahya Saria said, “Today and for the first time we announce that we have dozens of targets within our range in the UAE, some are in Abu Dhabi and can be attacked at any time.”

Markey, Merkley Urge Administration To Halt Nuclear Technology Talks With Saudis. Reuters (9/18, Gardner) reports Senate Foreign Relations Committee members Sens. Edward Markey (D-MA) and Jeff Merkley (D-OR) sent a letter to Pompeo and Energy Secretary Perry Wednesday urging a halt to “talks with Saudi Arabia on building nuclear reactors after weekend attacks that halved the country’s oil output and increased instability in the Middle East.” They wrote, “Sharing nuclear technology with Saudi Arabia, especially without adequate safeguards, will give Riyadh the tools it needs to turn the Crown Prince’s nuclear weapons vision into reality.”

Badran, Schanzer: US Should Recognize Lebanon As Iranian Client State. In the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Tony Badran and Jonathan Schanzer of the Foundation for Defense of Democracies say the US must stop treating Lebanon as a friend, since it is dominated by Hezbollah and acts as an Iranian client state. They urge the Trump Administration to acknowledge it as such. The two note that earlier this summer, the Treasury Department imposed sanctions on Lebanon’s Jammal Trust

Bank for facilitating Hezbollah transactions.

Senate Approves Treasury Nominations.

The Hill (9/18, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports, "The Senate on Wednesday voted to confirm two Treasury Department nominees whom Democrats have criticized for their roles in controversial department actions – including the refusal to comply with House Democrats' requests for President Trump's tax returns." The Senate "confirmed Brent McIntosh to be Treasury under secretary for international affairs by a vote of 54-38 and Brian Callanan to be Treasury general counsel by a vote of 55-39, both largely along party lines." McIntosh "is the current general counsel at Treasury," and Callanan "is currently deputy general counsel." Law360 (9/18, Subscription Publication, 8K) also reports.

Trump Appoints O'Brien As New National Security Adviser.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to announce, "I am pleased to announce that I will name Robert C. O'Brien, currently serving as the very successful Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs at the State Department, as our new National Security Advisor. I have worked long & hard with Robert. He will do a great job!" The AP (9/18, Riechmann, Superville) reports O'Brien, "who made headlines in July when he was dispatched to Sweden to monitor the assault trial of American rapper A$AP Rocky, was among five candidates Trump said Tuesday were under consideration. 'He's worked with me for quite awhile now on hostages and we have a tremendous track record on hostages,' Trump said...on a tarmac in Los Angeles."

To Reuters (9/18, Holland, Landay, Spetalnick), O'Brien's selection demonstrates Secretary of State Pompeo's "clout with the president, with US officials saying Pompeo had made clear he would be happy with either O'Brien or another candidate, former deputy national security adviser Ricky Waddell." According to Reuters, "A source close to the White House said Trump wanted to pick a new adviser who would be able to get along well with Pompeo after the secretary of state sometimes struggled with Bolton. O'Brien, the source said, 'is a low-profile, articulate negotiator who has a strong relationship with Pompeo.'"

CNN (9/18, Liptak, Cohen, Diamond, 83.16M) reports on its website, "Introducing O'Brien to reporters on the tarmac of Los Angeles International Airport, Trump hailed his 'tremendous track record' securing the release of hostages and said 'we know each other well,' adding 'Robert's been fantastic' as a hostage negotiator and that the US hasn't spent any money to secure the hostages' release." O'Brien also "complimented Trump in brief remarks while standing alongside the President," saying, "We've had tremendous foreign policy successes under President Trump's leadership. I expect those to continue." Trump, added CNN, is "known to respond well to flattery," and "has recounted praise from O'Brien in tweets and in conversations, suggesting that the new national security adviser also knows how to handle the President and his mercurial moods."

The Hill (9/18, Samuels, 2.98M) reports O'Brien also said, "We have a number of challenges, but there's a great team in place with Secretary Pompeo and Secretary Esper and Secretary Mnuchin and others. I look forward to working with them and working with the president to keep America safe and continue to rebuild our military and really get us back to a peace through strength posture."

The New York Times (9/18, Baker, Crowley, Haberman, 18.61M) reports, moreover, that "whereas Mr. Trump was known to grouse about Mr. Bolton's famous bushy mustache, the president has been taken with Mr. O'Brien's well-tailored looks and easy demeanor, and thinks he 'looks the part,' as one person close to the president said."

USA Today (9/18, Subramanian, 10.31M) reports "the high-profile release of A$AP Rocky is not O'Brien's only success." O'Brien "has helped to extricate Americans from countries like Turkey and Iran." He "played a key role in the release of Danny Burch, an American who was held in Yemen, earlier this year," and "is also credited for the 2018 release of Andrew Brunson, an American pastor who was imprisoned in Turkey for two years and accused of plotting to overthrow President Recep Tayyip Erdogan's government."

Along those lines, the Washington Post (9/18, Ryan, Harris, Hudson, 14.2M) reports that "in his 15 months as...Trump's special envoy for hostage affairs," O'Brien "forged a relationship with the president as he worked to secure the freedom of Americans locked up abroad," and "in turn, O'Brien helped Trump accrue a record of hostage successes that the president has mentioned as proof of his international savvy." The Post adds that "people close to some of the hostages freed and their families say they believe his appointment might bring more attention to their plight."

The Washington Post (9/18, Wagner, Hudson, 14.2M) also reports that one anonymous "senior US official" says that within the Administration, O'Brien "was viewed as the 'safest option' at a time when the national security team wanted as little 'drama' as possible going into the 2020 elections." The senior official is quoted as saying, "He gets along with everybody. He's the nicest guy on the planet."

As part of its reporting on Iran, ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 4, 2:39, Muir, 6.69M) mentioned that Trump "stood with his fourth National Security Adviser, former top State Department hostage negotiator...O'Brien." NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 3, 1:01, Welker, 5.99M), in a piece about Bolton criticizing Trump's foreign policy, also mentioned O'Brien's appointment. The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Megerian, Bulos, 4.64M) describes Trump as "thrusting the Los Angeles lawyer into the maelstrom of US confrontations with Iran, North Korea, China and other global hotspots." The Times adds that "in addition to those challenges, O'Brien will work for a mercurial president who has already pushed out three national security advisers and often surprises his top staff, setting foreign policy priorities or abruptly issuing orders by tweet." The Daily Beast (9/18, Messer, 1.39M), CQ Roll Call (9/18, Bennett, 154K), the New York Daily News (9/18, Goldiner, 2.52M), The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Megerian, Bulos, 4.64M), NPR (9/18, Naylor, 3.12M) and the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Salama, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report on O'Brien's appointment.

NYTimes, Politico Analyses: O'Brien's Views Not All That Different From Bolton's. The New York Times (9/18, Baker, 18.61M) says "it is not clear how different [O'Brien's] advice will be" from that of Bolton, "given that Mr. O'Brien previously worked for Mr. Bolton and has cited his hawkish views." The Times adds O'Brien is "a founding partner of the Los Angeles-based law firm Larson O'Brien," and "has written regularly about foreign policy," including "a book, 'While America Slept,' published in 2016 during the last presidential campaign with a cover blurb from Mr. Bolton." According to the Times, "In that book, Mr. O'Brien warned of the dangers that major powers like Russia and China pose and argued against 'appeasement and retreat' as he excoriated President Barack Obama." The Times also reports that O'Brien "compared Mr. Obama's nuclear agreement with Iran to the Munich Agreement that emboldened Adolf Hitler in 1938."

Under the headline "Trump's New National Security Adviser Is The Anti-Bolton In Style Only," Politico (9/18, Bertrand, Lippman, Oprysko, 4.29M) says O'Brien "represents a stylistic – but not necessarily an ideological – shift from the man he is replacing." According to Politico, "People who have worked with and are close to O'Brien describe him as similarly aggressive as his predecessor on issues like Iran, but more of a congenial colleague than Bolton, who was known as a sharp bureaucratic infighter. And unlike Bolton, O'Brien, a career lawyer before working in government, is not a big name in the intelligence and national security world, indicating he will likely bring a much lower profile to the job."

Stevenson: Pompeo "The Ed McMahon Of American Foreign Policy." Jonathan Stevenson, who served on the National Security Council staff from 2011 to 2013, writes in the New York Times (9/18, 18.61M) that in O'Brien, Trump "seems to have found a compliant, behind-the-scenes worker bee better suited to Mr. Trump's domineering temperament. His appointment may signal the death knell of any hope to check the president's worst foreign-policy impulses." To Stevenson, "O'Brien's appointment is likely to mean that [Pompeo] will continue to be the president's chief foreign policy adviser, a role he usurped from Mr. Bolton. Unfortunately, Secretary Pompeo has succeeded precisely because he seems to have few if any principles that he won't suppress for the sake of holding and wielding executive power." Stevenson further calls Pompeo "the Ed McMahon of American foreign policy," as "he is smart enough to be in on the Trump joke" and "doesn't care that it's not funny and laughs anyway."

Romney Praises His "Friend" O'Brien's Appointment. Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT), who had lamented Bolton's departure on Twitter, yesterday wrote, "Congratulations to my friend Robert O'Brien, who the President has appointed to serve as National Security Advisor. As the Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs, he has doggedly pursued the release of American hostages abroad. He is a man of the highest integrity." The Washington Post (9/18, Wagner, Hudson, 14.2M) points out that O'Brien "will become the highest-ranking Mormon in the US government," after having "converted from Catholicism in his 20s."

In 2015 Opinion Piece, O'Brien Urged Cruz To Attack Trump For Being "Chummy" With Putin. The Washington Examiner (9/18, Gehrke, 448K) reports that O'Brien "suggested during the 2016 Republican primary campaign that Texas Sen. Ted Cruz attack then-candidate... Trump's attitude toward Russian President Vladimir Putin." In his 2015 piece in Politico Magazine, O'Brien wrote, "Cruz will need to abandon his 'kid glove' treatment of Trump. ... He certainly has an opening to do so on national security versus Trump, who has been playing up how chummy he will be with Vladimir Putin if he is elected."

Senate Panel Expected To Clash Over Several Diplomatic And Development Nominees.

The Washington Post (9/18, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports, "Members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are expected to clash Thursday over at least three of President Trump's nominees to diplomatic and development posts because of questions related to their disclosure forms and FBI background checks, according to people familiar with the dispute." Democrats have raised concerns with Marshall Billingslea, "the Treasury Department's assistant secretary for terrorist financing, who has been nominated to serve as undersecretary of state for civilian security, democracy and human rights;" "former California congressman Darrell Issa (R), whom Trump picked as the next director of the U.S. Trade and Development Agency;" and "documentary producer and filmmaker Michael Pack's bid to lead the Broadcasting Board of Governors." The piece says the confirmation process for Issa, Billingslea, and Pack "was expected to face partisan hurdles. Each was nominated at least a year ago, initially, but their bids have been pending as lawmakers argue about their fitness for the positions." The Post adds that Billingslea "has been a politically polarizing figure because of the role he played running special operations in the Defense Department of the George W. Bush administration." Human Rights Watch and "several other groups have vociferously opposed his nomination over what they say is his 'well-documented history of advocating for the use of torture and other unlawful interrogation practices' while at the Pentagon." The piece says Democrats on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee "also are concerned that there may be outstanding documents pertaining to his time there that they have yet to view."

Hoyer "Hopeful" House Will Pass Funding Bill By Friday.

Reuters (9/18, Morgan, Brice) reports House Majority Leader Hoyer "said on Wednesday he hopes the House will pass a stopgap government funding bill no later than Friday." Hoyer told reporters that he and House Speaker Pelosi "want a spending bill that is as clean as possible." Hoyer said, "Once we pass the [continuing resolution], hopefully no later than Friday [and] relatively early in the day, I'm hopeful that the Senate will take it up, that we'll have agreement and that we will send it to the President, that the President will sign it."

The Hill (9/18, Carney, Elis, 2.98M) reports Eric Ueland, the White House director of legislative affairs, "declined to say if Trump would sign a short-term bill, noting that the administration had yet to see it. But he did describe the White House as 'optimistic.'" The piece says Ueland "indicated that the administration would prefer Congress pass fiscal 2020 funding bills instead of a full-year resolution — an idea previously floated by Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin." He said, "We're hopeful that the bills will be able to move out on the Senate floor and ultimately go to conference and emerge in a format the president can sign."

Turkish Official Says US Unlikely To Impose Sanctions Over Russian Purchase.

Reuters (9/18, Pamuk) reports President Trump has "become more understanding about why Turkey has purchased a Russian missile defense system and he is not expected to impose U.S. sanctions on Ankara over the issue, a senior Turkish official said on Wednesday." The person told reporters in Washington, "My expectation is it (sanctions) would not be implemented...He understood the whole history behind how we got to purchasing the S-400s." The piece notes that last week, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said the Trump administration was considering imposing sanctions related to Turkey's purchase of the S-400s but that no decisions had been made."

NYT Provides Excerpts From Mnuchin Interview.

The New York Times (9/18, 18.61M) publishes excerpts from an interview with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin by DealBook's Andrew Ross Sorkin at the Times's first DealBook/DC Strategy Forum.

US, Chinese Trade Deputies Meeting In Washington Today.

Reuters (9/19, Lawder) reports US and Chinese deputy trade negotiators "were set to resume face-to-face talks on Thursday for the first time in nearly two months as the world's two largest economies try to bridge deep policy differences and find a way out of a bitter and protracted trade war." The piece explains that the negotiations on Thursday and Friday are "aimed at laying the groundwork for high-level talks in early October that will determine whether the two countries are working towards a solution or are headed for new and higher tariffs on each other's goods." A delegation of about 30 Chinese officials, "led by Vice Finance Minister Liao Min," will launch talks on Thursday morning at the US Trade Representative's (USTR) office. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "who will participate in the October talks along with USTR Robert Lighthizer and Chinese Vice Premier Liu He, has said that currency issues will be a focus of the new rounds of talks." Reuters adds that Mnuchin "formally declared China a currency manipulator last month after the yuan slipped below 7 to the dollar, accusing Beijing of pushing its currency lower to gain a trade advantage."

Trump Planning Outreach To Unions Ahead Of Next Year's Campaign.

Politico (9/18, Orr, 4.29M) reports that President Trump "found Reagan-like support with blue-collar workers in 2016, but needs to further dominate the union vote next fall to compensate for the suburban slump he's already facing." Trump is "banking on a strong economy to do that – saying current economic conditions preserve jobs that might otherwise be threatened by...environmental regulations under a Democratic administration – even as many of the workers he's after are suffering through a manufacturing slowdown under the weight of his trade war." Trump campaign officials are "in the early stages of assembling a 'workers coalition'...that will feature rank-and-file workers and labor leaders who are sympathetic to the president's...agenda." Politico also reports that "in their own attempt to help the president connect with union workers, White House officials recently stepped into discussions around the United Auto Workers walkout against General Motors," and are "pushing for a deal that would reopen a GM plant in Lordstown, Ohio."

No Progress Reported In UAW-GM Talks. The Detroit News (9/18, Thibodeau, 825K) reports "the United Auto Workers strike at General Motors Co. that began at midnight Monday is now the longest strike for that union in more than a decade." Negotiations between GM and the UAW "started 'early' Wednesday as the national strike moved into the third day," and "no significant progress was reported early Wednesday."

The Detroit Free Press (9/18, Howard, 1.52M) reports, meanwhile, that GM "announced a decision to shift worker health care payments to the union immediately – a strategy that risks dragging out the strike, labor negotiators say." Said Harry Katz, the Jack Sheinkman Professor of Collective Bargaining at the School of Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell University, "They're pouring gasoline on the fire. ... This induces the workers to get more angry. GM thinks this will scare them or get them to rethink the cost of their benefits. I think it's going to backfire. It's quick, rash and insensitive."

Index Funds Grow In Influence On Wall Street.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Lim, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that index funds, which passively track broad equity indexes, rose to $4.27 trillion in assets as of Aug. 31, eclipsing the $4.25 trillion held by funds that actively try to beat the market by picking stocks. The milestone marked a continuation of a trend that has lowered the cost of investing for individuals while giving indexing titans like Vanguard Group and State Street considerable influence over corporations.

Pro-Trade Lobbying Groups Seek To Limit Trump's Power To Impose Tariffs.

Reuters (9/18, Shalal) reports that "nearly two dozen US lobbying groups have joined forces to try to rein in" President Trump's "power to unilaterally impose tariffs amid growing concern about the negative economic impact of his trade policies." The Tariff Reform Coalition, which is "led by" the National Foreign Trade Council, is "urg[ing] Congress to wrestle back greater control of trade policy and increase its oversight of the president's use of tariffs." NFTC President Rufus Yerxa "said the US constitution gave Congress the power to regulate commerce, and lawmakers should ensure that tariffs were used only in exceptional circumstances." Reuters adds the coalition includes the Grocery Manufacturers Association, the National Retail Federation, the Association of Global Automakers, and the American International Automobile

Trump Touts His Record On Economy, Energy, Military Strength.

In a tweet Wednesday morning, President Trump touted his Administration's record on a variety of fronts including the economy, energy independence, and the military. Trump wrote, "So nice that our Country is now Energy Independent. The USA is in better shape than ever before. Strongest Military by far, biggest Economy (no longer even close), number one in Energy! MAGA = KAG!"

Capital One, Walmart Team Up To Launch Two New Co-Branded Credit Cards.

CNBC (9/18, White, 3.62M) reports Capital One and Walmart announced on Wednesday the launch of the new joint Capital One Walmart Rewards Credit Card Program, including two new cards: the cobranded Capital One Walmart Rewards Mastercard and the private-label Walmart Rewards Card. Both cards will be available from September 24. The Capital One Walmart Rewards card will offer 5% back on Walmart.com purchases, 2% back on in-store Walmart purchases, 2% back on travel and restaurants, and 1% back on all other purchases. Additionally, a special introductory offer allows cardholders to earn 5% back on all in-store Walmart purchases during the first 12 months after approval.

USA Today (9/18, Tyko, 10.31M) reports current Walmart cardholders "will be converted to one of the two new cards and can start earning the rewards Oct. 11 with Walmart Pay before the new cards arrive beginning in November."

MarketWatch (9/18, Passy, 1.67M) reports that while both Capital One and Walmart "declined to provide specific figures for the credit scores they would consider for the card during a press call," Capital One Senior Vice President and head of the Walmart Partnership Daniel Mouadeb said they were primarily targeting consumers with "good to excellent credit."

NerdWallet (9/18, 395K) calls the new Capital One offering "a major upgrade" for Walmart cards, as it replaces Walmart's previous partnership with Synchrony. Both new cards have no annual fee and a rewards structure "on par with other retailer co-branded credit cards." Additionally, NerdWallet writes, "as with other Capital One credit cards, cardholders will be able to lock or unlock the card easily if it's lost or misplaced, receive alerts about things like potential fraud or purchasing errors, and track spending through text alerts."

Capital One Deal A Sign Of Walmart's Bet On E-Commerce. Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M) reports the new partnership with Capital One is "a sign of how much Walmart Inc. is betting on e-commerce," as the new payment cards offer "better rewards for online shopping and checking out with its mobile app." Walmart SVP of Digital Acceleration Daniel Eckert said, "We really recognized the need to fully integrate a digital-first experience in a payment program. These are the richest rewards we've ever offered our customers." With the new Capital One cards, Walmart "is narrowing the gap with big competitors that have programs with more lucrative rewards" including Target, which offers 5% cash back on purchases with its branded cards. Capital One "has hinted that Walmart's aspirations in banking could go deeper than expanding their card offerings," with Capital One CEO Richard Fairbank telling investors in June, "They are very committed to building deeper financial relationships and especially with credit cards as the tip of the spear for those enduring relationships."

Unlimited Grocery Spending A Key Differentiator For New Cards. The Points Guy (9/17, 81K) takes a look at how the new Walmart Rewards cards stack up against other competitors, noting that unlimited cash back rewards on grocery spending and the flexibility to spend rewards on Capital One's travel portal set the cards apart. According to the article, users will "be able to redeem points for much more than just Walmart purchases. You can also redeem for travel through Capital One's travel portal, use points as a statement credit, redeem for gift cards and more." Additionally, "unlimited earning on credit cards for groceries is hard to come by," with Costco and American Express cards imposing "spending caps for how much you can earn on grocery purchases throughout the year."

Business Round Table Opposes Law De-emphasizing Shareholder Value.

The Hill (9/18, Elis, 2.98M) reports a major business advocacy group "said Wednesday it's opposed to creating legal standards to enforce a recently adopted set of principles that says shareholder value should no longer be the main goal of a corporation." JPMorgan Chase CEO and Business Roundtable (BRT) Chairman Jamie Dimon said during a press conference, "If you create a legal system that hamstring companies in the United States, I think you're just creating a worse economy, not a better economy."

Illinois Emerges As Nation's Busiest State For Bank Consolidation.

American Banker (9/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Illinois has "emerged as the nation's busiest state for bank consolidation." Fourteen banks in the state "have agreed to be sold this year, including nine between June and August, according to data compiled by S&P Global Market Intelligence." Illinois has "accounted for 8% of all bank sales, slightly outpacing the dozen deals announced in Texas."

AT&T Mulls Parting Ways With DirecTV, Combining It With Dish.

In a front-page exclusive, the Wall Street Journal (9/18, A1, Ramachandran, FitzGerald, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports AT&T is considering spinning off its DirecTV unit, according to sources familiar with the matter. The decision would mark a reversal of AT&T CEO Randall Stephenson's media strategy. Besides a spinoff of DirecTV, AT&T is also considering a combination of DirecTV's assets with Dish Network.

FAA Chief Wants To Personally Fly Boeing 737 MAX Before Certifying Its Safety.

NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 11, 1:01, Holt, 5.99M) reported "the new head of the FAA, an experienced pilot," told NBC's Tom Costello "he will not give the approval for the 737 MAX to return to the air until he has personally piloted the airplane." FAA Administrator Steve Dickson said, "I'm the final sign off authority in the US, and I'm not going to sign off on the aircraft until I would fly it myself or put my own family on it." Costello added: "Dickson reiterates he is talking about flying as a pilot, not a passenger. He'll be in a Boeing simulator later this week."

Trump Says Administration Is "Revoking" California's Emissions Waiver.

ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 7, 1:07, Muir, 6.69M) reported President Trump is in "a new feud with California...telling that state it cannot set its own emissions standards, revoking that state's right to set its own limits for cars and trucks." Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) is calling it "a political vendetta, and he's vowing to fight back." NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 8, 1:30, Holt, 5.99M) reported, "For almost 50 years, lawmakers here in California have been able to set their own car emission standards, but today, President Trump threatened to change that." NBC's Ann Thompson: "California's long led the way in reducing tailpipe emissions and increasing fuel efficiency, to clean its air and fight climate change. Now the Trump Administration wants to bring that to a stop, revoking California's ability to set its emissions standards in favor of one national mark."

In a three-tweet thread, the President wrote, "The Trump Administration is revoking California's Federal Waiver on emissions in order to produce far less expensive cars for the consumer, while at the same time making the cars substantially SAFER. This will lead to more production because of this pricing and safety advantage, and also due to the fact that older, highly polluting cars, will be replaced by new, extremely environmentally friendly cars. There will be very little difference in emissions between the California Standard and the new U.S. Standard, but the cars will be far safer and much less expensive. Many more cars will be produced under the new and uniform standard, meaning significantly more JOBS, JOBS, JOBS! Automakers should seize this opportunity because without this alternative to California, you will be out of business." The New York Times (9/18, Davenport, 18.61M) reports the President offered "an aggressive defense of his unprecedented move to abolish California's legal authority to set its own standards" in the tweets.

Reuters (9/18, Shepardson) reports Trump and "the state of California went to war on Wednesday over who should set the standards." The AP (9/18, Biesecker, Beam) reports the President announced that the Administration is "revoking California's authority to set auto mileage standards stricter than those issued by federal regulators, a move critics said would result in less fuel efficient cars that create more planet-warming pollution." According to the AP, "most" automakers want "increases in standards that are less than the Obama-era requirements, saying their consumers are gravitating to gas-guzzling SUVs and trucks rather than buying more efficient cars."

The Sacramento Bee (9/18, Wilner, Wiley, 567K) reports, "Within weeks, the Trump administration is expected to publish a national federal rule that significantly weakens Obama-era standards for tailpipe emissions of carbon dioxide, the leading greenhouse gas fueling climate change." The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Willon, Phillips, 4.64M) says "experts have...raised serious doubts about the administration's argument that the new policy will make new cars safer. In a study published last year in the journal Science, researchers wrote that the administration's analysis of its own policy proposal 'has fundamental flaws and inconsistencies, is at odds with basic economic theory and empirical studies, [and] is misleading.'"

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Lazo, Foldy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports California officials were quick to respond, with Attorney General Xavier Becerra (D) and California Air Resources Board Chairperson Mary Nichols joining Newsom in vowing legal action. The San Francisco Examiner (9/18, Service, 438K) reports Newsom "criticized the Trump administration's plan to rescind California's nearly half-century old authority to impose tough car emissions standards, vowing to take legal action to action to block the action." The San Francisco Chronicle (9/18, Gardiner, 2.67M) quotes Newsom saying, "That's the perversion of this moment: pure politics." Newsom also tweeted, "Today's actions represent another act in Donald Trump's political theater. A failed attempt to assert power. A continuation of a political vendetta against CA and our progress. Bad news for him – we will prevail. See you in court."

Rep. Ami Bera (D-CA) tweeted, "This is just another attempt by President Trump to take on #California, which has led the country in #climate and #environmental policies. California's auto emissions waiver created jobs and kept families safe and healthy. Revoking this is a step backwards." Rep. Nanette Barragán (D-CA) tweeted, "To say states, like California, can't impose more ambitious standards on emissions is a direct threat to our public health. The reality is that when you set goals & when you set bold & aggressive action, it challenges Congress & the industry to come up with innovation quicker." Rep. Mark DeSaulnier (D-CA) tweeted, "The Trump Administration's move to strip California and more than a dozen other states of their ability to decrease auto emissions is backwards and illegal."

Rep. Katie Hill (D-CA) tweeted, "Trump is revoking California's emissions standards because he wants to control everyone who disagrees with him. The California standard is 51 mpg by 2026, Trump's is 37 mpg. That's a big difference. Clean cars create just as many jobs as dirty ones." Rep. Ed Perlmutter (D-CA) tweeted, "This is yet another attack on climate change & states' rights to set their own auto emissions standards & protect their residents. We should be doing everything we can to combat climate change & this takes us backward."

The Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M) editorializes that after California "offered what one senior state official described as an 'olive branch'" to the Trump Administration to compromise on emission rules, the Administration could have "negotiate[d] a deal with the state and carmakers on uniform national efficiency norms." Instead, the Administration will "slap away California's olive branch. ... Hardly anyone would gain from such a pigheaded move."

The New York Times (9/18, 18.61M) editorializes, "Trump finds himself arrayed against the plain language of the Clean Air Act, California's historical role as a laboratory for tough new environmental rules and the express wishes of several major automakers and two-thirds of the American people. It is, further, one more intended nail in the coffin" of President Obama's "strategy to reduce greenhouse gases and, coming as it does on the eve of a big United Nations conference on global warming, a thumb in the eye to the rest of the world."

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) defends the Administration in an editorial, saying that the Clean Air Act allows for waivers only to "meet compelling and extraordinary conditions" like the smog California faced in the 1970s. It was not intended to allow the state to set its own permanent environmental standards, the Journal argues. The Daily Caller (9/18, White, 716K) headlines its report "Trump Touts Decision To End California's Ability To Set Its Own Emission Rules." The Washington Times (9/18, Biesecker, 492K), Washington Examiner (9/18, Lawler, 448K), and Politico (9/18, Guillén, 4.29M), among other outlets, also have reports.

Trump Visits Border Barrier Site Near San Diego, Signs Wall With Sharpie. Much of the coverage of the President's California trip focuses on his visit to a border barrier installation site. The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Shalby, Oreskes, Hamblin, 4.64M) reports, "Trump's tour of California took him to San Diego on Wednesday, with an afternoon visit to the border where he reviewed a prototype of his much-debated wall and signed it in Sharpie." The President "toured the border area of Otay Mesa, a San Diego neighborhood along the Mexican border, after a fundraiser in San Diego." Trump said, "This wall can't be climbed. It's designed to absorb heat. ... You can fry an egg on that wall. It's very, very hot. If you want to climb it you're going to have to bring hoses and water."

The San Diego Union-Tribune (9/18, Davis, 755K) reports, "Standing in the 'no man's land' between newly fortified primary and secondary border fencing," the President "praised the replacement barriers as 'virtually impenetrable' and held them up as an example of the 400-plus miles of wall he wants to see spread along the rest of the southwest border." Trump said, "It's an amazing project. There are thousands of people over there that had been trying to get in."

USA Today (9/18, Collins, Fritze, 10.31M) reports Trump, "who faced criticism earlier in his presidency for shifting positions on how he thought the border barrier would be designed, used some of his most forceful language yet to defend the 'bollard fence' design. ... Trump claimed '20 mountain climbers' were tasked with trying to scale the structure to test its effectiveness. But, he said, 'this wall can't be climbed.'"

The New York Times (9/18, Baker, 18.61M) writes, "one thing President Trump loves about his job is signing his name," and "at the invitation of the team building his new barrier along the border, he affixed his distinctive signature to one of the steel slats that have risen just opposite Mexico in recent months, the most physical manifestation of what he plans to make his argument for a second term next year and, he hopes, his place in the history books." The Washington Post (9/18, Rucker, Miroff, Nakamura, 14.2M) calls the visit "part of a show of force" by Trump "ahead of the 2020 election aimed reducing a massive spike in unauthorized immigration. ... As the president ramps up his reelection bid, his reliance on hard-line immigration tactics represents an uncertain bet that deterrence will persuade migrants to stay away. Past trends, however, suggest that ebbs in migration patterns will be difficult to sustain in the face of ongoing violence and poverty in Central America."

The Washington Times (9/18, Howell, 492K) reports Trump "boasted Wednesday about progress on his border wall during a visit to a section outside San Diego, saying he thinks he can get to 500 miles by next year, depending on 'terrain conditions.'" Politico (9/18, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports Trump "said he was talked out of his initial vision for the wall – a solid concrete block – though he asserted it would have been cheaper to use it." The President tweeted a 45-second video montage of the visit, writing, "GREAT progress on the Border Wall!"

The AP (9/18) reports the Interior Department said Wednesday that it is "transferring 560 acres (226 hectares) of federal land to the U.S. Army to speed up construction on 70 miles (113 kilometers) of border wall in West Texas, California and Arizona. This marks the first time the government has transferred land on an emergency basis to build border barriers."

Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) tweeted, "Trump said Mexico would pay for the wall. We knew that wasn't true. Now, military families are paying the price. Crumbling schools, dangerous work conditions, exposure to asbestos – These are just some of the costs of Trump's broken promises, and for what? A wall to nowhere."

Reuters (9/18, Mason), the New York Post (9/18, Musumeci, 4.57M), and the Fox News (9/18, Pappas, 27.59M) website, among other outlets, also cover the President's stop.

Barrack Attended Two Trump Fundraisers During President's California Swing. Maggie Haberman writes in a brief New York Times (9/18, 18.61M) item that Thomas Barrack, "the billionaire investor and an old friend of the president's who has come under scrutiny by federal prosecutors looking into possible foreign influence over Mr. Trump's 2016 campaign," was among "Trump's relatives, party and campaign officials and the well-heeled" at a Tuesday night fundraiser for the President's reelection in Beverly Hills. Barrack "also attended a fund-raising breakfast for Mr. Trump on Wednesday morning in Los Angeles. And he has given $360,600, the maximum amount allowable, to the Trump Victory Committee."

Trump's Comments On California Homelessness Highlighted. Several reports also touch on the President's Tuesday remarks on homelessness in the state. USA Today (9/18, Collins, 10.31M) reports Trump's Tuesday comments "came less than a week after a senior administration confirmed that the administration had sent a team of federal officials to California on a fact-finding mission to learn more about the state's homeless crisis." Both ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 8, 1:16, Muir, 6.69M) and NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 9, 3:14, Holt, 5.99M) had features on Californians experiencing homelessness.

Flag Burned Outside Trump's Los Angeles Hotel Tuesday. The Daily Caller (9/18, Talcott, 716K) reports, "A self-described group of communists burned the American flag outside of a Los Angeles hotel Tuesday as the president was in the city. Revolution Club Los Angeles tweeted out a video Wednesday of members burning the American flag and chanting 'America was never great!' A clash broke out shortly after as a pro-Trump counter-protester tried to break into the circle."

Cuccinelli Wants To Publicize Personal Information Of Refugees Accused Of Crimes.

BuzzFeed News (9/18, Aleaziz) reports Acting USCIS Director Ken Cuccinelli is "seeking a new power – to unilaterally publicize personal information about asylees, refugees, and their family members in the US who are being prosecuted for certain crimes, according to a memorandum obtained by BuzzFeed News." Cuccinelli says "in the memo that he should be given the ability to disclose the information because they could come into play in the criminal prosecutions themselves." Cuccinelli writes, "This authorization would help to ensure that these individuals are not granted bail during criminal proceedings without full consideration by the court of all relevant information and would allow the disclosure of such information to the media in press releases and other press-related materials in connection with their prosecutions."

Woman Admits Running Business That Brought Chinese Women To US To Give Birth.

The Washington Free Beacon (9/18, Piro, 78K) reports, "A Chinese national pleaded guilty to running an illegal 'birth tourism' scheme in California, where she charged clients thousands of dollars to help them give birth in the United States in order to obtain U.S. citizenship for their children." The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Reyes-Velarde, 4.64M) reports Dongyuan Li, 41, "pleaded guilty Tuesday to one count of conspiracy to commit immigration fraud and one count of visa fraud." The Times says that "her promotions lured women by promising that the U.S. was the 'most attractive nationality,' with years of free education, less pollution, retirement benefits and an easier way for an entire family to immigrate with an American-born child, according to the court documents." Li is "the first of 19 people to plead guilty after being indicted in similar schemes, prosecutors said."

Report: US Abortion Rate Reaches An All-Time Low.

The Washington Post (9/18, Cha, 14.2M) reports that according to a Guttmacher Institute report released Wednesday, the US abortion rate has "hit an all-time low." The report "estimated the abortion rate in 2017, the most recent year studied, at 13.5 per 1,000 women ages 15 to 44," compared to "14.6 in 2014 and 16.9 in 2011." It is "the lowest rate since the US Supreme Court legalized abortion through the landmark decision Roe v. Wade in 1973."

The Washington Times (9/18, Vondracek, 492K) says the report "notes that one potential driver of the decline could be the Affordable Care Act's mandate that most private health insurance plans cover contraception – which can include so-called 'abortion pills.' The report states that another contribution could be declining sexual activity."

Mystal Says He Fantasizes About Crashing Car Into Trump Building.

The Federalist (9/18, Justice, 126K) reports that Elie Mystal, a regular on MSNBC, "tweeted Wednesday that he regularly fantasizes about ramming his car into the lobby of a Trump Organization luxury apartment complex in a New York City suburb." Mystal wrote, "Real talk: When you come out of the parking lot of this mall/movie theater, you have to sit a red light staring right into this lobby. I've thought about driving my car through it EVERY TIME. Basic humanity keeps me from doing it, but JUST." Mystal included a link to story Mystal wrote on Twitter, linking to an article about a recent about a car that "accidentally ploughed into the Trump Plaza hotel resulting in minor injuries."

White House Circulating Gun Background Check Proposal To Hill Republicans.

Politico (9/18, Levine, Everett, 4.29M) reports that the White House has begun "circulating a much-anticipated gun background check proposal to Republicans on Capitol Hill," but is unclear whether it has President Trump's support. The plan which is "similar to a proposal" from Sens. Joe Manchin (D-WV) and Pat Toomey (R-PA), "would expand background checks to all commercial gun sales, including gun show sales." Under the proposal, "background checks would be conducted through federal firearm licensees...or a newly created group of licensed transfer agents." Politico adds that the plan "is narrower than a universal background checks bill passed by the House and pushed by top Democrats" like Senate Minority Leader Schumer.

The Hill (9/18, Bolton, Carney, 2.98M) says the President "has yet to endorse the proposal, but the White House is taking the temperature of Senate Republican support for the idea." Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M) reports, "Eric Ueland, the White House's top lobbyist, said the proposal shouldn't be seen as an endorsement by Trump for a particular approach but is part of a broader effort to reach out to lawmakers for their ideas," and the Daily Caller (9/18, Athey, 716K) says White House Principal Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley told The Atlantic's Elaina Plott that the President "has not necessarily signed off on the plan." Said Gidley, "Not even close."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (9/18, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports that the proposal being circulated by Attorney General Barr was "met with skepticism from key Republicans and appeared to face serious obstacles on Capitol Hill." The Washington Post (9/18, Kim, Kane, Dawsey, 14.2M) says the NRA "immediately dismissed the plan drafted by the Justice Department as a non-starter."

Trump: O'Rourke Made A Deal On Guns "Much Harder." In a tweet Wednesday, Trump took aim at ex-Rep. Beto O'Rourke (D-TX) for calling during last week's Democratic presidential debate for a mandatory buyback program for some weapons, arguing the former lawmaker's comments have "made it much harder" to reach a deal with Democrats on the issue. Trump wrote, "Dummy Beto made it much harder to make a deal. Convinced many that Dems just want to take your guns away. Will continue forward!" The Washington Post (9/18, Wagner, 14.2M) says Trump's tweet "appears to have been inspired by criticism of O'Rourke on Monday by Fox News host Jesse Watters."

Politico (9/18, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that O'Rourke responded to Trump's tweet, Wednesday "outlining his gun platform and encouraging the White House to take action." He wrote, "To be clear: We will buy back every single assault weapon. We'll also license every gun & do a background check on every buyer. That's what the American people want – and deserve. The only thing stopping us from ending this epidemic is you & your cowardice. Do the right thing."

O'Rourke stood by his comments in an interview Wednesday night. Asked on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (9/18, 941K) if he is in favor of "gun confiscation," O'Rourke said, "Yes, when it comes to AR-15s and AK-47s, weapons designed for use on a military battlefield. ... When it comes to those weapons, the answer is yes. But, when it comes to firearms used for hunting or self-defense, the answer is no. I don't want you or anyone else to get into the fear mongering that some have fallen prey to, saying that the government is going to come and take all of your guns. What we are talking about exclusively is weapons of war that have no place in our homes, no place on our streets, and should remain on the battlefield."

Manchin: O'Rourke Is "Not Taking My Guns Away From Me." The Washington Times (9/18, Chasmar, 492K) reports that Sen. Joe Manchin (D-WV) said Wednesday that O'Rourke is not going to take his guns. Manchin told the Wall Street Journal's Lindsay Wise, "Beto's one human being. He gave his own opinion, OK? ... I think it was very harmful to make it look like all the Democrats," he reportedly said. "I can tell you one thing: Beto O'Rourke's not taking my guns away from me. You tell Beto that, OK?" The Washington Free Beacon (9/18, Crookston, 78K), the Washington Examiner (9/18, Ferrechio, 448K), and the Daily Caller (9/18, Caruso, 716K) also report on Manchin's comments.

Report Says Annual Cost Of Gun Violence Is $229B.

The New York Post (9/18, Schultz, 4.57M) reports, "Gun violence costs the United States $229 billion annually – or 1.4 percent of GDP – according to a new report released Wednesday by the Joint Economic Committee." New York has "one of the lowest costs of gun violence as a share of the state's economy," and "report authors credited the low rate in New York to stricter gun laws, including a ban on assault rifles, and permits needed to purchase handguns." The report said "more rural states – Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana and West Virginia – have the highest costs of gun violence measured as a share of their economies."

Colt Reportedly To Stop Producing Rifles For Retail Sales.

Guns (9/18, Eger) reports Colt Firearms "last week reportedly signaled they are exiting the consumer rifle market in coming days." Paul Spitale, senior VP of Colt's commercial business line, said, "We're going to focus on the products that our consumers are asking for. We've expanded our 1911s and our revolver line, and that market has been very positive for us." Colt's rifle line production is reportedly "occupied, at least for the time being, with outstanding contracts which include orders through police and defense channels."

DC's "Red Flag" Law Used For First Time By Police To Seize Firearms.

The Washington Post (9/18, Hermann, 14.2M) reports, "D.C. police seized a semiautomatic handgun and a rifle from a man earlier this month, using for the first time a new law that allows authorities to temporarily seize firearms from people believed to be dangerous." According to the article, "D.C. Superior Court filings under the 'red flag' law say the 44-year-old man from Northwest Washington tried to register a .45-caliber semiautomatic handgun at police headquarters Sept. 6." The Post adds that "the D.C. police officer who requested the petition wrote the man 'may be experiencing a mental health crisis or other dangerous mental health issues.'"

Nugent Argues Michigan Hunting Rules Will Prompt "Widespread Civil Disobedience."

The Washington Times (9/18, Blake, 492K) reports that rock musician and "longtime board member" of the NRA Ted Nugent "took aim Tuesday at a new rule prohibiting baiting and feeding deer and elk in Michigan." Testifying before a state House committee "in support of a bill that would overturn the recently enacted rule against baiting game," Nugent argued the ban will prompt "widespread civil disobedience" among hunters. Nugent told reporters, "This is a Rosa Parks moment. ... The law is wrong, the law is bad, the law is illegal."

Lawyer At Center Of "Civil War" Inside NRA Emerges As Top Counselor.

In a 3,500-word article, the Washington Post (9/18, Leonnig, Hamburger, 14.2M) reports that a lawyer with the National Rifle Association, who is a Democrat and "had no experience in Second Amendment litigation," has emerged as a "victor" from an "ugly public fight" that has "led to an exodus of high-level officials and warring accusations of financial impropriety." William Brewer III is now the "top counselor to NRA chief executive Wayne LaPierre" and gives input on "some of the group's most important decisions, including legal strategy, management and public relations, said multiple people familiar with his role." However, "those who have been pushed out shared a common concern: that Brewer ran up excessive fees and then cemented his role by overstating claims about the organization's legal jeopardy and the potential conflicts of his critics, according to the people and internal documents."

PSA Focuses On Recognizing Warning Signs To Prevent School Violence.

The Washington Post (9/18, Bellware, 14.2M) reports, "Familiar back-to-school supplies such as pencils, scissors and gym socks are recast as emergency survival tools in a devastating new public service announcement from the Sandy Hook Promise, an anti-violence nonprofit founded by the parents of victims of the Sandy Hook shootings in 2012." The PSA, "Back to School Essentials," aired "on NBC during the Wednesday morning broadcast of the 'Today' show alongside an interview with Sandy Hook Promise co-founder Nicole Hockley." The spot "promotes 'Know the Signs,' a campaign geared at teaching students and school staff how to recognize and intervene when someone shows warning signs of behavior that could lead to shootings or other forms of violence in schools."

On NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 7, 1:55, Holt, 5.99M), Kate Snow reported, that "it's been watched by more than seven million" since Wednesday morning. She added that the PSA was "tweeted out by nearly every Democratic candidate for president" as Attorney General Barr "was on Capitol Hill talking to Republicans about a proposal to expand background checks on some gun sales."

Prosecutors Allege Democratic Donor Is A Violent Sexual Predator.

The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Tchekmedyan, Branson-Potts, Winton, 4.64M) reports that Democratic donor Ed Buck was arrested and charged this week with operating a drug house. This, after two men were found dead in his West Hollywood apartment since 2017 and a third overdosed but survived in September. According to prosecutors, Buck is "a violent sexual predator who preys on men struggling with addiction and homelessness." Buck "is accused of injecting a 37-year-old man, who overdosed but survived, with methamphetamine on Sept. 11." Prosecutors say the man tried to escape, but Buck "prevented [him] from getting help."

The New York Times (9/18, A1, Holson, Real, 18.61M) says that according to court documents, Buck "would lure men to his apartment and administer large doses of narcotics to manipulate his victims to participate in sex acts." NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 6, 1:31, Almaguer, 5.99M) reported that Buck "is being held on $4 million bail. If convicted, he could get five years in prison."

Tropical Depression Imelda Brings Heavy Rain To Southeast Texas.

NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 5, 0:57, Holt, 5.99M) reported that "parts of Texas and Louisiana are getting hit" Wednesday night by Tropical Depression Imelda. According to NBC, "as much as twenty-one inches of rain fell in southeast Texas, triggering dangerous flash floods." On ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 2, 1:22, Muir, 6.69M), Clayton Sandell reported that Texas is "expecting another ten inches of rain by the end of the week."

More Tropical Threats Forming. ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 3, 1:02, Muir, 6.69M) reported on "other tropical threats in the pipeline." ABC's chief meteorologist Ginger Zee added, "There are five areas of interest in the Atlantic alone," including Jerry and Humberto. Zee said "Bermuda had a 100-mile-an-hour gust" from Humberto. Meanwhile, "most of the computer models curve" Jerry "away from the United States."

Schumer Calls For Federal Response To Help Schools Fight Cyberattacks.

The Rochester \(NY\) Democrat & Chronicle (9/18, Murphy, 360K) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer "called on Congress and the FBI on Wednesday to help school districts and other local government bodies threatened by increasingly common and sophisticated cyberattacks." The House has passed a bill called the Department of Homeland Security Cyber Incident Response Teams Act, which "would create specific teams within the DHS to assist local government against cyberattacks." Schumer also "said the FBI should be more active in targeting attacks at their source, often out of the country."

Bolton Blasts Trump's Foreign Policy At Private Lunch.

Politico (9/18, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that former National Security Adviser John Bolton "harshly criticized Trump's foreign policy on Wednesday at a private lunch, saying inviting the Taliban to Camp David sent a 'terrible signal' and that it was 'disrespectful' to the victims of 9/11 because the Taliban had harbored al Qaeda." Bolton "also said that any negotiations with North Korea and Iran were 'doomed to failure,' according to two attendees." Bolton was speaking at an event sponsored by the Gatestone Institute, a conservative think tank. According to Politico, Bolton "also said more than once that Trump's failure to respond to the Iranian attack on an American drone earlier this summer set the stage for the Islamic Republic's aggression in recent months," and "called the alleged attack on Saudi Arabia, which US and Saudi officials have blamed on Iran, 'an act of war' by anyone's definition." NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 3, 1:01, Welker, 5.99M) also reported the story, citing "someone in the room." NBC added that "neither the White House nor Bolton responded to requests for comment."

White House To Withdraw Nomination Of FEMA Pick.

The New York Times (9/18, Kanno-Youngs, Flavelle, 18.61M) reports, "The White House will pull the nomination of Jeffrey Byard to be the head of the Federal Emergency Management Agency after a federal inquiry into a possible barroom altercation involving Mr. Byard prompted concern in Congress and the White House, according to federal officials familiar with the investigation." According to the Times, "while the F.B.I. determined that the allegations facing Mr. Byard were unsubstantiated, the White House is expected to nominate the current acting administrator of FEMA, Peter T. Gaynor, to lead the agency instead. That move is expected before the end of the month, officials said." Axios (9/18, Treene, 521K) reports that the President "was impressed with the way Gaynor handled Hurricane Dorian."

US Military Has Spent "Nearly $200,000" At Trump's Scottish Resort Since 2017.

Politico (9/18, Bertrand, Bender, 4.29M) reports that "according to figures and documents the Pentagon provided to the House Oversight Committee," since August 2017, "the U.S. military has spent nearly $200,000 at the president's luxury Scotland resort." Politico says that "the spending...paid for the equivalent of hundreds of nights of rooms at the Turnberry resort over approximately three dozen separate stays." According to Politico, "The committee's probe has ramped up in the wake of Politico's reporting on several overnight stays at the resort by U.S. Air Force crews, some of which have been multnight stays involving dozens of crew members and passengers."

The New York Times (9/18, Lipton, 18.61M) reports that "the total spending of more than $184,000 is way up compared to the prior two years, when department records show that a total of $64,380 was spent through government travel charge cards at Trump Turnberry." The Washington Post (9/18, Wagner, Fahrenthold, 14.2M) reports the amount was "disclosed in letters exchanged between the Pentagon and top Democrats on the committee, which is probing whether Trump has violated a constitutional provision that prevents presidents from enriching themselves through the office." In a letter dated Wednesday, leaders of the House committee "voiced frustration with the limited scope of a response last week from the Pentagon to requests for detailed information on the cost of the stays."

Purdue Pharma's Bankruptcy Plan Seeks Protection For Sackler Family's Personal Funds.

The Washington Post (9/18, Merle, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports as Purdue Pharma "heads to bankruptcy court," billions of funds allegedly transferred by the Sacklers from company to personal accounts "represent a central sticking point in the company's plan to resolve thousands of lawsuits against it." The company's "tentative settlement with more than 2,000 plaintiffs in a mammoth federal lawsuit and about half the attorneys general in the United States demands protection from all litigation for the company." However, "about half the attorneys general who have sued the company and the family are refusing to go along with the deal." Some claim "that the Sacklers knew litigants would be coming after that money and transfers into their personal holdings and trusts amounts to 'fraudulent conveyance' – an illegal attempt to hang on to it."

Trump: Polls Show "Very Little Support" For Impeachment.

President Trump tweeted tweeted Wednesday night, "All Polls, and some brand new Polls, show very little support for impeachment. Such a waste of time, especially with sooo much good that could be done, including prescription drug price reduction, healthcare, infrastructure etc."

Politico (9/18, Shepard, 4.29M) reports that "even as nearly two-thirds of Democratic members favor impeaching President Donald Trump or at least opening an impeachment inquiry, a new Politico/Morning Consult poll shows they haven't made the sale to voters." According to the poll, "Only 37 percent support beginning impeachment proceedings, while half oppose it. Just 12 percent of voters are undecided." Politico adds that since former special counsel Robert Mueller's report was released, "overall support for impeachment has fluctuated between 35 percent and 38 percent, while opposition has ranged from 46 percent to 53 percent."

The Washington Post (9/18, Bade, Debonis, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports that House Democrats "are struggling to galvanize public opinion," for impeaching the President, "a major challenge that has delighted the White House and flummoxed Capitol Hill investigators who say they're running short on time." According to the Post, voters "overwhelmingly oppose a move to oust the president – and some polls even show sentiment moving in the opposite direction." The Post adds that some Democrats fear the public "is becoming desensitized to Trump-related scandals," making the job of "convincing voters even more difficult."

Pelosi Criticized House Panel Staffers For Pursuing Impeachment. Politico (9/18, Ferris, Caygle, Bresnahan, 4.29M) reports that "in a closed-door meeting last week," House Speaker Pelosi "stunned lawmakers and aides with a swipe at Democratic staff on the House Judiciary Committee." Pelosi "criticized the panel's handling of impeachment in harsh terms, complaining committee aides have advanced the push for ousting President Donald Trump far beyond where the House Democratic Caucus stands. ... 'And you can feel free to leak this,' Pelosi added, according to multiple people in the room."

Media Reports: Lewandowski Hearing Was "A Big Letdown For Democrats."

On NBC's Today (9/18, 3.42M), Kristen Welker reported that "many House Democrats were hoping Tuesday's hearing with Corey Lewandowski would get them one step closer to impeachment proceedings against President Trump, but it all became chaotic quickly and now the path forward is anything but uncertain." Welker added that Democrats "are still deeply divided. Some feel as though Lewandowski bolstered the argument for impeachment proceedings by stonewalling, but others feel there's still just not enough there." Gayle King said on CBS This Morning (9/18, 2.72M) that the hearing "turned into a big letdown for Democrats."

Lewandowski was asked on CNN's New Day (9/18, 502K) if he accomplished what he set out to do in the hearing. Lewandowski said, "Yeah, my goal was to show up and answer the questions that the House requested under Congressional subpoena. ... I answered every question I had the obligation to answer. ... I answered the majority of their questions. And what I said was: anything that pertains to the campaign, the White House has allowed me to answer. Anything that's in the Mueller Report, I've been allowed to answer. Anything that pertains to private conversations with the President or his senior staff, the White House has asked that I exert the privilege, so that if they choose to use it, it has been preserved." Lewandowski said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/18, 831K), Lewandowski said, "The truth is what this charade was another demonstration of 'no collusion, no obstruction,' which is exactly what the Mueller team said. And so, now the House Judiciary Committee wants to go and talk about impeaching the President of the United States for something other than standing up and putting America first. And if he is charged with that then he is guilty. Putting America first is exactly what this President has done. But this obstruction, this collusion stuff, this fake Russian narrative has all been a hoax from day one and the American people are tired of it."

Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/18, 831K), "I thought Lewandowski handled himself very well. Look, he said the same thing numerous times to Republican members of Congress. Asked when he ran the campaign part of his campaign if there was ever any type of coordination or work with Russia to impact the election, he said, 'no, there wasn't.' Which is interesting because that's the exact same answer Jim Comey gave us when he sat at that exact same desk and...I had a chance to depose him last year. Also the exact same answer Bob Mueller gave us when we asked that exact same question. ... Nothing new there and Corey handled himself very well."

Pelosi Says She Would Have Held Lewandowski In Contempt "Right Then And There." The Washington Post (9/18, Bade, 14.2M) reports that House Speaker Pelosi said Wednesday evening that Lewandowski should have been held in contempt "right then and there" after he talked over members, dodged questions and promoted his possible US Senate bid. According to "three people familiar with the exchange," in "a small huddle with lawmakers from across the caucus," Pelosi "complained that no witness should be able to treat members of Congress" the way Lewandowski did in Tuesday's hearing. Pelosi said, "I would have held him in contempt right then and there." The Post says several lawmakers "took her remarks as a dig at" House Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler.

WPost Analysis: Lewandowski Admitted He Lies To The Media. A Washington Post (9/18, Farhi, 14.2M) analysis says Lewandowski "did something Tuesday that few, if any, political types have ever done: He publicly admitted he lies to the media." Lewandowski said during the hearing, "I have no obligation to be honest with the media because they're just as dishonest as anyone else." During his "combative" interview with CNN Wednesday morning, Lewandowski "expanded upon his situational truthfulness." He said, "I'm as honest as I can be, as often as I can be." Lewandowski said in his testimony that "he tells the truth while under oath." Asked by CNN's Alisyn Camerota "if that is the only circumstance in which he feels obligated to be honest, Lewandowski deflected, invoking former FBI director Andrew McCabe." During the interview, "Lewandowski declined to admit that he lies in news interviews, despite telling the House committee that on Tuesday."

Cottle Calls For Changes In The Way Congressional Hearings Are Conducted. In an "Editorial Observer" piece for the New York Times (9/18, 18.61M), Michelle Cottle calls Lewandowski's appearance before the House Judiciary Committee "a strutting spectacle of contempt for democratic processes worthy of President Trump himself. Mr. Lewandowski's performance requires a serious response. Maybe more than one." Cottle recommends a number of changes to the way the House conducts such hearings.

Horowitz Says He Referred Comey For Criminal Prosecution.

The Washington Times (9/18, Mordock, 492K) reports that Justice Department Inspector General Michael Horowitz told the House Oversight and Reform Committee Wednesday "that he referred former FBI Director James Comey for criminal prosecution earlier this year after concluding he leaked sensitive materials to a friend." Horowitz told the panel, "We are required by the [Inspector General] Act to send information that we've identified that could plausibly be criminal to the Department of Justice." While Horowitz's team concluded that Comey "improperly leaked information to the news media," the Justice Department "ultimately decided not to prosecute" him.

The Washington Examiner (9/18, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that Horowitz "promised to make as much of his investigation into the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, finished last week, as public as possible." Horowitz "laid out details about the next steps for his report on alleged FISA abuse by the DOJ and the FBI, telling the congressmen that he'd handed over a draft of his factual findings" to Attorney General Barr last week "and that the process of review and classification was now just beginning, and could take a while."

Graham: Someone Should Go To Jail For Lying To FISA Court.

The Washington Examiner (9/18, Chaitin, 448K) reports that Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) said Tuesday that he believes someone must be sent to prison to restore confidence in the justice system following alleged surveillance misconduct by the government. On Fox News' Hannity (9/17, 535K), Graham "called for accountability for the Justice Department and FBI officials" who used the unverified Steele dossier "to obtain warrants to electronically monitor onetime Trump campaign adviser Carter Page." Graham said, "Every American should be concerned about the fact that the Department of Justice and the FBI knew that the source of the document had a bias, and they did nothing to ensure the document was reliable. It's not reliable to this day. If the court does not clear this up and take corrective action, then why do you expect people in the future to be deterred? If somebody doesn't go to jail, and if the court doesn't hold those who lied to the court accountable, then we will have missed a great opportunity to restore the rule of law."

Acting DNI Defies Congressional Subpoena Over Whistleblower Complaint.

On CNN's Situation Room (9/18, 769K), Wolf Blitzer described "a rather tense standoff right now, pitting America's top intelligence official against Congress. The Acting Director of National Intelligence defying a subpoena to hand over a secret whistleblower complaint." The Washington Post (9/18, Miller, Nakashima, Harris, 14.2M) cites "two former U.S. officials familiar with the matter" who say the whistleblower complaint "involves President Trump's communications with a foreign leader." According to the former officials, "Trump's interaction with the foreign leader included a 'promise' that was regarded as so troubling that it prompted" an intelligence community official to file a formal whistleblower complaint with intelligence community Inspector General. The Post says it is unclear "which foreign leader Trump was speaking with or what he pledged to deliver, but his direct involvement in the matter has not been previously disclosed. It raises new questions about the president's handling of sensitive information and may further strain his relationship with U.S. spy agencies." IG Michael Atkinson "determined that the complaint was credible and troubling enough to be considered a matter of 'urgent concern,' a legal threshold that ordinarily requires notification of congressional oversight committees." But Acting DNI Maguire "has refused to share details about Trump's alleged transgression with lawmakers," prompting "speculation that the spy chief is improperly protecting the president."

Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) said on CNN's Situation Room (9/18, 761K), "We think it is very serious. The Inspector General said it is urgent and it is credible. So the question is, what is the Administration hiding and what is the risk to our national security if we aren't able to hear from this person. Just to clarify, we don't know much but it looks like the whistleblower comes from inside the intelligence community. The person's conduct that they are concerned about comes from outside and there is a small pool of people that would be able to have a privilege that could even protect them in any way from us knowing about it. Anyway, the White House should not be involved, if they are involved, and this is very rare. This has never happened before. We should have been told immediately. Instead, we're left in the dark."

Gloria Borger said on CNN's Situation Room (9/18, 761K), "The suggestion that there are privilege issues – there are only certain people that that could apply to, either the President or people who work in the White House. So the question is, who are they trying to protect and why? Is it just an embarrassing thing or is it something worse? We don't know the answer."

WPost Analysis: Democrats Now Wary Of Wading Into Kavanaugh Controversy.

The Washington Post (9/18, Kane, 14.2M) reports that "in a head-spinning few days, Republicans have moved into a full offensive posture over the latest allegations against" Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh, "leaving congressional Democrats in a defensive crouch as they try to change the subject." The Post says that in a news conference in Tuesday, Senate Minority Leader Schumer "never mentioned the latest Kavanaugh imbroglio...and appeared exhausted when the topic came up as the very first question." Schumer said, "Look, I've said this before, very simply. I never thought Kavanaugh should be on the bench, and I still don't today."

Sen. Kennedy Unsure If He Will Support Appeals Court Nominee Menashi.

HuffPost (9/18, Bendery, 1.67M) reports Sen. John Kennedy (R-LA) "said Wednesday that he's not inclined to support President Donald Trump's judicial nominee Steven Menashi, a major blow for an already controversial court pick with strong opposition from progressive groups." Kennedy said, "I'm real doubtful. My thought is, look, if he'll treat a United States senator the way he treated us, I wonder how he would treat the people." According to the article, "Kennedy said he was 'very annoyed' by Menashi's performance in his confirmation hearing last week, where he visibly angered Republicans and Democrats by refusing to provide details about what he's worked on in his current role as a White House legal adviser."

House To Hold First Hearing On DC Statehood In More Than 25 Years.

The Washington Post (9/18, Portnoy, 14.2M) reports that "for the first time since 1993," a House committee on Thursday will "hold a hearing on legislation that would turn most of the nation's capital into the State of Washington, Douglass Commonwealth." The bill, sponsored by Rep. Eleanor Holmes Norton (D-DC), "would reduce the seat of the federal government to a two-square-mile enclave, encompassing the White House, Capitol Hill and the Supreme Court. The rest of the District would become the new state." However, it is "silent on how the District would disentangle itself from the federal government, which currently pays more than $1 billion annually to fund much of the city's criminal justice system including the courts, prison services and supervision of offenders released into the community."

Omar Blasts Trump For Retweeting Claim That She Danced On 9/11 Anniversary.

The Washington Post (9/18, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports that Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) on Wednesday claimed President Trump is "spreading 'lies that put my life at risk' after the president retweeted a post falsely claiming that the Minnesota Democrat 'partied on the anniversary of 9/11.'" According to the Post, Omar "said the video of her dancing was taken not on the anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks but at a Congressional Black Caucus event" on September 13.

Trump Says Voters Turned Off By Omar Will Help Republicans Win Minnesota. On Twitter President Trump posted on Wednesday, "Ilhan Omar, a member of AOC Plus 3, will win us the Great State of Minnesota. The new face of the Democrat Party!"

NYTimes Profile: Ocasio-Cortez Has Become More Cautious.

The New York Times (9/18, Edmondson, 18.61M) says Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) now realizes "the downsides of her revolutionary reputation and social media fame," and "has tempered her brash, institution-be-damned style with something different: a careful political calculus that adheres more closely to the unwritten rules of Washington she once disdained." Ocasio-Cortez told the Times, "I think I have more of a context of what it takes to do this job and survive on a day-to-day basis in a culture that is inherently hostile to people like me." The Times says that "gone from her Washington office are her original chief of staff and her communications director, two Justice Democrats co-founders who were intent on waging their divisive brand of politics." However, adds the Times, Ocasio-Cortez on Tuesday endorsed liberal Marie Newman's primary challenge to Rep. Dan Lipinski (D-IL), "who is regarded...as something of an outlier because of his opposition to abortion rights and his vote against the Affordable Care Act."

Trenton Council President's Anti-Semitic Slur Draws Backlash.

The New York Times (9/18, Gold, 18.61M) reports that during a closed meeting on September 5, Trenton City Council President Kathy McBride "used an anti-Semitic slur to describe the negotiation tactics of a Jewish city attorney." According to a recording, McBride said, "They were able to wait her out and Jew her down." The comment "drew condemnations from state and local officials," and "after not addressing the situation for days, Ms. McBride publicly apologized at the start of the Council meeting" on Tuesday. She said, "In my position, you cannot make anyone feel insulted, or you cannot be insensitive to any ethnic backgrounds, so I am apologizing to the community at large." However, McBride's apology "did not quell the controversy. On Wednesday, it spread to Washington, with all 12 members of New Jersey's House of Representatives delegation calling for public apologies or resignations from two Trenton lawmakers who had come to Ms. McBride's defense."

Obama Says Presidents Should Avoid TV, Social Media When Making Decisions.

The New York Post (9/18, Garger, 4.57M) reports, "Former President Barack Obama appeared to take a rare shot at his White House successor on Wednesday, advising against 'watching TV or reading social media' when running the country, according to reports." At a private event in San Francisco, Obama talked about "how he handled the information overload that came with the job, according to The Guardian." He told the audience, "The other thing that's helpful is not watching TV or reading social media. Those are the two things I'd advise, if you're president, not to do."

WPost A1: Compromise Emerges On Wild Horse Management.

On its front page, the Washington Post (9/18, A1, 14.2M) looks at "The Battle Over Wild Horses," reporting that a compromise has emerged between advocates of wild horses and burros and those who say roundups are necessary to control ranch land. Over three years, "major ranching and hunting organizations...quietly negotiated with animal welfare groups, including the Humane Society of the United States. These strange bedfellows recently unveiled a wild horse proposal that they say meets both sides' goals: It keeps mustangs alive, and it gets a lot more off the land."

Sharpton Bungles Tweet Tribute To Roberts.

The New York Post (9/18, Golding, 4.57M) reports that Al Sharpton "brutally botched" a tweet paying tribute to Cokie Roberts, who died Tuesday. In the now-deleted tweet, Sharpton misspelled her name as "Cookie." He wrote, "Saddened to hear of the passing of legendary journalist Cookie Roberts. Here is a Easter Sunday special we did in 2011. May she Rest in Peace." The Post adds that Sharpton "added insult to injury by posting several images that showed journalist Christiane Amanpour...instead of Roberts." He "replaced the mangled memorial with a corrected version, but not before a screenshot of the original was tweeted by Justin Baragona, publisher and editor of the Contempror website."

Malkin Calls Roberts "One Of The First Guilty Culprits Of Fake News." The Hill (9/18, Folley, 2.98M) reports, "Conservative commentator Michelle Malkin knocked [Roberts] on Tuesday, the same day of her death, calling her 'one of the first guilty culprits of fake news.'" Speaking on a panel on media bias, Malkin said, "President Trump did not invent the concept of fake news. Cokie Roberts, of course, passed away today, and God bless her for an incredible career that she had, but I distinctly remember that she was one of the first guilty culprits of fake news." CNN's Brian Stelter, who was also on the panel, responded, "We're doing this today? You're attacking her today? I just want to be clear. The body's not cold yet."

Sabato's Crystal Ball Gives 248 Electoral Votes To Each Party, With Three States Toss-Ups.

The latest Electoral College ratings from Sabato's Crystal Ball (9/19) project both a President Trump-led Republican ticket and the 2020 Democratic ticket with 248 electoral votes, with 42 electoral votes in three states – Arizona, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin – toss-ups. (NE2's electoral vote is also a toss-up.)

Economist/YouGov Poll: Trump 86%; Weld 5%; Sanford 2%; Walsh 1%.

The Hill (9/18, Frazin, 2.98M) reports President Trump "holds a commanding lead over his Republican primary challengers" in an Economist-YouGov poll of "416 GOP primary or caucus voters and 371 Republicans surveyed" September 14-17. Trump leads nationally with 86%, followed by ex-Gov. Bill Weld (R-MA) at 5%, ex-Gov. Mark Sanford (R-SC) at 2%, and ex-Rep. Joe Walsh (R-IL) at 1%.

NYTimes Highlights Pro-Trump Latinos Who Turned Out At New Mexico Rally.

Under the headline "Most Latinos Don't Back Trump. But Some Wear Their Support Proudly," the New York Times (9/18, Medina, 18.61M) reports on Latinos who turned out in support of President Trump at Monday's rally in New Mexico. The Times says, "Some wore it proudly emblazoned across their chest: Latinos for Trump, though they would rarely use the ethnic term to describe themselves. A few forcefully emphasized that they were Hispanic." The Times adds that Trump's New Mexico visit was "aimed at demonstrating his support among Hispanic voters, and many did come to hear him – enthusiastically waiting for hours in the blazing sun." Even so, adds the Times, "Trump is deeply unpopular with most Hispanics in New Mexico, and those who do support him are unlikely to have a decisive electoral effect there. But brown faces were not hard to find at this week's rally, held in Rio Rancho, a suburb of Albuquerque."

Latino Republican Urges Trump's Defeat In 2020. Abel Guerra, Associate Director of Public Liaison during President George W. Bush's first term, writes in the Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M), "I am a Republican. I worked in the George W. Bush White House. And I say to my fellow Latinos: I'm not asking you to become a Democrat. But I am asking you to vote President Trump out of office." Guerra says Republicans "have lost control of the monster they helped create. ... From day one, Trump spewed his white-supremacist views, promising to halt the invasion of immigrants and spurring a rhetoric of resentment and retaliation against the 'other.' No matter our background, we have been vilified as invaders, marked as illegal and degraded as subhuman. The silence from prominent Republicans is deafening."

Fox News Poll: Biden 29%; Sanders 18%; Warren 16%; Harris 7%; Buttigieg 5%.

In an online article, Fox News (9/18, Blanton, 27.59M) reports that a Fox News national poll of Democratic voters, taken Sept. 15-17, shows ex-Vice President Joe Biden leading the race for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination with 29%, followed by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) at 18%, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) at 16%, Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) at 7%, and South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 5%; no other contender tops 4%. Fox News says Biden's support is "down 2 points since last month and down 6 points since May." Biden's "11-point lead is down from a high of 19 points in June." Meanwhile, Sanders' support is "up 8 points since August," while Warren's support is "down 4" since then.

In its report on the Fox News poll, The Hill (9/18, Coleman, 2.98M) says, "Democratic primary voters said they prioritize a candidate who has the best chance to beat President Trump, at 56 percent, up 15 percentage points from March. Voters have traditionally seen Biden as the most electable although the other candidates are closing the gap."

Economist/YouGov Poll: Biden 25%; Warren 19%; Sanders 15%; Buttigieg 8%; Harris 5%. An Economist/YouGov weekly tracking poll of 603 Democratic voters, taken Sept. 14-17, shows Biden leading with 25%, followed by Warren at 19%, Sanders at 15%, Buttigieg at 8%, and Harris at 5%; no other contender tops 3%. In a report on the poll, The Hill (9/18, Axelrod, 2.98M) says that the survey "shows Biden and Sanders holding approximately steady, after garnering 24 percent and 17 percent last week, respectively, while Warren slipped 5 points since last week's tracking poll."

Iowa Poll: Biden 25%; Warren 23%; Buttigieg 12%; Sanders 9%; Klobuchar 8%; Harris 5%. The Washington Times (9/18, Sherfinski, 492K) reports that a David Binder Research poll of 500 Iowa likely Democratic caucusgoers, taken Sept. 14-17, shows Biden leading with 25%, followed by Warren at 23%, Buttigieg at 12%, Sanders at 9%, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) at 8%, and Harris at 5%; no other contender topped 3%. The survey was "conducted for the group Focus on Rural America." The Times reports that "Binder is a pollster for Ms. Harris and was a pollster for President Barack Obama in 2008 and 2012." The Times adds, "A Binder Research poll released in early July had Ms. Warren in first place at 20%, followed by Ms. Harris at 18%, Mr. Biden at 17%, Mr. Sanders at 12%, Mr. Buttigieg at 10% and Ms. Klobuchar at 4%." Politico (9/18, Korecki, 4.29M) headlines its report on the survey "New Poll Finds Harris' Support Has Plunged 13 Points In Iowa."

Florida Poll: Biden 34%; Warren 24%; Sanders 14%; Buttigieg 5%. The Tampa Bay (FL) Times (9/18, Taylor, 742K) reports that a Florida Atlantic University poll of 407 Florida Democratic voters, taken Sept. 12-15, shows Biden leading with 34%, followed by Warren at 24%, Sanders at 14%, and Buttigieg at 5%; no other contender tops 4%. In a similar poll taken in May, Biden led with 39%, followed by Sanders and Warren both at 12%. In hypothetical general election matchups, the poll shows President Trump edging the three leading Democrats by one point or less.

Armstrong Williams: Biden Told Thomas He Didn't Believe Anita Hill's Accusations.

In an online article, Fox News (9/18, London, 27.59M) reports, "A close friend and former colleague of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, echoed new" remarks made by ex-Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) that then-Sen. Joe Biden (D-DE) "did not believe Anita Hill after she accused Thomas of sexual harassment during Thomas' Supreme Court confirmation process. 'With Senator Joe Biden, Justice Thomas has always held this very deep affection and respect for Joe Biden, because they would talk often off-the-record during the confirmation hearings. And Biden did express to the Justice at the time that he did not believe Ms. Hill,' said Thomas friend and radio host Armstrong Williams." Fox News adds that Hatch "alleges that Biden confided to him during the 1991 hearings that he doubted Hill's story. 'Biden told me personally that he didn't believe her.'" Hatch said.

Biden Draws Heat From Left For Touting His Work With McConnell. The New York Times (9/18, Thrush, 18.61M) reports that as he has campaigned this year, Biden has touted deals he "cut" with Senate Majority Leader McConnell "as proof of his skill in achieving bipartisan legislation in an otherwise hyperpartisan environment. 'I'll work with Mitch McConnell where we can agree,' Mr. Biden said this month – adding that on some issues, like gun control, there was no room for compromise." However, says the Times, Biden's is "a view that has been branded as naïve and wistful by some Democratic rivals as well as by the ascendant left wing of his party. That criticism is particularly pointed with regard to Mr. McConnell." The Times says "many" Democrats consider Biden's "comfortable relationship with the Senate leader...dangerous."

WTimes Analysis: Warren Aims To "Shatter" Notion Of Biden "As Heir To The Obama Legacy." The Washington Times (9/18, Miller, McLaughlin, 492K) reports that Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "has a plan to beat" Biden: "Shatter the image of" him "as heir to the Obama legacy." The Times says Warren "is offering Democrats an Obama-esque vision that Mr. Biden can't match with his meandering message about fighting racism and restoring the status quo in a post-Trump America." The Times adds that Warren's "plans for a socialist-style makeover echo Mr. Obama's promise in 2008 of 'fundamentally transforming the United States.'"

After 2016 Trouncing In South Carolina, Sanders Hoping For Better Showing Next Year.

The New York Times (9/18, Ember, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports that in the 2016 Democratic presidential race, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "stunned the political world by almost beating Hillary Clinton in the Iowa caucuses. He trounced her in New Hampshire. Then, in more diverse South Carolina, where black voters make up an estimated 60 percent of the Democratic primary electorate, he got annihilated," losing "every county in the state, with Mrs. Clinton carrying more than half of them with more than 80 percent of the vote." The Times adds, "After mostly minimizing South Carolina four years ago, if not seeming to downright disregard it at times, Mr. Sanders has returned with a previously unseen vigor. ... [B]y this weekend, when Mr. Sanders visits on a college tour, he will have notched as many visits to the state as he made in the 2016 cycle."

Sanders "Quietly Parted Ways With His Iowa Political Director." The Washington Post (9/18, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports that Sanders "quietly parted ways with his Iowa political director in recent weeks, his campaign confirmed Wednesday, part of a series of recent staff shake-ups in key early states. The campaign announced in March that Jess Mazour would be political director in Iowa, "part of a first wave of early state hires. She is no longer on the team." The Post adds, "A campaign official who spoke anonymously because of the sensitivity of the situation said Mazour was let go in late summer and will not be replaced. Mazour...was a high-ranking campaign aide but not the director of the Iowa effort."

Politico: Slumping Harris Adopting "Iowa-Or-Bust Strategy."

Politico (9/18, Cadelago, 4.29M) reports that Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "is putting her stumbling campaign on the line with a new Iowa-or-bust strategy: She's shifting away from the closed-door fundraisers that dominated her summer calendar to focus on retail politicking in the crucial kickoff state. Harris huddled with top campaign officials Tuesday in Baltimore to discuss the next steps as a series of polls show her plummeting into the mid-single digits. She's not expected to significantly alter her message," but plans "to make weekly visits to the state and nearly double the size of her 65-person ground operation," according to "sources familiar with the discussions." Politico adds, "A half-dozen Harris officials and outside allies briefed on internal expectations said she needs a top-tier finish in Iowa to remain competitive" in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Rove: Democrats Won't Win Moderate Votes With Vicious Assaults On Trump.

In his column for the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Karl Rove observes that many of the Democratic candidates at last Thursday's debate in Houston combined positive, uplifting messages about the future of the country with vicious personal attacks on President Trump. In Rove's view, such assaults, while galvanizing the left, will alienate swing voters.

Sources Say Kennedy To Announce Primary Challenge To Markey On Saturday.

The AP (9/18) reports that Rep. Joe Kennedy III (D-MA), "a scion of one of America's most storied political families, is set to announce" a 2020 primary challenge to Sen. Edward Markey (D-MA). The AP says, "A person with knowledge of Kennedy's plans told [the AP] that Kennedy will formally make the announcement Saturday. The person wasn't authorized to preempt Kennedy's announcement and spoke Wednesday on condition of anonymity. The 38-year-old grandson of Robert Kennedy has been quietly laying down the foundation of a run, building up his staff and formally announcing his interest in the race by filing preliminary paperwork with the Federal Election Commission last month."

The Boston Globe (9/18, 972K) reports, "Kennedy informed Markey of his decision Wednesday," according to a source. The Globe adds, "Backed by his famous surname and relative youth, Kennedy, 38, will enter the race as the front-runner, according to recent polls. But Markey, 73, has insisted publicly and privately he will put up a tough fight to stay in Congress, where he began serving in 1976." The Boston Herald (9/18, Kashinsky, 410K) reports that Markey "has been staffing up and pushing out endorsements" from Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and Rep. Alexandria Ocasio Cortez (D-NY), "his Green New Deal co-sponsor."

The New York Times (9/18, Martin, Fandos, 18.61M) reports, "The contest will almost certainly be the country's most high-profile Senate primary and could offer clues for just how eager Trump-era Democrats are to replace more incumbent lawmakers. But unlike with some of the Tea Party-era Republican races between ideological foes, Mr. Kennedy, 38, and Mr. Markey, 73, are both reliable progressives and each is claiming support from liberal leaders and organizations." Politico (9/18, Murray, 4.29M) reports, "A public poll conducted just after Labor Day found Kennedy 14 percentage points ahead of Markey in a head-to-head match-up, and 9 percentage points ahead of Markey and two lesser-known primary challengers." USA Today (9/18, Behrmann, 10.31M), Axios (9/18, Basu, 521K), Bloomberg (9/18, Dennis, Wasson, 4.73M) and the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Andrews, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also report on the story.

Milbank: Trump Constantly Denying Things He Has Said Shows His Word Can't Be Trusted.

In his column for the Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M), Dana Milbank points out the many instances when President Trump has denied saying something, when the record shows that, in fact, he did. It is "not necessarily a new phenomenon," Milbank writes, "but the lapses have become more serious." Milbank concludes: "Whether it's deceit or memory malfunction, the consequence is the same: Friends and foes alike know that the president's word is not to be taken seriously."

Loyola: Threat To Pack Supreme Court Could Influence Justices' Decisions.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Mario Loyola, a senior fellow at the Competitive Enterprise Institute, writes that a threat by Democrats to pack the Supreme Court should be taken seriously, not because such legislation is likely to pass, but because it could inappropriately influence the justices. Loyola points to Franklin D. Roosevelt's threat to pack the court, which led to the justices eventually acquiescing in cases that expanded federal authority.

WPost: More Information Should Be Released About Response To DC Fire That Led To Two Deaths.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M) questions the response to a fire that led to the deaths of two people last month in Washington. The Post urges city officials to release "more information about the events" so the public can "judge for themselves whether officials are right that dispatchers did what they could in a challenging situation." It adds that the District of Columbia Council, "which plans to examine the District's handling of the property, should also do its own review of this matter."

Number Of Investment Bank Jobs Leaving London Still Smaller Than Expected.

Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M) reports that with only six weeks until the UK is expected to leave the European Union, "the expected rush of investment bank jobs out of London is still just a trickle, according to a study." Banks "have moved 1,000 posts to rival hubs like Frankfurt and Paris since the referendum in June 2016, a report by EY said." That contrasts "with some estimates of tens or even hundreds of thousands shifting to the EU as a result of Brexit."

Sources: Italy Cutting 2019, 2020 GDP Growth Forecasts.

Reuters (9/18, Fonte, Jones) reports the new Italian government "expects the economy to expand by only about 0.4% next year after eking out 0.1% growth this year," according to three sources, "underscoring the need for an expansionary 2020 budget." In April, the previous government had targeted GDP of 0.2% this year and 0.8% in 2020.

BOJ Keeps Monetary Policy On Hold.

The Financial Times (9/18, Harding, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports the Bank of Japan kept monetary policy on hold but suggested action next month.

ECB Considers Investigating Deutsche Bank Over Alleged Unauthorized Bond Purchases.

Reuters (9/18) reports the European Central Bank is "examining whether to open a formal investigation into Deutsche Bank for allegedly buying some of its own securities without authorization, two people familiar with the matter said on Wednesday." The alleged offense, "which could result in a fine if the bank is found to have broken rules, comes as Germany's biggest lender tries to improve its reputation with investors and relationship with regulators after years of misdeeds."

FT Supports Bank Of England Holding Rates.

The Financial Times (9/18, Board, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) says in an editorial that with the Bank of England meeting on Friday, it is unlikely to make any move on rates. The editors say the bank is right to hold fire.

Brazil's Central Bank Cuts Benchmark Rate To Record Low.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Trevisani, Lewis, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Brazilian central bank cut its benchmark interest rate on Wednesday, as expected. The bank cut the benchmark Selic rate from 6% to a record low of 5.5%. At least one more cut is expected this year, with economists surveyed by the central bank predicting the Selic at 5% by the end of 2019.

Latvian Financial Watchdog Fines PrivatBank Over Money-laundering Controls.

Reuters (9/18) reports Latvia's financial watchdog "said on Wednesday it had fined PrivatBank, the country's 12th-biggest bank, 1 million euros ($1.1 million) for insufficient money-laundering controls." The Financial and Capital Market Commission (FCMC) said in an emailed statement "it had found a number of 'serious faults' in the internal control system in the area of anti-money laundering and terrorist financing at the bank."

Leading International News

After Israeli Elections, Trump Seems To Distance Himself From Netanyahu.

Axios (9/18, News, 521K) reports that after Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "fail[ed] to win a parliamentary majority in Tuesday's elections," President Trump "appeared to distance himself" from the Israeli leader. Speaking to reporters in California, Trump said that he had not spoken to Netanyahu about the election results, and stressed that the Administration's relations "are with Israel." Axios says Trump's "cool remarks are a blow to Netanyahu, who is fighting for his political survival." The Washington Post (9/18, Gearan, 14.2M) also describes Trump as "appear[ing] to distance himself" from Netanyahu as he "declin[ed] to offer either encouragement or praise to his most enthusiastically loyal foreign ally now that he faces potential electoral defeat."

Trump's comment comes as Israel voters, according to Reuters (9/18, Heller), "dealt a new blow to Israel's longest-serving leader." Netanyahu "failed to win a ruling majority in an election that produced a virtual tie between his right-wing bloc and a center-left grouping that would be led by former military chief Benny Gantz." Reuters adds that "with coalition-building again key to forming a government, it could be days or even weeks before it becomes clear whether the wily politician hailed by supporters as 'King Bibi' has been dethroned after a decade in power." In a brief report on the election results, ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 10, 0:21, Muir, 6.69M) said Netanyahu "has canceled his trip to New York City for the UN General Assembly next week."

The Washington Post (9/18, McAuley, Eglash, Hendrix, 14.2M) reports that Netanyahu and Gantz, "head of the centrist Blue and White faction," have both begun "jockeying for the endorsement of smaller parties in hopes of achieving a governing majority of 61 seats in the Knesset, Israel's parliament. Preliminary results show the two parties each with 32 seats." According to the Post, "If confirmed by the final tally expected Thursday, center-left and Arab would parties gain influence and ultrareligious parties would see theirs wane." The AP (9/18, Heller) says Netanyahu is "facing an uphill battle to hold on to his job." Likewise, the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Schwartz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Netanyahu has few options to remain in power.

Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M) reports that "after a near-final tally is released Thursday, President Reuven Rivlin will consult with the various parties to see whom they recommend he ask to form the next government. Coalition talks could take as long as six weeks." The New York Times (9/18, Specia, 18.61M) reports that "the secular ultranationalist party Yisrael Beiteinu, which is expected to win nine seats in the Knesset, may have the potential to make or break a coalition," and "its leader, Avigdor Lieberman, appears to hold the power to be a kingmaker." Reuters (9/18, Farrell) says Lieberman "took a huge gamble by refusing to join a Netanyahu coalition government on a point of principle in an election last April. If exit polls and early vote tallies prove correct, he reaped the reward by boosting his party's seat numbers in the Sept. 17 rerun."

The AP (9/18, Heller) says that "Lieberman took the political gamble of his life when he spurned his mentor," Netanyahu, "and forced an unprecedented repeat election," and "it appeared to have paid off." Lieberman "passed up the post of defense minister in Netanyahu's government following April's election and refused to join the new coalition because of what he said was the excessive influence it granted to ultra-Orthodox Jewish parties." the move left Netanyahu "one seat short of a parliamentary majority. Instead of allowing an alternative candidate a chance to form a government, Netanyahu dissolved parliament and called another snap election. – launching a scathing campaign aimed at ending the career of his former protégé."

The New York Times (9/18, Kershner, 18.61M) says "the murky outcome for the main Jewish parties," could allow the Joint List, "an alliance of predominantly Arab parties," to "play a rare and critical role." In a separate story, the AP (9/18, Krauss) reports that "in absolute terms, the Arab bloc appears to have repeated its performance in 2015, when it won 13 seats. But this time around, due to the shifting constellation of Israeli politics, it would be well-placed to lead the opposition if a national unity government of the two largest parties is formed, as seems likely." According to the AP, "That would put a representative of Israel's Arab citizens closer to the center of power than ever before and strengthen their ability to influence the national agenda." Similarly, a New York Times (9/18, Halbinger, Kershner, 18.61M) analysis says that "whatever the government, Arab citizens will enjoy greater representation, and perhaps even speak with a louder voice if an Arab lawmaker becomes opposition leader for the first time."

WPost Welcomes Possibility Of Netanyahu's Defeat. A Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M) editorial says Netanyahu "suffered a crippling and perhaps politically mortal blow in Tuesday's elections – and for all the right reasons." To the Post, Netanyahu "conducted a vile campaign directed at Israel's Arab minority." If "Israel's other parties stick to their campaign positions, a leader who has polarized his country and damaged Israel's standing in the United States could finally be forced from office – or, at least, prevented from following through on his most extreme promises." Israel's election, the Post argues, "could arrest what has been a dangerous slide toward a self-defeating nationalism."

Trump To Appear With India's Modi At US Rally.

The Washington Post (9/18, Slater, 14.2M) reports President Trump will join Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi at a rally in Houston on Sunday. According to the Post, "it marks the first time that any U.S. president and Indian prime minister have addressed such an event together," and it comes amid trade tensions between the two countries and concerns from "the State Department and some members of Congress, who have urged India to end its detentions of Kashmir's political leaders." At the event, "the two countries will emphasize their affinities rather than their differences," and "officials from both countries have dropped strong hints that they hope to announce progress toward reducing the current trade frictions while Modi is in the United States." Also, "for Trump, the rally provides access to a pool of voters – Indian Americans – that he hopes to court in next year's presidential elections, even if the community tends to lean heavily Democratic."

Congress To Vote On Bill Backing Hong Kong Activists.

Reuters (9/18, Zengerle) reports congressional committees are set "to start voting next week on legislation supporting human rights in Hong Kong, with measures under consideration including annual reviews of the Chinese territory's special economic status and the imposition of sanctions on those who undermine its autonomy." House Speaker Pelosi "held a news conference on Wednesday with House members – Republicans and her fellow Democrats – as well as Joshua Wong, Denise Ho and other Hong Kong democracy activists to back the 'Hong Kong Human Rights and Democracy Act of 2019.'" The activists in Washington this week made "their case for U.S. support, including testifying at a congressional hearing on Tuesday."

The AP (9/18, Mascaro) reports, "Pelosi thanked the activists for 'challenging the conscience,' not only of the Chinese government, but the worldwide community with their mass protests over the territory's autonomous status." She supported "the protesters' demand for universal suffrage and 'a political system accountable to the people.'" And she "warned others in the U.S. government not to allow 'commercial interests' to drive foreign policy in the region."

American Airlines Mechanic Caught Sabotaging Plane May Have Ties To ISIS.

The Miami Herald (9/18, Weaver, 1.09M) reports, "An American Airlines mechanic accused of sabotaging a navigation system on a flight with 150 people aboard at Miami International Airport was denied bond by a federal judge on Wednesday after prosecutors suggested he may have links to a Middle East terrorist organization." Abdul-Majeed Marouf Ahmed Alani "told investigators after his arrest earlier this month that he disabled the system because he was upset over stalled union contract negotiations," but investigators found "Alani lied about taking a trip to Iraq in March to visit his brother, and that he told a fellow American Airlines employee in June that his brother...was a member of...ISIS." Moreover, "prosecutors also said Alani allowed the FBI to search his smartphone and agents found a 'disturbing' ISIS video in which a person was being shot in the head, and that he sent the video to someone with an Arabic message asking 'Allah' to take revenge against non-Muslims."

All three major network newscasts reported the story last night. In its lead segment, ABC World News Tonight (9/18, lead story, 2:23, Muir, 6.69M) reported "authorities say Alani had also received an article about airplane crashes involving the very sensor he had sought to disable," and that "he allegedly shared a message asking Allah to take action against the kafirs, or non-believers." The CBS Evening News (9/18, story 3, 1:37, O'Donnell, 4.12M) remarked on the "dramatic turn in the case," while NBC Nightly News (9/18, lead story, 2:16, Holt, 5.99M) led its broadcast with the "disturbing new questions" about Alani.

Brian Todd said on CNN's Situation Room (9/18, 761K), "Terrorist groups from al Qaeda to ISIS are known to be fixated on trying to bring down American planes and the threat of a terrorist getting a job with an airline to pull off an inside job has always been a major security concern. ... But terrorism experts say it is possible Alani's interest in Iraq and ISIS could have no bearing on the alleged sabotage."

Aviation correspondent Renee Marsh said on CNN's Situation Room (9/18, 769K), "Although prosecutors have presented these links to ISIS, they don't, at least right now, have evidence that this mechanic was motivated by ISIS. Otherwise, the charges would reflect that." The New York Times (9/18, Zaveri, 18.61M) also reports "Alani has not been charged with any terror-related crimes," and "Federal prosecutors did not answer questions about the case on Wednesday evening." Moreover, "a lawyer for Mr. Alani, Christian S. Dunham, did not immediately respond to requests for comment on Wednesday evening." Also reporting the story, among other news outlets, are the Washington Examiner (9/18, Bufkin, 448K), the AP (9/18, Anderson), Townhall (9/18, Pavlich, 177K), the New York Post (9/18, Fredericks, 4.57M), and the Fox News (9/18, Casiano, 27.59M) website.

Lawmakers Skeptical Of Administration Efforts To Renew Spy Program.

The Washington Post (9/18, Barrett, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports lawmakers on Wednesday were skeptical "about the Trump Administration's call to retain the authority to run a counterterrorism program that was shuttered last year." House Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler expressed doubt about whether the NSA's "aborted program to collect millions of Americans' phone records should be reauthorized following repeated compliance problems and minimal evidence of the program's utility." Nadler said, "Simply put, the NSA dismantled the program because it was a serious failure. It is not a bad thing that the NSA identified a problem, told us about it, and tried to fix it." But Nadler said it was "baffling" that the Administration wants Congress to reauthorize that effort after shutting it down.

Facebook Still Auto-Generating Pages Promoting Extremist Groups.

The AP (9/18, Butler, Ortutay) reports that following a story by the AP four months ago about how "pages that Facebook auto-generates for businesses are aiding Middle East extremists and white supremacists in the United States," the company "appears to have made little progress on the issue." A whistleblower's complaint says "that Facebook itself has inadvertently provided the two extremist groups with a networking and recruitment tool by producing dozens of pages in their names." The filing "identifies almost 200 auto-generated pages – some for businesses, others for schools or other categories – that directly reference the Islamic State group and dozens more representing al-Qaida and other known groups."

UN Security Council To Vote On Call For Idlib Truce.

Reuters (9/18, Nichols) reports the United Nations Security Council is set to vote Thursday "on a draft resolution calling for a truce in northwest Syria, though diplomats said the measure is likely to be opposed by veto-power Russia." According to the article, "diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Russia wanted language to be included in the resolution that would exempt from the truce military offensives against armed groups blacklisted by the Security Council." However, "the United States and others refused, diplomats said." The measure instead demands "member states ensure that all measures taken to counter terrorism, including in Idlib Governorate, comply with their obligations under international law."

Khalilzad To Provide Classified Briefing To House Panel.

The Washington Times (9/18, Meier, 492K) reports, "President Trump's lead negotiator with in the failed peace talks with Afghanistan's Taliban militants will not appear publicly before the House Foreign Affairs Committee Thursday, as planned, but will instead provide a classified briefing to panel members." Chairman Eliot Engel "announced late Thursday that he has withdrawn his subpoena of veteran diplomat Zalmay Khalilzad that was issued last week after 'numerous requests' made to the State Department to be briefed on negotiations were ignored." The panel will "continue its Thursday hearing on the Trump administration's plans for the 18-year U.S. war in Afghanistan, but it will commence without Mr. Khalilzad's public presence."

TIME (9/18, Kambhampaty, Carlisle, Chan, 18.47M) reports, "Justin Trudeau, Canada's prime minister, wore brownface makeup to a party at the private school where he was teaching in the spring of 2001." The photograph, "taken at an 'Arabian Nights'-themed gala," depicts Trudeau, then a 29 year-old teacher at West Point Grey Academy, "wearing a turban and robes with his face, neck and hands completely darkened." It appears in the 2000-2001 yearbook of the private school.

The New York Times (9/18, Austen, Bilefsky, 18.61M) reports, Trudeau told reporters on Wednesday, "This is something I shouldn't have done many years ago. It was something that I didn't think was racist at the time, but now I recognize it was something racist to do, and I am deeply sorry." The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Vieira, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Trudeau added, "I am going to be thinking how much harder I am going to have to continue to work to demonstrate to Canadians that I am focused on building a better world with less discrimination, less intolerance and less racism."

USA Today (9/18, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports Trudeau "also told reporters about another incident where he wore similar makeup during a high school talent show." He said "he wore 'makeup' to perform 'Day-O', a traditional Jamaican folk tune sung by legendary African American performer and civil rights activist Harry Belafonte."

The AP (9/18) reports "the photo's publication could spell more trouble for Trudeau, who polls say is facing a serious challenge from Conservative leader Andrew Scheer." The Washington Post (9/18, Coletta, Knowles, Thebault, 14.2M) reports Scheer "blasted his opponent Wednesday night, calling the brownface photo 'an act of open mockery and racism.'" Speaking to reporters, Scheer said he was "shocked" and "disappointed."

Trump A Hot Topic For Candidates Campaigning In Canada's Election. The Washington Post (9/18, Coletta, 14.2M) reports President Trump "could play an unusual role" in Canada's federal election campaign. Party leaders are "unlikely to alienate voters if they criticize the president." However, "candidates must also tread lightly: Trump is seen as an easy target; spending too much time on him could backfire as cheap politicking at the expense of more substantive campaigning. And the eventual winner will have to work with him."

Housing

HUD Official Reprimanded For Hatch Act Violations.

Politico (9/18, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reports that the Office of Special Counsel has "reprimanded" Lynne Patton, "a top Department of Housing and Urban Development official with ties to President Donald Trump's family, for making political statements on the job." Patton "used her official government Twitter account to promote political tweets and displayed a red 'USA' hat sold by the Trump campaign in her office." The OSC "issued Patton a warning letter after determining that both activities violated the Hatch Act, which prohibits executive branch officials from certain political activity while on duty."

Freddie Mac Announces Its CRT Programs Have Transferred Over $50B In Credit Risk.

DS News (9/18, Welborn) reports, "Freddie Mac recently announced that its Single-Family Credit Risk Transfer (CRT) programs have surpassed the $50 billion mark in transferring credit risk to private investors and (re)insurers. From program inception to date, the company has transferred a portion of the credit risk on more than $1.3 trillion of Single-Family mortgages based on unpaid principle balance (UPB) at issuance. Per Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) guidelines, Freddie Mac now transfers the credit risk on more than 90% of the UPB on CRT-eligible, newly-acquired Single-Family mortgages." Freddie Mac VP of Single-Family Credit Risk Transfer Mike Reynolds said, "I am proud of our accomplishments and the positive impact we are making on the U.S. housing finance industry. Freddie Mac will continue to lead the industry with innovation in the CRT space and set the standard for credit risk management." Recently, CEO David Brickman praised Freddie's "growing track record of strong returns, solid risk management and an unwavering commitment" to its mission in the GSE's Q2 earnings call.

Freddie Mac Launches Online Mortgage Insights Platform For Lenders.

American Banker (9/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Freddie Mac has launched a web-based mortgage insights platform designed to provide lenders with access to key market data. The service, ECO, for Evaluate|Compare|Optimize, is being rolled out a time when the mortgage industry has put more emphasis on organizing information digitally to ensure it is an easily digestible format." Freddie Mac Single-Family VP Bhavini Amin said, "Freddie Mac's ECO is the overarching view that our account executives review with their client counterparts on a monthly or quarterly basis. There's a greater ability to slice the data in many ways."

FHFA Ends GSE MSR Financing Pilot.

National Mortgage Professional (9/18) reports the FHFA "has announced the end of the Mortgage Servicing Rights (MSR) financing pilot program for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." The pilot "began in 2018 to provide financing to non-bank servicers as they continue to account for a growing percentage" of the GSEs' overall servicing portfolio. According to NMP, "While both GSEs were approved for the MSR pilot, only Freddie Mac chose to participate." FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "The MSR market is already served by a wide assortment of highly competitive private sources of capital and financing. Going forward, the Enterprises should focus on activities that are core to the guaranty business, mitigate risk, and are essential to end the conservatorships."

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/18, Muolo, Subscription Publication) provides similar coverage. Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/18, Muolo, Subscription Publication) says that "news of the Federal Housing Finance Agency killing the Freddie Mac MSR-financing pilot was still filtering down to the industry" as IMF "went to press Wednesday."

Freddie Mac's Loan Product Advisor Includes AIM For Direct Deposit With Paystub.

National Mortgage News (9/18, Sinnock) reports, "Freddie Mac is partnering with Finicity to give lenders access to a new automated process that advances efforts to consolidate borrower-authorized data validation checks used in the secondary market underwriting process."

In its latest Mortgage Tech Rundown, HousingWire (9/18, Lloyd, 23K) reports Freddie Mac "announced its Loan Product Advisor solution now includes AIM for Direct Deposit with Paystub, which leverages data from Finicity's verification of income and employment solution in limited release." Freddie "explained in a press release that Finicity's solution extracts a borrower's pay statement data from the paystub and then cross-verifies it against their income transactions from their personal financial institutions." In other tech news, Realogy partnered with HomeAdvisor to launch a new home improvement program, RealVitalize, and investing/lending platform Groundfloor "launched a new product" targeting real estate investors who "may need additional financing during renovation projects."

JPM And Citigroup Say That Deutsche Bank's Help Still Does Not Link Them To GSE Bond-Rigging.

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg Law (9/18, Leonard, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports JPMorgan Chase and Citigroup "say a Southern District of New York lawsuit claiming they rigged the $550 billion market for bonds backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac fails to link them to any scheme, even with Deutsche Bank AG's help. The proposed class action accuses the country's top financial institutions of colluding to narrow the spread between what they pay for the unsecured over-the-counter bonds and what they get for them. The case is consolidated in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York."

Reporting on news that the SEC fined three Raymond James entities for "wrongfully charging advisory fees on inactive retail client accounts" and "charging extra commissions for brokerage customer investments in unit investment trusts," Zacks Investment Research (9/19, 96K) says Deutsche Bank "agreed to pay $15 million in penalty to settle allegations that it exploited its market presence by overcharging clients for unsecured bonds issued by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac between 2009 and 2016."

First American: Existing-Home Sales Exceeded Market Potential In August.

National Mortgage News (9/18, Finkelstein) reports, "Existing-home sales exceeded their market potential again in August, and the improvement may continue for some time before there's a correction, according to First American. There were an additional 41,519 home sales in August, 0.8% above what the First American Potential Home Sales Model estimated. First American measures home sales using a seasonally adjusted, annualized rate." First American Chief Economist Mark Fleming explained, "Given the historical relationship between existing-home sales and population demographic data, homeowner tenure, house-buying power, house price trends and conditions in the financial market, the pace of existing-home sales is exceeding what we believe is fundamentally supported by the market. The main reason? Rising tenure length." However, according to NMN, Fleming "pointed to the Sept. 12 Freddie Mac Primary Mortgage Market Survey," saying that if mortgage rates "remain this low or even fall further, more existing-home owners may be enticed to move as the rate 'lock-in' effect fades. While actual existing-home sales are marginally outperforming market potential this month, declining mortgage rates could be the factor that bridges the gap."

Future Of GSEs A Highlight Of NAR Housing Opportunity Working Group Meeting.

According to Illinois Realtors (9/18), "The future of government sponsored enterprises (GSEs) like Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as private utilities and the importance of counting renters in 2020 U.S. Census were two highlights at Housing Opportunity Working Group meeting Wednesday morning at the Chicago Marriott Naperville." NAR Senior Policy Advisor Ken Fears "explained how the two GSEs came to be placed in government conservatorship following the financial crisis in 2008, their importance to the U.S. economy and what the Trump administration hopes to accomplish by removing them from government control. Then he summarized NAR's ideas to ensure the financial viability of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac and preserve housing opportunities for all by making these entities private utilities."

MBA: Last Week, Mortgage Applications Fell As Mortgage Rates Moved Higher.

HousingWire (9/18, Lloyd, 23K) reports, "Last week's uptick in interest rates sent the nation's refinance activity into decline, as mortgage rates climbed to a seven-week high, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association's weekly Mortgage Applications Survey." On both adjusted and unadjusted bases, mortgage applications fell 0.1% for the week that ended on September 13 from the prior week. The Refinance Index "fell 4% from the previous week," yet remained "148% higher than the same period in 2018." Meanwhile, the unadjusted Purchase Index "rose 16% from a week ago and is still 15% higher than the same week a year ago." The seasonally adjusted Purchase Index "ticked up 6% from the week before." The refinance share fell from 60% to 57.9%, while the ARM share "retreated to 5% of total applications." The FHA share rose from 9.3% to 10.9%, while the VA share rose from 11.9% to 12.7%. The average rate for 30-year conforming FRMs rose from 3.82% to 4.01%, while that for jumbo balances rose from 3.84% to 4.01%. The 15-year FRM average rose from 3.28% to 3.42%, and the 5/1 ARM average rose from 3.42 to 3.54%. Mortgage News Daily (9/18, Swanson) reports the "average loan for a purchase mortgage" was $327,400.

National Mortgage News (9/18, McCullom) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "The jump in U.S. Treasury rates at the end of last week caused mortgage rates to increase across the board, with the 30-year fixed-rate mortgage climbing to 4.01% – the highest in seven weeks. Refinancing activity dropped as a result, driven solely by conventional refinances. ... The purchase index increased for the third straight week to the highest reading since July. Additionally, the average loan amount on purchase applications increased to its highest level since June. This is a likely a sign that the underlying demand for buying a home remains strong, despite some of the recent volatility we have seen."

Ellie Mae: Refis Surged In August Thanks To Lower Rates.

M Report (9/18, Albanese) says, "The 30-year note rate fell for the eighth-consecutive month to 4.07% in August from the prior month's 4.18% Ellie Mae reported in its latest Origination Insight Report." Refis made up 43% of all loans in August, representing a 38% increase from July. According to M Report, "Purchase percentages as a share of all loans fell under 60% for the first time this year." Ellie Mae CEO Jonathan Corr said, "Interest rates continue to decline and we're seeing homeowners capitalize on the refinance opportunity throughout the month of August. As we enter the fall and the market expects further rate cuts from the Fed, we will watch to see if the share of refinances continues to climb further."

Commerce: August Homebuilding Activity Surged At Fastest Pace In A Dozen Years.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Parker, Chaney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports homebuilding activity rose in August to reach the highest level seen in over 12 years, according to data released Wednesday by the Commerce Department. According to MarketWatch (9/18, Passy, 1.67M), the data was released as the Federal Open Market Committee opted to "cut short-term interest rates."

Bloomberg (9/18, Pickert, 4.73M) reports US home construction "surged in August to the fastest pace since mid-2007 on more apartment projects and single-family houses, a welcome sign for the housing sector that has struggled to gain momentum." Residential starts "climbed 12.3% to a 1.36 million annualized rate after an upwardly revised 1.22 million pace in the prior month, according to government figures released Wednesday that topped all estimates in Bloomberg's survey." The median forecast was for 1.25 million starts on an annual basis. Single-family housing starts "increased in the West, Midwest and the populous South, but fell in the Northeast." Starts for single-family houses "rose 4.4% to a 919,000 annualized pace, the strongest since January." Multifamily housing starts were up "32.8% to a three-month high." Meanwhile, residential permits "increased 4.5% to 866,000, the most since July 2018," reaching a "12-year high." Continuing Coverage: Homebuilding Confidence Reportedly On The Rise. Reuters (9/18, Mutikani) reports, "A survey on Tuesday showed confidence among homebuilders rose in September, with builders reporting solid demand for homes. But builders said scarce building lots and labor remained a challenge and also noted that trade tensions, which have undercut manufacturing, were 'holding back home construction in some parts of the nation.'" According to data from Freddie Mac, as of last week, the average rate for a 30-year FRM was 3.56%. Reuters reports, "Firmer demand for housing was underscored by a separate report on Wednesday from the Mortgage Bankers Association showing applications for loans to purchase a home increased for a third straight week last week."

Analysis: Mortgage Investors Need Not Worry About A Housing Supply Surge.

Potentially behind a paywall, Christopher Maloney writes for Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M) that mortgage investors are “unlikely to see a net supply surge even should interest rates continue to move lower, if only because the pace of new home construction is far slower than it used to be.” Since almost every home purchase transaction “feeds supply into the agency MBS market,” a “tepid pace of single-family homes being built will translate into less supply, benefiting mortgage investors.”

Opinion: Blockchain Mortgages Can Mitigate Imminent Economic Downturn.

In a Forbes (9/18, Dimitrov, 9.71M) piece, arguing the blockchain mortgages “could help the impending recession,” enterprise blockchain architect Biser Dimitrov writes that the state of the stock market and US economy, the downtrend of European banks, US-Chinese trade tensions, and the Administration’s GSE reform plan “add up negatively as the impending recession is getting closer.” According to him, “The digital transformation caused by blockchain and DLT will have its impact on the mortgage industry, but it might take some time. We already see steps in that direction as startups are currently issuing $85 million in loan originations per month, but it will take years until the important participants like banks are fully onboard. One thing we know for sure, the sophistication that blockchain technology and smart contracts bring will lead to huge operational cost savings and the opening of new untapped markets.”

Opinion: “Self-Service Mortgage Products” Can Enhance Borrowers’ Experience And Boost Lenders’ Profits.

In a National Mortgage News (9/18) opinion piece, Finastra regional managing director of sales Dan Putney argues that lenders should “create an automated mortgage lending operation” to “build profits.” Last year, mortgage profitability “hit an all-time low,” with lenders “reporting an average net loss of $200 for each loan they originated in the fourth quarter.” According to Putney, “Many financial institutions could have avoided those losses and come out ahead if they’d been willing to make changes before it was too late. ... Financial institutions can reduce expenses around regulatory requirements, MLO compensation, and fixed costs in a number of ways, but there is one clear path to increasing volume: self-service mortgage products that give borrowers the control, speed, and convenience they desire.”

Markets

Treasury Yields Lower Following Fed Rate Cut.

CNBC (9/19, Amaro, 3.62M) reports US government debt prices “were higher Thursday morning, after the Fed failed to signal further rate cuts this year, disappointing market expectations.” At around 02:10 a.m. ET, the yield on the benchmark 10-year Treasury note was “lower at around 1.7787%, while the yield on the 30-year Treasury bond was also lower at around 2.2234%.”

Stocks Finish Mixed.

Reuters (9/18, Culp) reports the S&P 500 and the Dow “reversed losses to close higher on Wednesday and US Treasury yields slipped after remarks by...Powell tempered the market’s initial reaction to the US central bank’s policy statement.” The Dow “rose 36.28 points, or 0.13%, to 27,147.08, the S&P 500 gained 1.03 points, or 0.03%, to 3,006.73, and the Nasdaq Composite dropped 8.62 points, or 0.11%, to 8,177.39.”

Dollar Rises.

Reuters (9/18, Chavez-Dreyfuss) reports the dollar hit “a seven-week high against the yen and a three-month peak versus the Swiss franc on Wednesday after the Federal Reserve cut interest rates by a quarter of a percentage point, as expected, but gave an uncertain outlook on future easing and sounded less bleak about the U.S. economy.” In late afternoon trading, the dollar “rose 0.3% to 108.42 yen JPY=, hitting a seven-week high of 108.43.” The dollar index “was up 0.3% at 98.56, advancing against the Swiss franc to 0.9981 franc CHF=.”

Gold Prices Little Changed On Thursday.

Reuters (9/19, Namboothiri) reports gold prices “were little changed on Thursday after a sharp fall in the previous session as a lack of clarity in the U.S. Federal Reserve’s monetary policy outlook kept investors cautious.” Spot gold “inched 0.1% higher to $1,495.36 per ounce as of 0636 GMT, after falling as much as 1% on Wednesday. However, U.S. gold futures were down 0.8% at $1,503.”

Oil Prices Edge Up.

Reuters (9/19, Tan) reports oil prices “edged higher in Asian trade on Thursday after days of turbulence, with markets soothed by Saudi Arabia’s pledge to restore full production by end-September at facilities knocked out in drone and missile attacks last weekend.” Brent crude futures “rose 24 cents to $63.84 a barrel by 0634 GMT, while U.S. West Texas Intermediate (WTI) crude CLc1 was up 21 cents to $58.32 a barrel.”

Senate Fails To Advance Spending Package In Test Vote.

The Washington Times (9/18, Sherfinski, 492K) reports the Senate on Wednesday “failed to move forward on a package of House-passed spending bills, as lawmakers appeared to dig in for a forthcoming battle over President Trump's desired U.S.-Mexico border wall ahead of an end-of-month funding deadline." On a "mostly party-line vote, the Senate voted 51-44 to move forward on the legislation – short of the 60 votes needed to clear a filibuster." The Times says that "the procedural vote had been expected to fail. Had it succeeded, it would have allowed Senate Republicans to substitute their own version of the legislation and push the process closer to final negotiations with their counterparts in the Democrat-led House."

Senators Introduce Legislation To Curb Foreign Interference In US Elections.

The Hill (9/18, Miller, 2.98M) reports, "Sens. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) and Jack Reed (D-R.I.) introduced legislation on Wednesday meant to combat foreign influence in U.S. elections through the establishment of a response center that coordinates intelligence sharing." The Combating Foreign Influence Act "would require the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI) to establish a Malign Foreign Influence Response Center," which would "be the primary group responsible for compiling and analyzing intelligence on foreign influence operations and campaigns directed against U.S. elections." The center "would also help coordinate intelligence sharing between agencies including the FBI, and the departments of Homeland Security, Defense and State," and it "would be required to submit an annual report to Congress detailing how its work is addressing privacy and civil liberties issues."

DNC Chair Warns Of Potential Interference In 2020 Election.

The Washington Post (9/18, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports, "A top Democratic official is warning in newly blunt terms that the party cannot partner effectively with the Trump administration to fend off foreign cyberattacks because of the president's professed doubts about Russian interference in the 2016 election. 'The president's words and actions have made it difficult to develop a truly effective trust-based relationship with the Department of Homeland Security,' Tom Perez, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, wrote in a letter Tuesday to Sen. Ron Wyden (D-Ore.), in response to a request for information about how the major national party committees were guarding against information warfare. 'While we have contact with those in the administration, this president's continued refusal to recognize the threat of foreign interference in our elections creates a barrier to true cooperation,' Perez said," and "though he acknowledged the agency's 'dedicated career people,' the DNC chairman concluded, 'this fundamental problem comes from the top.'"

CISA Head Urges Cybersecurity Community To "Stop Selling Fear."

NextGov (9/18, Corrigan) reports, "Cybersecurity pros in government and industry need to get a broader community of people engaged in fighting digital threats, but 'selling fear' shouldn't be their primary strategy, according to the Homeland Security Department's cyber chief." NextGov adds, "As director of the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, Chris Krebs has made it a priority to get more outside groups involved in his agency's cyber efforts," and "he attributes the successful defense of the 2018 midterm elections to those partnerships, and in the run-up to the 2020 race and beyond, Krebs wants the broader cybersecurity community to follow CISA's lead." NextGov adds, "During a speech at the agency's second annual Cybersecurity Summit, Krebs called on industry and government experts to do more to help society grapple with the growing array of digital threats targeting governments, private companies and everyday citizens."

Huawei Suspended From Membership In Global Forum Aimed At Combating Cyber Breaches.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Isaac, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Huawei Technologies Co. has been suspended from membership in an international group of companies, governments, and individuals established to deal with computer security breaches and to share information about network vulnerabilities. The Forum of Incident Response and Security Teams (FIRST) was created in the 1990s to encourage global cooperation in an effort to address and prevent hacking incidents.

Forbes (9/18, Doffman, 9.71M) reports that Huawei, "under heavy fire from the U.S. government over alleged information security issues, has been (temporarily) suspended from the quietly competent global trade body responsible for promoting cross-industry information security," and "as a result, Huawei will be (officially) excluded from shared information on new threats to security platforms and technologies, theoretically slowing down its ability to address or patch those issues for its own products."

Financial Reform

US Bankers See Opportunity To Pressure Fed On Liquidity Rules.

Reuters (9/18, Johnson, Henry) reports big US banks "are using the recent chaos in short-term funding markets as an opportunity to pressure the Federal Reserve to ease liquidity requirements they have long despised." Speaking at an event hosted by Business Roundtable on Wednesday, JPMorgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon "criticized Fed-imposed standards of how much idle cash banks must keep on hand, blaming a liquidity rule that is hated on Wall Street for causing market jolts in recent days." He said, "Banks have a tremendous amount of liquidity, but they also have a lot of restraints on how they could use that liquidity and how much they have to maintain at the Fed."

TFI/Sanctions

UK Bank Pays $4M Over Allegations Of US Sanctions Violations.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Sun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the US Treasury Department said British Arab Commercial Bank PLC agreed to pay $4 million to settle allegations that it violated US sanctions against Sudan. Treasury alleged that the London-based commercial bank processed payments of hundreds of millions of dollars related to Sudanese clients. It also had a funding arrangement for years that attempted to get around US sanctions regulations, according to the settlement agreement between Treasury's OFAC and the company.

Federal Reserve

Despite Rate Cut, Trump Slams Fed Again.

The AP (9/18, Crutsinger) reports that "a sharply divided" Federal Reserve on Wednesday "cut its benchmark interest rate...for a second time this year but declined to signal that further rate cuts are likely this year." The move "was approved 7-3, with two officials preferring to keep rates unchanged and one arguing for a bigger half-point cut." The Fed "did leave the door open to additional rate cuts – if...the economy weakens." CNBC (9/18, Cox, 3.62M) says on its website "that was the most dissents for a Fed decision since December 2014," and the Los Angeles Times (9/18, Lee, 4.64M) that "Fed policymakers have been divided on just how much preventive medicine is warranted when the US economy is still expanding at a healthy clip." Reuters (9/18, Schneider, Saphir) reports Fed Chair Jerome Powell said in his news conference that "the US economic outlook is 'favorable,' with labor markets strong and inflation likely to return to the Fed's 2% inflation goal." However, Powell is quoted as saying, "If the economy does turn down, then a more extensive sequence of rate cuts could be appropriate. ... We are not on a preset course."

Politico (9/18, Guida, 4.29M) reports that "within the minutes of the Fed's move," President Trump tweeted, "Jay Powell and the Federal Reserve Fail Again. No 'guts,' no sense, no vision! A terrible communicator!" Politico says that during his press conference, Powell "dismissed Trump's suggestion last week that the central bank cut rates below zero, a policy deployed for years in Europe and Japan with unclear results. 'I do not think we'd be looking at using negative rates,' he said." The Washington Examiner (9/18, Halaschak, 448K) points out "Trump has vocally broken with the precedent of White House officials not commenting on the Fed's monetary policy," and the New York Times (9/18, Smialek, 18.61M) that Trump "has been pushing for an extensive cut, one that leaves rates at or below zero." ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 9, 0:15, Muir, 6.69M) also reported on Trump "tweeting his disapproval...after making it clear he wants interest rates down to zero," and NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 4, 0:18, Holt, 5.99M) said he "wanted a bigger cut."

The AP (9/18) reports that Fed forecasts "show uncertainty about the course of rates after Wednesday's rate cut." According to the AP, "The uncertainty stems from...Trump's pursuit of tariffs against China and a broader global slowdown that has irked businesses and manufacturers though consumer spending has been relatively solid." To The Hill (9/18, Pitofsky, 2.98M), meanwhile, "the cut marked an effort by the Federal Reserve to stave off a recession even while the US economy remains strong." USA Today (9/18, Davidson, 10.31M) indicates, however, that "policymakers are split, with seven saying rates should fall further by year-end, five saying they should be unchanged and five who appear to oppose both recent cuts and prefer slightly higher rates by December."

The New York Times (9/18, Smialek, 18.61M) reports "for now, a growing number of Fed officials expect just one more cut this year, based on economic projections released following the meeting, in line with investor and economist expectations."

CNBC (9/18, Li, 3.62M) reports the Fed "dialed up its growth expectations slightly while keeping its inflation projection unchanged, according to its Summary of Economic Projections." The central bank now expects GDP to "grow at a 2.2% pace for 2019, versus the 2.1% forecast in June."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes what it sees as confusing signals from the Fed, driven by factions in its ranks and continuous criticism from the President. The Journal doesn't see the need for rate cuts, given that the economy appears to remain quite strong, and hails the fact that the Fed has at least not taken drastic steps and can adapt to further economic developments.

Reuters (9/18, Brice), The Hill (9/18, Lane, 2.98M), The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Blinder, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Lahart, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), The New York Times (9/18, Russell, Smialek, 18.61M), BBC News Online (UK) (9/18, 1.02M), The Financial Times (9/19, Greeley, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M), The New York Post (9/18, Crudele, 4.57M), CNBC (9/18, Franck, 3.62M), CNBC (9/18, Breuninger, 3.62M), NBC News (9/18, 6.14M), Bloomberg (9/18, Torres, Miller, 4.73M), Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M), Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M), Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M), Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M), Bloomberg Opinion (9/18), Bloomberg Opinion (9/18), Bloomberg Opinion (9/18), Reuters (9/18, Schneider), Reuters (9/18), Axios (9/18, Brown, 521K), Bloomberg (9/18, Torres, Miller, 4.73M), the Wall Street Journal (9/18, A1, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), and Breitbart (9/18, Carney, 673K), among other news outlets, also report on the topic.

NYTimes Analysis: Turbulence In Repo Market Prods Fed To Intervene. The New York Times (9/18, Phillips, 18.61M) reports in an analysis that "signs of stress have emerged" in the market for repurchase agreements, spurring the Federal Reserve to inject "new money into markets for a second straight day." The Fed also "said that it would cut what it pays banks to keep excess reserves parked with it." According to the article, "there is little reason to worry that an economic catastrophe is in the offing." However, "the movement highlighted the importance of a market that usually operates in the background."

Reuters (9/18, Leong) reports the Fed "injected another $75 billion into the U.S. banking system on Wednesday, restoring a measure of order after a bout of extreme volatility inside the bank funding market drove the central bank's benchmark interest rate above its targeted range for the first time since the financial crisis."

Reuters (9/18, Leong, Saphir) reports separately that the central bank "made only minor changes to help it better manage its benchmark interest rate after" it "briefly lost control of it earlier in the week." However, it "signaled that before long the Fed may take the bigger step of slowly bulking up its balance sheet to try to keep the problem from cropping up again."

Reuters (9/18, Marte, Saphir, Davies) also says the "wild swings this week" in money markets "have raised fresh concerns about whether the New York Federal Reserve under John Williams has lost its deft touch with markets."

Reuters (9/18) further reports that JPMorgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon said Wednesday the Fed did the "right thing" in injecting funds to support overnight funding needs for banks. "It's not a big deal given that it happened in good times. If we don't fix the underlying problem, it will hurt the economy in bad times," he said.

The Financial Times (9/18, Samson, Rennison, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports the New York Fed will inject a further $75 billion into the US financial system on Thursday morning, in its third attempt to steady the repo market.

Also covering the topic are CNBC (9/18, Domm, 3.62M), Reuters (9/18, Schneider, Saphir), and Reuters (9/18).

Financial Regulatory Agencies

CFPB To Continue Publishing Complaints Database.

The New York Times (9/18, Cowley, 18.61M) reports the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau will "continue to publish its database of consumer complaints about financial companies, ending – for now – a battle over public access to one of the agency's most powerful tools." According to the Times, CFPB Director Kathleen Kraninger pointed to an "outpouring of comments" from "more than 26,000 people, companies and advocacy groups" for the decision. She "said that the database would remain public and that the bureau would add new features to help consumers contact companies and research answers to common questions."

American Banker (9/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the agency is "also making changes intended to soften industry criticism of the portal." The bureau "also announced changes that appear to be meant to combat the perception that a complaint against a financial firm is proof of guilt. The agency said it will display disclosures 'more prominently' clarifying that the database 'is not a statistical sample of consumers' experiences in the marketplace.'"

CFPB Ramps Under Enforcement Actions.

American Banker (9/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the CFPB has ramped up investigations and enforcement actions in recent months under Director Kathy Kraninger. Until the recent uptick, the CFPB had been signaling that its primary focus would be supervision instead of enforcement actions. Anthony DiResta, Co-Chair of Consumer Protection Defense at Holland & Knight, said, "If you get a subpoena from the CFPB, it's going to be as intense as it was in the early days." DiResta added, "They aren't as aggressive in their agenda, but in their ways of conducting their investigations and supervisory exams, they are equally as intense."

Trade Groups, Regulators Submit Comments On CFPB's Proposed Debt Collection Rule.

The ABA Banking Journal (9/18) reports that in a comment letter to the CFPB, the American Bankers Association provided feedback on the bureau's proposed debt collection rule that would modernize and clarify rules related to third-party debt collection. While the ABA applauds the bureau's efforts to modernize the rule, it "strongly opposed the CFPB's 'unnecessary reliance' on the Dodd-Frank Act's UDAAP authority in issuing the rule." The ABA also asked the CFPB to "allow collectors to contact consumers using contact information they provided, until and unless the consumer requests that the collector not do so."

Similarly, ACA International (9/18) reports ACA submitted comments as well. ACA CEO Mark Neeb said, "Overall, ACA believes that the bureau's efforts will resolve ambiguities in the FDCPA and help create uniform national standards." Neeb added, "Nevertheless, in its comprehensive comments, ACA identifies a significant number of changes that should be made to the proposal," including comments on why arbitrary limitations on communications ultimately harm consumers.

Lastly, American Banker (9/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Linda Lacewell, New York State's Superintendent of Financial Services, objected to the CFPB's proposed rule, saying it doesn't go far enough to protect consumers from excessive and unwanted communications. Lacewell said, "The current proposal would severely harm the financial futures and social well-being of millions of consumers in New York state and nationwide." Lacewell added, "The rule should provide additional protections for consumers complaining about collectors attempting to collect debts not owed."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Challenger Banks Poised To Begin Making Loans.

American Banker (9/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports some of the most popular challenger banks have taken or are poised to begin making loans. Personal loans and credit cards "are lucrative but inherently risky, and these young companies – like MoneyLion, Varo and others – will have to prove to regulators, investors and the public that they have the wherewithal to weather downturns in the credit cycle." Varo is "hoping the structure of its business will help gird it for economic downturns and credit cycle fluctuations. The San Francisco company received conditional approval for a national bank charter from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency a year ago, though it still awaits the OK from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. for government backing of its deposits."

BankThink: Medici Bank CEO Discusses Future Of Fintech. Writing for American Banker (9/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) in its "BankThink" column, Medici Bank CEO Ed Boyle says "that most fintechs, despite their sophisticated methods and sleek processes, must ultimately interact with the banks they sought to disrupt." But while they currently only act as supplements to the traditional banking system, fintechs "likely have a future beyond banks. American banking infrastructure is evolving, if at a glacial pace." For example, "a fintech with a banking license could inaugurate a paradigm shift in the U.S. financial system the same way that Europe's challenger banks Monzo, Revolut and Starling have redefined expectations of how finance and payments work." The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency "recognized and addressed this by offering a special-purpose banking charter for fintechs that has been fraught with controversy and litigation by state regulators."

SEC Joins Other Regulators In Approving Volcker Rule Changes.

Law360 (9/18, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the SEC on Wednesday "announced it had followed other federal agencies with responsibility for the financial sector in approving a final set of changes to the Volcker Rule's ban on proprietary trading." SEC Chairman Jay Clayton "said the regulator is following in the footsteps of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which approved the rule changes last month, and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, which said on Monday that it had given the revisions the green light."

Continuing Coverage: FDIC, OCC Approve Proposal To Ease Swap Margin Requirements.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in a financial regulation roundup that the FDIC and the OCC have moved to ease a rule that would free up nearly $40 billion for global banks by reducing the amount of cash large lenders need to have to cover swaps market trade risk.

Continuing Coverage: CFPB Investigating BofA For Possible Unauthorized Accounts Dating Back To 2014.

The Charlotte (NC) Business Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 883K) reports Bank of America "is under investigation to determine whether it opened unauthorized customer accounts, according to information released on Tuesday by" the CFPB. The CFPB "issued a CID, or civil investigative demand, in March requesting documents from BofA in regards to potentially 'unlawful acts or practices in connection with unauthorized consumer bank, credit card, and other accounts.'" The accounts in question go back to at least 2014. BofA "promptly requested to dismiss the CFPB's demand, as the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency had already conducted similar investigations in more than 40 large and mid-size banks in the wake of a widespread, fake accounts scandal uncovered at Wells Fargo & Co. in 2016." In its petition "to dismiss, BofA said it views the OCC's investigation as appropriate given the circumstances, but the more recent CFPB probe is 'unnecessary, redundant and unduly burdensome.'"

New CBA Chair Will Prioritize Student Loan Disclosures.

American Banker (9/18, Alix, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the new chair of the Consumer Bankers Association says the federal government should have to tell student borrowers the total that they will owe after finishing school and what their estimated monthly bills will be. The CBA "has long argued that the government fueled the rising cost of higher education through its own student lending policies and that greater private-sector competition could restore some balance. Requiring plain-language disclosures for federal student loans would be a first step, and the CBA is backing a Senate bill intended to do exactly that, said Nitin Mhatre, whose one-year term as chair began last week." Mhatre said in an interview, "We believe that clarity will help all consumers regardless of where they go, and we believe in some shape or form it will help to indirectly reduce the inflation of college costs." Last year, the OCC "began encouraging banks to offer high-interest, small-dollar loans as an alternative to payday loans. But the three federal banking regulators have yet to issue explicit interagency guidance on the matter, leaving many midsize and regional banks nervous about getting into that business."

Bureau of Engraving and Printing

Research Shows Money Is Covered With Hidden Bacteria.

Fast Company (9/18, 2.46M) reports research shows "currency can harbor and spread some nasty bacteria" although the US dollar and the euro, "and their mixture of fibers like cotton and stabilizers like gelatin, both perform pretty well . . . especially compared to their more plastic-based counterparts." Yahoo! Lifestyle (9/18) similarly says "while circulation can make paper money gross, American currency is relatively resistant to bacterial growth and circulation."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Trump Muddies The Air." The New York Times (9/18, 18.61M) editorializes that President Trump "finds himself arrayed against the plain language of the Clean Air Act, California's historical role as a laboratory for tough new environmental rules and the express wishes of several major automakers and two-thirds of the American people." The Times says the Administration's revocation of California's emissions rule waiver is "one more intended nail in the coffin" of President Obama's "strategy to reduce greenhouse gases and, coming as it does on the eve of a big United Nations conference on global warming, a thumb in the eye to the rest of the world."

Washington Post.

"Netanyahu's Defeat Would Be Good News For Israel – And The United States." A Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M) editorial says Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "suffered a crippling and perhaps politically mortal blow in Tuesday's elections – and for all the right reasons." To the Post, Netanyahu "conducted a vile campaign directed at Israel's Arab minority." If "Israel's other parties stick to their campaign positions, a leader who has polarized his country and damaged Israel's standing in the United States could finally be forced from office – or, at least, prevented from following through on his most extreme promises." Israel's election, the Post argues, "could arrest what has been a dangerous slide toward a self-defeating nationalism."

"The White House Should Compromise With California On Fuel Efficiency Standards." The Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M) editorializes that after California "offered what one senior state official described as an 'olive branch'" to the Trump Administration to compromise on emission rules, the Administration could have "negotiate[d] a deal with the state and carmakers on uniform national efficiency norms." Instead, the Administration will "slap away California's olive branch. ... Hardly anyone would gain from such a pigheaded move."

"Did A 911 Delay Lead To Two People Dying In A D.C. Fire?" In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/18, 14.2M) questions the response to a fire that led to the deaths of two people last month in Washington. The Post urges city officials to release "more information about the events" so the public can "judge for themselves whether officials are right that dispatchers did what they could in a challenging situation." It adds that the District of Columbia Council, "which plans to examine the District's handling of the property, should also do its own review of this matter."

Wall Street Journal.

"Iran's Whip Hand." The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that President Trump's sanctions on Iran for the attack on Saudi oil facilities are unlikely to alter Tehran's future actions, as Trump has indicated he is reluctant to go further.

"Powell Walks The Line." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes what it sees as confusing signals from the Fed, driven by factions in its ranks and continuous criticism from the President. The Journal doesn't see the need for rate cuts, given that the economy appears to remain quite strong, and hails the fact that the Fed has at least not taken drastic steps and can adapt to further economic developments.

"California Can't Go Its Own Way." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) defends the Administration for revoking California's emissions rule waiver, saying that the Clean Air Act allows for waivers only to "meet compelling and extraordinary conditions" like the smog California faced in the 1970s. It was not intended to allow the state to set its own permanent environmental standards, the Journal argues.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Sam Bee: [On 'Fox & Friends' focusing on the New York Times' errors on the Kavanaugh accusations] "Interesting that 'Fox & Friends' believes the victim who doesn't remember, but not the ones who do. Though, to be fair, I can't recall 'Fox & Friends' ever doing anything in good faith or anything good at all except that one time Tucker Carlson fell asleep on air."

Trevor Noah: [On the Secret Service getting jet skis] "Everyone knows that the US Secret Service's job is to keep the President and his family safe. And now they look totally cool doing it. ... Of all the things I thought I would learn about Trump and his family, it definitely wasn't that they are active in water sports. I feel like Trump's version of being active in water is trying to keep his head dry in the shower, you know."

Trevor Noah: "All right, the Secret Service needs to buy jet skis because the Trump family spends a lot of time in the water. Well, that and Melania sometimes tries to sail away. They can't let that happen."

Trevor Noah: "The Middle East. It's like the New York Knicks. It's got major problems and will probably be generations before they're fixed. And over the weekend, tensions flared up once again in the region when Saudi Arabia's oil facilities were attacked by missiles. ... Yeah, that's right, Mike Pompeo...is flying to the Middle East to confront the crisis head on. I actually feel bad for secretaries of state, because you realize they only get sent to [bad] situations. Yeah, it is always them jumping on a 16-hour flight to prevent a war or genocide, or pretend to like Kim Jong-un. Be like, 'Hey, Kim, I love that outfit, who made it? Oh, a slave, very nice.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "For those of you visiting, welcome to Hollywood, where there's an extra layer of smog and spray tan thanks to a bigly visitor from the east. President Trump was in town for an adventure that started in Palo Alto and made a stop here in LA."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Last night, [Trump] appeared at a fundraising dinner where he told supporters we will never be a socialist country, and then he asked them for money."

Jimmy Kimmel: "While he was here, Trump took time to criticize our cities for the homeless crisis we're experiencing and says he plans to do something about it, which is good. I think it would be great if he let all the homeless people stay at the Trump Hotel. I hear they've got a lot of empty rooms."

Jimmy Kimmel: "You know who didn't send an invitation today? The Taliban. Less than two weeks after Trump canceled their Camp David slumber party, they said if Trump wants to talk, their doors are open. Of course their doors are open. They live in caves. Can you imagine that meeting? The only peace he's going to get with them is a five-piece from KFC."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This is the new National Security Adviser, Robert C. O'Brien. Trump officially announced him on Twitter. He wrote, 'I am pleased to announce Robert C. O'Brien, currently serving as the very successful special presidential envoy for hostage affairs at the State Department, as our New National Security Adviser.' ... He is a hostage negotiator, for real. He got to know Trump when he tried to get him to let Melania go, and that didn't work out."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Donald Trump has now gone through more National Security Advisers than wives."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Meanwhile, the First Lady has a renovation project going. She's been fixing up the East Wing, painting, refurbishing, patching up little fist holes in the wall."

Stephen Colbert: "Look, I know, I know that all of us have been so concerned that, with John Bolton gone, there is no National Security Adviser. There was no one steeped in all facets of international political, military, and economic conflict who could make sense of a dangerous world and give our President the essential information he needed to completely ignore it and tweet whatever he wants."

Stephen Colbert: "Well, everyone can breathe easy, stop worrying, because the position has finally been filled. Introducing future former National Security Adviser...Robert C. O'Brien. Now, Trump made the announcement about O'Brien in Los Angeles. ... Of course, the National Security Advisor is a critical member of the Administration and one of the most powerful positions in the world. Something that important should only be revealed via tweet."

Stephen Colbert: "[Trump] hired a hostage negotiator, someone who is known to talk madmen down from the brink. That will come in handy: 'Mr. President, we know you're locked in the Oval Office, and we don't want you to do something you'll regret. Think of your family-- wait, no. Think of something you love. Think of-- think of a bucket of fried chicken, sir! Think of the nuggets.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Tensions have been high in the Middle East ever since the fall of Jericho, but more recently, since an attack on Saudi oil refineries that the Saudis blame on Iran. So far, Trump has declined to order military action in response. ... I'm not saying attacking Iran is right, but I've never heard the commander-in-chief call US military action 'dastardly.' He sounds like the villain in a 1930s two-reeler."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump's in California for the sweet, sweet, sweet, cash for the campaign. ... But Trump, not exactly a gracious guest. You see, California has the strictest auto emissions standards anywhere in the nation. And, because they're so big, that sets the standards for all the automakers – the same way that Texas is so big, they set the standard for who not to mess with."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump made this official announcement revoking the standard, again on Twitter: 'The Trump Administration is revoking California's federal waiver on emissions in order to produce far-less-expensive cars for the consumer, while at the same time, making the cars substantially safer.' Yes, the cars will be a lot safer, as long as there's no DWI: Driving while inhaling."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump continued: 'This will lead to more production because of this pricing and safety-- dot, dot, dot, dot, dot, dot, dot, dot, dot-- advantage, and also due to the fact that older, highly polluting cars will be replaced by new, extremely environmentally friendly cars.' Yes, true. Removing pollution standards makes cars environmentally friendly, the way removing the 'poison' label makes arsenic an energy drink."

Stephen Colbert: "According to a new NBC News/Wall Street Journal/ Jersey Mike's Sub-poll, Elizabeth Warren is closing in on Joe Biden. ... She's down just six points. If she gets any closer, she'll be able to sniff his hair."

Stephen Colbert: "Bernie has fallen into a distant third place. Since July, he's seen an increase of just one percent. Yet another reason for Bernie to hate the one percent."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well guys, leaders from all over the world are descending on New York City for the UN General Assembly. It's that special time of year when you can spot the king of Belgium taking a selfie with Spongebob in Times Square."

Jimmy Fallon: "That's right, leaders from 193 countries will be in New York City for the next two weeks discussing the world's greatest humanitarian crisis: Sean Spicer on 'Dancing With The Stars.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "President Trump announced that he is hitting Iran with new sanctions for their attacks on Saudi Arabia, but fellow Republican Lindsey Graham said Trump's response was, quote, 'a sign of weakness.' Then Trump responded to Graham on Twitter and said, 'No, Lindsey, it was a sign of strength that some people just don't understand.' ... Trump sounds like an angry kid trying to convince his parents that he's going to make it as a professional DJ."

Jimmy Fallon: "It was a busy day for Trump, 'cause he also named Robert O'Brien his new National Security Adviser. Yep. O'Brien spent the day moving into his new office and said he looks forward to moving out of it tomorrow."

Jimmy Fallon: "According to reports, Bernie Sanders' campaign is in complete disarray, and campaign workers say it's unorganized and total chaos. Basically, if the campaign were a person, it would look like Bernie Sanders."

Seth Meyers: "During his congressional testimony yesterday, former Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski said he has, quote, 'no obligation to be honest with the media.' Many are calling the statement shocking, while Fox News is calling it an audition."

James Corden: "President Trump spent last night and much of today here in Los Angeles. He came to California for a series of fundraising events. Because if there is one thing this town needs, it is another delusional narcissist with a fake tan and a bunch of bad ideas."

James Corden: "He was here in part to talk to all of his supporters here in Hollywood, and the trip was scheduled so well he actually got to meet all five of them."

Treasury in the News

Mnuchin Expects Deal Soon To Let Fannie, Freddie Retain Their Earnings.

In an interview on Fox Business (9/9, 1.73M) "Mornings with Maria," Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said, "We think now is the time to recapitalize" Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, "make them stronger, so that taxpayers are not at risk, and eventually raise third party capital, so that we restructure them, and that, in another housing downturn, taxpayers are not at risk." He added, "The first step in the process is we are in the process of negotiating with FHFA on current lines. We expect in the near term we will have an agreement where we will allow both Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to retain their earnings, which will be a significant increase in capital and a step in the right direction to ultimately raising third party capital." Mnuchin also said, "Our first choice is to work with Congress on a bipartisan basis," adding, "I hope that if we are going to get congressional support it will be in the next three to six months. And if we can't do that we will move on administrative front."

Fox Business (9/9, Limitone, 1.73M) reports that when "asked about the federal appeals court ruling in New Orleans that concluded the FHFA structure is unconstitutional and backed the government's rights to take all of the mortgage giants' profits, Mnuchin said, 'we're not going to let this stand in the way of housing reform.'"

The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that in the wake of a court decision overturning a ruling supporting the government sweeping the GSEs' profits to the Treasury Department, Mnuchin demurred on whether the government would cancel a planned September sweep.

American Banker (9/9, Pedersen, Adler, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Mnuchin's comments on a potential legislative timeline could draw attention from members of the Senate Banking Committee at GSE reform hearing scheduled for Tuesday." AFP (9/10, Montet) reports, "In Senate testimony on Tuesday, US Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin is due to lay out a plan for the reform of American housing finance."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) praises the Administration's plans for reforming Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, but says it is unlikely Congress will go along.

Charles Lane, in a column in the Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M), writes that any reform of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac ought to include jettisoning the 30-year, fixed-rate loan, but it is politically untouchable due to government intervention training consumers to expect it. Lane argues it would be better for industry to no longer support it, and that the loan doesn't even promote homeownership. "Even when Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were healthy, much of the government subsidy they provided accrued not to homeowners but the builders, developers, real estate agents, bond investors and Fannie-Freddie stockholders" in "what amounts to massive federal support for suburban sprawl."

Also covering the Administration's plans for the GSEs are Reuters (9/9), Bloomberg (9/9, 4.73M), Vox (9/9, Glesias, 2.27M), MarketWatch (9/9, Passy, 1.67M), American Banker (9/9, Subscription Publication, 31K), and the Financial Times (9/9, Armstrong, Subscription Publication, 1.34M).

Moody's: GSE Plan Is Credit Negative. Reuters (9/9) reports Moody's Investors Services, in a report released on Monday, said that the Administration proposal to bring Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac out of conservatorship "would be credit negative for the companies' creditors."

5th Circuit Rules FHFA Is Unconstitutionally Structured. Behind a paywall, Law360 (9/9, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports that the en banc Fifth Circuit "ruled Friday that the Federal Housing Finance Agency is unconstitutionally structured and that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac investors can proceed with their claim that the agency exceeded its statutory authority with the 'net worth sweep' of the mortgage giants." The en banc decision gives "new life into investor litigation surrounding a 2012 agreement between the FHFA and the U.S. Treasury Department that amended the terms of the government's 2008 bailout of Fannie and Freddie, requiring them to pay quarterly dividends to the Treasury in an amount equivalent to their net worth."

Also reporting are the National Mortgage News (9/9) and the ABA Banking Journal (9/9).

Columnist: FHFA, DOJ Unlikely To Ask Supreme Court To Review 5th Circuit Decision. In her column for Reuters (9/9, Frankel), Alison Frankel writes that a ruling by the en banc 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Friday that the structure of the Federal Housing Finance Agency is unconstitutional "arguably creates a split in the federal circuits over the constitutionality of independent agencies headed by directors who can't be removed without good cause." However, Frankel finds it "unlikely...that either DOJ or FHFA, which has independent litigating authority, will ask the Supreme Court to look at the 5th Circuit's en banc ruling, even putting aside the appellate remand of shareholders' APA claim to the trial court." Frankel says that "it will be interesting to see if Fannie and Freddie shareholders go to the Supreme Court to ask for review of the 5th Circuit's remedy for FHFA's unconstitutional structure."

Mnuchin: US Prepared To Sign Trade Deal With China, But Only If It Is "Good For Us."

In an interview on Fox Business (9/9, 1.73M) "Mornings with Maria," Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said, "The President is, you know, wants to deal with this very important issue of China trade. And we have been working on this for the last two and a half years...to rebalance the trading relationship so it was a fairer relationship. ... And if we can get a good deal, which is our objective, we will enter into a deal with China." Mnuchin also said, "I think the enforcement area we have a conceptual agreement." He added, "They are coming here; I take that as a sign of good faith, that they want to continue to negotiate. And we are prepared to negotiate. If we can get a good deal, a deal that is good for us, we will sign it. If not, the President is perfectly fine with continuing the tariffs, which are raising significant amounts of money for the US Treasury.”

CNBC (9/9, Breuninger, 3.62M) reports Mnuchin “emphasiz[ed] positive progress already made in trade talks.” He also “painted a rosy picture of the American position in the trade war, a regular source of stress and uncertainty for investors and blamed for contributing to a slowdown in the economy.” However, “the trade war has already measurably affected some U.S. industries.” The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Mnuchin cast the resumption of trade talks with China as a sign of good faith.

Also covering this story are Reuters (9/9), the New York Post (9/9, Fredericks, 4.57M), and MarketWatch (9/9, Schroeder, 1.67M).

Mnuchin: Upcoming China Trade Talks Will Cover Currency Manipulation. Politico (9/9, Behsudi, 4.29M) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin told reporters that “China’s currency practices will be a topic of conversation when high-level officials from Beijing arrive in Washington early next month for another round of trade talks.” Mnuchin is quoted as saying, “I expect the governor of the People’s Bank of China to come over for these talks, so part of the conversations we will be having with them is around currency and currency manipulation.”

Mnuchin: Tariffs On Chinese Goods Not Affecting US Economy.

In an interview on Fox Business (9/9, 1.73M) “Mornings with Maria,” Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said, “We have not yet seen any impact on the US economy” from the tariffs on Chinese goods. “There have been certain situations where there have been difficulties for companies, and Ambassador Lighthizer has done a very good job managing the exception process.” When asked about slowing US growth, he replied, “Our growth is significantly higher than the rest of the world.”

The New York Times (9/9, Rappeport, 18.61M) reports Mnuchin’s “assertion...was at odds with a raft of increasingly gloomy economic data and industry surveys,” although the “comments dovetail with those of Mr. Trump, who has continued to insist that the trade war is hurting China more than the United States.” However, “the Treasury secretary’s view seems increasingly divorced from economic data, which is showing pain from a trade war that has lasted more than a year.” Meanwhile, despite their public comments, “some of Mr. Trump’s advisers have begun to caution him about the potential economic impact from a long-running trade war. That includes Mr. Mnuchin, who has privately tried to prevent Mr. Trump from escalating his trade fight with additional tariffs.” Business Insider (9/9, Heeb, 3.67M) reports, “Hundreds of American business representatives testified over the past year tariffs would force them to raise prices or pause investment.”

Mnuchin: Passing USMCA Is “Top Priority.”

In an interview on Fox Business (9/9, 1.73M) “Mornings with Maria,” Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said that passing the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) is “the top of our agenda. Ambassador Lighthizer is working closely with the House. I have spoken to the Speaker about this several times. And we look forward to working with her this month, hopefully to get to the point where they are comfortable, in bringing this to the floor.” The Hill (9/9, Birnbaum, 2.98M) mentions Mnuchin’s comments.

House Democrats Control Fate Of USMCA. CNBC (9/9, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports, “House Democrats will control the fate of” the USMCA. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi “and top Democratic negotiators still have concerns about whether it goes far enough to protect American workers and the environment” and that it “could raise drug prices for U.S. consumers.” After Congress returns to Washington “Democrats expect the pace of their talks with the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative to pick up,” and “Some members – many of them freshmen who helped Democrats flip the House by winning swing districts – have pushed for a vote on the deal before the end of the year. Even so, Pelosi has not yet committed to firm timing on a vote.”

American Tech Industry, Portman Urge Congress To Pass USMCA. The Hill (9/9, Birnbaum, 2.98M) reports that the US tech industry is “pushing Congress to pass President Trump’s revised North American trade pact, arguing the stalled legislation would modernize trade law to accommodate the digital economy.” A “broad coalition of tech trade groups” in a letter Monday argued the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) includes language that would “set a new, global standard for rules that will benefit digital trade and e-commerce.” Signatories of Monday’s letter include “the Internet Association, which represents Facebook, Google and Amazon; the Consumer Technology Association; the Computing Technology Industry Association; and the Information Technology Industry Council.”

Writing in the Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M), Sen. Rob Portman (R-OH) also urges passage of the deal. He argues that “Democrats should be leading the charge for its passage, because they have long criticized NAFTA, and because the USMCA addresses the major concerns they have raised with NAFTA.” This is why, Portman writes, if House Speaker Pelosi “were to bring USMCA to the House floor for a vote, I am confident it would pass. And I know the Senate would quickly follow suit.”

Mnuchin: No US Recession.

In an interview on Fox Business (9/9, 1.73M) “Mornings with Maria,” Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said, “As you look at the US, we continue to be the bright spot of growth.” He added, “The President’s economic plan of tax cuts, regulatory relief, and trade are really what is driving the US economy. I don’t see, in any way, a US recession.”

Voice of America (9/9, Bredemeier, 48K) reports that “several indicators appear to be signaling that the world’s largest economy is slowing,” with job growth slowing in August and the “U.S. economy advanced at a yearly rate of 2% in the April-to-June period, down from the 3.1% expansion in the first three months of the year.”

Mnuchin: We Are Monitoring Government Debt.

In an interview on Fox Business' (9/9, 1.73M) "Mornings with Maria," Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said, "Maria we had a very modest increase in the budgets this year, and next year, in our two-year deal. The majority of that went to the military." He added, "we're looking at debt to GDP and that is something we continue to monitor."

Mnuchin: Administration Considering "Tax Cuts 2.0."

Politico (9/9, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin told reporters yesterday that the Trump Administration will "consider proposing a package of tax cuts in 2020, trumpeting the strength of the U.S. economy despite the ominous financial indicators of recent weeks." Mnuchin is quoted as saying, "Regards to a middle class tax cut, you know, we'll be looking at tax cuts 2.0, something that will be something we'll consider next year." The Hill (9/9, Jagoda, 2.98M) says "Mnuchin's comments are in line with comments that President Trump and others in his administration have also said in recent weeks." NEC Director Kudlow, for example, "said last month that a new tax-cut package could be rolled out before the 2020 election and could include elements such as lower individual tax rates, lower capital gains rates, changes for businesses other than corporations and relief for residents of high-tax states."

The Fiscal Times (9/9, Rainey, 3K) also covers this story.

Mnuchin: US Considering Sanctions On Turkey Over Russian Missile System.

Reuters (9/9) reports Treasury Secretary Mnuchin told reporters "we are looking at" imposing sanctions on Turkey over the country's purchase of the Russian-made S-400 air defense missile system. The US say the system "is not compatible with NATO defenses and poses a threat to Lockheed Martin's F-35 'stealth' fighter jet." Washington previously warned Turkey that the purchase would result in sanctions and removal from the F-35 program. Bloomberg (9/9, 4.73M) also covers this story.

Mnuchin: US Considering Options In Row With France Over Internet Company Tax.

Reuters (9/9) reports Treasury Secretary Mnuchin told reporters at the White House that, in Reuters' words, the government "is meeting with technology and other companies as it considers its options following a row with Paris over France's tax on big internet firms."

Iran: Tanker Unloaded Oil.

The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Faucon, Osseiran, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Iran's foreign ministry spokesman, Abbas Mousavi, said that the Adrian Darya 1 oil tanker, which was released from Gibraltar in spite of US objections that it was carrying oil to Syria, unloaded its cargo, according to the state news agency IRNA. On Sunday, Treasury Under Secretary Sigal Mandelker told reporters the ship's arrival in Syria illustrated "yet another game of deception" by Iran.

Trump Awards Medal Of Valor To Shooting Responders.

The Hill (9/9, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports President Trump awarded the Medal of Valor to six police officers who responded to the mass shooting in Dayton, Ohio last month and gave five civilians a Certificate of Commendation for "heroic actions in trying to stem the violence during a mass shooting a day earlier at a Walmart in El Paso." The Hill mentions that some members of Trump's cabinet attended the ceremony, including Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin.

Leading National News

Trump: "Great News" That Activist Investor Is Challenging AT&T Leadership.

In a two-tweet thread just after 9:00 a.m. Monday, President Trump wrote, "Great news that an activist investor is now involved with AT&T. As the owner of VERY LOW RATINGS @CNN, perhaps they will now put a stop to all of the Fake News emanating from its non-credible 'anchors.' Also, I hear that, because of its bad ratings, it is losing a fortune. But most importantly, @CNN is bad for the USA. Their International Division spews bad information & Fake News all over the globe. This is why foreign leaders are always asking me, 'Why does the Media hate the U.S. sooo much?' It is a fraudulent shame, & all comes from the top!" USA Today (9/9, Morin, 10.31M), covering the President's tweets, reports, "Elliott Management, a top activist shareholder firm, announced Monday that it has a $3.2 billion stake in AT&T. WarnerMedia, which owns CNN, is under AT&T."

The New York Times (9/9, De La Merced, Lee, 18.61M) reports under the headline "A Hedge Fund Becomes A Very Noisy Stakeholder In AT&T" that Elliott Management, "one of Wall Street's biggest hedge funds," expressed doubts "about AT&T's decision to go Hollywood, saying in a sharply worded letter to the AT&T board that the company had 'transformed itself into a sprawling collection of businesses battling well-funded competitors.'" While its holdings "represent just over 1 percent of AT&T's $271 billion market capitalization, Elliott Management...made a splashy entry into the ranks of company stakeholders with its 24-page letter, telling AT&T that it needed to change to bolster its share price."

Reuters (9/9, Herbst-Bayliss, Mukherjee) reports the letter offered a "four-part proposal" that "ranges from divesting certain businesses, eliminating $5 billion in costs, reviewing how it allocates capital and urging CEO Randall Stephenson...to stop making acquisitions." The Wall Street Journal (9/9, FitzGerald, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) discusses the letter without mentioning Trump's tweets.

Citi, Wells Fargo Lower NII Forecasts, Citing Potential Rate Cuts.

Reuters (9/9, Moise) reports Citigroup and Wells Fargo on Monday "struck a cautious tone" as "they updated investors on how lower interest rates and an inverted yield curve would affect the year's profits." At an industry conference, top executives from both banks "tempered their outlooks for net interest income," citing macroeconomic concerns. Although Citi "has been less asset sensitive than its peers," CFO Mark Mason "said on Monday that the shrinking difference between long- and short-term borrowing rates and the potential for accelerated rate cuts has made the bank slightly more conservative in its outlook." Citi now expects its "net interest income to be up between 3% and 4% for the year, compared with prior guidance of 4% growth." Meanwhile, American Banker (9/9, Wack, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Wells Fargo expects net interest income "to decline by 6% compared with 2018." This is the second time the bank lowered projections this year, previously forecasting a decline "of close to 5% this year."

Reuters (9/9) and Bloomberg (9/9, Surane, Nguyen, 4.73M) also report.

BofA Sees Revenue Growth From Investment Bank Turnaround.

Reuters (9/9, Moise) reports Bank of America "said on Monday its deal-making unit is gaining momentum with mid-sized companies as it focuses on the sector to regain market share." The bank's revenue from the middle market "grew by 17% in the first seven months of the year," and for the third quarter, the bank "estimated overall investment banking revenue to be up in the low single digits."

JPMorgan Index Quantifies Interest Rate Impact Of Trump Tweets.

Reuters (9/9, Ahmed) reports JPMorgan analysts have "quantified the impact of [President Trump's] tweets, at least on the U.S. interest rates market," in a detailed report. The analysts "use machine learning techniques and their own volatility model to show how the president's 280-character missives served to raise investors' expectations for future moves in the U.S. rates market." The Volfe Index – "a nod to 'covfefe,' the mysterious word coined by Trump in an unfinished 2017 tweet – analyzes a rolling sample of recent tweets to judge how much effect the president's remarks have had on volatility."

Bloomberg Analysis: Manufacturing Sector May Already Be In Recession.

Shawn Donnan of Bloomberg (9/9, 4.73M) writes that "for all the debate on whether the U.S. is headed for a recession there's plenty of evidence that corners of the economy...may already have tumbled into one. After two boom years the picture has changed for America's factories." Facing "rising uncertainty and the damper it has put on capital expenditures, slowing export markets, a stronger dollar, and higher input costs due to tariffs," manufacturers are producing less than they did a year ago. The "surge in industrial jobs seen in the first two years of the Trump presidency has also gone into reverse in some parts of the country."

US, Japan Still Working Out Details Of Trade Deal.

Reuters (9/9, Kihara, Kaneko) reports Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe "may have averted giving away too much" in trade talks with President Trump, "but Tokyo is struggling ahead of a late-month deadline to achieve its primary goal: get the unpredictable president to drop threats of punitive auto tariffs." Reuters says that "even after announcing a preliminary deal with Abe on Aug. 25, Trump left open the possibility of slapping higher duties on Japanese vehicles." Trump and Abe are seeking "a final agreement in time for their expected meeting on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly later this month," but negotiators "have only just begun working out details, such as how much tariffs will be cut for which items."

White House, USDA, OMB Officials Questioned Farmers' "Bailout."

In an article titled "As Billions Flow To Farmers, Trump Administration Faces Internal Concerns Over Unprecedented Bailout," the Washington Post (9/9, Stein, 14.2M) reports that "senior government officials, including some in the White House, privately expressed concern that the Trump administration's nearly $30 billion bailout for farmers needed stronger legal backing." Two Department of Agriculture officials "involved in the bailout program" tell the Post that they were "worried the funding could surpass the original intent of the New Deal-era Commodity Credit Corporation, which is being used to distribute the money." According to the Post, "Separately, some officials in the Office of Management and Budget also raised questions about the scope of $16 billion in a second round of bailout funds," and "pushed" the USDA "to provide more legal reasoning for the effort."

Reuters Analysis: Democrats Have Failed To Unite Around Trade Message.

Reuters (9/9, Oliphant) says "the growing economic fallout from President Donald Trump's drawn-out trade war with China would appear to be a ready-made opportunity for Democratic presidential contenders seeking to blunt his central 2020 re-election pitch," but, "so far, it has not quite worked out that way." According to Reuters, "While most of the 20 Democratic presidential hopefuls vying to take on Trump in the November 2020 election have condemned his tit-for-tat exchange of tariffs with China for hurting farmers, consumers and businesses, they have not been of one voice on how they would handle things differently." Reuters adds, "That has led to a scrambled and sometimes incoherent message from Trump's rivals even as global markets gyrate, U.S. consumer prices of Chinese imports rise and farmers lose their biggest export market as a result."

For First Time, Most New Hires Of “Prime Working Age” Are Non-Whites.

The Washington Post (9/9, Long, Van Dam, 14.2M) reports, “For the first time, most new hires of prime working age (25 to 54) are people of color, according to a Washington Post analysis of data the Labor Department began collecting in the 1970s. ... Women are predominantly driving this trend, which is so powerful that even many women who weren't thinking about working...are being lured into employment.” The data show there are “5.2 million more people in the United States with jobs than at the end of 2016, and 4.5 million of them are minorities.”

Cities Objecting To Spread Of Cashless Retail.

USA Today (9/9, Jones, 10.31M) reports that more and more cities are raising objections to the growth of cashless retail. “From Philadelphia to San Francisco, several cities and states have passed or are considering bills that prohibit retailers from refusing to accept cash, a policy they say shuts out the millions of Americans who don't have a bank account, lack credit cards or don't have photo identification,” the article says. Retailers are adopting cashless systems “to speed up transactions, reduce the risk of theft and accommodate the increased use of credit and debit cards, as well as digital wallets like Apple Pay and Google Pay.”

Stocks Largely Unchanged Monday.

Reuters (9/9, Valetkevitch) reports US stocks “ended flat on Monday as increased expectations of stimulus from central banks around the world were offset by losses in technology and healthcare shares.” The Dow Jones Industrial Average closed up 38.05 points at 26,835.51, the S&P 500 was down 0.28 to 2,978.43, and the Nasdaq was down 15.64 points to 8,087.44. The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Otani, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that though markets have risen so far in September, investors are wary of signs of slowing growth and ongoing volatility.

States, Territories Announce Antitrust Probe Of Google.

The AP (9/9, Lerman, Gordon) reports “fifty US states and territories, led by Texas, announced an investigation into Google's 'potential monopolistic behavior.’” The “announcement closely followed one from a separate group of states Friday that disclosed an investigation into Facebook's market dominance,” with the two probes widening “the antitrust scrutiny of big tech companies beyond sweeping federal and congressional investigations and enforcement action by European regulators.” The Hill (9/9, Neidig, 2.98M) notes “the coalition includes 48 states, plus the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico. California and Alabama are the only two states not to join the investigation.”

The CBS Evening News (9/9, story 10, 0:17, O'Donnell, 4.22M) briefly reported the story last night as a “new development in the backlash against Big Tech.” The Washington Post (9/9, Romm, 14.2M) recounts that “appearing on the steps of the Supreme Court, Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton charged that Google ‘dominates all aspects of advertising on the Internet and searching on the Internet,’ though he cautioned that despite his criticism the states had launched an investigation for now and not a lawsuit.” Google “declined to comment, pointing to its previous statements saying it will work with state officials.”

The Washington Times (9/9, Swoyer, 492K) says “the bipartisan group will look into the tech giant's advertising markets and search capabilities, probing whether business practices led to anticompetitive behavior and harmed consumers.” The New York Times (9/9, Lohr, 18.61M) indicates “the state inquiries coincide with bipartisan scrutiny of the tech companies in Washington, by House and Senate committees, the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission.” The Times adds “federal officials are examining the practices of Amazon and Apple as well as those of Facebook and Google.” Axios (9/9, Rosenberg, Knutson, 521K), Bloomberg (9/9, Brody, McLaughlin, 4.73M) and Washington Examiner (9/9, Dunleavy, 448K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Pharmacy Chain Fred's Files For Bankruptcy, Will Close All Stores.

USA Today (9/9, Bomey, 10.31M) reports, “Discount merchandise retailer and pharmacy chain Fred's filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy Monday with plans to close all of its stores.” The company “had 568 stores in 15 states in the southeastern U.S. as of Feb. 2, including 169 with full-service pharmacies, according to a court filing.”

Moody's Downgrades Ford Credit Rating To Junk Status.

The Detroit Free Press (9/9, Howard, 1.52M) reports, “Ford Motor saw its credit rating downgraded to 'junk' status by Moody's Investors Service late Monday. The impact of the action, which occurred after the stock market closed, could increase the cost of borrowing money because the automaker is considered a higher credit risk.” The Detroit News (9/9, Thibodeau, 825K) reports, “Monday's downgrade to Ba1 – the highest non-investment grade rating – comes as Ford and Hackett have said repeatedly over the last year that 2019 would deliver the results promised, including improved profit margins around the world.”

Nissan CEO Resigns Following Improper Compensation Revelation.

The Wall Street Journal (9/9, McLain, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Nissan CEO Hiroto Saikawa is resigning, with COO Yasuhiro Yamauchi set to become acting CEO next week. Nissan's board sought to remove Saikawa after an internal investigation found that he received improper stock-based performance compensation of about $439,000 in 2013. The New York Times (9/9, Dooley, 18.61M) reports his exit “follows months of speculation about his ability to manage the Japanese carmaker since it was rocked by the arrest last year of its former chairman Carlos Ghosn.”

WSJournal Analysis: Chinese Tech Giants Struggle To Replicate Success Overseas.

The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Dvorak, Woo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Alibaba has long dominated the online shopping market in China, but like many other Chinese tech giants it has found it hard to translate domestic success overseas.

WSJournal Likens We Co. Corporate Governance To That Of A Chinese Company.

A Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial likens the corporate governance of We Co. to a Chinese company and says the fact that the American press and investors were able to discover problems with the company is evidence that the markets can do a better job than a regulator would.

Krupp: Automakers Want Strict Emissions Standards.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Fred Krupp, president of the Environmental Defense Fund, argues that the Administration's dispute with car makers over clean-air standards is not necessary because the car makers want strict emissions standards and accept the standards Ford, Honda, BMW, and Volkswagen negotiated with California.

Media Analyses: Trump Campaigns In NC9 Special Election That Could Preview His Own 2020 Race.

Coverage of President Trump's rally in Fayetteville, North Carolina in support of NC9 special election Republican nominee Dan Bishop suggests the Tuesday election could be a test of the President's political capital in advance of next year's presidential election, and Trump's strength in a state he won by less than four points in 2016 and that is expected to be competitive in 2020. Reports say the President railed against Democrats, the media, and Democratic nominee Dan McCready, but mostly stayed away from personal attacks. Vice President Pence campaigned with Bishop earlier Monday, but did not appear at the evening rally. Polls over the last two weeks give McCready a narrow lead, but Bishop has a small advantage in prediction markets.

The AP (9/9, 168K) says Trump, "trying to prove his political clout by pushing a Republican to victory in a special election," used the rally "to paint a bleak picture of a nation that he claimed would be overrun with crime, poverty and immigrants if Democrats seize power in Washington. ... While the stakes for the House are high, Trump's trademark rallies inevitably become more about him than the local candidate, as he uses the stage to settle political scores, sharpen attacks and take on perceived foes." The President "touted his administration's accomplishments but also urged voters to give him more time."

WTVD-TV Raleigh-Durham, NC (9/9, 11:01 p.m. EDT, 3.43M) reported that Trump "came to campaign for Dan Bishop ahead of tomorrow's special election but Trump was also here to reengage the sea of red MAGA hats for his own reelection 14 months from now."

WRAL-TV Raleigh, NC (9/9, 10:00 p.m. EDT, 1.52M) reported that Trump "spoke for more than an hour and a half." Trump "attacked Dan McCready" and "comend[ed] the Tar Heel state for job growth, low unemployment for minorities, and its ability to rebuild after natural disasters like Hurricane Dorian." WGHP-TV Greensboro, NC (9/9, 10:06 p.m. EDT, 1.52M) reported that Trump "discussed how well the American economy is booming, tax cuts, securing the border, and how [Bishop] supports his views."

The Charlotte Observer (9/9, Morrill, Ma, 470K) reports, "Trump won the district by nearly 12 points in 2016. But polls show the race is a toss-up. ... Some have seen the election as a test of Trump's strength in a state he carried in 2016 and which is expected to be a battleground again in 2020." The AP (9/9, 168K) reports that before leaving Washington for the event, Trump "dismissed questions of whether a poor result" for Bishop "would serve as a warning sign in next year's elections." Trump said, "No, I don't see it as a bellwether."

The Durham Herald-Sun (9/9, Murphy, Specht, Vaughan, 76K) reports Trump "mostly shied away from the personal attacks on Democrats that highlighted" his July rally in Greenville, where he attacked four female House freshmen, "and he largely avoided the latest controversies surrounding Hurricane Dorian's projected path and the transfer of money from military projects, including those in North Carolina, to his long-promised wall along the southern border."

The Fayetteville Observer (9/9, Woolverton, 151K) reports the President "brought to the stage both Bishop and another candidate, Republican state Rep. Greg Murphy. Murphy is running for the eastern North Carolina 3rd District on Tuesday. That seat has been vacant since Walter Jones died in office early this year." Murphy's race is not expected to be close. The President "had been scheduled to tour hurricane damage on the North Carolina coast earlier in the day, but weather caused a change of plans."

USA Today (9/9, Jackson, 10.31M) reports, "The day before a test of his political strength in a key state," Trump told supporters "that he needs Republican victories over the next 14 months because Democrats are out to reverse his accomplishments. ... Previewing his own re-election bid in November of 2020, Trump spent nearly 90 minutes defending his record and savagely attacking Democrats."

The New York Times (9/9, Karni, Crowley, 18.61M) reports, "Trump's push for Mr. Bishop is part of a wider administration effort on his behalf that also included a visit on Monday to the other end of the district" by Pence. The Times says the special election "could give early clues about the president's political strength going into the 2020 campaign." The Washington Post (9/9, Dawsey, Sonmez, Hughes, 14.2M) reports Trump "said Bishop would support his agenda on issues including illegal immigration and Second Amendment rights" and "drew cheers from the crowd when he joked that he would remain in office through 2026 so that he could be president when the United States co-hosts the World Cup that year."

The Washington Times (9/9, A1, Howell, 492K) reports Trump "said the U.S. still has the best economy in the world, despite murmurs of a possible recession and fears that tariffs on Chinese goods will hurt American consumers. 'They tried the Russia thing, that didn't work. They tried many other things,' Mr. Trump said in a riff against Democrats and the media." Breitbart (9/9, Spiering, 673K) reports Trump said he "was primarily running against the media in 2020, as they were teaming up with Democrats to defeat him." The President said, "I wouldn't mind fighting the Democrats, but we really have to look at it as a twosome – the media and the Democrats, it's one and the same."

The Hill (9/9, Greenwood, 2.98M) says Trump "made an aggressive, eleventh-hour pitch" for Bishop. Fox News (9/9, Re, 27.59M) reports on its website that "high stakes were matched by some of President Trump's harshest campaign rhetoric yet...with just hours to go until voters there head to the polls in a pivotal toss-up special election that will decide the winner of a long-contested – and long-vacant – House seat." Trump said, "Support for sanctuary cities is disloyalty to American cities – and McCreehy wants sanctuary cities, with all of their protections for people who are serious criminals. Tomorrow is your chance to send a clear message to the America-hating left."

The Washington Examiner (9/9, Brown, 448K) reports Trump "claimed during his Monday night rally...that the Democratic Party does not put much stock in religion and that their attempts to appeal to religious voters are ineffective." The President said, "The other side, I don't think they're big believers. They're not big believers in religion, that I can tell you. You listen to some of them. They're trying. They're trying to put out little statements. They're not working too well." Trump "did not specify to which statements he was referencing."

The Charlotte Observer (9/9, Wang, 470K) reports Pence campaigned with Bishop earlier in the day, and "visited a phone bank set up inside a hotel on Independence Boulevard in Charlotte. There, he made phone calls to potential voters and asked for them to support Bishop in the special election." He then addressed a Bishop event at Wingate University. Politico (9/9, Shepard, Kumar, 4.29M) says Bishop is "counting on" Trump and Pence "to carry him across the finish line, telling Politico over the weekend that the two would 'put us over the top.'" Reuters (9/9, Rampton, Cornwell) reports, "Bishop's campaign says the most important issues are taxes, the economy and immigration, while McCreehy has focused his race on healthcare, education and the pay of North Carolina teachers."

The President tweeted after the event, "Beautiful evening in Fayetteville tonight! Big day in North Carolina tomorrow. Make sure you get out and VOTE for Dan Bishop in #NC09 and Greg Murphy in #NC03!" He also tweeted video from the rally. Pence posted several tweets from his day of campaigning. Bishop tweeted, "What an incredible night welcoming @realDonaldTrump to Fayetteville! We're not tired of winning & we're going to bring home a big victory tomorrow night thanks to his huge support!"

Federal Judge Reinstates Injunction On Administration's Asylum Rules.

The AP (9/9, Spagat, Superville) reports that US District Judge Jon Tigar yesterday "reinstated a nationwide halt on the Trump administration's plan to prevent most migrants from seeking asylum at the US-Mexico border." Tigar "ruled...that an injunction blocking the administration's policy from taking effect should apply nationwide." Tigar "blocked the policy in July after a lawsuit by groups that help asylum seekers," but the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals "limited the impact of Tigar's injunction to states within the area overseen by the appeals court," which "meant the policy was blocked in the border states of California and Arizona but not in New Mexico and Texas." The Washington Post (9/9, Barnes, 14.2M) points out "Tigar said he interpreted the 9th Circuit's ruling to mean he was free to reimpose the nationwide injunction if there was evidence to warrant it."

Politico (9/9, Hesson, Forgey, 4.29M) says Tigar was appointed by former President Barack Obama, and reports that acting Customs and Border Protection Commissioner Mark Morgan "characterized Monday's order as another example of the 'unprecedented judicial activism' the administration has encountered in attempting to implement its immigration agenda." In an editorial titled "President Tigar Strikes Again," the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) casts Tigar as overstepping his authority and abusing the use of injunctions, and urges the Supreme Court to step in. On the other hand, the Washington Examiner (9/9, Quinn, 448K) reports, "ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt said that in reinstating the nationwide injunction, 'the court recognized there is grave danger facing asylum-seekers along the entire stretch of the southern border.'"

USA Today (9/9, Wu, Subramanian, 10.31M) quotes Tigar as saying in his ruling, "The question now before the court is whether those harms can be addressed by any relief short of a nationwide injunction. The answer is that they cannot." Tigar "noted the need for 'uniform immigration policy' and potential complications if the injunction were limited to only a part of the country, as the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in August." The Los Angeles Times (9/9, Dolan, 4.64M) reports "Trump's new rule makes migrants ineligible for asylum if they passed through another country en route to the U.S. and failed to apply for protection in that country. Most asylum seekers come from Central America." Reuters (9/9, Alper), the Washington Times (9/9, Swoyer, 492K), Daily Caller (9/9, Daley, 716K) and Wall Street Journal (9/9, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

White House: Ruling A "Gift To Human Smugglers And Traffickers." The Washington Examiner (9/9, Quinn, 448K) reports "the White House on Monday denounced a ruling from a federal judge in California reimposing a nationwide injunction against the Trump administration's new asylum rules, calling it a 'gift to human smugglers and traffickers.'" Said White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham, "Immigration and border security policy cannot be run by any single district court judge who decides to issue a nationwide injunction." The ruling, she added, "undermines the rule of law."

CBP Chief Credits Mexico's Help For Border Detentions Dropping 56% Since May.

Reuters (9/9, Alper) reports that Acting CBP Commissioner Mark Morgan yesterday "credited Mexico and Central American countries with helping to reduce border detentions 56% this year." Morgan "announced that 64,000 people were detained or turned back at the southwest border in August," which was "down 22% from July and 56% from a high mark in May." Reuters adds, "Even so, the total was the highest for the month of August in more than a decade." Bloomberg (9/9, Wingrove, 4.73M) also reports that "the decline comes as Mexico steps up efforts to halt migrant flows as part of a June deal with" President Trump.

The Washington Times (9/9, Howell, 492K) quotes Morgan as saying, "Why do we see in 90 days a 56 percent reduction? The President has made it very clear that he's going to use every tool available to him and his Administration to address this crisis at the southern border." Morgan "said Mexico has 'stepped up' as a great partner, even dispatching a national guard division for border security," though "we need Mexico to do more." Reuters (9/9, Alper) notes Morgan also said yesterday, "The Northern Triangle countries, specifically, along with the government of Mexico, have really joined the United States as true partners for the first time."

Politico (9/9, Hesson, 4.29M) recounts that "border arrests soared in the spring to the highest levels in more than a decade, a surge fueled by record numbers of families trekking north from Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador." Trump "responded by threatening to hammer Mexican goods with escalating tariffs," and "the two countries brokered a deal that required Mexico to deploy thousands of troops from its newly formed National Guard to intercept migrants. At the same time, the Trump administration moved to implement its 'remain in Mexico' program across the entire southwest border."

The Washington Examiner (9/9, Giaritelli, 448K) and Townhall (9/9, Pavlich, 177K), among other news outlets, run largely favorable assessments of Morgan's comments. Axios (9/9, Kight, Treene, 521K) reports, however, that "while Mexico's efforts and the Migrant Protection Protocols...have likely had an impact on the flow of migrants into the US, border crossings tend to begin falling around this time of year."

House Oversight Republicans Ask Democrats To Explain Trips To Mexico.

The Daily Caller (9/9, Rodgers, 716K) reports that after reports that a Democrat was "coaching" migrants on how to violate the law and enter the US illegally, Republicans on the House Oversight and Reform Committee "are calling on Democrats give them more information about a number of trips taken to Mexico." Fox News reported that Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) sent a letter to Chairman Elijah Cummings "asking about the trips and the details behind the visits to Mexico and detention facilities at the border." Jordan said the trips were made "to delegitimize the administration's border security efforts and vilify the men and women who protect our border."

Tillis Blasts North Carolina Sanctuary Cities.

The Washington Times (9/9, Miller, 492K) reports that Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) on Monday "blasted sanctuary cities in his home state of North Carolina for turning loose nearly 500 illegal immigrants" despite detention requests from ICE. Tillis said, "These North Carolina counties are releasing illegal immigrants charged with violent crimes like rape and murder without even notifying federal officials, jeopardizing public safety." The Times adds that a report from WBTV-TV in Charlotte detailed "the release of 489 illegal immigrants by law enforcement agencies across North Carolina." The immigrants "were turned loose during the past 10 months as a result of sanctuary city policies that ignore detainer requests from ICE, according to the report."

Survey Finds Rising GOP Concern Over Immigration.

The Washington Post (9/9, Clement, Balz, 14.2M) reports, "After a year of controversy at the U.S.-Mexico border, Republican concern about immigration has risen sharply," according to a June survey by the Chicago Council on Global Affairs poll released Monday. The survey "found that 78 percent of Republicans say large numbers of immigrants and refugees coming into the United States represent a 'critical threat' to the nation's vital interests," up 12 percent since last year. Among Democrats, "just 19 percent say the same, ranking it last among 14 possible concerns."

Malkin: Terminating Flores Agreement Will Reduce Catch-And-Release Scams.

Townhall (9/9, Meads, 177K) reports that in her new book "Open Borders, Inc: Who's Funding America's Destruction?" conservative author Michelle Malkin "explains that a key problem with the United States' immigration system is what she describes as 'The Kiddie Catch, Release, and Cash In Scam.'" in which immigrant smugglers take advantage of the Flores agreement "by charging foreign nationals thousands of dollars to take their children to the U.S. border." The children "would be dumped off, taken in by the government, and given an education, housing, shelter and many more benefits." Malkin told Townhall, "The Trump administration's move to terminate the Flores agreement is long overdue and will substantially reduce the catch-and-release scams exploiting illegal alien children. ... But it's just one step."

Pelosi Plan Would Let HHS Negotiate Most Costly Drug Prices.

The Washington Examiner (9/9, Leonard, 448K) reports, "The government would be allowed to directly negotiate the prices for some of the most expensive prescription drugs" under a proposal from House Speaker Pelosi "that aligns much closer to liberal goals than expected." A six-page draft summary of the proposal indicates it "would lift the current prohibition" preventing the HHS secretary "from negotiating drug prices, meaning that it's likely to be a non-starter from Republicans and face fierce industry opposition." The plan would not allow the government to negotiate the prices of all drugs, but "would allow for the secretary to directly negotiate the top 250 most expensive brand-name drugs, as long as they lack at least two generic alternatives."

Sanders' Medicare For All Ideas Reportedly Forged During 1987 Canada Visit.

The New York Times (9/9, A1, Ember, 18.61M) reports, "In July 1987, Bernie Sanders, then the mayor of Burlington, Vt., arrived in Ottawa convinced he was about to see the future of health care." As he toured "community centers and" had "meetings with health care providers," Sanders "more than liked what he saw." Some 30 years "before 'Medicare for all' would propel his presidential campaigns, Mr. Sanders' expedition to Ottawa helped forge his determination to transform the American health care system. ... Now, as he seeks the Democratic presidential nomination for a second time, he has made 'Medicare for all' the single most important issue of his campaign and in turn set the agenda for the ideological discussion in the Democratic primary."

Kaiser Analysis Finds UVA Health System Sued Former Patients More Than 36,000 Times Over Six Years.

In a 2,900-word front-page report, the Washington Post (9/9, Hancock, Lucas, 14.2M) reports that over six years ending in mid-2018, the University of Virginia Health System and its doctors "sued former patients more than 36,000 times for over $106 million, seizing wages and bank accounts, putting liens on property and homes and forcing families into bankruptcy," according to a Kaiser Health News analysis. While "unpaid medical bills are a leading cause of personal debt and bankruptcy...UVA stands out for the scope of its collection efforts and how persistently it goes after payment, pursuing poor as well as middle-class patients for almost all they're worth." UVA "sued patients for as little as $13.91 and as much as $1 million during most of that period, until July 2017, when it restricted lawsuits to those owing more than $1,000, the analysis shows."

NYTimes: Title X Changes About Controlling Women.

The New York Times (9/9, 18.61M) editorializes, "The Trump administration's recent efforts to undermine the nation's Title X family planning program are already having their intended effect, making it harder for women's health clinics to stay afloat and for patients to afford birth control and other services." The Times says the changes "make clear that these politicians have always been trying to do more than prevent abortions. These are attacks on women's ability to control if and when they get pregnant," and "on their health and well-being."

WPost Urges Attention To "Vaping Crisis."

In an editorial headlined "Everyone Should Be Alarmed By The Vaping Crisis," the Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M) says, "There are still more questions than answers about the electronic devices that vaporize fluids in an alternative to the known hazards of burning tobacco, but both the immediate crisis and the longer-term regulatory and health issues suggest much more scrutiny needs to be given to vaping. ... Everyone should be alarmed about the rapid growth in popularity of vaping among teenagers and young people."

Court Vacates Sentence Against Paul Attacker As Too Lenient.

CNN (9/9, Berman, 83.16M) reports on its website that "the 30-day sentence Rene Boucher received for attacking" Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) was too lenient, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled Monday, "ordering a lower court to issue a new sentence." CNN adds that "the sentencing guidelines ranged from 21 to 27 months, and the three-judge appeals court panel agreed with the Justice Department that the sentence wasn't enough." The Hill (9/9, Budryk, 2.98M) indicates yesterday's opinion "offers examples of other 30-day sentences for assaulting members of Congress and notes that the damage paled in comparison to that of Boucher, who broke five of Paul's ribs and caused injuries that later required part of Paul's lung to be removed." For example, "in 1981, two defendants were each sentenced to 30 days for throwing eggs at a congressman without hitting him, while a third defendant was sentenced to 15 days for spitting on a senator at an airport."

The Washington Free Beacon (9/9, Griswold, 78K) says Boucher "could have received up to ten years in prison for an assault of a member of Congress that inflicted personal injury," and the Washington Examiner (9/9, McGhee, 448K) that "two years, six broken ribs, several bouts of pneumonia, and one hernia surgery later," Paul "might finally get the justice he deserves." The Daily Caller (9/9, Kerr, 716K) runs a similar story.

Law & Crime (9/9, Kalmbacher) reports, meanwhile, that "decarceration-minded legal experts are viewing Monday's ruling decidedly askance." Said Ohio State University Moritz College of Law Professor Douglas A. Berman, "I continue to find that courts are much more interested in seriously questioning 30-day sentences when prosecutors appeal than in questioning 30-year sentences when defendants appeal. And so it goes in incarceration nation."

Trump Recognizes Officers And Civilians Who Responded To Mass Shootings.

The CBS Evening News (9/9, story 11, 0:24, O'Donnell, 4.32M) reported President Trump yesterday "honored some heroes who helped save lives in two mass shootings last month," including the officers who "took down the shooter who killed nine in Dayton about a half a minute after he started firing." The President also "recognized five civilians who put themselves at risk to help others escape the shooter at a Walmart in El Paso." The AP (9/9, Superville) says "the six police officers each received the Medal of Valor," which according to the Dayton

(OH) Daily News (9/9, Frolik, 121K) "was created in 2001 to honor law enforcement, firefighters, corrections, court, emergency services or civil defense officers who exhibited exceptional courage in the attempt to save and protect people's lives." Trump tweeted after the ceremony, "To every one of the HEROES we recognized today – THANK YOU and God Bless You All!"

Fox News (9/9, O'Reilly, 27.59M) reports on its website that appearing alongside Attorney General Barr, Trump said, "There are few people who could have done, and would have done, what these police officers did. ... To each of you, we are in awe of your swift response, sterling professionalism, and rock-solid nerves of steel." On its website, CNN (9/9, Vazquez, 83.16M) quotes Trump as further stating, "In the midst of such profound anguish, one memory fills us with hope. ... When evil showed its hideous face, Americans of all walks of life rose up – and they did, they rose up – they defied fear, they stared down death to protect the innocent. And stand tall they did just for righteous and for good." The New York Post (9/9, Fredericks, 4.57M) and Daily Caller (9/9, Caruso, 716K), among other news outlets, run similar reports.

The Washington Post (9/9, Wagner, 14.2M) says that "during his remarks, the president made no mention of legislation that Democrats have urged him to embrace to strengthen background checks for gun purchasers." The New York Times (9/9, Shear, 18.61M) also reports "Trump did not comment on the debate over gun control that erupted again after the two mass shootings, saying only that the El Paso attack was a 'racist attack motivated by pure evil' and that the Dayton shooting was committed by 'a vile, wicked murderer.'"

Along similar lines, the Cleveland Plain Dealer (9/9, Eaton, 895K) recounts that as Trump awarded the medals, "Democrats including US Sen. Sherrod Brown and Dayton Mayor Nan Whaley called for Trump and Republicans who control the US Senate to pass background check legislation." Whaley "said the mother of Dayton shooting victim Monica Brickhouse texted her 'Go get 'em,' upon learning that she'd be visiting Washington to demand background check legislation. She said 90 percent of Americans want universal background checks for gun purchases."

The Columbus (OH) Dispatch (9/9, Rowland, 367K) reports that Whaley, who "who has been harshly criticized by and critical of Trump, was not invited" to the White House, and "instead, Ohio Lt. Gov. Jon Husted and Attorney General Dave Yost, both Republicans, were on hand. Ohio GOP Sen. Rob Portman was listed among those expected to attend, but he did not, a spokeswoman said." Instead, Whaley appeared with Democratic leaders, including House Speaker Pelosi, Senate Minority Leader Schumer, and Brown in a call to Senate Majority Leader McConnell "to consider House-passed measures on gun violence."

The Toledo (OH) Blade (9/9, Skalka, 88K) reports Whaley said yesterday in an interview, "We emailed and said, 'Hey, we'd be happy to come' and they said that they didn't want us there, so we did not go. We were not invited. ... I think they told [my senior policy aide], 'It's not going to work out this time.' ... Even the reps who were there didn't represent Dayton." Gov. Mike DeWine (R) "is attending a trade conference in Japan."

White House Mulling Gun Proposals Aimed At Mentally Ill. The Washington Post (9/9, Wan, 14.2M) reports that the White House is "considering a controversial proposal to study whether mass shootings could be prevented by monitoring mentally ill people for small changes that might foretell violence." Former NBC Chairman Bob Wright, identified as a "longtime friend and associate of President Trump's, has briefed top officials, including the president, the vice president and Ivanka Trump, on a proposal to create a new research agency called HARPA to come up with out-of-the-box ways to tackle health problems, much like DARPA does for the military." The Post says "advisers to Wright quickly pulled together a three-page proposal...which calls for exploring whether technology like phones and smart watches can be used to detect when mentally ill people are about to turn violent."

The AP (9/9, Daly) reports Pelosi and Schumer are "pressing" President Trump to "intervene with Senate Republicans and demand passage of a bipartisan bill to expand background checks for gun purchases." The AP says "the letter came as Congress returned to the Capitol from a six-week break, with gun violence legislation at the top of the agenda." According to the AP, McConnell "has made it clear that he won't take action on guns without Trump's commitment to sign a bill into law." The New York Times (9/9, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports that Democrats hope to "put Mr. Trump and Mr. McConnell into a box on gun control legislation – and, perhaps, to ensure that Republicans and the president take the blame if nothing gets signed into law."

WPost-ABC News Poll Finds Strong Support For "Red Flag" Laws, Expanded Background Checks. The Washington Post (9/9, DeBonis, Guskin, 14.2M) reports that a Washington Post-ABC News poll found that "Americans across party and demographic lines overwhelmingly support expanded background checks for gun buyers and allowing law enforcement to temporarily seize weapons from troubled individuals." The poll found "a continued partisan divide on more far-reaching gun-control proposals," but "public opinion is firmly behind Democrats' push for action as Congress returns to Washington on Monday." According to the poll, "86 percent of Americans support implementing 'red flag' provisions," and "89 percent support expanding federal background checks to cover private sales and gun-show transactions." The poll also found that 51 percent of Americans "say they trust congressional Democrats over Trump to handle the nation's gun laws," while 36 percent trust Trump.

Gun Control Advocates See Progress In Stores' No-Open-Carry Requests. The New York Times (9/9, Corkery, 18.61M) reports that David Amad, vice president of Open Carry Texas, says many of his groups members have carried their guns openly into Walmart stores since the retailer 's "recent announcement that it is 'respectfully requesting' that customers not openly carry guns into its stores," and "none have been asked to leave." Walmart's announcement "sparked similar actions by Kroger, CVS, Walgreens and the Wegmans grocery chain." While the moves won praise from gun control groups, "none of the retailers have banned guns in their stores outright, even though legal experts say that is something they could do." The Times adds that while "gun control advocates praise the moves as progress in making open carry socially unacceptable," gun rights advocates "say they the retailers are doing nothing to restrict their ability to carry their firearms."

WPost, USA Today Urge Congress To Pass Gun Control Legislation. A Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M) editorial says President

Trump "will never step up" on the issue of gun control and argues that "hiding behind his failure" is a way for McConnell "and other Republican senators to abdicate their legislative authority and their responsibility to the country." The Post calls on the Senate to "stop waiting for Mr. Trump. Stop making excuses," and pass gun control legislation.

In an editorial, USA Today (9/9, 10.31M) calls for universal background checks. USA Today cites the recent mass shooting in Odessa, Texas in which the gunman "never should have been able to buy a gun." A court "had ruled him mentally unfit to purchase or own a firearm, so he was barred from buying a gun from a licensed dealer in 2014 after failing a federal background check." However, he obtained "his AR-style rifle thanks to a loophole in the federal background-check system." The loophole "would be closed if Congress passed universal background checks favored by nine out of 10 Americans."

Ross Threatened To Fire NOAA Employees After Agency Contradicted Trump.

The New York Times (9/9, Baker, Flavelle, Friedman, 18.61M) reports that according to "three people familiar with the discussions," Commerce Secretary Ross "threatened to fire top employees at NOAA on Friday after the agency's Birmingham office contradicted President Trump's claim that Hurricane Dorian might hit Alabama." After Trump said in a tweet that Alabama would be hit "harder than anticipated," the National Weather Service in Birmingham, Alabama tweeted that the state "will NOT see any impacts from Dorian." Ross "phoned Neil Jacobs, the acting administrator of NOAA, from Greece where the secretary was traveling for meetings and instructed Dr. Jacobs to fix the agency's perceived contradiction of the president." When Jacobs objected, he "was told that the political staff at NOAA would be fired if the situation was not fixed, according to the three individuals." Hallie Jackson said on NBC Nightly News (9/9, story 3, 2:05, Holt, 6.01M) that "the Commerce Department tells NBC News that's false, and the Secretary did not threaten to fire anyone over forecasting and public statements about Dorian."

Rep. Jim Himes (D-CT) said on CNN's Situation Room (9/9, 750K), "If that story is true, the Commerce Secretary needs to resign now," and Rep. Gerry Connolly (D-VA) said on CNN's Situation Room (9/9, 691K), "To have a political figure like Wilbur Ross decide you will not talk about that, you will not contradict the President even though he makes a misstatement and your statement is based on science, that's a very troubling development. I call for Wilbur Ross to resign over this."

Bianna Golodryga said on CNN's Situation Room (9/9, 750K), "Think about the subject from a larger perspective. A hurricane is something this President cannot be blamed for. It is not his fault. ... If they go to these lengths to protect the President and his ego, what would happen if something does occur with the economy, something the President can be blamed for, if we have a geopolitical crisis, something the President can be blamed for? What lengths will the President and those who support him in his Cabinet go to protect him versus disseminating the truth to the American public?"

NOAA, NWS Officials Back Officials Who Contradicted Trump. The AP (9/9, Reeves) reports that Craig McLean, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's acting chief scientist and assistant administrator for ocean and atmospheric research, "said his agency likely violated its scientific integrity rules last week when it publicly chastised a weather office that contradicted" Trump's claim. The AP adds that "another career civil servant, National Weather Service Director Louis Uccellini said forecasters in Birmingham did the right thing Sept. 1 when they tried to combat public panic and rumors that Dorian posed a threat to Alabama." The CBS Evening News (9/9, story 7, 1:09, O'Donnell, 4.09M) reported that "the director of the National Weather Service...stood by the Birmingham tweet, saying it was sent out for one reason, public safety."

The Washington Post (9/9, Epstein, Freedman, Samenow, Belz, 14.2M) reports that Trump's "incorrect assertion on Sept. 1 that Alabama 'would most likely be hit (much) harder than anticipated' set off a chain of confusion and outrage among the public and within NOAA."

Wehner: "Deeply Damaged" Trump Is "An Emotional Misfit." Peter Wehner writes at The Atlantic (9/9, 3.47M), "Even now, almost a thousand days into his presidency, the latest Trump outrage elicits shock and disbelief in people. The reaction is, 'Can you believe he said that and did this?' To which my response is, 'Why are you surprised?' It's a shock only if the assumption is that we're dealing with a psychologically normal human being. We're not." President Trump "is profoundly compromised, acting just as you would imagine a person with a disordered personality would. Many Americans haven't yet come to terms with the fact that we elected as president a man who is deeply damaged, an emotional misfit. But it would be helpful if they did."

Trump: US Must Be "Careful" About Dorian Victims Entering US From Bahamas.

The Hill (9/9, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports that President Trump told reporters Monday that the US must be "careful" to make sure everyone entering the country from the Bahamas has proper documentation, "suggesting dangerous individuals could sneak into the U.S. along with those seeking refuge following Hurricane Dorian." Trump said, "We have to be very careful. Everybody needs totally proper documentation. Because look, the Bahamas has some tremendous problems with people going to the Bahamas who weren't supposed to be there." Trump "suggest[ed] that gang members or drug deals could be among those seeking refuge in the U.S. after the devastation from Dorian." Said Trump, "I don't want to allow people that weren't supposed to be in the Bahamas to come into the United States, including some very bad people and some very bad gang members, and some very, very bad drug dealers."

Morgan: Administration Expediting Immigration Process For Storm Victims. Reuters (9/9) reports that acting Customs and Border Protection Commissioner Morgan said Monday that the Administration is "expediting its immigration processes and deploying more resources to help storm victims from Bahamas to enter the country quickly." Morgan is quoted as saying, "I've authorized the deployment of an enormous amount of resources to southern Florida to make sure we can receive people coming in from the Bahamas. ... That doesn't mean we do this with a blind eye. We still have to balance the humanitarian need and assistance of those that need it versus the safety of this country. So we still go through that process but we're expediting this process."

Bahamians Without US Visas Told To Leave Ferry. The Washington Post (9/9, Shepherd, Wong, 14.2M) reports that as hundreds of Dorian survivors crowded into a Ferry in Freeport on Sunday, a crew member announced that passengers without a US visa would have to disembark. The Post says "hundreds of Bahamian refugees have reportedly come to the United States after going through a screening process with only a passport and proof of no criminal record." CBP "says no rules have changed and laid the blame on the ferry operator...for not properly coordinating with government officials."

However, the New York Times (9/9, Dickerson, 18.61M) says US authorities "issued conflicting statements about the matter in a space of a few hours on Monday, adding to the confusion and frustration among hurricane survivors." While CBP initially "said that they would have allowed the passengers without visas into the United States as long as they had valid passports, documentation of a clean criminal record and prior approval for entry by the United States embassy in the Bahamas," a spokeswoman for the agency said later "that only travelers arriving by air, not by sea, were eligible to enter without visas."

Dorian's Death Toll Rises To 45 In Bahamas. The Washington Post (9/9, Sieff, Krygier, 14.2M) reports that on Monday evening, the death toll in the Bahamas stood at 50, and NBC Nightly News (9/9, story 4, 2:10, Holt, 6.01M), which earlier in the evening had reported that the death toll was 45, said the number of dead is "expected to rise sharply." Errol Barnett said on the CBS Evening News (9/9, story 6, 1:35, O'Donnell, 4.22M), that according to the UN, "the storm left more than 70,000 homeless." ABC World News Tonight (9/9, story 2, 1:57, Muir, 7M) described a "growing humanitarian crisis in the Bahamas."

The Washington Post (9/9, Lamothe, 14.2M) reports that "the Pentagon's involvement in the relief effort" in the Bahamas "is expected to remain relatively small, with no senior commander deployed on the ground and Navy ships barely involved."

Trump Gets Briefing On Dorian's Damage While In North Carolina.

President Trump wrote in a tweet Monday evening that he had received an update on damage from Hurricane Dorian during his visit to North Carolina. Trump posted pictures from the briefing and wrote, "Received an update on Air Force One at MCAS Cherry Point in North Carolina, regarding damage caused by Hurricane Dorian."

"Tension" Over Trump Reported At Bush Administration Reunion.

The Washington Examiner (9/9, Drucker, 448K) reports that "differences over President Trump reverberated during a weekend reunion bash for George W. Bush White House alumni, exposing rifts in the network of Republican operatives and officials." According to the Examiner, Matt Schlapp, an "enthusiastic Trump supporter who was political director in the Bush White House, had to be convinced to attend the reunion...after he expressed fears of being confronted." Meanwhile, "another Bush administration veteran, sometimes critical of Trump and sometimes not, was accosted at the gathering by a former colleague and accused of being too pro-Trump." The former president and former vice president Dick Cheney, it notes, "spoke at the reunion but generally steered clear of the disagreements roiling national politics."

Trump To Release Report On His Personal Finances.

CQ Roll Call (9/9, Bennett, 154K) reports the President "said Monday he soon will release a report detailing his personal finances." Trump "said the report will show he is so wealthy he does not need revenue from his hotels." The Washington Times (9/9, Howell, 492K) indicates Trump also "said people will be 'shocked' at the extent of his holdings," adding, "I don't need someone to take a room overnight at a hotel." The Hill (9/9, Samuels, 2.98M) quotes the President as saying, "At some point prior to the election, I'm going to be giving out a financial report of me, and it will be extremely complete. ... I'm going to give out my financial condition and you'll be extremely shocked that the numbers are many, many times what you think."

Trump Says He Knows Nothing About Air Force Crew Staying At Scotland Resort.

President Trump tweeted Monday morning that he knows nothing about an Air Force plane landing at an airport in Scotland and its crew staying at his Turnberry golf resort. Trump wrote, "I know nothing about an Air Force plane landing at an airport (which I do not own and have nothing to do with) near Turnberry Resort (which I do own) in Scotland, and filling up with fuel, with the crew staying overnight at Turnberry (they have good taste!). NOTHING TO DO WITH ME"

The New York Times (9/9, Lipton, 18.61M) says the tweet is the first time Trump has addressed the "growing controversy over the use by the Air Force of his resort there for overnight stays by military personnel." It came "after the Air Force announced it is reviewing the procedures it uses to place military personnel in hotels, following questions about the matter by House investigators."

Politico (9/9, Bertrand, O'Brien, 4.29M) reports that Air Force crews have stayed overnight at Trump's Scotland resort "on at least four occasions, two more than previously reported." The trips "date back to at least September 2018 and continued through at least this past June," and "include at least one instance in which a crew member said a nearby airport arranged for rides and lunches to and from the luxury waterside retreat."

In a separate story, the New York Times (9/9, Lipton, 18.61M) reports that after he acquired the resort in 2014, Trump "entered a partnership with a struggling local airport there to increase air traffic and boost tourism in the region." As Trump began running for President, "the Pentagon decided to ramp up its use of that same airport to refuel Air Force flights and gave the local airport authority the job of helping to find accommodations for flight crews who had to remain overnight. Those two separate arrangements have now intersected in ways that provide the latest evidence of how Mr. Trump's continued ownership of his business produces regular ethical questions."

The Washington Post (9/9, Wagner, Ryan, 14.2M) reports that Thomas released a statement saying the USAF "had asked the service's Air Mobility Command to examine rules regarding how Air Force personnel select destinations for overseas stopovers," but "said there was no initial indication of wrongdoing during stopovers in Scotland." Politico (9/9, Bender, Bertrand, 4.29M) reports that Jon Thomas, "the deputy commander of the Air Mobility Command, which oversees all Air Force transportation worldwide, said the review is intended to make sure that personnel are following all the rules but also whether staying at the commander-in-chief's property is appropriate." Townhall (9/9, Barkoukis, 177K) says the Air Force "completely disput[ed] accusations" that "an Air Force mission may have helped line the president's pockets."

Politico (9/9, O'Brien, 4.29M) reports that House Democrats "are doubling down on proposed legislation to block military funds from being spent at properties owned by" Trump. In July, the House voted "to bar the Defense Department from spending money at nearly five dozen Trump properties worldwide – including Trump Turnberry – as part of annual defense policy legislation." One of the measure's sponsors, Rep. Don Beyer (D-VA), said in a statement to Politico Monday, "The House sent a clear message by adopting our amendment in July that we will not allow taxpayer funds, including the defense budget, to be used to enrich the President. ... As alarming details emerge about US Air Force crews staying at the President's luxury golf resort in Scotland, it has become even more important that Congress include this language in the final version of the National Defense Authorization Act."

Jury Selected For Trial Of Chinese Woman Found At Mar-A-Lago.

The AP (9/9, Spencer) reports that "the trial of a Chinese businesswoman charged with lying to a Secret Service agent and trespassing at President Donald Trump's Mar-a-Lago club will be heard by a jury of 10 women and two men after their selection first bogged down Monday over the defendant's lack of underwear." The AP adds "the bizarre case took a weird turn before the potential jurors were brought into the courtroom, when defendant Yujing Zhang told Judge Roy Altman that she was wearing brown jail garb instead of civilian clothing because she had not been provided any underwear." The AP says that "after some discussion about which agency was supposed to provide Zhang with underwear, she was taken to a holding cell and changed into a copper-colored blouse and khaki slacks found in her hotel room after her March arrest." The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (9/9, Musgrave, 223K) also reports on the "undergarment snafu," and adds Zhang "faces a maximum six-year sentence if convicted." Fox News (9/9, Sorace, 27.59M) and CNN (9/9, Joseph, 83.16M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Trump Feuds With Celebrities Over Criminal Justice Reform.

The New York Times (9/9, Fortin, 18.61M) reports that President Trump "called the model Chrissy Teigen 'filthy mouthed' and the musician John Legend 'boring' in tweets on Sunday night that trumpeted the president's achievements in criminal justice reform, prompting them to fire back." According to the Times, "In his tweets shortly after 11 p.m. on Sunday, Mr. Trump appeared to be responding to Mr. Legend's appearance at a criminal justice town hall that was hosted by the 'NBC Nightly News' anchor Lester Holt at the Sing Sing prison in Ossining, N.Y., and aired on MSNBC at 10 p.m. that night." The Times says Trump "began by pointing to the criminal justice reform legislation he passed last year," which the Times says he "considers...one of his major accomplishments – one he hopes will broaden his appeal to voters."

House Democrats Set To Lay Out Rules For Trump Impeachment Hearings.

The CBS Evening News (9/9, story 5, 1:33, O'Donnell, 4.32M) reported, "Congress is back at work after a six-week recess, and if anything, House Democrats have a bigger appetite to start impeachment proceedings." The Washington Times (9/9, A1, Muñoz, 492K) says the "summer recess did little to quell the ardor of lawmakers seeking President Trump's impeachment." The AP (9/9, Jalonick) reports the House Judiciary Committee will vote Thursday to "establish rules for hearings on impeachment." The resolution is "a technical step, and the panel would still have to introduce impeachment articles against Trump and win approval from the House to bring charges against Trump." House Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler "has said that the committee will move forward with impeachment hearings this fall, bolstered by lawmakers on the panel who roundly support moving forward."

Reuters (9/9, Morgan) reports, "The measure to be considered at 8 a.m. EDT (1200 GMT) on Thursday would authorize [Nadler] to designate committee and subcommittee hearings as impeachment proceedings. It would also allow for aggressive questioning of hearing witnesses by committee attorneys, set procedures for reviewing grand jury material and allow the White House to respond in writing to evidence and testimony." Politico (9/9, Caygle, Cheney, Desiderio, 4.29M) reports President Trump's attorneys "would be permitted to review some of Congress's impeachment-related evidence under a set of procedures unveiled" by the Judiciary Committee. Politico adds that "the measure...would also allow smaller groups of lawmakers on the Judiciary panel's subcommittees to consider evidence – a step that could streamline and hasten its review" – and "would also allow committee staffers for both the Democratic and Republican sides of the panel to question witnesses for an extra hour, part of an effort to elicit more useful information." Breitbart (9/9, Wong, 673K) headlines its report "House Judiciary Committee Forging Ahead On Impeachment Despite Most Americans Opposing It."

Ex-Rep. Donna Edwards (D-MD), a contributing columnist, writes in the Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M), "Some evidently have concluded that accountability for this president will come with the 2020 election, and they want to leave it at that. They could not be more wrong. Losing an election (should that even happen) will not erase Trump's end run around the Constitution. ... Should House Democrats choose not to act on this laundry list of obstruction, abuse of power and emoluments violations, they alone bear the responsibility of forever changing the lines of demarcation for future presidents."

House Panels Probing Giuliani's Interest Hunter Biden's Ukraine Ties. Politico (9/9, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that the House Foreign Affairs, Intelligence and Oversight and Reform Committees "announced a new investigation into...Rudy Giuliani, over his interactions with Ukrainian officials and whether the Trump administration's withholding of foreign aid from Ukraine had any underlying political motives." The committees "demanded information from the White House and State Department regarding Giuliani's contacts with Ukraine and a decision to hit pause on more than $250 million in security assistance already appropriated by Congress." Politico says that in letters to White House Counsel Pat Cipollone and Secretary of State Pompeo, the committee chairs "charge that Trump and Giuliani 'appear to have acted outside legitimate law enforcement and diplomatic channels to coerce the Ukrainian government into pursuing two politically-motivated investigations under the guise of anti-corruption activity.'"

Reuters (9/9, Zengerle) reports that Trump and other Republicans have "questioned whether it represented a conflict of interest that Hunter Biden, the son of Democratic former Vice President Joe Biden...had served on the board of Burisma, a Ukrainian gas company." Bloomberg (9/9, House, 4.73M) says the New York Times reported in May that Giuliani "had said he planned to travel to" Ukraine "to encourage the nation's president-elect to press inquiries into two matters of interest to Trump. ... One was the origins of Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russia's interference in the 2016 election. The other was the involvement of...Hunter Biden, in an energy company owned by a Ukrainian oligarch, and whether the former vice president had influenced the removal of a Ukrainian prosecutor with authority over investigations of the oligarch."

House Intelligence Committee Demands Flynn Appear On September 25. Reuters (9/9, Zengerle) reports the House Intelligence Committee has sent a letter to former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn "demanding he testify before the panel on Sept. 25, a committee aide said on Monday." The committee said Flynn "had failed to comply with its subpoena, served on June 12, or cooperate with its efforts to secure his compliance."

Trump: Administration Has Accomplished More Than "Perhaps Any Administration" In History.

In a tweet Monday morning, President Trump said his Administration has accomplished more so far than any previous Administration but gets "ZERO media credit." Trump wrote, "The Trump Administration has achieved more in the first 2 1/2 years of its existence than perhaps any administration in the history of our Country. We get ZERO media credit for what we have done, and are doing, but the people know, and that's all that is important!"

Trump Called Fox News CEO To Complain About Negative Coverage.

Citing a report in The Atlantic, the Washington Examiner (9/9, Brest, 448K) reports that President Trump has "called Fox News CEO Suzanne Scott to complain about the negative coverage he is getting from the network's programming." An anonymous source told The Atlantic, "I'm not sure she tells him what he wants to hear. ... If you think about Suzanne, it's like, 'I'm running the network. The president is not running the network'. And if you're Donald Trump, it's like, 'Damn if you are - I'm running the network'. And, to be candid, there have been times when the network probably gave Trump too much of the idea that he was running the network."

Trump: MSNBC Can't Say Anything Positive About The Administration. In a tweet Monday morning, President Trump blasted MSNBC. Trump argued the network has "lost all credibility" and is "incapable of saying anything positive" about the Administration despite its accomplishments. Trump wrote, "As bad as @CNN is, Comcast MSNBC is worse. Their ratings are also way down because they have lost all credibility. I believe their stories about me are not 93% negative, but actually 100% negative. They are incapable of saying anything positive, despite all of the great things that this Administration has done. They don't talk about the great economy, the big tax and regulation cuts, the rebuilding of the Military, 'Choice' at our VA, our Vets, Judges and Supreme Court Justices, the Border Wall going up, lowest crime numbers, 2nd A, and so much more!"

One America News Network Sues MSNBC, Maddow For Defamation. The Washington Examiner (9/9, Brest, 448K) reports that One America News Network has filed "a $10 million defamation lawsuit against Rachel Maddow and MSNBC." The complaint, filed in California's southern district Monday, says the dispute began after OAN president Charles Herring "called out and objected to Comcast's anti-competitive censorship in an email to Comcast's President of Content Acquisition," according to an OAN press release from the network. According to the complaint, shortly after Herring's comments, Maddow opened her show by saying OAN "really, literally is paid Russian propaganda." OAN alleges that Maddow and MSNBC "knew this statement was false and that they acted maliciously and recklessly in making it," and that the statement was "meant to damage OAN's business and reputation." The Daily Caller (9/9, Talcott, 716K) also reports on the lawsuit.

MRC Studies Say Broadcast News Coverage Of Trump Is "90% Negative." The Washington Times (9/9, Harper, 492K) reports that according to a series of studies by the Media Research Center, broadcast news coverage of President Trump and his Administration "has been, on average, 90% negative." An analysis released Monday by the conservative group found that the networks' "fixation on Trump" leaves little time for coverage of his Democratic presidential rivals. Rich Noyes, who led the study, wrote, "From June 1 through August 31, analysts found the networks devoted 838 minutes of airtime – nearly 14 hours – to coverage of President Trump personally, the vast majority of which was negative.”

Trump: House GOP Committee Chairs Should Be Able To Serve More Than Six Years.

In a tweet Monday morning, President Trump argued that House Republican committee chairmen should be allowed to serve more than six years. Trump wrote, “House Republicans should allow Chairs of Committees to remain for longer than 6 years. It forces great people, and real leaders, to leave after serving. The Dems have unlimited terms. While that has its own problems, it is a better way to go. Fewer people, in the end, will leave!”

The New York Times (9/9, Barnes, Goldman, Sanger, 18.61M) reports, “Decades ago, the C.I.A. recruited and carefully cultivated a midlevel Russian official who began rapidly advancing through the governmental ranks.” The source eventually “landed an influential position that came with access to the highest level of the Kremlin” and “became one of the C.I.A.’s most important – and highly protected – assets. But when intelligence officials revealed the severity of Russia’s election interference with unusual detail” in 2016, the CIA “worried about safety made the arduous decision in late 2016 to offer to extract the source from Russia.” The source’s extraction “effectively blinded American intelligence officials to the view from inside Russia as they sought clues about Kremlin interference” in last year’s midterm elections.

CNN (9/9, 83.16M) reports on its website that “in a previously undisclosed secret mission in 2017, the United States successfully extracted from Russia one of its highest-level covert sources inside the Russian government. ... A person directly involved in the discussions said that the removal of the Russian was driven, in part, by concerns” that President Trump and his Administration “repeatedly mishandled classified intelligence and could contribute to exposing the covert source as a spy.” The Washington Post (9/9, Harris, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports, “The exfiltration was first reported by CNN. The CIA declined to comment.”

Rep. Gerry Connolly (D-VA) said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/9, 691K), “I think there was plenty of reason to believe and fear that this President’s recklessness with the intelligence he gets both on camera, through tweets, and by meeting with foreign adversaries and sharing sources and methods deeply concerned our own intelligence agencies and they moved – correctly – to protect human assets. I think it’s a sad commentary about this President and this Administration.”

Rep. Jim Himes (D-CT) said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/9, 750K), “This President has a long track record of being pretty sloppy in his use of classified information. Remember, he is the declassifying authority. That means if he says something is not classified, it is not classified. But nonetheless, the intelligence community and people like me are very, very worried about the very loose attitude he takes to it.”

CNN Analyst Questions Report. The Daily Caller (9/9, Ross, 716K) reports CNN analyst Phil Mudd said Monday that he “questions a key aspect of a CNN report” that intelligence officials extracted the asset. Mudd, a former CIA and FBI official, said, “I question whether this angle of the story, about whether the President’s engagement with intelligence, was actually a spur in the extraction of the informant. I suspect there were other issues here.” The Washington Examiner (9/9, Chaitin, 448K) also covers Mudd’s remarks.

Pentagon Formally Relaunches Space Command.

The Washington Times (9/9, Meier, 492K) reports the Pentagon on Monday formally relaunched the United States Space Command. The new Space Command – housed Peterson Air Force Base in Colorado Springs – will serve “as a unified hub that will coordinate all aspects of Pentagon space policy, now spread across various agencies and departments of the military.” To the Times, the move “marks a key step in the process of standing up [President] Trump’s planned Space Force, which in time could become the sixth branch of the armed forces on a par with the Army, Navy and Air Force.”

Dunford: US Faces “Sputnik Moment” In Space Race Competition. The AP (9/9) reports the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff warned Monday that the US has “reached a new ‘Sputnik moment’ in which the military must act to keep the nation’s competitive advantage in space against adversaries such as Russia, China, and to a lesser extent, Iran and North Korea.” During a ceremony at Peterson Air Force Base recognizing the re-launch of US Space Command, Gen. Joseph Dunford also compared President Trump’s “re-boot of the US Space Command to President John Kennedy’s call to action after the Soviet Union started the space race with Sputnik...and with 1961’s first manned trip into space.” Said Dunford, “In my view, it’s not an overstatement to say that we’re at another Sputnik moment. And you could argue that the stakes are much higher than they were in the late 1950s and early 1960s.”

Trump Mocks Primary Foes As “The Three Stooges.”

The Washington Post (9/9, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that in two tweets, President Trump on Monday “mock[ed] his latest Republican primary” foe, ex-Rep. Mark Sanford (R-SC), “dismissing him and two other GOP White House hopefuls as the ‘Three Stooges.’” The Post says that “shortly after Sanford touted his candidacy on MSNBC’s ‘Morning Joe,’ Trump referenced a 2009 episode in which Sanford, then South Carolina’s governor, disappeared for nearly a week before reemerging to hold a tearful news conference at which he revealed an extramarital affair.”

Politico (9/9, Forgey, 4.29M) quotes Trump as saying in the tweets, “When the former Governor of the Great State of South Carolina, @MarkSanford, was reported missing, only to then say he was away hiking on the Appalachian Trail, then was found in Argentina with his Flaming Dancer friend, it sounded like his political career was over. It was...but then he ran for Congress and won, only to lose his re-elect after I Tweeted my endorsement, on Election Day, for his [primary] opponent. But now take heart, he is back, and running for President of the United States. The Three Stooges, all badly failed candidates, will give it a go!" Ex-Rep. Joe Walsh (R-IL) and ex-Gov. Bill Weld (R-MA) are also mounting primary challenges to Trump.

In a separate story, Politico (9/9, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that Trump on Monday "dismissed his trio of" primary foes "as 'a laughingstock,' and defended the decisions by GOP leaders in a handful of states to scrap their 2020 primaries and caucuses. 'The three people are a total joke. They're a joke. They're a laughingstock,' Trump told reporters outside the White House." The President "also contended he had 'nothing to do with' Republican officials in Arizona, Kansas, Nevada and South Carolina moving in recent days to abandon their nominating contests next year, which he criticized as 'very expensive' for state parties."

Trump was asked in an interview with WBTV-TV Charlotte, NC (9/9, 11:00 p.m. EDT, 94K) about Sanford's primary campaign against him. Trump said, "Well, I don't think there is much reaction. I just got a 94 percent approval rating in the Republican Party, and that's the highest in history, higher than Ronald Reagan, who had an 87." Asked about Sanford's comments on the national debt, Trump said, "We had to rebuild our military. Our military has been totally rebuilt, almost completely rebuilt with new planes, which a lot of equipment [is] made right here in North Carolina. We had no choice but to rebuild our military and we can start working on that very soon in terms of debt."

GOP Strategist Mair Argues Sanford Is Most "Formidable" Of Trump's Primary Rivals. In a New York Times (9/9, 18.61M) op-ed, GOP strategist Liz Mair says that in contrast to Walsh and Weld, Sanford "enters the race in a vastly different position," which "could make him a more formidable challenger to Mr. Trump." Mair says Walsh and Weld are "both 'Never Trumpers,'" while Sanford "is unlikely to be defined by Never Trumpism." Mair adds that Sanford's "candidacy is likely to be dedicated to...issues related to fiscal restraint and responsibility. He happens to be on the right side of those issues, and the president on the wrong side."

Politico Analysis: Many Democrats Expect Biden Campaign "To Implode Any Day."

In an article titled "Why Biden's Rivals Are Planning Around His Big Collapse," Politico (9/9, Siders, Schneider, 4.29M) says, "No one should be surprised next year if former Vice President Joe Biden wins the Democratic presidential nomination. However, "what is surprising is how many people expect his campaign to implode any day." Politico said that "it is a sensation underpinning the entire primary, evident not only in the vulturous calculations of Biden's competitors, but also within his own orbit of supporters – a feeling that the front-runner may be made of porcelain." Ex-DNC Chair Ed Rendell, identified by Politico as "one of Biden's most vocal supporters," said, "There's a clear worry among Biden supporters that he can't be the front-runner from June of 2019 through July of 2020...that eventually, the gaffes will pile up and he'll come down." Rendell said Biden supporters are "nervous as hell."

Sununu Says Biden Was "Confused" When Overseeing Thomas Confirmation Hearings. The Washington Examiner (9/9, Pickett, 448K) reports that Biden "was 'confused' as Senate Judiciary Committee chairman during the Clarence Thomas Supreme Court nomination hearings, vacillating on whether to give accuser Anita Hill a public hearing or not, said John Sununu, White House chief of staff for President George H.W. Bush." Speaking with the Examiner, Sununu said of the October 1991 confirmation hearings, "One of the reasons it got so difficult is that the chairman of the committee was relatively useless." Sununu is quoted as saying that Biden "was confused. He didn't know whether he wanted to do the right thing or whether he wanted to cave into the liberals that were trying to really, in a very disgraceful way, ruin the reputation of a very good man, currently Justice Thomas."

NYTimes Analysis: Warren Took Money From Rich Donors Before Swearing It Off.

Under the headline "How Elizabeth Warren Raised Big Money Before She Denounced Big Money," the New York Times (9/9, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports that just last year, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "was busy collecting big checks from...politically connected insiders" in Boston, Los Angeles, Martha's Vineyard, New York, Philadelphia, and Silicon Valley, among other locations. However, "early this year, Ms. Warren made a bold bet that would delight the left: She announced she was quitting this big-money circuit in the 2020 presidential primary, vowing not to attend private fund-raisers or dial up rich donors anymore." The Times adds, "Admirers and activists praised her stand – but few noted the fact that she had built a financial cushion by pocketing big checks the years before."

Warren Backs Two Progressive Primary Foes Of Incumbent House Democrats. USA Today (9/9, Madhani, 10.31M) reports that Warren on Monday "endorsed two liberal candidates who have launched primary challenges against incumbent House Democrats." Warren backed businesswoman Marie Newman, who is mounting a primary challenge to Rep. Dan Lipinski (D-IL), and immigration attorney Jessica Cisneros, who is mounting a primary challenge to Rep. Henry Cuellar (D-TX). USA Today says that for Warren, her backing of the two challengers provides her "an opportunity to underscore her alliance with the more liberal wing of the Democratic party as she battles with Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "for the progressive mantle in 2020 Democratic presidential contest."

CQ Roll Call (9/9, Bowman, 154K) reports that Cuellar and Lipinski "are two of three remaining House Democrats who have voted against abortion rights and Warren referenced women's reproductive health in her statement backing Newman," who "nearly defeated Lipinski in a primary in 2018. Warren did not endorse Newman in that race last year." CQ Roll Call adds that Sanders "has also endorsed Newman's 2020 race and backed her in 2018." The Chicago Tribune (9/9, Pearson, 2.65M) reports that Newman "came within 2,150 votes of defeating Lipinski" in 2018.

The Texas Tribune (9/9, Svitek, 23K) reports that in the Texas race, Cisneros "has the backing of Justice Democrats, the progressive group famous for helping elect freshman" Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) in 2018. The Tribune adds that Cuellar "is among the more conservative Democrats in the House." The Hill (9/9, Rodrigo, 2.98M) reports that Justice Democrats "has made Cuellar a top target since January, bashing his voting record. Cuellar responded with a tweet, saying, 'We told you the outside special interests were coming to take away local jobs. Elizabeth Warren and our opponent share an agenda that would kill over 108,000 jobs in our region. I'm fighting back. Will you join me?'" The Washington Times (9/9, McLaughlin, 492K) reports on Warren's endorsement of Cisneros.

Ossoff Enters Georgia Senate Race.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/9, Bluestein, 895K) reports that failed 2017 Democratic House hopeful Jon Ossoff on Monday announced a 2020 bid to unseat Sen. David Perdue (R-GA), joining businesswoman Sarah Riggs Amico, Clarkston Mayor Ted Terry, and ex-Columbus Mayor Teresa Tomlinson in the Democratic primary. In an interview, Ossoff said "he would 'raise a grassroots army unlike any this state has ever seen' by expanding the network of supporters who helped him raise roughly $30 million in a 2017 special election he narrowly lost."

The New York Times (9/9, Astor, 18.61M) reports that with Perdue seeking another term in 2020 and Sen. Johnny Isakson (R-GA) stepping down later this year due to health concerns, "Georgia will be home to two of the most closely watched Senate races in the country in 2020, and Democrats are determined not to squander the opportunity. They now need two candidates strong enough to compete in a red state, and Georgia's biggest Democratic star," failed 2018 gubernatorial hopeful "Stacey Abrams, has already declined to run and intends to focus her efforts on fighting voter suppression."

Politico (9/9, Arkin, 4.29M) reports that Ossoff, "32, became a political sensation during his" failed GA6 bid "in 2017, one in a series of special elections that attracted wide notice amid backlash against President Donald Trump before Democrats took the House majority in the midterm election." Politico adds, "Georgia has not elected a Democrat to the Senate in two decades, but the party sees the changing state as a major opportunity in 2020 after several close statewide losses in 2018." The Hill (9/9, Wise, 2.98M) and HuffPost (9/9, Terkel, 1.67M) also report on the story.

Trump-Backed Hagerty Enters Tennessee Senate Race.

The AP (9/9) reports that ex-US Ambassador to Japan Bill Hagerty on Monday officially filed to mount a 2020 bid to succeed retiring Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-TN), "nearly two months after President Donald Trump announced the campaign in a tweet. 'With President Trump's support, I'm ready to fight for your family in the US Senate,' Hagerty said in a statement during his campaign launch." Hagerty joins trauma surgeon Manny Sethi in the GOP primary. In a campaign video, Hagerty said, "Serving in President Trump's administration was the honor of a lifetime, but when I saw the threat to Tennessee and our country from the Democrats' socialist agenda, I felt called to act."

The Tennessean (9/9, Ebert, 458K) reports that while "neither candidate has run for office before, Hagerty has a significant advantage over Sethi, given Trump's early support of his candidacy, which he touts in the campaign video. In July, the president said on Twitter that Hagerty, who he called an outstanding ambassador, had his 'complete and total endorsement.'" Politico (9/9, Arkin, 4.29M) reports that in an interview, Hagerty "a businessman who served as Trump's Tennessee Victory chair during the 2016 campaign," said of the President, "He's looked at all the candidates in this race and he's decided to endorse me as the candidate best able to put forward conservative Tennessee values in the US Senate." CQ Roll Call (9/9, Pathé, 154K) headlines its report "Trump's Pick Enters Tennessee Senate Race."

Financial International News

World Bank Official In Line For Top Job At IMF.

The AP (9/9, Egelko) reports World Bank CEO Kristalina Georgieva "is in line to head the International Monetary Fund with the organization saying that there is only one person nominated for the job." She "is expected to adapt similar policy stances to" outgoing Managing Director Christine Lagarde, "who is stepping down from the IMF this week to lead the European Central Bank." AFP (9/9) reports, "Georgieva's rise perpetuates Europe's long-standing control over the designation of the fund's leadership." MarketWatch (9/9, Robb, 1.67M) also covers this story.

IMF: Increased Phantom Investment.

Fox Business (9/9, De Lea, 1.73M) reports a new International Monetary Fund found that "about $15 trillion worth of global foreign direct investments are being funneled to shell companies, allowing multinational corporations to lessen, or erase tax liabilities." Phantom investments, which "pass through empty shell companies, or special purpose entities" that generally have no business activity, increased "to 40 percent of global foreign direct investments, up from 30 percent less than a decade ago."

Business Insider (9/9, Reinicke, 3.67M) reports, "Luxembourg and the Netherlands hold nearly half" of such investments, the study showed." Add in Hong Kong, British Virgin Islands, Bermuda, Singapore, the Cayman Islands, Switzerland, Ireland, and Mauritius and more than 85% of phantom FDI is accounted for."

Think Tank: France Will Win Britain's Finance Crown In EU After Brexit.

Reuters (9/9, Jones) reports that according to New Financial think tank, France will likely take "Britain's financial services crown in the European Union after Brexit, which leaves the bloc's economy more reliant on struggling eurozone banks." Brexit will "likely lead to a shift in the tone and direction of policy on EU capital markets and the loss to the EU of much of the markets and regulatory expertise that has built up in the UK over many decades, New Financial said in a report." In short, New Financial said, "[T]he EU economy will be even more reliant on a struggling banking sector than it is today." According to New Financial, Britain accounts for almost one third of all EU capital market activity, "more than France and Germany combined." Losing Britain "means that the EU's share of the global capital market will fall from 21% to 14%, or one-third the size of the US or equivalent to China.

Johnson Expected To Suspend Parliament After Losing Control Of Brexit.

Reuters (9/9, Faulconbridge, Piper) reports Prime Minister Boris Johnson "lost influence over Britain's withdrawal from the European Union on Monday when a law came into force demanding he delay Brexit until 2020 unless he can strike a divorce deal." Reuters adds, "It was unclear what Johnson's next move...would be: while the law will oblige him to seek a delay unless he can strike a new deal, EU leaders have repeatedly said they have received no specific proposals."

The AP (9/9, Lawless, Katz) reports that "in a session that ran past midnight, Parliament enacted a law to block a no-deal Brexit next month, ordered the government to release private communications about its Brexit plans and rejected Johnson's call for a snap election to break the political deadlock." Parliament was "then set to be suspended at the government's request until Oct. 14, a drastic move that gives Johnson a respite from rebellious lawmakers as he plots his next move." The New York Times (9/9, Castle, 18.61M) notes Johnson "needed more than 430 votes for a snap election to proceed. He got 293."

The Washington Post (9/9, Witte, Adam, Ferguson, 14.2M) says Johnson's "dreams of an election that would clear his path to Brexit by the end of October were decisively dashed after midnight Tuesday morning, leaving him with no obvious means of making good on his vow of a 'do or die' exit from the European Union." The Post says Johnson is now left "in a bind: He has insisted he will not ask the EU for an extension – he said last week that he would 'rather be dead in a ditch.' But a law passed by rebel lawmakers requires him to seek one if there's still no deal by Oct. 19."

The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Hannon, Douglas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that during his first meeting with Irish Prime Minister Leo Varadkar since taking office in July, Johnson insisted he wanted to leave the EU with an agreement, but didn't give any detail about how he proposed to do it.

Reuters (9/9, Piper), meanwhile, profiles Labour Party leader Jeremy Corbyn, whose "journey – from Eurosceptic to last line of defence against leaving the EU without a withdrawal agreement, from Socialist rebel to leader of an opposition united against Johnson – is among the most improbable in modern British history."

Mozambique: Creditors Support Eurobond Debt Swap Plan.

Reuters (9/9, Strohecker) reports Mozambique said that creditors holding 99.5 percent of the country's Eurobond support its debt restructuring proposal, "paving the way for an overhaul of part of its heavy debt burden." In spite of "objections by creditors that they had to undergo a second restructuring in around three years, the debt swap plan was seen by many as investor friendly." Under the plan, $900 million of new bonds maturing in 2031 will be issued.

Trump: Taliban Peace Talks Are "Dead" For Now.

The AP (9/9, Riechmann, Faiez) reports President Trump on Monday declared that peace talks with the Taliban are now "dead." To the AP, "Trump's remark to reporters at the White House suggested he sees no point in resuming a nearly yearlong effort to reach a political settlement with the Taliban," and the Washington Times (9/9, Howell, 492K) says his remarks "leave critical decisions about the 18-year-old war in Afghanistan in the air, including whether the US will withdraw troops planned." To the New York Times (9/9, Shear, 18.61M), "The president's declaration was the latest evidence of difficulty in the nine-month effort to negotiate an exit of American troops from Afghanistan. ... But it was unclear whether Mr. Trump's angry denunciation would mean a permanent end to the talks." The Hill (9/9, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) says his remarks had "an air of finality, though the president has a penchant for reversing course on decisions."

The CBS Evening News (9/9, story 3, 2:20, O'Donnell, 4.32M) showed Trump saying of the peace talks: "They're dead. They're dead. As far as I'm concerned, they're dead." CBS' Margaret Brennan reported, "President Trump said it was his decision to plan and then call off the summit at Camp David with the Taliban." Trump: "It was my idea, and it was my idea to terminate it." Brennan added, "But a senior US official told CBS it was not that simple. It appeared the Taliban negotiators did not have full control over their fighters, and the President's advisers were at odds over whether a troop drawdown should happen with or without a negotiated deal. There was also confusion over whether the Taliban had agreed to attend the Camp David meeting."

The Washington Examiner (9/9, Rosas, 448K) quotes Trump as saying, "When I heard, very simply, that they killed one of our soldiers and 12 other innocent people, I said there's no way I'm meeting on that basis. There's no way I'm meeting. They did a mistake."

As was the case yesterday, much of the coverage is devoted to the choice of Camp David for the talks, as well as the timing – just days ahead of the 9/11 anniversary. ABC World News Tonight (9/9, story 4, 2:25, Muir, 7M), for example, said "critics want to know why it was planned so close to 9/11 and at Camp David at all." ABC's Jonathan Karl added, "The idea of inviting the Taliban, the radical Islamic movement that gave safe haven to Osama bin Laden, to Camp David just days before the anniversary of the 9/11 attacks was highly controversial. ... Today, Trump defended his decision."

NBC Nightly News (9/9, story 5, 1:40, Holt, 6.01M) likewise said Trump is "defending his controversial idea to hold those now scrapped talks with the Taliban at Camp David, the site of previous presidential negotiations." Trump: "Camp David's held meetings with a lot of people that would have been perceived as being pretty tough customers and pretty bad people." According to NBC, "the idea of a Camp David meeting spark[ed] division within the President's national security team. According to US officials, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo supported it, and National Security Adviser John Bolton was vehemently opposed."

Along similar lines, USA Today (9/9, Fritze, Subramanian, Jackson, 10.31M) reports Trump, "who was under pressure from within his administration to not accept a hasty agreement in Afghanistan, became increasingly frustrated with the peace talks, administration officials speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss internal deliberations said. Among the critics, officials said, was...Bolton." John Roberts, on Fox News Special Report (9/9, 1.53M), also referred to "a split in the Administration about bringing the Taliban to Camp David."

The Washington Post (9/9, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports that after "lawmakers on both sides of the aisle sharply criticized Trump over the weekend," Trump yesterday "defended his invitation, arguing that wars would 'go on forever' without meetings." Said the President, "I took my own advice. I liked the idea of meeting. I've met with a lot of bad people and a lot of good people" since becoming president. Having the meeting at the White House would have been "a step too far," he added. "And I thought Camp David would be good, and I still do."

The New York Times (9/9, Rogers, 18.61M) notes that Trump "has not had many meetings, period, at Camp David. The president has visited the retreat only nine times since his election, according to an accounting from the Twitter updates of the president and his wife, Melania Trump, a minuscule amount compared with the 293 days he has spent at a Trump property." Axios (9/9, Basu, 521K), among other media outlets, also reports Trump's comments to reporters.

The President also addressed criticism of meeting on Twitter yesterday, writing, "A lot of Fake News is being reported that I overruled the VP and various advisers on a potential Camp David meeting with the Taliban. This Story is False! I always think it is good to meet and talk, but in this case I decided not to. The Dishonest Media likes to create... the look of turmoil in the White House, of which there is none. I view much of the media as simply an arm of the Democrat Party. They are corrupt, and they are extremely upset at how well our Country is doing under MY Leadership, including... the Economy, where there is NO Recession, much to the regret of the LameStream Media! They are working overtime to help the Democrats win in 2020, but that will NEVER HAPPEN, Americans are too smart!"

The Hill (9/9, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports Trump "was reacting to reports by NBC News and other outlets" that Vice President Pence and Bolton "were staunchly opposed to the idea of holding a meeting in Washington with Taliban leaders." USA Today (9/9, Collins, Fritze, Subramanian, 10.31M) too days Trump "pushed back" over reports that he "overruled objections from...Pence and other advisers." The Washington Examiner (9/9, Gage, 448K) reports Pence himself "hit back at NBC," tweeting, "That's Absolutely Right Mr. President. More Fake News! The Dishonest Media never contacted our office before running with this story and if they had, we would have told them I FULLY support your decision."

Jake Tapper said on CNN's Situation Room (9/9, 678K) that Pence "weigh[ed] in with a slyly written tweet," in which he said he fully supports Trump's decision. Tapper said, "That, of course, is a nonanswer and does not directly address the idea that before the decision was made, the Vice President advised against it."

A Washington Times (9/9, Taylor, 492K) analysis says that while "critics feared President Trump's career as real-estate mogul turned reality-TV star would find him all too ready in the Oval Office to accept foreign policy offers that promised favorable coverage and won a few news cycles," some of the "biggest calls of his presidency – from North Korea negotiations to the Iran nuclear deal and now the freeze on talks with the Taliban – have shown Mr. Trump's ability to walk away from the table, even when it seems like a deal could be within grasp." Michael Pregent of the Hudson Institute said, "He understands the leverage game and I don't think he gets enough credit for it."

Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) said on Fox News Special Report (9/9, 1.53M), "The President has done exactly the right thing. This President has shown that he is willing consistently to walk away from bad deals. ... This is a President who has demonstrated his willingness and his ability and determination not to let the United States be taken advantage of."

A Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M) editorial says Trump's decision to cancel the talks "avoided an unseemly spectacle – the killers of thousands of Americans hosted at the presidential retreat – and offered at least temporary relief to the many Afghans and Americans who believed he was rushing into a bad bargain." The Post, however, cautions that Trump could revive the talks or decide to withdraw US troops without a peace deal. Afghans, it says, "can only hope that he chooses to set aside his personal political agenda and hold out for a better deal."

Trump: US Military Hitting Taliban "Harder Than At Any Time In The Last Ten Years." President Trump tweeted yesterday, "We have been serving as policemen in Afghanistan, and that was not meant to be the job of our Great Soldiers, the finest on earth. Over the last four days, we have been hitting our Enemy harder than at any time in the last ten years!"

His comments came as Reuters (9/9, Stewart) reports the US military "is likely to accelerate the pace of its operations in Afghanistan to counter an increase in Taliban attacks," CENTCOM commander Marine Gen. Kenneth McKenzie said Monday following the suspension of peace talks with the insurgents. McKenzie "said during a visit to Afghanistan that the Taliban overplayed its hand in peace negotiations by carrying out a spate of high-profile attacks, including one that killed a US soldier last week." He added, "Whatever targets are available, whatever targets can be lawfully and ethically struck, I think we're going to pursue those targets."

The Washington Times (9/9, Wolfgang, 492K), meanwhile, reports that the Taliban "steadily amassed power and territory throughout its high-stakes, yearlong peace talks with the Trump administration, and they are now stronger than at any other point in the post-9/11 era, say military observers." They caution that the "sudden end to negotiations...likely won't change the Taliban's grand strategy, which centers on galvanizing its ethnic and popular base of support, capturing and holding territory, and making it impossible for the US-backed government in Kabul to function."

Afghan President Demands Ceasefire Before Talking With Taliban. The AP (9/9, Faiez) reports that Afghans are "braced for a possible new wave of Taliban violence" after President Trump "abruptly called off talks with the insurgent group, which vows to continue its fight against what it calls 'foreign occupation.'" Afghan President Ashraf Ghani, "whose government was sidelined in those talks, again declared that his country was ready to meet with the Taliban but that 'negotiation without a cease-fire is not possible.'" According to the AP, "It was a notable shift in the stance of the Afghan government, which before Trump's decision had said it had no conditions for entering talks with the insurgent group."

In a piece titled "With US-Taliban Peace Talks Canceled, Afghan President Is On The Hot Seat," the Washington Post (9/9, Constable, 14.2M) reports Trump's decision to call off talks with the Taliban is "putting Ghani in the spotlight at a moment of national crisis that cries out for leadership and all but guaranteeing that elections will be held as planned on Sept. 28." To the Post, "Ghani is likely to win a second five-year term" as his "repeated calls for a lasting, Afghan-led peace may find new resonance with voters who feared a US peace deal would leave them vulnerable to a reprise of Taliban cruelty."

Meanwhile, on the CBS Evening News (9/9, story 4, 1:22, O'Donnell, 4.32M), Charlie D'Agata spoke with Abdullah Abdullah, Afghanistan's chief executive, who said, "A complete withdrawal without any progress in the peace process or the negotiations – and also a Taliban violating the commitments that they are making – that will have a serious, negative impact."

The New York Times (9/9, Zucchini, 18.61M) reports that "for many Afghans, the abrupt suspension of talks after 10 months of negotiations was not entirely unexpected. What jarred them was the notion that a single attack, and the death of one American, could really have upended the talks when the deaths of thousands of Afghans this year – not to mention at least 15 other American soldiers – had not."

US Soldier Whose Death Upended Talks Described As Family Man Who Loved The Army. The New York Times (9/9, Philipps, 18.61M) reports that those who knew Army Sgt. First Class Elis A. Barreto Ortiz, who was killed last week in a Taliban car bombing in Kabul during his third deployment in Afghanistan, "described him as a compassionate leader whose two loves were his family and the Army." Ortiz, a father of two, "grew up in a small town in Puerto Rico, the son of a career Army soldier, and joined the Army himself in 2010."

US Military Hunting Down ISIS Fighters In Iraq.

In an eight-minute segment, ABC World News Tonight (9/9, story 5, 8:00, 7M) anchor David Muir reported from Iraq, where US and Iraqi forces are hunting down ISIS fighters in Anbar province, along the border with Syria. Muir noted that "many of these [US] military leaders have been to Iraq before," Marine Brig. Gen. William Seely III, commander of Task Force Iraq, among them. Asked if he ever thought he'd be back in Anbar, Gen. Seely said, "It is surreal that we're going back out to Al Anbar. That's where they are. But that's where they'll die."

Trump Again Signals He Is Open To Meeting With Rouhani.

Reuters (9/9, Holland) reports President Trump said Monday that he "could" meet with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani "and that he had no problem with such an encounter." Trump is quoted as saying, "It could happen. It could happen. No problem with me." Reuters reports that last week, Trump "said a meeting with Rouhani was possible at the UN General Assembly in New York later in September."

IAEA: Iran Is Preparing Advanced Centrifuges. The AP (9/9, Rising) reports the International Atomic Energy Agency on Monday "confirmed...that Iran is preparing to use more advanced centrifuges, another breach of limits set in the country's slowly unraveling nuclear deal with major powers." The AP says Iran "had already announced the step," and the IAEA "reported its inspectors verified the installation of new centrifuges." However, they "said all had been 'prepared for testing' but none yet tested at the time of the Sept. 7-8 inspection." The New York Post (9/9, Moore, 4.57M) reports the IAEA "said its inspectors saw 30 advanced IR-6 models, as well as a number of IR-4 and IR-5 models."

Israel Reveals New Iranian Nuclear Weapons Site. The Washington Free Beacon (9/9, Kredo, 78K) reports Israeli officials on Monday "disclosed the existence of yet another secret Iranian nuclear weapons site that Tehran has attempted to hide from the international community, a disclosure likely to amplify calls from the international community for Iran to come clean about its ongoing weapons work." Elad Strohmayr, spokesman for the Israeli Embassy in Washington, tweeted, "Israel has exposed another Iranian violation of their international commitments: the Abadeh Nuclear Weapons Development Site. We have proof that Iran conducted experiments to develop nuclear weapons there, and that they destroyed the site when they realized we discovered it."

Hook: Media Ignoring Iran's Role In Yemen. US special envoy Brian Hook writes in the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that Iran is playing a growing role in the war in Yemen, and media is not paying attention. The Administration, he says, is working to cast a light on Iran's promotion of violence in not only Yemen, but also Lebanon, Syria, the Golan Heights, and Iraq.

Iran Says Formerly Detained Tanker Has Unloaded Its Cargo. The New York Times (9/9, Hubbard, 18.61M) reports that the Iranian Foreign Ministry says the Adrian Darya 1, "an Iranian tanker that Western nations sought to bar from delivering its oil, has unloaded its cargo after docking on the Mediterranean coast."

Hezbollah Downs Israeli Drone In Southern Israel.

The Washington Post (9/9, McAuley, 14.2M) reports Hezbollah said Monday it downed an Israeli drone in southern Lebanon. The Post says the downing "was seen as a possible retaliation for an earlier strike" that Hezbollah "blamed on Israel and that the Israeli government has yet to deny." In a statement, Hezbollah said its operatives shot down the Israeli drone outside the village of Ramyeh across the border from northern Israel, and the Israeli army confirmed in a statement that the drone was shot down "on a routine mission in northern Israel" and that it "fell into Lebanese territory."

Netanyahu Accuses Rivals Of Plotting To "Steal" Israeli Election. The New York Times (9/9, Kershner, 18.61M) reports Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Monday "accused opponents of trying to 'steal' next week's election and urged supporters to thwart them en masse." According to the Times, the "rallying cry came after his conservative Likud Party failed to speed a contentious bill through Parliament that would have allowed party representatives to film inside polling stations, ostensibly to prevent voting fraud." Analysts, however, said the effort was "more likely intended to intimidate Arab voters," and the Times writes that "vote fraud has not played a significant role in Israeli elections."

North Korea Open To Resumption Of Denuclearization Talks This Month.

Reuters (9/9, Shin) reports Vice North Korean Foreign Minister Choe Son Hui said Monday that leader Kim Jong-un is "willing to restart nuclear talks with the United States in late September, but warned that chances of a deal could end unless Washington takes a fresh approach." Reuters reports that on Sunday, Secretary of State Pompeo "said he hoped to return to denuclearization talks...in the coming days or weeks." According to Reuters, Choe "stressed that Washington needed to present a new approach or the talks could fall apart again." Choe is quoted as saying, "I want to believe that the US side would come out with an alternative based on a calculation method that serves both sides' interests and is acceptable to us."

The AP (9/9, Kim) says Choe's statement was "apparently aimed at pressuring the United States to make concessions when the North Korea-US talks restart." The Washington Post (9/9, Denyer, 14.2M) reports that Pompeo "insists Kim has promised to denuclearize and said Sunday that the administration was 'hopeful that in the coming days or perhaps weeks we'll be back at the negotiating table with them.'"

Communists Make Inroads In Moscow City Elections.

The New York Times (9/9, Nechepurenko, 18.61M) reports Russian President Vladimir Putin's "allies...suffered significant losses in Moscow city council elections, preliminary results showed on Monday, but mostly held their own in other local polls across the country." In Moscow, "the governing United Russia party will still form the majority in the city legislature of 45 seats, but the results revealed the party's continuing weakness, as well as the seeming effectiveness of the opposition's 'smart voting' effort, which sought to consolidate voting behind the antigovernment candidate with the best chance of winning." The Times adds, "Beyond Moscow, the Kremlin was still able to demonstrate its full control of the political situation, winning all 16 of the governor's races."

The Washington Post (9/9, Englund, 14.2M) reports that "opposition leader" Alexei Navalny "was in a jubilant mood Monday" because those "arrayed against...Putin's United Russia party showed, for once, that when they put aside their differences and act in concert, they can make serious inroads." However, the strategy "put liberals like Navalny – who once played the nationalist card but has dropped it in recent years – on the same side as the Communist Party, and it put 13 Communists on the city council in contrast with four liberals. The other three opposition winners were from a party called Just Russia, which is ideologically closer to the Communists than anyone else."

Housing

Mortgage Prepayments Slowed In August.

Reuters (9/9, Leong) reports, "The growth in prepayments on U.S. mortgage bonds slowed in August, scaling back from the previous month's surge in refinancing as a result of a dramatic drop in home borrowing costs, according to estimates from J.P. Morgan published late on Friday." According to J.P. Morgan analysts, "prepayments on 30-year mortgage-backed securities backed by Fannie Mae on average rose 5% in August, cooling from a 29% jump in July." Analysts said, "For mortgage investors, the (August) print should be somewhat reassuring as it showed for the time being, capacity constraints are still in place and application volume reported by refi index is still a reasonable predictor of demand."

Opinion: Better Times Ahead For Mortgage Industry.

In a piece for the National Mortgage News (9/9), Stanley Middleman expects that the "next couple of years should be better" for the mortgage industry "in terms of profits, and less volatile in terms of interest rates, helping lenders better serve both consumers and investors." Middleman writes that the FHA and Ginnie Mae recently "put out some new guidelines for the industry in terms of new program requirements, capital and liquidity, servicer and credit ratings and even stress testing." Middleman sees "the changes as a positive development" because "by trying to control prepayment speeds, Ginnie Mae is actually helping independent mortgage banks whose primary asset, after all, is mortgage servicing rights."

Fannie Mae: US Home Purchase Sentiment Rose In August.

Reuters (9/9, Leong) reports that Fannie Mae said Monday that US home-buying sentiment rose in August. Fannie Mae "said its index on home purchase sentiment moved up 0.1 percentage point to 93.8 last month, the highest level since this measure began," in part due to the fact that "mortgage rates have fallen to their lowest levels since the autumn of 2016 in step with lower U.S. bond yields."

CNBC (9/9, Olick, 3.62M) reports that Doug Duncan, chief economist at Fannie Mae, said, "Unfortunately, much of the lower interest rate environment can be attributed to global economic uncertainties, which appear to have dampened consumer sentiment regarding the direction of the economy. We do expect housing market activity to remain relatively stable, and the favorable rate environment should continue supporting increased refinance activity."

Puerto Rico Recovery

Democrats To Hold Hearing After HUD Misses Puerto Rico Disaster Relief Deadline.

The Hill (9/9, Elis, 2.98M) reports, "House Democrats say they plan to hold a hearing on why the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) missed a crucial deadline for allocating the most recent batch of disaster relief funds to Puerto Rico." HUD Secretary Ben Carson "last week missed a deadline for allocating $8.9 billion in Community Development Block Grant funds from June's supplemental disaster relief bill. Democrats wrote in a letter Thursday that was made public on Monday." Lawmakers "said Carson had published allocations for other states and territories that needed the funds, such as California, Texas, Georgia, Louisiana, and at the last minute, the U.S. Virgin Islands as well," but had left out Puerto Rico.

Markets

Treasury Yields Rise.

CNBC (9/9, Franck, 3.62M) reports the 10-year U.S. Treasury yields "rose 8 basis points higher at 1.634%" on Monday, "as gradual de-escalation of trade relations between the U.S. and China continued to ease investor angst."

Dollar Remains Flat.

Reuters (9/10, Westbrook) reports that on Tuesday, the dollar index against a basket of major currencies was flat at 98.359. Meanwhile, the yen fell "as low as 107.49 per dollar," and the euro "was flat at $1.1043, underneath an overnight high of $1.1067."

Gold Falls For Fourth Consecutive Session.

Reuters (9/10, Namboothiri) reports, "Gold prices dropped for a fourth straight session on Tuesday as risk appetite remained buoyed by hopes for global stimulus and expectations of a possible thawing in the Sino-US trade war." Spot gold "was down 0.6% at $1,490.10 per ounce, as of 0650 GMT, after hitting its lowest since Aug. 13 at $1,486 earlier in the session." Meanwhile, US gold futures "fell 0.8% to $1,498.50 per ounce."

Oil Rises For Fifth Day.

Reuters (9/10, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil futures rose for a fifth day, rising to their highest in almost six weeks, on optimism that OPEC and other producing countries may agree to extend output cuts to support prices." Brent crude "was up 31 cents, or 0.5%, at $62.90 a barrel by 0544 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate futures "were 32 cents, or 0.6%, higher at $58.17 a barrel."

Budget

House Democrats Propose Temporary Funding Bill.

The AP (9/9) reports House Democrats "are proposing a government-wide temporary funding bill to prevent a federal shutdown at month's end and to give the Senate time to get moving on $1.4 trillion in spending bills." House Appropriations Committee Chairwoman Nita Lowey said the bill would probably cover until "sometime in November." The AP predicts, "The GOP-held Senate is likely to go ahead with the move," with all sides seeking "to avoid a repeat shutdown debacle."

McConnell Supports Stopgap Funding Bill To Avoid Shutdown.

Reuters (9/9, Cornwell) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell "said Monday he expects the Senate will pass a stop-gap government funding bill before the end of September, to prevent any lapse in funding when the fiscal year ends at the end of the month." Said McConnell, "A major focus of the Senate this month will be moving forward as many of the regular appropriation bills as possible and then passing a temporary continuing resolution for the outstanding parts of the government before the end of September." Politico (9/9, Everett, 4.29M) indicates "McConnell's position aligns with that of House Democratic leaders, who said the chamber will vote next week on a stopgap bill to fund the government past Sept. 30."

The New York Times (9/9, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports "White House officials and congressional leaders are pushing for a temporary agreement in the coming weeks to hold off a funding breach and allow more time to resolve the thorniest issues," but "the race to reconcile at least a fraction of the 12 necessary bills is particularly charged, even by the usual standards of the divided Congress." At any rate, "there is some optimism that a portion of the government could be funded before the deadline."

CBO: Budget Deficit Has Surpassed $1T.

The Hill (9/9, Elis, 2.98M) reports "the federal deficit surpassed $1 trillion in the first 11 months of the 2019 fiscal year, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) said Monday." The deficit "presently stands at $1.068 trillion, though it is likely to be reduced in September as quarterly tax payments are paid." As of yesterday, "the deficit...was running $168 billion ahead of the deficit in the last fiscal year at this time."

Cybersecurity

Pennsylvania School District Hit By Ransomware Attack.

The Montgomery (PA) News (9/9, Keeler, 110K) reports from Franconia, Pennsylvania, "The cyber attack on Souderton Area School District's computer systems was a ransomware attack, the district said in an update posted on the district website Sept. 9. 'This message is an update on the network disruption that affected Souderton Area School District over the Labor Day weekend. We have confirmed that the disruption was the result of a ransomware attack. Ransomware is a software used by cybercriminals to encrypt or "lock up" files on computers or servers with the goal of making those items inaccessible. The District is working diligently with the Department of Homeland Security, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the U.S. Secret Service and local authorities, as well as with a specialized cybersecurity firm. Our priority is to remediate the disruption and encryption caused by the ransomware and to restore the District and its services to normal operations as soon as possible.'"

FBI Probing Hack Of Oklahoma Law Enforcement Retirement Fund.

KXAS-TV Dallas (9/9, 206K) reports, "A hacker stole millions from the Oklahoma Law Enforcement Retirement System but the officials say they're confident the money will be recovered." According to KXAS-TV, "Officials with the OLERS said Monday that the FBI is investigating the cyber crime and that pension payouts are not affected and are not at risk. 'We notified the FBI, who is conducting an active investigation of the crime ... we are certain the stolen funds will be recovered,' OLERS said in a statement on their website."

Cybercriminals Take In Billions Using Email Compromise, Fraudulent Tech Support.

CIO Dive (9/9, Schwartz) reports, "Email compromise, extortion, tech support fraud and payroll diversion contributed to a total of $2.7 billion in consumer and business losses in 2018, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Internet Crime Complaint Center's (IC3) report on internet cybercrimes." According to CIO Dive, "Last year the IC3 received more than 20,000 complaints pertaining to business email compromise (BEC) and email account compromise (EAC)," and "bad actors disguise as business leaders with 'legitimate' email addresses acquired through social engineering or hacking." The losses "added up to $1.2 billion because of the unauthorized transfers of funds, according to the report." CIO Dive adds, "Fraudulent tech support cost victims almost $39 million last year, a 161% increase year-over-year from 2017, according to IC3. Extortion costs increased 242% year-over-year, with victims losing more than $83 million in 2018."

Microsoft's Brad Smith Interviewed On New Book, Risk Of Major Digital Terror Attack.

The Rolling Stone (9/9, 12.8M) interviewed Microsoft President Brad Smith, and a long-time adviser to Bill Gates, about his new book, Tools and Weapons: The Promise and the Peril of the Digital Age. Smith spoke with Rolling Stone at Microsoft's offices in Times Square, where he "discussed breaking up Big Tech, why the Cambridge Analytica scandal was the Three-Mile Island of the tech sector, and what a digital September 11th attack on the US could look like." He said, "We are not yet prepared either to fully prevent such an attack, or to know how we would respond as a nation if it happened." Smith's book is not "the typical vanity project churned out by so many Fortune 500 leaders." Tools and Weapons is a glimpse "behind the curtain as Microsoft reckoned with the Snowden revelations, defended against the vicious cyberattacks, and took both the Obama and Trump Administrations to court."

Huawei Executive Claims "No Significant Impact" From Security Fears In Poland, Czech Republic.

Reuters (9/9, Kahn, Muller) reports that concerns regarding the security of Huawei's telecoms equipment in Poland and the Czech Republic "have not had a significant business impact despite creating uncertainty, a deputy head of central Europe and the Nordics said." A Czech cybersecurity watchdog's warning "that Huawei's technology could pose a security threat and Poland's arrest of a Chinese Huawei employee and a former Polish security official on spying allegations have put it under pressure." Huawei VP of Central Europe and the Nordics Radoslaw Kedzia said, "It is pretty much business as usual with a little bit more attention to show that we are transparent, open and inclusive and we have nothing to hide." Since the concerns first surface in December, "there had been no 'no significant impact' on business or major strategy shifts in the region...Kedzia said, adding that Huawei is contacting governments and customers when security fears arise."

India May Spurn Huawei On 5G. The Washington Examiner (9/9, Gehrke, 448K) reports Huawei "could be barred from India over security and domestic economic concerns." Ambassador Harsh Vardhan Shringla, India's envoy to the United States, told the Washington Examiner, "We have consulted broadly on this issue with many of our international partners. And, obviously, we will make our decision based on the best available options, including the development of alternative technologies that come up." Those comments "suggest that India is in no hurry to install 5G wireless technology." India's decision "could have major ramifications, for not only the telecommunications industry but India's burgeoning strategic partnership with the US."

Apple Accuses Google Researchers Of “Stoking Fear” About iPhone Hack.

CNN (9/9, Iyengar, 83.16M) reports Apple “says Google researchers who reported vulnerabilities in iPhone software that potentially gave hackers access to the devices are creating a ‘false impression’ and ‘stoking fear.’” Cybersecurity researchers at Google’s Project Zero “detailed the vulnerabilities in a blog post late last month.” Apple disputed those claims in a statement released Friday, “The sophisticated attack was narrowly focused, not a broad-based exploit of iPhones ‘en masse’ as described.” It said the hacked websites “used to exploit the vulnerabilities numbered fewer than a dozen and mainly featured content related to the Uyghur community, a predominantly Muslim ethnic group from China’s western Xinjiang region.” Apple said, “Google’s post, issued six months after iOS patches were released, creates the false impression of ‘mass exploitation’ to ‘monitor the private activities of entire populations in real time,’ stoking fear among all iPhone users that their devices had been compromised. This was never the case.”

Romney: US Needs To “Up Its Game” On Cybersecurity.

Deseret (UT) News (9/9, 308K) reports Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) wants to know what DHS “can be doing to better defend the nation against cyberattacks.” The Republican raised the question “during a hearing Monday in New York City of the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, held at the National September 11 Memorial & Museum in the dramatic Foundation Hall.” He asked a panel of former leaders of the agency formed in response to the to September 11, 2001, attacks, “China, Russia, North Korea, Iran, they continue to launch hundreds, thousands of attacks on technical databases, government databases, corporations and so forth. Is there some way we can do a better job of deterring that.”

Why McConnell Is Blocking Election Security Bills.

The Washington Post (9/9, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that McConnell is blocking action on election security bills because he “is wary of drawing the ire of President Trump, who has repeatedly wavered on whether Russia interfered in the presidential contest – and seems to view traditionally bipartisan discussions about election security as delegitimizing his unexpected 2016 victory over Hillary Clinton.” McConnell is likely also “concerned about the political fallout for Republican senators, several of whom have supported and even co-sponsored election security bills in the past, says a former Democratic Senate staffer who worked extensively on cybersecurity issues during the Obama Administration.” From McConnell’s perspective, there “has been real progress on this issue already.” The McConnell staffer “pointed to $380 million in election security funding that Congress appropriated to help states with election security in 2018 and to several smaller bills the Senate has passed related to election security.”

Federal Agencies Seek Solutions TO Cyber Workforce Challenge.

Federal News Network (9/9, Miller, 220) reports that, over the course of one-and-a-half days at the 10th annual Billington Cybersecurity Summit, “more than 70 speakers hit upon nearly every unclassified topic you could imagine.” Attendees even heard “from Israeli and UK cyber executives, who helped make the world a little smaller by demonstrating their challenges are no different than the ones faced by US federal agencies.” The one common theme that permeated across nearly every keynote, panel and breakout session “was the safe discussion about the cyber workforce.” In the federal sector, the Office of Management and Budget, the CIO Council, the Department of Homeland Security, and the National Institute of Standards and Technology “have all sprung up initiatives to tackle the cyber workforce program from a grand scale – think of the cyber workforce reskilling program and the executive order creating a rotational program for public and private sector experts.”

TFI/Sanctions

Seib: Iran Sanctions Working, But May Drive Country To Resist Harder.

Gerald F. Seib, in a column in the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Seib, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), writes that the Administration’s sanctions are undoubtedly hurting Iran’s budget and its economy. This threatens Iran’s ability to pay the subsidies keeping down the prices of many goods. However, it isn’t clear that this pain won’t just spur Iran to resist further, turning to threatening European states with ending the nuclear deal and possibly increasing attacks on shipping.

Federal Reserve

Analysis: Fed Cutting Interest Rates Wouldn’t Produce Trump’s Promised Improvements.

In an analysis, Politico (9/9, Guida, 4.29M) reports, “President Donald Trump is relentlessly pressing the Federal Reserve to cut interest rates,” but “there’s little evidence that” it “would supercharge economic growth and make U.S. exports more competitive” as he believes. “Borrowing costs are already ultralow” and business groups say that few members have trouble getting loans. Additionally, the dollar’s strength is due to “the relative health of the U.S. economy.” Instead, companies are “pointing...to trade tensions – sparked mostly by Trump’s policies – and slowing global growth as the major contributors to a slowdown in business investment and a contraction in U.S. manufacturing.” Meanwhile, the Fed is “grappling with the limits of its ability to bolster the economy, since rates are still low and consumer demand is strong.”

NY Fed Survey Shows Declining Inflation Expectations, More Pessimistic Outlook.

Reuters (9/9, Marte) reports that survey results released by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York Monday "showed consumers' one-year inflation outlook declined 0.2 percentage point to 2.4% last month, the lowest since the survey was launched in 2013," while the survey's "three-year outlook for inflation expectations fell by 0.1 percentage point to 2.5%." According to Reuters, "the U.S. economy is producing an inflation rate persistently short of the Fed's 2% goal." The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and Bloomberg (9/9, 4.73M) also cover this story.

Financial Regulatory Agencies

SEC Head Warns Countries May Seek To Advantage Domestic Companies By Not Punishing Corruption.

The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Michaels, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that, in a speech at the Economic Club of New York, Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Jay Clayton said that the US have strongly punished violations of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, but believes that some countries are not punishing corporate bribery in a strategy to boost domestic companies compared to US companies, which follow the law. Clayton did not say he would back on enforcement of FCPA, but would raise the issue with overseas regulators and law enforcement.

SEC Proposes CAT Changes.

Reuters (9/9, Johnson) reports the Securities and Exchange Commission on Monday proposed greater transparency for the groups managing the Consolidated Audit Trail (CAT) repository, which is intended to hold all stock and options "message traffic" and prevent "sudden and dramatic shifts in financial markets." The SEC said the proposed changes were designed to "decrease the likelihood of additional delays to CAT implementation by increasing operational transparency and attaching financial accountability." The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Osipovich, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the SEC said that the exchanges would face fines for missing further deadlines on CAT. SEC Chairman Jay Clayton said, "CAT needs to be implemented without further delays."

Kraninger: CFPB Stepping Up Enforcement Actions.

American Banker (9/9, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger said the bureau is stepping up enforcement actions after predecessor Mick Mulvaney temporarily froze its ability to use the tool. Total enforcement actions "were significantly down" under Mulvaney's leadership, but Kraninger "said in a speech that enforcement actions are an effective way for the CFPB to discourage violations of consumer protection laws." Speaking at a National Association of Federally-Insured Credit Unions event, she said, "Public decisive action against wrongdoers does send a clear message to the marketplace and hopefully continues to deter unlawful behavior and support, as I've said, that level playing field, so that's something that we'll continue to do and have done." Still, Kraninger "remains focused on preventing harmful activity as opposed to punishing bad actors after the fact through enforcement actions, she said."

States, DC Sue Over SEC Rule Change.

Reuters (9/10) reports seven states and the District of Columbia are suing to block Securities and Exchange Commission rules allowing "brokers to recommend products that benefit them as long as they disclose the conflict." The plaintiffs "argued that the rule change is 'arbitrary and capricious.'"

Internal Revenue Service

IRS Proposed Dropping Safe Harbor For Built-In Gains, Losses.

Law360 (9/9, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Internal Revenue Service "proposed new rules that would eliminate a safe harbor for calculating a company's built-in gains and losses when a corporation undergoes an ownership change." The change was intended "to streamline the process."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Chase Continues Expansion Across Greater Washington.

Behind a subscriber wall, the Washington Business Journal (9/9, Medici, Subscription Publication, 882K) reports JPMorgan Chase "continues to expand its nascent branch network across Greater Washington." Since the bank announced its move into the area in April 2018, Chase "has applied for 36 branch locations locally, according to filings so far submitted to the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency." Chase has opened the doors on 14 of those branches and plans to open about 36 to 37 across the Baltimore, D.C., and Richmond areas by the end of 2019, according to Alfonso Guzman, who lead's the bank's expansion effort in the area. Guzman said in an interview that Chase has tentative plans to open between 50 and 55 branches in the region by the end of 2020.

Customer-Centric Banking To Gain Momentum.

In a Forbes (9/9, Dryer, 9.71M) Finance Council post, Trevor Dryer, EVP and GM at CUNA Mutual Group's Mirador, lists trends "shaping fintech into 2020." As more fintechs cater to Millennials, Dryer says "banks should look for new ways to serve younger customers' needs." Dryer also predicts that with only 18 percent of customers going to a bank branch, paycheck startups could "offer[] the option to withdraw cash on a prepaid card, bypassing the need for a bank account altogether." As such, "banks should offer similar innovations to their paycheck-deposit customers – before they're pushed out entirely." Meanwhile, "big money" will flow into fintech, as firms "focus on putting customer needs first." The future of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency's fintech charter "is still in doubt, but even the attempt to create such a charter signals a more permissive regulatory atmosphere." Banks should use big data on customers "to deliver more of what they want."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The G.O.P.'s War On Women's Health Gets Results." The New York Times (9/9, 18.61M) editorializes, "The Trump administration's recent efforts to undermine the nation's Title X family planning program are already having their intended effect, making it harder for women's health clinics to stay afloat and for patients to afford birth control and other services." The Times says the changes "make clear that these politicians have always been trying to do more than prevent abortions. These are attacks on women's ability to control if and when they get pregnant," and "on their health and well-being."

Washington Post.

"No, Sens. McConnell And Blunt, You're The Ones Who Need To Step Up." A Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M) editorial says President Trump "will never step up" on the issue of gun control and argues that "hiding behind his failure" is a way for Senate Majority Leader McConnell "and other Republican senators to abdicate their legislative authority and their responsibility to the country." The Post calls on the Senate to "stop waiting for Mr. Trump. Stop making excuses," and pass gun control legislation.

"Everyone Should Be Alarmed By The Vaping Crisis." In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M) writes, "There are still more questions than answers about the electronic devices that vaporize fluids in an alternative to the known hazards of burning tobacco, but both the immediate crisis and the longer-term regulatory and health issues suggest much more scrutiny needs to be given to vaping. ... Everyone should be alarmed about the rapid growth in popularity of vaping among teenagers and young people."

"Trump's Camp David Cancellation Offered Temporary Relief From A Bad Deal." A Washington Post (9/9, 14.2M) editorial says President Trump's decision to cancel the peace talks with the Taliban "avoided an unseemly spectacle — the killers of thousands of Americans hosted at the presidential retreat — and offered at least temporary relief to the many Afghans and Americans who believed he was rushing into a bad bargain." The Post, however, cautions that Trump could revive the talks or decide to withdraw US troops without a peace deal. Afghans, it says, "can only hope that he chooses to set aside his personal political agenda and hold out for a better deal."

Wall Street Journal.

"Subduing The Housing Godzillas." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) praises the Administration's plans for reforming Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, but says it is unlikely Congress will go along.

"President Tigar Strikes Again." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) casts US District Judge Jon Tigar as overstepping his authority and abusing the use of injunctions, and urges the Supreme Court to step in.

"WeWork's China Syndrome." A Wall Street Journal (9/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial likens the corporate governance of We Co. to a Chinese company and says the fact that the American press and investors were able to discover problems with the company is evidence that the markets can do a better job than a regulator would.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Being president is a pressure-filled job. It's important for the presidents to find a way to let off steam. Obama played basketball. George W. Bush cleared brush on his ranch, Lincoln liked going to the theater – it took his mind off things. When it comes to President Trump, his passion is beefing with his enemies. ... First up is the controversy that just won't die, it's President Trump versus the weather. Eight days after he incorrectly warned Alabama that Hurricane Dorian was headed its way, Trump is still insisting that he was right all along. ... And you realize there's a chance this hurricane beef might never end, and I mean never. Like when Trump is, like, 100 years old, he will be laying on his death bed surrounded by the people he loves – and Eric – and he will still be, like, 'I was right about Alabama.'"

Trevor Noah: "Over the weekend, Trump tweeted out he was canceling a secret meeting planned with the Taliban because they had launched an attack in Afghanistan. And this came out of the blue, because no one knew Trump scheduled peace talks with the Taliban. Trump is like your best friend telling you he's getting a divorce and you're like, 'I didn't know you were married.'"

Trevor Noah: "Over the past nine years, the US government has been trying to get a peace deal with the Taliban to end the war in Afghanistan...[but Trump] demanded that the Taliban come to Camp David in America to sign the deal with him on camera so that he would get the praise. But the Taliban didn't want to come to America, firstly because they don't trust the United States, which I understand...and secondly, because they probably don't want to deal with the TSA. Can you imagine how stressful that [is] going to be for them? ... The guy at the TSA is going to be, like, what do you do for a living? 'I'm leader of the Taliban.' So you're a terrorist? 'Yes, but not for this trip, okay? Not for this trip, this time I'm off the clock.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President had a very busy couple of days tweeting. That guy does nothing but work. It really is remarkable. Most notably, he tweeted about a meeting, a very high-profile secret meeting that ultimately did not take place. On Saturday he wrote, 'Unbeknownst to almost everyone, the major Taliban leaders and separately the President of Afghanistan were going to secretly meet with me at Camp David on Sunday.' Only Trump would brag about a meeting he didn't have."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Donald Trump invited the Taliban to Camp David three days before 9/11. Next month, he's taking Al-Qaeda to Six Flags."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump invited the Taliban to Camp David the weekend before 9/11. That's like – there's nothing that's like that. That is what – that is only that. Nothing else is like that. Does Trump not know what 9/11 is?"

Stephen Colbert: "According to people familiar with the talks, Trump was taken with the idea of sealing a landmark peace agreement in one of the most presidential settings, and 'wanted to be the deal maker who would put the final parts together himself, or at least be perceived to be. He wanted the praise for a diplomatic achievement that he didn't achieve. That's right, he's a shoo-in for the Nobel Participation Prize."

Stephen Colbert: "But while Trump might be close to making peace with the Taliban, he's taking on America's true enemies – John Legend and Chrissy Teigen. John Legend has long been an advocate for criminal justice reform, and on Sunday, he appeared on an MSNBC town hall with Lester Holt to talk about it, broadcast from a prison yard. Apparently, the President tuned in. I assume he was hoping to catch a glimpse of some of his former campaign staff."

Jimmy Fallon: "It is fashion week here in New York City. ... This is the time of year when all the big names release their new lines. For example, last night, President Trump released his new line of insults against Chrissy Teigen and John Legend."

Jimmy Fallon: "You know these are strange times when the President attacks John Legend and Chrissy Teigen, but invites the Taliban to Camp David."

Jimmy Fallon: "You guys, we're just three days away from the next Democratic debate, and this one will feature ten leading candidates all on stage at the same time. That's right, ten candidates all on stage, talking over each other on ABC. It's basically 'The View' on steroids."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump claimed on Saturday that he had scheduled and then canceled a meeting with the Taliban at Camp David to discuss a peace agreement. And if you're wondering where we are as a nation, my first thought was, I don't know, I'll believe it when I hear it from the Taliban."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump told reporters today that he would release a report on his finances before the 2020 election, and said that people will be 'shocked' that the numbers are many, many times what you think. Okay, but anything times zero is zero."

James Corden: "There's been a big announcement from the White House. President Trump canceled what were going to be secret peace talks at Camp David over the weekend. Trump had planned to meet with the terrorist organization known as the Taliban. Yeah, I know, I know. I'm thinking the exact same thing. I really hope him canceling doesn't damage America's relationship with the Taliban."

James Corden: "Trump was scheduled to meet them on Sunday, and this is a big deal. You know what this means? Trump almost worked over a weekend."

James Corden: "He called off the peace talks at the last minute. There was one big hangup. It turns out no one in the Taliban plays golf."

James Corden: "In other Trump news, the President took to Twitter to praise himself for signing criminal justice reform into law. And he took the opportunity to lash out at John Legend and Chrissy Teigen. He wrote, 'Now that it is passed, people that have virtually nothing to do with it are taking the praise. Guys like boring musician John Legend and his filthy-mouthed wife.' Yeah. I'm guessing no Camp David for them either."

James Corden: "Trump called John Legend 'a boring musician,' and called Chrissy Teigen 'a filthy-mouthed wife.' In other news, Melania's campaign against cyberbullying is still going strong."

James Corden: "To be fair, Trump has done a lot of work to support criminal justice. He has had like half his campaign staff thrown in jail."

Trump Warns Chinese Trade Deal Will Be "Much Tougher" If They Wait Till After 2020 Election.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "China is doing very badly, worst year in 27 – was supposed to start buying our agricultural product now – no signs that they are doing so. That is the problem with China, they just don't come through. Our Economy has become MUCH larger than the Chinese Economy is last 3 years. ... My team is negotiating with them now, but they always change the deal in the end to their benefit. They should probably wait out our Election to see if we get one of the Democrat stiffs like Sleepy Joe. Then they could make a GREAT deal, like in past 30 years, and continue... to ripoff the USA, even bigger and better than ever before. The problem with them waiting, however, is that if & when I win, the deal that they get will be much tougher than what we are negotiating now...or no deal at all. We have all the cards, our past leaders never got it!"

Reiterating the argument he made on Twitter, the AP (7/30) reports, Trump later told reporters, "China would love to wait and just hope. ... They would just love if I got defeated so they could deal with somebody like Elizabeth Warren or Sleepy Joe Biden... They'll pray that Trump loses. And then they'll make a deal with a stiff, somebody that doesn't know what they're doing like Obama and Biden, like all the presidents before."

Bloomberg (7/30, Dopp, Sink, 4.73M) reports Trump also said later Tuesday that "he had spoken recently with Chinese President Xi Jinping without elaborating on when or the substance of the discussion." Reuters (7/30, Heavey, Brice, Alper) also reports that "speaking to reporters at the White House, Trump said the trade talks were going well with China, but added the United States would 'either make a great deal or no deal at all.'"

Trump said in an interview with C-SPAN (7/30, 56K), "We cannot let China do what they have done to us over the last 25 years. They have taken hundreds of billions of dollars out of our country every single year." Asked if he thinks he can reach a deal, Trump said, "I think I can reach a deal if I want to. I think they are right now hurting. The tariffs are killing them. Companies are moving out of China. They are going all over, including they are coming here, by the way, because they don't want to pay the tariffs. Yeah, I think I can reach a deal. Absolutely."

Reuters (7/31) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and USTR Robert Lighthizer "shook hands with Chinese Vice Premier Liu He before beginning trade talks in Shanghai on Wednesday in a bid to end a year-long trade war." Reuters (7/31) reports separately that American negotiators "should show 'sincerity' and temper expectations as they begin a new round of talks with Chinese counterparts to ease trade tensions between the two sides, state-owned tabloid Global Times said on Wednesday." The paper "accused 'trade hawks' of refusing to consider China's legitimate interests, adding that the U.S. side should hold 'reasonable expectations' after making 'unrealistic demands that infringe upon China's sovereignty and dignity.'"

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Deng, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Mnuchin and Lighthizer had dinner Tuesday with the Chinese side, led by Chinese Vice Premier Liu He, at the Fairmont Peace Hotel, according to a person familiar with the situation. The piece says a more formal round of talks was set to take place at a government guesthouse in the city on Wednesday. Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-IA) said regarding Trump's tweets, "I don't think you ought to make anything out of it except to forget the tweet. Just forget his tweet and say, 'What a blessing it is that, in Shanghai, Lighthizer and Mnuchin are sitting down with their negotiators now, and when they're talking there's a chance of getting something done.'"

Bloomberg (7/31, 4.73M) reports this morning that the two sides "concluded a new round of trade talks in Shanghai on Wednesday following a hiatus of almost three months, with little immediate evidence of progress being made toward ending their year-long dispute." Mnuchin and Lighthizer "wrapped up talks with their Chinese counterparts" Wednesday afternoon at the Xijiao State Guest Hotel.

The AP (7/31, Kang, McDonald) reports the "meeting ended about 40 minutes ahead of schedule. Neither delegation spoke to reporters before U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin left for the airport."

Reuters (7/31) reports this morning that China's foreign ministry "said on Wednesday that the United States was to blame for flip-flopping in bilateral trade negotiations over the past year." Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying "made the remarks during a daily press briefing. Top U.S. and Chinese trade negotiators concluded their latest round of trade negotiations in Shanghai earlier on Wednesday."

The Washington Post (7/30, Telford, Paletta, Lynch, 14.2M) reports "some influential business leaders are growing worried at the lack of progress in the talks, which the administration in May said were on the verge of a historic deal before collapsing." The Post adds, "Despite Trump and...Xi...agreeing last month to restart negotiations, the bargaining has been slow to resume."

CNBC (7/30, Cox, 3.62M) reports "while U.S. officials have tamped down expectations for a major deal this week, there is hope that at least some progress can be made in the tit-for-tat tariff battle that began more than a year ago."

Politico (7/30, Rodriguez, 4.29M) reports "industry officials and leading experts continue to warn not to expect any big news from this week's negotiations." Politico (7/30, Palmer, 4.29M) reports separately that "there is growing skepticism that the trade fight between the world's two biggest economies will be resolved before American voters decide in November 2020 whether to give Trump a second term." The piece says the "most some expect from this week's talks is an agreement to meet again, as well as a resumption of Chinese purchases of U.S. farm goods and progress on tech issues."

To the Washington Times (7/30, Howell, 492K), Trump "tore into China as untrustworthy and an economic failure Tuesday, while his top negotiators were in Shanghai trying to hammer out a trade deal." The New York Times (7/30, Swanson, Smialek, 18.61M), meanwhile, casts Trump as "taking credit for weakening China's economy and downplaying the likelihood of a deal before the 2020 election." Trump's comments "appeared to be an effort to give his negotiators more leverage and to pressure China into making concessions in talks this week."

Politico (7/30, McCrimmon, 4.29M) also reports that as the officials visit Shanghai this week, "state and local governments are warning that Trump's feud with Beijing has put their agricultural communities in a tough spot."

Also covering the topic are CQ Roll Call (7/30, Bennett, 154K), The South China Morning Post \(HKG\) (7/30, 138K), Bloomberg (7/31, 4.73M), Business Insider (7/30, 3.67M), and The Hill (7/30, Frazin, 2.98M).

Administration Expected To Reissue Iran Sanctions Waivers This Week.

Politico (7/30, Johnson, 4.29M) reports that "after building up its maximum pressure campaign on Iran," the Trump Administration is "poised deliver a disappointment to hawks who want tougher action against Tehran." Secretary of State Pompeo is expected to "reissue waivers this week allowing continued international work on nuclear projects inside Iran, according to two sources familiar with the deliberations." Politico notes that "some lawmakers have been pressing the administration to eliminate the waivers since Iran announced earlier this month that it had breached the limits on uranium enrichment set by the nuclear deal." The piece says "the likely move when the next deadline hits on Thursday follows a heated debate among senior administration officials and lawmakers supportive of much of the administration's foreign policy, with National Security Adviser John Bolton and his allies on the Hill arguing to end the waivers and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin the chief proponent of extending them for another round." Politico says Trump "himself has vacillated on the issue." In one recent meeting, he "instructed senior administration officials to eliminate the waivers, according to a U.S. official with direct knowledge of the discussion. In a subsequent meeting, he backed Mnuchin, who argued for extending the waivers, over Pompeo."

The Washington Post (7/30, Rogin, 14.2M) reports that in the Oval Office meeting last week, Trump "sided with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who argued that the administration should again renew sanctions waivers related to five separate parts of Iran's nuclear program." Mnuchin "prevailed over the objections of" Pompeo and Bolton, "according to six administration officials." The piece explains that Mnuchin reportedly "argued to Trump that if the sanctions were not again waived as required by law by Aug. 1, the United States would have to sanction Russian, Chinese and European firms that are involved in projects inside Iran that were established as part of the 2015 nuclear deal. The Treasury Department asked for more time to navigate the collateral effects of these sanctions." A senior Administration official said, "We still have the goal of ending these waivers. These waivers can be revoked at any time, as developments with Iran warrant. But because of the Treasury Department's legitimate concerns, we've decided to extend them for now." Reuters (7/30) also covers the Post report.

NBC News (7/31, De Luce, 6.14M) says Trump "appeared to come around to Mnuchin's view in recent days, much to the frustration of advocates of a tough line on Iran inside and outside the administration."

CNN (7/30, Hansler, Atwood, Gaouette, 83.16M) reports that "earlier this month, Sigal Mandelker, under secretary of the Treasury for terrorism and financial intelligence, made the case that the Trump administration's current 'maximum pressure' campaign against Iran is working. Administration officials have argued the US sanctions push will force Iran to change its behavior." She told the Aspen security forum, "Without a doubt, the sanctions are working." CNN says she pointed to "Iranian oil exports being at their lowest levels ever and Iranian proxies publicly appealing for donations."

Administration Divided Over Tax Cut For Investors.

The New York Times (7/30, Rappeport, Tankersley, 18.61M) reports Trump Administration officials are "divided over whether to give investors a big tax cut that would primarily benefit the rich before the 2020 election heats up in earnest." The piece explains that Republican senators and conservative anti-tax groups are "increasingly pushing the administration to use executive authority to deliver a tax cut to investors on profits they earn when selling assets like stocks or bonds." Supporters of the plan include Larry Kudlow, the director of President Trump's National Economic Council, "who is leading a White House task force examining the proposal." However, the Times says "the move has skeptics, including Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, whose department is bound by a 1992 opinion from the Office of Legal Counsel that determined the Treasury Department does not have the authority to index capital gains to inflation by regulation." According to the Times, some Republicans, "including senior Treasury Department officials, have privately expressed worry that a unilateral tax cut for investors would simply give Mr. Trump's potential 2020 rivals more fodder for those attacks."

Politico (7/30, Becker, 4.29M) reports 21 Senate Republicans "urged Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin in a Monday letter to use executive authority to index capital gains to inflation, saying such a move would 'remove the unfair inflation tax on savings and investment' and be a 'positive, pro-growth change.'"

Law360 (7/30, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall that Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR), the top Senate Finance Committee Democrat, "again warned Republican senators and Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin on Tuesday against indexing capital gains to inflation rates."

Parties Fail To Reach Agreement In Fight Over Trump's New York Tax Returns.

Politico (7/30, Faler, 4.29M) reports lawyers for President Trump, House Democrats, and New York state told a federal judge Tuesday "that they have failed to resolve a dispute over the president's state tax returns." The three sides said in a joint filing, "Notwithstanding their best efforts, the parties are unable to reach agreement." The piece notes they had been "ordered by District Judge Carl Nichols on Monday to figure out among themselves how to proceed in the case, in which Trump is demanding a temporary restraining order to prevent Democrats from taking advantage of a newly passed New York law designed to give them access to the president's state tax filings." Politico says Trump is "challenging the underlying law, and is concerned that Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal (D-Mass.) could obtain the records while the case is pending." The piece notes Neal is also "separately suing the Treasury Department for the president's federal returns under a 1924 law allowing the heads of Congress' tax committees to examine anyone's confidential tax information."

Reuters (7/30, Wolfe, Morgan) reports the Treasury Department has "denied the committee's request despite a federal law saying the department 'shall furnish' such records to the panel if requested." Treasury "said the committee had no legitimate purpose for reviewing Trump's returns."

The Hill (7/30, Jagoda, 2.98M) also reports.

California Governor Signs Law Requiring Tax Returns To Participate In Presidential Primary. The AP (7/30, Ronayne) reports California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) "signed a law Tuesday requiring presidential candidates to release their tax returns to appear on the state's primary ballot, a move aimed squarely at Republican President Donald Trump." The AP adds, "even if the law withstands a likely legal challenge, Trump could avoid the requirements by choosing not to compete in California's primary." At any rate, says the Los Angeles Times (7/30, Myers, 4.64M), Trump "is likely to fight back." Tim Murtaugh, "communications director for the president's reelection campaign," is quoted as saying, "The Constitution is clear on the qualifications for someone to serve as president and states cannot add additional requirements on their own. ... The bill also violates the 1st Amendment right of association, since California can't tell political parties which candidates their members can or cannot vote for in a primary election." The Times also reports that "during legislative debates on the bill, GOP legislators repeatedly accused Democrats of being motivated solely by their anger at Trump."

Politico (7/30, White, 4.29M) points out that "by signing the bill, Newsom broke with his predecessor [Jerry] Brown, who vetoed a similar bill in 2017, warning then of constitutional hurdles and the risk of escalating a political conflict." Politico adds that "while Brown displayed ample enmity toward Trump – particularly over the administration's approach to climate change – he was seen as more cautious and moderate than Newsom."

The Washington Post (7/30, Wagner, 14.2M) says the new law "could prompt other Democratic-led states to follow suit." It notes that House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal (D-MA) has "requested six years of Trump's personal and business tax returns, from 2013 to 2018, a period that includes several years before Trump became president." Neal recently "sued the Trump administration in federal court to obtain the records, after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin argued in a May letter that Neal's 'unprecedented request' should be denied."

The New York Times (7/30, Medina, Karni, 18.61M) says that "the Trump campaign, which has been tracking ballot access issues carefully for months and coordinating with the White House Counsel's Office, is likely to respond with a lawsuit, according to an official with the campaign." That suit "could potentially include a number of plaintiffs, including the Republican National Committee, the California GOP and the Trump campaign, but the official warned that nothing about a suit had been finalized."

Reuters (7/30, Whitcomb) also reports.

Federal Judge Rules IRS, Treasury Donor Guidance Is Unlawful.

The Hill (7/30, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports a federal judge in Montana "ruled on Tuesday that IRS guidance reducing donor disclosure requirements for certain nonprofits is unlawful and will be set aside." The piece says the ruling is a "win for two states with Democratic governors that challenged the guidance — Montana and New Jersey — and is likely to be cheered by Democrats in Congress who have criticized the guidance." The IRS and Treasury Department released guidance last year that "ended a requirement for certain tax-exempt groups to report the names and addresses of major donors on annual forms." The Hill notes Treasury and the IRS had "said the lawsuit should be dismissed, arguing that the states lack standing to sue. They also argued that the guidance was an interpretive rule that didn't need a notice and comment period."

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Rubin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Democrats had been complaining about the rule since it was released last July. Judge Brian Morris wrote, "A proper notice-and-comment procedure will provide the IRS with the opportunity to review and consider information submitted by the public and interested parties. Then, and only then, may the IRS act on a fully-informed basis when making potentially significant changes to federal tax law."

Trump, GOP Senate Leaders Making Push For Party Loyalty On Budget Vote.

Politico (7/30, Everett, Bresnahan, Ferris, 4.29M) reports President Trump, Senate Majority Leader McConnell, and Senate Majority Whip Thune "are working to whip up support for their bipartisan, $2.7 trillion budget deal, hoping to stave off embarrassing defections ahead of a vote that's splitting the party." The effort is intended "to win over undecided rank-and-file senators to avoid a replay of last week's effort in the House, when roughly two-thirds of House Republicans opposed the deal, according to multiple senators and aides. Trump is 'strategically' making calls to on-the-fence members, Thune said." Sen. David Perdue is among those "trying to round up support for the deal struck by Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin." He said, "I'm disappointed it's not 100 percent [support]," arguing that voting against the budget leads to billions in extra spending. "Anybody who thinks that they're spending less by voting no on this thing, just doesn't know ... a no vote means you're going to spend more." Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer argued the chamber should vote on Tuesday, saying, "I believe we should do this today. It's the most important thing we can do. Secretary Mnuchin has said there is a danger to the debt defaulting." The Hill (7/30, Carney, 2.98M) also reports.

Lawmakers Unveil Foreign Investor Tax.

The Washington Post (7/30, Lynch, 14.2M) reports Fed Chair Jerome Powell has "spent several months fending off President Trump's demands to lower the value of the dollar to help American manufacturers sell their goods abroad. Under a bipartisan Senate bill due Wednesday, the central bank chief no longer would have any choice." Sens. Tammy Baldwin (D-WI) and Josh Hawley (R-MO) are introducing legislation that would "require the Fed to balance the nation's current account, the broadest measure of the trade balance, within five years." The Post says the "initiative shows that the trade debate is devoting greater attention to global currency issues." The piece points out that during the 2016 campaign, Trump "vowed to target China for allegedly reducing the value of the yuan to gain a trade advantage. But the Treasury Department has shied from officially labeling Beijing a currency manipulator." Meanwhile, a Commerce Department plan to "impose duties on trading partners that effectively subsidize exports by depressing the value of their currency also may be stillborn. It has been opposed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and is expected to be blocked by the Treasury."

Opinion: Amazon Is Not Destroying Retail.

In an opinion piece for Bloomberg (7/30, 4.73M), Karl W. Smith, a former assistant professor of economics at the University of North Carolina's school of government and founder of the blog Modeled Behavior, writes in response to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin's recent argument that Amazon has destroyed US retail so the DOJ is right to investigate it. Smith says while Mnuchin "is not wrong that brick-and-mortar retail sales are flat," what's happening "is a lot more complicated than e-commerce giants such as Amazon stealing business from mom-and-pop stores on Main Street. There is a larger trend at play, involving how Americans are choosing to spend their time as they grow older and wealthier." Due to an aging society, both small-business creation and dynamism are in decline in the US, and "entrepreneurial companies such as Amazon are the best answer to this type of slowdown." Amazon is "not destroying retail," but "saving it."

Bipartisan Lawmakers Say Trump Administration Delaying F-16 Sales To Taiwan.

The New York Times (7/30, Wong, Schmitt, 18.61M) reports members of Congress from both parties "have accused the Trump administration of delaying an $8 billion sale of F-16 fighter jets to Taiwan." China has said it strongly opposes the sale. Representative Michael McCaul (R-TX), who sits on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, is quoted as saying, "Our support for Taiwan through arms transfers is not up for negotiation with Beijing. ... I will support the sale of F-16s to Taiwan as soon the State Department notices them to our committee, which I expect to happen soon." Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ) is quoted as saying the Trump Administration "is possibly obstructing the sale of F-16 fighter jets to Taiwan so the president can use them as leverage in his failing trade war with China." The piece says the State Department "declined to comment on the proposed arms sales. The Treasury Department and White House National Security Council also declined to comment."

Leading National News

Consumer Spending Growth Moderates As Inflation Remains At Low Level.

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Torry, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports consumer spending fell slightly in June but demonstrated persistent strength. The Commerce Department said Tuesday that consumer spending rose 0.3 percent in June, in line with economists' forecasts. Personal income was up 0.4 percent, also in line with expectations. The personal consumption expenditures price index, the Federal Reserve's preferred measure of inflation, was up 0.1 percent for the month and 1.4 percent year-over-year. The core PCE price index, which eliminates volatile food and energy prices, was up 0.2 percent in June and 1.6 percent year-over-year.

Reuters (7/30, Mutikani) reports the results are "pointing to slower economic growth and benign inflation that could see the Federal Reserve cutting interest rates on Wednesday for the first time in a decade."

WSJournal Highlights Increase In Worker Wages.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/30, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights the increase in worker wages reported by the Bureau of Economic Analysis on Tuesday. Employee compensation was up five percent in 2018 after rising 4.5 percent a year earlier, which the Journal credits to a strong economy.

Bloomberg Analysis: Trump's Effort To Dismantle WTO Body Scores "Major Victory."

Under the headline "Trump's Bid To Dismantle Global Trading System Poised For A Win," Bloomberg (7/30, Donnan, Baschuk, 4.73M) reports that President Trump's "assault on the World Trade Organization – and the global system of rules that guide international businesses – may be quietly scoring a major victory. Thanks to a US veto on new appeals judges, the WTO's dispute arm is expected to start slipping into the institutional equivalent of a coma at the end of this year." The veto has "set off a scramble by the European Union, Canada and other countries to set up a temporary alternative allowing the use of arbitrators rather than three-judge panels to hear appeals." Bloomberg says "by creating that system, WTO members may be giving Trump and aides – who, like him, have deep-rooted skepticism of multilateral institutions – the very thing they want.”

Apple Revenue Up Slightly In Q3 Despite iPhone Sales Drop.

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, A1, Mickle, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Apple's revenue rose one percent in the second quarter despite weak iPhone sales. Profit was down for a third straight quarter, but Apple was able to offset a 12 percent drop in iPhone sales with revenue growth in iPads, Macs, and every other area of its business.

WSJournal Calls For Rational Exchange Rate Stability Structure.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/30, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes central banks in the US, Europe, and Japan for racing to cut rates even if there is no rational reason to do so. The Journal calls for consideration of a formal system of exchange rate stability to remove the irrationality and chaos.

Study: Bulk Of Administration's Farm Aid Goes To Wealthy Farmers.

Reuters (7/30, Pamuk) reports that “more than half of the Trump administration's $8.4 billion in trade aid payments to US farmers through April was received by the top 10% of recipients, the country's biggest and most successful farmers, a study by an advocacy group showed on Tuesday.” Highlighting what Reuters calls “an uneven distribution of the bailout, which was designed to help offset effects of the US-China trade war, the Environmental Working Group said the top 1% of aid recipients received an average of more than $180,000 while the bottom 80% were paid less than $5,000 in aid.” The EWG said its findings are based on data obtained from the US Department of Agriculture through Freedom of Information Act.

Trump Says Administration Will Seek Trade Accord With Brazil.

Reuters (7/30, Alper, Ayres, Rochabrun) reports President Trump on Tuesday “said he will pursue a US trade agreement with Brazil, suggesting a friendly relationship with President Jair Bolsonaro could help lower trade barriers between the two biggest economies in the Americas.” Speaking to reporters at the White House, Trump said, “We're going to work on a free trade agreement with Brazil.” He did not provide further details, but Reuters notes the remarks come ahead of Commerce Secretary Ross' meeting Wednesday with Bolsonaro in Brasilia.

Trump, Mongolian President To Discuss Trade During Talks Today.

The Washington Times (7/30, Howell, 492K) reports President Trump will “look to bolster trade with Mongolia, a ‘pearl between two oyster shells,’ when the president of the Asian nation visits the White House on Wednesday.” Senior Administration officials “said 90 percent of Mongolia's trade flows through its neighbor, China, yet the administration would like to help it diversify its options by bolstering the US partnership.” Officials said Trump and Mongolian President Khaltmaagiin Battulga “may discuss a bipartisan bill from Rep. Ted Yoho of Florida and Sen. Ben Cardin of Maryland that would allow Mongolia to ship cashmere to the US, duty-free, so it is less reliant on China for trade.”

France: Trump's Threats To Tax French Wine “Completely Moronic.”

The Washington Post (7/30, McAuley, 14.2M) reports that after France imposed “special taxes on certain revenue that large US tech companies such as Google, Amazon, Facebook and Apple earn in France,” President Trump “immediately threatened a trade war of sorts, by imposing retaliatory tariffs on French wines.” Trump told reporters Friday, “They shouldn't have done this. I told them, I said, ‘Don't do it because if you do it, I'm going to tax your wine.’” On Tuesday, French Agriculture Minister Didier Guillaume responded, saying, “It's absurd, in terms of having a political and economic debate, to say that ‘if you tax the GAFAs, I'll tax wine.’ It's completely moronic.” The Post notes that “GAFAs is the acronym used widely in Europe to denote Google, Amazon, Facebook and Apple.”

Reuters (7/30, Duvignau, Rose), meanwhile, reports that “American lovers of fine French wine are likely to keep stocking their cellars and uncorking bottles despite...Trump's threat to impose a tax,” but “makers of cheaper French vintages are concerned.” Trump has “raised the prospect of tariffs in retaliation for a planned digital services tax by France,” but “some experts say the fact that Americans mostly import prestige wines from Burgundy or Bordeaux which are less sensitive to higher price tags should cushion the blow.”

JPMorgan Using AI To Improve Marketing To Potential Borrowers.

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Ives, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports JPMorgan Chase is deploying AI to improve its marketing pitches to potential borrowers, signing a five-year deal with software firm Persado to help improve its marketing efforts. JPMorgan will first apply Persado to online display ads and direct-response emails and may expand its use to headlines on direct mail.

First Circuit Asks MA's Top Court To Weigh In On JPMorgan Foreclosure Suit.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (7/30, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, “The First Circuit will ask Massachusetts' top court just how specific JPMorgan Chase Bank NA should have been in a foreclosure notice, hoping to settle an issue the banking industry has said could have widespread consequences if decided against Chase, according to an order made public Tuesday.”

Judge Approves Investors' $10M Forex Deal With Citi, MUFG.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (7/30, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, “A New York federal judge gave investors the go-ahead on Monday for their $10 million settlement with Citigroup and a smaller deal with MUFG Bank Ltd. that would resolve claims that the banks participated in a scheme to rig foreign exchange markets.” US District Judge Lorna G. Schofield “was apparently satisfied with the investors' latest estimates for the size of the settlement class – which, according to court records, is currently pegged at 99,198 investors from eight states who indirectly purchased a forex instrument from Citigroup.”

Shareholders Approve BB&T-SunTrust Merger.

American Banker (7/30, Davis, Peters, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports BB&T's $28.2 million deal to buy SunTrust Banks “was endorsed by investors on both sides but still requires the OK of federal regulators.” In separate votes, BB&T's investors on Tuesday “approved the deal and a bylaw change that will allow the company to be renamed Truist,” with about 98 percent backing the merger, and 96 percent of voting shares supporting the name change. At the SunTrust meeting, almost 99 percent voted in favor of the merger. During BB&T's meeting, CEO Kelly King said one of the biggest challenges facing Truist will be convincing customers that it can deliver state-of-the-art technology. The nation's four biggest banks “have spent billions of dollars telling people they have all the services they need...and that perception has become reality. We need the capacity to go toe-to-toe with those banks,” he said.

Trump Hails American Democracy In Jamestown Speech.

Media coverage of the President's speech in Jamestown puts it in the context of his recent criticism of some minority Democratic lawmakers and of conditions in Rep. Elijah Cummings' Baltimore district, which some Democrats and media figures have sought to cast as motivated by racial animus. Along those lines, for example, Reuters (7/30, Holland) highlights the fact that “Trump, under fire in Washington for verbal attacks on racial minority lawmakers, condemned American slavery on Tuesday.” The AP (7/30, Rankin) says, meanwhile, the speech “in historic Jamestown played out against a backdrop of tension over his recent disparaging remarks about minority members of Congress and was boycotted by black Virginia state legislators.” Yesterday, Trump “noted that 1619...was the year the first enslaved Africans arrived in the colonies, saying, ‘We remember every sacred soul who suffered the horrors of slavery and the anguish of bondage.’” To the CBS Evening News (7/30, story 7, 1:10, Barnett, 4.01M), “the President's tone changed” at the ceremony in Jamestown “marking 400 years since the first legislative assembly in America and the arrival of the first enslaved Africans.” Trump was shown saying, “African Americans have built, strengthened, inspired, uplifted, protected, defended, and sustained our nation.”

At any rate, WTKR-TV Norfolk, VA (7/30, 5:03 p.m. EDT, 20K) reported, Trump was “met with a standing ovation.” The President was shown saying, “In America the people will forever rule. The people will forever rule. The people will forever reign. And the people will be forever sovereign.” The President later wrote, “Great reception in Jamestown by both REPUBLICANS & DEMOCRATS. Respect for our Country's incredible Heritage. Thank you!” Trump had tweeted ahead of the event, “Heading to Jamestown, Virginia. Word is the Democrats will make it as uncomfortable as possible, but that's ok because today is not about them!”

The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (7/30, Leonor, Martz, 277K) similarly reports the speech came “amid boycotts and protests from some of Virginia's elected leaders,” and that in his remarks Trump “marked the birth of American democracy, pronouncing that ‘in America we are not ruled from afar, we govern ourselves, and so help us God, we always will.’”

WSET-TV Lynchburg, VA (7/30, 5:02 p.m. EDT, 18K) also reported that Trump's appearance “prompted black state lawmakers to boycott the event, citing his recent comments about minority leaders,” and ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 7, 0:40, Phillips, 6.47M) noted that they said in a statement, “It is impossible to ignore the emblem of hate and disdain that the President represents.”

To the New York Times (7/30, Baker, Rogers, 18.61M), “the lawmakers' protest came as Mr. Trump has employed racist tropes in a caustic war of words with critics,” while to the Washington Post (7/30, Schneider, Ruane, Vozzella, 14.2M) the President's appearance at the “historic site...turned into a test for elected leaders who consider the president a racist.” Otherwise, “Trump's remarks stuck largely to a recitation of the history of Jamestown and praise for the English settlers who held the first meeting of representative democracy there in 1619.” NPR (7/30, Naylor, 3.12M) pointed out “Trump's advisers reject the idea that his words are racially motivated and argue he is merely hitting back at his critics.” Trump campaign adviser Katrina Pierson told NPR this week, “Honestly, you would have to be brand new to be shocked that President Trump would defend himself.”

The CBS Evening News (7/30, story 7, 1:10, Barnett, 4.01M) reported Trump's “speech interrupted by a protester,” Ibraheem Samirah, “a Democratic delegate to the state's legislature.” ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 7, 0:40, Phillips, 6.47M) also pointed out “there was...one state lawmaker of color who did show up and he took the opportunity to protest, shouting, ‘Mr. President, you cannot send us back, Virginia is our home,’ a reference, you'll remember, to the racist chant that broke out at the President's most recent rally in Greenville, North Carolina.”

WTKR-TV Norfolk, VA (7/30, 5:03 p.m. EDT, 20K) also reported Trump “faced a brief interruption when...Samirah began shouting in the middle of the speech,” but “the crowd chanted for the President as the delegate was escorted out.” Likewise, USA Today (7/30, Jackson, 10.31M) points out that “the president – who has been assailed by Democrats in recent weeks for racist tweets – did not react to the

Trump said in an interview with C-SPAN (7/30, 56K), "Today I was in Jamestown. I made a speech that was said to be a very good speech. ... There was one protester who stood up. ... He held up a sign and he said whatever he said, something. He got more publicity than the speech got. ... Now, I don't need publicity, at all, but I just thought it was so terrible, and it was on Fox with John Roberts. He talked about the protester for almost an entire segment of that. And I said isn't that a shame. One guy stands up, not an impressive person, he stood up and he got all of this – he took the whole thing away. One person."

Trump was apparently referring to a segment on Fox News' Outnumbered Overtime during which Roberts said, "It was unclear whether it was tied to his spat with Elijah Cummings or the feud he recently had with the four congresswomen known as the squad, his immigration policies, or all of it wrapped up together, as the President was delivering his speech commemorating the 400th anniversary of the legislative assembly, there in the Jamestown settlement, he was interrupted by a protester. The protester happened to be Democratic Virginia state Delegate Ibraheem Samirah."

Trump 2020 campaign senior adviser Lara Trump said on Fox News The Story (7/30), "That gentleman had a right to protest but it's a shame that more people can't celebrate what the President did here today."

Samirah took to Twitter to write, "I just disrupted the @realDonaldTrump speech in Jamestown because nobody's racism and bigotry should be excused for the sake of being polite. The man is unfit for office and unfit to partake in a celebration of democracy, representation, and our nation's history of immigrants."

The Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (7/30, Albiges, Subscription Publication, 176K) reports GOP state Sen. Bill Carrico "at one point interrupted Samirah's interview with reporters" after Trump's speech "to tell him he should've stayed home if he wasn't happy with Trump's attendance." Carrico said, "You are an embarrassment to this state and you should go home." He added that "reporters are 'feeding into this crap.'"

The Loudoun \(VA\) Times-Mirror (7/30, Cline, 95K) reports "Republican Party of Virginia Chairman Jack Wilson said Samirah's actions are a disgrace to Virginia." Said Wilson, "Delegate Samirah's outburst was nothing more than childish frustration over Hillary Clinton's loss. ... If the Democrats wanted someone to protest this historic, bipartisan event, maybe they should not have picked an anti-Semite. Ibraheem Samirah is a disgrace to Virginia and should resign."

The Washington Free Beacon (7/30, Rowan, 78K) reports "Speaker of the Virginia House Delegates Kirk Cox also released a statement, saying that Samirah's protest was 'not only inconsistent with common decency, it was also a violation of the rules of the House.'" Tweeted Cox, "I am disappointed by Delegate Ibraheem Samirah's disrespectful outburst during the President's remarks. It was not only inconsistent with common decency, it was also a violation of the rules of the House."

Josh Kraushaar of The National Journal said on Fox News' Special Report (7/30, 1.53M) that "when Trump plays to his base, when Trump tweets impulsively, you have Democrats reacting in a very extreme manner as we saw in Jamestown."

Washingtonian Magazine (7/30, Beaujon, 278K) says "Samirah represents the 86th District, which includes parts of Loudoun and Fairfax, including Herndon and parts of Chantilly." He is "a dentist" who "defeated Republican Gregg Nelson in February to take the seat vacated by Jennifer Boysko, who won Jennifer Wexton's old state Senate seat after she was elected to Congress."

Lawmaker Who Heckled Trump Had To Apologize For Anti-Israel Posts, Has Ties To Anti-Semitic Groups. While most mainstream media reports cast Samirah's protest as a legitimate reaction to Trump's rhetoric, a number of outlets (mainly conservative ones) point out that Samirah has been accused of holding anti-Israel and ties to anti-Semitic organizations. The Loudoun \(VA\) Times-Mirror (7/30, Cline, 95K) reports that "in February, Samirah apologized for making anti-Semitic remarks on social media five years ago." The Times-Mirror adds that "in a pair of now deleted Facebook posts, the first-generation American and second-generation Palestinian said that sending money to Israel is worse than sending money to the Ku Klux Klan and that former Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon would burn in hell after Sharon died."

On its website, Fox News (7/30, Singman, 27.59M) recalled that "the Washington Post, in February, reported on a series of Samirah's social media posts from 2014 that have since been deleted," and that the Virginia Democrat "also is reportedly connected to multiple anti-Semitic organizations." The Washington Free Beacon (7/30, Rowan, 78K) reports that its own "investigation found in early 2019 that Samirah has connections to many anti-Semitic organizations and that his father is a organizer for the terrorist group Hamas." Samirah "spoke at a Hamas-related conference in 2018 and is a fervent supporter of the Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions movement against Israel." Samirah "has said that he takes his inspiration from his father, whom Al Jazeera described in 2011 as a 'leading member of the Muslim Brotherhood in Jordan.'" Samirah "posted on Facebook in 2018 that he is 'inspired by my father' to 'dedicate my life to the liberation of Palestine.'" The Free Beacon adds "Samirah volunteered on Rep. Rashida's Tlaib's (D., Mich.) national campaign in 2018."

The Washington Times (7/30, Boyer, 492K) reports Samirah "was born in the US but calls himself a 'second-generation Palestinian refugee,'" and the Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (7/30, Albiges, Subscription Publication, 176K) that he told reporters later yesterday that "his Jordanian father was barred from legally entering the country because of his Muslim religion."

WSJournal Praises Trump's Rhetoric On Race During Yesterday's Speech. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/30, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) hails Trump's comments about slavery and African-Americans during his remarks yesterday. In particular, the Journal praises Trump for combining an acknowledgment of past injustices with a restatement of America's promise and its ability change for the better throughout its history.

Somali Refugees Arrested In Arizona After Attempting To Join ISIS.

President Trump tweeted yesterday, "Somali refugees arrested in Tucson on way to Egypt. They were in touch with an agent posing as a terrorist. One of them stated, 'The best wake up call is Islamic State to get victory or another 9/11.' Get smart people!" The Arizona Daily Star (7/30, Davis, 243K) similarly recounts that "Ahmed Mahad Mohamed, 21, and Abdi Yemani Hussein, 20, had been communicating with an undercover FBI agent who they believed was a supporter of Islamic State ideology, federal court records show." CNN (7/30, Klein, 83.16M) said that "during conversations with the undercover agent via an encrypted social media platform, Mohamed made a series of statements, including the quote Trump tweeted." Moreover, "during an in-person meeting with Mohamed and the agent in Tucson, Hussein allegedly said he wanted to blow up the White House, according to court papers." The Washington Times (7/29, Dinan, 492K) reports Mohamed also "said he wanted to be the 'beheading guy.'"

The Arizona Daily Star (7/30, Casanova, 243K) reports "Mohamed and Hussein both came to the US as refugees from Somalia," and the Arizona Republic (7/29, Burkitt, 869K) that "the pair bought tickets for a July 26 flight from Tucson connecting to Cairo," and "were arrested by an FBI agent after checking in at the airport and passing through security." The Washington Examiner (7/29, Halaschak, 448K), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Trump: Administration Making "Tremendous Progress" On Southern Border.

President Trump tweeted yesterday, "Despite the Democrats wanting very unsafe Open Borders & refusing to change the Loopholes & Asylum, tremendous progress is being made the Southern Border. We all waited because we assumed the Dems would ultimately be forced to change the horrible Immigration Laws. They didn't!"

Cuccinelli Praises Progress With Guatemala On "Safe Third Country" Deal.

Asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/30, 831K) about efforts to secure a "safe third country" deal with Guatemala, Acting USCIS Director Cuccinelli said, "We have a couple of boxes to check ourselves before this gets fully implemented, but this is a tremendous international relations breakthrough and it will be a game-changer once we are able to fully implement it, much like the 'Remain in Mexico' policy has been a tremendous help since we've been implementing it." Asked whether Guatemala is a safe country, Cuccinelli said, "To use just some statistics that I've referenced recently, the murder rate in Baltimore is higher than it is in Guatemala."

A Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) editorial says the "safe third country" agreement struck with Guatemala shows the "Administration's contempt for Central Americans fleeing violence, hardship and persecution." The Post argues that the "probable result of the administration's policy, if it goes into effect, will be to transform legal asylum seekers into undocumented immigrants. They are unlikely to seek refuge in Guatemala," and "instead, many will likely cross illegally into the United States and live in the shadows."

ACLU Asks 9th Circuit Court To Speed Border Wall Decision.

The Washington Times (7/30, Dinan, 492K) reports that "border wall opponents" led by the ACLU "asked a federal appeals court Tuesday to speed up the case involving their challenge to President Trump's plans, saying the longer the judges wait, the more wall he'll be able to build." The ACLU was joined by the Sierra Club and the states of California and New Mexico, "who all sued to halt the president's emergency border wall declaration issued earlier this year." The groups "asked for the usual time for filing briefs to be cut by a month, and for the court to hear oral argument on the case in October."

ACLU: Administration Exploited Loophole To Separate More Than 900 Children From Their Families.

The CBS Evening News (7/30, story 5, 0:40, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported, "The American Civil Liberties Union told a federal judge the Trump Administration has taken nearly 1,000 migrant children from their parents at the Southern Border since the government was ordered to stop the practice more than a year ago." The New York Times (7/30, A1, Jordan, 18.61M) reports that "more than 900 children have been removed from an adult — usually a parent — with whom they arrived at the southern border since June of 2018, according to tallies provided by the Department of Justice to the American Civil Liberties Union, which is challenging the separations." The data "were filed with Judge Dana M. Sabraw in San Diego as part of the court's continuing supervision of the family separation issue." In its motion on Tuesday, the ACLU "asked the judge to clarify a set of standards for such separations that would ensure that children are taken from their parents only when there is evidence that the parent is a genuine danger to the child, or is unfit to provide care."

The Washington Post (7/30, Sacchetti, 14.2M) reports that in an interview, ACLU lawyer Lee Gelernt said, "They're taking what was supposed to be a narrow exception for cases where the parent was genuinely a danger to the child and using it as a loophole to continue family separation."

WPost Analysis: Military Kicking Out Foreign Recruits For Having Foreign Ties.

The Washington Post (7/30, Horton, 14.2M) reports that "in the past month, the Pentagon booted two Chinese recruits from the enlistment process because of their dead grandfathers." Screening documents obtained by The Washington Post "detailing reasons that these and other foreign recruits were removed from the military reveal a pattern of canceled enlistments and failed screenings for fact-of-life events and, often, simply for existing as foreigners." According to the Post, "immigrant enlistees have been cut loose for being the children of foreign parents or for having family ties to their native government or military," and "in some cases, they have relatives who served in militaries closely allied with the United States." To the Post, "those removals raise questions about the Pentagon's screening process and why it has weeded out precisely the recruits defense officials said they needed."

DACA Recipient Deported After Transporting Undocumented Immigrants In High-Speed Chase.

The Washington Examiner (7/30, Halaschak, 448K) reports Jose Yepez-Vega, a 22-year-old Mexican national and DACA recipient, was "ordered to be deported after a high-speed chase with three undocumented immigrants in his car." Yepez-Vega "was arrested in July 2018 near Laredo, Texas" after law enforcement saw his vehicle "attempt to avoid a checkpoint and began to pursue him, but he didn't pull over and instead fled for more than 50 miles with officers from multiple jurisdictions in pursuit." After Yepez-Vega "lost control of his vehicle and was apprehended," three "undocumented immigrants were discovered in the car and admitted to paying between $4,000 and $6,000 to be smuggled into the country."

Reichlin-Melnick: Study Finds Asylum Seekers Show Up For Court Hearings.

Aaron Reichlin-Melnick, a policy analyst at the American Immigration Council, writes in the Wall Street Journal (7/30, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that Administration officials argue against releasing adult asylum seekers from detention on the ground that they are unlikely to show up in court, but a new report from the American Immigration Council finds that of families released from detention from 2001-2016, 86% attended every scheduled court hearing.

Trump: Ratcliffe Will "Rein In" Intelligence Agencies.

Axios (7/30, Rummler, 521K) reports President Trump said Tuesday that he believes the US intelligence community has "run amok," and that Rep. John Ratcliffe (R-TX), his nominee to replace Dan Coats as Director of National Intelligence, would "rein it in."

The Washington Examiner (7/30, Ferrechio, 448K), meanwhile, reports that Senate Majority Leader McConnell said Tuesday "he hasn't met...Ratcliffe...and isn't ready to pledge his support." Said McConnell, "I'd rather not address that until I've had a chance to meet him to discuss his background and qualifications." He added, "Generally speaking, I would lean toward the president's nominees." The Examiner writes that Ratcliffe will "likely have to rely on mostly Republicans to back him and they aren't lining up behind him yet." Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr, for example, "promised to move the nomination 'swiftly' but was silent about whether he backs Ratcliffe."

The CBS Evening News (7/30, story 10, 1:56, O'Donnell, 4.13M) similarly reported Ratcliffe "drew more fire today from Democrats questioning his qualifications," and "some Senate Republicans are also undecided." Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR): "He's the wrong man for this job." Sen. Mark Warner (D-VA): "It appears the President is more interested in getting a loyalist than someone who will speak truth to power." CBS (Cordes) added, "Many Senate Republicans were noncommittal today." CBS called McConnell's remarks "a surprisingly lukewarm response from the Senate leader, especially when talking about a fellow Republican lawmaker."

Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC), however, insisted on Fox News' Special Report (7/30, 1.53M) that Ratcliffe's nomination "is not in jeopardy. John Ratcliffe is an incredibly complicated situation, which means that the Democrats hate him just because he's a Republican. The part that is simple and not complicated is the fact that he is a qualified, competent person who has spent his life in public surfaced from a US Attorney, Congress member and someone who has worked on issues in the area of national intelligence for a number of years."

The New York Times (7/30, Barnes, Fandos, 18.61M), meanwhile, reports that aides to Ratcliffe "were forced on Tuesday to clarify his claims that he had won terrorism convictions as a federal prosecutor, as his background came under new scrutiny." The Times notes that Ratcliffe "said on his House website and in campaign material that he had tried suspects accused of funneling money" to Hamas. But "instead, an aide said, Mr. Ratcliffe had investigated side issues related to an initial mistrial, and did not prosecute the case either in that proceeding or in a successful second trial." The Times says "Ratcliffe's statements about his role in the Hamas case seems to be the clearest instance of an overstated résumé, but there are other examples relevant to his stated credentials to oversee the intelligence community." The Times goes to detail several other examples.

The New York Times (7/30, 18.61M) editorializes that "one reason [outgoing DNI] Coats's tenure was so uncomfortable was that, unlike many Trump appointees, he was more likely to say what he believed to be true than what the president wanted to hear." The Times argues that "one of the most important lessons from America's response to the attacks of 9/11 that led to the creation of this post was that intelligence agencies need to work freely and honestly, and not be swayed by political considerations and the need to placate a president. An administration that sought and got the message it wanted from the intelligence apparatus is what helped lead to the invasion of Iraq and the disasters that followed." The Senate, it argues, "needs to be sure we don't go down that road again."

Ratcliffe Vows To Expose Origins Of FBI's Trump-Russia Probe. The Washington Times (7/30, Scarborough, 492K) reports Ratcliffe "promises as the nation's top spy to accelerate President Trump's effort to find out how the FBI began investigating him." The Times says that hours before the announcement of DNI Coats' resignation on Sunday, Ratcliffe told Fox News' Maria Bartiromo, "It does appear that there were crimes committed during the Obama administration."

WPost Analysis: Key To Haspel's Success Has Been "Keeping A Low Profile."

A Washington Post (7/30, Harris, 14.2M) analysis says "absorbing the fulminations of a president who derided US intelligence agencies even before he took office is not the position" CIA Director Haspel "envisioned for herself, said people who have known her for years. But so far, she is succeeding. The key to her success? Keeping a low profile." According to officials, the President receives "semi-regular" briefings from the intelligence community where "Haspel is careful not to contradict the president or argue with him about his opinions." The Post says that "unlike her predecessor, now-Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Haspel spends much of her time at CIA headquarters in Langley, Va., running the agency day-to-day and representing it at the White House rather than cultivating a personal relationship with Trump." That approach, adds the Post, "has won her points with career staffers who were relieved that Trump picked one of their own, and not another politician, when Pompeo departed" the agency.

Hyten Denies Charges Before Armed Services Committee, Wins Backing From McSally.

The AP (7/30, Baldor) reports Air Force Gen. John Hyten told the Senate Armed Services Committee considering his nomination "to be the nation's number two military officer" that, regarding "allegations of sexual misconduct," "Nothing happened, ever." Hyten "said the allegations were shown to be false after a 'fair and extensive investigation.'" The AP adds the Air Force Office of Special Investigations "reviewed the matter and found insufficient evidence to charge Hyten or recommend any administrative punishment." Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) "said she has 'full confidence' in Hyten and believes he is innocent." Reuters (7/30, Stewart, Ali) reports Chairman Jim Inhofe (R-OK) "signaled that the allegations would not sink Hyten's nomination."

NBC Nightly News (7/30, story 5, 2:02, Hunt, 5.46M) reported that "at this point, Hyten seems on track to be confirmed this fall," ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 10, 1:56, Ramos, 6.31M) that the Senate Armed Forces Committee is expected to approve the nomination today, and the CBS Evening News (7/30, story 4, 2:27, Martin, 4.01M) that "the chairman of the committee says he has the votes to send Hyten's name to the full Senate for confirmation, but any senator who does not like the way this case was handled can still put a hold on the nomination."

USA Today (7/30, Brook, 10.31M) quotes Hyten as saying, "There was a very extensive, thorough investigation which revealed the truth. Nothing happened. Ever." The Washington Post (7/30, Demirjian, 14.2M) also reports that McSally "who earlier this year detailed her experience with sexual assault," defended Hyten "against charges that he sexually assaulted an Army colonel under his command." The Washington Times (7/30, Meier, 492K) reports McSally said Hyten "has been falsely accused of sexual misconduct." She said, "The truth is that General Hyten is innocent of these charges. Sexual assault happens in the military. It just didn't happen in this case."

The Washington Post (7/30, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports "the two rape survivors who sit on the Senate Armed Services Committee split sharply Tuesday over" the nominee, with McSally backing him and Sen. Joni Ernst (R-IA) saying "the facts of the investigation 'left me with concerns regarding your judgment, leadership and fitness to serve as the next vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.'" The Post adds "McSally and Ernst went public earlier this year with their personal stories of sexual assault: McSally was raped by a superior officer when she was in the Air Force, and Ernst, who is also a veteran, was raped in college."

The Washington Times (7/30, Meier, 492K) reports, meanwhile, "former Air Force Secretary Heather Wilson stood up for her former colleague" Gen. Hyten. The New York Times (7/30, Cooper, 18.61M) and Politico (7/30, O'Brien, Levine, 4.29M), among other news outlets, also report on the hearing.

Democratic Presidential Candidates United In Support For Increased Corporate Tax Rate.

The Washington Times (7/30, Sherfinski, 492K) reports, "A consensus is emerging among the 2020 Democratic presidential field that the 2017 cut to the U.S. corporate tax rate needs to be repealed." The candidates differ on how much to raise the rate, currently 21 percent, but "the sense among the White House contenders is that the engine of capitalism must pay more so that the government can do more."

More Than 500K Children Would Lose Free School Meals Under Proposed SNAP Changes.

The New York Times (7/30, Fadulu, 18.61M) reports, "More than 500,000 children would lose automatic eligibility for free school meals under a rule proposed last week by the Agriculture Department intended to tighten access" to Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program benefits. House Education and Labor Chairman Bobby Scott said the impact on school meals "was not disclosed when the proposed food stamp rule was published last week."

Study Finds Green New Deal Would Cost $70,000 Per Household In Five States.

The Washington Times (7/30, Richardson, 492K) reports that according to a study released Tuesday by Power for the Future and the Competitive Enterprise Institute, Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's (D-NY) Green New Deal "would cost more than $70,000 per household in five states for higher costs for energy, housing, transportation and shipping" in its first year. The five states are Alaska, Florida, New Hampshire, New Mexico, and Pennsylvania. The study also stated, "The estimates are low-end approximations, given the unprecedented scope of the proposal."

Griswold: Mainstream Media Ignoring Omar's Retweet Mocking Attack On Paul.

Alex Griswold writes in the Washington Free Beacon (7/30, 78K) that while he expected "muted mainstream media coverage" of Rep. Ilhan

Omar's (D-MN) retweet of actor Tom Arnold's tweet mocking the attack on Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY), he did not expect "almost literally zero coverage." But, "outside of explicitly conservative and libertarian outlets," and a "brief aside" in a Washington Post story, "the Omar retweet was covered by Mediaite (which features both conservative and liberal writers), Newsweek (formerly a mainstream media outlet, now more of a bankrupt clickbait factory), and as I was writing this piece, by Paul's hometown paper, the Louisville Courier Journal. That's it." Griswold argues the mainstream media believes "that one member of Congress laughing it up about another being assaulted and hospitalized is neither newsworthy nor controversial!"

Planned Parenthood Files Suit Over Missouri Abortion Ban.

The CBS Evening News (7/30, story 13, 0:35, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported, "Planned Parenthood is filing suit against Missouri's new antiabortion law set to go into effect next month. It bans abortions after eight weeks of pregnancy with no exceptions for rape, incest, or human trafficking." Planned Parenthood Acting President Alexis McGill-Johnson "told CBS News reporter Kate Smith the lawsuit will put every so-called 'heartbeat ban' in five other states into the hands of the court."

Trump Expresses Frustration, Anger Over School Shootings.

President Trump was asked in an interview with C-SPAN (7/30, 56K) what was his most difficult moment as President so far. Trump said, "Well, we've had a lot. When you have – a school shooting is tremendously – it angers me, actually. It really angers me. It frustrates everybody. You say, 'How could a thing like this happen? How is it possible?' When you see innocent children being killed, teachers, that is something you just never can really get over."

Investigators Eyeing Weapon, Social Media Postings In California Shooting.

ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 5, 1:40, Muir, 6.47M) reported, "We are learning more about the victims and the survivors of that mass shooting at a food festival in California." ABC's Will Carr: "Investigators are scouring this massive crime scene, trying to figure out why Santino William Legan opened fire on a packed food festival. Authorities now zeroing in on the murder weapon. They say the suspect legally bought the AK-47-style rifle in Nevada on July 9, the gun store posting on Facebook the suspect 'was acting happy and showed no reasons for concern.'" The CBS Evening News (7/30, story 8, 0:25, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported, "Police and the FBI are investigating whether the gunman in Sunday's mass shooting in Gilroy, California harbored toward specific ethnic groups. They're going through his cell phone and scouring social media for his postings."

Employee Kills Two Coworkers At Mississippi Walmart.

ABC World News Tonight (7/30, lead story, 2:05, Muir, 6.31M) opened its Tuesday evening newscast by reporting on "another deadly workplace shooting. This time at a Walmart, an employee opening fire on coworkers and on an officer" in South Haven, Mississippi. The gunman "was shot; he did survive. He's now under arrest; two coworkers are dead." NBC Nightly News (7/30, lead story, 1:30, 5.48M) also opened with the story, with Lester Holt saying, "Another American workplace has been shattered by violence."

The CBS Evening News (7/30, story 2, 0:45, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported, "The police say 39-year-old Martez Abram apparently began setting a fire inside the store, sparking chaos. ... Police responded within three minutes, shooting and wounding Abram, but not before he shot one of the officers."

Disaster Investor Sector Growing As Annual Damage Rates Increase.

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Putzier, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) profiles disaster investors – real estate speculators who move in after hurricanes, tornadoes, wildfires, and other natural disasters to buy up properties and ruined homes at low prices. With annual damages from disasters regularly topping $1 billion, the sector is growing, particularly in California and Florida.

Trump Says African Americans Appreciate His Criticism Of Cummings, Baltimore.

President Trump on Tuesday continued his criticism of House Oversight Chairman Cummings (D-MD) and the conditions in his district. Errol Barnett said on the CBS Evening News (7/30, story 6, 1:06, O'Donnell, 4.01M) that Trump "denied his attacks on Congressman Elijah Cummings have anything to do with race, even as he continued to assault the majority-black district Cummings represents." Trump "also said he's heard from black Americans who are grateful for his comments." Chief White House correspondent John Roberts said on Fox News' Special Report (7/30, 1.53M) that the President "insisted" that "the White House is receiving accolades from people thankful that the President finally shined a spotlight on the problems in Baltimore."

The AP (7/30, Colvin) reports Trump "is claiming a groundswell of African American support in response" to his criticism of Cummings and his district, "despite polling showing consistently negative numbers." In comments to reporters at the White House Tuesday, Trump "claimed the building had been flooded with thousands of letters, emails and phone calls thanking him for 'getting involved' and exposing corruption." Trump said, "They really appreciate what I'm doing, and they've let me know it." The AP adds that the White House "did not immediately provide any evidence backing up Trump's claims." Geoff Bennett said on NBC Nightly News (7/30, story 3, 1:51, Holt, 5.48M) that despite Trump's claim that people in Baltimore are thanking him for getting involved, "We didn't hear much gratitude." Bennett added,

"Tonight, we kept hearing the same offer, that the President should come and see the city for himself." ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 6, 0:34, Muir, 6.47M) reported briefly on Trump's comments.

The Washington Post (7/30, Elfrink, Wagner, 14.2M) reports Trump "lashed out anew" at Cummings, and the city of Baltimore, which he described as "corrupt." Trump said, "Those people are living in hell in Baltimore," and blamed Cummings for the city's problems. The Washington Times (7/30, Boyer, 492K) reports that Trump "criticized again what he said was rampant corruption in the city," saying "all that money that has been spent over 20 years has been stolen and wasted by people like Elijah Cummings." Trump said, "Baltimore has been very badly mishandled for many years," and claimed that Cummings had an "iron" grip on his district. The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Salama, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Trump called on the House Oversight Committee, which Cummings chairs, to investigate Baltimore's government.

The Hill (7/30, Samuels, 2.98M) reports Trump "said his ongoing barrage of attacks" on Cummings and Baltimore are not part of a political strategy. Trump told reporters, "There's no strategy. I have no strategy. There's zero strategy. ... All it is is I'm pointing out facts. ... The most unsafe city in our country is Baltimore." USA Today (7/30, Jackson, 10.31M) says Trump told reporters, "I am the least racist person there is anywhere in the world." Asked in an interview with C-SPAN (7/30, 56K) about Cummings calling him a racist, Trump said, "I think the word has really gone down a long way because everybody is called a racist now. ... The word is overused. It's such a disgrace. I can tell you, I'm the least racist person in the world as far as I am concerned. They use it almost when they run out of things to criticize you, they say, 'He is a racist, he is a racist.' ... With me, they have a hard time getting away with it and they don't get away with it."

The Washington Post (7/30, Kranish, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports that Trump said in an interview, "Baltimore happens to be about the worst case. ... If you look at it statistically, it's like, the number of shootings, the number of crimes, the number of everything – this morning I heard a statistic, Baltimore is worse than Honduras, okay?" Trump also "blam[ed] Cummings for what he described, without evidence, as 'billions' of dollars in wasted federal aid aimed at revitalizing Baltimore," which "could have built 20 brand-new cities." Trump said, "The money that's been spent, the billions and billions and billions of dollars. ... And as you know, Congressman Cummings, he has been the leader, the one that tried to get a lot of this money. He is one of the reasons the money was sent there. ... Baltimore is a mess, and I want to help the people."

HUD Secretary Carson said on Fox News' Hannity, "The only thing the President is guilty of is not being politically correct and bringing attention to things that are supposed to be swept under the rug." The Daily Caller (7/30, Rodgers, 716K) reports Carson will visit Baltimore Wednesday "to spread awareness about the city which President Donald Trump described as a 'rodent infested mess,' the Daily Caller has learned."

Trump 2020 campaign senior adviser Lara Trump said on Fox News The Story (7/30), "What you hear here is nothing different than you always hear about the President. It's always a call of racism, and my problem with this, and I think so many people's problem with continually using racism when we know that that is not true, when it is just a talking point for the left and so much of the mainstream media, is that when it actually is true, when there is real racism, people aren't going to pay attention to it anymore because people are so sick of hearing this narrative." Trump added, "I would give credit to the President for finally putting some light on a city that obviously has been left behind by its leaders."

Marc Thiessen writes in the Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) that while Trump "was wrong to personally attack" Cummings, he was "absolutely right when he called Baltimore 'dangerous,' 'filthy' and 'rodent infested' – that is, if you can believe what you read in the 'failing New York Times.'" Thiessen cites a "heart-rending" story from the Times Sunday magazine entitled "The Tragedy of Baltimore," which "chronicled the precipitous decline of the city."

Scott Says Trump's Tweets Are Not Racially Motivated. Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC) said on Fox News' Special Report (7/30, 1.53M), "I don't think the back-and-forth is very productive for the average person in our country, there's no doubt. But I don't find his tweets to have been racially motivated. I think we should take the high road and spend more time talking about how to deal with the failed policies of the left, frankly. Major metropolitan areas throughout this country have one thing in common consistently: It is liberal leadership and poor outcomes, which means that the people who are mired in poverty aren't getting the help that they desperately need."

Daily Caller: Baltimore's Streets Are As Trump Described. The Daily Caller (7/30, Miller, 716K) says The Daily Caller News Foundation "went to Baltimore and surveyed the city to see if the president's description was correct and accurate." According to The DC, Baltimore "sure enough appeared just as Trump said: crumbling, dirty and duntrodden." Video of The DCNF's trip to Baltimore is posted on the site.

Trump Supporter Organizes Trash Cleanup In Baltimore. Townhall (7/30, Meads, 177K) reports that "MAGA fan Scott Presler" has "organized a massive trash clean up of the city set to take place in the near future." Presler told The Epoch Times, "I'm so tired of people saying, 'We should do this, we should do that'....I was just like, 'I've had, it. I'm going to go to Baltimore, even if it's just me on a street corner picking up trash.'" Presler "encouraged Trump supporters to wear Trump gear but told The Epoch Times that anybody can participate when the event takes place." He said, "I just want the citizens of Baltimore to see [that] we do care. We do give a damn. And at the end of the day, we're all American and if ya'll are struggling in Baltimore and you guys need help, then we're going to be there for you. ... I don't want this to be an anti-Rep. Cummings event. That's not what this is about. This is about helping our fellow American citizens." Presler "has not announced when the clean up will occur since he does not want any counteractivity to disturb the effort."

Baltimore Spending $66M In Federal Grants In FY2019. Breitbart (7/30, Caplan, Dulis, 673K) reports that while Baltimore Mayor Bernard "Jack" Young (D) said Monday that instead of criticizing Baltimore, the President should send federal assistance, his "budget is already spending $66 million in federal grants this year alone." According to the Fiscal Year 2019 budget, Baltimore is spending "$66.3 million in federal grants,” and its “federal fund operating appropriation is budgeted at $165.9 million.”

Baltimore FOP President Criticizes Police Commissioner's Crime Plan. Townhall (7/30, O'Brien, 177K) reports the Baltimore City Fraternal Order of Police on Monday “publicized some somber statistics” concerning murders and violent crime in the city. While “Baltimore Police Commissioner Michael Harrison hoped to address this crisis with his recent crime plan,” Baltimore City FOP President Mike Mancuso “said it will do little to help. First and foremost, they don't have the staff – they don't even have enough officers to respond to all 911 calls. That's not to mention their lack of other resources.” Mancuso's statement “says he was left ‘speechless’ by Harrison's claim the city isn't all that bad.” Mancuso wrote, “This leads us to Commissioner Harrison's recent public assertion that Baltimore is not a dangerous place; a comment which left me speechless. ... For him to try to alleviate the public's fear of being a victim of violent crime by stating that most suspects and victims know each other, is outright fantasy.”

McDaniel: Democrats Should Focus On The People In Their Districts. The Washington Times (7/30, Vogt, 492K) reports RNC Chair Ronna McDaniel argued on CNN's New Day Tuesday that the President's tweets are intended to call attention to the fact that Democrats are more focused on the President than the problems in their own districts. McDaniel said, “I think the president is making a point to Democratic lawmakers, which is you represent districts that are in distress and you're more concerned about how to get free health care for people coming to this country illegally. ... You're more concerned about an investigation of Russia. Why aren't you focused on the people in your district who are concerned about education and health care? It's more singling out these Democrat congresspeople and saying ‘why aren't you helping people in your districts instead of focusing on people outside of your districts?’”

Pavlich: Trump “Goaded” 2020 Democrats Into Defending “Race Baiter” Sharpton. Katie Pavlich writes on Townhall (7/30, 177K) that the President “has successfully goaded 2020 Democrat presidential candidates into defending one of the worst people in America.” After Trump “[told] the truth about Baltimore's rat infestation problem over the weekend, race baiter and hoaxer Al Sharpton called President Trump a racist and pledged to visit the long forgotten, crime ridden city.” When Trump responded, “Democrats promptly leaped to Sharpton's defense, ignoring his long and troubling history with Louis Farrakhan, the truth, race and the law.”

AP: Suburban Women Put Off By Trump's “Racially Polarizing Insults.” The AP (7/30, Levy, Bauer) reports that while Trump's “recent return to racial politics may be aimed at rallying his base of white working-class voters across rural America,” “many professional, suburban women – a critical voting bloc in the 2020 election – recoil at the abrasive, divisive rhetoric, exposing the president to a potential wave of opposition in key battlegrounds across the country.” The AP cites “more than three dozen interviews” with “women in critical suburbs” in which “nearly all expressed dismay – or worse – at Trump's racially polarizing insults and what was often described as unpresidential treatment of people.” Even some who support the President's handling of the economy or immigration “acknowledged they were troubled or uncomfortable lining up behind the president.” The AP says the interviews “are a warning light for the Republican president's reelection campaign.”

Gallup Poll Finds Plurality Of Democrats Support Slavery Reparations. The Washington Times (7/29, Ernst, 492K) reports that Gallup polling released Monday shows that “a plurality of the Democratic Party – 49% – now say it's time for the government to issue cash payments to the descendants of slaves.” Gallup reported, “While some Democratic presidential candidates have supported exploring reparations or other measures to address US racial disparities, Democrats themselves are divided on the matter of cash-based reparations. ... Currently, 49% of Democrats say the government should make such payments; 47% say it should not. Still, Democratic support is up from 25% in 2002, so there is momentum for reparations in the party.”

Quinnipiac Poll: 51% Of Americans Think Trump Is A Racist. The Hill (7/30, Klar, 2.98M) reports a Quinnipiac University poll released Tuesday “found that 51 percent of American voters said ‘yes’ when asked if they thought Trump was racist, while 45 percent said ‘no.’” The Hill adds that 80 percent of African Americans “said they consider Trump to be racist. Just 11 percent of African Americans said they do not think Trump is racist.” The New York Times (7/30, Stevens, 18.61M) reports that “86 percent of Democratic voters classified Mr. Trump as racist while 91 percent of Republicans said he was not.” Of those who said Trump is racist, 88 percent “disapprove of the job he is doing as president, while 94 percent of those who said he was not racist approve of his performance.”

Fox News chief White House correspondent John Roberts said on Fox News' Special Report (7/30, 1.53M) that Trump “fumed” about the “finding that 80 percent of African-Americans believe he is racist. The President called the poll ‘fakery’ and insisted no President in recent decades has done more to improve the lives of African-Americans than he has.” Yahoo! Finance (7/30, Knowles) says Trump “blamed the news media” for the poll. Trump told reporters, “The fake news doesn't report it properly, people like you. Fake news does not report it properly. ... If the news reported it properly of all of the things I've done for African-Americans, of all of the things like criminal justice reform, like opportunity zones, I think I'd do very well with the African-Americans.” Trump made the same argument in an interview with C-SPAN (7/30, 56K). He said, “The press doesn't put what I have accomplished for African Americans out. ... The truth is, if I wasn't able to get out my own message, I would not be elected anything because the press is very unfair. If the press did treat me fairly, I would have tremendous support from the African American community.”

Tlaib: Trump “Disgraces His Office” With Hate. Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-MI) writes in the Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M), “President Trump has found new targets for his harmful distraction through unhinged tweets and speeches: me and some of my colleagues in the US House.” Tlaib says Trump “disgraces his office with rhetoric rooted in hate,” and “did it again this weekend when he trashed the city of Baltimore. While my colleagues and I work on ways to improve the lives of our constituents, he is focused on a hate agenda for our country.” Tlaib writes, “I will always outwork the hate. My district and country depend on it.”

Judge Dismisses DNC Suit Against Trump Campaign, WikiLeaks.

Fox News (7/30, Re, 27.59M) reports on its website that "Judge John Koeltl, a Bill Clinton appointee sitting in the Southern District of New York," has "in frank terms...dismissed a lawsuit by the Democratic National Committee (DNC) against key members of the Trump campaign and WikiLeaks over hacked DNC documents." Koeltl said they "did not participate in any wrongdoing in obtaining the materials in the first place," and thus were not liable for disseminating the information. In court filings, the DNC claimed the Trump campaign's meetings "with persons connected to the Russian government during the time that the Russian GRU agents were stealing the DNC's information" showed they were conspiring with the Russians to "steal and disseminate the DNC's materials." Koeltl wrote in his opinion that the DNC's argument was "entirely divorced" from the facts. Reuters (7/30, Wolfe) reports that Koeltl "said holding WikiLeaks and the Trump campaign liable for dissemination of hacked emails would infringe on the First Amendment of the US Constitution." The AP (7/30, Neumeister) also reports on the decision.

President Trump reacted to the decision in a tweet Tuesday evening. Trump wrote, "Wow! A federal Judge in the Southern District of N.Y. completely dismissed a lawsuit brought by the Democratic National Committee against our historic 2016 campaign for President. The Judge said the DNC case was 'entirely divorced' from the facts, yet another total & complete vindication & exoneration from the Russian, WikiLeaks and every other form of HOAX perpetrated by the DNC, Radical Democrats and others. This is really big 'stuff' especially coming from a highly respected judge who was appointed by President Clinton. The Witch Hunt Ends!"

Trump attorney Jay Sekulow said on Fox News' Hannity (7/30, 535K) that "this is huge because this was basically the DNC's trial of the Russia hoax. ... What you have here is an attempt by the Democratic National Committee to litigate in federal court allegations of Russia collusion, Russia conspiracy, involving the Trump campaign. Not only is it rejected by the Department of Justice in the Mueller report, but it's now rejected by a federal court judge...appointed by President Clinton, who throws the case out and says, 'No evidence.' ... So this is a very, very significant win in federal court, a very significant win for the President. ... This was the death knell, this is the end point of this whole Russia hoax."

Trump: WPost Should Apologize To McConnell For Column Calling Him A "Russian Asset."

The Hill (7/30, Samuels, 2.98M) reports the President said Monday that the Washington Post should apologize to Senate Majority Leader McConnell for publishing an opinion piece titled, "Mitch McConnell is a Russian asset" that "criticized the senator's opposition to election security legislation." Trump, who said he did not read the piece, told reporters, "I think The Washington Post is a Russian asset by comparison. ... Mitch McConnell loves our country. He's done a great job. ... If they actually said that, that Mitch McConnell is an asset of Russia, they ought to be ashamed of themselves, and they ought to apologize." Trump added that McConnell "is a man that knows less about Russia and Russian influence than even Donald Trump, and I know nothing."

The New York Times (7/30, Hulse, 18.61M) says McConnell, who is "usually impervious to criticism," is "incensed with his new moniker, 'Moscow Mitch,' and even more miffed that he has been called a 'Russian asset' by critics who accuse him of single-handedly blocking stronger election security measures after Russia's interference in the 2016 election." The Times says the criticism of McConnell "for impeding a number of election proposals has taken hold – even back home in Kentucky, where the majority leader faces re-election next year."

WPost Analysis: McConnell Opposes Legislation About Hackers And Voting Systems To Please Trump. A Washington Post (7/30, Phillips, 14.2M) analysis reports that McConnell and other Republicans "are blocking bills aimed at blocking foreign hackers from states' voting systems." The Post adds that while "Republicans have policy objections to the legislation...it seems clear that politics is at the forefront of McConnell's decision-making. Specifically, the politics of pleasing Trump." McConnell, adds the Post, "said he won't move the legislation forward because the federal government is already working with states to address election interference."

Trump Says Media Coverage Of Him Is His Biggest Frustration.

President Trump was asked in an interview with C-SPAN (7/30, 56K) what his biggest frustration has been as President. Trump said, "I think the biggest frustration is the way the media covers me, the way media covers perhaps this agenda, and I'm disappointed by it. I'm very surprised by it. Generally, I think over my lifetime, I've gotten pretty good press, and here, no matter how big a victory, they really cover incorrectly. Hence the term 'fake news,' etc., etc. I would say that has been somewhat of a disappointment. I think after I won, I was covered I thought very poorly during the campaign. I thought after I won, they would be different, and actually, they have probably gotten worse. That would be somewhat of a disappointment to me."

Trump Reportedly Asking Those Around Him What Is Happening At Fox News. The Daily Beast (7/30, Suebsaeng, 1.39M) reports "those close to" Trump have recently "noticed him routinely asking media figures, longtime friends, and his political advisers a new, very leading question, often asked in the exact same way: 'What the hell is going on at Fox?'" According to "three people who have independently spoken to Trump about Fox News over the past four weeks, the president has repeatedly asked that question." He has also "grilled certain Fox employees, including his confidant Sean Hannity, on this topic, one of these sources noted." The President has been increasingly critical of Fox News coverage that he sees as less supportive of his Administration than in the past.

Trump Gloats Over Morning Joe's Falling Ratings.

In a tweet Tuesday morning, President Trump blasted MSNBC's Morning Joe, saying the program's ratings have fallen. Trump wrote, "Wow!

Morning Joe & Psycho ratings have really crashed. Very small audience. People are tired of hearing Fake News delivered with an anger that is not to be believed. Sad, when the show was sane, they helped get me elected. Thanks! Was on all the time. Lost all of its juice!

Quinnipiac Poll Finds “Just 32%” Favor Impeachment.

The Washington Times (7/30, Dinan, 492K) reports that according to a Quinnipiac University National Poll of 1,306 voters conducted July 25-28, while “voters believe President Trump is racist and did obstruct the investigation into the 2016 election,” they “still don’t want to see Democrats begin impeachment proceedings against him.” The poll found that “just 32%” favor impeachment, though “Democrats and black voters are in favor.” Meanwhile, “just 31%” said that special counsel Robert Mueller “exonerated Mr. Trump.” The Times adds that 51% of respondents said Trump is “racist,” while 45% said he is not.

Democratic Leaders Face Increased Pressure On Impeachment. The Washington Post (7/30, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports there is “increasing pressure” on Democratic leaders “to respond to calls to impeach” the President, “as nearly a majority of House Democrats now support an impeachment inquiry.” The Post says that “despite what many have described as a lackluster performance, Mueller’s testimony appears to have provided the impetus for a number of fence-sitting Democrats to join in calling for the opening of an impeachment inquiry.” The Post says the growing support for impeachment comes “as the first ad featuring clips from the testimony of former special counsel Robert S. Mueller III is being broadcast on televisions across the country.” The group Need to Impeach, which is “run by billionaire activist Tom Steyer, said it is spending six figures on the ad.”

Schumer Supports Pelosi’s Stance On Impeachment. Senate Minority Leader Schumer said Tuesday that he supports House Speaker Pelosi’s “decision to hold back on a formal impeachment inquiry against President Trump, despite growing support from members of his leadership team for impeachment proceedings.” The Hill (7/30, Bolton, 2.98M) reports. Asked if he would change his position and back impeachment proceedings after one of his deputies, Sen. Patty Murray (D-WA), called for them, Schumer said, “I believe that Speaker Pelosi is handling this appropriately.” The Hill says Schumer “has been careful not to undercut Pelosi’s resistance to a formal impeachment inquiry, despite pressure from within his own caucus.”

Trump Promotes Twitter Accounts Associated With QAnon.

The Washington Post (7/30, Romm, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports President Trump on Tuesday “promoted two Twitter accounts that have shown support for the online conspiracy theory known as QAnon, amplifying the fringe accounts to his millions of followers.” He “tagged one user in a tweet about election security and retweeted another blaming Democrats for voter fraud.” Trump tweeted, “We should immediately pass Voter ID @Voteridplease to insure the safety and sanctity of our voting system. Also, Paper Ballots as backup (old fashioned but true!). Thank you!” The user @Voteridplease “has shared content related to QAnon.” Trump “also retweeted another account that shared a large graphic that read, ‘DEMOCRATS ARE THE TRUE ENEMIES OF AMERICA!’ That user has also linked to QAnon material.”

The Washington Times (7/30, Morton, 492K) reports that in an interview with C-SPAN, Trump “acknowledged some mistakes in his Twitter usage – other people’s tweets.” Asked “whether he regretted any of the 40,000-plus messages he had sent on the social-media site,” Trump said, “Not much, honestly not much. ... A lot of the times the bigger problem is the retweets. ... You know, you retweet something that sounds good but it turns out to be from a player that’s not the best player in the world. And that sort of causes a problem.” Citing the two Twitter accounts tagged by Trump “that, upon investigation by reporters, turned out to have supported the QAnon conspiracy theory,” the Times says, “Twitter later suspended those accounts.”

Trump Expects “Sleepy Joe” Biden To Win Democratic Presidential Nomination.

The New York Post (7/30, Feis, 4.57M) reports President Trump predicted Tuesday that Joe Biden “will ‘limp’ out of a crowded Democratic field to square off against him in 2020.” Trump told reporters, “I think he’s off his game by a lot, but personally, I think it’s going to be ‘Sleepy Joe.’”

Trump Campaign Believes Democrats’ Divisions, Extremes Will Boost Reelection Effort. Politico (7/30, Orr, 4.29M) reports Trump’s campaign believes the divisions among Democratic contenders and the Democrats’ leftward shift will help Trump win reelection. Trump’s team believes “trumpeting” the most extreme moments from Democratic debates “will help win over a certain type of voter that could help carry him to a second term. It’s the voter who might be wary of Trump, but is more alarmed by a Democratic Party they feel is drifting dangerously to the left.”

Trump Calls For Bipartisan Cooperation On “Transportation Infrastructure Act.”

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, “Senate is working hard on America’s Transportation Infrastructure Act. Will have BIG IMPACT on our highways and roads all across our Nation. Interest strong from Republicans and Democrats. Do I hear the beautiful word, BIPARTISAN? Get it done. I am with you!”

Sanders, Warren Defend Liberal Policies Against Attacks From Moderate Rivals At Debate.

In most coverage of Tuesday night’s Democratic presidential debate, the main focus is the ideological divide that was on display between the leading progressives in the race, Sens. Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren, and their comparatively more moderate counterparts, including Montana Gov. Steve Bullock, John Delaney, John Hickenlooper, and Rep. Tim Ryan. Sanders and Warren defended their support for Medicare for All, free college, decriminalizing illegal immigration, and the Green New Deal against criticism from their more centrist rivals, who argued for more pragmatic approaches. Politico (7/30, McCaskill, 4.29M) reports that Sanders and Warren "found themselves the targets of the more moderate candidates on stage, who were eager to contrast themselves and their visions for the country with the most progressive candidates running for president this cycle on issues ranging from health care to immigration."

The AP (7/29, Peoples, Burnett, 1.04M) reports, "The signature domestic proposal by the leading progressive candidates," Medicare for All, "came under withering attack from" centrists "in a debate that laid bare the struggle between a call for revolutionary policies and a desperate desire to defeat President Donald Trump." The AP says Sanders and Warren "slapped back against their more cautious rivals who ridiculed 'Medicare for All' and warned that 'wish-list economics' would jeopardize Democrats' chances for" defeating Trump. Responding to a comment by Delaney, Warren said, "I don't understand why anybody goes to all the trouble of running for president of the United States just to talk about what we really can't do and shouldn't fight for." USA Today (7/30, Groppe, Fritze, Collins, King, Jackson, 10.31M) says the "running exchange between Delaney and Warren underscored a major theme of the debate: Whether the party should pursue big ideas that appeal to progressives, or more incremental changes that appeal to moderates."

The Washington Post (7/31, Olorunnipa, Viser, Wang, 14.2M) reports, "Ambitious proposals for health care, climate change and other policies backed by" Sanders and Warren "came in for sharp critiques from a cadre of moderate candidates jousting for prominence." Sanders and Warren "were emphatic in defending their proposals – and each other – joining forces to brand their moderate detractors as too timid for the moment." Reuters (7/30, Whitesides, Renshaw) reports, "The dispute between the moderate and liberal wings of the Democratic Party highlighted the central question of the nominating contest: Which candidate in the field of more than two dozen would be best positioned to beat Trump next year?" The New York Times (7/30, Burns, Martin, 18.61M) reports that Sanders and Warren "strenuously fought back...against accusations of making fanciful promises and imperiling the party's prospects for" beating "Trump, as a group of moderate underdogs sought to slow their momentum."

The Detroit News (7/30, Oosting, 825K) reports that Tuesday's debate "saw progressive front runners defend against criticism from moderate candidates who warned too 'radical' of an approach could" lead to Trump's reelection. Politico (7/31, Caputo, 4.29M) reports, "Worried that the other Democrats were over-promising or taking positions out of step with the majority of the" nation, Bullock, Delaney, and Ryan joined "together in an unofficial moderate alliance," arguing that Sanders and Warren "are making it tougher to" defeat "Trump in 2020, with his campaign already attacking Democrats over the issues."

The Washington Times (7/30, Miller, McLaughlin, 492K) reports, "Exposing the depth of the rift in the Democratic Party, the moderate candidates shot down the left's most cherished proposals such as 'Medicare for All' government-run health care, decriminalized illegal immigration and the 'Green New Deal' environmental overhaul the US economy," with Delaney accusing Sanders and Warren "of peddling 'fairytale economics.' He warned that the party will lose if it embraces the liberal agenda of Mr. Sanders and Ms. Warren, invoking past Democratic presidential losers – George McGovern, Walter Mondale and Michael Dukakis – as a cautionary tale of what happens when the party moves too far left." The New York Times (7/30, A1, Goodnough, 18.61M) reports, "In the end," the debate "was a battle between aspiration and pragmatism, a crystallization of the struggle between the party's left and moderate factions."

In a front-page article headlined "Sanders, Warren Fight Back Against Moderates In Second Democratic Debate," the Wall Street Journal (7/30, A1, McCormick, Parti, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) offers a similar report. Under the headline "Left-wing Democrats Pounded By 2020 Debate Rivals On Healthcare And Immigration," the Washington Examiner (7/30, Lim, 448K) highlights the moderate candidates' criticism of the liberal policies pushed by Sanders and Warren. Under the headline "Moderate Democrats Make Their Last Stand During CNN Debate," the Daily Caller (7/30, Athey, 716K) offers a similar report. Under the headline "5 Takeaways From Combative Democratic Debate," The Hill (7/30, Greenwood, Easley, 2.98M) puts at the top of its list: "Debate puts Democratic divides on display." USA Today (7/30, Hayes, 10.31M) highlights key moments from yesterday's debate.

In an analysis for the Washington Post (7/31, 14.2M), Dan Balz writes, "It has been building since the first primary debate in Miami ended, and on Tuesday night, it broke out into the open, a full-scale ideological brawl about the direction of the Democratic Party and what it will take to defeat President Trump in 2020." Balz adds, "The fault line that was exposed between left and center now fully defines the Democratic nomination contest and will continue to do so as the candidates move through the summer and fall and head toward the primaries and caucuses early next year. It ultimately will be up to Democratic voters to resolve the differences, but the choices have become clearer and will now become harder to paper over."

In his Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) column, E.J. Dionne Jr. says the "debate was choppy but passionate, opening up wide philosophical divisions within the party's presidential field and providing sound bites critical of progressive ideas and candidates that Republicans are certain to use in 2020."

Politico (7/31, Shepard, 4.29M) reports, "Tuesday's event didn't necessarily have one clear winner, but here are some superlatives from the second Democratic debate, Part I." Under the heading "Made the Most of His 15 Minutes," Politico says Delaney "had exactly what he wanted," an opportunity to engage in "a fight with Sanders and Warren." The AP (7/31, Woodward, Yen) runs a fact-check piece examining the candidates' various claims made during the debate.

Warren, Sanders Spoke The Most During Debate. The Washington Post (7/30, Janes, Hughes, 14.2M) reports that according to its calculations, Warren spoke the most during Tuesday's debate, 17.9 minutes, followed by Sanders at 17.6 minutes, South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 14.4 minutes, ex-Rep. Beto O'Rourke at 10.9 minutes, Bullock at 10.8 minutes, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) at 10.7 minutes, Delaney at 10.3 minutes, and the other contenders lagging further behind.

Giuliani: Sanders, Warren "Defined Themselves As Very, Very Radical, Fiscally Irresponsible Left-Wingers." Trump attorney Rudy Giuliani said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (7/30), "What I really thought the takeaway from tonight's debate was, Sanders and Warren defined themselves as very, very radical, fiscally irresponsible left-wingers."

Williamson Winner Of Drudge Debate Poll. Breitbart (7/30, Caplan, 673K) reports, "Spiritual guru and author Marianne Williamson topped the Drudge Report's instant straw poll following the second 2020 Democrat presidential debate in Detroit, Michigan on Tuesday night. An early count shows Williamson garnered nearly 48 percent of the vote," followed by Delaney at 11%, and Warren and Sanders at "roughly 6 percent each."

In his New York Post (7/30, Podhoretz, 4.57M) column, John Podhoretz writes, "Used to be that Republicans running for president had the monopoly on unknowns, also-rans and non-politicians who would suddenly step up and deliver standout performances in debates." In Tuesday's debate, however, it was "Williamson [that] hit it out of the park and brought the Democratic Party into the Nutcase Era. The key problem afflicting America, in Williamson's view, is a 'dark psychic force' that is weaving a racial divide. It is the cause of white nationalism. That racial divide is causing an 'emotional imbalance' that is interfering with human thriving."

The Washington Examiner (7/30, Gage, 448K) reports that in a Tuesday tweet, Mike Huckabee quipped, "I may abandon my support of @realDonaldTrump and go w/ Marianne Williamson. I've already lit a candle, stroked a crystal, got in yoga pose, taken deep breaths, and chanted out loud and I feeling real love right now. She's got the groove!"

Sanders Labels Tapper Question On Medicare For All Taxes "A Republican Talking Point." USA Today (7/30, Culver, 10.31M) reports that during the debate, Sanders criticized moderator Jake Tapper "for using what he called a 'Republican talking point.'" Responding to a question from Tapper about "whether the middle class should pay more in taxes in order to support 'Medicare for all,'" Sanders replied, "There are millions of people who have insurance. They can't and when they come out of the hospital, they go bankrupt. What I am talking about and others up here are talking about is no deductibles and no copayments. And Jake, your question is a Republican talking point."

Ryan Only Candidate Not To Hold Hand Over Heart During National Anthem At Debate. The Washington Times (7/30, Morton, 492K) reports, "When 'The Star-Spangled Banner' played before the start of Tuesday night's Democratic presidential debate," all of the candidates except Ryan held "their hands over their hearts."

Trump Campaign Airing Ad During Debates Hitting Democrats For Backing Healthcare For Illegal Immigrants. The Hill (7/30, Hellmann, 2.98M) reports that Trump's "campaign will air an ad during the Democratic debates this week highlighting the candidates' support for providing health care to undocumented immigrants. Democrats are 'putting illegal immigrants before hardworking Americans,' says a narrator in the ad, which will air on CNN, MSNBC and Fox during the debates Tuesday and Wednesday. The ad shows video from the second night of the first set of debates, when every" candidate "raised their hands when asked whose health care proposals would cover undocumented immigrants. 'Democrats – radical, reckless, socialist,' the narrator says."

Pair Of National Polls Show Biden Leading By Double Digits In Democratic Race.

The Hill (7/30, Rodrigo, 2.98M) reports Joe Biden "holds big leads" in the 2020 race for the Democratic presidential nomination "in two national polls released Tuesday." An Emerson poll of 520 likely Democratic primary voters, taken July 27-29, shows Biden leading with 33%, followed by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) at 20%, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) at 14%, Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) at 11%, and Pete Buttigieg at 6%; no other contender topped four percent. Meanwhile, a Morning Consult weekly tracking poll of 16,959 Democratic voters, taken July 22-28, shows Biden leading with 33%, followed by Sanders at 18%, Warren at 13%, Harris at 12%, and Buttigieg at 5%; no other contender topped three percent. USA Today (7/30, Cummings, 10.31M) reports, "Heading into the second Democratic debate in Detroit, Biden's polling average, according to RealClearPolitics, is currently at 32%, exactly where it was before the" first debate last month "in Miami before dipping to a low of 26%."

Texas Poll: O'Rourke 27%; Biden 24%; Sanders 15%; Warren 11%; Harris 9%. The Hill (7/30, Klar, 2.98M) reports that a University of Texas poll of 465 Texas Democratic voters, taken July 24-27, shows Beto O'Rourke leading with 27%, followed by Biden at 24%, Sanders at 15%, Warren at 11%, and Harris at 9%. O'Rourke's support is up 12 points since a similar poll taken last month.

Clinton Aide Says Trump Will Be "Hard To Beat" In Debates.

Longtime Hillary Clinton aide Philippe Reines writes in Politico Magazine (7/30, 4.24M) about his experience playing President Trump in Clinton's 2016 debate preparations. He writes, "Watching a candidate share a debate stage with nine others might be one of the most important ways of deciding whom you like the most, but less useful in determining who is best to debate Trump. If that were our sole criterion, we should skip the thoughtful policy discussions and instead require each candidate to debate a 10-year-old boy who responds to everything with, 'I know you are, but what am I?'" While "that kid is obnoxious," "juvenile," and "insufferable," Reines writes, "that kid is hard to beat."

WPost Examines "Poignant But Complicated" Obama-Biden Friendship.

The Washington Post Magazine (7/30, Levingston, 13.17M) has a 5,300-word feature on "The Poignant But Complicated Friendship Of Joe Biden And Barack Obama," adapted from the upcoming book "Barack and Joe: The Making of an Extraordinary Partnership" by Steven Levingston. Levingston writes that “over their eight years together in office, Obama and Biden taught us a lesson in male bonding, often startling us by professing their fondness for each other.” He concludes that the two “adored each other, and probably still do, but it is also true that their own aspirations and their political hopes for America have not always aligned. Their friendship, in other words, was real. But like a lot of friendships, it was complicated.”

Ex-Hassan Aide Pleads Guilty To Misdemeanors In Kavanaugh Doxing Case.

Politico (7/30, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports Samantha Davis, a former staff assistant to Sen. Maggie Hassan (D-NH), “has pleaded guilty to aiding computer hacking and attempted evidence tampering for helping a fired co-worker enter a Senate office at night and wiping down computers so the colleague wouldn’t be caught.” Davis pleaded guilty to “two misdemeanor crimes for her role in events that culminated in the release of personal information of Republican senators backing the confirmation of Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court.” During her court appearance, “there was no indication that Davis was aware of or involved in the doxing carried out” by fired Hassan aide Jackson Cosko.

Political Operative Faces More Charges In North Carolina Ballot Tampering Case.

The Washington Post (7/30, Krakow, 14.2M) reports a North Carolina grand jury has returned new indictments against Leslie McCrae Dowless, “a political operative who prosecutors say orchestrated a ballot-tampering scheme while working for” Republican congressional candidate Mark Harris last year. Dowless “was charged with two counts of felony obstruction of justice, perjury, solicitation to commit perjury, conspiracy to obstruct justice and possession of absentee ballots.”

Pentagon CTO Has Moved To Eliminate Long-Standing Advisory Panel.

Reuters (7/30, Levinson) reports Defense Department CTO Michael Griffin moved in late March to terminate “a prestigious academic panel with top-secret clearances who’ve advised the Pentagon on some of America’s most vexing national security issues” for more than 60 years. The group, “known as Jason, is a team of some 60 of America’s top physicists and scientists who spend each summer in La Jolla, California, conducting studies commissioned by the Pentagon and other US government agencies.” Griffin has not commented on his move, “but a Defense Department spokeswoman said the Pentagon decided it had less need for the studies than previously thought.”

Two TSA Agents Suspended Over Racist Display At Miami Airport.

NBC Nightly News (7/30, story 12, 1:20, Holt, 5.48M) reported two TSA agents “have been suspended tonight after the discovery of an offensive and racist display” at Miami International Airport. NBC’s Morgan Chesky said the display featured “a noose with two stuffed gorillas. ... Three officers stumbled upon it last week near a work space where agents screen luggage. In response, the TSA calls it ‘unacceptable,’ saying it ‘does not tolerate racist or offensive behavior and those found responsible will be held accountable for their actions.’”

WPost Backs Hogan’s Plan To Improve Maryland Roads.

The Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) argues in an editorial that Northern Virginia has been outpacing Maryland in improving and expanding roads in the Washington region because a proposal by Gov. Larry Hogan (R) “to add express toll lanes to the Beltway through Montgomery and Prince George’s counties, and to Interstate 270 heading north to Frederick, faces uncertain prospects and opposition from local officials, all Democrats.” The Post calls Hogan’s plan “a sensible response to a predictable crisis that threatens to consign his state to perpetual also-ran status in the regional economic sweepstakes.”

NYTimes Backs New York Political Contribution Legislation.

The New York Times (7/30, 18.61M) says in an editorial that “more than a dozen” states have laws “that restrict candidates from receiving political contributions from companies doing business with or seeking business with the state.” Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) – who “has accepted millions of dollars in campaign contributions from people who win or seek contracts from New York state agencies” – agrees that New York “should join their ranks. ... The State Senate passed a bill this year to limit similar donations. The Legislature should pass it when it comes back in session in January.”

NYTimes: New York City Housing Authority “In Dire Need” Of Reform.

The New York Times (7/30, 18.61M) says in an editorial that New York’s efforts to fix the New York City Housing Authority’s “biggest problems have not been effective or speedy enough. ... Not only is there a backlog of tens of thousands of apartments to inspect, but the authority hasn’t even identified all apartments with young children, where inspection should be a priority.” The Times says the housing authority “is in dire need of rapid reforms to increase accountability, at every level.”

Trump Retweets Post Showing Him Praising First Responders On 9/11.

President Trump on Tuesday retweeted a post by Women for Trump co-founder and chair Amy Kremer that included video of Trump praising first responders at Ground Zero on Sept. 11, 2001. Trump wrote, “Thank you Amy!”

Contract Suggests Guantanamo Prison May Be Open Through 2043.

The Washington Times (7/30, Meier, 492K) reports, "The Trump administration may have sent a subtle clue about its plans for the terrorist detainee prison at Guantanamo Bay by awarding a maintenance contract for work at the site that extends until 2043." The Pentagon announced last week that Siemens Government Technologies "had been granted a contract worth more than $800 million to perform maintenance and energy conservation projects at the prison."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.2%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.2%, and his disapproval at 52.3%. The President's approval is up 0.3 since yesterday; his disapproval is down by 1.5.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (7/25-7/29) finds Trump's approval at 47%, with 51% disapproving.

An Emerson poll of 1,233 "registered voters" (7/27-7/29) shows Trump's approval at 45%, with 46% disapproving.

A Politico/Morning Consult survey of 1,994 "registered voters" (7/25-7/27), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 43%, and his disapproval at 53%.

Pound Slides As Johnson Vows To Deliver Brexit On Time "No Matter What."

Reuters (7/30, James, Humphries) reports Prime Minister Boris Johnson "promised on Tuesday to lead Britain out of the European Union on Oct. 31 'no matter what' as sterling tumbled." The British pound fell "to an intraday low of $1.2120," its "lowest since March 2017." Reuters notes the pound "has lost 3.6 cents since Johnson was named Britain's new prime minister a week ago." The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Ostroff, Davies, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the pound is nearing its lowest sustained level against the dollar in more than 34 years.

The AP (7/30, Lawless) reports Johnson yesterday visited Wales as part of "a national tour to reassure voters that his push for Brexit 'come what may' won't hurt the economy and rip apart the UK."

Chinese Manufacturing Shows Improvement, But Still Contracting.

Bloomberg (7/31, 4.73M) reports the "first official indicator of China's economy in the second half of 2019 showed conditions for factories improved slightly amid an ongoing government push to support the sector as it suffers from weak global demand and the U.S. trade war." The manufacturing PMI rose to 49.7 in July, "led by better conditions for large companies. The below-50 reading still signals contraction, though is better than the median estimate of 49.6 in a survey of economists."

China Looking Into Small Bank Shareholdings As Risk Worries Persist. Reuters (7/30, Leng, Chatterjee) reports China is "sharpening its scrutiny of small banks' shareholders amid fears that loans from the lenders to big investors could prove a weak point in the country's financial system, jolted by the state's weekend rescue of one lender and recent takeover of another." The piece explains that, "while nominally small, China's numerous small city commercial banks risk having outsized significance because of their close ties to the rest of the banking system as well as with bigger shareholders, many of whom are giant companies." Earlier this month, the China Banking and Insurance Regulatory Commission (CBIRC) "asked banks and some other financial firms for details of any investor building up stakes of 5% or more without required regulatory approvals."

BOE Requires Big Banks To Publish "Living Wills" In 2021.

Reuters (7/30, Jones) reports Britain's biggest banks, including Barclays and HSBC, "will have to tell investors in 2021 if they can be closed down without creating havoc in financial markets, the Bank of England said on Tuesday." After rescuing RBS and Lloyds during the financial crisis, big British banks "will have to present 'living wills' which show they can be resolved in an orderly way so that customer deposits and some core services are unaffected." In a statement, BOE Deputy Governor Jon Cunliffe said, "Increased transparency about the resolution regime is in the public's interest and also incentivises firms to make further progress on their resolvability."

Seoul: North Korea Fires Two Short-Range Ballistic Missiles.

Thomson Reuters Foundation (7/30, 27K) reports North Korea fired "multiple unidentified projectiles early on Wednesday, the Yonhap news agency reported, citing the South Korean military's Joint Chiefs of Staff." Reuters adds that just last week, North Korea test-fired two new short-range ballistic missiles. In its lead story last night, the CBS Evening News (7/30, lead story, 1:44, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported "a US official tells CBS News these firings look very similar to the last set of short-range ballistic missiles fired less than a week ago," and the Washington Post (7/30, Denyer, Hudson, 14.2M) reports South Korea's military said in a statement later Wednesday that the projectiles fired by North Korea were "two short-range ballistic missiles."

ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 2, 1:36, Muir, 6.31M) reported, "Less than one week after Kim Jong Un fired off two short-range ballistic missiles, there's news tonight he's at it again." On Tuesday, "President Trump insist[ed] his relationship with the dictator remains strong." Trump: "My relationship with Kim Jong Un is a very good one, as I'm sure you've seen. We'll see what happens. I can't tell you what's going to happen." ABC's David Muir noted that "in just the last 24 hours...Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said that he hopes nuclear negotiations will start, quote, 'again very soon,' and now this news tonight."

Andrea Mitchell likewise said on NBC Nightly News (7/30, story 2, 0:39, Holt, 5.48M), "North Korea appears to have fired at least two short-range ballistic missiles, the second launch in a week, the third since May, only hours after the President bragged about his relationship with Kim Jong Un."

North Korean Official Tells NSC Official Talks Should Revive Soon. Reuters (7/30, Rampton) reports, "A North Korean official told a White House National Security Council counterpart last week that working-level talks to revive denuclearization negotiations with North Korea would start very soon," according to an unnamed "senior US administration official." Reuters also reports Secretary of State Pompeo and North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho "had been expected to meet on the sidelines of a Southeast Asia security forum in Bangkok this week, but Ri canceled his trip to the conference, a diplomatic source said."

Ocasio-Cortez: "What's Going On With Israel" Is "Very Criminal."

The Washington Examiner (7/30, Brest, 448K) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "agreed with a New York radio host who said that what's going on in Israel is 'very criminal' on Tuesday." The host of "Ebro In The Morning" said, "What's going on with Israel and Palestine, while it's very deep, it is very, very criminal. It is very, very unjust." Ocasio-Cortez responded, "Absolutely, and I think to where we're at as a country when it comes to Israel-Palestine is very much a generational thing. I think that when we start looking at it through that lens, a lot of this stuff starts to make sense." She added, "There's this idea that if you criticize a policy of Israel, the Right wants to advance this notion that if you engage in critique of Israeli policy that you are anti-Semitic. But it's the furthest thing from the truth. ... Criticizing the occupation doesn't make you anti-Israel, frankly. It doesn't mean you're against the existence of a nation."

WPost Fact-Checker: Trump Falsely Claims Iran Has Changed Its Regional Behavior.

A Washington Post (7/30, Mirza, 14.2M) "Fact-Checker" analysis writes that it has been "more than a year" since President Trump withdrew from the 2015 nuclear deal from Iran and announced his intention of "instituting the highest level of economic sanction." So began his Administration's "maximum pressure" campaign against Iran. The Post says that while the President "has repeatedly claimed his policy has had an impact in changing Iran's regional behavior," a "report from the International Crisis Group looked at 40 years of Iran's economic performance and its regional activity," and found "there appears to be little correlation between Iran's support for proxies and shifts in its economy or oil revenue."

Experts Warn Pentagon Falling Behind Adversaries In Developing Hypersonic Weapons.

The Washington Times (7/30, Wolfgang, 492K) reports that the US "isn't used to losing arms races, but defense insiders...warn that the Pentagon is dangerously behind some of its top rivals in the race to build a new generation of game-changing weapons." The "rapid advance of hypersonic technology has eroded the once-insurmountable US edge over its adversaries, analysts say." Experts gathered at "a high-level conference this week at Purdue University," warn that "Washington has allowed Beijing and Moscow to make massive strides while failing to keep pace or to develop a comprehensive strategy to counter enemy first strikes."

Yazidi Women Raped By ISIS Militants Forced To Give Up Their Children If They Return Home.

The Washington Post (7/30, Loveluck, Salim, 14.2M) reports that when ISIS "tore across Iraq in 2014," Yazidi women were "given as sex slaves to the fighters" and many bore children to their captors. In April, the Yazidi's "highest religious body issued an edict that appeared to suggest that children born to an Islamic State father...would be welcomed back," but "the backlash was immediate, and the door swiftly closed." According to the religion, "a child cannot be counted as a Yazidi unless he or she has two Yazidi parents." Karim Sulaiman, a spokesman for the Yazidi Supreme Spiritual Council, said, "We know that they're just children and that they have no guilt. But in this case, religion and society just cannot accept them." As a result, the Post says Yazidi women are forced to give up if their children if they want to return home.

IG Report: State Department Wasted $103 Million On Afghan Security Compound.

The Washington Post (7/30, Morello, Constable, 14.2M) reports the State Department "wasted $103 million in an urgent effort to build a security compound in Afghanistan," the agency's inspector general said in a report issued Tuesday. The project, "which was terminated in early 2017," started in 2014 "amid increasing security threats." Security guards responsible for protecting US personnel "were housed more than two miles from the US Embassy in Kabul" and "had to travel the distance four times a day in convoys. To minimize the dangers," the Department began construction on a compound closer the embassy. An engineering consultant hired "to review the plans warned that delays and cost overruns were inevitable," but the "advice was repeatedly ignored," and the State Department "plowed ahead with the project, originally estimated to cost $173 million." The Post says "by the time the State Department pulled the plug in January 2017, the projected cost had ballooned to $315 million, and only 10 percent...had been completed."

Five Killed In Bombing Near Pakistani Police Station.

Reuters (7/30, Yousafzai) reports that five people, including two policemen, "were killed and 27 injured in a blast near a police station in southwestern Pakistani city of Quetta on Tuesday evening, a week after a similar blast that killed two people, police said." An "explosive rigged motorcycle was detonated to target a police van parked outside the police station" in Quetta, the city's police chief said. In "a similar blast last Tuesday two people were killed and 16 were injured when an explosive-rigged motorcycle went off outside a store in Quetta."

Trump Praises Bolsonaro For Nominating Son As US Ambassador.

The Washington Times (7/30, Howell, 492K) reports President Trump on Tuesday "praised Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro's decision to appoint his son, Eduardo, as the ambassador to the US, saying he doesn't view it as nepotism." Said Trump, "I find his son to be outstanding. I know his son, and that's probably why they did it." He added, "I don't think it's nepotism."

Celebrities Travel To Google Climate Summit In Private Jets.

Page Six (7/30, Smith, Bowden, 1.6M) reports the "world's rich and famous have flocked to a posh Italian resort to talk about saving Mother Earth — but they sure are punishing her in the process." Google's creators "have invited a who's who of A-list names— including former President Barack Obama, Prince Harry, Leonardo DiCaprio and Katy Perry — to the Sicilian seaside for a mega-party they've dubbed Google Camp." According to Italian press reports, "the attendees were expected to show up in 114 private jets, and 40 had arrived by Sunday."

Trump Dispatches US Envoy As A$AP Rocky's Trial Begins In Sweden.

The CBS Evening News (7/30, story 12, 1:34, O'Donnell, 4.13M) reported rapper A$AP Rocky pleaded not guilty on Tuesday to assault charges in Sweden. CBS (Saber) added, "On the first day of a trial that has spiraled into an international incident, A$AP Rocky sat silently as the prosecutor played this video showing the rapper throw a 19-year-old man to the ground, then punch and kick him. Rocky, his cousin, and friend are arguing self-defense, and in videos he posted online he repeatedly told the man to leave them alone." President Trump has called for Rocky's release, and "even dispatched his special envoy for hostage affairs." Special envoy Robert C. O'Brien: "I'm here to bring these Americans home. We'd like to see them get back to the United States as soon as possible. I think the President has made that very clear." CBS said the trial is expected to last until Friday.

Italian Police Reveal Murder Weapon Used By American Teens In Officer's Death.

ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 9, 1:24, Muir, 6.47M) reported Italian authorities yesterday "reveal[ed] an image of the seven-inch knife that they say" two American teens used to kill an Italian police officer. ABC (Pannell) added, "The blade seven inches long, according to police, plunged into the officer 11 times." Police say Americans 18-year-old Gabriel Natale and 19-year-old Finnegan Elder "confess[ed] to the stabbing of officer Mario Cerciello Rega after a drug deal gone bad." NBC Nightly News (7/30, story 8, 0:20, Holt, 5.48M) reported Italian authorities "say the suspects brought [the knife] from the US."

Chinese Officials Claim Most People Released From Re-education Centers.

The AP (7/30, Wang) reports, "Officials from China's northwestern Xinjiang region said Tuesday that most of the people who were in the area's controversial re-education centers have since left the facilities and signed 'work contracts' with local companies — claims that conflict with testimonies from Uighurs and Kazakhs who say their family members remain missing." The AP adds, "Former detainees and their family members have said in interviews with The Associated Press that the re-education centers resembled prisons where they were forced to renounce their faith and swear loyalty to China's ruling Communist Party."

Xi's Cousin Under Investigation By Australian Authorities Over Alleged Mob Ties. The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Wen, Wong, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Australian law enforcement are investigating Ming Chai, a cousin of Chinese President Xi Jinping and Australian citizen, as part of a probe into organized crime, money laundering and alleged Chinese influence-peddling, according to Australian officials. In particular, police are investigating Ming's alleged 2017 use of what they describe as a money-laundering front company.

WPost China Doesn't Understand Hong Kong Protests. The Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) editorializes that "China's rulers made it clear Monday that they don't have any new ideas about how to respond to the protests shaking Hong Kong," and "are hinting at the use of People's Liberation Army forces to put down the protests." The Post writes that "if the leaders in Beijing were smart, they would see that the protests that began in June are morphing into something more desperate than before, and they would be responsive to the demands." Instead, "China is making a large and potentially costly mistake by failing to understand the protests and the reasons behind them."

Freddie Mac Predicts More Homebuying Activity, Low Rates In 2020.

USA Today (7/30, Ausick, 10.31M) reports Freddie Mac "predicts more homebuying" and "forecasts mortgage lending to rise this year and next, due to combined low mortgage interest rates and slowing home price growth." Freddie said on Tuesday in its monthly forecast that the strong labor market and low rates will "help sustain the housing market for at least the next year and a half." 30-year FRM rates are expected to average 4.1% this year and 4.0% in 2020. Housing starts are expected to rise to 1.26 million units this year and 1.34 million next year. Home price growth is expected to rise 3.4% this year, but slow to 2.6% in 2020. Originations are forecast at $1.8 trillion in 2019, and $1.7 trillion in 2020. According to USA Today, first-time buyers may still face hurdles heading into 2021, as the CFPB "has said it will eliminate" the QM "patch." Although "the new forecast from Freddie Mac extends only into 2020, it seems clear that the number of mortgages will drop when the CFPB patch is eliminated."

National Mortgage News (7/30, Finkelstein) reports Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "We expect to see stronger housing starts and increased home sales for the remainder of the year as homebuyers benefit from very attractive mortgage rates, lower prices at the gas pump, plus a gradual bump up in wages. While this affordability boost is welcomed, rising demand in the face of limited homes for-sale is likely to put even more upward pressure on house prices. ... Owing to possible interest rate cuts in the second half of 2019, we expect the federal funds effective rate to be 2.3% in the third and fourth quarter of 2019. While our 2019 annual forecast for the federal funds rate remains unchanged from our previous forecast at 2.4%, we expect the annual average for 2020 to be 2.3%, which assumes no further rate cuts in 2020."

GSEs Prepare To Report Q2 Earnings.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/30, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac report second quarter earnings shortly and all eyes will be on the first paragraph where the two typically disclose information on when they will make the next dividend payment to the Treasury Department, which holds the senior preferred class of stock in the two." IMF predicts both GSEs "will pay Uncle Sam what he's owed by the end of September," and there "likely will be no revelation (at this time) allowing the two to build capital." IMF adds that FHFA Director Mark Calabria "recently told Reuters that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac eventually will halt purchases of residential loans indexed to LIBOR," stating, "We have not yet told Fannie and Freddie to stop buying LIBOR ARMs but this is a day that will come."

The Bancorp Wades Further Into CRE As Many Other Lenders Shy Away.

American Banker (7/30, Reosti, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports The Bancorp has "ramped up" its CRE dealings over the past several years, opting to "sponsor its own securitizations" and bundling "five deals totaling $1.7 billion since 2016." CEO Damian Kozlowski on Friday announced that a sixth deal totaling more than $700 million is currently in the works. Meanwhile, according to American Banker, Brooklyn-based Dime Community Bancshares "completed a $280 million securitization in late 2017, while the $9.4 billion-asset Banc of California in Santa Ana is looking to finalize a $574 million-asset bundle later this year. Those banks funneled their production into larger securitizations sponsored by Freddie Mac." This comes as "many other lenders have become more cautious" about CRE, particularly "multifamily and retail development."

Mortgage-Related CFPB Complaints Decline Slightly.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/30, Yang, Subscription Publication) reports mortgage-related complaints filed with the CFPB in Q2 "remained almost unchanged" from Q1, but "marked a double-digit decline from a year ago." Total mortgage complaints "rose 0.4% sequentially to 5,556 in the second quarter. At the six-month mark, mortgage-related complaints were down 17.7% from the first half of 2018." Servicing "continued to draw the majority of the complaints filed," but servicing-related complaints "dropped 1.3% to 2,821 in the first quarter, and the six-month volume fell 7.9% from a year ago." Other types of mortgage complaints "all saw double-digit declines annually," with modification-related complaints falling 29.6% in the first half of 2019 compared to the same period a year prior. Closing-related complaints fell 19.1% over the same timespan. Application-related complaints fell 16%.

MBA: Low Mortgage Rates Could Send Refis To 3-Year High This Quarter.

HousingWire (7/30, Howley, 23K) reports, "Cheap rates could push mortgage refinancings to a near-three-year high in the current quarter, the Mortgage Bankers Association said in their latest forecast." MBA predicts refi volume "will grow to $180 billion" in 3Q19, the largest volume since 2Q16's $265 billion of refis. MBA predicted the refi share will stand at 33% this quarter, which is the highest since 1Q18's 37%. Based on Freddie Mac's report that the 30-year FRM average fell to 3.75% last week, MBA predicts that the 30-year FRM will average 3.9% this quarter, "down from 4.4% at the beginning of the year." According to Black Knight, over eight million homeowners with 30-year loans are now "refi eligible," which is the highest number since 2016.

Mortgage Banking Income Barely Increased In Q2, Despite Surge In Originations.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/30, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports that its new analysis of "earnings reports from a diverse group of 20 publicly owned banks found combined second-quarter income from mortgage banking of $1.86 billion, up just 2.6% from the first three months of the year." Meanwhile, first-lien residential originations "mushroomed to an estimated $565 billion, a huge 59.6% explosion from the first quarter." According to IMF, "Volume wasn't the problem. Less-than-stellar hedging results on mortgage servicing rights were, along with some squishy production margins."

Fannie Mae Executes CIRT Transaction Covering Single-Family Affordable Loans.

DS News (7/30, Welborn) reports, "Fannie Mae has announced that it has executed a new Credit Insurance Risk Transfer (CIRT) transaction. According to the GSE, the covered loans are delivered to Fannie Mae with a short-term, lender repurchase obligation, provided primarily by state Housing Finance Agencies (HFAs), which serves as the initial loan credit enhancement." The new deal "provides front-end coverage of loans to be delivered to Fannie Mae over a forward 12-month period plus bulk coverage of existing loans, together insuring up to $1.75 billion of high loan-to-value ratios." Fannie Mae "has committed to acquire about $9.4 billion of insurance coverage on $360 billion of single-family loans through the CIRT program to date." Fannie Mae VP Rob Schaefer said, "This deal pioneered new ground as our first CIRT transaction to cover a targeted pool of single-family affordable loans. ... As this deal demonstrates, we continue to diversify our CIRT offerings, and are proud to be a leader in building and supporting the market for transferring Single-Family mortgage credit risk to private sources of capital."

NAR: In June, Pending Home Sales See First YoY Gain In 17 Months.

MarketWatch (7/30, Goldstein, 1.67M) reports NAR said Tuesday that pending home sales rose 2.8% in June, driven by a 5.4% surge in the West. Nationwide, sales rose 1.6% YoY, marking the first YoY gain in 17 months. Reuters (7/30) reports pending home sales "rose more than expected in June," with NAR crediting lower mortgage rates with supporting the housing market. According to Reuters, "Economists polled by Reuters had forecast pending home sales would rise 0.5% in June." HousingWire (7/30, Lloyd, 23K) reports that by region, the Pending Home Sales Index rose in June by: 2.7% in the Northeast (0.9% higher than June 2018); 3.3% in the Midwest (1.7% higher than June 2018); 1.3% in the South (1.4% higher than June 2018), and 5.4% in the West (2.5% higher than June 2018).

Mortgage News Daily (7/30, Swanson) reports NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun said, "Job growth is doing well, the stock market is near an all-time high and home values are consistently increasing. When you combine that with the incredibly low mortgage rates, it is not surprising to now see two straight months of increases. ... Homes are selling at a breakneck pace, in less than a month, on average, for existing homes and three months for newly constructed homes. Furthermore, homeowners' equity in real estate has doubled over the past six years to now nearly $16 trillion. But the number of potential buyers exceeds the number of homes available. We need to see sizable growth in inventory, particularly of entry-level homes, to assure wider access to homeownership."

Case-Shiller HPI Shows Price Gains Continued Slowing In May.

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Parker, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports home price growth slowed in May, according to the latest S&P CoreLogic Case-Shiller National Home Price Index. Bloomberg (7/30, Haar, 4.73M) reports, "The S&P CoreLogic Case-Shiller index of property values increased 2.4% from a year earlier after April's 2.5% advance, according to data out Tuesday. The gauge for monthly basis prices improved slightly while nationally home-price growth also moderated from May of last year." The 20-city index has now "decelerated for a 14th straight month." Mortgage News Daily (7/30, Swanson) reports, "The 10-City Composite slipped from 2.3 percent in April to 2.2 percent and the 20-City Composite posted appreciation of 2.4 percent, down 0.1 point from the previous month."

The AP (7/30, Boak) reports that a city-level look at the data highlights the "sluggish price growth" in the nation's priciest markets; prices "rose less than 2% in Los Angeles, New York, San Diego, and San Francisco." However, several cities were outliers. While Phoenix prices rose 5.7% and Tampa prices rose 5.1%, Las Vegas had the strongest gains, at 6.4%, according to the Las Vegas (NV) Review-Journal (7/30, Segall, 345K).

HousingWire (7/30, Lloyd, 23K) reports S&P Dow Jones Indices Director and Global Head of Index Governance Philip Murphy said, "Though home price gains seem generally sustainable for the time being, there are significant variations between YOY rates of change in individual cities. Seattle's home price index is now 1.2% lower than it was in May 2018, the first negative YOY change recorded in a major city in a number of years. On the other hand, Las Vegas and Phoenix, while cooler than they were during 2018, remain quite strong at 6.4% and 5.7% YOY gains, respectively." Murphy added, "Whether negative YOY rates of change spread to other cities remains to be seen; for now, there is still substantial diversity in local trends. Nationally, increasing housing supply points to somewhat weakened demand, but the fact that seven cities experienced stronger YOY price gains in May than they did in April suggests an underlying resiliency that may mitigate the risk of overshooting to the downside at the national level."

Opinion: HUD's Stance On Disparate Impact Standard Is A "Step In The Right Direction."

In a National Review (7/30, 731K) opinion piece, Robert Clegg argues the Administration should be "commended for the new regulations that HUD is proposing for enforcement of the Fair Housing Act, aimed at changing the disparate-impact approach used in the Obama administration." Although the "proposed regulations are not perfect," they represent a "big step in the right direction."

Treasury Yields Drop Slightly.

Bloomberg (7/30, 4.73M) reports the yield on 10-year Treasuries "dipped one basis point to 2.05%" as of 9:15 a.m. in London, "the lowest in a week."

Dollar Stays Firm.

Reuters (7/31, Saoshiro) reports, "The dollar held firm on Wednesday, as a wait-and-see mood prevailed, with traders looking ahead to the outcome of the Federal Reserve's meeting later in the day when policymakers are expected to cut interest rates for the first time since 2008." The dollar index against a basket of six major currencies "stood little changed at 98.055 after pulling back from a two-month high of 98.206 touched on Tuesday." Against the yen, the dollar "was flat at 108.575 yen." Meanwhile, the euro "was little changed at $1.1154."

Gold Holds Steady.

Reuters (7/31, Patel) reports, "Gold prices held steady on Wednesday as investors waited on the outcome of the Federal Reserve's meeting later in the day when policymakers are expected to cut interest rates for the first time since the financial crisis." Spot gold "was flat at $1,430.69 per ounce as of 0723 GMT," while US gold futures "edged 0.1% higher to $1,443.60 an ounce."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (UK) (7/30, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil prices rose for a fifth day on Wednesday, buoyed by a bigger than expected drop in US inventories and as investors awaited a widely expected cut in interest rates by the Federal Reserve, the first in more than 10 years." Brent crude "was up 33 cents, or 0.5%, at $65.05 a barrel by 0044 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude "gained 28 cents, or 0.5%, to $58.33 a barrel."

Stocks Finish Lower.

Reuters (7/30, Sully) reports "US stocks slipped on Tuesday after a warning from President Donald Trump to China pressured technology shares, while investors looked to an expected interest rate cut at the conclusion of the Federal Reserve's monetary policy meeting." The Dow "fell 30.26 points, or 0.11%, to 27,191.09, the S&P 500 lost 7.24 points, or 0.24%, to 3,013.73," and "the Nasdaq Composite dropped 13.05 points, or 0.16%, to 8,280.28."

DHS Issues Hacking Security Alert For Small Airplanes.

The AP (7/30, Abdollah) reports, "The Department of Homeland Security issued a security alert Tuesday for small planes, warning that modern flight systems are vulnerable to hacking if someone manages to gain physical access to the aircraft." The AP adds, "An alert from the DHS critical infrastructure computer emergency response team recommends that plane owners ensure they restrict unauthorized physical access to their aircraft until the industry develops safeguards to address the issue, which was discovered by a Boston-based cybersecurity company and reported to the federal government." According to the AP, "Most airports have security in place to restrict unauthorized access and there is no evidence that anyone has exploited the vulnerability," but "a DHS official told The Associated Press that the agency independently confirmed the security flaw with outside partners and a national research laboratory, and decided it was necessary to issue the warning."

The Hill (7/30, Miller, 2.98M) reports, "The alert was issued after cybersecurity group Rapid7 reported to DHS's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) that an aircraft's Controller Area Network (CAN) bus system can be exploited by a cyber attacker if the hacker has physical access to the plane." CISA "warned that the hacker could attach a device to the aircraft's CAN bus system that could 'inject false data,' leading to incorrect readings." Attackers "could manipulate the plane's altitude, airspeed and angle of attack data, CISA noted, adding that pilots would not be able to 'distinguish between false and legitimate readings' and could lose control of the airplane."

UPI (7/30) reports that the Homeland Security Department's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency "issued a report that recommends aircraft owners restrict physical access to the planes and that aircraft manufacturers review the implementation of Controller Area Network bus systems." UPI adds, "Government experts said in the report, however, such hacking could not be done remotely. 'An attacker with physical access to the aircraft could attach a device to [flight equipment] that could be used to inject false data, resulting in incorrect readings in avionics equipment,' the report states."

IG Report Finds DOD Employees Bought Thousands Of Chinese Electronics With Cyber Risks.

CQ Roll Call (7/30, Donnelly, 154K) reports, "Defense Department employees have procured thousands of printers, cameras and computers that carry known cybersecurity risks, and the practice may be continuing, according to an audit released Tuesday by the Pentagon's inspector general." CQ Roll Call adds, "More than 9,000 commercially available information technology products bought in fiscal 2018 could be used to spy on or hack U.S. military personnel and facilities, the report said," and "without fixing oversight of such purchases, more risks lie ahead, potentially including perils for top-dollar weapons that use such 'commercial-off-the-shelf' or COTS devices." The auditors "also wrote that the Pentagon has a pattern of buying products from companies such as Huawei, ZTE or Kaspersky Lab long after other federal agencies have identified the companies as posing cybersecurity risks and right up until the point that Congress outlaws purchases from the companies."

Canadian Official Says Huawei Decision Won't Come Before Fall Election.

The AP (7/30, Stoeltje) reports from Ottawa, Ontario, "Canadians won't find out until after this fall's federal election whether Chinese tech giant Huawei can provide equipment for the country's next-generation 5G wireless network, Canada's public safety minister said Tuesday." Ralph Goodale "said Canada needs more information from the United States about the nature of the potential security threat posed by the state-owned company. The election is Oct. 21." Goodale "commented after Canada and its Five Eyes intelligence allies wrapped up a meeting Tuesday that began with divisions over whether to let Huawei supply the equipment for the 5G system." The US and Australia "have banned Huawei, citing concerns it is an organ of Chinese military intelligence – a charge the company denies."

The Globe and Mail \(CAN\) (7/30, Chase, 1.04M) reports, "The update on the future of Huawei Technologies Co. Ltd. in Canada comes while the fate of two Canadians arrested by Beijing remains uncertain." China "detained former diplomat Michael Kovrig and entrepreneur Michael Spavor only days after Canada took senior Huawei executive Meng Wanzhou into custody last December on an extradition request from the United States." Critics "have called Beijing's seizure of the two Canadians 'hostage diplomacy.'"

Polls Finds Americans Fear Cyberattacks More Than North Korea, ISIS.

Courthouse News (7/30, Renda, 2K) reports, "Americans are far less concerned about two potential global threats that a majority of the country viewed as prominent existential risks just two years ago – North Korea and the Islamic State Group – but they are afraid of one thing: cyberattacks." According to CN, "A recent poll conducted by the Pew Research Center showed 53% of respondents said North Korea's nuclear program posed a major threat to the well-being of the United States, down from 75% of respondents saying so in 2017." The poll found that "both Democrats and Republicans rate cyberattacks from other countries as the single biggest threat to the well-being of the United States. Overall, 74% of the public rates cyberattacks as a hazard, including 72% of Republicans and 76% of Democrats."

Financial Reform

BankThink: Fed Should Require Banks To Use T-Bills As Collateral For Excess Reserves.

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (7/30, Subscription Publication, 31K), Bryce Doty, SVP and Senior Portfolio Manager of Sit Fixed Income, writes that the Fed should require banks to post Treasury bills for excess reserves above $20 billion. This would "keep[] the actual Fed funds rate from popping above the target rate when a bank looks to borrow money from another bank; since they are no longer competing against the rate the Fed is paying on excess reserves." It would also lower the yield on T-bills and encourage banks "to earn higher yields by lending the money rather than parking cash at the Fed, resulting in a stimulus for the economy."

TFI/Sanctions

Appeals Court Upholds Ruling Against Chinese Banks In North Korea Sanctions Investigation.

Reuters (7/31) reports a US appeals court "said on Tuesday it had upheld a ruling by a U.S. judge who held three large Chinese banks in contempt for refusing to comply with subpoenas in a probe into violations of sanctions on North Korea, opening the way for heavy daily fines." The US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit said in a filing on Tuesday, "The District Court's contempt orders against all three Banks appealed from in these causes is hereby affirmed," without making public the reasons. The piece notes that in a ruling in May, Beryl Howell, "Washington D.C.'s chief federal district judge, held the banks in contempt for refusing to comply with U.S. investigators' demands that they hand over records connected to the alleged movement of tens of millions of dollars in violation of international sanctions on North Korea." The US Patriot Act "allows the U.S. attorney-general or Treasury secretary to cut foreign banks off from dealing with U.S. financial institutions if they fail to comply with subpoenas." The Washington Post (7/30, Hsu, 14.2M) and The Financial Times (7/30, Shubber, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

Federal Reserve

Trump Calls For "Large Cut" In Interest Rates.

The Washington Times (7/30, Boyer, 492K) reports, "President Trump said Tuesday he wants a 'large cut' in interest rates by the Federal Reserve," saying to reporters "I would like to see a large cut, and I'd like to see immediately the quantitative tightening stop." The Hill (7/30, Lane, 2.98M) reports he told reporters on Tuesday, "I'm very disappointed in the Fed."

The Washington Examiner (7/30, Langford, 448K) reports Trump also said, "The Fed moved, in my opinion, far too early and far too severely. ... It puts me at somewhat of a disadvantage. Fortunately, I've made the economy so strong that nothing's going to stop us."

The Hill (7/30, Lane, 2.98M) reports the Fed is "poised to cut interest rates on Wednesday, delivering President Trump a long-sought boost to the economy." Chairman Jerome Powell and "the members of the Fed's policymaking arm, the Federal Open Markets Committee (FOMC), will conclude their monthly two-day meeting on Wednesday and are expected to deliver the first rate cut since 2008 during the height of the financial crisis."

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports officials are scheduled to release their decision Wednesday at 2 p.m. ET, and Powell is set to hold a press conference at 2:30 p.m. Trump said Tuesday, "The Fed is often wrong," adding that he was very disappointed with officials.

Reuters (7/30) reports Powell "signaled earlier this month that the central bank would ease monetary policy as the U.S. economy faces headwinds from weak global growth, trade tensions and Britain's possible disorderly departure from the European Union."

Reuters (7/30, Saphir, Hunnicutt) also reports Fed policymakers "will not surprise markets if they deliver on expectations and cut U.S.

interest rates for the first time in a decade on Wednesday,” but it is “less clear” how Powell will “manage debate at the central bank about whether the stimulus is necessary. The Fed chief faces a strong possibility that the move will draw at least one dissent.”

Reuters (7/31, Saphir) further reports the expected cut is “unlikely to assuage U.S. President Donald Trump’s increasingly strident demands for the central bank to ease monetary policy.”

Politico (7/30, White, Guida, 4.29M) reports officials aren’t cutting rates “because Trump demanded it. Instead, they will move in part because the president’s bruising trade policy has helped fuel a global manufacturing slowdown and injected deep uncertainty into executive suites around the world.”

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Ip, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports even though the US economy is in much better shape than Europe’s, the ECB is helping to force the Fed’s hand to move on rates.

Bloomberg (7/29, 4.73M) also reports on the topic.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Industry Appears Leery Of OCC’s Innovation Pilot.

American Banker (7/30, Berry, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, “The idea of testing a fintech product while getting direct regulatory feedback should be music to a banker’s ears, but the industry appears leery” of the OCC’s innovation pilot program. The OCC “received 19 comment letters” on the program, and commenters generally praised the OCC for encouraging banks to collaborate with fintechs. But banking trade groups “asked the OCC to publicly state that regulated banks will not be compelled to use the pilot for every innovative product they introduce,” and industry representatives “suggested banks may not participate if benefits such as avoiding enforcement action are not clearly stated.” But consumer advocates “encouraged the OCC to hold the line” and not waive regulations. The program “is meant to foster development of appropriate controls and give supervised entities regulatory input early in development, [OCC Chief Innovation Officer Beth Knickerbocker] said.”

Republicans Press Banking Agencies For More Reg Relief.

American Banker (7/30, Heltman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports a group of Senate Banking Committee Republicans are pressing banking regulators to make several regulatory relief proposals even more lenient. In a letter to the regulators, the senators including committee chair Mike Crapo (ID) “said the regulators must act to continue the country’s economic expansion.” The letter, dated Tuesday, “praised the Fed for its proposed and finalized revisions to the stress testing program and the Fed’s proposal to tailor its rules for foreign banking organizations.” The lawmakers “called on regulators to complete its work on the Community Bank Leverage Ratio,” but “said that regulators should reduce that ratio to 8%.” The lawmakers also chided the regulators for “a number of situations where your agencies have enacted guidance and other policy statements that are being enforced as rules,” and called on them to “submit all rules to Congress even if they have not gone through a formal notice and comment rulemaking.”

Behind a paywall, Bloomberg Law (7/30, Beyoud, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports the lawmakers also called on the OCC, the FDIC, and the Fed “to clarify that loans from a bank or fintech lender are still valid when resold, according to a July 30 letter to the three regulators.” The letter read, “We urge your agencies to use all available authorities to clarify uncertainties introduced by Madden.” Bloomberg Law says in doing this, the Republicans “may have just given the political cover needed for federal banking regulators to find a legal fix for loans sold by fintech lenders and their bank partners.”

Vehemently opposing the call for more regulatory relief, Forbes (7/31, Valladares, 9.71M) contributor Mayra Rodriguez Valladares says big banks “have already benefited from the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act passed in 2018,” and “due to their systemic risk, more oversight is needed for big banks, not less.” She says she is concerned with the letter, “because these senators continue to push for weaker regulations for big banks so late in the credit cycle.” In addition, “By continuing to fight against important bank regulatory guidance, Republicans continue their daily attack on bank supervisors. And when a financial crisis comes again, these same politicians will not admit their part in causing a crisis, but will rather blame bank supervisors.”

Senate Banking Chair, NY AG Open Probes Into Capital One Breach.

CQ Roll Call (7/30, Ratnam, 154K) reports Senate Banking Chairman Mike Crapo (R-ID) and New York state Attorney General Letitia James “said they will probe the data breach suffered by credit card issuer Capital One.” Crapo said, “I have concerns about all aspects of this. We want to understand how this happened, how other breaches happened...and we want to know how vulnerabilities [appear] in systems and figure out what we must do to deal with them at a policy level. I don’t have answers yet, but yes, we need to figure that out and we do have concerns about those vulnerabilities.”

Reuters (7/30) reports that New York Attorney General Letitia James said on Tuesday that “her office will begin an immediate investigation into Capital One Financial Corp’s data breach, which the bank said involved the access of personal information belonging to about 100 million people in the United States.” The New York Post (7/30, Sheehy, 4.57M) reports James said in a statement, “Today, 100 million consumers across America are wondering if they were unfortunate enough to be a victim of the most recent data breach. Though Capital One’s breach was internal, the fact still remains that safeguards were missing... My office will begin an immediate investigation into Capital One’s breach, and will work to ensure that New Yorkers who were victims of this breach are provided relief.”

Other federal lawmakers also expressed their frustration, according to The Hill (7/30, Miller, 2.98M), with Senate Finance Committee

Ranking Member Ron Wyden (D-OR) tweeting, "I'm sick of waking up to headlines revealing that millions of Americans had their information stolen because a billion-dollar company failed Cybersecurity 101. Corporations will only take Americans' privacy seriously when CEOs are held personally accountable." Senate Banking Committee Ranking Member Sherrod Brown (D-OH) also expressed support for a committee investigation.

Meanwhile, Capital One's primary federal regulator, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, "declined to comment about the breach and whether the bank is facing civil penalties," the Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (7/30, Mosbrucker, 399K) reports.

Potential Class Action Lawsuit Brought Against Capital One. Reuters (7/30) reports a lawsuit "seeking class-action status was filed in the federal court in Washington, D.C. by Kevin Zosiak, a Stamford, Connecticut resident who said he is a Capital One credit card customer whose personal information was compromised." According to Reuters, Zosiak's case "is likely to herald many similar lawsuits over the breach."

Yahoo! Finance (7/30) reports the lawsuit accuses Capital One of "serious security failures" and "negligence for failing to safeguard personal data including Social Security numbers."

Capital One Share Price Falls Sharply After Hack Revealed. The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Banerji, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Capital One shares were down nearly seven percent on Tuesday, the stock's worst daily performance in more than four years. According to the Journal, companies hit by major data breach scandals struggle to recover their previous highs, with Equifax still languishing below its previous high reached just before the breach was revealed in August 2017.

MarketWatch (7/30, Arends, 1.67M) reports analysts are concerned about the risk of "longer-term reputational damage and...for political and regulatory actions, including penalties" following the breach. Describing the market's reaction to the news, Reuters (7/30, Henry, Mukherjee) reports Oppenheimer analyst Dominick Gabriele said, "We are a bit surprised that a single individual could penetrate [Capital One's] defenses and gain access to so many accounts."

Analysis: Capital One Hack "Unlike Any Other," As Single "Rogue" Engineer Able To "Wreak Havoc." CNBC (7/30, Fazzini, 3.62M) says the incident will likely become "one of the most important data breaches of the year," as the theft of more than 100 million customer records was allegedly carried out "by a single, experienced engineer," according to court filings. According to CNBC, "The details set it apart from breaches of companies such as Equifax and Marriott" and "from the spate of ransomware attacks against major US cities," which were perpetrated by individuals outside the US. The incident "will bring up major issues facing the biggest tech companies, cloud firms and banks, namely how to control who has access to sensitive consumer data and detect insiders who may go rogue."

According to American Banker (7/30, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K), Capital One's breach "was a preventable security lapse, and its mistakes may be ones other institutions are in danger of repeating."

Hacker Attacks An Endless Fight For Big Banks. The New York Times (7/30, Cowley, Perloth, 18.61M) reports large financial companies "have to thwart hundreds of thousands of cyberattacks every single day." So far this year, there "have been 3,494 successful cyberattacks against financial institutions, according to reports filed with the Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network." The Capital One episode "is a reminder of the intricacy of the computer networks at large financial institutions, as well as their vulnerability." The breach is particularly embarrassing for Capital One, "because it was one of the first big financial institutions to move its systems to cloud computing." The company functioned "almost like a 'proof of concept' for regulators looking to see if the migration to the cloud could be done securely."

Financial Institutions Assess Cloud Use In Wake Of Capital One Hacking. The Wall Street Journal (7/30, McMillan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports financial institutions are reexamining their cloud computing strategies in the wake of the high-profile hacking of Capital One. Capital One has been one of the biggest proponents of using the cloud for storage of sensitive data. Amazon, which hosts Capital One's data, attributed the incident to a firewall issue, not a problem with cloud computing itself.

BofA Closes West Modesto, CA Branch, Leaving Residents Without A Bank.

The Modesto \(CA\) Bee (7/30, Rowland, 171K) reports, "After almost 60 years serving the residents of west Modesto, Bank of America shut down its Paradise Road branch Tuesday." The closure leaves residents on Modesto's west side "without a brick-and-mortar bank branch to visit." About a dozen protesters "held signs and chanted in front of the bank Tuesday morning, imploring the national financial institution to change its mind and stay in their community." The residents "said they felt abandoned by the bank because the branch serves a largely low-income population." Marvin Jacobo, Executive Director of City Ministry Network in Modesto, and Perfecto Munoz, Executive Director of the West Modesto Community Collaborative, have arranged for a representative from the OCC "to come to a community meeting about the closure at 9 a.m. Sept. 10 at the King-Kennedy Memorial Center."

Continuing Coverage: OneWest Settles Redlining Allegations.

HousingWire (7/30, Guerin, 23K) reports in continuing coverage, "OneWest Bank is finally able to put two-year-old allegations of housing discrimination to rest as the Department of Housing and Urban Development approved a settlement Monday that will see the bank hand over a chunk of change to end the ordeal." OneWest was "founded by a group of private equity investors led by Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin." During the alleged discrimination, Mnuchin served as the bank's chairman, while Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting was CEO.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“America’s Intelligence Chief Must Value Honesty Over Politics.” The New York Times (7/30, 18.61M) editorializes that “one reason [outgoing DNI] Coats’s tenure was so uncomfortable was that, unlike many Trump appointees, he was more likely to say what he believed to be true than what the president wanted to hear.” The Times argues that “one of the most important lessons from America’s response to the attacks of 9/11 that led to the creation of this post was that intelligence agencies need to work freely and honestly, and not be swayed by political considerations and the need to placate a president. An administration that sought and got the message it wanted from the intelligence apparatus is what helped lead to the invasion of Iraq and the disasters that followed.” The Senate, it argues, “needs to be sure we don’t go down that road again.”

“New York’s Public Housing Isn’t Getting Better.” The New York Times (7/30, 18.61M) says in an editorial that New York’s efforts to fix the New York City Housing Authority’s “biggest problems have not been effective or speedy enough. ... Not only is there a backlog of tens of thousands of apartments to inspect, but the authority hasn’t even identified all apartments with young children, where inspection should be a priority.” The Times says the housing authority “is in dire need of rapid reforms to increase accountability, at every level.”

“Cut New York Politicians’ Financial Ties To Business.” The New York Times (7/30, 18.61M) says in an editorial that “more than a dozen” states have laws “that restrict candidates from receiving political contributions from companies doing business with or seeking business with the state,” and Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) – who “has accepted millions of dollars in campaign contributions from people who win or seek contracts from New York state agencies” – agrees that New York “should join their ranks. ... The State Senate passed a bill this year to limit similar donations. The Legislature should pass it when it comes back in session in January.”

Washington Post.

“The Trump Administration’s New Policy Again Shows Its Contempt For Central Americans.” A Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) editorial says the “safe third country” agreement struck with Guatemala shows the “Administration’s contempt for Central Americans fleeing violence, hardship and persecution.” The Post argues that the “probable result of the administration’s policy, if it goes into effect, will be to transform legal asylum seekers into undocumented immigrants. They are unlikely to seek refuge in Guatemala,” and “instead, many will likely cross illegally into the United States and live in the shadows.”

“China Doesn’t Understand Hong Kong’s Protests. That’s A Big Mistake.” The Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) editorializes that “China’s rulers made it clear Monday that they don’t have any new ideas about how to respond to the protests shaking Hong Kong,” and “are hinting at the use of People’s Liberation Army forces to put down the protests.” The Post writes that “if the leaders in Beijing were smart, they would see that the protests that began in June are morphing into something more desperate than before, and they would be responsive to the demands.” Instead, “China is making a large and potentially costly mistake by failing to understand the protests and the reasons behind them.”

“Virginia Is In The Fast Lane. Maryland, Not So Much.” The Washington Post (7/30, 14.2M) argues in an editorial that Northern Virginia has been outpacing Maryland in improving and expanding roads in the Washington region because a proposal by Gov. Larry Hogan (R) “to add express toll lanes to the Beltway through Montgomery and Prince George’s counties, and to Interstate 270 heading north to Frederick, faces uncertain prospects and opposition from local officials, all Democrats.” The Post calls Hogan’s plan “a sensible response to a predictable crisis that threatens to consign his state to perpetual also-ran status in the regional economic sweepstakes.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Race-To-The-Bottom Standard.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/30, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes central banks in the US, Europe, and Japan for racing to cut rates even if there is no rational reason to do so. The Journal calls for consideration of a formal system of exchange rate stability to remove the irrationality and chaos.

“Celebrating American Democracy.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/30, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) hails Trump’s comments about slavery and African-Americans during his remarks yesterday. In particular, the Journal praises Trump for combining an acknowledgment of past injustices with a restatement of America’s promise and its ability change for the better throughout its history.

“The 99% Get A Bigger Raise.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/30, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights the increase in worker wages reported by the Bureau of Economic Analysis on Tuesday. Employee compensation was up five percent in 2018 after rising 4.5 percent a year earlier, which the Journal credits to a strong economy.

Last LaughsLate Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: [On the Democratic primary debates line-up for each evening] "What is going on? I feel like I'm watching bloopers from the courtroom scene in 'Chernobyl.' When we mix Bill de Blasio with Marianne Williamson, it creates a chain reaction that could destroy an entire city."

Trevor Noah: "Fundamentally, all the Democrats on tonight's stage agreed on the basic idea of universal healthcare. What they disagreed on was how exactly to do it. ... Basically, it was different flavors of the same thing. You know, it's like on a night when you and your friends agree that you're gonna party all night long, and then one of you drinks Red Bull, and the other one does cocaine. There's different levels!"

Trevor Noah: [On the debate moderator telling candidates they were out of time as soon as they would start to make a point] "You tell them, Jake, stick to the rules of time. CNN doesn't have time for these candidates and all these people debating on how they're going to lower the price of prescription drugs. We gotta make an ad for prescription drugs, coming up next."

Trevor Noah: "According to CNN, candidates would get as little as 15 seconds to respond to a policy question, which is great snappy TV, but horrible for policy debates. You know, it's also a good thing that CNN doesn't run a restaurant. That would be horrible. Just be like, looking up at the waiter who's Jake Tapper, and be like, 'I'm going to order the pasta, but I'm allergic to--' 'Time's up, thank you very much!' 'No, but I'll die if--' 'I said thank you!'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Have 30 years of reality TV taught the Democrats nothing? You can't go from 20 candidates right to one. You have to put them on an island and separate them into tribes."

Jimmy Kimmel: "CNN gave the candidates 60 seconds to answer a question, 30 seconds for a rebuttal. When their time was up, a red light appeared, which did put Bernie Sanders at a disadvantage. Because usually when the light turns red, he falls asleep until someone behind him honks the horn."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President has been taking a lot of heat for his attacks on the city of Baltimore and their congressman, Elijah Cummings. ... A lot of people think this racist stuff is part of Trump's master plan to fire up his base. I think they're giving him too much credit. He's just an impulsive, Diet Coke Garfield. Not the president, the cat, by the way."

Stephen Colbert: [On the debate moderator telling candidates they were out of time as soon as they would start to make a point] "The CNN moderators stuck to their rule on candidates' answers: Stop them from answering."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw a poll that said 34 percent of Democrats were very motivated to watch this week's debates. That number dropped to 4 percent when Democrats remembered it's 'Shark Week.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Actually, while the debate was on CNN, ABC was showing the finale of 'The Bachelorette.' You could tell some people were confused, because halfway through the debate, Luke P. burst on stage and proposed to Elizabeth Warren."

Seth Meyers: "During her opening statement in tonight's Democratic debate, Sen. Elizabeth Warren said that President Trump disgraces the office of the President every single day, which isn't fair, because he's really only in the office like twice a week."

Seth Meyers: "After the first half of tonight's debate, Google searches for former Congressman John Delaney increased by 3,400 percent, and still no results."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump did not tweet for the entirety of tonight's debate. I think we all owe a big thank-you to 'The Bachelorette' finale."

Seth Meyers: "Tonight's half of the debate marked the first appearance of Steve Bullock, who replaced Congressman Eric Swalwell, who dropped out. Not going to lie, still not sure which is which."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump also said today that he thinks former Vice President Joe Biden will get the Democratic nomination, but will 'limp across the finish line.' As opposed to Trump, who only limped when he asked about Vietnam."

Seth Meyers: "Of course, just because it was the Democrats' big night doesn't mean that Donald Trump could stay out of the news. In fact, he's physically incapable of it. I'm shocked he didn't crash through the walls of the debate stage in his golf cart."

James Corden: [On Trump saying he's the 'least racist person' in the world] "After his recent attacks on the city of Baltimore and Reverend Al Sharpton, President Trump is having to defend himself from charges of racism. And in front of the White House earlier today, he made this bold claim. ... You know what that is? That is the least believable statement there is anywhere in the world."

James Corden: "Throw Trump out of the equation and think about that statement. If you saw that on a billboard for a real estate agent, 'I'm the least racist person anywhere in the world,' the first thought you'll have is that real estate agent is definitely racist."

James Corden: "There are so many Democrats running for President, they had to split the field into two separate debates. In other words, tonight there was a debate to find out which people from this debate could eventually move on to debate the people in the other debate, to see who gets to go to the final presidential debate – which will be the only one anyone will actually care about."

James Corden: "Tonight's field had 10 candidates, including Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren, Beto O'Rourke, and John Hickenlooper. The candidates were really stumped by the first question, which was, 'Who is John Hickenlooper?'"

Senate Panel To Vote Wednesday On Deputy Treasury, HHS, USTR Nominees.

Reuters (3/1, Shalal) reports the Senate Finance Committee "said its members will vote on Wednesday" on the nominations of Wally Adeyemo for Deputy Treasury Secretary, Katherine Tai for USTR, and Xavier Becerra for HHS Secretary. Senate Finance Chair Ron Wyden "will convene the business meeting at 10 a.m. to vote on the nominations," all three of which "are expected to win approval by the committee, a congressional aide said." That development "would clear the way for their consideration by the full Senate."

Reuters (3/1, Shalal) separately reports Adeyemo, responding in writing to Senate Finance members' questions, "underscored his commitment to rigorous enforcement of U.S. sanctions against Iran, Russia and other countries." Adeyemo "said Iran should only enjoy sanctions relief if it took the appropriate steps to resume compliance with its commitments under the 2015 nuclear accord." Adeyemo also "said Treasury would look carefully at 'any Iranian efforts to evade sanctions and abuse the international banking system' to fund terrorist activities, and would use all available tools to disrupt that support."

WSJ Analysis: "Small" FinCEN To Take On Huge Roll Implementing Anti-Money-Laundering Law.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Tokar, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network, "a small, relatively obscure bureau" of the Treasury Department, "will take a lead role in plugging what many experts consider the biggest hole in the U.S.'s anti-money-laundering protections." FinCEN "has a year to promulgate regulations under the new anti-money-laundering law and another two to put them into effect. But the magnitude of the project could stretch the rollout beyond the bill's Congressional deadlines." Although Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen has named the law as a priority, the Biden Administration "has faced delays in filling key positions." President Biden "has yet to nominate a Treasury undersecretary for terrorism and financial intelligence, a role that also oversees FinCEN."

Treasury Pushed To Waive Unemployment Benefit Taxes For Americans Receiving Surprise Bills In $1000s.

The Washington Post (3/1, Long, 10.52M) reports unemployed Americans are now finding their weekly payments "count as income just like wages from a job," leaving them on the hook for "surprise tax bills, ranging from several hundred to several thousand dollars, and many say they just cannot pay." One option advocates are discussing in economic policy circles "would be for Biden's Treasury Department to simply waive taxes on most of the unemployment payments in 2020." Proponents "argue Treasury has done this before during natural disasters, and the pandemic is a large-scale disaster." However, "two senior Treasury officials, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak publicly, said that idea is not on the table."

FT: Poorer Countries Need More Global Assistance (Yellen Mention).

In an editorial, the Financial Times (3/1, Subscription Publication, 1.48M) says, "The global response to coronavirus has left much to be desired. Former US president Donald Trump's nationalist instincts and a divisive..."

Louisiana Parish Launches Treasury-Funded Rental Assistance Program.

The New Orleans \(LA\) Times-Picayune (3/1, Roberts, 691K) reports Jefferson Parish "has launched a program to help renters who have struggled to make payments due to the pandemic, according to a news release." The program "provides rental assistance to those who meet certain criteria and can show a hardship brought on by the pandemic, the release says." The funding "is part of a federal-state partnership that sent $308 million to Louisiana out of a $25 billion federal program funded through the U.S. Treasury Department." Jefferson's "initial allocation is $12.8 million, a parish spokeswoman said. If the parish uses 85% of that amount by the end of September, the parish will be allotted another $14.1 million." Jefferson Parish President Cynthia Lee Sheng added in the news release, "We are pleased to be able to offer this much-needed assistance to residents in Jefferson Parish who were impacted financially by COVID-19."

COVID-19 News

Zients Says It Is Still "Too Difficult" For Americans To Obtain Appointments For Vaccines.

Reuters (3/1, Lambert, Humer) reports that on Monday, White House COVID response coordinator Jeff Zients said getting appointments for COVID-19 vaccines "remains too difficult in many places." The Hill (3/1, Weixel, 5.69M) reports Zients "said the Biden administration is working with states to improve their coronavirus vaccine sign-ups, as many Americans have expressed frustration at the difficulties in finding appointments." The article says as states have expanded "vaccine eligibility to more people, signups have been plagued by technical glitches. Websites have repeatedly crashed, phone lines have been inundated with callers, and people have been unable to find open appointments."

Van Hollen, Heinrich Urge The White House To Distribute Doses Reserved For Second Shots. The Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) reports that in a letter sent to Jeff Zients, the White House coronavirus coordinator, on Monday, Sens. Chris Van Hollen (D-MD) and Martin Heinrich (D-NM) "arg[ued] that using doses initially set aside as second doses could expedite how many Americans get protection against Covid-19."

US Begins Rolling Out Johnson & Johnson's Vaccine.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Thomas, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports on Monday, the distribution of Johnson & Johnson's newly authorized COVID vaccine began in the US. On NBC's Today (3/1, 3.05M), Stephanie Gosk said Johnson & Johnson is "set to deliver four million doses of its vaccine this week."

On ABC World News Tonight (3/1, lead story, 4:20, Muir, 7.55M), Eva Pilgrim highlighted that the new vaccine "requires just one shot and no special freezers for storage. Today, the initial batch of nearly four million doses loaded onto trucks, then onto planes bound for all corners of this country. 2.8 million of those doses are going to state and local governments, 800,000 to pharmacies and the rest to community and federal health centers. The first shots could go into arms as early as tomorrow. Officials insist that all communities will have equal access."

On the CBS Evening News (3/1, lead story, 3:55, O'Donnell, 4.6M), Errol Barnett reported the J&J vaccine "comes as more than 50 million Americans already received at least one vaccine dose from Moderna and Pfizer, and, as the number of new COVID cases nosedives, 73% in the past two months. But COVID cases and deaths have plateaued at levels much higher than before last devastating surge."

On NBC Nightly News (3/1, lead story, 2:50, Holt, 6.45M), Tom Costello said, "The first J&J vaccine doses began moving this morning, with UPS and FedEx again splitting deliveries.” Costello added, “The Biden Administration says it will be delivered evenly across the country, 20 million doses by the end of March.” On ABC’s Good Morning America (3/1, 3.31M), George Stephanopoulos said Johnson & Johnson “has committed to delivering 100 million by this summer.”

However, Reuters (3/1, Heavey) reports J&J Chief Scientific Officer Paul Stoffels “said on Monday that the next round of deliveries is contingent on regulatory approvals at a new plant.” In another article, Reuters (3/1, Steenhuisen, Erman) reports Stoffels in an interview “said a new, larger plant operated by contract manufacturer Catalent Inc has been preparing doses, but the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) still needs to allow the companies to begin shipping them.”

Bloomberg (3/1, Griffin, 3.57M) reports Johnson & Johnson is working to secure manufacturing partnerships to boost supply of its newly authorized COVID-19 vaccine, according to CEO Alex Gorsky, who said on Monday that the company is “doing everything we can partnering with the U.S. government and other external manufacturers to see what we can do to accelerate and increase that number as well.”

White House Addresses Concerns About J&J Vaccine. The Washington Post (3/1, Cunningham, Shammass, Diamond, 10.52M) reports the White House on Monday “sought...to tamp down fears that the newly authorized” Johnson & Johnson vaccine is “not as useful as two earlier ones and could be steered mainly to hard-to-reach communities.” According to the Post, “At a briefing by the White House’s coronavirus-19 response team, officials talked up evidence that the vaccine...is effective at blocking severe cases of illness from the virus as well as deaths, even if clinical trials have suggested it is somewhat less protective against moderate cases.” The Post adds that officials also “countered an emerging public perception that the vaccine, with its simpler storage and handling requirements, could be targeted to...underserved communities. Marcella Nunez-Smith, chair of the Biden administration’s coronavirus equity task force, said the government will allocate the J & J vaccine in direct proportion to the population size of states, tribes and other jurisdictions – the same allocation method used for the” Pfizer and Moderna vaccines. On CBS This Morning (3/1, 2.51M), Errol Barnett reported NIAID Director Fauci on Sunday “effectively said don’t be too concerned about the lower efficacy of this vaccine.”

A Washington Post (3/1, A1, Stanley-Becker, 10.52M) article headlined “Johnson & Johnson Vaccine Deepens Concerns Over Racial And Geographic Inequities” says decisions “to send the shots to harder-to-reach communities make practical sense, because Johnson & Johnson’s single-shot vaccine is easier to store and use. But they could drive perceptions of a two-tiered vaccine system, riven along racial or class lines – with marginalized communities getting what they think is an inferior product.” According to the Post, “The issue came up on a recent call between governors and Biden administration officials coordinating the country’s coronavirus response.” Massachusetts Gov. Charlie Baker (R) “stressed the need for prominent health officials to communicate clearly about the benefits of the one-shot vaccine, according to three people who heard his remarks and spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss a private conversation.”

The AP (3/1, Loller, Mattise, Flaccus) also reports the vaccine rollout “has heightened tensions between rural and urban America, where from Oregon to Tennessee to upstate New York complaints are surfacing of a real – or perceived – inequity in vaccine allocation.” The questioning frequently takes “on partisan tones, with rural Republican lawmakers in Democrat-led states complaining of ‘picking winners and losers,’ and urbanites traveling hours to rural GOP-leaning communities to score COVID-19 shots when there are none in their city.”

New Orleans Archdiocese Urges Catholics Against Taking J&J COVID-19 Vaccine. The Hill (3/1, 5.69M) reports, “The Catholic Archdiocese of New Orleans urged Catholics on Friday against taking a vaccine for COVID-19 manufactured by Johnson & Johnson because the vaccine is developed from stem cells obtained from two abortions.” The archdiocese stated on its website, “If the Moderna or Pfizer vaccine is available, Catholics should choose to receive either of those vaccines rather than to receive the new Johnson & Johnson vaccine because of its extensive use of abortion-derived cell lines.”

Fauci Says US Intends To Stick With Plan To Administer Two Doses Of Pfizer’s And Moderna’s Vaccines.

The Washington Post (3/1, Diamond, 10.52M) reports NIAID Director Fauci on Monday “reiterated that the United States will stick to a plan to inoculate tens of millions of Americans with two doses of coronavirus vaccine, as calls mount to protect more people by letting them get one shot now.” Fauci told the Post, “There’s risks on either side,” and also warned that “shifting to a single-dose strategy for the Pfizer-BioNTech and Moderna vaccines could leave people less protected, enable variants to spread and possibly boost skepticism among Americans already hesitant to get the shots.” Fauci added, “We’re telling people [two shots] is what you should do...and then we say, ‘Oops, we changed our mind’? ... I think that would be a messaging challenge, to say the least.” Fauci also discussed the vaccines in an interview with NPR (2/26, Ferran, Gans, 3.69M).

Novavax CEO Says Its COVID Vaccine Could Get FDA Authorization By May.

Reuters (3/1, O’Donnell) reports Novavax’s COVID vaccine could get US FDA approval as soon as May if the agency “authorizes it based on data from the company’s British trial, which could be completed ‘in the coming weeks,’ its chief executive said on Monday.” However, CEO “Stanley Erck added that talks...are ongoing and the agency may require Novavax to submit data from its U.S. trial, which could take an additional two months to complete, pushing back U.S. clearance to mid-summer.”

CNBC (3/1, Lovelace, 7.34M) reports, “Novavax’s phase three trial in the U.S. is still ongoing, with 30,000 participants, Erck said. The company hopes the FDA will allow it to use data from its clinical trial conducted in the U.K. when it files its emergency use application later this year, he added.”

Trumps Vaccinated Before Leaving White House.

Bloomberg (3/1, Wingrove, 3.57M) reports according to "aides familiar with the matter," former President Trump and his wife, Melania, "privately received at least one dose of a coronavirus vaccine" While Trump was still in office in January, "at a time when other public officials took shots on-camera to boost public confidence in the vaccines."

CNN (3/1, Acosta, Kelly, 89.21M) reports that it was uncertain "which vaccine or how many doses each had received." The news came after Trump "urged his followers to get vaccinated for the virus during his speech at the Conservative Political Action Conference," marking "a notable shift as Trump, during his time in office, had long dismissed the gravity of the virus and eschewed practices like social distancing and mask wearing." A Washington Post (2/28, Blake, 10.52M) analysis suggests that "perhaps the most significant thing" Trump said in his Conservative Political Action Conference speech on Sunday "was something he avoided forcefully advocating for when he actually commanded the most powerful office in the world: Get a coronavirus vaccine."

The Hill (3/1, Samuels, 5.69M) reports Trump "did not initially get the vaccine...citing the antibody therapy he received as part of his treatment for the virus. Trump has in the past expressed skepticism about vaccines on social media, and experts worried that his past rhetoric and reluctance to get the shot while in office could contribute to broader vaccine hesitancy." The New York Times (3/1, Haberman, 20.6M) reports that in contrast to Trump's secrecy, "President Biden, Vice President Kamala Harris and former Vice President Mike Pence received vaccine shots in front of television cameras." On NBC Nightly News (3/1, story 3, 1:55, Holt, 6.45M), Geoff Bennett similarly reported that "unlike President Biden who got his publicly, the Trumps got theirs privately."

Landmark California Program Targeting Thousands Of Immigrant Farmworkers For Vaccine.

The New York Times (3/1, Jordan, 20.6M) reports, "A landmark initiative in California is taking vaccines to the fields, targeting an immigrant work force that is at high risk for Covid-19." The program was launched in January in the Coachella Valley and "is the culmination of a monthslong effort to educate farmworkers about Covid-19." However, "many of the workers are undocumented, raising questions about whether they should have priority."

Arizona County Opens Up Vaccine Eligibility To General Public.

The New York Times (3/1, Romero, 20.6M) reports Gila County, Arizona "is one of the first places in the U.S. to open vaccinations up to the general public." The county "has been so successful at vaccinating its residents that it is now one of the first places in the United States to open eligibility to the general population, offering a glimpse of what vaccination could start to look like in the rest of the country weeks or months from now."

NBC Nightly News Highlights Alaska's Successful Vaccination Effort.

On the NBC Nightly News (3/1, story 9, 2:45, Holt, 6.45M) "Life After Lockdown" series, Lester Holt said Erin McLaughlin "went to Alaska, the state with the highest vaccination rate per capita, to a village where almost everyone has gotten a shot." McLaughlin added, "In remote Alaska, teams are braving extreme temperatures and navigating some of the toughest terrain in the world in an unprecedented effort to save lives. The tiny village of Nulato is only accessible by plane. Here anyone 16 and up can get vaccinated." According to McLaughlin, "Three quarters of the village is already done, with the elders leading the way."

Side Effect Of Moderna, Pfizer COVID Vaccines Can Be Mistaken For Cancer, Physicians Say.

The New York Times (3/1, Grady, 20.6M) reports as the COVID vaccine rollout continues across the US, physicians are observing enlarged lymph nodes, which may be mistaken for a sign of cancer, "in recently immunized people, and medical journals have begun publishing reports aimed at allaying fears and helping patients avoid needless testing for a harmless condition that will go away in a few weeks." According to the article, "The swelling is a normal reaction by the immune system to the vaccine, and occurs on the same side as the arm where the shot was given." Swelling occurring in the armpit "was a recognized side effect in the large trials of the Moderna and Pfizer-BioNTech vaccines." However, "the condition was not listed among the reported side effects in a briefing document from the Food and Drug Administration about the Johnson & Johnson Covid vaccine."

NIH Studying Tens Of Thousands Of People To Improve Understanding Of COVID Long Haulers.

NBC Nightly News (3/1, story 6, 4:35, Holt, 6.45M) reported that at the National Institutes of Health, "the human brain is revealing COVID's secrets." National Institute of Neurological Disorders and Stroke Intramural Clinical Director Avindra Nath "is studying the brains of 30 people who died from COVID but never had serious symptoms." The brains, Nath "says, could help answer one of the most perplexing mysteries of COVID-19: Why is it that long after the virus is gone, some people are suffering from symptoms that simply won't go away?" A "massive billion dollar initiative at NIH" is "studying tens of thousands of people to understand so-called long haulers." NIH Director Francis Collins said, "We certainly are going to have to follow people for months and maybe years."

Twitter Upping Enforcement Against COVID Misinformation.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Ziobro, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports Twitter has announced new rules for its strike system targeting misinformation about COVID-19 and vaccines. The new rules are an expansion of the platform's efforts to favor reliable information about the pandemic while blocking false messages. The new standards will include labeling posts "pertaining to vaccines that include conspiracy theories and rhetoric unfounded in research or credible reporting."

The AP (3/1) reports the platform "has begun labeling tweets that include misleading information about COVID-19 vaccines and using a 'strike system' to eventually remove accounts that repeatedly violate its rules." Twitter is also "using human reviewers to assess whether tweets violate its policy against COVID vaccine misinformation." Reuters (3/1, Sandle) reports Twitter "started promoting public health information before COVID-19 was declared a global pandemic. It also aimed to remove demonstrably false or misleading content about the virus that had the highest risk of causing harm."

Walensky "Really Worried" That States Are Lifting COVID Restrictions.

CNBC (3/1, Lovelace, 7.34M) reports CDC Director Walensky on Monday said "she is 'really worried' about some states rolling back public health measures intended to contain the coronavirus pandemic as U.S. cases appear to be leveling off at a 'very high number.'" The drops "in Covid-19 cases seen since early January now appear to be stalling at around 70,000 new cases per day...Walensky said during a White House news briefing. 'With these statistics, I am really worried about more states rolling back the exact public health measures we have recommended to protect people from Covid-19.'"

The Hill (3/1, Sullivan, 5.69M) reports new COVID-19 cases dropped "for weeks, from as much as 250,000 per day in January to around 70,000 per day currently," but "the declines have leveled off and are now even showing signs of ticking back up. Even 70,000 cases per day is an extremely high level, above the peak of last summer." In addition, the Washington Post (3/1, Ruane, Tan, Duggan, 10.52M) reports "health officials in the District, Maryland and Virginia have reported more than 1 million coronavirus infections since last March: 577,174 in Virginia, 382,702 in Maryland and 40,684 in the District." Those figures mean "6 in every 100 residents of the three jurisdictions have tested positive in the past year, slightly lower than the national rate of eight infections per 100 people." Although DC "had the higher per capita case rate in the region at the start of the pandemic, it now has the lowest cumulative case rate among the three jurisdictions, followed by Maryland and Virginia, respectively."

While the AP (3/1, Hollingsworth, Webber) reports Massachusetts on Monday "made it much easier to grab dinner and a show," St. Louis and Kansas City, Missouri "are relaxing some measures," Iowa "recently lifted mask requirements and limits on the number of people allowed in bars and restaurants, while the town of Lawrence, home to the University of Kansas, now lets establishments stay open until midnight," the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Campo-Flores, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports Miami Beach is beefing up restrictions from February 22 to April 12 to deter spring breakers from vacationing irresponsibly. This city will have police officers and code-compliance staffers patrolling areas to ensure restrictions, including a midnight curfew, are being followed.

US Sees Record Number Of Coronavirus Variant Cases In One Day.

The Hill (3/1, Budryk, 5.69M) says that on Sunday, the US "reported an all-time high of 306 cases of coronavirus variants, with the majority concentrated in Florida, Michigan and Texas, USA Today reported." The new variant cases "included 104 new infections in Florida, for a total of 605 in that state; 85 in Michigan, for a total of 421; and 41 in Texas, for a total of 102."

Bloomberg (3/1, Court, Wingrove, Fabian, 3.57M) reports that according to Gregory Armstrong, Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Advanced Molecular Detection Program, "about 735 cases of a coronavirus variant that emerged in New York City in November have now been identified in the U.S., including 585 in the last two weeks." Bloomberg adds that per Armstrong, individual cases of the variant "have also been found in 14 other states, including Texas, Wyoming and Maryland."

Meanwhile, the Houston Chronicle (3/1, Downen, Garcia, 982K) reports a new study from Houston Methodist Hospital has "found that Houston is the nation's first city to record every major variant of the novel coronavirus, a development that one local infectious disease expert called "disquieting" amid the region's push to reach herd immunity through widespread vaccinations."

US Seeing "Almost-Universal Return Of Schools."

Axios (3/1, Fernandez, 1.26M) reports more than 72% of K-12 students "are now attending schools that offer in-person or hybrid models of learning," which comes as the US "is seeing an almost-universal return of schools that were in-person as of November, as well as a gradual return in parts of the country that had been virtual for almost a year." According to Axios, "Elementary schools in Ohio, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, Maryland and Virginia began in-person instruction this week, after being closed since last March."

Meanwhile, the Philadelphia Inquirer (3/1, Graham) reports that after "four false starts and with a mix of both relief and caution, Philadelphia city, school, and teachers' union officials on Monday announced a deal to begin bringing students and staff back to classrooms for the first time in nearly a year." Per the Inquirer, "Some teachers will begin reporting to their buildings on Wednesday. Students at 53 schools citywide will start in-person classes on Monday. The return will then continue in waves, with a group of about 50 schools every week reopening, first for prekindergarten through second-grade students, through March 22."

Newsom, Lawmakers Reach Deal To Reopen California Schools. The San Francisco Chronicle (3/1, Koseff, 2.44M) reports California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) and state legislative leaders "have reached a deal on requirements for reopening schools during the coronavirus pandemic that could get more California students back into the classroom by the end of the month." Two sources told the Chronicle the agreement “foregoes conditions on collective bargaining with teachers unions and testing and vaccinations for school staff that have held up negotiations for months,” while Bloomberg (3/1, Marois, 3.57M) reports the deal includes $2 billion in grants “for personal protective equipment, ventilation upgrades and Covid testing to districts that bring back students in kindergarten, first and second grades by the end of March,” and “allocates $4.6 billion in funding to assist school districts that need to make up for lost learning, including possibly extending the current school year into the summer.”

The Los Angeles Times (3/1, Myers, 3.37M) says the agreement “marks the completion of weeks of negotiations at the state Capitol and merges current public health guidelines with earlier school reopening proposals introduced by the governor and lawmakers. For Newsom, the proposal envisions students back on campus a full two months later than he had promised in the plan he offered in late December.” Politico (3/1, Mays, 6.73M) reports that the agreement “could lead to California reopening most schools by President Joe Biden's 100-day deadline at the end of April, but not necessarily for five days per week.”

The AP (3/1, Beam) reports that while Newsom “had been at odds with legislative leaders on the best way to encourage school districts to return students to the classroom,” this announcement “marked a turn, with Newsom, Senate President Pro Tempore Toni Atkins and Assembly Speaker Anthony Rendon praising each other for reaching an agreement. All are Democrats.”

The San Francisco Chronicle (3/1, Board, 2.44M) editorializes that the agreement “sets the right goal without acceding to the most unreasonable demands of teachers’ unions,” but “offers parents and students too little reassurance that school districts and their employees will comply.” The Los Angeles Times (3/1, 3.37M) editorializes that the deal “is less meaningful than the governor’s recent turnaround on vaccines for teachers” and “even that’s not enough to meet April 1 deadlines for most schools.”

LA Nursing Home To Settle Lawsuit Brought By City For “Dumping” Residents To Take In Lucrative COVID Patients.

The Los Angeles Times (3/1, Rainey, 3.37M) reports, “A nursing home accused of illegally ‘dumping’ patients onto city streets and into ill-equipped homes in order to take in more lucrative COVID-19 patients will nearly double its nursing staff, allow increased oversight and pay $275,000 in penalties and costs to settle a lawsuit brought by the Los Angeles city attorney’s office.”

WHO Says It Is Premature To Think The Pandemic Can Be Stopped By Year’s End.

The AP (3/1, Keaten) reports that Dr. Michael Ryan, director of WHO’s emergencies program, “said Monday it was ‘premature’ and ‘unrealistic’ to think the pandemic might be stopped by the end of the year, but that the recent arrival of effective vaccines could at least help dramatically reduce hospitalizations and death.” He said “the world’s singular focus right now should be to keep transmission of COVID-19 as low as possible.”

Meanwhile, Reuters (3/1, Revill, Chander, Maddipatla) reports the WHO on Monday announced that “the number of new coronavirus infections globally rose last week for the first time in seven weeks.” Maria Van Kerkhove, the WHO technical lead for COVID-19, said, “We need to have a stern warning for all of us: that this virus will rebound if we let it. ... And we cannot let it.” Similarly, WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus “said the rise in cases was ‘disappointing but not surprising’ and urged countries not to relax measures to fight the disease.”

WHO Advises Against Using Hydroxychloroquine To Treat COVID. Reuters (3/1, Kelland) reports the drug hydroxychloroquine “should not be used to prevent COVID-19 and has no meaningful effect on patients already infected, a World Health Organization expert panel said on Tuesday” in recommendations (3/2, Subscription Publication, 23K) published in the BMJ British medical journal. The WHO’s Guideline Development Group expert panel also said the anti-inflammatory drug is “not worthwhile” for further exploration as a potential COVID-19 treatment.

ABC News (3/1, Jacobo, 2.44M) reports, “Hydroxychloroquine was aggressively touted by former President Donald Trump as a promising treatment for the virus, despite a lack of evidence. As early as March 2020, Trump declared the drug a ‘game changer’ as the pandemic grew, while the nation’s top infectious disease expert, Dr. Anthony Fauci, called it ‘not effective’ for the coronavirus.” Bloomberg (3/2, Gretler, 3.57M) reports the US FDA “revoked its authorization after just a few months when research showed the drug didn’t work against the virus.”

New WTO Leader Argues For Greater Vaccine Access.

The AP (3/1, Keaten) reports the WTO’s new Director-General Ngozi Okonjo-Iweala “called Monday for a ‘technology transfer’ when it comes to COVID-19 vaccines and urged member nations to reach a deal to reduce overfishing after years of fruitless talks as she laid out her top priorities after taking office.” Okonjo-Iweala “did not take sides on an effort led by South Africa and India to wrest a temporary waiver of WTO rules on intellectual property protections, which could help expand production of COVID-19 vaccines and expedite their rollout around the world,” but said, “I propose that we ‘walk and chew gum’ by also focusing on the immediate needs of dozens of poor countries that have yet to vaccinate a single person. People are dying in poor countries.”

In addition, Reuters (3/1, Farge) reports Okonjo-Iweala “said on Monday the trade body needs to work with companies to open up more manufacturing sites for COVID-19 vaccines in developing countries.” She said, “People are dying in poor countries. ... We must focus on working with companies to open up and license more viable manufacturing sites now in emerging markets and developing countries.”

Countries Urge Drug Companies To Share Blueprints, Technical Knowledge So More Vaccines Can Be Produced.

The AP (3/1, Hinnant) reports that it has found three factories “on three continents whose owners say they could start producing hundreds of millions of COVID-19 vaccines on short notice if only they had the blueprints and technical know-how.” However, “that knowledge belongs to the large pharmaceutical companies who have produced the first three vaccines authorized by countries including Britain, the European Union and the U.S. – Pfizer, Moderna and AstraZeneca.” The AP adds, “Across Africa and Southeast Asia, governments and aid groups, as well as the World Health Organization, are calling on pharmaceutical companies to share their patent information more broadly to meet a yawning global shortfall.”

Modi Vaccinated As India Expands Rollout.

The Hill (3/1, Budryk, 5.69M) reports Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi “received the coronavirus vaccine Monday as one of the world’s most populous, and hardest-hit, countries prepares to expand vaccine distribution.” The AP (2/28, Ghosal) reports India “is expanding its coronavirus vaccination drive beyond health care and front-line workers, offering the shots to older people and those with medical conditions that put them at risk.” According to the AP, “Those now eligible include anyone older than 60, as well as those over 45 who have ailments such as heart disease or diabetes that make them vulnerable to serious COVID-19 illness.”

German Finance Minister Urges Merkel To Move Faster With German Reopening.

Bloomberg (3/1, Rogers, Delfs, 3.57M) reports Chancellor Angela Merkel “faces further pressure to lay out a path to ease Germany’s coronavirus lockdown after Finance Minister Olaf Scholz became the latest senior official to call for a quicker reopening of Europe’s largest economy.” According to Bloomberg, Scholz “threw his weight behind proposals to move away from a reliance on using the seven-day incidence rate to manage Germany’s pandemic and focus on ramping up testing.”

Czech Police, Military Set Up Border Checkpoints To Enforce Travel Restrictions.

The AP (3/1, Janicek) reports, “Police and military forces in the Czech Republic set up 500 checkpoints across the country as one of the European Union’s hardest-hit nations marked the first anniversary of its coronavirus outbreak on Monday by significantly limiting free movement.” Czechia deployed roughly 30,000 officers “in an unprecedented operation to enforce a tight new restriction that bans people from traveling to other counties unless they go to work or have to take care of relatives.” Reuters (3/1, Skacel, Muller) says the Czech Republic is “battling the world’s worst surge in COVID-19 infections.”

Finland Declares State Of Emergency Over Increasing COVID Cases.

Reuters (3/1, Lehto) reports the Finnish government “declared a state of emergency on Monday due to rising COVID-19 infections, a step that would allow the Nordic country to shutter restaurants and to impose other measures to blunt the pandemic.” Reuters adds the decision “comes as new variants contribute to a sharp rise in infections in the country, which has already closed its borders.”

UK Researchers Say One Dose Of Pfizer, AstraZeneca Vaccines Can Greatly Reduce Severe Illness Or Death.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Douglas, Strasberg, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports researchers in the UK found that just one dose of Pfizer’s or AstraZeneca’s SARS-CoV-2 vaccine greatly reduced severe illness and death from the virus. Bloomberg (3/1, Ashton, 3.57M) reports the researchers found that a single dose of either vaccine “can cut hospitalizations among older people by around 80%.” In addition, a single dose “reduces the chance of people aged over-70 becoming ill by some 60%.” Reuters (3/1, Smout) reports Public Health England (PHE) Head of Immunisations Mary Ramsay “said that while more work needed to be done to understand the impact of vaccines in reducing transmission of the coronavirus, the effect of the rollout was already apparent.”

In a more than 3,000-word article, the New York Times (3/1, A1, Testa, Cowell, 20.6M) reports that while the number of new cases in the UK “may be trending downward, but the battle is no less intense. In the land of Churchill, it is likened sometimes to war, the Covid war.” The Times adds that in “the latest phase of Britain’s splintered campaign against the coronavirus, Prime Minister Boris Johnson last week laid out a long glide path for England’s gradual reopening from lockdown, from March to June. But despite a speedy vaccine rollout, the schedule for changes was decidedly protracted – and declared reversible – for good reason. After almost a year of mixed messages, Covid still divides the land between those who know and dread its fearsome reach, and those seduced by unlikely promises and invented deadlines of redemption.”

Slovakia Buys 2M Doses Of Russian Sputnik V Vaccine.

Bloomberg (3/1, Dudik, 3.57M) reports Slovakia “will get 2 million doses of the Sputnik V vaccine from Russia in a move the European Union member’s leader hailed as life-saving for its citizens.” Slovak Prime Minister Igor Matovic “said his health minister will authorize the use of the shots on Monday, skirting the usual approval from the Slovak drug regulator.”

Latin American Countries Increasingly Turn To Russia For Vaccines As Colombia Becomes

First To Get Vaccines From COVAX.

Reuters (3/1, Ramos, Laing, Garrison) reports, "Bolivia's reliance on Moscow [for COVID-19 vaccines] underscores how governments across the region have turned to Russia's Sputnik V drug amid fears of being left behind in the global scramble for vaccines." As far as Russia is concerned, "acceptance in Latin America lends legitimacy to its vaccine, which faced initial skepticism." Such acceptance "also provides Moscow an opportunity to make in-roads in the resource rich region at a time when COVID-19 vaccines are becoming a tool for soft power."

Meanwhile, Bloomberg (3/1, Jaramillo, 3.57M) reports Colombia "became the first nation in the Americas to get Covid-19 shots through the World Health Organization-backed Covax program, giving a boost to a vaccination drive that has lagged regional peers." According to Bloomberg, "The 117,000 doses of the Pfizer Inc.-BioNTech SE vaccine arrived on Monday in Bogota, with President Ivan Duque calling on all parties involved to 'accelerate the distribution' of the shots. Colombia has purchased 20 million doses through the program."

Caribbean Nations See Worst COVID Outbreaks Since Start Of Pandemic.

Reuters (3/1, Marsh) reports, "While global new infections start to decline, a handful of countries across the Caribbean, including the larger islands of Jamaica and Cuba, are suffering their worst outbreaks since the start of the pandemic following social gatherings over year-end, quarantine violations by visitors and growing complacency."

Brazil's COVID Outbreak Worse Than Ever.

The Washington Post (3/1, McCoy, 10.52M) reports, "While much of the world is using restrictions and vaccines to try to tame the coronavirus, Brazil's outbreak is worse than it has ever been." COVID-related deaths there "have hit a new high, averaging 1,208 per day over the past week...public hospital occupancy is peaking...[and] Health systems in more than half the country's 26 states are at or near capacity."

Biden Lobbies Senate Democrats On Relief Bill.

The Washington Post (3/1, Werner, Stein, 10.52M) reports President Biden "launched a lobbying effort targeting fellow Democrats on Monday to unify them behind his $1.9 trillion coronavirus relief bill as the Senate prepares to move forward on the massive legislation this week." According to the Post, "Democrats don't have a vote to spare in the Senate, but several moderate-leaning senators have raised concerns about the structure of unemployment insurance benefits and Biden's plan to send $350 billion to state and local governments, among other issues." The Post says Biden on Monday "convened a group of these Democrats," including Sens. Jon Tester (D-MT), Joe Manchin (D-WV), Mark Warner (D-VA), and Angus King (I-VT), on a conference call, "the first in a days-long outreach campaign that will also include calling into the weekly Senate Democratic lunch on Tuesday and addressing the House Democratic caucus on Wednesday evening."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Peterson, Duehren, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports that although Senate Democrats "tried over the weekend to salvage a more limited wage increase through the tax code," they "scrapped that backup plan late Sunday," so Biden instead focused on "advancing the rest of the bill, as the party works to pass its agenda with narrow majorities in both chambers."

The AP (3/1, Fram) reports Senate Democrats "hope to unveil their version of the broad relief package and begin debate as early as Wednesday." Axios (3/1, Allen, VandeHei, 1.26M) reports White House Office of Public Engagement Director Cedric Richmond "told 'Axios on HBO' that the White House feels 'an extreme sense of urgency.'" Richmond also "said the White House will continue to make overtures to Republicans, but made it clear Biden is prepared to push through his $1.9 trillion rescue plan with just a couple or even zero GOP votes."

However, while The Hill (3/1, Carney, 5.69M) reports Senate Majority Whip Durbin on Monday "said Democrats should...look for another piece of legislation to use as a vehicle for trying to increase the minimum wage," and Reuters (3/1, Cornwell) reports Senate Majority Leader Schumer on Monday announced the Senate will begin debating the bill this week, it "did not end hopes of addressing the minimum wage issue in Congress." Bloomberg (3/1, Dillard, 3.57M) reports Progressive Caucus Deputy Whip Ro Khanna (D-CA) and 22 other House lawmakers on Monday sent a letter to the President and Vice President Harris "demanding that they set aside the ruling of the Senate Parliamentarian and include a minimum-wage increase in the Covid-19 relief package." CNBC (3/1, Franck, 7.34M) reports progressives have "specifically" targeted Harris on the bid to "overrule Senate parliamentarian Elizabeth MacDonough's ruling to exclude the minimum wage increase," but Chief of Staff Klain and other Administration officials "said there are no plans for Harris to overrule the parliamentarian," and Bloomberg (3/1, Dennis, Wasson, 3.57M) reports House Speaker Pelosi "said Friday she's 'absolutely' confident she could pass a stimulus bill without a minimum-wage provision in it, but that remains to be seen."

On ABC's Good Morning America (3/1, 3.31M), Cecilia Vega said that while progressives "are not happy at all about" the removal of the minimum wage hike, "moderate Democrats have also expressed some concern about the large price tag of this overall bill." On ABC World News Tonight (3/1, story 3, 1:05, Muir, 7.55M), Rachel Scott said Biden "cannot afford to lose a single Democratic vote and that includes moderates like" Manchin.

Buttigieg Touts Importance Of American Rescue Plan. Transportation Secretary Buttigieg said on Fox News The Story (3/1) that "the risk of not doing enough is so much worse than the possibility of acting too quickly or doing too much. ... It is fantastic news that we have more vaccines are on the way. But of course, that's why we have to pass this bill. Part of what the American Rescue Plan does is make sure that we can get those the sites up, get the shots out to the sites, get the shots into peoples' arms." Asked about spending for education that does not "kick in until 2022," Buttigieg said, "Part of how this works is we have got to think more than a few weeks at a time. You don't want to run all the way out of gas and then try to come back to Congress to do it all over again. If there is one thing we learned, we have to be capable of planning a little bit ahead."

Sanders Will Force Senate Vote On $15/Hour Minimum Wage. The Hill (3/1, Bolton, 5.69M) reports Senate Budget Chairman Bernie Sanders on Monday "declared he would not back down on his signature wage initiative" and he is "vowing to force the Senate to vote this week on an amendment to set the federal minimum wage at $15 an hour."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) says that Democrats "need to bow to [the] reality" that a $15 an hour minimum wage increase will not be in the relief bill – "not by giving up on a higher minimum wage, but by seeking to raise it to a somewhat more modest figure than $15 per hour." According to the Post, "Such a compromise might even attract Republican support." A Wall Street Journal (3/1, Morath, Haddon, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) article headlined "Many Businesses Support A Minimum-Wage Increase – Just Not Biden's $15-An-Hour Plan" makes a similar argument.

Catherine Rampell writes in the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) that by ruling that a minimum-wage increase cannot be included in the COVID relief bill Democrats plan to pass using reconciliation, the Senate Parliamentarian "in a sense...did the party a favor by allowing it to avoid an ugly intra-caucus fight." Rampell says "the primary hurdle to passing a $15 federal minimum wage isn't procedural. It's that there isn't unified support within the Democratic Party for the policy."

CFPB: Over 11M Families Could Lose Housing When COVID Foreclosure, Eviction Protections Expire. The Hill (3/1, Lane, 5.69M) reports over "11 million families are at risk of losing housing when federal coronavirus eviction and foreclosure protections expire later this year, according to a report released Monday by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB)." By "analyzing private sector and federal data, the CFPB found that 2.1 million homeowners are at least 90 days behind on mortgage payments and 8.8 million households are behind on rent." Acting CFPB Director Eric Uejio wrote in a blog post, "Put simply: we have very little time to prevent millions of families from losing their homes." Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Ackerman, Parker, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports millions of landlords and households are falling into debt as tenants who are struggling to pay their rent wait for $25 billion that federal lawmakers appropriated in December.

Analyses Suggest State Budgets Not As Adversely Impacted By Pandemic As Feared. In a more than 2,200-word article, the New York Times (3/1, Walsh, Russell, 20.6M) reports that amid debates in Congress over whether states should receive federal aid amid the ongoing fiscal challenges brought on by the pandemic, "new data shows that a year after the pandemic wrought economic devastation around the country, forcing states to revise their revenue forecasts and prepare for the worst, for many the worst didn't come." The Times adds, "One big reason: $600-a-week federal supplements that allowed people to keep spending – and states to keep collecting sales tax revenue – even when they were jobless, along with the usual state unemployment benefits."

Psaki Says Biden Supports The Right Of Workers To Organize After He Signaled Support For Amazon Unionization Bid.

Reuters (3/1, Holland, Bose) reports White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki on Monday "said President Joe Biden believes workers should have the right to organize but he will not comment on specific cases that are before the National Labor Relations Board." The New York Times (3/1, Thrush, 20.6M) reports the President in a video released Sunday "expressed solidarity with workers attempting to unionize an Amazon facility in Alabama" and "emphasized his broad support of the labor movement – without explicitly backing their cause or naming the company itself." The Times says that if the workers at Amazon's warehouse in Bessemer vote to be represented by the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, "they would be the first of Amazon's 400,000 American workers to join a union – a landmark undertaking and early test of Mr. Biden's campaign claim that he will be the 'most pro-union president' ever."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Thomas, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports the video "marked the first time Mr. Biden has weighed in on an internal corporate dispute as president." A Washington Post (3/1, Bump, 10.52M) analysis says the President's remarks are not "typical presidential behavior, even for a Democrat," but "particularly for Biden and particularly in this moment, his approach makes sense." According to the Post, "There are a number of good reasons, including potent political ones, for Biden to have taken the position that he did."

Paul Waldman writes in the Washington Post (3/1, Waldman, 10.52M) that while Biden did not "take an explicit position on whether workers there should vote to unionize," labor advocates "are saying it's the most pro-union statement a president has ever made." Biden "did not explicitly tell" the workers "to vote yes on the union. But he came about as close as one could without saying it directly. Not only that, but he made a broader case, to a wide audience, for why unions are important." Waldman adds, "This was a test for Biden, and it's one that, so far, labor advocates are saying he passed." But, "no matter what happens with the union election in Alabama, if Biden really wants to be 'the most pro-union president you've ever seen,' it will take both actions and words."

Congressional Delegation To Visit Amazon Fulfillment Center In Bessemer On Friday. Reuters (3/1, Bose, Shepardson) reports Reps. Andy Levin (D-MI), Jamaal Bowman (D-NY), Cori Bush (D-MO), Terri Sewell (D-AL), and Nikema Williams (D-GA) are among the lawmakers who will visit the Amazon fulfillment center in Bessemer on Friday "to show their support for workers who will vote on whether to unionize."

AWS Executive Sues Amazon Over "Systemic" Discrimination In Corporate Offices. Reuters (3/1, Stempel, Dastin) reports Charlotte Newman, "a business development head at Amazon Web Services who is Black," filed a discrimination lawsuit against Amazon on Monday, "saying it hires Black people for lower positions and promotes them more slowly than white workers, and that she was subjected to harassment." Newman specifically "said the company suffers from a 'systemic pattern of insurmountable discrimination,' despite its pledge to fight racism and statements of solidarity from Chief Executive Officer Jeff Bezos."

Harris Stresses Need To Strengthen Cities' Infrastructure.

Bloomberg (3/1, Sink, 3.57M) reports "during her keynote address at the CityLab 2021 conference, hosted by Bloomberg Philanthropies and the Aspen Institute" on Monday, Vice President Harris said the US has the "imperative to strengthen infrastructure in our cities and create good union jobs." As "the Biden administration readies a sweeping stimulus package to follow its $1.9 trillion coronavirus relief proposal," Harris said, "Think of small businesses. Cities are incubators for startups and hubs for mom and pop shops. These businesses create jobs and foster community. ... And we need to make sure they have access to the capital they need to get through this time." Bloomberg says President Biden hopes to unveil an infrastructure package after the Senate considers his COVID relief legislation. Harris "touted support from community leaders for that relief bill – which includes $350 billion for state, local, and tribal governments – and said the funding would help keep small businesses open and first responders on the job."

Vilsack Predicts Farms Will Provide "Early Wins" On Climate.

Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M) reports that in remarks to the National Farmers Union Monday, Agriculture Secretary Vilsack "predicted farms would provide 'early wins' for the Biden administration's efforts to counter climate change, and hinted he will draw on the department's borrowing authority to fund initiatives to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions." Vilsack told the group "that he believes USDA has 'some flexibility' to draw resources for climate change initiatives from the Commodity Credit Corporation." Vilsack "said 'it's going to take a while' for other sectors of the economy such as power generation, construction and transportation to switch to more climate-friendly practices. But agriculture is 'in the best position to start early and quickly.'"

As CERAWEEK Conference Begins, Oil And Gas Execs Stress Need For Fossil Fuels. Reuters (3/1, Resnick-Ault, Parraga) reports as "global energy leaders and other luminaries...bored in on the tough road to transforming world economies to a lower-carbon future at the kickoff of the all-virtual CERAWEEK conference on Monday," there was "a notable bit of tension as some oil and gas executives asserted their primacy, noting the need for fossil fuels to drive economic activity." While panelists "were quick to talk up ambitious plans for lowering carbon emissions, boosting investment in new technologies related to hydrogen, carbon capture and renewables," the "primary message was that achieving 'net zero' – where polluting emissions are offset by technologies that absorb carbon dioxide for the atmosphere – is going to be difficult."

API Preparing To Endorse Carbon Pricing. The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Mann, Puko, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports the American Petroleum Institute "is preparing to endorse setting a price on carbon emissions in what would be the strongest signal yet that oil and gas producers are ready to accept government efforts to confront climate change." The Journal cites a draft statement which says API is set to support carbon pricing as a policy that would "lead to the most economic paths to achieve the ambitions of the Paris Agreement." The draft statement says, "API supports economy-wide carbon pricing as the primary government climate policy instrument to reduce CO2 emissions while helping keep energy affordable, instead of mandates or prescriptive regulatory action."

State Auditor Says California Agency Overstated Its Programs' Impact On Emissions. The San Francisco Chronicle (2/24, Gardiner, 2.44M) says according to a "blistering report" from the California state auditor's office, the state Air Resources Board "has overstated the extent to which some of its programs have reduced greenhouse-gas emissions." The report concludes that the board "could hamper California's ability to meet its climate-change goals unless the agency can accurately track the effects of its programs. State Auditor Elaine Howle said the agency has failed to measure whether its programs offering rebates to encourage the purchase of electric cars or other zero-emission models have reduced emissions." According to Howle, the board "doesn't have enough data to measure whether the rebates it issues actually lead people to purchase electric vehicles that they wouldn't have otherwise."

LATimes: "Political Will" Needed To Expand Number Of Non-Fossil Fuel Powered Vehicles. A Los Angeles Times (3/1, 3.37M) editorial says while "climate scientists tell us that we have less than a decade to make meaningful reductions in carbon emissions...if we have any hope of staving off the worst effects of global warming," manufacturers "are still making, and consumers are still buying, overwhelming numbers of vehicles that will, on average, continue to spew carbon into the atmosphere for a dozen years after they first leave the lot." The Times argues that "to throttle back the gas burners and expand exponentially the number of vehicles that run on electric batteries, hydrogen fuel cells or other non-fossil energy sources," it will take "political will, strong government thumbs on the scale to favor zero-emission vehicles over gas burners (an all-out ban on their production and sale is likely too radical for the world, but it would certainly help), and increased spending on developing and producing clean energy sources, battery technologies and charging capabilities."

USDA Slows Land Transfer For Arizona Copper Mine.

The AP (3/1, Fonseca) reports that the Administration "is pulling back an environmental review that had cleared the way for" Oak Flat, "a parcel of federal land held sacred by Apaches to be turned over for a massive copper mine in eastern Arizona." The Agriculture Department "said Monday that it likely will take several months to further consult with Native American tribes and others about their concerns" and "determine whether the environmental review fully complies with the law." But, the department and the US Forest Service "acknowledged they can only do so much. Congress mandated that the land be transferred to Resolution Copper no later than 60 days after the final environmental review was published. The document was released in the last days of Donald Trump's administration."

Interior Reverses Trump Administration's Last-Minute Grazing Permits To Hammonds.

The Hill (3/1, Beitsch, 5.69M) reports that the Interior Department "is reversing a last-minute decision made under the Trump administration to grant grazing permits for two men pardoned by President Trump." On the Trump Administration's last full day in office, then-Interior Secretary David Bernhardt issued a permit that would "allow Hammond Ranches to graze on lands in southeast Oregon. The ranch is operated by father-son duo Dwight and Steven Hammond, who were convicted of setting fire to public lands in 2012." BLM "subsequently revoked their grazing privileges in 2014 – a move that caught the eye of Ammon Bundy, escalating to a 2016 takeover of the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge in Oregon." The Biden Administration is "reconsidering the January permit issued under the Trump administration, arguing the prior administration didn't follow proper protocol in issuing it."

Workhorse To Meet With USPS After Losing Delivery Vehicle Contract.

Reuters (3/1) reports Workhorse Group Inc. "will meet with U.S. Postal Service on Wednesday after the electric-vehicle maker lost a multibillion-dollar contract to Oshkosh Defense for making postal delivery vehicles last week." Workhorse CEO Duane Hughes said on a conference call with analysts on Monday, "We have requested pursuant to the publicly provided bid rules – bid process rules, additional information from the U.S. postal service and have scheduled a face-to-face meeting with postal service on March 3. ... We intend to explore all avenues that are available to us." Reuters says, "The contract, which could be worth more than $6 billion in total, allows for delivery of between 50,000 and 165,000 of vehicles over 10 years that will be a mix of combustion-powered and electric vehicles." Bloomberg (3/1, Natter, 3.57M) provides similar coverage.

Warren Proposes 2%-3% Annual Tax On Those Worth More Than $50M.

Bloomberg (3/1, Wasson, 3.57M) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) on Monday introduced legislation to impose a "wealth tax on households worth more than $50 million," which she "said...could help pay for investments in infrastructure, childcare and health reforms as part of President Joe Biden's plan to 'Build Back Better.'" Warren as well as Reps. Pramila Jayapal (D-WA) and Brendan Boyle (D-PA) also "said [their Ultra-Millionaire Tax Act] would create a 'fairer' economy with a 2% annual tax on households and trusts valued at between $50 million and $1 billion. All net worth over $1 billion would be taxed at 3%." However, Bloomberg says "the measure – like wealth tax proposals Warren has offered in the past – is unlikely to garner the support needed to pass, particularly in the evenly divided Senate. But it could serve as a marker for progressives in Congress and is a reminder of the restiveness on the party's left flank."

The New York Times (3/1, Tankersley, 20.6M) says President Biden "pointedly did not endorse a wealth tax in the 2020 Democratic presidential primaries. But Ms. Warren is pushing colleagues to pursue such a plan, which has gained popularity with the public as the richest Americans reap huge gains while 10 million Americans remain out of work as a result of the pandemic." According to the Times, "Polls have consistently shown Ms. Warren's proposal winning the support of more than three in five Americans, including a majority of Republican voters."

CNBC (3/1, Iacurci, 7.34M) reports on its website that Sens. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), Sens. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-RI), Jeff Merkley (D-OR), Kirsten Gillibrand (D-NY), Brian Schatz (D-HI), Edward Markey (D-MA), and Mazie Hirono (D-HI) also co-sponsored the bill.

New York Lawmakers Consider Raising Taxes On Wealthiest Residents. The New York Times (2/26, Bellafante, 20.6M) reports six bills comprise "the proposed Invest in Our New York Act, which seeks to raise $50 billion a year for affordable housing, education, health care and other resources through a series of changes to the tax code focused entirely on demanding more from the penthouse class." According to the Times, "The bills include plans to tax capital gains more aggressively (treating investment income as wage income), to lower the floor at which inheritance is taxed (to $250,000) and to restore taxes on corporate profit." However, the Times adds, "Even in this climate of excessive hardship, and even with a Democratic supermajority in the State Legislature, few expect all of these bills to become law. It still seems a radical notion to ask a lot of those who have so much."

New York AG Calls Cryptocurrencies "High-Risk, Unstable Investments."

Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M) reports New York Attorney General Letitia James "issued a scathing statement on the cryptocurrency market, warning consumers about its susceptibility to 'speculative bubbles' and abuse by criminals." In an investor alert Monday, James said, "Cryptocurrencies are high-risk, unstable investments that could result in devastating losses just as quickly as they can provide gains." Bloomberg says it is "the strongest language James, who has taken several recent enforcement actions in the sector, has used to describe the rapidly evolving industry."

Goldman Sachs Groups Restarts Its Crypto Currency Trading Desk. Reuters (3/1, Irrera, Withers) cites "a person familiar with the matter" who said Goldman Sachs Group "has restarted its cryptocurrency trading desk and will begin dealing bitcoin futures and non-deliverable forwards for clients from next week." According to the person, "the team will sit within the U.S. bank's Global Markets division."

Goya CEO Calls Trump The "Legitimate" President, Sparking Calls For A Boycott.

The Washington Post (3/1, Salcedo, 10.52M) reports Goya Foods CEO Robert Unanue promised in January to stop publicly discussing politics. The promise "came after reportedly getting censured by Goya's board for making false claims about election fraud." But on Sunday, "Unanue once again denied the election results, falsely calling Trump 'the real, the legitimate, and still the actual president of the United States' in a speech at the Conservative Political Action Conference in Orlando." The Post says his comments "sparked renewed outrage on social media, with some calling again for action against the company with a #BoycottGoya hashtag on Twitter."

Fiat Chrysler Automobiles Pleads Guilty To Conspiracy To Violate Labor Management Relations Act.

Reuters (3/1, Shepardson) reports Fiat Chrysler Automobiles entered a guilty plea Monday "to charges it conspired with company executives to make illegal, lavish gifts to United Auto Workers (UAW) leaders and undermined workers' confidence in collective bargaining." The US unit of the company "said in January it reached agreement with U.S. prosecutors to plead guilty to one count of conspiracy to violate the Labor Management Relations Act and pay a $30 million fine. U.S. District Judge Paul Borman said at a court hearing he accepted Fiat Chrysler's guilty plea and set a June 21 sentencing date."

Private Equity Company Netted Millions From Medical Supply Company Accused Of Fraud.

The Washington Post (3/1, Torbati, 10.52M) reports federal prosecutors said in a December lawsuit that the medical equipment company Apria "submitted false medical claims for ventilator rentals worth millions of dollars to the government, even as, in a bid to cut costs, it eliminated the jobs of respiratory specialists needed to ensure patients were properly using the machines." Apria settled the complaint "for $40.5 million, according to an announcement by federal prosecutors. Despite that settlement, Apria went public last month, netting its owners more than $170 million, according to another disclosure to the Securities and Exchange Commission." The private equity company Blackstone's "stake in Apria is now nearly 70 percent, down from nearly 93 percent before the offering. ... For critics of the private equity industry, Blackstone's ability to extract so much money out of Apria is an example of how the profits flowing to private equity owners are disconnected from the realities of how the businesses are run."

Administration Says It Will Use "All Available Tools" In Response To Unfair Trade Practices By China.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Hayashi, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports the Biden Administration "said Monday it will use 'all available tools' to respond to alleged unfair trading practices by Beijing." The Administration "said it is committed to using tariffs and other tools to combat alleged unfair trade practices by China, including unfair subsidies to favored industries and use of forced labor that targets Uyghurs and other ethnic minorities." The Administration said, "The Biden administration recognizes that China's coercive and unfair trade practices harm American workers, threaten our technological edge, weaken our supply-chain resiliency and undermine our national interests. ... Addressing the China challenge will require a comprehensive strategy and more systematic approach."

Meanwhile, Bloomberg (3/1, Wadhams, 3.57M) says that the Administration "is moving to put semiconductors, artificial intelligence and next-generation networks at the heart of U.S. strategy toward Asia, attempting to rally what officials are calling 'techno-democracies' to stand up to China and other 'techno-autocracies.'" The strategy would seek to create "an alliance of nations fighting for an edge in semiconductor fabrication and quantum computing, upending traditional arenas of competition such as missile stockpiles and troop numbers." According to "current and former government officials, along with outside experts," the Administration strategy is "a microcosm of its broader plans to take up a more alliance-oriented but still hostile approach to China after a more chaotic approach under President Donald Trump."

Xi To Unveil Plans To End China's Dependence On West For Key Tech Components. Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M) reports Chinese President Xi Jinping is "worried" the US will block "China's potential to dominate sensitive cutting-edge technologies" and "this week will unveil plans for greater self-sufficiency." During an annual session of China's legislature, "top Communist Party leaders will approve a five-year policy blueprint to cut dependence on the West for crucial components like computer chips while also making big bets on emerging technologies from hydrogen vehicles to biotech. The push to mobilize trillions of dollars could help China surpass the U.S. as the world's biggest economy this decade and cement Xi's goal of turning the nation into a superpower."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (3/1, Popper, Li, 20.6M) reports on "China's latest economics experiment: a national digital currency." The central bank "began testing eCNY last year in four cities," and "recently expanded those trials to bigger cities such as Beijing and Shanghai." Digital currencies "enable direct handouts of money that expire if not used by a particular date and can make it easier for governments to track financial transactions to stamp out tax evasion and crack down on dissidents."

Meng Attorney Argues HSBC Knew Huawei Controlled Skycom's Accounts. Reuters (3/1, Warburton, Berman) reports that as Huawei CFO Meng Wanzhou's extradition hearing resumed in a Canadian court on Monday, the defense "counter[ed] prosecutors' claims that Meng misled HSBC about the Chinese telecom company's relationship with its affiliate while doing business in Iran." Defense lawyer Frank Addario "kicked off a new phase of hearings with an assertion that HSBC's global client relationship manager, tasked with overseeing its dealings with Huawei Technologies, knew that Huawei controlled Skycom Tech Co Ltd's accounts." According to US prosecutors, Skycom "operated as a Huawei affiliate in Iran" and Meng "misrepresented this relationship. Meng allegedly made statements suggesting Skycom was sold to an arms-length third party, according to the prosecutors, when it was in fact sold to a parent company controlled by Huawei."

Commission Recommends Steps To Prevent China Overtaking US In Semiconductors.

Reuters (3/1, Nellis) reports the National Security Commission on Artificial Intelligence “on Monday recommended Congress tighten up ‘choke points’ on chipmaking technology to prevent China from overtaking the United States in semiconductors in the coming years.” The commission “recommended clamping down on China’s ability to procure the manufacturing equipment needed to make advanced computing chips.” While “much chipmaking equipment comes from U.S. firms,” it “also comes from firms such as Nikon Corp and Canon Inc in Japan and ASML Holding in the Netherlands. The report recommends that the United States coordinate with those countries to create a policy of ‘presumptive denial’ in each country for export licenses of advanced chipmaking tools to China.” In addition, the report “recommends formalizing into U.S. policy a longstanding regulatory practice of limiting China’s semiconductor industry to two generations behind the United States.”

The AP (3/1, O'Brien) says the commission, which is led by former Google CEO Eric Schmidt, “is urging the U.S. to boost its AI skills to counter China, including by pursuing ‘AI-enabled’ weapons – something that Google itself has shied away from on ethical grounds.” The commission’s report “says that machines that can ‘perceive, decide, and act more quickly’ than humans and with more accuracy are going to be deployed for military purposes – with or without the involvement of the U.S. and other democracies. It warns against unchecked use of autonomous weapons but expresses opposition to a global ban.”

WPost Analysis: Continued Reliance On Existing Semiconductor Factories Is Likely. In an analysis, the Washington Post (3/1, A1, Whalen, Albergotti, Lynch, 10.52M) reports that amid the global semiconductor shortage, the White House has “leaned on big chip producers and their host nations, including Taiwan, to increase output.” But, last week, governors from eight states “urged President Biden to ‘redouble those efforts,’ warning of a ‘growing list of automakers, suppliers, and dealers negatively affected by the shortage.’” However, the Post says “the growing presence of chips in devices large and small foreshadows a supply problem not easily resolved by warmer weather or presidential executive orders. New semiconductor factories are among the most complex manufacturing facilities to build, costing billions of dollars and taking years to construct,” which means “much of the world’s electronics industry will continue to depend heavily on existing factories, many of them in Taiwan – a reliance that critics say looks increasingly risky as the island’s tensions with China rise.”

USTR Says Biden Administration Will Consider Carbon Border Adjustment Tax.

Reuters (3/1, Lawder) reports as the Biden Administration released a new trade agenda Monday, the US Trade Representative’s office said it “would consider carbon border adjustment taxes to help cut greenhouse gas emissions in global trade and to combat China’s use of forced labor among Uighur Muslims in its western Xinjiang region.” The USTR’s office “said the carbon border adjustment, which consists of import fees levied by carbon-taxing countries on goods manufactured in non-carbon-taxing countries, would be considered as part of an effort to explore and develop market and regulatory approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.”

DOJ Says Trump Acted Lawfully When He Killed Tariff Exemption For Solar Panels. In what Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M) describes as a “potential setback to clean-power developers,” the Biden Administration said Monday that former President Donald Trump “acted lawfully and fully within his authority” when he killed a tariff exemption for two-sided solar panels. In a filing asking “the U.S. Court of International Trade to dismiss a lawsuit by parties including the Solar Energy Industries Association, which in December challenged Trump’s move to stiffen tariffs on imported solar equipment,” the Justice Department said, “The President followed the law and, thus, the Court should dismiss the complaint.”

South Korean Battery Makers Make Cases To Administration About Georgia Factory Project.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Foldy, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports South Korean battery makers SK Innovation and LG Chem “made their pitches to the Biden administration about a disputed factory project under construction in Georgia seen as key to the electric-car plans of Ford Motor Co. and Volkswagen AG.” SKI “is looking for the White House to overturn a ruling by a federal trade commission last month that the company said would cause it to abandon a $2.6 billion battery factory complex it had hoped to open later this year.” But, “representatives of LG Chem met with administration trade officials Friday to make their pitch for preserving the ruling, according to people familiar with the discussion.”

NYTimes Analysis: To Help US Manufacturing, Biden Must Deal With Strength Of US Dollar.

The New York Times (3/1, Scheiber, 20.6M) reports in an analysis that to deliver on his pledge to make American manufacturing a priority, President Biden may have to deal with “the strength of the dollar. Because a strong dollar lowers the price of imports and raises the price of exports, it gives foreign companies an advantage over American competitors and can drag down U.S. employment.” Biden “has hired a handful of senior economic advisers who are concerned about the dollar’s strength and have explored ways to reduce it.”

Senate Confirms Cardona As Education Secretary On 64-33 Vote.

The Washington Post (3/1, Meckler, Douglas-Gabriel, 10.52M) reports the Senate in a 64-33 vote “confirmed Miguel Cardona to serve as education secretary Monday, vaulting the little-known Connecticut educator into the center of the national debate over how to reopen schools for face-to-face classes.” The Post adds that the bipartisan vote came after Cardona’s nomination “moved through the chamber without any significant controversy – in contrast with the confirmation his immediate predecessor, Betsy DeVos, who needed the tiebreaking vote of Vice President Mike Pence to win confirmation.” Politico (3/1, Stratford, 6.73M) reports Cardona’s confirmation “was also more bipartisan than that of John B. King Jr., President Barack Obama's second secretary of Education, who was confirmed on a 49-40 vote. The five secretaries of Education prior to King were each confirmed by the Senate either on a voice vote or under unanimous consent."

The New York Times (3/1, Green, 20.6M) says Cardona "drew bipartisan support for his success in reopening a majority of Connecticut's schools and for his conciliatory positions on divisive education issues," while his background as the son of Puerto Rican parents "and career – a sharp contrast to that of...DeVos, a billionaire private-school champion – drew widespread praise." The Times highlights that Cardona "started as a struggling English-language learner and went on to become an elementary-school teacher, an award-winning principal, an assistant superintendent in that school system and Connecticut's first Latino commissioner of education."

Meanwhile, the AP (3/1, Binkley) says Cardona "has vowed to make it his top priority to reopen schools," which "has become a political firestorm for Biden, who is caught between competing interests as he aims to get students into the classroom without provoking the powerful teachers unions that helped put him in the White House. He says his goal of returning students to the classroom is possible if Congress approves his relief plan, which includes $130 billion for the nation's schools." CNN (3/1, Lobosco, 89.21M) reports on its website that teachers' unions "back Cardona and are pleased with Biden's push to reopen schools but have warned that the 100-day reopening timeline may need to be a goal rather than a fixed target."

In addition, USA Today (3/1, Behrmann, 12.7M) reports Cardona "has vowed to undo many of the policies DeVos put in place," which "include DeVos' stricter rules for investigations of sexual misconduct at schools and colleges, plus her looser guidelines benefiting for-profit colleges." Axios (3/1, Chen, 1.26M), the Fox News (3/1, Lea, 23.99M) website, and The Hill (3/1, Carney, 5.69M), among other outlets, provide similar coverage.

Senate Votes To Limit Debate On Raimondo Confirmation.

The Providence (RI) Journal (3/1, 376K) reports the Senate in an 84-15 vote on Monday limited debate on the nomination of Commerce Secretary-designate Raimondo "and scheduled the final vote for 2:15 p.m. on Tuesday." Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX), who "sought to delay the vote out of a stated belief she had not taken a firm enough stand against Chinese telecom giant Huawei," will get "30 minutes earlier in the day to state his case."

Four GOP Members Of Senate Judiciary Panel Back Garland Nomination.

The Washington Post (3/1, Wagner, Itkowitz, Sonmez, 10.52M) reports that on Monday, the Senate Judiciary Committee "voted to advance Merrick Garland's nomination to be the next U.S. attorney general. ... Fifteen members of the committee – all of the panel's 11 Democrats plus four Republicans – voted in favor of advancing the nomination, while seven Republicans opposed it." According to the Post, "Some of the Republicans said that Garland did not provide meaningful responses to their questions at his confirmation hearing and in writing afterward. Durbin said Republicans had submitted nearly 850 written questions after the hearing."

The New York Times (3/1, Kanno-Youngs, Shear, 20.6M) reports that Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) "said that he was disappointed by the way that Judge Garland answered questions during his hearing and in his questionnaire and disapproved of the fact that he would not meet in person."

After Meeting With Tanden, Murkowski Hasn't Decided Whether To Support Her.

The Hill (3/1, Carney, 5.69M) reports Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) told reporters that she had not made a decision on whether to support Neera Tanden's nomination to head OMB after meeting with her on Monday. Murkowski said, "I met with her today. We had a sit down meeting, which was good." She "added that she hasn't made a decision, was still doing her 'assessment' and had 'some more follow-up questions.'" Murkowski "is viewed as the only remaining GOP senator who could potentially be swayed to vote for Tanden."

Anti-Trump Group Spending $1M To Promote DOJ Nominee Gupta.

The Washington Post (3/1, Nakamura, 10.52M) reports that "a group of prominent anti-Trump conservatives is launching a $1 million ad campaign in support of civil rights lawyer Vanita Gupta's nomination as associate attorney general, an effort aimed at countering attacks from hard-right Republicans who have painted her as a radical liberal." According to the Post, "The ad campaign is being spearheaded by Defending Democracy Together, a collection of moderate Republicans launched in opposition to Donald Trump's presidency whose founders include columnist Bill Kristol and author Mona Charen." The Post says Gupta has been "under attack from the Judicial Crisis Network, a deeply conservative organization that launched an $800,000 ad campaign calling her a 'dangerous appointee' and attempting to tie her to the social justice movement to 'defund the police' while also casting her as soft on terrorism and white nationalism."

Reuters (3/1) reports that "several Republican state attorneys general wrote a letter to Biden on Monday asking him to withdraw Gupta's nomination, calling her a 'radical nominee' who favors 'destructive policies that would defund the police.'"

Meagher Hired As Deputy White House Press Secretary.

The Washington Post (3/1, Viser, 10.52M) reports Chris Meagher "has been hired to be deputy White House press secretary." Meagher, who has worked as spokesman for "several prominent Democrats," will "replace TJ Ducklo, who resigned last month amid reports that he had threatened a Politico reporter." Meagher will start Wednesday.

US Chamber Asks Biden To Reinstate Robb As NLRB General Counsel.

The Hill (3/1, Gangitano, 5.69M) reports the US Chamber of Commerce has called on President Biden to "immediately reinstate Peter Robb, the former National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) general counsel, who he fired on Inauguration Day." In a letter to Biden on Monday, the group "criticiz[ed] him for firing Trump appointee Robb and his chief deputy counsel Alice Stock," and asked "that he reverse the decision, and impl[ie]d that the decision was due to pressure from labor leaders."

Minneapolis City Council Members Question Plan For Police, Military Presence During Chauvin Trial.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (3/1, Navratil, 855K) reports some members of Minneapolis' City Council on Monday "questioned the city's plan to bring in thousands of soldiers and police officers for former officer Derek Chauvin's trial, saying it could inflame tensions in a traumatized community."

City Council Drops Plan To Hire Social Media Influencers For Trial. The Washington Post (3/1, Bellware, 10.52M) says the City Council "is dropping its plan to hire influencers who would boost city-approved messaging and dispel misinformation ahead of the trial of" Chauvin, who is "charged in the killing of George Floyd." Last Friday, the council "voted unanimously to approve a public safety and communication plan tied to the upcoming trials, which included paying a $2,000-per-person fee to six social media influencers tied to the city's Black, Hmong, Latino, Native American and Somali communities, officials said." A spokesman for the city said in a statement the goal was to make information accessible to communities that "do not typically follow mainstream news sources or City communications channels. ... It's also an opportunity to create more two-way communication between the City and communities."

WSJournal Analysis: Proving Chauvin's Use Of Prone Restraint Was Murder Will Be Difficult. The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Gershman, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports Chauvin's use of a technique known as prone restraint in which a suspect is pinned to the ground on his or her stomach "helped fuel unrest over racial justice last summer. But proving that technique was murder will likely be a steep challenge for prosecutors." Many "federal civil lawsuits over prone-restraint deaths are rejected before trial by judges, according to a review of such cases by The Wall Street Journal. Others are settled before trial, including one for $1.5 million in New York City. It is rare for prone-restraint cases in civil court to go before a jury, the review found."

Floyd Killing, Pandemic, Helped Spur Affordable Housing Push. The Washington Post (3/1, Schwartzman, 10.52M) reports that a "nationwide focus on racial equity – intensified by the coronavirus pandemic and the killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody – has trickled down to the realm of the local zoning board. Advocates in D.C. are invoking the need to correct past wrongs as they demand subsidized housing in affluent neighborhoods where low-cost apartments have always been scarce." In the coming weeks, the D.C. Council "will vote on Mayor Muriel E. Bowser's proposed changes to zoning policy," which "would allow taller apartment buildings on key corridors, potentially catalyzing the construction of tens of thousands of housing units, a portion of them subsidized." Bowser's proposal "echoes efforts in Portland, Ore., Minneapolis and Sacramento, where leaders seeking to lower costs have moved to relax zoning laws to allow more building in neighborhoods zoned for single-family homes."

Former Maryland Governor Advocates For Parole Reform.

In a Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) op-ed, former Maryland Gov. Parris N. Glendening (D) writes that his announcement at the start of his first term that he "would not grant parole to anyone with a life sentence, even though they were supposed to have a chance to earn it" was "a serious mistake." His statement, Glendening adds, "meant that people whose sentences promised a chance at parole were denied it for decades, regardless of how thoroughly they worked to redeem themselves and make amends to those they harmed." Glendening adds that he supports legislation before Maryland's General Assembly "that would leave the final decision about whether a person has earned release to the 10-member Maryland Parole Commission."

Manhattan Prosecutors Focusing On Trump Organization CFO.

The New York Times (3/1, Protes, Rashbaum, Haberman, 20.6M) reports Manhattan prosecutors "investigating former President Donald J. Trump and his family business are sharpening their focus on the company's long-serving chief financial officer," Allen H. Weisselberg, "asking witnesses questions about his dealings at the company, according to people with knowledge of the matter." Prosecutors working for Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus R. Vance Jr. "have been interviewing witnesses who know Mr. Weisselberg and have asked at least one witness about Mr. Weisselberg's sons, Barry and Jack Weisselberg, according to two of the people with knowledge of the matter." The Times says the "increased focus" on Weisselberg "could step up pressure on him to cooperate with the investigation if the prosecutors unearth evidence of wrongdoing on his part." Weisselberg's cooperation with prosecutors "might provide a significant boost to the long-running investigation and deliver a blow to Mr. Trump, who has long depended on Mr. Weisselberg's unflinching loyalty."

Louisiana Man Who Refused To Wear Mask At High School Basketball Game Shoots, Kills Officer Who Intervened.

The Washington Post (3/1, Elfrink, 10.52M) reports when John Shallerhorn tried to enter a high school basketball game in New Orleans without a mask on Saturday, a staffer bled his way. Shallerhorn "punched the staffer," and "Tulane University police officer Martinus Mitchum, who was working security for the team, rushed to help. That's when Shallerhorn pulled a gun, police said, and fatally shot Mitchum, 38, in the chest." Shallerhorn, "who was quickly arrested and charged with multiple felonies including murder of a police officer, had also robbed someone outside the game before coming inside, according to a criminal complaint reviewed by nola.com. He confessed to the killing, police said, and was ordered held without bail."

Former Education Secretaries Promote Civics Lessons Roadmap.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M), former Education Secretaries Lamar Alexander, Arne Duncan, John King, Rod Paige, Richard Riley, and Margaret Spellings promote the Roadmap to Educating for American Democracy – an initiative that provides guiding principles for local school districts, educators, and states aimed at rebuilding civics and history curriculums in the US --as a foundation for delivering equitable learning opportunities for all students.

NYC Appoints Education Department Veteran As School Chancellor.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Hawkins, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports Meisha Ross Porter, a 20-year Education Department veteran, has taken a short-term role as New York City Schools Chancellor from now until the end of Mayor de Blasio's (D) term in 2022. In that time, her most challenging priority will be revamping the city's gifted and talented program and restarting in-person learning.

One Student Wounded After "Targeted" Shooting In Arkansas Junior High School.

The New York Times (3/1, Bahr, 20.6M) reports that on Monday, "the first day back inside classrooms" for Watson Chapel Junior High School students in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, a 15-year-old boy "was wounded in a shooting" by another 15-year-old boy, who was taken into custody. Chief Kelvin Sergeant of the Pine Bluff Police Chief Kelvin Sergeant "said in an interview that the police did not yet know a motive or how the two students were related," but that "he was 'fairly confident' that the shooting 'was not random and was targeted.'"

Virginia Commonwealth University Suspends Fraternity After Student Dies In Hazing Incident.

The New York Times (3/1, Hauser, 20.6M) reports Virginia Commonwealth University "has suspended a fraternity after a freshman, Adam Oakes, 19, of Sterling, Va., was found dead over the weekend at an off-campus house where a family member said he had been blindfolded and given alcohol." The college's student code of conduct, "which applies to behavior on the university's premises, at sponsored activities and at off-campus locations, says hazing and the use of alcohol are both prohibited."

CMS Commits $2.3M To Bolster ACA Signups In Underserved Communities.

Axios (3/1, Fernandez, 1.26M) reports the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services on Monday announced it "will provide about $2.3 million to help bolster Affordable Care Act sign-ups in underserved communities." The funds will go to ACA navigators, who will provide in-person enrollment assistance during the ACA's additional open enrollment period later this month. Previously, the Biden Administration "pledged a $50 million advertising blitz to bolster public awareness." The Washington Post (3/1, Goldstein, 10.52M) reports navigators "complained they had little money left after a regular enrollment season ended late last year," and "had no way to anticipate that President Biden would order HealthCare.gov, the federal online ACA insurance marketplace, to reopen for an unprecedented extra shopping time."

Trump Era Policies Complicating Biden's Medicaid Work Requirement Rollback.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Armour, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports the Biden Administration's efforts to roll back Medicaid work requirements may be complicated by changes in the final weeks of the Trump presidency. Prior to Biden's takeover, several states signed agreements with the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services to keep work requirements in place for nine months – and some are examining whether that gives them legal ground to sue the Biden Administration's actions to invalidate work requirements.

FTC Orders E-Cigarette Makers To Turn Over Sales, Advertising Data.

Reuters (3/1) reports the FTC said Monday it has ordered e-cigarette makers JUUL Labs, Inc; R.J. Reynolds Vapor Company; Fontem US, Logic Technology Development, and NJOY "to turn over sales and advertising data." The agency said it sent orders to the companies "seeking information from 2019 and 2020 including annual data on sales and giveaways of e-cigarettes and characteristics of their e-cigarette products such as flavors."

Average Turnover At Nursing Homes Greater Than 100% In A Given Year, Researchers Say.

The New York Times (3/1, Abelson, 20.6M) reports, "Extraordinarily high turnover among staffs at nursing homes likely contributed to the shocking number of deaths at the facilities during the pandemic," investigators concluded in a study representing "a comprehensive look at the turnover rates in 15,645 nursing homes across the country, accounting for nearly all of the facilities certified by the federal government." The study revealed that "the average annual rate was 128 percent, with some facilities experiencing turnover that exceeded 300 percent." In an emailed statement, Dr. David Gifford, "the chief medical officer for the American Health Care Association and National Center for Assisted Living, a trade group," stated, "Workforce recruitment and retention is among the most pressing challenges confronting longterm care providers, and we have been calling for help for years."

Mayorkas Says Administration Will Allow Families Separated At The Border To Live In The US.

The Washington Post (3/1, Miroff, 10.52M) reports DHS Secretary Mayorkas on Monday "blamed the Trump administration...for the growing number of unaccompanied minors held in U.S. custody after crossing the Mexico border, saying the former president's policies left President Biden with a 'gutted' immigration system." The Post says that the day after Trump "blasted Biden's border policies in a speech to the Conservative Political Action Conference, Mayorkas appeared in the White House briefing room to respond and deny that the new administration is spiraling into a crisis." Mayorkas also "told reporters the Biden administration is 'working around-the-clock to replace the cruelty of the past administration with an orderly, humane and safe immigration process,' citing Trump's border crackdown in 2018 that separated more than 3,000 children from their parents at the border."

On ABC World News Tonight (3/1, story 4, 3:10, Muir, 7.55M), Chief National Correspondent Matt Gutman said Mayorkas is promising "a massive overall of the Trump-era immigration policy," with the Administration "taking aim tonight at the most controversial part, the separation of parents from their children at the border." Gutman added Mayorkas is "saying the 506 families that remain separated by a policy critics have labeled a human rights violation would be allowed to reunite in the United States or their country of origin." The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Parti, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports Mayorkas said, "We are hoping to reunite the families, either here or in the country of origin." Mayorkas added that if the families "seek to reunite here in the United States, we will explore lawful pathways for them to remain in the United States and to address the family needs so we are acting as restoratively as possible." That process, as part of the Administration's immigration agenda, "would take some time, though he declined to specify how long."

CNN (3/1, Alvarez, Sands, 89.21M) reports on its website that lawyers "are still trying to locate the parents of nearly 500 children who had been split from their families at the US-Mexico border by the Trump administration, according to attorneys – down from a month ago, when attorneys were looking for the parents of 611 children." Axios (3/1, Perano, 1.26M) says Mayorkas "added that the administration is also 'working closely' with legal counsel for the separated families, the countries of El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, non-governmental organizations, and soon the private sector." In addition, NBC News (3/1, Soboroff, 4.91M) reports on its website that Mayorkas announced Michelle Brané has been named executive director of the Administration's task force on reuniting the families.

While Político (3/1, Rodríguez, 6.73M) describes the announcement as "a significant step for the Biden administration as it seeks to undo the damage done by Trump's 'zero tolerance' policy, which allowed U.S. officials to forcibly separate children from their parents at the border," The Hill (3/1, Samuels, Beitsch, 5.69M) reports Biden "is facing pressure from all sides as migration swells at the southern border – posing one of the first major policy tests for his administration." According to The Hill, Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) and other "progressives have hit Biden officials over reopening a housing facility for young migrants used briefly during the Trump administration," while "conservatives...say Biden's approach has encouraged increased migration to the southern border."

However, Bloomberg (3/1, Cook, Fabian, 3.57M) reports Mayorkas "also accused the Trump administration of issuing 'unlawful' contracts within the department, citing an agreement signed just before Trump left office requiring the union representing Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents to approve any immigration policy changes."

CBP Deploys Additional Agents To Rio Grande Valley As Memo Says 200-400 Unaccompanied Minors Crossing Into The US Per Day. On the CBS Evening News (3/1, story 5, 1:10, O'Donnell, 4.6M), Weijia Jiang reported that while Mayorkas on Monday "warned migrants to stay away from the border for now because he said the Trump Administration dismantled the US immigration system," CBS News "obtained a new memo that shows the number of unaccompanied minors at the border is soaring with about 200 to 400 a day, and unlike the Trump Administration that made the children wait in Mexico for their cases to be processed, the new policy is to house them in the US, but bed space is already 97% full." Meanwhile, Reuters (3/1, Hesson) reports Customs and Border Protection "said Monday it was deploying additional Border Patrol agents to the Rio Grande Valley in South Texas 'due to fluctuations along the southwest border.'"

Number Of Migrants Crossing Border Increases As Matamoros Camp Empties. Bloomberg (3/1, Smith, Malik, 3.57M) reports that as the US has begun admitting asylum seekers from the "tent city" in Matamoros, at "the current rate of crossings, the camp could be cleared out in days" Meanwhile, Bloomberg adds the "number of migrants crossing the southern border is surging." The Arizona Republic (3/1, Carranza, 1.05M) reports that as border authorities resume "the practice of releasing asylum-seekers apprehended along the Arizona-Mexico border directly to communities throughout the state," the "number of asylum-seekers released remains far below the peak in arrivals in 2019." The trend is due "in large part because of pandemic restrictions at the U.S.-Mexico border, including a policy that allows the U.S. to turn away migrants, even if they have valid asylum claims."

Cotton: Biden Is Encouraging Foreign Nationals To Attempt To Enter The US Via Mexico. On Fox News' Fox & Friends (3/1, 831K), Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) said that in regard to President Biden's immigration policies, "You cannot run a campaign saying that you're going to reinstitute 'catch and release,' you're going to give free healthcare to illegal aliens, and not expect a massive surge on our border." Cotton added, "The only thing that the Biden Administration can do is reverse this policy now. They can reinstitute the agreement we had negotiated with Mexico and other Latin American countries to keep migrants in their countries, to let us adjudicate their asylum claims there, make it clear that we're going to turn people back at the border." He continued, "What Joe Biden is doing, he's going to track down illegal aliens in Mexico that Donald Trump turned away and invite them to come back. That's not 'catch and release,' that's 'recruit and release.'"

Utah Mayor Praises Administration's Immigration Policy. In a Deseret News \(UT\) (2/28, 114K) op-ed, Salt Lake County, Utah Mayor Jenny Wilson (D) declared Salt Lake County has "proven that the vision of proactive immigrant inclusion makes communities stronger.

And now, we finally have an ally in Washington who sees immigration through the same, humane lens." She concluded, "The tide is turning, there is hope of ending the humanitarian crisis at our border. Federal efforts to bolster the inclusion of immigrant communities complement and strengthen Salt Lake County's ongoing work, and will help ensure that everyone has a chance to thrive and pursue the American Dream."

Republicans Attempting To "Rewrite The Story Of What Happened" During Capitol Riot.

In a nearly 2,100-word article, the Washington Post (3/1, A1, DeBonis, Barr, 10.52M) reports "a legion of conservative activists, media personalities and elected officials are seeking to rewrite the story of what happened at the Capitol on Jan. 6, hoping to undermine the clear picture of the attack that has emerged from video and photo evidence, law enforcement officials, journalistic accounts and the testimonials of the rioters themselves: that a pro-Trump mob, mobilized by the former president's false claims of a stolen election, stormed the seat of American government to keep Trump in power through violent means." In a nearly 2,400-word article, the New York Times (3/1, A1, Grynbaum, Alba, Epstein, 20.6M) reports that although "the claim that antifa was involved has been repeatedly debunked by federal authorities," the assertion "has hardened into gospel among hard-line Trump supporters, by voters and sanctified by elected officials in the party," which shows "pro-Trump Republicans have succeeded in warping their voters' realities, exhibiting sheer gall as they seek to minimize a violent riot perpetrated by their own supporters."

A Washington Post (3/1, Bump, 10.52M) analysis says former President Trump "hasn't yet finalized his sales pitch to America after hundreds of the supporters he had encouraged to come to Washington on Jan. 6 took his false claims about the results of the 2020 election at face value and attempted to block the finalization of Biden's victory," but his CPAC speech shows how he "planned to sell the country on the idea that he bears no culpability for the insurrection – even as he worked to maintain the falsehood at its center."

Meanwhile, a Washington Post (3/1, Kessler, 10.52M) "Fact Checker" analysis says Rep. Jim Jordan is among the Republicans who "have tried to pin the blame elsewhere" even though the "Capitol Hill insurrection" was "inspired by...Trump's lies about the 2020 election and mounted by his followers." According to the Post Jordan recently made a "false claim" that House Speaker Pelosi "denied a request for National Guard troops" on Jan. 6. In addition, the New York Times (3/1, Epstein, 20.6M) highlights that Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) "has come under renewed scrutiny for claiming in a series of radio interviews...that the Jan. 6 attack on the Capitol was not an 'armed insurrection' and for using his time during a Senate hearing to read a first-person account that posited 'provocateurs' and 'fake Trump supporters' were behind the attack," while Bloomberg (3/1, Grant, 3.57M) reports YouTube "said it suspended Rudy Giuliani for the second time in two months after the former New York City mayor lied again in videos that the 2020 presidential election was stolen from...Trump."

DC National Guard Commander To Testify At Hearing On Capitol Attack. The Washington Post (3/1, Lamothe, 10.52M) reports Maj. Gen. William Walker, the commanding general of the DC National Guard, "will testify on Wednesday during a Senate hearing about the attack on the U.S. Capitol, joining a group that initially included only civilian witnesses, defense and congressional officials said." According to the Post, "Walker oversaw the D.C. National Guard in its limited role responding to the possibility of violence ahead of the riot at the Capitol on Jan. 6, which was spawned from a rally in support of President Donald Trump's false claims that the election was stolen from him. The National Guard response was expanded hours after Congress was overrun, eventually including about 26,000 National Guard members through the Jan. 20 inauguration of President Biden. Several thousand remain activated in Washington to provide security."

Capitol Police Union Endorses Honoré's Security Recommendations. The New York Times (3/1, Broadwater, 20.6M) reports the Capitol Police union on Monday "endorsed an array of security enhancements that are being recommended by retired Lt. Gen. Russel L. Honoré in response to the Jan. 6 assault at the Capitol, including hiring 1,000 more officers, establishing a quick reaction force for emergencies and considering options for different types of security fencing around the complex."

Prosecutors Describe Proud Boys Involvement In Assault Of Capitol. Politico (3/1, Cheney, Gerstein, 6.73M) reports that in "one of the most detailed" court filings about the Jan. 6 attack on the Capitol to date, federal prosecutors on Monday "say the Proud Boys – bereft of their leader Enrique Tarrio, who had been arrested two days earlier – turned to new leaders, including Ethan Nordean, a Seattle-based Proud Boys leader, who helped orchestrate the group's role in the assault. In a filing seeking Nordean's detention pending trial, prosecutors say he helped hatch a plan to provide Proud Boys with walkie-talkies...and communicated privately with individuals willing to fund and provide equipment for the Capitol siege."

NYTimes Analysis: Far-Right Groups Splintering In Wake Of Capitol Riot. The New York Times (3/1, MacFarquhar, 20.6M) reports, "Just eight weeks after the Capitol riot, some of the most prominent groups that participated are fracturing amid a torrent of backbiting and finger-pointing." According to the Times, "The fallout will determine the future of some of the most high-profile far-right organizations and raises the specter of splinter groups that could make the movement even more dangerous."

Harvard CAPS-Harris Poll: 61% Approve Of Biden's Performance.

In an exclusive, The Hill (3/1, Greenwood, 5.69M) reports that according to a new Harvard CAPS-Harris Poll survey of 2,006 registered voters (2/23-2/25), President Biden "is starting his tenure in White House with the approval of 61 percent of voters," which "are markedly higher than those of former President Trump when he first took office," while "only about 39 percent of respondents said they disapprove of the job Biden is doing in the White House." According to The Hill, "There's a relatively wide partisan divide in early perceptions of Biden's presidency, with an overwhelming majority of Democrats approving of his job performance and most Republicans disapproving. Still, nearly one-third of GOP voters – 31 percent – said they approve of Biden's handling of his job."

Administration Endorses New Election Reform Bill.

Reuters (3/1) reports the Biden Administration “backed Democrats’ efforts to overhaul voting rules and turn over the process of drawing congressional districts to independent commissions on Monday, weighing in on a political fight that is likely to dominate Washington in coming years.” In a statement, the Office of Management and Budget said the legislation is important as it comes as the US is facing “an unprecedented assault on our democracy, a never before seen effort to ignore, undermine, and undo the will of the people, and a newly aggressive attack on voting rights taking place right now all across the country.” According to Reuters, the House “is set to vote and likely to pass a sweeping election reform bill, HR-1, as soon as this week.” The AP (3/1, Slodysko) reports that as lawmakers begin to debate the “sweeping voting and ethics legislation, Democrats and Republicans can agree on one thing: If signed into law, it would usher in the biggest overhaul of U.S. elections law in at least a generation.”

A Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) editorial criticizes the election reform legislation, which it argues “would make mail balloting in a plague year seem buttoned up.” The Journal concludes, “Ballot access is important, but so is ballot integrity.”

As Supreme Court Considers Arizona Election Rules, GOP Lawmakers Seek To Restrict Voting Laws. The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports the Supreme Court this week will hear “an Arizona case with broad ramifications for the future of the Voting Rights Act, the first in a pipeline of high-stakes litigation following the legal frenzy that marked the 2020 election season.” In particular, the court is focused on “a longstanding rule disallowing votes cast in the wrong precinct, and a measure passed by the legislature in 2016 that prohibits get-out-the-vote operatives from collecting and delivering vote-by-mail ballots.”

Meanwhile, Norah O’Donnell reported on the CBS Evening News (3/1, story 6, 2:00, O’Donnell, 4.6M) that Republican lawmakers “in dozens of states are taking extreme steps to change voting laws.” Ed O’Keefe added that in Georgia, there was “heated debate...as Democrats accuse Republicans of making it harder to vote.” The AP (3/1, Nadler, Yoganathan) reports Republican lawmakers in Georgia “muscle legislation through the state House on Monday that would roll back voting access, over the objection of Democrats and civil rights groups gathered at the Capitol to protest.” The AP highlights that the bill “comes after record turnout led to Democratic wins in Georgia’s presidential election and two U.S. Senate runoffs.”

Eugene Robinson writes in the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) that the biggest problem Republicans are undertaking “a massive push for voter suppression that would make old-time Jim Crow segregationists proud.” Robinson adds, “The thrust of virtually all these measures is to make it more difficult for African Americans and other minorities to vote.” It is, he adds, “an outrageous and shameful attempt to establish and perpetuate minority rule in a nation in which the Republican candidate for president has won the popular vote only once in the past eight elections.” Robinson argues Democrats at the state level “must fight these efforts relentlessly. And at the federal level, they should use any means necessary – including eliminating or suspending the Senate filibuster – to pass H.R. 1, the ‘For the People Act,’ which would invalidate much of the most anti-democratic legislation the GOP is trying to enact.”

WPost Analysis: Proportional Party System Could Provide Better Alignment With Constituents. In an analysis for the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M), Christopher Ingraham says research finds the “inherent problem” with the political system in the US “is that it shoehorns the entire spectrum of political opinion into just two parties” while “fully half of Americans do not identify with any party.” Rep. Don Beyer (D-VA) is leading a group of legislators who support the proposed Fair Representation Act, which would introduce “a ranked-choice voting system like the one in Maine” that would “allow voters to follow their consciences...rather than choose the lesser of two evils.”

White House’s Failure To Disclose Participants In Virtual Meetings Draws Scrutiny.

Politico (3/1, Kumar, 6.73M) says President Biden “has fallen short of his former boss, Barack Obama, in several areas, and is under pressure to do more to restore confidence in the federal government.” According to Politico, “Among the critiques: The schedules for the president and vice president aren’t posted online,” and although “the White House has committed to releasing visitor logs,” it “doesn’t plan to divulge the names of attendees of virtual meetings, which are the primary mode of interaction until the coronavirus pandemic eases.” Politico adds, “And while Biden has received kudos for keeping the American public informed, primarily by resuming the daily White House press briefings, he has yet to hold a news conference of his own.”

NASA To Review SpaceX Engine Failure Ahead Of April Crewed Flight To ISS.

Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M) reports as it “prepares for the next crewed flight to the International Space Station in April,” NASA “will review an engine failure last month that caused Space Exploration Technologies Corp.’s Falcon 9 rocket booster to land in the sea after a satellite launch.” On Feb. 15, “one of the Falcon 9’s nine Merlin engines shut down...during ascent because of a hole in one of the covers, or ‘boots,’ around the top of each engine, Benji Reed, SpaceX’s director of human spaceflight, said Monday at a NASA news conference.” NASA “plans to ‘understand that anomaly’ before the April flight with astronauts, Steve Stich, the agency’s commercial crew manager, told reporters as he discussed that mission and a busy April at the space station.”

GAO Study: Women In Military Pay More For Uniforms.

The Washington Times (3/1, Glenn, 626K) reports a Government Accountability Office (GAO) study “finds women across the military face a ‘pink tax’ – higher bills for essential uniform items from panty hose and dress shoes to mandatory handbags – than do their male counterparts, a burden especially heavy for female officers.” The report “also found that women in the military have out-of-pocket costs for uniforms at least twice as much as their male counterparts," sometimes by thousands of dollars more over a career. The GAO "recommended that the Pentagon develop 'consistent criteria' for determining which clothing items are considered 'uniquely military' across the services, and periodically review the list for any needed changes."

Supreme Court Asks Solicitor General To Weigh In On Texas USERRA Case.

McClatchy (3/1, Copp, 29K) reports the Supreme Court "has asked the US solicitor general to weigh in" on the case of LeRoy Torres v. The Texas Department of Public Safety to "determine whether federal protections for service members apply to state employees." Torres is a "Texas state trooper who deployed to Balad, Iraq, in 2007 as an Army reservist" and developed a lung disease that prevented him from returning to his job. He "sued the state under the 1994 Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (USERRA) which prohibits federal and private sector employers from retaliating against or firing National Guard members and reservists who take leave from their jobs due to military duty." The State of Texas claimed sovereign immunity from the law.

Supreme Court Considers Constitutionality Of Patent Judges Appointments.

The New York Times (3/1, Liptak, 20.6M) reports the Supreme Court heard the case of United States v. Arthrex on Monday, which calls into question the constitutionality of the way "more than 250 administrative judges who hear patent disputes were appointed." The Times says that "several justices indicated during the oral argument that they thought the judges, who serve on the Patent Trial and Appeal Board, an administrative tribunal in the executive branch created by a 2011 law, perform work of such importance and independence that they should have been appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate." The Court's decision "will affect more than 100 cases that have been vacated by the appeals court."

Supreme Court To Consider Puerto Rico SSI Benefits.

The AP (3/1) reports the Supreme Court agreed Monday to rule on the constitutionality of excluding people in Puerto Rico from receiving Supplemental Social Security Income (SSI), in an appeal filed by the Trump Administration. A lower court ruled residents of Puerto Rico and other US territories should have the same access to benefits as residents of the 50 states and DC, although the Supreme Court upheld their exclusion in decisions passed 40 years ago. A different program provides similar benefits to residents of US territories, "but it has more stringent eligibility requirements and pays less generous benefits than SSI."

Durbin Warns That He May Limit GOP Senators' Ability To Block Judicial Nominees.

The New York Times (3/1, Hulse, 20.6M) reports, "Offering a warning to Republicans on judges," Senate Judiciary Chairman Dick Durbin "said he would reserve the right to end their ability to block district court nominees through the arcane 'blue slip' process – which allows senators to bless or blackball nominees from their home states – if he concluded that they were obstructing nominations without legitimate grounds." According to the Times, "That would represent the latest diminution in the power of minority senators in the judicial wars, and it would also ease the Biden administration's path to confirming district court judges in states with Republican senators."

Poll Shows 52% Of Republicans Support Trump For 2024 Nomination.

The Hill (3/1, Greenwood, 5.69M) reports a Harvard CAPS-Harris Poll (2/23-2/25) of 2,006 registered voters found 52% of Republicans would support former President Trump if he decided to seek the 2024 GOP presidential nomination. Former Vice President Mike Pence and former UN Ambassador Nikki Haley were named after Trump, trailing widely. If Trump does not run, 41% of Republicans would support Pence, followed by Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) and Haley.

Commentary Broadly Critical Of Trump's CPAC Comeback Speech. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) says Trump's return at CPAC shows he is still "trying to rewrite" his loss to Biden "as someone else's fault – Democrats who cheated, Republicans who won't 'fight,' a cowardly Supreme Court that includes three of his appointees, anyone but himself. This isn't true, as another Trump pollster, Anthony Fabrizio, made clear in his post-election analysis. Mr. Trump had one landmark victory in 2016 but he has cost the GOP dearly since." The Journal concludes that if Republicans continue to "focus on the grievances of the Trump past, they won't be a governing majority."

In his Washington Post (2/28, 10.52M) column, By E.J. Dionne Jr. says "Trump, the Sequel, drew a predictably ecstatic response" at CPAC, yet "the resumption of the Trump Show reminded the GOP that it has the worst of all worlds: a cult of Trump without any of the benefits that might have come from a serious inquiry into why the old conservatism had been unable to stop him." According to Dionne, "Party leaders in their hearts know that they can't win with Trump and Trumpism – and they can't live without him and his followers. They know his voters dominate party primaries and they need them to turn out to win House and Senate seats. But the more Trump dominates the conversation, the more he will continue to push middle-class suburban voters who embraced Biden last year – especially women – away from the GOP."

Henry Olsen writes in the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) that in his CPAC speech, Trump "threw down the gauntlet against his intraparty foes. He said each of the 10 representatives and seven senators who voted to impeach or convict him deserved to face a primary challenge and be defeated." Now, Olsen writes, Trump "must win these challenges to maintain his influence. Anything else will reveal him to be a paper tiger." Olsen adds "any sign that his targets might survive will be rightly interpreted as a vote against Trump's leadership. This would likely cause Trump to double down. ... Republicans could come to see him as a political King Lear, thundering on the heath in his madness, rather than a righteous and sound leader."

In an op-ed for the New York Times (3/1, 20.6M), political editor and commentator Daniel McCarthy writes that Trump is the Republican Party's "kingmaker, and two impeachments and a re-election defeat have not quelled Republican voters' enthusiasm for him." In 2020, Trump received "11 million more votes" than he did in 2016. McCarthy writes, "After everything that had happened in those years...the Trump brand had actually grown its base of support. This singular fact is seared into the minds of Republicans who look to the future. ... The lesson Republicans take from this is that Mr. Trump has discovered a potentially winning formula."

In contrast, New York Times (3/1, 20.6M) political correspondent Jonathan Martin discusses the "absence of soul-searching" by Republicans over their recent election losses and movement away from "traditional conservatism." Martin highlights the lack of interest in fiscal conservatism at CPAC and says the GOP now believes "harnessing the grievance of the party rank and file toward both [Democrats and the news media], is the best recipe for acclaim." Martin concludes, "This is the party" former President Trump "has remade – and it's why so many traditional Republicans are appalled, or at least alarmed, that Trumpism is replacing conservatism."

Jennifer Rubin writes in the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) that the word conservative "has no meaning. ... If conservatism no longer means belief in objective reality, reverence for the rule of law, fiscal sobriety, recognition of universal human rights or public virtue, the Republican Party has no value (or values, frankly)." Rubin adds, "Whatever conservatism is these days – a reactionary stance, an irrational resentment, a delusionary cult – it has no principles at all," and "without a democratic (small 'd') ethos and viable ideology (moderation? centrism? 19th century liberalism?)," the Republican Party "serves only as a receptacle of resentment, cult worship and racism."

Michael Gerson writes in the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) that the Republican Party "has been swiftly repositioned as an instrument of white grievance. It refuses to condemn racists within its congressional ranks. Its main national legislative agenda seems to be the suppression of minority voting. Trumpism is defined by the belief that real Americans are beset by internal threats from migrants, Muslims, multiculturalists, Black Lives Matter activists, antifa militants and various thugs, gangbangers and whiners." Gerson writes that "the largest single group within the new GOP coalition is comprised of people who claim to be evangelical Christians. And the view of human beings implied by Trumpism is a direct negation of Christian teaching (as well as many other systems of belief)."

Gary Abernathy writes in the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) as Trump addressed CPAC on Sunday he "wanted to do what so many have done: to forgive Trump (if they ever blamed him) for his actions after the election. ... But try as I might, I couldn't." Abernathy adds, "I'll continue to praise Trump for what I loved about him, and the Senate was smart not to take away the right of Americans to vote for him, which would have made him a martyr to some. But I'll never stop urging his supporters to forsake him, as he forsook his post-election duties to them and all Americans." Abernathy adds that Trump should not be discussed in the media "without a reminder that he attempted to override an election and contributed to a deadly incursion at the Capitol during a constitutionally mandated affirmation of democracy. Just wondering, did anyone at CPAC mention it to him? Anyone?"

Meanwhile, Max Boot writes in the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) that former UN Ambassador Nikki Haley is a "pathetic politician" who "has changed positions on former president Donald Trump so often that she should start sporting flip-flops." Boot adds, "There is nothing admirable about how Haley has conducted herself since" she left her position in the Trump Administration. Her "ambition – she desperately wants to be president – is obvious. Her principles are not." Boot adds if Haley "believes in anything other than her own ambition, it's not clear what it is. Which, in a way, makes her the perfect candidate for a Republican Party that no longer seems to have any principle other than an insatiable lust for power at any price."

ACU Insists CPAC Stage Not Designed Like Nazi Insignia. The Washington Post (3/1, Peiser, 10.52M) reports that while speakers at the Conservative Political Action Conference last weekend "shared a number of contentious views, from echoing false claims about election fraud to undermining the seriousness of a pandemic that has killed more than 512,000 Americans," some critics "also took aim at a seemingly more mundane detail: the shape of the conference stage," as "many noted a resemblance to the Odal or Othala Rune, a symbol emblazoned on some Nazi uniforms." The Post adds the American Conservative Union, which organizes CPAC, "vehemently denied any link between the stage design and the Nazi symbology, calling the criticism 'outrageous and slanderous,'" but Hyatt Hotels on Sunday "said in a statement that it had addressed the concerns with the conference and denounced any use of hate symbols."

Romney Recovering After Fall.

The AP (3/1) reports Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) "said Monday that he was knocked unconscious in a fall over the weekend, but he was 'doing better.'" Romney "said the accident happened when he was spending time with his grandchildren in Boston" and "told reporters he was taken to a hospital and got stitches on his right eyebrow and lip." Romney jokingly said, "I had kind of a tough, tough weekend. ... I went to CPAC – that was a problem." The event, held in Orlando, Florida, over the weekend, "was largely a celebration of former President Donald Trump."

Former Classmates Of Cawthorn Detail Accounts Of Unwanted Advances.

CNN (3/1, Cole, Serfaty, 89.21M) reports that former college classmates of Rep. Madison Cawthorn (R-NC) detailed on Monday "how the rising star of the conservative right would use 'fun' drives as a way to make unwanted advances on them." One classmate, Caitlin Coulter, "said she was taken on something Cawthorn called a 'fun drive,' where he asked about her purity ring and her sexual experiences." CNN "spoke to two other women who went to school with Cawthorn, both of whom mentioned his invitations on the 'fun' drives, and said that turning him down would result in more unwanted attention." Cawthorn issued a statement in September 2020 saying "I have never done anything sexually inappropriate in my life" in response to earlier allegations.

"Anti-Trump" Combat Veteran Launching Campaign For TX6 Seat.

The Hill (3/1, Stanage, 5.69M) reports that Michael Wood, an Afghanistan combat veteran and major in the Marine Corps Reserve, will launch a campaign Monday for the Texas 6th District seat left vacant by the death of Rep. Ron Wright (R). Wood is openly "anti-Trump" and "in his launch video, warns that the GOP cannot become 'the party of conspiracy theories, QAnon and political violence.'" He will face off against Wright's widow, Susan, former Trump adviser Katrina Pierson, and others on May 1.

Third Woman Accuses Cuomo Of Sexual Harassment As Criticism Of His Behavior Intensifies.

The New York Times (3/1, Flegenheimer, McKinley, 20.6M) reports Anna Ruch on Monday accused New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) of making an "unwanted advance" at a wedding in 2019, an account that "comes after two former aides accused Mr. Cuomo of sexual harassment in the workplace, plunging his third term into turmoil as the governor's defenders and Mr. Cuomo himself strain to explain his behavior."

In addition, Axios (3/1, Rummler, 1.26M) reports New York Attorney General Letitia James (D) "received a formal referral letter on Monday from...Cuomo's office to begin an investigation into sexual harassment allegations made against the governor by two of his former aides." On ABC World News Tonight (3/1, story 2, 3:30, Muir, 7.55M), Stephanie Ramos reported Cuomo "had hoped to appoint an investigator with close ties to his top advisers, but he backed down amid an outcry from Democrats." On the CBS Evening News (3/1, story 2, 2:05, O'Donnell, 4.77M), Jericka Duncan reported New York City Mayor Bill De Blasio (D) on Monday joined House Speaker Pelosi and Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D) in calling for an independent investigation of Cuomo's behavior.

However, the New York Times (3/1, McKinley, 20.6M) reports Charlotte Bennett, a former Cuomo aide, "said on Monday that the governor 'has refused to acknowledge or take responsibility for his predatory behavior' and encouraged other women with similar experiences to step forward." The AP (3/1, Sisak, Villeneuve) reports Bennett "reject[ed] his attempt to apologize for his behavior and excuse it as an attempt to be 'playful.'"

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Vielkind, Palazzolo, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports Cuomo's administration has retained "prominent white-collar defense attorney" Elkan Abramowitz "as it grapples with allegations of sexual harassment and Justice Department inquiries into Covid-19 deaths in the state's nursing homes." Bloomberg (3/1, Hurtado, 3.57M) and Reuters (3/1, Goldberg, Gorman), among other outlets, provide similar coverage.

Politico New York (3/1, Toure, French) reports Cuomo "remained in hiding Monday as the state attorney general formally announced an investigation into allegations of sexual harassment – and some of the state's top Democrats began to wonder just how long the three-term governor can hold on." An AP (3/1, Peoples) article headlined "Cuomo Allegations Leave Democrats Grappling With Response" says that while Democrats "celebrated" Cuomo last year, the "sexual harassment scandal [is] testing the limits of his party's support as Democrats grapple with one of the first political headaches of the post-Trump era." On NBC Nightly News (3/1, story 2, 1:50, Holt, 6.45M), Anne Thompson reported Cuomo "also faces a federal investigation for how his administration counted COVID nursing home deaths. A traumatic term of events for Cuomo, once lauded for his leadership in the pandemic."

The Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) editorializes that if New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's (D) behavior would be inappropriate at a business and contends it is "hard to imagine that, in a well-run company, that executive wouldn't be asked to resign – or be fired on the spot – for his behavior." However, the Post concedes that whether the sexual harassment allegations against him "end up costing Mr. Cuomo his job...remains to be seen."

In her New York Times (3/1, 20.6M) column, Michelle Goldberg says that while Democrats are not yet calling on Cuomo to resign, his "fate will tell us whether there's still power in the #MeToo movement." Goldberg speculates that "if this scandal had broken a few years ago, high-profile Democrats would have felt no choice but to call for Cuomo's resignation," but "the locus of our culture wars shifted from sex to race" and "most significantly, among many Democrats, there's tremendous bitterness toward those who pressured Al Franken to leave the Senate in 2018 after he was accused of grabbing several women's butts." While Goldberg argues Democrats "would probably be better off jettisoning [Cuomo] now over the sexual harassment charges," she does not "expect a stampede away from him yet" because "the TV-nurtured myth of Cuomo's take-charge competence still prevails" and because "many Democrats are sick of holding themselves to a set of standards that Republicans feel no need to try to meet."

Hill-HarrisX Poll: 71% Believe Cuomo Intentionally Concealed Total Number Of Nursing Home Deaths. The Hill (3/1, Schulte, 5.69M) reports a new Hill-HarrisX poll of 1,909 registered voters (2/24-2/25) found 71% "said Cuomo was aware of how many residents had died in the state's nursing homes during the pandemic but concealed the accurate figures," while 29% "said they didn't think he was aware of the discrepancy." The Hill adds the survey "found that 80 percent of Republicans, 71 percent of independents and 62 percent of Democrats believe Cuomo was aware of the true number of nursing home deaths and concealed it," while a separate Harvard CAPS-Harris poll found 71% "said Cuomo should be impeached if it is found that he concealed the number of nursing home deaths."

Trump Says He Regrets Supporting Georgia Governor.

The Hill (3/1, Greenwood, 5.69M) reports former President Donald Trump told conservative news service Newsmax he regrets supporting Gov. Brian Kemp (R-GA) in his successful 2018 gubernatorial campaign. Kemp was a close Trump ally, but refused to "use nonexistent emergency powers to overturn President Biden's electoral victory in Georgia." The Hill says Trump has promised "to support primary challengers to Republicans whom he views as insufficiently loyal."

United Methodist Conservatives To Form A New Denomination.

The AP (3/1, Crary) reports that "conservative leaders within the United Methodist Church unveiled plans Monday to form a new denomination, the Global Methodist Church, with a doctrine that does not recognize same-sex marriage." This agenda could "hasten the long-expected breakup of the UMC over differing approaches to LGBTQ inclusion." Due to COVID, "UMC's General Conference – at which the schism would be debated" – is "now scheduled to take place in Minneapolis starting in late August of 2022." The AP paraphrases Rev. Keith Boyette, a Global Methodist initiative chairman, as saying that "he and his allies do not want to wait that long to formally leave the UMC." They hope to add it to the agenda of an online conference on May 8.

Large Protestant Adoption And Foster Agency Will Provides Services To LGBTQ Parents.

The New York Times (3/1, Graham, 20.6M) reports Bethany Christian Services, one of the nation's largest adoption and foster care agencies, "announced on Monday that it would begin providing services to LGBTQ parents nationwide effective immediately, a major inflection point in the fraught battle over many faith-based agencies' longstanding opposition to working with same-sex couples." The resolution happens "amid a high-stakes cultural and legal battle that features questions about sexuality, religious freedom, parenthood, family structure and theology."

Texas Public Utility Commission Chair Resigns.

Bloomberg (3/1, Chediak, 3.57M) reports, "Texas Public Utility Commission Chair DeAnn T. Walker resigned from her position" following the call by Texas Lieutenant Governor Dan Patrick for her to resign, "saying she had failed to adequately prepare for the grid emergency" and Walker had "repeatedly disavowed any responsibility for the disaster." Her resignation also "follows the resignation of seven board members of the Electric Reliability Council of Texas."

The AP (3/1, Vertuno) reports Walker, "Texas' top utilities regulator resigned Monday ... the highest-ranking official to step down." Walker was appointed by Gov. Greg Abbott in 2017. Walker in her letter "said she accepted her role in the outages but that others should acknowledge their responsibility, including gas companies and lawmakers."

ERCOT Bars Griddy From Market As Texas AG Sues Alleging Deceptive Practices. The Houston Chronicle (3/1, Carballo, 982K) reports, "Griddy said Monday that it asked the Electric Reliability Council of Texas... for emergency help on Feb. 16 after the Public Utility Commission mandated that wholesale prices rise to the state maximum of $9,000 per kilowatt hour." Then ERCOT "barred the company, headquartered in California, from participating in the state's power markets." Griddy said that ERCOT "decided to take this action against only one company that represents a tiny fraction of the market." Also on Monday, Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton sued Griddy "claiming the retail power company used deceptive practices to mislead customers, many of whom were hit with electric bills in the thousands of dollars."

Texas Energy Companies Have Failed To Pay $2.46 Billion In Power and Service Charges. Reuters (3/1, McWilliams) reports, "Texas energy companies failed to pay another $345 million for electricity and other services incurred during last month's cold snap, the operator of the state's grid said on Monday." Charges of "up to $9,000 per megawatt hour (mwh) spot rates and $25,000 per mwh service fees" also "drove one provider into bankruptcy on Monday." According to ERCOT "electricity providers skipped out on $2.46 billion in power and service charges." The state could, however, "cut about $2 billion off the burden facing municipal utilities, marketers and generators by reducing some fees," and "also could apply a portion of the state emergency fund."

Texas Power Cooperative Declares Bankruptcy. Reuters (3/1, McWilliams) reports Brazos Electric Power Cooperative Inc, "The largest and oldest electric power cooperative in Texas filed for bankruptcy protection in Houston on Monday, citing a disputed $1.8 billion debt to the state's grid operator." Brazos "is one of dozens of providers facing enormous charges." The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Biswas, Gladstone, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports on Brazos filing for bankruptcy, presenting it as likely indicating further problems in dealing with the bills from the state's energy crisis.

Nearly 400,000 In Texas Still Under Boil Water Advisory. NBC Nightly News (3/1, story 5, 0:15, Holt, 6.45M) reported, "Two weeks after that devastating storm in Texas, almost 400,000 people are still being told to boil their water. Thousands more still lining up for food and water. Many waiting for broken pipes to be fixed."

Many In Jackson, Mississippi Still Without Water.

The CBS Evening News (3/1, story 4, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.77M) reported that in Mississippi "communities are still struggling two weeks after the south was hit with those devastating storms. The biggest problem for many is finding clean water." CBS (Janet Shamlian) added, "Tonight, frustration is boiling over in Jackson after two weeks without water." CBS continued, "the entire city, more than 165,000 people, hasn't had safe drinking water since the mid-February storm," and "pressure so low, it's not reaching some neighborhoods."

The Washington Post (3/1, Fowler, 10.52M) reports that "many residents" in Jackson, Mississippi have "been without water nearly two weeks" following the February 15 ice storm. The water "system lost power" on February 17, "and officials immediately issued a boil-water notice to 43,000 connections," and "two weeks later, many residents still don't have water."

Kentucky Governor Declares State Of Emergency Over Flooding, While West Virginia Has Flooding In Over A Dozen Counties.

The AP (3/1, Raby, Reynolds) reports on flooding in "parts of Appalachia on Sunday and Monday sending rivers out of their banks and leading to multiple water rescues, mudslides, road closures and power outages." and on Monday, Kentucky Gov. Andy Beshear "declared a state of emergency...because of heavy rainfall across the state." Meanwhile, in West Virginia, "floodwaters inundated roads in more than a dozen counties."

WPost Report: Melania Trump Made Some Additions, Improvements To White House.

The Washington Post (2/28, Koncius, 10.52M) reports, while former First Lady Melania Trump "did not make refurbishing" the White House "a major focus, there were some significant additions and improvements during her tenure. They included a bronze statue by Isamu Noguchi, a restoration of the East Room and new fabrics to replace sun-damaged upholstery and walls in the Red Room. There were also practical projects, such as the modernization of the subbasement curatorial storage room and restoration of historical wooden doors that had been dinged by presidential dogs over the decades." Trump's office said in a statement, "From the Tennis Pavilion to the Rose Garden, Mrs. Trump worked on a variety of restoration projects during her time as first lady. ... She is passionate about the historic preservation of the White House and its grounds, ensuring history and beauty are preserved for generations to come."

Poll: 64% Say "Cancel Culture" Threatens American Freedom.

The Hill (3/1, Manchester, 5.69M) says a Harvard CAPS-Harris poll of 2,006 registered voters (2/23-2/25) found 64% "said they thought cancel culture posed a threat to freedom in the US," while 36% "said it was not a threat." The term, "which has been defined as a cultural boycott, has been frequently used in political discourse over the past year." Overall, the findings suggest that more "Republicans than Democrats consider cancel culture a threat" to their freedom.

Jordan Calls On Judiciary Committee For Hearing On "Cancel Culture." The Hill (3/1, 5.69M) reports that in a letter to House Judiciary Chairman Jerry Nadler on Monday, Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) called for the panel "to hold a public hearing on 'cancel culture,' arguing that the committee should investigate what he claimed was a wave of 'censorship' occurring in private companies, on college campuses, and other facets of American life." Jordan wrote that "cancel culture's long-term consequences to our democracy and our constitutional framework are serious and substantial."

Reporter Publishes Account Of His Departure From NYTimes.

The New York Times (3/1, Tracy, 20.6M) reports Times science and public health reporter Donald G. McNeil Jr., "who resigned under pressure last month after 45 years at the paper, published an account on Monday describing the circumstances of his departure, a four-part essay that was often critical of Times leadership." McNeil "announced his departure last month in the wake of an article in The Daily Beast" in which "several students and their parents complained that Mr. McNeil, who was serving as an expert guide on the trip, had used a racial slur and made other insensitive remarks."

Argument Made For Saving The Florida Grasshopper Sparrow.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M), naturalist Bruce Beehler and David Wilcove, a professor of ecology, evolutionary biology and public affairs at Princeton University, make a case for saving the Florida grasshopper sparrow, which "might be the most endangered bird in the continental United States." They argue, "By working to preserve the Florida grasshopper sparrow, we're also protecting the remaining bits and pieces of a unique natural ecosystem unlike any place else on Earth: the Kissimmee prairie, a natural subtropical savanna unique in the Eastern United States." The "habitat we protect for the sparrow is home to thousands of other native species."

FLOTUS Making Unannounced Visits To Small Businesses.

The Washington Post (3/1, Yuan, 10.52M) reports on some of the restaurants and cafes that Dr. Biden has recently visited. The Post sees "an emerging pattern of unannounced dropbys at small businesses that the first lady has been making that seem anything but random," including three "in recent weeks at a Black- or immigrant-owned small business." The Post continues, "Maybe the first lady wanted to support small businesses. Maybe she wanted to signal to Black Americans that President Biden was serious when he said his administration would not abandon them." However, the Post adds Dr. Biden "clearly knows the power of a photo op, like when she made an unannounced stop to drop off cookies to National Guard members when they had been unceremoniously kicked out of the Capitol, part of the contingent sent to protect the city from attacks by rioters."

First Lady To Travel To Connecticut, Pennsylvania With Education Secretary Cardona.

Axios (3/1, Mucha, 1.26M) reports First Lady Jill Biden will travel on Wednesday to Connecticut, where she will "visit schools reopening under her husband's first-100-days pledge, reviewing practices and taking note of what does and doesn't work." Education Secretary Miguel Cardona will join the First Lady as she "visits Waterford, Pennsylvania, and Meriden, Connecticut."

Argentina Hits Brakes On IMF Talks, Calls For Investigating Previous Agreement.

Reuters (3/1, Misculin, Jourdan) reports Argentina President Alberto Fernandez "said on Monday that he did not want to rush into a new deal with the [IMF], amid broader concerns that a previously set May date to reach an agreement will be missed." In an address to the country's Congress, Fernandez "said that Argentina would also launch judicial action to investigate the former administration's agreement with the Fund, which he has previously criticized for exacerbating debt levels." Fernandez said, "We will continue our negotiations with full focus and with the firmness we have always shown, we do not want to rush. ... Our government's only hurry is to put production and work back on its feet in order to improve the situation of millions of Argentine families that have been plunged into the pit of poverty."

ECB Official Calls For Greater Role In Combating Bubbles.

Reuters (3/1, Canepa) reports ECB Vice President Luis de Guindos "said on Monday" the ECB "should have a greater role in setting so-called 'macroprudential policy' aimed at preventing financial bubbles and cushioning crashes, which is currently in the hands of national authorities." De Guindos said during an online conference, "The reflections should in my view consider an increased role for the ECB's Governing Council in macroprudential policy, given its special role in and responsibility for both monetary and macroprudential policy in the euro area."

IMF Board Approves $1.8B Loan Program For Costa Rica.

Reuters (3/1, Lawder) reports the IMF "said its executive board approved a three-year, $1.79 billion Extended Fund Facility Arrangement for Costa Rica on Monday to help the tourism-dependent Central American country recover from the COVID-19 pandemic." The approval "allows for an immediate disbursement of about $296.5 million, the IMF said. The full IMF loan program follows emergency IMF financing of $521.7 million granted to Costa Rica in April 2020."

Some Democrats Criticizing Biden's First Foreign Policy Moves.

Politico (3/1, Desiderio, 6.73M) reports President Biden's "early foreign policy moves are putting him at odds with his fellow Democrats, some of whom are mounting pressure campaigns to force his hand." The "friendly fire" Biden drew after ordering airstrikes on Iran-backed militia groups in Syria "was an early sign of what's to come for Biden: a Democratic-controlled Congress that won't hesitate to try to rein in or pressure a Democratic president's actions on the world stage." While Democrats "are much more satisfied with Biden's posture in the early stages of his presidency than they were with that of former President Donald Trump, whose erratic foreign policy forays frustrated lawmakers," they "are taking on Biden in the hope that he will follow through on his campaign pledges, which included levying strict punishments against those responsible for [Jamal] Khashoggi's killing as well as scaling back American involvement in the Middle East."

UK Foreign Secretary Welcomes Biden's Moves On Climate Change, WHO Funding, And Iran.

On CNN's New Day (3/1, 908K), British Foreign Secretary Dominic Raab said, "Certainly what we have seen with the new administration – and I've had great conversations with my opposite numbers, so Tony Blinken, but also national security adviser Sullivan – and if you look at some of the multilateral steps, rejoining the Paris agreement on climate change, reversing the decision to leave the WHO, even on the position on Iran, where we're all concerned about getting Iran back to compliance with the JCPOA. ... All of that stuff is much easier if we don't give our adversaries...the gift of splits in transatlantic unity." Raab added, "Certainly on the multilateral sphere, I think the Biden Administration has been very clear about wanting to work with partners – and from COVID to climate change through to...issues of regional security like Iran...that does put us in a strong position to get the results that we need."

Biden Advocates For Improving Bilateral Relations In Virtual Meeting With Mexican President.

The AP (3/1, Stevenson, Miller, Madhani) reports that as President Biden "looks to dismantle the last administration's hardline immigration agenda, he worked Monday to build a partnership with someone who found an unexpected understanding with Donald Trump: Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador." The AP says that as Biden and López Obrador "met for a virtual bilateral meeting, with immigration, the coronavirus pandemic and climate issues on the agenda," Biden acknowledged that the US and Mexico "haven't been perfect neighbors to each other," while López Obrador "told Biden that he was thankful that the new president was 'willing to maintain good relations for the good of our people in North America.'"

Fox News (3/1, Lea, 23.99M) reports on its website that Biden "assured...López Obrador that he considers the country 'an equal' during" the virtual meeting, "as his administration works to unravel some of...Trump's immigration policies," while the New York Times (3/1, Kanno-Youngs, Shear, 20.6M) says Biden "sought help from...López Obrador of Mexico in averting a new crisis at the border, hoping for diplomatic cooperation from one of the key supporters of the harsh tactics imposed by Mr. Biden's predecessor to choke off immigration." According to the Times, "Biden is now hoping that Mr. López Obrador will become a partner in preventing another cycle of out-of-control migration from Central America, but that he will do so without resorting to the full range of policies Mr. Trump embraced."

The Washington Post (3/1, Gearan, Sheridan, Miroff, Sieff, 10.52M) reports Biden's efforts come "as he faces criticism from liberal Democrats for detaining migrant children and accusations from Republicans that he is recklessly throwing open the nation's borders amid a pandemic." The Post adds Biden and López Obrador "issued a joint declaration affirming their will to cooperate on migration issues, particularly the long-term goal of creating more jobs in southern Mexico and Central America. But whether Biden can get Mexico's immediate help to contain the growing border influx was not clear."

Meanwhile, USA Today (3/1, Groppe, 12.7M) reports López Obrador had been "expected to talk to Biden about a 'Bracero'-style labor program that would allow Mexicans to temporarily live in the USA." According to USA Today, López Obrador "argues that the U.S. economy needs Mexico's young and strong workers to boost its aging workforce." USA Today adds that when asked if Biden would support such a proposal, White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki on Monday "declined to say, noting that such a plan would probably have to be approved by Congress."

Psaki Says Administration Will Discuss Helping Mexico With Vaccines After "Every American Is Vaccinated." Reuters (3/1, Graham, Holland, Alper) reports Psaki on Monday "downplayed the prospect of sharing coronavirus vaccines with Mexico, saying it is focused first on getting its own population protected against a pandemic that has killed more than 500,000 Americans." Psaki said, "The administration's focus is on ensuring that every American is vaccinated. And once we accomplish that objective, we're happy to discuss further steps." According to Reuters, her comments came as López Obrador was "expected" to use the meeting "to ask the United States to consider sharing some of its COVID-19 vaccine supply," but "an official statement released after the meeting ended made no mention of vaccine distribution."

However, Politico (3/1, Forgey, 6.73M) also reports Psaki continued, "The next step is economic recovery. And that is ensuring that our neighbors, Mexico and Canada, have similarly managed the pandemic, so that we can open our borders and build back better." The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Parti, Montes, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) and The Hill (3/1, Samuels, 5.69M), among other outlets, provide similar coverage.

El Salvador's President's Allies Appear To Win Control Of Legislature.

The Washington Post (3/1, Brigida, Sheridan, 10.52M) reports El Salvadoran President Nayib Bukele "emerged as the big winner in El Salvador's legislative elections Sunday as his party and its allies took control of the national legislature at a moment when critics fear the country is sliding toward authoritarian rule." Bukele's success, says the Post, "worried human rights advocates at home and abroad" and "could pose a challenge to President Biden's policy of strengthening democracy in Central America." The Post also reports that "Bukele might be the most popular leader in Latin America," and his "party and a small allied party, GANA-New Ideas, had won around two-thirds of votes cast for the legislature." Yet, "Bukele was unable to secure meetings with Biden's top Latin America officials during a recent trip to Washington."

Reuters (3/1, Renteria) reports, "With 80% of the vote counted on Monday morning, the electoral authority's tally forecasts that candidates from Bukele's New Ideas party plus the allied GANA party will win 56 seats of the 84-member unicameral Congress." With that level of support, Bukele would have "free rein to pick new supreme court judges and the country's attorney general, along with the power to enact constitutional changes."

Haitians Call For Departure Of President Moïse.

The Miami Herald (2/28, Charles, 647K) reported on Sunday, "thousands of Haitians peacefully waved tree branches and Haitian flags through the capital and several major cities in Haiti...to protest a growing wave of for-ransom kidnappings, and again called for the departure of President Jovenel Moïse." It was "deemed the largest demonstration since anti-government protests resumed earlier this year." Demonstrators "also targeted the head of the U.N.'s Integrated Office in Port-au-Prince, Helen La Lime, saying the protest was also a show of force to her."

Sources Differ Over Venezuelan Oil Exports In February.

Whereas Bloomberg (3/1, Kassai, 3.57M) reports Venezuelan oil exports "dropped in February after the U.S. sanctioned key trading houses and individuals that had been propping up" the country's oil exports, with its data showing "crude shipments fell to 418,857 barrels a day" down 13% from January, Reuters (3/1, Parraga, Guanipa) reports that "Venezuela's oil exports rose in February to over 700,000 barrels per day (bpd), their highest level in 10 months, pushed by more sales of fuel oil cargoes to new clients in Asian markets." Reuters adds that "'phantom clients,' have been raising their intake of Venezuelan oil steadily since October, when they took about 123,000 bpd, to 568,200 bpd last month, accounting for three-quarters of the country's total exports in the period."

Ecuador's Interior Minister Says Prison Riots Were Connected To International Criminal Groups.

Reuters (3/1, Valencia) reports, "Ecuadorean officials said on Monday prison riots that left 79 inmates dead last week were linked to organized transnational crime." The riots "were among the bloodiest incidents in the history of" Ecuador's "penitentiary system and underscored the problems of overcrowding and underfunding that plagued the system." Interior Minister Patricio Pazmino on Monday said, "We are talking about a confrontation between criminal groups with international contacts over illegal markets in the country."

Thomas-Greenfield Calls For Increased UN "Pressure" On Burma's Military As Suu Kyi Faces Additional Charges.

The AP (3/1, Lederer) reports Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield "urged the international community on Monday to 'ramp up pressure' on Myanmar's military to restore democracy at a wide-ranging press conference where she also said she hopes to work with Russia and China on some key issues." The AP adds Thomas-Greenfield "strongly reiterated President Joe Biden's determination to re-engage with the world and make the United States again a nation that leads," while Reuters (3/1, Nichols) reports she "said...she hopes to use Washington's presidency of the United Nations Security Council in March to push for more 'intense discussions' on Myanmar."

However, Reuters (3/1, Nichols, Spetalnick) reports detained Burma leader Aung San Suu Kyi "appeared at a court hearing via video conferencing on Monday," where another two charges were added against her, "as supporters marched in several towns and cities in defiance of a crackdown after the bloodiest day since the Feb. 1 military coup." On the CBS Evening News (3/1, story 7, 1:15, O'Donnell, 4.6M), Ramy Inocencio reported, "Hundreds of thousands of pro-democracy protesters have been fighting for Aung San Suu Kyi, now detained exactly one month." According to the AP (3/1), police in Yangon "fired tear gas Monday at defiant crowds who returned to the streets to protest last month's coup, despite reports that security forces had killed at least 18 people a day earlier." The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Mandhana, Solomon, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) and Bloomberg (3/1, Lin Kyaw, Heijmans, 3.57M), among other outlets, provide similar coverage.

Meanwhile, a more than 2,300-word New York Times (3/1, Beech, 20.6M) article adds that Burma's generals "are now back in charge with a far more sophisticated arsenal at their disposal: Israeli-made surveillance drones, European iPhone cracking devices and American software that can hack into computers and vacuum up their contents." The Times adds critics "say [the] ruthless armed forces, which maintained a dominance over the economy and powerful ministries even as it briefly shared power with a civilian government, used the facade of democracy to enable sensitive cybersecurity and defense purchases."

A Washington Post (3/1, Mahtani, 10.52M) analysis asserts the detention Burma's "generation's brightest and bravest," again "epitomizes dashed hopes for a better future in Myanmar. These reformers and technocrats, whose skills and experience helped salvage the country's antiquated financial system in recent years, are now silenced and subject to the whims of isolationist generals."

A Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) editorial says Burma's military "demonstrated on Sunday that it is prepared to massacre the country's citizens in order to sustain its coup," which "revealed the regime's criminality – but also its weakness. The generals appear to be panicking in the face of mass resistance far beyond what they expected." The Post concludes the US "and other nations have the means to bring crushing economic pressure to bear on the generals. They should not hesitate to use it."

US Urges Release Of Pro-Democracy Activists In Hong Kong.

Reuters (3/1, Pamuk) reports the State Department "said on Monday that recent detentions of pro-democracy activists in Hong Kong show how the national security law imposed by Beijing is being used to stifle dissent." According to State Department spokesman Ned Price "the United States calls on Hong Kong authorities to release those still held and drop charges against them."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (3/1, Ramzy, 20.6M) reports that hundreds of protesters "assembled outside a court in Hong Kong on Monday in a rare act of defiance after 47 of the city's most prominent pro-democracy politicians and activists were arrested." According to the Times, "Such demonstrations have become an unusual sight in Hong Kong in the past year or so, after the city enacted restrictions to fight the pandemic and Beijing imposed a harsh national security law in June. The police warned the crowd they could be in violation of the security law or illegal-assembly rules." The Times goes on to report that "the 47 opposition figures had been charged on Sunday by the police, the most forceful use of the national security law so far and a move that could effectively decimate the political opposition in Hong Kong."

In an op-ed for the New York Times (3/1, 20.6M), Yi-Zheng Lian, a former chief editor of The Hong Kong Economic Journal, questions why Beijing is "still going after Hong Kong so hard when the repression generates pushback from much of the world." One reason, he writes, "is that there is a gap between China's national interests and the personal ambitions of its leader, Xi Jinping." Xi "seems intent on remaining president beyond his second term." but "to stay on, Mr. Xi must deliver something monumental. And he is not measuring up." Lian says, "The lower-hanging fruit is to bring Hong Kong back into Beijing's fold: China's president is plucking away at that one." But, "even that is tricky because it could destroy Hong Kong's standing as the freest conduit of goods, capital and people between the Chinese mainland and the West. That loss would be colossal for Beijing."

Administration Seeks To Form Common Policy Towards China Among Asian Neighbors And European Countries.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Mauldin, Leary, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports on the Biden Administration's effort to support countries facing conflicts with China including Japan, India, and Australia as well as seeking the help of Europe in forming a common policy. On the positive side, the US has extended its agreement with Japan on hosting US soldiers, and is near to doing so with South Korea. The Journal says that the Administration intends to continue the stronger policy of the previous administration towards China, but is also seeking possibilities for cooperation.

Foreign Correspondents In China Report Worsening Conditions. The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Strumpf, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports on a study by the Foreign Correspondents' Club of China concluding that conditions in China for foreign journalists were worse last year than before, with no journalist reporting an improvement in conditions. In response, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Wang Wenbin said the report was "full of scare-mongering and completely lacking in evidence."

China Seeks To Undermine Women Witnesses Of Chinese Treatment Of Uighurs. Reuters (3/1, Cadell) reports, "China, under growing global pressure over its treatment of minority Muslim Uighurs in far west Xinjiang, is mounting an unprecedented and aggressive campaign to push back, including explicit attacks on women who have made claims of abuse." Chinese officials, adds Reuters "accused some of having affairs and one of having a sexually transmitted disease." According to Reuters, there is "a meticulous and wide-reaching campaign."

China Building Nuclear Launch Capacity From Underground Silos. The AP (3/1, Burns) reports, "China appears to be moving faster toward a capability to launch its newer nuclear missiles from underground silos, possibly to improve its ability to respond promptly to a nuclear attack," according to Hans Kristensen, "a longtime watcher of U.S., Russian and Chinese nuclear forces." Last summer, the Pentagon said in a report "that Beijing intends to increase the peacetime readiness of its nuclear forces by putting more of them in underground silos and operating on a higher level of alert."

Chinese Documentary Of Korean War Renews Claims US Used Biological Weapons Against Chinese Soldiers. The Washington Times (3/1, Gertz, 626K) reports, "Chinese state media recently broadcast decades-old disinformation claiming that the U.S. military used biological weapons against Chinese troops in the Korean War," as part of "a 40-part historical drama series called 'Crossing the Yalu River,' depicting Chinese troops in the Korean War." The Times adds, "the claim that Americans used biological weapons 70 years ago was renewed after China faced growing criticism over its handling of the early days of the COVID-19 outbreak."

US Envoy To Afghanistan Meets With Senior Official In Kabul.

Reuters (3/1, Spetalnick, Qadir Sediqi) reports, "The U.S. special envoy to Afghanistan, Zalmay Khalilzad held discussions on Monday with a senior Afghan official in Kabul over ways to accelerate the peace process, before heading to Qatar, where negotiations with Taliban representatives are ongoing." On Sunday, the US State Department said "that Khalilzad and his team were visiting Kabul and Qatar" and that "U.S. diplomats would also visit other regional capitals as part of a mission aimed at working toward 'a just and durable political settlement and permanent and comprehensive ceasefire.'"

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Seib, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports on the difficulties President Biden faces in deciding on US policy in Afghanistan, specifically whether to withdraw all US soldiers. Biden had pledged to end the war, but violence has increased, and it seems likely that the Taliban could seize Kabul in a fairly short period if the US withdraws. Because of that a commission selected by Congress has advised that the US not withdraw. The Journal adds that Biden's pledge to remove most US troops was already done by the previous administration which reduced US personnel there to 2,500 from 14,000 over the past year.

SIGAR Finds Little Spending Has Been For Intended Use. The Hill (3/1, Budryk, 5.69M) reports the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction issued a report Monday finding "that of $7.8 billion in spending since 2008, only $343.2 million was spent on buildings and vehicles that were 'maintained in good condition' and only $1.2 billion went to vehicles and buildings that were put to their intended use."

Duckworth Asks Haines For Unclassified Report On Claims Russia Offered Bounties For Taliban Targeting US Troops In Afghanistan. The Hill (3/1, Budryk, 5.69M) reports that Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) has asked the Administration "to declassify intelligence related to reports that the Kremlin offered bounties to Taliban forces for targeting U.S. troops in Afghanistan." Duckworth, in a letter to Director of National Intelligence Avril Haines, wrote, "the American public, and Gold Star Families in particular, have a pressing need to know if there is any truth to these claims." Duckworth requested "an unclassified report to 'provide urgently needed transparency on this grave matter.'"

Two Americans Accused Of Helping Ghosn Escape Now In Japanese Custody.

The New York Times (3/1, Dooley, 20.6M) reports, "Two American men accused of helping the former Nissan chief Carlos Ghosn escape Japan in a speaker box in 2019 as he faced criminal charges were extradited from the United States on Monday to face trial in a Japanese court." Michael Taylor, 60, and Peter Maxwell Taylor, 27, were arrested "in May in Massachusetts in response to a Japanese warrant." Bloomberg (3/1, Yaffe-Bellany, 3.57M) report the men "face a possible three-year sentence in Japanese prison." Reuters (3/1, Raymond, Shepardson) and the AP (3/1, Richer), among other outlets, provide similar coverage.

Armenian Prime Minister And Those Calling For His Ouster Stage Dueling Rallies.

The AP (3/1, Demourian) reports, "Political tensions in Armenia heightened Monday, with supporters of the embattled prime minister and the opposition each holding massive rallies at separate sites in the capital." The AP says Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan "has faced opposition demands to resign since he signed a peace deal in November that ended six weeks of intense fighting with Azerbaijan over the Nagorno-Karabakh region." On Monday, "after an hour-long speech, Pashinyan led his supporters on a march across Yerevan under the heavy escort of police and security officers."

Pentagon Announces Military Aid Package For Ukraine.

The AP (3/1) reports, "The Pentagon on Monday announced a $125 million military aid package for Ukraine, including two armed patrol boats to help the country defend its territorial waters." An additional $150 million "will not be provided until the departments of State and Defense are in position to certify to Congress that Ukraine has made 'sufficient progress on key defense reforms this year.'"

EU Sanctions Russian Officials As Navalny Is Moved To Notorious "Penal Colony."

The New York Times (3/1, Kramer, Erlanger, 20.6M) reports that Russian opposition leader Aleksei Navalny is "going to serve his prison sentence in a penal colony notorious for disciplinary measures considered harsh even by Russian standards." According to the Times, "Russia's decision to transfer Mr. Navalny to a prison known for abusive treatment of inmates came even as the Kremlin faced mounting foreign criticism for the sentencing as well as an assassination attempt on Mr. Navalny last summer." On Monday, the EU "placed sanctions on four senior Russian officials considered responsible for his prosecution, the first time the union has exercised that power under a new law to punish human rights violators worldwide."

In addition, Reuters (3/1, Mohammed, Pamuk) says the US "is expected to impose sanctions as early as this week on Russians connected to the poisoning of Kremlin critic Alexei Navalny, three sources familiar with the matter said on Monday." Bill Neely reported on NBC Nightly News (3/1, story 7, 1:20, Holt, 6.45M) that the US sanctions will target "Putin's inner circle" in "the first direct action by President Biden against the leader he has long condemned."

Meanwhile, Reuters (3/1, Nebehay) separately reports Agnes Callamard, UN Special Rapporteur on Summary Killings, and Irene Khan, UN expert on freedom of opinion and expression, "said on Monday that Russia was to blame for attempting to kill Kremlin critic Alexei Navalny, and called for an international investigation into his poisoning with a 'signature compound' last year."

Russian Authority Says Twitter Violated Law By Failing To Delete Posts.

The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Grove, Simmons, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) reports a Russian communications authority has alleged that Twitter has violated Russian law by not deleting prohibited content for a number of years. Specifically, Twitter left undeleted 2,862 posts even after receiving 28,000 requests to do so. Twitter could be fined $100,000 for failing to delete the posts. Reuters (3/1, Kolodyazhnyy, Marrow) reports, "Roskomnadzor said Twitter had failed to delete 2,862 posts containing material linked to suicide, pornography and drugs since 2017," and "could be fined heavily if found guilty of repeatedly failing to delete content deemed illegal under Russian law."

EC President Visits Georgia Amid Tense Political Standoff.

The AP (3/1) reports that European Council President Charles Michel "visited ex-Soviet republic Georgia on Monday and urged all of its parties to engage in a dialogue to resolve the country's political crisis." According to the AP, "The political situation in Georgia has been tense amid allegations of voter fraud in the country's Oct. 31 parliamentary election. The ruling Georgian Dream party won the vote, but the opposition United National Movement has refused to concede defeat and demanded a rerun." The AP adds that "tensions escalated last week following the arrest of the United National Movement's leader, Nika Melia," who "faces charges of inciting violence during protests that erupted in 2019."

American On Trial In Italy Claims Killing Of Italian Officer Was In Self Defense.

The New York Times (3/1, Povoledo, 20.6M) reports, Finnegan Elder, 21, of San Francisco, "on trial in the death of an Italian police officer told a court in Rome that he 'panicked' and believed the officer, who he said did not identify himself, would kill him." Deputy Brig. Mario Cerciello Rega, 35, an officer in the Carabinieri, died in July 2019. Elder spoke "during the final scheduled hearing of a yearlong trial." The AP (3/1, D'Emilio) reports, "Elder, 21, and a friend from California, Gabriel Natale-Hjorth, 20, are charged in the murder of a Carabinieri paramilitary officer on a street near their hotel while vacationing in Rome in 2019." Elder "told the court that Vice Brigadier Mario Cerciello Rega had his hands pressing on Elder's neck."

Court Convicts Sarkozy On Corruption Charges, But He May Avoid Prison Time.

The New York Times (3/1, Breeden, 20.6M) reports a court in Paris on Monday sentenced former French President Nicolas Sarkozy to three years in prison after finding him guilty on charges of corruption and influence peddling in what was "only the second time in modern French history that a former president has been convicted of a crime." The Times adds Sarkozy, who said he will appeal the ruling, "still holds considerable sway among French conservatives, but the conviction could undermine his broader stature in French politics and dash any hopes of mounting yet another political comeback – especially for a politician who has fashioned himself as particularly tough on crime."

The AP (3/1, Corbet) reports the court "said the facts were 'particularly serious' given that they were committed by a former president who used his status to help a magistrate who had served his personal interest," and "as a lawyer by training, he was 'perfectly informed' about committing an illegal action, the court said." Reuters (3/1, Salaün) reports Sarkozy "is due in court again later this month, on charges of violating campaign financing rules during his failed 2012 re-election bid," and prosecutors "are also investigating allegations that Gaddafi provided Sarkozy's 2007 campaign with millions of euros shipped to Paris in suitcases."

However, the Washington Post (3/1, Noack, 10.52M) says that as "short prison sentences in France can typically be waived, it is unclear whether Sarkozy would have to spend any time in prison even if the appeal were to fail." According to the Post, Sarkozy "could also request to serve the sentence at home, subject to electronic monitoring." The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Bisserbe, Subscription Publication, 8.41M), Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M), and Politico Europe (3/1, 15K), as well as a brief ABC World News Tonight (3/1, story 7, 0:15, Muir, 7.55M) segment, among other outlets, provide similar coverage.

Former IMF Chief Charged With Corruption, Money Laundering, And Tax Avoidance By Spanish Court.

Reuters (3/1, Pinedo) reports, "Former International Monetary Fund chief Rodrigo Rato, found guilty of embezzlement in 2018, is close to standing trial again in Spain after a court charged him with corruption, money laundering and tax dodging." A court is "investigating a kickback scheme Rato, 71, allegedly benefited from during Bankia's advertising campaigns when he was chairman of the state-owned lender between 2010 and 2012."

White House Suggests MBS Could Still Be Punished For Ordering Khashoggi's Murder.

The Washington Post (3/1, Wagner, Itkowitz, Sonmez, 10.52M) reports that on Monday, White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki "said...that the United States reserves the right to place sanctions on Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman in the future. But she continued to defend the Biden administration's decision not impose any direct punishment on the Saudi royal in the 2018 killing of journalist Jamal Khashoggi in Istanbul." According to the Post, Psaki was "peppered with questions for another day in the wake of Friday's public release of a U.S. intelligence report that concluded that Mohammed had 'approved' the operation that led to the murder. ... Asked if the United States reserves the right to sanction the crown prince in the future, Psaki said: 'Of course, we reserve the right to take any action at a time and manner of our choosing.'" However, The Hill (3/1, Chalfant, 5.69M) reports that Psaki "noted that the United States does not typically sanction leaders of countries with whom it maintains diplomatic relations."

Meanwhile, Reuters (3/1, Pamuk, Lewis) reports State Department spokesman Ned Price said Monday that the Administration is "very focused on future conduct and that is part of why we have cast this not as a rupture, but as a recalibration" of US-Saudi relations. Price added, "We are trying to get to the systemic issues underlying the brutal murder of Jamal Khashoggi." Bloomberg (3/1, Wadhams, 3.57M) also reports Price pledged, "We will never check our values at the door even when it comes to our closest security relationships."

However, Reuters (3/1, Nebehay) reports Agnes Callamard, the UN's special rapporteur on summary executions who led the UN investigation into Khashoggi's murder, on Monday "reiterated her call for sanctions targeting Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman's assets and his international engagements." She said, "It is extremely problematic, in my view, if not dangerous, to acknowledge someone's culpability and then to tell that someone 'but we won't do anything, please proceed as if we have said nothing.'" Callamard continued, "That to me is an extremely dangerous move on the part of the USA."

The San Francisco Chronicle (3/1, 2.44M) editorializes that the President "must hold Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman personally accountable for approving the 2018 assassination of Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi. Anything less that direct, severe sanctions against the crown prince would send the message to other tyrants around the world that they can jail or even kill dissidents and journalists without real fear of retribution from the new U.S. administration."

Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) CEO Fred Ryan writes that as a candidate, Biden "was firm and unequivocal in assuring American voters that, if elected president, he would make the [Saudi] regime 'pay the price and make them, in fact, the pariah that they are.' He also said, '[Jamal] Khashoggi was, in fact, murdered and dismembered, and I believe on the order of the crown prince.'" But after the release of the Director of National Intelligence report on Khashoggi's killing, the Biden Administration "seems ready to move on while proposing some sanctions falling far short of honoring Biden's campaign promise to hold [the crown prince] accountable." Ryan says this "is not a time to show weakness and surrender on human rights to gain the support of a leader who is an increasing threat to regional stability. To the contrary, it is an essential time to show the world that enduring American values matter more than commercial and diplomatic short-term opportunities – and bring justice for Jamal."

State Department Declines To Identify 76 Saudis Barred From Entry To US Over Khashoggi's Murder. Politico (3/1, Toosi, 6.73M) reports the Biden Administration "will not publicly identify any of the 76 Saudis it says it is barring from entering the United States as part of punishing Saudi Arabia over the murder of journalist Jamal Khashoggi." Politico adds, "The decision, which the State Department says is rooted in privacy laws governing U.S. visas, raises questions about the effectiveness of the penalty if there's to be no public awareness of whom the U.S. has labeled a human rights violator."

Saudi Ambassador To UN Says US Report On Khashoggi's Murder Lacks Evidence. Reuters (3/1, Swilam, Ghantous) reports that Abdallah Al-Mouallimi, Saudi Arabia's ambassador to the UN, "said on Monday a U.S. intelligence report that implicated the kingdom's de facto ruler Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman in the killing of journalist Jamal Khashoggi had presented no firm evidence."

Blinken Calls On Houthis To "Match" Saudis' "Commitment" To Ending War In Yemen.

Reuters (3/1, Staff) reports that on Monday, Secretary of State Blinken "said...that Saudi Arabia and the government of Yemen are 'committed and eager' to find a way to end the war in Yemen and called on the Houthis group to do the same." Blinken is quoted as saying, "The Saudis and the Republic of Yemen government are committed and eager to find a solution to the conflict. ... We call on the Houthis to match this commitment. A necessary first step is to stop their offensive against Marib." According to Reuters, President Biden "has said Yemen is a priority, declaring a halt to American support for the Saudi-led military campaign and demanding the war 'has to end.'"

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) says that while the Biden Administration "seems to have hoped that 'recalibrating' the U.S. relationship with Saudi Arabia, which has fought the 2015 Houthi takeover in neighboring Yemen, would draw down the war there," the Houthis "have other ideas." The Journal says the Houthis have no incentives to stop their attacks in Yemen since the US "has legitimized them with a sanctions reprieve in return for nothing, and when it broadcasts a strategy of accommodating their patrons in Tehran."

Thomas-Greenfield Vows US Will Help "Bring Awareness" To Yemen, Other Humanitarian Crises After UN Fundraising Effort Falters. Bloomberg (3/1, Wainer, 3.57M) reports Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield "vowed to re-energize diplomatic efforts to help bring an end to the world's worst humanitarian disasters, citing crises in Yemen and Ethiopia." Thomas-Greenfield "said the goal will be to 'bring awareness to the world about these growing and devastating humanitarian crises, and to call for leadership on the council for urgent, necessary solutions.'" She continued, "In these regions, war and instability have left millions of people and two million children under the age of five at risk of starvation and acute malnutrition." She added, "We cannot stand idly by." Her comments came after Reuters (3/1, Nichols) reports UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres "said a 'disappointing' $1.7 billion had been pledged by countries on Monday for humanitarian aid in Yemen – less than half the $3.85 billion the world body was seeking for 2021 to avert a large-scale famine."

IAEA Director Urges US And Iran To Pursue "Constructive Discussions."

The Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) reports that on Monday, International Atomic Energy Agency Director Rafael Grossi "urged that inspections not be used as a 'bargaining chip' as Iran, the United States and other nations lock horns over how to revive their beleaguered nuclear deal," and "appealed to all sides to engage in 'constructive discussions.' ... Without the work of inspectors, 'you don't know whether you can sleep tight or be very, very concerned at night,' Grossi said." Grossi is quoted as saying, "The inspection work of the IAEA should not be put in the middle of a negotiating table as a bargaining chip."

Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M) reports that IAEA investigators, "who have carried some 170 short-notice visits to sites in Iran over the last four years, are the most recent casualties in the dispute. They lost their right to call snap inspections and visit key installations last month when Iran suspended the agency's so-called Additional Protocol." According to Bloomberg, "Both sides are insisting that the other has to move first in order to rejuvenate the deal. But on Monday, Iran's Foreign Ministry said now wasn't the right time for direct talks with the Biden administration and European powers."

Meanwhile, Reuters (3/1, Murphy) reports the UK, France, and Germany "are pressing ahead with a U.S.-backed plan for a resolution by the U.N. nuclear watchdog's board criticising Iran for curbing cooperation with the agency, despite Russian and Iranian warnings of serious consequences." However, it is "unclear how many countries would support a resolution," as Russia in "a position paper obtained by Reuters before Iran's announcement...warned that a resolution could hurt efforts to revive the deal, formally known as the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), and that it would oppose it."

In his Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) column, Walter Russell Mead contends the Biden Administration's approach to the Middle East "seems to be working with everyone but Tehran." According to Mead, Iran "seems convinced that Washington's only two real choices are the nuclear deal on Iranian terms, or an Iranian bomb. If the resulting tensions damage Washington's relations with either Europe or Middle East allies, so much the better."

Netanyahu Says Iran Behind Attack On Israeli-Owned Freighter In Gulf Of Oman.

The Washington Post (3/1, Hendrix, 10.52M) reports, "Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu blamed Iran for a mysterious attack on an Israeli-owned freighter loaded with vehicles in the Gulf of Oman last week, pledging that his government would retaliate." Netanyahu said in a radio interview, "Iran is the greatest enemy of Israel. I am determined to halt it. We are hitting it in the entire region." In response, Iranian Foreign Ministry spokesman Saeed Khatibzadeh said, "We strongly reject this accusation." He added, "The security of the Persian Gulf is extremely important for Iran."

The AP (3/1, Zion) says Netanyahu "accused Iran of attacking an Israeli-owned ship in the Gulf of Oman last week, a mysterious explosion that further spiked security concerns in the region." After the attack, "the crew was unharmed, but the vessel sustained two holes on its port side and two on its starboard side just above the waterline." Reuters (3/1, Hafezi) reports, "Iran strongly rejects Israel's claim that Tehran was behind a blast aboard an Israeli-owned ship in the Gulf of Oman last week" according to Khatibzadeh. Bloomberg (3/1, 3.57M) provides similar coverage.

US Says Strike In Syria Killed Iranian-backed Fighter, Wounded Two Others.

The Washington Post (3/1, Sonne, 10.52M) reports that according to the US Department of Defense "the U.S. military strike last week on a facility in Syria used by Iranian-backed militias led to the death of one fighter and wounded two others, in addition to destroying nine buildings." Pentagon spokesman John Kirby "announced the casualty figures at a briefing on Monday." Reuters (3/1, Stewart, Ali) reports the strike "killed one Iranian backed militia member and injured two others, the Pentagon said on Monday."

Members Of US House Urge Administration To Respond To Turkish Human Rights Issues.

Reuters (3/1, Zengerle) reports, "One hundred seventy members of the U.S. House of Representatives signed a bipartisan letter sent to Secretary of State Antony Blinken urging President Joe Biden's administration to address 'troubling' human rights issues" with respect to Turkey. According to the letter, "Strategic issues have rightfully received significant attention in our bilateral relationship, but the gross violation of human rights and democratic backsliding taking place in Turkey are also of significant concern."

Sahrawis Restarting War With Morocco Over Western Sahara.

Reuters (3/1) reports, "Generations of young Sahrawis have grown up in Algeria's remote desert refugee camps largely forgotten by the outside world and now see no prospect of an independent homeland in Western Sahara except through a new war their leaders say has already begun." Reuters adds, "In November, the movement said it was quitting a three-decade ceasefire with Rabat and has announced frequent attacks since then on Moroccan forces along the desert frontier." In addition, "the Sahrawi government-in-exile based in Tindouf has called on U.S. President Joe Biden to reverse his predecessor's decision to accept Moroccan sovereignty over Western Sahara."

Abductions Of School Children Increasing In Nigeria.

The New York Times (3/1, Maclean, 20.6M) reports that "since last December, mass kidnappings of girls and boys at boarding schools in northwest Nigeria have been happening more and more frequently — at least one every three weeks" and "just last Friday, more than 300 girls were taken from their school in Zamfara state, and the week before, more than 40 children and adults were abducted from a boarding school in Niger state. They were freed on Saturday." The Times adds that "boarding schools...are often located outside of cities and towns, where there is often no security." Those responsible "are carrying out many more attacks and demanding less ransom per victim than before — amounts like $1,000." The Wall Street Journal (3/1, A1, Parkinson, Anwar, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) also reports on the increasing number of abductions of school children.

Hundreds Of Thousands Displaced In Central Africa Republic By Fighting.

The AP (3/1, Surprenant) reports on the Central African Republic where rebels have caused "an estimated 240,000 people [to be] displaced in the country since mid-December, according to U.N. relief workers." The AP adds, "hundreds of thousands of people are also left without basic food or health care."

Zimbabwe's Vice President Resigns.

Bloomberg (3/1, Ndlovu, Marawanyika, 3.57M) reports, "Zimbabwean Second Vice President Kembo Mohadi resigned on Monday, after claiming he was the victim of a campaign to damage his reputation." Mohadi had been accused "of being involved in multiple 'immoral' relationships, including with members of his staff."

Kenyan Police Use Twitter To Change Reputation.

The Washington Post (3/1, Bearak, 10.52M) reports that the Twitter account of Kenya's Directorate of Criminal Investigations has been using "florid, even Shakespearean" language to describe its activities. Director George Kinoti said it is an effort to soften the image of the police as killers, "to show them we are not all like that — we do work for them." The Post adds, "polls show that more than half of Kenyans think police are a threat, not a service."

Housing

FHFA Authorizes GSEs Double Funding Of Housing Trust Fund, Capital Magnet Fund.

American Banker (3/1, Subscription Publication, 27K) reports, "After loans backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac skyrocketed last year due to heightened refinancing activity, the two mortgage giants will more than double their contributions to two trust funds that support affordable housing." The FHFA authorized the GSEs "to contribute a total of $1.09 billion to the National Housing Trust Fund and the Capital Magnet Fund in 2021, more than twice the amount they gave in 2020 and the highest contribution to date." HousingWire (3/1, 7K) reports FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "The record increase in house prices last year exacerbated the affordable housing shortage. To help increase the supply of affordable housing in our communities, FHFA remains steadfast in support of the Housing Trust Fund and Capital Magnet Fund."

National Mortgage Professional (3/1) reports that the Housing Trust Fund is overseen by HUD, allocating money "to states and state-designated entities for the production or preservation of affordable housing through the acquisition, new construction, reconstruction and rehabilitation of non-luxury housing." The Capital Magnet Fund "is overseen by Treasury and competitively awards money to finance affordable housing activities, as well as related economic development activities and community service facilities." DS News (3/1, Peck) provides additional coverage.

GSEs Preparing For Broader Rollout Of Data Verification Technology.

National Mortgage News (3/1, Sinnock) reports Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are "preparing for a broader rollout" of technology that could expedite verification of data on income, assets, and employment, "pending a green light from their oversight agency." NMN says, "That could help lenders reverse the trend of ever-lengthening mortgage closing timelines, which has occurred despite the fact that the industry's processes are increasingly automated. Record volumes in 2020 extended processing times by two to four days, according to a recent Freddie Mac report." Finicity's one-touch Mortgage Verification Service (MVS) technology reportedly "allows applicants with mainstream payroll providers to use a single sign-on session and roughly a dozen click-throughs to submit their information." NMN notes, "To be sure, while consolidated digital verifications from multiple types of information may be about to take off, it's unclear how much potential there is to just use a single source of data. The GSEs have experimented with this in the past."

Dodd Frank Update (3/1) reports Freddie Mac Single-Family VP Rick Lang said, "Freddie Mac has been at the forefront of advancing the digital mortgage experience that today's borrowers have come to expect. Our data-driven strategy helps produce safer loans and reduces the paper chase so our clients can speed up underwriting and bring borrowers to the closing table sooner." Fannie Mae VP Chuck Walker said that "addressing asset, income and employment verification is central to moving the industry toward the ideal digital mortgage."

MBA: Slowing Exits Drive Forbearance Volume Up In Portfolio Loans, PLS, And Ginnie Mae Loans.

HousingWire (3/1, 7K) reports that after a month of "steady declines," servicers' forbearance portfolio volume "rose one basis point last week to 5.23%, according to data released Monday by the Mortgage Bankers Association. The trade group pointed to a slowdown in exits coupled with an uptick in requests for last week's increase." Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac again "boasted the smallest forbearance share with servicers' portfolios remaining unchanged from the week prior at 2.97%." Portfolio loans and private-label securities (PLS), however, "increased by nine basis points to 9.03%, while Ginnie Mae loans in forbearance rose three basis points to 7.35%." MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni suggested Ginnie Mae buyouts and general forbearance increases were likely the driving force behind the increases for portfolio and PLS loans.

STRATMOR: Strong Sales, Low Rates, And Ample Liquidity Boost Mortgage IPO Market.

M Report (3/1, Babb) says, "Strong home sales, low interest rates, widely available capital, and aging business ownership have led to a robust mortgage IPO market in recent months. According to STRATMOR Group, before the end of 2020, equity investors or private companies held an interest in 17 of the top 25 independent mortgage bankers, accounting for more than 40% of the total IMB market." Stratmor Group Senior Partner Garth Graham said, "The M&A deals we're seeing are game-changers. They are record-breaking deals that have investors outside the industry putting money into mortgage banks that are generating solid profits."

Column: "Dying Malls" Could Be Repurposed To Ease Nation's Housing Shortage.

In a piece for Business Insider (3/1, 2.74M), columnist Emil Skandul argues that America's "dying malls" could be repurposed for both "public and private use." According to Skandul, "The most obvious private use for malls addresses America's housing crisis by turning malls into residences. Across the US, the housing supply has reached the lowest point in decades, and the public loan enterprise Freddie Mac estimates supply is short by 2.5 million units. Affordable housing for lower- and middle-income households is in the highest demand, but may be the most difficult to accomplish."

Analysis: US Insurers Face More Pressure, Scrutiny On Role In Climate Change.

Reuters (3/1, Madonna) reports, "While the U.S. financial sector has voiced some support for broad environmental principles, the action spotlight could soon move to insurers over their multi-faceted exposure to climate factors." The voluntary moves come as some "climate advocates argue that the insurance industry's coverage of fossil-fuel projects exacerbates climate problems, while industry stakeholders worry about increased asset and liability risk." Furthermore, "the Biden administration's designation of climate change as a crisis could help spur insurers to voluntarily distance themselves from the fossil fuel industry, experts say." So far in the US, "Chubb and The Hartford have pledged to phase out insuring or investing in coal projects." Several European carriers made similar promises.

Markets

10-Year Yield Ticks Up.

MarketWatch (3/2, 2.64M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 1.443 percent.

Dollar Rises.

Reuters (3/2, Ponthus) reports that the dollar "held on to three-weeks highs against major currencies on Monday as U.S. and euro zone bond yields steadied, after a fixed-income selloff in February that lifted demand for safe-haven currencies." The dollar index rose 0.35% and reached 91.07. The euro dropped 0.23% down to $1.2042.

Gold Falls.

Reuters (3/2, Layek) reports that gold prices "slumped to their lowest in 8-1/2 months on Tuesday, as a stronger dollar and elevated U.S. Treasury yields eroded investor appetite for the non-yielding metal." US gold futures dropped 0.3% down to $1,717.80.

Oil Falls.

Reuters (3/2, Obayashi) reports that oil prices "slid more than 1% on Tuesday as expectations that OPEC would agree to raise oil supply in a meeting this week weighed on sentiment, already hit by concerns over slowing Chinese demand." Brent crude slid 80 cents, or 1.3%, down to $62.89 per barrel. West Texas Intermediate crude dropped 69 cents, or 1.1%, down to $59.95 per barrel.

Cybersecurity

Cybersecurity Risks Rise As Corporate IT Adjusts To Pandemic.

Politico (3/1, Geller, 6.73M) reports in its Weekly Cybersecurity newsletter that the coronavirus pandemic has "accelerated a shift to remote work at many businesses, but how permanent will that shift be, what technological changes will companies need to make, and how will these changes affect their cybersecurity postures" remains unclear. A report out today "from the endpoint security vendor Tanium reveals the current status of these changes, and a Tanium executive told MC how the federal government can help companies manage the digital transformations that many of them now face." The report's findings, "drawn from a survey of 500 IT decision-makers, are significant not just for the security professionals who may be able to act on them but also for all workers whose lives will be transformed by the technology that their employers use." Tanium's report "lays out various security challenges for businesses."

FireEye's CEO Warns Risk Growing Of US Being Pulled Into Global Cyber Warfare.

Business Insider (3/1, Hartmans, 2.74M) reports Americans are "at risk of being dragged into cyber attacks that would put their connected devices at risk," according to the cybersecurity executive whose company discovered the SolarWinds hack. Kevin Mandia, the CEO of cybersecurity company FireEye, "told 'Axios on HBO' on Sunday that future cyber warfare between the US and China or Russia could impact regular citizens, leading to widespread disruptions to daily life." Mandia said, "Apps won't work. Appliances may not work. People don't even know all the things they depend on. All of a sudden, the supply chain starts getting disrupted because computers don't work." Mandia "warned that the rules of engagement around cyberattacks are unclear, meaning that there may be nothing that's off-limits." In a world where "more devices are connected to the internet than every before, consumers could be opened up to massive risk."

Chinese Cyber Actors Now Targeting India's Critical Infrastructure.

SC Magazine (3/1) reports a newly discovered threat group that researchers "attributed to the Chinese government breached the power infrastructure in India, amid tensions along the two countries' borders." Researchers "say it's the first time a China-linked cyber actor has emerged as a significant threat against another nation's critical infrastructure." Recorded Future's Insikt research team, "which discovered the hackers, dubbed the group RedEcho." Researchers "traced their hacking efforts against Indian energy assets back to mid-2020, around the same time that a squabble between China and India over the Himalayan border began to escalate." Jon Condra, Recorded Future's head of nation-state research, "said that the choice of targets suggests RedEcho may be more interested in offensively positioning China for future conflict rather than engaging in the peace-time intellectual property theft that Chinese hackers are typically known for."

SII, Bharat Biotech Targeted By Chinese Hackers, Says Security Firm.

Reuters (3/1, Das) reports, "A Chinese state-backed hacking group has in recent weeks targeted the IT systems of two Indian vaccine makers whose coronavirus shots are being used in the country's immunisation campaign, cyber intelligence firm Cyfirma told Reuters." Cyfirma "said Chinese hacking group APT10, also known as Stone Panda, had identified gaps and vulnerabilities in the IT infrastructure and supply chain software of Bharat Biotech and the Serum Institute of India (SII)."

EPA Leads Cybersecurity Response If Water Utilities Get Hacked.

Federal Computer Week (3/1, 263K) reports lawmakers are questioning "what entities govern cybersecurity at water utilities and what changes must be made before a future attack succeeds in harming the public." Cybersecurity regulations for different industries "vary because the rules are set by whichever government agency or panel is responsible for that sector." The EPA is the "sector-specific agency for water and wastewater systems." In the event of a compromise, EPA "partners with the FBI and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency to investigate." The EPA's 2021 budget request included "approximately $7.7 million for assisting local and state water utilities with preparing their infrastructure against both physical and cybersecurity threats."

NSA Publishes Guidance For Security Professionals On Adopting Zero Trust Security.

Security Week (3/1) reports NSA has "published guidance on how security professionals can secure enterprise networks and sensitive data by adopting a Zero Trust security model." NSA has published guidance "on how security professionals can secure enterprise networks and sensitive data by adopting a Zero Trust security model." Titled 'Embracing a Zero Trust Security Model,' the document "details the benefits and challenges of the security model, and also provides a series of recommendations on the implementation of Zero Trust within existing networks." Zero Trust "allows administrators to limit access and control the manner in which devices, processes, and users engage with data, to eliminate the abuse of compromised credentials, along with remote exploitation, and insider threats." NextGov (3/1) reports NSA is "working with National Security Systems and Defense Department programs to pilot the implementation of Zero Trust principles and will provide more guidance in the coming months," according to a document the agency released last week.

Opinion: Inherently Secure Systems Mitigate Software Supply Chain Attacks.

In a commentary in Government Computer News (3/1), Roger R. Schell, president of Aesec Corporation, writes, "The supply chain cybersecurity problem can be solved with inherently secure engineering. Current futile efforts to keep an adversary out of a system can be replaced by a secure architecture that dramatically constrains the ability of an adversary who planted attacks (e.g., Trojan horses) inside a system to compromise sensitive information." He contends, "Even if implemented after such an attack, the properly configured Class A1 OS prevents exfiltration of information."

Federal Reserve

Analysts Say US Economy Showing Signs Of Improvement.

Reuters (3/1, Saphir, Schneider) says a "bullish sentiment" toward the US economy "has increasingly taken root among executives, analysts and consumers who see the past year of comparative hibernation – from the government-ordered business closings last spring to continued risk avoidance by the public – giving way to a cautious re-emergence and green shoots in the economy." However, a nearly 2,300-word Wall Street Journal (3/1, A1, 1p, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) article considers the prospect of whether the US faces an inflation risk from the $1.9 trillion in spending of the President's relief bill.

Brainard Flags Financial System Weaknesses Revealed By Covid, Urges Actions To Address Them.

Reuters (3/1, Schneider) reports Fed Governor Lael Brainard said Monday that Covid-19 revealed multiple weaknesses within the financial system that must be addressed with new rules before the next shock occurs. Brainard said, "We should not miss the opportunity to distill lessons from the COVID shock and institute reforms so our system is more resilient and better able to withstand a variety of possible shocks in the future, including those emanating from outside the financial system." Brainard "focused her most detailed suggestions on the rules governing the large money market funds that saw massive redemptions as the pandemic intensified last spring, causing stress in corporate and other funding markets that rely on them." Brainard "said ideas like 'swing pricing,' which kicks in after redemptions hit a certain level to penalize those who continue to withdraw, as well minimum deposit and other rules could head off a future crisis by reducing the 'incentive to run.'"

The New York Times (3/1, Smialek, 20.6M) and The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Ackerman, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) also report.

Barkin: Fed Guidance On Future Plans Could Not Be More "Clear And Explicit."

Reuters (3/1, Schneider) reports Richmond Fed President Thomas Barkin "said on Monday...[i]nvestors evaluating Fed policy should focus on the central bank's 'explicit' guidance on its plans and the relevant economic outcomes, not on second-guessing far ahead of time when interest rates or the pace of monthly asset purchases might change." Barkin said in a Bloomberg TV interview that the Fed's guidance "is as clear and explicit as we have seen," given the central bank's pledge to hold interest rates until inflation surpasses 2%. Barkin added, "The challenge for investors is to not try to turn that into calendar based guidance but to say lets see how the outcomes go."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

Gensler Hearing Comes During Calls For Tighter Wall Street Regulation.

The AP (3/2, Gordon) reports that Gary Gensler, President Biden's nominee to lead the SEC is "coming before a Senate panel for his confirmation hearing at a moment when a roiling stock-trading drama has spurred clamor for tighter regulation of Wall Street." Gensler has "experience as a tough markets regulator" and has promised to increase market transparency and accountability. University of Michigan Assistant Business Professor Erik Gordon said Gensler will "tip the SEC away from making it easy for companies to raise money and toward protecting unsophisticated investors." According to the AP, among his "likely priorities...would be requirements for corporations to disclose their climate change risks, political spending and executive compensation." Gensler has also shown receptiveness to cryptocurrencies and new financial technologies, such as the blockchain.

Incoming CFPB Head Needs To Put An 'End To The Political Pendulum Swing.'

American Banker (3/1, Subscription Publication, 27K) reports there are a number of things incoming CFPB chief Rohit Chopra can do help improve "the nation's banking industry, protect consumers equally across institutions and finally, put an end to the political pendulum swing." The CFPB needs to preserve consumers' access to credit and "develop long-term, consistent consumer protection laws across the board."

Contributor Richard Hunt writes, "Now more than ever, banks need this transparency, and American consumers deserve it as the economy climbs out of the effects from the coronavirus pandemic."

CFPB Receives Record Number Of Complaints In 2020.

MarketWatch (3/1, Jagannathan, 2.64M) reports that in 2020, the CFPB "received a record number of consumer complaints," with "credit-reporting complaints making up a majority of the grievances, according to [a] study released Monday by the U.S. PIRG Education Fund." The number of complaints grew by more than 50% from 2019 to 2020, to 444,551 complaints. Credit-reporting complaints "more than doubled from 136,000 in 2019 to 282,000 in 2020." The report authors wrote, "In 2020, each month set a complaint volume record for that month, and complaint volumes dramatically increased during the course of the coronavirus pandemic." Experts are predicting the CFPB under President Biden will "be more aggressive in tackling predatory behavior and doling out penalties, as well as bolster consumer protections in areas like payday lending, overdraft fees, consumer data and credit reports." The CFPB is also expected to scrutinize the student-loan industry as well.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Optimism Grows That Agencies Can Work Together On CRA Reform.

American Banker (3/2, Subscription Publication, 27K) reports that optimism is growing that agencies can come together to jointly reform the CRA. During the Trump Administration, the OCC developed its own CRA rule, but faced criticism that its "sweeping overhaul could hurt the very communities that the anti-redlining law was meant to help." However, the current rule has not yet been fully implemented, and acting Comptroller Blake Paulson "appeared willing last month to slow down the process." Analysts expect that whether President Biden nominates Michael Barr or Merhsa Baradaran, "either are likely to throw out the CRA rule finalized under former Comptroller Joseph Otting." The move would shift the focus to an alternative plan the Fed has worked on that would "rely on existing data collection and reporting for CRA scoring." However, Stroock & Stroock & Lavan Partner Quyen Truong "expects the OCC to help take the lead on an eventual reform framework regardless of who becomes comptroller." California Reinvestment Coalition Deputy Director Kevin Stein added that either Barr or Baradaran would be a "great" comptroller.

New Indictments Brought Against Those Responsible For Failure Of Washington Federal Reserve Bank For Savings.

American Banker (3/1, Subscription Publication, 27K) reports, "A new set of indictments tied to the December 2017 failure of Washington Federal Bank for Savings alleges that four employees and several borrowers conspired to embezzle millions of dollars from the Chicago bank." A federal grand jury has added a fifth individual to the "list of defendants facing charges of falsifying bank records to conceal embezzlement from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp." The new charges begin brought are in connection to $31 million in funds that were embezzled, an FDIC's Office of Inspector General press release said. The bank was shut down when OCC "determined that it was insolvent and had at least $66 million in nonperforming loans." The FDIC eventually sold the bank to Royal Savings Bank.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"Would A Well-Run Private Company Tolerate Behavior Like Andrew Cuomo's?" The Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) editorializes that if New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's (D) behavior would be inappropriate at a business and contends it is "hard to imagine that, in a well-run company, that executive wouldn't be asked to resign – or be fired on the spot – for his behavior." However, the Post concedes that whether the sexual harassment allegations against him "end up costing Mr. Cuomo his job...remains to be seen."

"A $15 Minimum Wage Won't Happen. Democrats Should Get To Work On A More Modest Raise." The Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) says that Democrats "need to bow to [the] reality" that a $15 an hour minimum wage increase will not be in the relief bill – "not by giving up on a higher minimum wage, but by seeking to raise it to a somewhat more modest figure than $15 per hour." According to the Post, "Such a compromise might even attract Republican support."

"Myanmar's Coup Leaders Turn To Massacres. The U.S. Response Must Be Forceful." The Washington Post (3/1, 10.52M) says Burma's military "demonstrated on Sunday that it is prepared to massacre the country's citizens in order to sustain its coup," which "revealed the regime's criminality – but also its weakness. The generals appear to be panicking in the face of mass resistance far beyond what they expected." The Post concludes the US "and other nations have the means to bring crushing economic pressure to bear on the generals. They should not hesitate to use it."

Wall Street Journal.

"Making Every Election Like 2020." The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) criticizes the election reform legislation, which it argues "would make mail balloting in a plague year seem buttoned up." The Journal concludes, "Ballot access is important, but so is ballot integrity."

“Biden’s Mideast Concessions Backfire.” The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) says that while the Biden Administration “seems to have hoped that ‘recalibrating’ the U.S. relationship with Saudi Arabia, which has fought the 2015 Houthi takeover in neighboring Yemen, would draw down the war there,” the Houthis “have other ideas.” The Journal says the Houthis have no incentives to stop their attacks in Yemen since the US “has legitimized them with a sanctions reprieve in return for nothing, and when it broadcasts a strategy of accommodating their patrons in Tehran.”

“The Grievances Of Trump Past.” The Wall Street Journal (3/1, Subscription Publication, 8.41M) says Trump’s return at CPAC shows he is still “trying to rewrite” his loss to Biden “as someone else’s fault – Democrats who cheated, Republicans who won’t ‘fight,’ a cowardly Supreme Court that includes three of his appointees, anyone but himself. This isn’t true, as another Trump pollster, Anthony Fabrizio, made clear in his post-election analysis. Mr. Trump had one landmark victory in 2016 but he has cost the GOP dearly since.” The Journal concludes that if Republicans continue to “focus on the grievances of the Trump past, they won’t be a governing majority.”

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Here's the thing, even if Cuomo felt he was being playful, it's still not okay. This is what bosses never seem to understand. You should never be flirtatious with your employees because as a boss, you're basically a dragon. Nobody's ever trying to hug a dragon; they're trying to get out of the cave in one piece."

Trevor Noah: "For now, things are looking bad for Governor Cuomo. He's facing investigations and calls to resign. You know it's not good when you're the person in trouble and you're like, 'Guys, please, remember all the people in nursing homes I got killed? Let's talk about that again, come on, huh?'"

Trevor Noah: "Yes, barely a month into Joe Biden's presidency and he has already dropped his first bombs on Syria. ... It's actually ridiculous just how little power Congress has to actually stop the President from bombing whoever he wants. Even a drunk guy at a bar has at least two friends to hold him back."

Trevor Noah: "There's one story that everybody's talking about and so we need to make time for it: CPAC. The Conservative Political Action Conference, which is an annual gathering for hard-core right-wingers. Sort of like the Golden Globes, but for your aunt's Facebook group."

Trevor Noah: "It is amazing how adamantly some conservatives refuse to ever wear a mask. The only thing that fights to get itself killed so hard is when a dog eats chocolate."

Trevor Noah: "I've watched CPAC and WandaVision this weekend, and I'm not sure which characters are living in a more warped reality."

Jimmy Kimmel: "First, the return of the mythical creature known as Donald Trump, who was at CPAC, which sounds like the antibiotic you get after being exposed to Ted Cruz in a hot tub. But it's not. It is the Conservative Political Action Committee Convention."

Jimmy Kimmel: "After weeks of hibernation, Donald Trump emerged from his cave. ... Yell-vis went on and on for more than 90 minutes. He was yelling. My wife was yelling at me for watching it. It was kind of like, you know that show 'Dr. Pimple Popper'? All this disgusting stuff keeps coming out, and you're like, 'Oh God, when will it end?', but until it does, you can't look away? That's him."

Jimmy Kimmel: "To his credit, Trump did urge everyone to get vaccinated. But he did not mention that he got vaccinated himself. The New York Times reported that Trump and Melania were vaccinated at the White House in January. Why would you get a vaccine for a virus that disappeared, that washed away on its own last summer? I don't know. They probably had to vaccinate him by covering the needle in peanut butter, and making him eat it."

Stephen Colbert: "The headliner of the weekend was the former President. His speech was pretty light on substance and energy, but there was one major revelation: He told the audience that he would not start a third party. Of course he isn't going to start a new political party. He already owns one!"

Stephen Colbert: "The biggest attraction at CPAC was the giant golden statue of him. Nothing says the party of Christian values like worshipping a golden idol. And it's an Old Testament two-fer, 'cause he'll also covet your wife, neighbor."

Jimmy Fallon: "Yesterday, Trump gave his first speech since leaving office to close out CPAC in Orlando. Yep, it was 90 minutes of rambling followed by Trump supporters storming EPCOT."

Jimmy Fallon: "During his speech, Trump said, 'A Republican President will make a triumphant return to the White House, and I wonder who that will be.' Then the Manhattan DA holding Trump's taxes was like, 'Well, we all know who it won't be.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Biden on Friday ordered air strikes against Syria. Well, that certainly didn't take long. It's like going to a Chumbawamba concert and they open with 'Tubthumping.' I mean, we knew it was coming; we just didn't know it would be right away."

Seth Meyers: "A giant golden replica of former President Trump was displayed over the weekend at the Conservative Political Action Conference in Florida. This news first reported in Exodus 32:4."

Seth Meyers: "President Biden is facing criticism after declining to directly sanction Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Mohammad bin Salman for ordering the death of journalist Jamal Khashoggi. Okay, if having a journalist murdered doesn't count as malarkey, what does?"

James Corden: "Earlier today, President Biden had another virtual meeting with the head of state. This time it was Mexico's President Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador. And you just know Biden used the opportunity to throw around the word 'compadre' as much as possible. ... I bet Joe Biden opened with, 'Can we talk about that wall you guys are paying for?' And then they just laugh and they laugh."

James Corden: "But the two leaders did discuss border issues. Mexico's President apologized for the amount of drugs coming across the border, and Joe Biden apologized for the amount of Ted Cruz coming across the border."

Fellow Announcement: Proposed Academy Bylaw Amendments

The Academy's Governance Committee, made up of several Fellows, recently reviewed the current Academy Bylaws, last amended in 2013, to determine whether the Academy is adhering to current nonprofit best practices and standards. The exercise identified several areas for improvement. As a result, the Governance Committee and the Academy's Board of Directors are proposing several changes. Read the full letter from Academy Board of Directors Chair, David Wennergren, here.

The full text of the proposed change for each affected bylaw can be found on the Academy's website here. You can choose to approve the full set of proposed amendments. If you click "no", you will be able to vote for or against for each change individually. A "yes" vote is in favor of the change; a "no" vote rejects it.

Please vote by Friday, April 30th.

It's Time to Reinvent How America Delivers Foreign Aid

By Academy Fellow Marcelo Giugale

Meet Fellow Michael Jacobson

Who or what inspired you to work in public service?

My dad was a career officer in the Coast Guard and his dad was a high school chemistry teacher. I always thought that they had interesting, challenging, and fulfilling jobs and they felt like they contributed to society.

What is something you are excited about right now?

I am excited by the prospect of making a giant step forward in addressing the racial inequities in our society. Many people have had their eyes opened to the treatment of black men at the hands of police but there are so many ways in which BIPOC communities and other minorities (such as religious or gender/sexual minorities), are marginalized by our public institutions. I see this as a generational opportunity to make change for the better for all of our communities.

When President John F. Kennedy created the U.S. Agency for International Development in 1961, he could not have imagined that helping other countries develop would be such an unpredictable, ever-changing task. What started as the funding of roads, schools and clinics in faraway places is today a global search for solutions to some of the world's most intractable problems—from entrenched poverty and corruption to climate change and pandemics.

What was a single American agency has since turned into a network of stakeholders—multilateral banks, official donors, private investors, NGOs and academics. And what was a national policy to foster prosperity abroad has grown into a multitude of international commitments to worthy causes, such as the Sustainable Development Goals.

2020 Data Breaches Set Cybersecurity Tone for New Year

Security and Privacy Rights of Individuals

Risk Based Security released their 2020 year-end data breach report this past week, and despite an overall decline in breach events (security incidents), the number of breached records grew dramatically.

Other trends included a doubling of ransomware attacks from 2019 to 2020, and data breach severity rising. Here are some of the highlights from the report:

“There were 3,932 publicly reported breach events at the time of this report; a 48% decline compared to 2019. As the year matures, and 2020 breaches continue to be disclosed into 2021, it is typical for the number of reported breaches to grow by 5% to 10%. In 'normal' times that would place 2020 on par with 2015 and 2016 breach years.”

Union Leaders Report Slow Movement to Implement Biden Workforce Order

Officials at the nation's largest federal employee union said that they have seen little progress from agencies in the days since President Biden signed an executive order rescinding Trump administration edicts on labor-management relations last week.

In a call with reporters, labor leaders across the federal government with the American Federation of Government Employees said that they are eager to get to work dismantling restrictions on official time, expanding the scope of collective bargaining and restoring both due process protections for federal workers and collaborative relations with management, but so far have been met with apprehension.

Biden issues executive orders promoting racial equity

President Joe Biden on Tuesday rolled out an additional slate of executive actions to address racial equity, a move to fulfill a key campaign promise that he made during the height of this past summer's protests.

Biden said that Tuesday's actions are a direct response to the groundswell of protests that emerged following the killing of George Floyd, an unarmed Black man, by Minnesota police and the resulting calls for racial justice. In brief remarks at the White House, the president said Floyd's death "opened the eyes of millions" and paved the way for change.

Primary Care Providers Can Help Steer People to Opioid Addiction Treatment

The United States is grappling with two severe health crises: the COVID-19 pandemic and an opioid epidemic that appears to be worsening as more people deal with stress and isolation as they face increased barriers to medical care. Preliminary numbers for 2020 show that overdose deaths were outpacing the record-setting number of more than 71,000 fatalities in 2019.

More than ever, it is key to connect patients with opioid use disorder (OUD) to treatment as early as possible. Primary care offices can be among the most promising places to make this connection because they typically see patients over long periods of time. And a model for confronting substance use disorder, including OUD, that was pioneered by the National Academy of Medicine can help. This approach, which has been around for decades, has a long name—screening, brief intervention, and referral to treatment—that is usually shortened to SBIRT.

Our Path Forward: Building Resiliency with Innovation and Optimism

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2021 AT 12:30PM - 1:30PM

Keynote Discussion with Dr. Oscar Alleyne,

Chief of Programs and Services for the National Association of County and City Health Officials.

Please join us in a discussion of promising and innovative practices to enable resiliency in the face of the tremendous challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic. What are the key challenges and how can we collectively rise above them and embrace innovation in our path forward? What have we learned and what practices can we put in place for tomorrow?

This is the first in a series of convenings to hear from leaders and on-the-ground practitioners about how they are establishing a path forward by obtaining, analyzing, and sharing information tailored to communities. We look forward to hearing more about the tools that frontline leaders can take away and use to ensure ongoing progress towards disease mitigation, advancing public health and supporting financially impacted communities.

Topic: Build Back Better: Where to Start?

The Biden-Harris Administration's transition mantra has been to #BuildBackBetter. But to do so, it is important to understand the current state of affairs. For the most part, the transition team has focused on policy initiatives, but there have been many reports about actions taken in recent months to hobble the administrative abilities of agencies to act on new initiatives.

This panel session will identify and discuss the implications of some of the Trump administration's actions and which might be of higher priority to be addressed in any "build back better" agenda in coming months. You will be invited to add to the list!

Where regulators 'behave like adults'

By Jerry Hagstrom, author of How to Survive the Next Recession (HarperCollins)

By Jerry Hagstrom

Heath Tarbert was sworn in one year ago Wednesday as the chairman of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. Like many heads of federal agencies, he's gotten quite a bit more than he bargained for during that time, as he's tried to navigate derivatives regulation, as well as commission leadership, in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic.

For starters, it means working from his home in Northwest D.C., beginning at 7 a.m. and ending at 9 p.m.—and being grateful for all the work he did in his first months on the job to get himself up to speed.

In a telephone interview on Tuesday, Tarbert said the CFTC has been telecommuting “nearly 100 percent” since mid-March, conducting meetings over the phone and online. That system, he said, has allowed the agency to continue to protect the integrity of financial markets and sanction firms and individuals for fraudulent activities—even though Tarbert says he always worries about potential volatility and defaults on contracts.

“During a crisis period, more communication is better than less,” Tarbert said, noting that he has increased the number of meetings he holds with agency staff and the other four commissioners.

His day is so long, he said, because he needs to keep in touch with the other financial regulators in the U.S. government and with his counterparts overseas.

In some ways, he said, his efficiency has increased because there “are fewer distractions in the office,” he doesn't need to commute, and he doesn't need “to fly to Basel,” the Swiss city where so many international banking standard-setting meetings take place.

Tarbert said he believes the agency's 700 longtime employees and 300 contractors have adjusted well to a new routine but, for new hires who have started working without ever being in the office, as well as for summer interns, "it's tough."

It would have been easy to cancel the summer-internship program, he said, but these college students had already lost so much he didn't want them to lose the internships too.

Before his presidential appointment to the CFTC, Tarbert was acting Treasury undersecretary for international affairs; a special counsel on the Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee in 2009-10 when the Dodd-Frank Act was written; and a law clerk for Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

But chairing the CFTC, he said, "has been the most rewarding 12 months in my career. I've done a lot of unique and cool things."

That started with spending the first 100 days in office "making sure I got an understanding of what was going on."

Too many political appointees in Washington "take the 'ready, fire, aim' approach without taking the time to figure out what is going on," he said.

To avoid that mistake, he wrote a mission statement saying that the agency wants to protect the integrity of the futures markets without under-regulation or overregulation, and offering a statement of core values that includes "valuing diverse skill sets and backgrounds to achieve our mission"—an important point in a field that has been very white and very male.

Tarbert said he determined that even though the United States is going through "one of the most divisive political environments" and the commission by law has a mix of Republican and Democratic commissioners, "we are a technical agency" that should not be divisive on policy.

The CFTC, he said, should fulfill voters' expectation that officials in Washington "behave like adults."

When he was a Supreme Court clerk, he said, he observed each justice had his or her own views on cases that did not follow partisan lines, and he has aspired to "follow the values of the judiciary."

Financial futures dominate the industry, with cybersecurity and cryptocurrencies the hot issues. But Tarbert, a Baltimore native, visited farms, feedlots, and grain elevators in the Midwest because, he said, "the futures industry grew up through ag. If these markets aren't working for farmers and ranchers, they aren't working."

Tarbert had to cancel this year's CFTC ag meeting in Kansas City, but overall he has held 12 public meetings in the past year, more than the commission held in the last six years combined.

In the early weeks of the pandemic, ranchers were upset by market volatility and high consumer prices, so Tarbert appointed a Livestock Market Task Force and a liaison with the Agriculture Department.

He also convinced the White House and appropriators to increase the budget to implement the Dodd-Frank Act.

The CFTC's Democratic commissioners have agreed with the Republicans on most of the 18 rules that have been issued this year, but they said Tarbert's proposed rule on limiting positions in the derivatives market to comply with the Dodd-Frank Act was not strict enough. The issue has vexed the commission for 10 years.

Tarbert said he's now going through public comments on position limits and talking with his fellow commissioners. Even if the Democratic commissioners don't vote for the final rule, he said, they will have been consulted.

OPINION | REVIEW & OUTLOOK

Justice Thomas's Question Time

Telephone arguments aren't ideal, but here's a significant silver lining.

By The Editorial Board

May 4, 2020 6:16 pm ET

Associate Justice Clarence Thomas speaks during oral arguments before the Supreme Court in the case U.S. Patent and Trademark Office v. Booking.com as it is live streamed on a laptop, May 4.

The Supreme Court heard oral argument by telephone for the first time Monday, with a real-time audio feed carried by C-Span. Almost as unprecedented: About seven minutes in, Justice Clarence Thomas piped up with “a couple of questions.”

Justice Thomas's habit is to let his colleagues make the inquiries. He once went 10 years without posing a question at oral argument. Justice Thomas said in 2013 that Supreme Court advocates “get pummeled” these days: “I think we should listen to lawyers who are arguing their case.”

But holding oral arguments by conference call has dampened the usual free for all. Presumably to avoid undecipherable crosstalk, the Justices are being given the floor by order of seniority. Chief Justice John Roberts went first and then called on each of his colleagues, beginning with Justice Thomas, whose 28-year tenure is the longest on today's bench.

Monday's case, U.S. Patent and Trademark Office v. Booking.com, was a relatively dry affair. Generic terms aren't eligible for trademark. That rule applies, the government says, to a business named Generic Co. or Generic Inc. But how about a web address, Generic.com, or possibly Booking.com? Drawing an analogy, Justice Thomas asked the government's lawyer about vanity phone numbers like “1-800-PLUMBING, which is a registered mark.”

The subsequent two speakers built on his point. Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg posed “a follow-up to Justice Thomas.” Justice Stephen Breyer’s opening words: “The same question as Justice Thomas’s question.” When the lawyer for Booking.com finally stepped into the batter’s box, Justice Thomas had queries for her, too.

The Court has nine more virtual arguments scheduled in coming days. What a great chance for the public to witness the thoughtful Justice Thomas in action, so unlike the negative caricatures of him. The teleconference format is a little awkward, but there’s a silver lining if it encourages the High Court’s most resolute originalist to make his baritone voice heard.
