The Washington Free Beacon (6/18, Daley, 78K) says the ruling "capstones a first term for Trump that has seen little progress on immigration, to the disappointment of his supporters." The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Kendall, Bravin, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and McClatchy (6/18, Madan, Daugherty, 19K), among other news outlets, similarly report Thursday's ruling.

The CBS Evening News (6/18, story 2, 2:40, O'Donnell, 4.56M) reported on "the reaction of the people impacted most by this decision: Dreamers," and the New York Times (6/18, Jordan, 18.61M) reports "there was celebration Thursday in front of the Supreme Court in Washington and among young immigrants across the country, who had feared that the court would side with the government and clear the way for a speedy end to their legal lifeline." The Times spoke with several Dreamers about their reaction.

The Washington Times (6/18, A1, Dinan, 492K) reports many Dreamers "took to social media to celebrate the Supreme Court ruling, though many of them acknowledged they were surprised the case turned out that way."

A Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes the ruling, saying it is not a matter for the court, but rather Congress, to decide.

Republican Senators Criticize Ruling, Roberts. The Hill (6/18, Carney, 2.98M) reports, "Conservative senators are fuming over the Supreme Court's ruling...and, in particular, Chief Justice John Roberts." Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) said Roberts was posturing as a "Solomon who will save our institutions from political controversy and accountability." Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) "railed against Roberts during a Senate floor speech," saying, "Chief Justice Roberts has been playing games with the court to achieve the policy outcomes he desires." Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL), meanwhile, said the Court increasingly "appears to be legislating."

Obama, Biden Praise Decision. The CBS Evening News (6/18, lead story, 3:25, O'Donnell, 4.56M) reported "on Twitter, President Obama praised the decision and urged Americans to elect Joe Biden and a Democratic Congress that does its job."

ABC World News Tonight (6/18, lead story, 3:50, Muir, 7.39M) reported Joe Biden responded on Twitter, saying, "Here's my promise to you. On day one, I'll send a bill to Congress that creates a clear road map to citizenship for Dreamers and for 11 million undocumented migrants into our country."

Trump Sees US On Path Toward “Super V” Economic Recovery.

Breitbart (6/18, Spiering, 673K) reports President Trump on Thursday “cheered on the economic recovery after the coronavirus shutdown, describing the economic curve as a ‘super v’ at a White House event.” NEC Director Kudlow “shared several positive economic numbers with the group, noting that the economy was growing again quickly.” Kudlow said, “We will be back to where we were in 2019, we will have made up for the lost ground. It’s not going to take five years, we will have made it up with some decent numbers by the first quarter of 2021.” Trump said, “That’s called a Super V. It’s called a V Plus, that’s where we’re headed.”

Appearing on Fox News (6/18, 896K), Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro was asked for his thoughts on the economy. Commenting on the improving economic numbers, Navarro credited “Donald J. Trump, the greatest jobs President in modern history.” Navarro said, “We are doing it again. We have to get back to a good place, There will be structural headwinds but, so far we are on the upswing. There is a lot of hard work ahead of us.”

Economists Differ With Trump On Prospects Of Fast Recovery. Politico (6/18, Cassella, 4.29M) reports Trump has been “quick to declare victory against the coronavirus recession,” but “that view stands in stark contrast to projections by the Federal Reserve, the Congressional Budget Office and many economists who say that though the economy is on its way back, a full recovery may take years.” At the center of “the sharply different outlooks is the question of whether to focus on how far the economy has come, as Trump does, or how far it has left to go.” The White House has touted “certain statistics to bolster its election-year narrative, but it rarely acknowledges that widespread recovery and a return to full employment will hinge largely on the country’s ability to contain a virus that has infected about 2.2 million Americans and continues to spread.”

Pence Visits Michigan Plants, Declares “The American Comeback Has Begun.”

The Macomb (MI) Daily (6/18, Franz, 156K) reports Vice President Pence “visited two manufacturing plants in Sterling Heights,” Michigan, “on Thursday, declaring that the nation’s economic rebound is strong and crediting health care workers for their efforts during ‘challenging times’ caused by the COVID-19 pandemic.” Said Pence, “Businesses are open again in this great state because we’re opening up America again. ... The American comeback has begun.” Pence also praised “the economic stimulus package pushed by President Donald Trump and approved by Congress, and the paycheck protection program, while crediting employers for doing their part when possible.”

MLive (MI) (6/18, Barrett, 925K) says Pence “delivered an optimistic message about the ability of Michigan’s economy to bounce back,” and adds he and Labor Secretary Scalia “visited Macomb County, a key 2020 electoral battleground, to celebrate the reopening of Michigan’s economy.” Both officials “said the Trump administration can restore the US economy to its former glory after a historic period of economic expansion was cut short by the pandemic.” WDIV-TV Detroit (6/18, Johncox, 460K) recounts “Pence also had lunch at Engine House in Mount Clemens prior to the tour and speech on Thursday.” The restaurant “is owned by local Detroit firefighter Captain Greg Sisoy and former Detroit firefighter John Gusumano, who retired after 31 years of service.”

The Detroit News (6/18, Mauger, Burke, 825K) reports “the Republican vice president did not wear a face covering Thursday during his stops in Macomb County.”

SBA’s Carranza Touts Trump’s Engagement With Recipients Of PPP Loans.

Appearing on Fox Business’ Mornings With Maria (6/18) on Thursday morning, SBA Administrator Carranza said she was scheduled to speak to a roundtable of business owners and governors later in the day about “how the President is working long and hard, and listening, not only to the governors, working with them very closely, but also engaging with the small business community, the recipients of the PPP, the Paycheck Protection Program. We are going to learn how expedient it was, how they have transitioned their businesses, and embraced the retention of employees.”

New Unemployment Claims Continue To Fall At Slow Rate.

The AP (6/18, Rugaber) reports that “U.S. employers are still shedding jobs at a heavy rate, a trend that points to a slow and prolonged recovery from the recession.” The AP adds “the number of laid-off workers seeking unemployment benefits barely fell last week to 1.5 million, the government said Thursday,” which “was down from a peak of nearly 7 million in March, and...marked an 11th straight weekly drop.” However, “the number is still more than twice the record high that existed before the pandemic,” and “the total number of people receiving jobless aid remains a lofty 20.5 million.” The New York Times (6/18, Casselman, Hsu, 18.61M) says “not all of the unemployment claims reported on Thursday necessarily reflect new layoffs,” as “some states are working through backlogs of claims filed earlier in the crisis,” and “in other cases, people filing under multiple programs may be double-counted.”

NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 8, 1:30, Holt, 6.63M) referred to “a dire new report on unemployment,” and the CBS Evening News (6/18, story 5, 1:10, O’Donnell, 4.56M) to “13 straight weeks of at least a million claims, and more than 45 million unemployed since the crisis began.” The numbers come “as more states are reporting record numbers of new coronavirus infections, including the country’s three most populous states, along with Oklahoma, where the President is holding a rally this weekend.”

Reuters (6/18, Mutikani) reports that the Labor Department’s “weekly jobless claims report...sketched a picture of a distressed labor market even though employers hired a record 2.5 million workers in May as businesses reopened after shuttering in mid-March to slow the spread of COVID-19.” Reuters adds “at least 29 million people are collecting unemployment checks.” Reuters adds that “stubbornly high joblessness could stifle the nascent signs of economic recovery that had been flagged by a record jump in retail sales in May and a sharp rebound in permits for future home construction.”

Bloomberg (6/18, Pickert, 4.73M) also reports that “by several metrics, the economy has rebounded at a faster pace than many anticipated. Payrolls at companies increased by several million in May and consumer spending on cars, restaurant meals and more soared last month, exceeding expectations as states loosened restrictions.” However, according to Bloomberg, “the jobless claims data remain a glaring blemish that shows churn and volatility in a labor market that entered the year in solid shape.” The New York Times (6/18, 18.61M) reports, “Economists said recent layoffs, though smaller than the wave in March and early April, suggested that the crisis was reaching deeper into the economy.” The AP (6/18, Rugaber), Politico (6/18, Rainey, 4.29M), and the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Morath, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Record Number Of “Mega Bankruptcies” Predicted This Year.

The New York Times (6/18, Walsh, 18.61M) reports a number of companies have already succumbed to the pressures presented by the pandemic “and the wave of bankruptcies is going to get bigger.” According to the Times, “in many cases, the coronavirus crisis exposed deeper problems, like staggering debts run up by companies whose business models were already struggling to deal with changes in consumer behavior.” Using a “widely used method of predicting business failures,” Edward I. Altman, a professor at New York University’s Stern School of Business, has “estimated that this year will easily set a record for so-called mega bankruptcies – filings by companies with $1 billion or more in debt. And he expects the number of merely large bankruptcies – at least $100 million – to challenge the record set the year after the 2008 economic crisis.”

Brown: Essential Workers Deserve To Be Treated As Valuable Assets.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) calls on business leaders to demonstrate they support their employees by raising pay and improving working conditions. Throughout the coronavirus crisis, Brown says, workers on the front lines have proved they are essential to business. Brown tells corporate leaders that essential workers deserve to be treated that way.

WSJournal: Lamont Right To Oppose Extending Enhanced Jobless Benefits.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Connecticut Gov. Ned Lamont (D) is right to oppose extending enhanced unemployment benefits. His stance goes against Democratic orthodoxy, the Journal observes, and highlights the tension between state leaders who want their economies to rebound and Democrats in Washington who want to prolong economic shutdowns.

Wirecard Shares Plummet As Auditors Say €1.9B Missing.

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Davies, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that shares in payments company Wirecard fell nearly 62 percent on Thursday after auditors said they could not locate €1.9 billion of the company’s cash. The German company delayed publication of its annual report and said its management board was working with Ernst & Young GmbH on the matter.

Group Claims US Farm Aid Violates Treaty Rules.

Bloomberg (6/18, Dorning, 4.73M) reports that the Environmental Working Group, “a critic of farm subsidies,” claims President Trump’s “billions in bailout payments for farmers probably pushed the U.S. past international treaty limits on subsidies, potentially inviting retaliation from trading partners.” The EWG “calculated that the aid pushed ‘trade distorting’ subsidies covered under a 1994 international agreement to $34 billion in 2019, far above the pact’s $19.1 billion cap for the US.” Bloomberg adds, “The European Union, China and five other World Trade Organization members have already raised complaints that Trump’s farm assistance payments may violate international rules.”

Trump Says Under Democrats, “The Whole Country Will Be Minneapolis.”

The Washington Post (6/18, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports that President Trump “painted a dire image of America if he loses his reelection, warning in an interview with his son that the economy would collapse, law enforcement would disappear and the ‘whole country will be Minneapolis.’” The President said, “I feel that if the Democrats get in, we are literally going to end up in a recession-slash-depression the likes of which you’ve never seen. There will be tremendous negative growth, there will be tremendous bedlam all over the place, there won’t be law and order. You’ll have a Seattle, you’ll have a Minneapolis like you’ve never seen before. The whole country will be Minneapolis.” Trump’s remarks were in reference “to the looting and riots that beset the city for several nights following the death of George Floyd.”

Twitter Adds “Manipulated Media” Warning To Trump Tweet.

The Washington Post (6/18, Zakrzewski, 14.2M) reports Twitter added “a warning label to one of President Trump’s tweets after the company determined it violated its policies on manipulated media.” The President “tweeted a doctored version of a popular video that went viral in 2019, which showed a black and a white toddler hugging. In the version Trump shared, the video has been edited with ominous music and a fake CNN headline that says, ‘Terrified toddler runs from racist baby.’” The New York Times (6/18, Conger, 18.61M) says Twitter’s move “is likely to escalate tensions” between Trump and the social media company.

Cotton Says Twitter “Threatened To Permanently Lock Down” His Account. Appearing on Fox News (6/18, 896K), Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) said, “Twitter threatened to permanently lock down my account if I didn’t censor my own tweets about riots and looting. ... We received shifting explanation and unclear guidance. I called Twitter’s bluff and did not delete those tweets in 30 minutes and they got back to me and said they weren’t going to take action. It’s an example of how arbitrary and hypocritical some of the social media platforms can be.”

Facebook Removes Anti-Antifa Trump Ads That Featured Symbol Once Used By Nazis.

The Washington Post (6/18, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports that on Thursday, Facebook “deactivated dozens of ads placed by President Trump’s reelection campaign that included a symbol once used by the Nazis to designate political prisoners in concentration camps.” The Post says the “red inverted triangle” was in an ad that is “part of the campaign’s online salvo against antifa and ‘far-left groups.’” According to the Post, “The red triangle appeared in paid posts sponsored by Trump and Vice President Pence, as well as by the ‘Team Trump’ campaign page.”

USA Today (6/18, Wu, 10.31M) says Anti-Defamation League CEO Jonathan Greenblatt noted on Twitter the symbol used in the ad was used by Nazis “to identify political victims in concentration camps.” Tweeted Greenblatt, “Using it to attack political opponents is highly offensive. @POTUS’ campaign needs to learn its history, as ignorance is no excuse for using Nazi-related symbols.” The Hill (6/18, Rodrigo, 2.98M), Breitbart (6/18, Bokhari, 673K), and the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Glazer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Trump Campaign: Triangle Is An Antifa Symbol, And Ad In Question Was About Antifa. The AP (6/18, Tucker, Ortutay) reports that “in a statement, Trump campaign communications director Tim Murtaugh said the inverted red triangle was a symbol used by antifa so it was included in an ad about antifa.” Moreover, “he said the symbol is not in the Anti-Defamation League’s database of symbols of hate.” Added Murtaugh, “But it is ironic that it took a Trump ad to force the media to implicitly concede that Antifa is a hate group.” Reuters (6/18, Culliford) points out Murtaugh also wrote, “We would note that Facebook still has an inverted red triangle emoji in use, which looks exactly the same, so it’s curious that they would target only this ad.”

The Washington Times (6/18, Lovelace, 492K) reports “the Trump campaign also defended its use of the symbol in a tweet responding to Media Matters.” Trump’s War Room wrote on Twitter, “This is an emoji. ... It’s also a symbol widely used by Antifa. It was used in an ad about Antifa.”

USA Today (6/18, Wu, 10.31M) confirms “the ads called on the president’s supporters to sign a petition and ‘stand with President Trump against ANTIFA.’” The New York Times (6/18, Karni, 18.61M) also reports “the Trump campaign had used the ads, with a picture of a large red triangle, to inveigh against antifa,” whom the President “has blamed for violence and vandalism during the nationwide protests against racial injustice. There is scant evidence that antifa has been involved in any coordinated campaigns during the demonstrations.”

Top State Official Resigns Over Trump’s Handling Of Racial Tensions.

The Washington Post (6/18, Kim, 14.2M) reports Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs Mary Elizabeth Taylor, “who has served in the Trump administration since its first day,” is resigning “over President Trump’s recent handling of racial tensions across the country – saying that the president’s actions ‘cut sharply against my core values and convictions.’” Her “five-paragraph resignation letter...serves as an indictment of Trump’s stewardship at a time of national unrest from one of the administration’s highest ranking African Americans and an aide who was viewed as both loyal and effective in serving his presidency.”

Tim Scott Recounts His Experiences With Police As He Promotes Legislation.

In a USA Today (6/18, 10.31M) op-ed, Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC) writes, “I, like many other Black Americans, have found myself choking on my own fears and disbelief when faced with the realities of an encounter with law enforcement. At the age of 21, I was pulled over for simply having an improper headlight, and yet the officer felt the need to place his hand on his weapon and call me ‘boy.’” Scott writes that even now, he is “not immune to being stopped while driving at home or even while walking onto the grounds of the Capitol.” Scott says his JUSTICE Act will bring about “police reform, accountability and transparency.”

McEnany: Trump Worked “Very Closely” With Scott On Police Reform Bill. Appearing on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (6/18, 831K), White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said, “The President, the Administration, we did work very closely with Sen. Scott. This is a great bill. It’s one that closely tracks the President’s executive order. It’s very strong. It’s fair. It’s even-handed. We hope to see it pass.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, A1, Campo-Flores, Jamerson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) has a 2,700-word front-page feature on the years of pressure brought by Black Lives Matter activists and their allies that has resulted in the recent moves to overhaul police.

Cotton, Perdue Back Scott Bill. Appearing on Fox News (6/18, 896K), Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) said, “I want to commend Sen. Tim Scott for his thoughtful and careful approach to the JUSTICE Act which I’m proud to cosponsor. ... The Republican bill will provide more resources and guidance for police training and resourcing, and will hold officers accountable when they do the wrong thing as all good officers want to do. Unfortunately, the House Democrats’ bill will try to essentially defund the police and put left-wing groups in charge of policing standards.”

Appearing on Fox News’ Daily Briefing (6/18), Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) said, “The JUSTICE Act is our best effort to move quickly and to do a couple of things. One, to make sure the police forces, demographically, reflect the communities they serve. That's not the case today. We believe they need more training about deescalation techniques and the right way to serve in addition to policing. And then when more data about problem cops that transfer from one district or jurisdiction to another."

Pelosi Orders Removal Of Portraits Of Ex-Speakers Who Served Confederacy.

ABC World News Tonight (6/18, story 6, 0:20, Muir, 7.39M) and the CBS Evening News (6/18, story 8, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.56M) both briefly reported that House Speaker Pelosi has ordered the removal of portraits of four former House speakers who also served the Confederacy. Both quoted Pelosi as describing the portraits as symbols of "violent bigotry and grotesque racism."

The Washington Examiner (6/18, Ferrechio, 448K) reports Pelosi "said she has ordered House Clerk Cheryl L. Johnson to remove the portraits of former Speakers Robert Hunter of Virginia (1839-41), Howell Cobb of Georgia (1849-51), James Orr of South Carolina (1857-59), and Charles Crisp of Georgia (1891-95). ... All four men were part of the Confederacy in one form or another." The AP (6/18, Daly) and Reuters (6/18) also have reports.

Blunt Blocks Removal Of Confederate Statues From Capitol. The Hill (6/18, Carney, 2.98M) reports Senate Rules Chairman Roy Blunt "blocked the Senate from passing a bill to remove Confederate statues from the Capitol" after Senate Minority Leader Schumer and Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) tried to pass the measure by unanimous consent. Blunt said Congress "had an agreement with states and that he wanted time to consider giving the issue a hearing in the Rules Committee." The Washington Post (6/18, Wagner, Kane, 14.2M) reports that last week, Pelosi "sought to immediately remove 11 of the statues" – an idea Senate Majority Leader McConnell "rejected, saying it should remain a state issue."

WPost Analysis: Democrats Hope Confederate Legacy Issue Will Help In November. According to the Washington Post (6/18, Kim, 14.2M), "President Trump's pledge not to sign legislation that would rename military bases that honor Confederate leaders has left Senate Republicans struggling over how to respond to an issue that is at the forefront of the national debate over how the country deals with its racist past." The Post says Democrats are "looking to make the Confederacy an issue ahead of November's elections after a powerful Senate committee advanced a bill last week containing language that would rename all military assets' that bear the name of Confederate military officials."

In the Washington Post (6/18, Seidule, 14.2M), Ty Seidule offers suggestions for new names for military bases currently named for Confederates, including soldiers of various ethnicities who won the Medal of Honor.

Esper Tasks New Boards With Increasing Diversity In US Military.

Stars And Stripes (6/18, Dickstein, 30K) reports Defense Secretary Esper "announced Thursday that he would create two new groups charged with studying racial diversity challenges in the military in an effort to make the Pentagon a leader in a national conversation on systemic racism." Esper said "in a video to the force" posted Thursday morning, "We are not immune to the forces of bias and prejudice – whether visible or invisible, conscious or unconscious. ... These things have no place in our military. They have no place in our country." The new "internal board, dubbed the Defense Board of Diversity and Inclusion in the Military, is charged with reporting to the defense secretary in December with 'concrete, actionable recommendations.'" Esper also tweeted, "Bias & prejudice have no place in our military, or in our country. Prejudices – whether visible or invisible, conscious or unconscious – remain a burden to many. They hold back the diversity of the force, representation in our officer ranks, and experiences of our minority members."

The Washington Times (6/18, Wolfgang, 492K) reports Esper "also directed civilian and uniformed leadership inside the Pentagon to present other ideas that can be put into practice immediately." The Times adds "the Navy, Marine Corps and several other arms of the military also have banned all use of the Confederate flag, and Army officials say they're open to stripping the names of Confederate generals off of 10 military bases. President Trump, however, opposes that idea."

The Military Times (6/18, Myers, 772K) reports that "on day 23 of nationwide protests against police brutality and racial inequality in America's justice system, the Pentagon began an initiative to take a look at those issues in its own backyard." Along similar lines, the Washington Post (6/18, Lamothe, 14.2M) says "the announcements come amid a national reckoning after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody last month, and amid sharp criticism of...Trump's advocacy for using active-duty troops to quell unrest," and adds that Esper and JCS Chairman Gen. Mark Milley "were against doing so."

The New York Times (6/18, Cooper, 18.61M) reports "the military has long promoted itself as one of the most diverse institutions in the country. Indeed, about 43 percent of the 1.3 million men and women on active duty are people of color." However, "those making the crucial decisions, like how to respond to the coronavirus crisis and how many troops to send to Afghanistan, are almost entirely white and male." The Times adds that "of the 41 most senior commanders in the military – those with four-star ranks in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines and Coast Guard – only two are black."

Attorney Says Officer Charged In Brooks Death Has Not Agreed To Be Prosecution Witness.

Reuters (6/18, Layne) reports Devin Brosnan, "one of the two Atlanta police officers charged in the shooting death of Rayshard Brooks, has not agreed to be a witness for the prosecution, his lawyer said on Thursday, contradicting an assertion by the lead prosecutor on the case." Brosnan turned himself in at the Fulton County Jail on Thursday "and was soon released after filling out booking forms, getting fingerprinted and signing his own bond."

All three broadcast networks covered the story along with other developments in the Brooks shooting case. On NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 2, 2:30, Holt, 6.63M), Blayne Alexander reported Brosnan's lawyer "den[ie]d that his client failed to provide first aid and stood on Brooks' shoulders." Brosnan himself addressed the shooting on MSNBC, saying, "I think it is a tragic event, and it's a total tragedy that a man had to lose his life that night."

On ABC World News Tonight (6/18, story 2, 2:55, Muir, 7.39M), Steve Osunsami said, "The rank and file of Atlanta police believe the shooting was justified and that city leaders served these officers up for political reasons. Police across the city have been calling in sick. The official line from police is that the numbers are small, saying in statements, 'We have enough resources to maintain operations and remain able to respond to incidents.'" The CBS Evening News (6/18, story 3, 2:25, O'Donnell, 4.56M) covered both the sick-out and other developments.

Fox's Carlson: Ex-Officer's Stepmother Fired From Job. The Washington Examiner (6/18, Chaitin, 448K) reports Fox News' Tucker Carlson reported that Melissa Rolfe, "the stepmother of the former Atlanta police officer charged with fatally shooting" Brooks, has been fired from her job. Carlson said, "Rolfe was promised that her job was safe, but today she was told, and we're quoting, 'We have to terminate our relationship with you.' No other explanation was offered." The New York Times (6/18, 18.61M) reports that Garrett Rolfe "faces a total of 11 charges in connection with" Brooks' death.

NYPD May Be Mulling Massive July 4th "Sickout" To Give City Its "Independence."

The New York Post (6/18, McCarthy, Moore, 4.57M) reports, "A labor strike is brewing in the NYPD. A pair of flyers making their rounds among NYPD officers are encouraging them to call out sick July 4th – as retribution for police reform and a perceived anti-cop climate following the outrage over high-profile police killings of unarmed black men across the country, multiple cops told The Post." The Post adds "one message calls for the strike to kick off at 3 p.m. July 4," with the flyer reading, "NYPD cops will strike on July 4th to let the city have their independence without cops." The message "is being passed among cops via text, according to sources." The Post adds "it's unclear whether the messages are being written by other police officers."

The Washington Examiner (6/18, Mastrangelo, 448K) quotes Police Benevolent Association President Patrick Lynch as saying, "Over the past few weeks, we have been attacked in the streets, demonized in the media and denigrated by practically every politician in this city. ... Now, we are facing the possibility of being arrested any time we go out to do our job."

As Protesters Demanded, Seattle Police Union Expelled From Labor Council.

The AP (6/18) reports, "The largest labor group in the Seattle area has expelled the city's police union, saying the guild representing officers failed to address racism within its ranks." The vote "Wednesday night by the King County Labor Council to exclude the Seattle Police Officers Guild comes after weeks of protests in the city over police brutality and racism following the killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis." The Seattle Times (6/18, Takahama, 935K) also says it was "a decision pushed for by many protesters who have been demonstrating against police brutality and racism in recent weeks." The Times adds that "in an hourslong roll call vote, 45,435 of the Martin Luther King, Jr. County Labor Council delegates voted in favor of passing a motion approved May 20 by the executive board, effectively removing the Seattle Police Officers Guild from the council – while 36,760 of the delegates voted against."

Olympia Mayor Likens Protesters Who Vandalized Her Home To Domestic Terrorists. The New York Post (6/18, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports, "A Democratic mayor in Washington state spoke out this week against the protests supporting the Black Lives Matter movement – after a group of vandals damaged her home." Mayor Cheryl Selby "told The Olympian this week that she was 'really trying to process' the news that her home had been vandalized," but added, "It's like domestic terrorism. It's unfair. It hurts when you're giving so much to your community."

Noting CHAZ's "Wall," Trump Quips He Was "Ahead Of Our Times." President Trump tweeted Thursday, "First thing the anarchists did upon taking over Seattle was 'BUILD A WALL'. See, I was ahead of our times!"

Under Fire From Activists, Nashville Police Chief To Resign.

The Tennessean (6/18, Timms, 458K) reports, "Metro Nashville Police Chief Steve Anderson plans to retire this fall amid ongoing calls for police reform in Nashville and across the nation." Anderson "has been a central figure in the city through his 10 years leading the department," and "has been lauded for his response to previous protests against police brutality and for reforming the way Nashville responds to domestic violence." However, "as the nation faces a renewed call for police reform in the wake of the death of George Floyd, activists feel Anderson has become an impediment to change," as Anderson "has come under fire from activists and Nashville council members in recent weeks amid the local and national debate." WTVF-TV Nashville, TN (6/18, 137K) reports that during a news conference, Nashville Mayor John Cooper (D) "was asked several times whether he asked Chief Anderson to resign," but "Cooper did not provide a direct answer either way."

The AP (6/18) reports "Anderson has been criticized in recent years, particularly after two high-profile deadly shootings by white officers of black men in 2017 and 2018." Nashville "also has run into delays in trying to implement widespread use of body cameras for officers, with the mayor saying last week that the full deployment of the devices was beginning and that other precincts would begin getting them by February 2021 at the latest."

Newsweek (6/18, Martin, 1.53M) also says "some lawmakers said" Anderson "was resistant to change, making any effort toward police reform difficult," and that "in June, 15 members of Nashville's City Council, out of 40 council members total, signed a resolution asking for Anderson to be removed." The Hill (6/18, Budryk, 2.98M) indicates the resolution called "for Anderson's resignation in furtherance of 'meaningful policy and behavioral change,' adding '[i]n order for police practices to change in Nashville and in order to build trust between the Metropolitan Nashville Police Department and communities of color in Nashville, a change in leadership is essential.'"

Police Union Survey: 71% Considering Leaving DC Police.

Breitbart (6/18, Wong, 673K) reports, "A D.C. Police Union survey of its members released Thursday showed that of nearly 600 who responded, 71 percent are considering leaving the Metropolitan Police Department." The survey "was in response to emergency legislation passed by the D.C. Council last week that the union said would have 'wide ranging negative impacts to the working condition of police officers in the District.'"

Milwaukee Public Schools To End Use Of Police Outside Schools, At Events.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (6/18, Johnson, 632K) reports Milwaukee Public Schools "will end the use of police officers outside schools, at athletic events and recreational activities under a resolution unanimously approved by board members" on Thursday.

Duluth Officials Push To Remove "Chief" Form Job Titles.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (6/18, Galioto, 1.04M) reports Duluth, Minnesota "city leaders are making a push to remove the word 'chief' from job titles, calling the term offensive to indigenous people." The Star Tribune adds that at a news conference Wednesday, Duluth Mayor Emily Larson (D) "implored City Council members to vote to approve the change next week 'so that we have more inclusive leadership and less language that is rooted in hurt and offensive, intentional marginalization.'"

Some Small-Town Police Brutality Protests Facing Armed Backlash.

The Washington Post (6/18, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports "demonstrations against racial injustice and police brutality" have "made their way into small-town America, redrawing the geography of the Black Lives Matter movement." But unlike in larger metropolitan areas, the organizers "have faced fierce online backlash and armed intimidation, which in some places is unfolding with the apparent support of local law enforcement." The Post says "the armed mobilization sheds light on the growth of the anti-government militia groups, whose efforts – often coordinated on Facebook and other online platforms – have expanded since the onset of the coronavirus pandemic" and the recent protests.

Arthur Ashe Statue Vandalized With "White Lives Matter" Graffiti.

The CBS Evening News (6/18, story 9, 0:10, O'Donnell, 4.56M) briefly reported that in Richmond, Virginia on Wednesday, "a statue of African American tennis legend Arthur Ashe a native of the city, was defaced with 'WLM,' and 'White Lives Matter.'"

University Of Florida Bans "Gator Bait" Chant.

ESPN (6/18, Adelson, 14.75M) reports, "The University of Florida will no longer allow its 'Gator Bait' cheer at sporting events because of 'historic racist imagery associated with the phrase,' school president Kent Fuchs announced Thursday." The move was "part of a university-wide review to help the school take steps against racism," and "Fuchs highlighted the cheer as an action that will be taken immediately." The Washington Times (6/18, Chasmar, 492K) points out that "according to the Jim Crow Museum of Racist Memorabilia at Ferris State University in Michigan, the term 'alligator bait' was used as a racial slur against African Americans and some black babies may have even been used as actual alligator bait."

UCLA Professor: "What Kind Of Society Values Property Over Black Life?"

UCLA professor of American history Robin D.G. Kelley writes in the New York Times (6/18, 18.61M) that "the hackneyed emphasis on 'why loot?' obscures the critical question black people have been asking for centuries: What kind of society values property over black life? ... Philonise Floyd put it eloquently when he spoke about his brother's killing before the House Judiciary Committee: 'Is that what a black man's worth? Twenty dollars?'"

Trump Says Testing Is "Overrated," Touts "Greatest Testing Machine In History."

The Washington Post (6/18, Bellware, 14.2M) reports that in a Wall Street Journal interview, President Trump "called coronavirus testing 'overrated' and suggested...that some people wear masks not as a health precaution but to signal their disapproval of him." Trump is quoted as saying, "I personally think testing is overrated, even though I created the greatest testing machine in history." The Post says Trump "cited more testing as the reason there are more confirmed cases. 'In many ways, it makes us look bad,' he said." USA Today (6/18, Fritze, Rodriguez, 10.31M) notes Trump added "If we stop testing right now, we'd have very few cases, if any." USA Today adds that "asked about that statement, White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany said it was 'entirely logical.'" Said McEnany, "Countries that don't do as much testing don't identify the same number of cases."

Coronavirus Cases Rising In US.

ABC World News Tonight (6/18, story 4, 2:05, Muir, 7.39M) reported the coronavirus is "surging here in the US." ABC's Matt Gutman said, "Twenty states reporting increases in new cases and hospitalization are increasing in at least 18 states."

The CBS Evening News (6/18, story 6, 1:00, O'Donnell, 4.56M) reported, "California reported almost 4,300 cases on Wednesday, a single-day record, and hospitalizations surged 11 percent over the last 24 hours in Texas. In Florida, daily cases reached a record high."

On NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 3, 2:05, Holt, 6.63M), Sam Brock reported, "The healthcare strain in Texas is more troubling – a 95 percent increase in COVID hospitalizations just since Memorial Day. In Ohio, new cases hit the highest mark in nearly a month, the Governor there now redeploying the National Guard."

Protests Haven't Yet Led To Significant Increase In COVID-19 Cases. The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Hernandez, Krouse, Abbott, Scott, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports early testing data from a few cities and states in the US seems to suggest the recent protests decrying racial injustices haven't led to a marked increase in new coronavirus cases. Public-health officials caution that the data is still preliminary, however, and cases linked to protests could still rise.

Fauci Says He Will Oppose Announcing Vaccine Unless It Is "Safe And Scientifically Sound."

McClatchy (6/18, Wilner, 19K) reports NIAID Director Fauci "pledged on Thursday to publicly oppose any effort by the Trump administration to rush an announcement of a COVID-19 vaccine by the November election unless the medicine has been proven 'safe and scientifically sound.'" In an interview, Fauci "said he disapproved of the use of the term 'Operation Warp Speed' – the name of the federal vaccine development project – because it incorrectly implies that critical scientific benchmarks for safety and effectiveness might be sidestepped in a rushed government effort to achieve a vaccine." Fauci said, "There is no chance in the world that I'm going to be forced into agreeing to something that I don't think is safe and scientifically sound. I'll guarantee you that."

Fauci: "Football May Not Happen This Year." Reuters (6/18, Keating) reports that on Thursday, Fauci "cast doubt on the National Football League playing this year. 'Unless players are essentially in a bubble – insulated from the community and they are tested nearly every day – it would be very hard to see how football is able to be played this fall,' Fauci said in an interview with CNN." Fauci added, "If there is a second wave, which is certainly a possibility and which would be complicated by the predictable flu season, football may not happen this year."

In an interview with the Washington Post (6/18, Caren, 14.2M), Fauci says, "Unfortunately for us, we still are in the first wave because even though there's variability throughout the country, where some places like New York City are going very nicely down, staying down so that they can start to reopen, simultaneously, we're seeing in certain states an increase in cases and even now an increase in some of the states of hospitalization. What that directly is related to is complicated. It's a combination of testing more, but not explained completely by testing more, because some of the states really do have a real increase in the percent of the tests that are positive."

Scientists Call On Journal To Retract Coronavirus Study Because Of Flawed Analysis.

The New York Times (6/18, Mandavilli, 18.61M) reports, "A group of leading scientists is calling on a journal to retract a paper on the effectiveness of masks, saying the study has 'egregious errors' and contains numerous 'verifiably false' statements." The study now under scrutiny was "published on June 11 in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences." It "acknowledged that mask-wearing 'significantly reduces the number of infections' with the coronavirus but said that 'other mitigation measures, such as social distancing implemented in the United States, are insufficient by themselves in protecting the public.'" The study "also said that airborne transmission was the primary way the virus spreads." According to the Times, "many scientists believe that social distancing is a big factor in reducing transmission of the virus, and that airborne transmission, while it may occur, is not the primary means by which the virus spreads."

Study: Using Blood Plasma From People Who Recovered Is Safe, Possibly Beneficial Treatment.

The Washington Post (6/18, Johnson, 14.2M) reports a study of 20,000 hospitalized COVID-19 patients "who received transfusions of blood plasma from people who recovered found the treatment was safe and suggests giving it to people early in the disease may be beneficial." The study, published Thursday in Mayo Clinic Proceedings, is "the largest analysis yet of an experimental treatment rapidly deployed in the early weeks of the pandemic through a grass roots effort by physicians." The results showed that "severe adverse events were rare, in less than 1 percent of patients. But they also highlight the difficulty of conducting conclusive studies in the midst of a global pandemic – and add to a body of inconclusive and sometimes conflicting evidence about the approach."

Newsom Orders Californians To Wear Masks In Indoor Public Spaces.

The Los Angeles Times (6/18, Willon, 4.64M) reports Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) on Thursday "ordered all Californians to wear face coverings while in public or high-risk settings, including when shopping, taking public transit or seeking medical care, following growing concerns that an increase in coronavirus cases has been caused by residents failing to voluntarily take that precaution." The New York Times (6/18, 18.61M) says Newsom "issued the order as California reported more than 4,000 new cases on Wednesday, a new one-day record. The new guidance states that 'people in California must wear face coverings' in indoor public spaces from offices to Ubers to apartment hallways, and outdoors if it is not possible to stay six feet away from people in other households." The AP (6/18, Cava, 10.31M) and Wall Street Journal (6/18, Calfas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Cuomo May Order Quarantine For Visitors From States With Case Spikes.

CNBC (6/18, Higgins-Dunn, Kim, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Thursday, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "said...he's considering imposing a quarantine on travelers arriving to New York from states like Florida where coronavirus cases have spiked. 'I haven't made a decision yet, but I have had experts advise me of that. It is a real concern,' Cuomo said when asked about whether he'd consider imposing some sort of quarantine measure or taking health precautions at airports where travel has increased." Cuomo is quoted as saying, "The number of people who are getting infected and getting sick and walking into a hospital is going up in these states. Undeniably. And you can go state by state. It's Arizona. It's Texas. It's Florida. It's North Carolina. It's South Carolina. It's Utah. It's Montana. It's Alaska. It's 20 states on the increase."

De Blasio, Cuomo: Many NYC Businesses Will reopen On Monday. The New York Times (6/18, Gold, 18.61M) reports that New York City "will enter its next phase of reopening on Monday, with as many as 300,000 employees expected to return to their jobs as outdoor dining, in-store shopping and office work resumes." Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) said on Thursday, "I'm very comfortable now saying that we will start Phase 2 on Monday,." Also on Thursday, Cuomo "said...that the state would not make its final decision on easing more restrictions until Friday." However, Cuomo adds, "My advice to New York City businesses: plan to reopen Monday in Phase 2."

New York Hospital Prepares For Potential Second Wave. NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 5, 3:10, Holt, 6.63M) provided a look inside one of the COVID units of a New York City hospital. NBC's Gabe Gutierrez reported, "Inside Lennox Hill hospital in Manhattan, the fight against the coronavirus has changed drastically." Gutierrez said "they won the battle," but they are "now preparing for a potential second wave this year coinciding with flu season," so "the war may not be over."

Michigan Supreme Court Asked To Clarify Whitmer's Emergency Powers.

The Detroit News (6/18, LeBlanc, 825K) reports, "A federal judge asked the Michigan Supreme Court Thursday to clarify" whether Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) "has the authority to continue issuing or renewing executive orders under either of the two state laws that govern her emergency powers." US District Judge Paul Maloney's "request came on the same day that Whitmer extended Michigan's state of emergency through July 16." Federal and state lawsuits are "seeking answers to whether state law allowed for the governor's emergency powers to continue after April 30, even without legislative approvals, and whether the emergency laws giving Whitmer virtually limitless authority violate the separation of powers between the governor and Legislature in Michigan's Constitution."

Michigan Lifts Barber's License Suspension. The AP (6/18) reports "the state of Michigan has lifted the suspension of a barber's license, but he still faces a hearing for cutting hair while shops and salons were closed" by Whitmer. The AP adds "an administrative law judge on Tuesday granted the state's request to lift Karl Manke's suspension," as "regulators said an 'imminent threat' to public health no longer exists at the Owosso barbershop."

Arizona Sheriff Critical Of Lockdown Tested Positive At White House.

The Washington Post (6/18, Bella, 14.2M) reports that "as the rest of Arizona followed a stay-at-home order imposed by the governor in May, Pinal County Sheriff Mark Lamb proclaimed that the state's attempt to curb the spread of the novel coronavirus was unconstitutional." The Post adds, "On Wednesday, less than two months after publicly challenging the state's efforts to slow the spread of a virus that has now spiked in Arizona, Lamb announced he had tested positive for the coronavirus before a scheduled meeting with President Trump." Lamb "was invited on Tuesday to the White House as part of Trump's meeting with law enforcement officials and the signing of his executive action on policing. As part of a mandatory coronavirus screening for all White House visitors, he learned he had the virus."

Nebraska Governor Threatens To Withhold Federal Funds From Counties With Mask Mandates.

The Omaha World-Herald (6/18, 641K) reports Nebraska Gov. Pete Ricketts (R) has "told counties that they won't receive any of the $100 million in federal COVID-19 money if their 'customers' are required to wear masks. ... The no-mask mandate has been poorly received in some corners of the state, with officials criticizing the loss of local control. It also runs counter to the advice of public health officials, who have stressed the importance of wearing masks."

Airlines Increase Safety Protocols As Summer Travel Increases.

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Sider, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on the jump in travel bookings as Americans feel ready to begin traveling again by plane. Airlines are adding more domestic flights, as well as new sanitation and safety protocols. For instance, they are implementing stricter cleaning regimens in areas including bathrooms, ticket counters, and more.

Trump Says “Wacko” Bolton’s Book “Is A Compilation Of Lies.”

President Trump continued to criticize former National Security Adviser John Bolton on Thursday, tweeting at 9:08 a.m., “Bolton’s book, which is getting terrible reviews, is a compilation of lies and made up stories, all intended to make me look bad. Many of the ridiculous statements he attributes to me were never made, pure fiction. Just trying to get even for firing him like the sick puppy he is!” A little more than an hour later, Trump tweeted, “When Wacko John Bolton went on Deface the Nation and so stupidly said that he looked at the ‘Libyan Model’ for North Korea, all hell broke out. Kim Jong Un, who we were getting along with very well, went ‘ballistic’, just like his missiles – and rightfully so. He didn’t want Bolton anywhere near him. Bolton’s dumbest of all statements set us back very badly with North Korea, even now. I asked him, ‘what the hell were you thinking?’ He had no answer and just apologized. That was early on, I should have fired him right then & there!”

All three broadcast networks covered the controversy over Bolton’s new book. On ABC World News Tonight (6/18, story 5, 2:45, Muir, 7.39M), Martha Raddatz said Trump is “attacking [Bolton] as a ‘wacko,’ calling his book a compilation of lies and made-up stories. ... Bolton had some strong words for President Trump when he sat down with me for a wide-ranging interview, after 17 months at the President’s side.” Bolton: “I don’t think he’s fit for office. I don’t think he has the competence to carry out the job. There really isn’t any guiding principle that I was able to discern other than what’s good for Donald Trump’s reelection.”

On the CBS Evening News (6/18, story 4, 2:15, O’Donnell, 4.56M), Ben Tracy reported, “Trump is fighting back,” calling Bolton “a liar; his bombshell book, ‘pure fiction.’ But in front of reporters, the President would not answer questions about his former aide’s scathing critique. ... He did, however, angrily unload on Twitter.” Peter Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 6, 1:30, Holt, 6.63M), “Bolton writes President Trump was so focused on a trade deal with China, which he hoped could help his reelection, that he told President Xi he’d support China’s controversial prison camps for minority Muslims. ... Bolton also says President Trump told him directly that he wanted to withhold security aid to Ukraine until all the Russia materials related to [Hillary] Clinton and [Joe] Biden had been turned over.”

The New York Times (6/18, Baker, 18.61M) reports, “The book, ‘The Room Where It Happened,’ describes Mr. Bolton’s 17 turbulent months at Mr. Trump’s side through a multitude of crises and foreign policy challenges, but attention has focused mainly on his assertions that the president took a variety of actions that should have been investigated for possible impeachment beyond just the pressure campaign on Ukraine to incriminate Democrats.” The Washington Post (6/18, Helderman, Hamburger, 14.2M) reports Bolton’s book “highlights Trump’s pattern of welcoming foreign political help and a casual comfort with what was once unthinkable in American politics – foreign intervention in U.S. elections. ... Experts fear that Trump’s behavior may embolden nations to try to sway U.S. voters in the 2020 campaign.”

Gabriel Sherman of Vanity Fair (6/18, 9.08M) writes that his publication “has seen unredacted pages from the book and it’s clear why the White House tried to keep Trump’s words secret: they are deeply embarrassing and illustrate Trump’s naked politicization of America’s foreign policy. According to an unredacted passage shown to Vanity Fair by a source, Trump’s ask is even more crudely shocking when you read Trump’s specific language. ‘Make sure I win,’ Trump allegedly told Xi during a dinner at the G20 conference in Osaka, Japan last summer. ‘I will probably win anyway, so don’t hurt my farms. ... Buy a lot of soybeans and wheat and make sure we win.’”

The Washington Post (6/18, Gearan, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports, “Reverberations from Bolton’s forthcoming tell-all account of working for Trump extended to Capitol Hill, where Republicans mostly sought to avoid commenting in detail on Bolton’s allegations, among them that Trump had sought China’s help to win reelection.” The Post says the President’s “ferocious focus on the book failed to prevent details from spilling out, and may have backfired as Trump amplifies public attention on Bolton’s unflattering portrait of the president as a mendacious, inattentive leader chiefly focused on bettering his own political fortunes.”

The Washington Post (6/18, Hudson, 14.2M) says the book “exposes alleged fissures” between the President and Secretary of State Pompeo, “a man who elevated himself into Trump’s inner circle through unmatched loyalty and messaging discipline.” The Washington Examiner (6/18, Gehrke, 448K) reports Pompeo “condemned John Bolton as ‘a traitor who damaged America’ with his memoir,” while Politico (6/18, Cohen, 4.29M) quotes Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro saying, “I was in a staff meeting one time; he walked in and he was absolutely giddy at the prospect of a coup in Venezuela. It was like weird, and I’m thinking to myself, ‘Wait a minute. This is a serious, serious matter and he is giddy. There’s something wrong with that dude.’” The Washington Examiner (6/18, Doyle, 448K) reports Navarro also told Fox News, “Big Lie Bolton, it’s Book Deal Bolton – he is doing it for the money, that is pretty clear, and my view is it [is] the Washington swamp’s equivalent of revenge porn.”

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News’ Special Report (6/18, 1.53M), “When people do tell-all books, I prefer that they tell us all what they accomplished in those positions. ... Much of the national security accomplishments that happened, and there are many in the Donald Trump presidency, happened before he got there or after he left.”

Appearing on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (6/18, 831K), White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said, “John Bolton has discredited himself. He is a misguided hawk on foreign policy. ... This man is someone who praised President Trump as being ‘strong on foreign policy,’ ‘not making the mistakes of previous administrations,’ being ‘perfectly prepared.’ These are all quotes from John Bolton. ... He’s discredited on both sides of the aisle.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that the book makes both its author and the President look bad, and says it reveals little about Trump’s character and leadership style that voters did not already know. Philip Bump of the Washington Post (6/18, 14.2M) writes, “For all of the valid criticism President Trump has faced during his time in office, his ability to be effective is constrained by one recurring problem. Someone keeps hiring staffers who Trump thinks are terrible.”

House Democrats Consider Seeking Bolton Testimony. Politico (6/18, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that “top House Democrats say they’re seriously considering” whether Bolton “should appear before them – either voluntarily or under subpoena – to testify about explosive allegations contained in his new book, including that Trump encouraged China to construct internment camps for Uighurs, urged [Xi] to purchase American agricultural products in order to help his reelection bid and promised autocrats like Turkey's Recep Tayyip Erdogan that he would do legal favors for an ally facing a U.S. indictment."

Bloomberg (6/18, 4.73M) reports that House Speaker Pelosi "told reporters Thursday that the former national security adviser 'chose royalty over patriotism' in making a book deal after refusing to appear before the House's impeachment hearings without a subpoena." The New York Post (6/18, Moore, 4.57M) reports Pelosi told reporters, "I'm not paying any money for a book. I don't want to pay any money for a book that was a substitute for testifying before Congress about the well-being of the American people."

Dismissal Of Defamation Suit Against Steele Upheld In Appeals Court.

The Miami Herald (6/18, Hall, 1.09M) reports ex-British spy Christopher Steele "scored a major victory Thursday when an appellate court upheld the dismissal of a defamation lawsuit against him by two powerful Kremlin-linked Russian oligarchs." A three-judge panel of the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a lower court's "dismissal of the lawsuit against Steele and his investigative firm...brought by Russians Mikhail Fridman, Petr Aven and German Khan." They "are the ultimate owners of Russia's Alfa Group and had alleged that Steele had defamed them with his collection of reports about then-candidate Donald J. Trump and his possible ties to Russia."

Businessman Sues DOJ, Mueller Over Report Footnote.

The Washington Times (6/18, Mordock, 492K) reports, "A businessman has filed a $100 million defamation lawsuit against former special counsel Robert Mueller and the Justice Department claiming that a footnote in the Mueller report falsely links him to an unverified, salacious accusation against President Trump." Giorgi Rtskhiladze, a US citizen "from the former Soviet republic of Georgia, claimed in the Thursday lawsuit that the Mueller report falsely describes him as a 'Russian businessman' and wrongly claimed he knew of supposed tapes of Mr. Trump in a Moscow hotel in 2013."

Vindman In Line For Promotion To Full Colonel.

The New York Times (6/18, Schmitt, 18.61M) reports that the potential promotion of Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman, "an Army officer who was a prominent witness in the impeachment inquiry into President Trump last year, is imperiled in what Pentagon and congressional officials say could be another flash point between the president and the military." Vindman, "who served on the staff of the White House's National Security Council, is among scores of officers who have been picked to be promoted to full colonel this year. Typically, such promotions are backed by Army and Pentagon officials before moving to the White House for final approval and then to the Senate for a confirmation vote."

Trump Announces Transportation Funding For Nearly Two Dozen States.

President Trump took to Twitter Thursday evening to announce a series of transportation grants. In Michigan, Trump said, "Proud to propose a $25M award to @MichiganDOT to replace and expand the Blue Water Bridge port of entry in @Port_Huron. CRITICAL for security, operations, and commerce at our country's third BUSIEST U.S.-Canada border crossing!"

Trump also wrote, "Great news for Louisiana! $135M proposed to @La_DOTD from @USDOT to build 8.3 miles of elevated highway from Leeville Bridge to Golden Meadow to protect access to the area against flooding."

The President further tweeted, "I'm proud to propose a $6.8M award to @WisconsinDOT from @USDOT to complete the last phase of the Merrimac Bridge rehabilitation – more efficient and lower cost rail car travel over Lake Wisconsin!"

Trump also announced, "@WVDOT will be awarded $12 million from @USDOT to help finish the Corridor H project between Kerens and Parsons, key to a booming economy in the Great State of West Virginia!"

"Great things," Trump added, "headed to Tennessee! $11.2M is headed to @myTDOT from @USDOT to install fiber optic communications on I-40 from Memphis to Nashville. This is HUGE for safety info and broadband in a lot of communities that need it!"

In South Carolina, Trump tweeted, "@SCDOTPress will have $34.6M headed its way for a new interchange on I-77 in Rock Hill! This will facilitate access to a 234-acre development site at Exit 81. HUGE innovation and development coming to the area! @RockHillSCCity @YorkCountySC @YorkCountySCGov"

He also announced, "@TulsaPort, $6.2M is coming your way from @USDOT to bring major upgrades and improve rail transportation to the port. HUGE for JOBS and the economy in the region!"

Trump also said, "Port Tampa Bay in Florida will be awarded $19.9 million from @USDOT to improve Hooker's Point container facility, adding much-needed capacity to keep commerce moving and allowing the region to GROW!"

In Washington state, the President tweeted, "Proposing $73.7M to @wsdot for the Puget Sound Gateway Program from @USDOT. Will build "missing links" to the Ports and improve commerce and safety – BIG boost to the economy and JOBS!"

Trump announced that "@Port_Houston in Texas is set to receive $79.5M from @USDOT for much-needed restoration and upgrades to the Barbour's Cut Container Terminal. This will increase capacity and efficiency of the terminal. GREAT for economic growth in this busy region!"

In Rhode Island, the President said, "@RIDOTNews is set to be awarded $65 million from @USDOT to complete multiple safety improvements and repairs to the RI-246 corridor – greatly improving travel through the region!"

Trump announced, "$25M coming your way @NCDOT! The great state of North Carolina is set to be awarded @USDOT funding to help complete highway improvements in the US 74 corridor in Cleveland, Columbus, and Robeson Counties. Huge for travel and growth in the area!"

In Nevada, the President said he is "proposing a $50M award to @nevadadot from @USDOT to reconstruct the Tropicana Avenue/I-15 interchange. So important for improving and reducing traffic in this booming area!"

He further announced on Twitter, "$71.5M will be headed to @MississippiDOT from @USDOT to finish the Greenville Bypass in Washington County. So important for economic growth in the area and reducing travel times through Western Mississippi on US 82!"

Trump announced "Floridians will get $10M grant from @USDOT for @MyFDOT's I-4 to improve technology to provide travelers with better information and important messages in real time! Will make getting BACK TO WORK easier. Great work @GovRonDeSantis!"

In Delaware, the President said he is "designating $56.8M to @DelawareDOT to construct a redesigned interchange at I-95 and SR 896 in New Castle County. Huge improvement for traffic flow and safety in this important area!"

He also tweeted, "Big news for @EagleCounty, Colorado! $60.7M proposed to @ColoradoDOT from @USDOT for improvements and enhanced safety to the Vail Pass on I-70, between miles 180-190. HUGE for safe travel through the region!"

In Kentucky, the President announced, "$55.15M will be on its way to @KYTC to widen 2mntnparkway from two lanes to four lanes between the KY 191 overpass and the KY 205 interchange. Must keep the people of Kentucky moving efficiently and safely!"

In Maine, Trump said he is "designating $38.1 million to @MaineDOT1 from @USDOT to replace SEVEN bridges and improve FIVE locations in Kennebec, Oxford, Penobscot, and Somerset Counties. Very important for keeping our bridges safe and people moving in the Great State of Maine!"

The President also said he has "$40M proposed to @AnokaCounty in Minnesota from @USDOT for the Ramsey Gateway Project on US Highway 10/169. Will help congestion and make travel safer and more efficient in the area!"

Finally, Trump announced, "Great things coming to Arkansas! $40M to be awarded to @myARDOT from @USDOT to reconstruct and improve US 67 in @PulaskiAR and Lonoke Counties. Will reduce congestion and travel time – a huge boost for economic growth!"

Sowell Defends Charter Schools.

In the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Thomas Sowell of Stanford University's Hoover Institution argues on behalf of charter schools, saying such schools raise performance levels among non-white and poorer students. Sowell says teachers' unions are to blame for slowing expansion of charters.

New Head Of VOA Parent Agency Draws Bipartisan Criticism Over Firings.

The AP (6/18, Lee) reports that Michael Pack, "the new chief of U.S.-funded global media, is facing a conservative backlash over his decision to fire the heads of two international broadcasters, adding to concerns about the direction of the agency, which oversees the Voice of America and other outlets." According to the AP, "Trump allies, including former adviser Sebastian Gorka, have offered public support for the ousted head of the Middle East Broadcasting Networks, Alberto Fernandez, while others have taken issue with the firing of the head of Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty, Jamie Fly." Pack, "a conservative filmmaker and onetime associate of Trump adviser Steve Bannon, sacked both of them late Wednesday in a purge of USAGM's outlets, which also include Radio Free Asia and the Cuba-focused Radio/TV Marti."

The Washington Post (6/18, Farhi, 14.2M) says "the speed and sweep of the firings – Pack began work only Monday after a bruising Senate confirmation battle – raised fears that Trump was trying to exert greater control over the output of such venerable organizations." Fernandez, "a former State Department official whose agency oversees the Arabic-language Alhurra TV networks and Radio Sawa, said in an interview Thursday that his dismissal after three years was 'unexpected,'" and "offered no theories about why Pack opted to remove him."

Pentagon Official Passed Over For Top Intelligence Post Resigns.

Politico (6/18, Seligman, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that Kathryn Wheelbarger, "the Pentagon's top official overseeing international security affairs, resigned on Thursday after the White House abruptly nixed her nomination for a permanent senior role over White House concerns that she was not loyal enough" to the President. Politico adds "news of the resignation...comes just days after the White House announced a new choice for the No. 2 position at the Pentagon overseeing military intelligence after souring on Wheelbarger, its initial pick." Instead, President Trump "intends to nominate Bradley Hansell, a retired Army Special Forces officer, to be deputy undersecretary of defense for intelligence and security." Politico adds, "It also comes two days after acting comptroller Elaine McCusker submitted her resignation, following the White House's decision to pull her nomination to be permanent comptroller."

Reuters (6/18, Stewart) reports "both current and former US officials accused the White House of passing over Wheelbarger because of her past work" with then-Sen. John McCain (R-AZ), "a fierce Trump critic and former chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee." The Washington Times (6/18, Meier, 492K), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Former DIA Analyst Sentenced To 30 Months In Prison Over Leaks Of Classified Intel.

The Washington Times (6/18, Mordock, 492K) reports, "A former Defense Intelligence Agency official was sentenced to 30 months in prison Thursday for leaking classified information to two journalists, including one with whom he was in a relationship." Henry Kyle Frese "pleaded guilty in February to the willful transmission of Top Secret national defense information. He had faced up to 10 years in prison." The New York Times (6/18, Goldman, 18.61M) points out Freese is a "former Pentagon counterterrorism analyst," and that his arrest "was part of the Trump administration's effort to crack down on illegal leaks of classified information, a push that dates to the second half of the George W. Bush administration and intensified under former President Barack Obama."

Trump Says He "Made Juneteenth Very Famous."

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Bender, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that in an interview, President Trump said there is some systemic racism in the US and took credit for expanding awareness of Juneteenth. On the first point, the President said, "I'd like to think there is not [systemic racism], but unfortunately, there probably is some. I would also say it's very substantially less than it used to be."

It is the latter point that is drawing most media attention. On NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 7, 0:50, Holt, 6.63M), Peter Alexander said, "On the return of his campaign rallies this Saturday in Oklahoma, the President pushed back after criticism he scheduled it for Juneteenth. ... Trump now says, 'I did something good. I made Juneteenth very famous. It is actually an important event. It is an important time, but nobody had heard of it.'" ABC World News Tonight (6/18, story 3, 2:05, Muir, 7.39M) reported Trump "says he deserves credit for making Juneteenth 'very famous.'" Politico (6/18, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports Trump "took credit for popularizing Juneteenth, a day commemorating the end of slavery in the United States, citing the backlash over his plans to hold a campaign rally on the holiday amid a national reckoning over racism and police brutality." The Tulsa World (6/18, 205K) also highlights the comment.

The Miami Herald (6/18, Chambers, 1.09M) reports HUD Secretary Carson said Thursday that he has been a part of White House conversations about making Juneteenth a federal holiday. Carson said, "It's a topic worthy of consideration and discussion. I think just recognizing that this country sort of came of age, and recognize that an abominable practice came to an end, is certainly worthy of all of our recognition."

The Washington Post (6/18, 14.2M) says in an editorial, "The country needs education in the symbolic power of Juneteenth, which it is now getting amid a stunning surge of protests for racial justice. The date connotes a moment when America's promise of full equality seemed about to be realized at last, only to be postponed – and yet, the 'dreams that once dwelt in their hearts' never died."

Tulsa Rally Going Forward. USA Today (6/18, Fritze, Jackson, 10.31M) reports that on Thursday, Oklahoma Gov. Kevin Stitt (R) told Trump that "his state is ready to host a pivotal campaign rally Saturday, dismissing warnings from health officials about hosting a large gathering during the coronavirus pandemic." Stitt is quoted as saying, "We're so excited to have you. ... Oklahoma's ready for your visit." On the CBS Evening News (6/18, story 7, 1:30, O'Donnell, 4.56M), Omar Villafranca reported, "Trump's supporters are energized and already lined up for Saturday's rally." On NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 4, 1:10, Holt, 6.63M), Tulsa County Commissioner Karen Keith (D) was shown saying of the President, "I would beg him as a national leader to call this off."

The New York Times (6/18, Karni, Haberman, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that it was Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale's idea to hold President Trump's first post-lockdown rally in Tulsa because it was "a city with a supportive Republican mayor" and "where the coronavirus was no longer having a deep impact on daily life." However, according to the Times, the decision is creating controversy "instead of offering Mr. Trump a glide path back into the campaign season, where he could sell a message about a country overcoming daunting challenges." The Washington Times (6/18, Howell, 492K) reports Trump's opponents "say he is courting disaster by scheduling a mass gathering during a pandemic."

Appearing on Fox News' Special Report (6/18, 1.53M), White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway was asked if the Tulsa rally is still planned. Conway answered, "The information I have from the campaign is that it's happening and that people want to get out there and express their beliefs peaceably. We've seen people see it through protest. People in Tulsa or otherwise, they want to participate in our great democracy."

Samantha Whiteside, a Tulsa emergency physician, writes in the Tulsa World (6/18, 205K), "As a physician, my oath is to do no harm, and to sit silently on this matter feels wrong. I was raised in a conservative, pro-life, Southern Baptist household and continue to have these values today with my own family. It's not about President Trump. For me, it doesn't matter if the rally is for a Republican, Democrat or Queen Elizabeth herself. It's a terrible idea."

Senate Confirms Walker Nomination To DC Court Of Appeals.

The Louisville Courier-Journal (6/18, Wolfson, 368K) reports, "Louisville native Judge Justin Walker was confirmed Thursday by the US Senate for a seat on what is considered the nation's second-most powerful court." The Senate "voted 51-42 for the nomination to the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia," continuing "Walker's meteoric ascendancy in the federal court system." The new Appeals judge "is only 38 and was appointed to the federal district bench just last October," but he "had a powerful ally" in Senate Majority Leader McConnell, "a family friend and mentor." Fox News (6/18, Olson, 27.59M) says on its website that "the vote was nearly along party lines, with only GOP Maine Sen. Susan Collins joining Democrats in opposition."

The Washington Times (6/18, Lovelace, 492K) indicates that Collins, "facing a tough reelection battle in November, supported...Walker's confirmation to the lower court last year but voted against" him on Thursday. Senate Minority Leader Schumer "pointed to Ms. Collins' reversal as evidence that Senate Republicans moved too quickly to elevate Judge Walker to the federal appellate court." Said Schumer, "There is no reason to do this nomination now. This is about the Republican leader and his relentless pursuit of a right-wing judiciary."

Axios (6/18, Allasan, 521K) says "Walker's appointment to one of the most powerful courts in the country illustrates how President Trump has reshaped the federal judiciary during his first term," as this "appointment is the 199 to the federal bench since Trump took office." NBC News (6/18, Kapur, 6.14M) indicates on its website that Trump's "200th judicial confirmation...is teed up for next week. It's a number not achieved by any president at this stage in four decades." NBC also reports, however, that Trump "has been somewhat of a bystander in his own towering judicial legacy, delegating the task to McConnell and activists on a mission to curtail legislative and regulatory authority."

To the New York Times (6/18, Hulse, 18.61M), meanwhile, "His Senate majority may be teetering and the nation reeling from cascading crises, but...McConnell is following his one true credo: Leave no judicial vacancy behind." The Times adds that "next up is Cory Wilson of Mississippi, another nominee aggressively opposed by Democrats," who "would be the 53rd circuit court judge nominated by Mr. Trump and placed on the bench under the stewardship of Mr. McConnell. Upon Judge Wilson's confirmation, no vacancies would exist on the nation's appeals courts." McConnell told the Times, "It is a source of considerable satisfaction."

The AP (6/18, Daly) recalls "Walker drew a 'Not Qualified' rating from the American Bar Association when Trump nominated him last year to be a federal judge in Kentucky." However, "the group changed its rating just before the May 6 hearing, calling Walker 'Well Qualified' to serve on the appeals court."

The Hill (6/18, Carney, 2.98M) recounts "Democrats homed in on Walker's comments on the 2012 Supreme Court ruling, written by Chief Justice John Roberts, that upheld ObamaCare's individual mandate by classifying it as a tax." Walker told an audience in Kentucky, "The greatest words you can hear from Justice Kennedy are: 'You're hired.' ... And the worst words are: 'The chief justice thinks this might be a tax.'" Walker "told the Senate Judiciary Committee last month that the remarks were a joke." Reuters (6/18, Wolfe) recalls Walker was also "a vocal ally of Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh during his confirmation battle in the Senate in 2018." CQ Roll Call (6/18, Cioffi, 154K), Politico (6/18, Levine, 4.29M), and the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also cover the Senate vote.

Democrats Unveil $1.5T Infrastructure Bill.

Reuters (6/18, Cowan) reports House Democrats "on Thursday unveiled a $1.5 trillion infrastructure bill that they will seek to pass in coming weeks, arguing it has been made more urgent by the coronavirus pandemic." House Speaker Pelosi "said she would push for passage of the sprawling bill, which also would bring broadband service to more rural areas, before a July 4 congressional recess." Politico (6/18, Wolfe, 4.29M) explains "the House is preparing to merge several typically unrelated bills into one massive 'infrastructure' package." Pelosi "gathered the heads of some of the largest House committees to discuss their pieces of the legislation, which she called 'Moving America Forward.'"

The Hill (6/18, Beitsch, 2.98M) calls the bill "the latest attempt to advance an infrastructure package that has been discussed since the early days of the Trump administration but continuously fails to gain traction," and adds "lawmakers are more optimistic this time around as Congress considers more spending to help stabilize the economy amid fallout from the coronavirus."

In Autobiography, Top Donor To Pro-Trump Super PAC "Used Racial Stereotypes To Describe" Blacks.

The Washington Post (6/18, Lee, 14.2M) reports, "The top donor supporting President Trump's reelection and GOP congressional lawmakers is a reclusive heir to the wealthy Mellon family fortune who used racial stereotypes to describe African Americans in a self-published autobiography. Timothy Mellon, the 77-year-old founder of a rail and freight company, who poured $30 million into three GOP super PACs in five months, wrote that black people were 'even more belligerent' after the expansion of social programs in the 1960s and 1970s and that Americans who rely on government assistance were 'slaves of a new Master, Uncle Sam.'" The Post says Mellon wrote the comments "in a self-published 2015 autobiography." Mellon "gave his first major pro-Trump donation in April, with a $10 million check to America First Action, the main super PAC supporting the president's reelection."

Advertisers Flee Carlson's Fox Program While Ratings Remain Steady.

The New York Times (6/18, Grynbaum, Hsu, 18.61M) reports, "Amid a backlash and an ad boycott, 'Tucker Carlson Tonight' is still attracting big audiences, another sign of the nation's political divide." In recent weeks, Carlson has "challenged the Black Lives Matter movement, dismissed demonstrators as 'criminal mobs,' accused a Texas police chief of 'sounding more like a therapist than a cop' and mocked a CNN children's special about racism that featured Elmo, the 'Sesame Street' puppet." But Carlson's show was "seen by 4.2 million people on Monday, making it the most-watched television program in the country that night."

Gaetz Reveals He Has A Cuban-American Son.

The Washington Examiner (6/18, Yilek, 448K) reports Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL) has "revealed he has a 19-year-old son," writing on Twitter, "This is my son Nestor [Galban]. We share no blood but he is my life. He came from Cuba (legally, of course) six years ago and lives with me in Florida. Nestor turned 19 a few days ago & will be off to University. He arrived here at 12. As you can imagine, I was triggered when (to make an absurd debate point) a fellow congressman diminished the contributions of Republicans because we don't raise non-white kids. Well, I have."

Fox News (6/18, Phillips, 27.59M) reports on its website that Gaetz was referring to "a fiery exchange" with Rep. Cedric Richmond (D-LA) a day earlier. During the argument "over the House police reform bill, Richmond said he was 'angry as hell' at his Republican colleagues who 'keep introducing amendments that are a tangent and a distraction' and asking them to not 'make a mockery of the pain that exists in my community.'" Business Insider (6/18, Sheth, 3.67M) recounts that "after Richmond discussed the injustice that Black people like him and his son face, Gaetz interjected and asked, 'Are you suggesting that you're certain none of us have nonwhite children? Because you reflect on your Black son, and you said none of us could understand.'"

Fox News National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 50%-38%, Up From An Eight-Point Edge In May.

On its website, Fox News (6/18, Blanton, 27.59M) reports that a Fox News national poll of 1,343 voters, taken June 13-16, shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 50%-38%. Fox News says, "That 12-point advantage is statistically significant, and up from Biden's 8-point lead last month (48-40 percent)." Fox News adds, "Biden supporters are far more likely to say fear that Trump might win is behind their vote choice (63 percent) than to say it is enthusiasm for Biden (31 percent). The opposite is true among those backing Trump, as almost twice as many of his supporters say enthusiasm is the motivation (62 percent) rather than fear Biden could win (33 percent)."

Politico (6/18, Choi, 4.29M) reports that the Fox survey "was conducted amid weeks of protests over race and police brutality, a period where Trump attempted to establish himself as a 'law and order' president and threatened federal force to quell demonstrators. Some 61 percent of respondents disapproved of Trump's handling of race relations, compared to only 32 percent approving. Last month, those figures were at 56 percent and 37 percent respectively."

Quinnipiac National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 49%-41%. The Hill (6/18, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports that a Quinnipiac University national poll of 1,332 "self-identified registered voters," taken June 11-15, shows Biden leading Trump 49%-41%, "a significant lead, sitting outside the survey's 2.7 percentage-point margin of error, albeit smaller than the 11-point lead Biden held in a similar Quinnipiac poll released last month."

Democracy Fund/UCLA Nationscape Project National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 50%-39%. USA Today (6/18, Wu, 10.31M) reports that a Democracy Fund/UCLA Nationscape Project national poll of 10,601 voters, taken May 28-June 20, shows Biden leading Trump 50%-39%. USA Today says, "The Democracy Fund + UCLA Nationscape Project is a large-scale study of the American electorate. Throughout the 2020 election cycle, the researchers aim to conduct 500,000 interviews about policies and the presidential candidates."

New Hampshire Poll: Biden Leads Trump 49%-42%. On its website, WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (6/18, DiStaso, 239K) reports that a Saint Anselm College Survey Center poll of 1,072 New Hampshire voters, taken June 13-16, shows Biden leading Trump 49%-42%. According to the poll, "58 percent of Granite Staters view...Trump unfavorably, while 42 percent view him favorably." However, "Biden is also 'under water' in the Granite State, with 52 percent viewing him unfavorably and 47 percent viewing him favorably."

Trump's Approval Rating At 39% In New AP Poll. Under the headline "AP-NORC Poll: Trump Adds To Divisions In An Unhappy Country," the AP (6/18, Pace, Swanson) reports that according to an AP-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research poll, "most Americans – including 63% of Republicans – say the country is heading in the wrong direction. And close to two-thirds – including 37% of Republicans – say Trump is making America more divided." The AP adds, "Just 24% say the country is headed in the right direction, down from 33% a month ago and 42% in March. ... Overall, 37% of Americans say they approve of Trump's handling of the coronavirus outbreak – a dip from 44% in March." The AP adds, "Trump's overall approval rating...sits at 39%," which is "down slightly from the 43% who approved of his job performance in February and March," but "well within the narrow range where his ratings have stayed throughout his time in office."

Reuters (6/18, Oliphant, Kahn, Mason) reports that Biden "now has a 13-point lead over Trump, the biggest recorded by the Reuters/Ipsos poll since Democrats began their state nominating contests earlier this year, powered by substantial gains among suburban residents, independents and high-income earners." Reuters adds, "Even traditionally Republican-leaning groups – men, white suburban women and those older than 55 – have recently flipped for Biden, the polling analysis shows. Trump led elderly voters until May."

Trump Says He Will Only Lose If Democrats Exploit Mail-In Voting.

In an exclusive, the Washington Times (6/18, Boyer, 492K) reports on a Thursday interview it conducted with President Trump, who was "asked how he assesses the race against [Joe] Biden compared with [Hillary] Clinton in 2016." Trump replied that Biden is "weaker, but the machine is stronger, because they're desperate." The Times adds, "Pointing to increased hiring and retail sales in May as states reopened from the coronavirus shutdowns," Trump "said the economy will be a 'better platform' for him to win in November." Trump "said his chief concern about the election is the push to allow more voting by mail." Said Trump, "Mail-in voting is the only way I'm going to lose, because they [Democrats] cheat and rob and steal. They don't send [ballots] to certain areas, mostly Republican areas. There's so much illegal voting."

Trump Campaign Wants Four Debates.

Politico (6/18, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's campaign "has tapped former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani to spearhead a campaign to press for more debates this fall, starting earlier than usual and to have a say in choosing the moderators. The changes sought by the Trump campaign amount to a major reversal. Trump last year threatened to boycott the debates; now he wants more one-on-one encounters with... Joe Biden, which advisers think will sow doubts about the former vice president's stamina for the job." Politico says that on Thursday, Giuliani "held a...conference call with Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale and Frank Fahrenkopf, co-chairman of the nonpartisan Commission on Presidential Debates." Giuliani and Parscale "pushed for the debates to begin before early voting starts," and "also requested a fourth debate."

Under the headline "Getting Biden Out Of The Basement: Giuliani Tasked By Trump With Securing Extra Debates," the Washington Examiner (6/18, Doyle, 448K) reports that the Trump camp wants Giuliani "to lead an effort demanding extra presidential debates, believing Trump will gain from them by shining a spotlight on...Biden." The Examiner adds, "Trump officials began shifting course as the former vice president moved closer to clinching the Democratic Party nomination. White House counselor Kellyanne Conway pressed for extra presidential debates, calling in May for 'more of them than usual' because of Biden's time spent largely out of view."

Trump Campaign Ad: Biden "Received Endorsements By Osama Bin Laden."

The Washington Examiner (6/18, Leonardi, 448K) reports that the Trump campaign is out with an ad hammering Joe Biden. In the spot, a narrator says, "Joe Biden received endorsements by Osama bin Laden. After our brave warriors took him out, which Joe Biden was against doing, bin Laden planned to attack Obama to make Joe Biden president, thinking that would be enough of a US disaster in and of itself." The narrator adds, "Joe Biden: China's candidate, Iran's candidate, and Osama's candidate. We need a president who terrorists and tyrants fear." The Examiner says, "Secretive documents, which were first reported by the Washington Post in 2012, showed bin Laden wanted to kill former President Barack Obama and US Gen. David Petraeus so Biden would become the president."

Biden Airing Ads In Six States Trump Carried In 2016.

The New York Times (6/18, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports that Joe Biden is "making his first television ad buy of the general election, a $15 million television, digital, radio and print advertising blitz starting Friday for five weeks across six fall battlegrounds – all states that President Trump carried in 2016. The ads, which will air in Michigan, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Florida, Arizona and North Carolina, as well as on national cable, are evidence of Mr. Biden's improved financial position after he raised $80.8 million in May, as well as a forceful early effort to lock in and expand the consistent lead he has established in national polls over Mr. Trump." The Times adds that Trump "has so far advertised in the same six states where Mr. Biden is going up with ads, along with Iowa and Ohio, two states that Mr. Trump won more comfortably in 2016 and that were not initially expected to be crucial 2020 swing states."

Reuters (6/18, Reid) reports that Biden's ads "will be positive in nature, using Biden's own words to portray 'a voice of clarity and moral authority that the country desperately needs,' the campaign said." On its website, CNN (6/18, Saenz, Dean, 83.16M) reports, "The first ad, titled 'Unite Us,' features Biden's...words from his Philadelphia speech where he promised, 'I won't traffic in fear and division. I won't fan the flames of hate. I'll seek to heal the racial wounds that have long plagued our country, not use them for political gain' as it shows images of Trump's photo op at St. John's Church after peaceful protestors were forcibly cleared from the area a few weeks ago. It also features images of Biden wearing a mask while meeting with voters. The second ad, 'My Commitment,' is a positive message that features Biden speaking about the importance of essential workers, the need to pay them adequately, and portraying the role of a president as a 'duty to care, to care for all of us, not just those who vote for us.'"

Under the headline "Joe Biden's Ad Launch Signals New Strength In His Campaign To Unseat President Trump," the Los Angeles Times (6/18, Finnegan, 4.64M) reports that Biden's launch of the ads "reflects his growing strength in both fundraising and polling at a time when most Americans disapprove of Trump's response to the coronavirus pandemic and nationwide Black Lives Matter protests. It also offers voters in six of the most competitive states in the November election a counterpoint to Trump ads that attempt to portray Biden, 77, as a feeble old man who has failed to confront China." Fox News (6/18, Steinhauser, 27.59M) and The Hill (6/18, Axelrod, 2.98M) also report on the story.

Klobuchar Withdraws From VP Consideration, Urges Biden "To Put A Woman Of Color On That Ticket."

The New York Times (6/18, Epstein, 18.61M) reports Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) "announced late Thursday that she was withdrawing from consideration" to be Joe Biden's running mate, and told MSNBC "that she called Mr. Biden Wednesday night and told him he should choose a woman of color to be his running mate." Klobuchar said, "After what I've seen in my state and what I've seen across the country, this is a historic moment and America must seize on this moment. I truly believe, as I told [Biden] last night, that I believe that this is a moment to put a woman of color on that ticket."

A new Monmouth poll finds 59 percent of Democratic primary voters believe a woman of color would increase the ticket's chances of victory.

Carson: "Identity Politics" Would Be Behind Biden Choosing Black Woman As Running Mate. Appearing Thursday on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (6/18, 2.91M), HUD Secretary Carson was asked about Biden possibly an African American woman, such as Rep. Val Demings (D-FL) as his running mate. Carson said, "It's completely the opposite of what Dr. Martin Luther King said, evaluate people based on their character and not the color of their skin. It's all about identity politics. That way you can manipulate each one of the groups separately and make you think that you are their savior."

Clarke Mailer Shows NY9 Primary Challenger's Face "Noticeably Darkened."

The New York Daily News (6/18, Shahrigan, 2.52M) the reelection campaign of Rep. Yvette Clarke (D-NY) "is sending out mail with the skin color of her progressive challenger Adem Bunkedeko noticeably darkened – a move he described as 'racist' – ahead of next Tuesday's Democratic primary." Bunkeddeko said in a Thursday statement to the Daily News, "As Democrats, we are supposed to be the party of equality, truth and facts. But instead, Ms. Clarke puts out a racist mailer that clearly darkens my skin. This is despicable. She needs to apologize to me and every single one of her constituents. ... At a time when we're rising up to say Black Lives Matter and demanding overdue reforms, re-creating the type of campaign attacks that have been used for generations of fear-mongering is inexcusable."

The Washington Free Beacon (6/18, Anderson, 78K) reports Clarke "did not respond to a request for comment from the Free Beacon on the decision to use the photo without Bunkeddeko's permission," but "her campaign denied the racism accusation in a statement" that read, "To suggest that our campaign for a Black woman, run by Black women would deliberately darken a Black man's face is preposterous."

Democrat McClellan Announces 2021 Bid For Virginia Governor.

The AP (6/18, Suderman) reports that Democratic state Sen. Jennifer McClellan (D) on Thursday announced a 2021 bid to succeed term-limited Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D), "which if successful would make her the nation's first African-American woman to ever lead a state." The AP adds that several other Democrats are "either officially running or eyeing a possible" 2021 bid, including "former Gov. Terry McAuliffe, Lt. Gov. Justin Fairfax, Attorney General Mark Herring and Del. Jennifer Carroll Foy, who like McClellan is also a black woman. If she were to win the 2021 contest, McClellan would be Virginia's first woman governor, the first African American female governor in the United States and only the second woman ever elected to statewide office in Virginia."

Politico (6/18, King, 4.29M) reports that McClellan, "one of two African American women who have announced their candidacies in the 2021 election, is making a timely entry into the Democratic primary. As issues of race in America have been pushed to the front of mind for more voters, at least four black women have drawn mention as vice presidential prospects for presumptive Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden. One of them, Stacey Abrams, narrowly lost her 2018 gubernatorial bid in Georgia. Black women – one of the Democratic party's most influential voting blocs – are also seeing their numbers grow in Congress and state legislatures."

The Hill (6/18, Birenbaum, 2.98M) reports that in a Thursday interview, McClellan "framed her campaign in a historical context, referencing the New Deal and racial unrest in 1968, saying she would aim to use government as a force for progressive change. She said she would address the economic effects of the pandemic through guaranteeing economic and health care safety nets and expanding clean energy jobs in the state." On its website, CNN (6/18, Duster, 83.16M) reports that Fairfax, an African American, "said during a dinner in December 2019 that he 'was going to be planning to run for governor in 2021,'" and "is expected to launch a bid but has not made an official announcement."

Jean Kennedy Smith Dies At 92.

ABC World News Tonight (6/18, story 9, 0:20, Muir, 7.39M) reported Jean Kennedy Smith, the last surviving sibling of President John F. Kennedy, has died at the age of 92. The CBS Evening News (6/18, story 10, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.56M) reported, "In the 1990s, Smith became the American ambassador to Ireland, where she played a key role in brokering the Northern Ireland peace accords." On NBC Nightly News (6/18, story 10, 1:10, Holt, 6.63M), Andrea Mitchell reported Smith "received the Medal of Freedom from President Obama in 2011."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 42.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 42.6%, and his disapproval at 54.8%. The President's approval is down 0.2 since yesterday, but his disapproval is down 0.1.

The latest Quinnipiac (6/18, University) poll of 1,332 "registered voters" (6/11-6/15) finds Trump's approval at 42%, and his disapproval at 55%.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (6/15-6/17) finds Trump's approval at 47%, and his disapproval at 51%.

Financial International News

IMF Says US Recovery Likely To Be Slower Due To Continued Lockdowns.

Reuters (6/18, Shalal) reports the IMF said Thursday that the US likely experienced a deeper-than-expected GDP contraction in the second quarter following its COVID-19 lockdown that lasted longer than expected. IMF spokesman Gerry Rice said in a briefing that details will be available in the IMF's updated World Economic Outlook to be released June 24, adding that the US economic recovery may be slower given the continued lockdowns. Rice also "said the Chinese economy was gaining momentum, with high frequency data showing a stronger-than-expected recovery in investment and services through May. Overall, the balance of risks remained on the downside, he said."

ECB Gives Out €1.31T To Cushion COVID-19 Economic Impact.

The AP (6/18, McHugh) reports the ECB "has handed out 1.31 trillion euros ($1.46 trillion) in long-term, ultra-cheap credit to hundreds of banks as part of its emergency support aimed at cushioning the impact of the coronavirus pandemic on businesses and workers." The loans "are aimed at making sure banks can keep lending to companies so they don't run out of money and go out of business during the crisis. That would cause a cascading loss of jobs and income and hurt the long-term recovery from the severe interruptions to business due to the measures aimed at limiting the spread of the virus." The ECB "said Thursday that 742 banks across the 19 countries that use the euro currency took up the credit offer, which can carry a negative interest rate of as low as minus 1.0% so long as banks keep up their lending to businesses. That means banks are getting paid by the ECB to borrow the money, an offer that many found hard to refuse." The ECB "cut the rate on the offer from minus 0.5% at its April 30 meeting as the virus lockdowns slammed the European economy."

Bank Of England Boosts Bond-buying By £100bn But Slows The Pace.

The Financial Times (6/18, Giles, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports, "The Bank of England voted to pump an additional £100bn into the UK economy on Thursday but, with financial markets more stable than in March..."

The Independent (UK) (6/18, 1.36M), The Guardian (UK) (6/18, Inman, 4.19M), Bloomberg (6/18, Bn, 4.73M), Barron's (6/18, Briançon, 1.07M), and MarketWatch (6/18, Goldstein, 1.67M) also report.

Swedish Health Officials Investigating Treatment Of Elderly Patients In Nursing Homes.

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Pancevski, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the coronavirus has taken a high toll on the elderly population in Sweden, particularly in long-term care facilities, raising questions whether official triage guidelines may have precluded elderly patients from receiving vital care and resulting in unnecessary deaths. In response to the public outcry, Swedish healthcare authorities have launched a probe into the treatment of older patients in nursing homes and hospitals in Stockholm.

NYTimes: US Immigration Policies Exacerbating Spread Of Coronavirus Abroad.

In an editorial, the New York Times (6/18, 18.61M) questions the US policy for holding asylum seekers and immigrants in facilities where the coronavirus "easily spreads only to later send them to other nations," calling it "a public health hazard – here and abroad." The Times finds it unconscionable that the US is "continuing to deport thousands of immigrants, many infected with the coronavirus, to poor countries ill equipped to cope with the disease." The editorial urges "Congress, the courts and nongovernmental organizations to continue seeking an end to the administration's dangerous deportation drive, and to expose its immigration policies for the assault on American values that they represent."

US Resists Getting Dragged Into Libya's Conflict As Proxy War Between Turkey And Russia Escalates.

The Washington Times (6/18, Taylor, Glenn, 492K) reports, "Libya's slow-burning civil war is boiling over once again as an expanding proxy war between Turkey and Russia, each of which is seeking greater influence in the oil-rich North African nation and across the region in the absence of a clear U.S. policy or role in the conflict." While Turkey has sought to draw the Administration "into an alliance in Libya and the Pentagon has escalated its warnings about Russian mercenary activity there, the White House has spent the past three years trying to avoid getting sucked into the power vacuum left by the overthrow of strongman Moammar Gadhafi nearly a decade ago."

McKenzie: New Iran Rocket Attacks Won't Force US Hand In Iraq Troop Drawdown.

The Military Times (6/18, South, 772K) reports that a "recent, steady flow of rocket attacks in the past week on facilities housing U.S. troops in Iraq...may be attempts of Iranian-backed groups to pressure an American exit. But the region's top military commander sees little effect." CENTCOM Commander Gen. Kenneth McKenzie said in an interview with Washington Post columnist David Ignatius, "We're not going to quit the region in response to Iranian pressure." Iran, he added, "needs to understand that the United States controls the final steps in an escalatory ladder."

Iranian FM: "Agreeable Solution" Possible For IAEA Inspection Request.

Reuters (6/18, Dehghanpisheh) reports Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif tweeted Thursday that "an agreeable solution is possible" for the IAEA's request this week for access to two nuclear sites in the country.

Trump Signs Bill That Could Sanction Chinese Officials Over Detention Camps.

The Washington Post (6/18, Shih, 14.2M) reports that on Wednesday, President Trump "signed a measure...to potentially sanction Chinese officials for their role in interning ethnic Uighurs amid new claims by...John Bolton that Trump told President Xi Jinping he approved of China's construction of large-scale camps to forcibly reeducate Muslim minorities." The Post says the bill that passed the Senate and House unanimously "drew a furious response from Beijing on Thursday during a delicate moment" when Secretary of State Pompeo was meeting in Hawaii with Chinese counterpart Yang Jiechi. According to the Post, Trump signed the bill on Wednesday "without a ceremony...as reports of Bolton's account emerged," and "later told the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Bender, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that his signing the legislation proved he was in fact tough on China and that Bolton was a 'liar.'" The Post says the Chinese Foreign Ministry "immediately responded to express 'strong indignation' that the law interfered with China's domestic affairs."

The New York Times (6/18, Myers, 18.61M) says, "Bolton's account underscored the jarring contradictions of Mr. Trump's policies toward China, which have confused and angered the Chinese leadership." According to the Times, Bolton "portrays a president pleading with Mr. Xi for political help, particularly through a truce in the trade war that would increase Chinese purchases of American products." The Times adds, "Now, however, the Trump administration's fury with China is a pillar of his re-election strategy – and that of many Republican lawmakers." The Times goes on to report that Chinese officials "portrayed the meeting between Mr. Yang and Mr. Pompeo – which was hastily arranged and conducted in unusual secrecy – as a constructive dialogue, signaling that perhaps the two countries would step back from a confrontation that has plunged relations to the lowest level in decades."

On Twitter, Trump Says "Complete Decoupling" From China Remains An Option. President Trump on Thursday posted on Twitter, "It was not Ambassador Lighthizer's fault (yesterday in Committee) in that perhaps I didn't make myself clear, but the U.S. certainly does maintain a policy option, under various conditions, of a complete decoupling from China. Thank you!"

Top US, China Diplomats Meet In Hawaii Amid Rising Tensions. Reuters (6/18, Pamuk, Brunnstrom, Munroe) reports Pompeo met Yang in Hawaii "in high-level face-to-face talks that have become rare amid tensions between the two strategic rivals." According to Reuters, "Yang told Pompeo that Washington needs to respect Beijing's positions on key issues, halt its interference on matters such as Hong Kong, Taiwan and Xinjiang, and work to repair relations, China's foreign ministry said in a statement." Pompeo stressed "the need for fully-reciprocal dealings between the two nations," State Department spokeswoman Morgan Ortagus said in a statement.

Rogin: China Must Change Behavior If It Wants To Improve Relationship With US. In his column for the Washington Post (6/18, 14.2M), Josh Rogin writes that despite claims by Chinese leaders that "they want better relations with the United States," there is "little concrete evidence that they are willing to change their bad behavior one iota – or even cooperate honestly on the global pandemic their actions helped spawn." Rogin asserts that "the only way to have better U.S.-China relations is for Beijing to be a better partner and a better global citizen. Absent that, tensions will continue to rise."

Tensions Remain High Between India And China Amid Attempts To Deescalate Situation.

The AP (6/18, Sharma, Schmall) reports, "India said Thursday it was using diplomatic channels with China to de-escalate a military standoff in a remote Himalayan border region where 20 Indian soldiers were killed this week." In response "to China's claim to the disputed Galwan Valley, India's External Affairs Ministry spokesman Anurag Srivastava said both sides agreed to handle the situation responsibly." Foreign Ministry spokesperson Zhao Lijian, "citing Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi in a call with his Indian counterpart, said that 'mutual respect and support serves our long-term interests.'"

The New York Times (6/18, Gettleman, 18.61M) reports that "a wave of anti-Chinese anger is cresting across India as the nation struggles to absorb the loss of 20 Indian soldiers beaten to death this week by Chinese troops in a high-altitude brawl along India's disputed border with China." According to the Times, "Indian and Chinese generals continued to meet on Thursday to discuss de-escalation at the border high up in the Himalayas where the brawl erupted, officials said. But military analysts and satellite imagery indicated that Chinese troops had yet to pull back." The Times reports that "by some accounts, in recent weeks they have taken about 23 square miles of territory claimed by India and show no signs of leaving." The Times adds that "western intelligence officials said that India would not accept this and that the chances of more fighting remained high."

Democrats Introduce Bill To Block Trump From Withdrawing Troops From Germany.

Reuters (6/18, Zengerle) reports Democrats introduced legislation on Thursday to stop President Trump from removing "9,500 troops from close ally Germany by prohibiting funding for a withdrawal of U.S. forces from Europe without congressional approval." Sen. Bob Menendez (D-NJ) and House Foreign Affairs Chairman Eliot Engel "introduced the bill, reflecting concern in Congress from Democrats as well as Trump's fellow Republicans about the plan to cut troops." The legislation would "prohibit the use of funds to withdraw or reduce the presence of U.S. armed forces in Europe unless the host government requests it, or the president declares the intent 180 days in advance, justifies the decision, Congress approves it and the secretaries of State and Defense testify about it."

Surge Of Piracy In Gulf Of Mexico Prompts US Warning.

The New York Times (6/18, Semple, 18.61M) reports that a "surge of piracy in the southern Gulf of Mexico...prompted an American government security alert on Wednesday." According to the Times, "the attacks – mainly on vessels and offshore platforms associated with the Mexican oil industry – have added another hefty burden to Mexico's overstretched security forces and threatened to chill foreign investment in Mexico's oil sector." On Wednesday, the US government "issued a special security alert about the danger of pirates in Mexican waters of the Gulf, particularly in a vast bight called the Bay of Campeche, where offshore oil wells are concentrated."

Australia's Morrison Says Foreign State Ramping Up Cyberattacks.

The AP (6/18, McGuirk) reports, "Australia is under increasing cyberattack from a 'sophisticated state-based cyber actor,' the Australian prime minister said Friday." Prime Minister Scott Morrison "would not name the state, and he said he made the growing threat public to raise awareness." Morrison declined to "comment on the inevitable speculation that the cyberattacks were part of Australia's increasingly hostile rift with China."

Freddie Mac Reports Mortgage Rates Fall To New All-Time Lows; 30-Year FRM Dips From

3.21% To 3.13%.

The Washington Post (6/18, Orton, 14.2M) reports that the "latest data released Thursday by Freddie Mac" indicates the 30-year FRM average fell from 3.21% a week ago to a "record-low 3.13 percent" this week, surpassing the "previous low of 3.15 percent set at the end of last month." According to the Post, "This is the fourth time the 30-year fixed rate has fallen to a new low in the past couple of months." Meanwhile, the 15-year FRM average fell from 2.62% a week ago to 2.58% this week, and the 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.10% a week ago to 3.09% this week. Bankrate.com "found nearly two-thirds of the experts it surveyed expect rates to stay about the same in the coming week." According to Bloomberg (6/18, 4.73M), "Rates are sliding toward a theoretical floor for lenders who have to cover their fixed costs. They've tumbled as the Federal Reserve holds its benchmark rate near zero and buys mortgage bonds as part of its plan to stimulate the economy."

The AP (6/18) reports in a piece carried by NBC News (6/18, 6.14M) that Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said he sees signs of slow recovery in the economy following the havoc induced by the pandemic. MarketWatch (6/18, Passy, 1.67M) reports Khater stated, "Mortgage rates have hit another record low due to declining inflationary pressures, putting many home buyers in the buying mood." HousingWire (6/18, Howley, 23K) reports Khater explained, "While the rebound in the economy is uneven, one segment that is exhibiting strength is the housing market. Purchase demand activity is up over twenty percent from a year ago, the highest since January 2009." However, National Mortgage News (6/18) reports Khater added, "it will be difficult to sustain the momentum in demand as unsold inventory was at near record lows coming into the pandemic and it has only dropped since then."

Moody's Report: Agency Multifamily MBS Performing Better Than Non-Agency Multifamily CMBS.

In a piece accessible to subscribers, GlobeSt (6/18) says that a "new report" from Moody's Analytics and loan special servicer CWCapital examines the crisis' impact on commercial mortgage-backed security loans by property type, finding that fully 96% of the loans transferred to special servicing from March 1 through the third week in May were for hotel and retail properties." Multifamily loans are "likely to be less hard-hit, because of the necessity of housing and because rent growth and vacancy levels for rental housing were strong before the Covid-19 crisis hit, the report said." The report also "found that agency multifamily MBS loans, issued by the quasi-governmental agencies Government National Mortgage Association (Ginnie Mae), Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), and Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac), were performing far better than non-agency multifamily CMBS loans."

HUD Secretary Delivers Report To President On Opportunity Zones.

M Report (6/18, Welborn) says HUD Secretary Carson "delivered a report" this month" to President Trump "outlining Opportunity Zone best practices and examples of revitalization occurring across the nation." The report "identifies legislation and executive actions that States have taken to aid the Federal Opportunity Zones mission," and discusses efforts of state agencies to "become involved in the Opportunity Zones space." In addition, the report "outlines ways that State-specific actions regarding Opportunity Zones have created certainty and stability for investors."

Ellie Mae: Average FICO Score For Closed Mortgages Rose To 750 In May.

Mortgage Orb (6/18) reports, "The average FICO score on all closed mortgages increased to 750 in May, up from 749 in April to reach the highest level in more than two years, according to Ellie Mae's Origination Insight Report." Ellie Mae reported that the refi share held at 65%, and the ARM share fell from 3.9% to 3.8%. The 30-year FRM average for conventional loans averaged 3.44% in May, down from 3.48% in April. Ellie Mae CEO Jonathan Corr said, "Interest rates continued to decline in May, but we are seeing signs of refinances leveling out as the percentage of closed refinances held at 65 percent for the second month. As we enter the summer months that typically bring a busier purchase market, we will watch to see if the numbers shift further as homebuyers continue to take advantage of low rates and a loosening of inventory after a tight March and April driven by the shelter in place."

NAR/72Point Survey Shows Nearly Half Of Homeowners Considered Selling Home Due To Pandemic.

HousingWire (6/18, 23K) reports that "52% of people said they are routinely concerned about making their mortgage payments and 47% said they have considered selling their home because they are unable to afford their mortgage payments," according to a "new poll from 72Point and the national Association of Realtors." Thirty-five percent of respondents also said that they have skipped or missed a mortgage payment since the beginning of the pandemic. According to HousingWire, "Out of those who said they were financially insecure, 35% said they were worried about losing their homes. Unexpected financial distress as a result of the pandemic was experienced [by] 81% of homeowners."

Equifax: HELOC Lending Running Well Below Year-Ago Levels.

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, McCaffrey, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that although many Americans are now unemployed or short on cash thanks to the pandemic, borrowers generally are not taking out home equity lines of credit. Equifax data shows that new HELOCs fell 19% from March through May, when compared to the same period last year. This could be attributed in part to the tightening of credit standards at many lenders, and the complete pause on HELOC lending at JPMorgan Chase and Wells Fargo.

WSFS Mortgage Highlights Anxieties Of Aspiring Homebuyers.

National Mortgage Professional (6/18) reports that a "regional study conducted by WSFS Mortgage revealed that homebuyers in Delaware and greater Philadelphia are feeling stressed out when it comes to purchasing a home. The study examined Gen Xers, millennials and those in Generation Z, who plan to purchase a home within two years." According to the report, 83% of respondents "believe they know what to do to get a mortgage, with young millennials (85%) exhibiting the most confidence. However, one third (34%) of those who don't own a home today are extremely anxious, with another 52% somewhat anxious about the homebuying process."

ENotaryLog RON Now Certified By MISMO.

Mortgage Professional America (6/18, Mendoza) reports that eNotaryLog has "announced that its remote online notary (RON) platform" is now certified by the Mortgage Industry Standards Maintenance Organization (MISMO). eNotaryLog Chief Technology Bisailon said, "The MISMO RON Certification is the first industry compliance standard for remote online service providers. We fully support a transparent certification for remote online service providers to make it easier for partners and vendors to measure compliance."

Remax: May Home Sales Nosedive YoY, But Buying Season Likely Just "Deferred For Several Weeks."

National Mortgage News (6/18) reports that May sales "plummeted from the year-over-year average, with the coronavirus effect socking the housing market for the second straight month, according to Remax." Although May is usually a "top month for home purchases," NMN says, "Closed transactions dove 33.7% year-over-year and 3.9% from April 2020. Annual sales dropped by double digits in all 53 of the top housing markets analyzed." Remax CEO Adam Contos said, "We believe the spring selling season was largely deferred for several weeks. And, with home being the center of people's lives this year, we could see the effect of pent-up demand play out in a significant way. Absent another major coronavirus wave, inventory levels and the unemployment rate may well be the governors on how strong the housing market performs this year."

FBI Warns Of COVID-19 Phishing Scams.

The El Paso \(TX\) Times (6/18, Martinez, 123K) reports, "The COVID-19 pandemic has forced millions of Americans to work from home and scammers are trying to take advantage of the pandemic and the increased use of technology." According to the Times, "FBI El Paso Complex Financial Crimes Squad special agent Chris Goldschmidt said that across the nation the agency has seen a rise in internet and email related scams due to the large number of companies having in employees work from home. 'During the last few months with the COVID-19 pandemic, we are starting to see what I would describe as traditional frauds and swindles but capitalizing on the pandemic due to the unprecedented amount of people we are seeing teleworking and working from home,' Goldschmidt said. 'Scammers will exploit people's fear and develop platforms they think will be more successful in their scams. They take successful platforms that are already existing, and they tweak them a little bit to fit the current crisis.' The FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center, also known as IC3, has received 750 reports of phishing scams in the state of Texas with a reported loss of $130 million between January to June 15, Goldschmidt said."

Michigan Man Charged In 2014 UPMC Server Hack.

The Johnstown (PA) Tribune-Democrat (6/18, Pesto, 2K) reports, "A Michigan man has been accused by federal authorities of hacking into UPMC's human resources databases, stealing employees' personal information and selling it online, United States Attorney Scott W. Brady announced Thursday." Justin Sean Johnson, 29, "was arrested on Tuesday morning in Detroit on charges of conspiracy, wire fraud and aggravated identity theft, according to Brady's office. The 43-count indictment naming him was returned by a federal grand jury in Pittsburgh on May 20 and unsealed on Thursday. 'Justin Johnson stands accused of stealing the names, Social Security numbers, addresses and salary information of every employee of Pennsylvania's largest health care system,' Brady said. 'After his hack, Johnson then sold UPMC employees' (personally identifiable information) to buyers around the world on dark web marketplaces, who in turn engaged in (a) massive campaign of further scams and theft. His theft left over 65,000 victims vulnerable to years of potential financial fraud.'"

Senior Tech Industry Officials Testify On Election Security.

Politico (6/18, Levine, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Tech column that top tech industry leaders "are signing online today to testify at a virtual House Intel hearing on social media's role in foreign influence operations and election security." The panel is expected "to question the officials on their firms' post-2016 progress fighting election interference; how tech companies are sharing information with each other and the government to detect and prevent foreign meddling; and the state of state-backed disinformation across their platforms." Beyond this election focus, lawmakers also plan to "examine misinformation tied to the pandemic and the protests prompted by the recent killing of George Floyd by Minneapolis police."

USA Today (6/18, Jansen, 10.31M) reports tech companies such as Facebook and Twitter "told a House panel Thursday that they have removed dozens of networks of participants spreading misinformation about elections and coronavirus, but Democratic lawmakers worried about continued interference in the 2020 election." Nick Pickles, director of global public policy strategy and development at Twitter, told the House Intelligence Committee, "The threat of interference is real and evolving." The committee held a "virtual hearing with officials from Facebook, Twitter and Google." But Republicans, who have "complained about Democrats holding remote hearings by teleconference, refused to participate." Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA), the chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, said, "A tweet or Instagram photo or a YouTube video can be viewed by millions of Americans in the span of hours. A policy that only identifies and acts upon misinformation, whether from a foreign or domestic source, after millions of people have seen it is only a partial response at best."

Commissioners Call For Changes To Federal Hiring Practices To Fill Critical Cyber, AI Positions.

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Rundle, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports legislators called for changes in federal hiring practices in order to fill thousands of jobs in cybersecurity and artificial intelligence left vacant due to stiff competition from private industry. Officials from the Cyberspace Solarium Commission, the National Security Commission on Artificial Intelligence and the National Commission on Military, National, and Public Service said the long delays in garnering security clearances and government assistance in education are key barriers that need to be addressed.

New Report Finds Google Chrome Users May Have Been Impacted By A Massive Spying Campaign.

CNN (6/18, Iyengar, Business, 83.16M) reports a new study concludes Google Chrome extensions "downloaded more than 32 million times were used to spy on the popular browser's users in a massive global surveillance campaign." Cybersecurity firm Awake Security "found at least 111 'malicious or fake' Chrome extensions capable of taking screenshots, stealing login credentials and capturing passwords as users typed them." The report "said that the campaign impacted a wide range of sectors including financial services, healthcare and government organizations." The new report "highlights the potential for fraudulent extensions to do harm and compromise a wide variety of systems." Researchers at Awake said, "The actors behind these activities have established a persistent foothold in almost every network."

NBC News (6/18, 6.14M) reports Google "said it removed more than 70 of the malicious add-ons from its official Chrome Web Store after being alerted by the researchers last month." Google spokesman Scott Westover told Reuters, "When we are alerted of extensions in the Web Store that violate our policies, we take action and use those incidents as training material to improve our automated and manual analyses." Based on the number of downloads, it "was the most far-reaching malicious Chrome store campaign to date," according to Awake co-founder and chief scientist Gary Golomb.

Tips Offered For Protecting How Consumers Shop Online.

CNN (6/18, Iyengar, 83.16M) reports, "Retail stores may be slowly reopening across the US, but many consumers continue to shop online for everything from groceries to bicycles." The piece says that it is "likely that your personal and credit card information has been stored in more places over the past few months," and "now is as good of a time as any to make sure you're...protecting how you shop online." CNN offers several precautions to consider, such as keeping track of card information and being vigilant about web browsing.

Delaware Quietly Removes Deployed Online Voting System.

NPR (6/18, Parks, 3.12M) reports Delaware briefly "deployed a controversial Internet voting system this summer but scrapped it amid concerns about security and public confidence." Before the online option was closed, voters "returned more than 2,700 ballots electronically – and those votes still will be counted," according to the state. Delaware Election Commissioner Anthony Albence "said the decision to stop using the cloud-based return option was made to protect public perception of the election." Albence said, "We have had no problems with the system. We have confidence in the system, but we want everyone to be fully confident in anything that we do." The system, "which was offered by the Seattle-based voting technology company Democracy Live, allows voters to mark their ballots through a web portal and then upload them to a cloud accessed by election administrators, who print them out and count them."

Hackers Targeting Smaller Firms Tied To Larger Institutions, Creating Major Disruptions.

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Strasburg, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports smaller businesses are confronting an increase in cyberattacks that are largely not publicly discussed, creating a risk for major companies and institutions that rely on their services. Analysts are identifying activities by cybercriminals that are attacking lesser-known targets but that are closely tied to larger, influential companies.

Op-Ed: Cybersecurity Rules And Passwords Need To Be More User Friendly.

In an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), technology researcher Alexandra Samuel discusses the challenge of generating and retaining passwords, especially given the need for more complex passwords demanded by systems. However, she contends that relying on password manager software can be problematic at times. She argues that two-factor authentication is better, it is also cumbersome to use. She asserts that the industry needs to develop a painless verification for use with some apps that confirm a user's identity immediately.

Huawei Hires Lobbyists To Expand Artificial Intelligence Research In Canada.

The Globe and Mail (CAN) (6/18, 1.04M) reports Huawei "has hired lobbyists in Ottawa to discuss artificial intelligence research in Canada and how the government supports foreign investment – a sign the company is seeking to further benefit from Canadian expertise in a branch of computing science vital to technology companies and to China itself." According to the federal lobbyists' registry, earlier this year, Huawei "tasked Joe Jordan, a former parliamentary secretary to prime minister Jean Chrétien, with lobbying the federal government about 'the location of an artificial-intelligence research centre in Canada.'" Mr. Jordan "works for Bluesky Strategy Group, an Ottawa-based lobbying firm." He and Bluesky co-founder Tim Barber give "a Huawei artificial-intelligence research centre as an objective in their listings with the federal Registry of Lobbyists."

Cyber Command's ISIS Operations Offer Lessons Learned For Future Information Warfare.

C4ISR & Networks (6/18, Pomerleau) reports DOD's information warfare leaders "want to know what they can learn from US Cyber Command's online offensive against the ISIS." Defense officials have been "applying lessons learned in combat to the hotly contested information space." To date, this process has "involved a variety of reorganization efforts across the services, but the approach is changing." One starting point includes "Joint Task Force-Ares – US Cyber Command's online offensive against the Islamic State group – and its Operation Glowing Symphony, the command's largest and most complex operation." The task force's former director of plans and strategy, Col. Brian Russell, "is now leading II Marine Expeditionary Force Information Group, or MIG, one of the Marine Corps' new information warfare units." Russell "told C4ISRNET that the Navy and Marine Corps can perform successful information operations by understanding how Joint Task Force-Ares organized and conducted cyber operations."

Regulators To Vote On Volcker Rule Trading Limits And Swaps Margin Demands.

Bloomberg Law (6/18, Hamilton, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports, "Two of the major rules for Wall Street banks are poised for approval next week as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. sets June 25 votes on changes to Volcker Rule trading limits and swaps margin demands." The changes would "ease constraints on banks' interactions with investment funds," and "remove requirement for posting margin between a bank's affiliates." The OCC and Fed "must also approve the swaps margin change."

US Imposes Sanctions On Mexican Firms, Individuals Tied To Venezuelan Oil Trade.

Reuters (6/18, Psaledakis, Parraga) reports the US on Thursday "blacklisted Mexico's Libre Abordo and a related company, accusing them of helping Caracas evade US sanctions in the first formal action by the Treasury Department against Mexican firms involved in trading Venezuelan oil." Treasury "said in a statement it imposed sanctions on three individuals, eight entities and two vessels for activities related to a network attempting to skirt US sanctions on Venezuela aimed at ousting President Nicolas Maduro." Among those blacklisted "were Mexico-based Libre Abordo and related Schlager Business Group, as well as their co-owners, Olga Maria Zepeda and Veronica Esparza." The Treasury also targeted Mexican Joaquin Leal Jimenez, accusing him of having worked with Alex Saab, recently arrested in Cape Verde, Libre Abordo and Schlager for brokering the resale of millions of barrels of Venezuelan crude." The Associated Press (6/18, Smith), Bloomberg (6/18, Kassai, 4.73M), and The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also report.

OFAC Exempts Medicines, PPE, Other Items From Sanctions On Iranian Manufacturing Due To Covid-19.

Reuters (6/18, Abdelhady) reports the COVID-19 pandemic has triggered "concerns that US sanctions impede Iran's access to medicine, medical supplies, and other essentials needed to respond to the novel coronavirus." The Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) on March 6 "published Guidance Related to Humanitarian Assistance with Regard to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 outbreak in Iran (COVID-19) (OFAC FAQ No. 828)." The guidance "explained that existing US sanctions allowed for certain sales, exports, and humanitarian donations of medicines, medical supplies, and food to Iran." OFAC indicated "for the first time that persons in Iran manufacturing certain essential products would be exempted from sanctions promulgated by Executive Order 13902 of January 10, 2020." OFAC then published "four new FAQs on June 5, expanding on the April fact sheet."

Iran Rejects US Sanctions On Syria, Vows To Boost Trade With Damascus.

Reuters (6/18) reports Iran on Thursday "condemned as inhumane a fresh round of U.S. sanctions against its regional ally Syria and said it would expand its trade ties with Damascus." Foreign Ministry spokesman Abbas Mousavi told state media, "As the world is involved with the Corona pandemic, the imposition of such inhumane sanctions will only exacerbate the suffering of the Syrian people."

Congressional Watchdog Says Fed Should Shift Focus Away From Bond Buying.

Bloomberg (6/18, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports the Congressional Oversight Commission said it's an "open question" whether the Fed should continue using public funds to purchase corporate bonds, and urged the central bank to do more for small businesses, states, and cities. This came following a report on Thursday showing that several of the lending facilities aimed to help smaller businesses aren't fully in operation. The report said, "In some areas of the economy, such as the ability of larger companies to issue debt to continue operations, the agencies' actions have had a clear and powerful impact." The report added, "There is less evidence that the actions of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve have been as beneficial for small and mid-sized businesses and state and local governments." The Economist (6/19, 2.36M) advocates a similar changing of the Fed's priorities.

Mester Predicts "Another Year Or Two" Before US Economy Returns To Pre-COVID Levels.

Reuters (6/18, Marte) reports Cleveland Fed President Loretta Mester said Thursday that the US economy may need a year or two before it returns to pre-pandemic levels. Mester "said she expects the economy to decline by 6% in 2020 and for the unemployment rate to remain elevated at around 9% at the end of this year," saying in a virtual chat, "We're going to see the economy recovering, but to get back to pre-pandemic levels, it's going to take another year or two." The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Kaplan: Systemic Racism "All Of Our Problems."

Reuters (6/18, Burns) reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan on Friday "said systemic racism in the United States is everyone's problem and addressing it effectively would improve the country's economic performance." Kaplan, in an interview on Marketplace, said, "Yes, it's all of our problems. ... And the challenge is there are a number of things that we're going to need to do to address it. I've spent a lot of time here at the Dallas Fed talking about, in particular, improving early childhood literacy, expanding pre-K, improving educational attainment, as well as beefed-up skills training. Those would be some examples of real changes that we're making progress on, but we can do much better. I think that would help close this gap and would give us better GDP growth as a country."

Bullard Says US Economy "Definitely" Not Yet "Out Of The Woods."

Reuters (6/18, Marte) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard "said on Thursday that he is hopeful the worst of the economic crisis caused by the coronavirus pandemic may have passed in April, but the U.S. economy is not yet in the clear." Bullard, during a virtual conference, said, "I definitely don't think we're out of the woods. ... We're still at a high, high risk level here. Any crisis, I think you have to keep in mind that many things can happen – many twists and turns can occur." Bullard "said he expects the U.S. economy to rebound more quickly than it did during the 2007 to 2009 financial crisis, but that the pace of the recovery will depend on the coronavirus." Bullard added, "If you get massive business failures, you'll face depression risk or financial crisis risk or both. And we want to stay out of those situations."

Kashkari: US Economic Recovery Will Not Be Smooth Or Strong.

Reuters (6/18, Saphir) reports Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari said Thursday that America's economic recovery will not be smooth or strong, given the likely resurgence of COVID-19 cases. Kashkari said, "My base-case scenario is that we are going to continue to see peaks, second waves, et cetera, unfortunately, for the rest of the year, until we get to some form of effective therapy or some form of vaccine or very, very widespread testing, and we are not there yet." Kashkari added, "That means our economic recovery is likely to be bumpy and it's going to be more muted."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

Trump Announces Nominee For Democratic Seat On SEC.

The Hill (6/18, Lane, 2.98M) reports on Thursday, President Trump "announced his intention to nominate Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) senior counsel Caroline Crenshaw to fill an open Democratic seat" on the commission, to replace former commissioner Robert Jackson Jr. Crenshaw had previously "served as counsel to Jackson and former Democratic commissioner Kara Stein."

Consumer Complaints To CFPB Rose 31% Over Last Year In First Five Months.

Axios (6/18, Rabouin, 521K) reports, "Consumer complaints to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau rose 31% in the first five months of 2020," over the year before to 142,782. Axios says that the findings indicate that "the lower-than-expected number of Americans taking advantage of mortgage forbearance and other financial hardship programs may be due to a lack of knowledge rather than a lack of interest."

Internal Revenue Service

IRS Will Review Hundreds Of Returns From High-Wealth Filers.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (6/18, Olivo, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the IRS "will soon begin examining several hundred returns from global high-wealth individuals to learn how their related businesses are applying the 2017 tax overhaul," according to one official.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC's Brooks Responds To Community Activists' Concerns About CRA.

Marketplace (6/18, Marshall-Genzer, 32K) reports that under the Community Reinvestment Act, in 1977, "the three agencies that regulate banks — the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Federal Reserve — started requiring banks to make loans anywhere they took in deposits." But now, adds Marketplace, "community activists are worried about changes to the Community Reinvestment Act," because, "they say the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency...is loosening the act's requirements with a new rule." Marketplace adds that Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks "said he's aware of these concerns," and that the banks "will still have to prove that the big projects...help their communities, possibly by creating jobs." Brooks said, "We're focused on sustainable, full-time jobs created by these things, not on the idea that there might be some seasonal, part-time employment but that there's full-time employment associated with the project."

Alaska's Congressional Delegation Asks OCC, FDIC, And Fed To Examine Whether Banks Are Discriminating Against Alaska Natives.

The AP (6/18) reports that Alaska's congressional delegation — Sens. Lisa Murkowski (R) and Dan Sullivan (R), and Rep. Don Young (R) on Tuesday wrote to the OCC, FDIC, and Fed asking them "to investigate possible discrimination against Alaska Natives by large banks refusing to fund Arctic oil and gas projects." They wrote that "banks may be discriminating against Alaska Natives who depend on the oil and gas industry for their livelihoods." The banks in question "include Citigroup Inc., Wells Fargo & Co., The Goldman Sachs Group Inc., JPMorgan Chase & Co., and Swiss bank UBS."

Big Banks Still Unsure Of Loan Forgiveness Rules Under PPP.

American Banker (6/18, Yacik, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports on "new loan forgiveness forms" announced by the Treasury Department and the Small Business Administration for the Paycheck Protection Program on Wednesday. But, major banks, including JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America and Wells Fargo, have said "that they were still not in a position to begin accepting applications for loan forgiveness."

TD Bank Training Customers And Employees To Combat Increasing Fraud Under Pandemic.

American Banker (6/18, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that TD Bank "has seen an escalation in fraud attempts involving commercial wire transfers" during the pandemic, and is providing training to "customers and employees about how to spot scammers and establish proper controls to deter them." American Banker adds that "criminals are taking advantage of the fact that so many businesses are shifting to ACH payments now that they can't deposit checks at bank branches."

Bank Of America Recently Doubled Size Of Racial Equality Initiative To $1 Billion Over Four Years.

American Banker (6/19, Alix, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that Bank of America “had been working for over a year on a $500 million racial equality initiative,” but in response to recent events, it “moved quickly, doubling its commitment to $1 billion over the next four years.” Vice Chair Anne Finucane’s task is “to make sure BofA delivers on its promises.” Finucane is “responsible for the company’s environmental, social and governance (ESG) strategy.”

Chicago Chase Branches Close Temporarily Over Protesters’ Demands.

USA Today (6/18, Menton, 10.31M) reports, “A handful of Chase branches temporarily closed in Chicago this week after protesters demanded” that it “boost its lending programs to the city’s African American neighborhoods.” They also “are calling for reparations from Chase to make up for unequal lending practices,” including “$1 billion in grants for African-American homebuyers and small business owners for start-up costs,” and “$10 billion to cover home mortgage, small business and investment loans.”

Wells Fargo Names New Head Of Wealth And Investment Management.

Barron’s (6/18, Snel, 1.07M) reports that Wells Fargo has named Barry Sommers, formerly CEO of wealth management at JPMorgan Chase, to be “head of wealth and investment management.” Sommers will report to CEO Charlie Scharf and will be a member of the bank’s operating committee.

Wells Fargo Investment Institute To Sell Feeder Fund Platform To iCapital.

Reuters (6/18) reports that Wells Fargo announced Thursday that “its investment adviser Wells Fargo Investment Institute will sell its feeder fund platform to fintech firm iCapital Network for an undisclosed amount.” The platform, the article explains, “provides brokerage and wealth management clients the ability to invest in private equity, private debt, hedge funds, private real estate and direct private investments.” Wells also said it would make an investment of an undisclosed size in iCapital.

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Kellaher, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports the story.

U.S. Bank names Lawlor New Private Wealth Management President.

Investment News (6/18, 177K) reports U.S. Bank has named Beth Lawlor as its new President of Private Wealth Management. Prior to her new role, Lawlor spent more than 25 years in increasingly senior roles at UBS, Merrill Lynch, Morgan Stanley, Wells Fargo Advisors and Smith Barney. In her new role, Lawlor “will set the strategic direction and oversee all aspects of the business, managing teams across the U.S.”

The Minneapolis-St. Paul (MN) Business Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 833K) reports U.S. Bank Wealth Management President Mark Jordahl said, “Beth is exceedingly client-focused and driven by leading a sales organization. She’s a terrific cultural fit for the bank. Not only will she advance growth for our clients and our business, but she also thrives in a team-based environment.”

Black Americans Report Bad Experiences At Banks.

The New York Times (6/18, Flitter, 18.61M) reports, “For many black Americans, going to the bank can be a fraught experience,” as an attempt “to cash a check or open a bank account can lead to suspicious employees summoning the police, causing anxiety and fear — and sometimes even physical danger — for the accused customers.” The Times adds that while “there is no data on how frequently the police are called” in such cases, it does have “its own social media hashtag: #BankingWhileBlack.” The Times recounts a series of incidents reported by bank customers and says that there is little recourse under the law for the black customers.

New York Times.

“Why Is The United States Exporting Coronavirus?” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/18, 18.61M) questions the US policy for holding asylum seekers and immigrants in facilities where the coronavirus “easily spreads only to later send them to other nations,” calling it “a public health hazard – here and abroad.” The Times finds it unconscionable that the US is “continuing to deport thousands of immigrants, many infected with the coronavirus, to poor countries ill equipped to cope with the disease.” The editorial urges “Congress, the courts and nongovernmental organizations to continue seeking an end to the administration’s dangerous deportation drive, and to expose its immigration policies for the assault on American values that they represent.”

Washington Post.

“The ‘Dreamers’ Are Saved – But Still Vulnerable.” The Washington Post (6/18, 14.2M) editorializes that Dreamers “are safe from immediate deportation. This is good news for them, and good news for the country. But they are still not safe from President Trump’s arbitrary whims and the malice of the anti-immigration fanatics he has brought into government.”

“150 Years Later, Americans Have A Chance To Fulfill The Legacy Of Juneteenth.” The Washington Post (6/18, 14.2M) says in an editorial, “The country needs education in the symbolic power of Juneteenth, which it is now getting amid a stunning surge of protests for racial justice. The date connotes a moment when America’s promise of full equality seemed about to be realized at last, only to be postponed – and yet, the 'dreams that once dwelt in their hearts' never died.”

Wall Street Journal.

“On DACA, Obama Can, But Trump Can't.” A Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes the Supreme Court ruling on DACA, saying it is not a matter for the court, but rather Congress, to decide.

“Ned Lamont Says The Unspeakable.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Connecticut Gov. Ned Lamont (D) is right to oppose extending enhanced unemployment benefits. His stance goes against Democratic orthodoxy, the Journal observes, and highlights the tension between state leaders who want their economies to rebound and Democrats in Washington who want to prolong economic shutdowns.

“The Confessions Of John Bolton.” The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that former National Security Adviser John Bolton's book makes both its author and the President look bad, and says it reveals little about Trump's character and leadership style that voters did not already know.

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "What a momentous week for the Supreme Court. On Monday, they ruled the LGBTQ community are protected by the Civil Rights Act, and then today, they announced Trump can't just arbitrarily decide to end protections for Dreamers. At this rate, tomorrow they're going to announce Trump has to retroactively serve in Vietnam."

Trevor Noah: "What's interesting about the Court's ruling is that it also said that Trump does have the power to terminate DACA, but only in accordance with the process laid out by the Administrative Procedures Act. Basically to put that in terms that the President would understand, the court has said, 'You can color Sebastian any color you want – blue, yellow, whatever – but you have to color within the lines.'"

Trevor Noah: "Now, of course, President Trump isn't taking the news well. I mean, after the decision was announced, he tweeted that it was a 'shotgun blast to the face of Republicans,' and then he asked, 'Do you get the impression that the Supreme Court doesn't like me?' Which is crazy – the Supreme Court is not supposed to like you. They're supposed to like the Constitution. But Trump thinks everything is about him. When the sun goes down at night, he probably thinks it's because him and the sun have a beef."

Trevor Noah: "According to Bolton, Trump's shady dealings with other countries went far beyond Ukraine. He was promising to personally kill any investigations into Turkish companies, and he was begging China to help him win reelection. And, you know, that's not just corrupt; it's also really embarrassing. Because Bolton's book makes Trump sound less like a President and more like a crackhead who's out of cash. (As Trump) 'Come on, Xi, just help me get one more term, and I'll – did I tell you about my electoral college ratings? So strong.'"

Trevor Noah: "How do you become the President of the United States without knowing if Finland is its own country?"

Trevor Noah: "So just from the excerpts that we've seen, John Bolton's book has painted Trump as corrupt, dumb, and amoral, but my favorite thing that has come out of this book so far, it also showed us Trump is, like, really weird. ... The President of the United States obsessed with getting a CD to Kim Jong-un like some teenager giving a mix tape to his crush. ... It's...weird that Trump thinks Kim Jong-un listens to CDs. Dude, he's the President of North Korea. The man listens to cassettes."

Trevor Noah: "Trump's response to all these revelations is pretty predictable. He claims Bolton is lying and that he's just a disgruntled, boring fool, which is basically what he says about any former employees who criticized him. He's also suing Bolton to try to prevent the book from being released because clearly, Trump is afraid this book will tarnish his reputation. But, Mr. President, don't worry about that at all, because whatever is in this book, I promise you will in no way change our opinion of you."

Stephen Colbert: "This morning, the 'Supreme Court ruled against Trump's attempt to end DACA, a win for undocumented 'Dreamers' brought to the US as children.' Of course, Trump doesn't care about immigrants brought to the US as children. He barely cares about immigrants he brought to the US as wives."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump was not pleased with this decision or the one Monday that said employers cannot fire people just because they're LGBTQ. He tweeted, 'These horrible and politically charged decisions coming out of the Supreme Court are shotgun blasts into the face of people that are proud to call themselves Republicans or Conservatives. We need more justices or we will lose our second amendment and everything else. Vote Trump 2020!' So, essentially, your argument is 'this is as bad as getting shot in the face' and 'aren't guns great? We should keep them.'"

Stephen Colbert: "[Trump] went on to tweet, 'Do you get the impression that the Supreme Court doesn't like me?' Yes, I do. They wear black robes. Some of your fans have been known to wear the white ones."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, guys, it's another day and another Supreme Court setback for President Trump. ... So Dreamers can keep dreaming, while Trump's still having a four-year nightmare."

Jimmy Fallon: "Yeah, at first, Trump was confused. He thought DACA was the AC/DC cover band opening for his rally in Tulsa."

Jimmy Fallon: "Actually, DACA is how Trump asks for a Diet Coke when he is cranky. 'DACA! DACA, DACA!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump wanted to roll back LGBTQ rights, and the Court said, 'No.' Trump tried to end DACA, and the court said, 'No.' Basically, Trump's trying to dunk on Obama, but Ruth Bader Ginsberg is blocking all his shots."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump was pretty upset by the decision 'cause he actually did tweet, 'Do you get the impression that the Supreme Court doesn't like me?' Then minorities, immigrants, scientists, doctors, women, CNN, MSNBC, the New York Times, and every former staffer was like, 'Hey, don't forget about us!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump also tweeted, 'These horrible and politically charged decisions coming out of the Supreme Court are shotgun blasts to the face of people that are proud to call themselves Republicans or Conservatives.' And this is strange – right after he said 'shotgun blasts to the face,' Dick Cheney suddenly appeared."

Jimmy Fallon: [On Trump wanting to give Kim Jong-un a CD] "Here is one of the most bizarre [revelations of Bolton's book] involving Trump and Kim Jong-un. ... Giving someone a Cd isn't diplomacy; it's how you tell someone you have a crush on them in eighth grade."

Seth Meyers: "The Supreme Court today blocked the Trump Administration's attempt to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program that protects more than 700,000 immigrants from deportation. Man, how many times is the Supreme Court going to shut him down this week? Tomorrow, are they going to say, 'We're also making it illegal to wear suits that look like trash bags?'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump tweeted today about former National Security Adviser John Bolton's new book and said, quote, 'Wacko John Bolton's exceedingly tedious 'New York Times' book is made up of lies and fake stories, said all good about me in print until the day I fired him. A disgruntled, boring fool who only wanted to go to war and never had a clue, was ostracized and happily dumped. What a dope.'"

Okay, but everyone already knew that, and then you hired him. Trump's like a McDonald's manager who puts a golden retriever on the register and then gets mad about the long line. It was never going to work."

Seth Meyers: "In a new interview, former National Security Adviser John Bolton said he believes that Putin thinks he can play President Trump, quote, 'like a fiddle.' I don't know, fiddles are notoriously hard to play. If anything, Putin is playing Trump like a drum machine."

Seth Meyers: "The organizers of hundreds of LGBTQ Pride events across the world have announced that they will hold a virtual experience later this month, which will include speeches from former Vice President Joe Biden and Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. But other than that, it should be a lot of fun."

Mnuchin Says He Will Talk With Congress About Disclosing PPP Loan Recipients.

CNBC (6/15, Hirsch, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Monday, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said...he will be talking with the Senate and others on a 'bipartisan basis' about striking a balance between protecting the privacy of recipients of small business loans and ensuring proper oversight of the funds." Mnuchin "said in a tweet he will be having discussions with the Senate Small Business Committee and others 'to strike the appropriate balance for proper oversight' of the Paycheck Protection Program loans 'and appropriate protection of small business information.'" Mnuchin "angered Democrats last week when he indicated in testimony before the Senate Small Business Committee that the administration may not disclose the names of those who took out loans aimed at helping smaller businesses stay afloat during the coronavirus pandemic."

Reuters (6/15, Schroeder) reports Mnuchin's "resistance was met with blowback from both Republicans and Democrats, who said it is difficult to appropriately guide government aid during the pandemic without knowing where the money is going." Furthermore, they argued "the public has a right to see where taxpayer dollars are spent."

The AP (6/15, Jalonick, Daly) reports that the House Select Subcommittee on the Coronavirus Crisis, which is "investigating billions of dollars in coronavirus aid," is "demanding that the Treasury Department, the Small Business Administration and several large banks turn over detailed information about which businesses applied for and received federal loans." The AP says "the requests came after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin told Congress last week that the names of loan recipients and the amounts disbursed as part of the $600 billion-plus Paycheck Protection Program are 'proprietary information.'" According to the AP, Democrats "say there is nothing proprietary or confidential about businesses receiving millions of taxpayer dollars." Democrats, in their letter to Mnuchin and SBA Administrator Jovita Carranza, urged more transparency "so American taxpayers can understand whether federal funds are helping vulnerable businesses and saving jobs, or are being diverted due to waste, fraud, and abuse."

Politico (6/15, Warmbrodt, Cheney, Swan, 4.29M) says Democrats "have applied new pressure on the administration since Mnuchin said last week he did not plan to disclose details on borrowers receiving the aid because the information was 'proprietary' and 'confidential.'" The Democrats said in the letter, "Contrary to Secretary Mnuchin's recent testimony, there is nothing 'proprietary' or 'confidential' about a business receiving millions of dollars appropriated by Congress, and taxpayers deserve to know how their money is being spent."

CNBC (6/15, Hirsch, 3.62M) reports on its website that "in letters to bank executives, the lawmakers said they are seeking a number of materials from the banks, including 'all formal or informal guidance' from the Treasury or SBA about PPP requirements and communication with the departments about the 'prioritization or exclusion' of loan applicants in underserved or rural markets. They also requested 'all internal communications' and policies pertaining to the program." The Democrats "joined a growing chorus of critics of Mnuchin's statement last week that the administration does not plan to disclose the names of those who took out loans from the program." The lawmakers "demanded in their letter that the SBA and Treasury disclose a list of all PPP applications received and loans they have issued."

Bloomberg (6/15, Davison, Niquette, 4.73M) reports the letters sent by the committee Monday stated, "Some large lenders apparently created a two-tier system for processing PPP loan applications. The banks' wealthiest clients had access to a personalized application process that ensured their applications were processed first." The letters said, "Other applicants had to use poor-performing electronic portals, faced significant processing delays, and sometimes needed to find another lender to consider their application." The letters "called on Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and SBA Administrator Jovita Carranza to release details about which companies received funding and in what amount after Mnuchin testified at a Senate committee hearing last Wednesday that such information would be withheld because it's proprietary or confidential with payroll information."

The New York (NY) Times (6/15, Cochrane, Rappeport, 18.61M), American Banker (6/15, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K), Fox Business (6/15, Henney, 1.73M), and The Hill (6/15, Jagoda, 2.98M) also report.

IGs Leading COVID-19 Oversight Committee Say Administration Blocking Relief Funds Scrutiny. The Washington Post (6/15, Hamburger, Stein, O'Connell, Gregg, 14.2M) reports the Trump Administration's "intensifying efforts to block oversight of its coronavirus-related rescue programs is raising new alarms with government watchdogs and lawmakers from both parties amid concerns about the anonymity of companies receiving unprecedented levels of taxpayer funds." The Post says "inspectors general leading the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee (PRAC), an independent panel created to oversee implementation of the Cares Act, expressed concern" in a letter Thursday to members of Congress "that previously unknown Trump administration legal decisions could substantially block their ability to oversee more than $1 trillion in spending related to the coronavirus pandemic." The Post says the letter and Secretary Mnuchin's "insistence that the PPP data will not be released come after the White House has repeatedly rebuffed efforts to scrutinize where the taxpayer funding is going."

Politico (6/15, Cheney, 4.29M) reports the letter, "first revealed by The Washington Post, was signed by the Justice Department inspector general, Michael Horowitz, who leads a panel of inspectors general charged with coronavirus-related oversight known as the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee, and its executive director, Robert Westbrook." The Hill (6/15, Klar, 2.98M), CNN (6/15, Mattingly, 83.16M), and Reuters (6/15, Prentice, Qing) also report.

Commentary: Administration Reversed Vow Of Transparency On COVID Relief Spending. In her column for the Washington

Post (6/15, 14.2M), Catherine Rampell writes that “taxpayers should be asking” what the Administration is “hiding” as it “refuses to reveal where a half-trillion dollars of our hard-earned cash has gone.” Rampell says senior officials, including Secretary Mnuchin, “repeatedly pledged ‘full transparency on anything we do.’” Rampell argues Mnuchin, in spite of “his alleged commitment to transparency,” testified to “lawmakers last week that information on loan recipients and amounts would not be released because it is ‘proprietary’ and ‘confidential.’” Responding to Mnuchin’s tweet Monday, Rampell said, “Maybe he means it this time, but this feels a bit like Lucy and the football.”

Hannah Levintova writes for Mother Jones (6/15, 881K) that in April, “Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin pledged that when it came to giving out billions in coronavirus relief funds, the Trump administration would strive for ‘full transparency.’” However, on Sunday, “White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow told CNN that the Trump administration had never promised to release the names of companies that received a total of more than $500 billion in forgivable loans under the Paycheck Protection Program, enacted by Congress this spring as part of a sweeping stimulus package to mitigate the economic effects of the pandemic.”

In an editorial, the San Francisco Chronicle (6/15, 2.67M) says “there is no way of knowing” whether the PPP is working as intended because the SBA “has provided only top-line data such as the sum of loans that have been awarded.” Previously the SBA “was deflecting questions from Congress, journalists and public-interest groups about where, specifically, the money was going. It cited a priority of getting the relief funds into the hands of employers to save jobs. Transparency would have to wait.” Now, the waiting “is officially over. Public accountability is not coming. In testimony before Congress last week, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said the names of recipients and the level of loans they received is ‘proprietary information’ and thus confidential.” The Chronicle says this “is utter nonsense.”

COVID Was Never “Under Control” In America.

Shannon Palus writes for Slate (6/15, 1.58M) that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin has suggested there are some places where “COVID is under control.” Palus says the notion that “we can have the virus ‘under control,’ without doing work, like refraining from meals out even as spread appears low, is a fantasy that the Trump Administration has been pushing for the length of the pandemic.”

Judge Orders Treasury To Release $679M COVID-19 Relief Funds To Tribal Governments.

The AP (6/15, Fonseca) reports DC District Judge Amit Mehta on Monday ordered the Treasury Department to release $679 million in COVID-19 funding for Native American tribes it had planned to withhold while waiting for a court challenge to the Department’s initial payments to tribal governments to play out in court. Judge Mehta “said the agency doesn’t have discretion to withhold the money that is part of a federal relief package that included $8 billion for tribes” and “ordered the Treasury Department to disburse it among tribal governments by Wednesday.” Mehta said, “Continued delay in the face of an exceptional public health crisis is no longer acceptable.”

Trump Expected To Sign Executive Order On Policing Tuesday.

President Trump said Monday that he will on Tuesday sign an executive order on policing in the US. While media reports say Trump said little about what the order will entail, Administration representatives said it will focus on proper police training, better training in deescalation, and a larger role for social workers in responding to certain nonviolent incidents, among other policies.

Reuters (6/15, Mason, Beech) reports the President “will sign an executive order on Tuesday that will seek to improve how police officers treat African Americans and others by improving credentialing, training and mental health resources, administration officials said.” The order “comes after Trump has struck a strict ‘law and order’ tone in his response to protests around the country sparked by the death” of George Floyd while in police custody. On ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 6, 0:30, Muir, 7.94M), Jonathan Karl said, “We still don’t have many specifics, but the White House says this will encourage better practices on the use of force and on deescalation, and more transparency about officers who have been accused of misconduct. The President, we are told, will sign it at an event tomorrow here at the White House attended by both police officers and those who have been killed by police officers.”

On its website, NPR (6/15, Wise, 3.12M) quotes the President saying, “Basically, we’re going to be talking about things we’ve been watching and seeing for the last month. And we’re going to have some solutions – I think some good solutions. And some of it, as you know, it’s about great people. We need great people in our police departments. And we have mostly great people, I would say that. I would say that with certainty. We have mostly great people. ... But we will do better, even better.” The CBS Evening News (6/15, story 8, 0:15, O’Donnell, 5.04M) very briefly mentioned the upcoming executive order.

Bloomberg (6/15, Sink, 4.73M) reports Trump “didn’t say what the order would do.” However, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, Leary, Duhren, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Fraternal Order of Police President Patrick Yoes said in a statement that the organization had reviewed the order and “supports its goals and methodology.” The Hill (6/15, Chalfant, Samuels, 2.98M) reports, “Senior administration officials told reporters Monday afternoon that the order would incentivize police departments to use best practices when it comes to use of force; encourage information sharing so that officials can track officers who have excessive use of force complaints; and call for co-responder programs in which social workers accompany police when responding to nonviolent reports involving homelessness, mental health, and drug and alcohol addiction.”

USA Today (6/15, Jackson, 10.31M) says the President is “under political pressure over protests against police brutality.” The executive order “comes down as Trump, down in pre-election polls to Democratic challenger Joe Biden, faces criticism over his handling of nationwide protests over Floyd's death." The Washington Post (6/15, Nakamura, 14.2M) reports White House aides "said the executive action is the result of months of deliberation by a policing commission Trump established in late December, well before" Floyd's death. Trump "intends to use a White House event Tuesday to call on Congress to pass legislative reforms, but he felt compelled to act to 'turn the anger in the country now into action and hopefully bring some unification and some healing,'" an Administration official said. Politico (6/15, Cook, 4.29M) says with the order, Trump "hopes to acknowledge a nationwide uproar over police brutality while preventing rifts with police and other law enforcement groups integral to his political future."

Asked Monday on Fox News (6/15) about the executive order, White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said, "He will announce that tomorrow, but it won't surprise you that they'll be talking about the rule of law enforcement, making sure that people understand the role is to keep the community safe and the neighborhoods protected." On Fox News' Hannity (6/15, 1.5M), White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said the order will include "an incentive structure for police departments across the country to implement correct training so that things like what we saw with George Floyd never happen again."

Deputy Assistant to the President Ja'Ron Smith said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/15, 831K) that the President's "approach is working with the police in the communities to bring them together through community policing." Smith added, "There are many communities that are violent, and we want to quell the violence, and also allow for a safe and peaceful atmosphere. And the only way that you can do that is to bring the police and community together, and that's what President Trump is focused on, instead of defunding the police."

Trump Calls Brooks Shooting "A Terrible Situation," "Very Disturbing." The Washington Times (6/15, Boyer, 492K) reports that on Monday, for the first time, Trump addressed the Friday night shooting of Rayshard Brooks by an Atlanta police officer. NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 4, 0:40, Holt, 6.8M) showed Trump saying, "I thought it was a terrible situation. I studied it closely. To me, it was very disturbing." David Muir opened ABC World News Tonight (6/15, lead story, 4:10, 7.94M) by reporting that in the short time since the shooting, "the officer has now been fired, the Atlanta police chief has resigned," and Atlanta's Mayor has "order[ed] new rules for police." The New York Times (6/15, 18.61M) reports Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms (D) "said the Atlanta police will now 'use only the amount of objectively reasonable force necessary to successfully protect themselves and others, to effect an arrest, or to bring an incident under control.' Officers will have to use de-escalation techniques before resorting to deadly force, she said, and will be 'duty bound to intercede' when they see colleagues go too far."

On NBC Nightly News (6/15, lead story, 3:40, 6.8M), Lester Holt said, "The movement that has sparked protests and forced change in police departments across the country is mourning yet another name. Protesters in Atlanta tonight marching in the memory of Rayshard Brooks, a black man fatality shot by a white police officer on Friday after a struggle and foot chase over a taser gun. And while the circumstances are different than the death of George Floyd, the outcome and its impact is the same."

The Wall Street Journal (6/15, Siddiqui, Calvert, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports protesters marched to the Georgia State Capitol in Atlanta to protest police brutality. Norah O'Donnell of the CBS Evening News (6/15, lead story, 3:25, 5.04M) reported, "Demonstrators rallied...after a weekend of protests in Atlanta, including the burning of the Wendy's where the shooting happened." CBS' Mark Strassmann: "What many in this community now want is accountability [and] justice." The Washington Post (6/15, Zapotosky, 14.2M) says Atlanta "has emerged as the new epicenter of nationwide protests against police brutality, with tensions already simmering after the February killing" of Ahmaud Arbery and "turmoil last week with problems during the primary election, including mailed ballots that may not have been counted and long lines at polling places in heavily black precincts."

On the CBS Evening News (6/15, story 2, 2:10, O'Donnell, 5.04M), Jeff Pegues reported that Fulton County District Attorney Paul Howard, who is African American, "says these types of cases further erode public trust." Howard: "People from our community, my own son, they do not trust the police." Pegues: "Your own son?" Howard: "Doesn't trust the police. My son is 25. He came and asked me, he said, 'Daddy, are the police going to do something to me?'" The Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M) says in an editorial, "The world is watching, and yet police keep killing unarmed black people. Last week's shooting in Atlanta reveals how broken this country's law enforcement system remains, even as protesters across the country cry out for fixing it."

Trump Blasts Inslee, Durkan Over Seattle Protesters. The Hill (6/15, Samuels, 2.98M) reports the President "laced into" Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D) and Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan (D) on Monday "for failing to break up a group of protesters who have occupied a portion of the city, though he declined to offer specifics on when or how he might intervene." The President said, "You have a Governor who doesn't do a damn thing about it, and you have a Mayor that doesn't know she's alive. If they don't do the job, I'll do the job." The Hill reports, "When pressed for specifics, the president demurred. He suggested he could do 'about 10 different things' to disperse the gathering, then launched into a diatribe accusing the news media of failing to give the protest adequate attention."

The President tweeted Monday morning, "LAW & ORDER!" Townhall (6/15, O'Brien, 177K) headlines its brief report on Trump's comments "Trump Absolutely Rips The Lack Of Leadership In Seattle." NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 7, 1:25, Holt, 6.8M) reported protesters "continue occupying part of the city and demanding police reform." NBC's Jo Ling Kent said the "protesters showing no sign of leaving this six-block area, taking it over a week ago."

Carson On Trump Understanding NFL Players' Grievances: "He'll Get There." The AP (6/15, Freking) reports that in a radio interview Monday, HUD Secretary Carson, "the lone African American member" of the Cabinet, said he would work with the President on the issue of athletes "taking a knee during the national anthem, though Trump has shown no signs of softening." The AP reports that "when asked on the Hugh Hewitt Show if he might persuade the president not to be upset with players kneeling during the anthem, Carson replied: "Well, I don't think he has manifested as much animosity in that region lately. And I think we just continue to work with him. He'll get there."

The Washington Post (6/15, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that over the weekend, Trump “made clear in a pair of tweets that he has no plans to watch sports in which players kneel during the national anthem.” Politico (6/15, Forgey, 4.29M) similarly reports the President “has remained adamant in his condemnation of kneeling during the anthem, lashing out last week at NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell after he acknowledged the league was ‘wrong for not listening’ to players earlier and encouraged ‘all to speak out and peacefully protest.’”

Senate Republicans Expected To Propose Chokehold Ban. The AP (6/15, Mascaro) reports Senate Republicans are “poised to unveil an extensive package of policing changes that includes new restrictions on police chokeholds and other practices as [Trump] signals his support.” The AP says the measure crafted by Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC) “doesn’t go as far as a sweeping Democratic bill heading toward a House vote,” but “shares similar provisions as Congress rushes to respond.” Politico (6/15, Desiderio, Everett, 4.29M) reports the Senate is not expected to take up the bill “until after the Independence Day recess...raising the prospect that it could be a month or longer before a measure heads” to the President’s desk.

The Washington Free Beacon (6/15, Lehman, 78K) reports Democrats including Senate Minority Leader Schumer have criticized the emerging legislation, even though it has not yet been rolled out. However, House Speaker Pelosi said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/15, 695K), “Let’s do the best we can, not the minimum that we can in this. This is about justice. It’s about redressing past grievances. It’s about, let’s see what we can do.”

SCOTUS Declines To Hear Cases Challenging Officers’ Qualified Immunity. The AP (6/15, Gresko) reports the Supreme Court is “for now declining to get involved in an ongoing debate by citizens and in Congress over policing, rejecting cases Monday that would have allowed the justices to revisit when police can be held financially responsible for wrongdoing.” The AP says the justices “turned away more than half a dozen cases involving the legal doctrine known as qualified immunity, which the high court created more than 50 years ago,” and which “shields officials, including police, from lawsuits for money as a result for things they do in the course of their job.” Reuters (6/15, Hurley, Chung) reports that in Congress, Democrats and Republicans “have been pulling together their own versions of police reform legislation,” and “a Democratic plan unveiled in the House would roll back qualified immunity for law enforcement officers.”

USA Today (6/15, Wolf, 10.31M) says that by “refusing to hear a case, the court is not necessarily signaling that it will never abolish qualified immunity or significantly scale it back. Chief Justice John Roberts, in particular, prefers baby steps to big changes in court precedent.” The Washington Post (6/15, Barnes, Marimow, 14.2M) reports, “An extraordinary coalition of organizations on the left, right and middle – one federal judge called it ‘perhaps the most diverse amici ever assembled’ – has called on the court to revisit the issue.” The Post adds, “And so have two members of the court who represent its opposite ideological wings” – Justices Sonia Sotomayor and Clarence Thomas.

NYPD To Disband Plainclothes Teams. The New York Times (6/15, Watkins, 18.61M) reports New York City Police Commissioner Dermot Shea “announced on Monday that he was disbanding the Police Department’s anti-crime units: plainclothes teams that target violent crime and have been involved in some of the city’s most notorious police shootings. Roughly 600 officers serve in the units, which are spread out across the city and work out of the department’s 77 precincts.” Shea said the units “were part of an outdated policing model that too often seemed to pit officers against the communities they served.” The Washington Examiner (6/15, Halaschak, 448K) also covered the decision.

New Jersey AG Orders Disclosure Of Names Of Disciplined Officers. The Wall Street Journal (6/15, De Avila, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports New Jersey Attorney General Gurbir Grewal (D) has directed all law enforcement agencies in the state to start disclosing the names of officers who have been disciplined for serious violations and misconduct. Grewal said, “Today we end the practice of protecting the few to the detriment of the many.”

Liberal Groups Criticize Biden’s Stance On Policing. The Washington Post (6/15, Linskey, 14.2M) reports “more than 50 liberal groups” have signed a letter to Biden “criticizing his response to the emerging protest movement against police brutality, warning that failing to embrace more aggressive agenda risks alienating the African American voters he needs to win the election. The letter pointed to Biden’s recent promise to add $300 million for community policing programs, a plan that activists say would undermine their efforts to push for systemic changes such as defunding police forces.”

National Pride At Lowest Level In History Of Gallup’s Tracking. Axios (6/15, Fernandez, 521K) reports 63 percent of US adults “say they are either ‘extremely’ or ‘very’ proud to be American – a seven-point decline from 2019 and the lowest figure since Gallup began tracking the question in 2001.” The poll found 49 percent of white respondents “said they were ‘extremely’ proud to be American, compared to just 24% for nonwhite respondents.”

Trump Posts Link To Favorable Coverage On Coronavirus Stimulus.

On Twitter, President Trump posted a link to Washington Times article published last week with the title “Trump Team Should Get ‘A Lot Of Credit’ For Fast Coronavirus Stimulus: CBO.”

Trump Agrees With Economist Who Projects V-Shaped Recovery.

On Twitter, President Trump on Monday quoted Chetan Ahya, Chief Economist at Morgan Stanley, who said, “We have greater confidence in our call for a V-shaped recovery, given recent upside surprises in growth data and policy action.”

Experts Offer Advice On How To Travel Safely During Pandemic.

On NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 10, 1:35, Holt, 6.8M), Tom Costello reported that for families making summer vacation plans, “even with airlines disinfecting their planes, road trips seem more popular." Costello added, "Because it's easier to limit exposure to others, disease experts generally recommend driving rather than flying." Costello said, "In the air or on the road, experts say it is all about taking smart precautions."

Hawley Proposing To Limit Big Tech's Section 230 Immunity.

Politico (6/15, Lima, 4.29M) reports that Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) is "preparing legislation that could require major online platforms like Google and Facebook to stop selling certain targeted ads to keep key legal protections." Politico says "the proposal would make industry protections under Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act – a 1996 law that shields online businesses from lawsuits over user content – contingent for some platforms on not allowing advertisers to target users based on behavioral data, which includes information such as web-browsing history and online activity." Politico says "it's the latest GOP-led plan to target Section 230, which has come under fire from" President Trump, who "has called for the legal shield to be 'revoked' over GOP allegations that social media companies stifle conservative viewpoints."

Bezos Willing To Testify Before House Panel Probing Tech Antitrust Issues.

The New York Times (6/15, McCabe, 18.61M) reports that an attorney for Amazon says CEO Jeff Bezos is willing to testify before a House panel in regards to an "antitrust investigation into the market power of major tech companies." The Times says Amazon "had earlier resisted making [Bezos] available to the House Judiciary Committee...prompting lawmakers to threaten to legally compel Mr. Bezos to testify." According to the Times, "The chief executives of the other companies under investigation by lawmakers – Apple, Facebook and Google – have all testified at various points in recent years on other matters." The Times says the committee "has been pushing for them to return to testify" as well.

The Washington Post (6/15, Romm, 14.2M), which is owned by Bezos, says members of Congress are "still seething over reports that Amazon employees tapped data from third-party sellers in the company's marketplace to make decisions about launching its own competing products" The Post adds, "Lawmakers' inquiry coincides with a probe into Amazon by the Federal Trade Commission...which is reviewing whether the e-commerce giant violated antitrust laws. In Europe, meanwhile, regulators as soon as this week are expected to issue charges against Amazon over its harnessing of third-party sellers' data." Politico (6/15, Lima, 4.29M) and Reuters (6/15), among other news outlets, also cover the announcement regarding Bezos' willingness to testify.

Tesla In Talks With Texas County On Incentives For New Assembly Plant.

The Austin American Statesman (6/15, Hawkins, Subscription Publication, 343K) reports, "Tesla is negotiating terms of a possible incentives deal with Travis County that could bring the electric car maker's next U.S. assembly plant – and thousands of jobs – to Austin, the American Statesman has learned." The Travis County Commissioners Court is "scheduled to discuss the terms of the potential incentives deal in an executive session on Tuesday, according to people with knowledge of the proceedings." Previous coverage had reported that "Tesla had chosen Austin and Tulsa as finalists for the assembly plant," but "it was unclear Monday whether the negotiations with Travis County signal that Tesla has settled on Austin, or if the company is also continuing to negotiate with Tulsa on possible incentives."

At Least 19 Alleged Cases Of Vehicles Ramming Demonstrators.

The Washington Post (6/15, A1, Satija, Davies, Bennett, 14.2M) reports on its front page that there have been "at least 19 cases in the past few weeks in which witnesses or police say civilian vehicles were driven through massive" police brutality demonstrations. According to the Post, "in at least eight of the events, a driver faces charges for what prosecutors described as a deliberate act, according to arrest and court filings." The allegations "echo the 2017 vehicle attack at a white-supremacist rally in Charlottesville that killed Heather Heyer, a counterprotester. They occur amid a resurgence of Internet memes featuring messages such as 'All lives splatter' and 'Run them over' and pictures of bloodied trucks."

FBI, California AG To Oversee Probe Of African American Man Found Hanging From Tree.

The AP (6/15) reports, "State and federal authorities will monitor the investigation into the death of a black man found hanging from a tree in the Southern California city of Palmdale, officials said Monday following large weekend protests." The FBI and the California Attorney General's office "will oversee the investigation, which is being led by the Los Angeles County sheriff's homicide bureau."

All three broadcast networks covered the death of 24-year-old Robert Fuller. On ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 2, 1:50, 7.94M), David Muir reported Fuller's family "has said they do not believe it was a suicide." On the CBS Evening News (6/15, story 9, 1:40, O'Donnell, 5.04M), Jonathan Vigliotti reported investigators are "in full retreat, walking back early claims" that Fuller killed himself. Vigliotti added, "An autopsy has also been ordered in another suspicious death. Thirty-eight-year-old Malcolm Harsch was found hanging from a tree in neighboring San Bernardino County." On NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 8, 2:00, 6.8M), Lester Holt said there are "calls for an independent investigation tonight into two separate deaths with striking similarities."

Minneapolis 911 Dispatcher Called Supervisor During Floyd Arrest.

ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 3, 0:30, Muir, 7.74M) briefly reported that audio newly released Monday indicates that a Minneapolis 911 police dispatcher was "so concerned" about an officer's actions in the arrest that led to George Floyd's death that "she called a supervisor to respond to the scene."

Second Man Charged With Murder In Dorn Death.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (6/15, Currier, 685K) reports, "Prosecutors have charged a second man with murder in the June 2 fatal shooting of retired St. Louis police Capt. David Dorn during looting at a pawn shop." Mark Jackson "was charged Thursday with second-degree murder (also called felony murder), robbery, burglary, stealing and three counts of armed criminal action."

WPost Profiles Ferguson Six Years Later.

In the wake of protests over George Floyd's death, the Washington Post (6/15, Gowen, 14.2M) profiles Ferguson, Missouri, six years "after a white police officer fatally shot unarmed black teen Michael Brown Jr."

Trump, Pence: Increase In COVID-19 Cases Due To Improved Testing.

President Trump tweeted that the United States is seeing an increase in COVID-19 cases because "Our testing is so much bigger and more advanced than any other country." Similarly, Bloomberg (6/15, Sink, 4.73M) reports, Vice President Pence said the flare-ups of cases in several states are the result of a "dramatic increase" in testing.

On a call with governors, Pence encouraged them to echo that Administration's position that the new coronavirus outbreak reports are due to increased testing, "even though evidence has shown that the explanation is misleading," according to the New York Times (6/15, 18.61M). However, an analysis of data collected by the Times found that "in at least 14 states, the positive case rate is increasing faster than the increase in the average number of tests." Pence also "was dismissive of the idea that community spread is a culprit," despite officials in several states "specifically" pointing to community spread.

Kudlow: There Has Been No "Second Wave." Appearing on Fox News (6/15, 896K), NEC Director Kudlow was asked about his insistence last week that there was "no second wave" of coronavirus despite reports of upticks in new cases across the country. Kudlow said, "I understand the growing concerns," but added, "These are relatively small bumps." Kudlow also said, "I think it is something we have to get used to you. I think it is controllable. ... We are not intending to close down the economy. "

On CNBC's Closing Bell (6/15, 108K), Kudlow was asked whether a spike in cases will slow down the economic recovery. Kudlow answered that "there are so many green shoots" that he believes "the v-shape economy is right there. ... Our view is you're going to get plus 20 percent in the second half of the year and with good policies, you're going to get a big bang economy in 2021."

The Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M) reports that Kudlow confirmed that President Trump "is opposed to national lockdown measures even if coronavirus data were to show a drastically worsening outbreak." Additional coverage includes Bloomberg (6/15, Sink, 4.73M).

US Coronavirus US Cases Rising. NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 3, 2:05, Holt, 6.8M) reported, "As more of the country reopens, cases of COVID-19 are surging in some areas." Researchers affiliated by the University of Washington offered "a dire forecast" that more than 201,000 people in the country could be dead by COVID-19 by October. NBC (Brock) added that in the last week Florida's COVID-19 cases have "soared by 10,000." While Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) attributes the total to increased testing, "health officials are worried about the trend." Across the nation "at least 16 states [are] showing a spike" in cases, with Texas seeing "a record number of hospitalizations for COVID-19."

ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 4, 2:45, Muir, 7.74M) reported coronavirus cases are rising in 21 states and Puerto Rico, with hospitalizations "up in 11 states." ABC's Marcus Moore added that Arizona hospitals are "seeing a record number of patients on ventilators and people showing up at the ERs." Manuel Bojorquez reported on the CBS Evening News (6/15, story 4, 2:25, O'Donnell, 4.78M), "Health experts' concerns are growing as quickly as the crowds."

Bloomberg (6/15, 4.73M) reports COVID-19 cases "continued to climb in a number of U.S. states over the weekend, threatening recent efforts to relax restrictions and revive businesses after months of lockdowns." Bloomberg says that on Sunday, both Texas and Florida "reported record numbers" of new infections. According to Bloomberg, "The recent surge in illnesses in those states and others, including Arizona and North Carolina, has led to concern among public-health officials that reopening the economy has come at the cost of spreading the new coronavirus." Bloomberg goes on to report that "state authorities are also bracing to see whether three weeks of demonstrations across the country...could cause spikes in cases."

CNBC (6/15, Lovelace, 3.62M) reports on its website that Texas officials "said there were 2,287 patients sickened with" COVID-19 across its hospitals on Sunday, "the sixth new high for coronavirus hospitalizations in the state in less than a week." According to CNBC, "In the past week, Wednesday was the only day that Texas didn't set a new record for hospitalizations."

Even as coronavirus infections continue to rise in many parts of the country, the Washington Post (6/15, A1, Bernstein, Weiner, Achenbach, 14.2M) reports, public health recommendations are "under attack from communities tired of staying home and officials eager to restart local economies." Experts attributed "the tension between warnings issued by public health experts and the reality in places where cases are increasing" to multiple factors, including people not yet having been personally affected by the outbreak, people moving around more in good weather, and political leaders "refusing to issue a consistent public health message about wearing masks and maintaining social distance." However, NIH Director Collins said, "I understand how people must be very tired of this at this point. But the virus doesn't care that we're tired. The virus is still out there."

Miami, Miami Beach Mayors "Sounding The Alarm" On New COVID-19 Cases But Won't Reverse Reopenings. The Miami Herald (6/15, Leibowitz, 1.09M) reports that Miami Mayor Francis Suarez (R) and Miami Beach Mayor Dan Gelber (D) held a news conference in which they expressed concern about the increasing totals and positive test rates of novel coronavirus cases in Miami-Dade County. Suarez said that if the current trend continues, "we're gonna be put in a situation where we have to make tough choices." He added, "We're kind of sounding the alarm." However, both said that they don't yet plan to reverse the reopening of their cities' economies or require residents stay home. Meanwhile, at his own news conference, Miami-Dade County Mayor Carlos Gimenez (R) "suggested the county's increasing number of COVID-19 cases is a direct result of increased testing."

FDA Revokes Emergency Authorization For Malaria Drugs Touted By Trump.

Marcus Moore reported on ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 4, 2:45, Muir, 7.74M) that the FDA is "revoking emergency authorization for hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine, saying the two malaria drugs are 'unlikely to be effective' in fighting COVID-19." HHS Secretary Azar said, "If a doctor wishes to prescribe it working with a patient, they may prescribe it for any purpose that they wish to do so. And this actually removes a potential barrier to that."

Reuters (6/15, Beasley, Mishra) reports the FDA's move "quickly came under fire from" President Trump, who "said only U.S. agencies have failed to grasp its benefit in fighting the coronavirus" and "said there had been 'great reports' out of France, Spain and other places, without offering any evidence or further explanation." The FDA also "warned that the drugs have been shown in lab studies to interfere with" remdesivir – the only medicine that clinical trials have shown provides a benefit against COVID-19.

The AP (6/15, Perrone) reports that there is growing evidence that the malaria drugs, promoted by President Trump "for treating COVID-19...don't work and could cause serious side effects." The FDA, "citing reports of heart complications," said the drugs' unproven benefits "do not outweigh the known and potential risks." The AP points out that the drugs are "still available for alternate FDA-approved uses, so U.S. doctors could still prescribe them for COVID-19."

The Washington Post (6/15, McGinley, Johnson, 14.2M) reports the FDA's "change in position was outlined in a letter from Denise Hinton, the agency's chief scientist, to Gary Disbrow, the acting director of the Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Authority, who requested the revocation. The FDA noted in the letter that the request was an 'interagency effort' prompted by new clinical trial results and other information." The Post reports that "for months," President Trump "touted hydroxychloroquine as a 'game changer,'" and "it was also talked up by many of his close associates," including Rudy Giuliani.

Reuters (6/15, Mishra, Beasley) reports that "in recent weeks," doctors "had already pulled back on the use of hydroxychloroquine for COVID-19, after several studies suggested it is not effective and may pose heart risks for certain patients." According to Reuters, "Half of hospitals responding to a mid-May survey conducted by the American Society of Health-System Pharmacists (ASHP) reported excess supplies of hydroxychloroquine that they expected to return to wholesalers."

The New York Times (6/15, 18.61M) reports that members of Congress "have questioned increases in the F.D.A.'s granting of emergency use authorizations during the pandemic for certain drugs as potential treatments. They have also questioned authorizations for antibody and diagnostic tests whose data had not been thoroughly vetted before approval, and for certain types of masks and other devices." According to the Times, Democrats "have criticized the Trump administration for pressuring the agency into issuing too many emergency approvals."

Some Concerned White House Pressure Will Cause Approval Of Ineffective COVID-19 Vaccine.

Politico (6/15, Owerhohle, 4.29M) reports that with President Trump seeking reelection and "eager to fulfill his promise" that a coronavirus vaccine will be available to all Americans before next year, "public health experts are growing increasingly worried that" the FDA will be pressured "to approve the first vaccine candidate to show promise – without proof that it provides effective, reliable protection against the virus." Such a move, which could make millions of doses available outside of clinical trials, would increase the difficulty of enrolling enough people in such trial to actually to show the vaccine works and could "squeeze other – potentially better – candidates out of the market." FDA Commissioner Hahn said, "Under no circumstances will the FDA allow political pressure to affect our decision-making."

Human Challenge Trials Under Consideration For COVID-19 Vaccine Candidates, But Thorny Issues Loom. The Washington Post (6/15, A1, Guarino, Johnson, 14.2M) reports there are "preliminary discussions" about using human challenge trials – in which healthy volunteers receive an experimental vaccine and are exposed to a pathogen – to study novel coronavirus vaccine candidates. NIH Director Collins said they are "on the table for discussion – not on the table to start designing a plan." Some experts are concerned that traditional Phase 3 trials could "take too long or not gather enough evidence to be conclusive"; in contrast, challenge trials can involve as little as 100 subjects take two or three months. However, infecting healthy people with a potentially lethal virus that there is no treatment for "raises some of the most fraught ethical, scientific and philosophical issues in the history of medicine." Despite the risks, the new online organization 1Day Sooner has more than 28,000 other volunteer to be part of such trials.

Survey: COVID-19 Deaths Hitting African Americans Disproportionately.

The AP (6/15, Stafford, Fingerhut) reports that three COVID Impact surveys conducted between April and June by NORC at the University of Chicago for the Data Foundation lay "bare how black Americans have borne the brunt of the" coronavirus pandemic. They found that 11 percent of African Americans "say they were close with someone who has died from the coronavirus, compared with 5% of Americans overall and 4% of white Americans." Additionally, an AP analysis of data from state and local health departments found that nationwide "more than a quarter of all COVID-related deaths nationwide have been black victims," almost double the share of the African American population in the sampled areas, and "in a number of states, the disparity was even more outsized."

Cuomo Warns New Yorkers Over Lax Adherence To Social Distancing Rules.

The New York Times (6/15, McKinley, Ferré-Sadurní, 18.61M) reports that New York's coronavirus indicators "clearly turned a corner," but over the weekend many people in New York City "openly disregarded social-distancing rules." Responding to videos and reports, Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "singled out bar owners and patrons in Manhattan and the Hamptons on Long Island for flouting the rules." He warned that, absent local crackdowns on such behavior, "there is a very real possibility that we would roll back the reopening in those areas" and that restaurants and bars could lose their liquor licenses. Cuomo said that if people violate the rules a second wave of infections "will come. And once it comes, it's too late."

Next Year's Oscars Pushed Back Due To Pandemic.

USA Today (6/15, Truitt, 10.31M) reports the 93rd Academy Awards has been pushed back from Feb. 28, 2021 to April 25 due to the coronavirus pandemic, and the eligibility period for Academy Awards consideration has been extended to Feb. 28, 2021, instead of ending with the year.

SCOTUS Declines To Hear Administration Challenge To California Sanctuary Law.

The New York Times (6/15, Liptak, 18.61M) reports that on Monday, the Supreme Court "turned down an appeal from the Trump administration seeking to challenge a California 'sanctuary law.'" Justices Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito "said they would have granted the administration's petition seeking review." According to the Times, "The California law prohibits state officials from telling federal ones when undocumented immigrants are to be released from state custody and restricts transfers of immigrants in state custody to federal immigration authorities." The Times says "a unanimous three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in San Francisco, ruled that the federal government is not entitled to commandeer a state's resources to further its immigration agenda."

The AP (6/15) reports, "The case is at the heart of long-running tensions between the state and the Trump administration over immigration enforcement." The Los Angeles Times (6/15, Savage, 4.64M) reports, "At issue was a clash between federal power and states' rights," and the late Justice Antonin Scalia's "state's rights doctrine" – that state and local officials are not required to carry out federal enforcement – "appears to have prevailed."

The Washington Post (6/15, Barnes, Marimow, 14.2M) reports that Solicitor General Noel Francisco "had asked the Supreme Court to take the case, saying the law intrudes on what is a federal responsibility." California Attorney General Xavier Becerra countered that the law is "consistent with the longstanding principle that the Constitution allows states to decline to use their own resources to carry out federal regulatory programs." Bloomberg (6/15, Stohr, 4.73M) and Reuters (6/15, Hesson), among other news outlets, also cover the ruling.

In an editorial, the Los Angeles Times (6/15, 4.64M) writes that the Court reaffirmed "that states and cities can't be forced to support" President Trump's "pernicious effort," since he took office to wage "a mean-spirited, costly and unnecessary war against undocumented immigrants." The Times adds, "Communities are safer when police and local law enforcement officers stay out of the deportation business."

Bipartisan Proposal Would Expand Tax Break For Charitable Gifts.

The Wall Street Journal (6/15, Rubin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a bipartisan effort to expand tax breaks for charitable donations is gaining support in Congress. Senators are proposing to allow taxpayers deduct charitable gifts, even if they do not itemize their deductions, in an effort to help nonprofit groups that are struggling during the pandemic, as well as middle-class donors.

Barr Announces Resumption Of Federal Executions.

The Washington Examiner (6/15, Dunleavy, 448K) reports Attorney General Barr said four federal death row inmates convicted of murdering children will be executed in July and August, the first federal executions "in nearly two decades." Last summer, Barr announced new guidelines on resuming capital punishment under federal law and directed that the three drugs previously used in federal executions be replaced with just the barbiturate phenobarbital.

SCOTUS Declines To Hear Cases Pushed By Pro-Gun Groups.

The Washington Post (6/15, Barnes, 14.2M) reports that on Monday, the Supreme Court "declined to take up new cases for next term that gun rights groups claimed denied Second Amendment rights." According to the Post, "The court did not accept a batch of nearly a dozen cases that gun groups had hoped the court, fortified with more conservative members, might consider." The AP (6/15) reports the Court left in place restrictions on carrying weapons in public, a ban on some semi-automatic firearms and large-capacity ammunition magazines, a handgun control law, and a federal ban on interstate handgun sales.

WPost Analysis: DeVos Seizing Opportunity To Push School Choice During Pandemic.

The Washington Post (6/15, Meckler, 14.2M) reports Education Secretary DeVos has "said little" about how public schools should confront the challenges posed by the pandemic, and instead, has "pressed her central agenda: that students and families should have choices beyond their traditional public schools, and that tax dollars should follow those choices." The pandemic, DeVos has said, "offers a 'silver lining,' showing Americans that traditional schooling is not the only way." In appearances on talk shows, DeVos has "said the remote education forced on schools this spring has taught people there is more than one way for students to learn. She spent less time discussing the challenges of students, parents and teachers who have tried but struggled under this system, or the challenges faced by schools and families with less money or less access to tools to make remote learning work."

Trump: Bolton Will Break The Law If He Publishes Book.

ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 10, 0:20, Muir, 7.94M) reported President Trump "would not confirm reports but strongly suggested the White House could sue to stop publication of" former National Security Adviser John Bolton's new book, due out next week. He said the book was full of classified information and that publishing it would break the law.

NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 6, 0:20, Holt, 6.8M) reported that President Trump is "bracing" John Bolton's upcoming book. Trump was shown saying, "Any conversation with me is classified." However, "Bolton's lawyer has said the White House has months to review the book and says it does not contain classified information." The CBS Evening News (6/15, story 6, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.78M) reported Trump is threatening to sue Bolton. Reuters (6/15, Mason) reports that at an event with Trump, Attorney General Barr said Bolton did not complete the process required to publish the book.

Bloomberg (6/15, Fabian, Sink, 4.73M) reports a person familiar with the matter said that the Administration is expected to seek a court injunction to block the book's publication, which is scheduled for June 23, and if unsuccessful could still sue Bolton for breach of contract. In a Wall Street Journal op-ed published last week, Bolton attorney Charles Cooper wrote that the assertion the memoir contained classified information and would violate nondisclosure agreements came after four-month review and weeks of silence from the White House. Meanwhile, failing to prevent the book's publication could "backfire by generating free publicity for its author."

Schumer Seeks Inquiry On Hiring Of Trump Ally To Head Post Office.

The Washington Post (6/15, Bogage, 14.2M) reports that in "the latest salvo in a growing political battle over the future" of the US Postal Service, Senate Minority Leader Schumer wrote to Postal Service Board of Governors Chairman Robert M. Duncan requesting communication with the White House about the appointment of new Postmaster General DeJoy, "a seasoned businessman and top fundraiser for President Trump." Schumer questioned whether DeJoy was "selected for reasons of politics or patronage" and how he'll distance himself from the GOP and "rid his extensive portfolio of any holding that conflicts with his new role." The letter comes as the Administration has sought to leverage the agency's deteriorating finances during the pandemic "to pull the independent agency into its sphere of influence."

Senate Democrats Denounce Pentagon Policy Chief Nominee.

Politico (6/15, O'Brien, 4.29M) reports that six Democrats on the Senate Armed Services Committee will oppose Anthony Tata, President Trump's "pick to be the next Pentagon policy chief, amid scrutiny over past tweets calling former President Barack Obama a 'terrorist leader.'" According to Politico, "The shot across the bow, led by ranking Democrat Jack Reed of Rhode Island, just days after Tata was officially nominated spells trouble for his nomination for undersecretary for policy." Politico says "the rebuke from Reed is a rare early rejection of a nominee on a committee that typically functions through bipartisan consensus." Politico says that on Friday, CNN "reported...that Tata has a history of making Islamophobic remarks and derogatory comments toward Democrats, including calling Obama 'a terrorist leader' and referring to Islam as 'the most oppressive violent religion I know of,' in since-deleted tweets from 2018."

Director Resigns As Trump Ally Is Set To Head Up VOA.

The AP (6/15, Fox) reports that Voice of America Director Amanda Bennett and Deputy Director Sandy Sugawara resigned Monday "following recent clashes with the Trump administration that have sparked fears for its independence." Bennett and Sugawara "announced they were leaving the organization as Trump ally and conservative filmmaker Michael Pack takes over leadership of the agency that oversees VOA." According to the AP, "Democrats objected to the nomination of Pack, a one-time associate of former Trump adviser Steve Bannon, in part for his refusal to answer questions about past business dealings," but "that didn't stop his confirmation by the Senate."

The Washington Post (6/15, Farhi, Izadi, 14.2M) reports that VOA's "relationship with the Trump administration was already fraught, but over the weekend, a new rift developed. After news emerged that the Centers for Disease Control had instructed its communications staff to deny interviews to VOA reporters – a policy prompted by the White House's criticism of the agency – Bennett issued a strongly worded statement condemning the policy. 'Efforts such as those outlined in the CDC memo can result in the kind of chilling effect on our journalism that we regularly see in the markets we broadcast to that have no free press,' Bennett wrote in response."

Politico (6/15, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that the CDC's "mandate came in an April 30 email sent from the CDC official, Michawn Rich, which detailed in part the process for approving interview requests before they are forwarded to the Department of Health and Human Services or Office of the Vice President. 'NOTE: as a rule, do not send up requests for Greta Van Susteren [sic] or anyone affiliated with Voice of America,' the email states." Van Susteren is "a longtime news anchor and attorney who now works as a host for VOA." According to Politico, Rich, "who was named communications director at the Agriculture Department last year, had been detailed to the CDC to assist with communications related to the coronavirus."

The New York Times (6/15, Wong, 18.61M) reports, "Trump has placed extraordinary pressure on Voice of America in recent months by personally denouncing its work." Many journalists at organizations overseen by the US Agency for Global Media, such as Voice of America, "have been nervous" about Pack's leadership and "whether he intends to maintain editorial independence from the White House and other parts of the government," as VOA "is supposed to."

First Lady Announces National Youth Art Project On Women's Suffrage.

The AP (6/15, Superville) reports First Lady Melania Trump on Monday "announced a youth art project to coincide with the ratification nearly 100 years ago of the constitutional amendment that granted women the right to vote." She "said children should be included in conversations about the upcoming centennial so they can learn the history behind the women's suffrage movement, including peaceful protests like those they see taking place in response to the killing of George Floyd by police in Minneapolis."

The Washington Examiner (6/15, Yilek, 448K) reports the First Lady said in a statement, "For decades, women leaders lobbied, marched, and protested for equality and their right to vote in the United States. It is my hope that this project will both support and expand the important conversations taking place on equality and the impact of peaceful protests, while encouraging children to engage in the history behind this consequential movement in their own home state."

Trump's Niece To Publish Tell-All Next Month.

The New York Times (6/15, Vigdor, Alter, 18.61M) reports that Mary Trump, the President's niece, "will divulge a series of damaging stories about him in an upcoming book, the first time that the president could be forced to grapple with unflattering revelations by a member of his own family." Mary Trump "will release the book, 'Too Much and Never Enough: How My Family Created the World's Most Dangerous Man,' on July 28," according her publisher, Simon & Schuster. The Times says that in the book, she "will say she was a primary source for The New York Times's coverage of Mr. Trump's finances and provided the newspaper with confidential tax documents." The Times reports that Mary Trump is "the daughter of Fred Trump Jr., the president's older brother, who died in 1981," and "has mostly kept out of the public eye, except for a family feud over the will of the Trump family patriarch, Fred Trump Sr., who died in 1999."

Gorsuch Joins Roberts And Liberal Justices In Barring Discrimination Based On Sexuality.

The Hill (6/15, Samuels, 2.98M) reports that on Monday, President Trump said, "we live with" the Supreme Court's ruling earlier in the day that civil rights laws protect gay and transgender employees against employer discrimination. While the Administration had argued on behalf of the employers in the case, Trump said the justices "have so ruled."

NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 2, 2:10, Holt, 6.8M) reported that in a "landmark decision" the Supreme Court ruled "the nation's most important civil rights law also bans discrimination against gay and transgender workers." NBC (Williams) added that in "a stunning ruling from a more conservative Supreme Court," the 1964 Civil Rights Act was held to ban job decisions because of sexual orientation and gender identity, "because they're forms of sex discrimination." Williams said, "Even more surprising" was that Justice Neil Gorsuch, President Trump's first Supreme Court appointee, who wrote the ruling.

Terry Moran, reporting on ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 7, 2:00, Muir, 7.74M) called the ruling a "stunning victory for LGBTQ Americans." Meanwhile, Justice Samuel Alito's 100-page dissent "warned of dire consequences" from the ruling, "from bathrooms at workplaces to pronouns." The CBS Evening News (6/15, story 3, 2:10, O'Donnell, 4.78M) offered similar coverage.

Calling the ruling "a resounding victory for LGBT rights from a conservative court," the AP (6/15, Sherman) reports that the Supreme Court's decision was 6-3, with Justices Alito, Kavanaugh, and Thomas dissenting. Gorsuch wrote, "An employer who fires an individual for being homosexual or transgender fires that person for traits or actions it would not have questioned in members of a different sex."

According to Politico (6/15, Gerstein, Rainey, 4.29M), "The conservative Gorsuch embraced arguments that seemed radical to many liberals just a few years ago: that the 1964 Civil Rights Act's prohibition on sex discrimination in employment also effectively banned bias based on sexual orientation or gender identity, even though few if any members of Congress thought they were doing that at the time." To Politico, the decision is "a rout for social conservatives and a defeat for President Donald Trump's administration, which had urged the justices to take a narrow view of the half-century-old law."

The Washington Post (6/15, Barnes, 14.2M) says Gorsuch "acknowledged that lawmakers in 1964 were probably not protecting gay and transgender workers. But the words of the statute they wrote do that, he said. 'Likely, they weren't thinking about many of the act's consequences that have become apparent over the years, including its prohibition against discrimination on the basis of motherhood or its ban on the sexual harassment of male employees,' he wrote." Gorsuch added, "The limits of the drafters' imagination supply no reason to ignore the law's demands."

The New York Times (6/15, Liptak, 18.61M) reports that "until Monday's decision, it was legal in more than half the states to fire workers for being gay, bisexual or transgender." According to the Times, "The decision, covering two sets of cases, was the court's first on lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender rights since the retirement in 2018 of Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, who wrote the majority opinions in all four of the court's major gay rights decisions."

USA Today (6/15, Wolf, 10.31M) reports the ruling "is likely to have a sweeping impact" in the areas of education, healthcare, housing, and financial credit. Additionally, it could imperil the Administration's new rule narrowing the legal definition of sex discrimination in healthcare to omit transgender people. However, discrimination in public accommodations based on sex is not barred by federal law.

In an analysis, the New York Times (6/15, Shear, 18.61M) reports, "Justice Gorsuch has largely echoed" the legal philosophy of Justice Antonin Scalia, who he succeeded, and "has repeatedly said he is a staunch believer in 'textualism.'" Conservative legal scholars, who "were instrumental" in persuading Trump to nominate Gorsuch and pushed for his confirmation, "denounced his opinion, calling it a travesty for conservative legal thought." With this opinion, Gorsuch "assumed the role of his mentor, former Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, who played a pivotal role in many of the biggest gay rights cases of the last quarter-century."

Similarly, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, A1, Bravin, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Gorsuch used Scalia's approach of examining the language Congress enacted, in contrast to considering wider exploration of legislators' goal or relying on broad constitutional principles of due process and equal protection.

Reuters (6/15, Hurley) and Bloomberg (6/15, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover the ruling.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes that the decision was a win for Justice Elena Kagan's efforts to redefine Scalia's jurisprudence. The Journal adds that the majority opinion essentially rewrites Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act using her views, distorts textualism, and usurps Congress. The Journal concludes that the opinion makes textualism meaningless and allow the law to force transgender females' competition in women's sports, provision of gender neutral restrooms, and the compliance of religious institutions.

In an editorial, the New York Times (6/15, 18.61M) welcomes the ruling as "an emphatic win for civil rights, equal justice and common sense" that should have been unanimous. The Times criticizes Justice Samuel Alito's dissent as "sound[ing] like it was written in 1964" and pointing out that if the Court, as he argued interpreted statutes to "mean what they conveyed to reasonable people at the time they were written," then the Second Amendment would apply only to bayonets and muskets. Still, the Times warns that when textualism is "applied too rigidly it can lead to very unjust results."

The decision "helped make America a better country," the Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M) writes in an editorial, calling it another "major civil rights advance" that didn't come from Congress, which "should have acted years before now to remove any doubt that the law protects LGBTQ people." The Post criticizes the GOP for continuing to trail "society's welcome evolution on questions of fair treatment for all."

Supreme Court Allows Pipeline Crossing Appalachian Trail.

Reuters (6/15, Hurley) reports that in a 7-2 ruling the Supreme Court handed Dominion Energy Inc. and the Trump Administration a victory, holding that the Forest Service has authority to grant the proposed $7.5 billion Atlantic Coast Pipeline a right of way where it would cross the Appalachian Trail, which is overseen by the National Park Service. The ruling removes just one of "several obstacles facing the project."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) celebrates environmentalists' loss. The Journal casts opponents of the trail – and the rulings supporting them – as contrary to common sense and seeking to stop US energy production.

Trump Contrasts Health Media Warnings About His Rallies With Justifications For Protests.

The CBS Evening News . . . (6/15, story 5, 1:05, O'Donnell, 4.78M) reported President Trump on Monday rejected "concerns that his upcoming campaign rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma on Saturday will expose his supporters to COVID-19." CBS' Ben Tracy added, "Despite the recent spike in coronavirus cases, President Trump says he won't be shamed into canceling his campaign rally and is still planning to pack an arena in Tulsa, Oklahoma on Saturday."

Politico (6/15, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that Trump "claimed to be a victim of double standards when it comes to perception of his decision to resume campaign rallies in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic, declaring that attempts to 'covid shame' his campaign 'won't work!'" Politico says the President "complained about discrepancies in media coverage of his upcoming rally in Tulsa, Okla., compared to that of mass protests across the country over police killings of unarmed black Americans." Trump wrote on Twitter, "The Far Left Fake News Media, which had no Covid problem with the Rioters & Looters destroying Democrat run cities, is trying to Covid Shame us on our big Rallies." According to Politico, public health experts, who "have faced accusations of hypocrisy for backing the protests," have "argued that, while still dangerous, mass gatherings are safer outdoors than indoors, as Trump's rally will be."

The Washington Post (6/15, Elfrink, 14.2M) reports that Tulsa Health Department Director Bruce Dart "warned over the weekend that a rally expected to draw more than 19,000 Trump supporters could ignite a bigger crisis." According to the Post, "The conflict hints at the significant challenges of campaigning during a pandemic, a particularly acute problem for Trump, who has built a movement centered on the giant gatherings that health officials warn are among the riskiest events for transmitting the coronavirus." Also, The Hill (6/15, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports, "The editorial board of Tulsa World has called on Trump to reconsider hosting the campaign rally in the city, calling it the 'wrong time' to do so during the pandemic."

The Washington Times (6/15, Boyer, 492K) reports, "The Trump campaign said Monday it has received more than 1 million requests for tickets to the president's next campaign rally, even as the top health official in Tulsa, Oklahoma, warned that people could contract the COVID-19 disease in the enclosed arena." On Twitter, Trump wrote on Monday, "Almost One Million people request tickets for the Saturday Night Rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma!" On NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 5, 1:00, Holt, 6.8M), Peter Alexander reported Trump "says to accommodate ticket requests, they will fill the 19,000 seat arena and the convention hall next door. The type of gathering the CDC classifies as highest risk of spreading coronavirus."

The Tulsa World (6/15, 205K) reports Vice President Pence on Monday said he will join Trump in Tulsa on Saturday. Pence tweeted, "Thrilled to be joining President @realDonaldTrump in Tulsa, Oklahoma on Saturday! We are Making America Great Again! #FourMoreYears"

Reuters (6/15, Chiacu, Lange) reports people attending the campaign rally on Saturday will "receive temperature checks, masks and hand sanitizer before entering the arena, the Republican's campaign said." The Washington Examiner (6/15, Crilly, 448K) reports Deputy Campaign Communications Director Erin Perrine said, "The campaign takes the health and safety of rallygoers seriously and is taking precautions to make the rally safe. Every single rallygoer will have their temperature checked, be provided a face mask and hand sanitizer."

Axios (6/15, Fernandez, 521K) reports Republican National Committee Chair Ronna McDaniel "said Monday that masks would be optional, telling Fox News: 'The American people can make decisions for themselves, we're all pretty informed about Covid at this point.'" Axios points out that "two of Trump's recent high-dollar fundraisers had more rigorous safety precautions for top Republican donors than the rally will, including requiring a negative coronavirus test, a wellness questionnaire and temperature checks," according to NBC News.

On ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 5, 1:40, Muir, 7.74M), Jonathan Karl reported that "the President's top economic adviser recommended masks for everybody, but was less emphatic about those attending the rally." When asked during an appearance on CNN if people should be wearing masks at the rally, NEC Director Kudlow answered, "Well, okay, probably so."

On Fox News' Hannity (6/15, 535K), White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany addressed media criticism of President Trump's planned campaign rally in Tulsa. Speaking of the media, McEnany said, "This is how much they have Trump Derangement Syndrome. They see a million people registering for a rally so they are so contradictory, praising the crowd of protesters, criticizing the million people who signed up for a Trump rally. We saw this with the churches when President Trump opened the churches, socially distanced. They criticized that but then in the same breath laud the protests a week later. It's so wrong. People see directly through this and it's all because President Trump is succeeding."

Trump To Travel To Alabama For Rally In Support Of Tuberville.

CNN (6/15, Collins, 83.16M) reports on its website that President Trump will "travel to Mobile, Alabama, next month to rally on behalf of Tommy Tuberville, who is running against his former attorney general, Jeff Sessions, as he attempts to reclaim his old US Senate seat." Calling it "a blow" to Sessions, CNN says "the rally will be held in his hometown days before the runoff election scheduled for July 14." Sessions responded to the news by telling the President his time "would be far better spent in swing states he must win to be reelected."

Conway: Trump Giving Seniors More Tools To Fight Financial Fraud.

On Fox News (6/15), White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway discussed President Trump's roundtable with senior citizens he was scheduled to hold on Monday. Conway said Trump is focused on tackling "the financial fraud that is hurting our seniors all across this country." Conway said, "We are giving banks more leeway and more guidance. If you see a senior citizen withdrawing his or her life savings, they probably have gotten one of those calls or texts or emails or threatening notes to do that. There's a ton of financial fraud. We are getting seniors more tools to help them fight against that."

Report Finds Racial Bias In Mortgage Lending.

NYTimes Analysis: Federal "Midlevel Managers" Trying To "Undermine Climate Change Science."

According to the New York Times (6/15, Friedman, 18.61M), "Efforts to undermine climate change science in the federal government, once orchestrated largely by President Trump's political appointees, are now increasingly driven by midlevel managers trying to protect their jobs and budgets and wary of the scrutiny of senior officials." The Times says "government experts said they have been surprised at the speed with which federal workers have internalized President Trump's antagonism for climate science, and called the new landscape dangerous." The Times says an EPA IG report "found that almost 400 employees surveyed in 2018 believed a manager had interfered with or suppressed the release of scientific information, but they never reported the violations."

Iowa Poll: Trump Leads Biden 44%-43%, Down From A 10-Point Edge In March.

The Des Moines Register (6/15, Pfannenstiel, 404K) reports that a Des Moines Register/Mediacom Iowa Poll of 674 likely Iowa voters, taken June 7-10, shows President Trump leading Joe Biden 44%-43%. The Register says that Trump "carried Iowa by 9 percentage points in his 2016 contest against Democrat Hillary Clinton." The Register adds that a similar poll taken in March showed Trump leading Biden 51%-41%.

National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 49%-35%. An Abacus Data national poll of "registered voters," taken July 11-13, shows Biden leading Trump 49%-35%. The write-up accompanying the poll doesn't indicate how many "registered voters" were surveyed, saying only that "1,500 American adults" were polled.

WPost's Blake Rehashes Trump Attorney's Back-And-Forth With Stelter Over CNN Poll. Writing in "The Fix" blog on the website of the Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M), Aaron Blake rehashed Trump campaign attorney Jenna Ellis' Sunday back-and-forth with CNN's Brian Stelter over a poll conducted by CNN that showed Biden with a 14-point edge over Trump. Blake says Ellis "claimed the CNN poll was 'junk' because it included adults who aren't registered voters," though "Stelter rightly noted, this is not at all uncommon with polls – including Washington Post polls – and the 14-point lead the poll showed was based only upon registered voters, not all adults." Blake adds that Ellis later tweeted a different poll at Stelter showing a closer race between Biden and Trump, but Blake says "the poll she tweeted wasn't even a presidential preference poll. Instead, it was a poll of who people thought would win the presidential race. The poll from Zogby Analytics showed people thought Trump would win by a 51-43 margin."

WPost's Bump Slams OAN Report On Poll As "Dishonest" and "Fake News." In an online analysis for the Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M), Philip Bump highlights what he says was an example of One American News offering a "dishonest" report on a Gravis Marketing poll testing Biden and Trump in Florida. Bump says the OAN report on the poll included "fake news...invented, cherry-picked and deceptively framed information meant not to convey actual information but, instead, to placate the president and his supporters. It is to news what your mom's evaluation of your performance in your Little League game was – reassuring but hardly objective."

Trump Camp, RNC Raise $14M On President's Birthday, Their Best Online Fundraising Day Ever.

In an exclusive, Fox News (6/15, Re, 27.59M) reports on its website that President Trump's campaign and the Republican National Committee "posted their largest online fundraising day ever on Sunday, bringing in $14 million across three entities on the president's birthday – smashing their previous online fundraising record of $10 million on Oct. 19, 2016." Fox News adds, "Trump and the RNC – which have been building a fundraising juggernaut for more than three years – have roughly $255 million cash on hand, compared with the approximately $100 million the Joe Biden campaign and DNC have in their coffers. A competitive primary with numerous candidates on the Democratic side essentially stalled their effort to consolidate donations for months."

The Hill (6/15, Manchester, 2.98M) reports, "Fundraising is expected to increase in the coming months, with Trump slated to resume his in-person campaign events this weekend in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Trump hosted a high-dollar fundraiser at his Bedminster, New Jersey golf club on Saturday, with tickets going as high as $250,000 per person."

On its website, NBC News (6/15, Alba, 6.14M) reports that Trump's reelection effort "raised more than $27 million in the span of four days after an extensive digital fundraising effort and resumption of in-person fundraising. The team announced it raised $14 million online on Sunday in a push to mark the president's 74th birthday, resulting in its largest single-day fundraising total to date." NBC adds, "And late last week, the Trump campaign and" RNC "resumed in-person fundraising, raking in $10 million at a private home in Dallas and $3 million in Bedminster, N.J. over the weekend." The Washington Times (6/15, Sherfinski, 492K) also reports on the story.

Trump Says He's Done More In Less Than Four Years Than Biden Did In Over 40 Years.

President Trump on Monday tweeted, "I've done more in less than 4 years than Biden's done in more than 40 years, including for Black America. Biden has been a part of every failed decision for decades. Bad Trade Deals, Endless Wars, you name it, he has shown a complete lack of leadership. He's weak & shot!!!"

Across US, Local GOP Chairs Are Convinced Trump Will Win Reelection.

Politico (6/15, Siders, 4.29M) reports, "By most conventional indicators, Donald Trump is in danger of becoming a one-term president." Yet, throughout the GOP's "vast organization in the states, the operational approach to Trump's re-election campaign is hardening around a fundamentally different view. Interviews with more than 50 state, district and county [GOP] chairs depict a version of the electoral landscape that is no worse for Trump than six months ago – and possibly even slightly better. According to this view, the coronavirus is on its way out and the economy is coming back. Polls are unreliable, Joe Biden is too frail to last, and the media still doesn't get it." Robeson County, NC GOP chief Phillip Stephens told Politico, "We're calling him 'Teflon Trump.' Nothing's going to stick, because if anything, it's getting more exciting than it was in 2016. ... We're thinking landslide." The Washington Examiner (6/15, Doyle, 448K) reports on the story drawing from Politico's article.

Biden, DNC Raise Almost $81M In May.

Politico (6/15, Caputo, 4.29M) reports that Joe Biden's campaign on Monday "announced it raised $81 million last month, fueled by his rise in the polls against President Trump and growth in his online fundraising operation. The $80.8 million haul by Biden and two committees associated with the Democratic Party came as Biden's campaign tripled the number of online donors since February and counted 1.5 million new supporters 'in the last few weeks,' according to an email sent Tuesday to supporters." Politico says "the new fundraising numbers partly reflect the full fundraising weight of the Biden Victory Fund, a joint enterprise with the Democratic National Committee established in May. Before the fund was established, Biden and the DNC raised $60.5 million in April, 30 percent less than the sum the campaign announced Monday."

The New York Times (6/15, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports that the haul represented Biden's and the DNC's "biggest fund-raising month of the campaign...as large and small donors alike consolidated behind the presumptive Democratic nominee ahead of his fall contest with President Trump." The Times adds that May "was also the first full month that Mr. Biden had an agreement to raise money in tandem with the DNC through what is known as the Biden Victory Fund, which allows a single donor to give more than $620,000."

The AP (6/15) describes the nearly $81M haul as "a massive sum that shows the extent to which Democrats have unified behind" Biden "as he seeks to defeat Republican President Donald Trump. Then on Monday," Biden "broke his own single-event record by taking in $6 million during an online fundraiser" with Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "that was attended by over 600 people. The amount of money Biden is pulling in suggests he won't have difficulty amassing the resources needed to compete with Trump, even in the midst of a pandemic that has tanked markets, forced many out of work, or otherwise crimped peoples' ability to spend." On its website, CNN (6/15, Bradner, 83.16M) reports a fundraiser with Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) last week "raised $3.5 million, underscoring how Biden is leaning on his former rivals – and the fundraising bases they built – for the general election."

Reuters (6/15, Ax) reports that Biden said in a statement, "Just a few months ago, people were ready to write this campaign off. Now, we are making huge dents in Donald Trump's war chest." Bloomberg (6/15, Allison, 4.73M) says that "during the primaries, Biden's campaign lagged behind rivals like Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren in attracting those smaller, grassroots donations. Through the end of March, Sanders had raised $114 million from small-dollar donors, those giving less than $200, compared to $53 million for Biden, FEC records show." The Hill (6/15, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports, "The Biden campaign said that half of those who contributed in May were new donors. The average online donation to the campaign last month was $30." The Washington Times (6/15, McLaughlin, 492K) reports briefly on the story.

Obama Slated To Headline Virtual Fundraiser For Biden On June 23. The Washington Post (6/15, Sonmez, Lee, 14.2M) reports that former President Obama "will host a virtual fundraiser next week for...Biden, marking the first time that the 44th president will host an event for his former vice president's 2020 White House bid." Biden's "campaign announced the event Monday night, encouraging supporters to 'chip in any amount to attend our grassroots fundraiser with President Obama' on June 23." Axios (6/15, Nichols, 521K) reports that Biden's "campaign is looking to surpass a virtual event with former candidate Pete Buttigieg, which raised $1 million from approximately 36,000 donors." The Hill (6/15, Coleman, 2.98M) also reports on the story.

In 1993, Biden Said Confederate Heritage Group Included "Many Fine People."

On its website, Fox News (6/15, Re, 27.59M) reports, "A recently resurfaced video clip shows Joe Biden calling members of a Confederate heritage group 'fine people' in 1993 – nearly mirroring President Trump's 2017 remarks that some protesters opposing the removal of Confederate statues in Charlottesville, Va., were 'very fine people.'" During a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on July 22, 1993, Biden made a positive remark about the United Daughters of the Confederacy, "which has been linked to the Ku Klux Klan." Praising a speech by then-Sen. Howell Heflin (D-AL), Biden said, "As a son of the Confederacy, acknowledging that it was time to change and yield to a position that Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun raised on the Senate floor, not granting a federal charter to an organization made up of many fine people who continue to display the Confederate flag as a symbol." That was a reference to Moseley-Braun remarks earlier in the day concerning the UDP."

Planned Parenthood Endorses Biden.

Reuters (6/15, Ax) reports, "The political advocacy arm of reproductive-services provider Planned Parenthood on Monday endorsed Democrat Joe Biden for US president, calling his race against Republican President Donald Trump a 'fight for our country's very survival.'" Reuters adds, "Planned Parenthood Action Fund, which earlier this year launched a $45 million campaign to support Democratic candidates, had been expected to endorse the Democratic candidate for president, as it has in recent elections."

In Letter, Group Of Liberals Press Biden To Select Warren As Running Mate.

The Washington Post (6/15, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports, "More than 100 liberal activists, leaders and celebrities signed a letter" urging Joe Biden to choose Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) as his running mate, "intensifying pressure on the presumptive Democratic nominee from the left as he faces competing demands to pick a black woman." The letter casts Warren "as the best prepared prospect to serve as president and one uniquely capable of helping Biden politically in the November election. It asserts that he is 'already strong' among nonwhite voters but could use help winning over disaffected voters who" had supported Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) during "the primary – even as some of them have soured on Warren."

USA Today (6/15, Santucci, 10.31M) reports, "Jane Fonda, whose recent activism includes a slew of arrests at climate protests, signed the letter," as did "progressive health care activist Ady Barkan, Pulse nightclub shooting survivor and gun violence activist Brandon Wolf and a wide range of left-leaning scholars and public figures." USA Today adds that Biden "is faced with the challenge of picking a VP who will help him energize young voters and voters of color. Some Democrats have called on him to choose a Latina or African American running mate to reach key voting blocs. Those calls have intensified as massive protests against racism and police brutality take place across the country."

Hillary Clinton Endorses Engel In NY16 Primary.

The New York Times (6/15, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports, "Hillary Clinton delivered her first Democratic primary endorsement in a 2020 House race on Monday, throwing her support behind" Rep. Eliot Engel (D-NY), who is "trying to fend off a serious challenge from his left after more than three decades in Congress." Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) are among those backing Engel's "leading challenger, Jamaal Bowman, a middle school principal."

DNC Climate Council's $16T Plan Creates Intra-Party Tension.

Reuters (6/15, Hunnicutt, Volcovici) reports that the Democratic National Committee's council on climate change "irked party leadership when it published policy recommendations this month that ventured beyond presidential candidate Joe Biden's plan." The DNC's Environment and Climate Crisis Council "published proposals for the party's four-year platform on June 4 in a press release, calling for up to $16 trillion in spending to shift the US economy away from fossil fuels while banning hydraulic fracturing and oil and gas exports." Reuters says that "far exceed Biden's current climate plan, which bans new oil and gas permits on public lands and dedicates $1.7 trillion to accelerate the transition to renewable energy, but allows continued fracking and exports in the meantime."

Trump Lawyer Targeting State Voting Laws Profiled.

The New York Times (6/15, Hakim, Saul, 18.61M) profiles attorney William Consovoy, whose "firm [has] argued against affirmative action at Harvard and for virtually outlawing abortion in Georgia." Consovoy's "work for Mr. Trump has centered on the president's efforts, now before the Supreme Court, to keep his tax returns private – in the course of which Mr. Consovoy famously claimed that the president could not be prosecuted while in office, even for shooting someone in the middle of Fifth Avenue." The Times adds, "But it is his work on voting cases across the country that is drawing increasing attention. ... In recent weeks, his firm, Consovoy McCarthy, has fought against extending the deadline for mail-in voting in Wisconsin, sought to thwart felons from being re-enfranchised in Florida and sued to block California's plan to send absentee ballots to all registered voters."

USA Today: Ability To Vote By Mail "Even More Important" During Pandemic. In an editorial, the USA Today (6/15, 10.31M) writes that the coronavirus pandemic "renders mail-in voting even more important, particularly as epidemiologists warn of a possible second coronavirus surge come fall." Though President Trump has tweeted "outrageous outbursts about the issue," USA Today says, "Trump himself votes by mail. All 50 states allow it to some degree. One in four Americans voted by mail in 2016 and 2018. And the practice dates to Union troops voting absentee in the Civil War. ... The reality is that mail voting is a prudent step in a health crisis, and the risks of fraud are tiny."

In an opposing USA Today (6/15, 10.31M) op-ed, elections attorney Harmeet Dhillon, who says she "represent[s] Republicans suing in California to prevent millions of ballots being sent to inactive voters," argues that "expanding vote-by-mail systems takes an immense amount of equipment, time, staff and funding," and "is less secure than in-person voting."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 42.4%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 42.4%, and his disapproval at 55.3%. The President's approval is unchanged since yesterday, but his disapproval is up 0.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (6/10-6/14) finds Trump's approval at 43%, and his disapproval at 56%.

ECB Considers Next Move Amid Inflation Uncertainty.

Bloomberg (6/16, Look, 4.73M) reports the ECB's next move in response to the economic downturn resulting from the pandemic "could turn on whether it listens more to consumers or investors about the risk of deflation." Executive Board member Isabel Schnabel "highlighted the dilemma last week when she noted that financial markets have been pricing in 'significant risks' of a downward spiral in prices because of the coronavirus, while households expect just the opposite." Bloomberg says the right answer to that dilemma "matters hugely for the ECB because policy makers have justified their unprecedented support by saying it's geared toward their mandate of price stability, defined as inflation 'below, but close to, 2%.'" Numerous ECB officials "have said their decision this month to extend and almost double their pandemic bond-buying program was motivated by fear that prices will start a broad-based decline."

BOJ Head: Interest Rates Likely To Remain Ultra-Low Past 2022.

Bloomberg (6/16, Fujioka, Ito, 4.73M) reports Bank of Japan head Haruhiko Kuroda "said interest rates would likely remain ultralow into 2023 and warned that the pandemic could end up having a longer-than-expected impact on the economy." Kuroda "said that firms were still under severe financing stress, adding that he was determined to support businesses with lending for as long as needed during the crisis." Kuroda said, "Whether it's the fiscal year 2021 or 2022, I do feel we're a long way from a situation where we can raise rates." Kuroda "added that it would be difficult to move before the Federal Reserve, which hinted last week it would keep rates low through 2022 last week."

Reuters (6/16, Kihara, Kaneko, Kajimoto) also reports on Kuroda's comments.

Tens Of Thousands Tested In Beijing Following New Outbreak.

The New York Times (6/15, Buckley, 18.61M) reports that "authorities in Beijing placed a swath of the city under lockdown on Monday and tested tens of thousands of people as they rushed to contain a new coronavirus outbreak that marked an unnerving breach in China's capital." According to the Times, Chinese President Xi Jinping "had said from the outset that Beijing, the seat of Communist Party power and a crowded metropolis, should be a fortress against the pandemic, and local officials have imposed strict measures to keep infections low." The Times says that "until now, the efforts appeared to have protected the capital against the virus."

The Washington Post (6/15, Fifield, 14.2M) reports that "after dozens of new cases were reported over the weekend, continuing into Monday, Chinese authorities mobilized almost 100,000 community workers to carry out tests on everyone who has worked in or visited the Xinfadi market in the southwest of Beijing." According to the Post, Xinfadi is "the largest fruit, vegetable and meat market in the capital, which is home to some 21 million people, and supplies 70 percent of the city's fresh vegetables and 80 percent of its fruit." The Post reports that "after discovering more than 90 new infections linked to the market over the weekend, and a further 36 being reported Monday, Beijing's health authorities are taking military-style action to try to ensure the virus doesn't spread further."

In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, A1, Hua, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that residents, who had been returning to normal life as strict pandemic controls eased, were rattled by the new outbreak.

The AP (6/15) reports that the WHO's Michael Ryan "said he 'fully expects' China to share the genetic sequences from the resurgence of coronavirus that have recently hit Beijing, even though they have not yet done so." According to the AP, "Chinese officials said that their examination of the virus shows it originated in Europe, but they have not yet shared the sequences with WHO or the global scientific community."

US, China Agree To Allow Four Flights A Week. Reuters (6/15, Shepardson, Rucinski) reports that, "easing a standoff on travel restrictions," the US Transportation Department said that Washington and Beijing agreed to allow four weekly flights between the two countries. The agency said, "As the Chinese government allows more flights by U.S. carriers, we will reciprocate."

WHO Head To Deliver Graduation Speech At Chinese University. The New York Post (6/15, Nelson, 4.57M) reports that on Sunday, WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, "whose alleged pro-China bias prompted President Trump to withdraw US funding," will deliver a graduation speech at China's Tsinghua University School of Economics and Management.

European Borders Reopen, But International Travelers Remain Prohibited.

The AP (6/15, Moritsugu, Moulson, Hadjicostis) reports that on Monday, European countries "reopened borders...after a three-month coronavirus shutdown, although international visitors are still being kept away and there was uncertainty over whether many Europeans will quickly embrace travel outside their home countries." Germany and France "dropped border checks nearly two weeks after Italy opened its frontiers." However, the EU is not "expected to start reopening to visitors from outside the continent until at least the beginning of July and possibly later."

Pakistan Has Many More Confirmed Cases Since Easing Lockdown Than Beforehand.

The New York Times (6/15, Ur-Rehman, Masood, Abi-Habib, 18.61M) reports that "before reopening, Pakistan had recorded about 25,000 infections. A month later, the country recorded an additional 100,000 cases – almost certainly an undercount – and the pandemic shows no signs of abating. At least 2,356 people have died" of COVID-19, according to official figures released last week. According to the Times, Pakistan is "now reporting so many new cases that it is among the World Health Organization's top 10 countries where the virus is on the rise," and the WHO "wrote a letter criticizing the government's efforts on June 7 and recommended that lockdown be reimposed, stating that Pakistan did not meet any of the criteria needed to lift it."

Canada, Mexico Discuss USMCA Trade Deal.

Reuters (6/15, Martinez) reports Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador said Monday "he had a half-hour phone call with Canada's Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the two heads of state spoke about the bilateral economic relationship and the USMCA trade deal."

Johnson Agrees To Press Ahead With EU Trade Talks.

The New York Times (6/15, Erlanger, 18.61M) reports British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, "in his first direct talks with Brussels about Brexit since his country left the European Union at the end of January, agreed with European leaders on Monday to push ahead with intensified talks in July and August to try to reach a trade deal by the end of the year." After a videoconference with the union's three presidents – Ursula von der Leyen of the European Commission, Charles Michel of the European Council and David Sassoli of the European Parliament – the two sides "praised" their negotiators but "agreed nevertheless that new momentum was required."

The Washington Post (6/15, Booth, Aries, Adam, 14.2M) reports that despite the coronavirus pandemic, Brexit "is still a big deal" for Johnson, "whose political career is built upon delivering it, even if pollsters say most Britons now care much more about the flatlining economy and the virus."

IAEA Head Calls For Greater Access In Iran.

The AP (6/15, Rising) reports IAEA Director General Mariano Grossi "said Monday that Iran must provide inspectors access to sites where the country is thought to have stored or used undeclared nuclear material." Grossi told reporters after a meeting of the agency's board in Vienna, "We need this cooperation. I regret that at this point we have this disagreement."

Senators Ask Pentagon If $1B In Afghan Aid Was Cut.

Reuters (6/15, Mohammed) reports Sens. Robert Menendez (D-NJ) and Jack Reed (D-RI) on Monday asked Defense Secretary Esper "what happened to $1 billion in aid for Afghanistan the Trump administration said it would cut nearly three months ago, according to a letter reviewed by Reuters." The two senators "demanded Esper explain whether the funds had been cut and if so from which accounts." In a letter to Esper, they write, "If the administration has determined that this cut in security assistance does not diminish our ability to pursue our national security objectives, what conditions have changed to create such a sizeable surplus?"

Trump Confirms Plans To Cut US Military Presence In Germany.

USA Today (6/15, Jackson, Subramanian, 10.31M) reports President Trump on Monday confirmed he is planning to withdraw "a little more than half of the U.S. troops now stationed in Germany, despite concerns that such a move would reduce American influence throughout Europe." Claiming Germany is "not paying enough toward the NATO military alliance, Trump said the total deployment of American troops in Germany would drop to 25,000." The Wall Street Journal (6/15, Gordon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) quotes Trump as saying, "Until they pay, we're removing our soldiers, a number of our soldiers. Germany has been delinquent. And why should we be doing what we're doing if they don't pay, and they're supposed to pay."

Sources: Pompeo To Meet With Chinese Delegation This Week In Hawaii.

Reuters (6/15, Pamuk, Brunnstrom) reports Secretary of State Pompeo "is planning to meet a Chinese delegation at a U.S. military base in Hawaii this week to discuss bilateral ties that have soured deeply since the start of the year, sources familiar with the matter said." Hong Kong's South China Morning Post newspaper "cited an unidentified source as saying that Yang Jiechi, a state councilor and member of the Communist Party's powerful politburo, will represent the Chinese side for the meeting with Pompeo" at Hawaii's Hickam Air Force base.

Huawei CFO's Defense Expected To Cite Trump's Comments About Potential Intervention. Politico (6/15, Blatchford, Nylen, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's "musings about a trade deal with China will be under a legal microscope Monday as lawyers for Huawei executive Meng Wanzhou formally allege her extradition case to the U.S. has been tainted by politics." Meng, Huawei's CFO, "was arrested by Canadian police in December 2018 on an extradition request from the United States," and "her case, based on fraud charges connected to her alleged violation of U.S. sanctions on Iran, has infuriated Beijing and damaged the Canada-China diplomatic relationship." In 2018, Trump "said he would be willing to intervene in Meng's case if it would help the U.S. secure a trade deal with China or serve other American national security interests – comments her defense team plans to seize on to prevent her extradition before a court in Vancouver on Monday."

US Companies Will Be Allowed To Work With Huawei On 5G Standards. Reuters (6/15, Freifeld) reports exclusively that the Administration "will amend its prohibitions on U.S. companies doing business with China's Huawei to allow them to work together in standards setting for next-generation 5G networks." The Commerce Department "and other agencies signed off on the rule change, and it is awaiting publication in the Federal Register." However, Reuters adds that "industry officials say the rule change should not be viewed as a sign of weakening U.S. resolve against Huawei."

Whelan Conviction Prompts Speculation About Potential US-Russia Prisoner Swap.

The New York Times (6/15, Nechepurenko, 18.61M) reports that on Monday, Paul Whelan, a Marine veteran arrested in Moscow in December 2018, was "sentenced...to 16 years in a high-security prison on espionage charges that he and his family have described as a tool to increase his value in a potential future trade for Russians held in the United States." Whelan "had been a frequent visitor to Russia before his last trip to the country ended...with an arrest at a luxury hotel in Moscow, where he was attending a wedding, by agents of the Federal Security Service."

The Washington Post (6/15, Khurshudyan, 14.2M) reports Whelan "said throughout the trial that he was framed," and his attorney, Vladimir Zherebenkov, "said his client was unwittingly handed a flash drive containing 'state secrets' while visiting Russia for a wedding in late 2018." According to the Post, "speculation is rife about a possible prisoner exchange," and Zherebenkov "said he was told Konstantin Yaroshenko, a pilot who was arrested in 2010 for conspiracy to smuggle cocaine into the United States, and Viktor Bout, a gun runner...are the people the Kremlin is focused on as possible trades for Whelan's release." Reuters (6/15, Osborn, Heavey) reports that the Russian Foreign Ministry "told the Russian news agency RIA it had proposed detailed prisoner swaps to Washington many times but gave no further details.”

ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 8, 0:20, Muir, 7.94M) reported, “US authorities are outraged” over Whelan’s conviction; the “US Ambassador in court call[ed] it a mockery of justice.” The AP (6/15, Isachenkov) reports that in a statement, Secretary of State Pompeo said, “We have serious concerns that Mr. Whelan was deprived of the fair trial guarantees that Russia is required to provide him in accordance with its international human rights obligations.” The CBS Evening News (6/15, story 7, 0:20, O’Donnell, 4.78M) reported “Pompeo called it an outrage, and accused the Russians of conducting a secret trial with secret evidence.”

On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) calls Whelan’s conviction a reminder of why US-Russian relations have not improved.

US Accuses Maduro Of Seeking To Rig Upcoming Election.

Reuters (6/15, Berwick) reports the Administration on Monday “accused Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro of ‘illegally’ installing a new national electoral council to oversee parliamentary elections due to take place later this year.” Secretary of State Pompeo, in a statement, “said Maduro was manipulating Venezuela’s constitution and the new council would fail to implement the conditions required to hold free and fair elections.”

Cape Verde May Send Suspect To US Without Extradition Treaty. The AP (6/15) reports that a “Colombian businessman linked to the Venezuelan government who is wanted in the United States could be extradited from the Cape Verde islands even though Washington and the West African country have no bilateral extradition treaty, according to Cape Verde’s attorney general.” Attorney General José Landim says suspect Alex Saab was arrested Friday night “when his plane stopped to refuel in the former Portuguese colony on the way to Iran.”

Grenell: White House To Host Kosovo Peace Talks.

Politico (6/15, Gray, 4.29M) reports US special envoy Richard Grenell said Monday that the White House will host leaders from Serbia and Kosovo” later this month in an effort to kickstart stalled efforts to reach a permanent peace settlement.” Grenell “said each side had made commitments to allow the White House talks to take place.”

Israel Building Road Connecting Settlements As It Mulls West Bank Annexation.

Reuters (6/15, Farrell, Lubell, Ayyub) reports that “construction is under way on a major new ring road for Jerusalem that Israeli officials say will benefit all of its residents, but critics of the project say is another obstacle to Palestinian hopes to make East Jerusalem the capital of a future state.” The bypass, called The American Road, “will connect Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank that are north and south of Jerusalem.”

EU Ministers Urge US To Revive Mideast Peace Talks. The AP (6/15, Cook) reports on Monday, EU foreign ministers “urged the United States to join a new effort to breathe life into long-stalled peace talks between Israel and the Palestinians,” but they rejected President Trump’s Middle East plan “as the basis for any international process.” EU foreign policy chief Josep Borrell “said the Europeans ‘recognize the merit of the U.S. plan because it has created a certain momentum where there was nothing.’” But Borrell “insisted that any new initiative must respect the ‘internationally agreed parameters.’”

US Pilot Killed When Fighter Crashes In North Sea.

The AP (6/15, Kirka) reports the US Air Force announced on Monday the pilot of a fighter jet that “crashed into the North Sea, off the coast of northern England, has been found dead.” The jet was on “a routine training mission from RAF Lakenheath when it crashed at 9:40 a.m. The cause of the crash wasn’t immediately clear.” ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 11, 0:15, Muir, 7.94M) reported the F-15 pilot’s body “has been recovered,” but “the name has not been released.” The CBS Evening News (6/15, story 10, 0:20, O’Donnell, 5.04M) also briefly reported the crash, as does Reuters (6/15) and the New York Times (6/15, Mueller, 18.61M), among other news outlets.

WPost: Philippines Sliding Toward Autocracy.

The Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M) editorializes that it surprised “no one when Rodrigo Duterte, the Philippines’ autocratic-minded president, found himself at odds with the country’s most prominent journalist,” Maria Ressa. However, the Post says “what ought to be shocking to democratic nations was Ms. Ressa’s conviction Monday on libel charges – the first of eight court cases against her orchestrated by the Duterte government.” The Post says the Trump Administration “has been largely silent” on the matter and argues that the Philippines’ “slide toward dictatorship deserves much greater resistance from Washington – if not from the White House, then from Congress.”

Freddie Mac And Fannie Mae Announce Hiring Of Financial Advisers JPMorgan Chase And Morgan Stanley.

Reuters (6/15, Schroeder) reports that “Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac announced on Monday they had hired Morgan Stanley and JPMorgan Chase, respectively, as financial advisers on any potential plan to exit government control.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/15, Ackerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the GSEs announced the hires, and adds that the Federal Housing Finance Agency had hired Houlihan Lokey in February to advise it.

HousingWire (6/15, Howley, 23K) reports, Fannie Mae "said it has chosen Morgan Stanley while Freddie Mac said it will use J.P. Morgan." Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman said, "We look forward to working with J.P. Morgan to continue meeting the milestones necessary to begin our new chapter as soon as possible." Brickman added, "At the same time, our focus on supporting borrowers, renters and lenders in the face of COVID-19 is stronger than ever."

National Mortgage News (6/15, Lang) reports that Houlihan Lokey will "assist in evaluating" the plans developed by the GSEs and their advisers to "facilitate the road map out of government control." Fannie Mae's President and CEO Hugh Frater said, "Today's announcement marks another important step toward a responsible exit from conservatorship, and we look forward to working with FHFA, Treasury, and Morgan Stanley to chart a strong course forward for Fannie Mae."

Bloomberg (6/15, Westbrook, 4.73M) also reports the news.

FHFA In Annual Report Asks Congress For Legislative Reforms, Announces It Will Repropose Financial Eligibility Requirements For Freddie Mac And Fannie Mae.

HousingWire (6/15, Howley, 23K) reports Federal Housing Finance Agency on Monday issued its annual report to Congress, that includes "several legislative steps it is seeking including the ability to examine the books of mortgage servicers." HousingWire adds, "The Financial Stability Oversight Council and the Government Accountability Office both have recommended that Congress authorize the FHFA to examine third parties that do business with the GSEs."

The ABA Banking Journal (6/15) reports FHFA Director Mark Calabria wrote in a cover letter to the annual report, "Only Congress has the authority to enact the legislative reforms necessary to address the structural flaws in the current model." Calabria added, "I reiterate my recommendation that Congress remove unnecessary statutory exemptions and other advantages afforded the Enterprises and grant FHFA the authorities, similar to those of other financial regulators, to develop capital standards for the Enterprises and to issue new enterprise charters."

M Report (6/15, Albanese) reports the FHFA on Monday announced "that it will be re-proposing the updated minimum financial eligibility requirements for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." The agency stated in a release, "FHFA has determined that it is prudent to work with the Enterprises to reassess and re-propose these requirements, including incorporating lessons learned from the evolving COVID-19 national emergency."

National Mortgage News (6/15, Sinnock) reports, "Smaller players in the housing finance industry requested a delay in the proposal's implementation and welcomed the move."

MBA Finds Mortgages In Forbearance Rose .02 Percent In First Week Of June, While Those Backed By Fannie Mae And Freddie Mac Declined.

USA Today (6/15, Menton, 10.31M) reports the Mortgage Bankers Association announced on Monday that "nearly 4.3 million homeowners were in forbearance plans during the first week of June," though the "growth rate was small, rising just two percentage points to 8.55% from 8.53% the prior week." USA Today adds that the share of homeowners in forbearance with "mortgages backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac fell from 6.4% to 6.38%, while the percentage for loans backed by the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration remained flat at 11.83%."

National Mortgage News (6/15, Centopani) reports the growth rate was "nearly flat" for the week, and Mike Fratantoni, the MBA's senior vice president and chief economist, said that it was "primarily driven by a larger share of portfolio and PLS loans in forbearance." The News adds that there is "good news" in that mortgages "purchased by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac — in forbearance actually decreased." It also reports that "Ginnie Mae mortgages — Federal Housing Administration, Department of Veterans Affairs and U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Housing Service products — remained the highest percentage of loans in forbearance by investor type, but stayed static at 11.83%."

National Mortgage Professional (6/15) reports "the total number of loans now in forbearance rose slightly over last week" and "the share of Ginnie Mae loans in forbearance remained flat" while "the share of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac loans in forbearance decreased."

Multifamily Finance.

- Freddie Mac Loan Aids Fairstead's Purchase Of Affordable Housing Property In Sunrise, Florida. The Commercial Observer (NY) (6/15, Cunningham) reports Capital One Multifamily Finance "provided $33.1 million in agency financing" for Fairstead's purchase of Federation Sunrise, a 123-unit "three-story affordable housing property," in Sunrise, Florida, while Meridian Capital Group "negotiated the 16-year Freddie Mac loan." The property is "subject to a long-term Section 8 contract."

FHFA Raises Concerns With Several FHL Banks.

American Banker (6/15, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the FHFA in its annual report to Congress "identified several safety and soundness concerns with the Federal Home Loan Bank of Des Moines and the Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco." For the San Francisco bank, "the agency flagged concerns with the bank's credit risk underwriting and credit risk management, compliance with rules and regulations, and collateral management practices." With respect to the Des Moines bank, the agency "heightened its oversight of the bank and is working closely with the bank's president and CEO, Kristina Williams," who started in January. The agency raised concerns regarding "supervisory issues, including with the bank's management." The agency also reported that the Federal Home Loan Banks of San Francisco, Des Moines, New York, Cincinnati and Chicago all "needed to improve their diversity and inclusion programs."

CoreLogic Home Equity Report Shows Gain Of 6.5 Percent Of Equity In First Quarter Of 2020 Over First Quarter Of 2019.

National Mortgage Professional (6/15) reports the CoreLogic Home Equity Report shows that in the first quarter of 2020 US homeowners with mortgages had "equity increase by 6.5% year-over-year, representing a gain of $590 billion since the first quarter of 2019." Meanwhile, the percentage of homeowners with negative equity fell "3.1% to 1.8 million homes or 3.4% of all mortgaged properties." Dr. Frank Nothaft, chief economist for CoreLogic, said, "The pandemic recession will likely lead to price declines in many areas during the next year and weaken home equity gains," but, Nothaft added, "price declines will be far less than those experienced during the Great Recession," as "our latest forecast shows the national index to have a peak-to-trough decline of 1.5%."

Survey Shows Most 2020 Homebuyers Concerned About Making Payments Due To Pandemic.

National Mortgage News (6/15, Finkelstein) reports a Clever Real Estate survey shows that "nearly 80% of those that purchased a home in 2020 are concerned about making their mortgage payment in the coming months due to the coronavirus." The survey also shows that "only 56% of 2020 homebuyers are paying their mortgage in full each month." In an April 28 survey, "83.6% of borrowers said they were able to make their mortgage payments as usual."

Central Florida Sales Fell In May, But Market Sees Rise In Pending Sales, New Listings.

The Orlando (FL) Sentinel (6/15, Glenn, 536K) reports according to the Orlando Regional Realtors Association, home sales in the Orlando area "sunk dramatically in May," to 2,127, 44% lower than May 2019 which had 3,806 sales, and 11% lower than April 2020 with 2,393 sales. Still ORRA president Reese Stewart said there are "signs of eagerness" as pending sales have risen to 4,930, up 34% over 3,679 in April, and there are 3,717 new listings, up 32% over the month before. Stewart said, "All indicators are, once this passes, we're going to be in a strong real estate market."

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (6/16, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.739 percent.

Dollar Slips.

Reuters (6/16, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar slipped and riskier currencies rallied on Tuesday as the U.S. Federal Reserve prepared to start its corporate bond buying scheme, while a report flagging the possibility of more fiscal stimulus helped underpin investor sentiment." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar "was broadly steady at 96.489, about 1% below Monday's high of 97.396." Meanwhile, the euro "edged up to $1.1343."

Gold Rises.

Reuters (IND) (6/16, Patel) reports, "Gold rose on Tuesday after the U.S. Federal Reserve widened its program of buying corporate debt to combat the financial toll of the pandemic as worries grow about a second wave of coronavirus infections." Spot gold "was up 0.1% at $1,726.20 per ounce by 0647 GMT, after falling more than 1% on Monday. U.S. gold futures rose 0.3% to $1,733."

Oil Edges Higher.

Reuters (6/16) reports, "Oil prices made marginal gains on Tuesday, reversing out of earlier losses, as hopes for further cuts in crude supplies took the sting out of concerns that a resurgence of new coronavirus infections around the world could hamper fuel demand." Brent crude "edged up 9 cents, or 0.2%, at $39.81 a barrel by 0659 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate crude "gained 3 cents, or nearly 0.1%, to $37.15 a barrel, after closing 2.4% higher in the previous session."

Cybersecurity

FBI Warns Of Increased Cybercrime Risk.

KVOA-TV Tucson, AZ (6/15, 17K) reports that the FBI "raised awareness about cybercrimes targeting Arizona seniors in recognition of World Elder Abuse Awareness Day on Monday." The press release "said the latest FBI Internet Crime Complaint Center or IC3 report showed residents over the age of 60 made up the majority of Arizona cyber-crime victims in 2019."

FBI Warns Of Increase In Ransomware Attacks.

WBIR-TV Knoxville, TN (6/16, Sullivan, 216K) reports, "The City of Knoxville is just the latest to learn a single click can have costly consequences. Hackers took its servers hostage late last week and are still holding them for ransom. 'The FBI recommends not paying that ransom and that's for several reasons,' FBI Supervisory Special Agent Jason Jarnigan said. 'For one, it encourages the ransomware to continue. There would be no ransomware if people did not pay the ransom.'" Jarnigan "said the bureau is seeing more ransomware attacks – and not just on governments or big companies. Hackers target home computers and cell phones too. 'In fact many computers are infected and you may not even know it,' Jarnigan said."

Commerce Department Says US Companies Can Work With Huawei On 5G.

Reuters (6/15, Freifeld, Shepardson) reports the US on Monday "confirmed a Reuters report that it will amend its prohibitions on US companies doing business with Huawei to allow them to work together on setting standards for next-generation 5G networks." The Commerce Department and other agencies "signed off on the rule change, which is awaiting publication in the Federal Register." Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross "confirmed the action in a statement to Reuters." Ross said, "The US will not cede leadership in global innovation. The department is committed to protecting US national security and foreign policy interests by encouraging US industry to fully engage and advocate for US technologies to become international standards."

New Study Proposes Government Actions To Boost Security For Internet Of Things.

Politico (6/15, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that the Atlantic Council "said in a report published today that securing the internet of things will require stronger FTC enforcement authority, a clearer baseline set of security standards, international cooperation and a labeling system." The paper "proposes an approach focused on applying 'strategic upward pressure' on IoT products' supply chains." The paper "says that by 'applying regulatory pressure on the distributor to sell products that adhere to a specified set of design and manufacturing standards,' the US government can create a ripple effect that leads to compliant companies crowding out noncompliant ones, thus encouraging noncompliant firms to pressure suppliers to improve their components' security." The authors "wrote that Congress should amend the FTC's founding statute to explicitly empower regulators to punish companies for 'unsafe acts or practices.'"

DDoS Attacker Rakhshan Receives 5-Year Prison Term After Pleading Guilty.

Gov Info Security (6/15, Field) reports a federal judge has "sentenced an Iranian-born, US naturalized citizen to five years in prison for one in a series of distributed denial-of-service attacks over the course of at least five years." Andrew Rakhshan, formerly known as Kamyar Jahanrakhshan, "pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy to commit computer fraud in February." He was also fined $520,000. Beginning in 2015, Rakhshan "conducted a series of DDoS attacks against websites that had posted legal information about his prior conviction for fraud in Canada," according to the Justice Department. One of the sites that "Rakhshan targeted with a DDoS attack, called Leagle.com, is based in Canada but it's servers are housed in Texas."

Op-Ed: Private Lawsuits Against Nation-States Will Not Resolve US Cyber Threats.

In a commentary in Lawfare (6/15), Allison Peters, Deputy Director of the National Security Program at Third Way, assesses US efforts to confront malicious cyber activity, including increased efforts by private entities to sue other countries. Peters writes, "Congress should be taking more action to deal with these threats and impose consequences on the bad actors behind them. Legislators are understandably tempted to enact the Homeland and Cyber Threat Act (H.R. 4189, HACT Act), which would allow private lawsuits against foreign states for alleged unauthorized cyber activity. Yet this response is deeply misguided and would create more problems than it solves." Peters contends, "Because of the potential conflicts between private litigation and national security considerations, the executive branch has typically opposed Congress's steps to carve out novel additional exceptions to foreign state immunity."

Sen. Peters Introduces Two Bills To Bolster Cyber Defenses.

MeriTalk (6/15, Polit) reports Sen. Gary Peters (D-MI) introduced "two bills – the Continuity of Economy Act of 2020 and the National Guard Cyber Interoperability Act of 2020 – with the goal of bolstering the US' cyber defenses." The ranking member of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, Peters "introduced the legislation on June 12." Peters "explained that the Continuity of Economy Act of 2020 would direct the president to 'develop a plan to ensure essential functions of the economy are able to continue operating in the event of a cyberattack.'" It is "based on a recent recommendation from the Cyber Solarium Commission to incorporate continuity operations in the event of a cyberattack, as well as other significant events – such as the COVID-19 pandemic – that impact the economy." The National Guard Cyber Interoperability Act of 2020 "would focus on enabling the National Guard to provide remote cybersecurity support and technical assistance to help states respond to cyber incidents."

Magecart Skimmed From Claires For Nearly Two Months.

SC Magazine (6/15, Jaffee) reports International retailer Claire's "was hit with a Magecart scheme that skimmed PPI, including credit card data, for nearly two months." Discovered by researchers at security firm Sansec, "the malware injection began on April 20 and stopped on June 13." An anonymous party "reserved the claires-assets.com URL that ultimately unleashed the attack, whose financial damage is unknown, on a server hosted on the Salesforce Commerce Cloud, previously known as Demandware." Sansec informed Claire's on June 12 "of its discovery, and the retailer took immediate action to investigate and address the breach by removing the code and taking additional measures to reinforce the security of the e-commerce platform." According to Sansec, "it's unlikely the Salesforce platform itself was breached or that Salesforce was responsible for Claire's hacking."

Gov Info Security (6/15, Field) reports the attackers appear "to have infiltrated the company's Salesforce Commerce Cloud environment for at least seven weeks, although the security firm that spotted the breach says there's no indication that the underlying Salesforce platform itself had a flaw or was hacked."

Lawyers Of Detained Huawei Executive Allege Abuse Of Process In Canada.

AFP (6/15) reports lawyers for Huawei executive Meng Wanzhou on Monday "accused Canadian police and border agents, in collusion with the FBI, of abuse of process in her arrest on a US warrant." At a British Columbia Supreme Court hearing, defense lawyer David Martin "argued that Canadian officials purposely delayed her arrest by several hours during a December 2018 stopover in Vancouver in order to gather evidence for the FBI." In court filings, the defense "said this 'pre-planned scheme' allowed authorities to snoop through her electronic devices under the pretense of a customs inspection."

Beijing Points To CSIS Report To Bolster Claim Meng Wanzhou's Arrest Was A "Political Conspiracy." The Globe and Mail \(CAN\) (6/15, 1.04M) reports the Chinese government is "using a recently released report from one of Canada's spy agencies to bolster its allegation that the arrest of Meng Wanzhou was a political scheme concocted by the US." Two top spokespersons from China's Ministry of Foreign Affairs on Monday "pointed to a report from the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to support Beijing's claim that the Dec. 1, 2018, detention of the Huawei executive at Vancouver International Airport was unjustified."

Greek Shipping Manager Trio Declare Halt To Venezuela Trade After US Imposed Sanctions.

Reuters (6/15, Saul) reports three Greece-based shipping companies "said they have halted trade with Venezuela after the United States imposed sanctions on vessels under their management, as Washington ramps up commercial heat on Caracas." One of the companies, Athens-based Dynacom Tankers Management, said Monday in a statement it was "committed to refraining from any future business involving Venezuela." The company "added that the tanker's owner Seacomber Ltd, which Washington also designated, was co-operating with U.S. authorities to resolve the matter." Another firm, NGM Energy SA, said Friday it had implemented "a strict policy against servicing vessels intending to call at Venezuela or to load cargo of Venezuelan origin in the future, absent express U.S. authorization." The third firm, Thenamaris, "said it was fully cooperating with U.S. authorities to resolve sanctions against the Seahero tanker that it manages and the vessel's owner Adamant Maritime Ltd."

Syria Facing "Acute Economic Crisis" With US Sanctions Looming.

The New York Times (6/15, Hubbard, 18.61M) reports Syrian President Bashar al-Assad "has mostly won Syria's civil war," but "now faces an acute economic crisis that has impoverished his people, brought about the collapse of the currency and fueled a rare public rift in the ruling elite." Government salaries have "become nearly worthless," and "the government is so strapped for cash that it is squeezing wealthy businessmen to help fund the state, a move that prompted a powerful Syrian tycoon to openly criticize the government." To the Times, "That the tycoon, a member of Mr. al-Assad's inner circle, had the temerity to go public with his dispute suggests a weakening of his power. And strict American economic sanctions that take effect Wednesday are likely to make matters worse."

Fed To Begin Buying Individual Corporate Bonds.

Politico (6/15, Guida, 4.29M) reports the Fed announced that it will start buying debt from large corporations on Tuesday. The Wall Street Journal (6/15, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Fed will make the purchases by creating a portfolio based on a broad, diversified market index of corporate bonds. The AP (6/15, Rugaber) reports the Fed's purchases "should hold down corporate bond yields, making it cheaper for companies to borrow. But by also lowering the return from investing in those bonds, the Fed's actions will likely encourage investors to shift money from corporate bonds to stocks in hopes of achieving a higher return." The Hill (6/15, Lane, 2.98M), MarketWatch (6/15, Oh, 1.67M), Business Insider (6/15, Winck, 3.67M), CNBC (6/15, Cox, 3.62M), and Reuters (6/15, Marte, Dunsmuir), among other outlets, also report.

Fed To Resume Bank Exams But Keep Activities Off-Site.

American Banker (6/15, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Federal Reserve will resume bank examinations, "but all exams will still be conducted remotely due to the coronavirus pandemic, the central bank said Monday." The Fed in March said it would cut back on regular exams so banks could focus on responding to the pandemic. "Since that time, banks have had time to implement contingency operating plans and adapt their operations, so exam activity will resume," the Fed said in a press release. However, until "conditions improve," the Fed said all examination activities will be conducted off-site. The Fed's announcement comes less than one week after Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks "signaled a return to on-site exams for his agency in the near future." In an op-ed, the head of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency said, "Our work is too important to rely solely on a phone, a webcam and a broadband connection."

Separately, American Banker (6/15, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "With coronavirus cases still on the rise in several states, workplace health experts says it is possible to manage the risks of in-person bank examination responsibly. But bankers and some other observers are urging caution about the pace of regulators' re-entry into financial institutions." OCC Chief Operating Officer Blake Paulson "said Monday the agency still intends to make use of remote monitoring methods." Paulson said, "The agency has learned the benefits of performing some examination activities remotely and appreciates the flexibility banks and examiners have shown during this pandemic to support the ongoing supervision of national banks and federal savings associations." But while the agency prioritizes "the health of its examiners, Paulson said, in-person supervision has benefits that the current process lacks."

Bostic Says US Unemployment Likely To Remain High.

Bloomberg (6/15, Matthews, 4.73M) reports Atlanta Fed President Raphael Bostic "said he expects U.S. unemployment will be around 10% in the fourth quarter, with an uneven recovery from the Covid-19-induced recession." Bostic said in a telephone interview, "We are going to see sort of some bumps on our journey through recovery" while also "noting that the downturn especially is hurting minorities and low-income workers." Bostic added, "I think the second half of the year is going to be pretty strong, certainly much stronger than the first half, but I am not anticipating this will be a smooth, straight line up."

Fed's Kaplan Expects Economy Will Rebound In Second Half Of 2020.

Reuters (6/15, Marte) reports, "The US economy will experience a 'significant, historic' contraction in the second quarter before it starts to rebound, and unemployment will remain elevated at the end of 2020, Dallas Federal Reserve President Robert Kaplan said on Monday." Kaplan "said he projects that gross domestic product will drop by an annualized rate of 35% to 40% in the second quarter and that it should start to recover in the second half of the year." Kaplan said, "If people wear masks widely, if we have extensive testing and contact tracing, if businesses and us as individuals follow good procedure, we're going to grow faster." The Wall Street Journal (6/15, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Daly Downplays Usefulness Of "Little Helper" Yield Curve Control.

Reuters (6/15) reports San Francisco Fed President Mary Daly on Monday "downplayed the usefulness of yield curve control for U.S. monetary policy, saying that while it could be a 'little helper' should other tools fail to deliver, it would not be a first choice." Daly said to reporters, "Targeting forward guidance and quantities on the balance sheet would be the policies I would want to use before we go to yield curve control." Daly added, "you can think of yield curve control as a little helper...but if we have very robust forward guidance then a lot of that movement in rates at the short end and even at the longer end, that gets done without having to go to yield curve control."

OCC's Brooks Pushes For Payments Charter, While Future Of Fintech Charter Remains Uncertain.

Payments Source (6/16, Heun) reports that given the "fairly choppy legal ride" the OCC has endured in trying to establish a special charter for fintech companies, it may be "somewhat surprising that Acting Comptroller Brian Brooks is pushing the idea for a similar charter for payments companies – which he'd like to have in place for applicants within a few months." In a recent podcast interview, Brooks said the rubric for such charters is that OCC regulations "for more than 20 years...have said that a bank is anything that takes deposits and makes loans, or engages in payments." The backdrop is that the OCC's fintech charter "did not garner full support from traditional banks" or state banking regulators "at least in part because they felt unique charters were not as stringent as a standard charter." For Brooks and the OCC, "it's more of a question of how to get payments companies on a level playing field with banks and, at the same time, address how regulators and consumers alike should be envisioning future financial services."

Cowen: OCC's Brooks Is "Most Important Crypto Advocate" In Trump Administration.

Bloomberg Law (6/15, Maranz, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports behind a paywall that Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks "could become a 'longer-term policy positive' for Facebook's Libra stable coin project and other crypto efforts, if President Donald Trump were to win re-election in November, according to Cowen. Brooks, who previously worked at crypto exchange Coinbase and has ties to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, is the 'most important crypto advocate within the Trump administration,' Cowen analyst Jaret Seiberg wrote in a note."

Goldman Pledges Additional $250M To Fund PPP.

Reuters (6/15, Hussain) reports Goldman Sachs on Monday "pledged an additional $250 million to fund the" Paycheck Protection Program "to help businesses hurt by the COVID-19 pandemic." This "addition will take the bank's total commitments to $775 million." Goldman Sachs "will not issue these loans directly, but rather provide the financing to community development financial institutions and other mission-driven lenders that then loan it out to the clients."

JPMorgan Plans To Return More Traders To Manhattan Next Week.

Reuters (6/15) reports JPMorgan Chase plans to start returning traders to their Manhattan trading floors next week, ramping up to about 50 percent occupancy in sales and trading by the middle of July. Other departments have not yet finalized their return strategies.

CNBC (6/15, Son, 3.62M) reports workers will wear masks in common areas, and desks will be marked according to whether they are open for employees to use.

Big Banks Stick To Branch Expansion Plans Despite Pandemic.

American Banker (6/16, Alix, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that the coronavirus pandemic has "led to weeks of branch closures and accelerated a consumer shift to digital," raising "questions about whether banks would cancel or scale back" their expansion efforts. However, executives of several big banks "have insisted their plans are largely unchanged and that there is still value in adding branches." Bank of America remains committed to adding more than 500 branches through 2022, head of consumer banking Dean Athanasia said at the Morgan Stanley Virtual US Financials conference. But Athanasia said that the bank may use those branches differently given what it's learned during the pandemic. "We'll do a lot more outbound calling from our financial centers than we ever have," he said. "We could add to them, enhance them and make them better and make them more efficient."

New York Times.

"Gay Rights Are Civil Rights." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/15, 18.61M) welcomes the Supreme Court's ruling that civil rights laws protect gay and transgender employees against employer discrimination as "an emphatic win for civil rights, equal justice and common sense" that should have been unanimous. The Times criticizes Justice Samuel Alito's dissent as "sound[ing] like it was written in 1964" and pointing out that if the Court, as he argued interpreted statutes to "mean what they conveyed to reasonable people at the time they were written," then the Second Amendment would apply only to bayonets and muskets. Still, the Times warns that when textualism is "applied too rigidly it can lead to very unjust results."

Washington Post.

"The Supreme Court's Ruling On LGBTQ Rights Is A Sweeping Victory For Fairness." The Supreme Court's decision that civil rights laws protect gay and transgender employees against employer discrimination "helped make America a better country," the Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M) writes in an editorial, calling it another "major civil rights advance" that didn't come from Congress, which "should have acted years before now to remove any doubt that the law protects LGBTQ people." The Post criticizes the GOP for continuing to trail "society's welcome evolution on questions of fair treatment for all."

"The Philippines Slides Toward Autocracy." The Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M) editorializes that it surprised "no one when Rodrigo Duterte, the Philippines' autocratic-minded president, found himself at odds with the country's most prominent journalist," Maria Ressa. However, the Post says "what ought to be shocking to democratic nations was Ms. Ressa's conviction Monday on libel charges — the first of eight court cases against her orchestrated by the Duterte government." The Post says the Trump Administration "has been largely silent" on the matter and argues that the Philippines' "slide toward dictatorship deserves much greater resistance from Washington — if not from the White House, then from Congress."

"The Atlanta Shooting Shows Hows Broken Our Law Enforcement System Is." The Washington Post (6/15, 14.2M) says in an editorial, "The world is watching, and yet police keep killing unarmed black people. Last week's shooting in Atlanta reveals how broken this country's law enforcement system remains, even as protesters across the country cry out for fixing it."

Wall Street Journal.

"Another Win For The Kagan Court." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) celebrates environmentalists' loss to the 7-2 ruling by the Supreme Court that held that the Forest Service has authority to grant the proposed $7.5 billion Atlantic Coast Pipeline a right of way where it would cross the Appalachian Trail, which is overseen by the National Park Service. The Journal casts opponents of the trail — and the rulings supporting them — as contrary to common sense and seeking to stop US energy production.

"The Lorax Loses At The Supreme Court." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes that the Supreme Court's decision that civil rights laws protect gay and transgender employees against employer discrimination was a win for Justice Elena Kagan's efforts to redefine Scalia's jurisprudence. The Journal adds that the majority opinion essentially rewrites Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act using her views, distorts textualism, and usurps Congress. The Journal concludes that the opinion makes textualism meaningless and allow the law to force transgender females' competition in women's sports, provision of gender neutral restrooms, and the compliance of religious institutions.

"From Russia With Malice." On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (6/15, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) calls Marine veteran Paul Whelan's conviction a reminder of why US-Russian relations have not improved.

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Donald Trump had quite a weekend. He put on a bigly presentation at West Point on Saturday, where he showed up to give a commencement speech, whether the graduates wanted it or not. The cadets at West Point were sent home in March because of the virus. But then Trump decided he wanted to give a speech in person, and so all the cadets were ordered to return to campus and stay in quarantine for two weeks. They were literally a captive audience."

Jimmy Kimmel: "On Sunday, Donald Trump turned 74. Seventy-four years ago yesterday, Rosemary had a baby. And that little baby grew into a bigger baby. And now that big old baby is our President."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Trump's family went all out for daddy's big day, too. He got a card from his daughter [Ivanka]: 'Thank you for every job I've ever had.' Jared said, 'I'm a mannequin standing in front of an orangutan.' Here's one from Melania, 'Happy birthday to best husband. Get away.' ... And this one: 'Dads like you are an endangered species, but we promise not to shoot. Eric and Don Jr.' And from Tiffany: 'Here's my routing number.' And finally, Trump's most loyal admirer said, 'Hope you have a ball on your birthday. You already have both of mine. Woof, woof. Mike Pence.'"

Stephen Colbert: "I don't know if you've noticed, but we're living through some extremely dark times. If God submitted the year 2020 to 'Black Mirror,' they would have rejected the script."

Stephen Colbert: "Some cities are trying new approaches, like in Seattle, where protesters have set up camp around an abandoned police precinct, calling it the Capitol Hill Autonomous Zone, or 'CHAZ.' A rare instance of the name 'CHAZ' appearing in the news without the words 'intoxicated' and 'catamaran.'"

Stephen Colbert: "The people within the CHAZ insist they're improvising as they go along, saying there wasn't an overarching goal to build a commune. In fact, 'CHAZ' is 'largely leaderless, and lacking a clear idea for its future.' So, like the rest of America, but with free snacks."

Jimmy Fallon: "Today started off with big news from the Supreme Court. ... Oh, my gosh! It's 2020, I thought good news was illegal. ... Yep, the decision protects gay and transgender workers from discrimination in the workplace. Unfortunately, thanks to Trump's handling of the pandemic, there is no workplace."

Jimmy Fallon: "The court decided employers can't fire workers based on their sexual orientation or gender identity. They'll have to stick to the usual reason workers get fired – not muting themselves on Zoom."

Jimmy Fallon: "Yep, it's a tough day for the Trump Administration. We're just one more 'Will & Grace' reboot away from this being the worst day of Mike Pence's life."

Jimmy Fallon: "Another Trump tell-all book. It's crazy that after all these tell-all books, there's still more to tell. Trump's tell-all books are starting to feel like a 3:00 a.m. infomercial. 'But wait, there's more!'"

James Corden: "On Saturday, President Donald Trump gave the commencement address at West Point, and Twitter went absolutely bonkers over this slow walk down a ramp as he left the stage. ... Now for months, President Trump has refused to wear a mask out of fear he might look foolish. And all it took was a slight decline to make him look foolish. And of course, the President remained cool after the video. I'm kidding, he went to Twitter."

James Corden: [On Trump's West Point tweet regarding him walking down the ramp] "Now, this tweet creates more questions than it does answers, like why is the word 'fall' in quotation marks. Tweeting about this only draws more attention to it. It is like sending an office-wide email with the subject line 'The mustard stain on my shirt today.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump's birthday was yesterday. So let me be the first to say – happy 104th?"

Seth Meyers: "The Supreme Court ruled today that federal law forbids job discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or transgender status. Now the only thing you could be fired for is actually showing up to the office."

Seth Meyers: "During an interview with Fox News last week, President Trump pushed back against critics who worry if he will leave office willingly if he doesn't win re-election in November. Of course he will. Trump hates working. If he loses, he'll have a 9:00 a.m. tee time on November 4 and never look back. You know, you're still President until January."

Seth Meyers: "Republican party officials announced last week that this year's convention will be held in Jacksonville, Florida, and even hearing that was enough for Mike Pence to sunburn."

Seth Meyers: "A new book about first lady Melania Trump titled 'The Art Of Her Deal' will be released this week. And it shares details about her life that even her husband doesn't know. (As Trump) 'Wow, you're Slovenian. Get out of town.'"

Treasury in the News

French Finance Minister: Mnuchin And I Spoke On Digital Tax Compromise, Set Two Week Deadline.

Reuters (1/7, Van Overstraeten, Kar-Gupta) reports French Finance Minister Bruno Le Maire said to reporters Tuesday, "I had a long talk with U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin. We have decided to step up efforts to try and find a compromise, within the OECD, on digital tax." Le Maire said, "We gave each other precisely 15 days, until our next meeting, which is planned on the sidelines of Davos at the end of January." The AP (1/7, Corbet, 14.2M) reports Le Maire said that the US and France had agreed in the phone call "to intensify efforts in the coming days to try to find a compromise" on the tax. Bloomberg (1/7, Horobin, Davison, 4.73M) also reports.

Community Groups Mobilizing To Oppose CRA Proposal.

Politico (1/6, Guida, 4.29M) reports, "Community groups across the U.S. are mobilizing to oppose" Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting's plan to revise the Community Reinvestment Act, and Otting is the groups' "main target." The groups plan "a major public awareness campaign" saying the proposal undercuts the law's intent of combating discriminatory lending by allowing "lenders a wide berth to satisfy the law's requirements through big dollar projects...without consulting local residents." Otting entered office "with the motivation to reform CRA based on his experiences during his long career in banking" as the law "gave him headaches when he ran OneWest, a lender co-founded by current Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin." Otting says he seek "to modernize regulations that haven't been updated in more than two decades and address the lack of measurable data on banks' CRA activities."

Credit Union Group Warns USDA Hemp Rules Conflict With Treasury Guidelines.

Law360 (1/6, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Ohio Credit Union League, in a letter made public Monday, urged the US Department of Agriculture the US Treasury's "definition of a 'key participant' in a hemp company as someone who holds a 25% ownership share in the business," warning that proposed USDA rules differ from Treasury guidelines, which "could create challenges for banks and other financial institutions" doing business with the newly legal industry.

Don Layton Says Treasury Will Ultimately Decide Fate Of Fannie And Freddie.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (1/6, Hollier, Subscription Publication) says, "Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the Federal Housing Finance Agency all have a role in ending the 11-year conservatorships of the GSEs. But, the final say...rests with the Treasury Department. That's the main takeaway from the latest paper from Don Layton, the former CEO of Freddie Mac turned fellow at Harvard's Joint Center for Housing Studies." Layton's paper "comprises a list of 14 'investor-centric' issues that have to be resolved before a commercial bank could successfully underwrite a capital raise of the size the GSEs will require." According to IMF, "This conceit allows Layton to raise some interesting points. For example, his hypothetical capital market executive makes a guess about the commitment fee that Fannie and Freddie will have to pay for Treasury's backstop."

Trump Defends Soleimani Strike As Democrats Move To Curtail His War Powers.

President Trump called the Rush Limbaugh Show (1/6, 165K) Monday to discuss the strike on Qassem Soleimani. Trump said, "This should have been done for the last 15 to 20 years, him in particular. He was their real military leader. He is a terrorist. He was designated a terrorist by President Obama and then Obama did nothing about it except give them $150 billion dollars – and even more incredibly $1.8 billion in cash. ... He should have been taken out a long time ago and we had a shot at it and we took him out and we're a lot safer now because of that. We'll see what happens. We'll see what the response is, if any, but you've seen what I have said our response will be." Jonathan Karl of ABC World News Tonight (1/6, story 3, 2:15, Muir, 7.55M) reported that in the interview, "the President made no mention to an imminent threat," and the CBS Evening News (1/6, story 4, 1:45, O'Donnell, 5M) that it "has learned some military commanders were opposed" to the strike "because of possible retaliation by Iran." The President had earlier written on Twitter, "IRAN WILL NEVER HAVE A NUCLEAR WEAPON!"

ABC World News Tonight (1/6, story 3, 2:15, Muir, 7.55M) reported, meanwhile, that "amid rising tensions, Democrats...are demanding the White House make public the intelligence they used to justify taking out Qassem Soleimani." Senate Minority Leader Schumer was shown saying, "Knowledge of the actions and justification should be shared with the American people in a timely manner." The CBS

Evening News (1/6, story 4, 1:45, O'Donnell, 5M) said House Speaker Pelosi "is planning a vote this week to limit the President's military actions against Iran, as Democrats demand more answers about the...attack." On NBC Nightly News (1/6, story 2, 2:00, Holt, 6.18M), Kristen Welker said "Democrats are rallying behind a resolution that would require the President to seek congressional approval before taking any further military action." However, "the Senate's top Republican" is "urging Democrats not to rush to judgment." Senate Majority Leader McConnell was shown saying, "In this toxic political environment, some of our colleagues rush to blame our own government before knowing the facts."

USA Today (1/6, Wu, 10.31M) also reports that "in a letter to Democratic members of the House, Pelosi said the 'provocative and disproportionate' airstrike on Soleimani 'endangered our servicemembers, diplomats and others by risking a serious escalation of tensions with Iran.'" To Townhall (1/6, Pavlich, 177K), "Pelosi isn't just condemning... Trump's decision to (rightfully) take out Iranian terrorist leader...Soleimani, she's submitting a resolution to tie his hands in the future."

Politico (1/6, Ferris, Caygle, Zanona, 4.29M) also says "House Democrats are preparing a powerful rebuke of...Trump," and adds that the "resolution is expected to easily pass the House as early as Wednesday, with nearly every Democrat likely to support it. Adoption will force a vote on the Senate floor in the coming days, because it is privileged." Democrats "hope it will pose a tough loyalty test for Republicans, who were also mostly blindsided by Trump's strike." At any rate, as the Washington Times (1/6, Dinan, 492K) indicates the measure "would face a presidential veto and would require a two-thirds vote of both chambers in order to override the veto and constrain Mr. Trump." The Hill (1/6, Klar, 2.98M) reports the resolution will be led by Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-MI), "a former CIA and Department of Defense analyst specializing in Shia militias," and adds that Sen. Tim Kaine (D-VA) "has introduced a similar legislation in the Senate."

The AP (1/6, Burns, Lemire) reports that Schumer and Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ), the former Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, yesterday "called on" Trump to "immediately declassify the administration's reasoning for the strike on the Iranian official." Schumer and Menendez wrote, "It is critical that national security matters of such import be shared with the American people in a timely manner. ... An entirely classified notification is simply not appropriate in a democratic society." The Washington Times (1/6, Lovelace, 492K) reports "White House counselor Kellyanne Conway told reporters Monday that the Democrats' letter amounted to 'chest-thumping' and said that Congress would be briefed at the Pentagon's discretion."

Reuters (1/6, Zengerle) reports that Trump "broke precedent by failing to inform congressional leaders before the attack on Soleimani, and by making classified his formal notification to Congress of the attack on Saturday." Reuters adds, "By making the War Powers notification classified, Trump limited lawmakers' ability to talk about it, and sidestepped the law's goal of keeping Americans informed about military action, some legal experts said."

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (1/6, 768K), "I think it was an assassination. I think it was in violation of international law. This guy was a bad news guy, but he was a ranking official of the Iranian government, and once you get into violating international law in that sense, you can say there are a lot of bad people all over the world running governments. ... Once you start this business of a major country saying, hey, we have the right to assassinate, then you're unleashing international anarchy."

Sen. Mazie Hirono (D-HI) said on CNN's Situation Room (1/6, 726K), "I think that the President is so concerned about the impending impeachment trial that this is a heck of a way to distract us, using basically the lives of our troops and not to mention the civilians in this area."

Rep. Abigail Spanberger (D-VA) said on CNN's Situation Room (1/6, 726K) that Soleimani "was at the helm of this organization, the Quds Force, that meant to do harm constantly and consistently to America and its allies. I think the challenge though is I don't think anyone is under any illusion that he was the one who was going to be leading a militia to attack an American base or that he would be the one driving a truck bomb. Those individuals are still out there. ... He spent years upon years building this infrastructure. So, I think as we are looking to what are next steps are, we need to know that while removing him from the battlefield, removing him as a threat is one potential step, the hundreds, if not thousands, of people he trained remain there."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) lauds Trump's decision to eliminate Soleimani's threat, but takes issue with his threat to "put very big sanctions on Iraq" and to attack Iran's "cultural sites," which is casts as unnecessary distractions. The Journal encourages the President to be ready to follow up in his campaign against the Iranian regime, and calls on him to craft a coalition of foreign allies and even Democrats as he furthers his challenge to the mullahs.

Administration Officials To Brief Lawmakers On Wednesday, But Schiff Planning "Open Hearings." Politico (1/6, McGraw, 4.29M) reports that the White House is "working to schedule a briefing this Wednesday for members of Congress and the so-called Gang of Eight congressional leaders on the killing of...Soleimani." Politico adds that "among those expected to brief the Senate at 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, according to a Senate aide, will be key advisers...Trump consulted with before making his decision to strike Soleimani: Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Secretary of Defense Mark Esper, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mark Milley and CIA Director Gina Haspel." The Daily Caller (1/6, Talcott, 716K) says "the entire US Senate will be briefed."

In the Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M), meanwhile, Greg Sargent recounts his interview with House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff, who "told me...he wants to see the House hold open hearings on multiple aspects of this spiraling situation" in Iran. Said Schiff, "I think there should be open hearings on this subject. ... The President has put us on a path where we may be at war with Iran. That requires the Congress to fully engage." The Washington Examiner (1/6, Ferrechio, 448K) reports "Defense Department officials on Wednesday will begin briefing Congress on the strikes, but will do so in a closed-door setting."

Axios (1/6, 521K) says "Schiff's suggestion comes after Trump reiterated a threat to Iranian cultural sites as possible retaliation during an Air Force One gaggle with reporters and threatened deep sanctions on Iraq if it moves to limit the US military presence there."

USA Today (1/6, 10.31M) editorializes, "Administration officials are finally scheduling a meeting with members of Congress on Wednesday to brief them on the Soleimani killing. There are a host of crucial questions: What was the proof Soleimani was planning imminent attacks? Has the threat ended with his death? And, most important, what's the ultimate goal? ... Americans deserve to hear a better strategy than can be communicated by bursts of invective on Twitter." In an accompanying op-ed in USA Today (1/6, 10.31M), CEO of the Foundation for Defense of Democracies Mark Dubowitz writes that "while wary of conflict," Trump's "red line was American blood. Tehran attacked US allies and global energy assets for the past year without a response," and "then Soleimani killed an American and wounded four others in Iraq, and was reportedly plotting additional attacks."

WPost Analysis: Effort To Limit Trump's Options Breaking Along Sharply Partisan Lines. The Washington Post (1/6, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports that "Congressional Democrats' attempts to limit...Trump from acting militarily against Iran are shaping up to be largely partisan exercises, as some of the GOP's most influential critics of unauthorized war have balked at crossing Trump's decision to take out...Soleimani." Democrats "seem unlikely to win the support of several key Republican figures who have backed previous efforts to check Trump's power as commander in chief but now vocally defend his decision to kill Soleimani." Said Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC), "I would be very shocked if any Republican votes for this resolution. ... It's going to be seen all as a political ploy to try to ding the President of the United States – and it's very hard to side with Iran and a terrorist against the President of the United States."

Haley: Democrats "The Only Ones Mourning" Soleimani. The Washington Times (1/6, Richardson, 492K) reports "former US Ambassador to the UN Nikki Haley said Monday that the Democratic leadership and 2020 presidential candidates are 'the only ones mourning' the death of...Soleimani." Haley said on Fox News' Hannity, "I'll tell you this: You don't see anyone standing up for Iran. You're not hearing any of the Gulf members, you're not hearing China, you're not hearing Russia. ... The only ones that are mourning the loss of Soleimani are our Democrat leadership and our Democrat presidential candidates." Haley also said that Soleimani's death "should be celebrated," and added, in reference to Trump critics, "You go tell that to the 608 American families who lost a loved one. ... Go tell that to the military members who lost a limb. This was something that needed to be done, and should be celebrated."

Conway "A Little Sick" Of Soleimani "Hero Worship" From Trump Critics. Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (1/6, 831K), Conway said Trump "knows he was on solid ground, constitutionally, legally strategically, to have taken out one of the world's best-known most blood-thirsty and brutal terrorists. And the world is safer because Soleimani is now dead. ... We've got Americans who have buried their sons and daughters" because of Soleimani, and "thousands of other Americans maimed and injured. ... So I'm a little sick already of hero worship...of Soleimani." Conway added that in regard to Congressional Democrats, "I'm not going to be lectured by people who voted affirmatively to fork over $130 billion in cash to Iran, which helped to fund the Quds Force. I don't think it went to economic development and women's freedom and liberation in Iran, do you? ... I'm disappointed but not surprised the Democrats who see in this moment of Soleimani's death some kind of partisan political opportunity."

Hannity Mocks "Lectures From The Benghazi Democrats." Along similar lines, Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (1/6, 535K) that Pelosi "announced a resolution trying to tell the Commander-in-Chief what he can do and cannot do in Iran. Pelosi obviously knows nothing about the US Constitution" and "separation of powers. He is the elected Commander-in-Chief, not her. This totally unenforceable, non-binding resolution is nothing more than the latest political hit job to undermine the President and, frankly, make us less safe as a country. ... Now we are getting lectures from the Benghazi Democrats, the bribe Iranian mullah appears in the swamp. How did that Biden/Obama $150 billion bribe work out for any of us? The answer, we now know, it was a disaster. Now the President is cleaning up their...mess."

HuffPost/YouGov Poll: Public Favors Strike By 43%-38% Margin. The Hill (1/6, Wise, 2.98M) reports, "About 4 in 10 Americans approve of President Trump's decision to order the airstrike that killed a top Iranian military commander, according to a new HuffPost-YouGov survey." The poll "found that 43 percent of registered voters surveyed said they supported Trump's order to kill...Soleimani," while 38 percent "said they disapproved of the military action" and 19 percent were undecided. The New York Post (1/6, Moore, 4.57M) points out "Republicans overwhelmingly – 84 percent – back Trump's ordering the air strike as do 14 percent of Democrats," while "eight percent of Republicans and 71 percent of Democrats disapprove."

Media Analyses Slam Trump's Iran Strategy. Under the headline "What Is Trump's Iran Strategy? Few Seem To Know," Max Fisher of the New York Times (1/6, 18.61M) writes, "Friend and foe alike are left puzzled over what...Trump aimed to achieve by killing a top Iranian general, what he might do next or how Tehran could mollify him." Fisher quotes Ellie Geranmayeh, an analyst at the European Council on Foreign Relations, as saying, "There's not a single person that I've spoken to who can tell you what Trump is up to with Iran. ... It just doesn't add up." Fisher adds, "It's not that experts or foreign officials suspect a secret agenda, but that the administration's action fit no clear pattern or long-term strategy."

In an analysis titled "Qassem Soleimani Killing Leaves Trump's Middle East Strategy in Tatters," Bloomberg (1/6, Wadhams, Wainer, 4.73M) says, "US policy in the region seems to be going in the opposite direction of what Trump has long promised – with more US troops going in, not fewer; an Iran defiant, not cowed and broken by sanctions; and regional allies giving only lukewarm support to Trump's airstrike instead of rallying around it." Bloomberg adds, "Economic costs of the strike are also mounting: oil surged above $70 a barrel on Monday and equities around the world extended losses. Havens climbed, with gold rising to the highest in more than six years."

Philip Bump of the Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) writes, "Trump's decision to target...Soleimani, an act that escalated tensions with that country and prompted his subsequent threat, was itself a dramatic demonstration of Trump's splashy interest in demonstrating his style of deploying American military assets." Bump adds, "His casual threat to attack cultural institutions is something more akin to the shrug he offered to waterboarding: They deserve it anyway, for what they're doing."

The Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) accuses Trump of "issuing bombastic threats, hinting at a desire to commit war crimes and mocking congressional powers. If 'deescalation' is actually the administration's aim, as Secretary of State Mike Pompeo insists, then the president is actively thwarting it." Trump "may believe this bluster will deter Iranian action," but "it almost certainly won't" and "may end up ensnaring the United States in the full-scale war with the Islamic republic that the president says he does not want."

Ocasio-Cortez "Likes" Tweet From "Russian-Funded Operative" Claiming Iran Doesn't Target Civilians. The Washington Free Beacon (1/6, Griswold, 78K) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "liked a tweet from a Russian-funded operative claiming that Iran, the world's most prolific state sponsor of terrorism, does not target civilians." Rania Khalek wrote, "A friend flying into the US says he hasn't seen so much security since 9/11. ... The US is terrified of how Iran will retaliate. Iran won't attack civilians, that's what al Qaeda does. But it shows this assassination did the opposite of making Americans safer and our leaders know it." Khalek "is a host for In the Now, a viral media company funded by the Russian government that was kicked off Facebook for its pro-Russia propaganda. She previously served as an editor for anti-Israel site The Electronic Intifada but resigned after speaking at a pro-Bashar al-Assad conference in Syria."

Omar: Trump Could Go To War To Defend His Business Interests. Breitbart (1/6, Caplan, 673K) reports Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) "floated the theory that...Trump could go to war against Iran if the Islamic regime targets his hotel properties in response to the US's deadly strike on...Soleimani." Omar wrote on Twitter, "Trump needs to immediately divest from his businesses and comply with the emoluments clause. Iran could threaten Trump hotels worldwide and he could provoke war over the loss of revenue from skittish guests. His business interests should not be driving military decisions."

Fox News' Earhardt: "So Interesting" Trump Critics Skeptical Of Intel Community's Assessment. The Daily Caller (1/6, Caruso, 716K) reports "Fox News host Ainsley Earhardt remarked that it is 'so interesting' that Americans are skeptical of...Trump's strike on Iranian Quds Gen. Qasem Soleimani." Said Earhardt, "It's so interesting that people are critical of the President's decisions, of our intelligence community's decisions, our general's decisions. ... We heard Pompeo over the weekend saying, everything that we have, the intelligence community has, he said I ran the CIA at one point, we can't release everything. We can't release all of our intelligence information. We'll release as much as we can, but you just have to trust us basically."

Ford Vehicle Sales Down 1.3% In Q4.

Reuters (1/6) reports Ford "posted a 1.3 percent fall in fourth-quarter vehicle sales as soft demand for passenger cars outweighed stable sales of larger sport utility vehicles (SUVs) and pickups. ... Discounts during the key holiday season and lower interest rates helped pushed sales of Ford's trucks to 330,075 in the quarter, up from 284,859 trucks a year earlier."

UAW Official Pearson Faces New Criminal Charge.

The Detroit News (1/6, Snell, 825K) reports, "Vance Pearson, a close aide to former United Auto Workers President Gary Jones, is expected to plead guilty for his role in an embezzlement conspiracy involving Jones and other labor leaders." Prosecutors filed a new criminal charge against Pearson, "accusing him of embezzling union funds spent on personal luxuries, including cigars, golfing, clothes and tips for caddies."

Market In Riskier Corporate Loans Slows.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Davies, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the market for low-rated corporate loans has declined in recent months, according to S&P Global Market Intelligence. At the state of December, the percentage of loan trading at less than 70 percent of face value was at a three-year high.

Pier 1 Imports Could Close Nearly Half Its Stores.

The New York Times (1/6, Maheshwari, 18.61M) reports specialty furniture chain Pier 1 Imports said Monday "that it might close up to 450 of its 936 stores, as well as some distribution centers, and lay off an unspecified number of corporate employees. ... Pier 1 made the announcement while reporting a quarterly sales decline of 13 percent and a loss of $59 million."

AP Analysis: Lyft Loses "Good Guy" Image.

The AP (1/6, Bussewitz) writes that while "for years, Lyft has been the good guy of ride-hailing," that changed "when dozens of women filed lawsuits against Lyft in recent months, claiming that they were sexually assaulted by the company's drivers. The women said Lyft did not do enough to keep them safe, and several said that when they reported the incidents, Lyft did little or nothing to make it right." A spokeswoman told the AP that Lyft has "launched more than 15 new safety features in the past few months."

Bayer's Roundup Faces New Challenger In Corteva's Enlist.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Bunge, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that with Bayer's Roundup weed killer at the center of court cases alleging it causes cancer, seed and pesticide maker Corteva has moved in with a new weed spray called Enlist. Roundup had been the unrivaled leader of the market, but a Corteva representative said Roundup's woes have offered a new opportunity.

IKEA To Pay Parents Of Toddler Killed By Recalled Dresser $46M.

ABC World News Tonight (1/6, story 11, 0:10, Muir, 7.03M) reported IKEA has agreed to "a major settlement. IKEA says it will pay $46 million to the parents of a toddler who was killed when one of its recalled dressers toppled onto him in California." The CBS Evening News (1/6, story 9, 0:20, O'Donnell, 5M) reported, "IKEA has already paid a total of $50 million to settle three earlier suits following the deaths of children killed in similar accidents."

WSJournal: Climate Activists' Focus On Banks And Insurers Hurts Competitiveness.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that climate activists are putting pressure on banks and insurers as a means of coercion, with some insurers now refusing to insure companies that make a significant percentage of their revenues in fossil fuels. The Journal says such refusals will not slow climate change but will only hurt US competitiveness.

New Research Concludes Tariffs Hurting US Businesses And Consumers Hardest.

The New York Times (1/6, Smialek, Swanson, 18.61M) reports US businesses and consumers, "not China, are bearing the financial brunt of President Trump's trade war, new data shows, undermining the president's assertion that the United States is 'taxing the hell out of China.'" A National Bureau of Economic Research working paper concludes, "U.S. tariffs continue to be almost entirely borne by U.S. firms and consumers." The Times calls the findings "the latest evidence that voters and American businesses are paying the cost of Mr. Trump's penchant for using tariffs to try to rewrite the terms of trade."

NYTimes Analysis: Wine Industry Wracked With "Fear And Dread" Over Possible 100% Tariffs.

The New York Times (1/6, Asimov, 18.61M) reports "the last month has passed in a blur of fear and dread" inside the wine industry as it contemplates President Trump's "threat to impose 100 percent tariffs on all wines imported from the European Union, along with a variety of other goods including foods, spirits and clothing." Such a tariff, the Times says, "would be catastrophic for Americans in the beverage and hospitality industry," and US jobs "may be lost."

Chinese Newspaper Hints At Beijing's Doubts About "Phase One" Trade Deal.

The Washington Times (1/6, Sands, 492K) reports Beijing's Global Times, "typically a reliable indicator of official policy," said in a Monday editorial that China "should not rush to sign a much-touted Phase One trade deal with the Trump administration, hinting that some key details in the agreement have yet to be nailed down." Despite its importance to China's economy, "a speedy signing is not of the essence, but the actual content of the deal and its implementation are," the news outlet wrote in an unsigned editorial.

US Chamber's Brilliant Gives Mixed Assessment Of Trump's Trade Record.

Politico (1/6, Palmer, 4.29M) says President Trump has "threatened to blow up the established order of international trade to get fairer terms for the United States," and "after three years of tariff hikes and trade negotiations that have yielded some gains, the jury is still out on whether his get-tough approach has produced better results than the tactics of predecessors." Myron Brilliant, head of international affairs at the US Chamber of Commerce, said, "The Administration has made progress on the trade front, but it's not come without risks and uncertainty. ... We are at halftime and we don't know yet the final score. ... We'd like to understand how they will connect all the dots and address important issues to the business community that remain problematic."

Saudi Envoy Dispatched To Washington Amid Tensions With Iran.

Barak Ravid reports for Axios (1/6, 521K) that a "senior Saudi envoy has arrived in Washington and will meet Monday with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and senior White House and Pentagon officials in an attempt to de-escalate the crisis in the Gulf." Deputy Defense Minister Prince Khaled bin Salman, a former ambassador to the US, was "urgently sent to Washington" by Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman amid concerns that the Kingdom "could become engulfed in uncontrolled escalation between the US and Iran."

In Apparent Contradiction With Trump, Pentagon Rules Out Striking Iranian Cultural Sites.

The New York Times (1/6, Baker, Haberman, 18.61M) reports Defense Secretary Esper "sought to douse an international outcry on Monday by ruling out military attacks on cultural sites in Iran if the conflict with Tehran escalates further, despite President Trump's threat to destroy some of the country's treasured icons." Speaking to reporters, "Esper acknowledged that striking cultural sites with no military value would be a war crime, putting him at odds with the president, who insisted such places would be legitimate targets." Asked if cultural sites could be targeted Esper responded, "We will follow the laws of armed conflict."

Johnson: UK Will Not Back Targeting Of Iran's Cultural Sites. In what the Washington Post (1/6, Booth, Adam, 14.2M) calls "his first big foreign policy test since his landslide election victory," Prime Minister Boris Johnson warned Monday that Britain will not support President Trump's threat to target cultural sites in Iran. Johnson also issued a joint statement, alongside German Chancellor Angela Merkel and French President Emmanuel Macron, calling on "all parties to exercise utmost restraint and responsibility. The current cycle of violence in Iraq must be stopped.” To the Post, Johnson is “trying to strike a balancing act” as he is “under pressure to support Trump” but “remembers well how former British prime minister Tony Blair was seen as the gullible, junior partner to President George W. Bush and his headlong rush to war in Iraq.”

The New York Times (1/6, Landler, 18.61M) similarly says “Britain is caught between its traditional alliance with Washington – one that Mr. Johnson promised voters he would deepen with a post-Brexit trade agreement – and the new, still-undefined, relationship with Europe.” Johnson, it adds, “is walking a tightrope that officials said could become even more treacherous if Mr. Trump’s showdown with Iran opens a new trans-Atlantic rift.”

White House Tightens Security Amid Iran Threat.

Politico (1/6, Cook, Lippman, Orr, 4.29M) reports President Trump’s “top aides were met Monday with stark reminders of the new risks facing the administration in the new year: enhanced security measures across the White House including additional Secret Service agents, tighter security at entrances and greater scrutiny of visitors.” A White House official “said the new posture involved guards taking a bit more time, or more closely screening cars entering the complex, ‘but nothing over the top that would disrupt entry for people with legitimate reasons to enter.” Senior Administration officials “also have been told to be on the lookout for cyberattacks that often arrive in inboxes as suspicious emails.”

Iranian Officials Hint At Possible Attacks On Trump Properties. The New York Post (1/6, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports that “senior Iranian officials are using Twitter to hint at threats against President Trump’s properties – including his Mar-a-Lago Club resort in Florida and Trump Tower in Manhattan – over the killing of Iran’s top military commander.” For example, Hesameddin Ashena, a top adviser to President Hassan Rouhani, “tweeted a link to a Forbes magazine profile that listed the properties, none of which is fortified to withstand a military attack, along with a quote from the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini,” which stated, “I tell the whole world that if the world wants to stand up to our religion, we will stand up against their whole world.” The Washington Times (1/6, Boyer, Howell, 492K) also reports on the heightened security at Trump properties, including the Trump International Hotel in Washington.

Susan Rice: Soleimani’s Death Will Lead To Attacks On US. The Washington Examiner (1/6, Dibble, 448K) reports former national security adviser Susan Rice “claimed that terrorists embedded in the United States ‘could be activated’ as Iran inches toward conflict with the US.” Writing in the New York Times over the weekend, Rice argued that President Trump’s decision to kill Gen. Qasem Soleimani “made Iranian attacks against Americans inevitable.” She wrote, “Despite President Trump’s oft-professed desire to avoid war with Iran and withdraw from military entanglements in the Middle East, his decision to order the killing of [Soleimani] now locks our two countries in a dangerous escalatory cycle that will likely lead to wider warfare.”

Esper Disavows Letter Suggesting US Troops Are Preparing To Leave Iraq.

Reuters (1/6, Hafezi, Mason) reports that Defense Secretary Esper said Monday that the Administration does not intend to withdraw US troops from Iraq “following reports...of a US military letter informing Iraq officials about the repositioning of troops in preparation to leave the country.” Esper is quoted as saying, “There’s been no decision whatsoever to leave Iraq. ... I don’t know what that letter is... We’re trying to find out where that’s coming from, what that is. But there’s been no decision made to leave Iraq. Period.” Reuters says that for his part, Gen. Mark Milley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said of the letter sent to Iraqi authorities, “Poorly worded, implies withdrawal. That’s not what’s happening.”

An earlier Reuters (1/6, Foundation) dispatch had indicated that “the United States-led military coalition against Islamic State said on Monday that it was pulling out of Iraq and would be repositioning forces over the next few days and weeks, a letter seen by Reuters showed.” The letter “from United States Marine Corps Brigadier General William H. Seely III, the commanding general of Task Force Iraq,” read, “Sir, in deference to the sovereignty of the Republic of Iraq, and as requested by the Iraqi Parliament and the Prime Minister, CJTF-OIR will be repositioning forces over the course of the coming days and weeks to prepare for onward movement.” The Washington Post (1/6, Dadouch, O’Grady, 14.2M) says that after the letter was reported on, Milley “called Gen. Kenneth F. McKenzie Jr., the commander of US Central Command, which oversees the Middle East,” who “told [Milley] the draft letter was an honest mistake, ‘but used other words that were a little more colorful than mistake,’ Milley said.”

NBC Nightly News (1/6, lead story, 2:50, Holt, 6.18M) also reported “the Pentagon is scrambling to clarify US troop deployments after what it says was a leaked draft of a memo sent to the Iraqis that strongly implied the US was leaving the country for good.” At any rate, “Esper said there has been no decision whatsoever to leave Iraq. US military officials tell NBC News instead, a few hundred military trainers and administrative personnel may leave from Baghdad, sent to safe areas, primarily in Kuwait.” Along similar lines, the CBS Evening News (1/6, lead story, 2:40, O’Donnell, 5M) reported that “the Secretary of Defense could not have been more emphatic: the US military is not about to leave the country it invaded 17 years ago.”

Politico (1/6, Bender, 4.29M) reports “the misfire added yet another layer of confusion to an already murky situation days after the region erupted in response to the US drone attack,” and the Washington Post (1/6, Deyoung, Ryan, Sonne, 14.2M) that “the quickly quelled uproar was indicative of what Milley called the ‘highly dynamic situation’ in which the United States finds itself after Friday’s killing of...Soleimani.” The Post adds, “A policy afterthought for the past three years, while it served as a hub for military efforts against the Islamic State and a place from which to keep a close eye on Iran, Iraq has suddenly become a problem for the United States.”

The AP (1/6, Abdul) says “it was not clear what steps caretaker Iraqi Prime Minister Adel Abdul-Mahdi would take following the parliament's vote" Sunday to expel foreign troops as "experts were split on whether, as a resigned prime minister, he has the authority to request the termination of the US presence." At any rate, the New York Times (1/6, 18.61M) reports that the Iraqi government "has begun to consider new parameters for the American military in Iraq after lawmakers voted 170-0 on Sunday in favor of expelling United States troops from their country. The troops will be limited to 'training and advising' Iraqi forces, but will not be allowed to move off their bases or to fly in Iraqi airspace while plans are being made for their departure, said Brig. Gen. Abdul Karim Khalaf, the military spokesman for Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi," who "drafted the language and submitted the bill to Parliament, leaving little doubt about his support for the expulsion." The Times reports that on Monday, Mahdi met with Matthew Tueller, the US ambassador to Iraq, regarding the vote to expel US troops.

Sen. Mazie Hirono (D-HI) said on CNN's Situation Room (1/6, 726K), "I conclude that there is ongoing chaos with this Administration. Clearly that the Iraqi parliament wants us to leave, and this letter actually seemed to comport with it, and only to be told moments later it is a mistake. ... I don't think that there is an end game that this Administration thought about, because this is the way that the President makes his decisions."

Rep. Abigail Spanberger (D-VA) said on CNN's Situation Room (1/6, 726K), "There is confusion within the American government. There is confusion about what this means. I think we can be certain that there is confusion within the Iraqi government as to what their partners, the United States, means by this letter. It speaks to a little bit of chaos and freneticism, and forward looking, we must be concerned about what strategy exists to move our country forward, protect our national security interests and ensure that our US personnel overseas are operating on an order and on a strategic plan that will keep them safe, and meet the US objectives."

WPost Analysis: US Withdrawal From Iraq Would Benefit Russia. In an article titled "Russia Stands To Benefit As Middle East Tensions Spike After Soleimani Killing," the Washington Post (1/6, Dixon, 14.2M) reports that "some of the loudest critics of President Trump's order to kill a senior Iranian commander – other than Iranians – are Russian officials, who have denounced it as an illegal assassination and a politically motivated election-year decision." However, the Post suggests that Trump's decision "might...benefit" Russia if it leads to US troops withdrawing from Iraq, "much as it benefited in Syria after Trump ordered a troop pullout there last fall." The Post adds that "a hasty U.S. departure would give Iran what it has sought for years," and "could also create a void for Russia to exploit, although it is more likely to do so through diplomatic overtures, trade deals and arms sales than by taking up any military slack."

Iraqi Consulate In Detroit Open For Condolences For "Righteous Martyrs," Soleimani. The Detroit Free Press (1/6, Parvez, 1.52M) reports "the Consulate General of the Republic of Iraq in Detroit announced that it will be open for condolences for Iranian Major General Qassem Soleimani who was killed in a US airstrike in Baghdad Friday." The consulate "announced 'the opening of a record of my condolences for the lives of the righteous martyrs who were killed as a result of the recent American raids in Iraq.'" The consulate also "will be accepting condolences for Commander Abu Mahdi Al-Mohandes, who was killed in the same airstrike." The Free Press adds "people have taken to social media to share their disdain for the event, even tagging the FBI to stop it."

US Troops In Region Preparing For Attacks From Iran.

The New York Times (1/6, Gibbons-Neff, 18.61M) reports that US military units stationed in Iraq and Syria "are readying for attacks from either Iranian forces or their proxies" in the wake of Soleimani's death. While it is "unclear what an Iranian retaliatory attack would look like," already, "American forces in the region are reinforcing their outposts, bases and airfields" and the Pentagon "directed about 4,500 additional troops to the region atop the roughly 50,000 already there." The CBS Evening News (1/6, story 2, 1:05, O'Donnell, 5M) reported "the likely targets of any attack would be US military installations. Right now, there are more than 60,000 Americans deployed in the Middle East. That includes an aircraft carrier group. Those in Iraq may be at the highest risk of attack."

NBC Nightly News (1/6, story 3, 1:35, Holt, 6.18M) reported, "As the policy and politics of [Soleimani's death] play out, the real life consequences are being felt tonight by American military families as thousands of servicemen and women are deployed to the region." Kerry Sanders reported from Fort Bragg, "More soldiers with the 82nd Airborne [are] on route to the Middle East. By midweek, as many as 3,500 men and women in uniform will join those already stationed in the region. The Army hasn't deployed this many this quickly in 30 years." In addition to US troops, ABC World News Tonight (1/6, story 2, 2:35, Muir, 7.55M) reported, "Six B-52 bombers are reportedly being relocated to the Indian Ocean tonight."

Former Acting CIA Director Mike Morrell said on the CBS Evening News (1/6, story 5, 2:00, O'Donnell, 5M), "I think we're closer to war [with Iran] than any time in the last 30 years. Given the President's red line, we're one dead American away. So as the mourning period ends, what I'm most concerned about is a missile attack in Iraq against a US diplomatic or military facility that kills an American, thereby forcing the President to either live up to his red line and attack Iran, in which case we're at war, or he doesn't do that, and he looks weak."

Security Heightened At DC-Area Military Installations. The Washington Times (1/6, Kaplan, 492K) reports that "D.C.-area military bases have increased their security protocols following a heightened conflict with Iran." Maj. Mark Lazane, "speaking for the Army bases in the region," said, "While we will not discuss specifics, US Northern Command is implementing additional force protection condition measures to increase security and awareness for all installations in the US NORTHCOM area of responsibility."

Khamenei Declares Retaliation Must Carried Out By Iranian Forces Directly. According to the New York Times (1/6, Fassihi, Kirkpatrick, 18.61M), Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, "in a departure from Iran's usual tactics of hiding behind proxies," wants "any retaliation" for the killing of Soleimani "to be carried out openly by Iranian forces." Three Iranian sources said Monday that in the house after Soleimani's death, Khamenei "made a rare appearance at a meeting of the government's National Security Council to lay down the parameters for any retaliation," insisting that "it must be a direct and proportional attack on American interests" that is "openly carried out by Iranian forces themselves."

Soleimani Adviser Has History Of Targeting US Troops. The Washington Times (1/6, Scarborough, 492K) reports Soleimani "leaves a legacy in Iraq of more than 100,000 Shia militia loyalists and one of his closest advisers, a Quds Force general who serves as Iran's ambassador in Baghdad." The ambassador is Brig. Gen. Iraj Masjedi, "long a practitioner of targeting US troops, according to Iran's main opposition group."

Paul Criticizes US Policy Toward Iran.

Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) said on CNN's Situation Room (1/6, 695K), "I think the stated purpose by the Administration was that they were going to prevent attacks on Americans. I think if you ask the question now, 'Is it more or less likely that there will be attacks on Americans?', I think it's much more likely." Paul added, "When Secretary of State Pompeo is out there saying, 'Maximum pressure. Our goal is to get them back to the negotiation table,' no naive child would believe that. You would have to be brain-dead to believe that. We tear up the [nuclear] agreement, we put an embargo on you, and we kill your major general, and they are just going to crawl back to the table and say, 'What do you want America?'"

Oil Prices Rise Above $70 Per Barrel Amid US-Iran Tensions.

The AP (1/6, O'Brien) reports the "global benchmark for crude oil rose above $70 a barrel on Monday for the first time in over three months, with jitters rising over the escalating military tensions between Iran and the United States." The Brent contract for oil hit a high of $70.74 a barrel on Monday, "the highest since mid-September, when it briefly spiked over an attack on Saudi crude processing facilities."

Rouhani Warns Trump Against Threatening Iran As Crowds Mourn Soleimani.

On NBC Nightly News (1/6, lead story, 2:50, Holt, 6.18M), Ali Arouzi reported from Tehran, "Extraordinary scenes of grief and anger, punctuated with chants of revenge and 'Death to America.'" Monday's funeral for Gen. Qassem Soleimani was "the largest funeral gathering since the death of the founder of the Islamic Republic in 1989." On ABC World News Tonight (1/6, lead story, 3:40, Muir, 7.03M), Martha Raddatz reported from Tehran, "The emotion was so high here today. We saw many people weeping, but it was mixed with anger and a real desire for revenge and anger clearly aimed at President Trump."

The AP (1/6, Karimi, Gambrell) reports the funeral "drew a crowd said by police to be in the millions in the Iranian capital, filling thoroughfares and side streets as far as the eye could see." Although there "was no independent estimate, aerial footage and Associated Press journalists suggested a turnout of at least 1 million, and the throngs were visible on satellite images of Tehran taken Monday." According to the AP, "Authorities later brought his remains and those of the others to Iran's holy city of Qom, turning out another massive crowd."

Reuters (1/6, Hafezi, Mason) reports Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei "wept in grief with hundreds of thousands of mourners thronging Tehran's streets on Monday." Responding to Trump's threats to hit Iranian sites if Tehran retaliates for his death, President Hassan Rouhani "pointedly" tweeted: "Never threaten the Iranian nation." The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Egbali, Rasmussen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Soleimani's successor as the commander of the Quds Force also vowed Monday that he would continue on his path. Brig. Gen. Esmail Qaani told state television, "The minimum retribution for us is to remove America from the region."

Calling it "the largest gathering in decades," the CBS Evening News (1/6, story 3, 1:50, O'Donnell, 5M) said the funeral procession "stretched nearly four miles as Iran's leaders made new vows to avenge the death" of Soleimani. CBS (Palmer): "Soleimani's daughter was also on hand. Her father's death, she said, 'would bring dark days to America.'"

Azadeh Moaveni, an analyst with the International Crisis Group, writes in the New York Times (1/6, 18.61M) that "Iranians have turned out to mourn [Soleimani] on an extraordinary scale, in scenes unmatched since the funeral of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini himself in 1989." The mourning, he argues, "is Iran's first act of retaliation."

WPost's Ryan Criticized For Comparing Funeral Turnout To Trump's Inauguration. The Washington Examiner (1/6, Brest, 448K) says Washington Post reporter Missy Ryan "shared a comparison of the crowds" gathered for Soleimani's funeral and for President Trump's inauguration. Ryan retweeted the comparison on Monday. The original tweet has the caption: "Hard to resist not retweeting this."

Europeans May Back Reimposition Of Iran Sanctions.

Reuters (1/6, Emmott, Irish) reports Britain, France and Germany – parties to the 2015 Iran nuclear deal – "could launch a dispute resolution process this week that might lead to renewed UN sanctions on Tehran." Politico says there will be "an emergency meeting of the European Union's 28 foreign ministers" on Friday. An anonymous "EU diplomat" is quoted as saying of the potential for the reimposition of sanctions, "It is increasingly likely, but not yet decided. Friday will be key." Another "European diplomat" tells Politico Europe, "The deal is all but dead, but we will do everything to slow and limit the (nuclear) proliferation slope that has been taken to try and save what can be saved."

Grenell Faults EU Allies For Failing To Condemn Iran's Actions In Iraq. Politico Europe (1/6, Desiderio, Cheney, 8K) reports Richard Grenell, US Ambassador to Germany, said Monday that European allies of the US "agreed that" Soleimani "was a terrorist threat, but were wrong to focus so much on de-escalation." Grenell said German Foreign Minister Heiko Maas has "made very clear that General Soleimani was a terrorist and he was on the EU terrorist list." However, "referring to calls from European capitals for a de-escalation in the wake of the general's killing," Grenell added: "The language of just de-escalation is not fair. We have seen the Iranians escalate over the last several months. And there has been no, or I should say little response from the European governments. ... If you want to de-escalate, and you think that it's really important to de-escalate, I would say then you must condemn all the way up the ladder of escalation, and that was not done."

WPost Analysis: Soleimani's Death A Boon For Netanyahu.

The Washington Post (1/6, Hendrix, Eglash, 14.2M) reports that the airstrike targeting Qasem Soleimani last week "gave Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu three things he dearly wanted: a strong blow against Iran, relief from growing fears that President Trump was backing out of the Middle East and a change of subject from the corruption indictments dogging him two months before a national election." According to the Post, "After growing frustration at Trump's apparent unwillingness to confront Iran more directly, his surprise decision to target the powerful Iranian commander was deemed a 'strategic miracle' by at least one Israeli commentator." Israeli officials "have declined to say whether they were briefed ahead of the U.S. operation, although most analysts assume the Netanyahu administration was given at least some notice." Israeli officials "were equally mum on the more sensitive question of whether Israel provided intelligence or other support to the operation."

CAIR Claims Iranian-Americans Crossing Into US From Canada Were Profiled.

The AP (1/6) reports that "civil rights groups and lawmakers demanded information from federal officials Monday following reports that dozens of Iranian-Americans were held up and questioned at the border as they returned to the United States from Canada over the weekend." The Washington state chapter of the Council on American-Islamic Relations "said more than 60 Iranians and Iranian-Americans were detained and questioned for hours at the Peace Arch Border Crossing in Blaine, Washington." The "unusual delays in clearing travelers of Iranian descent continued until Sunday afternoon but appeared to have ended by Monday, the civil rights groups said."

The Washington Post (1/6, Hauslohner, 14.2M) reports that a "CBP spokesman denied that Iranians were being delayed based on their national origin," instead saying the "extended wait times – of two to four hours – at that specific port of entry on Saturday were the combined result of lowered holiday staffing, high border traffic, and an 'enhanced posture' of security implemented at border crossings due to 'the current threat environment.'"

Politico Analysis: Pompeo Acting As Trump's Shadow Defense Secretary.

Politico (1/6, Toosi, 4.29M) reports that "in recent days, one aide to President Donald Trump has blitzed the media to talk about troop deployments, deterrence and the likelihood of American bombs raining down on Iranian soil," and "it's not the man who leads the Pentagon." Instead, Secretary of State Pompeo "has seized the spotlight amid the escalating US confrontation with Iran. As he's done so, he's come across to some observers as an unofficial secretary of defense, overshadowing the actual defense secretary." To Politico, Pompeo's "omnipresence illustrates the extraordinary influence he wields in Trump's inner circle."

NYTimes Analysis: Fox Host's Shift On Trump Foreign Policy Emblematic Of GOP.

The New York Times (1/6, Steinhauer, 18.61M) reports that "immediately after President Trump ordered the killing of...Suleimani...some of the loudest applause was heard from Pete Hegseth, a Fox News host and a decorated veteran of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars." Said Hegseth on Fox News' Fox & Friends, "He's a terrorist who has killed Americans. We knew where he was and the President took a bold move to get rid of him, and people around the globe are thankful for that." Hegseth's views, which "have greatly evolved since his time in the Army and his tenure leading two conservative veterans organizations, are emblematic of the seismic shift among many Republicans under Mr. Trump on long-held foreign policy positions." To the Times, "they also reflect a slow but significant souring among veterans on the post-9/11 conflicts that many believe have cost the nation too much in lives and money."

Walter Russell Mead writes in his Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column that by ordering Soleimani's death last week, Trump was seeking to appeal to his base, which viewed the move as demonstrating his courage and resolve and doesn't care whether or not it was permissible under international law.

The Arizona Republic (1/6, Hansen, 869K) reports Rep. Paul Gosar (R-AZ) "sparked his first social-media muddle of the new year after tweeting a doctored picture on Monday of former President Barack Obama and Iranian President Hassan Rouhani in which he seemed not to realize the foreign leader remains in power." Gosar posted on his personal Twitter account a photo purporting to show the two leaders shaking hands, writing, "The world is a better place without these guys in power." The photo "apparently came from a 2011 meeting Obama had with now-former Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh," who was digitally replaced with Rouhani.

Biden And Sanders Use Iran Tensions To Tout Their Foreign Policy Stances.

The New York Times (1/6, Ember, Glueck, 18.61M) reports that both former Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) are "aggressively seizing on the escalating tensions with Iran to press their starkly divergent cases for the presidency as they compete for an overlapping slice of the electorate." According to the Times, "Both men seemed newly energized on the campaign trail, treating the Iran confrontation as a clarifying political moment, as well as a tailor-made opportunity to showcase their long records on international affairs. And yet no two candidates better illustrate the sharp divisions in the party about what American leadership abroad should look like." The Times says that while Biden "has focused on highlighting his decades-long résumé in foreign policy and his relationships overseas," Sanders is "emphasizing his long-held aversion to war."

WPost Analysis: New Foreign Policy Focus Has Perils For Biden. The Washington Post (1/6, Wootson, 14.2M) reports, "In the days since President Trump authorized the killing of a top Iranian leader, [Biden] has made his extensive foreign policy experience a central part of his campaign pitch." But the effort includes "significant risks" for Biden, who in recent days "has overstated his initial opposition to the Iraq War" and faced questions about his role in US foreign policy during his decades in the Senate.

CNN "Fact Check:" Biden Again "Dishonestly" Says He Opposed Iraq War From Start. In an online "Fact Check" piece, CNN (1/6, Dale, 83.16M) says Biden "dishonestly suggested on Saturday that he had opposed the war in Iraq 'from the very moment' it began in 2003," despite his campaign saying "in September that he 'misspoke' when he made a similar claim. Biden was responding Saturday to a voter in Des Moines, Iowa, who told him, 'I'm with you 90% of the way' but questioned his judgment in part because 'you were for the second Gulf War, which was a mess.' Biden said that 'from the very moment' President George W. Bush launched his 'shock and awe' military campaign, and 'right after' that occurred, 'I opposed what he was doing, and spoke to him.'" CNN asserts, "It's false that Biden opposed the war from the moment Bush started it in March 2003. Biden repeatedly spoke in favor of the war both before and after it began."

Trump: Impeachment A Democratic "Con Game," And "Not What The Founders Had In Mind."

In a tweet early Monday morning, President Trump argued that his impeachment was "not what the Founders had in mind," and is a waste of his and Congress' time when the nation has "important matters pending." Trump wrote, "Congress & the President should not be wasting their time and energy on a continuation of the totally partisan Impeachment Hoax when we have so many important matters pending. 196 to ZERO was the Republican House vote, & we got 3 Dems. This was not what the Founders had in mind!"

In another tweet, Trump called impeachment a Democratic "con game" to help them in the election. Trump wrote, "The Impeachment Hoax, just a continuation of the Witch Hunt which started even before I won the Election, must end quickly. Read the Transcripts, see the Ukrainian President's strong statement, NO PRESSURE – get this done. It is a con game by the Dems to help with the Election!"

Trump Now Favors Short Senate Trial, Swift Resolution.

The Washington Examiner (1/6, Crilly, 448K) cites "senior Republican sources" who said that the White House "has backed down from its demand to call a string of witnesses during President Trump's Senate impeachment trial," and now favors "a swift resolution." While the President "has previously demanded that Joe Biden and his son Hunter give evidence as part of a trial that he said would reveal the extent of the corruption in U.S. politics and confirm the need for him to 'clean the swamp,'" Republican officials "say the White House is in lock step" with Senate Majority Leader McConnell, "who has been pushing for a swift resolution."

Trump's Legal Team Has Its Trial Strategy In Place. Politico (1/6, Samuelsohn, Zanona, 4.29M) says Trump's lawyers "have their strategy in place. ... All they need now is a start date." Over the past month, "the White House counsel's office and the president's team of private lawyers have prepared a detailed legal brief pushing back against last month's House-passed impeachment articles," According to "a person familiar with the Trump legal strategy," the document "is modeled after one that President Bill Clinton's lawyers submitted at the start of his 1999 Senate impeachment trial – which ended a month later with his acquittal." Politico adds that White House Counsel Pat Cipollone "is primed to have the lead speaking role and will be backed up by his top deputies, Michael Purpura and Patrick Philbin." Trump's personal attorney Jay Sekulow "also is expected to have a presence on the Senate floor during the trial, though it's still unclear whether that includes making any public remarks."

McConnell Has The Votes To Keep Trial Short. Citing a report from The Hill, Townhall (1/6, Baumann, 177K) says McConnell "has the votes to keep the Senate trial short, meaning new witness testimony and documents would not be included." Townhall adds that Sens. Susan Collins (R-ME) and Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) are "siding with McConnell." They "believe the precedent set during the Clinton impeachment trial should be followed." Both "want to see House impeachment managers and Trump's defense team make their opening statement. Then, if necessary, the Senate could subpoena for additional documents and witness testimony."

Trump Jokes With Limbaugh About Mueller's Conclusions.

The Washington Post (1/6, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that in an interview with Rush Limbaugh Monday, President Trump "continued to criticize House Democrats for impeaching him, calling the process a 'hoax.'" The Post adds that Trump "also claimed the results of the investigation led by" Robert Mueller "proved that Democrats found 'nothing' on him." Trump said , "Even I was impressed with how clean I am, Rush." The Post says Trump "also renewed his attacks on" House Speaker Pelosi, "accusing [her] and other Democrats of trying to influence the 2020 election by withholding the articles of impeachment." Trump said , "I think what they're trying to do is affect the election, illegally. ... They are a joke. They are not crimes. There is nothing there. They found nothing."

Bolton Says He Is "Prepared To Testify" In Senate Impeachment Trial.

The AP (1/6, Miller) reports former national security adviser John Bolton said Monday that he is "prepared to testify" in an impeachment trial if he is subpoenaed by the Senate. Bolton "said that he has weighed the issues of executive privilege" and that after "careful consideration and study," concluded that he would comply with a Senate subpoena. Mary Bruce said on ABC World News Tonight (1/6, story 5, 1:05, Muir, 7.03M) it is "unclear why Bolton is making this move now."

Politico (1/6, Desiderio, Cheney, 4.29M) cites "a source familiar with the matter" who said that before his announcement, Bolton "gave a heads up to [Senate Majority Leader] McConnell informing the majority leader of his decision," which the Wall Street Journal (1/6, Andrews, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) increases pressure on Republicans to call him. Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (1/6, 695K), "Bolton's testimony could be explosive, especially when it comes to Rudy Giuliani and his role in the Administration's alleged scheme to find dirt on Joe Biden in Ukraine."

USA Today (1/6, Shesgreen, Jackson, 10.31M) says Bolton's "unexpected" statement "plays into the hands of" House Speaker Pelosi "and Senate Democrats," while the New York Times (1/6, Fandos, Schmidt, 18.61M) calls it "a dramatic turn that could alter the dynamic of the impeachment proceeding." The Times says Democrats "quickly seized" on Bolton's statement, "arguing that it strengthened their case that the Senate must hear from Mr. Bolton and other senior officials as part of Mr. Trump's impeachment trial."

Bloomberg (1/6, 4.73M) reports Pelosi said in a tweet that Trump and McConnell "have run out of excuses" and "must allow key witnesses to testify, and produce the documents Trump has blocked, so Americans can see the facts for themselves." Reuters (1/6, Cornwell, Hosenball) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer said in a statement, "If any Senate Republican opposes issuing subpoenas to the four witnesses and documents we have requested they would make absolutely clear they are participating in a cover up." The Washington Times (1/6, Muñoz, 492K) reports that in a tweet, House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff "said the responsibility for securing Mr. Bolton's testimony now lies with the Senate." Schiff wrote, "Bolton refused to testify in the House, following Trump's orders. Now he is willing to come forward. The Senate must allow testimony from him, [Acting Chief of Staff] Mulvaney and others. The coverup must end."

Nancy Cordes said on the CBS Evening News (1/6, story 6, 1:50, O'Donnell, 5M) that "a few Senate Republicans" said Monday that "they're interested in hearing what Bolton has to say and that it might even be favorable to the President. But allowing him to testify could open the door to other witnesses that the White House tried to block the first time around."

In her Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) column, Ruth Marcus questions why "any senator charged with the grave responsibility of trying the president on articles of impeachment" would "not want to hear Bolton's account? How could any senator justify refusing to hear from someone so central to Trump's handling of Ukraine?"

Romney Says He Would Love To Hear From Bolton. Kasie Hunt said on NBC Nightly News (1/6, story 4, 1:45, Holt, 6.18M) that four Republican senators would need to vote with Senate Democrats in order to call Bolton. Hunt added that Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) said Monday that "he would love to hear from Bolton" Politico (1/6, Levine, Bresnahan, 4.29M) says Romney "stopped short of saying he would vote with Democrats to subpoena" Bolton. Democrats "were hoping moderate Republicans like Sens. Susan Collins of Maine, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska," and Romney would "endorse their efforts to bring in Bolton and [Mulvaney] to testify at the trial." However, "on Monday, Collins and Murkowski both signaled they wanted to begin the trial first."

Axios (1/6, Treene, 521K) reports that "key Senate Republicans are refusing to give a clear answer" on whether Bolton should be subpoenaed. Axios says these senators "either are facing tough re-election fights, have previously bucked Trump and" McConnell "or are retiring and may feel less pressure to stick to the party line." Axios cites comments from Collins, Murkowski, and Romney, as well as Sens. Joni Ernst (R-IA) and Thom Tillis (R-NC).

Rubio Argues Senate Should Not Call Bolton. The Washington Post (1/6, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that in a tweet Monday, Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) "pour[ed] cold water on the idea of Bolton testifying before the Senate." Rubio argued "that the Senate should not consider any documents or witness testimony beyond what the House has already reviewed." He wrote, "The testimony & evidence considered in a Senate impeachment trial should be the same testimony & evidence the House relied upon when they passed the Articles of Impeachment. Our job is to vote on what the House passed, not to conduct an open ended inquiry."

Hawley Resolution Would Allow Dismissal Of Impeachment Charges If Pelosi Does Not Send Articles.

The Washington Times (1/6, Swoyer, 492K) reports Republican senators are considering a measure to "change Senate rules allowing them to dismiss the impeachment charges against the president if Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi continues to refuse to transmit the articles of impeachment to the upper chamber." Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) "introduced the measure Monday and accused Ms. Pelosi of obstructing a Senate trial, which is to occur after the House votes to impeach a sitting president under the U.S. Constitution." Hawley said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (1/6, 831K) that Pelosi "is attempting to obstruct a Senate trial. ... Here's what needs to happen: we need to change the Senate rules to allow the Senate to dismiss this case if she refuses to send the articles over." The Washington Times (1/6, Swoyer, Muñoz, 492K) describes "increasing pressure" on Pelosi, who, as of Tuesday, will have withheld the articles for 20 days to send them to the Senate. The Times adds that Hawley said on the Senate floor, "Now when it's time to put up or shut up – actually put the evidence forward to be judged – now Speaker Pelosi is saying she may withhold the articles indefinitely. ... We now have the longest delay in American history."

The Hill (1/6, Carney, 2.98M) says Hawley's resolution "would give the House 25 days to send articles of impeachment over to the Senate." According to the proposal, at the end of that period, a senator could offer a motion to dismiss "with prejudice for failure by the House of Representatives to prosecute such articles" with a simple majority vote.

Nunes: House Republicans Investigating Intelligence Community IG.

The Washington Examiner (1/6, Chaitin, 448K) reports Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA), the ranking member on the House Intelligence Committee, said Monday that House Republicans are investigating Intelligence Community Inspector General Michael Atkinson. Atkinson "notified Congress of the whistleblower complaint that sparked an impeachment effort against President Trump." Nunes told The Sara Carter Show that he still faces "serious questions" in the wake of his testimony in October, "which to this day remains under wraps." Nunes said, "Everyone needs to see that testimony," and added that it has not been released "because it's very damaging, not only to the whistleblower but also to Atkinson himself." Nunes said House Republicans have "an active investigation" into Atkinson.

State Department Struggled With How To Handle Information From Steele.

The Daily Caller (1/6, Ross, 716K) reports that State Department emails from 2014 obtained via lawsuit filed by the Daily Caller News Foundation and Judicial Watch "show that officials deliberated how best to handle information from Christopher Steele, who would go on to write the infamous Trump dossier." Officials "decided that one official, Jonathan Winer, would send Steele's reports from his personal email account to an assistant, who would then forward them to the department's classified system." The Daily Caller adds that officials "were concerned about security problems with the State Department's unclassified computer network, and so they came up with a solution," in which Winer, "an aide to former Secretary of State John Kerry and longtime Steele friend, would send the reports from his personal email account to a State Department contractor," who would then "strip identifying information from the documents and send them to a small group of State Department officials on 'the high side,' or the agency's classified network."

GOP's Joint Fundraising Platform Sees Surge In Donations Due To Impeachment.

The AP (1/6, Miller) reports that the President's impeachment has "prompted a surge of donations to Republican Party groups through its new joint fundraising platform," WinRed. The "long-awaited answer to Democratic powerhouse ActBlue, brought in $101 million in the second half of last year, most of it since the Oct. 31 party line vote by the House paving the way for its impeachment of Trump." WinRed "was launched in June to maximize the Republican Party's small-dollar giving and now unites the Republican National Committee, every state Republican Party and most House and Senate campaigns on the same platform." According to the group, fundraising appeals using the terms "impeach" or "impeachment" took in "300% more than those without those terms."

PI Says Hunter Biden Used Dead Brother's Name To Conceal His Identity.

The Washington Examiner (1/6, Neale, 448K) reports private investigator Dominic Casey "has claimed in an Arkansas paternity case that former Vice President Joe Biden's son Hunter Biden tried to conceal his whereabouts by using the identity of his dead older brother Beau." Casey said in a court document "that stolen identities were used to check Biden into an Arizona rehabilitation facility as Joseph R. Beau Biden III and Joseph McGee. The identities were reportedly found by police after responding to reports of suspicious items inside a Hertz rental car on Oct. 28, 2018."

DHS Sharing Citizenship Data With Census Bureau.

The AP (1/6) reports DHS "is agreeing to share citizenship information with the U.S. Census Bureau" as part of President Trump's "order to collect data on who is a citizen following the Supreme Court's rejection of a citizenship question on the 2020 Census form." Trump's order is "being challenged in federal court, but meanwhile the Department of Homeland Security two weeks ago announced the agreement in a report."

CBP Now Collecting DNA Information From Migrants.

The Daily Caller (1/6, Hopkins, 716K) reports Customs and Border Protection "has launched a small-scale pilot program that collects DNA samples from detained migrants, and plans to dramatically expand its reach in the near future." On Monday, CBP began "collecting DNA information from migrants who are detained near Detroit, as well as individuals detained at the Eagle Pass, Texas port of entry."

Mexican Asylum Seekers May Be Sent To Guatemala.

Reuters (1/6, Rosenberg) reports that Mexican citizens who are seeking asylum in the US "could be sent to Guatemala under a bilateral agreement signed by the Central American nation last year." According to Reuters, US Citizenship and Immigration Services field staff were told Saturday that "Mexican nationals will be included in the populations 'amenable' to the agreement with Guatemala." Reuters says an "agreement, brokered last July" between the Trump Administration and "the outgoing Guatemalan government, allows U.S. immigration officials to send migrants requesting asylum at the U.S.-Mexican border to apply for protection in Guatemala instead."

The New York Times (1/6, Kanno-Youngs, 18.61M) reports, "Andrew Meehan, a homeland security spokesman when the deal was signed, said that 'Mexican nationals were not under consideration' to be sent to Guatemala. He is no longer with the administration. ... The addition of Mexicans to the deal comes as homeland security officials have in recent weeks searched for ways to prevent them from crossing" the border.

At Least 41 Governors Have Said Their States Will Continue To Accept Refugees.

The Washington Times (1/6, Dinan, 492K) reports governors "have overwhelmingly refused President Trump's offer to exercise a veto over new refugees being sent to their states. ... New York and Alaska added their names to the list late last week, activist groups said, making at least 41 governors who have now said they will continue to accept refugees." The Times calls the "striking groundswell of support" a "rebuff of sorts" for the President.

Civil Rights Groups Say Boston Public Schools Proving Information To ICE.

The Washington Times (1/6, Dinan, 492K) reports civil rights groups claimed Monday that "Boston's public schools have for years been indirectly providing information to ICE on unruly" migrant students, resulting in "at least one of them getting deported. ... The groups said they'd obtained new documents as part of their lawsuit against the city that detailed what they called the 'school-to-deportation pipeline.'" School officials "denied sharing information directly with ICE, but acknowledged they send incident reports to the Boston Police Department."

American Boy Killed In Shootout On Mexican Road Near Border.

NBC Nightly News (1/6, story 7, 1:15, Holt, 6.18M) reported, "For the second time in two months, Americans came under attack in Mexico. It happened near the US border and left an American boy dead and others wounded." NBC's Miguel Almaguer said the American boy was "killed in a violent shootout on a Mexican road. His family says he was with relatives in [a] silver car with Oklahoma plates leaving Mexico, headed home to the States. The US State Department confirming two other US citizens were also injured. Today Mexican authorities say one survivor is in grave condition, offering no motive for the attack." ABC World News Tonight (1/6, story 10, 0:20, Muir, 7.55M) ran a brief item on the attack.

Tens Of Thousands Of Mexicans Disappeared In Last Decade. The Washington Post (1/6, A1, Sheridan, 14.2M) reports that Mexican authorities announced Monday that "more than 61,000 people have disappeared in Mexico...sharply raising their estimate of those who have vanished in more than a decade of extreme violence by and among organized-crime groups." The government of President Andrés Manuel López Obrador "released the new figure after an exhaustive analysis of data from state prosecutors. Previously, authorities had estimated the number of victims at 40,000."

DOJ Will Seek Death Penalty In MS-13 Kidnapping And Murder Case.

The Washington Post (1/6, Weiner, 14.2M) reports the Justice Department will "pursue the death penalty for a member of the MS-13 gang accused in the kidnappings and killings of two Virginia teenagers in 2016." Elmer Martinez "is alleged to be the leader of the Fairfax County clique that authorities say killed a 17-year-old suspected of belonging to a rival gang and a 14-year-old who revealed that crime to the victim's family."

FBI: Gun Background Checks Hit Record High In 2019.

The Washington Times (1/6, Mordock, 492K) reports in a brief item that "background checks on gun purchases in the United States hit a record high in 2019, the FBI said Monday." The FBI conducted "more than 28.3 million background checks last year. ... That represents a 3 percent increase from the record 27.5 million set in 2016."

NYTimes Examines School Shootings Outside Of Class Hours.

The New York Times (1/6, Smith, Lu, 18.61M) reports on "an overlooked epidemic of school shootings": those that happen "after class lets out. ... Since mid-August, gunfire has erupted more than 20 times at or near school sporting events around the country, more shootings than took place during school hours. Since the start of 2013, at least 19 people have been killed and more than 100 wounded in shootings with some connection to school sporting events."

US Ambassador To Afghanistan Leaving His Post.

The New York Times (1/6, Jakes, 18.61M) reports that John Bass, the US Ambassador to Afghanistan, is "leaving his post after two years in Kabul." The Times says Bass' exit "comes as the United States is again trying to negotiate a tentative peace agreement with the Taliban that could withdraw American forces from Afghanistan in exchange for reduced violence." Citing an anonymous State Department official, the Times reports Bass was "not being removed from his assignment because of any disagreement with the administration, and that his departure had in fact been long planned." In fact, the Washington Post (1/6, George, 14.2M) reports the State Department said in a statement that Bass' departure "is long-planned and part of the normal rotation cycle."

Pompeo Tells McConnell He Is Not Running For Senate.

CNN (1/6, Zeleny, Hansler, 83.16M) reports on its website that Secretary of State Pompeo told Senate Majority Leader McConnell Monday "that he does not plan to run for the US Senate seat in Kansas, a Republican familiar with the conversation told CNN, appearing to end months of speculation about Pompeo's political plans." CNN adds "that source said that although the filing deadline for Pompeo to run for the open seat in Kansas has not passed, the secretary of state told McConnell not to wait for him and the National Republican Senatorial Committee should assume he's not running." Citing "two people familiar with the meeting," Politico (1/6, Isenstadt, Arkin, 4.29M) also reports the story.

The Kansas City \(MO\) Star (1/6, Lowry, Wilner, Shorman, Dumain, 549K) reports Pompeo's "decision ends widespread Republican hopes that he would enter the race in his home state, where the party's failed 2018 nominee for governor, Kris Kobach, currently leads the GOP field." The Star quotes a "source" who said, "Leader McConnell believes Secretary Pompeo is doing an incredible job as Secretary of State and is exactly where the country needs him right now."

The New York Times (1/6, Haberman, Martin, Burns, 18.61M) reports "the secretary of state's decision most likely ends Republicans' hopes of securing a potentially dominant candidate for the open seat in Kansas, his home state." The Times adds Pompeo "has quietly explored a campaign for months." The Washington Post (1/6, Dawsey, Hudson, 14.2M) says "Pompeo had regularly visited Kansas and was consulting with Ward Baker, a prominent GOP strategist close to McConnell." He "had fueled speculation of a bid in recent weeks by creating personal social media accounts that regularly featured him with his family dog, cheering on sporting events and even drinking beer in his kitchen." The AP (1/6, Fram, Mascaro), USA Today (1/6, Shesgreen, 10.31M), Bloomberg (1/6, Jacobs, Wadhams, 4.73M) and Reuters (1/6, Holland), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Esper's Chief Of Staff Leaving For Private Sector Job.

Politico (1/6, Morgan, O'Brien, 4.29M) reports that Eric Chewning, Chief of Staff to Defense Secretary Esper, is "stepping down at the end of the month, the latest in a series of high-profile civilians to leave the Pentagon." Chewning will be "replaced by Jen Stewart, the top Republican staffer on the House Armed Services Committee and a former top adviser to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs." A Pentagon spokesman "confirmed that Chewning will take a new job in the private sector," but did "not offer additional details, including the reason for the departure or any specifics about Chewning's professional plans."

Trump: Democratic-Run Cities Should "Politely Ask" For Federal Help With Homelessness.

In a tweet Monday afternoon, President Trump said homelessness in Democrat-run cities like Los Angeles and San Francisco is a local problem, but if those cities ask "politely," the Federal government will consider intervening. Trump wrote, "The homeless situation in Los Angeles, San Francisco, and many other Democrat Party run cities throughout the Nation is a state and local problem, not a federal problem. If however, the city or state in question is willing to acknowledge responsibility, and politely asks for help from the Federal Government, we will very seriously consider getting involved in order to make those poorly run Democrat Cities Great Again!"

Trump also retweeted a post from Fox News host Tucker Carlson promoting a segment on his show. Carlson's tweet said, "San Francisco's left-wing government has turned the city into an 'American Dystopia' – Our shocking & exclusive 5-part series premieres tonight at 8pm ET and runs all week on @FoxNews." In the segment, Carlson said that the reality of San Francisco "is even worse than you may have heard. Civilization itself is coming apart in San Francisco right there in broad daylight on the city sidewalks, which are littered with junkies and feces and dirty needles." Carlson added that the city's "left-wing officials no longer enforce so-called quality of life crimes like public urination or defecation or even open-air drug use."

Trump Reportedly Plans To Attend College Football National Championship Game.

Bloomberg (1/6, 4.73M) reports that President Trump is "scheduled to attend the college football national championship game between Louisiana State University and Clemson University on Jan. 13 in New Orleans."

Trump Calls Ocasio-Cortez, Omar, Tlaib Anti-Semitic.

Breitbart (1/6, Key, 673K) reports that in an interview Monday with the Rush Limbaugh Show, President Trump "said Democrats like Reps. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY), Ilhan Omar (D-MN) and Rashida Tlaib (D-MI) were antisemitic." Trump said, "If you go back and 10 years or eight years maybe even five years, Israel was the King of the Congress. Our Congress protected Israel and fought for Israel. You look at the way the Democrats in Congress are treating where you have AOC, and you have Tlaib, and you have Omar they are actually, you know, Antisemitic. They are totally against Israel. The things they've said. You go back to the past. You look at the things that they've said about Israel and Jewish people. It's incredible. Ten years ago, that would be unacceptable."

Group Names Omar "Anti-Semite Of The Year." The Washington Free Beacon (1/6, Kredo, 78K) reports that the group StopAntiSemitism.org has named Omar its "2019 anti-Semite of the year."

EPA Introduces New Limits On Truck Emissions.

The New York Times (1/6, Davenport, 18.61M) reports the Administration on Monday "took its first step toward tighter pollution controls on trucks, an anomalous move for a government known for weakening environmental policies but one that would pre-empt tougher state rules." EPA Administrator Wheeler "began the legal and regulatory process for curbing highway emissions of nitrogen dioxide, which has been linked to asthma and other respiratory diseases." Wheeler said, "Through this initiative, we will modernize heavy duty truck engines, improving their efficiency and reducing their emissions, which will lead to a healthier environment." The Washington Post (1/6, Dennis, 14.2M) says "some environmental advocates said they feared that the EPA's proposal could preempt even more stringent rules being considered in California."

Campaign Finance Lawyers Urge Trump, Congress To Restore A Voting Quorum To FEC.

The Washington Post (1/6, Lee, 14.2M) reports that in a letter to President Trump and congressional leaders Monday, a "bipartisan group of campaign finance lawyers" urged them "to restore a voting quorum on the Federal Election Commission, which cannot monitor compliance with election laws even as presidential primaries begin in a month." The attorneys, "whose clients are regulated by federal campaign finance law," called for "swift attention to this situation, which has languished for far too long." They wrote, "In representing those clients, we often find ourselves in adversarial positions in the legal arena. ... Yet we are united in our commitment to the rule of law and the need for the agency tasked with regulating federal campaign finance laws to fully function and carry out the mission assigned to it by Congress."

Newly Empowered Virginia Democrats Moving Quickly To Shift State's Course.

The New York Times (1/6, Williams, 18.61M) reports Virginia Democrats have gained "full control of state government for the first time in a generation," and "lawmakers are rushing to shift the state's course as quickly as possible." According to the Times, they want to "ban assault-style rifles," abolish "statues honoring Confederate leaders in dozens of Virginia cities," and "give undocumented people licenses to drive," all in the next 60 days. The Times says Democrats "now hold both chambers in 19 states, including Virginia. The result has been a wave of legislation to expand voting access, add anti-discrimination rules and bolster protections for abortion rights." However, "control also carries political risk. ... Democrats may find that control of state government does not always translate into overwhelming legislative success, political analysts said."

WPost Calls On Virginia Lawmakers To Enact "Sensible" Gun Safety Measures. A Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) editorial says that with "extremists" set to join "conventional gun rights advocates" in Richmond later this month to "protest proposed firearms legislation, Virginia authorities must take care to apply lessons learned from the chaos in Charlottesville" in 2017. The Post argues that while these protesters "are entitled to exercise their constitutional rights," they "must not be allowed to brawl and use their weapons as they did in Charlottesville." the Post adds that "in the face of attempted intimidation, the right response from lawmakers is to enact sensible and widely popular gun-safety measures that Republicans were able to spike when they controlled the General Assembly."

Authorities Investigating Swarms Of Drones Sited Over Colorado, Nebraska.

The CBS Evening News (1/6, story 8, 1:30, O'Donnell, 5M) reported that the FBI, FAA, and Air Force are investigating "swarms of drones" that have appeared "in the skies over Colorado and Nebraska." CBS (Shamelin) added, "The military and local companies have denied responsibility." A sheriff's office "says it is now looking for a closed box trailer with antenna or a large suspicious van, and is asking anyone who has seen it to call authorities."

Cuomo Helps Man In Traffic Accident.

NBC Nightly News (1/6, story 9, 0:20, Holt, 6.18M) reported that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) was "caught on camera, helping a man out of a van that tipped over in an accident on the highway. Cuomo's team passed the wreck. The Governor stopping to cut the man out of his seat belt. No life threatening injuries reported but an example of your government in action."

Chelsea Clinton Has Made $9M Since 2011 As Member Of Corporate Board.

Citing a report from the financial publication Barron's, the New York Post (1/6, Lapin, 4.57M) says Chelsea Clinton took in "around $9 million since 2011 for her work on the board" of IAC/InterActiveCorp, "which is controlled by business and television mogul Barry Diller," who is "a pal of her mom's." Chelsea Clinton "has received an annual retainer of $50,000 for serving on the board," but "it's the $250,000 worth of restricted IAC stock units Clinton received on top of the retainer that lead to the windfall, according to the report." The former first daughter reported to the SEC last month "that she owned $8.95 million worth of IAC stock."

Gervais Objects To Criticism Of His Golden Globes Performance As "Right Wing."

Breitbart (1/6, Ng, 673K) reports Ricky Gervais is taking issue with "mainstream media criticism of his performance as host of the Golden Globes, pointing out that he took humorous aim at targets that liberals usually love to hate, like large corporations and the super wealthy." Gervais argued in a tweet Monday "that people have been calling his Golden Globes jokes 'right wing' despite the populist angle of his routine." Breitbart says the tweet appeared to be a response "to comments like those from Vanity Fair writer and former Entertainment Weekly editor Mark Harris, who complained in a Twitter rant Monday that making fun of hypocritical celebrities is a 'right-wing talking point.'"

Trump To Rally Base, Tout His Accomplishments Over Next Couple Of Weeks.

Politico (1/6, Kumar, 4.29M) reports that President Trump, gearing up for his reelection bid, "will hit the campaign trail in 2020 with a pair of rallies in Ohio and Wisconsin over the next week. He's then expected to give a traditional presidential interview during the Super Bowl – often the most watched TV event of the year. And two days after that, he'll deliver his State of the Union address to tens of millions of people watching at home. And, of course, there's always Twitter," where he often blasts "the House impeachment investigation" and touts "his accomplishments. But he'll also try to divert attention away from impeachment," heralding "what he describes as his accomplishments – the economy, a new trade deal with Mexico and Canada and the killing of Iran's military leader, Qassem Soleimani. To his allies, it's a critical message the public needs to hear."

Trump To Hold Rally In Van Drew's District January 28.

The AP (1/6, Miller) reports that President Trump "is making a campaign stop in deep-blue New Jersey later this month to reward" freshman Rep. Jeff Van Drew (R-NJ) "for switching parties and voting against his impeachment. Trump will travel to Wildwood, New Jersey, in Van Drew's district on Jan. 28 to hold a rally, his campaign announced." Politico (1/6, Friedman, 4.29M) reports, "According to the Trump campaign, the rally is scheduled for 7 p.m. at the Wildwoods Convention Center. Van Drew is not mentioned on the invitation, but he had told local media outlets that he expected Trump to come to the" NJ2.

NJ News (1/6, Johnson, 1.72M) quotes Trump campaign Chief Operating Officer Michael Glassner as saying in a statement, "President Trump looks forward to returning to the Garden State to celebrate his message of 'Promises Made, Promises Kept.'" NJ News adds that Van Drew "told NJTV last month that Trump was planning to visit in January or February." The Hill (1/6, 2.98M) reports that Trump carried NJ2 "by 4.6 percentage points in 2016." The Hill adds, "Polling indicated Van Drew would have faced a difficult reelection bid as a Democrat. Van Drew's party switch was seen as a coup for Trump and his Republican allies who have sought to paint impeachment as a partisan exercise led by Democrats."

Wife Of Ex-Rhode Island Rep. Kennedy Seeking Van Drew's Seat. Meanwhile, the New York Times (1/6, Tully, 18.61M) reports that Amy Kennedy, the wife of former Rep. Patrick Kennedy (D-RI), on Monday announced a 2020 bid to unseat Van Drew. Kennedy, "who described herself as a former teacher and a mother of five in a minute-long YouTube video announcing her candidacy, did not mention Mr. Van Drew's defection from the Democratic Party last month or his pledge of 'undying support' for...Trump. But the video did include an image of Mr. Van Drew shaking the president's hand in the Oval Office as he announced he would join the Republicans, one day after the South Jersey lawmaker voted against impeaching Mr. Trump."

The Washington Post (1/6, Wagner, 14.2M) quotes Kennedy as saying in the video, "Too many of our leaders have lost their moral compass. Trump and Van Drew are symptoms of a bigger sickness infecting our country and our politics." NJ News (1/6, Johnson, 1.72M) reports that in the video, Kennedy, "the daughter of former Atlantic County Freeholder Jerry Savell, also touted her Jersey heritage." Said Kennedy, "As a fourth-generation South Jerseyan, I will never turn my back on the people of this district. I'll be an independent voice in Congress and work to get us back on the right track."

Politico (1/6, Friedman, 4.29M) reports that Kennedy joins a crowded Democratic primary that includes, among others, Atlantic County Freeholder Ashley Bennett, ex-Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) aide Will Cunningham, and Montclair State University Professor Brigid Harrison. The Philadelphia Inquirer (1/6, Verma, 814K) reports that Harrison "is considered the front-runner and a favorite of establishment Democrats." CQ Roll Call (1/6, Pathé, 154K) reports, "Inside Elections with Nathan L. Gonzales shifted the race from Tilts Democratic to Tilts Republican after the initial reports of Van Drew's party switch."

Pence To Reach Out To Puerto Rican Voters In Central Florida.

The Miami Herald (1/6, Smiley, 1.09M) reports that Vice President Pence will visit Central Florida next week "to hold a Latinos for Trump campaign event in Osceola County, home to Florida's largest concentration of Puerto Ricans." The campaign stop "could give Pence an opportunity to woo voters who comprise one of Florida's most-coveted voting blocs – and also may be one of Trump's biggest stumbling blocks." The herald adds that Puerto Ricans "have emerged as a crucial swing demographic in a state known for narrow election margins," but Trump "enters his reelection campaign with the support of barely one in five island transplants."

Politico Analysis: Pence Preparing For His Own Eventual Presidential Campaign. Politico (1/6, Orr, 4.29M) reports that "aides and allies" of Vice President Pence "insist his sole focus...is helping" President Trump get reelected, which "means his schedule for the next 11 months will look much like it did on Dec. 18, when [Pence] rode a campaign RV through" Saginaw County, Michigan, "a majority white area...that Trump captured by just over 1 percent in 2016." However, according to Politico, "the more Pence utilizes this particular campaign strategy...the harder it becomes to distinguish between a vice president who is simply doing the pedestrian politicking his counterpart loathes, and one who is using this stage to prep for his own future presidential run." Politico says Pence's "current deployment strategy could work for 2020, while also benefiting" his "long-term ambitions." Politico says that "whereas Trump plays to his base...Pence focuses on easing prospective Trump voters into supporting the president even if they abhor his personality."

Biden Slams Trump In Des Moines Register Op-Ed.

In a Des Moines \(IA\) Register (1/6, 404K) op-ed, ex-Vice President Joe Biden decries what he says is the "damage President Donald Trump has done to our communities," criticizing the President on healthcare, trade policy, and for "a tax cut that largely benefited the wealthiest Americans." However, Biden says "worse, somehow, than his policy failures has been the damage he's done to the soul of our nation" by, among other things, fanning "the flames of hate groups at home," embracing "murderous dictators abroad," ripping "children from their mothers' arms at our border," and pressuring "foreign nations to interfere in our elections." Biden touts his own candidacy and urges Iowa Democratic caucusgoers to "choose a candidate who can build a broad, diverse coalition to unify this nation around our common values."

Julián Castro Endorses Warren.

The AP (1/6) reports that ex-HUD Secretary Julián Castro, who quit the 2020 Democratic presidential race last week, on Monday endorsed Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), calling her "the most qualified, best-equipped candidate to win the nomination" and beat President Trump. The AP says, "In an online video posted Monday featuring the two former 2020 White House rivals, Castro tells Warren, 'No one is working harder than you.'" Politico (1/6, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that Castro "ended his campaign last week after not making the last two primary debates and failing to gain traction in the polls. And his quick endorsement comes at a crucial time for Warren," who "enters the home stretch before the Iowa caucuses at a diminished position following a recent surge by former South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg and steady strength" from former Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT).

Similarly, the New York Times (1/6, Herndon, 18.61M) reports that the endorsement by Castro, "whose progressive presidential candidacy did not make significant inroads with Democratic voters but earned plaudits from the party's left wing," offers Warren "a possible lift for her candidacy less than one month before the Iowa caucuses." The Washington Post (1/6, Janes, 14.2M) reports that Castro's endorsement "is in keeping with the lack of hesitation he demonstrated during his campaign: Other than Rep. Tim Ryan (D-Ohio), who endorsed former vice president Joe Biden a few weeks after ending his campaign, none of the major players in this year's Democratic race have announced their endorsements."

On its website, CNN (1/6, Diaz, Lee, 83.16M) reports that Castro's "decision to formally back Warren is in many ways not surprising. The two shared a publicly complimentary relationship as 2020 rivals, publicly complimenting each other's' ideas and policy positions. During his run, Castro repeatedly criticized candidates like former South Bend, Indiana, Mayor Pete Buttigieg and former Vice President Joe Biden, but remained on good terms with Warren and her campaign." Reuters (1/6, Becker), McClatchy (1/6, Earls, 19K), and the Wall Street Journal (1/6, Jamerson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also report on the story.

Buttigieg Targets New Hampshire Counties Trump Carried.

Reuters (1/6, Renshaw) reports that ex-South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg, "sitting at or near the top in the polls in Iowa and New Hampshire and backed by a big campaign war chest," is "betting his moderate politics will lure disaffected voters in counties" President Trump "flipped and propel him to victory in the pivotal early primary states." According to Reuters, "Buttigieg's latest four-day swing marked his 15th trip to New Hampshire, where he has racked up more campaign stops than other front-runners." Reuters says Buttigieg "has focused more than his chief rivals on historically Republican counties and those that Trump flipped from Democratic support in the 2016 election."

WSJournal Profiles Buttigieg Camp's National Investment Chairwoman Mylavarapu. The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Bykowicz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) profiles Silicon Valley investor Swati Mylavarapu, who serves as national investment chairwoman for the Buttigieg campaign. The Journal says that Mylavarapu has played a key role in developing fundraising strategies for Buttigieg, who has raked in approximately $76 million since launching his White House bid last year.

In Op-Ed, Ex-Marines Say Buttigieg Over-Hypes His Military Service. In a Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, ex-Marine Greg Kelly, a host at Newsmax TV, and ex-Marine Katie Horgan, a consultant, say that Buttigieg over-hypes his service in the Navy, in which he served in a non-combat role after having joined by way of a direct commission in the reserves, a much easier path than most in the military face.

Bloomberg Nearly Doubles Biden In Campaign Staff.

Reuters (1/6, Lange) reports that former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg "has hired about 800 staff members as part of a plan to compete in the 14 states that hold Super Tuesday primary contests on March 3." According to Reuters, "Bloomberg's staffing levels gives his campaign a sizable nationwide presence." Reuters says Bloomberg "has hired about 500 staff members in more than 30 states, in addition to about 300 at his New York campaign headquarters." Reuters says ex-Vice President Joe Biden's campaign "has more than 400 staff members across the country."

AP Analysis: Bloomberg Views California As A Template For Rest Of US. The AP (1/6, Blood) reports that Bloomberg "likes a lot of what he sees in" California "and thinks its efforts on climate change, gun control and criminal justice reform sets a benchmark for other states to emulate. 'I think that California can serve as a great example for the rest of this country,' Bloomberg told supporters at the opening of his Angeles headquarters." The AP adds that "California 'is something the rest of the country looks up to,' Bloomberg said. 'California has been a leader in an awful lot of things.' His comments marked a sharp departure from views of President Donald Trump, whose administration has been in a long-running feud with" California "over issues from environmental protection to homelessness."

"Judge Judy" Appears In Bloomberg Ad. Bloomberg (1/6, 4.73M) reports that Judy Sheindlin, "who presides over the daytime television courtroom show 'Judge Judy,' appears in a new campaign ad endorsing...Bloomberg." The article says, "In a USA Today opinion piece before Bloomberg announced his candidacy, Sheindlin encouraged him to run because 'he represents our best chance to bring America together again and begin the long national process of healing.'" The Washington Times (1/6, Sherfinski, 492K) also reports on the story.

GOP Ex-Rep. Taylor To Seek 2020 Rematch With Luria In VA2.

The Washington Post (1/6, Portnoy, 14.2M) reports that ex-Rep. Scott Taylor (R-VA) on Monday dropped his bid to oust Sen. Mark Warner

(D-VA) and announced that he will seek a 2020 rematch with Rep. Elaine Luria (D-VA), who unseated him in 2018. The Post says Taylor, "a former Navy SEAL, is one of several Republicans vying for the party nomination, including Ben Loyola, a retired Navy captain and defense contractor."

The AP (1/6) reports that Taylor's 2018 reelection bid in VA2 "was plagued by an election-fraud scandal that resulted in charges being filed against a former campaign staffer. A handful of Taylor's staff members were accused of forging signatures to place an independent 'spoiler' candidate on the ballot to siphon votes away from Luria. A former staffer was charged in May with two counts of false statements and election fraud. Taylor has maintained that he was unaware of any wrongdoing." The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (1/6, Cain, 277K) reports that of the 2018 scandal, Taylor said in a Monday interview, "I am responsible for my campaign. I'm responsible for their actions, no matter what happened. I was very disappointed, obviously."

The Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (1/6, Hafner, Subscription Publication, 176K) reports, "When asked if polling contributed to his decision to shift gears from the Senate to the House, Taylor said 'there's no polling.' 'I still think that we need change at the state level. I think it's very clear in Virginia right now that we're not being represented properly,' he said. 'The last straw for me was impeachment.' He said Luria was 'using her military background to justify impeachment, which is taking away from the needs of the district.' Luria voted last month to impeach President Donald Trump." CQ Roll Call (1/6, Pathé, 154K) reports that Trump "carried the Norfolk-area district by 3 points in 2016. ... Inside Elections with Nathan L. Gonzales rates the race for Virginia's 2nd District as Leans Democratic."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45.2%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45.2%, and his disapproval at 52.6%. The President's job approval is up 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (12/30-1/5) finds Trump's approval at 49%, with 50% disapproving.

A The Hill/HarrisX survey of 1,001 "registered voters" (1/3-1/4), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 47%, and his disapproval at 53%.

WPost's Olsen: Trump Approval, 2020 Standing On The Rise. Writing for the Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M), Henry Olsen says "tensions with Iran have rightly dominated the news in the past week, but one important item has escaped attention: President Trump's job approval rating has regained all the ground lost after his telephone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky came to light and now stands close to a three-year high. This should worry Democrats." Trump's "approval rating as of Monday afternoon is 45.2 percent in the RealClearPolitics average," and it "hasn't been this high since Feb. 20, 2017, a mere month after he was inaugurated." That means "three years of nonstop attacks have done nothing to dent his support." Trump is "also moving up in national polls against his potential Democratic rivals," and "this surely shocks and infuriates liberals," who "have to wonder if anything can bring this man down."

Financial International News

Japan's Finance Minister Sees Economy Still In Moderate Recovery Despite Increasing Pressure From Global Slowdown.

Reuters (1/7) reports Japanese Finance Minister Taro Aso "said on Tuesday there was no change to the view that the economy remains in moderate recovery, despite rising pressure from a global slowdown." Aso said to reporters following a cabinet meeting, "It's true that manufacturers are mainly being affected by global slowdown. But fundamentals that support domestic demand remains solid." Aso "also said he did not expect a repeat of deep declines in demand as happened during the previous sales tax hike in 2014."

Issues Expected To Continue For European Banks.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Toplensky, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports European banks aren't expected to have much good news this year as last year's issues continue. If revenues rise, they aren't expected to do so much, and the region's economic growth is forecast to remain anemic. Meanwhile, banks will need to spend on technology to streamline systems and add digital services. Also, British banks will continue to need to deal with Brexit uncertainty.

Additional US Troops Sent To Kenya After Al Shabaab Kills Three Americans.

Reuters (1/6, Stewart) reports that the Pentagon "deployed additional forces to Kenya on Monday to bolster security at a key airfield after an attack by al Shabaab militants on Sunday that killed three Americans." Reuters goes on to report that "as speculation swirls about how Tehran might respond to the strike, the US military sought to separate the two events, saying: 'The US Africa Command does not assess yesterday's attack by al Shabaab is linked to Iran.'" The AP (1/6, Odula, Anna) points out that the Pentagon "said its East Africa Response Force had arrived to increase security there. It did not say how many troops were involved."

The Washington Post (1/6, Bearak, Ombuor, 14.2M) reports that Africa Command has "acknowledg[ed] that one US service member and two American private contractors had been killed, and that six aircraft used by the U.S. military had been damaged or destroyed." The Post adds that "locals say one Kenyan civilian was killed by gunfire and that at least 10 militants escaped during the attack and moved through nearby villages." The Post goes on to report that "accounts indicate that the al-Shabab attack lasted around nine hours." The White House "has not commented on the attack or on the deaths of the Americans."

ABC World News Tonight (1/6, story 4, 0:25, Muir, 7.03M) briefly reported on the attack in Kenya, "where US forces are supporting African troops in their fight against terror." The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes in an editorial that US and Kenyan forces should not have been caught by surprise by al-Shabaab. The Journal also argues that while Africans will eventually have to take the lead role against the terror group, for now the US will need to continue providing its African hosts with the firepower and know-how to keep the Islamists from gaining ground.

Haftar Loyalists Say They Have Taken Key Libyan City.

Reuters (1/6, Al-Warfalli) reports, "Libyan forces loyal to eastern-based commander Khalifa Haftar said on Monday they had taken control of the strategic coastal city of Sirte in a rapid advance preceded by air strikes." Reuters says "holding Sirte would be an important gain for Haftar, who since April has been waging a military offensive" on Tripoli, "home to Libya's internationally recognized Government of National Accord."

Young Women Studying At College Among Somalia Bombing Fatalities.

The New York Times (1/6, Dahir, 18.61M) has a feature on some of the 82 people killed in the December 28 bombing in Somalia's capital under the headline "Mogadishu Bombing Took The Lives Of The 'Best And The Brightest.'" Sixteen of those killed "were students at Benadir University – most of them young women studying sciences, in a country where precious few women have access to higher education."

Abrams Says US Considering More Sanctions On Venezuela.

Reuters (1/6, Brunnstrom, Psaledakis) reports US Special Envoy Elliott Abrams said the US "is looking at additional sanctions to step up pressure on the Venezuelan government...after Venezuela's ruling Socialist party moved forcefully to install a new head of Congress." Abrams told reporters in Washington, "We are looking at additional sanctions – personal sanctions, economic sanctions – that we think will bring more pressure yet on the regime." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Maduro government's forced takeover of Venezuela's parliament has completed the destruction of democracy in the country.

Officials Say China May Be Manipulating Social Media To Sway Taiwan Election.

The New York Times (1/6, Zhong, 18.61M) reports, "As Taiwan gears up for a major election this week, officials and researchers worry that China is experimenting with social media manipulation to sway the vote." They say such an operation "would be easy...in the island's rowdy democracy, where the news cycle is fast and voters are already awash in false or highly partisan information." However, "polls suggest...that Beijing's heavy-handed ways might be backfiring and driving voters to embrace" President, Tsai Ing-wen.

WPost: Australia Wildfires Should Serve As Global Warning.

The Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) editorializes, "Australia's wildfires are a disaster on a scale hard to fathom. ... This is the future humanity is writing for itself, right now, every day world governments waste failing to respond to climate change." The Post says that "even without human help, Earth can be at times inhospitable. All the more reason to avoid priming the planet for worse – extreme weather, intense heat waves, more drought, more flooding, rising seas, species die-offs, disease proliferation, and more foreseeable and unforeseeable consequences."

Freddie Mac Launches CreditSmart Homebuyer U.

National Mortgage News (1/6) reports, "Borrower education stands as a barrier to homeownership for younger consumers and Freddie Mac is trying to change that. The government-sponsored enterprise on Monday launched CreditSmart Homebuyer U — a free, comprehensive online resource to walk people through the homebuying cycle. Freddie Mac broke out the course into six learning modules, spanning everything from saving, to securing a loan, to purchasing a house and homeownership preservation." Freddie Mac Single-Family SVP Danny Gardner said, "Becoming a homeowner is an important responsibility and Freddie Mac is committed to providing the tools and resources to ensure a successful path toward sustainable homeownership. The goal of this exceptional program is to empower those who are pursuing the dream of homeownership with knowledge to make informed, responsible decisions." Providing similar coverage are National Mortgage Professional (1/6) and Mortgage News Daily (1/6, Swanson).

New Conforming Loan Limits Kick In.

Realtor Magazine (1/6) reports, "The Federal Housing Finance Agency's new loan limits for 2020 have gone into effect: Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which are operated by the FHFA, began backing larger loans last week when the new year started. The cap on Fannie and Freddie loans has increased to $510,400 from 2019's $484,350 limit." According to Realtor Magazine, this marks "the fourth consecutive year that the FHFA has raised conforming loan limits, which can stretch even higher in areas with expensive median home values. High-cost areas will be capped at $765,600, or 150% of the $510,400 limit. The maximum conforming loan limit is higher in 2020 for all except 43 counties in the U.S." Inman News (1/6, McPherson, 10K) provides similar coverage, and Maui \(HI\) Now (1/6) reports on the impact that the new caps could have on homebuying in Hawai'i.

Experts Believe Low Rates, Strong Job Market Should Help Housing Market In 2020.

The Washington Post (1/6, Orton, 14.2M) reports, "A strong job market and low mortgage rates should sustain the housing market in 2020. The problem will be finding enough homes for buyers." Unemployment remains at a "50-year low," and mortgage rates are still "well below historical norms." According to Freddie Mac data, the 30-year FRM average has stayed below four percent for the past eight months. However, "the real estate industry is being dragged down by scarcity in housing stock, especially at lower price ranges. Not enough homes are being built, and homeowners are staying put longer, creating a bottleneck." NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun said, "In 2020, more home-building activity and consequent growth in supply should tame down home price gains. That's a healthy development for potential home buyers. Southern cities should once again do better than most other markets."

CUNA Supports FHFA's Promotion Of Credit Unions' Access To Secondary Market.

Valuation Review (1/6) reports that the Credit Union National Association (CUNA) "supports the Federal Housing Finance Agency's (FHFA) proposal to require the Government Sponsored Enterprises (GSEs) Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to rely upon larger, multiple-lender pools, CUNA stated in a written letter." CUNA said, "CUNA recognizes and applauds FHFA's efforts to ensure the efficiency and effectiveness of the UMBS in order to facilitate the security's smooth transition into the To Be Announced (TBA) market. Because a key component of CUNA's Credit Union Principles for Housing Finance Reform is ensuring that the transition from the current system to any new housing finance system is reasonable and orderly, we encourage the agency to continue its efforts to maximize the effectiveness of the UMBS, while promoting access for credit unions and other smaller lenders to the enterprises' secondary market programs."

JV Acquires Bronx Portfolio With Freddie Mac Financing.

Real Estate Weekly (1/6) reports, "LIHC Investment Group (LIHC), Belveron Partners (Belveron) and Camber Property Group (Camber) today announced the acquisition of eight buildings totaling 1,275 units of affordable housing in the Bronx. The joint venture partners reached an agreement to purchase the property from Cammeby's International Group for $166 million including the assumption of existing debt. ... To finance the project, the JV partners assumed New York State Housing Finance Agency and Freddie Mac loans serviced by Citibank, N.A. and JLL Capital Markets."

NKF Originates $61M In Freddie Mac Debt For Chicago Suburb Apartments.

Commercial Observer \(NY\) (1/6) reports Newmark Knight Frank's multifamily capital markets group "has originated just over $61 million in Freddie Mac-backed debt to a joint venture between Cantor Fitzgerald and BH Equities to finance its acquisition of Railway Plaza," a "garden-style multifamily property" in Naperville, Illinois.

Administration Proposes New Guidelines For Regulation Of AI In Medicine, Other Industries.

The AP (1/6, O'Brien) reports "the Trump administration is proposing new rules to guide future federal regulation of artificial intelligence used in medicine, transportation and other industries." However, "the vagueness of the principles announced by the White House is unlikely to satisfy AI watchdogs who have warned of a lack of accountability as computer systems are deployed to take on human roles in high-risk social settings, such as mortgage lending or job recruitment." US "agencies such as the Food and Drug Administration will be bound to follow the new AI principles, which makes the rules 'the first of their kind from any government,' said Michael Kratsios, the U.S. chief technology officer, in a call with reporters Tuesday."

Administration To Propose Rollback Of Obama-Era Rules Intended To Increase Construction Of Low-Income Housing.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Kusisto, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that the Administration on Tuesday is set to release a proposal to roll back Obama-era rules that encouraged local governments to incentivize construction of low-income housing in higher-income areas. According to The Journal, this policy was crafted in an attempt to reverse years of housing discrimination. However, it also required local officials to deal with a significant surge in paperwork. HUD Secretary Carson said, "HUD's commitment to fair housing remains as steadfast as ever before.... Mayors know their communities best, so we are empowering them to make housing decisions that meet their unique needs, not a mandate from the federal government." Politico (1/6, O'Donnell, 4.29M) provides additional coverage.

After Dropping Out Of Presidential Race, Julián Castro Endorses Elizabeth Warren.

The AP (1/6) reports that former HUD secretary Julián Castro endorsed Sen. Elizabeth Warren today, "saying the Massachusetts senator is 'the most qualified, best-equipped candidate to win the nomination' and defeat President Donald Trump." According to the AP, "In an online video posted Monday featuring the two former 2020 White House rivals, Castro tells Warren, 'No one is working harder than you.'" Politico (1/6, Oprysko, 4.29M), the New York Times (1/6, Herndon, 18.61M), and the Washington Post (1/6, Janes, 14.2M) also cover Castro's endorsement.

Options On SOFR Futures Are Now Trading.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (1/6, 4.73M) reports, "Options on SOFR futures became available for trading Monday, and at least one transaction was done – a straddle, in which a put and a call with the same strike are bought, anticipating an increase in volatility. The trade involved the 98.625 strike in December 2020 options on three-month SOFR futures, according to Chris Grams, a spokesman for CME Group Inc., which lists the contracts. Five straddles were traded at a price of 37 ticks, according to several traders familiar with the transactions who asked not to be identified because they aren't authorized to speak publicly." Bloomberg says that SOFR futures "were rolled out in 2018 by CME," and CME "has proposed that in the event that Libor becomes unavailable, existing eurodollar futures and options contracts will be settled based on SOFR."

NAHB: 2010s Decade Saw 7M Single-Family Housing Starts, 3M Multifamily Starts.

HousingWire (1/6, Falcon, 23K) reports, "Housing production had a long way to go in order to catch up after the recession, with a shortage of homebuilding materials, shortage of labor and the lingering economic effects of the crisis impacting homebuilding. Despite that, there were still nearly 7 million single-family houses built in the last decade." According to the NAHB, there were 6.9 million single-family starts from 2010 to 2019, and over half of these were in the South region. There were 3.1 million multifamily starts over the same decade, although the sector has "leveled off" since peaking in 2015.

CoreLogic: Texas, Florida Lead Country In New Home Sales.

M Report (1/6, Albanese) says Texas had "the top-two markets with the highest share of new home sales from October 2018 to September 2019 – Dallas and Houston. Dallas had more than 32,000 new homes over that one-year span, followed by Houston at nearly 30,000. This increase occurred during the same period where Texas grew by 367,000 people. Florida was second in growth, adding 233,000 residents." CoreLogic "states that of the metros with more than a 15% increase in sales, more than half were located in Texas and Florida." CoreLogic said in its report, "These places had lower housing costs than in high-cost markets and had a collective unemployment rate that was two-tenths of a percentage point lower than the U.S. rate."

Realtor.com: Boston, New York Have Priciest Real Estate Per Square-Foot.

M Report (1/6, Albanese) says, "A study by realtor.com found Boston, Massachusetts, to be the priciest real estate market, based on pricing per-square-foot. Based on the national average sale price of $305,000, buyers in Boston can expect to get 263-square-feet and pay $1,160 per-square-foot." According to Re/Max Unlimited broker Elias Papadopoulos, this could pose problems for Boston's housing market in the near future, as when "the housing prices climb to a level where the possible income someone would earn is not enough to offset the housing, people will stop moving to the area." Coming in second on Realtor.com's list was New York, New York, with an average sales price of $305K grabbing an 276 square-feet, thereby costing buyers $1,106 per square-foot.

UWM Generates $107.7B In Loan Volume In 2019.

National Mortgage Professional (1/6, Hall) reports that United Wholesale Mortgage "announced that it set a company record of $107.7 billion in mortgage loan volume in 2019." UWM "noted this level was double its 2018 production of $41.5 billion and broke a mortgage wholesale industry record of $103.3 billion set in 2005 by the now-defunct Countrywide Financial." Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (1/6, Muolo, Subscription Publication) provides additional coverage.

Sagent Lending Technologies Agrees To Acquire Mortgage Tech Provider ISGN Corporation.

According to Mortgage Professional America (1/6, Mendoza), "Sagent Lending Technologies has entered an agreement to acquire Australian mortgage technology provider ISGN Corporation. The mortgage servicing technology provider said that the acquisition would expand Sagent's loan servicing products. Sagent also said that it aims to enhance its 'comprehensive capabilities within the mortgage and consumer lending market' through the transaction."

Quontic Bank Thriving During All-Digital Transformation.

American Banker (1/6, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Quontic Bank, a $400 million-asset bank in midtown Manhattan that has been transforming itself into an all-digital institution," saw retail deposits grow 261 percent to $200 million in 2019. The bank focuses "on digital access and digital marketing, and the goal is to beat challenger banks like Chime and Varo Money." The bank's high interest rates on checking accounts are enabled by "its lack of a branch network" reducing costs, as well as "the revenue stream its mortgage business pulls in."

California Medical Center Reschedules Procedures After Ransomware Attack.

Becker's Hospital Review (1/6, Garrity, 81K) reports, "Chico, Calif.-based Enloe Medical Center was forced to reschedule some elective procedures following a ransomware attack on Dec. 31, according to local ABC affiliate KRCR." According to Becker's, "Staff have been unable to access information stored on the hospital's network since it was encrypted. Enloe Medical Center is working with the FBI and a security consultant to restore its systems. 'Our caregivers did an incredible job responding to the cybersecurity incident and are doing everything possible to return our core systems to functionality, protect patient information and partner with law enforcement agencies, including the FBI,' Enloe Medical Center's Director of Advancement and Communications Jolene Francis told KRCR."

Pensacola Warns About 57,000 People That Cyberattack May Have Compromised Personal Information.

The Pensacola (FL) News Journal (1/6, Little, 170K) reports the city of Pensacola "will be mailing notices to nearly 57,000 people by the end of this week to notify them that their personal information may be at risk in the wake of a cyberattack against the city." Mayor Grover Robinson "said Monday at his weekly press conference that city officials have seen nothing to indicate anyone's personal information was compromised in the attack." Robinson said, "At the same time, we just thought it was the right thing to do to protect people." Pensacola's computer network "was attacked in the early morning hours of Dec. 7 with software called 'ransomware' designed to lock data down until a ransom is paid to the attackers." A cyber-criminal group "calling itself Maze took credit for the attack and published more than 2 GB of data on a public website last month before the website was taken down."

White House Proposes New Rules For Regulating Use Of AI.

The AP (1/7, O'Brien) reports, "The Trump administration is proposing new rules to guide future federal regulation of artificial intelligence used in medicine, transportation and other industries," but "the vagueness of the principles announced by the White House is unlikely to satisfy AI watchdogs who have warned of a lack of accountability as computer systems are deployed to take on human roles in high-risk social settings, such as mortgage lending or job recruitment." The AP adds, "A document from the White House said that in deciding regulatory action, U.S. agencies 'must consider fairness, non-discrimination, openness, transparency, safety, and security.'" The rules "won't affect how federal agencies such as law enforcement use AI; they are specifically limited to how federal agencies devise new AI regulations for the private sector," and "there's a month-long public comment period before the rules take effect."

UK's Cyber Security Centre Denies London Stock Exchange Outage Due To Cyberattack.

Computer Business Review (1/6, Targett, 70K) reports the UK's National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC) today "denied claims in the Wall Street Journal that intelligence officials are digging into an August outage at the London Stock Exchange, fearing it may have signaled malicious cyber-activity or the possibility of it." A spokesman told Computer Business Review, "The NCSC has not treated the LSE outage as a cyber security related incident and has not investigated it as such." Officials "said that the WSJ is incorrect, responding to the August 5 report that said officials were 'examining whether a trading outage blamed on a software hiccup at the London Stock Exchange in August may actually have been caused by a cyberattack aimed at disrupting market.'"

Bosch Deploys AI To Prevent Attacks On Cars' Electronic Systems.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Rundle, McCormick, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Germany-based engineering company Robert Bosch GmbH is using artificial intelligence to reduce the risk that hackers will be able to trick cars' electronic systems into misinterpreting road signs. Traffic-sign recognition is one of the key tools required for autonomous vehicles. Thanks to road-sign standardization, this technology is well-suited to machine-learning and deep-learning processes that can identify images.

Opinion: The Military's Ban Of TikTok Is Just The Beginning.

In a commentary in Slate (1/6, 1.58M), Josephine Wolff writes, "The DOD hasn't specified exactly what prompted the ban or what threat TikTok poses beyond warning employees of a 'potential risk associated with using the TikTok app.' But the most likely explanation is that the Pentagon is concerned that the data being collected by the video app is accessible to the Chinese government." Wolff contends, "By making these decisions app by app, service by service, it's hard to see exactly how the military will keep up with a changing technological landscape." She argues, "To its credit, the military has clearly been trying to be proactive about the risks that new apps and technologies may pose. In addition to warning personnel about TikTok, it also recently advised against using home genetic testing kits." However, Wolff concludes, "The vastness of the mobile software ecosystem makes it almost impossible to keep up with all the security risks posed by new and lesser-known services."

TFI/Sanctions

"Senior Administration Officials" Drafting Sanctions Against Iraq.

The Washington Post (1/6, Stein, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports "senior administration officials have begun drafting sanctions against Iraq after...Trump publicly threatened the country with economic penalties if it proceeded to expel US troops, according to three people briefed on the planning." The Post adds "the Treasury Department and White House would likely play a lead role if the sanctions are ultimately implemented, the officials said. Such a step would represent a highly unusual move against a foreign ally that America has spent almost two decades and hundreds of billions of dollars supporting." The "officials...stressed that talks were preliminary and that no final decision has been made on whether to impose the sanctions." According to "one of the officials," the plan "was to wait 'at least a little while' on the sanctions decision in order to see whether Iraqi officials followed through on their threat to push US troops out of the country." The Hill (1/6, Wise, 2.98M) also reports.

Sanctions Experts Say Additions Iran Sanctions May Have Little Impact.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Sun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports sanctions experts believe the US will impose more sanctions on officials in, and companies connected to, Iran following the killing of Qassem Soleimani in Iraq. However, The Journal quotes several of those experts saying any additional sanctions will have a very limited impact on Iran beyond what has already been imposed.

Federal Reserve

Fed Adds $76.9B To The Markets On Monday.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the New York Fed on Monday added $76.9 billion in temporary liquidity to the markets. Banks sought less than the Fed offered, but more than in previous such operations.

Internal Revenue Service

IRS Personal Income Tax Audits Fall To Historically Low Level Due To Budget Cuts, Heavier Workload.

The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Rubin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports tax enforcement by the IRS has fallen to its lowest level in over 40 years, and as a result taxpayers today are half as likely to be audited compared to 2010. The Journal says the decline in tax enforcement has resulted from years of budget cuts combined with a heavier workload for the IRS.

House To Hold Hearings On CRA Proposal.

American Banker (1/6, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the House Financial Services Committee will hold two January hearings on the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.'s proposal to overhaul the Community Reinvestment Act. While the plan is cast as a way "to provide institutions with more flexibility to serve their communities, Democrats and consumer groups worried the plan would dilute CRA-available resources in the areas that need them the most."

Analysis: OCC, FDIC Have Incentive To Rush CRA Changes.

In an analysis, American Banker (1/6, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. "have a powerful incentive to move quickly" on their proposed changes to the Community Reinvestment Act, as a potential Democratic sweep in the 2020 elections "could enable Congress to scrap the plan" through the Congressional Review Act, which allows Congress to overturn any recently-enacted regulation with a majority vote. Meanwhile, Democrats are asking for the 60-day public comment period to be doubled, and "some in the industry are sympathetic to the calls for additional time to analyze the proposal's impact." However, "a spokesperson for the OCC disputed that parties would not have enough time to fully review and understand the proposed changes."

Continuing Coverage: Former Wells Fargo Execs Under Criminal Investigation.

In continuing coverage, the San Francisco Business Times (1/6, Calvey, Subscription Publication, 880K) reports, "Several former Wells Fargo & Co. senior executives are under criminal investigation resulting from the bank's fake-accounts scandal," according to American Banker. The executives are said to be under the scrutiny of "a federal criminal investigation...conducted by the U.S. Justice Department in California and North Carolina, with help from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Securities and Exchange Commission." Banking Dive (1/6, Hrushka) also covers this story.

PNC Bank Closing Eight Branches.

The Cincinnati Business Courier (1/6, Watkins, Subscription Publication, 840K) reports PNC Bank is closing eight bank branches – in Ohio, Michigan, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania – "according to regulatory filings with the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency." PNC spokeswoman Marcey Zwiebel said, "Increasingly, year over year customers are using more convenient, alternative channels such as online banking, mobile banking and ATMs to conduct the basic transactions that they once visited a branch to complete."

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"Australia's Apocalyptic Fires Are A Warning To The World." The Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) editorializes, "Australia's wildfires are a disaster on a scale hard to fathom. ... This is the future humanity is writing for itself, right now, every day world governments waste failing to respond to climate change." The Post says that "even without human help, Earth can be at times inhospitable. All the more reason to avoid priming the planet for worse – extreme weather, intense heat waves, more drought, more flooding, rising seas, species die-offs, disease proliferation, and more foreseeable and unforeseeable consequences."

"Virginia Officials Must Show They Learned The Lessons From Charlottesville." A Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) editorial says that with "extremists" set to join "conventional gun rights advocates" in Richmond later this month to "protest proposed firearms legislation, Virginia authorities must take care to apply lessons learned from the chaos in Charlottesville" in 2017. The Post argues that while these protesters "are entitled to exercise their constitutional rights," they "must not be allowed to brawl and use their weapons as they did in Charlottesville." the Post adds that "in the face of attempted intimidation, the right response from lawmakers is to enact sensible and widely popular gun-safety measures that Republicans were able to spike when they controlled the General Assembly."

"If Deescalation With Iran Is The Goal, Trump Is Actively Thwarting It." The Washington Post (1/6, 14.2M) accuses President Trump of "issuing bombastic threats, hinting at a desire to commit war crimes and mocking congressional powers. If 'deescalation' is actually the administration's aim, as Secretary of State Mike Pompeo insists, then the president is actively thwarting it." Trump "may believe this bluster will deter Iranian action," but "it almost certainly won't" and "may end up ensnaring the United States in the full-scale war with the Islamic republic that the president says he does not want."

Wall Street Journal.

"Trump's Post-Soleimani World." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) lauds President Trump's decision to eliminate Qassem Soleimani's threat, but takes issue with his threat to "put very big sanctions on Iran" and to attack Iran's "cultural sites," which is cast as unnecessary distractions. The Journal encourages the President to be ready to follow up in his campaign against the Iranian regime, and calls on him to craft a coalition of foreign allies and even Democrats as he furthers his challenge to the mullahs.

"Venezuela's Latest Coup." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Maduro government's forced takeover of Venezuela's parliament has completed the destruction of democracy in the country.

"The Terrorist Horn Of Africa." The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes in an editorial that US and Kenyan forces should not have been caught by surprise by al-Shabaab. The Journal also argues that while Africans will eventually have to take the lead role against the terror group, for now the US will need to continue providing its African hosts with the firepower and know-how to keep the Islamists from gaining ground.

"Climate Of Investment Fear." The Wall Street Journal (1/6, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that climate activists are putting pressure on banks and insurers as a means of coercion, with some insurers now refusing to insure companies that make a significant percentage of their revenues in fossil fuels. The Journal says such refusals will not slow climate change but will only hurt US competitiveness.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Venezuela is a country in chaos. The economy crashed. People can't afford food and two men claim to be the leader. President Nicolas Maduro and Juan Guaido. Over the weekend, an awkward moment where Guaido showed up at the office, and Maduro changed the locks. ... Politicians are trying to climb over the fence just to vote. That would never happen in America. Can you imagine Mitch McConnell climbing a fence to try to get into Congress? Although he probably wouldn't climb, he would probably just try to ooze through the bars."

Trevor Noah: "It is officially 2020. New decade, new year, new goals. ... There is someone who made a New Year's resolution, the 45th President of the United States Donald Trump. ... On December 31, Donald Trump said his dream was for peace, specifically in the Middle East. And then on January 2, he did this. ... Sweet Jesus! Donald Trump ordered the killing of Iran's top general. What happened to peace? When most people break resolutions, they eat ice cream instead of working out. This guy rained fire down...and ate ice cream while doing it!"

Trevor Noah: "You have to admit this is wild. Trump kills Iran's top general and then, when Iran threatens to retaliate, Trump says, 'You better not or I'll destroy your culture.' What's next? Will he send a text? 'You think I'm crazy? Well, I'm loco, si.'"

Trevor Noah: "Destroying cultural sites is a war crime, you can't do that. According to Geneva convention, in war, the things you destroy are supposed to be for the purpose of the war, not just to be [jerks]. Secondly, there's no way Trump knows anything about Iranian cultural sites. If Iranians are smart, they will use this to get Trump to destroy things they don't want. 'Don't destroy the karaoke bar next to my house, that stays open till 3:00 a.m.! Don't do it, Donald!'"

Trevor Noah: "I think it's safe to say this thing is not going according to plan. You realize now America is sending more troops to the Middle East? Also, how is Trump going to flat-out refuse to leave someone else's country? He would be the worst Airbnb tenant of all time."

Trevor Noah: "I know this might not be a popular opinion, but this is where I don't blame Trump. Pentagon officials gave Trump a ton of options, but then they were shocked when he chose the most extreme one? ... Have you seen Trump's apartment? What part of his life makes you think he's ever going to pick middle-of-the-road options? If you don't want Trump to pick something, why do you give him the option in the first place? Donald Trump will always pick the most extreme option on the menu, whether military strike or KFC, he will pick the most extreme thing."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Speaking of fun couples, the President rang in the new year at Mar-a-Lago in Palm Beach where they were asked about their resolutions for 2020. ... I love also that Melania's resolution is peace on the world. First of all, that's not a resolution, it's a wish. It's a wish that it seems her husband doesn't share."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We are the talk of the world. We might even end the world. If you haven't been following the news, the President, the guy who Sharpie'd a hurricane, authorized a military strike that killed the number two most powerful man in Iran. And now we have a big mess."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Our President continues to escalate the situation. He tweeted a threat that he would attack Iran with our best weapons if they retaliate. Even threatened to release the movie 'Cats' over there if he has to. Scary stuff."

Jimmy Kimmel: "According to the failing New York Times, the officials presented him a list of options, including targeting the general he targeted, General Soleimani, mainly to make other options seem reasonable. This is like a decoy. When President Trump chose the option of killing General Soleimani, top officials were flabbergasted. Three years into the administration, you didn't know he was going to pick the craziest choice? That's what he does. You don't want him to make a crazy choice, don't give him crazy things to choose from. The only thing Donald Trump should be allowed to choose is Popeye's or KFC, that's it."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, the reason that I'm a little on edge tonight is that on Thursday, in response to Iranian-sponsored militia attacks on the US embassy in Baghdad, President Trump ordered a drone strike, killing the top Iranian commander in Baghdad, Qassem Soleimani. ...

Bombing Iranian cultural sites could be a war crime. ... When he was asked about it, Trump immediately said, 'They're allowed to kill our people, they're allowed to torture and maim our people, they're allowed to use roadside bombs and blow up our people, and we're not allowed to touch their cultural sites? It doesn't work that way.' That's a really strange use of the word 'allowed.' Your honor, Ted Bundy was allowed to murder over 30 people in the 1970s. I can't stab one guy?' Doesn't work that way."

Stephen Colbert: "Normally, when a President takes an action this big, he preempts our stories and addresses the nation to reassure us. Trump didn't do that. ... Also, presidents usually inform something called the 'gang of eight,' which is the top Democrat and Republican of the House and Senate, as well as the chairs and ranking members of each chamber's intelligence committee, but top Democratic leaders in Congress received no advance notification of the strike. Yeah, they didn't need to know because they weren't staying at a Trump hotel."

Stephen Colbert: "Apparently, days before the strike, Trump roamed the halls of Mar-a-Lago, telling friends that he was working on a 'big' response to the Iranian regime that they would be hearing about very 'soon.' Can you imagine checking into that hotel? 'Okay, the pool is to the left, there's a fitness center on seven, and if you make your way into the courtyard, there's an old man giving away state secrets.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Here's how it went down: Trump's advisers went to Mar-a-Lago and military officials put the option of killing Soleimani – which they viewed as the most extreme response – on the menu they presented to President Trump. They didn't think he'd do it. They tacked on the choice of targeting General Soleimani to make other options seem reasonable. Quick note to the generals: The only way Trump isn't going to order something on a menu is if it comes with vegetables."

Stephen Colbert: "(As Trump) 'Let's see here, what if we got? What if we got? Oooh, oh, I've got to say, the killing Soleimani looks tempting. Oh, it comes on a bed of spinach. Can you hold that? No? Then I'll have the chicken-fried sanctions.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "First up, since President Trump ordered a strike on Iran's top general, people have been warning that World War III could break out. A lot of experts say the strike was a bad idea, almost as bad as eating 50 pizzas in 30 days."

Jimmy Fallon: "Listen to this: Before the Iran strike, Trump told some guests at Mar-a-Lago that something huge was coming, but he never told Congress. Which means there's a really good chance that Sugar Ray's Mark McGrath heard about the strike before Nancy Pelosi."

Jimmy Fallon: "Past presidents including George W. Bush declined taking out Iran's top commander because it could lead to war. You know things are bad when even George W. Bush was like, 'This could really mess things up in the Middle East.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "After the attack, Iran said it was pulling out of the 2015 nuclear deal. So this morning, Trump tweeted, 'IRAN WILL NEVER HAVE A NUCLEAR WEAPON.' Because nothing calms tensions quite like an all-caps threat on social media."

Jimmy Fallon: "According to a new poll, Republicans' top choices for President in 2024 include Ivanka and Donald Trump Jr. Meanwhile, Eric just got his tongue unstuck from a pole he licked on Christmas."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump yesterday dismissed concerns that Iran might retaliate for his strike on a military leader, saying quote, 'If it happens, it happens.' Wow, you're talking about the possibility of World War III, and you sound like Courtney Cox talking about a 'Friends' reunion. 'Look, if they want to do it, I'll show up.'"

Trump Administration May Need To Do More To Shield Economy From Coronavirus.

The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Davidson, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports officials and economists warn the Trump Administration to step up responses to help households and firms dealing with declining incomes and revenues due to COVID-19. However, the Journal says the Administration doesn't see an immediate need for a broader fiscal-policy response to the virus, due to the current strength of the economy. Although Trump has suggested passing a payroll-tax cut through Congress, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin has said that idea is not being considered.

However, in his Bloomberg Opinion (3/5) column, Michael R. Strain reports there "are other stimulus ideas in the works," including from House Ways and Means Chairman Richard E. Neal (D-MA), who "believes that a stimulus package should be based on infrastructure spending." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has reportedly expressed his support for including infrastructure spending in a stimulus bill."

US Sanctions Nicaragua Police Force Over Human Rights Abuses.

Reuters (3/5, Psaledakis, Lambert) reports the US on Thursday "imposed sanctions on the Nicaraguan National Police over accusations of human rights abuse, in the Trump administration's latest move to pressure the leftist government of President Daniel Ortega." The Treasury Department "said in a statement it blacklisted Nicaragua's police over its role in significant acts of violence, including 'using live ammunition against peaceful protesters and participating in death squads, as well as carrying out extrajudicial killings, disappearances, and kidnappings.'" Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said in the statement, "The Ortega regime has utilized the Nicaraguan National Police as a tool in its campaign of violent repression against the Nicaraguan people." The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Sun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Bloomberg Profile: Kudlow's Optimism Vs. Coronavirus.

In a lengthy profile on White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow, Bloomberg (3/5, Donnan, 4.73M) reports Kudlow "occupies a special place in the administration" from which he has "waged economic policy battles, pushing for a truce in the trade war with China, and taken a stand against such ideas as intervening in currency markets or imposing tariffs on cars imported from Europe." Bloomberg says that, as the Fed announced its rate cut Tuesday, Kudlow was in his office with no TV or computer screens except "a pair of smartphones. When one buzzes, Kudlow picks up. It's Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin. Powell has just held a press conference, he informs Kudlow, who seems unaware: 'Was it a presser this morning? I didn't see.'" According to Bloomberg, Kudlow told Mnuchin on the call that Powell "stayed with our line: The market is fundamentally strong." Kudlow said of Mnuchin after the call, "He's a good friend and policy ally."

New Documents Show Secret Service Paid Trump Organization $628,000 Since 2017.

The Washington Post (3/5, Fahrenthold, Parlow, O'Connell, Leonnig, 14.2M) reports, "President Trump's company charged the Secret Service $157,000 more than was previously known – billing taxpayers for rooms at his clubs at rates far higher than his company has claimed, according to a new trove of receipts and billing documents released by the Secret Service." The documents show that the Trump Organization has "charged the Secret Service more than $628,000 since he took office in 2017." In response to questions about the Secret Service payments, "Eric Trump has said the company charges the Secret Service 'at cost' but declined to provide more details."

The Hill (3/5, Moreno, 2.98M) reports similar coverage, and says Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats "have requested details on Trump's travel costs as part of negotiations over legislation regulating the Secret Service." However, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has told the committee that he opposes releasing that information until December, after the general election."

Judge Gives Democrats Additional Time In Trump Tax Return Case.

The Hill (3/5, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports, "A federal judge on Thursday gave House Democrats one week to figure out how they want to move forward in their lawsuit to obtain President Trump's tax returns from the administration." House Democrats are "seeking Trump's returns both under a subpoena from House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal (D-Mass.) and through a provision under the federal tax code."

The Washington (DC) Post (3/5, Hsu, 14.2M) reports the House "sued the administration last July after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin refused to comply with a subpoena for Trump's business and tax records issued in May." Mnuchin "has said the subpoena 'lacks a legitimate legislative purpose' and is instead part of 'a long-running, well-documented effort to expose the President's tax returns for the sake of exposure,' according to Trump's court filing."

Leading National News

Amid Widespread Outrage, Schumer Walks Back Comments About Supreme Court Justices.

Critics from across the political spectrum – including the President, GOP senators, the ABA and the editorial pages of the Washington Post and USA Today – took Senate Minority Leader Schumer to task yesterday for comments many deemed threatening toward conservative Supreme Court justices. NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 9, 1:35, Hunt, 6.1M), the only major network newscasts to mention the story, recounted that Schumer's remarks sparked a "stunning rebuke [on Wednesday] of the Senate's top Democrat by Supreme Court Chief Justice John Roberts." NBC went on to show Trump telling Fox News, also on Wednesday night, "That was a terrible thing he said. If that were a Republican, you would see really bad things happening." Yesterday, the President took to Twitter to write, "Schumer has brought great danger to the steps of the United States Supreme Court!" Trump said during a town hall with Fox News (3/5, 27.59M) last night that Schumer's comment "was a real intimidation. The best you can say is they are trying to intimidate so that the judges, the justices vote their way. That is no good either but that was physical. If a Republican did what Schumer did, they would be in jail right now."

Politico (3/5, Desiderio, 4.29M) indicates "Schumer was roundly criticized, including by some liberal legal scholars, for his comments on Wednesday," and the Washington Post (3/5, 14.2M) editorializes that the New York senator yesterday "walked back the offensive comments" Thursday, saying "he 'shouldn't have used the words I did.' That is an understatement." The Post adds "the negative reaction" to Schumer's remarks "was swift and ran the gamut from liberal Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe to...Roberts Jr., who immediately, publicly – and justifiably – responded that 'threatening statements of this sort from the highest levels of government are not only inappropriate, they are dangerous.'" To the Post, "Schumer and his fellow Democrats need to learn from this episode," and he "should remember the next time he's tempted to fight the president with his own methods." USA Today (3/5, 10.31M) similarly editorializes that for Schumer to "furiously shout words that sound very much like a threat against two high court justices is unseemly and warrants a full-throated apology." Fox News (3/5, Blitzer, 27.59M) reported, meanwhile, that "the American Bar Association said they were 'deeply troubled' by Schumer's remarks."

The Washington Times (3/5, Swoyer, 492K) reports, meanwhile, that "a group of Republican senators introduced a resolution...to formally rebuke...Schumer over his threatening rhetoric against Trump-appointed justices." Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) "sponsored a motion to censure the New Yorker, calling on senators to respect the independence of the judiciary. Censure is a formal reprimand condemning the remarks." The Kansas City (MO) Star (3/4, Lowry, Dumain, 549K) says "Hawley's censure resolution, which has 14 Republican co-sponsors, invoked the shooting of House Minority Whip Steve Scalise, R-Louisiana, in 2017 and Schumer's comments about the dangers of violent rhetoric at the time of that incident." Hawley "said he discussed censure with Senate GOP leadership and during a White House meeting Thursday," but "declined to reveal President Donald Trump's reaction or whether he expected leadership's support." Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC), "one of Hawley's co-sponsors," called Schumer's comments "dangerous," saying, "There's not many consequences for lifetime appointments, so one could easily interpret it to mean things that would really be outside the norm."

Fox News (3/5, Blitzer, 27.59M) reports "Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell...called out" Schumer "on the Senate floor Thursday morning," saying of the New Yorker's comments, "There is nothing to call this except a threat." USA Today (3/5, Wu, 10.31M) reports that though "McConnell called on Schumer to withdraw his remarks and apologize...he did not mention" Hawley's resolution. McConnell is quoted as saying, "If any American had these words shouted at them from a sidewalk outside their office, they would hear those threats as personal. And most likely they would hear them as threatening or inciting violence." Politico (3/5, Desiderio, 4.29M) says that in his "scathing address from the Senate floor," McConnell also "attacked the Democratic Party as a whole, accusing lawmakers of undermining and threatening US institutions." Along those lines, Kimberley A. Strassel writes in the Wall Street Journal (3/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that Schumer's comments were in sync with the standard Democratic reaction to the Supreme Court, which is to seek to attack and intimidate conservative justices.

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (3/5, 831K), Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) similarly said Schumer was "threatening" Gorsuch and Kavanaugh "quite directly. ... That is an unambiguous threat and now, whether it's a threat of political retribution, or something even worse, that's not clear, but whatever it is, it's judicial intimidation. It's not right," and "I think the Senate should seriously consider taking disciplinary steps when you have the leader of one of the two parties going to the steps of the Supreme Court, threatening and trying to intimidate Supreme Court justices, that undermines the rule of law and undermines the judiciary and it's just flat out wrong. ... One of the possibilities being debated is censure."

In an "exclusive" to Townhall (3/5, McCarthy, 177K), Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) also "eviscerated...Schumer's hyper partisan attack on the Supreme Court," saying, "Threatening two sitting Supreme Court justices is not only disgraceful, it is dangerous. This shows how far the radical left is willing to go to realize their socialist agenda. Schumer's actions threaten the very balance of our three-branch government. It was irresponsible, inappropriate, and unacceptable. I hope the Senate will stand together and condemn this unacceptable behavior."

NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 9, 1:35, Hunt, 6.1M) referred to Schumer, "after intense backlash...walking back what many saw as a threat against two Supreme Court justices appointed by...Trump." Schumer was shown saying, "I shouldn't have used the words I did, but in no way was I making a threat." NBC recounted that "Wednesday at an abortion rights rally of the steps of the court, Schumer saying this --" Schumer: "I want to tell you, Gorsuch. I want to tell you, Kavanaugh. You have released the whirlwind, and you will pay the price. You won't know what hit you if you go forward with these awful decisions."

Media Analyses: Schumer's Explanation Yesterday "Short Of A Full Apology." While Schumer walked back the wording of his barrage against the justices, Reuters (3/5, Hurley, Cowan) reports, he "seemed to stop short of a full apology." The New York Times (3/5, Hulse, 18.61M) points out Schumer "chalked up his sharp tongue to his Brooklyn upbringing" and "refused to apologize for the spirit of his remarks, saying that Republicans would pay a political price if the court struck down abortion rights." National Review (3/5, Hoonhaut, 731K) also reports that "after a deluge of criticism, including a statement from...Roberts on the 'dangerous' comments, Schumer held his ground and did not apologize," and the AP (3/5, Jalonick, Sherman) that Schumer only "said...that he 'should not have used the words I used.'"

The Washington Post (3/5, Wagner, 14.2M) quotes Schumer as saying, "I shouldn't have used the words I did, but in no way was I making a threat. I never – never – would do such a thing." Politico (3/5, Desiderio, 4.29M) indicates that Schumer also "said Republicans were 'manufacturing outrage' against him, insisting that he was only trying to make a point about Republicans 'working hand in glove' with the courts to undermine abortion rights." Politico adds that "some of Schumer's Democratic colleagues were eager to back his mea culpa or defend him," and Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin "said it was ironic that Trump was condemning Schumer for verbal attacks since the president has previously attacked the federal judiciary."

Marge Baker, executive vice president for policy and program at People For the American Way, writing in USA Today (3/5, 10.31M), says "Trump and others on the right have responded disingenuously to...Schumer's remarks, choosing to deliberately misconstrue his meaning. And their reasons are all too obvious," as "the courts really are on the ballot this November." Schumer "gave exceptionally loud voice to that Wednesday, but he isn't the only one who knows it. And Republicans are running scared."

To the Washington Examiner (3/5, Adams, 448K), "Schumer wrapped himself in self-righteousness Thursday after he was admonished on the floor of the US Senate for threatening" Gorsuch and Kavanaugh, claiming "he was merely passionate about abortion." The Washington Free Beacon (3/5, Griswold, 78K), the Daily Caller (3/5, Olohan, 716K) and The Hill (3/5, Carney, 2.98M), among other news outlets, also cover Schumer's remarks yesterday.

Appearing on Fox News Fox & Friends (3/5, 831K), Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) said, "This is not the first time...Schumer has tried to intimidate someone. It didn't work with...Trump. I don't think it's going to work with...Gorsuch and...Kavanaugh. But it still is wrong. You don't do those kind of things." Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) remarked, "The interesting thing is, his spokesman puts out this unbelievable declaration that supposedly he was talking to Senate Republicans. There is only two problems with that. He was standing in front of the Supreme Court and he mentioned two Supreme Court justices."

Townhall (3/5, O'Brien, 177K) reports Schumer's "incendiary words made House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's life a lot harder Thursday on Capitol Hill, because even after his attempted apology, she couldn't justify them." Said Pelosi, "I believe he also said on the floor today that his words were not appropriate. ... And I support him in that." Added Pelosi, "It's unfortunate because as you can see, I think the Republicans say it's okay if the president does it, but it's not okay if other people do. It wasn't right for anybody to do and Chuck recognized those words."

Along those lines, the New York Post (3/5, Bowden, Moore, 4.57M) reports "Senate Democrats and party leaders on Thursday refused to call out...Schumer after he was roundly condemned for threatening two Supreme Court justices." Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) said, for example, "I've seen the reports. ... I don't have much feeling about it." Pelosi "also tied herself in knots at her weekly press conference, trying to blame...Trump for lowering public discourse."

Trump Says Economy Is Strong Because He Eliminated Regulations.

President Trump said during a town hall with Fox News (3/5, 27.59M), "I say simply, I want to have the cleanest air on the planet, I want to have crystal clear, beautiful water on the planet. Our conditions now are much better than they were three years ago. ... I've cut regulations more than any President...in the history of our country and I did in less than three years. This is why I was able to get the country going because so many jobs were stopped by not only EPA, so many other agencies where you would have to get 11 different permits for essentially the same thing. ... One of the reasons the economy is so strong is because what we did with regulations. If the other side – we will call it the other side, affectionately – got in, they would've made regulations much tougher."

Former UAW President Faces Corruption Charges.

The AP (3/5, White) reports that former UAW president Gary Jones has been "charged...with corruption." Prosecutors "alleg[e] he conspired with others to embezzle more than $1 million to treat themselves to private villas, golf outings, boozy meals, good cigars and horseback rides on beaches." The AP adds "the federal government has been marching toward Gary Jones for months, after an embarrassing public search of his Detroit-area home and a series of guilty pleas from others in a sweeping investigation of UAW leaders living the high life while representing blue collar workers." Jones was UAW president "for about 1 1/2 years before quitting under a cloud in November."

The New York Times (3/5, Boudette, Scheiber, 18.61M) reports that Jones is "the highest-ranking UAW official to be prosecuted in the inquiry, in which more than a dozen people have been charged. Among them are three former Fiat Chrysler executives, including the company's chief negotiator with the union." The Detroit (MI) Free Press (3/5, Lawrence, 1.52M), Wall Street Journal (3/5, Naughton, Foldy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Reuters (3/5, Klayman) and Bloomberg (3/5, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover the charges.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) puts the charges against the former UAW official in the context of what it sees as widespread corruption with the Labor movement, indicating that since the beginning of 2019 at least 60 union officials have either been convicted or pleaded guilty to union-related crimes.

Russia Mulling OPEC's Proposed Output Cut.

Reuters (3/5, El Gamal, Lawler, Ghaddar) reports that in Vienna yesterday, OPEC "agreed...to cut oil output by an extra 1.5 million barrels per day (bpd) in the second quarter of 2020 to support prices that have been hit by the coronavirus outbreak, but made its action conditional on Russia and others joining in." Russia and Kazakhstan, "both members of the broader and informal group known as OPEC+, said they had not yet agreed to a deeper cut, raising the risk of a collapse in cooperation that has propped up crude prices since 2016." Saudi Arabia "has been pushing OPEC and its allies, including Russia, for a big cut up to 1.5 million bpd for the second quarter of 2020, alongside extending existing cuts of 2.1 million bpd, which expire this month, to the end of 2020." However, "Riyadh, OPEC's biggest producer, has struggled to win over Moscow."

Ford Could Pay Hundreds Of Millions In Settlement Over Defective Transmissions, Lawyers Say.

The Detroit Free Press (3/5, Howard, 1.52M) reports, "A federal judge approved on Thursday a Ford Motor Co. class-action settlement that will result in the repurchase of thousands of defective Ford Fiesta and Focus vehicles for up to $22,000 apiece, according to lawyers who crafted the agreement." According to the article, "nearly 2 million owners and former owners stand to be affected by the settlement, which also includes a minimum $30 million in cash payments from Ford to customers that are separate from the buyback program." Michael Kirkpatrick, a lawyer at the nonprofit Public Citizen consumer advocacy group, said, "You could see where this settlement could end up costing Ford hundreds of millions of dollars, potentially $500 million."

Boeing's New CEO Tackles Its Challenges.

In a "wide-ranging interview" with the New York Times (3/5, Kitroeff, Gelles, 18.61M), Boeing's chief executive, David L. Calhoun, "largely laid the blame for the company's 737 Max crisis on his predecessor." Calhoun said Boeing's previous chief executive, Dennis A. Muilenburg, "had turbocharged Boeing's production rates before the supply chain was ready, a move that sent Boeing shares to an all-time high but compromised quality." To turn around the company, Calhoun said, "he is working to mend relationships with angry airlines, win back the confidence of international regulators and appease an anxious President Trump — all while moving as quickly as possible to get the grounded 737 Max back in the air."

Families Of 737 MAX Tragedy Seek Boeing's Help To Commemorate Crash Site. The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Sider, Wexler, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the grieving survivors of the Ethiopian Airlines Boeing 737 Max tragedy want to commemorate the crash site with a permanent memorial, but they need Boeing's financial assistance and the airline's cooperation, putting the families in the tough position of having to accept help from the companies that are linked to their source of pain.

Bill Would Hold Tech Firms Accountable For Online Distribution Of Child Sex Abuse Imagery.

The New York Times (3/5, Keller, 18.61M) reports bipartisan legislation "announced on Thursday aimed at curbing the spread of online child sexual abuse imagery would take the extraordinary step of removing legal protections for tech companies that fail to police the illegal content." The new bill, called the EARN IT Act, "would create a 19-member commission — including members representing law enforcement, the tech industry and child advocates — to recommend a set of strategies: for instance, how to spot illegal material, categorize it in standardized ways and verify users' ages." However, "despite some strong support, the bill faces opposition not only from the tech industry, which considers the reforms too broad, and a threat to its offering services like encryption, but also from some victim advocates who view it as too narrow an approach to combating harms online."

Trump Blasts Democrats' "Fake News And Disinformation" On Coronavirus.

President Trump tweeted yesterday, "I NEVER said people that are feeling sick should go to work. This is just more Fake News and disinformation put out by the Democrats, in particular MSDNC. Comcast covers the CoronaVirus situation horribly, only looking to do harm to the incredible & successful effort being made!" Trump also tweeted, "With approximately 100,000 CoronaVirus cases worldwide, and 3,280 deaths, the United States, because of quick action on closing our borders, has, as of now, only 129 cases (40 Americans brought in) and 11 deaths. We are working very hard to keep these numbers as low as possible!"

In response to a question about his Administration's handling of the coronavirus response during a Fox News (3/5, 27.59M) town hall, Trump said, "Actually, we are [being] given tremendous marks. You look at Gallup poll and other polls for the way we have handled it. One of the things I did as I closed on the borders to China and other areas that are badly affected and really having a lot of troubles, countries and Areas of countries that have a lot of problems and I closed them down very early against the advice of almost everybody and we've been given rave reviews."

Asked during the town hall with Fox News (3/5, 27.59M) about the potential impact of coronavirus on the economy and his reelection, Trump said, "I think people are viewing us as having done a very good job. What we have to do is do a very professional job. Nobody is blaming us for the virus. I haven't heard that even from some of these so-called enemies or whatever you want to call them, they aren't blaming us."

Surgeon General Jerome Adams said on Fox News The Daily Briefing (3/5), "I want to be straight with the American people. I want them to know that this virus is a new situation that is changing. We're learning about it each and every day. But I do want America to know the risk right now is low to the average American. We know there are higher risk groups. We know that if you are older, if you have medical comorbidities such as diabetes, heart disease, you're at higher risk. I want to give you perspective really quickly. Eighteen thousands people have died of the flu in this country this year so far," while "11 people have died from coronavirus. While our hearts go out to each and every family who has lost an individual, it's important that we keep things in perspective and we recognize that we can do things to keep our country safe."

In an interview with Newsy (3/5, 11K) that aired on a number of local stations, Adams said, "What keeps me up at night about this situation is that panic will win out over preparedness and that, unfortunately, fear will win out over facts. When you look at infectious disease outbreaks, in many cases more people die from panic and fear than from the disease itself. How does that play out? Well it plays out with stigma. We've heard cases of people of Asian descent being discriminated against, being treated horribly in the midst of this coronavirus outbreak. People also do things like hoard. I put out a tweet this weekend telling people in the general public [saying] there is no advantage to you buying or wearing a mask, and as a matter of fact, it can be a disadvantage."

Asked on Fox News' Fox and Friends First (3/5, 483K) about the WHO's claim that the global death rate from coronavirus is 3.4 percent and whether he expects that number to be better on the US, Adams said, "I expect it to be much better. Here is the thing about death rates: They are going to depend on where you are. Ebola kills more people in Africa than what it does in the United States. Right now we are seeing other countries where the death rates are much lower closer to flu death rates. At the end of the day, I want Americans to know you have for the best healthcare system in the world, you've got the best team in the world working for you. ... Americans, I think, are going to be okay by the time this is all said and done if they do things to protect themselves."

Transportation Secretary Chao was asked on WIBC-FM Indianapolis (3/5, 6K), "The whole Administration it's totally focused on ensuring public health and safety.... The President himself has taken up a very visible role in communicating with the public about what is happening with this virus and the Vice President has been put in charge and they're doing things every single day to communicate more accurate news about what's happening and what needs to be done. At the Department of Transportation, I just met with the CEO of United Airlines...who came in personally to talk to me about their flights and how they're reconfiguring their flight patterns that because United Airlines is the major carrier to Asia." Chao added, "We want to take precautions but we also need to be careful that we are not hampering ourselves in carrying our daily lives."

Trump Contrasts His Handling Of Coronavirus With 13,000 Swine Flu Deaths In 2009-2010. The President also took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Gallup just gave us the highest rating ever for the way we are handling the CoronaVirus situation. The April 2009-10 Swine Flu, where nearly 13,000 people died in the US, was poorly handled. Ask MSDNC & lightweight Washington failure @RonaldKlain, who the President was then?"

CBS Says "Some Experts" Agree With Trump On WHO Estimate; Other Analyses Slam President. On CBS This Morning (3/5, 2.91M), Ben Tracy reported that the President on Wednesday night "challenged an estimate from the World Health Organization this week that 3.4 percent of coronavirus patients worldwide have died." Trump was shown saying, "I think 3.4 percent is really a false number. Now, this is just my hunch, because a lot of people will have this and it's very mild. Personally, I'd say the number is way under one percent." Tracy said "some experts agree with [Trump], because they say, at this point, we don't know the full scale of the outbreak."

On the other hand, Politico (3/5, Kenen, 4.29M) says Trump is "vastly complicating the work of public health officials scrambling to contain the spread of" the coronavirus. Politico adds that "in the latest example alarming the scientific community, the president on Fox News forcefully contradicted the World Health Organization, which earlier in the week pegged the global mortality rate for the coronavirus at 3.4 percent." According to Politico, "Public health experts have noted the WHO's estimate may change as more is learned about the spread of the virus" because "thousands of non-fatal cases likely have gone undetected," and "the death rate may dip below 3.4 percent."

Last night, NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 5, 1:50, Jackson, 6.1M) showed Trump saying, "Well, I think the 3.4% is really a false number." Added NBC, "The reality? It's not a false number, but the actual estimate released by the World Health Organization. Although it could still change as more data comes in."

To the Washington Post (3/5, Olorunnipa, 14.2M), meanwhile, "The president has repeatedly misstated the number of Americans who have tested positive for the virus and claimed it would 'miraculously' disappear in the spring." He has also "given a false timeline for the development of a vaccine, publicly questioned whether vaccinations for the flu could be used to treat the novel coronavirus and dismissed the World Health Organization's coronavirus death rate estimate, substituting a much lower figure and citing a 'hunch.'" The Post adds that Trump's "running commentary about the coronavirus, untethered to script or convention, indicates that the Trump administration's greatest obstacle to sending a clear message about the outbreak may be Trump himself."

Cruz: Trump's Order Stopping Flights From China Prevented Early Spread Of Coronavirus. Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (3/5, 831K), Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) said, "I chaired a hearing yesterday with the Center for Disease Control, and with the Border Patrol and the Department of Transportation, to talk about what steps are we taking to secure our borders, to screen people. And one of the things that we heard testimony from the doctors and the experts is that when the President froze civilian air travel to and from China – and he did that right at the beginning of this outbreak – that step...played a major role in stopping the spread of the virus. ... Had the President not acted swiftly at the outset, the testimony we heard yesterday is that those numbers in the US would have been much, much higher."

Pence Visits Mask-Maker 3M And Hard-Hit Washington State.

Bloomberg (3/5, Parker, Kinery, 4.73M) reports Vice President Pence yesterday visited "surgical-mask maker 3M Co. and one of the U.S. areas hardest hit by the novel coronavirus" today, "as the Trump administration tries to show it has the outbreak under control." Pence "met 3M executives in Minneapolis to discuss ramping up mask production," and "from there, he'll travel to Olympia, Washington, to meet with Governor Jay Inslee after the state reported its 10th death from the illness." Pence "said Wednesday that he had no reservations about visiting Washington, and he complimented the work of Inslee, a Democrat, in dealing with the outbreak."

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (3/5, Montemayor, 1.04M) reports that "arriving Thursday at the 3M Innovation Center in Maplewood," Pence "described an 'all hands on deck effort' to combat the spread of coronavirus," and "expressed confidence about the availability of coronavirus test kits, but acknowledged, 'we don't have enough tests today to meet what we anticipate will be the demand going forward.'" Pence "was met by 3M company CEO Mike Roman, Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz and other government and industry officials." 3M "is a maker of the N95 respirator, a type of facemask used as personal protective equipment against airborne particles." Pence "credited 3M for going to full production level for respiratory masks as the virus started spreading in January," saying, "You are playing a vital role in the health of our nation."

The AP (3/5, Madhani) points out Pence also "pledged Thursday that federal officials would "lean into" the fight against the new coronavirus as he visited with a leading maker of masks being used to stem the spread of the virus. He asked Americans to refrain from buying masks unless they're sick." Said Pence, "You should know we're ready and we're going to continue to bring the full resources of the federal government to bear to confront the spread of the coronavirus in the United States."

The New York Post (3/5, Fredericks, 4.57M) recounts Pence also "alluded to the cruise ship Grand Princess, which was being held off the coast of California until all on board were tested." Said Pence, "We're focused very much on a cruise ship just off the California coast today. The Coast Guard delivered a sufficient number of tests for the passengers on that ship."

The CBS Evening News (3/5, story 4, 1:50, Reid, 4.58M) reported Pence was also in Washington State last night "for a briefing on the outbreak." The Olympian \(WA\) (3/5, Drew, 79K) indicates Pence said "Washington is setting a 'great example' for states in how to handle the coronavirus outbreak," and that "in a meeting with the state's congressional delegation and local government Thursday afternoon at Camp Murray, Pence also thanked...Inslee for his leadership." Said Pence, "The President wanted me to be here today to make it crystal clear that we are with you. We are here to help."

The Washington Times (3/5, Howell, 492K) quotes Pence as also saying, "Washington state is setting a great example as states around the nation continue to experience the advent of the coronavirus in their communities. ... We're going to continue to look to the example that you've set here."

Azar's Absence From Pence Trip Noted. Politico (3/5, Diamond, Owerhohle, McGraw, 4.29M) reports that there was "a notable omission" when Pence visited "Washington state Thursday as part of the Trump administration's coronavirus response: health Secretary Alex Azar." According to Politico, on Wednesday, the White House "also benched Azar from a coronavirus task force press briefing, the latest sign of diminished standing for an official who was the face of the U.S. response to the disease just a week ago." Citing "two individuals with knowledge of events," Politico adds that Azar "has in the last week emerged as a target inside and outside the administration," and Pence "asked Azar not to attend Wednesday's press conference."

Senate Approves $8.3 Billion Coronavirus Spending Package, Sending It To Trump.

Reuters (3/5, Whitcomb) reports that on a 96-1 vote, the Senate yesterday "passed an $8.3 billion bill to combat" the coronavirus "a day after the House of Representatives overwhelmingly approved it. The bill will now go to President Donald Trump for his signature." The Washington Times (3/5, Howell, 492K) points out "Sen. Rand Paul, Kentucky Republican, voted 'no' after his attempts to pay for the measure by trimming foreign aid were rejected."

Axios (3/4, Axios, 521K) reports "the agreed-upon package is larger than the $2.5 billion that the Trump administration had originally asked for to combat the virus – and slightly less than the $8.5 billion counter offered up by Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer." The AP (3/5, Taylor) says "the money would pay for a multifaceted attack on a virus that is spreading more widely every day, sending financial markets spiraling again Thursday, disrupting travel and potentially threatening the US economy's decade-long expansion."

USA Today (3/5, Hayes, 10.31M) recounts "Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell applauded the 'swift bipartisan action' and said it was 'only possible because members in both chambers put the actual needs of experts and health care professionals ahead of partisan posturing.'" Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee Richard Shelby (R-AL), "who helped lead the negotiations between the House and Senate, said he was also grateful that the deal came together so quickly to get the money to the communities that need it."

At the tail end of a story that criticizes President Trump's handling of the coronavirus issue, NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 5, 1:50, Jackson, 6.1M) mentioned that "lawmakers approved an emergency $8.3 billion coronavirus deal, now sending it to the President's desk." The CBS Evening News (3/5, story 4, 1:50, Reid, 4.58M) also mentioned the spending package at the end of its coronavirus coverage, saying it is "three times what the White House originally requested, suggesting the Trump Administration did not anticipate the scope of this crisis." CQ Roll Call (3/5, Shutt, 154K), The Hill (3/5, Carney, 2.98M) and Politico (3/5, Scholtes, Emma, 4.29M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Morgan: CBP "Ready To Do What CDC Recommends" On Border Closure.

Acting CBP Commissioner Morgan said on Fox Business Cavuto: Coast to Coast (3/5), "CBP, along with other operational components, have been involved in this from the very first stages of this. ... We are part of the task force and we are taking our direction from the medical experts, from CDC and HHS, as they continue to assess the health risk as it continues to change, shift, and grow." Asked if any consideration is being given to closing the US border, Morgan said, "It depends on what the health risk is for that specific country. ... I think what we are doing is we are being methodical yet decisive and CDC are continuing to evaluate the health risk. If we get to that point and they ask us operationally to do something based on the health risk, I can tell you, CBP is ready to do what CDC recommends, what's in the best interest of the health and safety of this country."

Cruise Ship Barred From California Port Until Passengers Tested.

The AP (3/5, Rodriguez, Geller) reports that "officials ordered a cruise ship with 3,500 people aboard to stay back from the California coast Thursday until passengers and crew can be tested, after a traveler from its previous voyage died of the disease and at least two others became infected." A Coast Guard helicopter "lowered test kits onto the... Grand Princess by rope as the vessel lay at anchor off Northern California, and authorities said the results would be available on Friday." California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said, "The ship will not come on shore until we appropriately assess the passengers." The New York Times (3/5, Mervosh, 18.61M) reports that "a patient who died from the virus had previously traveled on the vessel," and "about 20 people on board are showing symptoms."

In its lead story last night, NBC Nightly News (3/5, lead story, 3:10, Holt, 6.1M) reported that 35 passengers have "shown flu-like symptoms," while four passengers were "on a previous cruise" and have now "tested positive for coronavirus. One of them died. Authorities are working to contact thousands who were on that voyage and have since traveled home." ABC World News Tonight (3/5, lead story, 4:10, Muir, 7.17M) reported in its lead story that passengers are "telling us all 2,400 of them are now ordered to confine themselves to their rooms." The Grand Princess is "operated by the same company that ran the Diamond Princess cruise ship, where 700 of the 3,700 onboard were infected off Japan." The CBS Evening News (3/5, lead story, 2:45, O'Donnell, 4.58M) similarly reported on the cruise ship last night.

The Los Angeles Times (3/5, Chabria, Karlamangla, Wigglesworth, Barboza, 4.64M), meanwhile, reports that "authorities in Santa Clara County on Thursday announced that a Sunnyvale man might be California's second death connected to the coronavirus." The 72-year-old man "had been on a cruise where others contracted the coronavirus."

San Francisco Reports Two Coronavirus Cases; Four More Reported In Los Angeles County. The Los Angeles Times (3/5, Chabria, Karlamangla, Wigglesworth, Barboza, 4.64M) says San Francisco reported its first cases of the new coronavirus Thursday. The two San Francisco patients "are not related and have no travel history to areas where the coronavirus has spread." Additional cases were announced elsewhere in the state yesterday, "including four in Los Angeles County, all of whom had recently returned from Italy."

Number Of Cases In New York Double To 22.

Reuters (3/5, Whitcomb) reports that "the number of people who have the novel coronavirus in New York state doubled to 22 on Thursday following an increase in testing, as Tennessee and the city of San Francisco reported cases of the fast-spreading illness for the first time." Of the new cases in New York, "eight are connected in some way to a Manhattan lawyer who lives in Westchester County and was previously diagnosed with the virus, two are in New York City and one in nearby Nassau County." The New York Post (3/5, Hogan, Feis, 4.57M) reports that the eight new cases in Westchester are "connected to a single New Rochelle lawyer, identified by sources as 50-year-old Lawrence Garbuz." Garbuz's "wife, son and daughter have also tested positive, as have a friend, his wife and three of their four kids."

ABC World News Tonight (3/5, story 2, 2:50, Muir, 7.17M) reported New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio is calling the spread "unpredictable" and "worrisome." The New York Times (3/5, Paybarah, Goldstein, 18.61M) reports New York City officials also said yesterday that the city is "aggressively monitoring the 2,773 people who have self-quarantined."

New Jersey Reports First Coronavirus Case.

The New York Times (3/5, Vigdor, 18.61M) reports officials in New Jersey announced late Wednesday "that initial testing of a man in his 30s showed that he had the coronavirus, which would make him the state's first officially confirmed case." The state Department of Health "said it was waiting for a more detailed analysis" by the CDC to confirm "presumptive positive results," but "the presence of the virus in New Jersey would bring the total number of states with patients to 17."

Maryland Confirms First Coronavirus Cases.

The Washington Post (3/5, Noack, Berger, Horton, Freedman, Knowles, 14.2M) reports Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) announced Thursday that "three positive coronavirus cases were confirmed in the state," its first cases, "and that the patients contracted the virus while traveling overseas. They are quarantined in their homes in Montgomery County, a suburb of about 1 million people outside Washington, D.C."

Fifth Coronavirus Case Reported In Illinois.

The Chicago Tribune (3/5, Schencker, 2.65M) reports that a fifth person in Illinois has tested positive for the coronavirus, state health officials announced Thursday. The patient is "a Cook County resident in his 20s who flew into O'Hare International Airport earlier this month after traveling from Italy where he caught the illness, health officials said."

Sanders: We Need Scientists, Not Politicians, In Charge Of Response.

Democratic presidential hopeful and Sen. Bernie Sanders argues in USA Today (3/5, 10.31M) that "as reported cases of the coronavirus continue to grow and spread in our country and around the world, it is becoming clear that both the Trump administration and our current health care system are failing that test. We must do better." In the midst of what he calls "a global healthcare crisis," Sanders questions "how could anybody gain public confidence by appointing Mike Pence to lead the coronavirus task force — a politician with no scientific background." Sanders writes that "the time has come for Donald Trump to stop playing politics with this deadly virus and put scientists and health experts back in charge."

Experts Concerned US Testing Facilities May Be Overwhelmed.

In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (3/5, lead story, 2:45, O'Donnell, 4.58M) reported, "There are least 12 deaths and more than 200 cases confirmed right here in the US, but the Vice President today admitted the country does not currently have enough test kits to find out if others are sick." The Washington Post (3/5, Goldstein, Johnson, Sun, McGinley, 14.2M) reports that a day after "Pence touted a new policy allowing 'any American' to be tested for the novel coronavirus with a doctor's order, some health officials and physicians expressed concern that people with mild symptoms might overwhelm the nation's still-limited testing capability." Pence's announcement "drew praise from experts who said the previous guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention were far too restrictive." However, "other health experts warned the action might inadvertently send the wrong message, prompting a surge in demand for tests from people with mild symptoms who should simply stay home until they recover. They also noted that laboratory capacity for virus testing, while on the rise, is still lagging."

Reuters (3/5) reports Administration officials yesterday "said...they expect to be able to get enough coronavirus tests to public laboratories this week to test about 400,000 people, and acknowledged the challenge for doctors seeking to get patients screened for the disease. Officials expect to ship additional test kits to cover between 1.5 and 1.7 million people by the end of next week," HHS Secretary Azar told reporters. Azar is quoted as saying, "Right now, it is a challenge if you are a doctor wanting to get somebody tested. ... That experience will get better over the next week, week and a half, two weeks. But do not be surprised if you hear concerns of doctors saying: 'I have a patient. I don't know how to get this done.'"

Bloomberg (3/5, 4.73M) reports that after getting a briefing from officials yesterday, senators said the Administration "won't be able to meet its promised timeline of having a million coronavirus tests available by the end of the week." Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) said, "There won't be a million people to get a test by the end of the week." Scott and other lawmakers "said the government is 'in the process' of sending test kits out and people still need to be trained on how to use them. The entire process could take days or weeks, they said."

Officials: Insurers Will Cover Cost Of Test Kits, But Some Patients May Still Get Bills. The AP (3/5, Alonso) reports a day after Vice President Mike Pence "assured Americans that lab tests for coronavirus would be covered by private and government health insurance, that promise appears to be less than airtight." Medicare, Medicaid, and Affordable Care Act insurance plans "will cover the tests, officials said Thursday." Major insurers "also said they will cover such tests," but people "with employer-provided insurance should check with their plan because copays and deductibles may apply."

The Hill (3/5, Hellmann, 2.98M) reports the federal government "will rely heavily on commercial labs to run the vast majority of coronavirus tests." Those labs, "along with hospitals and academic institutions, could bill patients and their insurance companies for testing." CMS Administrator Seema Verma "told reporters Thursday that Medicaid and Medicare would cover testing, likely without cost-sharing requirements," but she also "acknowledged that people with private plans should ask their insurance companies if cost-sharing will be required."

Healthcare Workers Concerned About Shortage Of Equipment, Protective Gear.

The Washington Post (3/5, Mettler, Hernandez, Wan, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports healthcare workers are increasingly concerned about a shortage of staff, key medical equipment, and protection gear amid the coronavirus outbreak. Moreover, "some health care worker advocates say hospital administrators are not adequately protecting their staff." Notably, "National Nurses United, the largest labor union for nurses, said only 30 percent of the 6,000 nurses it has surveyed in 48 states believe their workplace has sufficient protective gear to handle an influx of coronavirus patients." Additionally, "Some nurses reported that hospitals are keeping N95 masks, which are the most effective at blocking respiratory droplets that spread the disease, and other specialized equipment off-site to prevent hoarding, preventing immediate access to one if a nurse needs it for a walk-in patient." The New York Times (3/5, Stockman, Baker, 18.61M) has a similar report.

Parents Search For Childcare Amid School Closures.

NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 3, 1:55, Holt, 6.1M) reported, "Across the country, we're seeing more schools temporarily closing their doors to limit the spread of the virus. And with kids potentially missing class for weeks, a lot of parents right now are trying to figure out the childcare issue."

The Washington Post (3/5, Denyer, Kashiwagi, 14.2M) reports UNESCO estimated Wednesday "that more than 290 million students — from prekindergarten to grade 12 — have had their education disrupted by the school closures linked to the coronavirus."

Workplaces Around The World Preparing For Coronavirus Disruptions.

The New York Times (3/5, Yaffe-Bellany, 18.61M) reports that "from Seattle to New York to London, companies of all sizes have spent the last week preparing for the coronavirus outbreak that started in China to disrupt workplace routines. They have put employees through work-from-home drills, built up inventory to weather a possible shutdown and dusted off emergency-response plans." Some have also "banned all nonessential travel."

The CBS Evening News (3/5, story 2, 1:50, O'Donnell, 4.58M), meanwhile, reported from inside an emergency room in Chicago, "where doctors hope telemedicine could also help prevent spreading the coronavirus."

Trans-Pacific Shipping Impacted By Outbreak.

The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Newman, Smith, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the coronavirus is causing a Trans-Pacific shipping crisis and pushing up transportation prices for US exporters. Fewer ships have made the return journey from China and the normal turnover of containers has stalled. Some shipping lines have surcharges that roughly doubled shipping costs to China and other Asian destinations.

Industry Group: Outbreak Could Erase $113B In Global Airline Revenue This Year.

The New York Times (3/5, A1, Chokshi, 18.61M) reports the coronavirus could wipe out up to $113 billion in worldwide airline revenues this year, the International Air Transport Association "said, a significant blow to an industry already hurt by the Boeing crisis." Just within the past few days, "several carriers — including United Airlines, JetBlue and Lufthansa — announced new route closings."

States Cracking Down Coronavirus-Related Price Gouging.

NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 7, 1:40, Holt, 6.1M) reported, "States across the country cracking down on coronavirus price gouging." NBC (Kent): "As fears grow, products like masks and hand sanitizer are selling out in stores and online. Prices on Amazon, Walmart, and Facebook Marketplace from third-party sellers are skyrocketing. $220 for a box of ten masks on Amazon, 11-times the regular price. And for a bottle of hand sanitizer on Walmart.com, $48, normally, less than $4. Amazon tells NBC News it's blocked or removed more than one million products. Both Amazon and Walmart also say they're actively working to take down overpriced items." The CBS Evening News (3/5, story 3, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.58M) reported, "New York City is cracking down, issuing $500 fines to any stores found price gouging starting this week."

WHO Urges All Countries To Take Steps To Fight Coronavirus.

The AP (3/5, Sedensky, Leicester) reports on "a vigorous appeal Thursday from the World Health Organization for governments to pull out 'all the stops' to slow the epidemic." WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said in Geneva, "This is not a drill. This is not the time for giving up. This is not a time for excuses. This is a time for pulling out all the stops. Countries have been planning for scenarios like this for decades. Now is the time to act on those plans."

The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Calfas, Hobbs, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), meanwhile, says that as more cases of the virus were reported globally some health officials warned it would be impossible to fully contain it. On the CBS Evening News (3/5, story 5, 1:25, O'Donnell, 4.58M), medical contributor Dr. David Agus said, "My gut is it's going to be the new normal. My gut is that this virus will infect most people or a good number of people around the globe. Most people will have a mild course, and it won't be significant. Obviously, the elderly and people with medical conditions, we worry about, and the reason we go to draconian measures now and the measures talking about closing schools and workplaces is to protect them. We need a national plan for what's going to happen over the next weeks to month with this virus."

Study: Disinfecting Effective At Eliminating Coronavirus. ABC World News Tonight (3/5, story 3, 1:35, Muir, 7.17M) reported on a "study out of Singapore that looked at the rooms of patients, bedrooms and bathrooms of the patients, it showed a significant amount of the coronavirus in the rooms. When they tested, 87 percent of the surfaces test[ed] positive." ABC (Ashton) added that "after being disinfected...it went down dramatically...showing that surface cleaning does work. We don't know exactly how long this strain of coronavirus can exist and live on hard surfaces like glass and metal, but from other coronaviruses, the range could be anywhere from two hours to nine days."

On NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 6, 0:40, Holt, 6.1M), Dr. John Torres said, "There's no evidence this virus lingers in the air. And according to the CDC, the people who should be quarantined, includes anyone who has come in direct contact with someone sick with the coronavirus. That means either you're living with a patient or you have been sitting within six feet of an infected person, like at work or on a plane. ... The vast majority of Americans can go about their daily lives."

Pompeo: US Offered To Help Iran With Coronavirus.

The Washington Times (3/5, Howell, 492K) reports Secretary of Mike Pompeo said Thursday that the US has offered to help Iran combat the coronavirus and he hopes Tehran "heeds" their offer of humanitarian aid and supplies.

Axios (3/5, Lawler, 521K), meanwhile, reports that "Iran's coronavirus outbreak has reached the upper echelons of power, and ordinary citizens fear that the information filtering down can't be trusted." No one "knows how widely the coronavirus has spread in Iran, but based on data from hospitals in Tehran leaked to the Washington Post (3/4, Cunningham, Bennett, 14.2M), epidemiologist Ashleigh Tuite estimated that there were now 28,000 cases."

Italy Now Has Almost 4,000 Confirmed Cases As Death Toll Hits 148.

ABC World News Tonight (3/5, story 4, 0:25, Muir, 7.17M) briefly said that Italy is "reporting in 41 new deaths from the coronavirus just today. The death toll there, now 148, the most outside China." The New York Times (3/5, 18.61M) reports that "in the hardest-hit European countries, the number of cases saw the biggest one-day jumps so far: from 3,089 to 3,858 in Italy; from 262 to 482 in Germany; and from 285 to 423 in France. In Netherlands, infections more than doubled, from 38 to 82. The death toll in Italy, the source of outbreaks in several other countries, leapt from 107 to 148, the highest figure outside of China." Britain and Switzerland "reported their first coronavirus deaths on Thursday, and Spain had its second. In Berlin, officials said three of the 13 cases could not be traced to any others, suggesting that the virus was spreading undetected in the city."

State Dept. Spokeswoman: Cooperation With China On Coronavirus Improving.

State Department spokeswoman Morgan Ortagus said on Bloomberg TV's Bloomberg Markets Americas (3/5), "We are going to continue to have to keep the pressure on the Chinese. The White House has indicated, especially CDC and the people that we have on the ground have indicated that they are working closely with them. We certainly were explicit that in the early days that the Chinese were not as transparent as the international community and the WHO had hoped for. The cooperation has been better in recent days."

Xi Cancels Planned Trip To Japan. The Washington Post (3/5, Taylor, 14.2M) reports China "remains the worst-hit country overall, with deaths surpassing 3,000 and confirmed cases topping 80,000," and yesterday, President Xi Jinping "canceled a planned state visit to Japan." However, "the epidemic is now slowing in China, while other countries are seeing outbreaks grow rapidly."

Chinese Official: New Infections May Drop To Zero By End-March In Wuhan. Reuters (3/5, Woo, Sun, Tian, Liangping, Goh, Chen) reports Wuhan, "the epicenter of China's coronavirus epidemic, will likely see new infections drop to zero by the end of this month, an expert with the country's top panel on battling the illness said on Thursday, even as the city reported a quicker rise in new confirmed cases." An official "said almost all regions outside Hubei province, where Wuhan is the capital, had managed to halt new infections by end of last month, according to an interview with the official People's Daily." The official "estimated other cities in Hubei will hit such a target by mid-March, based on data on how the outbreak has evolved, but did not give details."

South Korea Declares "Special Care Zone" As Coronavirus Spreads.

Reuters (3/5, Smith, Shin) reports South Korea declared a "special care zone" on Thursday around "a second city hit hard by the coronavirus and the US military confirmed two new cases among relatives of its troops in the country." The South Korean government declared a "special care zone" around Gyeongsan, "a city of about 275,000 people 250 kms (150 miles) southeast of Seoul, promising extra resources such as face masks and warning people from traveling there." The move comes as the city has "seen a spike in new cases."

Bethlehem's Church Of The Nativity Closed Amid Coronavirus Fears.

Reuters (3/4, Qawasma) reports Bethlehem's Church of the Nativity was ordered closed on Thursday and foreign tourists "were banned from West Bank hotels after four suspected coronavirus cases were found in the Palestinian town." The measures announced by the Palestinian Authority's tourism ministry "came as a particular blow to the Biblical town, whose businesses are largely dependent on Christian visitors to the church."

First Known Human-To-Animal Transmission Of Coronavirus Reported In Hong Kong.

The Washington Post (3/5, Brulliard, 14.2M) reports "a pet dog in Hong Kong has a 'low-level' infection of the coronavirus that causes covid-19 in people, city authorities said this week." The case may mark "the first known human-to-animal transmission of the novel coronavirus." This new case in Hong Kong raises "the specter that dogs might be swept into the epidemic, which, even now, public health officials say does not appear to infect or be spread by pets." However, "experts say that much remains unknown about the dog's infection, including whether it causes disease in dogs, and they emphasized that the lone case is not yet cause for alarm or reassessments about interactions with pets."

WPost: China Using Coronavirus To Escalate Its Repression In Hong Kong. The Washington Post (3/5, 14.2M) editorializes that the pro-democracy demonstrations "that rocked Hong Kong last year have lulled, in part because the city is under partial lockdown to prevent the spread of the coronavirus. You'd think Chinese Communist authorities and their hugely unpopular representatives in the city would breathe a sigh of relief and focus on keeping the population healthy. Instead, they chose last week to escalate the repression of opposition leaders."

Judge Bars FBI Agents Who Wiretapped Page From Other Surveillance Cases.

The Daily Caller (3/5, Ross, 716K) reports Judge James Boasberg, who presides over the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, has barred the FBI agents "involved in the process of wiretapping Carter Page" from "taking part in other investigations involving surveillance warrants while they are under disciplinary or criminal review." Boasberg "implemented a new rule that any FBI or Justice Department employees under disciplinary or criminal review will be unable to participate in future surveillance matters." The move is "the latest fallout from a Justice Department watchdog's report on FBI and Justice Department abuses of the surveillance process against Page."

FISA Court Mistakenly Says Fusion GPS Was Seeking Dirt On Clinton. The Washington Examiner (3/5, Dunleavy, 448K) reports a FISA Court ruling on Wednesday "mistakenly said Fusion GPS, the opposition research firm which hired British ex-spy Christopher Steele in 2016, was looking for dirt on former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton rather than on then-candidate Donald Trump." The court "said it would fix the glaring error after the Washington Examiner brought it to its attention."

Nunes: "Lunatics" In Media Trying To Link Him To Russia.

The Washington Times (3/5, Scarborough, 492K) reports Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA) said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight Wednesday that he is being stalked by "lunatics in the media" who are trying to "try to tie him to the Russian side when he has been one of Congress' fiercest anti-Moscow hawks for years." Nunes said, "No one has been put into the middle of this Russia nonsense more than me, other than maybe the president, obviously the president. ... Every time they resurrect the Russia hoax they insert me into it. ... For almost four years now, every chance these lunatics get, and I say lunatics because the lunatics in the media get, they tied me and Trump to Russia."

Democrats Urge Biden To Punch Back On Trump's Ukraine Attacks.

Politico (3/5, Cheney, Caygle, Matishak, 4.29M) reports that with the President preparing to "unleash a fusillade against former Vice President Joe Biden over his son's ties to Ukraine, Biden's allies on Capitol Hill have some advice for their candidate: Be ready to punch back – hard." Democrats have privately expressed concern that Biden has not responded "forcefully enough," Now that he is the frontrunner for the Democratic presidential nomination, "lawmakers say he needs to showcase a clear and effective response that can withstand months of Trump attacks." Politico cites interviews with "more than a dozen Capitol Hill Democrats," who say "the vice president needs to fine tune his response, pivoting away from the at times emotional and defensive rebuttals he's offered on the campaign trail." Politico adds that "Democrats widely agreed that the Burisma matter wouldn't weigh heavily on Biden's chances because it's been thoroughly debated for months and the facts are on his side."

Senate Republicans Are Stepping Up Probe Of Hunter Biden. The New York Times (3/5, Fandos, 18.61M) reports that as Biden "re-emerges as President Trump's chief rival for the presidency," Senate Republicans are using their majority power "to intensify an election-year investigation of Hunter Biden's work for a Ukrainian energy firm." The Times says Senate Republicans "are effectively picking up where the president left off last year when he pressed" Ukraine's "leaders to investigate the Bidens, an effort that led to his impeachment." Senate Homeland Security Chairman Johnson "plans to hold a vote next week despite Democratic objections to issue a rare Senate subpoena to Andrii Zelenskyy, a former Ukrainian official who worked for Burisma, the energy firm." While Republicans "insist Burisma is a matter of longstanding interest unrelated to Mr. Biden's presidential candidacy, and no evidence has emerged to suggest that either Biden acted improperly," Johnson "acknowledged that his investigation could affect the election and said that was as it should be."

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K) Wednesday night, "That will be a major issue in the campaign. I will bring that up all the time because I don't see any way out. ... I don't believe they will be able to answer those questions. That was purely corrupt." During a town hall with Fox News (3/5, 27.59M) Thursday, Trump said, "I think that [Joe] Biden has been damaged. ... You look at his son. Here's a guy, didn't have a job, the military was a very sad experience for him. He goes out and gets $3 million plus $183,000 a month to be a board member of a company that a lot of people said was corrupt. Just as bad, China. ... His son walks out of China with a billion and a half dollars for a fund."

Romney: GOP's Burisma Probe "Appears Political." The Washington Examiner (3/5, Yilek, 448K) reports Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) told reporters Thursday that Republicans' investigation into Hunter Biden and Burisma "appears political." Romney said, "There's no question but that the appearance of looking into Burisma and Hunter Biden appears political, and I think people are tired of these kind of political investigations." Politico (3/5, Desiderio, 4.29M) says Romney "has hinted that he could vote against" issuing a subpoena for records from "from a Democratic public relations firm related to the panel's investigation of conflict-of-interest allegations against the Bidens."

Hunter Biden Touted His Connections When He Sought Law School Job. The Federalist (3/5, Justice, 126K) reports that Hunter Biden "is family name and political connections to pursue a major gig as a law professor at the University of California Los Angeles, according to emails reviewed by the Daily Caller News Foundation." Hunter Biden was seeking a job teaching "a course on drug policy and identified a list of possible guest speakers with close ties to his leading 2020 presidential candidate father." The Washington Examiner (3/5, Leonardi, 448K) provides similar coverage.

Judge Says Barr's Handling Of Mueller Report Was "Distorted" And "Misleading."

The Washington Times (3/5, Mordock, 492K) reports US District Judge Reggie Walton ordered the Justice Department Thursday "to turn over former special counsel Robert Mueller's full unredacted report, saying he doesn't trust that Attorney General William Barr truthfully represented the report's conclusions." Walton said the Department "must submit the report to him because he saw discrepancies between Mr. Barr's depiction of the special counsel's report and the publicly released version." The Times calls Walton's "stunning rebuke" a "rare move from the courts, which traditionally shy away from ascribing political motivations to the nation's top law enforcement official." The New York Times (3/5, Savage, 18.61M) says Walton "sharply criticized" Barr's handling of the report, "saying that Mr. Barr put forward a 'distorted' and 'misleading' account of its findings and lacked credibility on the topic."

Politico (3/5, Gerstein, 4.29M) says Walton "excoriated" Barr in a "stinging 23-page opinion," that "said Barr's efforts to spin the report before its public release last year raised serious doubts about whether the Justice Department faithfully applied the law when deleting certain information from the publicly disclosed version." USA Today (3/5, Santucci, 10.31M) says Walton "determined that the court should conduct a private review of the Mueller Report to validate the Department of Justice's redactions and decide whether any information should be made public."

The Washington Post (3/5, Hsu, Barrett, 14.2M) calls Walton's decision "the latest indication of growing concern among federal judges in Washington about politicization at the Justice Department."

WPost: Court Should Not Duck Ruling On McGahn Case.

The Washington Post (3/5, 14.2M) says that if the ruling from the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit "that it could not order former White House counsel Donald McGahn to appear before the House Judiciary Committee, though the committee issued a subpoena that Mr. McGahn flouted, on President Trump's orders," is allowed to stand, it "would shred Congress's ability to oversee the executive branch." The Post argues that although the court "refused to act, to the benefit of the president, under the legal doctrine that courts should avoid involving themselves in political controversies," the "the legal question in this case is simple: Is the subpoena valid? The courts should answer, not duck."

Trump Says Administration Is Running "Remaining Portion" Of Obamacare Well.

President Trump said during a town hall with Fox News (3/5, 27.59M) that healthcare is "probably the thing that I'm most disappointed that I haven't been able to say what a good job we've done. ... First of all, I got rid of the individual mandate, which was the worst part of ObamaCare. ... We have many healthcare plans now where it is 60 percent, even 65 percent less-expensive than Obamacare. It is better than Obamacare. What we really have left is the carcass of Obamacare or you could call it, new health care, because without the whole thing of the individual mandate, it's a whole different ball game, it's a much different plan. What we would like to do is totally kill it but come up before we do that, with something that's great. We've really managed Obamacare, the remaining portion – we got rid of the bad part – but the remaining portion really well."

Report: VA Turned Away Thousands With Other-Than-Honorable Discharges Illegally For Decades.

The Washington Post (3/5, Horton, 14.2M) says that for decades the Department of Veterans Affairs has "unlawfully turned away thousands of veterans with other-than-honorable discharges, rendering some of the most vulnerable veterans invisible and desperate for help, according to a" report from the Veterans Legal Clinic at Harvard Law School. The article says that "systemic misunderstanding of the law within VA about which veterans it should care for – and which should be denied services – has triggered improper mass denial of care since 1980, the Veterans Legal Clinic at Harvard Law School said in the study, leaving an estimated 400,000 more at risk of never gaining access to health care they may have earned."

Trump Vows To Withhold Funds From "Sanctuary Cities."

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "As per recent Federal Court ruling, the Federal Government will be withholding funds from Sanctuary Cities. They should change their status and go non-Sanctuary. Do not protect criminals!"

The Washington Times (3/5, Boyer, 492K) recounts that "a three-judge panel of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Manhattan ruled unanimously last week that the federal government has the discretion to impose conditions when distributing grant money." The judges also "noted that the Supreme Court has consistently upheld the federal government's authority over states on immigration policy." Reuters (3/5, Heavey, Rosenberg) reports Trump's "battle against Democratic-led 'sanctuary' jurisdictions focuses on laws and policies that limit local law enforcement cooperation with federal U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) officials."

ICE Bolsters Efforts To Enforce Immigration Laws In Sanctuary Cities. The New York Times (3/5, Dickerson, Kanno-Youngs, Correal, 18.61M) reports that ICE is "boosting its operations in sanctuary cities to arrest and deport undocumented immigrants, conducting round-the-clock surveillance in addition to deploying elite tactical agents." According to the Times, ICE "plans to deploy hundreds of additional officers in unmarked cars in the coming weeks to increase arrests in cities where local law enforcement agencies do not cooperate with federal immigration enforcement." The Times says ICE "has requested at least 500 special agents who normally conduct long-term investigations into dangerous criminals and traffickers to join the enhanced arrest campaign rolling out in sanctuary cities." The Times adds that the request "follows an earlier decision, made public last month, to deploy elite tactical BORTAC agents – immigration SWAT teams that are normally assigned to risky border smuggling, rescue and intelligence operations – to help arrest and deport immigrants in sanctuary cities."

DHS Now Easing Immigration Backlog As Deportations Overtake Border Arrests.

The Washington Times (3/5, A1, Dinan, 492K) reports, "Illegal immigration across the southwestern border is down so much that the Department of Homeland Security is deporting more people each month than it captures coming across, officials announced Thursday, meaning they are now able to eat into the backlog of cases that built up during last year's surge." The Times adds that "over the past five months, 14,000 more people were removed or returned across the Mexican border than arrived, including 1,170 in February."

CBP Reports Slight Uptick In Border Apprehensions Last Month. The Washington Post (3/5, Miroff, 14.2M) reports that "the number of migrants detained by U.S. authorities along the border with Mexico rose slightly in February," which the Post says is "a sign that the administration's deterrent strategy may be stalling." US Customs and Border Protection "released figures showing a slight uptick in arrests in February, the first time in nine months that unauthorized crossings have increased. Authorities detained 37,119 border crossers last month, up from 36,660 in January, the latest figures show."

The Washington Times (3/5, A1, Dinan, 492K) reports Acting CBP Commissioner Mark A. Morgan "said the number of illegal crossings ticked up slightly in February but was still far below the heights of last year's wave." Morgan "said an increase from January to February is typical, though this year's is the second smallest in the past decade."

WPost Analysis: Barr Shows He Is Willing To Overrule Immigration Courts.

The Washington Post (3/5, Bellware, 14.2M) reports that Attorney General Barr "quietly intervened in an immigration asylum case last week when he issued a decision that narrowed the definition of torture for asylum seekers who invoke it as a grounds for staying in the United States." Barr "used a process known as 'certification,' a historically little-used power of the attorney general that allows him to overrule decisions made by the Board of Immigration Appeals and set binding precedent." According to the Post, "Half a dozen immigration experts who spoke to The Post said Barr's use of his certification power in this case erodes the neutrality and due process that should exist in immigration court. They also cited recent moves by Justice Department, such as creating an office to denaturalize immigrants or using an immigrant's confidential therapy notes in a deportation case against them, as evidence of the Trump administration's willingness to break norms to achieve its goals."

Trump: 500 Miles Of Wall Will Be Completed By Early Next Year.

President Trump posted a clip from his town hall on Fox News Thursday night in which he discusses progress on the construction of the border wall. Trump wrote, "The WALL is well under construction. So far we're up to 129 miles, and by early next year we will have 500 miles completed!"

Trump Meets With GOP Senators On Plan For DREAMers.

The Daily Caller (3/5, Datoc, 716K) reports that the President met Thursday with Senate Republicans "to discuss a new plan for children who illegally immigrated to the United States." During his campaign, Trump "promised to end DACA," but since entering office, "he has been hesitant to outright end the program." Nonetheless, he "still sought to do so...in order to gain an advantage over Democrats while negotiating additional immigration reforms, including funding requests for the southern border wall." The Daily Caller adds that Trump's stance "might have flipped once again...as his fiscal year 2021 budget requested a significantly smaller amount of funds for border wall construction." Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), who "has previously pushed for legalizing the so-called DREAMers," said, "I think the president will win in court on DACA that he can set aside the Obama-era DACA rules, then what do you do? ... I mean if you're going to give them legal status I hope we get something for it."

Morgan: Under Trump, CBP Has "Dramatically Reduced" Catch And Release.

Acting CBP Commissioner Morgan said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (3/5, 49K), "This President's strategy has given us more tools in our tool box than we have ever had. For the last five months, we have actually been removing more illegal aliens that we have been apprehended. Since the hype in May to this past January, we have dramatically reduced those number of people that we were just releasing into the United States. We dramatically reduced almost all catch and release and that is because this President's initiatives and this President's tools that he provided us."

Study: "Public Charge" Rule Will Impact Small Number Of Would-be Immigrants.

The Washington Times (3/5, Dinan, 492K) reports that an analysis by the Migration Policy Institute says the Administration's new "public charge" rule will impact "only a small fraction of would-be immigrants," a finding that "undercuts some of the vehement criticism from immigrant-rights activists." The rule allows USCIS to "refuse to grant green cards, signifying permanent legal status, if they see a history of welfare use involving programs such as Medicaid or food stamps or housing assistance." According to the study, "relatively few people in that pool of potential applicants are eligible to take part in those kinds of programs, so few people are likely be snared by the get-tough policy."

IG Audit: Administration's Zero Tolerance Border Policy Caught HHS By Surprise.

The Washington Times (3/5, Dinan, 492K) reports an audit by the HHS Inspector General Thursday found that the Administration's "2018 zero tolerance border policy, which led to separation of families, caught the Health and Human Services Department by surprise, with top leaders only learning about it from the media." The Department was left "woefully unready to handle the thousands of children separated from parents and sent to the Health Department for care and placement with sponsors, the department's inspector general said." In addition, Department leaders "disregarded specific, repeated warnings" from "lower-level staffers at the Office of Refugee Resettlement who'd seen an uptick for months in children who'd been knowingly separated by Homeland Security and the Justice Department."

DHS To Add 35,000 Seasonal Guest-Worker Visas In 2020.

The Washington Times (3/5, Dinan, 492K) reports DHS "announced Thursday that it will boost the H-2B seasonal guest worker program this year by adding 35,000 more visas, or more than 50% higher than Congress originally set." The agency "insisted it's coupling the increase with new anti-fraud measures, and also said it's setting aside 10,000 of the guest-workers for migrants from Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, rewarding them for their help in stemming last year's illegal immigration surge."

Judge Orders Deportation Of Former Nazi Concentration Camp Guard.

The Washington Post (3/5, Cenziper, Baldauf, 14.2M) reports that an immigration judge in Memphis "has ordered the deportation of a longtime Tennessee resident and German citizen who acknowledged having served as a guard at a concentration camp in Germany and is still receiving a pension for work that includes his wartime service." The removal order announced by the Justice Department and Immigration and Customs Enforcement on Thursday says "Friedrich Karl Berger served at a subcamp of the Neuengamme concentration camp system, near Hamburg."

Palantir Wins Navy Logistics Management Contract.

The Washington Post (3/5, Gregg, 14.2M) reports that Palantir Technologies "has sealed its first major deal with the US Navy," which the Post says is "a major step forward for a West Coast tech company that has long struggled to break into the Pentagon's insular information technology industry." According to the Post, "The sole-source contract, worth about $80 million, calls for a logistics management system for the service branch's warships and aircraft scattered across the globe."

Alabama Executes Inmate Despite Public Outcry.

USA Today (3/5, Lyman, 10.31M) reports an Alabama man was "executed Thursday evening on a 2005 conviction of being an accomplice to the murder of 3 police officers." Nathaniel Woods was "put to death amid a storm of appeals and protests from supporters who noted that Woods did not actually kill officers Charles Bennett, Carlos 'Curly' Owen and Harley Chisholm III on June 17, 2004, that Woods' attorneys missed key deadlines in his appeals, and that the trigger man – also on death row – said Woods was not involved." According to USA Today, "the Woods family and hundreds of thousands of people appealed to Alabama Gov. Kay Ivey to extend clemency to Woods. Ivey allowed the execution to proceed."

The Washington Examiner (3/5, Pearce, 448K) reports the Supreme Court "denied a request to stay the execution" of Woods. Earlier on Thursday, the article says, Justice Clarence Thomas had issued a stay of execution, but "the court then vacated Thomas's order, allowing the execution to proceed as planned."

The New York Times (3/5, Rojas, 18.61M) reports an although a jury disagreed on the death penalty, Woods was "condemned by a judge" because "Alabama is unique in allowing a judge to sentence a defendant to death without a jury voting unanimously in favor of it." According to the article, "the lack of a unanimous verdict has fueled some of the concerns over his case as death penalty activists and civil rights groups have urged the courts and Gov. Kay Ivey to intervene."

FEMA Administrator Focused On Making Agency Prepared For Catastrophic Disasters.

WPRI-TV Providence, RI (3/5, 5:12 p.m. EST, 54K) profiled FEMA Administrator Gaynor, who said of his new post, "There are times it is very surrealistic. Going to the White House, Going to the Oval Office to brief the President. Being on Air Force One or Marine One with the Vice President, or with local elected leaders out on disaster sites." WPRI added, "Gaynor led Rhode Island's emergency management agency for about four years." Gaynor: "I don't think you ever really leave Rhode Island. You always come back." WPRI added that Gaynor is "taking his more than 10 years of experience in the smallest state in the country to our nation's capitol." Gaynor: "Both local, state and now federal."

So I think I have a pretty good perspective about what emergency management is at the lowest level and what it is at the highest level.”

In a segment broadcast later, WPRI-TV Providence, RI (3/5, 6:13 p.m. EST, 66K) reported that Gaynor “says right now his agency is supporting the Department of Health and Human Services as it monitors the spread of the coronavirus. They are also monitoring tragedies ranging from natural disasters to terrorist attacks.” Gaynor: “One of our core goals is to be prepared for catastrophic disaster. We are trying to make sure that we are ready for it and our partners are ready for it.” WPRI added, “Gaynor says when it comes to acts of terrorism FEMA administers homeland security grants that states can use to prepare.” Gaynor: “Billions of dollars open for locals and states to close their gaps on things they need to become stronger when it comes to terrorism. It has to have a terrorist nexus. So, things like cybersecurity is a big deal. Fusion centers, Training exercises, equipment.” WPRI added, “Gaynor says his agency’s greatest challenge right now is trying to convince people they need to be prepared for disaster.”

Trump: Reports On Rural School Closures “More Fake News.”

The President took to Twitter yesterday to write, “The Department of Education is NOT closing hundreds of schools in rural areas of our Country. This is just more Fake News. We are investing greatly in our schools, and always will!”

Education Block Grant Plan Faces Resistance In Senate.

CQ Roll Call (3/5, Simon, 154K) reports, “Senate Republicans showed openness Thursday to a Trump administration proposal to streamline 29 federal education programs into a single $19.4 billion state block grant and other changes to federal policies, but a key GOP appropriator suggested those initiatives would still not make it into final fiscal 2021 appropriations language.” Democrats on the Senate Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Subcommittee were “uniformly critical of the $66.6 billion proposal, which would reduce current funding by 7.8 percent.” Subcommittee Chairman Roy Blunt (R-MO) “indicated the committee was unlikely to shift primary and secondary education programs addressing school safety, STEM education and after-school education into a state block grant, and would almost certainly not cut TRIO programs or the federal work-study program.”

Virginia Increases Protections For Transgender Students.

The Washington Post (3/5, Natanson, 14.2M) reports, “Transgender students attending public school in Virginia can expect more comprehensive safeguards against harassment from peers, teachers and administrators under a measure signed Wednesday by Gov. Ralph Northam (D).” The legislation “requires the Virginia Department of Education to develop and publish rules regulating the treatment of transgender students in elementary, middle and high schools. The guidelines will span topics including bullying, dress codes, school record-keeping and the use of bathrooms.”

Carey: Doctorates Face Bleak Job Prospects In Academia.

In a piece for the “UpShot” of the New York Times (3/5, 18.61M), Kevin Carey, the director of the education policy program at New America, discusses the history behind the current “job crisis” in academia, as “young Ph.D.s...despair of ever finding a steady job.” Because of supply and demand, the increase in contingent or adjunct faculty has vastly outpaced those achieving tenure, producing a system that is resistant to change because it is “in many ways, good for the winners,” Kevin Carey writes. When a “flood of Ph.D.s desperate to keep a toehold in academia depresses adjunct wages, that makes it cheaper for universities to hire them to teach classes and free up time for tenured researchers to do what they enjoy: conduct research.” The more tenure becomes a “rare prize, the more the victors may see themselves as uniquely deserving” and until that “changes, the academic labor market will most likely continue to feel like a wasteland.”

Trump Retweets Post Praising Brown’s Nomination As Air Force Chief Of Staff.

President Trump retweeted a post from Donald Trump Jr. praising the President’s nomination of Gen. Charles “CQ” Brown to be Air Force Chief of Staff. Trump Jr. wrote, “Incredible news. If it would have been done by someone other than @realDonaldTrump you would have heard all about it. But hey, I’ll pass it on. White House Nominates Nation’s 1st African American Military Service Chief.” The President wrote, “My great honor!”

Kushner Divests Stake In Company That Pursued Federal Tax Break.

The New York Times (3/5, Lipton, 18.61M) reports, “President Trump’s son-in-law and adviser Jared Kushner is selling his stake in Cadre, a New York-based real estate start-up that has sought to profit from a special tax break included in the package Mr. Trump signed into law in late 2017.” According to the article, “as of last year, the venture had moved in at least four cities – including Los Angeles and Nashville – to invest in real estate projects in so-called opportunity zones, which were created by the Treasury Department in 2018 under a provision of the 2017 tax law that was intended to encourage new investment in low-income neighborhoods.” However, “a spokesman for Mr. Kushner said he was selling the stake in Cadre, valued on his financial disclosure form at between $25 million and $50 million, because his involvement with the firm was complicating efforts to bring in new investors...given Mr. Kushner’s White House work on international affairs.”

Trump To Nominate Judge For DC Appeals Court.

The Washington Post (3/5, Marimow, 14.2M) reports, "The surprising retirement announcement Thursday of a judge on the influential appeals court in Washington gives President Trump another opportunity to make his mark on the federal judiciary." Judge Thomas B. Griffith "told court officials he plans to retire in September just two months before the 2020 presidential election," clearing "the way for Trump to add a third judge to the US Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit, which has been a pipeline for nominees to the Supreme Court." The Post adds "the new vacancy on the D.C. Circuit means Trump will be able to shape the future of the court, which has ruled on a set of separation-of-powers cases involving access to Trump's financial and tax records, congressional subpoenas and administration policies."

Trump Says He Has To Fight Back Against "Fake Media" That Is Part Of Democratic Party.

President Trump said during a town hall with Fox News (3/5, 27.59M), "We get hit so hard and we have a media that is – I say to a large extent it's a part of the Democrat Party, it really is – it's terrible, it's unfair. I call it fake news. I've used that and people are using that I guess all over the world right now and that's the way it is. We have to fight back. If we don't fight back you won't be a fan of mine very long."

Trump Slams Media's Failure To Note All Candidates He Endorsed Won On Tuesday.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday write, "@GOPLeader Kevin McCarthy informed me that I was 20 for 20 on Tuesday with respect to my Endorsement of candidates. Sadly, I didn't get that information from the Fake News Media. They don't report those things, or the far more than Dems cumulative votes, despite no opposition!"

Gaetz Dismisses Reports Of Bad Blood Between Trump And DeSantis.

Politico (3/5, Dixon, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's "close relationship" with Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) "is souring, and the bad blood is threatening to spill into the president's reelection effort in the nation's biggest swing state." DeSantis "was a Trump loyalist when the president helped propel the two-term Republican congressman into the governor's mansion in 2018." But Trump's Republican allies in the state are saying "behind the governor's back" that "DeSantis isn't doing enough to repay the political debt." However, Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL), who is an ally of both Trump and DeSantis, said, "Some selfish politicians and political operatives observe the special relationship between the president and governor with envy, so they try to cast their own hurt feelings as conflict through anonymous quotes to reporters." Gaetz "said the relationship between the two is 'at a zenith,' noting they've worked together on Everglades restoration, hurricane relief, and prescription drug prices."

Facebook Removed Trump Ads That Look Like Census Forms.

USA Today (3/5, Berry, Wu, 10.31M) reports "Facebook will immediately remove Trump reelection campaign ads on its social media site that civil rights groups and Democrats, including House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, complained looked like official Census forms." Facebook said in a statement, "There are policies in place to prevent confusion around the official US Census and this is an example of those being enforced." USA Today adds "the move came just hours after Pelosi criticized Facebook for not stopping Republicans from posting ads that she said could mislead people." The AP (3/5, Schneider, Seitz) notes the ad in question states, "President Trump needs you to take the Official 2020 Congressional District Census today."

The New York Times (3/5, Kang, 18.61M) reports "candidates in this year's presidential election are expected to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on political ads, and the companies have already struggled to enforce consistent policies." Facebook "has taken the most permissive – and most criticized – approach to political speech, allowing candidates and their campaigns to post misleading information and target those messages to specific audiences." The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Glazer, Adamy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Trump Says Obama And Biden Left A "Mess" Across The Board.

The Washington Times (3/5, Boyer, 492K) reports that during a town hall meeting Thursday in Scranton, Pennsylvania, the birthplace of former Vice President Joe Biden, that was broadcast on Fox News President Trump "criticized the Democratic frontrunner for leaving the country in a 'mess' under former President Barack Obama on everything from trade to military readiness." Trump "acknowledged that his only real conversation with Mr. Obama came in the Oval Office, on the day after he won the election in 2016 and visited the White House to talk about the transition." He said, "It was probably our only meeting, that was enough for me." Trump added that he "did speak to Mr. Obama once more briefly, at the funeral of President George H.W. Bush in 2018." Trump said, "I sat next to him and I said hello. And then I said goodbye. ... That's about it. No, I didn't like job he did, I didn't like the job that he and Biden did. I didn't like the position they put us in. I didn't like what he did to our military."

Politico (3/5, Choi, 4.29M) says Trump "contrasted his acts as president with those of his predecessor, while also complaining that a barrage of Democratic accusations about his conduct had hindered him from fulfilling his entire agenda." Politico describes a "tempered performance" by Trump during the event, Politico says it marked "a stark contrast to the bombast and ire of his campaign rallies, though the substance of what he said often echoed those regular events."

The Scranton \(PA\) Times Tribune (3/5, Horvath, 174K) reports that supporters who attended the event "used similar words to describe the unconventional commander in chief – authentic, genuine, real." Many "described the president as sincere and misunderstood."

At Town Hall, Trump Mocks Biden Gaffes, Says “There’s Something Going On There.”

The New York Post (3/5, Garger, 4.57M) reports that during a Fox News-hosted town hall event held in “Joe Biden’s hometown of Scranton, Pennsylvania,” President Trump on Thursday “mocked the former vice president’s recent series of campaign gaffes, saying, ‘there’s something going on there.’” Trump “took the shot at Biden when asked...which Democratic candidate he’d rather run against – Bernie Sanders or Biden. ‘Mentally, I’m all set for Bernie, communist,’ Trump told the audience. ‘And then we have this crazy thing that happened on Tuesday, which he thought was Thursday,’ he said, referring to a Biden flub where he mixed up the day of Super Tuesday at a Monday campaign stop. ‘But he also said 150 million people were killed with guns, and that he was running for the US Senate,’ Trump continued.”

The New York Times (3/5, Crowley, 18.61M) reports that after making those remarks, Trump added, “There’s something going on there,” which drew “laughter from the crowd of a few hundred local supporters. The setting, in which he took questions from the audience prescreened by Fox News, was an unusual one for” Trump, “who regularly delivers hour-plus monologues before thousands at campaign rallies in large arenas. His quiet exchanges with polite questioners was a far cry from the shouted slogans and bawdy call-and-response of his typical ‘Keep America Great’ events.” Writing at Townhall (3/5, 177K), Bronson Stocking says, “The crowd laughed as Trump recalled some of Biden’s most recent gaffes, but there were several more the president could have mentioned. Trump said, ‘in a certain way Bernie would be tougher because he’s got a base.’ But, after Super Tuesday, the president concluded, ‘I think it’s going to be very hard for him to come back.’”

Daily Caller: GOP Plans To Take Aim At Biden’s Mental “Capacity.” Meanwhile, the Daily Caller (3/5, Hasson, 716K) reports, “Republicans are preparing a full court press on...Biden’s mental fitness for office in the event that he wins the Democratic presidential nomination,” according to “GOP sources.” The report adds, “A Trump campaign official told the [Daily Caller] that Biden’s ‘capacity’ will be an issue in a potential general election matchup, echoing language used by Democratic New York Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez.” The Daily Caller adds that Trump “has repeatedly taken shots at Biden, saying the former vice president is ‘not playing with a full deck’ and ‘has lost his fastball.’ Trump’s campaign has already churned out videos highlighting Biden’s struggles.”

Florida Poll: Biden 60%; Bloomberg 14%; Sanders 12%; Warren 5%.

The Hill (3/5, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports on a St. Pete Polls survey of 1,882 likely Florida Democratic primary voters, taken March 4, that shows ex-Vice President Joe Biden leading the state’s Democratic presidential primary with 61%, followed by ex-New York City Mayor Mike Bloomberg – who dropped out of the race on Wednesday – at 14%, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) at 12%, and Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) – who dropped out of the contest on Thursday – at 5%. The Hill says the poll was conducted “the day after Super Tuesday.” The New York Post (3/5, Campanile, 4.57M) reports that in a similar poll released late last month, Biden led with 34%, followed by Bloomberg at 25%, Sanders at 13%, and Warren at 4%.

Reuters/Ipsos Poll: Biden Leads Sanders 55%-45% In Head-To-Head National Matchup. Reuters (3/5, Kahn) reports that a Reuters/Ipsos national poll of 568 Democrat and Democrat-leaning independent voters, taken March 4-5, shows Biden leading Sanders 55%-45% in a head-to-head match-up in the Democratic presidential primary. Reuters adds that Biden “is again considered to be the candidate with the best shot at beating [President] Trump. When the poll asked which of the presidential contenders is the most electable, twice as many Democrats picked Biden as those who picked Sanders. Last week, the poll showed Sanders was considered the most electable candidate.”

Sanders Focusing On Michigan As Biden Racks Up Key Endorsements In State.

Reuters (3/5, Lewis) reports that “after losing the momentum in the Democratic presidential” primary, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) “has work to do – and little time to do it – to build the ‘multiracial, multigenerational movement’ he says will propel him to victory...in November.” Reuters says the Sanders campaign “sees Michigan, which votes on Tuesday, as the next major battleground, and launched TV ads there attacking [former Vice President Joe] Biden’s support of trade deals that Sanders says sent jobs in the industrial Midwest overseas.” According to Reuters, Sanders “canceled a speech in Mississippi planned for Friday to schedule more events in Michigan, an aide said.”

Politico (3/5, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that “although” Sanders “triumphed over Clinton in Michigan during the party’s 2016 nominating contest, a Detroit News/WDIV-TV poll released Tuesday shows Biden ahead of Sanders by nearly 7 percentage points in the state.” Nevertheless, the New York Times (3/5, Ember, 18.61M) reports that “Sanders aides are confident that Mr. Sanders lines up favorably against Mr. Biden in the industrial Midwest.”

On ABC World News Tonight (3/5, story 7, 0:40, Muir, 7.17M), Mary Bruce highlighted Gov. Gretchen Whitmer’s (D) Thursday endorsement of Biden, and added, “The Michigan primary will be a critical test on Tuesday, as” Biden and Sanders “battle for working class voters. Now, Bernie Sanders is of course hoping for a repeat of his win there four years ago. Today, canceling a planned rally in Mississippi so he can spend more time in Michigan, instead.” Bruce called Sanders’ move “a clear sign he’s now going all-in on the Midwest.”

Michigan Governor, Detroit Free Press Endorse Biden. The AP (3/5, Eggert) reports Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) on Thursday endorsed Biden ahead of Michigan's March 10 "Democratic primary, giving the former vice president another boost after his success on Super Tuesday. Whitmer, who had not been planning to endorse a 2020 candidate at this time, said Biden 'has our backs.' She cited his work with President Barack Obama to add health coverage for millions of people and to rescue two of the Detroit Three automakers, General Motors and Chrysler, from financial ruin."

The Detroit Free Press (3/5, Egan, 1.52M) reports that Whitmer "is also joining the Biden campaign as one of four national co-chairs, the Biden campaign announced." The Detroit News (3/5, Mauger, 825K) reports, "Appearing on MSNBC's 'Morning Joe,' Whitmer credited Biden for 'working to protect health care,'" and "also highlighted the efforts of...Obama and Biden to save the auto industry during the economic recession." Said Whitmer, "I think the blueprint from 2018 about showing up, focusing on the dinner table issues and getting things done is exactly what Joe Biden represents. And that's why he has my enthusiastic support."

The Washington Post (3/5, Wagner, 14.2M) reports, "In the 2018 Michigan gubernatorial primary, Sanders endorsed one of Whitmer's opponents, Abdul El-Sayed, a former city health director for Detroit." The Hill (3/5, Axelrod, 2.98M) reports that Whitmer, "who was endorsed by Biden during her 2018 gubernatorial bid, has steadily gained a national profile after winning the gubernatorial election two years ago and delivering the Democratic Party's response to President Trump's State of the Union in February. Her endorsement comes just one day after" ex-Gov. Jennifer Granholm (D-MI) "also threw her support behind" Biden. Politico (3/5, Forgey, 4.29M) also reports on the story.

In an editorial, the Detroit Free Press (3/5, 1.52M) on Thursday endorsed Biden. The Free Press says, "The election of either...Biden or...Sanders would signal the resurgence of endangered democratic norms — allegiance to the rule of law, respect for career public servants, and human decency chief among them — that have been under relentless attack since...Trump's inauguration. But the nation, and our closely divided state, would be far better served by the succession of [Biden], whose four decades of experience in Congress and the West Wing have uniquely prepared him to meet the challenges awaiting the next president."

NYTimes' Brooks: With Biden's Surge, "The Establishment Gets One Last Chance." In his New York Times (3/5, 18.61M) column, David Brooks expresses joy over Biden's surge in the Super Tuesday primaries, saying that "the election results this week filled me with more hope than I've felt in years. ... The angry and putrid shouting that has marked the last four years — and that would mark a Trump vs. Sanders campaign — might actually come to an end." However, says Brooks, "the results carried a more portentous message as well. For those of us who believe in our political system, it's put up or shut up time. The establishment gets one last chance."

De Blasio: Blacks Backed Biden Because They Weren't Familiar Enough With His Record. The New York Times (3/5, Taylor, 18.61M) reports that New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio "drew anger on Thursday by suggesting that many African-American voters supported former...Biden...because his record had not been sufficiently examined beyond his connection to former President Barack Obama." Responding to a question on why Sanders "lost decisively to Mr. Biden among black voters in recent" primary contest, "de Blasio suggested those voters did not know enough about Mr. Biden — remarks that some called offensive and condescending." Appearing on MSNBC, de Blasio said, "It stands to reason if people have a certain amount of information — and I don't blame them for this, I understand it. ... The information that I think people received about Joe Biden was some of his historic connection, which, understandably, means something to people." After host Willie Geist asked, "To Barack Obama, you mean?" de Blasio replied, "Of course."

WPost Analysis: Monday Of This Week Proved To Be A Key Day For Biden's Campaign. Under the headline "The Day Everything Went Joe Biden's Way," the Washington Post (3/5, Johnson, Viser, Janes, 14.2M) reports on how Monday of this week proved to be a critical day for Biden. On that day, ex-South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg, who dropped out of the race Sunday, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), who ended her campaign Monday, and ex-Rep. Beto O'Rourke (D-TX), a former presidential candidate, all endorsed Biden — moves that the Post says "brought a chaotic cascade of good news for Biden's presidential effort and a mad scramble to maximize a sense of drama and momentum that Biden's campaign had rarely, if ever, enjoyed."

NYTimes Analysis: Soviet Union Sought "To Exploit" Sanders' "Antiwar Agenda."

The New York Times (3/5, Troianovski, 18.61M) reports that then-Burlington, Vermont Mayor Bernie Sanders in the 1980s "wrote to a Soviet counterpart in a provincial city that he wanted the United States and the Soviet Union to 'live together as friends.' Unbeknownst to him, his desire for friendship meshed with the efforts of Soviet officials in Moscow to 'reveal American imperialism as the main source of the danger of war.'" The Times reports on what it describes as "the Soviet effort to exploit Mr. Sanders's antiwar agenda for their own propaganda purposes," citing "89 pages of letters, telegrams and internal Soviet government documents," which, among other things, reveal "how the Kremlin viewed these sister city relationships as vehicles to sway American public opinion about the Soviet Union. 'One of the most useful channels, in practice, for actively carrying out information-propaganda efforts has proved to be sister-city contact,' a Soviet Foreign Ministry document provided to Yaroslavl officials said."

Bloomberg Creates Group Aimed At Aiding Eventual Democratic Nominee.

On the CBS Evening News (3/5, story 7, 0:50, O'Donnell, 4.58M), Ed O'Keefe reported that "CBS News has learned that Mike Bloomberg continues to spend his personal fortune to defeat President Trump. He plans to deploy staff to six key swing states." O'Keefe added that the staff is "going to be tasked with helping the Democratic nominee turn out the vote. The mayor remains deeply committed to defeating the President, his aides say." The Washington Post (3/5, Scherer, 14.2M) reports that Bloomberg "has decided to form an independent expenditure campaign that will absorb hundreds of his presidential campaign staffers in six swing states to work to elect the Democratic nominee this fall." The organization "would also be a vehicle for Bloomberg to spend money on advertising to attack...Trump and support the Democratic nominee, according to a" source. Bloomberg, "who is worth more than $50 billion, also has not ruled out using the group to spend money to support former vice president Joe Biden during his primary fight against Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.)."

Under the headline "Biden Looks To Expand Staff As Bloomberg Weighs How To Help Him," the New York Times (3/5, Martin, Burns, 18.61M) reports that Biden "is moving to hire new aides who he hopes can quickly help him secure the Democratic presidential nomination and then guide him through the general election. Mr. Biden is looking to broaden his communications and political teams and reorder some of the senior-most roles in the operation, according to multiple" sources. The Times adds that Biden "received a new burst of support this week when...Bloomberg...endorsed him and conveyed in a private phone call that he intended to be helpful to Mr. Biden's campaign."

Returning Fire, Trump Mocks Bloomberg With "Spaceballs" Meme. On its website, Fox News (3/5, Wulfsohn, 27.59M) reports that in a Thursday tweet, Trump "lit up Twitter...using a 'Spaceballs' meme to mock...Bloomberg." Fox News says Trump and Bloomberg had traded shots on Twitter a day earlier after Bloomberg quit the Democratic presidential race, with the former Mayor responding to a barb from the President "by sharing a clip from the first "Star Wars" film where Obi-Wan Kenobi battles Darth Vader." On Thursday, Trump "fired back with a meme created by the Twitter account 'Mad Liberals' featuring the 1987 Mel Brooks parody 'Spaceballs' where Lone Star uses his height to his advantage over Dark Helmet. However, Trump and Bloomberg's faces are used. 'Mini Mike, you're easy!' Trump tweeted."

Yang Forming Nonprofit Group Aimed At Promoting Ideas He Pitched During Campaign.

The New York Times (3/5, Stevens, 18.61M) reports that entrepreneur Andrew Yang, "who last month ended his long-shot presidential campaign in which he promoted a universal basic income, argued for data as a property right and called for a 'humanity first' approach to capitalism, announced Thursday that he would create a nonprofit organization tasked with advancing those ideas." The group, "called Humanity Forward, aims to bring Mr. Yang's ideas into the mainstream through conferences and a podcast, and to build pilot programs that might put his ideas into practice." The organization, "which will be based in New York, will focus first on a 'data dividend' project and campaign that would fight on behalf of consumers who want the rights to their personal data, Mr. Yang said."

Warren Ends Campaign Without Endorsing Biden Or Sanders.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) ended her presidential campaign on Thursday, but declined to endorse either Joe Biden or Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT). The AP (3/5, Weissert) reports that "outside her Cambridge, Massachusetts, home Thursday, Warren said she wasn't going to endorse anyone right away. 'I need some space and I need a little time right now,' she said, standing next to her husband." Bloomberg (3/5, Pager, Green, Egkolfopoulou, 4.73M) reports "Warren said she believed she could be a bridge between the progressive and centrist wings of the Democratic Party, but the election results showed that was not the case." The CBS Evening News (3/5, story 6, 1:00, O'Donnell, 4.58M) showed Warren saying, "There are two lanes-- a progressive lane that Bernie Sanders is the incumbent for, and a moderate lane that Joe Biden is the incumbent for. And there's no room for anyone else in this. I thought that wasn't right, but, evidently, I was wrong."

Politico (3/5, Thompson, 4.29M) reports that "according to a person with her campaign, Warren is contemplating not endorsing in the 2020 race, endorsing Bernie Sanders, or even endorsing Joe Biden, behind whom the more moderate candidates have consolidated." The New York Times (3/5, Goldmacher, Herndon, 18.61M) reports that Warren's "potential endorsement is highly sought, and both Mr. Sanders and Mr. Biden have spoken with her in the days since Super Tuesday losses sealed her political fate, though she revealed precious little of her intentions on Thursday." According to the Times, "Warren's impact on the race was far greater than just the outcome for her own candidacy. She effectively drove former Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg of New York...out of the race with a slashing debate performance last month."

USA Today (3/5, King, Morin, Groppe, 10.31M) reports Warren's exit has "removed any competition" Sanders "faced for progressive voters," but "that doesn't mean he'll automatically get her supporters." Though Sanders shares the Warren's "liberal ideology and her efforts to rein in the reach of corporations, her supporters tended to be college-educated women who backed structural changes rather than the political 'revolution' Sanders consistently champions." Additionally, "some Warren supporters remain angry at Sanders for not getting out of the race in 2016 and endorsing Hillary Clinton sooner than he did, and for allegedly telling Warren in December that a woman could never win the presidency – a claim he characterized as 'ludicrous.'"

The Washington Post (3/5, Wang, Linskey, 14.2M) reports that "in December's Democratic debate, moderators poked at a dispute that had been brewing for days between Warren and Sanders over a private meeting in 2018 during which Sanders reportedly said a woman could not win the presidency. Onstage, Sanders flatly denied making any such remarks," but Warren, "who insisted she was 'not here to try to fight with Bernie,' said she disagreed with Sanders – suggesting that he had in fact made those remarks."

Reuters (3/5, Ax, Becker) reports Warren "had finished well behind the two front-runners on Tuesday in 14 states, including her home state of Massachusetts, leaving her path to the nomination virtually nonexistent." According to the article, "the vague notion of 'electability,' a frequent buzzword on the campaign trail as Democrats prioritized defeating Republican President Donald Trump over all other concerns, seemed especially damaging for Warren and other non-white male candidates."

On NBC Nightly News (3/5, story 8, 2:05, Holt, 6.1M), Andrea Mitchell reported Warren was asked whether gender played a role in the campaign. ABC World News Tonight (3/5, story 6, 2:55, Muir, 7.17M) showed Warren responding, "Gender in this race? You know, that is the trap question for every woman. If you say, 'yeah, there was sexism in this race,' everyone says, 'whiner.' And if you say, 'no, there was no sexism,' about a bazillion women think, 'what planet do you live on?' I promise you this. I will have a lot more to say on that subject later on."

The Washington Times (3/5, Miller, McLaughlin, 492K) reports Warren also "lamented the nation is going to have to wait at least another four years before electing its first female president." The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Jamerson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Warren called the contest narrowing to two men one of the "hardest parts" about her decision to drop out.

Trump: Warren Did Sanders "No Favors" By Staying In Race Through Super Tuesday. President Trump said during a town hall with Fox News (3/5, 27.59M) that if Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) were "a true progressive, which probably she is, she should have dropped out three days ago. It would've been a whole different race. Texas was close. She got votes. She didn't do well but she got a lot of votes, far more than the difference. Think about Maine. Maine was almost a tie, they had to wait a day and a half before they could even call it. She came in third and it was a very distant third but she got a lot of votes. ... Bernie Sanders would have won five, six, seven states. ... So, when you look at it, she did him no favors, that was not a good friendship."

Pelosi Blames "Misogyny" And "Insecurities" For Disappointing Showing By Female Candidates. The Washington Examiner (3/5, Pearce, 448K) reports House Speaker Pelosi "said misogyny in the Democratic Party played a part in how the 2020 Democratic presidential primary has played out." Pelosi said, "I do think there is a certain element of misogyny that is there. Some of it isn't really mean-spirited. It just isn't their experience. Many of them will tell you they had a strong mom, they have strong sisters, they have strong daughters, but they have their own insecurities, I guess you would say."

USA Today (3/5, Groppe, Morin, King, 10.31M) reports Pelosi "said she nearly cries every time she is introduced as the most powerful woman in the country." She said, "Because I wish that was not true. I so wish that we had a woman president of the United States. And we came very close to doing that, a woman who was better qualified than so many people who have sought that office and even won it." The article adds that "Pelosi said she has no doubt that America is ready for a female president. But, she said, girls may need to start thinking about being president from the day they're born, the way some men might."

The New York Times (3/5, Lerer, 18.61M) reports that despite "the historic number of women in the 2020 field," the end of Warren's campaign on Thursday raises the question why "no women remained as a serious contender for the nomination." According to the article, "the female candidates made strategic miscalculations, struggled with fund-raising, building support and the rigors of the campaign trail," and "any missteps heightened the doubts that voters already harbored." The Times says "female voters worried the most about the viability of female candidates," pointing to a CNN poll in January that found "eighteen percent of Democratic women said that a woman could not win the White House, compared with 7 percent of men." Additionally, female candidates failed to win endorsements from "prominent women in the party," such as House Speaker Pelosi and Hillary Clinton, and "women's organizations also largely stayed out of the fight."

Likewise, Politico (3/5, Barrón-López, 4.29M) reports, "Elizabeth Warren's exit from the presidential race has left Democrats, including those who supported or ran rival campaigns, evaluating how the party arrived at Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders as the last two candidates standing." According to the article, "Warren likely failed for reasons more than gender: She was competing with Sanders for the progressive mantle, while also arguing she could bridge the two wings of the party better than her opponents." However, "there's few denying, including the candidate herself, that gender played a key role."

Pelosi Faces Challenge From Democratic Socialist.

The Washington Times (3/4, Blake, 492K) reports House Speaker Pelosi will face a challenge from democratic socialist Shahid Buttar in the November general election. Pelosi on Tuesday "easily won the primary contest upon receiving roughly 72.5%, of the vote," and Buttar, while "receiving only 12.7% of the vote," placed second, which "means his name will also appear on the ballot when Californians return to the polls this fall." According to the article, "Mr. Buttar, a 45-year-old lawyer and activist, previously ran in 2018 to replace Mrs. Pelosi but ultimately placed third in the state's primary."

Former Congressman Aaron Schock Comes Out As Gay.

The New York Times (3/5, Zaveri, 18.61M) reports, "Aaron Schock, the Republican who resigned from Congress in 2015 as he faced questions about his adherence to spending rules, came out as gay on Thursday, writing in a lengthy post on his website about the challenges of growing up in a religious household and saying he was wrong to oppose gay marriage." Schock "said he hoped that sharing his story could 'shine a light for young people, raised the way I was, looking for a path out of darkness and shame.'" However, "many people were quick to criticize Mr. Schock on social media, noting that he had opposed L.G.B.T.Q. causes a number of times, including votes against the legalization of same-sex marriage and the repeal of the 'Don't Ask, Don't Tell' policy, and that he did not apologize for those stances in his announcement on Thursday."

Bill Clinton Says He Had Affair With Monica Lewinsky To "Manage My Anxieties."

The New York Post (3/5, Brown, 4.57M) reports, "Bill Clinton claims in a new documentary the affair with Monica Lewinsky that almost destroyed his presidency was one of the 'things I did to manage my anxieties.'" Clinton "says in the Hulu series 'Hillary' that his affair was 'something that will take your mind off it for a while,' according to DailyMailTV." Clinton said, "Everybody's life has pressures and disappointments, terrors, fears of whatever."

WSJournal: USDA Regulators Should Be Reined In From Rule-Making By Memo.

The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes there is some confusion over whether the Department of Agriculture is moving forward with new cattle-identification requirements, despite President Trump's executive orders seeking to restrict agencies from issuing regulatory guidance. With ranchers turning to a federal judge, the Journal says the court should act to restore regulatory clarity.

WSJournal: Supreme Court Should Extend Janus Reasoning To Protect Free Speech Of Lawyers.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Supreme Court on Friday will consider a petition to extend its 2018 Janus decision that struck down mandatory public union fees in a matter involving state bar association dues. While the Journal supports extending the reasoning behind the Janus decision to protect the First Amendment rights of lawyers, as well as in all cases in which governments require individuals to join organizations that engage in political speech, it argues the Court should wait for a stronger case to decide on the constitutionality of state bar association dues.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45%, and his disapproval at 52.4%. The President's job approval is unchanged since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (3/2-3/4) finds Trump's approval at 48%, with 50% disapproving.

A Reuters/Ipsos survey of 943 "registered voters" (3/2-3/3), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 44%, and his disapproval at 54%.

No Fiscal Policy Changes Coming In China.

The Financial Times (3/5, Mitchell, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports China has no plans to follow the fiscal policy changes the US, South Korea, and Italy made to fight the effects of coronavirus on its economy.

Leading Lebanese Politician Says Country Must Work With IMF To Secure Aid Funds.

Reuters (3/5, Perry) reports leading Druze politician Walid Jumblatt said on Thursday that Lebanon will need to cooperate with the IMF if it wants to secure much-needed international aid, calling for a "joint program" with the Fund. Jumblatt "a major figure in Lebanese politics, also urged close cooperation with Hezbollah to assure the powerful Shi'ite Muslim group that IMF-backed reforms were no threat to Lebanon's sovereignty." In comments to Reuters, Jumblatt "said an IMF-backed programme was the only way for Lebanon to secure financial support," adding, "I just don't see any other way. Neither the Arabs nor the Americans nor even the French are ready to help us without the coordination of the IMF. This is my impression."

Ukraine's New PM Says "Constructive" Work With IMF Will Continue.

Reuters (3/5, Williams, Zinets) reports Ukraine's new PM Denys Shmygal on Thursday "said the government would continue 'constructive' work with the" IMF. Shmygal "outlined a proposal on Wednesday to increase social spending including on pensions, which he signaled would be offset by cuts elsewhere." Shmygal wrote on Facebook Thursday, "Changing the government means that we want even better and faster reforms in Ukraine. The government will continue prudent fiscal policy and constructive cooperation with the International Monetary Fund and other creditors of Ukraine."

IMF Says Argentina Talks "Productive" Despite Little Concrete Progress.

Reuters (3/5, Garrison, Jourdan) reports an IMF team "currently in Argentina has held 'productive' talks with local officials, a spokesman said on Thursday, though there was little detail on concrete progress about reaching a deal over the country's debt crisis." A spokesman for the IMF "said a team in Buenos Aires would complete its trip on Friday and return to Washington to push forward with technical work." The spokesman told Reuters, "Exchanges have been and remain very productive. We will communicate more details about next steps once we have more information."

State Department Spokeswoman: IAEA Reports Show Iran Hiding Nuclear Activities.

State Department spokeswoman Morgan Ortogus said on Fox Business Making Money (3/5) that two new IAEA reports on Iran's nuclear activities "are monumental reports. These show...that we now have more and more evidence of Iran hiding their activities, hiding materials, not being fully compliant. These are things that are not surprising to any of us who had to deal with the Islamic Republic of Iran and a regime that has been hell-bent on pursuing this path. We will continue our maximum economic pressure campaign. ... President Trump has said unequivocally that Iran will never obtain a nuclear weapon as long as he is President.”

Archive Of Secret Iranian Documents Draws Fresh Scrutiny.

The Washington Post (3/5, Warrick, 14.2M) reports that “in early 2003, a group of Iranian scientists began scouring the country on a secret quest for a place to dig an unusual tunnel,” and “finally found what seemed to be the right spot, a Mars-like dead zone regarded as one of the hottest and driest places on Earth.” The tunnel was never constructed, “but 17 years later the images and surveys still exist, part of a recently unearthed trove of secret Iranian nuclear documents. The records, now being studied in major Western capitals, are drawing fresh attention as weapons experts seek to answer a suddenly timely question: How quickly could Iran build a nuclear bomb if it decided to do so?”

Putin And Erdogan Reach Idlib Ceasefire Deal.

The AP (3/5, Fraser, Isachenkov) reports that in Moscow yesterday, Russian President Vladimir Putin and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan announced that they had “reached agreements on a cease-fire to take effect at midnight Thursday in northwestern Syria, where escalating fighting had threatened to put forces from the two countries into a direct military conflict.” Putin and Erdogan “also said the deal also envisions setting up a security corridor along a strategic highway in Idlib province.” Both presidents “had underlined the need to reach agreement at the start of the Kremlin talks, which lasted more than six hours. One goal had been to prevent damage to their bilateral relations and blossoming Russia-Turkey trade.”

The New York Times (3/5, Higgins, 18.61M) reports that the agreement calls for “joint patrols by Russian and Turkish troops of a seven-mile wide corridor along a highway that runs through Idlib eastward from the Mediterranean coast toward the border with Iraq.” The Times adds, “The deal, like a previous agreement over Idlib reached by Mr. Putin and Mr. Erdogan in September 2018, is unlikely to end the war in Syria,” but “it should at least tamp down a rapidly escalating crisis in Idlib” that has “pushed Russia, a nuclear armed global power, and Turkey, a member of NATO, toward direct military confrontation, a prospect that both countries have been eager to avoid.”

The Washington Post (3/5, Khurshudyan, Dadouch, 14.2M) reports that Turkey “has deployed thousands of troops to Syria to prevent President Bashar al-Assad’s forces from defeating rebel groups, including Turkish-backed factions, and consolidating government control in Idlib and nearby areas. ‘Turkey reserves the right to respond to any attack by the [Syrian] regime’s troops,’ Erdogan said Thursday.” The Post also reports, “Since Feb. 3, 58 Turkish soldiers have been killed by Syrian airstrikes and ground attacks...including two killed Thursday after the talks began.” The Post adds that Erdogan claims Turkey “has killed more than 3,200 Syrian soldiers, in addition to destroying tanks, weaponry, air power and ammunition depots.” Reuters (3/5, Vladimir Soldatkin/Andrey Ostroukh/, Kiselyova) also covers the agreement.

Trump Says Taliban Can Be Trusted, Want To Make A Peace Deal.

President Trump was asked during a town hall on Fox News (3/5, 27.59M) if the Taliban can be trusted. Trump said, “These warriors, we have been there for 20 years. We are really serving more as a law enforcement group than a military group. We could win the war very easily but I don’t feel like killing millions of people in order to do that. ... I had a very good conversation with [the Taliban leader]” and “I believe they really want to make a deal. I think after 19 actually going very close to 20 years, they’re also very tired of fighting believe it or not.”

Pompeo: Violence Must Ease For Peace Deal To Advance. The AP (3/5, Lee, Baldor) reports that “less than 24 hours after” President Trump said he had a “very good talk” with a Taliban leader and “insisted the militants want to end the violence, a US military drone targeted the group in retaliation for an uptick in attacks against Afghan forces.” To the AP, “it made clear the fragility of the US-Taliban deal signed last weekend aimed at ending America’s longest war.” Speaking to reporters at the State Department yesterday, Secretary of State Pompeo said, “We know that the road ahead will be difficult. We expected it. We were right. The upsurge in violence in parts of Afghanistan over the last couple days is unacceptable. In no uncertain terms violence must be reduced immediately for the peace process to move forward.”

A Nexstar (3/5, 31K) report that aired on several of the company’s stations across the country, meanwhile, said both the Afghan government and the Taliban are threatening to ignore the provisions of the new peace agreement.” State Department spokeswoman Morgan Ortagus was shown saying, “President Trump is committed to bringing our troops home and we are delivering on that promise.” The Nexstar reporter said Ortagus “says despite a shaky start to the afghan peace plan, the Administration still believes thousands of us troops should be coming home in the next few months.” Secretary Pompeo: “The best chance for peace in a generation,” but “we know that the road ahead will be difficult.”

Esper Confirms Secret Addenda In Peace Deal. The Washington Examiner (3/5, Mahshie, 448K) reports Defense Secretary Esper said yesterday “that secret addendums to the peace agreement with the Taliban” signed in Doha last week “address violence reduction, reversing prior statements.” Speaking to reporters, Esper said, “There are also two implementing arrangements that are not available to the public that address things such as the Taliban’s counterterrorism commitments and the withdrawal of forces.” He added, “I may be mistaken, but as I recall, the agreement says once signed, we would begin a continued reduction of violence that will continue downward, and as part of the intra-Afghan negotiations, we would move toward a comprehensive cease-fire across the country.” The Examiner notes that when questioned last week in the House Armed Services Committee about the existence of “any secret side deals with the Taliban,” Esper “denied that any existed.”

The New York Times (3/5, Ismay, 18.61M), meanwhile, reports on reactions to the peace among US military veterans who served in Afghanistan.

Special Operations To Serve As “Backbone” Ahead Of US Withdrawal. The Washington Post (3/5, Lamothe, 14.2M) reports that a “new network of Special Operations forces will serve as the backbone of a smaller US military mission in Afghanistan, hunting Islamic State fighters as the United States withdraws and providing firepower against the Taliban if a peace agreement with the group crumbles, military officials said.” The network was established as Army Gen. Austin “Scott” Miller, the top US commander in Afghanistan, “prepared to shrink the number of US troops last summer.” According to the Post, the idea was “to improve coordination between coalition and Afghan forces in a way that would still be possible if the number of US service members shrinks, relying on WhatsApp to share information.”

Ghani’s Rival Backs Release Of Thousands Of Taliban Prisoners. Reuters (3/5, Sediqi) reports Abdullah Abdullah, Afghan President Ashraf Ghani’s “main political rival,” has said he “supports a Taliban demand for the release of thousands of their prisoners before they will take part in peace talks with the government.” Abdullah’s “position on the prisoner dispute [is] at odds with that of Ghani.”

NYTimes Analysis: Afghan Peace Deal An “Ideal Outcome” For Pakistan. The New York Times (3/5, Mazzetti, Khan, 18.61M) reports that more than 18 years after the 9/11 attacks and “years of secret machinations by Pakistan’s spy service to help equip and finance the Taliban, a fragile deal brokered last weekend holds the promise of an ideal outcome for Islamabad: a weak and pliable neighbor that Pakistan can influence long into the future.” Pakistan “has long hoped for an end to the grinding violence in Afghanistan and the eventual withdrawal of American forces from the country,” but “regional experts warn that Pakistan risks playing a dangerous game if the American military withdrawal leads to a further descent into chaos.”

Pompeo: US Will Take “All Necessary Measures” To Bar ICC War Crimes Probe.

USA Today (3/5, Shesgreen, 10.31M) reports Secretary of State Pompeo said Thursday the Administration would take “all necessary measures” to shield US military and other personnel from a war crimes investigation by the International Criminal Court. The international court, based in the Hague, “ruled Thursday that its prosecutors could move forward with an investigation into possible war crimes and crimes against humanity committed by the Taliban, Afghan forces and American military and CIA personnel.” Speaking to reporters, Pompeo said, “This is a truly breathtaking action by an unaccountable political institution masquerading as a legal body. It is all the more reckless for this ruling to come just days after the United States signed a historic peace deal on Afghanistan, which is the best chance for peace in a generation.” Politico (3/5, Seligman, 4.29M) reports t Pompeo noted the US is not “a party” to the ICC and “indicated Washington will continue its refusal to cooperate with the court.”

The Washington Post (3/5, George, 14.2M) reports the Administration “has taken a strong stand against the court’s authority, describing attempted investigations involving U.S. forces as attacks on U.S. sovereignty that would subject Americans to unjust inquiries.” In April, the Administration “revoked the entry visa of the court’s chief prosecutor, and last year Pompeo threatened ‘economic sanctions, if the ICC does not change its course,’ referring to the investigation of U.S. forces in Afghanistan.”

Asked on Fox Business Making Money (3/5) about Pompeo’s comments State Department spokeswoman Morgan Ortagus said, “We do not think that is any sort of court or judicial mechanism that of course Americans are used to in the United States. These are at best, a bunch of political actors. This is something that the government of Afghanistan did not want. This is something that the United States did not want. ... We are not a party to the ICC.” Ortagus added, “The American people should know that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and President Donald Trump will do everything to protect Americans, to protect our servicemembers, to protect our diplomats, to protect members of intelligence of the community from rogue multinational political hack organizations like the ICC.”

The Washington Times (3/5, Taylor, 492K) says the ICC’s decision, “marking the first time the court’s 18 year history that prosecutors have been authorized to investigate US forces, flew in the face of longtime rejections by American officials to the court’s jurisdiction.” Reuters (3/5, Berg) notes that Afghanistan is a member of the ICC, but “Kabul has argued that any war crimes should be prosecuted locally.”

US To Clear Israeli Annexations If Palestinians Refuse To Negotiate.

Axios (3/5, Ravid, 521K) reports White House senior adviser Jared Kushner “told senators in a closed-door briefing Wednesday that the Trump administration is pressing ahead with its Middle East peace plan, even with the Palestinians boycotting the process and without a stable government in Israel.” With Israel set “to annex areas of the West Bank envisioned as part of Israel under the plan,” the Administration is “urging the Palestinians to negotiate, warning that its current plan will move forward without their input if they don’t.” According to the article, “despite the ongoing political chaos in Israel, the White House feels that because Netanyahu and Benny Gantz, his primary rival, both support the plan it can move ahead.”

US Joins Four Other Countries In Introducing New Initiative To Combat Online Child Abuse.

USA Today (3/5, 10.31M) reports Attorney General Barr “announced a new initiative to combat online child abuse in collaboration with four other countries and several technology companies.” Barr hoped the voluntary principles will be adopted as a “baseline” in the industry to protect against exploitation.

Sudan Hopes To Persuade US To Remove It From State Sponsor Of Terrorism List.

The Washington Times (3/5, Onyulo, 492K) reports that as Sudan transitions to a new government following “the ouster of longtime ruler Omar al-Bashir in April,” it faces spiraling inflation and a shortage of goods. Many in the country are looking to the US “for relief,” saying “the first crucial step to a real recovery is persuading the Trump administration to remove Sudan from the dreaded list of official state sponsors of terrorism." According to the article, "not all international economists agree, but the feeling is strong in Sudan that shedding the 'state sponsor of terrorism' label will clear the way for a spate of foreign investment and allow the country to receive much-needed International Monetary Fund and World Bank support and help with its $60 billion debt."

Guterres Says He's Pursuing Gender Parity Within UN.

In an interview with the New York Times (3/5, Donner, Gupta, 18.61M), United Nations secretary general António Guterres discussed his pursuit of gender parity in the international organization. Under his watch, the article says, "the U.N. has achieved gender parity at the most senior levels of management, two years ahead of a schedule that he himself set, and he has plans to bring parity to all levels of the organization by 2028." However, critics say Guterres "hasn't done enough to push for gender equality in countries where progress has stalled, or even been reversed," and "more broadly," Guterres has "been criticized for not calling out serious human rights abuses in specific countries."

WSJournal: Macron's Push For Pension Reform Will Help French Economy.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) supports French President Emmanuel Macron's effort to reform the country's public pensions, which he has been pursuing in the face of fierce opposition. If Macron stands firm, the Journal says, he has the opportunity to reshape the French people's relationship with work and help the French economy as well.

Freddie Mac: Mortgage Rates Fall To All-Time Lows; 30-Year FRM Drops From 3.45% To 3.29%.

The Wall Street Journal (3/5, McCaffrey, Eisen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports mortgage rates fell to a record low Thursday on worries over the economic cost of the coronavirus epidemic. The average rate on a 30-year fixed-rate mortgage dropped to 3.29% from 3.45% last week, according to Freddie Mac – reaching what the Washington Post (3/5, Orton, 14.2M) deems the "lowest level in the history of Freddie Mac's survey of mortgage lenders, which dates to 1971." Meanwhile, the 15-year FRM average fell from 2.95% to 2.79%, and the 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.2% to 3.18%. MarketWatch (3/5, Oh, 1.67M) reports, "The slump in long-term borrowing costs comes after the Federal Reserve carried out a surprise 50 basis point rate cut on Tuesday in face of heightened worries around how the COVID-19 outbreak could threaten the U.S. economic expansion."

Also covering Freddie's latest rates are pieces from the Associated Press (3/5), Bloomberg (3/5, 4.73M), Business Insider (3/5, 3.67M), the New York Post (3/5, Press, 4.57M), Forbes (3/5, Yale, 9.71M), a paywalled piece from Inside Mortgage Finance (3/5, Muolo, Subscription Publication), the Orange County (CA) Register (3/5, 546K), MarketWatch (3/5, Passy, 1.67M), and the Washington (DC) Post's (3/5, Press, 14.2M) Business Highlights.

Khater: Housing Market Continues To Boost Economy. HousingWire (3/5, 23K) reports Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "Mortgage applications increased 10 percent last week from one year ago and show no signs of slowing down. Given these strong indicators in rates and sales, as well as recent increases in new construction, it's clear the housing market continues to be a positive force for the broader economy." According to MarketWatch (3/5, Passy, 1.67M), however, "An emerging risk that those looking to refinance may want to consider is the possibility of government orders to shelter in place amid the coronavirus outbreak." Furthermore, a shortage of available homes may continue to challenge prospective buyers.

Also reporting on Khater's analysis are National Mortgage News (3/5), M Report (3/5, Albanese), National Mortgage Professional (3/5), Realtor (3/5, 25.12M), Yahoo! Finance (3/5), Newsy (3/5), Dodd Frank Update (3/5), and Seeking Alpha (3/5, Kiesche, 512K).

Capacity Constraints Leading To Wider Spreads.

National Mortgage News (3/5) reports, "Capacity constraints among mortgage lenders are leading to wider spreads between mortgages and the 10-year Treasury yield even after it remained below 1% for an extended period this week. As a result, mortgage rates have stayed flat or even been raised at some lenders. Originators have been overly busy in recent weeks, and higher rates are a tool to manage the flow of business." Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (3/5, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "According to Anthony Hsieh, founder and CEO of top-10 lender loanDepot, the mortgage industry might want to ponder creating a 'reservation' system for incoming applicants. At least that's what the veteran mortgage banker suggested on LinkedIn this week." NMN reports that before Freddie released its latest PMMS, Freddie Mac Deputy Chief Economist Len Kiefer said that "spreads on mortgage-backed securities relative to Treasuries which increased last week but are starting to close this week." He added, "Over time I expect to see movements in the 30-year mortgage rate that consumers see to align more closely with 10-year Treasury yields."

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (3/5, Muolo, Hollier, Subscription Publication) says that although investors currently seem "quite comfortable" with Treasuries, "the benchmark mortgage bond is the 2.50% UMBS (the Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac common security). At some point, investors will realize they can make a lot more money by owning MBS."

Freddie Mac Multifamily Increasing Spreads. Meanwhile, Multi-Housing News (3/5, Fiorilla) reports, "Property owners are furiously trying to take advantage of plunging interest rates by attempting to lock in long-term mortgages. ... It may be too soon to judge the ultimate impact of the coronavirus on the economy but borrowing rates have never been lower and property owners are eager to take advantage.” Freddie Mac VP of Investor Relations Amanda Nunnink “said about 90 percent of the requests are fixed-rate and about two-thirds are refinancings.” According to MHN, “Freddie wins on average just under 40 percent of the deals it quotes, but at the same time both government-sponsored enterprises are subject to a cap of $100 billion of loans in the five quarters between 4Q19 and the end of 2020, so they must decide how to handle the extra requests. At times in the past, the GSEs have raised spreads in order to slow the pace of originations so as not to burn through allocations too quickly. Nunnink said the agency has increased spreads in recent weeks and has maintained a floor on the all-in rate that is 15 basis points below where loan rates are set.”

Hunt Arranges $38M Freddie Mac Lease-Up Financing For Winston-Salem Apartments.

In a piece accessible to subscribers, GlobeSt (3/5, McCurry) reports, “Hunt Real Estate Capital recently secured a $38.2 million Freddie Mac conventional lease-up multifamily loan for EBSCO West End’s purchase of a mid-rise apartment building” in Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

Ellie Mae: Millennials Drawn To Refinances By January’s Low Rates.

Mortgage Professional America (3/5, Randall) reports, “Refinance activity among millennials borrowers increased in January following several months of decline,” according to Ellie Mae’s latest Millennial Tracker. The refi bump “corresponded with the average interest rate on all 30-year loans closed by millennials in January dropping to 3.94% from 3.95% in December. The previous two months saw rates rise.” Refis made up 31% of all loans closed by millennials in January, compared to 27% in December.

National Mortgage News (3/5) reports, “The average millennial FICO score jumped to 728 from January 2019’s 722, but stayed constant from December. At 31.3 years, the average age for millennial borrowers increased from 30.6 the year before and 30.4 month-to-month. Married individuals represented approximately 55% of loans closed, while 45% of primary borrowers were single. Nearly 60% were male, 31% female and 10% unspecified. The average loan amount jumped to $211,218 from $196,140 year-over-year and $206,572 from December.”

Fannie Mae Completes Its First Two CIRT Transactions Of 2020.

DS News (3/5, Welborn) reports that after completing its third CAS transaction of 2020, Fannie Mae has now “completed its first two Credit Insurance Risk Transfer transactions” of the year. According to DS News, “CIRT 2020-1 and CIRT 2020-2 together cover $30.7 billion in unpaid principal balance of 21-year to 30-year original term fixed rate loans, previously acquired from July 2019 through October 2019. Combined, these two deals transferred nearly $1 billion of mortgage credit risk, as part of Fannie Mae’s ongoing effort to reduce taxpayer risk by increasing the role of private capital in the mortgage market. To date, Fannie Mae has committed to acquire approximately $11.6 billion of insurance coverage on $435.2 billion of single-family loans through the CIRT program, measured at the time of issuance, for both post-acquisition (bulk) and front-end transactions.”

Fannie Mae Commits To Invest Up To $50M In LIHTC Fund For Disaster Areas.

DS News (3/5, Welborn) reports that Fannie Mae “has announced that it has committed to invest up to $50 million” in a LIHTC fund that will “support properties in disaster-stricken areas” as part of the GSE’s “ongoing commitment to affordable rental housing in underserved markets.” According to Affordable Housing Finance (3/5, 32K), “The Federal Housing Finance Agency approved Fannie Mae’s reentry into the LIHTC market as an equity investor in November 2017.” Since then, Fannie has committed “over $1 billion to LIHTC investments through a diverse group of funds in high-needs areas, including rural and Native American locations.” The GSE has also supported “a range of projects for formerly homeless families and individuals and other targeted populations, as well as mixed-income tax-exempt bond transactions.”

MFA Financial Preps Its First Non-Agency MBS Backed By Expanded-Credit Loans.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (3/5, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports, “MFA Financial is set to issue its first non-agency MBS backed by expanded-credit loans.” According to IMF, “All of the collateral in the $406.9 million security was originated by Citadel Servicing Corp., which was recently acquired by HPS Investment Partners.”

MBA Cancels Technology Solutions Conference & Expo Over Coronavirus Worries.

HousingWire (3/5, Lane, 23K) reports that the Mortgage Bankers Association “announced Thursday that it is canceling its upcoming Technology Solutions Conference & Expo in California over health concerns” regarding the outbreak of the coronavirus. The MBA said on its website, “MBA is closely following the spread and impact of coronavirus within the context of a large number of upcoming MBA conferences, meetings and MBA Education event. Rest assured that the health and safety of our members, students, and attendees is our top priority.”

ATTOM: Home-Flipping Activity Rose In 2019 Even As Returns Fell.

HousingWire (3/5, Falcon, 23K) reports that although home-flipping profits “slipped over the past few months...activity continues to increase.”

A "new report from ATTOM Data Solutions" indicates that US home flipping has "increased to an eight-year high in 2019," even as "returns have dropped to an eight-year low." ATTOM Chief Product Officer Todd Teta said, "Home-flipping profits across the U.S. dropped again in 2019 as the business of buying and selling houses absorbed its worst year since the housing market was mired in the fallout from the Great Recession. This happened as the cost of buying properties continued to rise faster than gains on resale. That's not to say that the home-flipping industry is tanking or losing its allure for investors because home flipping rates are higher than they've been in eight years. But profits did continue to decline again for investors."

Housing Tech Rundown Features Updates On Snapdocs, Informative Research, Roostify.

In its latest Housing Tech Rundown, HousingWire (3/5, Lloyd, 23K) reports that digital closing platform Snapdocs "announced an integration with the Ellie Mae Digital Lending Platform," fintech Informative Research announced a partner with Fincity, and digital lending platform Roostify "announced that TD Bank has added its home equity solution to the bank's digital home lending platform." M Report (3/5, Albanese) provides additional coverage of Snapdocs' partnership with Ellie Mae.

Column: Housing Industry Needs To Adapt Messaging To Shifting Idea Of The "American Dream."

HousingWire (3/5, 23K) columnist Kristin Messerli says that homebuying is "a unique example of an industry that has largely remained undisrupted through the drastic changes in technology and lifestyle over the last few decades." According to her, "The digital mortgage experience is improving rapidly and many companies are adopting new technology, but the messaging and approach to homeownership seems to be the same as it was in the 1960s. The American Dream still consists of a house in the suburbs with 2.5 children." Last week, Fannie Mae VP Jonathan Lawless said, "The average home was built 35-40 years ago and many homes well before then, but all when the needs were very different. Most of the homes were built in a timeframe when we had totally different demographic living in them."

Researchers Say Reverse Mortgages Still Considered A "Last Resort" To Prep For Retirement.

M Report (3/5, Albanese) says that a "recent report from Reverse Mortgage Daily (3/2, Clow, 43K) highlights a research paper by Peter Knaak, Margaret Miller, and Fiona Stewart on behalf of the World Bank's Finance, Competitiveness and Innovation Global Practice." According to M Report, "Their research claims that even though reverse mortgages could potentially heighten in demand as the world's population ages, such mortgages are still seen as a 'last resort' versus a real option in preparation for retirement." This is "mostly attributed to limited supply and demand, as well as a limited number of providers."

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (3/6, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.767 percent.

Dollar Falls To Yen And Euro.

Reuters \(IND\) (3/5, Cole) reports, "The dollar nursed savage losses against the yen and euro on Friday as a plunge in US yields to record lows wiped out the currency's single greatest attraction for investors – higher interest rates." The dollar sank "to a six-month low on the yen at 105.96 having shed 1.2% overnight." Meanwhile, the euro was "at $1.1226 on Friday having surged 0.9% overnight and a world away from the February trough of $1.0775."

Gold Rises.

Reuters \(IND\) (3/6, Sistla) reports, "Gold rose on Friday, on track to post its biggest weekly gain since late October 2011, over fears that the global coronavirus outbreak could deal a hard blow to the world economy." Spot gold "was up 0.2% to $1,674.20 per ounce by 0813 GMT," while US gold futures "rose 0.4% to $1,675.20."

Oil Drops 1%.

Reuters (3/6, Zhang) reports, "Oil slid 1% on Friday as worries about global oil demand and economic growth slowdown caused by the coronavirus outbreak were heightened by concern over non-OPEC crude producers not yet having agreed to cut output further to support prices." Brent crude "fell 49 cents, or 0.98%, to $49.50 per barrel by 0735 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate "was down 46 cents, or 1%, at $45.44 per barrel."

DOJ Releases Guidance On Gathering Threat Intel From Dark Web.

MeriTalk (3/5) reports, "The Department of Justice (DoJ) is offering up a list of legal considerations for industry to consider when gathering online cyber threat intelligence and possibly viewing or acquiring data from illicit sources." MeriTalk adds, "The document was prepared by DoJ's Cybersecurity Unit (CsU) in response to questions from industry, and is intended to 'help organizations adopt effective cybersecurity practices,' and make sure they do that legally. 'This document focuses on information security practitioners' cyber threat intelligence gathering efforts that involve online forums in which computer crimes are discussed and planned and stolen data is bought and sold,' the documents reads. 'It also contemplates situations in which private actors attempt to purchase malware, security vulnerabilities, or their own stolen data – or stolen data belonging to others with the data owners' authorization – in 'Dark Markets.'"

Government Computer News (3/5, Johnson) reports, "Researchers have many questions about the legality of cybersecurity intelligence gathering. For instance, passively lurking on online forums to gather intelligence – even information that touches on criminal conduct – is usually legal as long as the researcher is using legitimate credentials. However, DOJ said using exploits or 'other techniques' to access or gather information from the server or system on which the forum operates could be viewed as gaining unauthorized access. More active actions, like posing questions or directly soliciting advice, can also present a 'marginal legal risk' to researchers depending on whether their interaction furthers a crime." JD Supra (3/5, 3K) also reports.

Lankford Says US Boosts Election Security As Russia Interference Continues.

The Edmond (OK) Sun (3/5, 29K) reports Sen. James Lankford (R-OK) said Russia continues its effort to interfere with American elections. He said, "A lot has changed in election security from 2016 to 2018, and now certainly to 2020." Lankford "said that whether progressive, moderate, or conservative, Oklahomans don't want their votes tampered with by a foreign government. Russia is responsible for attempting two distinct types of election interference." Lankford told The Edmond Sun, "One is the tampering – trying to get into devices. The other one is false information and influence." Lankford "added that millions of dollars has been invested into election security both in Washington, DC, and among the 50 states, including $5 million in federal dollars to Oklahoma."

T-Mobile Discloses "Sophisticated Attack" May Have Exposed Customers' Personal Information.

The Washington Times (3/5, Blake, 492K) reports T-Mobile has begun "informing its wireless customers that a recently detected data breach may have resulted in the compromise of their personally identifiable information." Notices posted on T-Mobile's website "says the telecommunications company recently became aware of a 'sophisticated attack' that could have potentially exposed customer records." The notices read, "Our Cybersecurity team recently identified and shut down a malicious attack against our email vendor that led to unauthorized access to certain T-Mobile employee email accounts, some of which contained account information for T-Mobile customers and employees."

US Cyber Command Determining Appropriate Structure To Achieve Mission.

Politico (3/5, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that US Cyber Command "said will work to determine if its Cyber Mission Force is constructed properly to meet all of its recent missions." Army Gen. Paul Nakasone "said during a House Armed Services subpanel hearing. The 133-team, roughly 6,200-person cadre of personnel that conduct cyber operations was conceived in 2012 and since then has taken on election support, combating foreign influence operations and defending the data and weapons systems of the armed forces." He said, "What we are doing, given all of those missions, is, through a series of exercises this year, looking to gather data. What is the right size force that we need? Obviously as a commander I would tell you that I never have enough forces. But what I do need is I need the ability to show that in data."

Federal Computer Week (3/5, Williams, 263K) reports the head of Cyber Command is "preparing to ask for more personnel as the organization's election security role expands and cybersecurity threats evolve." During a March 4 budget hearing of the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Intelligence and Emerging Threats and Capabilities, Nakasone "said the organization is 'gathering data' to determine whether it has the right number of personnel to match current responsibilities." He said, "We see across our services the necessity, not just to defend networks, but also to be very careful in defending our data and our weapons systems."

Nakasone Prioritizes National Election Security. ExecutiveGov (3/5) reports Nakasone "considers election security as his priority and said federal agencies are ready to address potential foreign interferences." He discussed this priority "to a panel during a House Armed Services subcommittee hearing that took place Wednesday." Nakasone "said his command and other agencies have been coordinating on election threats, making the 2018 elections seem like a 'pickup game' in comparison with Tuesday's primary election."

DOD Official Says Canadian, US Military Equipment Vulnerable To Cyberhacking.

The National Post (CAN) (3/5, 75K) reports top defense officials said in Ottawa Thursday that Canada and the US are collaborating "to make their high-tech military equipment less hackable, but they have a lot of work to do." Speaking to the Ottawa Conference on Security and Defence, Ellen Lord, the US undersecretary of defence for acquisition and sustainment, "suggested US military officials have long made excuses for not addressing the vulnerabilities in their equipment." Lord said, "That is no longer acceptable. We are going to start shutting equipment down if they are not brought up to standards because every day we see the intel, we see how much has been compromised in what we do." Lord's comments follow "a growing recognition about the extent to which cyberattacks threaten not only targets such as computer networks, but all manner of devices – including fighter jets and warships – in an increasingly connected world."

House Approves Bill Banning TikTok On TSA Devices.

The Hill (3/5, Miller, 2.98M) reports the House on Thursday "approved a bill that would ban TSA officials from downloading social media app TikTok onto government-issued devices." The ban was approved "as part of the Rights for Transportation Security Officers Act, which a bipartisan majority of the House passed by a vote of 230-171." The ban on TikTok "was added to the bill by an amendment approved unanimously." Rep. Abigail Spanberger (D-VA), the lead sponsor of the amendment, "said on the House floor ahead of the vote that TikTok 'presents a significant counterintelligence threat.'"

In reaction to the closer oversight, the Wall Street Journal (3/6, Wells, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports TikTok announced that it had hired a chief information security officer in an effort to reassure regulators and lawmakers that it is effectively protecting users' data. The new cybersecurity official, Roland Cloutier, arrives at TikTok from ADP, where he was the top security official at the payroll-services provider. Reuters (3/5, Wang) reports, TikTok's new cyber security expert Roland Cloutier is its first chief information security officer and will make him "the most senior official in the company in charge of cyber security." Prior to ADP, Cloutier spent more than "a decade serving in the United States Air Force, Department of Defense and Department of Veterans Affairs."

UK Conservative MPs Will Seek To Ban Huawei Equipment From 5G Network.

The Financial Times (3/5, Payne, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports senior British Conservative MPs intend to approve a law next week blocking the inclusion of Huawei equipment in the UK's telecoms networks, including 5G infrastructure, after 2022.

Trump Administration Reviewing Removal Of Military, Intelligence Assets From UK Over Huawei Deal.

National Review (3/5, Hoonhout, 731K) reports the Trump Administration's National Security Council "launched a review this week of what military and intelligence assets will be withdrawn from Great Britain if the UK goes ahead with its 5G deal with Huawei." US officials "told Bloomberg's Eli Lake that the assessment is being conducted in response to Huawei 'putting smart antennas and computers run by the Chinese Communist Party all over our closest ally.'" President Trump "reportedly 'tore into' Johnson in a phone call over the deal, as the US has warned allies in the past that there would be consequences for dealing with Huawei, but has struggled to come up with 5G alternatives to the Chinese giant."

US, UK And Estonia Accuse Russia Of Cyber Attack On Georgia.

The AP (3/5) reports The US, UK and Estonia "accused Russia's military intelligence Thursday of conducting cyber attacks against the Georgian government and media websites in an attempt 'to sow discord and disrupt the lives of ordinary Georgians.'" The three countries "raised the issue at the Security Council after Georgia's ambassador wrote to the UN's most powerful body in February about the large-scale attack in October." Estonian Ambassador Sven Jurgenson read a statement afterward, "saying the cyber attacks 'are part of Russia's long-running campaign of hostile and destabilizing activity against Georgia and are part of a wider pattern of malign activity.'" The three Western countries "said the attacks demonstrate 'a continuing pattern of reckless ... cyber operations against a number of countries' by Russia's GRU military intelligence."

Federal Reserve

Williams: Central Bankers Aligned In Fighting Coronavirus Fallout.

The New York Times (3/5, Smialek, 18.61M) reports New York Fed President John C. Williams "made clear on Thursday evening that officials viewed the emergency rate cut they approved earlier this week as part of an international push to cushion the economy as the coronavirus threatens global growth." To the Times, Williams' statement "is significant, in part because global policymakers were criticized for failing to satisfy market expectations for a coordinated rate cut among major economies." The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Reuters (3/6, Marte), and Fox Business (3/5, De Lea, 1.73M) also report.

Kaplan To Reassess Fed Plan To Wind Down Bond Purchases.

Reuters (3/6, Saphir) reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan "said on Thursday that he will be reviewing whether the Fed ought to continue with its plan to curtail bond purchases and repo operations this spring, after the Fed earlier this week delivered an emergency rate cut to soften the impact of a slowdown due to the spread of the coronavirus." Kaplan said in comments to reporters, "I would not at this point talk about making changes to that plan, but I think we will have to continue to monitor it and assess it, and we have time to do that." Bloomberg (3/6, 4.73M), The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), and MarketWatch (3/5, Robb, 1.67M) also report.

Kashkari: Fed's Emergency Cut Appropriate, Could Presage Further Cuts If Coronavirus Impact Worse Than Expected.

Reuters (3/6) reports Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari "said on Thursday that he supported the U.S. central bank's emergency interest rate cut this week, and added the Fed could cut rates further if the impact of the coronavirus is worse than expected." Kashkari said, "This was an insurance that we took out because nobody knows how bad the virus is going to be," adding that the uncertainty would likely cause companies to ramp down their operations.

Regulators Postpone CRA Conference Citing Coronavirus.

American Banker (3/5, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Federal Reserve, OCC, and FDIC "are postponing next week's National Interagency Community Reinvestment Conference due to growing health concerns about the coronavirus, the agencies said Thursday." The biennial conference was set to take place in Denver from March 9 to 12 and be co-hosted with the Fed's regional banks in San Francisco, Kansas City and Chicago. The event was meant to provide updates on the Community Reinvestment Act reform, as well as "compliance training for banks and discussions on new community development trends and issues."

Reuters (3/5, Dunsmuir) reports that in a statement, the agencies said they "jointly made this decision out of an abundance of caution to help safeguard the health and well-being of the more than 1,300 registered conference participants."

Bloomberg Law (3/5, Subscription Publication, 4K) and HousingWire (3/5, Howley, 23K) provide similar coverage.

Major Banks' Demand For Fed Liquidity Stayed Strong Thursday.

The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports major banks' demand for liquidity from the Fed stayed strong Thursday, though demand for overnight loans reduced slightly. The Fed's overnight repos totaled $87.36 billion, under the $100 billion the central bank was ready to offer. The overall level of repos fell by $17.6 billion to $177.4 billion due to the expiration of old operations. Reuters (3/5, Pierog) also reports.

Financial Regulatory Agencies

FDIC To Offer 1,200 Voluntary Buyouts To Thwart Retirement Wave.

American Banker (3/5, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the FDIC "will offer 1,200 of its permanent employees – representing 20% of the agency's permanent workforce – voluntary early retirement and separation buyout packages, the agency said Thursday." The move is intended "to thwart the FDIC's coming retirement wave and ensure better continuity in its workforce as it prepares to confront future challenges to the banking industry." The agency's inspector general predicted in a February report that more than 42 percent of FDIC staff will be eligible to retire within five years, warning that a wave of retirements could leave the agency "short-staffed in the event of a banking crisis."

Internal Revenue Service

Former Head Of IRS Criminal Investigation To Lead New Fraud Enforcement Office.

Law360 (3/5, Moroses, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the IRS on Thursday "announced that the former head of its criminal investigation unit will be the director of its newly formed fraud enforcement office."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Announces Proposals Regarding Licensing Requirements For National Banks.

American Banker (3/5, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the OCC on Thursday "announced a flurry of new regulatory relief proposals" regarding licensing requirements for banks "seeking to engage in certain corporate transactions or other activities." Proposed changes "include allowing national banks to follow certain procedures now more relevant for state-chartered banks, expanding an expedited review process related to a bank's operating subsidiaries, and permitting banks to invest in certain entities that have not agreed to OCC oversight, among other things."

The ABA Banking Journal (3/5) provides similar coverage.

OCC Publishes Third-Party Risk Management FAQs.

The ABA Banking Journal (3/5) reports the OCC on Thursday "clarified its expectations for banks' management of relationships with third-party providers, including fintech firms, cloud services providers and data aggregators." The OCC "published a set of FAQs intended to supplement 2013 guidance on third-party risk management and reflect evolving industry trends."

Waters Calls On Wells Fargo Board Members To Resign.

The New York Times (3/5, Flitter, 18.61M) reports Rep. Maxine Waters (D-CA) on Thursday called for two members of Wells Fargo's board of directors to resign, saying they neglected their duties. Waters said Wells Fargo directors Betsy Duke and James Quigley "had a clear dereliction of duty as board members." Waters' call came the day after the House Financial Services Committee "released details of an investigation of Wells Fargo," which "found that senior Wells Fargo leaders took a cavalier approach to dealing with the bank's problems." Waters also told reporters, "I'm looking very closely and considering whether or not there will be a referral to the Department of Justice about that." Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting in a statement Thursday called Wells Fargo's behavior and its failure to fix its problems "unacceptable for this or any other bank." Otting added that he was "encouraged" by early actions taken by CEO Charles Scharf.

Reuters (3/5, Moise, Schroeder) The Washington Post (3/5, Merle, 14.2M), and The Hill (3/5, Lane, 2.98M) provide similar coverage.

OCC Clashes With Waters' Staff Over Wells Fargo Probe. Politico (3/5, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports that a yearlong congressional probe into Wells Fargo "ended in a standoff" between House Financial Services Chairwoman Maxine Waters (D-CA) and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency "over the potential public release of sensitive information." The OCC "warned" Waters "in a letter Wednesday just before the release of her findings that committee staff had ignored the agency's concerns about disclosing information that could affect OCC probes, enforcement actions related to former Wells Fargo executives and supervision of the bank." OCC Chief Operating Officer Morris Morgan "said in the letter to Waters that the House committee staff had argued that it was in the public's interest to know the internal details of how Wells Fargo is supervised." But that justification "ignores the fact that the best interest of the public is also served by the OCC being able to perform its supervisory work without the disruptions that will inevitably flow from a disclosure of this depth and breadth," Morgan wrote. Comptroller Joseph Otting "did not publicly weigh in on the dispute."

House Report Reveals How Regulators Worked To Oust Ex-Wells Fargo CEO Tim Sloan. American Banker (3/5, Wack, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "At a congressional hearing in March 2019, Wells Fargo CEO Tim Sloan testified that the bank was in compliance with provisions of an 11-month-old regulatory order." The next day, OCC staff "shared copies of the hearing transcript and questioned the accuracy of Sloan's testimony, according to a new report from House Democrats." In an internal email, a senior agency official asked, "Have we told them they are in compliance?" Another official "responded that the San Francisco bank was not in compliance with one of two portions of its remediation plans." Sloan was out as CEO less than two weeks later, and while the bank said Sloan decided to retire, the report "reveals previously undisclosed moves that regulators made behind the scenes to force a change at the top" of Wells Fargo. The report "confirms long-standing suspicions that the OCC helped to oust Sloan, though it also shows that the Federal Reserve Board played a significant role."

Law360 (3/5, Subscription Publication, 8K) and The Hill (3/5, Lane, 2.98M) provide general coverage of the House report.

Regulators' Madden Fixes Prompt Calls For National Rate Cap.

American Banker (3/6, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports on the lack of progress in Congress on setting a national rate cap. However, "calls for a national rate cap from progressive members have picked up in response to proposals by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. that dealt with loans sold across state lines." In response to Madden v. Midland Funding, the agencies "clarified that when a national bank sells a loan, the same interest rate can survive to both ends of the transaction."

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"What Schumer Needs To Learn From His Dangerous Supreme Court Comments." The Washington Post (3/5, 14.2M) editorializes that Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer yesterday "walked back the offensive comments" Thursday, saying "he 'shouldn't have used the words I did.' That is an understatement." The Post adds "the negative reaction" to Schumer's remarks "was swift and ran the gamut from liberal Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe to...Roberts Jr., who immediately, publicly – and justifiably – responded that 'threatening statements of this sort from the highest levels of government are not only inappropriate, they are dangerous.'" To the Post, "Schumer and his fellow Democrats need to learn from this episode," and he "should remember the next time he's tempted to fight the president with his own methods."

"The McGahn Ruling Could Shred Congress's Ability To Oversee The Executive Branch." The Washington Post (3/5, 14.2M) says that if the ruling from the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit "that it could not order former White House counsel Donald McGahn to appear before the House Judiciary Committee, though the committee issued a subpoena that Mr. McGahn flouted, on President Trump's orders," is allowed to stand, it "would shred Congress's ability to oversee the executive branch." The Post argues that although the court "refused to act, to the benefit of the president, under the legal doctrine that courts should avoid involving themselves in political controversies," the "the legal question in this case is simple: Is the subpoena valid? The courts should answer, not duck."

"China Is Using The Cover Of Coronavirus To Escalate Its Repression In Hong Kong." The Washington Post (3/5, 14.2M) editorializes that the pro-democracy demonstrations "that rocked Hong Kong last year have lulled, in part because the city is under partial lockdown to prevent the spread of the coronavirus. You'd think Chinese Communist authorities and their hugely unpopular representatives in the city would breathe a sigh of relief and focus on keeping the population healthy. Instead, they chose last week to escalate the repression of opposition leaders."

Wall Street Journal.

"Big Labor's Big Crooks." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) puts the charges against the former UAW official in the context of what it sees as widespread corruption with the Labor movement, indicating that since the beginning of 2019 at least 60 union officials have either been convicted or pleaded guilty to union-related crimes.

"Free Speech For Lawyers." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Supreme Court on Friday will consider a petition to extend its 2018 Janus decision that struck down mandatory public union fees in a matter involving state bar association dues. While the Journal supports extending the reasoning behind the Janus decision to protect the First Amendment rights of lawyers, as well as in all cases in which governments require individuals to join organizations that engage in political speech, it argues the Court should wait for a stronger case to decide on the constitutionality of state bar association dues.

“Macron Doesn’t Blink On Pension Reform.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) supports French President Emmanuel Macron’s effort to reform the country’s public pensions, which he has been pursuing in the face of fierce opposition. If Macron stands firm, the Journal says, he has the opportunity to reshape the French people’s relationship with work and help the French economy as well.

“Cowboy Regulators Need To Be Lassoed.” The Wall Street Journal (3/5, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes there is some confusion over whether the Department of Agriculture is moving forward with new cattle-identification requirements, despite President Trump’s executive orders seeking to restrict agencies from issuing regulatory guidance. With ranchers turning to a federal judge, the Journal says the court should act to restore regulatory clarity.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Conan O'Brien: "Elizabeth Warren announced she's ending her presidential bid. Yeah. Apparently America isn't ready to have a President who is only 70."

Conan O'Brien: "Last night, President Trump appeared on Fox News and says he has, quote, 'a hunch' the coronavirus isn't as bad as health experts say. And, ladies and gentlemen, I have a hunch we're all gonna die."

Trevor Noah: [On Sen. Elizabeth Warren commenting on if gender was a factor in the presidential campaign] "Elizabeth Warren has a good point, yeah, because, like it or not, there was some truth she dropped there. A woman addressing sexism or ignoring it while running for President is either going to be seen as a whiner, or living on another planet. Which is unfair, especially since the President is already a whiner who lives on another planet."

Trevor Noah: "Whether you think sexism played a role or not, you have to admit it's pretty strange that a race that started with a broad tap industry of candidates is now basically down to two old white men. They're so old, no matter which one wins, Donald Trump will be the youngest person in the race. Think about that."

Trevor Noah: "And now the big question is, who is Elizabeth Warren going to endorse? Biden or Bernie? Is she going to swipe right or really far left?"

Trevor Noah: "Yes, good news! Trump has a hunch that coronavirus is not as deadly as people think. In fact, he personally has a feeling that the death rate is lower than one percent. ... Honestly, I don't know why Trump is doing this. Why is he being, like, it's not that bad, acting like the virus is no big deal. No one is blaming Trump for coronavirus. People just don't want him ignoring it like it will just go away. This is a global pandemic, not his son Eric."

Jimmy Kimmel: [On Pres. Trump saying he has a 'hunch' that the coronavirus is a mild illness] "Donald Trump has a hunch. Here's thing. If you're President of the United States, you don't go with hunches. You have the world's greatest scientists, you go with them, you listen to them. The only hunch you should have is the one in your back when you're leaning over that 12-piece bucket of KFC."

Stephen Colbert: "Yet another candidate has dropped out of the Democratic race, and we're getting a clearer picture of America's future, and it looks a lot like America's past."

Stephen Colbert: "Warren is gone now. That's it. She's out of the race. Further proof that America cannot have nice things."

Stephen Colbert: "[Warren] had a plan for everything: a healthcare plan, an immigration plan, a student loan plan. And her most popular plan of all: knee-capping Michael Bloomberg with a croquet mallet."

Stephen Colbert: [On Sen. Warren's comment that the Democratic party only has two lanes] "Yes, despite her best effort, that Democratic road still has just two lanes, and two drivers who probably should have their keys taken away."

Stephen Colbert: [On Sen. Warren saying that she had to break pinky promises] "Are you happy America? You made Elizabeth Warren break her pinky promise. Now she has to hope to die and stick a needle in her eye."

Stephen Colbert: "So now it's down to Biden and Sanders. Showdown at high noon, right before they both eat dinner."

Stephen Colbert: "Coronavirus continues to spread...so last night, Donald Trump went on Fox News to lie about everything. Specifically, he lied about the most recent World Health Organization estimate that the global death rate of the coronavirus is 3.4%. ... Science is not based on hunches. That's why Bill Nye the Science Guy is more successful than his rival Phil Munch, Man of Hunch."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump backed up his fake hunch with fake math. ... This isn't 'The Art of the Deal!' You can't negotiate with science!"

Stephen Colbert: [On Pres. Trump saying people with coronavirus go to work and are fine] "Go to work? Maybe some of them do go to work, but they shouldn't go to work. Because that's a good way to spread a pandemic. Trump's like the mayor in 'Jaws,' but worse. (As Trump) 'Don't listen to the sheriff. The beaches are open for summer! A lot of people going to get attacked by a shark, but a lot of people aren't. You never hear about the hundreds of thousands of people who don't get chomped up. Some of them will get their leg eaten off. But they'll come to shore, and they'll get better just by sitting around. Their legs will grow back; I have a hunch.'"

Stephen Colbert: "For once, Congress has stepped up, because first the House – and then today, the Senate – both passed an $8.3 billion emergency spending package to respond to the coronavirus outbreak. Dang, with that kind of money, you could go on Amazon and buy six face masks!"

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, you guys, earlier today, Elizabeth Warren announced that she is dropping out of the presidential race. Yeah, after a lot of thought and reflection, Warren realized she was overqualified for the job."

Jimmy Fallon: "Elizabeth Warren suspended her campaign. Most Democrats were pretty sad, while Mike Bloomberg threw a party and got back in the race."

Jimmy Fallon: "Now that Warren is out of the race, Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders are both trying to win her support. That's right, two guys in their late 70s are fighting over a woman. This doesn't sound like an election; it sounds like an episode of 'The Golden Girls.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, ahead of Michigan's primary, Joe Biden was just endorsed by Detroit's top two newspapers. Yeah, Biden and newspapers have something in common. They both can't believe they're still around."

Jimmy Fallon: "But after a disappointing finish on Super Tuesday, Bernie Sanders says he needs more young voters. And keep in mind, if you're Bernie Sanders, pretty much every voter is a young voter."

Seth Meyers: "Sen. Elizabeth Warren announced today she's dropping out of the presidential race. Warren was incredibly competent, pragmatic, intelligent, and well-spoken. In other words, she never had a chance."

Seth Meyers: "That's right, Elizabeth Warren is dropping out of the presidential race. And it kind of feels like when your favorite teacher retires. You're sad to see her go, but also happy for her because she doesn't have to deal with your annoying classmates anymore."

Novel Coronavirus Outbreak Exposes Gaps In US Healthcare System's Ability To Effectively Respond To Epidemics.

The Washington Post (3/4, Rowland, Whoriskey, 14.2M) reports "the growing coronavirus outbreak in the United States is revealing serious gaps in the health system's ability to respond to a major epidemic, forcing hospitals and doctors to improvise emergency plans daily, even as they remain uncertain how bad the crisis will get." Nursing homes are "emerging as especially vulnerable to the virus, with more than a million residents, many of them frail. Many of the facilities have a history of struggling to contain even mundane infections." However, "the gaps are spread out across the country and affect medical facilities of all types."

TIME (3/4, Abrams, 18.47M) reports that "as government officials race to limit the spread of the new coronavirus, fundamental elements of the U.S. health care system – deductibles, networks, and a complicated insurance bureaucracy – that already make it tough for many Americans to afford medical care under normal conditions will likely make the outbreak worse." Although "the government will cover the cost of testing for Medicaid and Medicare patients, and for tests administered at federal, state and local public health labs, it's unclear how much patients will be charged for testing at academic or commercial facilities, or whether those facilities must be in patients' insurance networks."

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Armour, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that US officials and legislators, concerned about the novel coronavirus' spread, are trying to fix the country's healthcare system's gaps that may worsen the outbreak by keeping people from being tested for the virus, such as high medical care costs and a lack of paid sick days and insurance. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on Tuesday that Administration officials are starting to consider measures for supporting workers without paid sick leave. The San Francisco (CA) Chronicle (3/4, Gardiner, 2.67M) also reports.

Mnuchin: Trump Administration Taking "Whole-Of-Government Approach" To Combating Coronavirus.

CNBC (3/4, 3.62M) reported on their broadcast that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, in comments to reporters before a Congressional hearing Wednesday, said, "Most Americans who are healthy, even if they get this virus, they will be fine, and we're taking a whole-of-government approach." Mnuchin said he thought "the Fed's action yesterday was very precautionary, and the right thing to do." Mnuchin added, "I'd be very comfortable getting on a commercial plane today if I were personally traveling."

Mnuchin: Marijuana Businesses' Cash-Only Nature Poses Challenge For IRS.

The Hill (3/4, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said Wednesday that the cash-only nature of marijuana businesses poses challenges for the IRS." Mnuchin, speaking at a House Appropriations subcommittee hearing, said, "This creates significant problems for the IRS." The Hill says members of Congress from both parties "asked Mnuchin at the hearing about marijuana banking issues." Rep. Charlie Crist (D-FL) said during the hearing, "I'm hearing from financial institutions large and small alike that they still face uncertainty over whether they can provide financial services to legally operating marijuana businesses." Rep. David Joyce (R-OH) "asked Mnuchin if the Treasury Department would keep the Appropriations Committee informed about the challenges it faces on the cannabis banking issue." Mnuchin "declined to take a policy position but said that cash-only businesses create a concern for the IRS." Mnuchin said, "We have to build cash rooms to take in large amounts of cash where people owe us taxes, because we want to collect the taxes, and those entities are not banked. And I would say that creates risk to our IRS employees and to the people in the community." Fox Business (3/4, De Lea, 1.73M) also reports.

Mnuchin Maintains Tax Cuts Will Pay For Themselves Despite Rising Coronavirus Impact On Economy.

Business Insider (3/4, Heeb, 3.67M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said Wednesday that a $1.5 trillion Republican-led tax cut package would still pay for itself through higher economic growth, even as a coronavirus outbreak raised concerns about a potential downturn in the US and elsewhere." Mnuchin, during a House Appropriations subcommittee hearing, "was pressed on the longstanding claim that the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act would bolster enough gross domestic product growth to make up for steep losses in government revenue. Nearly every major independent forecaster has disputed that claim." Mnuchin said, "Here's the good news, this is just math," and that the Treasury Department had "internal projections" showing the economy on track to achieve the necessary growth for the tax cuts to be paid for with increased revenue. Mnuchin "acknowledged that the disruptions would affect the US economy but added that he expected a recovery in the short term."

Congress Pushes Treasury To Delay Carbon Tax Credit Requirement.

Behind a paywall and under the headline "Guidance Delay Fuels Calls For Carbon Tax Credit Extension," Law360 (3/4, Ota, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, "Delays in the U.S. Treasury's proposed regulations for an expanded carbon sequestration tax credit have sparked a drive on Capitol Hill to extend" a provisional requirement for the tax credit by one year.

Roberts Condemns Schumer's Comments Regarding Gorsuch And Kavanaugh.

Media coverage was extensive of comments made by Senate Minority Leader Schumer on Wednesday stating that Supreme Court Justices Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh would "pay the price" for their decision in an abortion case out of Louisiana. Many outlets highlighted Chief Justice John Roberts' response to Schumer's remarks, calling it a "rare" and "highly unusual" rebuke.

The Washington Post (3/4, A1, Barnes, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports Roberts "issued a rare rebuke of a sitting member of Congress on Wednesday, chastising [Schumer] for saying at [a] rally outside the Supreme Court that President Trump's two nominees to the court would 'pay the price' for a vote against abortion rights." USA Today (3/4, Santucci, 10.31M) reports Roberts said in his statement that the justices "will continue to do their job, without fear or favor, from whatever quarter."

Fox News (3/4, Re, 27.59M) reports on its website that Roberts "issued a highly unusual and forceful rebuke," calling Schumer's "seemingly threatening remarks directed at Associate Justices Neal Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh 'irresponsible' and 'dangerous.'" Roberts wrote: "This morning, Senator Schumer spoke at a rally in front of the Supreme Court while a case was being argued inside. ... Senator Schumer referred to two Members of the Court by name and said he wanted to tell them that 'You have released the whirlwind, and you will pay the price. You will not know what hit you if you go forward with these awful decisions.' ... Justices know that criticism comes with the territory, but threatening statements of this sort from the highest levels of government are not only inappropriate, they are dangerous."

On ABC World News Tonight (3/4, story 6, 1:25, Muir, 7.52M), Terry Moran described it as a "sharp and extraordinary rebuke," as Roberts tries "to protect the court in these difficult times." On the CBS Evening News (3/4, story 8, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.82M), Jan Crawford reported Roberts has a history of putting forth "a strong defense of an independent judiciary" in response to criticism.

Politico (3/4, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports, "After Roberts' criticism, Schumer doubled down. A spokesman declined to apologize for the senator's remarks and argued that Roberts' rebuke undermined his own impartiality." Justin Goodman, a Schumer aide, said, "Sen. Schumer's comments were a reference to the political price Senate Republicans will pay for putting these justices on the court, and a warning that the justices will unleash a major grassroots movement on the issue of reproductive rights against the decision." He added, "For Justice Roberts to follow the right wing's deliberate misinterpretation of what Sen. Schumer said, while remaining silent when President Trump attacked Justices Sotomayor and Ginsburg last week, shows Justice Roberts does not just call balls and strikes."

The New York Times (3/4, Liptak, 18.61M) reports Schumer's comments "suggested that Democrats see a political advantage in criticizing the court, which they expect to issue consistently conservative decisions after the departure in 2018 of Justice Anthony M. Kennedy." The Washington Examiner (3/4, Gage, 448K) reports Schumer earlier in the day had accused Kavanaugh and Gorsuch of "taking away 'fundamental rights' as the Supreme Court is hearing a case about a Louisiana law that regulates abortion providers, which opponents have argued unconstitutionally limits abortion access by placing an undue burden upon those seeking abortions."

The Washington Times (3/4, Lovelace, 492K), Breitbart (3/4, Hanchett, 673K), and Townhall (3/4, Pavlich, 177K) are among the other outlets covering the comments.

Trump Calls For "Serious Action" After Schumer's Comments Targeting Supreme Court Justices. The Washington Examiner (3/4, Pearce, 448K) reports President Trump suggested Schumer "should be arrested or removed from office after the Senate minority leader threatened two Supreme Court justices." Trump tweeted on Wednesday, "There can be few things worse in a civilized, law abiding nation, than a United States Senator openly, and for all to see and hear, threatening the Supreme Court or its Justices. This is what Chuck Schumer just did. He must pay a severe price for this!" Trump also tweeted, "This is a direct & dangerous threat to the U.S. Supreme Court by Schumer. If a Republican did this, he or she would be arrested, or impeached. Serious action MUST be taken NOW!"

Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K), "As far as Schumer is concerned, it was terrible thing he said. I was amazed by it and if that were a Republican you would see really bad things happening. It is very unequal justice and it is a disgrace that he was able to say something like that."

The Washington Times (3/4, Morton, 492K) reports Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) said Schumer's comment was "beyond disgusting and dangerous." He said, "This is a stark example of how unhinged Democrats have become as they embrace the extreme ideology and tactics of the far-left. Every Democrat needs to condemn Sen. Schumer's remarks and support the rule of law. Anything less than that is unacceptable."

Hawley To Introduce Motion To Censure Schumer For "Intimidation" Of Supreme Court. The Daily Caller (3/4, Morefield, 716K) reports Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) "plans to introduce a Senate motion to censure [Schumer] for attempting to intimidate" the two justices. Hawley called Schumer's remarks "disgusting, shameful, and frankly, WEAK" before vowing to "introduce a motion to censure Schumer for his pathetic attempt at intimidation" of the Supreme Court.

WSJournal: Schumer's Comments Deserve To Be Rebuked. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) applauds Roberts for denouncing Schumer's comments, and urges all who believe in institutional democratic norms to follow in rebuking him. The Journal adds that it is confident Justices Gorsuch and Kavanaugh will disregard Schumer's threats and rule on the merits of the case.

Conservative Writers Contrast Schumer's Criticism With Past Remarks. Writing for Breitbart (3/4, 673K), Joel Pollak calls Schumer's remarks "shocking," but points out "it was also not the first time Schumer has bullied the Supreme Court." Pollak writes that in 2010, Schumer leaped up to "applaud" then-President Obama when he "rebuked the members of the Supreme Court seated before him in the State of the Union" after the Citizens United decision. According to Pollak, "for Schumer, such threats or attacks on the Court are not unusual or unprecedented – 'inappropriate' and 'dangerous' though they may be."

For the "Tipsheet" of Townhall (3/4, 177K), Julio Rosas writes Schumer "sang a different tune about attacks on judges when President Trump criticized the judge who was overseeing the case of his friend and Republican political operative Roger Stone in February." In February, Schumer "called for Roberts to speak out against Trump's words aimed at Judge Amy Berman Jackson." In a speech floor in the Senate chamber, Schumer said, "Well President Trump is once again attacking a federal judge...the nation now looks again to Chief Justice Roberts to make clear to President Trump that these attacks are unacceptable."

Roberts, Kavanaugh Could Cast Crucial Votes In Louisiana Abortion Case. The Washington Post (3/4, Barnes, Marimow, 14.2M) reports Roberts and Kavanaugh "seemed key to the outcome of the Supreme Court's consideration of a restrictive abortion law from Louisiana, with both wondering Wednesday how a 2016 decision striking down an identical law from Texas should guide their judgment." The Post says "Roberts could cast the deciding vote in the court's first examination of abortion since President Trump's two nominees joined the bench," given that the four liberals on the Court appeared "convinced that the Louisiana law is unconstitutional." The Court is "examining whether the state's 2014 law requiring doctors at abortion clinics to have admitting privileges at nearby hospitals unduly burdens women's access to abortion."

The New York Times (3/4, Liptak, 18.61M) reports that Wednesday's arguments "yielded few clues about whether the justices are prepared to uphold a Louisiana law that its opponents say would leave the state with only one doctor in a single clinic authorized to provide abortions." Roberts and Kavanaugh, whose votes may be crucial, "focused their questions on whether they were bound by a 2016 decision that struck down an identical Texas law." The Times says, "Only Justice Samuel A. Alito Jr. asked questions consistently supportive of the Louisiana law. Justices Clarence Thomas and Neil M. Gorsuch asked no questions."

The Washington Times (3/4, Swoyer, 492K) reports both Roberts and Kavanaugh "wanted to know whether the benefits and impact of the safety regulation vary from state to state." Meanwhile, "the four Democratic-appointed justices were in lockstep, suggesting there is no medical need for the increased requirements placed on abortion providers."

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Kendall, Bravin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the suit was filed by two physicians and an abortion clinic who contend the law seeks to prevent abortions and is harmful to women. For its part, Louisiana argues that the law's restrictions aim to safeguard patients' health.

Politico (3/4, Ollstein, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports "the court also took up the separate matter of whether the abortion clinics and doctors challenging the law have legal standing." The Court's left wing "warned that embracing that stance would upend a half century of jurisprudence in abortion cases." Alito "rallied behind Louisiana's arguments on that point, contending it was strange that doctors and not patients were the ones filing suit." However, Roberts and Kavanaugh "did not weigh in on the standing issue, raising doubts about whether a majority of the court is prepared to make a major shift in how the courts deal with abortion litigation."

CQ Roll Call (3/4, Raman, 154K) reports "a decision is expected before the current term ends in June, which could stir interest in abortion as the presidential campaign heats up."

Broyde: Ginsburg Should Recuse Herself From Cases Related To Trump. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Michael J. Broyde of Emory University argues Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg should recuse herself from matters related to President Trump because of her blatant bias against the President. Broyde points to public interviews in 2016 in which Ginsburg effectively campaigned against Trump by asserting that he was not fit for office.

Media Analyses: Stocks Bounce Back On Biden's Super Tuesday Performance.

Reuters (3/4, Singh, Shivdas) reports that in trading on Wednesday, the Dow Jones Industrial Average and the S&P 500 both gained more than four percent. Reuters says Joe Biden's "strong showing in the 'Super Tuesday' primary contests jolted healthcare stocks and upbeat economic data helped soothe worries about the coronavirus impact." The S&P 500 "gained 126.72 points, or 4.22%, to 3,130.09 and the Nasdaq Composite added 334.00 points, or 3.85%, to 9,018.09." ABC World News Tonight (3/4, story 7, 0:20, Muir, 7.52M) reported the Dow climbed "more than 1,100 points, up 4.5 percent."

The New York Times (3/4, 18.61M) also says "investors responded to...Biden's strong showing in the Democratic Party's primaries." According to the Times, "Though the spreading coronavirus and its impact on global economic growth has dominated financial headlines for the past two weeks, Wall Street has also worried about" plans by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "to take on banks and tax stock and bond trades." The Times adds that Sanders "aims to eliminate most private health insurance as part of a single-payer health care plan. Health care stocks led the gains on Wednesday, rising more than 5 percent. Shares of insurers like UnitedHealth Group, Cigna and Anthem Health rose more than 10 percent."

Axios (3/4, Brown, 521K) reports on Wednesday, "Congress struck a bigger-than-expected emergency funding package to stem the coronavirus outbreak." The Washington Post (3/4, Telford, Heath, 14.2M) reports the International Monetary Fund on Wednesday "announced that it is proposing $50 billion in emergency funding to combat the coronavirus for low-income and emerging market countries."

Reuters (3/4, Culp) reports, "On the economic front, data showed stronger-than-expected private sector hiring, and the services sector expanding at its fastest pace in a year, according to reports from ADP and the Institute for Supply Management, respectively." Also, the Mortgage Bankers Association "reported that the average 30-year fixed contract mortgage rate fell last week to a seven-year low."

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, A1, Webb, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports some international stock markets gained in early trading Wednesday, after a sell off in US markets a day earlier when an emergency interest-rate cut failed to calm investors' worries about the economic cost of the coronavirus epidemic.

The Washington Post (3/4, Telford, Heath, 14.2M), Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M), and Reuters (3/4, Dunsmuir) also cover Wednesday's market news.

WSJournal: Biden's Victories Revitalizes Ailing Market. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) observes that health stocks, including insurers and hospital chains, popped on Wednesday as the threat of Sanders' Medicare for All diminished with Biden's victories. The Journal says the market's volatility over the past two weeks shows that investors were just as worried about a socialist President in office as they are about the coronavirus epidemic.

Saudis And Russia Disagree On Proposed OPEC+ Production Cut.

Reuters (3/4, El Gamal, Lawler, Astakhova) reports from Vienna that "Saudi Arabia and other OPEC members struggled on Wednesday to win support from Russia to join them in additional oil output cuts in a bid to prop up prices which have tumbled by a fifth this year because of the coronavirus outbreak. A panel of several ministers from OPEC, Russia and other producers failed to clinch a preliminary agreement for additional cuts, OPEC sources said." According to Reuters, Russia "proposed keeping existing cuts by the group known as OPEC+ until the end of the second quarter." However, Saudi Arabia "wants extra cuts of 1 million to 1.5 million barrels per day (bpd) for the second quarter while keeping existing cuts of 2.1 million bpd in place until the end of 2020."

Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M) reports that the OPEC+ Joint Ministerial Monitoring Committee, "which oversees the accord between the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and its allies, didn't choose between the Russian and Saudi proposals. ... Instead, it has been left to OPEC's full ministerial meeting on Thursday to consider both approaches." According to Bloomberg, "This isn't the first time that the two biggest producers in the OPEC+ coalition have appeared to be far apart just days before crucial decisions on oil production. Yet since the group was formed in late 2016, the two nations have usually found a way to resolve their differences and forge a common policy that supports crude prices."

Former Uber Executive Files For Bankruptcy After Order To Pay Google $179M.

The Washington Post (3/4, Albergotti, 14.2M) reports Anthony Levandowski, "who once ran Uber's self-driving car unit, was ordered Wednesday to pay $179 million to rival Google, prompting the software engineer to file for bankruptcy protection." The "enormous award, which was approved by a Superior Court judge in San Francisco and was confidential but disclosed in a Securities and Exchange Commission filing, casts new light on one of Silicon Valley's most heated dramas." The Post says the award is "also another blow to Levandowski, once a rising star in the tech industry who now faces criminal charges for allegedly possessing trade secrets that belong to Google."

French Court Rules Uber Driver Should Be Recognized As Employee.

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Schechner, Rana, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports France's top court on Wednesday ruled that one of Uber's former drivers should be recognized as an employee rather than as an independent contractor. Although the decision by the Cour de Cassation doesn't immediately impact the employment status of other drivers in France, it could pave the way for them to ask for reclassification by a French employment tribunal.

First Coronavirus Death In California Brings Confirmed US Total To 11.

David Muir reported on ABC World News Tonight (3/4, lead story, 4:00, 7.52M) that the coronavirus "death toll in the US" has risen "to at least 11," including "the first death from California, a passenger on a cruise ship during a round-trip voyage from San Francisco." ABC's Whit Johnson reported health officials say a "Grand Princess cruise ship is likely linked to the state's first death from the coronavirus, and a second infection. An elderly patient [was] possibly exposed while traveling from San Francisco to Mexico. The CDC [is] now investigating a 'small cluster of cases of COVID-19' in Northern California traced back to that ship." Miguel Almaguer similarly reported on NBC Nightly News (3/4, lead story, 2:50, Holt, 6.46M) that "the 11th fatality" was announced Wednesday, "the first in California – an elderly passenger on a cruise ship from San Francisco to Mexico. There are now more than 150 cases in a growing number of states." On the CBS Evening News (3/4, lead story, 2:25, 4.82M), Norah O'Donnell reported that "as California is reporting its first death...we're now learning a worker at LAX, who was screening passengers for the virus, has tested positive."

The Los Angeles Times (3/4, Karlamangla, Shalby, Luna, Gutierrez, 4.64M) reports the California patient who died "was an elderly adult with underlying health conditions and was the county's second confirmed case of COVID-19." The article adds that several cities in California have declared public health emergencies and more potential cases of COVID-19 are under investigation. Reuters (3/4, Gorman, Kearney) reports the Placer County, California public health department "said in a statement that the patient tested presumptively positive on Tuesday at a California lab and was likely exposed from Feb. 11-21 on a Princess cruise ship to Mexico from San Francisco."

Pence To Travel To Washington After State Announces 10th Death. The AP (3/4) reports, "Washington state has reported a 10th death from the new coronavirus." The state Department of Health "released updated figures Wednesday morning, showing that nine people had died in King County, the state's most populous, and one person in Snohomish County." The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Calfas, Carlton, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports Washington reported its 10th death. The Washington Times (3/4, Howell, 492K) reports Vice President Pence said Wednesday that he will travel to Washington to meet with Gov. Jay Inslee (D).

The New York Times (3/4, Weise, Harmon, Fink, 18.61M) reports, "Officials are recommending that residents of Seattle and surrounding communities who are 60 or older or have underlying health conditions remain in their homes and that community groups cancel events that would bring together more than 10 people and could possibly further spread the coronavirus."

Coronavirus Fears Spread In New York. On the CBS Evening News (3/4, story 2, 1:30, O'Donnell, 4.82M), Meg Oliver reported New Rochelle, New York "is Ground Zero as the coronavirus infects at least 11 people. It started a week ago when 50-year-old Lawrence Garbuz went to the hospital. ... Today, we learned another family of five who had close contact with the attorney tested positive. New York disease detectives are racing to track down anyone else who may have come into contact with the Manhattan attorney." The New York Times (3/4, Gold, Ferré-Sadurní, 18.61M) reports that "nine people connected to the man who was confirmed as New York's second case of the new coronavirus have all tested positive for the illness."

The Washington Post (3/4, Guarino, Bailey, Schwartzman, 14.2M) reports that while Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "urged calm, news of the virus's latest victims spread through close-knit Orthodox communities in the family's hometown of New Rochelle and across New York City, where pockets of Jews frequent the same kosher restaurants and attend the same schools, weddings, bar mitzvahs and funerals."

Anxiety Reportedly Spreading Across US. The Washington Post (3/4, Judkis, Selk, 14.2M) reports that many people in the US are worried about becoming infected with coronavirus. The article quotes an official from the American Psychological Association discussing coronavirus anxiety and how it is far more prevalent than coronavirus.

Trump: Estimated Death Rate Is A "False Number," Possibly Closer To "Fraction Of One Percent."

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K) that he thinks the 3.4 percent global death rate from coronavirus "is a false number. Now, this is just my hunch, but based on a lot of conversations with a lot of people that do this, because a lot of people will have this, and it is very mild. They will get better very rapidly, they don't even see a doctor, they don't even call a doctor. ... So if, you know, we have thousands or hundreds of thousands of people that get better, just by, you know, sitting around and even going to work, some of them go to work, but they get better and then, when you do have a death...all of a sudden it seems like three or four percent, which is a very high number, opposed to a fraction of one percent."

Trump Says Obama Administration Decision Was "Detrimental" To Ability To Respond To Coronavirus.

The New York Times (3/4, Baker, Kaplan, 18.61M) reports President Trump "sought on Wednesday to deflect criticism of his administration's response to the coronavirus onto his predecessor, complaining that a federal agency decision" under President Obama "had made it harder to quickly enact widespread testing for the virus." The President said, "The Obama Administration made a decision on testing that turned out to be very detrimental to what we're doing, and we undid that decision a few days ago so that the testing can take place in a much more accurate and rapid fashion." The Times says it was "not entirely clear what he was referring to. Health experts and veterans of the government during Mr. Obama's presidency said they were unaware of any policy or rule changes during the last administration that would have affected the way [the FDA] approved tests during the current crisis."

The New York Post (3/4, Nelson, 4.57M) reports, "Spokespeople for the White House and Vice President Mike Pence were unable to provide additional information on the specific regulation," and HHS "did not immediately respond to a request for information." The Daily Beast (3/4, Tucker, 1.39M) reports the President referred questions to CDC Director Robert Redfield, "who said that private labs were previously allowed to conduct clinical tests, but noted that 'in the previous administration that became regulated. For someone to do that they had to file with the FDA.'" The Daily Caller (3/4, Datoc, 716K) says "the rule in question previously required state-run laboratories to only run medical tests pre-approved" by the FDA.

The Week (3/4, O'Donnell, 1.94M) reports "critics were quick to jump on his attempt to blame Obama, pointing out that it was his administration that disbanded the team directly responsible for global health security and potential pandemics in 2018." Bloomberg (3/4, Jacobs, Langreth, 4.73M) also reports on Trump's comments. For his part, Obama did not respond directly, but tweeted Wednesday, "Protect yourself and your community from coronavirus with common sense precautions: wash your hands, stay home when sick and listen to the @CDCgov and local health authorities. Save the masks for health care workers. Let's stay calm, listen to the experts, and follow the science."

Trump Criticizes Obama Administration's Handling Of H1N1 Outbreak. Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K), "The H1N1...went from around April of '09 to April of '10 where there were 60 million cases of swine flu and you had...a lot of deaths and they didn't do anything about it. ... They never did close the borders. I don't think they ever did have the travel ban. And we did and...they lost at least 13,000, could be as high as 17,000 people."

Pence: Trump "Took Unprecedented Action" To Confront Coronavirus.

Vice President Pence said in an interview on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (3/4, 49K), "I think the most important thing the American people should know is that according to all of our experts, the risk of contracting the coronavirus for the average American remains low. Nevertheless, beginning in January, this President took unprecedented action, suspending all travel from China, quarantining Americans that came home. We've established screening in Italy and in South Korea while we put travel advisories on areas of those countries. But our focus is specifically now on putting the health and safety of Americans first. ... The American people can be confident that we are ready, thanks to the leadership of this President."

Pence: Therapeutics Could Be Available "In A Matter Of Months."

Vice President Pence said in an interview on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (3/4, 49K), "Our pharmaceutical companies have now formed a consortium to share information in the development – not just of vaccines, which, we think a vaccine will be in clinical trials in six weeks, will be available to the public in a year or a year and a half – but, we think long before that, therapeutics – the medicines that people can take if they contract the coronavirus to get relief – we think that could literally be available in a matter of months."

Azar Says Vaccine Will Take "12 To 18 Months." HHS Secretary Azar said on Fox News (3/4, 896K), "The doctors that the President met with yesterday, they actually designed a vaccine within three days of getting the genetic sequence of this virus from China. ... Just two days ago the FDA granted approval for the NIH...to begin what's called phase one clinical testings in about five weeks. That's where we are going to test the safety of this vaccine probably in about 40 to 50 people. It is going to take overall 12 to 18 months, though, before you could see a possible vaccine because you are putting a vaccine in otherwise healthy people."

Carson Says Politicians Should Work Together As Well As Pharma Companies Are. The Daily Caller (3/4, 716K) reports HUD Secretary Carson "chided elected officials Wednesday he viewed as politicizing the effort to stop the spread of the coronavirus outbreak." Carson said pharmaceutical companies, "who normally are rivals, have been working 'together voluntarily' along with members of the coronavirus task force to develop therapeutic medications and other remedies to stop the spread of the virus. 'Wouldn't that be a great lesson for the politicians,' he concluded."

Macron Hails "Excellent" Talk With Trump On Coronavirus Coordination.

Politico Europe (3/4, Momtaz, 8K) reports French President Emmanuel Macron said he had an "excellent" talk with President Trump Wednesday on coordinating responses to the coronavirus. Macron tweeted, "Excellent discussion with @realDonaldTrump. To better deal with Covid-19, we are ready to coordinate our scientific, health and economic response within the framework of the US G7 Presidency." According to Politico Europe, Macron "suggested it might be a good thing for the US to tackle head-on the issue of coronavirus at June's G7 meeting in the US."

House Passes $8.3B Emergency Coronavirus Spending Measure 415-2.

The AP (3/4, Taylor) reports the House voted 415-2 Wednesday afternoon to pass "an $8.3 billion measure...to battle the coronavirus outbreak." According to the AP, "The swift and sweeping bipartisan vote was a relative rarity in a polarized Washington and came just nine days after the president outlined a $2.5 billion plan that both Trump's GOP allies and Democratic critics said was insufficient." USA Today (3/4, Hayes, 10.31M) reports, "The package includes more than $3 billion for research and the development of vaccines and $2.2 billion that will help in prevention, preparedness and responding to the threat of the virus," according to a House Democratic aide. The total "is more than triple the amount" President Trump originally requested. The President tweeted, "Congress has agreed to provide $8 Billion to fight Coronavirus! This means @CDCgov, @HHSgov, and @DHSgov will have the resources they need to Keep America Safe and keep the risk to workers and families very low. This is great news for our Health, our Economy, and our Nation!"

The New York Times (3/4, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports that "the quick action was a recognition of the urgent need described by government health officials to respond to the virus, and mounting dissatisfaction among lawmakers in both parties with the funding request initially submitted by the Trump administration." According to the Times, "Lawmakers and their aides negotiated through the weekend over the provisions of the bill, but talks stalled earlier this week over Democratic efforts to further limit the expense of vaccines or treatments." The Washington Post (3/4, Werner, Debonis, 14.2M) reports that the Senate may vote on the spending package "as soon as Thursday," and that Trump is "expected to sign the legislation."

Politico (3/4, Emma, Scholtes, 4.29M) reports that "the deal comes after several days of partisan bickering over vaccine affordability and other issues that had ensnared the bipartisan, bicameral talks. Negotiators ultimately agreed to include $300 million 'to help ensure that, when a vaccine is developed, Americans can receive it regardless of their ability to pay,' according to a House Democratic aide."

Breitbart (3/4, Caplan, 673K) reports the legislation was largely hammered out by Senate Appropriations Chairman Richard Shelby and House Appropriations Chairwoman Nita Lowey. Shelby said in a statement, "This should not be about politics; this is about doing our job to protect the American people from a potential pandemic. We worked together to craft an aggressive and comprehensive response that provides the resources the experts say they need to combat this crisis." Reuters (3/4, Morgan, Cowan), Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M), the Washington Times (3/4, Muñoz, 492K), and CQ Roll Call (3/4, Shutt, 154K) are among the other sources covering the agreement.

CDC Expands Guidelines For Coronavirus Testing.

The New York Times (3/4, Rabin, 18.61M) reports the CDC on Wednesday "broadened the guidelines for coronavirus testing, allowing anyone who has symptoms like a fever, cough or difficulty breathing to receive a test if a doctor agrees." Under the expanded guidelines, doctors "were encouraged to first rule out other causes of respiratory illness, such as influenza, and to take into consideration whether there are other local coronavirus cases, officials said." Previous guidelines "required a patient to have symptoms of respiratory illness as well as a clear route of exposure, such as recent travel to China or a number of other affected countries, contact with a known coronavirus patient, or hospitalization with a severe and unexplained respiratory illness."

Paula Reid reported on the CBS Evening News (3/4, story 3, 1:50, O'Donnell, 4.82M) that Vice President Pence "said the greatest concern is access to tests for the virus, which he said would be expanded after initially restricting widespread screening." Pence: "We have more than 2,500 kits that are being distributed around the country this week that will make more than 1.5 million tests available at hospitals that have requested them." ABC World News Tonight (3/4, story 2, 0:30, Muir, 7.52M) reported, "The White House [is] now saying that those tests will be covered by your insurance."

HHS Secretary Azar said on Fox News (3/4, 896K), "If your doctor or public health official think you ought to get tested, you are going to be able to be tested. We have tested thousands of samples already. We haven't had a backlog at the CDC with a highly validated test that CDC did. ... But, we're radically expanding the capability to test in the United States."

NYTimes Analysis: Coronavirus Puts Trump's "Economic Cheerleading" To The Test.

The New York Times (3/4, Tankersley, Casselman, 18.61M) writes under the headline "Trump's Economic Cheerleading Is Suddenly Tested" that "one of President Trump's greatest strengths in his presidential campaign is his economic salesmanship," and his "ability to set the economic narrative is buoyed by an 11-year economic expansion, with rising wages and unemployment at a 50-year low." But "Trump's cheerleading is often overstated and parts of the economy are slowing, including manufacturing," which, the Times says, "helps explain why Mr. Trump has played down economic damage from the coronavirus and dismissed the stock market plunge."

Services Sector Activity Showed Strong Economy Before Coronavirus Outbreak. Reuters (3/4, Mutikani) reports US services sector activity "jumped to a one-year high in February, suggesting strength in the economy before a recent escalation of recession fears ignited by the coronavirus epidemic that prompted an emergency interest rate cut from the Federal Reserve." The Institute for Supply Management "said its non-manufacturing activity index increased to a reading of 57.3 last month, the highest level since February 2019, from 55.5 in January. A reading above 50 indicates expansion in the services sector."

US Gasoline Prices Decline. USA Today (3/4, Brown, 10.31M) reports, "While the coronavirus is upending travel and walloping stocks, the widespread respiratory illness has also lead to cheaper prices at the pump. Over the past three weeks, with China largely shut down and fewer people traveling, gas prices in the U.S. have fallen 6 cents per gallon" to a national average of $2.41.

United Airlines Slashes Service, Announces Hiring Freeze.

The New York Times (3/4, Chokshi, 18.61M) reports "the latest example of the [coronavirus] outbreak's toll" came Wednesday when United Airlines "became the first U.S. carrier to announce a widespread cut to domestic service, signaling that fear over the virus was starting to erode ticket sales far from the hot spots of the epidemic." International service in April will be cut "by about 20 percent and domestic service by about 10 percent, with similar cuts possible in May." The carrier "also announced a hiring freeze through June and said workers in the United States could apply for voluntary unpaid leave."

On NBC Nightly News (3/4, story 4, 1:55, Holt, 6.46M), Tom Costello reported, "For the travel industry, the coronavirus has been a body blow. Cruise ships quarantined, meetings and conferences called off, corporate travel curtailed, and study abroad programs and school trips cancelled. Now with demand dropping, United Airlines is announcing unprecedented deep cuts to its schedule." USA Today (3/4, Gilbertson, 10.31M) similarly says the "unprecedented steps" are "the first by a U.S. airline since the outbreak began."

The Washington Post (3/4, Aratani, 14.2M) reports, "Earlier Wednesday, U.S. airline executives met with Vice President Pence, who has been charged with leading the administration's response to the coronavirus outbreak. President Trump made a surprise appearance at the gathering, where airline executives emphasized their commitment to keeping their customers and employees safe."

Foreign Plants That Make F-35 Parts Closed.

The Washington Times (3/4, Glenn, 492K) reports coronavirus concerns have "resulted in the closure of facilities in Italy and Japan that produce components for the F-35 Lightning II combat fighter," according to Undersecretary of Defense for Acquisition and Sustainment Ellen Lord, who "said Lockheed Martin employees in Italy will be temporarily working from home while an F-35 assembly plant in Japan will be shuttered for a week."

Ford Confirms Two Employees In China Had Coronavirus; UAW And GM Restrict Travel.

The Detroit Free Press (3/4, Howard, 1.52M) reports two Ford Motor employees in China "were quarantined after being diagnosed with coronavirus and have made a full recovery, but the company declined to provide details about the situation or the patients." Ford spokesman T.R. Reid said Wednesday, "The coronavirus has had the attention of Ford senior executives from (CEO) Jim (Hackett) on down since late January. We identified the potential for an issue and the need to be on top of it from the start." GM, meanwhile, said Wednesday there are no known cases of coronavirus within the company and “asked people who traveled to China, South Korea, Iran, Japan and Italy within the past 14 days to not attend meetings at any GM facility in North America.” Elsewhere yesterday, the UAW announced “a domestic and international travel ban for all staff as a precaution related to the fast-moving contagion.”

Cities, Industries Mull Cancellation Of Major Public Events.

NBC Nightly News (3/4, story 5, 1:30, Holt, 6.46M) reported Hollywood is “now feeling the impact of the coronavirus. The release of the new James Bond movie has been pushed back as concerns grow over public gathering places like movie theaters, concerts, and sports events.” NBC’s Joe Fryer: “From movies to music festivals, questions are swirling around large public events. In Texas, major companies like Twitter and Facebook pulled out of the South by Southwest Festival, which starts in nine days,” and “in Miami, officials are debating whether to postpone a major dance music festival this month.” However, “the NCAA’s March Madness is still going on as planned.”

AIPAC Warns Attendees May Have Had Contact With Coronavirus Patient.

The Washington Examiner (3/4, Pearce, 448K) reports the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) “warned attendees after its annual conference that a group of participants may have been in contact with someone who is now quarantined with coronavirus.” The Washington, D.C. health department “warned AIPAC officials after its conference ended that a group of attendees may have coronavirus and are under observation,” the group said in a statement Wednesday. The group said that “none of the conference attendees have tested positive for the disease.”

Coronavirus Death Toll In Italy Jumps To 107, All Schools Shut.

Reuters (3/4, Fonte, Jones) reports Italy “closed all schools and universities and prepared other emergency measures on Wednesday to try to slow the spread of the coronavirus in Europe’s worst-hit country as the death toll and number of cases jumped.” The total number of dead in Italy “rose to 107 after 28 people died” of the virus over the past 24 hours, the Civil Protection Agency said. Education Minister Lucia Azzolina said schools and universities “all over the country would be closed from Thursday until at least March 15.”

Chinese State Media Suggesting CIA Behind Outbreak.

The Washington Times (3/4, Gertz, 492K) reports, “Four months after the outbreak of the coronavirus disease in China, investigators are still no closer to determining the origin” of the coronavirus outbreak. Still, “Chinese state-run media outlets are increasingly been promoting a new disinformation theory that the virus originated in the U.S., reports that have prompted rumors spreading throughout China and Asia that the CIA was behind the outbreak.”

China Pivots To Preventing Reintroduction Of Coronavirus From Other Countries. The Washington Post (3/4, Fifield, 14.2M) reports that “having largely contained the virus at home...China now faces the prospect of imported infections as the outbreak rages beyond its borders.” China “appears mindful that other governments might lack the techno-authoritarian tools to shut down the spread like it did,” and government “authorities are taking measures to prevent people who have traveled to new hotspots – South Korea, Iran, northern Italy and Japan – from bringing the disease back.” To the AP (3/4, Tanner), “the slowdown in coronavirus cases out of China offers a sliver of hope that the global outbreak can be controlled, but whether that can happen anytime soon without drastic measures remains to be seen, public health authorities say.”

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Journal, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), meanwhile, profiles Dr. Zhang Xiaochun, who has been working to stop the spread of the virus in Wuhan, China.

China Erecting Physical Barriers In Neighborhoods To Contain Outbreak. The New York Times (3/4, Liu, Li, 18.61M) reports that “to stop the coronavirus from spreading further, the Chinese government is thinking up new ways to separate its people.” To this end, “barriers have risen up at the neighborhood level” in many cities, in addition to quarantining entire regions. In addition, “guards now surround many residential complexes,” and “in some places, only one member of a household can leave home at a time to go grocery shopping or just get a breath of fresh air.”

DHS Official Links Coronavirus To Chinese Migrants Crossing Southern Border. The Washington Times (3/4, Dinan, 492K) reports, “Some 328 illegal immigrants from China have been nabbed jumping the US-Mexico border so far this year, according to Homeland Security data that raises the prospect a coronavirus carrier could sneak into the country via the border.” An unnamed “Homeland Security official” told the Times, “The journey to the US border puts migrants in poor conditions. We don’t know if they have come into contact with someone who has the flu, there is no passport, medical history, or travel manifest.”

Saudi Arabia Bans Pilgrimage In Mecca Over Fears About Coronavirus.

The AP (3/4, Vahdat) reports Saudi Arabia has “banned citizens and residents from performing the Muslim pilgrimage in Mecca over fears about the coronavirus.” The announcement Wednesday “gave no time frame for how long the suspension will stand.”

London Book Fair Canceled Over Coronavirus Fears.

The New York Times (3/4, Alter, 18.61M) reports the London Book Fair, “one of the publishing industry’s biggest international events of the year, was canceled on Wednesday because of concerns related to the coronavirus." The fair, "which was scheduled to take place next week, is one of several major book industry events that have been abruptly called off as governments and businesses respond to growing fears" over the virus.

Senate Committee Poised To Release Report On Bidens And Burisma.

Politico (3/4, Desiderio, Cheney, Matishak, 4.29M) reports that Senate Republicans on Wednesday "announced a new phase of their investigation targeting" Joe Biden and his son, Hunter. Senate Homeland Security Chairman Ron Johnson told reporters "he is likely to release an interim report within one to two months on his panel's probe of Hunter Biden's ties to a Ukrainian gas company, Burisma." Johnson said, "These are questions that Joe Biden has not adequately answered. And if I were a Democrat primary voter, I'd want these questions satisfactorily answered before I cast my final vote." Politico adds that Johnson "insisted that the timing of his probe has nothing to do with the election calendar. But the renewed focus on Biden...has alarmed House Democrats as they brace for an all-out GOP assault on Biden and his son."

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K), "That will be a major issue in the campaign. I will bring that up all the time because I don't see any way out. ... I don't believe they will be able to answer those questions. That was purely corrupt."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' The Story (3/4), "This is not picking on somebody's kids. We certainly know what that is all about in the Trump White House, don't we?" Conway added that "all we have heard about of Biden and China of late is the billions of dollars that, I guess his son got in business deals there. The Ukraine issue has not been resolved. There is a reason the Democrats, who talked about Ukraine, vomited every other word out of their mouth 'Ukraine' for months and now don't want to talk about it."

DiGenova Suggests Durham Is Looking Into Burr, Warner.

The Washington Examiner (3/4, Chaitin, 448K) reports former US Attorney Joe DiGenova said in a radio interview this week that Senate Intelligence Chairman Richard Burr and Vice Chairman Mark Warner "are likely 'very concerned' about the Justice Department review of the Russia investigation." According to DiGenova, the senators "appear to be under scrutiny" by US Attorney John Durham's team. DiGenova said, "I...think that Burr and Warner are very, very concerned about where the Durham probe is going in looking into activities of those two senators with various lawyers and nonlawyers, including journalists in the run-up to the leaking of the Carter Page affidavit." The Examiner says DiGenova "appeared to be alluding to the case of James Wolfe, a longtime Senate Intelligence Committee aide who pleaded guilty in late 2018 to lying to investigators looking into leaks of classified information."

Appeals Court Allows "Remain In Mexico" Policy To Continue.

The New York Times (3/4, Jordan, 18.61M) reports that "while insisting that a policy that has forced 60,000 asylum seekers to wait in Mexico violates United States law, a federal appeals court on Wednesday granted the Trump administration's request to keep the 'Remain in Mexico' restrictions in effect until March 11 for review by the Supreme Court." The US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit "reaffirmed its decision last week that the policy violates both United States and international law, "stating that the policy is causing "extreme and irreversible harm." However, the court "temporarily stayed its injunction against enforcing the so-called Migrant Protection Protocols after the government warned that the order could prompt thousands of migrants to try to enter the country and overwhelm the southwestern border."

Police Rule Out Retaliation Against Racism As Motive Behind Milwaukee Shooting.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (3/4, Luthern, 632K) reports, "The shooter who killed five people before killing himself last week at a Milwaukee brewery does not appear to have been influenced or motivated by retaliation for racist acts in the workplace, Milwaukee police said Wednesday." The department said in a statement, "As a result of the preliminary investigation, neither race nor racism has been identified as a factor in this incident." The department also "added that, based on the initial investigation, police officials are not aware 'of any of the victims targeted in the mass shooting being involved in any inappropriate or racist behavior toward the suspect.'"

The Washington Post (3/4, Gowen, Zezima, 14.2M) reports "current and former employees of the Molson Coors brewery" in Milwaukee "say there is a long-held culture of racism, including racist cartoons placed in workspaces, the n-word scrawled in break rooms and bathrooms and nooses hung at the facility – one on the locker of an employee who killed five co-workers there last week." Authorities have "not provided a motive for the Feb. 26 rampage;" and police "also have not said racism played a part in the shooting deaths." Milwaukee Police Chief Alfonso Morale said, "I don't believe that was a factor."

NOAA To Triple Supercomputing Capacity In Effort To Improve Weather Forecasting.

The Washington Post (3/4, Freedman, 14.2M) reports the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is "moving to close the computer modeling gap between the United States and international weather and climate agencies, such as the European Center for Medium-Range Weather Forecasts (ECMWF)." NOAA on Feb. 20 "announced it signed a contract that would provide two new supercomputers from Cray Computing, a division of HP, which would triple the computing capacity of the machines devoted to running the agency's weather forecasting and research models." However, "while the new machines will provide additional speed to run NOAA's computer models and allow for more data to be fed into them, large differences will still remain between how NOAA operates and how the European model is researched and run each day," meaning NOAA could "continue to lag behind...in accuracy for years to come."

Education Department Reverses Plan To Cut Rural School Funding.

The New York Times (3/4, Green, 18.61M) reports that amid "a bipartisan backlash led by Republican lawmakers," the Administration is "backing off a bookkeeping change that would have drastically cut federal funds for rural schools – at least for a year." Education Secretary DeVos "will allow states to more easily qualify for funding under the Rural and Low-Income School Program, after hundreds of districts faced cuts when the department abruptly began using eligibility requirements it had not enforced in 17 years." The Education Department's "decision to reverse course, first reported by Bloomberg Government, came hours after 21 senators – 13 of them Republicans," including Senate Majority Leader McConnell – "signed a bipartisan letter urging Ms. DeVos to abandon the new methodology."

Change To Charter School Funding In Budget Proposal Worries Proponents.

CQ Roll Call (3/4, Simon, 154K) reports the Education Department's fiscal 2021 budget request would eliminate the Charter Schools Program, "which in fiscal 2020 received $440 million to support new charter schools and the expansion of existing ones," and be replaced by "a block grant that would allow states to determine how they spend a major chunk of their federal education dollars." Education Secretary DeVos "says this would give states freedom to allocate money to suit their specific needs, including to charter schools." However, supporters of charter schools point out that states have differing views on charter schools. Tressa Pankovits of the Progressive Policy Institute "worries that GOP-led states could shift charter school funding to vouchers to help low-income people pay for tuition at private or religious schools, while Democratic states could use it to hire more teachers for public school systems that have struggled to produce positive outcomes."

Williams: Progressives Misguided In Criticism Of Charter Schools. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Conor P. Williams, a fellow at the Century Foundation, writes that many of the attacks lobbed against charter schools by Democrats are unfounded, adding that some of the same criticisms also hold true for public schools. Williams argues that a better way to frame the debate would be to focus on student performance. In this way, ineffective charters can learn from effective ones, and criticism can be focused on low-performing charter models, such as for-profit and online schools.

Anti-Semitism Allegations At New Jersey High School Prompts Federal Lawsuit.

The New York Times (3/4, Otterman, 18.61M) profiles a teenager identified only as "Paige," who was subjected to anti-Semitism at her New Jersey high school, the Marine Academy of Science and Technology. Paige's treatment prompted "an investigation by the state attorney general, which in October found probable cause that the school and district had discriminated against Paige based on her religion." It also inspired "a lawsuit against the school, which was filed Wednesday in federal court in Trenton, accusing the district and faculty of discrimination."

NYTimes Profile: Grenell "Undiplomatic" And "Confrontational."

The New York Times (3/4, Williamson, Vogel, 18.61M) profiles Acting DNI Grenell, who it says "has a remarkable record of being undiplomatic." To the Times, "His confrontational style touches such raw nerves that one top Obama administration official, Susan E. Rice, recently called him 'one of the most nasty, dishonest people I've ever encountered,' and some German politicians demanded that he be recalled from his post as United States ambassador to Berlin." While "bombastic perseverance and ostentatious attention-seeking may be problematic traits for some employers," the Times says "they have helped fuel Mr. Grenell's rapid rise under President Trump."

Trump Reelection Campaign Offers Supporters Chance To Meet First Lady.

The AP (3/4, Superville) reports First Lady Melania Trump is "set to make a rare foray onto the 2020 campaign fundraising trail." President Trump's reelection campaign is "asking supporters to make a donation for a chance to meet the first lady in California." According to the article, "a date for the event was not included" in campaign literature, "though it is believed to be scheduled for mid-March."

First Lady Helps Recognize 12 Women For "Acts Of Courage."

The AP (3/4, Superville) reports First Lady Melania Trump "drew parallels Wednesday between her youth welfare initiative and a group of women from around the world whom the State Department has recognized for acts of courage in their countries." Although the "Be Best" initiative is focused on youth, she said the program "ties nicely into the accomplishments of the women who share the stage with me." At the ceremony presenting the International Women of Courage Awards, the First Lady said, "Without positive support, guidance and well-being, which are just some of the attributes today's children need, they will not enter adulthood with the empathy and strength needed to help others as selflessly as the women here today."

Kardashian West Visits White House To Discuss Criminal Justice Reform.

Townhall (3/4, Baumann, 177K) reports Kim Kardashian West on Wednesday "blasted the mainstream media for failing to cover President Donald Trump's criminal justice reform policies. The First Step Act was a public policy win for the president, especially considering Democrats tout criminal justice reform as one of their issues." Townhall writes, "It's not surprising the mainstream media isn't covering this. After all,

Democrats have long-touted criminal justice reform as one of their 'go-to' topics," and "instead of talking about it President Trump has delivered."

Trump To Visit Tennessee On Friday In Wake Of Tornadoes.

On Twitter, President Trump announced on Wednesday that he will be "going to the Great State of Tennessee on Friday. The USA stands with the people of Tennessee 100%, whatever they need! The tornadoes were of record size & velocity. God bless your loved ones & all of the families affected! Thanks to @GovBillLee & @MarshaBlackburn."

ABC World News Tonight (3/4, story 4, 2:15, Muir, 7.52M) reported the tornadoes killed at least 25, "including five children, the youngest, just two." The CBS Evening News (3/4, story 4, 2:10, O'Donnell, 4.82M) reported "three tornado victims are still missing in Tennessee." Volunteers are "helping in the search, while those who lost everything are telling harrowing stories of survival." On NBC Nightly News (3/4, story 7, 2:30, Holt, 6.46M), Catie Beck reported, "Heartbroken communities are grappling with Tennessee tornadoes," with "homes destroyed and debris for miles."

Trump Says His Administration's Accomplishments Are Unprecedented.

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K), "I think what we've done is unprecedented. The largest tax cuts in history. Trade deals all over the place. ... We've rebuilt the military. We have taken care of our vets. We've got choice. Nobody thought we were going to get choice. They've been trying to get chose for over 40-years. ... What we've done is unprecedented. Nobody has done more in the first three-years than we have. Environmentally, we have the cleanest air, we have the cleanest water. Our air is as clean or cleaner than it has ever been, and yet we're not spending trillions of dollars giving it to foreign countries under the Paris Accord."

Trump Announces Keane Will Receive Medal Of Freedom.

On Twitter, President Trump announced Wednesday, "Retired Four Star General Jack Keane will receive the PRESIDENTIAL MEDAL OF FREEDOM next week!"

Trump Tweets It Was "Great Honor" To Address Latino Coalition.

On Twitter, President Trump said Wednesday that "it was my great honor to address the @LatinoCoalition Legislative Summit. With the hard work, love & devotion of millions of incredible Hispanic-Americans, our Country is thriving, our people are prospering, and our future has never looked brighter!"

Trump Blasts Los Angeles Mayor On Homelessness Problem.

On Twitter, President Trump on Wednesday took aim at Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti for the "terrible" homelessness problem. Trump said Garcetti is seeking federal help "to fix the terrible problem he and the Dems have caused," but then goes on to "talk 'trash'" about him.

Trump Says He Has Some "Difficulties" With Fox News.

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K), "I have my own little difficulties with" Fox News, "if you want to know the truth. They put people on that I think are inappropriate and say very, very false things and people don't challenge them. I think they're trying to be very politically correct or fair and balanced is term. But I think they hurt themselves, if you want to know the truth."

Pentagon Weakens Military Housing Bill Of Rights After Hearing From Industry.

Reuters (3/4, Pell) reports, "A sweeping U.S. military housing reform plan, pitched as a way to protect service families from shoddy homes and unresponsive landlords, has been watered down to remove several protections tenants and Congress had sought." The Defense Department took out three measures from a tenant-rights bill for military families "after Pentagon officials sat down with the private housing contractors to craft final details." They include "the ability for military families to withhold rent to protest unsafe conditions, obtain full maintenance histories of their homes upon moving in, and challenge landlords through a dispute resolution process." According to the article, "fifteen other measures are going ahead as planned."

Senators Reach Deal To Boost Funding For Conservation, National Park Maintenance.

The AP (3/4, Daly) reports, "Senate leaders and the Trump administration have reached an election-year deal to double spending on a popular conservation program and devote more than a $1 billion a year to clear a growing maintenance backlog at national parks." The plan, "announced Wednesday by senators from both parties," proposes $900 million to "fully fund" the Land and Water Conservation Fund and "add $1.3 billion a year for parks maintenance." According to the article, "the proposed $900 million for land and water conservation is nearly double the $485 million Congress approved for the program this year and 60 times larger than the amount Trump proposed in his budget plan just last month."

Jury Decides Smiley, Accused Of Sexual Misconduct, Must Pay PBS $1.5M.

The AP (3/4, Long) reports, "A jury decided Wednesday that former television talk show host Tavis Smiley, who was fired amid allegations of workplace sexual misconduct at the height of the #MeToo movement, must pay about $1.5 million to his former employer, the Public Broadcasting Service." According to the article, "at issue was the network's 'morals' clause, which bars romantic relationships in the office and also disallows employees from acting in a way that would impact the employee or network in a negative way." Smiley had sued PBS, "contending that racial bias contributed to his dismissal and he was wrongly terminated without proof," and "the network counter-sued, arguing in part that Smiley owed the network for a season that didn't air."

Michigan Poll: Biden 29%; Sanders 23%; Bloomberg 11%; Warren 7%.

The Detroit News (3/4, Burke, LeBlanc, 825K) reports that a Detroit News/WDIV-TV poll of 600 likely Michigan Democratic primary voters, taken Feb. 28-March 3, shows Joe Biden leading the state's March 10 Democratic presidential primary with 29%, followed by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) at 23%, Michael Bloomberg at 11%, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) at 7%, Pete Buttigieg at 6%, and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) at 3%. Bloomberg dropped out of the race on Wednesday and endorsed Biden. Buttigieg and Klobuchar have also dropped out of the race and backed Biden. The News says Sanders had been "viewed as an early favorite in Michigan because he staged a narrow upset victory" over Hillary Clinton in 2016. The Hill (3/4, Axelrod, 2.98M) reports that Michigan's "primary is set to be a test of the support for both Biden and Sanders among white, working-class voters, though Biden is expected to have an edge among African American voters in the populous precincts in and around Detroit."

Trump Campaign Shifts Focus To Biden.

Norah O'Donnell said on the CBS Evening News (3/4, story 6, 2:05, 4.82M) that Joe Biden's candidacy was "on the ropes as recently as last Friday," and on NBC Nightly News (3/4, story 2, 2:35, 6.46M), Lester Holt said Biden is "now the undisputed frontrunner" for the Democratic presidential nomination "after a big Super Tuesday."

Politico (3/4, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's "political operation is shifting its focus" Biden and "ramping up its efforts to convince Bernie Sanders' supporters he's being robbed of the nomination." Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (3/4, 846K), "President Trump is not exactly getting the outcome he wanted as Joe Biden is gaining momentum. For weeks, Trump campaign advisers have said privately they want to see Bernie Sanders win the nomination." Major Garrett said on the CBS Evening News (3/4, story 7, 1:40, O'Donnell, 4.82M) that "trying to sow divisions among the Democratic party" is "a central strategy for President Trump and the Republican National Committee."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' The Story (3/4), "The fact is, the President has said clearly...that it doesn't matter who he runs against, because they have to run against the Trump economy, the Trump record on national security and terrorism, the Trump record on nearly 200 federal judges confirmed to the courts, the Trump record on these trade deals. ... I think he is Hillary all over again. I think Joe Biden is Hillary 2.0."

A New York Times (3/4, Haberman, Karni, 18.61M) analysis describes a "bad week" for Trump. Despite what the Times calls "concerted efforts" by Trump to paint Biden "as corrupt," Biden "pulled off one of the most remarkable political comebacks in recent history on Tuesday night." The Times reports, "Privately, several advisers said on Wednesday that they were not surprised that voters coalesced around Mr. Biden, even if the president was."

In a pair of tweets Wednesday morning, Trump took aim at Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA). Trump called Warren the "all time great spoiler," and said that her decision to remain is hurting Sanders. If she were not in the race, Trump argued, Sanders would have won Massachusetts. In one tweet, Trump wrote, "So selfish for Elizabeth Warren to stay in the race. She has Zero chance of even coming close to winning, but hurts Bernie badly. So much for their wonderful liberal friendship. Will he ever speak to her again? She cost him Massachusetts (and came in third), he shouldn't!" Later in the morning, he tweeted, "Wow! If Elizabeth Warren wasn't in the race, Bernie Sanders would have EASILY won Massachusetts, Minnesota and Texas, not to mention various other states. Our modern day Pocahontas won't go down in history as a winner, but she may very well go down as the all time great SPOILER!"

Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K) that if Sanders "were able to convince Elizabeth Warren to endorse him or even to just drop out because she is doing terribly, he would have won a large number of the states that he lost [Tuesday] night."

WPost's Blake Dismisses Claim That Democratic Primary Is "Rigged." Aaron Blake writes in the Washington Post (3/4, 14.2M) that Biden's strong showing on Super Tuesday "severely impeded" Sanders' "march toward the Democratic nomination," and "the whole thing has reunited some Sanders supporters and President Trump behind a familiar argument: This is being rigged." On Wednesday, Trump "re-upped his increasingly frequent argument that Sanders is somehow getting a raw deal." Trump tweeted, "The Democrat establishment came together and crushed Bernie Sanders, AGAIN! Even the fact that Elizabeth Warren stayed in the race was devastating to Bernie and allowed Sleepy Joe to unthinkably win Massachusetts. It was a perfect storm, with many good states remaining for Joe!" Blake calls such claims "dangerous" and says the argument that the primary is rigged "is even thinner than it was in 2016. At least back then, there were legitimate arguments that Democratic National Committee officials did problematic things, even if it wasn't clear that those things had any significant impact."

Politico's Harris: Biden's Resurgence Has Sanders And Trump "Staring Into Their Political Graves." John F. Harris writes in his Politico Magazine (3/4, 4.24M) column that Biden "dug two big holes on Super Tuesday" and now Sanders and President Trump "are both staring into their political graves." Harris says Biden "summoned high turnout from precisely the diverse constituencies of African Americans, suburbanites, working-class and older voters" that House Speaker Pelosi "marshaled to retake the House in 2018." The "achievement indicated that Sanders has no convincing path to defeating this coalition with young people or previous nonvoters," and for the general election, "the implications of Tuesday are equally urgent for Trump. Voter turnout in the primaries was up from 2016 in almost every state," and "the overwhelming evidence is that it is Trump, not any Democrat, who is stimulating this surge." Trump "must also stimulate new voters or it is shovel time for him, too."

Bloomberg Ends His Campaign, Throws Support Behind Biden.

USA Today (3/4, Morin, 10.31M) reports Michael Bloomberg ended his presidential campaign Wednesday. In a statement, Bloomberg "said staying in the race would make it more difficult for Democrats to defeat President Donald Trump." Bloomberg also announced his support for Joe Biden. He said, "I've always believed that defeating Donald Trump starts with uniting behind the candidate with the best shot to do it. After yesterday's vote, it is clear that candidate is my friend and a great American, Joe Biden."

The Los Angeles Times (3/4, Hook, Barabak, 4.64M) says Bloomberg's departure has made the race for the Democratic presidential nomination "a two-person contest" between Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT). A Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that despite his poor showing on Tuesday, Bloomberg deserves credit for entering the race and trying instead of complaining about the field of candidates from the sidelines.

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Bykowicz, Day, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Biden and Sanders are set to represent two factions within the Democratic Party, with Sanders standing for liberals and Biden for moderates, including the party's establishment. That division is evident in a story from the AP (3/4, Fram, Taylor) which says "mainstream Democrats were rejoicing" about Biden's "rousing Super Tuesday performance that bolstered his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination, easing worries over the havoc they fear awaits down-ticket moderates should [Sanders] become the party's standard-bearer."

Bloomberg Expected To "Spend Heavily" For Biden. The New York Times (3/4, Burns, Ruiz, 18.61M) reports that Bloomberg is "said to be weighing his plans to spend heavily for Mr. Biden and other Democrats in the 2020 general election." The Washington Post (3/4, Wang, 14.2M) reports that Bloomberg senior adviser Tim O'Brien said Bloomberg intends to put his fortune and political infrastructure "in the broadest way possible behind Joe Biden's candidacy." According to Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M), it was "not immediately clear whether Bloomberg would air ads on Biden's behalf or deploy the staff and field offices in battleground states that he's pledged to keep through the November election for the nominee. A Bloomberg campaign aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it will take a few days to structure the aid to Biden."

Andrea Mitchell said on NBC Nightly News (3/4, story 3, 1:15, Holt, 6.46M) that Bloomberg "cannot legally donate more than $2,800 to Biden, but he can start a super PAC, provide boots on the ground in battleground states, and help Biden's online fundraising."

Trump: Bloomberg, Steyer Found They "Can't Buy The Election." In a tweet Wednesday afternoon, President Trump said Bloomberg, and billionaire Tom Steyer, who ended his campaign on Saturday, found out that they "can't buy the election." Trump wrote, "Pandering Mini Mike Bloomberg, along with his wacky friend, Tom Steyer, have found out the hard way that you can't buy the election! They both wish they had it to do over again!"

Trump Says Bloomberg Is "Surrounded By Losers." Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (3/4, 535K) that once Bloomberg debated, "I said, 'He is going to be in trouble because that's not his thing.' ... He has got a very bad political instinct. He is surrounded by people that I know, in some cases, I know pretty well. They're losers. He is really surrounded by losers but they become winners because they ripped him off for a lot of money. They really took him to the cleaners. Some of these guys are really third rate people, and they wanted him to keep going. The longer he goes, the more money they make."

Bloomberg News Says It Will Resume "Normal Coverage Of The Election." Axios (3/4, Rummier, 521K) reports that after Bloomberg ended his campaign Wednesday, "Bloomberg News editor-in-chief John Micklethwait announced that the organization would" resume its "normal coverage of the election." Bloomberg News said in November that it would "extend its policy of not investigating" Bloomberg "to all Democrats running for president in 2020." The move "led President Trump's campaign to blacklist Bloomberg News from its events in December. It's not yet clear if the Trump campaign will walk back that policy now that Bloomberg is out of the race."

Two More Florida Democrats Endorse Biden. The Washington Post (3/4, Wagner, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports that Biden's campaign on Wednesday "continued to roll out new congressional endorsements, including those of two more Democrats from the Florida delegation: Reps. Kathy Castor and Lois Frankel." According to the Post, Biden "now claims seven House backers from Florida, which holds its Democratic primary March 17."

Media Analyses: Sanders Faces Difficult Path To Democratic Nomination.

A Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says the possibility of having a socialist at the top of the ticket to take on Trump drove many Democratic voters away from Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and to Joe Biden on Super Tuesday. But Kristen Welker said on NBC's Today (3/4, 3.37M) that although Sanders "didn't have the strong night he was looking for" Tuesday, he "is still very much in contention." Similarly, Karl Rove writes in the Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that the race is not over. Rove says the race could be long due to Sanders' support among Latinos, young people, and progressives.

However, media analyses say Sanders now faces a difficult road. For example, Nate Cohn of the New York Times (3/4, 18.61M) writes that on Tuesday, Biden "opened a clear path to amassing enough delegates to clinch the nomination by the Democratic National Convention," and Bloomberg (3/4, Crane, Pager, Korte, 4.73M) says Sanders faces "a far more difficult path" to the Democratic presidential nomination "than it seemed just a few weeks ago, as the map, the momentum and the demographics all favor a newly resurgent Joe Biden – who is in a strong position to pull away from the Vermont senator coming out of Super Tuesday." Primaries on March 10 and March 17 "go through states where Biden is poised to do well," such as Michigan, Florida, and Ohio. April 28 "sees six important states that Biden could sweep, including New York and his home state of Delaware." Bloomberg adds that Biden also has "the thing Sanders had just a week ago, momentum and the feeling of being a winner."

Politico (3/4, Siders, Otterbein, 4.29M) says Michigan "may break" Sanders. Even before Biden's wins on Super Tuesday, "a Detroit News/WDIV-TV poll put Biden ahead of Sanders by nearly 7 percentage points in Michigan." While Sanders' advisers "believe Michigan could work in the Vermont senator's favor next week, with a victory re-establishing his foothold in the race," Politico says "the signs of weakness were evident everywhere in the results on Tuesday."

Nonetheless, the AP (3/4, Peoples, Weissert) reports that Sanders "lashed back in a Wednesday news conference in Vermont, declaring himself in a 'neck-and-neck' race with" Biden, "despite the former vice president's overwhelming support from the Democratic establishment." The Washington Times (3/4, McLaughlin, Miller, 492K) says Sanders "saw Tuesday as a chance to reset the race as a choice between sticking with the status quo and delivering the sort of change need to lift up the middle-class and the working poor."

The Washington Post (3/4, Viser, Wang, 14.2M) reports that Sanders "adopted a more aggressive tone" with Biden Wednesday. Reuters (3/4, Lange) says Sanders "attempted to draw a stark contrast between himself and Biden." He "attacked Biden's record voting in favor of trade deals that he says had devastated parts of the Midwest, Biden's votes in favor of the Iraq war and a bankruptcy bill, and his past record on Social Security." The Washington Examiner (3/4, Larsen, 448K) reports that Sanders said Biden is a "decent human being" but he is "heavily supported by the corporate establishment."

Politico (3/4, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that the Sanders campaign On Wednesday "unleashed a trio of new TV ads...including spots targeting Biden on Social Security and touting praise from former President Barack Obama."

Campaign Co-Chair Says Sanders Will Seek To Appeal To Older Voters, Mainstream Democrats. Politico (3/4, Otterbein, 4.29M) reports that Sanders' "strategy changed overnight." Sanders campaign co-chair Rep. Ro Khanna (D-CA) "said his candidate will work to appeal more to older voters and mainstream Democrats." Khanna said, "We need to make the case that single-payer [health care] will provide long-term care, dental and vision for seniors, that our policies are pro-innovation and -economic growth...and that we are very proud of the accomplishments of the Democratic Party, starting from FDR, and are building an inclusive coalition to complete the New Deal." Politico adds, however, that "the question for Sanders now is whether his shift is too little, too late."

Jennifer Finney Boylan writes in the New York Times (3/4, 18.61M) that Sanders often "seems to be driven less by joy than by fire." Like the Incredible Hulk, she writes, Sanders "is driven, at times, by what seems like rage. And he's right: We should be filled with rage" because "of all the ways in which our democracy does not work," and "because we are at the mercy of Donald Trump, a man who resembles the previous 43 presidents less than he resembles a villain out of Marvel Comics."

Pelosi Sets Aside Sanders' Legislative Agenda. The Washington Times (3/4, Muñoz, 492K) reports that while Sanders "says he is building a nationwide movement of people who back free college and government-run health care," Democratic leaders in the House "hope to prevent his plans from seeing daylight." House Speaker Pelosi "says she's not about to let the Democrats' majority be sunk by having to cast votes on bills that would expose the deep ideological split within the party." Pelosi has instead "pursued legislation on gun control, election reform and prescription drug price reductions." Pelosi called the initiative "mainstream and non-menacing" legislation on which "she can guarantee a near-unanimous vote from her troops."

Sanders Praised Cuba, According To An American Who Was Jailed There. The New York Post (3/4, Steinbuch, 4.57M) reports that Alan Gross, an American "who was locked up in Cuba for five years for trying to expand its Jewish community's access to the internet has accused Bernie Sanders of praising the Communist dictatorship when he visited him behind bars," according to an NPR report. Gross told NPR that Sanders, "who visited Cuba as part of a congressional delegation in 2014, told him he didn't understand why people criticized the country."

WPost: Sanders, Biden Must Avoid A "Scorched-Earth" Nomination Fight. A Washington Post (3/4, 14.2M) editorial says the race for the Democratic presidential nomination is now between Biden and Sanders. Both candidates "insist that their overriding goal is to beat President Trump." The Post says they "should be judged on whether they avoid scorched-earth tactics that poison the chances of a Democratic victory in November."

Warren Reassessing Her Candidacy.

The New York Times (3/4, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), "who last summer rose to the top of polls in several presidential primary states, on Tuesday reached the nadir of her bid for the White House: a third-place finish in her home state, Massachusetts. ... The result represented her worst-case scenario. Ms. Warren had already finished in third place or worse in the early nominating states of Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina."

Mary Bruce said on ABC World News Tonight (3/4, story 3, 3:40, Muir, 7.52M) that some supporters of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "are turning up the heat on" Warren "to drop out and endorse her fellow progressive," but the AP (3/4, Peoples, Weissert) reports that Warren "was reassessing" her candidacy Wednesday "as the winnowing process in the Democrats' 2020 nomination fight lurched forward after a consequential Super Tuesday." Warren "was huddling with advisers on Wednesday to determine if there was a reason to stay in the race after her Super Tuesday wipe-out. She didn't win a single state and finished in third place, after Biden and Sanders, in her own home state of Massachusetts."

Reuters (3/4, Lange) quotes a Warren campaign aide as saying the senator is "talking to her team to assess the path forward." Politico (3/4, Thompson, 4.29M) reports that Warren's campaign manager, Roger Lau, "sent a frank email to staffers [Wednesday] morning." Lau wrote that the "decision is in her hands, and it's important that she has the time and space to consider what comes next."

The Washington Post (3/4, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that "the leaders of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, who have endorsed Sanders's presidential bid, said Wednesday that Warren should take a hard look at her options but did not call on her to quit."

House Democrats Want Secret Service Protection For Biden, Sanders.

Reuters (3/4) reports that Democratic members of Congress want "Secret Service protection for Democratic presidential candidates after Joe Biden's wife and a senior staffer shielded the former vice president from protesters during a victory speech on Super Tuesday." According to Reuters, "Biden's remarks in Los Angeles were briefly interrupted on Tuesday night when a pair of protesters leapt onto the stage, Jill Biden and senior adviser Symone Sanders charged them and ushered them offstage." The House Homeland Security Committee "requested Secret Service protection for both" Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT).

The Washington Post (3/4, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the Administration "should heed [House Homeland Security Chairman Bennie] Thompson's call for prompt action and take the steps needed to ensure the safety of the presidential candidates."

Voters In Texas, California Say They Had Trouble Voting On Tuesday.

NBC Nightly News (3/4, story 9, 1:45, Holt, 6.46M) reported on "frustration and anger" among voters in Texas and California, "the two biggest Super Tuesday states." NBC's Cynthia McFadden added that voters across Los Angeles County "had a particularly tough time casting their ballots." Both California and Texas switched from "neighborhood polling stations to super vote centers, designed to make voting easier." As a result, some voters waited "hours and hours and hours" to vote. In addition, there were "troubles with LA County's brand new voting machines that had cost taxpayers $300 million."

Gail Collins Concerned By Age Of Remaining Presidential Contenders.

In her column for the New York Times (3/4, 18.61M), Gail Collins writes "the finalists" for the Democratic presidential nomination, Bernie Sanders, who is 78, and Joe Biden, 77, are facing off to run against President Trump, 73. According to Collins, "either Biden or Sanders, if elected, would be the oldest American entering a first presidential term," adding that "as of right now the record is held by Trump, who was 70, followed by Ronald Reagan, who was 69." Collins wonders if health and mental capacity could become an issue during the run-up to the election.

Trump Mocks Sessions For Failing To Avoid Alabama Senate Runoff.

The AP (3/4) reports that President Trump on Wednesday "lashed out...at his former attorney general, Jeff Sessions, as the Alabama Republican advanced to a primary runoff in his quest to win back his old Senate seat." The AP says Sessions "securely held the Alabama Senate seat for two decades, but was forced into a runoff" against ex-Auburn University football coach Tommy Tuberville "after being wounded by Trump's prior criticisms of his recusal in the Russia investigation." In a Wednesday tweet, Trump wrote, "This is what happens to someone who loyally gets appointed Attorney General of the United States & then doesn't have the wisdom or courage to stare down & end the phony Russia Witch Hunt. Recuses himself on FIRST DAY in office, and the Mueller Scam begins!" The AP says the tweet "could further damage Sessions' hopes of a political resurrection."

The Washington Post (3/4, Debonis, 14.2M) reports that Tuberville, "who has portrayed himself as a Trumpian outsider who would be completely loyal to the president – immediately endorsed the tweet: 'Mr. President, I could not agree more, and in 27 days help will be on the way!'" Alabama Live (3/4, Hrynkiw, 734K) reports that Sessions "served as Alabama's junior senator for 20 years before resigning in 2017 to become the country's 84th Attorney General under Trump. Tuberville, who coached the Tigers from 1999 to 2008, spoke during his election night speech about Sessions' strained relationship with Trump." Said Tuberville, "We're going to finish what President Trump started when he looked at Jeff Sessions from across the table and said, 'You're fired.'"

Bloomberg (3/4, Hunter, 4.73M) reports that Tuberville "has used Trump's firing of Sessions in ads and has supported Trump's plans to 'investigate the investigators,' while Sessions has ripped Tuberville on immigration and for previous criticisms of Trump." USA Today (3/4, Jackson, 10.31M) reports, "While Trump did not explicitly endorse Tuberville in his anti-Sessions tweet, many Trump associates took it that way. 'I think President Trump just ended the Alabama Senate contest with his tweet,' said Jason Miller, a senior communications adviser for Trump's campaign in 2016. 'Whether or not there's a formal endorsement is secondary at this point.'"

On its website, CNN (3/4, Rogers, 83.16M) reports that whomever wins the March 26 GOP primary runoff will face off against Sen. Doug Jones (D-AL) this fall "in a state Trump won in 2016 by over 27 points." The Hill (3/4, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports that Jones "is considered the most vulnerable Democratic senators facing reelection in 2020." Vox (3/4, Zhou, 2.27M) reports, "Cook Political Report currently rates the seat as 'Lean Republican.'" The Washington Times (3/4, Boyer, 492K), the Fox News (3/4, Blitzer, 27.59M) website, and Breitbart (3/4, Spiering, 673K) also report on the story.

Multiple Reports: Bullock Appears Likely To Challenge Daines In Montana.

The New York Times (3/4, Martin, 18.61M) reports that term-limited Gov. Steve Bullock (D-MT) is "poised to reverse himself and" mount a 2020 bid to unseat Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT), "according to three Democratic officials, a decision that would hand the party a coveted recruit who could help reclaim a majority in the chamber. After months of insisting he would not enter the contest, "Bullock, who ran for president last year, has told Democrats in the last week he is now inclined to run in what would immediately become one of the marquee Senate races of 2020." The Times says Bullock "has only a few days to finalize his decision: The filing deadline to run in Montana is Monday."

The AP (3/4, Volz, Mascaro) reports that Bullock, "who has insisted he won't run for the Senate, is poised to do just that, according to two people familiar with his plans." The AP says, "Democrats are straining to win back the Senate and they see a Bullock matchup with Daines as key to that strategy. Daines is increasingly allied with President Donald Trump and got a shoutout from the president Wednesday." In a tweet, Trump wrote "The great people of Montana can have no better VOICE than Senator @SteveDaines. He is doing an incredible job! Whoever the Democrat nominee may be, please understand that I will be working hard with Steve all the way, & last night I was 20 for 20 (per @GOPLeader). WE NEED STEVE!"

The Great Falls Tribune (3/4, Drake, 114K) highlights the New York Times' report, and adds that Bullock "has repeatedly said he would not run for the Senate, however, he has been prodded" by former President Obama and Senate Minority Leader Schumer "to change his mind." In an online story, CNN (3/4, Zeleny, Rogers, 83.16M) reports that Bullock "is making plans to run for the US Senate, telling Democratic leaders that he intends to declare his candidacy in the coming days, a reversal that improves the party's chances for winning a majority in the Senate. Two Democratic officials familiar with the matter tell CNN that the Democrat "is now opening a door that he repeatedly insisted was closed."

Politico (3/4, Arkin, Levine, 4.29M) reports, "Democrats are increasingly optimistic" that "Bullock will run for Senate this year, according to multiple people familiar with the matter." Politico adds that Bullock "has not publicly indicated an interest in the race, and it is not certain" he "will run, according to multiple Democratic sources. But the increased interest marks a serious departure from the previous widespread belief that recruiting Bullock into the race was a long shot."

CQ Roll Call (3/4, Cioffi, 154K) reports Nathan L. Gonzales of Inside Elections "said that if Bullock enters the race, it's a 'legitimate game-changing event.' 'With the governor in the race, Democrats would have another takeover opportunity,' said Gonzales, who had rated the Montana race Solid Republican." However, The Hill (3/4, Wilson, 2.98M) reports that if he enters the race, Bullock "faces an uphill climb ahead. President Trump is all but certain to win Montana's electoral votes in November; he beat Hillary Clinton by 20 points in Montana in 2016. Daines won his seat with nearly 58 percent of the vote in 2014, and he ended the year with more than $5 million in the bank."

Female GOP Candidates Backed By Stefanik PAC Roll To Primary Wins.

Writing at Townhall (3/4, 177K), Reagan McCarthy says that on Super Tuesday, E-PAC, the leadership PAC of Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-NY), "saw overwhelming victories from endorsed [GOP] primary candidates. E-PAC's mission is to engage, empower and elevate Republican women to elected office." McCarthy highlighted a number of tweets from Stefanik, who touted the wins by GOP female candidates her group had endorsed. McCarthy says Stefanik "launched the PAC after the 2018 midterm elections, which demonstrated a deficit of GOP women in Congress, largely" due to "a lack of resources in place to encourage Republican women to run for office." McCarthy adds that Stefanik "has been at the center of the fight to bring more women into the Republican Party, and to Congress."

WPost Urges Virginia Lawmakers Move Forward On Plan To End Gerrymandering.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (3/4, 14.2M) urges Democratic state lawmakers in Virginia "to reform" the state's "blatantly partisan redistricting procedure so it serves voters, not politicians." The Post urges Democrats to follow through on a constitutional amendment that would establish a bipartisan commission and make Virginia's Supreme Court the "ultimate arbiter" of disputes. The Post concludes, "Virginia Democrats, now in control, can show the state they are prepared for real leadership – and that their demands over the past decade for a bipartisan approach to redistricting will not fall victim to political opportunism now that they are in the driver's seat."

IG Report: FBI Missed Chances To Stop Deadly Domestic Terror Attacks.

The Washington Times (3/4, Mordock, 492K) reports the FBI "missed opportunities to stop domestic terrorists from killing Americans because field offices failed to further investigate individuals who had been labeled homegrown violent extremists, the Justice Department watchdog said in a scathing report released Wednesday." According to the Justice Department inspector general, "at least six terrorists who later carried out attacks killing a total of 70 people were on the FBI's radar prior to the attacks," but "agents quickly closed the cases, concluding the suspects were not threats to national security." Among the "more high-profile individuals the FBI failed to recognize as a potential source of terrorism" were Omar Mateen, who killed 49 individuals at the Pulse nightclub in Orlando in 2016, and Nidal Hasan, who killed 13 people at Fort Hood, Texas, in 2009.

The Washington Post (3/4, Zapotosky, 14.2M) reports Inspector General Michael Horowitz "chided the FBI for failing to fully address weaknesses in how it assesses possible homegrown terrorists." In a letter included in Horowitz's report, Suzanne Turner, chief of the FBI's External Audit and Compliance Section, wrote that the Bureau has "made changes to implement best practices and make recommended changes."

Federal Judge Orders 9/11 Victims' Attorneys To Detail Alleged Threats Against Witnesses.

The Washington Post (3/4, Jacobs, 14.2M) reports a federal judge has ordered "lawyers for 9/11 families suing Saudi Arabia to detail threats allegedly made against witnesses they may depose as part of their effort to prove the kingdom was involved in the 2001 terrorist attacks." The victims' attorneys have "argued they need to protect for now the identities of potential witnesses, pointing to the murder of journalist Jamal Khashoggi as an example of the kind of danger faced by those who speak out against Saudi Arabia." US Magistrate Judge Sarah Netburn said she was "troubled by the allegations" that witnesses were threatened and "asked for a submission from the plaintiffs' lawyers 'documenting in greater detail the information that you have' by March 18."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45%, and his disapproval at 52.3%. The President's job approval is down 0.7 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (2/28-3/3) finds Trump's approval at 48%, with 49% disapproving.

Financial International News

Georgieva: Virus Will Push This Year's Growth Below 2019 Levels.

Reuters (3/4, Lawder) also reports Georgieva said the coronavirus' continued spread will push global growth this year below 2019 levels, "adding that the IMF will again revise its forecasts downward in the coming weeks." The IMF in January "had estimated 2019 global growth at 2.9% and 2020 growth at 3.3%. In February, the Fund said the outbreak could shave 0.1 percentage point from 2020 growth." However, Georgieva said, "Growth this year will fall below the level of last year," though she "declined to say whether the virus crisis could push the world into a recession," adding, "It is the duration of the outbreak that at this time is difficult to predict." The Guardian \(UK\) (3/4, Inman, 4.19M), Bloomberg (3/4, Martin, 4.73M), and Business Insider (3/4, Heeb, 3.67M), among other outlets, also report.

Georgieva: IMF Ready To Disburse $50B To Low-Income, Emerging Market Countries Hit By Virus.

Reuters (3/4, Shalal, Dunsmuir) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva said Wednesday that the IMF would act with speed to process requests for low- or zero-interest loans from countries impacted by the spread of the coronavirus. Georgieva "said the IMF had $50 billion in such assistance available for quick disbursement" and "emphasized the need for concerted and immediate action by countries around the world to contain the spread of the disease that originated in China." Georgieva added, "Now is the time to put in place precautionary measures should the outbreak become more severe." Bank Of Korea Says Fed Cut Gives It More Room For Policy Maneuvering Due To Reduced Capital Outflow Risk.

Reuters (3/4, Kim) reports South Korea's central bank "said on Wednesday that the U.S. Federal Reserve's emergency interest rate cut gives it more policy room to maneuver by reducing the risks of capital outflows from Asia's fourth-largest economy." In a statement following "an urgently scheduled meeting in Seoul, the Bank of Korea (BOK) said outflow risks had eased as the Fed's overnight 50 basis-point cut to a range of 1.00% to 1.25% put policy rates of the two countries at a similar level." However, the Bank "stressed that the bank needs to consider factors other than capital movements when conducting policy, and said taking its rate down to an 'effective lower bound'...deserves comprehensive study."

DOD Contract Linguist Accused Of Disclosing US Intelligence Assets To Hezbollah.

The AP (3/4) reports the Justice Department announced Wednesday that Mariam Taha Thompson, "a Defense Department contract linguist," has been charged with "giving classified information, including the names of American intelligence assets, to a Lebanese national with ties to the militant group Hezbollah." Prosecutors said that "during a six-week period starting in late December," Thompson "repeatedly accessed dozens of files that she had no need to review" that "included the names of human assets, their photographs and cables detailing the information that the sources provided to the U.S. government." The Washington Free Beacon (3/4, Kredo, 78K) says FBI agents "arrested Thompson in late February at an overseas US military facility, where she was employed as a linguist holding top secret security clearance. A search of Thompson's living space revealed Arabic-language documents containing classified US materials."

The New York Times (3/4, Goldman, Barnes, 18.61M) reports law enforcement officials "suggested that the potential loss of classified information was grave and that the prosecution was one of the most serious recent counterintelligence cases they had seen." Reuters (3/4, Lynch) reports John Demers, the Justice Department's assistant attorney general for national security, "called Thompson's alleged conduct a 'disgrace' to her country." The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Strobel, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and Washington Post (3/4, Hsu, 14.2M), among other news outlets, also report Thompson's arrest.

Putin And Erdoğan Set To Meet In Hopes Of Averting Further Fighting In Syria.

Reuters (3/4, Tsvetkova, Isik) reports Russia is "racing to reinforce its troops in Syria by sea and air before talks between" President Vladimir Putin and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan in Moscow on Thursday. Putin and Erdoğan "agreed to meet after a surge in tensions between their countries over fighting in Syria's Idlib province between Russian-backed Syrian government forces and rebels allied to Turkey."

The Washington Post (3/4, Khurshudyan, 14.2M) says Thursday's meeting "will mark their first face-to-face encounter since Syrian government forces – backed by ally Russia – launched a major offensive in Idlib." Previous talks, it notes, "have produced stopgap measures on Syria, but nothing sustainable," and the two nations "have accused each other of breaching the terms of a 2018 deal."

The AP (3/4) similarly says that "with a looming new migration crisis at Europe's borders, all eyes will be on Moscow, where the two main power brokers in Syria will see if they can hammer out yet another deal carving up northern Syria, tailored to their own agendas." But cautions that "whatever deal they can work out, it will likely bring only a temporary halt" to fighting.

Taliban Have Launched At Least 76 Attacks Since Signing Deal With US.

Reuters (3/4, Sediqi, Greenfield) reports the US military on Wednesday "carried out its first air strike on Taliban fighters in Afghanistan since the two sides signed a troop withdrawal agreement on Saturday." A US forces spokesman "confirmed the incident in southern Helmand province," hours after President Trump spoke with chief Taliban official Mullah Baradar Akhund on Tuesday. In a tweet, spokesman Col. Sonny Leggett said the Taliban fighters "were actively attacking an (Afghan National Security Forces) checkpoint. This was a defensive strike to disrupt the attack." The AP (3/4) reports Leggett also said the Taliban "conducted 43 attacks on Afghan troops on Tuesday in Helmand."

The New York Times (3/4, Rahim, Mashal, 18.61M) reports the Taliban "resumed attacks against Afghan forces soon after signing a deal to end their war with the US military, raising concerns that the Americans are leaving their Afghan allies vulnerable to an insurgency unwilling to let go of violence as its main leverage." According to a spokesman for Afghanistan's national security council, "The Taliban have carried out at least 76 attacks across 24 Afghan provinces since Saturday, when they finalized an agreement for a troop withdrawal by the United States."

The Washington Post (3/4, George, 14.2M) also reports that "violence across Afghanistan has spiked in recent days following a Taliban announcement Monday that it had resumed offensive operations against Afghan security forces. ... Over the past 24 hours, the Taliban has conducted 30 attacks that have killed four civilians and 11 security force members and wounded 18 others, said Nasrat Rahimi, a spokesman for the Ministry of Interior Affairs." According to the Post, "A drop in violence was a critical precondition in the lead-up to the deal's signing, but the agreement did not specify violence levels moving forward."

Esper Voices Concerns About Open Skies Treaty.

The Washington Times (3/4, Meier, 492K) reports Defense Secretary Esper on Wednesday told a Senate panel he has "a lot of concerns" about an international treaty that allows US intelligence flights over Russia, "citing Moscow's repeated violations of the agreement." In testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee to defend the Pentagon's 2021 budget request, Esper said Russia has been cheating the Open Skies Treaty "for many years," adding, "We need to speak out more clearly about Russian noncompliance."

Bipartisan Bill Urges Olympic Committee To Move 2022 Winter Games Out Of China.

The Washington Times (3/4, Meier, 492K) reports that a "bipartisan group of senators is calling on the International Olympic Committee (IOC) to move the 2022 Winter Olympics out of China, citing humanitarian rights violations committed by Beijing against Hong Kong protesters and the detainment of more than 1 million ethnic Muslims." Led by Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL), "members unveiled legislation that urges the IOC to rebid the next winter games to a country 'that recognizes and respects human rights.'" In a Tuesday statement, Scott said, "The Olympic Games are an incredible opportunity to allow the world's best athletes to represent their countries and unite our nations, and should not be hosted by one of the world's worst human rights abusers."

WPost Analysis: US Democrats Increasing Wary Of Netanyahu.

The Washington Post (3/4, Tharoor, 14.2M) reports that after this week's election, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "may feel vindicated in his right-wing agenda – which [President] Trump has backed aggressively," but US Democrats "are increasingly wary of the Israeli prime minister and the trajectory of his rule. And there's a growing divide between American Jews, particularly the younger generations, and the Israeli voting public." To the Post, this divide "was on stark display at the American Israel Public Affairs Committee's annual conference this week," where "some leading candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination opted out of attending this year, including, most significantly," Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), who "could be the country's first Jewish president." Sanders did "not just politely decline his invitation to address AIPAC; he issued a statement attacking the organization for giving a platform to far-right figures," and "branded Netanyahu a 'reactionary racist.'"

Media Analyses: Netanyahu Has "No Clear Path" To Securing Majority Coalition. The AP (3/4, Goldenberg) reports Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "has fallen short of capturing the majority needed to form a government...deepening a year of political deadlock and appearing to dash the long-serving leader's hopes for a decisive victory." Netanyahu, "in an angry tirade...conceded that he did not have the parliamentary support to form a new government right away. But he still tried to claim victory as he lashed out at his main opponent and disparaged the leading Arab party – the third largest in parliament – as irrelevant.” With “over 99% of the votes counted, Netanyahu’s Likud led the way with 36 seats, ahead of challenger Benny Gantz’s Blue and White party, with 33 seats. Yet with his allies, Netanyahu’s right-wing camp held a total of only 58 seats, three shy of the 61 needed to form a government and no clear path to reaching the threshold.”

The New York Times (3/4, Halbfinger, 18.61M) says that “just one defector – whose political career could be ended, analysts said, by such a betrayal of the voters who elected him or her – would be a lot to ask. Three would seem a miracle, even for Mr. Netanyahu. And the likeliest candidates to be wooed by Mr. Netanyahu all insisted they were holding fast to their promises to see him into retirement and could not be bought off, no matter the inducement.”

Palestinians Protest As Israeli Bulldozers Clear Land In West Bank. Reuters (3/4, Sawafta, Al-Mughrabi) reports Palestinians have “launched protests in the occupied West Bank after Israeli bulldozers began clearing land in what villagers fear is an attempt to confiscate it for future Jewish settlements.” Villagers from “nearby Qusra challenged troops guarding Israeli bulldozers as they worked in a field close to Migdalim settlement in the northern West Bank.” In another nearby village, Beita, “residents protested over several days, planting a Palestinian flag and erecting a tent on the hilltop of al-Arma to defend it against settlers from Itamar settlement, near the city of Nablus.”

Ukraine’s Zelensky Fires His Cabinet.

The New York Times (3/4, Kramer, 18.61M) reports Ukraine’s President Volodymyr Zelensky fired his cabinet Wednesday “after suggesting in a speech that they had become overly solicitous of Western nations that financially support Ukraine by appointing foreigners to the boards of state companies.” In a speech to Parliament, Zelensky said, “With all respect to our international partners and with all appreciation for their help, the citizens of our country on governing boards of our companies are feeling like an ethnic minority.” While Zelensky “also faulted the ministers for poor performance,” he “offered praise and thanks that none had become entangled in a corruption scandal in the six months they served.” Zelensky “asked Parliament to vote on the cabinet’s dismissal in a special session Wednesday evening. Of the 450 members of Parliament, 335 voted in favor.”

Police Face Off With Migrants Seeking To Breach Turkey-Greece Border.

Reuters (3/4, Papadimas, Shakhshir) reports that “Greek and Turkish riot police deployed on their shared border fired tear gas on Wednesday as hundreds of migrants tried again to cross into Greece, amid an escalating war of words between Athens and Ankara about what was happening.” According to Reuters, “Turkey accused Greek forces of shooting dead one migrant and wounding five others, a charge strongly denied by Greece, which said Turkish police were using tear gas to help the migrants illegally cross onto its territory.” Reuters says “more than 10,000 migrants have been trying to breach the border since Turkey said last Thursday it would no longer abide by a 2016 deal with the European Union to halt illegal migration flows to Europe in return for billions of euros in aid.”

Congo Rainforest Losing Ability To Absorb Carbon Dioxide.

The Washington Post (3/4, Grossman, 14.2M) reports that “scientists have determined that trees in the Congo Basin of central Africa are losing their capacity to absorb carbon dioxide, raising alarms about the health of the world’s second-largest contiguous rainforest and its ability to store greenhouse gases linked to climate change.” A study published Wednesday in the journal Nature “found that some sites in the Congo Basin showed signs of weakened carbon uptake as early as 2010, suggesting that the decline in Africa may have been underway for a decade.” The study predicts that by 2030, “the African jungle will absorb 14 percent less carbon dioxide than it did 10 to 15 years ago,” and “by 2035, Amazonian trees won’t absorb any carbon dioxide at all.”

UI Report: As Mortgage Industry Transitions To SOFR, Many Will Look To GSEs, FHFA For Guidance.

The Urban Institute (3/4, 1K) released a report titled “An Examination of the Status of the US Mortgage Market in Preparing for the Transition at the End of 2021” from Libor to SOFR. The authors of the report, Laurie Goodman and Edward Golding, wrote that they see “signs of progress, albeit less than might have been expected. They believe that many market participants will look to Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and their regulator, the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA), for guidance on how to handle the shift from LIBOR to SOFR with minimal disruption to the US mortgage market.”

According to a piece from GlobeSt, (3/5, Borland) that is accessible to subscribers, “Last year, Freddie Mac adopted SOFR and phased out LIBOR, and the move is triggering a trend throughout the lending community. More and more lenders are referencing SOFR in their loan documents, following Freddie Mac’s lead to shift away from LIBOR.”

GSEs Take CECL In Stride.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (3/5, Hollier, Subscription Publication) reports, “After wringing their hands for nearly two years about how the Current Expected Credit Losses accounting standard might decimate earnings when launched at the beginning of 2020,

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac executives now seem to be saying, "Not so much." According to IMF, "Under the new standard, which went into effect on Jan. 1, the GSEs are now required to set aside reserves to cover all expected future losses on an asset at the time of acquisition. Prior to CECL, the two entities used the incurred loss methodology." Although "many analysts anticipated that the implementation of CECL would balloon the loan loss reserves of the GSEs, cutting deeply into their profits in the first quarter of 2020," now that the "CECL implications have been fully digested, both enterprises are downplaying the accounting standard's potential impact on first quarter earnings."

Five Star Government Forum To Feature Discussions With Officials From GSEs, Ginnie Mae, FHFA, CFPB.

DS News (3/4, Welborn) reports, "On Wednesday, April 1, leaders from numerous government agencies and the mortgage servicing industry will convene at the Ronald Reagan Building in Washington, D.C., for the 11th annual Five Star Government Forum (FSGF)," which is described as an annual event to "bring together officials making critical decisions on the direction of the housing economy with representatives of the mortgage industry in order to ensure that sensible regulations are in place to protect the industry and the customers that it serves." This year, "the CFPB, HUD, FHFA, Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, Ginnie Mae, and others" will be represented at the forum.

Saudi Arabia's Fannie-Freddie Equivalent Raises Its Volume Goal For 2020.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M) reports that Saudi Arabia's "first mortgage refinancing firm aims to raise its holdings of home-loan portfolios by 10 times this year, as a government push to boost home ownership spurs lending." According to Bloomberg, "The Saudi Real Estate Refinance Company – the state-owned equivalent of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac in the U.S. – plans to buy more than 23 billion riyals ($6.1 billion) of mortgage portfolios from banks in 2020, Housing Minister Majed Al-Hogail said in an interview with Bloomberg TV in Riyadh. That's a sharp jump from the 2.25 billion riyals it held at the end of last year."

Berkadia Arranges $34M Freddie Mac Loan For OKC Apartments.

Multi-Housing News (3/4, Marinescu) reports, "Berkadia has arranged a $33.8 million Freddie Mac loan for the purchase of Sycamore Farms Apartments, a 398-unit community in Oklahoma City."

Coronavirus Throws A Wrench In Companies' CECL Predictions.

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Maurer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the Current Expected Credit Losses standard went into effect for large public companies in the US in December, but the outbreak of the novel coronavirus is hurting companies' ability to accurately predict credit risk. According to NYU accounting professor Stephen Ryan, it is unlikely that even the CDC could currently forecast the way the virus will evolve with any significant degree of confidence.

Democratic Lawmakers Criticized Proposed Cuts To HUD Funding.

The Hill (3/4, Moreno, 2.98M) reports, "Democrats on a House Appropriations Committee subpanel pressed Housing and Urban Development (HUD) Secretary Ben Carson Wednesday on his department's proposal to slash funds for housing assistance." Rep. David Price (D-NC) said of HUD's $48 billion FY 2021 budget, "This is woefully inadequate to the task at hand." According to The Hill, the proposal amounts to "a cut of $8.6 billion or 15 percent compared to the current levels."

CFPB Says Servicers Failed To Carry Out Loss-Mitigation Procedures Required By RESPA.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (3/4, Yang, Subscription Publication) reports, "Residential servicers are violating loss-mitigation practices established by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau when dealing with property damage from natural disasters, according to a new supervisory report." The CFPB said, "Examiners determined that one or more servicers violated Regulation X [of RESPA], by failing to provide certain required loss-mitigation notices, providing incomplete notices or not providing notices within the time required by the regulation." According to IMF, however, "the violations were, in part, due to an unexpected surge in applications following natural disasters."

MBA: Mortgage Applications Rose 15% This Week As Mortgage Rates Fell.

HousingWire (3/4, 23K) reports, "mortgage applications jumped 15.1% from one week prior, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association." The Refinance Index rose 26% this week. The seasonally adjusted Purchase Index fell 3%, while the unadjusted Purchase Index rose 11%. The refinance share rose from 60.8% to 66.2% of total applications. The ARM share rose to 6.4%. The FHA share fell from 10.5% to 9.3%, while the VA share fell from 11.8% to 10.5%. The average rate for 30-year FRMs with conforming loan balances fell from 3.73% to 3.57%, while that for jumbos held steady at 3.72%. The 15-year FRM average fell from 3.18% to 3.03%. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.21% to 3.12%. According to Mortgage News Daily (3/4, Swanson), "The average size of a loan increased from $332,000 to $359,300 and purchase loans rose to $349,400 from $347,800."

National Mortgage News (3/4) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "The 30-year fixed-rate mortgage dropped to its lowest level in more than seven years last week, amidst increasing concerns regarding the economic impact from the spread of the coronavirus, as well as the tremendous financial market volatility. Refinance demand jumped as a result, with conventional refinance applications increasing more than 30%. Given the further drop in Treasury rates this week, we expect refinance activity will increase even more until fears subside and rates stabilize." Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (3/4, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "This week, thanks to the stock market continuing its meltdown (courtesy of the coronavirus), the yield on the 10-year fell to a new all-time low of 0.91%." MBS Highway's Barry Habib now predicts "an eventual yield of just 0.50% on the bond." For lenders, IMF says, this means the "lowest rates ever, a refi boom and fatter profit margins."

M Report (3/4, Albanese) also covers the MBA's latest mortgage applications survey.

Following Emergency Fed Cut, Libor Stages Biggest Single-Day Drop In A Decade.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M) reports that Libor "staged its biggest one-day drop in more than a decade Wednesday in a sign that markets are bracing for even lower U.S. borrowing costs in the face of the spreading coronavirus." According to Bloomberg, "The three-month London interbank offered rate for dollars...sank 31.4 basis points to 1.00063%. That's the biggest one-day slide since October 2008, the height of the global financial crisis. The move reflects a market that's catching up with front-end rates that had already begun pricing additional Federal Reserve rate cuts even after Tuesday's emergency half-point reduction. Fed officials have a scheduled meeting on March 17-18."

Black Knight: Low Rates Boost Refi-Eligible Population.

HousingWire (3/4, Howley, 23K) reports new data from Black Knight indicates that "low borrowing costs have made 11.1 million US mortgages 'refi eligible.'" Freddie Mac reported last week that the 30-year FRM averaged 3.45%. According to Black Knight, the average borrower could save $268 per month. The aggregate savings, HousingWire says, "if all eligible borrowers got new mortgages, would be $3 billion a month." Black Knight said, "Given the increasing refinance incentive, it would not be surprising to see another surge in refinancing activity."

USA Today (3/4, Menton, 10.31M) reports that Bankrate.com Chief Financial Analyst Greg McBride said of the drop in rates, "This blows the refinancing door wide open, particularly for borrowers that had taken loans a year ago. Knocking $150 off your monthly mortgage payment creates valuable breathing room in the household budget." CNN International (3/3, Bahney) reports Bankrate senior economic analyst Mark Hamrick said, "It's definitely a good time for someone looking to buy a home to get financing. Home prices have risen, and it is rough for those looking for a bargain, but the financing has gotten better."

Compass And Better.com Report: Women Gaining Power In Homebuying, Thanks To Digitization.

HousingWire (3/4, Falcon, 23K) says that a "new report" from Compass and Better.com "says that an increasing amount of women are taking hold of the housing market." National Mortgage News (3/4, Centopani) says that this is "thanks in part to the digitization of the mortgage and real estate industries." According to NMN, "The rise of fintech in some contexts led to less discriminatory lending to underserved groups," and in 2019, "about 58% of Compass agents reported women made up the majority of their clients. Approximately, 83% of agents said their share of female customers increased over the last five years and 71% said single women were entering the housing market earlier than single men." Meanwhile, Better.com found that "certain pockets of its female borrowers" are growing "exponentially." Single minority women borrowers "increased by five times last year," and "those in the 30- to 40-year-old demographic with monthly salaries between $10,000 and $20,000 grew four and a half times." Better.com's female borrower base "had an average credit score of 770."

Quicken, JPM, UWM, Caliber On Hiring Sprees As Rates Plummet.

According to a potentially paywalled Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M) piece carried by National Mortgage News (3/4), "A drop in interest rates in response to the coronavirus outbreak is adding urgency to a hiring spree across the mortgage industry. Executives at four of the nation's 15 biggest mortgage lenders, already gearing up for a busy 2020, anticipate hiring thousands of employees this year to keep up with what they expect to be a flood of demand for purchase loans and refinancings." Quicken Loans reportedly had its busiest day for mortgage applications in the company's entire history on Monday, and it "expects to hire a few hundred new employees this month." United Wholesale Mortgage "plans to hire another 2,000 people in 2020 after it doubled in size last year to roughly 5,400 employees." Meanwhile, Caliber Home Loans has "nearly doubled its call center staff over the past six months and anticipates hiring at least 25% more loan officers and back-office workers in the coming months," and JPMorgan Chase "told home-equity staff last week that half of the team would be transferred to mortgages to keep up with demand." NMN reports, "Interest rates for the typical 30-year mortgage should fall below 3.25% and remain there for the rest of the year, said Mike Patterson, chief operating officer at New Jersey-based Freedom Mortgage Corp. Mortgage investors were privately discussing on Tuesday how to price a new Ginnie Mae 30-year fixed-rate mortgage security that would yield just 2%, a first, Patterson said."

Fannie Mae Prices Third CAS Offering Of 2020.

DS News (3/4, Welborn) reports, "Fannie Mae has priced its first Connecticut Avenue Securities (CAS) Seasoned B-Tranche transaction, representing the third CAS transaction of 2020. CAS 2020-SBT1 is a $966 million security offering that references loans that were included in 2015 and 2016 CAS deals." Fannie Mae VP of Credit Risk Transfer Laurel Davis said, "This marks our second transaction in an ongoing program to transfer risk on our seasoned loan book. These transactions offer investors a different profile than our ongoing benchmark CAS REMIC transactions. We were pleased to see the strong demand for the deal, especially in light of the backdrop of global market volatility. We plan to return to the market in late March with our next benchmark CAS REMIC." National Mortgage News (3/4, Finkelstein) also covers the transaction.

M&A Activity On The Rise.

National Mortgage News (3/4, Sinnock) reports, "Mortgage-related companies finalized four partnerships, a servicing-retention firm went up for sale, and a long-delayed insurance-related transaction moved forward this week in a wave of industry merger and acquisition activity." According to NMN, "Mortgage technology vendor Black Knight finalized its acquisition of Collateral Analytics, AboutMYMortgage announced plans to sell, purchase-loan marketing fintech Home Captain closed on its purchase of Redefy, and Genworth struck a deal with New York that could help it complete the pending sale of its mortgage and life insurance affiliate to China's Oceanwide Holdings."

National MI Expands Integration With VirPack.

Mortgage Professional America (3/4, Mendoza) reports, "National MI and VirPack, a provider of document management and workflow automation platform for mortgage lenders, have broadened their integration to allow direct transfer of loan documents to National MI." According to MPA, "The expanded integration enables lenders using VirPack to electronically deliver loan files for mortgage insurance underwriting directly to National MI," and it "includes a direct delivery process for National MI's Delegated Assurance Review (DAR) program, along with other non-delegated programs."

Opinion: Lenders Should Keep An Eye On Disparate Impact As Use Of Alternative Data Grows.

In an opinion piece for American Banker (3/4, Subscription Publication, 31K), Marketplace Lending Association Executive Director Nathaniel Hoopes argues that as digitization grows, the mortgage industry should "work to maintain" the "disparate impact" framework in fair lending regulation and the implementation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act. According to him, "It doesn't just protect borrowers; it protects innovation. And it particularly protects the very use of alternative data that is expanding access to credit and lowering loan pricing for people of color and other borrowers poorly served by traditional underwriting."

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (2/18, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.976 percent.

Dollar Struggles.

Reuters (3/5, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar struggled to make headway on Thursday, as very low US yields and the prospect of even more monetary easing held back gains, while virus fears supported the safe-haven yen." The dollar rose "0.3% higher on the euro overnight." Meanwhile, the yen rose "0.2% through Thursday and last trading at 107.33 per dollar."

Gold Edges Higher.

Reuters (3/5, Sistla) reports, "Gold edged up on Thursday on safe-haven buying fuelled by worries about the fast-spreading coronavirus, but a rise in equity markets limited bullion's gains." Spot gold "inched 0.2% higher to $1,638.70 per ounce by 0451 GMT," while US gold futures "were down 0.2% at $1,639.50."

Oil Rises More Than 1%.

Reuters (3/5, Jaganathan) reports, "Oil prices rose more than 1% on Thursday, recouping losses from the previous day on a smaller-than-expected rise in crude oil inventories in the United States, although the gains were capped by uncertainties over cuts by major oil producers." Brent crude "rose by 78 cents, or 1.5%, to $51.91 per barrel by 0202 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate "was up by 69 cents, or 1.5%, at $47.47 per barrel."

Cybersecurity

Nakasone Says Election Security Is US Cyber Command's "Top Priority."

The Hill (3/4, Miller, 2.98M) reports US Cyber Command leader Gen. Paul Nakasone "told a House panel Wednesday that election security is his 'top priority,' emphasizing strides made in combating threats in the years since Russia interfered in the 2016 presidential election." Nakasone, "testifying during a House Armed Services subcommittee hearing on US Cyber Command's proposed fiscal 2021 budget," said, "We are 244 days from the 2020 presidential election. My top priority is a safe and secure election that is free from foreign influence." Nakasone "emphasized that even if foreign actors try to interfere in US elections, federal agencies are prepared." Nakasone warned,

"Malicious actors are trying to test our defenses and our resolve. We are ready for them and any others who try to interfere in our democratic processes."

Bloomberg (3/5, 4.73M) reports Nakasone "said an intensive US government effort to protect the Super Tuesday primaries from foreign interference made efforts in the 2018 midterm election look 'like a pick-up game.'" Nakasone "said his team gathered at 6 a.m. and joined a 'chat system' with other agencies – including the DOD, DHS, and intelligence community." He said, "This is all different than what we were doing in 2018. In 2018, I look back on that, even though very successful, it looks like a pick-up game compared to what I saw yesterday."

US Cyber Officials Monitor Voting Amid Russian Disinformation Campaign.

TIME (3/4, Walcott, 18.47M) reports that, as Super Tuesday voting got underway, officials from four national security agencies "huddled in a nondescript office building just across the Potomac River from Washington to monitor the presidential primaries for any signs of foreign interference." Two intelligence officials "said that, over the course of the day, the four agencies connected to state and local election officials via a text messaging platform to allow communication in case poll workers saw issues at voting stations, or federal officials got word of efforts to meddle from abroad." The officials "said the exercise included DHS, the FBI, NSA, and the US Cyber Command, and it found no signs of direct foreign meddling." The foremost threat of "direct meddling in the election outcomes, say experts inside and out of government, remains Russia."

Sen. Hawley To Introduce Bill Banning TikTok On Government Devices.

The Hill (3/4, Rodrigo, 2.98M) reports Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) on Wednesday "said he will introduce legislation banning federal employees from using TikTok on government devices." Hawley said during a Senate Judiciary subcommittee hearing on big tech's connections to China, "This is a necessary step to protect the security of the US and the data security of every American." The legislation comes "as several agencies that deal with national security and intelligence issues have completely banned their employees from using TikTok." However, enforcement of those bans "has been spotty, with many military members, for example, still posting on TikTok." Nexstar (3/4) reports on concerns raised about TikTok on Capitol Hill as "lawmakers raised concerns about apps' potential ties to the Chinese government." National security officials are concerned TikTok "could give Beijing unfettered access to Americans' data." Hawley called on all federal agencies "to ban their employees from using the app, something the Department of Homeland Security, the Pentagon and the Department of State have already done."

Breitbart (3/4, 673K) reports Clyde Wallace, an official in the FBI's cyber division, told the hearing, "TikTok is one example of an application where the average citizen doesn't understand the implications of what's behind it. It's basically controlled by a state-sponsored actor." While the various data points "collected by TikTok may not seem sensitive, Wallace said the information may be aggregated and 'used for many purposes.'" In his written testimony, Wallace "said Chinese-owned social media applications may collect personal data including biometrics, contact lists, location data and bank and credit card details." He said, "Any and all data can be transferred to other locations and associated entities to include the Chinese parent company."

Senate Passes Bill To Boost US Oversight Of Security Threats To 5G Telecom Networks.

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Ferek, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Senate approved a bill that would require the US government to find security threats and pursue potential fixes within the equipment and software that support 5G wireless networks. The bill, approved by a wide margin, highlights congressional concerns that other nations may spy on the data flows emerging from the 5G networks. US officials have expressed worry that Huawei equipment would facilitate Chinese spying on US citizens.

Telecom Executives Testify At Senate Hearing On Preventing Huawei Gaining Stronger Role In US 5G Networks. The Hill (3/4, Miller, 2.98M) reports lawmakers on Wednesday "heard from executives at top telecommunications companies as the Senate Commerce Committee weighed measures to prevent Chinese giant Huawei from getting a foothold in the emerging US 5G network." The hearing on '5G supply chain security' "featured executives from companies including Nokia and Ericsson, who touted their technology as a viable and secure alternative and offered their support for legislation to help American telecom providers replace Huawei equipment." Jason Boswell, the head of security for Ericsson's Network Product Solutions, "testified that Ericsson saw their products as 'the best in the world.'" He "argued that should the US decide to rely on Ericsson for 5G equipment, the company saw no 'restrictions on our ability to meet manufacturing demand.'"

US Senators Urge UK's Boris Johnson To End 5G Deal With Huawei. The Telegraph (UK) (3/4, Tominey, 956K) reports a group of US senators "has written to MPs expressing 'significant concern' about Huawei and urging the government to rethink the decision to grant the Chinese firm access to the UK's 5G network." The letter comes after Tory MPs "called on the government to reduce the state-subsidised telecoms company's involvement in Britain's 'fifth generation' infrastructure to zero by 2023." The US senators' letter said: "While banning companies like Huawei from the UK's 'core' 5G network infrastructure may address some security threats, in practice it could prove very challenging, if not impossible, to separate 'core' equipment from that considered to be on the periphery. Given the significant security, privacy, and economic threats posed by Huawei, we strongly urge the UK to revisit its recent decision, take steps to mitigate the risks of Huawei, and work in close partnership with the US on such efforts going forward."

Executive Says Huawei Will Build French Factory Regardless Of 5G Decision. Reuters (3/4, Rosemain, Protard) reports a Huawei executive "said the company will build a factory in France regardless of the government's decision on whether to use its equipment in a new 5G network." Huawei "said last week that it planned to build a manufacturing plant in France to ease worldwide concerns stoked by US charges that Beijing could use Huawei's equipment for spying." Europe has become a "major battleground in this and France's cybersecurity agency is screening 5G equipment, including from Huawei, for deployment in its new network." Huawei France's deputy chief executive Minggang Zhang told Reuters, "The plant will be built in France, whatever the French government's decision, as it is part of our strategy."

Huawei Pleaded Not Guilty To Racketeering Charges In US Federal Court. Bloomberg (3/4, 4.73M) reports Huawei pleaded "not guilty Wednesday to racketeering charges filed last month by US prosecutors who accused the Chinese telecommunications equipment giant of a 20-year pattern of corporate espionage." The company had called "the charges 'unfounded and unfair' prior to entering its plea Wednesday in federal court." The escalation of the criminal case "comes as the Trump Administration continues to brand Huawei a threat to national security while the company competes in the global battle for supremacy in fifth-generation wireless technology, or 5G."

Nokia And Ericsson Tell Senate Hearing They Are 5G Alternative To Huawei. CNET News (3/4, Reardon, 1.99M) reports European telecom equipment makers "were on Capitol Hill Wednesday to reassure lawmakers that their 5G gear is a safe and secure alternative to equipment from Chinese giant Huawei." Their testimony comes "as new legislation, allocating $1 billion in subsidies to rip and replace Huawei gear in rural wireless networks, awaits the signature of President Trump." The Senate Commerce Committee's hearing "featured executives from Nokia and Ericsson." The executives made "the case for why the US should trust them to supply the nation's wireless carriers as they build out their 5G networks." Jason Boswell, chief of security for Ericsson's Network Product Solutions, "reassured members of Congress that his company's products are 'the best in the world.'" And he "said that the company was up to the task of keeping up with manufacturing demand for its products to fuel US 5G networks."

Hackers Using Coronavirus To Scam Companies. The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Rundle, Stupp, Nash, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports criminals are exploiting worries about the coronavirus epidemic to infect computer systems with their own viruses. They are creating fake emails mentioning the outbreak that look like they are sent by business partners or public institutions to persuade users to open the messages. Cybersecurity firm Proofpoint indicates that the number of such fake emails have increased substantially since the beginning of the year.

Russian Propagandists Pushing New "News" App As Free Streaming Service.

The Daily Beast (3/4, 1.39M) reports Russian propagandists are "pushing a 'news' app that poses as a 'free streaming service,' but which is linked directly to the Russian propaganda outlet RT." It describes itself "as a 'one-of-a-kind free streaming service & TV library of news programs, talk shows, business updates, professional sports highlights and comedy.'" However, the only shows "available on Portable. TV are produced by RT America, including shows like Redacted Tonight with self-proclaimed comedian Lee Camp and The World According to Jesse with former Minnesota Gov. Jesse Ventura." The only shows "actually available on the app are those found on a Russian propaganda channel." There isn't "a single show on Portable. TV that didn't originate on RT." The app also comes "a few years after the ODNI issued a report highlighting RT's central role in propagating Russian interference efforts during the 2016 elections."

Federal Reserve

Fed Finalizes New Capital Rules For Big Banks.

Reuters (3/4) reports the Federal Reserve released new rules integrating "capital requirements stemming from the Fed's annual bank stress tests with regular capital standards" to create "a 'stress capital buffer' to determine how much banks must hold in reserve to guard against downturns."

The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Ackerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Fed Vice Chairman for Supervision Randal Quarles said in a statement that the move simplifies rules for big banks. Fed Governor Lael Brainard opposed the plan, saying it would cause big banks to reduce their capital buffers.

American Banker (3/4, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Under the new system, each bank subject to the Comprehensive Capital Analysis and Review will have to meet a unique benchmark based on its performance of how much capital to hold in the following year to combat stress." The new plan "is expected to result in higher capital requirements for the largest banks, while some smaller institutions still subject to CCAR may get a break." The final stress capital buffer – which will be in place for this year's stress tests – "will calculate a bank's stress capital buffer as the difference between a bank's starting and projected capital ratios under the 'severely adverse' stress test scenario."

Bullard: Interest Rates Now Appropriate For Addressing Virus Risks Following Fed's Emergency Cut.

Reuters (3/4) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard said Wednesday that risks of the coronavirus becoming more serious than expected are rising, but that interest rates following the Fed's emergency cut Tuesday are now appropriate. Bullard said, "We got the policy rate to the right place for now, given the information we have now. And we took out some insurance against the possibility that this will cause a growth slowdown in the U.S." Bullard "said he was going to support a rate cut at the March meeting and did not see a reason to wait. The emergency cut moved up the Fed's action, lessening the need for another move at the March meeting, Bullard said, but policymakers are tracking developments closely." Bullard added, "It will be temporary. Eventually, we'll get through this. But the question is, how severe is it going to be and how long is it going to last?" The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

New York Fed Accepts $100 Billion In Overnight Repo Bids.

Reuters (3/4, Chavez-Dreyfuss) reports the New York Fed "on Wednesday accepted $100 billion of the $111.478 billion in overnight bids from primary dealers in a repurchase agreement (repo) operation meant to keep the federal funds rate within the target range." The Wall Street Journal (3/4, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Financial Regulatory Agencies

Fifth Circuit Affirms Constitutionality Of CFPB Structure.

Law360 (3/4, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports a panel of the Fifth US Circuit Court of Appeals "affirmed on Tuesday the special tenure protections enjoyed by the director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau as 'valid and constitutional' in a 2-1 split, siding with other circuit courts that have ruled on the agency's constitutionality." All American Check Cashing Inc. "had argued that a CFPB enforcement action accusing it of abusive business practices should be void because of constitutional flaws in the CFPB's structure – namely, that it is led by a single director, currently Kathleen Kraninger, who cannot be fired by the president except for cause."

Reuters (3/5, Grzincic) reports the 5th Circuit is now "the third federal appeals court to find the leadership structure of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau passes constitutional muster, even as the US Supreme Court heard argument on the same question."

Former CFPB Official To Return As Acting Deputy Chief.

American Banker (3/4, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports FDIC executive Leonard Chanin "has been tapped as acting deputy director at the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau" on a part-time basis. Chanin "will still remain at the FDIC. Previously a top lawyer at the CFPB in the agency's early days, Chanin has been serving as deputy to FDIC Chair Jelena McWilliams since March 2019."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Congressional Report: Wells Fargo Not Complying With Regulatory Settlements.

Reuters (3/5) reports a Congressional report released Wednesday said Wells Fargo is failing to comply with the terms of multiple settlements related to its fake-accounts scandal. The House Financial Services Committee "released the findings of its year-long probe into the bank ahead of hearings next week that will see its new CEO Charles Scharf and its chair Betsy Duke testify before the committee for the first time."

Politico (3/4, Guida, 4.29M) reports the committee "said its yearlong investigation into Wells Fargo shows that board members fell down on the job of oversight and the bank's management didn't take regulators' demands seriously enough in the wake of multiple consumer abuse scandals." In its report, the committee "also slammed financial regulators, saying they knew for years about serious company-wide deficiencies in managing potential problems." The report pointed to an email from former chief risk officer Michael Loughlin to former CEO Tim Sloan. According to the committee, Loughlin wrote, "If any of the $200MM [in proposed customer remediation] is left over, we promise to give it to charity – only after the CFPB and the OCC let us out of the consent orders. If they do not, no donation. Put the onus back on them."

The House report also revealed, according to The New York Times (3/4, Flitter, 18.61M), that Eric Blankenstein, a Consumer Financial Protection Bureau official "who was forced out over racist comments," promised "political oversight of regulatory actions" to Wells Fargo. Blankenstein, an enforcement official at the agency, "privately offered reassurances to Wells Fargo's chief executive at the time that there would be 'political oversight' of its enforcement actions, according to a report issued Wednesday by the House Financial Services Committee." The report "said the agency had promised that the unresolved regulatory matters, such as an inquiry into the bank's aggressive practice of closing customers' accounts, would be settled in private, without further fines."

Wells Fargo Names Douglas Edwards Acting Legal Chief As Parker Exits.

Bloomberg Law (3/4, Baxter, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports Wells Fargo "has appointed Douglas Edwards to serve as acting legal chief and a member of the bank's operating committee." Edwards' promotion requires approval of the OCC "under the terms of a 2018 consent order in which the federal banking regulator was given input on the selection of Wells Fargo senior executives and board members." An OCC spokesman "said the agency would not comment on specific individuals." Two lawyers who have worked in-house at the bank within the last year "told Bloomberg Law that the OCC has taken an active role in monitoring law department developments at the company, with chief bank examiner Tanya Smith addressing an off-site gathering of hundreds of bank lawyers last year in Salt Lake City." Former general counsel-turned-interim CEO C. Allen Parker left the bank February 7.

Former US Bank Risk Officer Fined $450,000 In Money Laundering Case.

Reuters (3/4) reports former US Bancorp Chief Operational Risk Officer Michael LaFontaine has been fined $450,000 "for his role in failing to prevent violations of the US anti-money laundering law." LaFontaine "admitted he failed to take steps to implement and maintain an effective compliance program to prevent money laundering, the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) said on Wednesday."

PYMNTS (3/4, 12K) reports that in February 2018, FinCEN, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the US Department of Justice fined the bank $185 million for related charges. Two subordinates "alerted LaFontaine that they thought the system was insufficient due to the alert limits." The OCC also "warned US Bank that capping the system due to staff size and available resources could trigger enforcement.” FinCEN Director Kenneth A. Blanco said, “Mr. LaFontaine was warned by his subordinates and by regulators that capping the number of alerts was dangerous and ill-advised. His actions prevented the proper filing of many, many SARs, which hindered law enforcement’s ability to fully combat crimes and protect people. FinCEN encourages technological innovations to help fight money laundering, but technology must be used properly.”

CFBP Plans Fifth Third Probe Over Fake Accounts.

PYMNTS (3/4, 12K) reports the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau plans to file enforcement action against Fifth Third Bank “over the generation of fake accounts allegedly done by employees.” The bank, which disclosed the information in a regulatory filing, said it will “vigorously” defend itself.

American Banker (3/4, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Fifth Third spokeswoman Laura Trujillo said the bank will “fully cooperate with any regulatory and government inquiries,” but did “not say what types of accounts are under investigation by the CFPB.” Fifth Third recently converted from a state charter in Ohio to a national bank charter. American Banker says, “Because it was not previously supervised by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the bank likely was not part of a broad examination by the national bank regulator in 2018 into whether more than 40 banks under the OCC’s purview had also opened unauthorized accounts.”

LendingClub-Radius Deal Likely To Face Intense Regulatory Scrutiny.

American Banker (3/5, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports LendingClub’s agreement to acquire Radius Bank “will likely invite intense regulatory scrutiny that could set ground rules for future deals involving fintechs buying banks.” LendingClub executives expect a 12- to 15-month review process, but that time frame “could hinge on how thorough regulators will be with their evaluation and any conditions they set for the San Francisco lender before signing off on a $185 million acquisition that will provide LendingClub with a bank charter.” The Federal Reserve and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency “will likely be the most involved – and most vocal – regulators reviewing the transaction, industry experts said.”

Big Banks Test Disaster Recovery Sites Amid Coronavirus Fears.

The Financial Times (3/4, Noonan, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports Goldman, JPMorgan, Morgan Stanley, and Citigroup have all been testing their disaster recovery sites in the US and London so they can keep their businesses running through a coronavirus outbreak.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

“It’s Clear That Biden And Sanders Need Secret Service Protection.” The Washington Post (3/4, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the Administration “should heed [House Homeland Security Chairman] Thompson’s call for prompt action and take the steps needed to ensure the safety of the presidential candidates.”

“Democrats, A Scorched-Earth Competition Will Only Help Trump.” A Washington Post (3/4, 14.2M) editorial says the race for the Democratic presidential nomination “is now between former vice president Joe Biden and Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders (I). Both candidates insist that their overriding goal is to beat President Trump.” The Post says they “should be judged on whether they avoid scorched-earth tactics that poison the chances of a Democratic victory in November.”

“Time To End Gerrymandering In Virginia.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (3/4, 14.2M) urges Democratic state lawmakers in Virginia “to reform” the state’s “blatantly partisan redistricting procedure so it serves voters, not politicians.” The Post urges Democrats to follow through on a constitutional amendment that would establish a bipartisan commission and make Virginia’s Supreme Court the “ultimate arbiter” of disputes. The Post concludes, “Virginia Democrats, now in control, can show the state they are prepared for real leadership — and that their demands over the past decade for a bipartisan approach to redistricting will not fall victim to political opportunism now that they are in the driver’s seat.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Sanders Vs. Biden Stakes.” A Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says the possibility of having a socialist at the top of the ticket to take on Trump drove many Democratic voters away from Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and to former Vice President Biden on Super Tuesday.

“Joe Biden’s Stock-Market Tonic.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) observes health stocks, including insurers and hospital chains, popped on Wednesday as the threat of Sen. Bernie Sander’s (I-VT) Medicare for All diminished with Joe Biden’s victories in Super Tuesday primaries. The Journal says the market’s volatility over the past two weeks shows that investors were just as worried about a socialist President in office as they are about the coronavirus epidemic.

“Schumer Threatens The Court.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) applauds Chief Justice John Roberts for denouncing Senate Minority Leader Schumer’s comments directed at Justices Gorsuch and Kavanaugh on the abortion case out of Louisiana, and urges all who believe in institutional democratic norms to follow in rebuking him. The Journal adds that it is confident Justices Gorsuch and Kavanaugh will disregard Schumer's threats and rule on the merits of the case.

"Bloomberg's Contribution." A Wall Street Journal (3/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that despite his poor showing on Tuesday, former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg deserves credit for entering the race and trying instead of complaining about the field of candidates from the sidelines.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Sam Bee: "Yesterday was Super Tuesday, one of the most important nights in the 2020 election. Fourteen states had their primaries, and it now looks like it's a close race between Bernie, Biden, and the coronavirus, which is projected to infect them all."

Sam Bee: "The big winner of the night was Joe Biden, who won 10 states, and much of his success could be attributed to other moderate candidates dropping out of the race and giving him their endorsement. Amy Klobuchar laid down her comb and stapler after throwing them at her staffers one last time, while Pete Buttigieg gave up his dream of becoming America's first white Obama."

Sam Bee: "I know that last night's primary results were probably disappointing for some of you, and it may seem now that Democrats are more divided than ever. This primary has become bigger than the candidates. It's starting to seem like it's about the very soul of the Democratic party, a race between unapologetic progressive values and the color beige."

Conan O'Brien: "Yesterday, Joe Biden won three states he didn't even visit. That's true. Yeah. That explains Biden's new campaign slogan: 'Vote for me or I'll come talk to you.'"

Conan O'Brien: "I don't know if you saw this during a speech last night. Protesters rushed toward Joe Biden. And his wife, Jill, jumped in the way to keep her husband safe. ... Today Melania Trump said, 'Why would she do that? ... She had a chance. A chance to be free!'"

Conan O'Brien: "At 77 years old, Biden is actually the youngest man still in the Democratic primary. ... When Bernie was a freshman in college, Joe was a mere senior in high school. That's a whole year younger. Yeah. Joe might be 77, but his teeth are only three years old. Lightly spiced food? Joe's young belly can handle it. Agile Joe's shower only has two grab bars."
he's the youngest.

Trevor Noah: "Going into Super Tuesday, the Democratic field had been narrowed down to four main candidates, which is a long way from the original 6,000."

Trevor Noah: "And as the dust began to settle, it became clear there were two winners and two losers. Elizabeth Warren, one of the night's losers. She failed to pick up a single state. And to add insult to injury, in her home state of Massachusetts, she came in third. Yeah. Which is pretty rough. Like, you came home to find your parents had replaced you with another child. They would be like, 'Sorry, honey, we would like Joe Biden to be our daughter now.'"

Trevor Noah: "Another candidate who hit the low point was Mike Bloomberg. ... I'm not going to lie. I still can't believe Mike Bloomberg spent $500 million to not be President. Now like, I'm also not going to be the President, but I spent nothing. In a certain way, I feel like I saved $500 million, you know?"

Trevor Noah: [On Jill Biden stopping protesters who stormed the stage at Joe Biden's speech] "Jill Biden, see that, stepped in and blocked that protester like a white lady Jackie Chan. Bam! ... [Joe Biden] has more women protecting him than T'Challa. ... No wonder he won the black vote."

Trevor Noah: "Don't forget this contest is far from over. ... And even with his good night last night, Biden is still basically neck and neck with Bernie in the delegate count. Up until this point, these two have been super-friendly on the campaign trail. ... The gloves are officially off. The dentures are in. And things are about to get messy between these two. ... And Bernie, if you are going to attack Joe Biden, I wish you the best of luck. But remember not to get too close. Because then you will have to deal with Jill."

Jimmy Kimmel: "There's so much going on with the coronavirus, Genesis reuniting, and on top of all that, Joe Biden has risen from the dead. Super Tuesday was like Easter Sunday for Joe Biden."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Some voters here in Los Angeles waited three hours to vote, and if I'm waiting in line for three hours, I better get a Popeye's chicken sandwich at the end of it."

Jimmy Kimmel: "It's essentially a two-man contest. Joe and Bernie fighting for the nomination like it's the last bowl of Jell-O at the senior center. Isn't your late 70s a weird time to start a new job? The only job you should start in your 70s is Walmart greeter."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We already have a rule that you can't be younger than 35 to be President. ... By the way, why is the minimum age 35? If we want somebody who's 33 and great, we can't have that person? Jesus died at 33. He would have been ineligible to be President of the United States. I feel like the reason that we go for the old white guys is because when we were growing up, we were told that's what God looked like."

Jimmy Kimmel: "[Mike Bloomberg] dropped out of the race. The only place he won was American Samoa. It would have been cheaper for him to just buy American Samoa for that much money."

Stephen Colbert: "Fourteen states held primaries last night, and Biden won ten of them, including states he was never expected to win, like Texas. Apparently, down there, he appealed to Hispanic voters, because like many of them, his first language is not English."

Stephen Colbert: [On Jill Biden stopping protesters who stormed the stage at Joe Biden's speech] "I don't know if Joe can win the presidency, but Jill is definitely going to win summer slam."

Jimmy Fallon: "Last night was Super Tuesday, and today for Mike Bloomberg, it was, 'Oh my God, I-wasted-a-billion-dollars Wednesday.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "After finishing fourth in Iowa and fifth in New Hampshire, Biden won ten states. It's like going from the middle seat on Spirit Airlines to Beyonce's private jet."

Jimmy Fallon: "Seriously, no one saw Biden becoming the front-runner again. Right now, even Jesus is thinking, 'Wow, this is a crazy comeback.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "There was a scary moment last night during Biden's victory speech when a woman stormed the stage. Thankfully, no charges were pressed, and she was able to be our lead guest tonight. Hillary Clinton is here, ladies and gentlemen!"

Jimmy Fallon: "That's right, though. Protesters rushed the stage and Biden's wife, Dr. Jill Biden, stepped in to stop them. ... Forget first lady – she should be Secretary of Defense. The bad news is, this morning Jill got drafted by the Cincinnati Bengals."

Jimmy Fallon: "Super Tuesday went so poorly for Bloomberg that this morning, he dropped out of the race. But good news, Mike: compared to De Blasio and Giuliani, you're still every New Yorker's favorite mayor."

Seth Meyers: "Former Vice President Joe Biden is projected to have won yesterday's Super Tuesday primaries, including five states he did not campaign in. Turns out it was a smart move to have him talk to voters as little as possible."

Seth Meyers: "Former New York Mayor Mike Bloomberg announced today that he is dropping out of the presidential race. And then Elizabeth Warren announced, 'You're damn right he is.'"

Seth Meyers: "[Trump] actually did it. He found a way to blame the coronavirus on Barack Obama. Dude, Obama's been out of office for over three years. Let it go. The man's been wind surfing, white water rafting, and from the looks of him, playing a Hollywood agent in a remake of 'Entourage.' ... Seriously, who's Trump going to blame next, Hillary Clinton? 'I heard a rumor that one of Hillary's missing emails had the subject line, Secret Plan To Spread Coronavirus.'"

Seth Meyers: "One thing I think we can all enjoy is the fact that ex-Republican billionaire Mike Bloomberg had to drop out today after spending $500 million in an attempt to buy the election. ... Bloomberg spent half a billion dollars, and all he got was a nationally televised atomic wedgie from Elizabeth Warren in the debates."

Seth Meyers: "And honestly, it's insane that we're still talking about electability three years into the presidency of the least electable person in the history of elections. I mean, Donald Trump is like a lab experiment where a bunch of scientists got together and tried to create the most unelectable candidate possible. I mean, they mixed the racism of George Wallace with the corruption of Bernie Madoff, the trench coat of a mob boss, and the tan line of a hairless sphinx."

James Corden: "Of course, the big news today is that Joe Biden is back after his campaign had fizzled out last week. He pulled off a stunning Super Tuesday comeback, winning nine states. This means Biden has a very real chance of being the Democratic nominee. And one thing is for sure: When it happens, those debates between Biden and Trump are definitely going to need subtitles."

James Corden: "Here is how impressive Joe Biden's victory was yesterday. He won five states he never even campaigned in. I know Biden is the front-runner now, but it can't be a great sign that his number one constituency is people who don't want to see or hear from Joe Biden."

James Corden: "The candidate that had the most disappointing showing was Mike Bloomberg. He did so poorly he dropped out of the race early in morning. First Tom Steyer dropped out. Now Bloomberg. Billionaires just can't catch a break these days, can they?"

James Corden: "Bloomberg spent hundreds of millions of dollars of his own money on his campaign. It just goes to show you, you can't buy the American presidency. You can steal it with the help of Russians, but you can't buy it."

Treasury in the News

Treasury Approves Billions In Payroll Assistance For Nation's Airlines.

Bloomberg (5/12, Mohsin, Been, 4.73M) reports five large airlines account for "the lion's share of federal aid Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin has approved in the past six weeks as the industry copes with an economy forced to shut down by the coronavirus pandemic." Out of "the $35 billion set aside for payroll support," the story says Mnuchin "has approved $25 billion in payroll assistance for 362 applicants, which included contractors, passenger and cargo airlines." Out of these applicants, American Airlines received the largest payroll assistance funding from Treasury at $5.8 billion. Mnuchin said in a statement, "Treasury is committed to the highest standards of public transparency as we provide this critical relief."

Florida-Based Charter Goes Bankrupt Waiting For Answer From Treasury To Loan Application. Politico (5/12, Mintz, 4.29M) reports in its daily "Morning Transportation" rundown that Miami Air International "has gone bust due to the coronavirus, after waiting weeks for the Treasury Department to respond to its application for CARES Act assistance." The Florida-based charter airline "had filed for bankruptcy in March but told employees it was ending operations on Friday, according to Airways Magazine, after an application to the Treasury Department went unanswered for weeks even as the agency started sending checks for billions to major airlines." Association of Flight Attendants-CWA President Sara Nelson is quoted saying Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "actively ignored Miami Air's less than $10 million dollar payroll grant application for six weeks, and instead pushed the company off a cliff." Politico adds that "congressional scrutiny of the Treasury Department's allocation of CARES Act grants is ramping up" after Sens. Roger Wicker (R-MS) and Mike Crapo (R-ID) "sent a letter to Mnuchin asking about the implementation of the stimulus law for the aviation industry."

Administration's Holding Pattern On New COVID-19 Aid Could Garner Rising Pressure To Act.

Bloomberg (5/12, Wingrove, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports President Trump "and allies are holding off on more coronavirus-related stimulus as his team tracks the impact of some $5 trillion already poured into the economy, – and banks on an economic rebound as shutdown measures are eased.” However, “they may find themselves under more pressure to act again, sooner than they expected, if efforts to reopen the economy don’t rapidly bear fruit.” The actions the government “has already taken are still working their way into the economy.” Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “has so far used less than half of $454 billion Congress authorized as backstops for Fed lending programs.” Mnuchin has “said he’s waiting for four more lending programs the Fed has yet to launch before deciding which ones should be expanded.” According to Bloomberg, “For each dollar Mnuchin pledges to the central bank through the Treasury’s Exchange Stabilization Fund, the Fed can leverage $10 in lending to corporations, small and medium sized businesses, and state and local governments.”

Michigan Lawmakers Ask Mnuchin To Arrange Auto-Supplier Credit Vehicle.

The Detroit News (5/12, Noble, 825K) reports a number of Michigan lawmakers “are calling on U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to direct existing COVID-19 relief funds toward auto suppliers in need of cash.” Ten members of the Michigan congressional delegation, “led by U.S. Sen. Gary Peters and Reps. Fred Upton and Haley Stevens,” said in a letter to Mnuchin that many auto components manufacturers face losses in working capital for start-up costs as they resume production this week. The letter said, “While there are many large suppliers with operations in the U.S., two-thirds of this industry’s employment is generated by small and mid-sized manufacturers. These entities are often U.S.-based with limited financial resources to meet the growing needs of this crisis.” The lawmakers “are requesting a ‘special purpose vehicle’ that would focus on serving the auto suppliers with short-term loans to help them pay for raw materials and other costs needed to resume production.”

GOP Proposal To Grant States Flexibility In COVID-19 Aid Gets “Positive Reception” From Trump.

Politico (5/12, Levine, 4.29M) reports several GOP senators “met with President Donald Trump and his senior aides at the White House on Tuesday to discuss...a proposal from Sen. John Kennedy [R-LA]...to give state and local governments more flexibility when it comes to spending federal dollars from the coronavirus rescue package.” Kennedy “said when he described his legislation, he ‘got a very positive reception.’” Kennedy said after the meeting, “I asked the chief and the president and Jared Kushner on a call over the weekend to talk about coming over and pitching my bill. We pitched the bill, we talked at length about the merits of it.” Politico says that, along with Trump, “the meeting included Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, White House chief of staff Mark Meadows, White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany and senior adviser and son-in-law Jared Kushner.”

Brouillette: Trump Asked Me, Mnuchin To Evaluate Relief Programs To Ensure Energy Industry’s Access.

Bloomberg (5/12, Mohsin, Natter, 4.73M) reports Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette said Tuesday that the Trump Administration has asked the Fed to modify the Main Street Lending Program so as to include mid-sized companies, thus helping oil firms to cope with the drop in oil prices. Brouillette said Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “worked very closely with the Federal Reserve. We adjusted the program – the Main Street Lending Program – and made that program available to what we refer to as mid-cap size companies.” Brouillette “said the president directed both him and Mnuchin ‘to evaluate the programs that were passed by the Congress and ensure that there is access for these energy industries to those programs. And that’s what we’ve done.’” The Hill (5/12, Beitsch, 2.98M) also reports.

Mnuchin, Powell To Testify Before Senate Banking Panel Next Tuesday On COVID-19 Response.

Reuters (5/12, Schneider) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Fed Chair Jerome Powell “will testify via the web before the Senate Banking Committee next Tuesday in the first required update to Congress on the economic response to the coronavirus pandemic.” The committee “said the first quarterly hearing required under the CARES act would be held remotely beginning at 10 a.m. Eastern time.”

Small Businesses Confused By PPP Rule Changes.

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Simon, Rudegear, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports changes made to the Paycheck Protection Program by the SBA and the Treasury Department are confusing small business owners who are trying to decide whether they actually qualify for the loans or if they will be able to pay them back. The agencies have issued nine “interim final rules” and over 40 pieces of guidance since the program rolled out in April.

Senate Committee Advances WH Lawyer Nominated To Virus Relief Watchdog Post.

Law360 (5/12, Kragie, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Senate Banking Committee on Tuesday voted “to advance a White House lawyer’s nomination to monitor the U.S. Treasury Department’s coronavirus relief efforts, with all but one Democrat opposed and questioning his independence.” Brian D. Miller, “who currently works in the White House counsel’s office but previously served as watchdog for the General Services Administration, saw a 14-11 committee vote to send to the Senate floor his nomination to be the Special Inspector General for Pandemic Relief.” The special IG technically “is limited to programs the Department of the Treasury establishes under the new law, but that can still allow for a broad scope." CQ Roll Call (5/12, Saksa, 154K) also reports.

Treasury Reports Record $738B Deficit For April.

Reuters (5/12, Dunsmuir) says that the Treasury Department yesterday "reported a record $738 billion budget deficit in April as an explosion in government spending and a shrinking of revenues amid the novel coronavirus pandemic pushed it deeply into the red." The Treasury Department "said the budget deficit in April was the first to reflect the enormity of government spending that has been authorized to try to mitigate the economic impact of the crisis. The previous record budget deficit for any month was $235 billion in February 2020."

Bloomberg (5/12, Golle, 4.73M), The Associated Press (5/12, Crutsinger), The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Kieman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Axios (5/12, Perano, 521K), MarketWatch (5/12, Robb, 1.67M), and Newsweek (5/12, Lemon, 1.53M), among other news outlets, also report.

Commentary: Failed Auctions For Treasury Bonds Could Be Black Swan Event.

In an op-ed for Bloomberg Opinion (5/12), Jared Dillian says it is "now clear in hindsight that a global pandemic was one of those things that financial markets never truly considered a real threat," but he asks "the question of what other so-called black swans might be lurking out there?" Dillian suggests one "that might happen sooner rather than later: a failed auction of government bonds by the U.S. Treasury Department." Dillian says that, "if demand seriously wanes, and there simply aren't enough bidders to participate in the auction, the expectation will be that the Federal Reserve will step in as the buyer of last resort, and participate in bond auctions as a direct bidder. This would have both political and economic significance, for it would be signal the direct monetization of debt."

Leading National News

Media Analyses: High Court Skeptical Of House Subpoena Of Trump Records.

Most mainstream media reports, including stories on all three major network newscasts, describe the Supreme Court as signaling unease with House Democrats' subpoena of the President's financial records. On the other hand, media analyses saw a bigger chance that the Court could approve New York's subpoena, which is related to an investigation of payments to adult film performer Stormy Daniels. NBC Nightly News (5/12, story 8, 0:50, Holt, 7.26M) reported, for example, that "it did seem a majority of the court is prepared to rule that House Democrats went too far in seeking years of financial records from...Trump and his family members," and the CBS Evening News (5/12, story 6, 1:30, O'Donnell, 5.29M) that "even liberals like Justice Stephen Breyer indicated there has to be a stopping point." Breyer was heard saying, "The fact that what I hold today will also apply to a future Sen. McCarthy asking a future Franklin Roosevelt or Harry Truman exactly the same questions, that bothers me." ABC World News Tonight (5/12, story 6, 0:45, Muir, 8.35M) also reported on the "mixed responses" from the justices, who "asked: where is the line between oversight and political harassment?" However, "observers say it seemed they might be more sympathetic to a New York prosecutor's pursuit of records involving hush money paid" to Daniels.

Likewise, Axios (5/12, Baker, 521K) indicates that to the justices, "Congressional investigations must have a 'legislative purpose' and can't be an exercise in law enforcement," and Politico (5/12, Gerstein, Cheney, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) that "the House's bid to subpoena...Trump's financial records appeared imperiled Tuesday as justices of all ideological stripes raised concerns that blessing the lawmakers' efforts could unleash an avalanche of such requests that might paralyze Trump and future presidents." Under the headline "Supreme Court Appears Ready To Cap Lawmakers' Power To Subpoena Presidents," CQ Roll Call (5/12, Ruger, 154K) also reports the court "expressed concern Tuesday that allowing congressional subpoenas for tax and financial records of President Donald Trump and his businesses now would give lawmakers a 'limitless' way to harass political opponents in the future." Roll Call adds "a theme that emerged during questions from Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. – and then picked up by other key justices, including one member of the liberal wing – showed a majority see the need for courts to put some type of cap on when Congress could demand the private records of a president."

The Washington Free Beacon (5/12, Daley, 78K) says "a split outcome may be in the offing, with the president prevailing over House Democrats but losing" in the New York dispute. In an article titled "US Supreme Court Wary Of Presidential 'Harassment' In Trump Finances Fight," meanwhile, Reuters (5/12, Hurley, Chung) reports that the justices "appeared divided over...Trump's bid to prevent congressional Democrats from obtaining his financial records but seemed more open toward a New York prosecutor's attempt to secure similar records." The court's "conservative majority signaled concern about improper 'harassment' of Trump...by three Democratic-led House of Representatives committees seeking his records."

The Washington Times (5/12, Swoyer, 492K) reports Roberts "asked the lawyer representing the House Democrats how harassment should be measured when there are several different House committees investigating the president, all seeking the same personal financial information." Asked Roberts, "At what point does the number of committees investigating the President's personal papers become a factor?" Justice Clarence Thomas "followed the chief justice's questioning by noting, 'At some point, there is a straw that breaks the camel's back.'" The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Bravin, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) quotes Trump attorney Patrick Strawbridge as saying, "The subpoenas at issue here are unprecedented in every sense. ... These subpoenas are overreaching. ... They're an obvious distraction."

The New York Times (5/12, Liptak, 18.61M) reports that "the court's ruling, expected by July, could require disclosure of information the president has gone to extraordinary lengths to protect. Or the justices could rule that Mr. Trump's financial affairs are not legitimate subjects of inquiry." However, the Times adds that "some of the justices' questions raised a third possibility: that the court could return the cases to lower courts for reconsideration under stricter standards," which the Times says "would have the incidental effect of deferring a final decision beyond the 2020 presidential election." In fact, says the Washington Post (5/12, Marimow, 14.2M), "several justices suggested there might be more work for lower courts to do, which could delay any turnover of the documents being sought by congressional Democrats and Manhattan's district attorney until after November's election."

To Bloomberg (5/12, 4.73M), meanwhile, "Most of the justices suggested they wanted to balance the competing interests of lawmakers, state prosecutors and the president. Although the justices showed little interest Trump's bid for an absolute ban on state grand jury subpoenas involving a sitting president, a majority seemed inclined to put some limits on what lawmakers and prosecutors can seek."

Along similar lines, the AP (5/12, Sherman) reports that the Supreme Court "appeared likely to reject...Trump's claim that he is immune from criminal investigation while in office," but "seemed less clear about exactly how to handle subpoenas from Congress and the Manhattan district attorney for Trump's tax, bank and financial records." The AP says "there was no apparent consensus about whether to ratify lower court rulings that the subpoenas to Trump's accountant and banks are valid and should be enforced."

USA Today (5/12, Wolf, 10.31M) similarly recounts that "justices challenged...Trump's lawyer Tuesday about efforts to keep Trump's personal and corporate financial records out of Congress's hands." USA Today adds that "in previous separation-of-powers battles over documents or testimony, the Supreme Court ruled unanimously against Presidents Richard Nixon in 1974 and Bill Clinton in 1997." The Hill (5/12, Kruzel, 2.98M) cautions, however, that "the justices' seeming lack of consensus over some of the core constitutional questions suggests they may not achieve the unanimity that marked prior Supreme Court decisions on executive privileges and immunities which handed defeats to...Nixon and Clinton."

Likewise, CNBC (5/12, Higgins, Mangan, 3.62M) reports on its website that "attorneys for the president faced skepticism from both liberals and conservatives over whether allowing Trump to keep his tax records shielded would unconstitutionally limit the power of Congress or put the president above the law." However, as do other outlets, CNBC says "several of the court's conservatives...expressed concern that rulings against Trump could open up the presidency to a wave of burdensome investigations and requests for documents." According to CNBC, Trump's personal lawyer, Jay Sekulow "said that Trump cannot be criminally charged by a state prosecutor while in office, much less subjected to a grand jury subpoena."

The New York Post (5/12, Golding, 4.57M) also reports that in the case "involving an attempt by Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr. to get Trump's tax returns, the justices didn't seem to accept the arguments of Trump lawyer Jay Sekulow that a president can't be subject to criminal probes." That case "involves Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr.'s attempt to subpoena copies of Trump's tax returns and other documents for an investigation into hush-money payments" to Daniels "and former Playboy model Karen McDougal before the 2016 election."

Trump Touts Recovery Of Oil Industry Combined With Record Low Gas Prices.

President Trump tweeted yesterday, "Crude Oil prices going up as Saudi Arabia cuts production levels. Our great Energy Companies, with millions of JOBS, are starting to look very good again. At the same time, gasoline prices at record lows (like a big Tax Cut). The BEST of all Worlds. 'Transition To Greatness.'"

Brouillette: Future Of Energy In US Is A Diversity Of Supply. Energy Secretary Brouillette said on Fox Business' Varney & Co. (5/12, 64K), "I think the future of energy in America is going to continue to be a diversity of supply. We need all forms of energy. Wind energy, solar energy, they are important components in the delivery of electricity all throughout the country. But it's important that we maintain a diversity of supply, so we are going to need natural gas, we are going to need nuclear energy as well." Brouillette added, "I think there's still a bright future for coal. We have seen a transition away from coal for the production of electricity in the United States in certain parts of the world. But there are other parts of the world where coal is a critical component to their electricity generation. ... Importantly as well, there's an important role for coal to play in the provision of critical minerals for the development of battery technologies as we go forward." Brouillette was also interviewed on Bloomberg TV (5/12) Tuesday.

Consumer Prices See Largest Decline Since 2008.

Reuters (5/12, Mutikani) reports, "US consumer prices dropped by the most since the Great Recession in April, weighed down by a plunge in demand for gasoline and services including airline travel as Americans stayed home during the coronavirus crisis." The Labor Department report also "showed a record decrease in underlying prices last month, raising the specter of a bout of deflation as the economy sinks deeper into a recession triggered by lockdowns to slow the spread of COVID-19, the respiratory illness caused by the coronavirus." USA Today (5/12, Davidson, 10.31M) warns that "low prices don't do much good if consumers aren't spending. What's more, deflation is not good for the economy," as "it prompts people to put off purchases on the expectation that prices will fall further, hurting economic growth."

Pelosi Proposes Additional $3T In Emergency Spending.

The AP (5/12, Mascaro, Taylor) reports that House Speaker Pelosi yesterday "unveiled a more than $3 trillion coronavirus aid package...providing nearly $1 trillion for states and cities, 'hazard pay' for essential workers and a new round of cash payments to individuals." According to the AP, the House is "expected to vote on the package as soon as Friday," but Senate Majority Leader McConnell "has said there is no 'urgency.'" The AP goes on to report that "the so-called Heroes Act from Democrats is built around nearly $1 trillion for states, cities and tribal governments to avert layoffs, focused chiefly on $375 billion for smaller suburban and rural municipalities largely left out of earlier bills." In addition, "the bill will offer a fresh round of $1,200 direct cash aid to individuals, increased to up to $6,000 per household, and launches a $175 billion housing assistance fund to help pay rents and mortgages. There is $75 billion more for virus testing."

The New York Times (5/12, Cochrane, Fandos, 18.61M) reports that "unlike" previous coronavirus relief "packages, which were the product of intense bipartisan negotiations among lawmakers and administration officials who agreed generally on the need for rapid and robust action, the House bill represents an opening gambit in what is likely to be a bracing fight over what is needed to counter the public health and economic tolls of the pandemic."

USA Today (5/12, King, 10.31M) quotes Pelosi as saying, "There are those who said let's just pause. ... But the families who are suffering know that hunger doesn't take a pause. The rent doesn't take a pause. The bills don't take a pause. The hardship of losing a job or tragically losing a loved one doesn't take a pause." The Washington Examiner (5/12, Ferrechio, 448K), meanwhile, reports McConnell said of Pelosi's bill, "If we reach a decision, along with the administration to move to another phase, that'll be the time to interact with the Democrats. ... But what you've seen in the House is not something designed to deal with reality but designed to deal with aspirations. This is not a time for aspirational legislation. This is a time for practical response to the coronavirus pandemic."

Along those lines, Reuters (5/12, Morgan) reports that Republicans "say they want to hold off on new coronavirus relief legislation to assess the impact of nearly $3 trillion in response assistance that Congress has allocated since early March, as states move to reopen a shuttered US economy." The Washington Post (5/12, Werner, 14.2M) recounts that Republicans "rejected the legislation even before they saw it, describing it as a liberal wish list that would go nowhere in the Republican-led Senate." The Post reports that "other parts of the bill would increase nutrition assistance benefits by 15 percent," and "$25 billion for the US Postal Service – a frequent target of attacks from President Trump." The Post adds, "Protections are included for legitimate cannabis-related businesses, and there is $3 billion to increase mental health support."

NEC Director Kudlow said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (5/12), "You can hear the President talk about it almost daily on restrictions, on liability restrictions, or shields or safeguards. This has got to be an integral part of any new package that may emerge in the next month or two, got to be for all these reasons. I mean, look, restaurants being the obvious one, but it's not only restaurants. It's, you know, it could be haircutters or small stores, things of that sort. If they know they're going to be sued and hauled off to court, then they're not going to open. And if they do open and get sued, they don't have the money to go to court and so forth. So this is something we have got to pay enormous attention to. This has to be part of any new package, and the President has said that many times."

Kudlow said on Fox News' Hannity (5/12, 535K), "I doubt very much whether President Trump is going to go for another $3 trillion in spending before we see what the total impact has been of the prior $3 trillion in spending. That's point number one. So we are going to pause for a bit. We will price out Speaker Pelosi's proposal and take a look at it. But having said that, contrast her spending with President Trump's pro-growth tax and deregulation program. ... We should provide growth incentives and not go through various wish lists."

Politico (5/12, Caygle, Ferris, Bresnahan, 4.29M) reports that Reps. Pramila Jayapal (D-WA) and Mark Pocan (D-WI), co-chairs of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, "have objected that one of their chief priorities – federal funding to cover payrolls for businesses – wasn't included in the House measure." Jayapal "pushed hard for inclusion of the 'Paycheck Guarantee' program in the new bill," but House Ways and Means Chairman Richard Neal "turned it down, saying the proposal is too costly and complicated." Politico says Jayapal's plan – "which is backed by more than 60 House Democrats – has a price tag of more than $600 billion for six months." Bloomberg (5/12, Wasson, Davison, 4.73M), Axios (5/12, Treene, 521K), The Hill (5/12, Marcos, 2.98M), Washington Times (5/12, Muñoz, Sherfinski, 492K), Washington Examiner (5/12, Ferrechio, 448K) and New York Post (5/12, Nelson, 4.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Cuomo: New York Needs $61B Federal Bailout. The New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) reports that "with New York making steady progress in its battle against the virus and three upstate regions poised to start a gradual reopening by this weekend," Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "reiterated the importance of federal aid as the state charts its recovery. ... 'To get this economy up and running, we're going to need an intelligent stimulus bill,' Mr. Cuomo said." According to the Times, Cuomo indicated that New York state "needs an estimated $61 billion in federal support to avoid enacting 20 percent cuts to schools, local governments and hospitals."

Relief Bill Includes Provision Eliminating Voter ID Laws. The Washington Times (5/12, Dinan, 492K) reports, "Tucked inside House Democrats' new coronavirus bill is language that would create a loophole in states' voter ID requirements, allowing people to cast ballots without having to prove who they are." The Times adds "one section of the bill would require states to allow at least 15 days of in-person early voting before Election Day this year, and to also allow voting by mail for any reason, overriding states that have more limited policies."

McConnell Preparing Broad Coronavirus Liability Bill.

Reuters (5/12, Morgan) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell said Tuesday that "he is helping to spearhead a broad legislative package that would provide protection against coronavirus-related litigation for businesses and a range of other entities." On the Senate floor, McConnell said, "Our legislation is going to create a legal safe harbor for businesses, nonprofits, governments and workers and schools who are following public health guidelines." He did not say when the legislation would be introduced.

Lawmakers Make Case For Paycheck Guarantee Act.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M), Reps. Sean Casten (D-IL), Pramila Jayapal (D-WA), Adam Schiff (D-CA), and Haley Stevens (D-MI) argue that if Congress' "goal is to stop mass unemployment, we must admit that we have not accomplished what we hoped."

They write that under their proposal, the Paycheck Guarantee Act, employers would "file a sworn statement with the IRS on the amount of revenue lost" due to COVID-19, and "the IRS would use 2019 tax filings to calculate a grant that totals the percentage of revenue loss multiplied by payroll and benefits for workers up to a salary cap of $90,000. Businesses would also receive an additional 25 percent to cover operating costs, such as rent, so they don't close permanently." They argue that the measure "is a clear, simple and streamlined solution that matches the scale of the crisis" and should be included in the next relief package Congress passes.

The CBS Evening News (5/12, story 5, 1:50, O'Donnell, 5.29M) reported on "the economic pain that many Americans are feeling." CBS' Mark Strassmann spoke to an Atlanta woman who has lost her job and is "two months behind on rent, almost $3,000."

Transit Agencies Call For Additional $33B In Federal Aid.

Politico (5/12, Maldonado, 4.29M) reports that amid the ongoing pandemic, the leaders of transit agencies from five states on Tuesday "called upon the federal government to include about $33 billion in funding for public transportation" in the next COVID-19 aid package. New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority CEO Pat Foye and New Jersey Transit CEO Kevin Corbett joined San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit General Manager Bob Powers, Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority General Manager Leslie Richards and Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority CEO Jeffrey Parker "on a conference call to make the case that transportation plays a key role in fighting the pandemic and in the nation's eventual economic recovery." Foye said, "This is a national disaster that requires a continued national response. The ongoing impacts of the pandemic are outpacing the historic levels of support previously included in the CARES Act."

DOT: US Air Travel Fell 51% In March.

Reuters (5/12, Shepardson) reports the Department of Transportation said Tuesday that "US airlines carried 51% fewer passengers in March amid the massive coronavirus pandemic travel collapse to the lowest air travel level in nearly two decades." Airlines carried "slightly more total, domestic and international passengers in March 2020 than in September 2001, the month of the Sept. 11 attacks on New York and Washington."

Boeing CEO Predicts Major US Airline Will "Most Likely" Go Out Of Business. NBC Nightly News (5/12, story 6, 1:55, Holt, 7.26M) reported, "Calling the threat to the airline industry grave, the prediction from Boeing's CEO to Savannah Guthrie on 'Today' sent shock waves through Wall Street and airline offices." Guthrie: "Do you think there might be a major US carrier that just has to go out of business?" Boeing CEO Dave Calhoun: "I don't want to get too predictive on that subject, but yes, most likely. You know, something will happen when September comes around."

Chao Reminds Airlines They Must Provide Refunds If They Cancel Flights. Gray Television (5/12, 26K) Washington Bureau Chief Jacqueline Policastro reported that if an airline cancels a flight, "you are entitled to a refund." The Department of Transportation "is reporting a big increase in complaints, many from people having a difficult time getting their refund. ... We asked Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao how the agency is responding to frustrated travelers." Chao: "We actually work with individual passengers on resolving their individual disputes with the airline companies and I myself have spoken with several airlines CEOs asking them to pay attention to the whole issue of refunds." Chao told WISN-TV Milwaukee (5/12, 89K), "The airlines are doing the best they can. Most of them are following the law. They are finding, obviously, these ambiguities in what is a prompt refund, what is considered a delay to be confusing as well."

Musk Thanks Trump For Backing Him On Plant Reopening.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "California should let Tesla & @elonmusk open the plant, NOW. It can be done Fast & Safely!" Elon Musk replied, "Thank you!" CNBC (5/12, Bursztynsky, 3.62M) reports on its website that Musk "has been pushing to restart its California production that had stopped March 23 due to the coronavirus pandemic," though "attempts to return have been met with heavy resistance from local authorities." Reuters (5/12, Shepardson) recounts Musk "said production was resuming at the automaker's sole US vehicle factory, defying an order to stay closed and saying if anyone had to be arrested, it should be he." Reuters notes that Musk tweeted "Thank you!" to Trump. The AP (5/12, Krisher, Margot) also reports, "Tesla's factory reopened Monday with Musk practically daring local authorities to arrest him. The plant apparently continued operations on Tuesday."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that while it is not endorsing law-breaking, Musk's decision to defy local authorities and open his plant could serve to clarify the landscape of disparate ordinances – and do away with edicts by some increasingly dictatorial officials.

Food Prices Highest In Almost 50 Years.

ABC World News Tonight (5/12, story 7, 0:20, Muir, 8.35M) reported, "The cost of groceries jumping in the US." The Labor Department is reporting "overall prices rising 2.6 percent in April. That's the biggest one-month increase in nearly 50 years. Meat, poultry, and eggs among the biggest price hikes. Ground beef up almost seven percent."

NBC Nightly News (5/12, story 4, 2:05, Holt, 7.26M) reported, "Compared to last year, prices are up for items like eggs, bread, chicken, and milk. In fact, in just one month, the average price for a dozen eggs jumped 16 percent, more than $3 in some places. Poultry, fish, meat, and eggs were up more than four percent. Cereal and bakery products saw the largest monthly increase ever, about three percent. Even though people are eating the same amount, most are doing it from the safety of home, which is why a lot of produce and dairy are getting wasted. Suppliers are unable to repackage the food that would have gone to restaurants and redirect it to supermarkets.”

ABC World News Tonight (5/12, story 9, 1:40, Muir, 8.35M), meanwhile, reported that with “farmers forced to discard aging food and spoiling milk,” a group of college students have started FarmLink, “connecting farmers with food banks.”

Politico Report: Farm Workers Lack Workplace Protections.

Politico (5/12, Evich, Crampton, 4.29M) reports the Administration has “deemed the millions” of farmworkers “essential workers” but is “doing little to keep them healthy during the pandemic.” According to Politico, “The lack of federal action has left state and industry leaders scrambling to shield their farmworkers from the coronavirus. As harvest season ramps up, farmers across several major produce states have installed more hand-washing stations, instructed workers to keep their distance and provided face masks – but those efforts have been inconsistent and largely voluntary.”

Some Returning To Work Despite Health Concerns.

ABC World News Tonight (5/12, story 3, 2:30, Muir, 8.35M) aired a feature on “the millions of workers who do want to go back to work, but who are still worried about their health.” ABC’s Matt Gutman reported Chrysler, Ford, and GM all reopened “in compliance of state orders...bringing thousands of assembly line workers in Michigan in for a phased reopening, and they aren’t starting production until Monday. Some manufacturers [are] struggling with handling the risks reopening, food plants in particular, deemed essential and ordered back in the Defense Production Act, but only after applying new safety precautions. Tyson Foods in Portland, Maine closed down for six days after an outbreak, then reopened last week. But now reports 51 people have tested positive, 12 percent of the work force.”

After Closing Stores Early In Pandemic, Patagonia Is Cautious About Reopening.

The New York Times (5/12, Maheshwari, 18.61M) reports the retailer Patagonia announced the closure of its brick-and-mortar stores and its online business in North America March 13, making it “one of the first major retailers to take such a drastic step” early on in the coronavirus pandemic. At the time, “the company’s chief executive thought the situation would last about a month,” and now the company “is being very cautious in deciding how to open up again.”

If Workers Stay At Home, Manhattan Could Face A “Real Estate Reckoning.”

The New York Times (5/12, Haag, 18.61M) reports that Manhattan’s business district provides workspace to hundreds of thousands of office workers, but “as the pandemic eases its grip, companies are considering not just how to safely bring back employees, but whether all of them need to come back at all.” According to the Times, “when the dust settles, New York City could face a real estate reckoning.” The Times adds, “Entire economies were molded around the vast flow of people to and from offices, from the rush-hour schedules of subways, buses and commuter rails to the construction of new buildings to the survival of corner bodegas. Restaurants, bars, grocery stores and shops depend on workers for their survival.” In addition, “real estate taxes provide about a third of New York’s revenue, helping pay for basic services like the police, trash pickup and street repairs. Falling tax revenue would worsen the city’s financial crisis and hinder its recovery.”

Big Advertisers Look To Walk Back Commitments To TV Networks.

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, A1, Vranica, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that many big advertisers are seeking to walk back ad commitments made to TV networks. Companies have the option to cancel up to 50 percent of third-quarter ad spending. Ad buyers estimate around $1.5 billion in commitments for the quarter could be canceled.

Uber Seeks To Acquire GrubHub.

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Lombardo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Uber Technologies Inc. is in talks to acquire GrubHub Inc. People familiar with the matter say Uber approached GrubHub earlier this year and the companies are in discussions.

Reuters Report: China Working To Abide By Phase One US Trade Deal.

Citing “three Chinese sources,” Reuters (5/12) reports China is “committed to its Phase 1 trade deal with the United States and is working towards meeting its promise to boost U.S. purchases, even though the pace of buying has been restrained by the coronavirus outbreak.” Reuters notes that “under the Phase 1 deal signed in January, Beijing pledged to buy at least $200 billion in additional U.S. goods and services over two years and Washington agreed to roll back tariffs in stages on Chinese goods.” According to Reuters, “China’s April imports of U.S. goods slumped 11.1% in dollar terms from a year earlier, weighed by weaker domestic demand because of the epidemic.” However, Chinese officials “have on many occasions in recent months discussed how to fulfill China’s commitments under the deal to the fullest extent, two officials in Beijing who are familiar with the situation told Reuters on Tuesday.”

Fauci, Other Top Health Officials Warn Against Hasty Reopening Of Economy.

Several Administration health officials playing leading roles in coronavirus response appeared remotely at a hearing of the Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee on Tuesday, but the vast majority of the coverage focuses on the testimony of NIAID Director

Fauci, with reports saying his blunt assessment that a prompt reopening of the economy would result in more deaths puts him at odds with President Trump. All three broadcast networks opened with the story.

David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (5/12, lead story, 5:35, 8.35M) that both Fauci and CDC Director Redfield had "candid words about reopening the country too quickly, Dr. Fauci warning if we're not careful, it could trigger an outbreak that we can't control. ... All of this as the death toll approaches 82,000 lives lost in this country, Dr. Fauci acknowledging the real number is 'almost certainly higher.' ... Fauci not only warn[ed] about the potential of an outbreak if reopening is done without great care, he also said that could deal another setback to the economy." ABC's Mary Bruce said Fauci offered "a stark warning for the 45 states moving to reopen without meeting the federal guidelines." Sen. Patty Murray (D-WA): "If a community or a state or a region doesn't go by those guidelines and reopens, the consequences could be pretty dire, correct?" Fauci: "The consequences could be really serious. There is a real risk that you will trigger an outbreak that you may not be able to control, which in fact, paradoxically, will set you back, not only leading to some suffering and death that could be avoided, but could even set you back on the road to trying to get economic recovery." Bruce: "Fauci's message, at odds with President Trump, who insists the country is ready to get back to work." Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA): "I'd just like to hear your honest opinion. Do we have the coronavirus contained?" Fauci: "If you think that we have it completely under control, we don't. I think we're going in the right direction, but the right direction does not mean we have, by any means, total control of this outbreak."

On the CBS Evening News (5/12, lead story, 4:15, 5.29M), Norah O'Donnell similarly said Fauci and his colleagues offered "a stark warning" that "the US is not out of the woods and is at risk of a resurgence of coronavirus. ... Fauci told senators we could know as early as late fall or early winter if the vaccines currently being tested are successful, though he said it will not be in time for the start school year." CBS' Nancy Cordes: "Fauci said the virus is still not contained, a point underscored by the sight of four of the nation's top health officials and many senators attending the hearing remotely, accompanied only by their dogs. The White House revealed today that President Trump and Vice President Pence are now distancing from one another after both came in contact with infected staffers."

Lester Holt opened NBC Nightly News (5/12, lead story, 4:00, 7.26M) by saying, "There will be consequences – more outbreaks, more deaths. A blunt warning from Dr. Anthony Fauci against reopening the country too soon. Fauci and other top government health officials stepping out from under the shadow of the White House today and into a videoconference to break the bad news to a Senate committee hearing that the COVID outbreak is not under control, testing still falls short, and that grim days are still ahead." NBC's Jeff Bennett called it "a reality check from the nation's top infectious disease expert, which stands in stark contrast to President Trump's push to reopen the country."

The AP (5/12, Neergaard, Alonso) reports Fauci "warned bluntly...of 'really serious' consequences of suffering, death and deeper economic damage if state and local officials lift stay-at-home orders too quickly," even as President Trump "pushes them to act to right a free-falling economy." Fauci and other health officials "stressed that pandemic danger persists, even as testing increases and work toward a vaccine and treatments continues. More COVID-19 infections are inevitable as people again start gathering, but how prepared communities are to stamp out those sparks will determine how bad the rebound is, Fauci told the senators."

Reuters (5/12, Brice, Cowan) quotes Fauci as saying, "I think we're going in the right direction, but the right direction does not mean we have by any means total control of this outbreak." Fauci "urged states to follow health experts' recommendations to wait for signs, including a declining number of new infections, before reopening." According to Bloomberg (5/12, Litvan, Sink, 4.73M), Fauci's "call for caution puts him in conflict with...Trump's race to reopen the country for business and ease restrictions that have crushed the economy." The Washington Post (5/12, Wagner, Kim, 14.2M) reports that Fauci "at one point contradicted statements made last week by Trump, when the president proclaimed the virus would disappear in coming months even without a vaccine. ... 'That is just not going to happen,' Fauci said of the notion the virus would disappear on its own."

Politico (5/12, Cancryn, 4.29M) reports that "the vast majority of states have yet to meet the most basic reopening benchmarks set out by the White House by last month, even as most move in stages toward lifting their social distancing guidelines," and "that means that new outbreaks are likely as public life resumes, Fauci said, prolonging the coronavirus fight if states are not adequately prepared to respond. ... 'There is no doubt even under the best of circumstances when you pull back on mitigation, you will see some cases appear,' he said."

CQ Roll Call (5/12, McIntire, 154K) reports Fauci's "warning comes as many states have already begun to partially reopen" and as Trump "has shifted his focus to lifting restrictions and jumpstarting the economy." The Hill (5/12, Hellmann, 2.98M) reports, "Experts say far more testing and contact tracing capacity is needed before the country can safely reopen. Testing availability varies dramatically from state to state, and some public health departments are still hiring and training workers who will trace contacts of confirmed COVID-19 cases and link them to testing." CNBC (5/12, Feiner, Lovelace, 3.62M) reports on its website that "as drugmakers across the world race to develop a coronavirus vaccine," Fauci said "there's no guarantee that the vaccine is actually going to be effective. ... Another worry among epidemiologists, Fauci said, is that the vaccine backfires and strengthens the virus."

The Daily Caller (5/12, Davis, 716K) reports Fauci "agreed with" Sen. Tim Kaine (D-VA) that the US coronavirus death rate "is 'unacceptable' compared to other nations." Kaine said, "The US has the seventh-highest per capita death rate in the world. ... If we want to open up our economy and schools we have to learn the lessons of nations that have managed this well." Kaine "then asked Fauci if the U.S. death rate compared to other countries is 'unacceptable,' which Fauci agreed it was."

Politico (5/12, Everett, Desiderio, Levine, 4.29M) reports, "Fauci's Tuesday testimony clashes with the GOP's vision, and it's fueling growing fatigue among Republicans with one of the government's most trusted public health leaders at a critical moment." The Daily Caller (5/12, Caruso, 716K) reports Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) told Fauci that "one-size-fits-all' lockdowns are 'kind of ridiculous.'" Paul also said, "As much as I respect you, Dr. Fauci, I don't think you're the end-all. I don't think you're the one person that gets to make the decision. We can listen to your advice, but there are people on the other side saying there's not going to be a surge and that we can safely open the economy, and the facts will bear this out." Fauci replied, "I'm a scientist, a physician, and a public health official. I give advice according to the best scientific evidence. There are a number of people that come into that and give advice that are more related to the number of things that you spoke about, about the need to get the country back open again and economically." Breitbart (5/12, Spiering, 673K) headlines its report "Dr. Fauci: We Do Not Have Coronavirus Completely Under Control." Axios (5/12, Fernandez, 521K) and Townhall (5/12, McCarthy, 177K) are among the other sources covering Fauci's testimony.

White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (5/12), "Time and time again Dr. Fauci has told the truth to the American people. The problem is the media just don't want to acknowledge what he said in the past because so much of it has to do with praising this Administration and how quickly it moved to protect the American people. Lives were saved because of Donald Trump. That's the bottom line." Gidley was also interviewed on WMAL-FM Washington (5/12) and the Joe Pags Show (5/12).

During an interview with Fox News' Fox & Friends (5/12, 831K) prior to the hearing, White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany responded to Senate Minority Leader Schumer's claim that Fauci has not been allowed to testify about the President's response to the pandemic. McEnany said, "Perhaps Sen. Schumer was napping every Sunday morning when we put Dr. Fauci out on the Sunday shows, when we put Dr. [Deborah] Birk out on the Sunday shows. They have routinely had an opportunity to speak directly to the American people."

In an interview on ABC's Good Morning America (5/12, 3.64M) before the hearing, Joe Biden said, "Dr. Fauci talks about, if we open needlessly or open soon, there will be needless deaths. And we have to have things in place. Everybody wants to open. The governors want to open, but they want to open in a rational way. The President hasn't done his work. The President hasn't done what he's supposed to do."

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Armour, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports other top Administration health officials who testified Tuesday also stressed the need for caution. The Washington Post (5/12, Abutaleb, Gearan, Wagner, 14.2M) reports officials warned of "new coronavirus outbreaks and possibly a broad resurgence nationwide if states and cities reopen too quickly, setting up a potential conflict" with the President. The New York Times (5/12, Stolberg, 18.61M), under the headline "At Senate Hearing, Government Experts Paint Bleak Picture Of The Pandemic," reports both Fauci and Redfield "predicted dire consequences if the nation reopened its economy too soon, noting that the United States still lacked critical testing capacity and the ability to trace the contacts of those infected." Redfield "pleaded with senators to build up the nation's public health infrastructure, even as he acknowledged that the C.D.C. had not filled 30 jobs authorized by Congress last year to expand its capacity to track outbreaks, and had yet to put in place a 'comprehensive surveillance' system to monitor outbreaks in nursing homes, which have been hard hit by the pandemic."

The Washington Post (5/12, Wagner, Kim, 14.2M) reports that HHS Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir "told senators the U.S. could be performing up to 50 million tests a month by September – but that would still amount to fewer than the 2 million to 3 million tests a day that experts have said is needed to ensure that people returning to work are infection-free." Politico (5/12, Lim, 4.29M) quotes Giroir as saying, "We project that our nation will be capable of performing at least 40 to 50 million tests per month if needed at that time." According to Politico, "A significant portion of that capacity – 25 million to 30 million tests – would come from 'point of care' tests that can be analyzed in hospitals and doctors' offices, he added."

The AP (5/12) reports Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) took "a swipe at the Trump administration's pandemic response," and "chided...Giroir for taking part in a White House event celebrating nearly 9 million coronavirus tests in the U.S. ... 'I find our testing record nothing to celebrate whatsoever,' Romney said."

Before Hearing, Trump Tweeted That US Testing Is "BEST In The World." Trump tweeted Tuesday morning, "Our Testing is the BEST in the World, by FAR! Numbers are coming down in most parts of our Country, which wants to open and get going again. It is happening, safely!"

Pew Poll: Most Think Testing Responsibility Lies With Federal, Not State, Government. Politico (5/12, Ward, 4.29M) reports that a Pew Research Center survey released Tuesday found that 61 percent of US adults "say it's primarily the federal government's responsibility" to "ensure there's adequate coronavirus testing," compared with 37 percent "who say the responsibility mainly falls on state governments to make sure there are enough tests to safely lift restrictions. These numbers shift when divided among Democrats and Republicans, with 78 percent of Democrats and Democratic-leaning independents placing the primary responsibility on the federal government," compared with 57 percent "of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents."

NBC: "Undisclosed" White House Task Force Data Show "Troubling Spike" In Cases. On NBC Nightly News (5/12, story 3, 2:45, Holt, 7.26M), Miguel Almaguer reported, "In some of the very regions reopening across our nation, a troubling spike in COVID cases, according to new, undisclosed numbers obtained by NBC News. The data, compiled by the White House pandemic task force, shows the top 10 areas recording surges of at least 72 percent over the previous week. Atop the list, Central City, Kentucky, where a prison has helped fuel a 650 percent increase in infections. Other hot spots include Nashville, Tennessee, Amarillo, Texas, and Des Moines, Iowa, where there was never state-wide stay-at-home orders."

The Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) editorializes, "Studies drawn from completed contact tracing...are showing that sustained, close contacts and close quarters are the biggest risks." This indicates "that the virus spreads when and where people are congregating, and among households, family and close contacts. This insight must be taken into account for every decision about opening up the country."

Kudlow Predicts "Big Reopening." NEC Director Kudlow said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (5/12), "Public safety goes hand in hand with economic growth. So I believe we will do both. I think the President has been right to adopt the mitigation measures he had. I think the shutdowns did help bring the virus to heel. I think we're coming down the home stretch on this, and I think we're going to see a big reopening."

And frankly, I think the second half of this year, you're going to see much stronger growth." Kudlow said on Fox News' Hannity (5/12, 535K), "I think the President's mitigation has succeeded in large measure. In a short period of time, he has completely built a safe healthcare infrastructure with PPE and masks and testing and the tracing and so forth. I think now, we should be focusing on how to safely reopen the economy."

Energy Secretary Brouillette said on Fox Business' Varney & Co. (5/12, 64K), "I have a smile on my face because we are beginning a transition to greatness as the President said this morning. That's what's really exciting about this particular economy. What we are seeing in the markets today are stability. That's what's important for these energy companies to survive this pandemic and to explode with economic activity on the other side of this pandemic." Brouillette was also interviewed on Bloomberg TV (5/12) Tuesday.

NYTimes' Baker: Democracy "Has Gone Digital." Peter Baker of the New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) observes how "American democracy in the coronavirus era has gone digital or at least more distant, however fitfully and incompletely," as seen by the presence of Senate HELP Chairman Lamar Alexander's dog "lounging contentedly on a dog bed behind the Republican in a wood-paneled den as he kicked off Tuesday's coronavirus hearing from his Tennessee home" and "the Red Hot Chili Peppers poster on the red walls" behind Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT). The New York Post (5/12, Fonrouge, 4.57M) reports on the considerable online chatter about "Fauci's vast book collection and [CD] spinner from the 1990s."

Trump, Pence To Avoid Contact With One Another "For The Time Being."

The Washington Post (5/12, Armus, Farzan, 14.2M) reports that President Trump and Vice President Pence "will limit their physical interaction with each other after a Pence staffer tested positive for the novel coronavirus and as the White House cracks down on its mask-wearing rules." The Post cites a "senior administration official," who indicated that Trump and Pence, "for the time being," are "likely to keep away from each other, which includes being in the same room." White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany is quoted as saying, "The vice president has made the choice to keep his distance for a few days. And I would just note that that's his personal decision to make that as to how many days he does it."

NYTimes Describes Coronavirus Testing Process For White House Staff Members. The New York Times (5/12, White, Collins, 18.61M) reports that White House staff members "are frequently being tested" for COVID-19. One of the "main devices being used can produce a result in less than 15 minutes." The Times goes on to describe the testing process.

NYTimes Columnists Criticize Trump's Resistance To Wearing A Mask. Michelle Cottle writes in the New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) that the President and Vice President are exempt from the requirement that all West Wing staff and visitors wear masks, but, "the primary purpose of a nonmedical mask isn't to protect the wearer but rather those around him or her, not exactly a top priority for Mr. Trump." Nonetheless, "it was a notable reversal – and surely a painful concession – by a president who has long made clear his anti-mask bias." Aides "have said that Mr. Trump's resistance stems in part from not wanting to look ridiculous," which Cottle says "comports perfectly with the warped logic of Trumpian machismo: Masks are for the weak – read: losers – and he is all about strength." Trump, she adds, "is increasingly desperate to project strong leadership because he has so utterly failed to provide strong leadership." In his New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) column, Frank Bruni describes masks as a metaphor. He writes, "Trump demands protection from everybody around him, but nobody is protected from Trump. Story of America."

Trump Says Governors Owe Their High Marks For Handling Coronavirus To Him.

President Trump argued in tweet Tuesday morning that governors who are seeing high approval for their handling of the coronavirus pandemic owe that success to him. Trump wrote, "Remember this, every Governor who has sky high approval on their handling of the Coronavirus, and I am happy for them all, could in no way have gotten those numbers, or had that success, without me and the Federal Governments help. From Ventilators to Testing, we made it happen!"

Trump To Visit Pennsylvania Thursday.

President Trump tweeted Tuesday morning that he will visit Allentown, Pennsylvania on Thursday. Trump wrote, "Looking forward to being in Allentown, Pennsylvania, on Thursday. I love the State, and for very good reason!"

USA Today (5/12, Jackson, 10.31M) reports Trump will "visit a medical supply business in the politically pivotal state of Pennsylvania." Trump "plans to use the trip to spotlight his argument that the economy can be re-opened safely and life can soon return to normal, even as lawmakers and his own health advisers warn that moving too quickly could trigger a deadly new wave of the coronavirus." USA Today adds that Trump "has encouraged protesters who have demonstrated against lockdowns in their states – including Pennsylvania, a state that is probably essential" to his reelection bid.

Small Pennsylvania Town With Big Hospital Has Few COVID-19 Cases, Zero Deaths. The Washington Post (5/12, Frankel, 14.2M) reports that the rural town of Danville, Pennsylvania, which is home to Geisinger Medical Center, has "one of the highest concentrations of hospital workers in the nation. Social distancing comes easy in these parts, and with just 50 [COVID-19] cases and zero deaths, there is little apparent need to mobilize forcefully against the virus." But, "almost everyone here is bracing for a medical battle, akin to the feeling of a military town on war-footing." to the Post, "This rare combination shows how the push to reopen the economy and the need to control a deadly virus can coexist, with fewer of the tensions that have popped up across the country."

Kushner Not Sure If Election Can Be Postponed.

TIME (5/12, Berenson, Bennett, 18.47M) reports, "When asked if there was a chance the presidential election could be postponed past November 3 due to the pandemic," Jared Kushner "said that isn't his decision. 'I'm not sure I can commit one way or the other, but right now that's the plan,' he said."

Navarro Will Not Appear At House Hearing On Bright Allegations.

The Washington Post (5/12, Costa, 14.2M) reports Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro – "who repeatedly warned colleagues about the coronavirus in memos earlier this year – is declining to testify before a House panel Thursday about a whistleblower's complaint that mentions him at length." Navarro "had been invited to appear before the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health" to answer questions about allegations made by ousted Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Authority Director Rick Bright.

Pentagon IG To Review Navy's Coronavirus Response.

The Washington Times (5/12, Wolfgang, 492K) reports the Defense Department Inspector General is opening a review of the Navy's handling of the COVID-19 outbreak "to examine whether Navy leaders took strong enough action to stop the virus' spread aboard ships, and whether their plan was effectively implemented" across the US fleet. The review, "slated to begin before the end of the month, comes amid high case counts aboard U.S. ships and recent news that Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Michael Gilday has self-isolated after potential contact with someone who tested positive for the virus."

FDA Fast-Tracks Moderna Coronavirus Vaccine Candidate.

The CBS Evening News (5/12, story 3, 1:50, O'Donnell, 5.29M) reported the FDA "is fast-tracking a possible coronavirus vaccine being developed by drug maker Moderna with the help of the National Institutes of Health." CBS' Jon Lapook: "Moderna says its vaccine...works differently from traditional vaccines by using genetic material known as 'messenger RNA' to instruct the body's immune system to fight the virus. The company says just two months after the NIH received the genome sequence for COVID-19 from China, a vaccine was ready for clinical trials. ... The Moderna vaccine is one of eight being tested in human trials worldwide, and one of three being based in this country."

Federal Government Partners With Startup Firm On Syringe Production.

On NBC Nightly News (5/12, story 7, 2:10, Holt, Gutierrez, 7.26M), Gabe Gutierrez reported, "With the global race to make a vaccine underway, scientists are now sounding the alarm about how to mass produce it." NIH Director Collins: "People are worried about, do we have enough medical glass to be able to put all of these doses of the vaccine into vials so that they can be administered, and that is a serious issue to think about right now." Gutierrez: "The Trump Administration announced a new $138 million effort called Project Jumpstart to dramatically increase domestic production of syringes." The Defense Department and HHS "will now partner with health startup Apiject Systems America. The company makes plastic pre-filled syringes." Apiject CEO Jay Walker: "Nobody has ever used an injectable, pre-filled syringe made of plastic in the tens or millions or even in the millions, because nobody has ever figured out how to attach a needle to a plastic-filled container with a drug."

CDC Preparing Response To Pediatric Illness Believed Linked To COVID-19.

Both ABC World News Tonight (5/12, story 2, 2:15, Muir, 8.35M) and NBC Nightly News (5/12, story 2, 2:30, Holt, 7.26M) aired reports on an illness believed linked to COVID-19 that is affecting children. ABC's Stephanie Ramos reported 13 states are "reporting that rare inflammatory syndrome possibly linked to the virus. New York [is] investigating about 100 cases, three kids have died." Ramos said NIAID Director Fauci "warn[ed] we're still learning about the virus' impact on children." Fauci: "I think we better be careful [that] we are not cavalier in thinking that children are completely immune to the deleterious effects." NBC's Kristen Dahlgren reported a CDC spokesman said the agency is "preparing a nationwide alert to help track pediatric multi-system inflammatory syndrome. Symptoms can include prolonged fever, rash, abdominal pain, and the inflammation can attack organs like the heart or kidneys."

Waters' Sister Dies Of Coronavirus.

The Washington Post (5/12, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports that Rep. Maxine Waters (D-CA), "who last month stood on the House floor and dedicated her support for a coronavirus relief package to her gravely ill sister, has lost her" to COVID-19. Waters "shared the news of her sister's passing with the Grio last week, describing it as 'one of the most painful things that I've ever had to experience in my life. ... She had suffered. And so we are going through a very difficult time. It was not easy, but in many ways, I'm so glad she's out of pain.'" The Post adds that Velma Moody, 86, "contracted the highly contagious virus at Grand Manor Nursing Home in St. Louis."

Newsom Lays Out Guidelines For Reopening California.

The CBS Evening News (5/12, story 2, 2:15, O'Donnell, 5.29M) reported California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) "is laying out guidelines for opening businesses in his state." CBS' Jamie Yuccas reported Newsom is "issuing new guidelines to partially reopen the world's fifth-largest economy." Newsom: "We're reopening in-room dining, outdoor museums, botanical gardens." However, Yuccas reported, "almost all California State University campuses now will close in the fall, except for online classes." Newsom: "The worst mistake we can make is to just throw those face coverings off. It's still virulent. It's still deeply, deeply deadly." Yuccas: "Newsom says when California restaurants are finally allowed to open, you'll get a throw-away menu and tables likely will be empty with no salt and pepper allowed. While there is no overall timeline, the governor says he will be more flexible with smaller communities that have fewer cases."

The New York Times (5/12, Hubler, 18.61M) reports California State University said Tuesday "that classes at its 23 campuses would be canceled for the fall semester, with instruction taking place almost exclusively online."

Whitmer's Legal Team Calls Lawmakers' Lawsuit A "Power Grab."

The Detroit News (5/12, Mauger, 825K) reports that the legal team for Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) "issued a blistering response Tuesday to the Michigan Legislature's challenge against her emergency powers." She argued that Republican lawmakers sought "to build a constitutional crisis atop a public health crisis." The Republican House and Senate "sued the Democratic governor in the state Court of Claims, contending that she had exceeded her authority in continuing unilateral actions to combat the COVID-19 pandemic." In a response filed Tuesday, three assistant attorneys general and one assistant solicitor general argued, "Having lost that political gamble, they are doubling down on this lawsuit. ... But this is more than a political bluff for a dissatisfied coequal branch of government holding a losing hand under applicable law. ... It is a power grab cloaked in the fineries of unfounded legal reasoning."

Armed Militia Helps Michigan Barber Reopen In Defiance Of State Orders. The Washington Post (5/12, Balingit, 14.2M) reports that armed members of the Michigan Home Guard stood outside Karl Manke's barbershop Monday to blockade the door if police arrived so Manke could reopen his shop "in defiance of state orders." The Post says "dozens" joined the militia, wearing Trump sweatshirts and Trump cowboy hats and waving Trump flags." They gathered to rail against Whitmer's approach to fighting the coronavirus outbreak in Michigan, one of the nation's worst hotspots. They were channeling President Trump's support of such protests, but some also were taking aim at the state's Republicans, who they say have not done enough to 'liberate' the state from safety measures that have ground life to a halt."

Poll Finds Partial Split Among Wisconsin Voters Over Coronavirus Restrictions.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (5/12, Glauber, Marley, 632K) reports that a Marquette University Law School poll released Tuesday shows that "partisan splits have emerged in the fight against the coronavirus pandemic even as the public at large supports social-distancing and other measures." According to the poll, 69 percent "said it was appropriate to close schools and businesses and restrict public gatherings, while 26% said it was an overreaction. In March, 86% said those measures were appropriate while just 10% said it was an overreaction." The Journal Sentinel adds that in March, "83% of Republicans said closures were appropriate, compared with 49% in the new poll." Support among Democrats "slipped from 95% in March to 90% in the current poll while among independents support slipped from 79% to 69%." The poll of 811 registered Wisconsin voters "was conducted May 3 through 7 with a margin of error of plus or minus 4 percentage points."

Arizona Governor Says Pro Sports Can Resume Without Fans On Saturday.

The AP (5/12) reports Arizona Gov. Doug Ducey (R) announced Tuesday "that professional sports, including MLB, NBA, NHL and NFL can resume without fans on Saturday." Ducey "said he's had discussions with 'leaders of some of these leagues' but did not say which ones or elaborate on what activities might take place in Arizona."

Virginia Contractor Fails To Deliver 10M Masks Promised To FEMA.

The Washington Post (5/12, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports that the "little-known Virginia-based defense company" Panthera Worldwide LLC, which "was awarded a $55 million federal contract to provide 10 million N95 masks for the U.S. government's coronavirus response failed to deliver and had its contract canceled on Tuesday, according to the Federal Emergency Management Agency." The company "had promised to deliver the much-needed personal protective equipment by May 1, despite having no history of providing such materials to the government." They "sought a 10-day extension to May 11 and ultimately did not furnish the items." A FEMA spokeswoman "said Tuesday the company requested another four-day extension, to May 15, but the agency denied the request. The agency moved to cancel the contract Tuesday, a day after the deadline."

DC Suburbs In Virginia And Maryland Will Be Allowed To Delay Reopening.

The Washington Post (5/12, Hedgpeth, 14.2M) reports that Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) "issued an executive order Tuesday allowing jurisdictions in the Washington suburbs to delay a gradual 'phase one' reopening, waiting two weeks after the rest of the state begins easing restrictions because of a concentration of cases in the region."

The Washington Post (5/12, Chason, Cox, Tan, Vozzella, 14.2M) reports in a separate story that Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) "has told leaders of the Washington suburbs and other places hard-hit by coronavirus that they will be able to opt out of a gradual reopening he plans to announce Wednesday, according to officials involved in the conversations." A Hogan spokesman "would not confirm those plans, but said the governor – who is under pressure to reopen from Republicans in more rural parts of the state – has discussed a regional approach with local leaders."

WPost: Contact Tracing Alone Will Not Solve Coronavirus Crisis.

The Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) says in an editorial, "Technologists have created contact tracing systems to help get us out of the coronavirus crisis and out of our houses, but the narrow debates surrounding the inventions miss a reality: Any digital solution to our problem that's sufficiently privacy-protective also won't be sufficiently useful without a lot of humans in the loop." Once contact tracing is in use, the Post says, "what happens then will depend on old-fashioned public health policy. Authorities could ask people who receive exposure pings to stay indoors, but they could also ask them to take self-assessments providing information about, say, any gatherings in large groups or other risky activity – and then, perhaps, to call a manual contact tracer."

NYTimes: Agencies Using Pandemic As Excuse To Ignore FOIA Requests.

The New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) says in an editorial that the Freedom of Information Act "has proved to be a valuable tool for taxpayers and the press to keep a check on dealings by public officials that would otherwise be shrouded in secrecy," but "far too many agencies have...interpreted the arrival of the coronavirus pandemic and necessary shelter-in-place orders as a justification for either further delaying or failing entirely to respond to FOIA requests." However, the Times says, "Local and federal government agencies continue to operate, albeit under altered circumstances, and the delays degrade the public's trust in elected officials."

Nicholas: Trump Trying To Deflect Criticism Over Coronavirus By Attacking Biden.

Peter Nicholas writes for The Atlantic (5/12, 3.47M) that while Joe Biden "didn't play a lead role" in the Obama Administration's response to swine flu, but President Trump "is trying to convince voters that the swine flu was at least a dry run, and Biden stumbled." Trump's political advisers have also argued that Biden "is too close to China, a relationship they argue could compromise America's national security and public health. Tying Biden to China fits within a larger strategy of demonizing that country and reviving the economic-nationalist argument that Trump successfully invoked in the 2016 race." Nicholas adds, "The deflection is obvious: Facing criticism that he gave China cover while Americans fell ill, Trump wants to depict his opponent as enthralled with China's leadership." But "inside GOP circles, some are finding Trump's routine exhausting. When I spoke with a Senate aide about Trump's methods, he described the attacks on Biden as 'revisionist history.'"

Trump Lawyers Push Immunity Argument In Zervos Case.

The Washington Post (5/12, Jacobs, Helderman, 14.2M) reports that President Trump's lawyers this week "reiterated their argument that a defamation lawsuit from a woman who alleges Trump groped and kissed her without consent should be halted because the president is immune from lawsuits filed in state courts while serving in office." The 28-page brief filed Monday "is Trump's latest salvo in a multi-front legal battle to limit the ability of private citizens, Congress and even law enforcement to investigate him as a sitting president."

Grenell Gave DOJ List Of Obama Officials Who Unmasked Flynn.

The New York Times (5/12, Barnes, Benner, 18.61M) reports that Acting DNI Grenell "has declassified an Obama-era document related to President Trump's former national security adviser Michael T. Flynn, according to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, in a highly unusual move that prompted accusations that he was trying to discredit the Justice Department's Trump-Russia investigation." According to officials, Grenell declassified "a list of Obama administration officials who sought to learn the identities of Trump associates swept up in surveillance of foreign officials" and "gave it to the Justice Department." While the department "does not intend to release it," and "Grenell's office declined to provide a copy," GOP lawmakers "could demand that Mr. Grenell's office release the list." The Washington Post (5/12, Harris, Zapotosky, 14.2M) says it was unclear "if Grenell would release the names on his own. ... Releasing the names would be an unprecedented action and risk turning powerful authorities to declassify intelligence toward political ends, current and former intelligence officials said."

Grenell Declassifying Information Showing Brennan Suppressed Intelligence On Russia Wanting Clinton To Win. The Washington Examiner (5/12, Chaitin, 448K) reports that Grenell "is declassifying information that shows former CIA Director John Brennan 'suppressed' intelligence on Russia wanting Hillary Clinton to win the 2016 election." Fox News' Ed Henry said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (5/12), "There's other intel that may have been more serious suggesting that Russia wanted Hillary Clinton to win, rather than balancing that out in the assessment they put out there in that assessment, and set the narrative that Russia wanted Trump to win." Henry "said he has a separate intelligence source who confirmed this intelligence is among the four or five batches of documents" that Grenell "is working to declassify."

Biden Denies, Then Admits Knowledge Of Flynn Investigation.

The Federalist (5/12, Justice, 126K) reports that in an appearance on ABC's Good Morning America Tuesday, Joe Biden "admitted...he was aware of federal prosecutors' plans to question incoming National Security Advisor Michael Flynn after denying knowledge of any investigation." Asked what he knew about the FBI's operations in 2017, Biden said, "I know nothing about those moves to investigate Michael Flynn." He added, "This is all about diversion. This is a game this guy plays all the time. The country is in crisis ... He should stop trying to always divert attention from the real concerns of the American people." When George Stephanopoulos followed up, "adding that Biden was present at a Jan. 5, 2017 Oval Office meeting where he and President Barack Obama was briefed by top White House national security officials on plans to question Flynn over conversations with then-Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak as the presidential transition was underway," Biden said, "I thought you asked me whether or not I had anything to do with him being prosecuted. I was aware that there was, that they asked for an investigation, but that's all I know about."

The Washington Examiner (5/12, Colton, 448K) says White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "pushed back" Tuesday on Biden's claim that the focus on Flynn's case is a "diversion" from the coronavirus pandemic. Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends, McEnany said, "Look, it is not a distraction to bring this up. Any time the FBI writes down on a piece of paper, asking whether their motive in interviewing someone, if their end goal is to 'get someone to lie,' in this case getting Michael Flynn to lie, that should trouble each and every American. And they go on to say, 'So that we can get him fired.' This is incredible what the FBI did and again it's not our hardworking rank and file at the FBI – those men and women are heroes. This was some of the top officials in the Obama era, and there are very real questions now that we know that President Obama was aware of the Flynn unmasking and the former vice president, too."

Similarly, White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (5/12), "A diversion from what? I am sure that Joe Biden and I am sure that Barack Obama don't want anyone looking into their behavior and their activities and whether or not they broke the law and whether they wiretapped and spied on the American citizen, which we now know they did, whether they tried to coerce somebody or entrap somebody in Gen. Flynn to tell a lie. I'm sure they don't want people looking into that. I'm sure they would prefer lots of distractions, things that don't matter like Russia collusion are dossier or a hoax about impeachment whatever it may be that Democrats have come up with." Gidley was also interviewed on WMAL-FM Washington (5/12) and the Joe Pags Show (5/12).

Grassley: It's Time To Find Out What Obama, Biden Knew About Flynn Probe And When They Knew it. Townhall (5/12, Pavlich, 177K) reports that Sen. Charles Grassley (R-IA) argued on the Senate floor this week for "more information about the previous administration's targeting" of Flynn. Grassley said, "The public knows a lot more than it did in 2017 when the news first broke about the Flynn case. ... On January 5, 2017, the day after [Peter] Strzok moved to keep the Flynn case open, President Obama met with [then-FBI] Director Comey, Deputy Attorney General Sally Yates, Vice President Biden, and National Security Advisor Susan Rice. In that meeting they briefed Obama on the Russia investigation. It's unclear to what extent they discussed the details of the investigation amongst each other. Given all that we know now regarding the fake foundation to the inquiry, it's time we asked: what did Obama and Biden know and when did they know it?"

Senate Republicans Examining Susan Rice Email About Conversation With Obama About Flynn.

Citing a Fox News report, the New York Post (5/12, Fredericks, 4.57M) says Senate Republican investigators are "taking a closer look" at a January 2017 email former National Security Adviser Susan Rice sent to herself "to document a meeting she'd earlier had with then-President Barack Obama about Michael Flynn." Rice wrote to herself, "President Obama began the conversation by stressing his continued commitment to ensuring that every aspect of this issue is handled by the intelligence and law enforcement communities 'by the book.' ... The president stressed that he is not asking about, initiating or instructing anything from a law enforcement perspective. He reiterated that our law enforcement team needs to proceed as it normally would by the book."

Sullivan Delays DOJ Move To Drop Charges Against Flynn.

The New York Times (5/12, Lafraniere, 18.61M) reports Judge Emmet G. Sullivan, who is overseeing the criminal case of former national security adviser Michael Flynn "opened the door late Tuesday for legal experts and other outside parties to oppose the Justice Department's motion to drop the case, suggesting he has at least some skepticism about the government's argument that Mr. Flynn should never have been charged." The Washington Times (5/12, Mordock, 492K) says Sullivan "issued a fairly lengthy order saying 'at the appropriate time' he will set a schedule for interested parties – known as amicus curiae – to comment on the case. The move will allow critics and supporters of dropping the criminal charges against Flynn to offer their opinions."

The Washington Post (5/12, Hsu, Leonnig, 14.2M) reports that Sullivan "put on hold" the DOJ effort to drop the charges against Flynn. His invitation to allow comments on the case "could set the stage for an adversarial proceedings in which one or more attorneys argue against the Justice Department. It would also permit, if the judge chooses, to require sides to produce evidence and revisit the case for and against Flynn." USA Today (5/12, Johnson, 10.31M) provides similar coverage.

The Washington Examiner (5/12, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that Flynn's legal team "criticized the judge's openness to considering 'amicus' filings in the case." Sidney Powell "filed a six-page motion Tuesday evening opposing any outside intervention in the case, stating that a group that dubbed itself 'Watergate Prosecutors' had moved to file an amicus brief on Monday." She said, "This Court has consistently – on 24 previous occasions – summarily refused to permit any third party to inject themselves or their views into this case." Powell argued that "the proposed amicus brief has no place in this Court."

O'Brien Backs DOJ Decision To Drop Flynn Prosecution.

National Security Adviser O'Brien said on Fox Business' Varney & Co. (5/12, 64K), "I think Attorney General Barr has made it very clear that that prosecution was an improper prosecution, that it was not well-founded and the Justice Department made the right decision to ask the judge to drop the prosecution and to reverse the guilty verdict. I think that was the right decision. I've got a lot of confidence in Attorney General Barr and the investigation he undertook to reach that conclusion." Asked if "this thing goes all the way to the top," to former President Obama, O'Brien said, "I think we are going to have to see what Mr. Durham, the US Attorney for Connecticut, has to say. He's undertaken an investigation. I think there's going to be more information that Gen. Barr hinted would be declassified this coming week. So we will have to see where the documents take us. But it's a very unfortunate situation, no doubt about it."

Paul Suggests Obama Was Aware Of FISA Court Abuses By His Administration.

The Washington Examiner (5/12, Mastrangelo, 448K) reports Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) on Tuesday "claimed it is highly unlikely former President Barack Obama was unaware of the FISA Court abuses allegedly committed by members of his administration." Paul tweeted, "You are the president of the US, and you're allowing your intelligence community to spy on your political opponents? I'd be surprised if President Obama didn't know about the abuses that occurred against @realDonaldTrump! We need to fix FISA now so it never happens again!"

Durham's Team Stacked With Veteran Prosecutors, FBI Agents.

The Washington Examiner (5/12, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that US Attorney John Durham, who was tapped by Attorney General Barr "to carry out an inquiry into the origins of the Trump-Russia investigation and conduct of U.S. law enforcement and spy agencies, has added additional members to his team, which is 'going full throttle' and 'looking at everything,' according to sources cited by Fox News." The Examiner says Durham's team "is stacked with veteran prosecutors and former FBI agents."

Media Analyses: "Obamagate" Is Trump's Latest Effort To Distract From Unwelcome News.

Politico (5/12, Nguyen, 4.29M) reports in an analysis that President Trump "is trying to keep his presidency afloat with another theory about his predecessor: Obamagate." Trump "has tweeted and railed about unproven claims that President Barack Obama, in his final days in office, orchestrated a plot to damage the incoming president." The term "Obamagate" has "become an all-caps rallying cry for Trump." Politico says the "trumpeting of an anti-Obama narrative is a tactic Trump has employed throughout his political career. Over the years, Trump's attacks on Obama have veered from the baseless...to exaggerations and falsehoods about his predecessor's record." Trump "has used these stories to distract from unwelcome stories while elevating himself and exciting his base. The questionable details are rarely important."

The Washington Post (5/12, Olorunnipa, 14.2M) says that throughout his presidency, "Trump has responded to criticism of his performance or comments by suggesting or outright asserting that his critics are criminals." Now, he is "reverting to a familiar political tactic as he faces the most significant challenge of his presidency, said Russell Riley, a presidential historian at the University of Virginia's Miller Center." Said Riley, "He's using this as a means of distraction. ... As we've seen over the years, when the pressure on him gets turned up, there's an attempt to deflect attention onto his political opponents."

NBC's Todd Apologizes For Airing Edited Barr Clip.

The New York Post (5/12, Garger, 4.57M) reports Chuck Todd, host of NBC's Meet The Press, apologized Tuesday "for taking remarks by [Attorney General] Barr out of context by only airing a shortened version of an interview" Barr gave to another network. Todd admitted making the "mistake," but "said that when the network on Sunday aired a CBS interview of Barr speaking about his handling of the Michael Flynn case, they were unaware it was not the full clip." Todd said, "Now, we did not edit that out. ... That was not our edit. We didn't include it because we only saw the shorter of two clips that CBS did air."

Hume: Media Coverage Of Russia Collusion Was "A Disaster."

The Washington Examiner (5/12, Soellner, 448K) reports Fox News senior political analyst Brit Hume "called the media's coverage of President Trump's alleged collusion with Russia the 'worst journalistic fiasco' he's seen in his 50-year career." On Fox News' The Story, Hume "blasted the pursuit of the 'collusion narrative' by top newspapers such as the New York Times and the Washington Post in a relentless chase that eventually landed the coverage Pulitzer Prizes in 2018." He said, "It was the worst journalistic fiasco of now my more than 50 some years in journalism. ... It was a disaster."

President Trump included a link to the Examiner story and video of Hume's comments in a tweet Tuesday night. Trump wrote, "Fake @PulitzerPrizes must be taken back. These 'journalists' got everything wrong. Give them to the real journalists who got it right!"

WSJournal: Transcripts Show Schiff Lied About Evidence Of Collusion.

A Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says newly released congressional testimony shows that House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff lied for three years about Russia and Donald Trump, claiming he had evidence of collusion despite the fact that his own committee had no such evidence. The Journal questions why the media continues to put Schiff on the air and argues that nothing he says can be believed.

Wolf Inspects New Wall Construction In Arizona, California.

The Washington Examiner (5/12, Giaritelli, 448K) reports Acting DHS Secretary Wolf "is headed to the US-Mexico border to tour new wall construction being installed in Arizona and California during the coronavirus pandemic." Wolf was in Arizona yesterday to "go on an aerial tour to see new fencing the Trump administration has installed in parts of southern Arizona since 2017." Wolf will travel to San Diego "to see completed primary and secondary border wall installed under the Trump administration."

The Arizona Republic (5/12, Carranza, 869K) reports "Arizona is the epicenter of construction" for President Trump's border wall, as "crews are replacing 161 miles of barriers along the state's international border with Mexico, while an additional 80 miles of construction are in the pipeline. Once completed, the new 30-foot barriers will cover nearly two-thirds of the state's border with Mexico." The Republic adds that "construction at the sites Wolf will tour on Tuesday has continued full-speed ahead, even as the COVID-19 pandemic paralyzed nearly all other activity along the US-Mexico border." Arizona Public Media (5/12, Reznick) recounts that in a press release Tuesday, Rep. Raúl Grijalva (D-AZ) "reiterated his call to halt construction and divert funds to address the public health crisis."

Citing Risk To Jaguar, Conservation Groups Sue Administration Over Border Wall.

The Hill (5/12, Frazin, 2.98M) reports, "A coalition of conservation groups is suing the Trump administration over its signature border wall, arguing that the transfer of military funds for the wall's construction is unconstitutional and claiming that the administration did not have the right to waive certain environmental requirements." The Center for Biological Diversity, Defenders of Wildlife and the Animal Legal Defense Fund filed the lawsuit in federal court in Washington on Tuesday. The Washington Times (5/12, Dinan, 492K) reports the environmentalist groups argue that "if President Trump is allowed to use Defense Department money to complete his border wall, it will be the final step in eliminating the endangered jaguar from US territory."

Georgia AG Asks For Probe Of Local Prosecutors In Arbery Case.

The AP (5/12, Martin, Bynum) reports the Georgia prosecutors who "first handled the fatal shooting of a black man, before charges were filed more than two months later, were placed under investigation Tuesday for their conduct in the case." Georgia Attorney General Chris Carr "announced that he asked the Georgia Bureau of Investigation and federal authorities to investigate how local prosecutors handled the killing of 25-year-old Ahmaud Arbery, who was pursued by a white father and son before being shot on a residential street just outside the port city of Brunswick." Gregory and Travis McMichael "were not charged with murder until last week, after the release of a video of the Feb. 23 shooting."

ABC World News Tonight (5/12, story 5, 2:00, Muir, 8.35M) reported "state authorities...are joining federal investigators who are looking into the actions of two local prosecutors who removed themselves from this investigation because of apparent connections to the McMichaels." On the CBS Evening News (5/12, story 7, 1:30, O'Donnell, 5.29M), Omar Villafranca indicated "next month could be the earliest a grand jury hears this case."

The New York Times (5/12, Fausset, Rojas, 18.61M) reports, meanwhile, that "an autopsy report released Tuesday showed that Ahmaud Arbery...was shot twice in the chest, had a third wound on a wrist and had no drugs or alcohol in his system."

Professor: Black Joggers Often Subject To Fear, Intimidation. Natalia Mehlman Petrzela, a marathon runner and associate professor of history at the New School, writes in the New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) that "when video surfaced of the killing of...Arbery, the young black jogger gunned down in South Georgia, distance runners became a new voice among the usual chorus of social justice activists who grimly parse such tragedies. But among runners, reactions largely differed by one important factor: race." Petrzela adds that "Black runners recounted their own routines, intended to deflect the sort of suspicions that turned deadly for Mr. Arbery: steering clear of certain neighborhoods, going out only in daylight, wearing an Ivy League sweatshirt to broadcast respectability. Many white runners, by contrast, were aghast that the sense of peace they feel when hitting the open road reflected their racial privilege." That "disparity should come as no surprise."

ADL Details Increase In Anti-Semitic Incidents.

The New York Times (5/12, Diaz, 18.61M) indicates that the Anti-Defamation League yesterday "reported more than 2,100 anti-Semitic incidents in the United States, a 12 percent jump and the most in any year since it began tracking them four decades ago." The Times adds, "The surge in reports, grouped in the categories of assault, harassment and vandalism, came as Jewish communities in Monsey, N.Y., Jersey City, N.J., and Poway, Calif., were the targets of deadly attacks last year." The ADL identified "61 cases of assault, a 56 percent increase from 2018."

The Washington Times (5/12, Richardson, 492K) reports the "record-setting surge in anti-Semitic incidents in 2019" was "led by dramatic increases in assaults and harassment against Jews in New York and New Jersey. ... The most dramatic increases were found in New York, where overall incidents rose by 26% and assaults soared by a staggering 106%, and New Jersey, which saw incidents jump by 73% and assaults climb from two to five for an increase of 150%."

California Voters To Consider Ballot Proposal On Parole.

The New York Times (5/12, Cramer, 18.61M) reports Brian Beinlich, whose criminal history includes "committing a series of robberies over a 12-day period to pay for cocaine," is one of an "estimated 6,000 people...who have been freed or had their sentences reduced since 2012, when Californians" voted to soften the state's Three Strikes law. In November, California "residents will be asked to vote on whether to go in the other direction and toughen some of the measures that have made many inmates eligible to be considered for an early parole." The new ballot proposal is opposed by political strategist Dan Newman, who claims that it would eliminate "even the opportunity to start the rigorous parole application process for people convicted of minor drug possession or petty shoplifting."

ED Garnishes Wages Of 54,000 Student Loan Borrowers Despite Moratorium.

The Washington Post (5/12, Douglas-Gabriel, 14.2M) reports that the paychecks of "about 54,000 people are still being shorted to repay past-due student loans, despite a federal moratorium that has been in place for six weeks, according to court documents filed late Monday by the Trump administration." While consumer advocates view the revelation "as an indictment of the administration's failings, the Education Department says it shows the federal agency is doing everything within its power to help borrowers." In March, the Administration imposed a 60-day moratorium on the collection of defaulted student loans by the federal government during the coronavirus pandemic. However, "a group of borrowers filed a class-action lawsuit in April" against Education Secretary DeVos and the department "for allegedly mismanaging the moratorium." Justice Department attorneys representing DeVos and the Education Department said in the report the agency is "continuing to endeavor to halt all wage garnishments."

California Community Colleges Sue DeVos Over Emergency Stimulus Funds.

The Washington Times (5/12, Vondracek, 492K) reports Education Secretary DeVos is being sued by California community colleges "for barring emergency stimulus funds from students who are ineligible for federal financial aid, including hundreds of thousands of undocumented immigrants and asylum applicants." State Attorney General Xavier Becerra (D) filed a request for an injunction against DeVos on Monday in the US District Court for the Northern District of California in San Francisco. The suit "argues that Congress did not explicitly stipulate eligibility rules in the Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security (CARES) Act, which allocated more than $6 billion in emergency grants to be distributed by colleges and universities to students harmed by the pandemic." Becerra "says that by limiting emergency dollars only to students eligible for federal financial aid, Ms. DeVos is creating a stricture never spelled out by Congress, which made the funds available to help students with housing, meals and other costs associated with the loss of on-campus learning."

Politico Profile: Meadows Receiving Bipartisan Praise From Congress.

Trump Temporarily Drops Controversial Plan For Mar-A-Lago Dock.

The Washington Post (5/12, Roig-Franzia, 14.2M) reports President Trump has "temporarily withdrawn a controversial dock proposal at his Palm Beach resort that had raised larger questions about the legality of the change of his official residency from New York to Florida." The decision was disclosed "in a letter sent to the Palm Beach mayor and town council on Monday." Trump had come under criticism "from his Palm Beach neighbors and their attorneys who accused him and his legal team of attempting to jam through the dock request at the Mar-a-Lago resort" while the town's council is "only able to hold meetings electronically." Trump's Palm Beach attorney, Harvey Oyer III, "said the president would revisit the proposal when the council resumes regular meetings."

Trump Appears To Suggest Scarborough Murdered Staffer In 2001.

Politico (5/12, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that on Twitter Tuesday, President Trump "explicitly suggested MSNBC's Joe Scarborough had committed murder." Politico says Trump "lashed out in a tweet posted just before 7 a.m." He wrote, "When will they open a Cold Case on the Psycho Joe Scarborough matter in Florida. Did he get away with murder? Some people think so. Why did he leave Congress so quietly and quickly? Isn't it obvious? What's happening now? A total nut job!" According to Politico, "Trump was apparently referring to the 2001 death of Lori Klausutis, who worked as a staffer in Scarborough's Fort Walton Beach, Fla., office when he served as a Republican House lawmaker from the state's 1st Congressional District." Politico says Klausutis' autopsy "revealed she had an undiagnosed heart condition," and "was not struck by another person." Politico also reports that Scarborough was "in Washington at the time of her death."

In his Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) column, Scarborough writes, "With the prospects of a historic Democratic landslide building with every Trump news conference, every deranged tweet, every racist remark, wouldn't now be the time for Republican candidates to stand up, speak out and finally stop following a man so ill-equipped for the presidency?"

Kudlow: Administration Working To Improve Barrasso's Infrastructure Bill.

NEC Director Kudlow said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (5/12) that the President "likes infrastructure, as he's said many, many times. And we want to have smart infrastructure, which probably does mean getting it down as far as we can into the local level. But we'd like smart infrastructure. ... We've penned several executive orders for much faster permitting, particularly with respect to environmental regulations where a lot of the locals stopped infrastructure because of ideological problems, all the green stuff. But we will try to be as smart as we can if we go forward with an infrastructure bill. There's a good bill" from Sen. John Barrasso (R-WY). "Elaine Chao at Transportation, my own team at NEC, and others have been working on making that bill better. There's some pretty reasonable Democrats, in my view, on the House side who we think we could work with on an infrastructure package. So we'll see how that works out in the next round of discussions."

Perdue Stock Arrangement Draws Scrutiny.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (5/12, Mitchell, 895K) reports Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) "was allowed to hold onto shares of a Georgia startup even after resigning from its board, a deal that earned him millions of dollars when the company went public several years later." The agreement Perdue had with the data marketing firm Cardlytics was first disclosed by The Intercept, "which reviewed Securities and Exchange Commission documents from shortly before he took office." According to the report, Perdue "made more than $6 million as a result."

Senators Accuse Federalist Society Of Mounting "Dark Money" Campaign To Influence Judiciary.

The New York Times (5/12, Protesse, Ruiz, 18.61M) reports that a group of Democratic senators on Tuesday "accused the Federalist Society of supporting a conservative 'dark money' campaign to influence the federal judiciary, including who gets selected to become a judge and how he or she rules once on the bench." In a "sharply worded letter" written by Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-RI) and signed by Senate Minority Leader Schumer, Senate Minority Whip Durbin, and Sens. Richard Blumenthal (D-CT), Sherrod Brown (D-OH), Mazie Hirono (D-HI), and Patrick Leahy (D-VT), the senators "said they supported a proposal by a judicial ethics panel that would ban membership among judges in the conservative legal group." They "suggested the group had become the 'de facto gatekeeper for judicial nominations in the Trump administration' and was 'in league with' special interest groups seeking to shape the outcome of court cases."

Trump Hits People He "Beat So Badly" Who Are Now Telling Him "How To Run For Office."

In a tweet Tuesday morning, President Trump took a shot at the people he "beat so badly" who are now telling him "how to run for office." Trump argued that many of them are Republicans who should "love" his accomplishments, but they "don't like that I beat them." Trump wrote, "So interesting to see all of these people I beat so badly, pundits & consultants that never had a chance, telling me how to run for office. Many are Republicans who should LOVE our 280 new Judges, rebuilt Military, 2A, great V.A. Low Taxes, etc. Just don't like that I beat them!"

NYTimes Analysis: Coronavirus Response Hurts Trump's Efforts To Sway Black Voters.

The New York Times (5/12, Haberman, Karni, 18.61M) reports efforts by President Trump's reelection campaign "to gain more black support...have now run into one of the grimmest realities of the coronavirus: It is killing African-Americans at disproportionately high rates, and depriving them of jobs in high numbers as well." The President "has only fleetingly addressed the virus's outside impact on black Americans, and made no apparent effort to aggressively tackle the racial disparities, even as he continues his online appeals to black voters." In a new CNN poll, "79 percent of black respondents said the federal government had done a bad job trying to contain the virus. That was compared with 50 percent of white respondents and 55 percent of Latino respondents."

Steube Bill Could Ban Trump Campaign Spending At Trump Properties.

The Daily Beast (5/12, 1.39M) reports Rep. Greg Steube (R-FL), a "steadfast ally of President Trump has introduced legislation that would inadvertently ban the president's reelection campaign from spending money at Trump-owned businesses." Steube "introduced a bill this month explicitly designed to target campaign spending by" Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN). But the "language of his legislation would very likely bar Trump campaign payments to Trump businesses as well, and his office could not muster an explanation otherwise."

Biden Widens Lead Over Trump To Six Points In Reuters/Ipsos Poll.

Reuters (5/12, Kahn) reports a new Reuters/Ipsos poll shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 46 percent to 38 percent nationally, compared to Biden's two-point lead in the same poll one week ago. Biden "has routinely led Trump among polls of registered voters this year. But his lead had been steadily eroding until this week." The online poll "gathered responses from 1,112 American adults, including 973 who identified as registered voters."

Biden Has Three-Point Lead In Wisconsin Poll, Far Ahead Among Oldest. The Week reports a Marquette University Law School poll released Tuesday shows Biden leading Trump in Wisconsin "by 3 percentage points, 46 percent to 43 percent, within the margin of error. But mind the age gap: Trump leads Biden among voters 30-59, 'a pattern that has held in most of the Marquette Law School polls since August,' Marquette notes, but Biden's lead among voters 60 and older – 18 points – is larger than his 10-point advantage in voters 18 to 29."

Biden's Favorability Among Women Declines Following Reade Accusation.

The Washington Examiner (5/12, Leonardi, 448K) reports Joe Biden's support among women "is declining amid allegations of sexual assault and harassment" by ex-staffer Tara Reade. According to a new Morning Consult poll, "Biden's favorability among women fell more than 6 points since mid-April, with only 44% viewing him favorably and 46% viewing him positively. ... Despite Biden's declining support among women, he still holds an 8-point lead ahead of President Trump."

Biden Makes Case That He Is "On The Campaign Trail" While Remaining At Home. The New York Times (5/12, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that in a Tuesday interview with ABC's George Stephanopoulos, Biden "rejected the notion that he is 'hiding' at his Delaware home amid the coronavirus pandemic, arguing that he is complying with public health guidelines and declaring that he is 'winning'" against Trump. Biden has "faced mounting concerns from Democratic donors, former Obama administration officials and aides to former 2020 primary rivals that his from-the-basement campaign has left him far less visible to American voters than Mr. Trump." However, the Times says Biden, asked "when he will 'be back on the campaign trail'...said he is 'on the campaign trail now.'"

According to the Washington Post (5/12, Sullivan, 14.2M), "Trump and his allies have sought to paint Biden's decision to campaign from his house in a negative light." But Biden "pointed to public opinion polls showing him beating Trump, disputing any notion that his lack of travel has hurt him politically. 'I reject the premise that somehow this is hurting us. There's no evidence of that. I'm following the rules,' he said." Politico (5/12, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that Biden "also fiercely criticized almost all aspects of the administration's federal response, including its struggles to ramp up testing capabilities, and has warned against Trump's eagerness to rapidly reopen the national economy."

CNBC Report: Top Democratic Fundraisers Optimistic About Retaking Senate.

CNBC (5/12, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports on its website that "big money donors are rushing to support Democrats in competitive U.S. Senate races as they sense an opportunity to take back the chamber." According to CNBC, "These wealthy fundraisers are targeting Republican-held seats in Maine, Colorado, North Carolina and Arizona that are seen as toss-ups this fall." In addition, Politico says they are "also focusing on states such as Iowa and Montana, where the Senate races are rated 'lean Republican' by the online political analysis organization Cook Political report."

Republicans Win WI7 Special Election, Lead In CA25.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (5/12, Schulte, Stringer, 632K) reports Republican Tom Tiffany defeated Democrat Tricia Zunker in the WI7 special election, holding a GOP seat. The AP (5/12, Bauer) reports that Tiffany, "a state senator endorsed by" President Trump, "easily won" the special election. Trump "won Wisconsin by less than a point, but carried the district by 20 points, in 2016." Tiffany won 57 percent to 43 percent.

The Los Angeles Times (5/12, John, 4.64M) reports Republican Mike Garcia "jumped to an early lead" over Democrat Christy Smith in the CA25 special election, "raising GOP hopes of flipping a blue California Congressional District for the first time since 1998." Vox (5/12, 2.27M) reports that with 85 percent of votes counted, Garcia led 56 percent to 44 percent.

Ocasio-Cortez Won't Be On Working Families Party Ballot Line After Petition Challenge.

The New York Times (5/12, Mays, 18.61M) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "will not be appearing on the Working Families Party ballot line in the June primary or in the November general election" in NY14 because she did not collect the 15 required petition signatures. Democratic primary challenger Michelle Caruso-Cabrera successfully challenged a number of signatures on the petition.

Presidential Electors: We Should Not Be Bound By Result Of Popular Vote.

Bret Chifalo, Esther John, Michael Baca, Polly Baca, and Robert W. Nemanich, who served as presidential electors from Colorado and Washington state in the 2016 presidential election, write in the Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) that the Supreme Court will hear two cases dealing with whether members of the electoral college "can implement the will of the voters, who either don't know what the electoral college is or just expect the electors to be robots and vote for the winner of the popular vote in the state – no matter what." They argue that they "should be allowed the 'vote' the Framers of our Constitution gave us, one based on our honor and discretion."

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), meanwhile, argues in an editorial that members of the Electoral College should be bound by their states' voters.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45.1%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45.1%, and his disapproval at 50.7%. The President's approval is up 0.6 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (5/7-5/11) finds Trump's approval at 46%, and his disapproval at 52%.

A CNN poll of 1,001 "registered voters" (5/7-5/10) shows Trump with a 46% approval rating and 51% disapproval.

A The Hill/HarrisX survey of 957 "registered voters" (5/6), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 51%, and his disapproval at 49%.

Trump Touts Approval Among Republicans, Forecasts Win In November. The President took to Twitter yesterday to write, "96% APPROVAL RATING IN THE REPUBLICAN PARTY. THANK YOU! We will win against a tired, exhausted man, Sleepy Joe Biden, in November."

IMF Head Says COVID-19 "Very Likely" To Further Impact Growth Forecasts.

Reuters (5/12, Lawder) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva "said on Tuesday that it was 'very likely' that the Fund will cut global growth forecasts further as the coronavirus is hitting many economies harder than previously projected." Georgieva said during a webcast put on by the Financial Times, "Incoming data from many countries is worse than our already pessimistic projections. ... Very likely we are going to come up with the update to our projections sometime in June, and at that point...our expectation is that there would be a bit more bad news in terms of how we see 2020."

IMF Head Will Back Chilean Loan Request, Fund Says.

Reuters (5/12, Shalal) reports the IMF on Tuesday "said its managing director would recommend approval of Chile's request for a two-year, $23.8 billion flexible credit line, given the Latin American country's 'very strong fundamentals' and track record." The IMF "said its executive board discussed Chile's request during an informal session on Tuesday, and Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva would endorse the step when the board meets to take a formal decision in coming weeks."

Ukraine PM: Government Hopes To Have Signed Memorandum For $5B IMF Loan By End Of May.

Reuters (5/12, Zinets) reports Ukraine's government "hopes to sign a memorandum with the International Monetary Fund for a new $5 billion loan package by the end of May, Prime Minister Denys Shmygal said on Tuesday." Shmygal said in a statement that $3.5 billion of the loan would go straight into the state budget. Shmygal said, "It's not just financial support. This is a guarantee of receiving funds from other international financial organisations and an indicator that we are on the path of systemic reforms."

Lebanon's Finance Minister Says IMF Talks Will Start Within Two Days.

Reuters (5/12, Francis) reports Lebanon "will begin negotiations with the International Monetary Fund in the next two days, the finance minister said on Tuesday, after Beirut officially requested IMF assistance this month." Finance Minister Ghazi Wazni told reporters, "There is contact with the IMF and in the coming two days we will start the negotiation sessions."

Trump: Asian Americans "Very Angry" At China Over Pandemic.

President Trump yesterday tweeted, "Asian Americans are VERY angry at what China has done to our Country, and the World. Chinese Americans are the most angry of all. I don't blame them!"

Cuomo Blames "European Virus" For New York Outbreak. Townhall (5/12, Rosas, 177K) reports New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) placed blame on the coronavirus pandemic within his state "on Europe instead of China, where the novel virus originated from, during his daily press conference on Monday." Cuomo said the state was "worse off because the 'European virus' attacked them and no one saw it coming." Said Cuomo, "We were really at a very, very bad place. Again, through no fault of our own. Virus came from Europe. Whoever would have figured that? Somebody should have, but above my pay grade."

Cheney Alleges China Spread Coronavirus On Purpose. The Washington Times (5/12, Scarborough, 492K) reports Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) said Tuesday that "China made a strategic decision to spread the coronavirus to make sure the world, not just Beijing, suffered economic hardship." Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends, Cheney said China cannot be "a member of civilized community of nations because of what they've done." The "evidence, she said, is that China realized it had an epidemic on its hands in the city of Wuhan and Hubei Province and responded by restricting domestic travel. But the ruling communist party continued to let Wuhan-area citizens fly internationally."

Administration Tells Federal Retirement Fund Not To Invest In China. The AP (5/12, Riechmann) reports the Administration has "directed the U.S. federal employee retirement fund to scrap its plan to place more than $4 billion into Chinese investments," and "has given the board overseeing the Thrift Savings Plan until Wednesday to comply with the president's directive." On Monday, NEC Director Kudlow and National Security Adviser O'Brien wrote a letter to Labor Secretary Scalia "calling on the retirement fund's board to keep money out of Chinese equities," and "warn[ing] that such investments present significant national security and humanitarian concerns because they operate in violation of U.S. sanction law and help China bolster its military and oppress religious minorities living in the country."

O'Brien said on Fox Business' Varney & Co. (5/12, 64K), "There's a security angle here. ... The federal savings plan is basically the 401(k) retirement program for federal employees and unfortunately, about $5 billion of those retirees' savings were going to be shifted to China and a number of the companies that were going to be invested in were Chinese military companies or surveillance state companies. We thought that was risky for US national security but we also thought it was risky for the investors because those companies don't have to comply with the same gap rules and other rules that you would have to if you were listed on the stock exchange."

Chinese Official: Beijing Wants To Help World Fight Coronavirus. Xie Feng, Commissioner of the Chinese Foreign Ministry in

Hong Kong, writes in the Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that China was the first to identify the virus and share its genome sequence with the World Health Organization and the rest of the world. Xie rejects accusations that China tried to cover up the outbreak and insists that nations much work together to fight the virus.

China Retaliates Against Australia Over Call For WHO Investigation. The Washington Post (5/12, Shih, 14.2M) reports China has “suspended a significant portion of beef imports from Australia and hinted at the imminent introduction of steep agricultural tariffs, raising pressure on the Australian government just days before it is set to formally propose an international investigation into the origins of the coronavirus pandemic.” China “appears to be following through on a warning conveyed in April by its ambassador, Cheng Jingye, who said China could stop purchasing key Australian agricultural products if Canberra moved ahead with an inquiry proposal that has become highly sensitive for the Chinese government.”

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Page, Khan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Beijing appears to be stalling international investigation efforts to find the source of the virus. On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) backs Australia’s call for an inquiry and criticizes China’s move to punish Canberra.

Senate Approves Bill To Help Taiwan Rejoin WHO. The New York Post (5/12, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports the Senate “unanimously approved a bill on Monday calling on the State Department to develop and submit a plan to help Taiwan regain its World Health Organization status and participate in next week’s World Health Assembly.”

All 11M Wuhan Residents To Be Tested By End Of Next Week. The Washington Post (5/12, Fifield, 14.2M) reports that “authorities in the Chinese city of Wuhan plan to test all 11 million residents for the novel coronavirus by the end of next week in a massive push to extinguish any remnants of the virus from the original epicenter of the global pandemic.” To the Post, “The scope of the endeavor underscores official sensitivities about any new flare-up in Wuhan,” and “comes after officials reported six new coronavirus cases in two days, confounding health experts after a 35-day streak without infections.” The Washington Times (5/12, Meier, 492K) also reports on the testing effort.

Administration’s Efforts To Blame China Ensure US Laboratory. The Washington Post (5/12, Sonne, Harris, 14.2M) reports. “An American nonprofit received millions of dollars from the U.S. government during the Obama and Trump administrations to identify unknown viruses in bats that could infect humans and cause a global pandemic.” Now, the New York City-based EcoHealth Alliance “has found itself at the center of a political maelstrom” over its “longtime Chinese partner in identifying unknown bat viruses, the Wuhan Institute of Virology.” To the Post, the “story of how EcoHealth became a target in the Trump administration’s effort to deflect criticism and focus blame on China illustrates the promise and perils of international cooperation on public health research between two superpowers that are increasingly at odds.”

NYTimes Analysis: China’s Reopening Could Serve As A Model For US. The New York Times (5/12, Stevenson, Li, 18.61M) reports that throughout China, “three months after the authorities virtually shut down the country to stop the outbreak, its workers have returned to their jobs with the aim of restarting the country’s vast growth machine without igniting another outbreak.” The Times adds, “If Chinese factories and offices can successfully restart without major infections, they could serve as a model for President Trump and other leaders who want to get their economies back on track.” According to the Times, “While restrictions have eased since China sharply limited movement around the country earlier in the outbreak, local authorities still sometimes erect temporary barriers, especially in places where sporadic infections have emerged.”

WPost Calls For Release Of Chinese Lawyer That Criticized Regime’s Handling Of Pandemic. The Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) editorializes, “It’s well known that people in China who speak up” about COVID-19 “are risking online harassment, arrest or worse from Communist authorities. ... So consider the courage of Zhang Xuezhong, a legal scholar who on Saturday posted an open letter on WeChat addressed to the National People’s Congress” criticizing the government’s handling of the epidemic. On Sunday, Zhang was taken from his home by security forces. The Post calls on China to release him and says he should be “applauded for speaking truth to power.”

Several Countries Hit With Second Wave After Easing Lockdowns.

The New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) reports that “several nations that have been hailed for curbing the spread of the pandemic are finding that victory over the coronavirus can be elusive and fleeting – especially after they start lifting lockdowns.” The Times cites Singapore, which it says was “once a model for its speed and efficiency in tracing the contacts of infected people,” but where “cases...have ballooned to more than 23,000.” The Times adds that in South Korea, “which has been a pioneer in using technology for contact tracing, more than 100 new cases have emerged after an infected man visited bars and clubs in a Seoul nightlife district. Just days after some restrictions were relaxed, the mayor ordered nightspots closed indefinitely.”

ABC World News Tonight (5/12, story 4, 1:50, Muir, 8.35M) reported South Korea is “racing to contain the possible outbreak connected to one man.” ABC (Pannell) added, “One 29-year-old man visiting five clubs, later testing positive. Thousands are now being tracked and traced. Phone records, credit card bills, even CCTV being used to identify who was in the area. More than 100 now testing positive. Despite Korea’s success in tackling the pandemic, the risks of reopening are proving very real.”

Europe Moves To Reopen Schools.

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Bender, Kostov, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that nations across Europe are preparing to or have already reopened schools. Nations, however, diverge on the risk children pose in contracting and spreading the virus. While Germany and Hungary have reopened schools for older children with younger children following afterward, France and Poland are doing the opposite, bringing back the youngest first.

UK Death Toll Surpasses 40,000.

Reuters (5/12, Bruce) reports data from the Office for National Statistics for England and Wales indicate that the UK's "COVID-19 death toll now exceeds 40,000, by far the worst yet reported in Europe, raising more questions about Prime Minister Boris Johnson's handling of the coronavirus crisis."

Sweden Does Not Tout Approach As Model For Other Nations.

The Washington Post (5/12, Tharoor, 14.2M) reports Sweden's "seemingly lax measures" in response to the coronavirus "attracted the attention of lockdown skeptics elsewhere," but Swedish officials are "hardly championing their own experiment as a template for the rest of the world." In an interview, Karin Ulrika Olofsdotter, Sweden's Ambassador to the United States, said, "This is a marathon, this is not over by any means." The Post points out that the country "is by no means coronavirus-free. As of Monday evening, Sweden had registered 3,256 coronavirus-related deaths and more than 26,000 confirmed cases."

The CBS Evening News (5/12, story 4, 1:30, O'Donnell, 5.29M) reported, "With Europe beginning to lift strict lockdowns, Sweden stands as the one country that never imposed a mandatory shutdown. Officials recommended social distancing, but schools and businesses and bars largely stayed open. Its COVID death rate is higher than the US, but officials say the infection rate appears to be slowing. It remains to be seen whether the strategy of herd immunity has paid off."

Nursing Homes Account For Majority Of Deaths In UK, Sweden.

Reuters (5/12, Grey, McNeill) reports that "at least 20,000 people have died in care homes in England and Wales as a consequence of the coronavirus pandemic." Reuters says that "in the eight weeks to May 1, there were 37,627 people who died in care homes of all causes in England and Wales, according to data from the Office of National Statistics (ONS)." Based on "a comparison of the average of weekly deaths in care homes in the same period over five years, Reuters calculated that excess deaths have totalled over 19,900 in England and Wales."

Bloomberg (5/12, 4.73M) reports that "like elsewhere," Sweden's COVID-19-related deaths "have disproportionately hit the elderly. But critics argue that many of those fatalities could have been avoided if the authorities had taken more steps to focus attention on the most vulnerable demographic."

DHS Officials Concerned About Infected US Citizens Returning From Mexico.

Reuters (5/12, Hesson, Landay, Rosenberg) reports US officials are "concerned that dual US-Mexico citizens may flee to the United States if the coronavirus outbreak in Mexico gets worse, putting more stress on US hospitals, especially near the border." The fears "come as hospitals in the San Diego area in southern California have pressed the Trump administration to do more to limit the threat of the virus crossing into the United States." However, "while senior US Department of Homeland Security officials have expressed their concerns about dual nationals in daily departmental calls, there are no plans at present to bar entry to them or make other changes to border operations."

San Diego, Tijuana Form Working Group To Address Cross-Border Coronavirus Surge. The San Diego Union-Tribune (5/12, Sisson, 755K) reports that as local hospitals "struggle to cope with a large number of COVID-19 patients – a surge doctors attribute to legal border-crossings from Tijuana – leaders are forming a binational working group to track cases." San Diego Mayor Kevin Faulconer and Tijuana Mayor Arturo González Cruz announced on Tuesday "a new regional binational working group to track and monitor cross-border coronavirus impacts in the region."

NYTimes Analysis: Latin America's Outbreaks Now Rival Europe's.

The New York Times (5/12, Kurmanaev, Andreoni, Casado, Taj, 18.61M) reports that as the coronavirus' toll "eased in New York and in European capitals, a devastating wave has struck cities in Latin America, one that rivals the worst outbreaks in the world, an analysis of mortality data by The New York Times has found." While the "catastrophes in Europe and the United States were closely monitored, playing out under intense international media scrutiny, much of Latin America's pain is unfolding far from global view, under governments that can't – or won't – offer a full tally of the dead." To determine the number of deaths, the Times compared "the total number of people who have died in recent months against the average in each place over the past several years."

Reuters (5/12, Miranda), meanwhile, reports that the coronavirus pandemic "will make a bad economic situation worse for women, indigenous people, migrants and people of African descent in Latin America, a region already plagued by deep-rooted inequality, a United Nations agency said in a report issued on Tuesday." Unequal access to "potable water, sanitation, healthcare and housing could also mean higher rates of infection and death among these higher-risk populations, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) said in the report."

Modi Announces $260B Coronavirus Rescue Package.

The New York Times (5/12, Gettleman, Kumar, 18.61M) reports that in a televised address Tuesday night, Indian Prime Minister Narendra

Modi announced "an economic rescue package of more than $260 billion for a nation that, although relatively successful in controlling coronavirus infections, has been left economically devastated." Modi, however, "was short on details but said the relief package, which amounts to around 10 percent of India's gross domestic product and was larger than expected, would help all classes, from farmers and migrant laborers to big businesses." The move came as Modi "has been under intensifying pressure to announce a rescue package."

Putin Spokesman Hospitalized With Coronavirus.

The AP (5/12, Litvinova) reports Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said Tuesday he has been hospitalized with the coronavirus. Peskov, a "key aide" of Russian President Vladimir Putin, told the Interfax news agency, "Yes, I've gotten sick. I'm being treated." However, "it wasn't immediately clear if Peskov's hospitalization reflects the gravity of his condition or was an extra precaution."

NBC Nightly News (5/12, story 5, 1:10, Holt, 7.26M) said Peskov is "Putin's right hand man," working for the Russian leader "for 20 years." Peskov, however, "said he hasn't seen Putin in a month."

WHO Sees "Potentially Positive Data" In Coronavirus Treatments.

Reuters (5/12, Farge) reports the World Health Organization said Tuesday "that some treatments appear to be limiting the severity or length of the COVID-19 disease and that it was focusing on learning more about four or five of the most promising ones." Spokeswoman Margaret Harris told reporters, "We do have some treatments that seem to be in very early studies limiting the severity or the length of the illness but we do not have anything that can kill or stop the virus." She added, "We do have potentially positive data coming out but we need to see more data to be 100 percent confident that we can say this treatment over that one." Harris did not name the treatments.

Analysts: Iran Likely To Lash Out To Compensate For Recent Military Blunders.

The Washington Times (5/12, Wolfgang, 492K) reports Iran "captured world attention by launching its first military satellite into orbit just weeks ago, but its armed forces remain plagued by high-profile mishaps that undermine the Islamic Republic's carefully crafted image as a major regional power." For example, the "death of 19 Iranians in a friendly-fire missile debacle Monday follows a pattern that saw Tehran's military embarrassingly shoot down a civilian airliner, killing all 176 people on board four months ago." Some regional analysts "warn that Tehran could seek to cover up its costly military mistakes by lashing out at Riyadh or Washington."

ISIS Blamed For Attacks On Hospital And Funeral That Left At Least 40 Dead.

Reuters (5/12, Sediqi, Shalizi, Sultan) reports that "gunmen disguised as police attacked a hospital" in Kabul yesterday, "killing 16 people including two newborn babies from a maternity clinic run by the international humanitarian organisation Doctors Without Borders." Reuters says that "in a separate attack the same day, a suicide bomber struck the funeral of a police commander, attended by government officials and a member of parliament, in the eastern province of Nangahar, killing at least 24 people and injuring 68." According to Reuters, "There was no immediate claim of responsibility for either attack." While the Taliban "says it has halted attacks on cities under a US troop withdrawal deal," and "denied involvement in both," Islamic State "operates in Nangahar and has carried out a number of high-profile attacks in Kabul in recent months."

The New York Times (5/12, Mashal, Abed, 18.61M) reports that the Afghan Interior Ministry "declared the attack [in Kabul] over and the three assailants dead after about five hours of fighting." The Washington Post (5/12, Hassan, 14.2M) indicates that there has been a "surge in violence in Afghanistan, nearly three months after the United States and the Taliban signed a landmark peace deal." However, the Post points out that the Taliban "denied responsibility for both attacks," and says "the shooting in Kabul echoes earlier attacks on Afghan minority groups carried out by the Islamic State." Nevertheless, according to the Post, "In response to Tuesday's violence, Afghan President Ashraf Ghani ordered Afghan forces to resume attacks on the Taliban, switching from 'active defensive' footing to 'offensive' mode – in a move that could further jeopardize the peace deal."

US, Taliban Dispute Casualty Figures In Rocket Attack.

The New York Times (5/12, Gibbons-Neff, 18.61M) reports that "when 16 rockets were fired at a small American base in southern Afghanistan last fall, the Taliban trumpeted the attack as a blood bath, claiming they had killed 'tens' of Americans." The US-led mission in Kabul, however, "downplayed it. The insurgents were lying, an American military spokesman said on Twitter; there were no coalition casualties. The rockets were inaccurate and injured two Afghan civilians, he said." However, "interviews with those present and previously unreported military documents obtained by The New York Times portray an event that came dangerously close to killing several Americans, just weeks after President Trump said the United States was striking the Taliban harder than it had in a decade. The incident revealed that the Taliban could still infiltrate a provincial capital, get within yards of a well-fortified American base and attack at will even after more than 18 years of fighting."

Netanyahu Poised To Oversee Annexation Of West Bank Territories.

The Washington Post (5/12, Hendrix, Gearan, 14.2M) reports that Israel's new government, "which will be sworn in Thursday, could soon confront renewed political upheaval over Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's proposed annexation of dozens of Jewish settlements built in the West Bank over recent decades." The Post adds that "the Middle East is bracing for an explosive turning point in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict if Netanyahu makes good on his campaign promise to extend Israeli sovereignty to large parts of the occupied West Bank." The Post says "uncertainty about the extent of any annexation has set off a scramble by officials and activists from Washington to the West Bank to influence the process." Secretary of State Pompeo is expected to be in Israel on Wednesday "to discuss annexation with Netanyahu and former Army Chief Benny Gantz, his rival-turned-governing partner, who will serve as alternate prime minister and defense minister."

Israeli Soldier Killed By Rock In The West Bank. The New York Times (5/12, Halbfinger, 18.61M) reports that "a 21-year-old Israeli soldier was killed early Tuesday when he was struck in the head by a heavy rock as his unit was completing a nighttime arrest mission in a Palestinian village near Jenin, in the northern West Bank." It was "the first combat fatality for the Israeli military this year, and it came as the region was bracing for a possible uptick in violence in response to an Israeli push to annex land in the occupied West Bank that the Palestinians have long counted on for a future state."

Bolsonaro And His Supporters Call For Military Takeover.

The Washington Post (5/12, McCoy, Traiano, 14.2M) reports that "as Latin America's largest nation grapples with its gravest health and economic challenges in a generation," and Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro "flounders under the pressure, the specter of the armed forces is looming larger over public life than at any time since the fall of the military dictatorship in 1985." As scandals have "engulfed his presidency," the former Army captain has "broadened the powers of the generals and former generals in his administration, allowing one to introduce a large economic aid package, undercutting his own finance minister." Now, Bolsonaro's "most radical supporters are urging a military takeover of the government – and Bolsonaro has attended their rallies, amplifying their calls." The Post says the "threat of military force in domestic affairs – no matter how unlikely – has further unsettled the unpredictable political situation."

Rodman Describes Wild Night With Kim.

The New York Post (5/12, Lapin, 4.57M) reports former NBA player Dennis Rodman "dished on his longtime bromance" with North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, "revealing how the pair partied with 'hotties and vodka' when they first met." Appearing on Mike Tyson's HotBoxin' podcast last week, Rodman said during his 2013 visit to Pyongyang, "Kim invited him to his home for a wild party."

Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman Shares Predictions Regarding The Post-Pandemic Future Of Real Estate.

Behind a paywall, Business Insider (5/12, 3.67M) interviews ten CEOs about the "post-pandemic future of how we'll buy, build, and use real estate." According to Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman, "COVID-19 will just accelerate the digital transformation of the home buying and financing processes and move it more quickly from forms to phones." He adds, "While the crises have not even subsided, there is likely to be widespread acceptance that this, or something like it, will occur again. As a result, the mortgage finance industry is likely to see changes in its composition and growth that highlight the importance of liquidity and recognize that different parts of the industry rely on different operating models. We know technology provides tremendous advantages and will continue to be a primary area of focus, but it has not proven to be an effective substitute for a solid balance sheet and financial resiliency."

CFPB, FHFA, HUD Release Joint Website With Finance, Security Resources Related To Pandemic.

American Banker (5/12, Berry, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the CFPB, FHFA, and HUD launched a joint website to be a central access point for housing relief and scam information related to the coronavirus pandemic. The website "describes potential strategies for both homeowners and renters economically affected by COVID-19," and offers homeowners tools to figure out if they have Freddie Mac, Fannie Mae, or FHA mortgage. CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger said, "A growing concern for many [homeowners] is the notion that they would have to make a balloon payment at the end of the mortgage forbearance." FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "Protecting and empowering borrowers and renters while ensuring the mortgage market functions as efficiently as possible has been a priority for FHFA during the national health emergency."

MBA: Unemployment Increase Drives Surge In Forbearance Requests.

Forbes (5/12, Richardson, 9.71M) reports that a "new survey by the Mortgage Bankers Association reveals a sharp uptick in the number of mortgage loans in forbearance." As the unemployment rate "soared to 14.7%," in April, the "total number of home loans now in forbearance increased from 7.54% of servicers' portfolio volume in the prior week to 7.91% as of May 3 as homeowners continue to seek relief from mortgage payments amid the coronavirus crisis. According to MBA's estimate, approximately 4 million homeowners are in forbearance plans." Ginnie Mae-backed loans "once again showed the largest overall share of loans in forbearance by investor type at 10.96%. The number of loans in forbearance for depository servicers such as commercial banks and credit unions rose to 8.75%, while the number of loans in forbearance for independent mortgage bank servicers increased to 7.54%.” Meanwhile, Mortgage Professional America (5/12, Smith) reports, “The share of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac loans in forbearance increased from 5.85% to 6.08%”

Real Deal \(NY\) (5/12, 124K) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni “warned...that servicer call volume picked up from last week, which could signal that more borrowers are inquiring about their options as monthly due dates loom. Calls from borrowers jumped to 8.6 percent of servicing portfolio volume from 7.2 percent last week.” National Mortgage News (5/12) provides additional coverage.

Mortgage Delinquencies Spike As Forbearances Become Overdue.

HousingWire (5/12, 23K) reports, “The delinquency rate in 2020’s first three months was below the 4.42% in the year-ago quarter, reflecting the timing of the pandemic. States began closing businesses and issuing stay-at-home orders in mid-March, in the final two weeks of the period, to stem the spread of COVID-19. Broken out by loan type, the delinquency rate for loans backed by the Federal Housing Administration rose by 113 basis points to 9.69%. The rate for loans backed by the Veterans Administration rate rose by 78 basis points to 4.65%, the MBA report said,” compared to “a delinquency rate of 3.16% for conventional loans, which could include Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac mortgages, up from 2.82% in the fourth quarter.”

National Mortgage Professional (5/12) reports, “The mortgage delinquency rate in the fourth quarter of 2019 was at its lowest rate since MBA’s survey began in 1979. Fast-forward to the end of March, and it is clear the COVID-19 pandemic is impacting homeowners. Mortgage delinquencies jumped by 59 basis points – which is reminiscent of the hurricane-related, 64-basis-point increase seen in the third quarter of 2017. The major variances from the fourth quarter of 2019 to this year’s first quarter are tied to the increase in early-stage delinquencies for all loan types. For example, the 30-day FHA delinquency rate rose by 113 basis points, the second-highest quarterly ramp-up in the survey series. The 30-day VA delinquency rate rose by 78 basis points – the highest quarterly increase.” National Mortgage News (5/12) and Mortgage Professional America (5/12, Jarvis) provide additional coverage.

With Servicers’ Call Centers Swamped, Some Borrowers Are Mistakenly Put In Forbearance, Prevented From Refinancing.

CNBC (5/12, Olick, 3.62M) reports, “More than four million homeowners are now delaying their monthly mortgage payments as part of both government and private lender relief programs – but some have been put into forbearance by mistake and are having a hard time getting out.” After the government “authorized a massive mortgage bailout under the CARES Act,” which “specifically states that servicers should not ask any questions of their borrowers, nor...require any documentation of hardship in order to accommodate them,” some borrowers’ “inquiries” were reportedly “misunderstood.” As a result, “some servicers, swamped with hundreds of thousands of calls, just put the borrowers into the program.” According to CNBC, “That’s precisely what happened to a Massachusetts borrower who called his servicer to get information and later found out his mortgage was in forbearance.” CNBC says, “Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which, along with FHA and VA, fund or insure the vast majority of mortgages from lenders, do not allow borrowers with a loan in forbearance to either refinance or obtain a new loan until one year after the loan payments are up to date again.”

Fed Buys Agency MBS With 2% Coupon For First Time In History.

Bloomberg (5/12, Nasiripour, Maloney, 4.73M) reports that the New York Fed “bought contracts for $240 million of mortgage bonds with a coupon of 2% on Monday, the first time it’s ever purchased mortgage securities promising to pay so little interest, according to a Fed spokeswoman.” According to Bloomberg, “Since March, when the Fed unleashed a wave of stimulus in response to the coronavirus, the central bank has bought $628 billion of mortgage bonds issued by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and the government agency Ginnie Mae, central bank data show, with nearly two-thirds of that concentrated among 30-year bonds with coupons of 2.5% and 3%.”

Homebuilders Roll Out Special Deals And Incentives To Bring In Buyers.

Realtor (5/12, 25.12M) reports homebuilders are offering special deals and incentives on new construction in an effort to entice buyers. For example, “Lennar is offering an additional $5,000 to $10,000 off the selling price of its homes. And its mortgage company is also offering mortgages with interest rates of just 2.7% on 30-year fixed-rate loans for select homes through May. The 30-year fixed-rate mortgage recently dropped to a record low of 3.26% for the week ending May 7, according to Freddie Mac.”

Multifamily Sector’s Outlook Reportedly Improving, With GSEs Making Loans With Sub-Three-Percent Fixed Rates.

The National Real Estate Investor (5/12, 131K) reports, “With some states taking cautious steps to reopen, the nation approaching nearly 400,000 COVID-19 tests per day and the commercial real estate sector having a better sense of what the long-term outlook might be, lenders are willing to talk about refinancing deals again. This is particularly true for the multifamily sector, where agencies, life companies, banks and other sources have shown some willingness to do deals on well-positioned assets.” Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae lenders “are now making loans with all-in, fixed interest rates at 3 percent or even lower.”

Podcast: American Action Forum’s Wade Says Administration Seems To Be Moving Toward Releasing GSEs.

In the latest episode of DS News' (5/12, Welborn) DS5 Podcast, the American Action Forum's Thomas Wade discusses "challenges involved in transitioning Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac out of conservatorship." According to Wade, the current Administration "does seem to be moving towards releasing the GSEs from conservatorship." Wade says, "I, and many others, were disappointed that the GSEs are likely to retain many of the advantages of inherent systemic riskiness post-conservatorship that characterizes them now."

Brian Montgomery Confirmed As Deputy HUD Secretary.

DS News (5/12, Welborn) reports that Brian Montgomery has been confirmed as Deputy HUD Secretary. According to DS News, "As the second most senior official at HUD, Montgomery will manage the day-to-day operations of the agency and will advise and assist the Secretary in leading the Department's nearly 8,000 employees." Montgomery has served as FHA Commissioner since June 2018, managing the FHA's "more than $1.4 trillion mortgage insurance portfolio, which includes its Single Family, Multifamily, and Health Care programs. As Assistant Secretary for Housing, he has overseen HUD's Project-based Section 8 rental assistance housing program, the Office of Housing Counseling, and HUD's Manufactured Housing Program." Federal Court Tells SEC And DOJ To Review RBS Whistleblower Suit.

Reuters (5/12, Price, Cruise) reports, "The U.S. Justice Department and Securities and Exchange Commission must review whether an ex-Royal Bank of Scotland employee is owed a whistleblower payout and provide documents relating to his case," the US Second Circuit Appeals Court "said on Tuesday." According to Reuters, "Former RBS risk manager Victor Hong sued the agencies in February alleging they flouted the law 'in bad faith' when assessing whether he was due a payout for helping federal probes into the British bank's mis-selling of mortgage bonds in the run-up to the 2007-08 financial crisis. In August 2018, RBS agreed to pay $4.9 billion to end the probes, which were led by the Justice Department. No portion of that fine has ever been deemed eligible for a reward under the whistleblower program, public records show." Filings "suggest Hong's information also 'significantly' contributed to the success of a separate $5.5 billion settlement RBS agreed with the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) in 2017 on behalf of housing finance giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac which had bought mortgage bonds from RBS."

California Senate Leaders Unveil Proposals To Provide Long-Term Aid For Renters, Landlords Amid Pandemic.

The Orange County (CA) Register (5/12, Hansen, 546K) reports that "in two ambitious proposals to help the state recover from the coronavirus, California senate leaders on Tuesday unveiled new plans to provide long-term aid for struggling renters and landlords and create a $25 billion economic recovery fund." One "proposal would allow landlords to receive tax credits for rent payments missed by their tenants, in exchange for promising to halt evictions." Tenants would be allowed "to repay the state over 10 years for missed rent under the voluntary program."

Avail: Incomplete Rent Payments Rise 93% From March To May.

HousingWire (5/12, Falcon, 23K) reports, "As more rent payments are made incomplete or not at all, Avail said that the total number of incomplete rent payments rose 93% between March and May. Avail said that nationwide, about 22% of landlords said they did not receive rent in full in March, while 33% did not receive rent in full in April and 42% did not receive rent in full in May." According to HousingWire, 60% of landlords "said they didn't receive a full rent payment in May because their tenants could not pay or did not pay."

MarketWatch (5/13, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.668 percent.

Dollar Eases.

Reuters (5/13, Sano) reports, "The dollar held below a three-week high on Wednesday ahead of a speech by Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell on growing speculation that the United States could introduce negative interest rates." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar index "edged 0.1% lower to 99.98, hovering below the three-week high of 100.44 hit on Tuesday."

Gold Holds Steady.

Reuters \(IND\) (5/13, Aranya) reports, "Gold held steady on Wednesday as market participants stayed away from making big bets ahead of a speech by Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell amid rising speculation the United States could one day adopt negative interest rates." Spot gold "was unchanged at $1,701.51 per ounce by 0326 GMT," while US gold futures "fell 0.1% to $1,704.50 per ounce."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (5/13, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil prices fell on Wednesday on concerns about a possible second wave of coronavirus cases in countries easing lockdowns, which could prompt renewed movement restrictions, while industry data showed U.S. crude inventories are still rising." Brent crude "dropped 40 cents, or 1.3%, to $29.58 a barrel by 0658 GMT." West Texas Intermediate crude futures "fell 10 cents, or 0.4%, to $25.68 a barrel, after rising 6.8% in the previous session."

Texas Courts Hit By Ransomware Attack.

The AP (5/12, Bleiberg) reports from Dallas, Texas, "Texas courts have been hit with a ransomware attack that took down the website and case management systems for the state's appellate and high courts." The AP adds, "The attack on the courts' network was discovered by staff Friday morning after beginning overnight, according to a statement the Office of Court Administration issued Monday. It says staff limited the damage by disabling part of their network and that the courts will not will not pay any ransom." According to the AP, "Local trial courts appear to have been unaffected and there is no current evidence that sensitive or personnel information was compromised, according to the statement." The hack "left Texas' top civil and criminal courts without a working case management system or internet in their offices and led staff to put out rulings over Twitter, Blake Hawthorne, the top administrator of the Supreme Court of Texas, said Tuesday."

Op-Ed: Cyber Command Needs New Acquisition Authorities.

In a commentary in Lawfare (5/12), Erica Borghard, Senior Director and Lead, Task Force One, for the Cyberspace Solarium Commission, writes, "Given the dynamic nature of the cyberspace environment, the rapidly changing pace of technological development, and the speed at which adversaries operate, Congress should accept the recommendation in the Cyberspace Solarium Commission's March 2020 report to create a major force program (MFP) category for cyberspace as part of the fiscal 2021 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA)." She concludes, "While the Cyberspace Solarium Commission, following its remit from Congress, focused on the more specific issue of an MFP for Cyber Command, it is also worth assessing the extent to which the broader MFP construct – hardly altered since the 1960s – should be reexamined in terms of its appropriateness for the contemporary needs of the military."

Federal Agencies Share List Of Top Ten Most-Exploited Vulnerabilities.

ZDNet (5/13, Cimpanu, 299K) reports, "Two US cyber-security agencies published this week a list of the top 10 most commonly exploited software vulnerabilities across the last four years, between 2016 and 2019." According to ZDNet, "The report, authored by the Department of Homeland Security Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (DHS CISA) and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), urges organizations in the public and private sector to apply necessary updates in order to prevent the most common forms of attacks encountered today. This includes attacks carried out by state-sponsored, non-state, and unattributed threat actors." Federal officials "argue that applying patches could degrade the cyber arsenal of foreign actors targeting US entities, as they'd have to invest resources into developing new exploits, rather than relying on old and tested bugs. 'Exploitation of these vulnerabilities often requires fewer resources as compared with zero-day exploits for which no patches are available,' US officials said."

Estonia Passes "Huawei Law" For Telecom Security Reviews.

Reuters (5/12) reports Estonia's parliament "approved on Tuesday a new Electronics Communications Act to ensure security reviews for telecom gear needed in the development of future networks." The act, which lawmakers "dubbed the 'Huawei law,' leaves detailed implementation to the government and includes intelligence services among the reviewing authorities." EU and transatlantic NATO alliance member Estonia "shares the US government's security worries over new 5G networks." Washington has "accused Huawei of spying on the West, allegations it denies."

Op-Ed: Congress Needs To Act On Cybersecurity Commission Calls For International Cooperation, Resilience And Retaliation.

In a commentary in Government Technology (5/12, 2K), Benjamin Jensen, American University School of International Service and Chris Inglis, US Naval Academy, write, The Solarium Cybersecurity Commission "lays out a comprehensive plan of action based on a new strategy: layered cyber deterrence. The proposed strategy breaks new ground in two ways. First, it asserts that contrary to conventional wisdom, it is possible to deter cyberattacks. Second, the strategy calls for coordinating activities in three layers to secure cyberspace." They contend, "This won't eliminate all bad behavior in cyberspace any more than traditional law enforcement has completely banished crime in the physical world. But it will improve how the US government and the private sector respond to cyberthreats." They conclude, "For the recommendations that require changes in law, the commission drafted legislative language to assist Congress. ... Implementing the strategy will involve changes in procedure, authority, law and ultimately in the behavior of cyberspace stakeholders."

Hacker Hits Magellan Health With Ransomware Attack.

Fox Business (5/12, Leggate, 1.73M) reports Fortune 500 company Magellan Health announced that "a hacker made off with some personal information in a ransomware attack last month." The hacker accessed Magellan's systems via a phishing email impersonating a client on April

6. The attacker reportedly "accessed one corporate service with some information like names, addresses, tax details and Social Security numbers, and used malware designed to steal passwords." According to the article, the FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center had 2,047 reports of ransomware with nearly $9 million in losses in 2019.

Florida Remains Undecided In Tapping Federal Election Security Funding.

The Washington Post (5/12, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that Florida is "shaping up as a battleground over election security efforts during the pandemic." Officials there have "yet to say whether they'll accept $20 million in federal money that lawmakers and experts say is vital to manage a surge in voting by mail and other changes brought on by the novel coronavirus." The money is Florida's "share of $400 million in election security funding Congress included in the coronavirus stimulus bill in March." But Congress also "mandated states match that money with 20 percent of their own funds." Rep. Stephanie Murphy (D-FL) said, "Florida doesn't have a great record of administering elections during normal times, so during a pandemic the lack of planning and the lack of additional resources could be catastrophic." Florida is the only "remaining state that hasn't signaled its intentions regarding the federal money."

Cyberthreats Could Derail Race To Develop A Coronavirus Vaccine.

CNBC (5/12, Bukszpan, 3.62M) reports cybercriminals are attacking "pharmaceutical companies, and while these attacks pose a threat to customers' privacy rights, some wonder if they might also interfere with the development of a vaccine." Sivan Nir, threat intelligence team leader at the cybersecurity company Skybox Security Research Lab, "said that many cybercriminals have pledged not to attack health-care providers during the coronavirus outbreak." Pharmaceutical companies, on the other hand, "are not so lucky." He said, "There is a certain amount of 'honor amongst thieves' that exists within cybercriminal communities/ At the onset of the Covid-19 crisis, a number of ransomware operators said that they will no longer be targeting medical or health organizations during the pandemic. This compassionate approach, however, does not extend to pharmaceutical companies."

Security Chiefs Confront Declining Cybersecurity Funding During Business Downturn.

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Stupp, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports market experts worry companies may be reducing budgets for cybersecurity as the effects of the economic downturn spur businesses to furlough employees and freeze capital investments amid the pandemic. In turn, these financial strains may press firms to sever ties with third-party suppliers of cybersecurity services.

NSA Guidance Calls On Teleworkers To Use End-To-End Encryption.

Security Boulevard (5/12, Berlove) reports NSA recently issued "guidelines for using collaboration services." At the top of "the NSA's list is the recommendation that collaboration services employ end-to-end encryption." It's inclusion in "the NSA's list highlights its shift to the mainstream by an organization known to seek the highest levels of security for themselves and their technologies." The NSA "notes that by following the guidelines it defines, users can reduce their risk exposure and become harder targets for bad actors."

CISA Launches SAFECOM Website For Centralized Emergency Communications.

ExecutiveGov (5/12, Rivers) reports, "The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) has launched a website for public safety communications that uses resources under the SAFECOM unit, Federal Partnership for Interoperable Communications and National Council of Statewide Interoperability Coordinators." CISA "said Thursday that the new SAFECOM website includes features and guidelines for local authorities and emergency responders to conduct self-assessment tests, issue communications grants and implement encryption for radio systems The new website collates data and sources from its predecessor under the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) as part of efforts to migrate SAFECOM to the CISA domain. Gerald Reardon, chair of SAFECOM, said that having a consolidated website is a "tremendous advantage" to members of the larger public-safety community."

Republican Senators Unveil Legislation To Impose Sanctions On China.

The Washington Times (5/12, Meier, 492K) reports Sen. Lindsey Graham (S-SC) on Tuesday unveiled legislation that would impose sanctions on China for "failing to cooperate with ongoing inquiries into the origins of the coronavirus outbreak." In a statement, Graham said, "I'm convinced that without Chinese Communist Party deception the virus would not be here in the United States." He called the measure a "hard hitting piece of legislation," and said lawmakers "must determine how the virus came about and take steps, like closing the wet markets, to ensure it never happens again."

Reuters (5/12, Brunnstrom) reports Graham said his "COVID-19 Accountability Act" would require the President to make a certification to Congress within 60 days that China had "provided a full and complete accounting to any COVID-19 investigation led by the United States, its allies or U.N. affiliate such as the World Health Organization (WHO)."

Huawei Could Face Financial Sanctions Reserved For Terrorists In Legislative Proposal.

Newsweek (5/12, Roos, 1.53M) reports a bipartisan group of congressional leaders "introduced a bill Tuesday targeting Huawei and other 5G companies either in violation of sanctions or suspected of participating in corporate espionage. The bill, which was introduced by Republican Arkansas Senator Tom Cotton and Republican Representative Mike Gallagher of Wisconsin, drew support from both political parties in both chambers of Congress, with Representatives Ruben Gallego (D-AZ), Liz Cheney (R-WY) and Chrissy Houlahan (D-PA) signing on alongside Senators Chuck Schumer (D-NY) Rick Scott (R-FL) and Chris Van Hollen (D-MD)."

Iron Mountain Discloses Subsidiary's Possible Sanctions Violations.

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Sun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports information management and storage company Iron Mountain said it had notified regulators that it may have potentially violated sanctions on Iran, as well as on entities allegedly linked to weapons of mass destruction proliferation. The company said a foreign subsidiary provided services and products for over a decade to two or more entities the US has blacklisted.

Swedish Refiner Says It Is No Longer Subject To US Sanctions After Split With PDVSA.

Reuters (5/12, Cohen, Parraga) reports Swedish oil refiner Nynas AB "said on Tuesday it was no longer subject to U.S. sanctions and that Venezuela's state-owned oil company Petroleos de Venezuela had sold its majority stake in the company." Nynas, "part-owned by Finland's Neste Oil, last year entered a court-administered process to reorganize its business, trying to disentangle itself from sanctions on PDVSA that are part of Washington's efforts to oust socialist President Nicolas Maduro." Nynas "said PDVSA had sold 35% of its shares to an independent Swedish foundation, Nynasstiftelsen, and now owned just 15% of all Nynas shares issued." The Treasury Department, "which enforces sanctions, said on Tuesday Nynas was no longer blocked under the sanctions."

Federal Reserve

Trump Pushes Again For Fed To Lower Interest Rates Below Zero.

Reuters (5/12, Heavey) reports President Trump on Tuesday reiterated previous calls for the Fed to adopt negative interest rates, citing benefits seen by other countries whose central banks have gone into negative interest rate territory. Trump said on Twitter, "As long as other countries are receiving the benefits of Negative Rates, the USA should also accept the 'GIFT'. Big numbers!" Barron's (5/12, Scaggs, 1.07M) also reports.

Reuters (5/12, Saphir) also reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan on Tuesday became the latest US central banker to unequivocally reject negative interest rates as a monetary policy tool.

Fed Begins Purchasing Corporate Debt ETFs In "Totally Uncharted Territory."

The New York Times (5/12, Smialek, 18.61M) reports the Fed began purchasing corporate debt ETFs on Tuesday, "stepping into totally uncharted territory," saying Monday night that it would start directly buying bonds "in the near future." The announcement that it would set up the programs back in March revived the corporate debt market, "allowing companies to issue debt to raise needed cash amid the coronavirus economic downturn." The programs will purchase newly-issued primary debt and existing secondary market debt. BlackRock will run the program for the first three months. CNBC (5/12, Cox, 3.62M) also reports.

Reuters (5/12, Schneider) reports Richmond Fed President Thomas Barkin said on Tuesday that the theory behind the Fed's purchase program is that a "relatively small investment would keep private trading on track."

Fed Faces Pressure To Expedite, Expand Emergency Loans.

The Hill (5/12, Lane, 2.98M) reports the Federal Reserve "is facing bipartisan pressure to quickly launch and expand two emergency lending programs" – the Main Street Lending Program and the Municipal Liquidity Facility. On Tuesday, during a hearing with the Senate Banking Committee, Fed Vice Chair for Supervision Randal Quarles was urged to roll out both programs "as soon as possible with access to a wider array of potential borrowers." Quarles said, "I don't think we're looking at months, but it would be premature for me to say exactly how many weeks it would be before they will be operational." Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) said "that he was concerned about the prospects of businesses that are too small to qualify for Fed emergency loans, but too big to apply for loans through the Small Business Administration's Paycheck Protection Program (PPP), which cuts off businesses with more than 500 employees."

American Banker (5/12, Hoopes, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that while most Americans "have done their part by staying at home to prevent the spread of coronavirus, the Federal Reserve must do more to meet consumer credit needs as they emerge from the crisis."

Fed Says It Will Provide Monthly Disclosures On PPP Recipients.

On its website, CNBC (5/12, Cox, 3.62M) reports that the Federal Reserve "outlined how it will make loans through another of its loan programs and said Tuesday it will provide detailed monthly information for who is getting the funds." As part of its "Term Asset-Backed Loan Facility, a financial crisis-era program aimed at the asset-backed securities market, the Fed said it will issue up to $100 billion in three-year loans." The Fed "also said it will provide monthly disclosures on both that lending facility and the Paycheck Protection Program," which "will include the name of participants, amounts borrowed, interest rates charged and value of pledged collateral. The information also will include costs, revenues and fees for the programs.”

Fed Could Curb Banks' Dividends Based On Pandemic-Focused Stress Tests.

Bloomberg (5/12, Hamilton, 4.73M) reports the Federal Reserve “could curtail Wall Street banks’ ability to pay dividends by cranking up the amount of capital they need to maintain due to the coronavirus crisis, Governor Randal Quarles said Tuesday.” At a virtual Senate Banking Committee hearing, Quarles said the central bank’s annual stress tests, which will include a current-events analysis, could change the capital buffer that dictates how much banks can return to shareholders. He said, “We are doing the analysis. ... And that will determine the ability of any of the banks to conserve capital.” He “also said the stress tests could be concluded well before the June 30 deadline.”

Fed Presidents Stress COVID-19 Vaccine As Path To Economic Recovery.

Reuters (5/12, Marte) reports Cleveland Fed President Loretta Mester said Tuesday that the US can only begin to grow again when sufficient progress is made on testing and treatment for coronavirus that will enable people to feel safe again. Mester said, “A reasonable baseline outlook is that as some of the stay-at-home restrictions are lifted, the economy will begin to grow again in the second half of this year and unemployment will begin to move down.” She added that a more pessimistic scenario involving a second wave of shutting down businesses is “almost as likely” if necessary testing and treatment conditions go unmet.

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Mester said the economy will contract by 5 percent or more this year, and that the jobless rate will be in the high single or low double digits. Mester expects inflation to stay low for the year. MarketWatch (5/12, Robb, 1.67M) reports Mester said Congress needs to allocate more funds to make sure the economy can recover and avoid “dire scenarios” that could develop as the coronavirus pandemic continues. Mester said, “I think that we need more direct fiscal policy and support to try to limit the possibilities of those very dire scenarios.”

Reuters (5/12, Saphir) reports Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari said on Tuesday that the economy may not fully bounce back until a vaccine is discovered.

Reuters (5/12, Marte) reports Philadelphia Fed President Patrick Harker said Tuesday the recovery could falter or even reverse if businesses open too soon leading to a second wave. Harker said a pessimistic scenario in which recovery hits some sectors before others – such as manufacturers coming back before hospitality and travel – could cause problems for the financial sector, “which is ‘heavily exposed’ to troubling sectors like commercial real estate.”

Bloomberg (5/12, Matthews, Boesler, Saraiva, 4.73M) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard warned of “business failures on a grand scale” and risks of going “into depression” if shutdowns are not lifted.

FDIC Proposes Steps To Ensure PPP Lenders Don’t Have Higher Deposit Insurance Premiums.

American Banker (5/12, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the FDIC on Tuesday “proposed steps to ensure banks participating in the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) and other coronavirus relief programs do not face higher deposit insurance premiums as a result.” The regulator said banks lending through the Fed’s PPP Lending Facility (PPPLF) or Money Market Mutual Fund Liquidity Facility could trigger risk measures used to calculate assessments if no action is taken. The proposed change would remove PPP loans from lending portfolios when calculating premiums, loans pledged to the PPP Lending Facility from a financial institution’s asset total, and other PPPLF-related borrowings from total liabilities. Eligible loans would also be excluded from the equation used to determine certain adjustments to banks’ premiums.

IRS Makes It Easier For Workers To Make Adjustments To Health Insurance Plans.

The New York Times (5/12, Sanger-Katz, Lieber, 18.61M) reports that the IRS on Tuesday “made it easier for employers to allow workers to make adjustments to their health insurance plans and flexible spending accounts in response to the coronavirus pandemic.” New guidance issued Tuesday allows employers to “let their workers drop out of their health insurance if they have another option, or sign up if they failed to earlier in the year. Workers could also be allowed to add more family members to their plan, or switch from one workplace plan to another.” The Times adds, “The changes could make it easier for workers who are furloughed to drop benefits temporarily and resume them when they return to work. They may also be attractive to workers who decided against buying health insurance earlier in the year but feel different now that they are worried about their risk of catching the coronavirus.”

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Senate Panel Presses Bank Regulators On Coronavirus Efforts, CRA Reform.

Reuters (5/12, Price, Schroeder) reports that on Tuesday, Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting, Fed Vice Chair of Supervision Randal Quarles, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chair Jelena McWilliams, and National Credit Union Administration Chairman Rodney Hood appeared remotely before the Senate Banking Committee “to defend their efforts” to help “ease the pain” caused by the pandemic. The Trump-appointed regulators “were pressured by Democrats who were skeptical that their efforts were effectively delivering relief to all Americans without creating undue risk in the financial system.”

American Banker (5/12, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Democrats “appeared to home in on comments” by Otting that the OCC is moving forward with a revamp of the Community Reinvestment Act, “despite criticism that regulators should pause the effort in light of the coronavirus pandemic.” While Democrats on the panel urged the OCC to slow down and postpone any rulemaking given the current state of the economy, Otting disagreed, “saying that the coronavirus pandemic amplifies the need to move quickly with the CRA revamp.” He said, “Actually, we think we should accelerate it, because it would drive more dollars into low and moderate income communities across America.” The hearing also “highlighted a sense of urgency” among both Republican and Democratic lawmakers for the Fed to make its Main Street Lending Program and Municipal Liquidity Facility operational. Quarles did not give a specific time frame but said “it is the highest priority at the Fed right now” to get those two facilities up and running. However, “because those are innovations, that is taking time,” he added.

Opinion: Banks Avoided Criticizing CRA Proposal Because They’re “Content With The Status Quo.”

In an opinion piece for The Hill (5/12, 2.98M), Kenneth H. Thomas, President of Community Development Fund Advisors, LLC, writes that bankers have been “criticizing their regulators from a safe distance,” what he calls “regulatory distancing,” on the recent notice of proposed rulemaking to update the Community Reinvestment Act. While 22 percent of comments on the OCC’s advance notice from August 2018 were from banks and their trade groups, only nine percent of comments submitted on the actual proposal in January came from the industry. Thomas says “most banks chose to avoid directly criticizing the notice and indirectly” its OCC and FDIC authors, because “they are content with the status quo: CRA exams have a 98 percent pass rate, with relatively low compliance costs, compared to more costly regs such as the Bank Secrecy Act.” In addition, most banks “do not want a major overhaul that is widely perceived as complex and excessively burdensome.”

Small Businesses Turn Away From Big Banks To Get Loans.

Bloomberg (5/12, Rockeman, 4.73M) reports, “As millions of entrepreneurs adapt to survive the coronavirus pandemic, many are ending their relationships with major banks that can’t keep pace with more nimble” financial institutions, such as fintechs and CDFIs. In the first weeks of the PPP, big banks “lagged behind in handling applications, leaving desperate applicants to explore alternate sources of financial help.” Business owners interviewed by Bloomberg said they received funding through PayPal and Square, as they were unable to get PPP loans fast enough through their primary banks. The experiences, Bloomberg says, “may have a lasting impact on the reputations of big banks, even as they now pull ahead in arranging loans during the second round of the federal program.”

In a Boston-area news roundup, Politico Playbook (5/12, 4.31M) reports that many regional small businesses “have turned to local sources of help – like a $2 million small business relief program [Boston Mayor Marty] Walsh announced in April, which is funded through federal grants and city taxpayer dollars.” In addition, Politico says PPP activity in Massachusetts “slowed significantly last week, with the US Small Business Administration approving an average of about 1,100 loans a day statewide – a fraction of the nearly 10,000-a-day pace of the previous week.”

SBA Raises Lending Limit For SBA Express Loans.

American Banker (5/12, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that the SBA “has acted on another key provision of the coronavirus stimulus package by temporarily increasing the maximum size of SBA Express loans.” Overshadowed by the PPP, “SBA Express has been a steady source of small-business capital since its creation in 1995.” The program does not offer loan forgiveness the way the PPP does, but it “gives borrowers more flexibility to cover a wider range of expenses,” and “with its lending limit increased from $350,000 to $1 million, the program could become a critical tool for businesses looking to rebound as the pandemic passes, lenders said.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“No, Your FOIA Request Cannot Wait ‘Until This Emergency Is Over.’” The New York Times (5/12, 18.61M) says in an editorial that the Freedom of Information Act “has proved to be a valuable tool for taxpayers and the press to keep a check on dealings by public officials that would otherwise be shrouded in secrecy,” but “far too many agencies have...interpreted the arrival of the coronavirus pandemic and necessary shelter-in-place orders as a justification for either further delaying or failing entirely to respond to FOIA requests.” However, the Times says, “Local and federal government agencies continue to operate, albeit under altered circumstances, and the delays degrade the public’s trust in elected officials.” The Times adds, “Organizations from the Air Force to the F.B.I. to the Department of Health and Human Services and the Federal Emergency Management Agency are either changing policies regarding FOIA requests or are not responding to them.”

Washington Post.

“Apple And Google’s Tools Alone Aren’t Enough For Contact Tracing.” The Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) says in an editorial, “Technologists have created contact tracing systems to help get us out of the coronavirus crisis and out of our houses, but the narrow debates surrounding the inventions miss a reality: Any digital solution to our problem that’s sufficiently privacy-protective also won’t be sufficiently useful without a lot of humans in the loop.” Once contact tracing is in use, the Post says, “what happens then will depend on old-fashioned public health policy. Authorities could ask people who receive exposure pings to stay indoors, but they could also ask them to take self-assessments providing information about, say, any gatherings in large groups or other risky activity – and then, perhaps, to call a manual contact tracer.”

“The Coronavirus Spreads In Close Quarters. That Should Factor Into Reopening Decisions.” The Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) editorializes, “Studies drawn from completed contact tracing...are showing that sustained, close contacts and close quarters are the biggest risks.” This indicates “that the virus spreads when and where people are congregating, and among households, family and close contacts. This insight must be taken into account for every decision about opening up the country.”

“A Chinese Lawyer Criticized The Regime’s Handling Of The Pandemic. Then He Disappeared.” The Washington Post (5/12, 14.2M) editorializes “it’s well known that people in China who speak up about the covid-19 epidemic are risking online harassment, arrest or worse from Communist authorities. ... So consider the courage of Zhang Xuezhong, a legal scholar who on Saturday posted an open letter on WeChat addressed to the National People’s Congress” criticizing the government’s handling of the epidemic. On Sunday, Zhang was taken from his home by security forces. The Post calls on China to release him and says he should be “applauded for speaking truth to power.”

Wall Street Journal.

“All The Adam Schiff Transcripts.” A Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says newly released Congressional testimony shows that House Intelligence Chairman Schiff lied for three years about Russia and Donald Trump, claiming he had evidence of collusion despite the fact that his own committee had no such evidence. The Journal questions why the media continues to put Schiff on the air and argues that nothing he says can be believed.

“Faithless Electors’ At The Supreme Court.” The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), meanwhile, argues in an editorial that members of the Electoral College should be bound by their states’ voters.

“Elon Musk Isn’t Taking It Anymore.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that while it is not endorsing law-breaking, Elon Musk’s decision to defy local authorities and open his plant could serve to clarify the landscape of disparate ordinances – and do away with edicts by some increasingly dictatorial officials.

“China’s Beef With Australia.” On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (5/12, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) backs Australia’s call for an inquiry and criticizes China’s move to punish Canberra.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Justin Trudeau, Canada's Prime Minister and America's sexy upstairs neighbor. As Canada continues its battle against coronavirus, Trudeau has decided to become a little more hands-on. ... Justin Trudeau is going to help Canadian kids with their homework. This is the sort of thing you can only get away with if you're Prime Minister because any other dude offering kids help on the internet, yeah, they're just getting a visit from the cops."

Trevor Noah: "I hope Trudeau inspires other world leaders to offer homework lessons, like Vladimir Putin ... 'This is easy way to solve math problem. You from KGB, poof, math problem disappear.'"

Trevor Noah: "Last week, President Trump's Justice Department unexpectedly dropped charges against Michael Flynn ... Even though Flynn pleaded guilty...Trump says the investigation itself was the real crime and the ringleader behind it was former President Barack Hussein Jihad Obama. ... According to Trump, Obama committed the worst political crime in American history, but Trump won't tell us what the crime is, because it's so obvious you don't even need to ask. Even though everyone needs to ask."

Trevor Noah: "I don't know what Obamagate is. Trump doesn't know either. I think he learned from Watergate things he doesn't like should have the word 'gate' after it. Obamagate, Saladgate, Ericgate."

Trevor Noah: "Today, the Supreme Court will hear arguments that will determine whether criminal investigators will be allowed to dig through Trump's laundry. ... Honestly, at this point, Trump only has himself to blame for this thing even getting this far. I mean, he's resisted releasing his tax returns for so long he's made it into a secret that we have to know what's in there. Tax crimes? A treasure map? A drawing of boobs?"

Trevor Noah: "One thing that's always amazed me is how long it takes these issues to get to the Supreme Court. We have been talking about this guy's tax returns since 2015, and now, five years later, the Supreme Court is on the case. You think the DMV moves slow? The Supreme Court is out here like, 'And now for case 874, New York versus President Reagan.'"

Trevor Noah: "Because of Trump's antics, [Dr. Anthony Fauci] keeps having to come up with new ways to say, 'Please stay inside, or you might die.' ... Fauci has said this to Trump a million times, but I bet this time, Trump is way more likely to listen because now he's watching it on TV. Normally when you're talking to him in real life, he's too distracted by how much he wants to watch it on TV."

Jimmy Kimmel: "[Dr.] Fauci told the New York Times yesterday that re-opening the country too soon could lead to 'needless suffering and death.' Which, I believe, is Trump's new campaign slogan."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Fauci and Trump seem to have opposite views of how to handle this. Trump says we have 'prevailed' on the same day everyone at the White House was required to wear masks. So I guess it just comes down to who you believe: the doctor, who is one of the world's leading experts on infectious disease, or our personal pan President."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Thanks to our President, there is a divide among party lines about whether or not we should be staying at home. Which is silly, because viruses don't care who you vote for, so I'm going to try to summarize what Dr. Fauci said today with a metaphor. Think of this lockdown as a scab. A big, ugly scab on our nation's face. It's not pretty. In fact, it's ugly, it's awful, but it's doing an important job. It's healing and containing the wound. The best thing you can do with a scab is be patient and let it fall off. Unfortunately, there are some impatient people who want to dig their tiny, orange fingernails into the scab and rip it off. ... And while that would feel good for a minute, if you rip off the scab and the wound is still bleeding, you have to start all over again with a new scab. So what Dr. Fauci is saying is the same thing your mother said: 'Don't pick the scab.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The virus is surging across the Midwest. And the South. ... A restaurant in Castle Rock, Colorado...decided to open on Mother's Day, despite an order that bans in-house dining throughout the state. ... No one was protecting themselves. Well, if it's mom's last meal, you might as well make it delicious."

Jimmy Kimmel: "At Fox News, which is the little engine behind the 'back to work' movement, they just decided to keep their own offices closed through June 15. Isn't that something? Fox News, the ones who are making fun of people cowering at home, is advising its employees to stay at home. Because apparently they don't get their news from Fox News."

Jimmy Kimmel: "As part of increased safety measures, the President and Vice President will keep social distance from each other. They decided to separate Pence from Trump because research has shown that in some rare cases, the coronavirus can be spread by pets, and they don't want the President to get it."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Even though the President says everything is great, he is also desperate to blame the fact that it isn't on anyone but him. His new thing is 'Obamagate.' He doesn't know what Obamagate is, but he's going with it."

Jimmy Kimmel: [On Sen. Mitch McConnell calling former President Barack Obama 'classless'] "Wait, Obama is classless? He's joking now, right? Of all the wildly hypocritical things anyone has said about anything during this ordeal, the idea that Obama is classless and shouldn't say bad things about another President, that might take the cake! The tonnage of terrible things Trump has said about Obama, I would put them all on screen, but no one in the world has a big enough screen to see them all! The screen over the field where the Dallas Cowboys play isn't big enough. So he had to be kidding. Mitch, you dirty little snapping turtle, you got us again!"

Stephen Colbert: "The country is starting to open up a little bit, but maybe too much a little bit, at least according to infectious disease expert...Dr. Anthony Fauci. In a preview of his testimony today, Fauci warned that reopening the economy too soon would cause 'needless suffering and death.' No need to sugarcoat it, doc. Although, sugarcoating is a good way to get Trump's attention. It's what Eric does."

Stephen Colbert: "Fauci was testifying from home because he was in modified quarantine after two members of the Trump Administration tested positive for coronavirus. And apparently, the President is freaking out. A former official called Trump 'a total germaphobe.' You know, for a germaphobe, Trump sure is anxious to get the rest of us out in the hot zone. It's the ultimate 'This milk smells funny. You drink it. Also, this bleach smells funny. Drink that, too.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Trump's fears may be why yesterday, the Administration released a memo ordering most White House officials to wear masks in the West Wing. Well, it's about time. The rest of us have been wearing them for the last two months, and if they had any shame, they should have been hiding their faces for the last three years."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump's been feeling a little stir crazy, so he planned a visit to a Pennsylvania factory that produces PPE materials. The factory made big news back in the day, because employees there went the extra mile at the beginning of the quarantine to make sure their workspace was uncontaminated. Dozens of them lived for 28 days inside the factory. So, while the rest of us were working from home, these folks were homing from work. Given the contamination risks, the factory turned the White House down, 'worried that a visit from Trump could jeopardize the safety of the workers.' Wow. We've all felt this way, but now someone can finally tell Donald Trump, 'Listening to you talk might kill me.'"

Stephen Colbert: "French-language experts have determined that the acronym 'COVID-19' is officially feminine. Well, we should have known COVID-19 is female. It explains why Trump doesn't take her seriously."

Seth Meyers: "During today's Supreme Court arguments concerning President Trump's financial records, Trump's lawyer Jay Sekulow argued that Trump is, quote, 'asking for temporary presidential immunity.' Temporary? He has seven months left in a four-year term. It's like going to work and asking for a six-hour lunch break."

Seth Meyers: "During today's Supreme Court arguments, the lawyer representing House Democrats told the justices that lawmakers need access to Trump's tax returns to see if he's, quote, 'subject to foreign leverage.' 'Oh, come on! That's just ridiculous,' said Justice Putin."

Seth Meyers: "During a coronavirus briefing yesterday, President Trump told an Asian American reporter to, quote, 'ask China' in response to a question about coronavirus rates. Okay, I'm starting to think Melania's Be Best program isn't working."

Treasury in the News

Mnuchin Says PPP Has Allowed 60M Americans To Retain Their Jobs.

Appearing Monday on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (5/4), Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin discussed the second tranche dedicated to the Paycheck Protection Program. Mnuchin said, "There is $175 billion of $310 billion that has been used. And all the systems have been caught up. We couldn't be more pleased. In this round, 2.2 million loans already done at average loan size of $79,000. ... This is more capacity than the SBA has done probably in its entire history at this point. And now the systems are up and running. This will impact about 60 million people by the time this round is concluded. So 60 million more people will be back to work, small businesses being able to open."

Mnuchin: Only Congress Can Make Loan Changes Sought By Restaurants. Politico (5/4, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports that Secretary Mnuchin on Monday "signaled that he will not ease restrictions on how small businesses must use emergency government-backed loans." Mnuchin was "asked about pressure...to revise the terms of the Paycheck Protection Program loans." Politico says the Treasury Department and SBA "require that businesses spend at least 75 percent of the money to pay workers and do so within an eight-week window to have the loans forgiven," but "the restaurant industry" maintains that "the payroll requirement is problematic for businesses with high rent costs and...the window to use the money is unworkable" because restaurants are now closed. However, according to Politico, Mnuchin "didn't indicate any willingness to change the terms and put the onus on Congress." Mnuchin is quoted as saying, "This is the way the program was designed by Congress. ... It has the right intent to get the money to employees. So I don't have the flexibility to change that." The Hill (5/4, Jagoda, 2.98M) and MarketWatch (5/4, Reklaitis, 1.67M) also report.

Wisconsin Judge Rules Strip Clubs Eligible to Receive Emergency Loans In Lawsuit Filed Against Mnuchin, Carranza. Newsweek (5/4, Roos, 1.53M) reports a Wisconsin judge "filed a preliminary injunction Friday on behalf of the owners of four strip clubs after their applications for small business coronavirus relief loans were denied." The rejections "were made because of the nature of the businesses and thus violated the Constitution on First Amendment grounds, U.S. District Judge Lynn Adelman argued." The article adds the lawsuit named Secretary Mnuchin and SBA Administrator Jovita Carranza as defendants in the case. Adelman's injunction said, "Congress did not single out any industry for ineligibility under the PPP, much less specify that sexually oriented businesses are ineligible for PPP loans. Such business must make payroll and pay rent and utility bills, just like any other business. Their contributions to the national economy are no different than the contributions made by small businesses in other industries." Newsweek says the injunction also "called for the SBA and Mnuchin to grant the owners' banks approval to proceed with their loan applications by noon on Monday."

Orszag: Pandemic Response "Beginning Of The End" Of Thinking Only Shareholders Matter. In his column for Bloomberg Opinion (5/4) reports, Peter R. Orszag writes that even before COVID-19, "the view was gaining momentum that company executives should care about people beyond their shareholders." Orszag says the pandemic "will be Econ 101's death knell, at least for the next several years and perhaps beyond," and that going forward, "corporate decision-makers will need to weigh effects of corporate activity on workers, communities and others." Orszag argues that one "early marker of the shift is the way Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin has called on publicly traded companies, private high schools and universities and others to turn away government support under the CARES Act, even though they technically qualify for them." Mnuchin's stance "is entirely appropriate under the circumstances," but it is "a remarkable indication of Econ 101's demise for a Treasury secretary – in a Republican administration at that – to suggest instead that just because decision-makers can do something doesn't mean they should."

Mnuchin Says “Too Hard To Tell” If International Travel Will Resume This Year, Encourages US Exploring.

USA Today (5/4, Thompson, Gilbertson, 10.31M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “encouraged Americans to focus on domestic travel this year as the international travel outlook for the rest of 2020 remains uncertain amid the coronavirus pandemic.” On Monday, in response to a question on Fox Business’ Mornings With Maria about whether international travel will be opened up this year, Mnuchin responded, “Too hard to tell at this point.” Mnuchin then “clarified that there may be some room for limited international travel: ‘Obviously, for business people that do need to travel, there will be travel on a limited basis.’”

The Washington Post (5/4, Zapotosky, Iati, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that Mnuchin also “made a pitch for U.S. residents ‘to explore America’ in the meantime.” The Post quotes Mnuchin: “But this is a great time for people to explore America. ... A lot of people haven’t seen many parts of America. I wish I could get back on the road soon.” The Hill (5/4, Elis, 2.98M), The Daily Beast (5/4, Wilstein, 1.39M), Politico Playbook (5/4, Sherman, Palmer, Ross, Okun, 4.31M), and The Financial Times (5/4, Politi, Badkar, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

Mnuchin: Trump Seeking “Ways To Stimulate Travel.” Reuters (5/4, Heavey) reports Mnuchin “said bipartisan discussions are underway over whether more U.S. government relief funding is needed amid the nation’s novel coronavirus outbreak, but that President Donald Trump is focused on taxes and travel.” Mnuchin said in the Fox Business interview that the Administration “was prepared to back additional coronavirus stimulus money for American businesses if needed, but that right now it was carefully monitoring the economy as some states restart activity.” Mnuchin said, “The President’s also looking about ways to stimulate travel. As the economy opens up, I think you’ll see demand coming back.” The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Hughes, Gershman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), The Hill (5/4, Gangitano, 2.98M), Financial Times (5/4, Dodd, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), MarketWatch (5/4, Schroeder, 1.67M), The Independent (UK) (5/4, Connolly, 1.36M), Fox Business (5/4, Henney, 1.73M), and New York Magazine’s Intelligencer (NY) (5/4, Levitz, 1.1M) also report.

Administration Weighs Steps To Punish Beijing For Pandemic As Trade Issues Loom Large.

The Hill (5/4, Chalfant, Elis, 2.98M) reports the Trump Administration “is weighing steps to punish Beijing” for the COVID-19 outbreak, “including leveling new tariffs on imports from China.” Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “threatened harsh retaliation if China pulls back from its promise to buy an additional $50 billion of agricultural products from the United States, a condition it seems unlikely to meet.”

However, The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Mauldin, Areddy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports senior Administration officials on Monday signaled that, if Beijing abides by those trade commitments it made earlier this year, the Administration will not endeavor to punish China economically. The Journal says Mnuchin told Fox Business that China failing to stick to the agreement would produce “very significant consequences in the relationship and in the global economy as to how people would do business with them.”

Meanwhile, Reuters (5/4, Shalal, Heavey) reports President Trump “plans an executive order soon to address the lack of medical product manufacturing in the United States during the novel coronavirus outbreak, the White House said on Monday.” White House trade adviser Peter Navarro “told Fox News in an interview that an order would soon require federal agencies to purchase U.S.-made medical products, saying the novel coronavirus outbreak had exposed the nation’s reliance on China.” However, that issue “has divided the White House and some of Trump’s key advisers, with U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow pushing back against the proposed order, according to current and former officials.”

Treasury Department To Boost US Borrowing By $3 Trillion To Support US Economy Amid Pandemic.

The Washington Post (5/4, Siegel, 14.2M) reports the Treasury Department “plans to borrow $2.99 trillion from April through June to cover the federal government’s massive response to the coronavirus pandemic, issuing a tremendous level of debt to try to limit the economic impact on U.S. businesses and workers.” The department “said it planned to borrow an additional $677 billion from July through September.” Last year, Treasury “borrowed $1.28 trillion over 12 months.” In a front-page article, The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the borrowing is needed to address the growing budget deficit amid the coronavirus as economies have shut down and as Congress authorizes trillions in emergency relief funds.

Bloomberg (5/4, McCormick, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “plans to boost U.S. borrowing from April through June by an unprecedented $3 trillion to support an economy entering a recession caused by the coronavirus.” The AP (5/4, Crutsinger) reports the amount “is more than five times the government’s previous record borrowing for a quarter, $569 billion, set in the depths of the 2008 financial crisis.” The Washington Examiner (5/4, Heflin, 448K) reports, “During the first quarter of 2020, Treasury borrowed $477 billion. The increase in borrowing during the second quarter is primarily driven by the effects of the coronavirus outbreak, including the over $3 trillion in new spending that Congress has recently approved and the fact that deadlines for tax receipts have been postponed.”

Politico (5/4, Emma, 4.29M), Reuters (5/4, Burns), Fox News (5/4, Phillips, Lawrence, 27.59M), Axios (5/4, Allassan, 521K), The Hill (5/4, Elis, 2.98M), CNBC (5/4, Cox, 3.62M), MarketWatch (5/4, Robb, 1.67M), and NPR (5/4, Horsley, 3.12M), among other outlets, also report.

Mnuchin Among Officials Schumer Says Senate “Needs To Hear From.”

Fox News (5/4, DeMarche, 27.59M) reports Senate Minority Leader Charles Schumer (D-NY) "said in an interview Monday that there is a chance the nation's top disease doctor, Anthony Fauci, will testify in the Senate next week despite the White House's decision last week to prevent the coronavirus taskforce member from testifying before a House subcommittee." Schumer "tweeted that the 'Senate needs to hear from Dr. Fauci, Dr. Brix, Sec. Mnuchin. We need to know why so many small businesses have had trouble getting loans. We need to know why unemployment insurance checks are failing to get to workers. We need to know we still don't have enough tests!'"

The Hill (5/4, Bolton, 2.98M) reports that on Monday, the Trump Administration "issued new guidelines for coronavirus task force members barring them from accepting invitations to appear before congressional panels this month unless [White House Chief of Staff Mark] Meadows grants permission."

Committee Leaders Write Mnuchin Urging Administration To Reverse IRS Tax Credit Decision.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Rubin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in a letter sent to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin on Monday, Senate Finance Committee and House Ways and Means Committee leaders Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-IA), Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR) and Rep. Richard Neal (D-MA) urged the Administration to reverse a decision the IRS made last week that would make employers who are providing employees health benefits without paying wages ineligible for the employee retention tax credit.

Senate Democrats Set To Challenge COVID-19 Bailout Watchdog Nominee.

Bloomberg (5/5, Mohsin, Davison, 4.73M) reports Senate Democrats "are ready to challenge a vow of 'fairness and impartiality' by Brian Miller, President Donald Trump's nominee to oversee trillions of dollars being spent in the effort to rescue the economy from the coronavirus pandemic." Miller, in remarks released ahead of his scheduled Tuesday appearance before the Senate Banking Committee, said, "I will be vigilant to protect the integrity and independence of the Office of Special Inspector General" and will work "to uncover fraud, waste and abuse." The committee is set to weigh Miller's nomination as Special Inspector General for Pandemic Recovery (SIGPR), which "will operate inside of the Treasury to oversee Secretary Steven Mnuchin's work, with an operating budget of about $25 million over five years, and is supposed to submit quarterly reports to Congress." Miller "said he has 'close to 30 years of experience in the federal government,' and supporters have emphasized his roles as a watchdog under presidents of both parties, probing health-care fraud for the Justice Department and monitoring spending at the General Services Administration." However, "Democrats on the Republican-led committee are expected to question his independence in light of his current post – as a White House lawyer who participated in Trump's impeachment defense."

Biden Campaign Aims To Tout His Role In Implementing 2009 Stimulus.

The New York Times (5/4, Thrush, 18.61M) reports that "during a private lunch in February 2009," then-Vice President Joe Biden asked President Obama to let him head up "the implementation of the $787 billion economic stimulus that had been rammed through Congress a few days earlier in the depths of recession," and Obama consented. The Times says Biden's "work on the rollout, implementation, oversight and selling of the 2009 stimulus – officially the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act – was the most sustained, and perhaps the most significant, assignment of his time in office." Now, amid "an election season defined by pandemic, economic collapse and a far-larger relief package, Mr. Biden's campaign is hoping to leverage his stewardship of the 2009 stimulus as a point of contrast with President Trump," who has "not embraced oversight as Mr. Obama did, nor has he deployed Vice President Mike Pence in the Biden watchdog role, leaving the task to various administration officials, like Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin."

Tribes Have Yet To Receive $8B In COVID-19 Relief.

The AP (5/4) reports the Treasury Department "has not sent any payments to tribal governments from a coronavirus relief package approved in late March." Treasury "said it has not determined how to allocate $8 billion in funding that was set aside for tribes. It said it would post details on its website, but nothing appeared as of Monday." The department "was named as a defendant in a federal lawsuit brought by tribes that sought to keep the money out of the hands of Alaska Native corporations. U.S. District Court Judge Amit Mehta in Washington, D.C., agreed last week to limit funding to the country's 574 federally recognized tribes while he settles the larger question of eligibility."

Law360 (5/4, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "must immediately disperse $8 billion in coronavirus relief funding promised to tribes or risk imposing irreparable harm, eight tribes said in papers submitted in D.C. federal court." Mnuchin "has already missed Congress' April 26 deadline to disperse the funds, according to the tribes, in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act." The tribes said Sunday that "many tribal members and non-members alike rely on tribal enterprises for employment and health insurance" and thus meet the threshold for irreparable harm needed for a preliminary injunction, followed by a temporary restraining order.

Treasury Says California First State To Borrow Federal Funds To Cover Unemployment Benefits.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Chaney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports California has become the first state to borrow federal funds to continue payment of unemployment benefits. The state borrowed $348 million after receiving approval to tap up to $10 billion for unemployment claims through the end of July, the Treasury Department said Monday. Fox News (5/4, O'Reilly, 27.59M) also reports.

China Pushes Back Against US Claims Coronavirus Originated In Wuhan Lab.

A day after the Administration said the coronavirus originated in a laboratory in Wuhan, CNN (5/4, Gan, 83.16M) reports on its website that "a nationalist tabloid controlled by the Chinese Communist Party has dismissed" the claims, "as the war of words over the pandemic escalates between Washington and Beijing." On Sunday, Secretary of State Pompeo said there was "enormous evidence" COVID-19 originated in a Wuhan lab. Responding to Pompeo's comments, China's state-owned Global Times newspaper said in an editorial Monday that Pompeo had "stunned the world with groundless accusations." It said, "Since Pompeo said his claims are supported by 'enormous evidence,' then he should present this so-called evidence to the world, and especially to the American public who he continually tries to fool." Breitbart (5/4, Hayward, 673K) also reports on the Global Times editorial, while the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Areddy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the official Xinhua on Monday similarly accused Pompeo of speaking "nonsense" and telling "lies," while a news reader on China Central Television called Pompeo "evil" and said he was "spitting poison."

Regarding the President's comments Sunday that he too had seen evidence, "two White House officials" told NBC News (5/4, Dilanian, Kube, Lee, 6.14M) "that by saying he'd seen convincing evidence, Trump wasn't saying he'd seen an intelligence assessment." Yahoo! News (5/4, Winter, Weinberger, 12.82M), however, reports that "amid a concerted push to blame China for the coronavirus pandemic, the Trump administration has issued an intelligence analysis claiming China purposely delayed notifying the World Health Organization about the spread of the contagion in order to stockpile medical equipment, according to two recent government documents obtained by Yahoo News." The analysis, "which some former officials and experts are questioning based on its limited methodology, relies exclusively on trade data to draw its conclusions."

ABC World News Tonight (5/4, story 2, 2:45, Muir, 9.79M) reported the President "is sharpening his criticism of China tonight, after a US intelligence report found China hid the severity of the outbreak and then hoarded vital medical supplies." ABC's Jonathan Karl added, "To President Trump, there is no doubt who is to blame for the coronavirus pandemic." Trump: "It came from China. It should have been stopped. It could have been stopped on the spot. They chose not to do it, or something happened. Either there was incompetence, or they didn't do it for some reason. And we're going to have to find out what that reason was." Karl: "The US is accusing China of covering up how devastating the virus was when it first hit. A report by the US Department of Homeland Security obtained by ABC News concludes, 'The Chinese government intentionally concealed the severity of the COVID-19 from the international community in early January while it stockpiled medical supplies.'"

The CBS Evening News (5/4, story 2, 2:25, O'Donnell, 5.55M) likewise reported on what it called a "startling new report" from the Department of Homeland Security that "says the Chinese government intentionally concealed the severity of COVID-19 from the international community in early January while it stockpiled medical supplies, such as face masks, surgical gowns, and gloves."

Appearing on Fox News (5/4, 896K), Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro made similar claims, saying, "I think that what's important for the American people to understand very clearly is that China lied, people died. ... That's absolutely correct and there is this bigger issue that China spawned the virus and they had the virus for about six weeks, which allowed that virus to escape Wuhan and infect the world. And then during that time, China hoarded an enormous amount of personal protective gear. They essentially went around the world vacuuming up over two billion masks."

Politico (5/4, Forgey, 4.29M), meanwhile, reports that Deputy National Security Adviser Matt Pottinger on Monday "insisted... the United States is not considering 'punitive measures' against China over its handling of the coronavirus pandemic." Said Pottinger, "The US isn't looking at punitive measures here. What President Trump is looking at doing is continuing with the policy that he ran on, the policy that he's implemented – which is to have a reciprocal and fair relationship with China. ... Not one in which the US allows ourselves to be taken advantage of in the hope that somehow China will just automatically liberalize."

The Washington Times (5/4, Gertz, 492K) reports Pottinger also hailed the "Chinese doctors who sounded the alarm over the government cover-up" of the disease as "heroes of democracy." Pottinger "said several doctors including Li Wenliang were persecuted by Chinese authorities for seeking to alert people."

Politico (5/4, Wertime, 4.29M) says that to the Chinese government "the audience at home is the one that really matters, and among that vast cohort, the verdict is unsparing: China has outperformed, while America has disastrously faltered." Politico adds that "it's a sentiment shared by even educated, internationalized Chinese observers – the very group once inclined to look to America as an exemplar." Reuters (5/4, Hirschberg), meanwhile, says "an internal Chinese report warns that Beijing faces a rising wave of hostility in the wake of the coronavirus outbreak that could tip relations with the United States into confrontation." The report, "presented early last month by the Ministry of State Security to top Beijing leaders including President Xi Jinping, concluded that global anti-China sentiment is at its highest since the 1989 Tiananmen Square crackdown."

Fauci: Evidence Against Artificial Or Deliberate Creation Of Virus. In an interview with National Geographic (5/4, Akpan, Jaggard, 30.44M), NIAID Director Fauci said, "If you look at the evolution of the virus in bats and what's out there now, the scientific evidence is very, very strongly leaning toward this could not have been artificially or deliberately manipulated. ... Everything about the stepwise evolution over time strongly indicates that [this virus] evolved in nature and then jumped species."

WHO Has Not Received Any Evidence From US On Wuhan Lab. The AP (5/4, Keaten) reports the World Health Organization's "emergencies chief said Monday that it has received no evidence from the US government to back up allegations" by Trump and Pompeo that the coronavirus could have originated at a Wuhan lab. Michael Ryan told reporters in Geneva, "From our perspective, this remains speculative. We have not received any data or specific evidence from the US government relating to the purported origin of the virus." He added that WHO would be "very willing" to receive any such information the US has.

The New York Post (5/4, Salo, 4.57M), meanwhile, reports Maria Van Kerkhove, WHO's "technical lead on COVID-19, said all evidence suggests that the virus originated in bats – but the organization still doesn't know how it jumped to humans before spreading around the world."

NYTimes Report: China Suppressing Efforts To Hold Wuhan Officials Accountable. The New York Times (5/4, Wang, Qin, Wee, 18.61M) reports that "Chinese authorities are clamping down as grieving relatives, along with activists, press the ruling Communist Party for an accounting of what went wrong in Wuhan, the city where the coronavirus killed thousands before spreading to the rest of China and the world." According to the Times, "Lawyers have been warned not to file suit against the government. The police have interrogated bereaved family members who connected with others like them online." The Times adds that "volunteers who tried to thwart the state's censorship apparatus by preserving reports about the outbreak have disappeared."

Trump: Media "Trying To Protect China." The President tweeted last evening, "MSDNC and FAKE NEWS CNN are going wild trying to protect China!"

The Federalist (5/4, Clark, 126K), meanwhile, reports that "corporate media outlets are parroting the authoritarian government's propaganda, even in the midst of an outbreak the CCP [China's Communist Party] worsened through a cover-up. Many of those media outlets have financial ties to Chinese companies with intense oversight from the CCP." For example, it notes Mexican billionaire Carlos Slim, who owns 17.4 percent of The New York Times, has close ties to China, where his Giant Motors has a joint venture with China's JAC Motors.

US "Turbocharging" Initiative To Remove Global Industrial Supply Chains From China. Reuters (5/4, Pamuk, Shalal) reports the Administration "is 'turbocharging' an initiative to remove global industrial supply chains from China as it weighs new tariffs to punish Beijing for its handling of the coronavirus outbreak, according to officials familiar with U.S. planning." Specifically, the coronavirus pandemic is "driving a government-wide push to move U.S. production and supply chain dependency away from China, even if it goes to other more friendly nations instead, current and former senior U.S. administration officials said."

Former Assistant Secretary of State Roger F. Noriega writes in the Washington Examiner (5/4, 448K) that "for the first time since China launched its economic outreach in the Americas 20 years ago, the COVID-19 pandemic has compelled the United States to work with hemispheric neighbors to reduce their dependence on Beijing." Noriega argues that "the Inter-American Development Bank should convene a virtual summit to challenge private sector leaders and policy makers to bolster supply chains and economic ties in the Americas."

Four Chinese Companies Testing COVID-19 Vaccines. The New York Times (5/4, Wee, 18.61M) reports China "wants to beat the world in the race to find a coronavirus vaccine – and, by some measures, it is doing just that." According to the Times, "Desperate to protect its people and to deflect growing international criticism of how it handled the outbreak, it has slashed red tape and offered resources to drug companies." As a result, the "four Chinese companies have started testing their vaccine candidates on humans, more than the United States and Britain combined."

Esper: China Continuing Provocations In South China Sea. The Washington Times (5/4, Glenn, 492K) reports that "about a week after Chinese officials claimed they expelled an American Navy destroyer from disputed waters in the South China Sea," the Pentagon is continuing to track "very aggressive" behavior from naval and air units of the People's Liberation Army. During an online discussion sponsored by the Brookings Institution, Defense Secretary Esper on Monday said Beijing is "claiming territory or space that simply is not theirs." Esper added, "We are continuing to watch closely what the Chinese are doing."

Banks To Introduce Bill To Stop China's "Predatory" Acquisitions Of US Companies. Breitbart (5/4, Wong, 673K) reports Rep. Jim Banks (R-IN) will introduce a bill on Tuesday "to prevent the Chinese government from making 'predatory' investments in American companies during the coronavirus pandemic." In a statement, Banks said, "Our job is to ensure the Chinese Communist Party doesn't profit off a pandemic of their own making. President Trump won an election vowing to stop China from taking advantage of Americans. I am glad to be working with him now to stop Chinese predation."

House GOP Seek Information On Chinese Ties To US Universities. Reuters (5/4, Zengerle) reports that a group of House Republicans "released a letter on Monday charging China with seeking to indoctrinate American students, the latest anti-China statement from congressional allies" of President Trump. The "ranking Republicans on seven House committees" sent a letter to Education Secretary DeVos "asking for information and accusing China of providing funds to US universities in an effort to spread Communist party propaganda and restrict research into COVID-19."

The Hill (5/4, Miller, 2.98M) quotes the letter as saying, "We write to seek a better understanding of the Department's efforts to address unreported foreign direct investment into the US higher education system. This joint inquiry is in furtherance of Congressional Republican's efforts to investigate the Chinese government's propaganda and cover-up campaign surrounding this pandemic."

The Washington Times (5/4, Mordock, 492K) reports the Republican lawmakers "said that not only does China's investments make US universities more vulnerable to intellectual property theft, but it also creates a national security threat because they want to steal US military secrets and technology."

Chinese Sending Uighur Detainees To Other Regions To Work. The Washington Examiner (5/4, Gehrke, 448K) reports that "Uighur Muslims held in Chinese Communist detention camps are being sent around the country to fill labor shortages, according to activists and local reports." Chinese officials are now "jump-starting a plan to distribute camp 'graduates' throughout the country, according to local media, pursuant to a policy adopted last year that was delayed" by the emergence of the coronavirus. World Uighur Congress President Dolkun Isa told the Examiner, "It's modern-day slavery. They don't have free movement. And this is another type of the camps."

Wall Street Closes Higher. Reuters (5/4, Krauskopf) reports US stocks "ended higher on Monday as gains in large tech and Internet companies and rising oil prices outweighed concerns sparked by fresh US-China tensions and downbeat sentiment from the annual meeting of Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway." The Dow Jones Industrial Average "rose 26.07 points, or 0.11%, to 23,749.76, the S&P 500 gained 12.03 points, or 0.42%, to 2,842.74 and the Nasdaq Composite added 105.77 points, or 1.23%, to 8,710.72."

Reuters (5/4, Ahmed, Joyner) reports separately that investors are "treating the U.S. equity market's blistering rally with a dose of caution, socking away cash, staying on the sidelines or buying insurance against a reversal even as markets scream higher in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic."

Liability Shield Seen As Next Coronavirus Assistance Dispute.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, A1, Hughes, Gershman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that efforts by Senate Republicans to shield companies from liability during the coronavirus pandemic foreshadow a showdown with Democratic lawmakers as representatives of businesses and labor dispute terms under which the economy will open up. Senate Majority Leader McConnell has called liability protections a necessary item for Republicans, vowing not to support Democratic proposals for further state and local aid without it.

USDA To Purchase $470M Of Dairy, Produce, Seafood To Combat Supply Chain Disruption.

Politico (5/4, Evich, 4.29M) reports the USDA "said Monday that it will spend $470 million to buy more surplus food amid the widespread disruption to the food supply as a result of the coronavirus." The purchases will "target fruits and vegetables, meat, dairy and seafood – which have seen their markets turned upside down as restaurants and other food service businesses have closed." A "large portion" of the funds will be used to purchase "surplus dairy ($120 million), followed by potatoes and turkey products ($50 million each) and strawberries ($35 million)."

O'Rourke, Iowans Say SNAP, Not USDA Program, Best Food Fix. In a New York Times (5/4, 18.61M) op-ed, ex-Rep. Beto O'Rourke (D-TX), Robert Leonard of Iowa radio stations KNIA and KRLS, and Iowa farmer Matt Russell write that the USDA's Coronavirus Food Assistance Program "isn't smart food policy." It is a "solution driven by ideology rather than practicality. ... Food banks aren't up to feeding tens of millions of hungry Americans indefinitely. We already have an amazingly efficient and effective program to do this. The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), formerly known as food stamps, empowers Americans in literally hours and days to go to their local grocery store and get the food they need."

Costco Latest Chain To Limit Fresh Meat Purchases Amid Supply Shortages.

NBC Nightly News (5/4, story 4, 2:00, Holt, 7.62M) reported, "With the virus forcing some big meat processing plants to shut down, the ripple effect is growing, with major grocery chains now limiting how much meat shoppers can buy." NBC's Gabe Gutierrez: "With more and more empty shelves, Kroger now says it will limit ground beef and poultry purchases in some of its stores, and Costco is restricting fresh beef, pork, and poultry items to three per customer."

Reuters (5/4) reports Costco said Monday it is limiting the number of meat products customers can buy as stores prepare for "massive shortages of meat supplies following coronavirus-induced supply disruptions." Costco is "temporarily limit fresh beef, pork and poultry purchases to a total of 3 items per Costco member." USA Today (5/4, Murphy, 10.31M) reports, "Other grocers have adopted similar limits on meat purchases. Grocery giant Kroger said it has purchase limits on ground beef and fresh pork, while New York-based supermarket chain Wegmans has set limits on family packs of boneless, skinless chicken breasts and 80% Ground Beef."

Matt Gutman reported on ABC World News Tonight (5/4, story 5, 1:20, Muir, 9.79M), "Demand for meat [is] up an estimated 40 percent, while production of beef and pork is down at least 25 percent. ... The result: Wholesale meat prices are up 60 percent. Beef prices [are] the highest in decades, according to industry insiders. And that's precisely what supermarkets hope the rationing will avoid."

Tyson Foods Says Pork Processing Capacity Has Dropped 50%. The Washington Post (5/4, Reiley, 14.2M) reports that on Monday, Tyson Foods said US hog processing capacity "had dropped by 50 percent." The Post adds, "The company has been severely affected," as three of its "six main U.S. processing facilities remain closed, and three others are operating at reduced capacity, the company said."

Shopping Looks "Very Different" As Some Malls And Stores Reopen.

Blayne Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (5/4, story 3, 1:55, Holt, 7.62M), "As states and stores start to reopen, things are looking very different. At malls, masks, blocked-off areas, and arrows taped to the ground are now the norm, trying to strike that balance between the safety of Americans and the health of the economy. ... [And] open malls do not mean open stores." At two shopping centers near Atlanta, "only a handful of stores were open."

J.Crew First Major Retailer To File For Bankruptcy Amid Pandemic.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Mou, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports J.Crew Group has become the first major retail chain to seek Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection directly linked to the coronavirus pandemic downturn. J.Crew closed about 500 stores in March and has said it expects to lose $900 million in sales as a result of the pandemic.

More Retailer Bankruptcies May Follow. Jericka Duncan reported on the CBS Evening News (5/4, story 5, 1:55, O'Donnell, 5.4M), "Many of the nation's giant retailers like J.Crew are crumbling under the weight of the pandemic. Neiman Marcus, Lord & Taylor, JCPenney, and others are reportedly in talks to file for bankruptcy."

Victoria's Secret Sale To Sycamore Partners Called Off. The New York Times (5/4, Maheshwari, 18.61M) reports a plan to sell Victoria's Secret to private equity firm Sycamore Partners, "was mutually terminated" on Monday after the buyer "tried to back out of the deal because it said it did not agree with steps the lingerie brand took in response to the coronavirus pandemic." Victoria's Secret owner L Brands had originally agreed to sell a majority of Victoria's Secret for about $525 million.

Amazon Web Services VP Resigns In Protest Over Employee Firings.

The New York Times (5/4, Zaveri, 18.61M) reports, "A prominent engineer and vice president of Amazon's cloud computing arm said on Monday that he had quit 'in dismay' over the recent firings of workers who had raised questions about workplace safety" during the coronavirus pandemic. Tim Bray "wrote in a blog post that his last day at the company was on Friday. He criticized a number of recent firings by Amazon," including that of warehouse employee Christian Smalls, "who had led a protest in March calling for the company to provide workers with more protections."

United Airlines Will Eliminate More Than 3,400 Management And Administrative Jobs.

The Chicago Tribune (5/4, Zumbach, 2.65M) reports United Airlines "plans to eliminate more than 3,400 management and administrative positions Oct. 1 as the airline reels from the coronavirus pandemic. ... The cuts represent 30% of United's roughly 11,500 management and administrative employees."

Carnival To Restart Some US-Departing Cruises On August 1.

Axios (5/4, Fernandez, 521K) reports Carnival announced Monday that it will restart some cruises departing from the US on August 1. Axios says "cruise ships, including some under Carnival's Princess brand, became hot beds for coronavirus infections earlier this year, resulting in thousands of infections and dozens of deaths around the world." The CBS Evening News (5/4, lead story, 4:30, O'Donnell, 5.4M) briefly reported in its lead story on the plan.

Russia Cuts Siberian Oil Production Despite Previously Saying It Was Impossible.

The New York Times (5/4, Kramer, 18.61M) says that "for most of the post-Soviet period, energy officials in Russia have resisted OPEC entreaties to participate in production cuts to help prop up oil prices, arguing that doing so was impossible because of the country's cold climate." However, "this week, confronted by a gusher of unsaleable oil and no place to put it, Russian energy executives unveiled plans to reduce production by a fifth by shutting down wells, many of them in the Arctic." Oil analysts "have called the cold weather claim one of the global oil industry's biggest geopolitical bluffs, one which Russian officials carried off with a straight face for decades to deflect OPEC demands for help with prices."

Trump Says Administration Is Getting "Great Reviews" For Pandemic Response.

President Trump tweeted Monday morning, "Getting great reviews, finally, for how well we are handling the pandemic, especially our strong production of desperately needed ventilators, the building of field hospitals & beds, and soon, the great things we are doing on testing. People are really working well together!"

Trump Sees "A Great Optimism" In The Country. The New York Post (5/4, Nelson, Bowden, 4.57M) reports that during an Oval Office interview Monday, Trump said "there's a great optimism" in America and he "predicted a strong economic rebound from the coronavirus crisis during the fourth quarter of 2020." Trump said Americans are "starting to feel good now. The country's opening again. We saved millions of lives, I think. ... You have to be careful, but you have to get back to work. ... People want the country open... I guess we have 38 states that are either opening or are very close." The Post adds that Trump "also foresaw a dramatic rise in economic indicators by the end of year." He said, "We'll open it up and I think your fourth quarter is going to be very good. ... We did the right thing and now we're bringing the country back. And I think there's a great optimism. I don't know if you see it, but I think there's a great optimism now."

The Washington Times (5/4, Boyer, 492K) reports that Trump's campaign "has launched a new seven-figure ad called 'American Comeback,' telling viewers that Mr. Trump built a strong economy and that his leadership will help to build it again."

Trump Cheers Governors Moving To Reopen Their States. The Washington Post (5/4, Olorunnipa, Witte, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports that while some states "are moving swiftly to reopen their economies despite failing to achieve benchmarks laid out by the White House," their "biggest cheerleader is President Trump." States such as Texas, Indiana, Colorado and Florida "have pushed forward with relaxing social distancing guidelines even as the number of people testing positive in many states has increased in recent weeks and testing continues to lag." Although "White House recommendations released last month encouraged states to wait to see a decline in cases over a two-week period as well as having robust testing in place for front-line workers before entering 'Phase One' of a gradual comeback," Trump "and some of his aides have backed away from their own guidelines, opting instead to hail the broad economic reopening that health experts say has started too quickly.”

Politico (5/4, Cook, Goldberg, Cancryn, 4.29M) says the White House “has tried to distance itself from governors’ actions by insisting its reopening guidelines are merely suggestions, not the rule of law.” Politico adds that Trump “is latching himself onto the message that America is ready to reopen.” He “has pivoted his attention squarely to the U.S. economy, even as he revised upward his own expectations for the death toll” caused by COVID-19.

Trump Hits Congress For Rejecting Offer Of Coronavirus Tests.

The New York Post (5/4, Moore, 4.57M) reports that in a tweet Monday, President Trump “lambasted Congress after congressional leaders rebuffed his offer to provide coronavirus tests so they could return to Capitol Hill.” Trump wrote, “Interesting? By Congress not wanting the special 5 minute testing apparatus, they are saying that they are not ‘essential’. In any event, we have great testing capacity, and have performed 6.5 million tests, which is more than every country in the world, combined!” Trump’s tweet came after Senate Majority Leader McConnell and House Speaker Pelosi “turned down the Trump administration’s plan to make three rapid-result testing machines available to the lawmakers.” In a joint letter Saturday, they wrote, “Congress is grateful for the Administration’s generous offer. ... Congress wants to keep directing resources to the front-line facilities where they can do the most good the most quickly.”

Pelosi said on CNN’s Situation Room (5/4, 2.02M), “The fact is we have said that the tests should go to those on the front line who have direct communication, contending with this. Our Capitol physician has said we don’t need to have them in terms of the exposure that we have. The testing organization said to us, you are not next. We can bump you in line and push other people out of the way, but you are not next in terms of essential workers. ... I don’t know there is one member of Congress who says i want to have a test before my constituent who really needs one gets one.”

Politico (5/4, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that House Minority Leader McCarthy said Monday that he disagreed with the decision. McCarthy said, “I do believe it would be critical to have the testing here because there will be a flare-up. Remember how many people from other parts of the country come to this location.” On the other hand, Senate Minority Leader Schumer, “who has castigated McConnell for bringing back the Senate without a more clear focus on the coronavirus, said he agreed with the decision.”

Trump Optimistic Coronavirus Vaccine Will Be Developed Soon.

ABC World News Tonight (5/4, story 3, 2:35, Muir, 9.79M) reported on an “intensifying” race to find a coronavirus vaccine. Officials in Washington State “say they’re going at record speed using a new process in the first of only two trials in the US.” In England, “Oxford’s trial is showing the most promise. Researchers say it works on monkeys, and they could get first results in humans by mid-June.” ABC added that President Trump is “optimistic about rolling out a vaccine soon.” But the CBS Evening News (5/4, story 4, 1:45, O’Donnell, 5.55M) reported that while Trump “says the US should have a vaccine available by the end of the year...they often take many years to develop.” CBS added that currently, “there are around 100 competitors, and tests on humans are already under way in the US, China, the United Kingdom, and Germany.”

Anyone Who May Come In Contact With Trump In Arizona Will Be Tested For COVID-19.

USA Today (5/4, Jackson, 10.31M) reports Administration officials said Monday that “anyone who might come into contact” with the President during his visit to Arizona Tuesday will be tested for COVID-19. White House spokesman Judd Deere said, “Those who will be in close proximity to the President will be tested for COVID-19.” Trump will visit a Honeywell aerospace plant in Phoenix that manufactures protective masks, USA Today says security plans for the visit “mimic policy at the White House. Visitors expected to meet with” the President and Vice President Pence “are given tests designed to detect coronavirus.” The tests “are ongoing so that results will be available before he lands in Phoenix mid-day Tuesday.”

Pence’s Handling Of Coronavirus Response Draws Praise From Governors Of Both Parties.

Breitbart (5/4, Boyle, 673K) cites “White house advisers” who say Vice President Pence’s “close personal relationship with governors of both parties has been a key to the federal response to the coronavirus pandemic.” Pence “has used his experience as a governor to build upon relationships with governors in fighting the coronavirus as the chairman of the White House Coronavirus Task Force. He has regular calls with governors...where he and the president address whatever their needs are – from testing to ventilators to personal protective equipment to anything else that may come up.” Breitbart adds, “Governors in both parties, Democrat and Republican, have praised Pence for his handling of the response.”

Navarro: “Lockdown Indirectly Kills Americans.”

Appearing on Fox News (5/4, 896K), Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro, who has been coordinating White House efforts to ensure there is adequate medical supplies in the US, said, “The original death estimate was about two million Americans dying in the absence of any kind of mitigation or containment, and the President took the very tough choice of entering into a mitigation phase in a containment phase. ... The estimates would basically take that down to 100 to 200,000 deaths. And that is a number that is still out there. We know what the numbers are today. We are just moving through time trying to simultaneously protect the American people from the effects of the China virus, killing them directly. But it's also through the lockdown indirectly kills Americans through the economic effects, with a higher suicide rate, depression, alcoholism, drug addiction, and all that. So what the President has been trying to do is thread that needle."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) cites a paper from the National Bureau of Economic Research which concludes that targeted lockdowns to protect the most vulnerable, combined with policies such as social distancing, will reduce the death rate by more than universal lockdowns, and would cause less economic harm.

WPost Analysis: US Healthcare Industry Has Been Crushed By Lockdown. The Washington Post (5/4, Frankel, Romm, 14.2M) reports that even as the COVID-19 pandemic "draws attention and resources to the nation's doctors and hospitals, the health-care industry is suffering a historic collapse in business that is emerging as one of the most powerful forces hurting the U.S. economy and a threat to a potential recovery." According to the Post, "health care spending declined at an annualized rate of 18 percent in the first three months of the year, according to Commerce Department released last week, the largest reduction since the government started keeping records in 1959," which, in turn, "proved the biggest factor in driving the annualized 4.8 decline in first-quarter gross domestic product." The Post says that "more than 200 hospitals...have furloughed workers."

Interior Secretary Granted Permission For Trump Fox News Lincoln Memorial Event.

The New York Times (5/4, Rogers, 18.61M) reports that when President Trump appeared at the Lincoln Memorial on Sunday for "a coronavirus-focused virtual 'town hall,' it was because a directive issued" by Interior Secretary Bernhardt has permitted it. While Trump "and many other presidents have hosted inauguration concerts and gatherings on the memorial's steps, any event meant to draw an audience inside the interior...is prohibited. ... When asked to comment on the specifics of the decision to host the event at the memorial, a White House official called it a 'joint decision' with Fox News, though three people involved in the planning said the decision had been made by the White House."

Coronavirus Task Force Members Prohibited From Testifying Before Congress This Month.

The Hill (5/4, Brufke, 2.98M) reports that a new guidance issued by the Administration on Monday prohibits members of the White House White House coronavirus task force members from testifying before Congress this month. The guidance instructs members of the task force and key deputies "not to accept invitations to participate in congressional hearings in May, while other agencies responding to the pandemic are being advised to limit the number of hearings they attend." According to Administration officials, "the coronavirus task force and the primary agencies responding to the pandemic need to focus their attention and resources on response efforts, and that having them testify could use up critical hours."

House Speaker Pelosi said on CNN's Situation Room (5/4, 2.17M) , "I was hoping they would spend more time on the crisis instead of those daily shows that the President put on. But the fact is that we need to allocate resources for this. In order to that, any appropriations bill must begin in the House and we have to have the information to act upon. So, the fact that they say we are too busy being on TV to come to the Capitol is business as usual for them." Pelosi added, "It's interesting, they said we are not going to the House, but [NIAID Director] Fauci can go to the Senate. I guess [Chief of Staff] Meadows, being until a week or so ago a member of the House of Representatives, knows that we will be very strictly insisting on the truth and they might be afraid of truth."

FDA Increases Oversight Of Coronavirus Antibody Tests.

On NBC Nightly News (5/4, story 7, 2:20, Holt, 7.62M), Stephanie Gosk reported that the FDA on Monday "put the brakes on antibody tests." In recent weeks, some 200 such tests have hit the market, but the agency now "says guard rails are needed." the FDA wrote, in part, "We unfortunately see unscrupulous actors marketing fraudulent test kits to take advantage of Americans." The AP (5/4, Perrone) says "companies will now have to show their tests work or risk having them pulled from the market." CNBC (5/4, Lovelace, Feuer, 3.62M) reports on its website that the FDA is "ordering manufacturers to submit emergency use authorization forms and data proving the tests work within 10 days or face possible removal." Currently, "12 antibody tests have been authorized by the FDA for emergency use, and more than 250 tests are currently the subject of a pre-EUA."

The New York Times (5/4, Kaplan, 18.61M) says the FDA acted in the wake of "a report by more than 50 scientists, which found that only three out of 14 antibody tests gave consistently reliable results, and even the best had flaws." An evaluation by NIH, "working with other federal health agencies, has also found 'a concerning number' of commercial tests that are performing poorly." According to the Times, the FDA, "has also been under fire from several members of Congress, with numerous lawmakers raising questions about the validity of some of the tests."

Politico (5/4, Lim, 4.29M) reports that the FDA's announcement follows a congressional investigation launched by Rep. Raja Krishnamoorthi (D-IL), Chairman of the House Oversight Economic and Consumer Policy Subcommittee. Politico says "the FDA's former policy allowed companies to validate their own tests and bring them to market without an agency review, if they included a disclaimer with test results." However, "a senior FDA official told Politico the policy change was not a direct result of pressure from Congress." The official "said that having a dozen authorized tests on the market was a natural inflection point to reevaluate the agency's approach to oversight."

The Washington Post (5/4, McGinley, 14.2M) reports that "many scientists say that even for good tests evidence is lacking that the tests can prove someone has immunity from the coronavirus or for how long." FDA Commissioner Hahn on Monday "emphasized those uncertainties" in a call with reporters. The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Burton, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage.

Roche Antibody Test Is More Than 99% Accurate. The CBS Evening News (5/4, story 3, 2:00, O'Donnell, 5.55M) reported that an FDA-approved antibody test from Roche "uses blood drawn from a vein rather than from a finger public as others do. The greater amount of blood helps make the test more than 99 percent accurate." ABC World News Tonight (5/4, story 3, 2:35, Muir, 9.79M) called the Roche test "a potential breakthrough."

White House Distances Itself From Forecast Of 3,000 Coronavirus Deaths A Day By June.

The New York Times (5/4, 18.61M) reports that the Administration "is privately projecting a steady rise in the number of coronavirus cases and deaths over the next several weeks. The daily death toll will reach about 3,000 on June 1, according to an internal document obtained by The New York Times, nearly double the current number of about 1,750. The projections, based on government modeling pulled together in chart form by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, forecast about 200,000 new cases each day by the end of the month, up from about 25,000 cases a day currently."

On its website, CNBC (5/4, Breuninger, Mangan, 3.62M) says the document's "sobering projections come as President Donald Trump has pushed to start reopening the country, and expressed support for protesters against state restrictions on businesses and social gatherings in the face of the coronavirus outbreak," while Politico (5/4, Oprysko, 4.29M) calls the modeling "alarming" and says it "underscores fears that moving too fast to relax strict social distancing restrictions could fuel a dangerous second wave of infections."

The New York Times (5/4, Stolberg, Sullivan, 18.61M) reports, "Public health experts and epidemiologists say they were not surprised by the administration's numbers. Many do not expect the virus to slow down until 60 to 70 percent of the population is infected, creating what experts call 'herd immunity.'"

NBC Nightly News (5/4, lead story, 2:35, Holt, 7.62M) led its broadcast with coverage of the new projections, which it described as "a stunning and brutal reality check." NBC's Peter Alexander said that "sobering new projection inside a draft government report from the Trump Administration" comes as "more states [are] starting to ease restrictions and reopen their economies." However, NBC also reported that "the White House and the CDC are disavowing the draft document."

Likewise, the Washington Examiner (5/4, Crilly, 448K) says the White House "distanced itself" from the "bleak administration forecast." White House Deputy Press Secretary Judd Deere "said the data did not reflect the models analyzed by the president's team." Deere said, "This is not a White House document nor has it been presented to the coronavirus task force or gone through interagency vetting. ... This data is not reflective of any of the modeling done by the task force or data that the task force has analyzed. The President's phased guidelines to open up America again are a scientific-driven approach that the top health and infectious disease experts in the federal government agreed with." The Washington Post (5/4, Wan, Bernstein, McGinley, Dawsey, 14.2M) says both the White House and the CDC "disavowed the report, although the slides carry the CDC's logo." The Hill (5/4, Samuels, 2.98M) provides similar coverage.

But Tom Llamas said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (5/4, lead story, 5:55, Muir, 9.45M) that the President is "now acknowledging the death toll could climb to 100,000." Trump: "We're going to lose anywhere from 75, 80 to 100,000 people. That's a horrible thing."

Health Officials Say State Coronavirus Numbers Could Be Artificially Low.

USA Today (5/4, Salman, Keemahill, 10.31M) reports that mapping coronavirus numbers across the country shows "stark variations in reported cases between counties separated by state lines." While the CDC said that "areas should make decisions about loosening restrictions based on a 'data-driven, county-by-county approach,'" each state's "reporting standards and test capabilities vary, and even counties within the same state can differ," which can cause issues in analyzing data. According to public health officials, "the virus has probably swept into many of these communities where numbers indicate otherwise. They fear artificially low counts will give government officials and residents a false sense of security about reopening and venturing out of self-quarantine."

Six States Partially Reopen As Others Keep Restrictions In Place.

NBC Nightly News (5/4, story 2, 2:35, Holt, 7.62M) reported, "With a course of protests growing louder across the country, tempers are flaring at capitols...city centers and on street corners. In New York, a police officer punched a bystander after attempting to enforce social distancing orders. In Michigan, three people now charged with killing a security guard who was shot after a dispute with a customer over a face mask." In Arizona, "where emergency orders were extended, at least two county sheriffs say they won't enforce the measures." NBC added that on Monday "six more states partially reopened." The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Calfas, Campo-Flores, Sylvers, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Florida is beginning to ease restrictions. The first phase of its reopening plan allows restaurants and stores in most parts of the state to operate at 25 percent of their indoor capacity beginning on Monday, while schools, bars, gyms and salons will remain closed.

Tom Llamas said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (5/4, lead story, 5:55, Muir, 9.45M), "Some of those states opening up have not seen the recommended 14-day decline in cases."

Trump Adviser Moore Touts Red-State Governors Easing Lockdowns. Politico (5/4, McCaskill, 4.29M) reports that Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp (R) "rejected charges...that Republican governors who have begun reopening their states care more about saving businesses than saving lives." The conservative groups Committee to Unleash Prosperity and FreedomWorks "hosted a Reopen America news briefing with Kemp" and Govs. Kim Reynolds (R-IA) and Kevin Stitt (R-OK), "all of whom were given A grades in a report card the groups released assessing the steps governors have taken to reopen their economies." Politico says Stephen Moore, co-founder of the Committee to Unleash Prosperity and a member of President Trump's "council to reopen the country, noted that while the report is 'not a partisan study whatsoever,' it's 'striking' that traditionally red states have been reopening sooner than traditionally blue states."

Newsom Says California Can Begin Reopening This Week.

The Los Angeles Times (5/4, Luna, 4.64M) reports California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) announced Monday "that some retail stores across the state can reopen with modifications as early as Friday amid growing pressure to ease the stay-at-home order that has cratered the California economy." Newsom told a news conference, "We are entering into the next phase this week. ... This is a very positive sign and it's happened only for one reason: The data says it can happen." Newsom "said bookstores, music stores, toy stores, florists, sporting goods retailers and others can reopen for pickup as early as Friday. He said more detailed guidelines on the businesses that can reopen would be released later this week." the Times says there have been growing calls for Newsom to lift the restrictions "with large protests at the state Capitol and in Orange County as a handful of small rural counties moved to open their communities in defiance of the governor." NBC Nightly News (5/4, story 2, 2:35, Holt, 7.62M) described "open defiance from local leaders and businesses."

California Progressives Use Pandemic To Push Long-Sought Initiatives. The New York Times (5/4, Arango, Fuller, 18.61M) reports, "Propelled by the urgency of the coronavirus crisis, and despite severe economic headwinds, liberal Californians see this moment as an opening to push through an agenda that addresses some of the state's most intractable and long-debated problems." According to the Times, "Already, thousands of people have been let out of the state's jails and prisons, cash bail has been eliminated for most crimes, thousands of homeless people now have roofs over their heads, and children in rural and poor areas of the state are being sent tens of thousands of laptop computers for distance learning – temporary measures to confront the pandemic that leaders are hoping will become durable solutions to longstanding problems of inequity."

Cuomo Outlines Plan For Gradually Reopening New York.

CNBC (5/4, Higgins-Dunn, Breuninger, Mangan, 3.62M) reports on its website that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said Monday "that the state is now 'on the other side of the mountain' as the daily number of hospitalizations, rate of new infections and deaths" related to COVID-19 continue to decline. CNBC adds that Cuomo "said the state was hoping for a faster drop in the number of hospitalizations than it's currently experiencing," but "the number is still falling, which is 'good news,' he said." An additional 226 people died on Sunday, he said, "which makes four consecutive days that daily figure has been below 300." CNBC goes on to report that Cuomo "outlined some criteria the state can use to begin rolling back restrictions, and said some parts of the state could reach these benchmarks earlier than others."

The New York Times (5/4, 18.61M) reports that Cuomo "provided new details about the process that New York plans to follow for reopening as the coronavirus continues to decline in the state." According to the Times, Cuomo "listed seven requirements each of the state's 10 regions must meet before restrictions meant to slow the virus's spread could be eased in those areas." Reuters (5/4, Layne, Caspani) says Cuomo "did not give a timeline, but the state's stay-at-home order is due to expire on May 15."

In a separate story, the New York Times (5/4, McKinley, 18.61M) says the move to reopen the state "comes as New York's budget is under immense pressure: The state's coffers are being drained by the cost of the outbreak – nearly $3 billion spent, at last report – and a precipitous fall in various types of tax revenue."

Ocasio-Cortez's District Among Worst Hit By Pandemic. The New York Times (5/4, Leibovich, 18.61M) reports that Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "says the toll of the virus in her district has made the case for more health care and less income inequity." According to the Times, Ocasio-Cortez "represents the nation's most devastated hot zone of the coronavirus outbreak." The Times reports that NY14, "which includes the working-class immigrant clusters of the Bronx and Queens, has had 19,200 coronavirus cases as of April 30, more than all of Manhattan, despite having almost a million fewer people." The Times says Ocasio-Cortez "knows many who have died, as well as others who were sickened with the virus, or left hungry or jobless."

Politico (5/4, Ferris, Caygle, 4.29M) reports that Ocasio-Cortez is "the lone Democrat to oppose any of the four rescue packages drawn up by congressional leaders." According to Politico, Ocasio-Cortez is "skeptical that many more progressive lawmakers will threaten to defect, potentially squandering a chance to shape the critical next phase of relief because it's simply too hard to vote down aid – even if they think it's not enough."

Ohio State Representative Cites Religion As Reason For Not Wearing Mask.

The Hill (5/4, Folley, 2.98M) reports Ohio state Rep. Nino Vitale (R) says he will not wear a face mask as recommended by Gov. Mike DeWine (R) because of his religious beliefs. Vitale said, "This is the greatest nation on earth founded on Judeo-Christian principles. One of those principles is that we are all created in the image and likeness of God. That image is seen the most by our face. I will not wear a mask."

Mitchell Sues Whitmer Over Michigan Shutdown Order.

The Detroit Free Press (5/4, Egan, 1.52M) reports Rep. Paul Mitchell (R-MI) filed suit against Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) "in federal court Monday, alleging she has violated the constitution in her management of the coronavirus pandemic." Mitchell "said he wants a judge to 'define the limits of a state's police power.'"

Three Arrested In Michigan Family Dollar Shooting. The AP (5/4) reports, "A woman, her adult son and husband have been charged in the fatal shooting of a security guard who refused to let her daughter enter a Family Dollar in Michigan because she wasn't wearing a face mask to protect against transmission of the coronavirus." Calvin Munerlyn "was shot Friday at the store just north of downtown Flint a short time after telling Sharmel Teague's daughter she had to leave because she lacked a mask, according to Genesee County Prosecutor David Leyton."

Northam Says Virginia Could Begin Soft Reopening Next Week.

The Washington Examiner (5/4, Neale, 448K) reports that Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) "announced a soft reopening of the economy as soon as next week." During his daily coronavirus briefing, Northam "said he was considering phase one of a plan to reopen, which will allow Virginians to get their hair cut and restaurants to serve customers with limited seating." Northam said, "We flattened the curve, and our hospitals have not been overwhelmed. ... I am keenly aware that it has come with a tremendous cost. Now, we can start to move into a new phase of our response." However, Northam cautioned that the coronavirus was "still here," he said. "We must not relax our vigilance or think that the risk has passed." The Washington Post (5/4, Schneider, Vozzella, Nirappil, 14.2M) says Northam's plans "appear to be a departure from the coordinated effort staged so far by leaders in Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia. Neither Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) nor D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) has said they are close to rolling back restrictions."

DOJ Supports Church's Challenge To Virginia's Restrictions. USA Today (5/4, Johnson, 10.31M) reports that the Justice Department is supporting a Virginia church that is challenging a state shutdown order that limits the size of religious gatherings, "claiming it violates constitutional guarantees of free expression." On Sunday, federal authorities filed notice of their support for the Lighthouse Fellowship Church in the town of Chincoteague Island "after the pastor was cited last month by local police for hosting a service attended by 16 people – six more than allowed for such in-person gatherings during the coronavirus health emergency." The church "has asserted that the restrictions ordered in March" by Northam violate religious freedom. The DOJ intervention comes in the wake of Attorney General Barr warning last week "that the Justice Department was reviewing shutdown orders issued by the states to guard against overly-restrictive policies."

The Washington Times (5/4, Mordock, Boyer, 492K) says Vice President Pence "cheered" the Justice Department's move. In a tweet, Pence praised the Justice Department "for acting quickly to protect prayer and worship during these unprecedented times." Pence wrote, "We cannot experience an American Comeback if we stand idly by while the rights of the men and women of this great Country are infringed."

Maryland Playing A Large Role In Battle Against Coronavirus.

The Washington Post (5/4, McCartney, 14.2M) reports that the Maryland biotechnology company Emergent BioSolutions "has signed deals to do initial production of three" coronavirus vaccine candidates. If one of them works, "the firm has a factory in place to manufacture hundreds of millions of doses a year." The firm's "readiness illustrates the outsize role that Maryland is playing in the battle against the novel coronavirus. In Montgomery County's biotech corridor...multiple companies have pivoted to work on possible vaccines and cures, and to expand testing." Meanwhile, "at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, 260 scientists are working on 25 projects" for COVID-19, and "the nation's best-known expert on the disease, Anthony S. Fauci, works at the Bethesda-based National Institutes of Health." While there is "plenty of competition" from other cities in the US and abroad, Maryland "may have an advantage because it has so much experience in gene and cell therapies, and in vaccines, all of which will be critical in fighting the coronavirus."

New Mexico Governor Extends Closure Of Roads In Gallup.

The AP (5/4) reports New Mexico Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham (D) "extended to Thursday the closure of all roads to nonessential traffic in Gallup, one of the largest communities bordering the Navajo Nation, where a surging coronavirus outbreak has already prompted widespread restrictions and weekend lockdowns." The extension of the order "also required that businesses in Gallup close from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. in the city of about 20,000 people along Interstate 40, which remained open to through traffic." The New York Times (5/4, Romero, 18.61M) reports, "The lockdown comes as state and local authorities grapple with one of the worst coronavirus outbreaks in the United States on the nearby Navajo Nation, the country's largest Indian reservation, and a surge in detected cases in places near the reservation."

New USS Roosevelt Commander Won't Wait For Entire Crew To Clear Quarantine To Go Back To Sea.

The CBS Evening News (5/4, story 6, 1:45, O'Donnell, 5.4M) interviewed Capt. Carlos Sardiello, the new commanding officer of the USS Theodore Roosevelt. Asked about the mood of the crew after the previous commander was relieved of duty, Sardiello said, "The mood of the crew was a challenging situation." Asked what he told the crew, Sardiello said, "We have a job to do. It's like no other job that we have ever faced. You know me, I know you. I had your back before, I am going to have your back now." CBS added, "Sardiello told CBS News he won't wait for all the crew to clear quarantine before he heads back to sea." Sardiello: "We have taken 45 days off from that business. It's a dangerous business. And so, we have a lot of training to complete."

Politico Analysis Questions Portrayal Of Biden's Role In Swine Flu Pandemic.

In an analysis, Politico (5/4, Korecki, 4.29M) reports that as Joe Biden "prepares to take on" President Trump in a presidential election "marked by a far more lethal pandemic," than the H1N1 epidemic the Obama Administration faced in 2009-10, Biden's former Chief of Staff Ron Klain "and other Biden intimates have seized on the idea that the former vice president is the man for this moment," and Biden "has insisted he is uniquely equipped to confront the coronavirus pandemic." However, Politico says "an extensive review of the handling of H1N1, including the examination of public records and congressional testimony, suggests the response was not the panacea portrayed by the Biden camp and its defenders: Biden's role, while significant, was not equivalent to leading the response." Politico adds that while Biden "took the threat of a pandemic very seriously," by "issuing warnings that others in the administration weren't prepared to endorse, he contributed to a muddled message."

WSJournal Criticizes Harvard Study Linking Climate Change, Coronavirus.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes a study from Harvard University's T.H. Chan School of Public Health concluding that there is a link between climate change and an increased risk of death from COVID-19. The Journal says that the research was sloppy and that the study was intended to reach a result fitting a political agenda.

Judge Rules Trump Tweets Are Not Declassification Orders.

The Washington Examiner (5/4, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that US District Court Judge Amit Mehta has "ruled against a multiyear effort to further declassify information from Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act filings related to onetime Trump campaign associate Carter Page." Mehta "agreed with the Justice Department in a three-page opinion that President Trump's tweets and a White House press release did not constitute formal declassification orders. The Monday ruling reinforced a March decision, which reached a similar conclusion."

House Judiciary Republicans Call On Wray To Review FBI Handling Of Flynn Case.

Axios (5/4, Treene, 521K) reports that Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH), the ranking Republican on the House Judiciary Committee, and Rep. Mike Johnson (R-LA), the ranking Republican on the panel's Subcommittee on the Constitution, Civil Rights, and Civil Liberties, sent a letter to FBI Director Wray on Monday "demanding he review his agency's handling of its investigation into Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn, according to a copy of the letter obtained by Axios." According to "sources familiar with the document," it is "a direct rebuke of Wray, and that it reflects a growing frustration among congressional Republicans who question whether he can be trusted to expose what they see as a corrupt FBI." In addition, the letter "casts doubt on Wray's motives for not disclosing what they describe as 'the FBI's misconduct,' and questions whether he and other top FBI officials intentionally 'prevented or delayed the disclosure of additional exculpatory information' regarding Flynn."

Georgian-American Businessman Demands Barr Apologize Over Mueller Report Mention.

The Daily Caller (5/4, Ross, 716K) reports that Georgian-American businessman Giorgi Rtskhalidze "says he has spent more than $100,000 on legal fees, on top of the damage to his reputation and businesses, as a result of" an Oct. 30, 2016 text message to Michael Cohen. Rtskhalidze wrote in the message, "Stopped flow of some tapes from Russia but not sure if there's anything else. Just so u know." While the message "was interpreted by President Trump's critics as a possible reference to the Steele dossier's most salacious allegation: that the Kremlin has video tapes of Trump with prostitutes in Moscow," Rtskhalidze "says that he had no direct knowledge of Trump-related tapes and that his full exchange with Cohen shows it." He is "waging a reputation rehabilitation campaign," and is calling on Attorney General Barr "to formally apologize over the descriptions of him in Special Counsel Robert Mueller's report of the Russia probe."

NYTimes: Trump Considers Efforts To Hold Him Accountable "Illegitimate."

The New York Times (5/4, 18.61M) argues in an editorial that the President's "move Friday night to replace the top watchdog" for HHS is "the latest in a series of direct attacks on statutory oversight of his administration." Trump "has been working to cleanse his administration of officials he considers insufficiently loyal," and he "has displayed a particular hostility to inspectors general." Trump "has made clear that he considers any efforts to hold him accountable to be, by definition, illegitimate" and Republicans "have done little to disabuse him of this notion."

Trump Says California Is Lucky Border Is "Very Tight" Thanks To Him.

President Trump tweeted Monday morning that since California wants to stop the flow of people over its southern border due to "very big coronavirus problems" in Mexico, it is "lucky" that he is President because the border is "very tight" and the wall is being built. Trump wrote, "Mexico is sadly experiencing very big CoronaVirus problems, and now California, get this, doesn't want people coming over the Southern Border. A Classic! They are sooo lucky that I am their President. Border is very tight and the Wall is rapidly being built!"

Pandemic Has "Drastically" Curbed Migration Around The World.

The New York Times (5/4, A1, Semple, 18.61M) reports as a result of "border closures, suspended asylum programs, interruptions in global transportation and stay-at-home lockdowns," migration has "drastically" declined around the world, "particularly from poorer nations to rich ones." While "once-crowded migratory routes that led from South America, through Central America and Mexico and to the United States have gone quiet, with the Trump administration seizing on the virus to close the border to almost all migrants," the "phenomenon extends well beyond the Americas. The number of East Africans crossing the Gulf of Aden to seek work in the Gulf States has plunged. Farms in western Europe are contending with severe labor shortfalls as travel bans have blocked the movement of seasonal migrant laborers from Eastern Europe." The Times adds that in some areas, "migratory flows have seemingly made a U-turn, as migrants no longer able to earn a living abroad have decided to return home."

Documents Show How DOJ Hiring Changes Have Altered Immigration Appeals Board.

CQ Roll Call (5/4, Misra, 154K) reports documents outlining hiring changes made by the Justice Department to the Board of Immigration Appeals "reveal additional ways the Trump administration may be achieving its goal of reducing immigration." The changes to the process have led to the hiring of "immigration judges with records of high asylum denial rates, many with a history of formal complaints."

White House Reportedly Considering Payroll Tax Suspension.

Politico (5/4, Cook, 4.29M) reports that President Trump is "preparing to spend the coming weeks cheering for a swift economic bounce-back from coronavirus – launching new proposals to accelerate the recovery despite uneasiness among health care experts." According to Politico, the White House is "preparing a proposal for tax and regulatory changes to boost the economy that it tentatively plans to release at the end of this week." Politico reports that the President "spent the weekend weighing the recommendations of his top advisers about which policy levers the White House should push to juice the economy in the third and fourth quarters." Among them are "a cut in payroll taxes, or a suspension altogether – an idea the president has championed for months, but one that would need to pass a divided Congress."

House Speaker Pelosi was asked on CNN's Situation Room (5/4, 2.17M) about Trump's demand that any bill include a payroll tax cut. Pelosi said, "This is all to be related to the coronavirus. ... Let's start now and do things in a positive way. Nobody is putting anything on the table saying, 'Unless we have this, we are not doing that.' He shouldn't either." Asked what she would do if the President said he would agree to most of what she wants if she agrees to the payroll tax cut, Pelosi said, "I am not negotiating with the President on television, right here. And he didn't say that. He started denigrating governors who are fighting the fight in their states to save lives and save livelihoods."

Kadlec's Dealings With Former Client Draw Scrutiny.

The Washington Post (5/4, Swaine, O'Harrow, Davis, 14.2M) reports that "after Robert Kadlec was confirmed as President Trump's top official for public health preparedness in 2017, he began pressing to increase government stocks of a smallpox vaccine." The Post says Kadlec's office "ultimately made a deal to buy up to $2.8 billion of the vaccine from a company that once paid Kadlec as a consultant, a connection he did not disclose on a Senate questionnaire when he was nominated." According to the Post, "Under the agreement struck last year with Emergent BioSolutions, Kadlec's office at the Department of Health and Human Services is paying more than double the price per dose it had previously paid for the drug."

Blase: Trump Should Veto Democrats' Medicaid Funding Plan If It Reaches Him.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Brian Blase, who served as a special assistant to President Trump at the National Economic Council, takes issue with a measure offered by House Democrats to increase the federal reimbursement for state Medicaid spending by 4.8 percentage points for each point state's unemployment rate exceeds a certain threshold, meaning the higher a state's unemployment rate, the less it would have to pay for Medicaid. Blase says the proposal would result in the federal government paying for almost all of state's Medicaid costs this year and calls on President Trump to veto it if it reaches his desk.

NYTimes Analysis: Ratcliffe Has "Easier Path" To DNI Confirmation On Second Attempt.

The New York Times (5/4, Fandos, Barnes, 18.61M) reports under the headline "Trump Ally Sees Easier Path To Intelligence Post In Second Attempt" on the confirmation prospects of DNI-designate Rep. John Ratcliffe (R-TX). The Times writes that while when Trump nominated Ratcliffe for the post the first time last year, "resistance in the Republican Senate was so firm that Mr. Ratcliffe's name was withdrawn before his nomination ever became official," eight months later he "is back" and his "prospects have vastly improved as Republican opposition has softened." The Times says the "reversal in fortune has been remarkable, even by the standards of Trump-era Washington," and "arguably has as much to do" with controversial Acting DNI Grenell as it does with Ratcliffe, "officials involved in the confirmation process said."

The Washington Post (5/4, Nakashima, Harris, Kim, 14.2M) reports, "Trump put Ratcliffe forward a second time in early March, and although he is expected to receive a grilling from the committee's Democratic minority, observers said he will probably be confirmed by the Republican-controlled Senate. The DNI post has been held by an acting official ever since Daniel Coats stepped down in August."

Ratcliffe's Campaign Twitter Account Follows QAnon Profiles. The Daily Beast (5/4, 1.39M) reports Ratcliffe "draws on some unusual sources of information." His "official, verified campaign Twitter account follows several accounts on the political fringe, including a 9/11 Truther account with just one follower besides himself and four promoting the outlandish QAnon conspiracy theory, which posits that the world is run by a cabal of Democratic pedophile-cannibals – and has been ruled a potential source of domestic terrorism by the FBI."

Hovakimian Will Reportedly Be Nominated To Be ODNI General Counsel.

Politico (5/4, Lippman, 4.29M) reports, "The White House has picked a top Justice Department lawyer to serve as the new general counsel of the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, according to two senior administration officials." Patrick Hovakimian, Chief of Staff to Deputy Attorney General Jeffrey Rosen, "will be nominated to ODNI to serve as the intelligence community's top lawyer," according to the officials.

Trump Boasts Of "Big Record" On Judicial Confirmations.

President Trump tweeted Monday morning, "Republicans love the biggest Tax Cuts, Rebuilt Military, Choice for Vets, saving 2nd Amendment and many other things my Administration has done, but what they love beyond all else is 252 (so far!) Federal Judges, not including two great Supreme Court Justices. A Big Record!"

DC Appeals Court Judge Wants Roberts To Look Into Circumstances Of Vacancy. The New York Times (5/4, Hulse, 18.61M) reports District of Columbia Court of Appeals Chief Judge Sri Srinivasan has "publicly advanced a call by a progressive group for an ethics investigation into the circumstances of a plum vacancy. Just days before a high-profile Senate confirmation hearing to fill a vacancy on the prestigious" court, Srinivasan asked Chief Justice John Roberts "to assign another circuit to look into a complaint filed by the progressive advocacy group Demand Justice, which questioned the timing and circumstances of Judge Thomas B. Griffith's retirement announcement in early March." The group claims Senate Majority Leader McConnell "had been contacting appeals court judges nominated by Republican presidents to encourage them to retire."

Trump Alludes To Intern's Death In Tweet Criticizing Scarborough.

President Trump tweeted Monday morning, "'Concast' should open up a long overdue Florida Cold Case against Psycho Joe Scarborough. I know him and Crazy Mika well, used them beautifully in the last Election, dumped them nicely, and will state on the record that he is 'nuts'. Besides, bad ratings! #OPENJOECOLDCASE". The Hill (5/4, Concha, 2.98M) reports Trump "referred to the accidental death of an intern" in the then-GOP congressman's office "to take a shot at" Scarborough in "the latest example of Trump attacking Scarborough over the death of Lori Klausutis."

Trump Recommends Crenshaw Book.

President Trump tweeted Monday evening, "A great new book, 'Fortitude: American Resilience in the Era of Outrage' by former Navy Seal, and current Texas Congressman @DanCrenshawTX, is now available. A fantastic guy – get your copy today!"

Vanity Fair: Trump Aims To "Take Down" Fox News.

Gabriel Sherman of Vanity Fair (5/4, 9.08M) writes, "When liberals look at Fox News, they tend to see Trump TV. ... But that is not the way Donald Trump himself sees it." Sherman says the President's view "that Fox is insufficiently loyal has motivated him to look for a more reliable media partner. ... Trump now is on the verge of having that alternative. According to sources, an investor group aligned with his son Don Jr. and the Dallas-based Hicks family has acquired a major stake in One America News Network, the fledgling conservative cable-news channel that features hosts like Jack Posobiec, a chief promoter of the Pizzagate conspiracy." A source told Sherman, "This is all about building a Fox competitor. Trump is really aiming to take down Fox."

Trump Campaign Video Shows Trump Beheading CNN, MSNBC. The Daily Caller (5/4, Caruso, 716K) reports President Trump's reelection campaign "posted an edited video from the 'Star Wars' series on its Twitter on Monday depicting Trump, edited to be Yoda, 'beheading' CNN and MSNBC, edited as soldiers. The Trump campaign's tweet predictably delighted some while worrying others."

Senate Reconvenes, With McConnell Calling Work "Essential."

The AP (5/4, Mascaro) reports, "The Senate reopened Monday in a Capitol largely shuttered by the coronavirus, but prospects for quick action on a new aid package are uncertain with a deepening debate over how best to confront the deadly pandemic and its economic devastation." The Senate is "convening for the first time since March, while the House is staying away due to the health risks."

Reuters (5/4, Zengerle, Morgan) reports, "Party leaders raised partisan differences as soon as the Senate opened over the next step in how to combat the pandemic, nominations for senior government posts" put forward by President Trump, "and even the decision to return." Senate Majority Leader McConnell said, "If it's essential that the brave healthcare workers, grocery store workers, truck drivers and many other Americans continue to carefully show up for work, then it's essential that their US senators carefully show up ourselves and support them." But Senate Minority Leader Schumer "accused McConnell of calling senators back to pursue a Republican political agenda, not help the country."

The Washington Times (5/4, Muñoz, 492K) reports McConnell said, "I don't think anybody could seriously argue that filling critical national security posts is not essential Senate business."

State Audit Shows Mississippi Allowed Poverty Funds To Be Misused.

The New York Times (5/4, Fausset, 18.61M) reports Mississippi "allowed tens of millions of dollars in federal anti-poverty funds to be used in ways that did little or nothing to help the poor, with two nonprofit groups instead using the money on lobbyists, football tickets, religious concerts and fitness programs for state lawmakers, according to a scathing audit" by the state auditor's office. The Jackson Clarion Ledger (5/4, Ramseth, 275K) reports the "routine annual audit...follows criminal indictments this year related to the welfare spending. White called that case Mississippi's largest embezzlement scandal, involving about $4 million in welfare money known as the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program."

Trump Criticizes "RINO Republicans" Of Lincoln Project.

In a Twitter thread posted at 12:46 a.m., President Trump wrote, "A group of RINO Republicans who failed badly 12 years ago, then again 8 years ago, and then got BADLY beaten by me, a political first timer, 4 years ago, have copied (no imagination) the concept of an ad from Ronald Reagan, 'Morning in America', doing everything possible to get even for all of their many failures. You see, these loser types don't care about 252 new Federal Judges, 2 great Supreme Court Justices, a rebuilt military, a protected 2nd Amendment, biggest EVER Tax & Regulation cuts, and much more. I didn't use any of them because they don't know how to win, and their so-called Lincoln Project is a disgrace to Honest Abe. I don't know what Kellyanne did to her deranged loser of a husband, Moonface, but it must have been really bad. John Weaver lost big for Kasich (to me). Crazy Rick Wilson lost for Evan 'McMuffin' McMullin (to me). Steve Schmidt & Reed Galvin lost for John McCain. Romney's campaign manager (?) lost big to 'O', & Jennifer Horn got thrown out of the New Hampshire Republican Party. They're all LOSERS, but Abe Lincoln, Republican, is all smiles!"

The Lincoln Project posted an ad critical of Trump titled "Mourning In America" online early Monday.

Trump: In Denying Reade Allegation, Biden's "Choice Of Words Weren't Very Good."

The New York Post (5/4, Nelson, Bowden, 4.57M) reports that President Trump on Monday blasted Joe Biden's "denial of a decades-old sexual assault allegation by a former Senate staffer – and said that Republicans get treated far more harshly than Democrats when accused of sexual misconduct. 'I mean, his choice of words weren't very good when he, you know, dismissed the allegation,' Trump said of Biden during an interview with The Post in the Oval Office. 'But he's got to fight his own battles, and we'll see how he does.'" The President "did not specify what part of Biden's denial he found fault with, but said he believes that Republicans face far harsher scrutiny when accused of sexual misconduct. During his 2018 confirmation hearings, Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh 'was treated more unfairly than any human being I've ever seen. I've never seen anything like,' Trump said."

Senate Secretary Says Office Can't Release Files Tied To Biden Accuser. The AP (5/4, Jaffe) reports that the Secretary of the Senate has "declined...Biden's request to release any potential documents pertaining to an allegation of sexual assault against him" by ex-Senate aide Tara Reade, "citing confidentiality requirements under the law." On Friday, Biden "made the request...after delivering his first public comments responding to" Reade's accusation "that he sexually assaulted her in the basement of a Capitol Hill office building in the spring of 1993. Biden has denied the allegation." The AP says the Secretary of the Senate "told Biden's legal counsel in an email that after reviewing the Government Employee Rights Act of 1991 and a Senate resolution regarding the release of Senate records, 'based on the law's strict confidentiality requirements,' the Senate legal counsel has advised the Secretary 'has no discretion to disclose any such information.'"

The Washington Post (5/4, Sullivan, Viser, 14.2M) reports that Reade "has [said] that her complaint dealt with harassment in the office, not assault," and "that she cannot recall the office to which she filed her complaint and that she does not have a copy." The Post reports that Reade was "employed in Biden's Senate office for nine months, ending in 1993," and she "said she filed a complaint that year with a congressional human resources or personnel office." The Post adds, "After the secretary of the Senate's statement, Biden campaign attorney Bob Bauer responded with follow-up questions about the possibility for a more limited release. 'Is just the existence of any such records subject to the same prohibition on disclosure?' Bauer asked, according to a statement from the campaign."

USA Today (5/4, Santucci, 10.31M) reports that Bauer asked "for further clarity on three points: whether the existence of any such records is also confidential; if any such record could be lawfully disclosed to anyone such as Reade herself; and whether the Senate could release procedures, forms or instructions that would have been used in 1993 by the Office of Senate Fair Employment Practices when processing such complaints. The office responded later Monday that disclosing the existence of any such record would 'amount to a prohibited disclosure' and that it was not aware of an exception that would allow the office to share that information with anyone, 'even to original participants in a matter.'" The New York Times (5/4, Ember, 18.61M) reports, "The exchanges have thrown into confusion Mr. Biden's attempt to make public any documents related to the allegation, a level of transparency he promised when he appeared on MSNBC Friday to address the issue for the first time, saying unequivocally that the assault 'never happened.' Even the Biden campaign itself appears uncertain of how to proceed."

Politico (5/4, Ward, 4.29M) reports that Biden "initially said Reade's complaint, if it exists, would only be housed at the National Archives, but the search for Biden's records has thus far proved circular. In response to Biden's request on Friday, the Archives said it did not possess the records the former vice president said it did and that the documents in question were instead maintained by the Senate. But Senate rules suggest that those documents are maintained by the General Services Administration, which, in turn, said the records are at the National Archives." Bloomberg (5/4, 4.73M) says Reade "has called on Biden to release the records that she says are being held at the University of Delaware, but Biden has said those records do not include any personnel files. Those records are sealed until two years after Biden retires from public life."

Townhall's Benson Sees Hypocrisy In Democrats' Defense Of Biden. Writing at Townhall (5/4, 177K), Guy Benson says that in the wake of Reade's accusation of sexual assault against Biden, Democrats are "totally and shamelessly abandoning their previous standards over such allegations. ... As members of the political media, Democratic politicians and lefty activists rediscover the value of evidence, skepticism and fairness, they'd enhance their own credibility by apologizing en masse to Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh." Benson goes on to discuss what he sees as hypocrisy in Democrats' talking points defending Biden in comparison to how they treated Kavanaugh.

Trump: Biden Should Pick Warren As Running Mate, Because She's "Responsible" For Him Winning.

The New York Post (5/4, Bowden, Nelson, 4.57M) reports that Trump "has announced his unlikely pick for Joe Biden's veep: [Sen.] Elizabeth Warren." Speaking on Monday with the Post, Trump "said he believed [Biden] 'owes' the Massachusetts senator the top spot on his ticket because he never would have gotten this far without her help. 'I think Elizabeth Warren is responsible for Joe Biden's win because she didn't drop out and [Sen.] Bernie [Sanders] would have won every single state on Super Tuesday,' Trump said, claiming Warren split the progressive vote. 'I think he should pick Elizabeth Warren because Elizabeth Warren, more than any other person...is responsible for the win of Joe Biden.'"

Simonson: As VP Nominee, Cortez Masto Could Aid Biden With Latino Voters. Writing for the Washington Examiner (5/4, 448K), Joseph Simonson says that Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto (D-NV) "is getting mentioned increasingly as a potential running mate for Biden, particularly by her political mentor, former Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada, whom she succeeded in the chamber in early 2017. Among her political attributes, Cortez Masto could help build support among Latino voters, a crucial voting bloc for Biden."

Biden Announces Plan To Boost African American Community.

Reuters (5/4, Hunnicutt) reports that the Biden campaign "on Monday unveiled a broad policy targeted toward helping reduce racial wealth and health gaps among new policies aimed at reaching black voters. As part of the wide-ranging plans," Joe Biden "pledged to open a new Public Credit Reporting Agency that could compete with Equifax Inc, Experian Plc and TransUnion and, according to the campaign, minimize racial disparities in lending." Biden "also promised a new tax credit for first-time homeowners, $900 million over eight years to finance efforts to save 12,000 lives in high-crime cities as well as to expand the Small Business Administration's efforts to lend money to African American-owned enterprises."

The Hill (5/4, Manchester, 2.98M) reports that Biden's "plan will also aim to increase access to high-quality education by ending the funding gap between majority white and majority nonwhite school districts by tripling Title I funding. Under the plan, the Obama administration's policies to diversify schools would also be reinstated." In addition, Biden's "campaign announced that [he] would invest over $70 billion in historically black colleges and universities and minority-serving institutions. Biden's plan will also aim to eliminate disparities in health due to race." It "would establish a public health insurance option, increase subsidies for the Affordable Care Act and expand federal investments in Medicaid."

Michelle Obama Criticizes "Our Folks" For Not Voting In 2016 Elections, Earlier Midterms. The Washington Examiner (5/4, Dibble, 448K) reports that Michelle Obama is blaming "nonvoters, not Republicans, for President Trump's election in 2016. In her soon-to-be-released Netflix documentary, Becoming," Obama speaks "about her frustration with those who didn't vote in the 2016 election," claiming "it was the fault of apathetic citizens that Trump won in 2016 and that President Obama didn't have a Democratic majority in the House and Senate when he was in the White House. 'So, the day I left the White House, and I write about how painful it was to sit on that [inauguration] stage,' Obama explained. 'A lot of our folks didn't vote. It was almost like a slap in the face.'" Obama added, "It wasn't just in this election. Every midterm. Every time Barack didn't get the Congress he needed, that was because our folks didn't show up. After all that work, they just couldn't be bothered to vote at all. That's my trauma."

Biden Camp's Field Organizers Reach Agreement On Union Contract.

The Washington Post (5/4, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports, "Unionized field organizers working for Joe Biden's campaign have ratified a contract with his campaign, officials announced Monday, setting the stage for the first time a major party's apparent presidential nominee will employ unionized workers under a collective bargaining agreement. The Biden campaign and Teamsters Local 238 announced the agreement in a joint statement. The union's secretary-treasurer, Jesse Case, said it 'includes overtime pay for all hours worked after 40 in a week, 100 percent employer-paid health insurance, a six-day work week, a union grievance procedure and other protections afforded by a union contract.'" Axios (5/4, Perano, 521K) reports, "The agreement also guarantees a $15 per hour minimum wage that will generate 'an overall average increase of $1,900 in annual wages for field organizers,' according to the campaign."

Axelrod And Plouffe Offer Biden Advice On Campaign Strategy.

In a New York Times (5/4, 18.61M) op-ed, David Axelrod and David Plouffe, former aides to President Obama, say that amid the pandemic, Joe Biden "is mired in his basement, speaking to us remotely," unable to hit the campaign trail. The writers says, "In order to break through and be heard," Biden must "up the tempo of his campaign, fully utilize his army of powerful surrogates and embrace a new suite of virtual, data-driven tools and creative tactics." Among other things, the writers advise Biden: "Act like an insurgent, not an incumbent. You don't defeat an incumbent president by playing defense”; and gird “for an onslaught,” as President Trump’s “team knows they can’t win a referendum on his leadership, so they will try to disqualify Mr. Biden...with an extensive campaign, led by the president, regularly questioning the mental acuity and physical stamina of the man he has branded ‘Sleepy Joe.’”

Georgia Poll Shows Trump Leading Biden 45%-44%, Possibly Competitive Senate Races.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (5/4, Bluestein, 895K) reports that a Cygnal (R) poll of 591 likely Georgia voters, taken April 25-27, shows President Trump leading Joe Biden 45%-44%. The poll also “suggests trouble for” appointed Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) in this fall’s special election. The survey, commissioned by the Georgia House GOP caucus, shows Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) leading the all-party primary with 29%, followed by Loeffler, and Democrats Matt Lieberman and the Rev. Raphael Warnock “essentially tied” at 11%. If no candidate tops 50% in November’s election, the top two finishers, regardless of party affiliation, will advance to a runoff. Meanwhile, in the state’s second US Senate race this fall, the poll shows Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) leading Democrat Jon Ossoff 45%-39% in a hypothetical matchup; 12% were undecided. Ossoff faces several other Democrats in a competitive primary. The Washington Times (5/4, Varney, 492K) also reports on the story.

Iowa Poll: Trump Leads Biden 48%-46%.

The Hill (5/4, Manchester, 2.98M) reports that a Public Policy Polling (D) survey of 1,222 Iowa voters, taken April 30-May 1, shows President Trump leading Joe Biden 48%-46%. The Hill adds, “Trump won the state by 9 points in 2016, but Democrats made inroads in the state in 2018, flipping two House seats.”

NYTimes Analysis: Presidential Conventions Could Become Thing Of The Past.

The New York Times (5/4, Nagourney, Flegenheimer, 18.61M) reports that “some Democratic leaders are discussing replacing” their national convention “with a virtual gathering, and some Republicans are unsure about holding the big spectacle that President Trump wants.” The Times adds that “even before the pandemic, a more fundamental debate was playing out: Has the American political convention become a ritual holdover from another age? ... In interviews with over a dozen emissaries and operatives from both parties, there was a strong view, especially among younger generations, that the value of conventions has flagged as the rules of politics have changed.”

WPost: Pandemic Has Altered Presidential Campaign. The Washington Post (5/4, 14.2M) editorializes, “American politics has long run on door-knocking, rally-throwing, baby-kissing and all manner of other activities that have suddenly become unsafe in the age of the novel coronavirus. Candidates are more dependent than ever on a realm that was created for mass connection: the Internet.” Joe Biden “is confined to his basement,” struggling to “compete with the freewheeling afternoon show” President Trump’s “reelection team churns out nightly. ... That’s not to mention President Trump’s ready-made platform in the White House briefings, which guarantees him a national audience.”

In Tweet, Trump Backs GOP Challenger Johnson’s Bid To Unseat Omar In MN5.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (5/4, Condon, 1.04M) reports that President Trump tweeted support on Monday for Republican Lacy Johnson, who is challenging Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) in MN5. Retweeting “a posting from Johnson two days earlier in which he introduced himself to potential supporters and touted last week’s Republican endorsement for his bid,” Trump wrote, “And I’m Endorsing you also Lacy, you truly deserve it. You are doing a great job, and Omar is a disaster who wants much higher taxes, hates our Military & our Vets, demands Open Borders, and is fighting to take away our great 2nd Amendment. Good luck Lacy!” The Hill (5/4, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports that Trump “has long targeted Omar...for criticism, accusing her of being anti-Semitic. Omar, in exchange, has accused the president of racism.”

WSJournal: SCOTUS’ Telephone Oral Arguments Give Thomas Chance To Be Heard.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Supreme Court’s decision to hear oral arguments by telephone has unexpectedly given the public a chance to hear the usually quiet Justice Clarence Thomas, and expresses hopes the format will let Americans come to see Thomas as a thoughtful thinker and questioner.

RCP Average Has Trump’s Job Approval At 44.3%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump’s job approval stands at 44.3%, and his disapproval at 50.8%. The President’s approval is up 0.2 and his disapproval is unchanged since yesterday.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 “likely voters” (4/29-5/3) finds Trump’s approval at 46%, with 53% disapproving.

Financial International News

Germany’s High Court To Rule On Legality Of ECB’s Bond Purchases.

Reuters (5/4, Koranyi) reports Germany’s Constitutional Court “will rule on the legality of the European Central Bank’s bond purchases on Tuesday, settling an existential challenge to a scheme credited with keeping the euro zone afloat during crises including the coronavirus pandemic.” The ECB “has long relied on quantitative easing to support the economy. With much of the euro zone now in lockdown to halt the spread of the virus, it plans to print another trillion euros to keep borrowing costs down for companies and governments." However, "a group of academics in Germany has long argued that the ECB is overstepping its mandate, and that these buys constitute direct financing of governments – a contravention of the central bank's obligations under the European Treaty." The European Court of Justice "has already cleared the asset purchase scheme, meaning the German court would need to find justification to reject the higher court's ruling – a prospect that would open a whole new can of legal worms." CNBC (5/4, Amaro, 3.62M) also reports.

Private Creditors Group Raises Concerns About Debt Relief Plan.

Reuters (5/4, Green, Arnold) reports the Institute of International Finance (IIF), "a trade association comprising the world's largest financial institutions, has outlined obstacles to the private sector joining a plan to ease the debt of the world's poorest nations." The G20 "announced on April 15 that they had agreed with the Paris Club group of major creditor nations to freeze debt payments for the 77 poorest countries from May 1 to the end of the year, as requested, to free up cash for the fight against the coronavirus pandemic." However, "the IIF, which last month issued a rallying call to the private sector to join the initiative, has written to the heads of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), World Bank and Paris Club to raise the concerns of creditors about their involvement in such a move." IIF head Timothy Adams wrote a letter dated May 1 that "said that its communications with more than 100 companies investing in or lending to countries within the initiative's scope showed there was 'deep appreciation for the challenges facing these most vulnerable countries and strong interest in finding ways to support them and the proposed debt service suspension.'"

IMF Head Says Call On Lebanon Recovery Plan "Productive" As Hezbollah Leader Backs Aid Request.

Reuters (5/4, Shalal) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva "said on Monday she had a 'productive' discussion with Lebanese Prime Minister Hassan Diab on the country's economic recovery plan, and an IMF team would begin talks with Lebanese authorities soon." Georgieva, "in a tweet, called the Lebanese reform plan 'an important step forward to address #Lebanon's economic challenges.'" Georgieva added, "We agreed that our teams will soon start discussions on much needed reforms to restore sustainability and growth for the benefit of the Lebanese people."

The AP (5/4) reports Hezbollah leader Sayyed Hassan Nasrallah "threw his support Monday behind the government in seeking financial assistance from the International Monetary Fund but warned that the terms should be negotiated carefully." Nasrallah's comments "came four days after the country's prime minister said Lebanon will seek a rescue deal from the IMF to help the nation find a way out of a crippling financial crisis." Nasrallah said in a televised speech, "We are not against Lebanon requesting assistance from any side in the world," adding that what is unacceptable "is that we go hand over our necks to the International Monetary Fund or any other organization." Reuters (5/4, Francis, Bassam) also reports.

Argentina Confronts Make-Or-Break May In Effort To Avoid Default.

Reuters (5/4, Raszewski) reports Argentina "is entering a crucial period this month for a precarious debt-restructuring process that will determine whether or not the country falls into default for a third time in just two decades." Following months of negotiations, Argentina "made a proposal in April to restructure $65 billion of its foreign debt. This offer expires on May 8, while a grace period for paying interest on three dollar bonds ends on May 22." Argentina's leaders "are racing to win over wary creditors, who have already rejected the initial offer, with bankers and investors increasingly concerned that no deal will be reached – at least not in time."

US Declines To Contribute To EU-Organized Pandemic Fund.

Reuters (5/4, Emmott, Guarascio) reports that "world leaders and organisations pledged $8 billion to research, manufacture and distribute a possible vaccine and treatments for COVID-19...but the United States refused to contribute to the global effort." Organizers of the virtual event included the European Union and non-EU countries Britain, Norway and Saudi Arabia, while leaders from "Japan, Canada, South Africa and dozens of other countries joined." China, however, was "only represented by its ambassador to the European Union." The AP (5/4, Cook) reports Russia also did not send a representative to the virtual conference.

The Washington Post (5/4, Booth, Johnson, Morello, 14.2M) reports that a "senior Trump administration official" said Monday the US "welcomes" the efforts of the conference participants, but "did not explain why the United States did not join them." Said the senior Administration official, "Many of the organizations and programs this pledging conference seeks to support already receive very significant funding and support from the US government and private sector."

Québec, Except Montreal, Starts Gradual Reopening.

Reuters (5/4, Lampert, Malo) reports the Canadian province of Québec, "worst hit by the coronavirus, gradually began reopening its economy on Monday but pushed back plans for a restart in the city of Montreal, citing health concerns." Québec is "allowing stores with an outside entrance for customers to serve customers but this does not apply to Montreal." Retail establishments in Montreal "were supposed to open on May 11 but premier Francois Legault said this had been put back to May 18 because there were not enough free hospital beds to cope with a possible surge of new cases.”

Experts Argue Government Missteps Exacerbated Pandemic In UK.

The AP (5/4) reports that “as the coronavirus continues to infect people across Britain in what will likely turn out to be Europe's worst outbreak, the government has come under criticism from scientists, who say it has neglected the fundamentals of epidemic control.” According to the AP, “Hundreds of outbreak experts have questioned the U.K.'s pandemic response, ridiculing the government's claim of ‘following the science.’” The UK's death toll “has now reached 28,446,” which is “only slightly less than Italy, Europe's worst-hit nation with 28,884 confirmed deaths.” Epidemic experts had “warned that Britain's overwhelming focus on testing ignored an equally essential element of outbreak control: the tracking and isolation of contacts of cases.”

Italy Cautiously Begins Reopening.

NBC Nightly News (5/4, story 8, 1:40, Holt, 7.62M) reported, “Tonight, one of the hardest hit countries is finally starting to reopen.” NBC's Richard Engel added, “Italy was hard hit by COVID, with around 1,000 deaths a day. Now, deaths are down up to 75 percent on some days, but Italy is opening cautious cautiously. ... The deputy health minister told me businesses were chosen that don't draw crowds as a test for the rest.” ABC World News Tonight (5/4, story 4, 2:15, Muir, 9.45M) reported, “This is essentially a test. In two weeks, shops are scheduled to reopen. Two weeks after that, cafes and restaurants. If at any time there is a big second wave, all of that stops.”

The AP (5/4) reports Italy on Monday “began opening up cautiously after its two-month shutdown.” The Washington Post (5/4, Harlan, Morris, 14.2M) notes that the nation “had one of the West's strictest lockdowns, so as momentous as Monday felt for many people, the country was merely shifting to a phase that puts it in line with nations under shelter-in-place orders.” Retail stores, museums and theaters remain closed, however, and “travel remains highly restricted between regions.” To the Post, “the most significant change...came with the restart of factories and construction projects, as more than 4 million people – about a fifth of the Italian labor force – returned to their jobs.”

Small Businesses In Spain Allowed To Reopen.

The New York Times (5/4, 18.61M) reports Spain on Monday “kicked off the start of a four-stage plan to return the country to a ‘new normalcy’ by late June, with small stores and businesses like hairdressers reopening.” According to the Times, “Deaths there have dwindled in recent days, with just 164 reported in the previous 24 hours on Monday, the lowest since before the lockdown.”

The Washington Post (5/4, Rolfe, 14.2M) reports that “for the first time in seven weeks, millions in Spain...ventured outdoors this weekend as the government gingerly eased Europe's strictest nationwide lockdown. But there were rules – and plenty of them. People were allowed outside to exercise...only during specific times designated by age group, to keep crowds relatively thin and to protect seniors from possible exposure.”

France May Allow Religious Services To Restart This Month.

Reuters (5/4) reports French Prime Minister Edouard Philippe on Monday “said France might allow religious services to resume before the end of May if a gradual easing of lockdown rules from May 11 did not result in the rate of coronavirus infections increasing.” According to Reuters, “The government had indicated religious ceremonies would be banned until June 2 at the earliest, but Philippe told the Senate this might be advanced by four days.” Reuters adds, “In a week's time, secular France plans to join countries such as Italy, Spain and Germany in relaxing unprecedented curbs on public life as it seeks to reboot its economy and ease the frustration of citizens cooped up in their homes.”

Brazil Surpasses China In Total COVID-19 Infections, Deaths.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, A1, Magalhaes, Sciaudone, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on the impact COVID-19 has had on Brazil, which has reported 105,222 cases and 7,288 deaths, surpassing China on both accounts. In Brazil, on a daily basis, deaths are increasing by almost 500, and infections are rising by more than 5,000.

Peruvian Finance Minister Rolls Out Massive Stimulus Package.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Dube, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Peruvian Finance Minister María Antonieta Alva is rising in popularity after rolling out a massive stimulus package in response to the coronavirus pandemic amounting to 12 percent of gross domestic product.

WSJournal: US Should Consider Sweden's Approach To Coronavirus.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that Sweden has taken a relatively permissive approach in its response to the coronavirus. The Journal suggests that American governors study the Swedish model as they begin relaxing lockdowns.

US Awards 29 Purple Hearts For Brain Injuries Sustained In Iran Attack.

The AP (5/4, Baldor) reports, “Six Army soldiers who were injured in a ballistic missile attack in Iraq in January have been awarded Purple Hearts, and 23 others have been approved for the award and will get them later this week,” US Central Command said Monday.

Iran Using Pandemic To Crack Down On Intellectuals.

The Washington Examiner (5/4, Chudnovsky, 448K) reports that "poor management of the COVID-19 pandemic (that Iran has blamed on the United States and Israel) has led to a sharp criticism of the country's leaders by Iran's intellectual elite." In response, Iran has "adopted the political doctrine to never let a good crisis go to waste." Last month, the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps' Basij Force "arrested 3,600 citizens for 'spreading rumors about coronavirus,'" and "more arrests are forthcoming."

Low Oil Prices And Lockdown Threaten Collapse Of Iraq's Economy.

The Washington Post (5/4, Loveluck, Salim, 14.2M) reports, "The coronavirus epidemic has pushed Iraq's economy to the brink of catastrophe, experts say, with the outbreak aggravating the risk of public desperation and renewed social unrest if the needs of millions of Iraqis are not met by sweeping reforms." According to the Post, Iraq's "political system" "became riddled with corruption while politicians grew rich on the spoils. But the epidemic has accelerated the crisis, tanking global oil prices and the oil revenue that keeps Iraq afloat – while forcing a lockdown that is ruining livelihoods and forcing families to go hungry."

US Troop Reduction In Afghanistan Advances.

The Washington Times (5/4, Wolfgang, 492K) reports the Pentagon is "forging ahead with a dramatic cut in combat troop levels in Afghanistan even as the Taliban ramps up attacks and specialists warn that the COVID-19 outbreak could destabilize the fragile country and fuel even greater chaos." Pentagon officials tell the Times "that the US expects to meet its commitment to draw down forces in Afghanistan from between 12,000 and 13,000 to 8,600 by mid-July." The officials "also said the COVID-19 pandemic has not slowed down their plan so far, even though the Defense Department has instituted strict limits on the movement of troops abroad."

US, Guaidó Deny Ties To Coup Plotters.

The AP (5/5, Smith, Goodman) reports interim Venezuelan President Juan Guaidó on Monday "denied having anything to do with an ex-Green Beret who claimed responsibility for a deadly beach invasion aimed at arresting socialist leader Nicolás Maduro." The government, meanwhile, "said it has mobilized more than 25,000 troops to hunt for other rebel cells." In a statement, Guaidó said he has "no relationship nor responsibility for any actions" taken by American Jordan Goudreau, "who repeated assertions that Guaidó had a contract with his security company, though he said he was paid only a tiny share of the amount agreed upon." To the AP, "that claim could pose a danger for Guaidó."

The Washington Times (5/4, Taylor, 492K) reports the Administration also "sought Monday to distance itself from an apparently abortive attempt to topple" Maduro. While the Administration "has long supported efforts to oust Mr. Maduro...there were far more questions than answers about the shadowy operation, which reportedly left eight people dead and deepened a mystery over who authorized and financed the assault." A State Department spokesperson said, "The United States Government had no connection to this weekend's events, nor with Jordan Goudreau."

Pennsylvania Teacher Released From Egyptian Prison.

The Washington Post (5/4, Raghavan, 14.2M) reports that a Pennsylvania teacher, "held in an Egyptian prison for nearly 10 months without trial and on flimsy charges, was released Sunday and returned to the United States with her teenage son, human rights advocates said on Monday." Reem Mohamed Desouky, a dual US-Egyptian citizen, was arrested last July, accused of "criticizing Egypt's government on Facebook."

Israel's Supreme Court Mulls Fate Of Netanyahu Coalition.

According to the Washington Post (5/4, Eglash, 14.2M), "Israel's democratic process and the fate of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has come under legal scrutiny this week as the country's highest court weighs whether a person charged with serious crimes should be allowed to form a government and whether a deal between Netanyahu and his main rival to end a year-long political stalemate is legal." The Post says the court could "derail...the government that Netanyahu is trying to form with onetime challenger Benny Gantz." But "Netanyahu's supporters...have warned that a court decision rejecting any part of the coalition deal signed with Gantz's Blue and White faction as unconstitutional or illegal could trigger yet another general election, a fourth since April 2019."

Eight Indian Soldiers Killed By Militants In Kashmir.

Reuters (5/4, Bukhari) reports that "three Indian soldiers were killed in a gunbattle with militants in the disputed Himalayan region of Kashmir on Monday, a day after a similar incident in which five were killed." According to Reuters, "Junaid Khan, a senior paramilitary force officer, told Reuters that militants attacked the men from the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) in North Kashmir." Reuters adds that "on Sunday, five Indian soldiers, including a high-ranking army officer, were killed in a forest area of North Kashmir during an operation against a group of militants, two of whom were later killed."

WPost: New Evidence Reinforces Suspicion Russia Downed MH17 Over Ukraine.

The Washington Post (5/4, 14.2M) editorializes that "a fair amount of detail has been gathered about the shooting down of Malaysian Airlines Flight 17 on July 17, 2014, in eastern Ukraine, which killed all 298 people aboard." While the plane was hit by "a Russian-made Buk missile launched by the 53rd Anti Aircraft Missile brigade based at Kursk, Russia," Russia has "insisted it did not shoot down MH17." The Post argues that the "body of evidence, however, clearly points to Russia, and now a new piece of evidence reinforces that suspicion." The open-source investigative group Bellingcat, along with its Russian partner the Insider and the McClatchy Washington Bureau, "reports that a high-ranking official of the Federal Security Service," Col. Gen. Andrey Ivanovich Burlaka, "oversaw the separatists and deployment of the missile."

Freddie Mac, Fannie Mae, And FHFA Roll Out Eviction Protection Tools For Renters.

According to National Mortgage Professional (5/4), "To help renters find out if they are protected from evictions during the COVID-19 national health emergency, the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) announced that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have created online multifamily property lookup tools." NMP says that the tools "allow renters to find out if the multifamily property where they reside has an Enterprise-backed mortgage." By doing so, they can see if they are covered by the CARES Act's "temporary eviction moratorium," which applies to renters in properties with Enterprise-backed mortgages. FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "Today's tool protects renters and empowers them to find out if they live in a multifamily property covered by the eviction moratorium. Landlords with Enterprise-backed mortgages cannot evict tenants for failing to pay their rent if they are affected by COVID-19. Renters who can pay their rent should." The ABA Banking Journal (5/4) reports that the FHFA added that "renters are still expected to pay their rent during the eviction moratorium period if they can," directing those facing hardship to reach out to their landlord and go over their options. Also reporting on the new tools are the San Antonio Express-News (5/4, 762K), Florida Realtors (5/4, 18K), and RISMedia (5/4, 2K).

MBA: Rate Of Mortgage Forbearance Requests Rose From 7% To 7.5% In Week Ending April 26.

Reuters (5/4, Scuffham) reports that "mortgage firms facing billions of dollars of missed home loan repayments are continuing to push for emergency government support as data published Monday" by the Mortgage Bankers Association "showed a further rise in borrowers asking to halt payments." According to Reuters, "The number of people seeking to have mortgage payments paused or reduced rose to 7.5% as of April 26 from 7.0% a week earlier as the economic effects of the novel coronavirus outbreak stretched household finances, figures from the [MBA] showed. The MBA estimates that 3.8 million homeowners are now in forbearance." Due to the CARES Act, "lenders must allow struggling borrowers to postpone mortgage payments. The law allows borrowers of mortgages backed by government entities Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to delay up to a year's worth of repayments." The FHFA "said last month it would cap the number of payments mortgage companies must advance to investors in some government-backed mortgage bonds." However, Greenspoon Marder partner David Merkur, who represents servicers, "said there was still a serious danger of some firms going bust if a facility was not introduced."

National Mortgage News (5/4, Centopani) reports that the MBA's data indicates that the share of loans in forbearance at independent mortgage bank servicers grew from 6.52% the week prior to 7.13%, while depositories saw an increase from 7.87% to 8.41% over the same period. NMN reports, "The share of conforming mortgages, those purchased by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, in forbearance rose to 5.85% from 5.46%. The share of forbearance of private-label securities and portfolio loans – products which were not addressed by the coronavirus relief act – jumped to 8.3% from 7.52% one week prior." Meanwhile, the group consisting of Ginnie Mae mortgages "maintained its hold on the highest percentage of loans in forbearance by investor type, going up to 10.45% from 9.73%."

HousingWire (5/4, Howley, 23K) reports that before the pandemic struck, the overall mortgage forbearance rate stood at 0.25%. MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "With millions more Americans filing for unemployment over the week, the level of job market distress continues to worsen. That is why we expect that the share of loans in forbearance will continue to grow, particularly as new mortgage payments come due in May."

Continuing Coverage: Black Knight Reports Forbearances Figures Could Spike In Early May As Unemployment Swells.

Mortgage News Daily (5/4, Swanson) reports that the MBA's data "confirmed the findings that Black Knight reported on Monday morning that, while the number of forbearances in effect as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic continues to rise, the rate of increase slowed as April progressed."

National Mortgage News (5/4, Centopani) says, "Even though the April forbearance count followed a declining curve" in April after a "deluge" at the start of the month, "the total increased by almost 2.8 million in the 19 business days from April 6 through April 30. With unemployment growing, May could chart the same trend." Black Knight "[estimated] an estimated 7.3% of all mortgages currently sit in forbearance totaling almost 3.9 million loans. On April 13, the company predicted the delinquency rate could eclipse the Great Recession's." According to NMN, "In a hopeful scenario, in which forbearance volume decreases 10% per day, the requests would peak at 4.5 million through mid-June. If current volumes track, over 8 million borrowers would enter forbearance by that time, totaling about 16% of all home loans." Servicers will face heavier strain as more borrowers delay payments. Black Knight "appraised total forbearances at a monthly average of $4.7 billion in principal and interest plus $1.7 billion for taxes and insurance." Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae "account for $1.9 billion in monthly P&I and $700 million in monthly T&I, with the FHA and VA registering $1.1 billion and $500 million, respectively."

In its coverage of Black Knight's data, DS News (5/4, Welborn) reports, "According to Black Knight CEO Anthony Jabbour, the recent Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) announcement of a four-month limit on advance obligations for servicers of mortgages backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac provides the industry with some much-needed clarity." Jabbour said, "Having a four-month end date on the period in which servicers need to advance principal and interest payments on behalf of homeowners in forbearance is extremely helpful to our servicing clients. Still, even knowing that time limit, with today's number of forbearance plans, servicers are still looking at more than $7 billion dollars in advances over those four months. And the forbearance numbers are climbing steadily, day by day. Clearly, this remains a challenging situation all around."

Providing similar coverage of Black Knight's latest data are National Mortgage Professional (5/4), Dodd Frank Update (5/4), and Seeking Alpha (5/4, Kiesche, 512K).

Continuing Coverage: WPost Report Suggests May's Missed Payments Could Spark A New Housing Crisis. National Mortgage Professional (5/4, Persaud) reports that a "Washington Post report revealed that the May 2020 payment period could be the next crisis the housing industry faces after tackling the hardships brought forth by the COVID-19 pandemic. The report states that this is especially true for high-priced regions for those making under $75,000, as the $1,200 stimulus check may not have been enough to help them cover rent or mortgage payments." This NMP piece also recaps the findings of both Black Knight and the MBA.

Fed's MBS Purchases Spark $5B In Margin Calls.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (5/4, Nasiripour, 4.73M) reports, "The Federal Reserve's emergency rescue of the U.S. mortgage market should have set off a celebration among lenders trying to keep up with demand from borrowers. Instead, executives at Quicken Loans got a hefty margin call." The Fed's mid-March announcement regarding its planned purchases of MBS, although intended to "steady the market," instead "caught many lenders by surprise and tipped their routine hedges deep into the red," adding "strains throughout the industry that have left the gap between mortgage rates and benchmark Treasuries the widest since 2009." According to Bloomberg, "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac...are offering to pay significantly less for debts than their implied value in related mortgage securities, industry executives said. ... Data on Optimal Blue's platform suggest the price cuts alone are forcing lenders to offer household mortgage rates up to 0.5 percentage point higher than normal." However, a Fannie Mae representative "said the company's pricing derives directly from mortgage-backed securities and reflects market rates," and a "spokesperson for Freddie Mac echoed that, adding that mortgage lenders' capacity constraints are what's driving the divergence between interest rates on new loans and yields on mortgage securities."

Cash-Out Refis Drop After FHFA Excludes Them From GSEs' Purchases Of Single-Family Forbearance Loans.

American Banker (5/4, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that mortgage lenders "have released new rate sheets in the past week showing higher credit scores and loan-to-value ratios plus added fees for cash-out refis" in response to "the Federal Housing Finance Agency's policy last month that excludes cash-out refinancing from the single-family loans that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will buy in forbearance." According to American Banker, "Last year, roughly 13% of homeowners with loans owned by Freddie Mac took out roughly $91 billion through cash-out refis, according to Freddie data. Cash-out refis hit a peak in 2006, when Freddie borrowers alone tapped $320.5 billion in home equity."

After Freddie Reported Mortgage Rates Hit All-Time Lows, Wells Fargo Halts All New HELOCs.

DS News (5/4, Albanese) reports that on Monday, Wells Fargo announced that it will no longer accept any applications for new home equity lines of credit (HELOCs). Wells Fargo VP Michale King cited "uncertainty around the timing and scope of the anticipated economic recovery," explaining, "The temporary suspension of HELOC applications will continue until our analysis of market conditions indicates that it is appropriate to resume the responsible extension of HELOCs to homeowners." DS News says, "A report by the Charlotte Business Journal revealed JPMorgan Chase & Co. stopped accepting applications for HELOCs in April," although Bank of America "continues to offer new HELOCs." DS News says Wells Fargo "will have employees move from working on HELOCs to processing mortgages for home purchases and refinances, which is a growing segment of the market due to low-interest rates." Meanwhile, last week's Freddie Mac Primary Mortgage Market Survey "revealed the average rate for a 30-year fixed-rate mortgage fell to 3.23% – the lowest rate in the 49-year history of the survey." Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, in part, that the "size and depth of the secondary mortgage market are helping to keep rates at record lows," but "it's important to remember that not all people are able to take advantage of them given the current pandemic."

Continuing Coverage: MBA Reports Drop In Mortgage Credit Availability. Realtor (5/4, 25.12M) also covers Freddie's latest rates, reporting that HELOCs are not the only part of the industry with tightening standards. According to Realtor, mortgage credit availability credit "dropped 16.1% in March – a clear indication that lending standards are tightening up, "the Mortgage Bankers Association reported. This is the index's lowest level since "mid-2015."

Multifamily Financing

- CPC Mortgage Company Closes $4M Freddie Mac Optigo SBL Refi For Williamsburg Apartments. The New York Real Estate Journal (5/5) reports, "CPC Mortgage Company LLC, a subsidiary of The Community Preservation Corp. (CPC), closed a $3.9 million Freddie Mac Optigo Small Balance Loan (SBL) to refinance a nine-unit apartment building in the Williamsburg neighborhood."
- Black Point Capital LP Buys CO Apartments With Freddie Mac Financing. The Colorado Real Estate Journal (5/4) reports, "Black Point Capital LP purchased Bears Village Apartments, a 98-unit complex just blocks from the University of Northern Colorado at 509 18th St. in Greeley, from seller Philip Schuman, an owner of Schuman Cos.” Unique Properties Inc. represented both the buyer and seller. Unique’s Phil Dankner said, “(The buyer) locked an incredible Freddie Mac rate. They timed the closure perfectly, so they didn’t have to have any principal interest escrow, and they were able to get it closed prior to all the new COVID-related lending requirements.”

- PAC Buys Florida Apartments With Freddie Mac Financing. Multi-Housing News (5/4) reports, “Preferred Apartment Communities Inc. (PAC) has acquired a one-year-old, Class A apartment community” in Panama City, Florida. According to MHN, “The decision to move ahead with the acquisition was based on strong April 2020 rent collection and a favorable Freddie Mac first-mortgage loan obtained two months earlier. The loan has a fixed annual rate of 3 percent over a 10-year term, is interest-only for the first two-years and amortized on a 30-year schedule.”

Policymakers Extend Protections To Stave Off Evictions And Foreclosures.

DS News (5/4, Welborn) reports on the ways that states’ policymakers are working to prevent evictions and foreclosures as the pandemic continues to weigh on homeowners and renters. Dallas “has announced that it is launching a program” to help affected Americans, announcing that pre-screening for applications will be carried out on a first-come, first-serve basis. Meanwhile, “Kansas Governor Laura Kelly announced that the state’s ban on evictions and foreclosures due to COVID-19 have been extended through May 31.” According to DS News, “With dramatic increases in unemployment, delinquencies and defaults can be expected to increase for the foreseeable future, even during forbearance, according to Black Knight.”

Justice Department “Doubling Down” On Anti-Discrimination Efforts During Pandemic.

Disability Scoop (5/5, Heasley, 1K) reports federal officials “say they are doubling down on efforts to root out discrimination against people with disabilities and other groups while the nation contends with coronavirus.” The Justice Department “said in a [newly-released] statement that those with disabilities should be on guard for discrimination that may arise in a host of [settings] ranging from education to housing and health care and they should speak up if their rights are violated.” If people with disabilities “believe they have been discriminated against, they should file a [complaint] with the Justice Department or contact the civil rights division directly, the agency said.”

Freedom Debt Relief Survey: More Than A Third Of Americans “Likely” To Miss Housing Payments.

DS News (5/4, Welborn) reports, “According to a survey from Freedom Debt Relief, 90% of Americans say their financial situation has been impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic to some extent. Nearly a third (32%) of participants say they have experienced a reduction in pay or work hours due to the pandemic.” Of respondents, “65% say that the pandemic relief check is not enough to get them through the current economy, and 45% report that they already are struggling to make their rent or mortgage payments. Another 36% say they will likely miss their mortgage or rent payment within the next six months.”

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (5/5, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.673 percent.

Dollar Edges Lower.

Reuters (5/5, Westbrook) reports, “The dollar handed back a sliver of recent gains to commodity currencies on Tuesday as oil prices bounced back, but hung on against the yuan as traders weighed optimism about a coronavirus recovery in China against fears about rising Sino-U.S. tensions.” The yen was ahead slightly at 106.53 per dollar, while the euro “last sat at $1.0914, close to a week-low hit overnight.”

Gold Falls.

Reuters (5/4, Editorial) reports, “Gold prices slipped on Tuesday as risk sentiment was lifted by easing coronavirus restrictions, while brewing tensions between the United States and China over the outbreak kept the safe-haven metal near the key $1,700 per ounce level.” Spot gold “fell 0.1% to $1,699.56 per ounce by 0133 GMT,” while US gold futures “were down 0.5% to $1,705.50 per ounce.”

Oil Extends Gains.

Reuters (UK) (5/5, Zhang) reports, “Oil prices jumped again on Tuesday on hopes for a recovery in vehicle traffic and fuel demand, as some U.S. states and countries in Europe and Asia start to ease coronavirus lockdown measures.” West Texas Intermediate crude futures “surged 9.9%, or $2.01, to $22.40 per barrel as of 0705 GMT,” rising for a fifth consecutive day. Brent crude futures “were up 6.9%, or $1.87, at $29.07, rising for a sixth straight day.”

Cybersecurity

FBI Warns Of Increased Cybercrime During Pandemic.

WSPA-TV Greenville, SC (5/4, Pisani, 30K) reports, "The Federal Bureau of Investigation wants you to be careful when you go online: The agency says cyber crimes are on the rise in the time of COVID-19. 'It's really too early to tell the exact numbers but I can assure you the trend is up,' said FBI Public Affairs Officer Don Wood." Wood "told 7News cyber criminals have tailored some traps to trick those thinking about the coronavirus pandemic. 'People will be looking for more information on coronavirus,' he said. 'They may be sent a fraudulent link to the CDC website.' That fake CDC website could then prompt visitors into clicking more links. For example, it could offer free personal protective equipment just by following a link. 'Once you click the link, you could be downloading a virus,' Wood said." WSPA-TV adds, "A more classic scam that is still tricking many Americans is the email extortion scam. These emails will threaten the recipient to pay a sum of money or run the risk of the sender leaking compromising photos, personal data or financial information. 'They're blackmailing you over the internet,' Wood said."

FBI Offers Advice On Teleconference Security.

Spectrum News Rochester (NY) (5/4, 44K) reports, "Many of us are using virtual teleconferencing applications as we work and attend school from home, and the FBI has some advice for you so you don't become a victim of so-called 'zoom-bombing.' 'We've seen a lot of what we would call "virtual teleconferencing hijackings," where somebody would get on and display a pornographic image or hate crime language or some kind of a threat during the middle of those meetings,' FBI Public Affairs Officer Maureen Dempsey says." Dempsey "says it's a problem nationwide, and while she cannot comment on specific cases, she confirms the FBI is looking into cases in our area. 'We've recognized the conversation that these things are happening in our district,' she said." The FBI "says anyone using the virtual teleconferencing, like Zoom, could be a target. 'On Zoom...or any virtual teleconferencing platform, I would argue if you're connected through the Internet, there's always a possibility that you can be hacked,' Dempsey says."

Security Pros Form Alliance To Support Hospitals Confronting Hacking Threats.

The Washington Post (5/4, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that cybersecurity companies and professionals "are banding together to offer free digital defenses to hospitals that are being pummeled with digital attacks during the coronavirus pandemic." The group, "which calls itself the Cyber Alliance to Defend our Healthcare, struck deals with 87 hospitals and four national health-care services in Europe over the past month." Organizers "hope to make similar arrangements with numerous US hospitals this month." The effort could be "a lifeline as criminals take advantage of coronavirus to lock hospital employees out of their computer systems in exchange for ransoms." André Pienaar, founder of C5 Capital, a cybersecurity-focused investment firm that launched the alliance, said, "This becomes a matter of life and death because hospitals have their IT systems locked down, sometimes medical devices, too, and can't function."

Ransomware Attacks Surge Against Healthcare Institutions.

TechRepublic (5/4, 73K) reports cybercriminals are making millions "by holding the data of healthcare institutions hostage until they get paid." Ransomware attacks on hospitals "are causing increased worry in the cybersecurity industry as hackers and groups go after healthcare organizations with increasing frequency." Nnenna Nwakanma, chief web advocate of the World Wide Web Foundation, "told a conference call organized by the UN in April that many around the globe were also concerned about the increase in cyberattacks now that more people were using the internet in general." Ransomware attacks on healthcare providers "rose 350% in the fourth quarter of 2019, and Emsisoft research shows that more than 759 healthcare providers were hit with ransomware last year."

Catfishing During Coronavirus On The Rise.

NBC News (5/4, 6.14M) reports deception has been "part of the Internet since its earliest days as a consumer tool, but the practice of using stolen photos arose as more people began creating social media and online dating profiles in the early 2000s." By 2012, catfishing "had become a cultural phenomenon with an MTV documentary show that year chronicling the deceptions of online dating." Despite increased awareness, "taking people's photos for fake accounts is growing more common as internet impersonating scams continue to rise." More than 19,470 people "reported being victims of confidence fraud and romance cybercrimes worth about $475 million," according to the FBI's 2019 Internet Crime Report; that's up by 1,000 reports since 2018. And as more of "the world shifts online because of stay-at-home orders amid the coronavirus pandemic, some cybersecurity experts are warning consumers to be on high alert."

Cybersecurity Lobbying Spending Rises As Firms Seek To Influence New Security Legislation.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Rundle, Uberti, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports cybersecurity firms are directing large sums toward lobbying Washington in an effort to sway policymakers as they revise privacy and security laws. Companies are engaging lawmakers and seeking to assist with designing bills and issues in their early stages. Government activities, such as defense-related programs, also have garnered growing attention from cybersecurity firms, which are interested in garnering contracts with DOD and other US agencies.

SAP Acknowledges Cybersecurity Shortfalls.

Bloomberg (5/4, 4.73M) reports SAP, Europe's largest software maker, "said several of its cloud-computing products do not meet the company's cybersecurity standards." The company "said Monday in a statement that he vulnerabilities impact 9% of SAP's 440,000 customers." It plans "to fix the problems in the second quarter to meet contractually agreed or statutory security standards." There are no "known breaches or security incidents that have resulted from the shortcomings, which affect products from companies that SAP acquired, including SuccessFactors Inc., Concur Technologies Inc. and Callidus Software Inc."

Some States Trying Online Voting To Work Around Pandemic Issues.

The Wall Street Journal (5/4, Corse, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports some states are permitting voters to vote on the Internet in future elections, overriding warnings from cybersecurity experts about the risks of tampering or technical glitches as election officials struggle with voting amid the pandemic. Three states – Delaware, New Jersey and West Virginia – reportedly will permit a small share of their voters to use an online voting tool for upcoming presidential primaries or local elections. The eligible voters are mostly those residing overseas, in the military, or sick or disabled.

Election Assistance Commission Confirms States Can Use CARES Funds For Internet Voting.

Politico (5/4, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that the Election Assistance Commission "confirmed state election officials can use the grants they received in the CARES Act (H.R. 748) to fund Internet voting projects." Mona Harrington, the agency's acting executive director, "said in an email that the rollout of Internet voting is a permitted use of the grants if it is done 'in response to [the] coronavirus and the 2020 election.'" News that states "can use the grants for Internet voting comes as three states prepare to let some residents vote online in upcoming contests, with two of them adding the option due to the ongoing pandemic." Election security experts "lambasted the decision, saying the government was effectively putting its seal of approval on a technology they consider highly dangerous." Congress did not "address specific technologies when it authorized $400 million for 'election security grants' in the CARES Act."

New Executive Order Seeks To Ban "Foreign Adversary"-Made Grid Equipment.

MeriTalk (5/4, Weingarten) reports an executive order "issued May 1 by President Trump declares a national emergency regarding the threat posed by 'the unrestricted acquisition or use' in the US of bulk-power system electric equipment made by 'foreign adversaries,' and lays the groundwork for the government to ban the use of that equipment going forward." The order does not "identify any particular foreign adversaries by name, but warns they are 'increasingly creating and exploiting vulnerabilities' in the US bulk-power system that 'supports our national defense, our vital emergency services, our critical infrastructure, our economy, and our way of life.'" The White House "said the order 'prohibits certain future transactions' involving bulk-power equipment if the government determines the equipment is connected to a foreign adversary."

Op-Ed: This Year's NDAA May Have Cyber Surprises.

In a commentary in Bloomberg Law (5/4, Subscription Publication, 4K), attorney Megan L. Brown writes, "the Cyberspace Solarium Commission report offers over 80 recommendations and dozens of legislative proposals on cybersecurity. As policymakers review it, questions are mounting about the process to implement them." Brown contends, "Some recommendations seem likely candidates for inclusion in the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA), one of the few pieces of 'must pass' legislation every year, but this may provide little opportunity for input on new obligations. The NDAA has become a vehicle to regulate private sector activity. Commissioners and staff of the Solarium Commission" made clear that many of its recommendations would be targeted for inclusion in the NDAA." The fiscal year 2021 NDAA is moving and it is likely to contain – for better and worse – obligations for the private sector." Brown concludes, however, that "the process to draft the NDAA is not as transparent as other legislation and may not leave time for input."

Federal Reserve

Fed Enters A Risky New World With 'Main Street' Loan Program.

The AP (5/4, Rugaber) reports, "With the U.S. economy sinking into a severe recession, the Federal Reserve is set to launch a high-risk program through which it will lend money to small and medium-sized companies outside the banking industry for the first time since the Great Depression. More than the eight other lending facilities the Fed has established in the nearly two months since the viral outbreak shut down the economy, its Main Street Lending Program will be the most complex and challenging yet, economists say. It will likely draw the Fed into more public scrutiny than it has faced since the 2008 financial crisis." Fed Chairman Jerome Powell "reiterated Wednesday that the Fed cannot lend to insolvent companies or 'grant money to particular beneficiaries.' In those cases, Powell suggested, the small business lending program in the federal relief package would be a better option. Those loans, from the Small Business Administration's Paycheck Protection Program, can be forgiven for companies that used most of the money to maintain their staffs or rehire all their laid-off workers. Congress has allocated $660 billion to that effort."

Central Banks Battle Against COVID-19 Could Become "Infinity War." Reuters (5/4, Schneider, Koranyi) reports big central banks "are buying from an expanding menu of government bonds, corporate debt and consumer loans to help businesses and households through the coronavirus pandemic – and no one knows whether they can stop." The best-case scenario "sees infection rates slow, commerce resume and people return to work this year." However, in the "extreme case that a recurring virus requires further damaging lockdowns, the U.S. Federal Reserve and its peers float the whole boat – government debt, corporate debt, perhaps even financing for mortgages and paychecks. The social, political and economic implications of taking economies offline for an extended period, underwritten by governments and struggling to return to normal, could run deep." Fed Chair Jerome Powell said this week, "We're still putting out the fire. We're still trying to win. And I think we'll be at that for a while. ... We won't run out of money."

NY Fed Report Says Future Of Fed's Balance Sheet "Highly Uncertain."

Reuters (5/4, Marte, Saphir) reports a NY Fed report said the outlook for the Fed's balance sheet is "highly uncertain" due to the economic fallout of the coronavirus pandemic. The central bank previously projected its balance sheet would rise to $6.3 trillion in a baseline scenario, but its balance sheet last month reached $6.7 trillion as it purchased assets in moves designed to maintain market stability.

NY Fed Says ETF Purchases Will Begin In "Early May." Bloomberg (5/4, Boesler, 4.73M) reports the Federal Reserve will soon stand up "two corporate lending programs that could buy up to $750 billion in debt and exchange-traded funds under its emergency coronavirus actions." On its website Monday, the New York Fed "announced...it expects to begin purchasing shares of eligible ETFs in early May through its Secondary Market Corporate Credit Facility. Lending through the Fed's Primary- and secondary-market corporate credit facilities via purchases of corporate bonds will begin soon thereafter, it said."

Reuters (5/4, Marte) and CNN (5/4, Egan, 83.16M) provide similar coverage.

Barkin: Changes To Business Practices, Job Retraining Will Be Key For US Recovery.

Reuters (5/4, Dunsmuir) reports Richmond Fed President Thomas Barkin said Monday that changes to current work practices and job retraining will need to be enacted to make sure employment is safe as U.S. economy recovers from the coronavirus crisis. Barkin, in a Richmond Fed website post, "also said that new productivity investments will need some government incentive to restore confidence in such an uncertain environment, in comments similar to those he made last week in a webcast."

Internal Revenue Service

Deadline Arrives For Disabled Vets To Register For COVID-19 Stimulus Checks.

Military Times (5/4, Shane, 772K) reports, "Veterans who missed out on economic stimulus checks connected to the coronavirus outbreak have only until tomorrow to register dependents with the Internal Revenue Service or miss out on potentially hundreds of dollars until 2021." Last month, Treasury Department officials "set a May 5 deadline for those veterans to update their eligibility information for the payments, which can total $1,200 per individual and $500 per dependent." Department of Veterans Affairs officials late last month "announced they had partnered with the Treasury department to use veterans' benefits accounts to route the stimulus money." However, "because of the way those disability accounts are set up, IRS officials could not see whether those disabled veterans also had eligible dependents. Without registering that information, those additional payouts will be delayed until veterans tax returns next spring." IRS Commissioner Chuck Rettig said in a statement, "(Veterans) need to act quickly and use the non-filers tool on IRS.gov to get the extra $500 per child added to their payment."

Bacon: IRS Made The Right Decision To Remove Barriers Blocking Stimulus Checks. In an op-ed for The Hill (5/4, 2.98M), Rep. Don Bacon (R-NE) praises the IRS' decision to remove the requirement that Social Security recipients file a tax return in order to receive COVID-19 stimulus checks. Bacon writes, "This was a barrier for many recipients of Social Security – which includes veterans, individuals with disabilities and seniors – who fall below the required income threshold for having to file a return." He continued, "The country's most vulnerable groups were almost stuck dealing with extra paperwork and red tape to get the checks they need."

Lawmakers Want IRS To Aid Companies Paying Health Benefits During Outbreak.

The New York Times (5/4, Tankersley, 18.61M) reports a group of lawmakers including Senate Finance Chairman Charles Grassley, ranking member Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR), and House Ways and Means Chairman Richard Neal have asked the IRS "to allow companies that continue paying the cost of health benefits for furloughed workers to remain eligible for a new tax credit." The tax credit for retaining employees "essentially reimburses companies for as much as half the wages they continue to pay workers who are furloughed amid the coronavirus pandemic."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Gives Wells Fargo "Outstanding" Community Lending Score.

American Banker (5/4, Wack, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency has awarded Wells Fargo an "outstanding" score "in connection with its obligations to meet the credit needs of communities in which it operates," three years after giving the bank a "needs to improve" rating "as a result of what regulators described as egregious evidence of discriminatory and illegal credit practices." In a report released Monday, the OCC assigned Wells Fargo the highest possible rating under the Community Reinvestment Act for the bank's activities from 2012 to 2018. The OCC's 2017 rating "took into account Wells Fargo's fake-account scandal," but "it pre-dated findings of misconduct in the bank's mortgage and auto lending units." The OCC on Monday "noted the more recent misconduct, but nonetheless gave the bank the top CRA rating, pointing to steps Wells Fargo has taken to remedy past misconduct."

Reuters (5/4) provides similar coverage.

Schumer Calls For Regulators To Take Action Against Loan Sharks.

WROC-TV Rochester, NY (5/4) reports Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (NY) "is warning Americans of the growing prevalence of loan sharking during the pandemic." Schumer "claims that loan sharks are asking for interest rates as high as 800%" and is urging the OCC, the FDIC, the CFPB, and the FTC "to use all their muscle to crack down on these loan sharks and put them out of business now."

Regulators Issue Timely Reminder About Responsibility For Cloud Security.

American Banker (5/4, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Federal banking regulators' latest warning about cloud security seems to have stemmed from recent data breaches and the accelerated use of cloud computing by people working from home during the pandemic." In a statement, the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council "reiterated existing recommendations that regulators have made to banks for years." The OCC and the FDIC, two agencies part of the FFIEC, declined to explain why they issued the reminder, but American Banker says the "point was clear: If you use a cloud provider, you still have some responsibility for security."

Banks Tightening Lending Standards Across Loan Types.

American Banker (5/4, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports banks are tightening lending standards across the board amidst an economy left sputtering due to the impact of the coronavirus. The Fed said in its April summary of a survey that most banks reported stricter lending standards "as the economic outlook shifted." More banks also "said they had either significantly or somewhat tightened commercial real estate lending standards compared to other types of loans." According to the survey, 52.4 percent of banks reported tightened standards for construction and land development CRE loans, while 47.6 percent said their standards hadn't changed over the past three months.

Reuters (5/4) and Bloomberg (5/4, 4.73M) also report.

Big Banks Dominate Second Round Of PPP.

Bloomberg (5/4, 4.73M) reports the nation's biggest banks "stepped up lending to dominate the U.S. government's small-business rescue program after playing an undersized role in its early days." Banks with assets of $10 billion or more "processed 68% of Paycheck Protection Program loans last week, data released on Sunday show, compared with about 40% during the program's first round from April 3 to April 16." According to Bloomberg, "that translates to about $24 billion of PPP loans a day from the largest banks, more than double the daily pace set by that group in the first phase."

BofA Names Itself Top Lender In PPP Round Two.

Bloomberg (5/4, Nguyen, 4.73M) reports Bank of America has "received approval for 265,500 small-business loans totaling $24.9 billion in relief funds from the Small Business Administration's Paycheck Protection Program." During the second round of funding, the bank "sent 213,000 promissory notes to small businesses informing them that their loans were approved by the SBA, Bank of America said Monday in a statement." That figure makes Bank of America the top lender in the PPP's second round, according to the company.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Mr. Trump's War On Accountability." The New York Times (5/4, 18.61M) argues in an editorial that the President's "move Friday night to replace the top watchdog for the Department of Health and Human Services," is "the latest in a series of direct attacks on statutory oversight of his administration." Trump "has been working to cleanse his administration of officials he considers insufficiently loyal," and he "has displayed a particular hostility to inspectors general." Trump "has made clear that he considers any efforts to hold him accountable to be, by definition, illegitimate" and Republicans "have done little to disabuse him of this notion."

Washington Post.

"New Evidence Reinforces The Suspicion That Russia Was Behind The Downed MH17 Plane." The Washington Post (5/4, 14.2M) editorializes that "a fair amount of detail has been gathered about the shooting down of Malaysian Airlines Flight 17 on July 17, 2014, in eastern Ukraine, which killed all 298 people aboard." While the plane was hit by "a Russian-made Buk missile launched by the 53rd Anti Aircraft Missile brigade based at Kursk, Russia," Russia has "insisted it did not shoot down MH17." The Post argues that the "body of evidence, however, clearly points to Russia, and now a new piece of evidence reinforces that suspicion." The open-source investigative group Bellingcat, along with its Russian partner the Insider and the McClatchy Washington Bureau, "reports that a high-ranking official of the Federal Security Service," Col. Gen. Andrey Ivanovich Burlaka, "oversaw the separatists and deployment of the missile."

"We're Asking An Extraordinary Amount From State And Local Governments. They Deserve More Aid." The Washington Post (5/4, 14.2M) editorializes in support of additional funding for state and local governments in the next COVID-19 stimulus package. The Post says the "major funding should have guardrails," but "rather than a punitive approach that emphasizes harsh consequences for mistakes, the federal government should implement structures to help states and localities spend the money appropriately, like a federal coordinator who can provide real-time support and guidance to local decision-makers."

"What This Year's Election Campaign Will Look Like Online." The Washington Post (5/4, 14.2M) editorializes, "American politics has long run on door-knocking, rally-throwing, baby-kissing and all manner of other activities that have suddenly become unsafe in the age of the novel coronavirus. Candidates are more dependent than ever on a realm that was created for mass connection: the Internet.” Joe Biden “is confined to his basement,” struggling to “compete with the freewheeling afternoon show” President Trump’s “reelection team churns out nightly. ... That’s not to mention President Trump’s ready-made platform in the White House briefings, which guarantees him a national audience.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Weighing Sweden’s Coronavirus Model.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that Sweden has taken a relatively permissive approach in its response to the coronavirus. The Journal suggests that American governors study the Swedish model as they begin relaxing lockdowns.

“The Fossil Fuel-Virus Nexus? Not.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes a study from Harvard’s T.H. Chan School of Public Health concluding that there is a link between climate change and an increased risk of death from COVID-19. The Journal says the research was sloppy and that the study was intended to reach a result fitting a political agenda.

“Targeted Lockdowns Are Better.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) cites a paper from the National Bureau of Economic Research which concludes that targeted lockdowns to protect the most vulnerable combined with policies such as social distancing will reduce the death rate by more than universal lockdowns, and would cause less economic harm.

“Justice Thomas’s Question Time.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/4, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Supreme Court’s decision to hear oral arguments by telephone has unexpectedly given the public a chance to hear the usually quiet Justice Clarence Thomas, and expresses hopes the format will let Americans come to see Thomas as a thoughtful thinker and questioner.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Since COVID-19 emerged from Wuhan, suspicions about the origins have been rampant. And today, the US Department of Homeland Security leaked a report that when the outbreak started, the Chinese government hid the severity of the problem in order to hoard medical supplies before other countries could stock up. ... I should have known that China was up to no good. My fortune cookie tried to warn me."

Trevor Noah: "Right now, 2020 Mother Nature is out of control. A killer virus is one thing. But murder hornets? Sounds like someone is combining the scariest words together. What is next, nunchuck wolves?"

Trevor Noah: "Murder hornets just sound like psychos. They cut off the heads of bees and mash up the thorax into meatballs, and fly back to feed their larvae. I thought only Rudy Giuliani fed his family that way."

Trevor Noah: [On Trump tweeting that he was pleased that Kim Jong-un is okay] "Yes, of course Trump is happy Kim Jong-un is back. 'Thank God, I'm no longer definitely the worst person on Earth.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "As if we didn't have enough to worry about, as if things weren't already insane, the country is now being invaded by something called murder hornets. These are hornets. They're two inches long. And they kill people and bees. So looks like we're never leaving our houses again."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President continues to play both sides. Last night, he was on Fox News for a virtual town hall set in front of the Lincoln Memorial. And while his top health experts are telling us to stay at home, he is ready to get back out on the road. ... He misses his rallies. He needs to get out there. He needs to be cheered. It's what keeps him going. He's like a shark. He has to keep moving, and he has a hammer for a head."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Trump has repeatedly predicted we're going to have a vaccine by the end of the year, which is something no one who actually knows anything about developing vaccines seems to agree with. But that's not how our President's brain works. ... He looked into his crystal ball, and expects to have a vaccine by the end of the year. It will be administered by mall Santa Clauses."

Stephen Colbert: "It was a beautiful weekend. Warm weather and sunny across the country. What a disaster. We've all been staying inside for over seven weeks, and we know we should stay inside, but the beautiful weather was just too tempting. ... While public health officials are worried, one person wasn't too concerned: Donald Trump. He had a Fox News virtual town hall last night and he said it was time to hit the beach. ... I seriously doubt you'll ever hear 'Trump did a great job. He really just lost one and a half Vietnams.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Trump thinks that getting the economy moving is the only way he can get re-elected, so he's going to try to do it, no matter what the risk is to Americans. I haven't seen a campaign strategy this dangerous since William Henry Harrison's 'Tippecanoe And A Scorpion Down Your Pants.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump saying at his town hall that he thinks folks who are unemployed now due to the virus will be able to get higher-paying jobs] "The town hall was supposed to be about reopening the country, and was titled, 'America together: Returning to work.' And Trump not only thought it would happen, he actually thought this disaster might actually make things better. ... Really? A better job with more money? So it's good the virus happened? (As Trump) 'I think it's going to be even better because the pigs that just flew out of my butt told me they're hiring.'"

Stephen Colbert: "As part of his 'blame China' initiative, Trump's been pushing unsubstantiated claims that the disease started in a laboratory in Wuhan. Yesterday, his conspiracy theory got the support of Secretary of State Mike Pompeo. ... Pompeo did provide evidence that two things can be true at the same time. For instance, that footage made Pompeo look like both a liar and an idiot."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump participated in a Fox News virtual town hall at the Lincoln Memorial yesterday. Said Lincoln, 'This is literally the worst thing that's ever happened to me.' "

Seth Meyers: "Newly appointed White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany had her first formal briefing on Friday and told reporters she will, quote, 'never lie to them.' Oh, really? Even the way you spell 'Kayleigh' is a lie. G-H? Come on now."

Washington's Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

- Vice President Pence — No public schedule released

US Senate:

- Senate Intelligence Committee considers DNI nominee – chamber's first committee hearing since return from recess – Nominations hearing considers Republican Rep. John Ratcliffe to be Director of National Intelligence * Represents the first committee hearing in the Senate since its return yesterday from an extended six-week recess amid the coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic. Due to ongoing social distancing protocols, attendance limited to senators, witnesses, and some staff * President Donald Trump nominated Rep. Ratcliffe in February, having removed Acting DNI Joseph Maguire a week earlier and replaced him with Richard Grenell, also in an acting capacity. The last permanent DNI, Dan Coats, left the role in August 2019. In July 2019, President Trump had announced that he intended to nominate Rep. Ratcliffe as Coats' replacement, but announced just five days later that he was withdrawing the nomination due to 'unfair scrutiny' from the 'lamestream media', amid reports that Rep. Ratcliffe has misrepresented his own role in prosecuting terrorism and immigration cases

Treasury in the News

Small Business Lending Portal Crashes After $310B Funding Injection.

The New York Times (4/27, Cowley, 18.61M) reports the SBA's online portal for submitting applications for Paycheck Protection Program funding crashed "minutes" after it opened on Monday, "and it kept crashing all day, much to the frustration of bankers" and "desperate clients." On Sunday the SBA warned of "pacing" limits, accepting just 350 applications per hour from each lender, "but bankers said they weren't able to get anywhere near that volume through the system." However, the SBA said that despite technical problems it "processed more than 100,000 loans under the program on Monday from 4,000 lenders." The Times says Community Spirit Bank CEO Brad Bolton "summarized his experience" by tweeting a picture of the SBA site's error message. Bolton's tweet, "directed at the S.B.A. and Treasury, also said: 'Your failure to be ready is unacceptable.'"

Reuters (4/27, Schroeder, Price) reports Rob Nichols, Chief Executive of the American Bankers Association, "tweeted that bankers were 'deeply frustrated' with the technology issues that he had raised 'at the highest levels.'" Reuters adds, "With the nation's lenders already sitting on hundreds of thousands of backlogged applications, the fresh funds are expected to be burned through in days – leaving swaths of mom-and-pop enterprises out in the cold again, banking groups said." The Treasury Department and the SBA on Sunday "tried to address concerns that big banks would suck up the second round of funds by capping the amount a lender can process at $60 billion, although few, if any, banks are likely to hit that high ceiling during the second round."

Bloomberg (4/27, Niquette, Levitt, 4.73M) reports the Treasury Department and SBA had "sought to avoid pitfalls from the first round" by issuing "new guidance last week reaffirming that companies must certify they were affected by the pandemic and telling large firms with access to other capital they shouldn't apply – and that firms can return loans by May 7 without penalty. Hedge funds and private-equity firms were told they were ineligible."

ABC News (4/27, Turner, 2.97M) reports on its website that Consumer Bankers Association President Richard Hunt said in a CNBC interview, "This is very much in demand. ... We think there are more loans in the pipeline than there were distributed in the first go around." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "who was integral with lawmakers in creating the program, said it was good news that the money was flying out the door to millions of businesses." Mnuchin said Sunday, "It's not a matter of how long it lasts. Actually, I think the sooner the money is dispersed, the better. So the first round impacted about 30 million workers. I think this round will be about the same. That will be close to 50% of the private workforce, so I actually hope we run out of money quickly."

The Washington Post (4/27, A1, Gregg, Merle, 14.2M) and American Banker (4/27, Subscription Publication, 31K) also report.

Senators Urge Administration To Do More To Ensure Small Businesses Can Get Loans. CNBC (4/27, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) "and 21 other senators on Monday urged the Trump administration to take more steps to ensure the small businesses devastated most during the coronavirus pandemic do not get shut out of a key government lifeline." The senators, in a letter to Secretary Mnuchin and SBA Jovita Carranza, "urged the administration to make public the measures it will put in place to make sure loans are not 'unjustly enriching' companies in less dire financial need." The letter said, "Every loan that provides a windfall for an applicant who does not truly need it results in one fewer loan made to a struggling small business owner whose employees could be truly helped by this funding." The Los Angeles (CA) Times (4/27, Haberkorn, 4.64M) also reports.

McGahn Blasts Critics Of Large Businesses Seeking PPP Funds. Former White House Counsel Don McGahn in an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), condemns politicians and government officials criticizing large companies for accessing Paycheck Protection Program. He argues that the Cares Act sought to quickly distribute money to businesses and its lax standards were intended. McGahn says Secretary Mnuchin has warned, as a response to critics, of "severe consequences" for businesses obtaining PPP loans in bad faith.

Schumer Announces The "No PR Act" To Prevent Trump, Pence From Signing Stimulus Checks.

Politico (4/27, Levine, 4.29M) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer revealed Monday the "No PR Act," which would "prohibit the use of federal dollars toward any material that promotes Trump or Vice President Mike Pence's names or signatures." Schumer's proposal "comes after the Treasury Department ordered that Trump's name appear on millions of stimulus checks sent out by the IRS following the passage of a $2 trillion rescue package in March." Schumer said, "President Trump unfortunately appears to see the pandemic as just another opportunity to promote his own political interests." He continued, "The No PR Act puts an end to the president's exploitation of taxpayer money for promotional material that only benefits his re-election campaign."

Forbes (4/27, Ziv, 9.71M) reports the bill "takes aim at the Treasury Department, which instructed the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) to print Trump's name on the 'memo' line of the stimulus checks."

Also reporting are USA Today (4/27, Cummings, 10.31M), The Hill (4/27, Wise, 2.98M), and National Review (4/27, Hoonhout, 731K).

US Citizen Sues Trump, Mnuchin, McConnell Over Stimulus Denial Due To Immigrant Spouse. CBS News (4/27, Picchi, 3.68M) reports President Trump "faces a lawsuit over the federal government declining to make $1,200 stimulus checks to U.S. citizens who are married to immigrants without Social Security numbers." The lawsuit "comes after the IRS said only married couples who both hold valid Social Security numbers will receive the payments." The suit, "filed by a U.S. citizen and Illinois resident identified only as 'John Doe,' alleges that the ban violates the Constitution and is a form of discrimination 'based solely on whom he chose to marry.'" The lawsuit "also names Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin as defendants." Law360 (4/27, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the man is claiming that Trump, Mnuchin, and McConnell "deprived him of his rights of association, of due process and equal protection under the law" and "discriminated against him on the basis of whom he chose to marry and based on the alienage of his spouse."

US Expats Organization Urges Treasury To Streamline Stimulus Application. Law360 (4/27, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, "Many American citizens living abroad have not yet received pandemic relief payments because of administrative and technical difficulties," American Citizens Abroad, "an organization representing expatriates has, told the U.S. Treasury Department." ACA, in a letter sent Friday, "urged the department and the Internal Revenue Service to streamline the application process and to mount a public awareness campaign to notify taxpayers of potential workarounds. The organization also said it could help those citizens directly by helping them set up U.S. bank accounts, one of the requirements for receiving the payment through direct deposit."

Administration Open To Infrastructure, Broadband In Next COVID-19 Relief Package.

The AP (4/27, Mascaro) reports Congress "is plunging ahead on a new coronavirus relief package, but deepening partisan divide and uncertainty in the schedule could stall the federal response to the health crisis and deteriorating U.S. economy." Although the pandemic has done "the unthinkable in Washington, sparking a rare bipartisanship accord between Democrats and Republicans on the biggest rescue package in history – a $2 trillion effort last month, followed by $500 billion last week – it may not extend to the new effort." The AP says Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "is seeking a broad package that could include infrastructure and broadband investment as part of Trump's long-running campaign promises."

The Hill (4/27, Carney, 2.98M) reports that a question being asked on Capitol Hill "is whether lawmakers will continue funding PPP in future pieces of legislation." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said during a White House coronavirus task force briefing that they expect the latest round 'is the last tranche,' but added a caveat that they could 'always reconsider that.'" Lawmakers "have proposed including new strings for additional funding that would tighten who can get help after reports that large chain restaurants were able to qualify for tens of millions in loans."

White House Gives Mixed Messages As Advisers Offer Contradicting Outlooks.

NBC News (4/27, 6.14M) reports that as President Trump "shifts from a self-described wartime president battling the coronavirus pandemic to a cheerleader for reopening the U.S. economy, the mixed messages coming from his administration risk confusing the markets, private industry and local and state officials." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "is predicting the economy will surge over the summer" while Kevin Hassett, a top economic adviser to Trump, "is warning of unemployment rates in coming months that Americans haven't seen since the Great Depression." Hassett "warned on Sunday that 'the next couple of months are going to look terrible.'" The same day, on "Fox News Sunday," Mnuchin said, "What I do think is, as we open up the economy in May, in June, you will begin to see the economy bounce back in July, August, September, and my expectation is that you'll see an increasing rate of growth in those three months." Hassett on Monday "played down any differences within the president's economic team. He said Mnuchin is optimistic about a quick recovery, and pointed to negotiations with Congress on a fourth economic relief package." Newsweek (4/27, Lemon, 1.53M) also reports.

Group Of Scientists, Billionaires Seeks To Influence Administration's Pandemic Response Plan. The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Copeland, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) profiles a small group of scientists and billionaires, dubbed Scientists to Stop COVID-19, who say they have a solution to the pandemic and are working to present their plan to the White House. The Journal mentions how Boston Celtics co-owner Steve Pagliuca passed a version of the groups report to Goldman Sachs CEO David Solomon, who then passed it to Secretary Mnuchin.

Nobel Prize-Winning Economist Says $100B Needs To Be Spent On Testing. The Washington Post (4/27, Long, 14.2M) reports that "Nobel Prize-winning economist" Paul Romer "says a return to nearly normal life is possible this summer if the United States does wide-scale testing for the coronavirus." According to the Post, Romer is "calling on the U.S. government to test everyone in the nation once every two weeks and isolate people who test positive." The Post says Romer "estimates that doing so would cost $100 billion, a hefty sum but far less than the $2 trillion Congress has spent so far and less than the cost of keeping the economy partly closed for months to come." Top officials at the White House "voiced support for more testing over the weekend." Secretary Mnuchin "said on Fox News Sunday that the Trump administration would 'balance' reopening the economy with 'more testing' to 'monitor this very, very carefully.'"

Trump Administration Lacks Agility To Respond To Increasingly Dire Oil Market Developments.

The Washington Post (4/26, Mufson, 14.2M) reports the Trump Administration's options to protect the ailing US oil industry are growing limited, as oil market developments are coming more rapidly than the government can generate an effective response. Monday, US crude prices "plunged more than 20 percent, an oil services company declared bankruptcy, and a flotilla of about 20 Saudi Arabian supertankers continued their approach to the Gulf of Mexico." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said on Sunday that the Trump administration is considering government loans to help out the industry, an extreme step to try to limit more economic damage." Rather than expecting an oil price recovery, however, investors are "expecting the oversupply to increase" on continued demand declines.

Legislators, State Officials Say Trump Administration Is "Unreasonably" Restricting How Local Governments Can Use Federal Aid Amid Pandemic.

The New York Times (4/27, Hulse, 18.61M) reports "lawmakers and state officials say the Trump administration is unreasonably restricting how local governments can spend federal aid as they struggle to stay afloat during the pandemic and Republicans raise doubts about providing added financial relief to hard-pressed communities." Those "officials say new Treasury Department rules that prohibit local governments from using their share of $150 billion provided last month for 'revenue replacement' are impractical." Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) "said he discussed the flexibility issue by telephone on Monday with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who has been negotiating with Democrats. Mr. Mnuchin, according to Mr. Brown, said that he would address the concern in upcoming legislation and that the Treasury would be liberal in its interpretation of what costs were directly related to the pandemic until then."

Judge Rules Alaska Native Corporations Ineligible For Tribal Government Relief Funds.

Law360 (4/27, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports a D.C. federal judge "handed a group of tribes a major win Monday by preventing the Treasury Department from sending any of $8 billion in funding to fight the COVID-19 pandemic to Alaska Native corporations, but stopped short of awarding federally recognized tribes all the money." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "had argued that it would be unfair to block the for-profit corporations, known as ANCs, from receiving some of the $8 billion in direct tribal funding in the $2 trillion Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security Act, saying that they met the requisite definitions to be eligible for funding." However, "in granting an injunction Monday to the Confederated Tribes of the Chehalis Reservation and more than a dozen other federally recognized tribes, U.S. District Judge Amit P. Mehta said that 'presently, no ANC satisfies the definition of 'tribal government' under the CARES Act and therefore no ANC is eligible for any share of the $8 billion allocated by Congress for tribal governments.'"

IRS Improves COVID-19 Rebate "Get My Payment" Web Tool.

The Hill (4/27, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports the Treasury Department and IRS "have announced enhancements to a web tool that people can use to check the status of their coronavirus relief payment." The enhancements "to the 'Get My Payment' tool come after many taxpayers experienced challenges in using the application." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has said that millions of people have been successfully able to use the tool." However, "some taxpayers have expressed frustrations with the tool, reporting that they have had difficulty inputting their information or had received a message from the tool that their payment status was not available." Mnuchin said in a statement Sunday, "Treasury and the IRS have made substantial enhancements to the 'Get My Payment' app to ensure more Americans can get their money fast and track its delivery. This Administration has already delivered over 88 million payments in less than three weeks, with millions more on their way. We encourage people who still need to input their information or want to track their payment to use the app."

Airlines Have Received $12 Billion In Federal Aid As DOT Allows Route Exemptions.

The Washington (DC) Post (4/27, Aratani, 14.2M) reports that the Department of the Treasury has paid out $12.4 billion of the $29 billion in grants that were allocated to airlines through the CARES Act. The delivery of the aid to airlines "has been relatively trouble-free – a relief to an industry reeling from the worst financial crisis in its history." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said in a statement, "The financial assistance the Treasury Department is providing under Title IV of the CARES Act is essential to help American workers, preserve our aviation industry, and assist businesses that are critical to maintaining national security. Treasury is fully committed to delivering relief to the American people and supporting the economy."

NYMagazine Profiles Mnuchin, Highlights Foreclosure Work In '08 Crisis.

New York Magazine's Intelligencer (NY) (4/27, Levitz, 1.1M) reports in a lengthy profile on Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "Thus far, the COVID-19 crash has been as kind to Mnuchin as the Great Recession once was. If the last global economic crisis made him rich enough to purchase a lofty perch in our government, this one is making the Treasury secretary powerful enough to claim a prominent place in U.S."

history." Prior to the pandemic, Mnuchin's "most memorable achievement as a public servant may have been commandeering a government plane for a solar-eclipse-themed day trip. Since the pandemic sickened global markets, he has brokered the largest stimulus legislation ever passed and won control of a multi-trillion-dollar bailout fund." The piece sums up: "We've put one of the primary beneficiaries of America's inequitable response to the last economic crisis in charge of crafting our nation's response to this one."

White House Offers Coronavirus Testing Guidance As More States Move To Reopen.

The White House released new guidance for states on coronavirus testing Monday as more states continued to move toward partial reopenings of their economies. Norah O'Donnell said on the CBS Evening News (4/27, lead story, 3:55, 5.63M), "The guidelines...require individual states to find testing supplies and conduct their tests rather than the federal government. The new plan comes as more and more Americans are suffering with what's being called 'quarantine fatigue,' a desire to return to a more normal life after weeks of staying home. That burnout, combined with rising unemployment, is leading 19 states to loosen restrictions and reopen some businesses and restaurants."

Weijia Jiang reported on the CBS Evening News (4/27, story 2, 2:20, O'Donnell, 5.63M), "Facing mounting pressure, [Trump] announced that national plan, which is really much more a list of suggestions for states. President Trump continues to claim the Administration has made great progress when it comes to coronavirus testing. ... But this new plan does not provide specifics about the supply chain or a roadmap for growing testing capacity, and the burden remains largely on the states." Kristen Welker reported on NBC Nightly News (4/27, story 7, 0:55, Holt, 8.35M), "The White House says the federal government's role will be to provide strategic direction and technical assistance to states, but in documents released late [Monday], the White House cautioned the federal government should be viewed as a 'supplier of last resort.'"

The AP (4/27, Miller) reports the White House released the new guidelines as Trump "sought to regain his footing after weeks of criticism and detours created in part by his sideshows. Trump appeared reluctant to cede the spotlight, with on-off-on plans for a press conference to capture the flurry of action." The AP says "Monday's developments were meant to fill critical gaps in White House plans to begin 'reopening' the nation, ramping up testing for the virus while shifting the president's focus toward recovery from the economic collapse caused by the outbreak."

USA Today (4/27, Subramanian, Jackson, 10.31M) reports the White House "blueprint outlines the federal government's role in assisting states with access to testing platforms, increasing testing and laboratory supplies as well as enhancing sample collection." The Washington Post (4/27, Sun, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports the guidelines have "sparked sharp debates within the administration between public health experts and other officials who fear that the guidelines could restrict worship services, damage the profitability of restaurants and upend daily life in a way they deem unnecessary."

David Muir reported on ABC World News Tonight (4/27, lead story, 5:00, 10.32M) that Trump is "calling on several private companies." The Washington Times (4/27, Boyer, Howell, 492K) reports, "Members of the coronavirus task force said they will marshal the public and private sector to expand rapid testing at pharmacies like CVS and Walgreens, tap unused lab capacity and make sure governors have the supplies they need." However, the Washington Post (4/27, DeBonis, Mooney, Eilperin, 14.2M) reports, "a previous high-profile public-private initiative announced by the president in March – partnering with companies to open up scores of testing sites on their properties across the country – has been slow to materialize."

The New York Post (4/27, Nelson, 4.57M) reports the White House Coronavirus Task Force announced that it will provide states with enough supplies for eight million tests per month. The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Bender, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Administration says it can send enough tests to all states to test at least 2.6 percent of their residents. HHS Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir said on Fox News' The Story (4/27), "Every state really has their own individual circumstance depending on how many cases they have. ... We believe that every state should have the capacity – that means the swabs, the testing, the drive-through sites – to test at least two percent of their individuals per month. ... Many states want three percent, four percent, six percent. What I am happy to say is as we moved into the next stages, we are able to fully supply their chains to allow them to do that."

Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (4/27), "We inherited a testing regime that was based on state-relied-upon testing facilities. What we have done is we've expanded that, not only through the state systems but also the commercial labs. I think part of what the President is talking about, and the Administration has been talking about with governors, is making sure that governors understand the capability and the capacity in each of their states." However, the New York Times (4/27, Tankersley, 18.61M) says in an analysis that "state and federal officials have nowhere near the testing capacity that experts say is needed to track and limit the spread of the virus." Efforts to "quickly restart economic activity risk further dividing Americans into two major groups along socioeconomic lines: one that has the power to control its exposure to the coronavirus outbreak and another that is forced to choose between potential sickness or financial devastation."

The New York Times (4/27, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports, "Governors have been complaining that they do not have nearly enough tests to give them the kind of information they need to make difficult decisions about reopening. They say they are competing with one another – and other countries – for the components that make up the testing kits. ... Congress has been pushing the Trump administration to come up with a clearer strategy." Bloomberg (4/27, Parker, LaVito, 4.73M) also covers the new guidelines.

In addition to rolling out the guidelines, The Hill (4/27, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports the White House "is changing the way it will handle messaging on its response to the coronavirus amid growing GOP fears that President Trump is hurting his party's chances in this fall's elections with his daily White House briefings on the pandemic." The Washington Post (4/27, Chiu, 14.2M) says the daily coronavirus news briefings were "meant to inform the public," but "have instead been largely taken over by the president and transformed into 'de facto political rallies.'" Politico (4/27, Ward, 4.29M) similarly says Trump's "marathon briefings have been the subject of stepped-up criticism of late, especially in the wake of the president's dangerous suggestion last week that Americans inject or ingest disinfectants as a coronavirus remedy."

Trump Urges Governors To Consider Reopening Schools. On ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 2, 1:15, Muir, 11.02M), Tom Llamas reported the President is urging governors "to seriously consider reopening the nation's schools. ... The President pointed out the school year is almost over, but he said several schools could open for a short period of time. He didn't say exactly where. He also added that young people seem to do well with this virus."

Politico: Hicks Faces "Difficult Task" In Setting Future Course For Trump. Politico (4/27, Cook, McGraw, 4.29M) reports that White House counselor Hope Hicks "faces the difficult task of formulating a new path for Trump out of an emergency that shows no sign of abating, even as the economy starts to reopen in a handful of states." According to Politico, Hicks "must position the president in a way he wants to be viewed as the man in charge, while guarding against the threat of overexposure that many aides and allies say poses a substantial political risk to Trump and his party just six months before a general election."

Some Antibody Tests "Giving Too Many False Positives." Politico (4/27, Brennan, Lim, 4.29M) reports that the FDA is "dealing with a flood of inaccurate coronavirus antibody tests after it allowed more than 120 manufacturers and labs to bring the tests to market without an agency review." According to Politico, "Normally, the FDA does its own quality check before allowing tests on the market," but "agency leaders have said they tried to create more flexibility for makers of antibody tests to help inform discussions about when people can safely return to work and school, and to identify survivors whose antibody-rich blood could help treat the sick."

The CBS Evening News (4/27, story 3, 2:00, O'Donnell, 5.63M) reported, "Antibodies can give a better picture of just how many people have been exposed to the coronavirus, even if they never had symptoms, but there are more than 100 unproven antibody tests on the market. We still don't know what level of immunity coronavirus antibodies give you." Gabe Gutierrez reported on NBC Nightly News (4/27, story 6, 2:15, Holt, 7.96M), "The latest results of [New York's] antibody testing program showed nearly one in four people in New York City tested positive for COVID-19 antibodies. ... There are still questions about the accuracy and meaning of the test. The World Health Organization now says, 'We expect that most people who are infected with COVID-19 will develop an antibody response, but we don't yet know is the level of protection or how long it will last.'" ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 3, 2:35, Muir, 11.02M) had an update on the progress of finding effective antibody tests.

Nobel Prize-Winning Economist Says $100B Needs To Be Spent On Testing. The Washington Post (4/27, Long, 14.2M) reports that "Nobel Prize-winning economist" Paul Romer "says a return to nearly normal life is possible this summer if the United States does wide-scale testing for the coronavirus." According to the Post, Romer is "calling on the U.S. government to test everyone in the nation once every two weeks and isolate people who test positive." The Post says Romer "estimates that doing so would cost $100 billion, a hefty sum but far less than the $2 trillion Congress has spent so far and less than the cost of keeping the economy partly closed for months to come."

Stocks Up On Hopes Of Shutdown Relaxations. Reuters (4/27, Culp) reports, "Wall Street gained more than 1% on Monday at the onset of a hectic earnings week, as investors turned a hopeful eye toward several U.S. states that are relaxing shutdown restrictions put in place to curb the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic." The Dow Jones Industrial Average closed up 358.51 points at 24,133.78, the S&P 500 was up 41.74 points to 2,878.48, and the Nasdaq gained 95.64 points to close at 8,730.16.

The AP (4/27) attributes stocks' gains in the US and elsewhere to "governments prepar[ing] to gradually lift restrictions they imposed on businesses to slow the sweep of the coronavirus pandemic." The New York Times (4/27, 18.61M) also reports that US stocks "rose and global markets rallied...as governments around the world discussed when and how to reopen businesses and get their economies back on track." Likewise, the Washington Post (4/27, Telford, Heath, 14.2M) reports, "European and Asian stocks closed on an upswing Monday as investors warily eye national economies as they exit the lockdown."

Research Shows More Americans Leaving Their Homes. USA Today (4/27, Yancey-Bragg, 10.31M) reports researchers led by Lei Zhang of the University of Maryland "have found Americans are venturing out of their homes more for the first time since social distancing guidelines were put in place in mid-March, despite warnings from experts strongly encouraging people to practice social distancing." Smartphone data show that from early March through April 14, the percentage of people staying within a mile of home "increased or stayed the same" each day, but has dropped since then.

Miguel Almaguer reported on NBC Nightly News (4/27, story 2, 1:45, Holt, 8.35M), "This is what quarantine fatigue looks like as Americans leave home amid stay-at-home orders. ... In San Diego minutes after beaches opened [Monday], a wave of surfers hit the water. ... From packed parks in Georgia to crowded green ways in Hawaii, a new study suggests more Americans are spending less time at home."

Data Indicate Political Divide Among Essential Workers. The New York Times (4/27, Rothwell, 18.61M) reports Gallup data indicate a political divide among essential workers. Those "who identify with the Democratic Party are more likely to be concerned about getting the virus (66 percent) than their Republican Party counterparts (45 percent). They also have far greater confidence in social distancing. Three out of four (73 percent) essential workers who affiliate with the Democratic Party say that they are very confident that social distancing saves lives, compared with 27 percent of essential workers who identify as Republicans."

Ohio, Texas Among States Taking Steps Toward Reopening. Lester Holt said in opening NBC Nightly News (4/27, lead story,

3:00, 8.35M), "Ready or not, and with nearly a million confirmed COVID-19 cases in the US since the start of this outbreak, parts of America are moving on tonight. The simple touchstones of life as we remember it, from shopping in a store to dining at a restaurant, [are] rapidly returning in a country dividing over how far to go to halt the spread of the virus, which has claimed over 55,000 lives here."

The New York Times (4/27, Healy, Fernandez, Baker, 18.61M) reports, "Numerous states, including some of the largest, began the process of lifting shelter orders in what could be a pivotal stage in the U.S. response to the pandemic." The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Purnell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports states including Ohio and Texas took steps Monday toward reopening their economies. Politico (4/27, Cadelago, 4.29M) reports, "While the biggest protests calling for an end to stay-at-home orders and business restrictions have hit Democratic governors, conservative activists and groups are intensifying pressure on GOP governors they say are being too deliberative as their economies stagger and jobless rates spiral."

The Washington Times (4/27, Sherfinski, 492K) reports in a brief item that Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine (R) on Monday announced plans for some businesses "to start reopening their doors on May 4." DeWine said "manufacturing, distribution, and construction companies and general business offices can reopen starting on May 4, with retailers to follow on May 12." Axios (4/27, Perano, 521K) reports Texas Gov. Greg Abbott (R) "announced on Monday that he will allow the state's stay-at-home order to lapse on April 30, at which point Texas will begin 'phase one' of its reopening plan." Abbott said "all retail stores, restaurants, movie theaters and malls will be permitted to reopen on May 1 as long as occupancy is limited" to 25 percent.

Reuters (4/27, McKay) reports that Georgia on Monday "allowed residents to dine at restaurants for the first time in a month, as more U.S. states began easing restrictions where the coronavirus outbreak has taken a relatively light toll." The AP (4/27, Brumback and Bynum) reports Gov. Brian Kemp (R) has "issued 39 requirements that restaurants must follow if they reopen, including observing a limit of 10 customers per 500 square feet and ensuring that all employees wear face coverings all the time."

Politico (4/27, White, 4.29M) reports that Colorado and Nevada have "joined a coalition of Western states coordinating a gradual lifting of coronavirus restrictions." Politico says "the governors of California, Washington and Oregon had already announced a regional pact aimed at restarting their economies as the pandemic's spread has slowed." According to Politico, "The addition of two more states means the group will encompass some 60 million Americans, or about a fifth of the nation's population." The Washington Post (4/27, Klemko, Hernández, 14.2M) reports Colorado Gov. Jared Polis (D) "said the state 'achieved what we wanted to achieve' during the stay-at-home order, including slowing the spread of the virus and increasing health-care capacity. ... But the state landscape will not be uniform." Denver Mayor Michael Hancock (D) "has extended the city's stay-at-home order until May 8, and suburban counties have followed suit."

Cuomo, Murphy Begin Considering Reopening Standards. The New York Times (4/27, 18.61M) reports New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) announced Monday "that 337 more people had died of the virus" in the state, while New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) "reported an additional 106 deaths." The one-day tolls "were less than half of what the two states reported at their peaks," and both governors "have begun to offer details on reopening in the months ahead." Reuters (4/27, Layne, Caspani) reports that Cuomo said "his stay-at-home order will likely be extended beyond May 15 in many parts of the state, but that restrictions could be relaxed in some regions if they have sufficient hospital capacity and meet other criteria." Bloomberg (4/27, Clukey, Young, 4.73M) and the New York Post (4/27, Hogan, Feis, 4.57M) also report on Cuomo's comments.

Politico (4/27, Friedman, 4.29M) reports that Murphy "outlined four broad goals that need to be achieved before the state can begin to reopen for business, but gave no specific date for when that would happen." On Tuesday, Murphy "plans to announce members of a Restart and Recovery Commission to plan which businesses may open first based on how essential they are to the state's economy and how much disease transmission risk they pose." The New York Times (4/27, Tully, 18.61M) reports, "When pressed on the timing of a phased-in reopening, [Murphy] was noncommittal, but suggested it could come by Memorial Day, the unofficial start to summer at the Jersey Shore."

Politico (4/27, Friedman, 4.29M) reports New Jersey Republicans criticized Murphy for inviting Rep. Tom Malinowski (D-NJ), who is "in a tough reelection fight," to speak at his daily coronavirus briefing. A Murphy spokesperson "said all members of New Jersey's federal delegation – both Republican and Democrat – have been invited to participate in the briefings."

Illinois Judge Says Pritzker Order Exceeded His Authority. The Washington Times (4/27, Tareen, O'Connor, 492K) reports Clay County, Illinois Circuit Judge Michael McHaney ruled Monday that the stay-at-home order issued by Gov. J.B. Pritzker (D) "exceeds his emergency authority and violates individual civil rights. ... Pritzker has relied on an April 2 statewide disaster declaration as authority to close schools, shut down nonessential businesses and limit movement by individuals from their homes." The Chicago Tribune (4/27, Pearson, Munks, Petrella, 2.65M) reports the ruling said Pritzker "was prohibited 'from in any way enforcing the March 20 executive order against Darren Bailey forcing him to isolate and quarantine in his home,' or any subsequent orders that would do the same."

Whitmer To Seek Extension Of Emergency Powers. The Detroit News (4/27, Mauger, 825K) reports Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) "outlined Monday her next steps for reopening the state's economy as a potential fight nears with the Republican-controlled Legislature over her emergency powers." Whitmer "said construction and other low-risk workplaces will soon see loosened restrictions. She provided few specifics but said in the 'coming weeks,' the state will re-engage additional industries after shutting down most businesses" on March 23. Whitmer also announced that she is "seeking a 28-day extension of her emergency declaration from the Legislature."

Some Nonessential Wisconsin Business Will Reopen. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (4/27, Spicuzza, 632K) reports Wisconsin Gov. Tony Evers (D) said Monday that some nonessential businesses in the state "will be allowed to reopen this week. Those companies, including animal groomers and small engine repair shops, can reopen for business Wednesday with some changes, such as curbside drop-off of goods and animals."

North Carolina Reopening Activist Tested Positive For COVID-19. WNCN-TV Raleigh-Durham, NC (4/27) reports on its website, "A leader of the ReOpen NC group revealed in a Facebook post that she tested positive for COVID-19." Audrey Whitlock, "one of the administrators of the ReOpen NC Facebook page" that has helped organize Raleigh protests against the stay-at-home order issued by Gov. Roy Cooper (D), "described herself as an 'an asymptomatic COVID19 positive patient.'"

Author Says New Orleans' Path Back From Katrina Offers Guidance. In a Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, Emily Chamlee-Wright of the Institute for Humane Studies, co-author of "How We Came Back: Voices from Post-Katrina New Orleans," says that in the aftermath of the 2005 storm, it was business and community leaders, not state political leaders, who led the way in recovery and resumption of normal activity, and that the coronavirus comeback can follow the same course.

Trump: Democrats To Blame For Any Delay In Enhanced Unemployment Insurance.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Blame the Democrats for any 'lateness' in your Enhanced Unemployment Insurance. I wanted the money to be paid directly, they insisted it be paid by states for distribution. I told them this would happen, especially with many states which have old computers."

Hassett: GDP May Decline 30% This Quarter, Additional Stimulus Required.

Appearing on CNBC's Squawk Box (4/27, 173K) Monday, White House economic adviser Kevin Hassett said that in regards to US GDP, "You're looking at something like minus 20 percent to minus 30 percent in the second quarter. ... I'm expecting when we see the unemployment rate for...the first week of May, we're going to see a number that's going to be maybe 16, 17 percent. Right now, if you take what happened at the end of the first quarter, we're getting that first quarter GDP number this week, then you're looking like it's pretty likely you get a negative number. Second quarter GDP will be the biggest negative number since the Great Depression."

Reuters (4/27, Lambert) reports that during the interview, Hassett also said, "We're going to probably need another phase of stimulus of some sort. We've built a bridge to the other side of this crisis we believe and it looks like we're getting close to opening up in many places around the country. With that, we have to think about what's it going to take to make sure we go back to thriving. ... And I don't think that absent another round of stimulus that it's very likely that you would see a V-shape."

Pelosi Suggests She Is Open To Universal Basic Income.

The Washington Post (4/27, Werner, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that House Speaker Pelosi "said that Congress might need to consider offering a guaranteed income to some Americans to help the country recover from the economic impact of the coronavirus pandemic." Pelosi is quoted as saying, "We may have to think in terms of some different ways to put money in people's pockets. Others have suggested a minimum income, a guaranteed income for people. Is that worthy of attention now? Perhaps so." According to the Post, "A number of Democrats in the House and Senate have advanced proposals that would ensure a guaranteed paycheck for workers impacted by the coronavirus. These include a plan" by Rep. Pramila Jayapal (D-WA) "that would create a three-month federal guarantee for 100 percent of worker salaries of up to $100,000." Reuters (4/27) reports that Pelosi "also pushed the need for additional funding to state, local and tribal governments as Congress considers the next massive relief legislation to help prop up the U.S. economy."

McConnell Hostile To Democrats' Coronavirus Aid Plans, Seeks To Prevent COVID-19 Suits. The Washington Examiner (4/27, Ferrechio, 448K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell apparently rejected Democratic plans for the next coronavirus aid package, warning against being "distracted by preexisting partisan wish lists" and "tangential, left-wing daydreams." Democrats have proposed giving aid to states, granting hazard pay to those in the front-lines of the pandemic, and helping the Postal Service. McConnell said that the next package should be focused on "concrete steps" and said there was an "urgent" need to prevent "opportunistic lawsuits" against businesses and healthcare professionals.

Millions Awaiting Stimulus Checks.

The CBS Evening News (4/27, story 4, 1:55, O'Donnell, 5.63M) reported, "As of last week, about 90 million Americans have received their $1,200 stimulus check," meaning about 60 million haven't. CBS (Shamlian) added that reasons that millions "are still waiting include a change of address or bank account since their last tax filing."

Tyson Foods Warns US Meat Supply Is At Risk.

NBC Nightly News (4/27, story 4, 2:40, Holt, 8.35M) reported that in "a stark warning," Tyson Foods, one of the nation's biggest meat companies, said that plant closures will result in stores having "limited supplies of its products" and warned "the food supply chain is breaking." NBC (Schwartz) added that over 1,000 meat processing employees testing positive for COVID-19 forced at least 15 plants to temporarily close. ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 5, 2:10, Muir, 11.02M) and the CBS Evening News (4/27, story 5, 2:10, O'Donnell, 5.63M) also mention Tyson's statement.

The Washington Post (4/27, Shepherd, 14.2M) reports that Tysons used "in a full-page newspaper ad published in The Washington Post, the New York Times and the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette on Sunday" to warn the coronavirus pandemic could "disrupt the U.S. food supply chain and raise the price of meat." The Post says Tyson also "defended itself from criticism that it has not adequately protected its workers and pleaded for more government assistance in doing so." According to the Post, Tyson "warned that shuttering processing plants would cause 'millions of pounds of meat' to disappear from the markets, reducing what's available on grocery store shelves and raising the prices."

The AP (4/27) says meat "isn't going to disappear from supermarkets. ... But as the meat plants struggle to remain open, consumers could face less selection and slightly higher prices." The AP adds, "Industry leaders acknowledge that the U.S. food chain has rarely been so stressed and that no one is sure about the future, even as they try to dispel concerns about shortages." However, according to the AP, "Nationally, although the reduced meat supply is expected to cause consumer prices to rise, expectations are that the increases will be slight." The USDA "said late last week that it expects beef prices to climb 1% to 2% this year, poultry as much as 1.5% and pork between by from 2% and 3%."

On the other hand, Bloomberg (4/27, 4.73M) reports that "meat prices are surging on the supply disruptions. U.S. wholesale beef has surged to a record, and wholesale pork soared almost 30% last week."

Lack Of Federal Distribution Plan Had Food Rotting In Field As Food Banks Run Low.

The CBS Evening News (4/27, story 5, 2:10, O'Donnell, 5.63M) reported, "Farmers say their crops...are rotting" even as "food banks are running low and lines are long," due to "lack of a federal plan the distribute the food." CBS (Bojorquez) added, "Farmers and food banks have pleaded with the US Department of Agriculture to connect the oversupply with the growing need," but despite this, the agency "didn't announce a plan until ten days ago." The USDA "said it's working as quickly as possible and plans to start purchasing food for distribution by the end or actually over the next week."

ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 5, 2:10, Muir, 11.02M) reported that farmers are "forced to discard aging produce, milk, and now meat." ABC (Osunsami) added New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said, "We have people downstate who need food. We have farmers upstate who can't sell their product. We have to put those two things together." He "announced a plan to get food from farms in New York state to the food banks that need it," as well as "working with companies like Cabot Cheese and Chobani to process all this extra milk and turn it into yogurt and cheese products that will be given to food charities." Meanwhile, Farms to Food Banks is raising money to buy food from farmers and feed those who need it.

WSJournal A1: Detroit Automakers Tentatively Plan May 18 Restart To US Factories.

In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (4/27, A1, Colias, Foldy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports people familiar with the plans say that General Motors, Ford, and Fiat Chrysler tentatively plan to restart some produce at US factors on May 18, following talks with United Auto Workers leaders and the office of Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D). The people said that the companies are working with the union on creating safety protocols for reducing workers' exposure risk. However, the Detroit News (4/27, Noble, 825K) reports Fiat Chrysler announced the indefinite delay of plans to resume vehicle production in North America starting May 4. GM and Ford previously indefinitely delayed their restarts.

GM Hiring Workers To Build Ventilators.

The CBS Evening News (4/27, story 6, 2:40, O'Donnell, 5.63M) reported General Motors is hiring 1,000 new workers at the Kokomo, Indiana plant "to help build 30,000 ventilators by August." CBS profiled workers building the ventilators.

New York AG: Amazon May Have Violated Laws By Firing Warehouse Worker Who Lead Protest.

The New York Times (4/27, Weise, 18.61M) reports New York Attorney General Letitia James sent Amazon a letter saying the company "may have violated federal worker safety laws and New York State's whistle-blower protections" by Christopher Smalls, an employee in Amazon's Staten Island warehouse, who "agitated for more worker protections" amid the coronavirus outbreak. Amazon put Smalls on quarantine, then fired him, "saying Mr. Smalls had violated its policies by leaving his quarantine to attend the protest at the site." Lawmakers said that leaked notes from an Amazon executives meeting April 1 showing they discussed making Smalls "the face of the entire union/organizing movement" indicate Amazon "planned to 'smear'" Smalls.

Workers Allege Unjust Firings At Minnesota Amazon Fulfillment Center. The Minneapolis Star Tribune (4/27, Kumar, 1.04M) reports that workers at Amazon's fulfillment center in Shakopee, Minnesota workers "protested what they said were unjust firings of multiple workers." Workers said Faiza Osman was "fired for issues related to taking unpaid time off" and Bashir Mohamed was fired after "circulating petitions and raising concerns about safety issues." Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) sent a letter to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration requesting a "comprehensive investigation" into the firings. Additionally, at least 25 workers at the facility "walked off their shift to demand an extension of unlimited unpaid time off for workers who don't feel safe working or need to stay home during the pandemic."

Apple To Delay 2020 Flagship iPhone Production Ramp-Up.

The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Kubota, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that with the coronavirus pandemic weakening global consumer demand and disrupting manufacturing, people familiar with the changes say that Apple Inc. is pushing back by a month its flagship iPhone production ramp-up but continues to plan to release four new iPhone models later this year. The company's annual product refresh drives most iPhone sales of each year.

Airbus CEO Says Losses “May Threaten The Existence Of Our Company.”

The New York Times (4/27, 18.61M) reports that “just two months ago, Airbus had so many orders that the company’s factories were struggling to keep up. Now, with the coronavirus pandemic sapping those deals for new aircraft, the European plane maker is warning of severe financial distress and cutting back on work.” Airbus CEO Guillaume Faury is quoted as saying, “We are bleeding cash at an unprecedented speed, which may threaten the existence of our company. ... We face a severe and immediate imbalance between our revenues and costs.” According to the Times, “Before the pandemic hit, Airbus was thriving on demand from customers around the world, while rival Boeing was struggling with the grounding of its most important plane, the 737 Max,” but “now Airbus, too, is paring back output.”

Oil Traders Turning To US Vessels To Store Oil.

Reuters (4/27, Saul, Kumar) reports that, “In a sign of the energy industry's desperation for places to park petroleum amid a 30% drop in worldwide demand,” five shipping sources said that oil traders are hiring US vessels to store gasoline or ship it overseas. Such vessels are “expensive” and normally only used for domestic shipments to meet the requirements of the century-old Jones Act.

US Oil Prices Drop 25%. CNBC (4/27, Stevens, 3.62M) reports on its website that in trading on Monday, US oil prices “plunged nearly 25%...on fears that worldwide storage will soon fill as the coronavirus pandemic continues to roil demand.” According to CNBC, “West Texas Intermediate for June delivery fell 24.56%, or $4.16, to settle at $12.78 per barrel, after earlier trading as low as $11.88. International benchmark Brent crude fell 6.76% to settle at $19.99.” CNBC adds, “WTI for July delivery fell more than 14% to $18.18 while the August contract slipped more than 9% to $21.50, suggesting the Street doesn't see a meaningful recovery in the next few months.” Reuters (4/27, Kelly) says that “even as governments worldwide are taking tentative steps towards reducing restriction on movement to help economies rebound, fuel demand remains weak. Fuel demand is down 30% globally, and storage is becoming precious, with roughly 85% of worldwide onshore storage full as of last week.”

Houston Suffering Effects Of Oil Market Chaos In Addition To Pandemic. The New York Times (4/27, Fernandez, Montgomery, 18.61M) reports Houston, like many cities, is “struggling under the economic shadow of the coronavirus,” but it also has to deal with a simultaneous “collapse” in its “fundamental industry” – oil – at the same time, as cratering demand drove oil prices negative. Despite the city's economy and population having diversified in past decades, Mayor Sylvester Turner recently declared “the worst budget that the city will deal with in its history.” Some estimates predict the Houston area “may lose 200,000 to 300,000 jobs – a blow worse than the Great Recession of 2008 and 2009.”

Trump Holds News Conference After Canceling Coronavirus Task Force Briefing.

The Hill (4/27, Chalfant, Samuels, 2.98M) reports that the White House canceled a coronavirus task force briefing that had been scheduled for Monday and later announced that President Trump “would hold a news conference in the Rose Garden.” To The Hill, the Rose Garden news conference “had all the trappings of the daily White House Coronavirus Task Force press conferences, which have come under increasing criticism from Republicans who worry they are doing more political harm than good for the president.” The event, “though rebranded, felt like the briefings of old if tighter – it lasted about an hour. It all suggests Trump sees some benefit from briefings after all, and will raise questions about what's to come.”

The New York Times (4/27, Baker, 18.61M) says Trump “resumed his daily coronavirus news briefings” to “the surprise of exactly no one.” Trump “relishes the spotlight and spends hours a day watching television,” and “the idea of passing on his daily chance to get his message out turned out to be untenable despite his anger over his coverage.” The Times says the event “was on the more sedate side of the spectrum” but “even as he talked about the crisis that has killed almost as many Americans as the Vietnam War, Mr. Trump attacked ‘Sleepy Joe’ Biden, complained about being persecuted and made some of his favorite false claims.”

White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said on Fox News (4/27, 896K), “The briefings were a great opportunity for the President to directly speak to the American people. That's why millions and millions tune in to the President's briefings to see what he has to say. They recognize leadership. Leave it to the Washington Post to mischaracterize those briefings, but the American people can see for themselves a President who is leading.”

Trump Denies Responsibility For Increase In Poison Control Calls About Disinfectant Misuse.

USA Today (4/27, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports that after President Trump speculated about injecting disinfectants as a treatment for coronavirus, there has been “a spike in cases of people misusing disinfectants.” However, President Trump “said he takes no responsibility” for it. When asked about the increase, Trump said, “I can't imagine why,” and when pressed about taking responsibility, said, “No, I don't.” States, companies, and federal agencies warned against dangerous disinfectant use following Trump's comments. Michigan and New York City are among places citing increased calls to poison control on the issue.

HUD Secretary Carson said on Cheddar TV (4/27), “You have to listen to what” President Trump is saying. “He is kind of musing” about how to take advantage of UV light killing the coronavirus. “I don't think he was saying, ‘Let's put ultraviolet lights inside of people’” or

“Let's put disinfectants inside of people,” but instead, “he was saying, ‘Is this information somehow, something that we can use to help get a handle on this?’”

Scientists Concerned Trump Bleach Comments Will Invigorate Phony Elixir Fringe Movement. The New York Times (4/27, Jacobs, 18.61M) reports some scientists fear President Trump’s public statements about using disinfectants to treat the coronavirus “could breathe life into a fringe movement” in which “pseudoscientists and purveyors of phony elixirs” promote and sell bleach as a cure for medical conditions from autism to malaria. Scientists and the FDA warn of the harm and ineffectiveness of such practices.

UV Treatment Company CEO Laments Politicization In Wake Of Trump Comment. Aytu BioScience Inc CEO Josh Disbrow, in an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Disbrow, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), writes about his company’s product, Healight, which uses ultraviolet light as an antimicrobial. After President Trump’s comments about treating COVID-19 with ultraviolet light, the company has had videos pulled and its Twitter account suspended. Disbrow laments that politics is so acrimonious – and engaging online – that it crowds out data. He concludes that should his treatment pan out as helping with COVID-19 and gain FDA approval, it will help people of all parties.

Trump Questions Why “Poorly Run” Cities, States Should Be Bailed Out.

The New York Post (4/27, Bowden, 4.57M) reports that in a tweet Monday morning, President Trump “dismissed calls for the administration to open federal coffers to bailout coronavirus-stricken states, instead accusing Democratic state leaders of fiscal mismanagement.” Trump wrote, “Why should the people and taxpayers of America be bailing out poorly run states (like Illinois, as example) and cities, in all cases Democrat run and managed, when most of the other states are not looking for bailout help? I am open to discussing anything, but just asking?” Politico (4/27, Forgey, Gronewold, 4.29M) says White House economic adviser Kevin Hassett “elaborat[ed] on the president’s position in an interview” with Fox News (4/27). Hassett said, “I think that the President has said that he is not eager to go around bailing people out, but he’s willing to negotiate.”

Reuters (4/27, Ahmann, Chiacu, Heavey, Zargham) says Trump’s tweet “appeared to back” Senate Majority Leader McConnell, “who last week said on conservative talk radio he ‘would certainly be in favor of letting states enter bankruptcy.” In a separate story, Reuters (4/27, Zargham, Beech) says McConnell “on Monday predicted that Congress would approve further funding for states and cities whose budgets have been hit hard by the coronavirus pandemic.” McConnell told Fox News Radio, “There probably will be another state and local funding bill but we need to make sure that we achieve something that will go beyond simply sending out money.”

Politico (4/27, Everett, 4.29M) says McConnell “is open to cutting a deal to provide reeling states and cities with relief during the pandemic-fueled recession. But it will come at a price.” While McConnell said the next coronavirus response bill will aid local governments, he “also wants Congress to limit the liabilities of health care workers, business owners and employees from lawsuits as they reopen in the coming weeks and months.” McConnell told Politico, “We probably will do another bill. What I’m saying is it won’t just be about money. ... The next pandemic coming will be the lawsuit pandemic in the wake of this one. So we need to prevent that now when we have the opportunity to do it.”

The Washington Post (4/27, McCartney, 14.2M) says McConnell “would rather see states declare bankruptcy than give them federal aid,” and cites “officials and analysts” who say that is “a recipe for turning a potentially short recession.” In an op-ed for the New York Times (4/27, 18.61M), Jodie Adams Kirshner, a research professor at New York University’s Marron Institute of Urban Management, says McConnell’s suggestion “is a terrible idea” that will not “bring back lost jobs or shuttered businesses,” or “magically reconstruct a tax base.” As an example, Kirshner cites “Detroit’s 2013 bankruptcy and the experiences of people who endured,” which “demonstrate the limits of a bankruptcy declaration as a cure-all.” Kirshner adds that it is “important to invest in people directly.”

Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) makes a similar argument in an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M). Scott writes that while Congress has taken steps to address the economic crisis caused by the coronavirus and there is more it can do, it should not intervene to protect states like Illinois, New York, and California from bad decisions made over recent decades.

A New York Times (4/27, 18.61M) editorial says the idea of “red states propping up blue states has long been a Republican canard.” The Times says New York receives 91 cents for “every dollar in federal taxes it pays.” Connecticut “receives 84 cents for each dollar,” and New Jersey and Massachusetts “both receive 90 cents per dollar.” Meanwhile, Kentucky, McConnell’s home state, “rakes in $2.41 for every tax dollar it sends Washington,” which means Kentucky “is effectively subsidized by blue states like New York and New Jersey.” The Times argues, “Allowing state budgets to collapse is shortsighted and counterproductive. Democratic lawmakers need to hold the line in this round of relief negotiations.”

Trump: Media Has Never Been “More Vicious Or Hostile.”

In a pair of tweets Monday morning, President Trump complained that the media has never been more “vicious or hostile” even “in the midst of a National Emergency,” and again described the media as “the enemy of the people.” Trump wrote, “There has never been, in the history of our Country, a more vicious or hostile Lamestream Media than there is right now, even in the midst of a National Emergency, the Invisible Enemy!” He followed that tweet with another saying, “FAKE NEWS, THE ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE!”

Officials Say President’s Daily Brief Repeatedly Warned Of Coronavirus Pandemic.

The Washington Post (4/27, Miller, Nakashima, 14.2M) cites “current and former US officials” who say US intelligence agencies “issued warnings about the novel coronavirus in more than a dozen classified briefings prepared for President Trump in January and February, months during which he continued to play down the threat." The warnings were delivered "in issues of the President's Daily Brief," which for weeks "traced the virus's spread around the globe, made clear that China was suppressing information about the contagion's transmissibility and lethal toll, and raised the prospect of dire political and economic consequences." However, those warnings "appear to have failed to register with the president, who routinely skips reading the PDB and has at times shown little patience even for the oral summary he now takes two or three times per week, according to the officials who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss classified material."

WTimes Analysis: In Early Days Of Outbreak, Media And Politicians Were Focused On Impeachment. The Washington Times (4/27, Dinan, 492K) reports in an analysis that while "Democrats and the media accuse" the President "of being slow off the mark in confronting the COVID-19 pandemic," a "review of who said and did what and when shows few heroes inside the Beltway in the early weeks of the outbreak. The press and politicians were more consumed with phone calls to Ukraine than a virus killing people in China."

Daily Beast Analysis: Kushner's Failures Underscore Administration's Coronavirus Response.

An analysis by The Daily Beast (4/27, Bianco, Suabsaeng, 1.39M) reports that was the White House "scrambled to handle the growing coronavirus epidemic" in February, Jared Kushner "stepped into what officials described as a crucial role: forging a partnership between the private sector and the federal government so they could together contain the rapidly spreading virus." More than a month later, "administration officials, state representatives, and health-care workers say they are still searching for answers." The Daily Beast adds, "Kushner's failures were, to some degree, predictable," but they "underscore the larger shortcomings of the administration's handling of the pandemic: the pursuit of a resolution to the crisis has often been defined by the search for a silver bullet or overwhelmed by the whims and interests of the president."

Emergency Spending Oversight Panel Names IG As Executive Director.

Politico (4/27, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee, "a council of inspectors general that went dark" after President Trump "removed the top coronavirus relief watchdog earlier this month, resurfaced Monday, naming a top staffer to oversee the government's pandemic response and launching a website that will catalog the IGs' efforts." The "panel of two dozen federal inspectors general charged with coordinating work to investigate the coronavirus relief effort, named Robert Westbrooks, a veteran inspector general, as its executive director on Monday." According to Politico, Westbrooks, "the inspector general of a massive federal retirement benefit program, has held senior watchdog positions" at the Small Business Administration, Transportation Department, US Postal Service, and National Archives.

Coalition: Vaccine Could Potentially Be Available Later This Year.

Bloomberg (4/27, Paton, 4.73M) reports that a coronavirus vaccine "could be available as early as this year for vulnerable groups such as health-care workers, even faster than initially thought," according to a group leading the global development effort. The Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations, "which is funding nine different coronavirus vaccine projects, has previously suggested a shot could be ready within 12 to 18 months, an already ambitious target." Richard Hatchett, the head of the Oslo-based organization, told reporters Monday, "These are all things we are looking at now as potential opportunities to perhaps deliver vaccines even faster than the 12 to 18 months we were discussing."

Oxford Researchers Say Vaccine Could Be Available In September. The New York Times (4/27, Kirkpatrick, 18.61M), meanwhile, reports that in the "worldwide race for a vaccine to stop the coronavirus, the laboratory sprinting fastest is at Oxford University." While "most other teams have had to start with small clinical trials of a few hundred participants to demonstrate safety," scientists at Oxford's Jenner Institute "had a running start on a vaccine, having proved in previous trials that similar inoculations – including one last year against an earlier coronavirus – were harmless to humans. That has enabled them to leap ahead and schedule tests of their new coronavirus vaccine involving more than 6,000 people by the end of next month." The Oxford researchers "now say that with an emergency approval from regulators, the first few million doses of their vaccine could be available by September" if it proves to be effective.

US, China In Race To Discover Vaccine. The Washington Examiner (4/27, Doyle, 448K) reports the US and China are "locked in a race to develop a coronavirus vaccine, with global influence and the power to inoculate their populations first on the line." China "quickly followed the US last month in announcing clinical trials for an experimental vaccine," and development in China "has already been militarized. President Xi Jinping demanded faster progress as he visited the Academy of Military Medical Sciences" last month.

CDC Expands List Of Possible Coronavirus Symptoms.

The New York Times (4/27, Belluck, 18.61M) reports the CDC "has expanded its list of possible symptoms of the coronavirus, a step that reflects the broad variation and unpredictability in the way the illness can affect individual patients." The agency's website now mentions "possible indicators of [COVID-19], the infection caused by the coronavirus," may include "chills, repeated shaking with chills, muscle pain, headache, sore throat, and new loss of taste or smell." Previously, it "listed just three symptoms: fever, cough and shortness of breath." The Washington Post (4/27, Fritz, Judkis, 14.2M) says the additions "confirm what patients and doctors have been reporting anecdotally for weeks. In particular, the loss of taste or smell has been known to appear in patients since at least mid-March."

Researchers Studying Whether Heartburn Drug Helps With COVID-19.

ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 4, 1:45, Muir, 11.02M) reported that Northwell Health in New York is examine whether famotidine, the active ingredient in the heartburn treatment Pepcid, could treat COVID-19. ABC's Eva Pilgrim added that doctors "are giving the drug intravenously to some patients in a study, coupled with hydroxychloroquine, that controversial anti-malaria drug." However, while the "drug is considered to be generally safe, researchers warn you should not go out and buy the drug for home treatment of the virus" and that "they don't know yet if it works."

WPost Analysis: Early US Coronavirus Deaths May Have Been Underestimated.

The Washington Post (4/27, Brown, Tran, Reinhard, Ulmanu, 14.2M) reports that the US "recorded an estimated 15,400 excess deaths" in the early weeks of the coronavirus pandemic. The Post says an analysis of federal data conducted "by a research team led by the Yale School of Public Health," found that the total is "nearly two times as many as were publicly attributed" to COVID-19 at the time. Those "excess deaths – the number beyond what would normally be expected for that time of year – occurred during March and through April 4, a time when 8,128 coronavirus deaths were reported." The Post says the analysis "suggests that the deaths announced in the weeks leading up to April 4, based on reports from state public health departments, failed to capture the full impact of the pandemic."

Barr Orders Prosecutors To Look For State, Local Anti-Pandemic Measures To Challenge.

The Washington Times (4/27, Mordock, 492K) reports Attorney General Barr ordered US attorneys "to pursue legal action against governors whose efforts to prevent the spread of the coronavirus infringe upon Americans' civil rights." Barr instituted Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights Eric Dreiband and US Attorney for the Eastern District of Michigan Matthew Schneider as overseers of "the department's efforts to monitor state and local policies."

The Washington Post (4/27, Zapotosky, 14.2M) reports Barr directed prosecutors to "be on the lookout" for state and local coronavirus-related restrictions that might run afoul of the Constitution." The Post says Barr has been "outspoken" in his "wariness of aggressive restrictions" seeking to stem the pandemic.

Cuomo, Trump Discussed Retaining Temporary NYC Hospitals In Case Of Second Wave.

CNBC (4/27, Breuninger, Feuer, 3.62M) reports on its website that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) indicated that he spoke with President Trump Monday "about keeping temporary health-care facilities in New York running in case the coronavirus flares up in a second wave later this year." Cuomo is quoted as saying, "We're now talking about the possibility of a second wave of the COVID virus or COVID combining with regular flu season in September, which could be problematic again for the hospital capacity. ... The facilities that were built, I spoke to the President about leaving them in place until we get through the flu season. God forbid we need extra capacity again." CNBC says that "with the help of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, New York City quickly converted numerous buildings and areas into makeshift hospitals to help health-care workers from being overwhelmed by the flood of coronavirus patients."

New York ER Doctor Takes Own Life.

Stephanie Gosk reported on NBC Nightly News (4/27, story 3, 2:05, Holt, 8.35M) that Lorna Breen, an emergency room doctor at New York's Presbyterian Hospital, committed suicide. While Breen survived COVID-19, her father said, in NBC's words, that "the grueling work" of caring for those affect by the pandemic "took a grave toll." Gosk added, "for many health workers, the coronavirus experience has been more difficult and more emotional" than dealing with the "life and death struggles [that] are part of the job at any hospital."

US Northern Command Shifts To Stabilizing Effort In Fight Against Coronavirus.

The Washington Times (4/27, Scarborough, 492K) reports that "a Pentagon source" said Monday that US Northern Command, "which is overseeing the military role for fighting COVID-19, has shifted to a stabilizing effort with an eye to scaling down anti-virus support activities." According to the source, NorthCom had been in "phase 3, respond" and has ordered a move to phase 4. The Times cites the order as a possible "sign that the country is turning the corner on blunting the pandemic."

At Least 955 USS Roosevelt Crew Members Have Tested Positive For COVID-19.

The Washington Times (4/27, Meier, 492K) reports that according to the US Navy, "at least 955 crew members aboard the U.S.S. Theodore Roosevelt have tested positive for COVID-19." Fourteen crew members have recovered as of Monday.

Coronavirus Cases Aboard USS Kidd Rise To 47.

The Washington Times (4/27, Meier, 492K) reports that 47 crewmembers aboard the Navy destroyer the USS Kidd have tested positive for the coronavirus, an increase from 33 cases on Saturday. As of Monday, 45 percent of the ship's crew has been tested.

Stars And Stripes (4/27, Kenney, 30K) reports that "the first sailor was evacuated from the ship four days ago." The amphibious assault ship the USS Makin Island "is providing medical support for the Kidd while at sea." Stars and Stripes says 15 sailors from the Kidd "have been transported to the Makin Island due to persistent symptoms but none of them are in intensive care or on ventilators, according to the Navy."

Man Recovers From COVID-19 After 32 Days On A Ventilator.

ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 10, 1:30, Muir, 11.02M) reported that after 32 days on a ventilator, Jim Bello, a 49-year-old from Hingham, Massachusetts, recovered from COVID-19 and headed home from the hospital.

Drones, Smartwatches Could Help Deal With Pandemic.

NBC Nightly News (4/27, story 9, 1:50, Holt, 8.35M) reported on "how cutting edge technology is helping us deal with the pandemic's daily challenges." NBC's Tom Costello added that UPS and Google drones are delivering medical samples and prescriptions, even takeout food and toilet paper. Meanwhile, Stanford University researchers say some smart watches could provide early warnings of infections, which "could alert communities to how quickly a disease is spreading."

Fox News Cuts Ties With Diamond & Silk Over Coronavirus Conspiracy Theories.

The Daily Beast (4/27, Cartwright, 1.39M) reports, "Fox News has cut ties with MAGA vlogging superstars Diamond & Silk, who had contributed original content to the network's streaming service Fox Nation since shortly after its late 2018 launch." The "sudden split comes after the Trump-boosting siblings have come under fire for promoting conspiracy theories and disinformation about the coronavirus," including musing about "whether 5G technology was being used to infect people with coronavirus in an effort to fill 'empty' hospitals," saying they would "refuse to take any coronavirus vaccine that tech giant Bill Gates was involved in because he's pushing for 'population control,'" and "claim[ing] that the number of American coronavirus deaths has been inflated to make [President] Trump look bad."

WPost Blasts Governments As Negligent On COVID-19 In Elder-Care Facilities.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) laments that despite elder-care facilities seeing almost a quarter of identified US COVID-19 cases, they suffer from "government negligence and lack of transparency." Governments have largely made no effort to test inside and around such facilities, and when the disease hits one some states refuse to disclose the information. This leaves many homes unsure whether they are dealing with the virus, families unsure whether they should have their relatives in a nursing home, and hospitals transferring patients to homes with outbreaks. The Post concludes, "The government's abdication has left most nursing homes flying blind in a pandemic that has made them uniquely vulnerable."

Public Health Researchers Warn Against Punitive Enforcement Of Social Distancing.

Brandon D.I. Marshall and Abdullah Shihpar, an associate professor of epidemiology and master's degree candidate at the Brown University School of Public Health, respectively, in an op-ed in the New York Times (4/27, 18.61M), warn against using police to enforce social distancing, warning it "risks exacerbating stark inequities in our society." Like the war on drugs, punitive enforcement "will unfairly burden the black and Latinx communities that have already been hit hard by the coronavirus" while ignoring the underlying issues minority communities face. It could also lead to worse health outcomes, as minorities, out of fear of the police, forgo or delay getting groceries or medications. Instead, Marshall and Shihpar suggest alternatives to punitive enforcement such as public health officials or trained volunteers offering education to those violating social distancing. Other policies that could help include guaranteed partial wages or paid sick leave, government-distributed masks, and food deliveries to vulnerable people, all of which have been implemented abroad.

Media Analyses: High Court Signals It May Not Hear Case On Trump's Tax Records.

CNBC (4/27, Higgins, 3.62M) reports on its website that the Supreme Court yesterday "called for more arguments in two cases over whether President Donald Trump may keep his financial records shielded from congressional investigators." The court "asked the parties to the case and the Department of Justice's solicitor general to provide briefs on 'whether the political question doctrine' applies to the cases," which CNBC says "refers to the practice in which courts sometimes leave some heated issues to the political branches." CNBC adds, "The request for new briefings ahead of oral arguments in the cases next month suggests at least some justices are eyeing a potential way out of having to issue a decision in the high-profile disputes."

Mother Jones (4/27, Choma, 881K) reports the court's request was "a fancy way to say the Court wants to know whether this is a real legal question or just a political bickering match that doesn't deserve a Supreme Court decision. It was an odd request, and not one that had been widely expected – and it's not clear exactly how it would play out."

The Washington Post (4/27, Barnes, 14.2M) reports "the order from the court caught lawyers by surprise and raised at least the possibility that the justices were looking for a way to avoid deciding the case's merits," but "it may also be less dramatic than that," as "the request could reflect the interest of just one or a small group of the nine justices."

CQ Roll Call (4/27, Ruger, 154K) quotes Georgetown University Law Center professor Joshua Geltzer as saying, "It reads like an invitation to make up a way out for the Court. ... Let's hope it's not." Bloomberg (4/27, Stohr, 4.73M) says, "Should the justices say the courts lack power to hear Trump's suits over the House subpoenas, the ruling could lead to his tax returns becoming public before the November election" because "the banks and the accounting firm aren't contesting the subpoenas and have said they will comply with their legal obligations."

Attorney Says Flynn's Plea Was Coerced.

The Washington Examiner (4/27, Chaitin, 448K) reports that former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn's attorney Sidney Powell "said documents filed under seal last week could be publicly revealed as soon as Tuesday." In an interview on Fox News' Hannity Monday, Powell "said an assistant U.S. attorney assigned to the case has advised her that they're working to redact the documents that were filed under seal on Friday" so "they can be disclosed publicly either tomorrow or Wednesday." Powell said Flynn's plea was "coerced by lack of information and threat to indict his son."

Cleveland: Sullivan Likely To Allow Flynn To Withdraw His Guilty Plea. Margot Cleveland writes for The Federalist (4/27, 126K) that the case against Flynn "imploded Friday" after the US attorney for the District of Columbia "provided Flynn's legal team with documents discovered by an outside review of the Flynn prosecution – documents withheld for years." In addition, Powell, "filed new documents in the case, revealing a secret 'lawyers' understanding' not to prosecute Flynn's son if the retired lieutenant general pleaded guilty." Cleveland adds that it "seems unfathomable that Judge [Emmet] Sullivan will reject Flynn's motion to withdraw his guilty plea. But Sullivan should do more: He should dismiss the charges against Flynn to make clear that outrageous prosecutorial misconduct will not be tolerated."

Steele Met With Lawyers For DNC, Clinton Campaign.

The Daily Caller (4/27, Ross, 716K) reports that Christopher Steele told a British court last month that a lawyer representing the DNC and the Clinton campaign provided him "with information in 2016 regarding an alleged secret communications channel between the Trump Organization and a Russian bank." The "now-debunked tip, from Perkins Coie lawyer Michael Sussmann, set off a chain of events that led to Steele publishing a Sept. 14, 2016 memo accusing the founders of the bank, Alfa Bank, of having 'illicit' ties to Vladimir Putin, according to a court transcript obtained by the Daily Caller News Foundation." According to the transcript, a week after writing the memo, Steele "had another meeting with Sussmann's colleague, Marc Elias."

Graham Seeks DOJ Documents That "Undercut" Steele Source. The Washington Examiner (4/27, Dunleavy, 448K) reports Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham has asked the Justice Department "to hand over documents that he said 'undercut' one of Steele's sources. In a two-page letter to Attorney General Barr Monday, Graham asked that his committee "be provided with five tranches of still-classified documents referenced in DOJ Inspector General Michael Horowitz's report on the FBI's Russia investigation." Graham asked for "all records related to the FBI's interviews with Steele's primary subsource in January, March, and May 2017 including the 'lengthy written summary' of a January 2017 interview written by FBI agents dubbed 'Supervisory Intel Analyst' and 'Case Agent 1,'" as well as "the two-page 'Intelligence Memorandum' provided to Crossfire Hurricane leader Bill Priestap by the supervisory intel analyst in late 2017, which discussed 'aspects of the Primary Sub-source's interview' that raised red flags about Steele."

Trump Jr.: Schiff Is "Trying To Hide" Witness Interview Transcripts From Russia Probe.

The Washington Examiner (4/27, Chaitin, 448K) report that in a tweet Sunday, Donald Trump Jr. "drew attention to reports that say" House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff "is blocking the release of witness interview transcripts from the panel's investigation into Russian election interference." Trump Jr. "raised the possibility that the California Democrat is 'trying to protect' prominent figures from the Obama administration and the FBI's investigation into potential ties between the Trump campaign and Russia." He wrote, "Adam Schiff is desperately trying to hide these transcripts (including mine) from the American people. Who do you think he's trying to protect? Me or Susan Rice, Samantha Power, Sally Yates and Andy McCabe?"

Whitaker Says Book Will Detail DOJ Plot To Sabotage Trump.

The Washington Times (4/27, Mordock, 492K) reports a book due to be released next month by former acting Attorney General Matthew Whitaker will detail what Whitaker "says was a Justice Department plot to sabotage President Trump." In "Above the Law: The Inside Story of How the Justice Department Will Try to Subvert President Trump," Whitaker says he will reveal how former FBI Director James Comey "and other top Justice Department figures openly worked against Mr. Trump and how a so-called 'deep state' of Washington insiders use the media to achieve its goals." The Times adds that the book "will also reportedly disclose how former special counsel Robert Mueller quickly concluded members of the Trump campaign did not collude with Russia but kept the investigation active 'as an act of political subversion.'"

Wolf, Morgan Say Trump's Immigration Suspension Is "Reasonable."

Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (4/27), "The executive order temporarily suspends the entry of new immigrants coming into the US. These are the individuals that would be able to work in the US, compete with American for jobs, basically any job in any industry. So, what the President did is he temporarily suspended that for 60 days. It's a reasonable, it's a short term measure designed to make sure that we get Americans back into American jobs as we come out of a pandemic and the economy keeps rolling."

Acting CBP Commissioner Morgan said on WMAL-FM Washington (4/27), "It really is a reasonable, common-sense first step. ... The President has been very clear from the first days of the Administration that protecting the American people is his number one priority, and that includes protecting American jobs...although we don't know the exact numbers because it really depends on the new migrants, how many would come in or would attempt to come in. ... This may not encompass millions of jobs but it does encompass enough that it really will help go towards that economic recovery, at least to give it a jump start."

Projections For Border Wall Construction Reduced By 22 Miles.

The Washington Times (4/27, A1, Dinan, 492K) reports that President Trump's border wall "just got 22 miles shorter." The $15 billion Trump "has won from Congress or siphoned from other Pentagon accounts" can build 731 miles of wall, "which would be more border fence than every previous president combined has built," but is "22 miles shorter than the Department of Homeland Security and the Army Corps of Engineers were projecting at the beginning of April." John B. Mennell, assistant chief at CBP headquarters, "said the earlier, larger assessment was made based on rough order of magnitude estimates for one $3.8 billion chunk of money in the Defense Department's drug interdiction account, projected to cover 177 miles of wall in segments from San Diego to Del Rio, Texas. Once specific projects were finalized, though, they had to recalculate how far the $3.8 billion would stretch."

Senate Democrats Call On DeVos To Grant DACA Recipients Coronavirus College Assistance.

The Washington Times (4/27, Dinan, 492K) reports that Senate Democrats on Monday sent a letter to Education Secretary DeVos demanding that the Trump Administration grant "'Dreamers' in college the same access to federal coronavirus assistance that citizens are entitled to." In a letter to the Education Department, more than two dozen senators wrote "DACA recipients attending institutions of higher education across the country face challenges like other students, many with the added burden of supporting their parents and siblings or being the first in their families to attend college. ... These students should not be excluded from critical emergency financial aid. Indeed, those who are especially vulnerable to economic hardship are exactly whom these funds were designed to help."

US Imposes New Restrictions On Semiconductor Exports To China.

Reuters (4/27, Freifeld) reports that the Commerce Department announced yesterday that "it will impose new restrictions on exports to China to keep semiconductor production equipment and other technology away from Beijing's military." Reuters adds, "The new rules will require licenses for US companies to sell certain items to companies in China that support the military, even if the products are for civilian use. They also do away with a civilian exception that allows certain U.S. technology to be exported without a license, if the use is not connected to the military." Commerce Secretary Ross issued a statement reading, "It is important to consider the ramifications of doing business with countries that have histories of diverting goods purchased from US companies for military applications."

US Biggest Spender As Global Military Expenditures Approach $2T.

Stars And Stripes (4/27, Vandiver, 30K) reports the US "continues to drive growth in global military spending, which saw its largest annual increase in a decade as European countries also ramped up expenditures, a new report on defense spending said." Global military spending "rose by 3.6% year-on-year to reach $1.9 trillion in 2019, the highest level since the 2008 financial crisis gutted many military budgets," said the report released Sunday by the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute. Since 2010, global military spending has increased by 7.2%, with the US "by far the biggest spender."

Supreme Court: Insurers Can Collect $12B From Government To Cover ACA Losses.

The AP (4/27, Sherman) reports that the Supreme Court yesterday "ruled...that insurance companies can collect $12 billion from the federal government to cover their losses in the early years of the health care law." Insurers "are entitled to the money under a provision of the 'Obamacare' health law that promised the companies a financial cushion for losses they might incur by selling coverage to people in the marketplaces created by the health care law, the justices said by an 8-1 vote." The Washington Times (4/27, Swoyer, 492K) recounts that "Congress later passed legislation to limit the government's financial responsibility," and "both the Obama and Trump administrations had argued that measure means the government didn't have to pay the insurers."

However, Politico (4/27, Luthi, 4.29M) reports, "the high court agreed with insurers that the congressional spending restrictions didn't release the government from its original promise to fund" the Affordable Care Act program, as "the court said Congress had created 'a rare money-mandating obligation' that later appropriations language couldn't repeal." To USA Today (4/27, Wolf, 10.31M), "the decision represents the high court's views on Congress' power of the purse: Lawmakers cannot promise funding in legislation and then disavow that pledge."

The Washington Post (4/27, Barnes, 14.2M) quotes Justice Sonia Sotomayor, who authored the majority opinion, as saying "the decision reflects 'a principle as old as the nation itself: The government should honor its obligations.'" Justice Samuel Alito, "the lone dissenter," wrote "the court should not provide a 'bailout' for the companies who decided to participate in the ACA's 'risk corridor' program, which has since ended." The New York Times (4/27, Liptak, 18.61M) and Wall Street Journal (4/27, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that the ruling illustrates the ACA's staggering price tag for taxpayers, and predicts the court's decision will lead to an increase in lawsuits and demands for government payments. On the other hand, the Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) editorializes that the ruling "caps a run of Republican Obamacare sabotage that turned out to be not just counterproductive but also expensive and wasteful. ... This is just one more bad result that could have been avoided if Republicans had tried to fix and adjust, rather than cripple, the Affordable Care Act."

Supreme Court Dismisses Challenge To Repealed New York City Gun Restriction.

The New York Times (4/27, Liptak, 18.61M) reports that the Supreme Court yesterday "said...that it would not decide what would have been its first decision on the scope of the Second Amendment in almost a decade, finding that New York City's repeal of the gun control regulation under challenge had made the matter moot." The Times adds that "when the court agreed to hear the case, the possibility of such a ruling alarmed gun control proponents, who urged New York officials to repeal the regulation." New York City "did so, and state lawmakers later enacted a law that seemed to make it impossible for city officials to change their minds."

The Washington Post (4/27, Barnes, 14.2M) reports that the case "involves now-rescinded restrictions unique to New York City about whether citizens who have a license to keep a gun in their homes may transport them to firing ranges outside the city or to a second home in the state." The dismissal of the case "disappoint[ed] Second Amendment activists and several conservative justices, who said the court had been manipulated." The Post also reports that "the decision dismissing the case was unsigned, but three justices filed a dissent. 'By incorrectly dismissing this case as moot, the court permits our docket to be manipulated in a way that should not be countenanced,' wrote Justice Samuel A. Alito Jr., joined by Justices Clarence Thomas and Neil M. Gorsuch." The AP (4/27, Sherman) indicates that "other guns cases remain in the high court's pipeline, including whether gun owners have a constitutional to carry their weapons in public."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes the court's ruling as an abandonment of its constitutional responsibility, musing that Chief Justice John Roberts may have acted out of fear of Democrats' anger. To the Journal, yesterday's decision cements Roberts' image as a very political chief justice.

Schools Consider Changes For Reopening Amid Pandemic.

The Washington Post (4/27, Meckler, Strauss, Balingit, 14.2M) reports that with pressure "building to reopen the nation's schools," the learning environment may change greatly from before the pandemic. Adaptations may include "include one-way hallways, kids and teachers in masks," lunch inside classrooms, half-empty buses, student temperatures taken prior to entering schools, and students switching between distance and in-person learning in shifts. However, "many teachers are scared of going back too early, and teachers unions are cautioning against it," concerned about reopening before it is safe and some believe "it would be nearly impossible to prevent virus transmission in a school." Feasibility also is an issue, with older buildings lacking many sinks for hand washing or even soap. Poor districts also need children to share supplies from crayons to calculators, allowing transmission of disease.

Think Tank Study Criticizes Common Core.

The Washington Examiner (4/27, Mastrangelo, 448K) reports a Pioneer Institute study said that since 2013 and "the adoption of Common Core curriculum in schools," reading and math scores have seen an "historic" dip. Pioneer Institute Executive Director Jim Stergios said in a statement, "The proponents of this expensive, legally questionable policy initiative have much to answer for."

NYTimes Analysis: McEnany Defending Trump's Pandemic Response.

The New York Times (4/27, Williamson, 18.61M) reports that "just two weeks into her new job," White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany's "energetic spinning of the administration's struggle against the coronavirus has earned her undying enmity on social media but some grudging respect for her sheer doggedness." Like her predecessor, Stephanie Grisham, the Times notes McEnany "has not held a news briefing, but her defense of her boss – and her castigations of the press – appear to be unperturbed by his shifting narratives, breaks from logic and flights of fantasy." McEnany "appears regularly on Fox News and Twitter, bashing the news media and defending the president on his coronavirus response, while other Republicans increasingly decline to do so."

Senate, House To Reconvene On May 4.

Politico (4/27, Everett, 4.29M) reports that the Senate will reconvene on May 4 "after an extended recess amid the coronavirus pandemic," though "it's not clear whether the House will follow." However, the Washington Post (4/27, Werner, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that House Majority Leader Hoyer "told Democrats on a conference call that the House, too, would be reconvening on Monday."

Axios (4/27, Allassan, 521K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell "said that senators will 'modify routines' to continue their work in 'in ways that are smart and safe,'" and "argued that it was 'essential' for the Senate to return if it was also essential for 'doctors, nurses, health care workers, truck drivers, grocery-store workers and many other brave Americans to keep carefully manning their own duty stations.'" The Washington Times (4/27, Dinan, 492K) and The Hill (4/27, Carney, 2.98M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Schiff Concerned Trump "Will Try To Disenfranchise Millions" Of Voters In 2020 Election.

The New York Post (4/27, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports that House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff "said he worries more that President Trump will try to keep 'millions of Americans' from voting safely in November than he does that the commander-in-chief would try to delay election day. Asked on MSNBC Sunday about Joe Biden's concern that Trump would try to delay the November election because of coronavirus," Schiff said the President "did not have the authority to do so." Said Schiff, "I'm more worried he will try to disenfranchise millions of Americans than that he will try to put off the election. He's already talking down absentee voting, making false claims about the reliability of absentee voting even when he votes by absentee himself."

Trump Campaign Blasts NRSC Leadership Over “Don’t Defend Trump” Memo.

Politico (4/27, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports that the National Republican Senatorial Committee this month “circulated a memo with shocking advice to GOP candidates on responding to coronavirus: ‘Don’t defend Trump, other than the China Travel Ban – attack China.’ The Trump campaign was furious.” Yesterday, “Trump political adviser Justin Clark told NRSC executive director Kevin McLaughlin that any Republican candidate who followed the memo’s advice shouldn’t expect the active support of the reelection campaign and risked losing the support of Republican voters. McLaughlin responded by saying he agreed with the Trump campaign’s position and, according to two” sources, “clarified that the committee wasn’t advising candidates to not defend Trump over his response.” Politico asserts, “The episode illustrates how the Trump political apparatus demands – and receives – fealty from fellow Republicans and moves aggressively to tamp down on any perceived dissent within the GOP.”

Ohio Poll: Biden Leads Trump 45%-44%.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (4/27, Richardson, 895K) reports that a Baldwin Wallace University poll of 797 Ohio voters, taken April 20-25, shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 45%-44%. The article says, “The close race in the poll appears to be a function of Trump losing support rather than Biden gaining it. In the March Great Lakes Poll, Trump led Biden 47% to 43%. That’s backed up by the president’s slightly worse approval rating than last month. In the latest poll, 49.4% approved of Trump’s job performance while 48.7% disapproved. In the Great Lakes Poll from March, 51% of registered voters Ohio said they approved of Trump’s job performance while 46.1% said they disapproved.” The Hill (4/27, Greenwood, 2.98M) also reports on the poll.

National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 44%-38%. USA Today (4/27, Page, 10.31M) reports on a USA Today/Suffolk University national poll of 1,000 voters, taken April 21-25, that shows Biden leading Trump 44%-38%. In a similar poll taken in December, Trump led Biden 44%-41%, according to USA Today. In the new poll, Trump’s “backing in the GOP remains rock-solid: More than nine of 10 Republicans say they will vote for him. But among independents, his standing has plummeted by 18 percentage points since the poll taken in December, to 27% from 45%.” Biden has “gained significant 8 points among independents, but one in three now say they are undecided or would vote for a third-party candidate.” The President “also has lost support by double digits among men, a group that has been part of his political base. While men still back Trump over Biden 46% to 35%, that’s a narrower advantage than in December, when it was 56% to 30%. Women now support Biden 53% to 30%.”

Pelosi, Jayapal Endorse Biden.

The AP (4/27) reports that Joe Biden on Monday “renewed his party unification efforts...with bookend endorsements from” House Speaker Pelosi and Rep. Pramila Jayapal (D-WA), co-chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, which “sometimes battles the speaker from the left.” The AP says “the twin announcements...highlight Biden’s effort to avoid a repeat of the 2016 presidential election, when tensions between establishment Democrats and the party’s progressive flank hobbled Hillary Clinton.” The AP adds that the CPC “want[s] sweeping expansion of the federal government’s role in the economy, notably through a single-payer ‘Medicare for All’ insurance plan that Biden and Pelosi do not favor.”

USA Today (4/27, Cummings, 10.31M) reports that in a video statement, Pelosi called “Biden a ‘battle-tested leader who will fight for the people.’” In addition, Pelosi “said that during the coronavirus pandemic, Biden – who has offered his perspective on how to manage the outbreak in media interviews and videos filmed at his home – ‘has been a voice of reason and resilience, with a clear path to lead us out of this crisis.’”

The New York Times (4/27, Astor, 18.61M) reports that “as many of her rank-and-file members fretted in February about the down-ballot implications of nominating” Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), “then the front-runner, Ms. Pelosi said she believed Democrats would ‘wholeheartedly support’ whomever the party nominated.” However, the Times says that “at the same time, she was laying the groundwork to distinguish House Democrats from Mr. Sanders if he won the nomination.”

The Washington Post (4/27, Scherer, 14.2M) reports that “earlier this year, when many moderate Democrats in the House feared Sanders would win the nomination and jeopardize their seats, Pelosi asked for party unity, even as she made clear that the House would not necessarily run” on Sanders’ policy platform. Reuters (4/27, Singh) says Pelosi’s endorsement “comes at an opportune time for Biden, who has struggled to maintain a high profile during the COVID-19 pandemic and sustain the momentum he had built up in his lightning-quick run toward becoming the Democratic nominee.”

“Two More Sources” Corroborate Parts Of Reade Assault Allegation Against Biden.

Writing for Business Insider (4/27, 3.67M), Rich McHugh says that in March, when Tara Reade, a former aide to then-Sen. Joe Biden, accused Biden “of sexually assaulting her in 1993,” Reade’s brother and a anonymous friend “came forward to say that” she “told them of the incident shortly after it allegedly occurred.” However, “two more sources have come forward to corroborate certain details about Reade’s claims.” McHugh writes That “a former neighbor of Reade’s” – says “that Reade disclosed details about the alleged assault to her in the mid-1990s. ‘This happened, and I know it did because I remember talking about it,’ Lynda LaCasse” said. The second “source, Lorraine Sanchez, who worked with Reade in the office of a California state senator in the mid-’90s, told Insider that she recalls Reade complaining at the time that her former boss in Washington, DC, had sexually harassed her, and that she had been fired after raising concerns.”

The Washington Post (4/27, Viser, 14.2M) reports, "Some allies of President Trump pointed Monday to new claims by a woman who said she was told about sexual assault allegations against...Biden decades ago, renewing attention to questions about [his] past behavior. ... Apparent corroboration surfaced this week for elements of two" of Reade's allegations, "one involving harassment and the second a sexual assault." The Post highlights the comments LaCasse and Sanchez made to Business Insider and an apparent call made by Reade's mother to Larry King Live in 1993, in which she referred to "unspecified 'problems' her daughter was having with her employer, whom she called 'a prominent senator.'" The Post adds that Donald Trump Jr. "has repeatedly tweeted about the accusations against Biden in recent days. On Monday afternoon, he retweeted the Business Insider story."

Drawing from the Business Insider story, Townhall (4/27, Baumann, 177K) quotes LaCasse as saying of Reade, "I remember her saying, here was this person that she was working for and she idolized him. And he kind of put her up against a wall. And he put his hand up her skirt and he put his fingers inside her. She felt like she was assaulted, and she really didn't feel there was anything she could do." Townhall says that LaCasse "is a Democrat and could face political repercussions for speaking out against the presumed Democratic nominee. 'I personally am a Democrat, a very strong Democrat,' she told Business Insider. 'And I'm for Biden, regardless. But still I have to come out and say this.'"

The Federalist (4/27, Justice, 126K) reports on the comments of LaCasse and Sanchez, drawing from the Business Insider article, and adds that "with multiple sources corroborating Reade's claims, the former Senate aide's story checks out to be far more credible than allegations lodged against Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh just a year and a half ago. Kavanaugh's primary accuser, Christine Blasey Ford, failed to provide any evidence that the two had even ever met, let alone bring forward a single witness to back up her story that apparently took place more than 30 years ago. Even Ford's lifelong friend, Leland Keyser could not offer evidence to support Ford's claims." Breitbart (4/27, Caplan, 673K) and the New York Post (4/27, Lapin, 4.57M) also report on the Business Insider story.

The Hill (4/27, Carney, 2.98M) reports that Senate Majority Leader McConnell "on Monday accused Democrats and the media of a double standard in their response to a sexual assault allegation against...Biden. McConnell, during a Fox News Radio interview, was asked to compare the response from national Democrats and reporters to the handling of sexual assault allegations made against [Kavanaugh] during his 2018 confirmation." McConnell replied, "At the very least it's pretty obvious that the same people who were outraged about...unproven allegations against Justice Kavanaugh when he was in high school seem to have little or no interest, or certainly not as much interest, in suggestions of improper behavior by an adult who is in the Senate. I think these things ought to be dealt with symmetrically."

On its website, Fox News (4/27, Re, 27.59M) reports, "Last year, it took just a day for...Biden to release an in-person video directly addressing accusations of inappropriate contact with multiple women. Now, more than a month after...Reade publicly accused him of sexual assault in a podcast on March 25, Biden himself remains silent – and even though he has conducted numerous interviews, no one in the media has asked Biden about the matter, either."

CNN's Cillizza: Biden Needs To Publicly Address Reade's Allegations. In an online analysis for CNN (4/27, 83.16M), Chris Cillizza says, "At the core of Biden's messaging in this campaign is the need to bring respect and dignity back into the White House and the country, to rid America off the cynicism and hypocrisy of Trump's presidency, to expunge the idea that the President doesn't have to follow the rules. ... Given both his pledge to do better than Trump...and accusations of improper touching that have surfaced in the past, the allegations by Reade are not the sort of thing Biden can or should be allowed to deny via a senior female campaign staffer. Reade's allegation needs to be directly addressed by the candidate himself."

The Cut's Traister: Woman Biden Picks For VP "Will Wind Up Drinking From A Poisoned Chalice." Writing for The Cut (4/27, 856K), Rebecca Traister highlights the corroborating statements made by Reade's former neighbor and her former co-worker in the Business Insider article and the 1993 call made to Larry King Live, and adds, "Such strong pieces of corroboration should surely imperil Biden's position at the top of the ticket, though it remains to be seen whether... there is any chance that they will. And part of what's sickeningly clear is that if Biden remains the Democratic nominee, whichever woman gets the nod to be his running mate will wind up drinking from a poisoned chalice. Because the promise to choose a woman ensures that whoever she is, she will be forced to answer – over and over again – for Biden's treatment of other women, including the serious allegations of assault leveled by...Reade."

Sanders Camp, Allies Rip Decision To Cancel New York Presidential Primary.

The New York Post (4/27, Bowden, 4.57M) reports the campaign of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) on Monday "condemned New York's unprecedented decision to cancel its June 23 Democratic primary – calling for the Empire State to lose its delegates if the move isn't overturned. In an email to supporters, senior advisor Jeff Weaver said the decision by the state Board of Elections was an 'outrage' and a 'blow to American democracy,' and called for the Democratic National Committee to overrule it." Weaver is quoted as writing in the email, "Just last week Vice President Biden warned the American people that President Trump could use the current crisis as an excuse to postpone the November election. Well, he now has a precedent thanks to New York state."

The New York Times (4/27, Saul, Corasaniti, 18.61M) reports that the cancellation of the presidential primary prompted "an immediate backlash" from the Sanders campaign "and his legion of progressive supporters who had hoped to amass convention delegates and help shape the party's platform in August." In announcing the decision, "the Democratic chair of the New York State Board of Elections called the primary 'essentially a beauty contest' that the state could ill-afford in the face of the coronavirus pandemic. The vote followed a decision this month by Mr. Sanders to suspend his presidential campaign, effectively conceding the Democratic nomination to" Joe Biden.

The Washington Post (4/27, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports that Weaver "suggested that instead of terminating the primary, New York should have changed it to an entirely vote-by-mail system to alleviate safety concerns about voting during the coronavirus pandemic. 'If this is not remedied, New York should lose all its delegates to the 2020 Democratic National Convention and there should be a broader review by the Democratic Party of New York's checkered pattern of voter disenfranchisement,' Weaver said." The AP (4/27, Villeneuve, Peltz) reports, "The move sets up a potential showdown with the national party and Sanders over the New York delegation to Democrats' summer convention, scheduled for the week of Aug. 17 in Milwaukee."

The New York Daily News (4/27, Sommerfeldt, Slattery, 2.52M) reports, "The decision to boot Sanders, made possible by language tucked into the state budget, strips New York Democrats of their chance to choose delegates to represent the state at the Democratic National Committee convention in August, progressives argue. 'New York's Democratic Party just sent a clear message to progressives that their voice and their values do not matter,' said New York Working Families Party State Director Sochie Nnaemeka. 'Voting for Bernie Sanders would have allowed New York's progressive voters to send progressive delegates to the convention so we could have a voice in shaping the Democratic Party platform that we know we need at this moment: Medicare for All, a real response to the climate disaster that awaits us, and student debt relief.'"

USA Today (4/27, Campbell, 10.31M) reports, "The decision to cancel the primary was made possible by a clause inserted into New York's state budget, which [Gov. Andrew] Cuomo and state lawmakers approved early this month amid the growing coronavirus outbreak. The clause allowed a party's election commissioners to remove names from the presidential primary ballot if the candidate publicly dropped out of the race or otherwise asked for their name to be removed. ... Asked Monday about the election commissioners' decision on the Democratic primary, Cuomo said he doesn't want to 'second guess' it. 'I know there are a lot of election employees...who are nervous about conducting elections,' said Cuomo, a Biden supporter. 'But I'll leave it up to the Board of Elections.'"

Politico (4/27, Montellaro, 4.29M) reports, "The move infuriated Sanders supporters and cut directly against the wishes of the campaign, which called on the DNC to step in and overturn the decision. The national party doesn't have the ability to force a state elections agency to make changes, but it could threaten the state party with delegate penalties." The Hill (4/27, Klar, 2.98M) reports that Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) on Monday ripped the move, saying in a tweet, "It is completely wrong for the BOE to cancel New York's Presidential Primary. This decision is not informed by public health: the state is still holding elections for every other seat that day, & so far the only way your ballot will 100% be counted in NY is to vote in person!" Reuters (4/27, Lewis, Hunnicutt) and Fox News (4/27, Phillips, 27.59M) also report on the story.

Sweet: Duckworth Among Those Viewed As Possible Biden VP Pick.

In her Chicago Sun-Times (4/27, 875K) column, Lynn Sweet says that with Joe Biden "poised to formally kick off his vice president search this week," Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) is "among those mentioned as a potential contender. Biden has already promised to pick a female running mate." Sweet lists "11 women Biden may be considering," and adds, "In handicapping stories, the Washington Post listed Duckworth 8th on their list, and in CNN's weekly rankings, Duckworth has been 6th and 7th dropping to 8th last week." Of Duckworth, Sweet says that she "is in play but a long shot."

Tuesday's MD7 Special Election To Test State's Plan For Mail-In Balloting.

The Washington Post (4/27, Portnoy, Wiggins, 14.2M) reports that Maryland will "carry out the state's first mostly mail-in election" on Tuesday, a special election in MD7 to fill the seat of late Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-MD). The Post says the election will "help officials work out any kinks in the process before the large-scale primary on June 2, which will include the presidential race and crowded contests for Baltimore mayor, City Council seats and congressional offices."

Netflix To Release Michelle Obama Documentary On May 6.

Michelle Obama took to Twitter yesterday to announce, "I'm excited to share that on May 6, @Netflix will release BECOMING, a documentary directed by Nadia Hallgren that shares the stories of the amazing people I met after the release of my memoir. During this difficult time, I hope you'll find some inspiration and joy in this film." Says Essence Magazine (4/27, Essence, 6.95M), "If you were one of the unlucky ones and didn't score a highly coveted ticket to Michelle Obama's book tour, then you're in good company." But "don't worry, ladies. Our Forever First Lady made sure we didn't miss anything because she documented the entire experience for a new documentary coming to Netflix next month."

The Hollywood Reporter (4/27, Feinberg, 1.89M) recounts that "the doc, which marks the feature directorial debut of cinematographer Nadia Hallgren (Trouble the Water), shares the name of the former first lady's best-selling 2018 memoir and recounts some of the same history of her life." However, "it also picks up where that story left off by following her on the 34-city tour that she undertook while promoting her book."

Deadline Hollywood (4/27, White, 1.05M) reports "the film is directed by Nadia Hallgren, a filmmaker and cinematographer from the Bronx." She "is best known as the DP on Oscar-nominated and Sundance Grand Jury Prize-winner Trouble the Water and CNN's When We Rise: Michelle Obama's Mission to Educate Girls Around the World as well as Motherland, a detailed depiction of a Manila maternity ward with director Ramona Diaz, and has worked on films including Fahrenheit 9/11, Searching for Sugarman and The Hunting Ground."

To the Washington Post (4/27, Rao, 14.2M), "'Becoming' arrives at a defining moment in Obama's life. A few years removed from the East Wing, the widely admired first lady's influence remains evident." Mrs. Obama has "maintained a foothold in American culture," and Joe Biden "recently said he would choose her as his running mate 'in a heartbeat.'" While "she's made clear that she does not want to run for office," Biden's "remark raises the same question Obama asks of herself in the film: How will she choose to wield her power?" The New York Times (4/27, Coleman, 18.61M) says "Michelle and Barack Obama have already found some success with Netflix," as "their production company, Higher Ground Productions...struck a multiyear deal with the streaming service in 2018 to create films and television shows." In fact, "one of their first projects, 'American Factory,' won this year's Oscar for best documentary," and "another recent documentary, 'Crip Camp: A Disability Revolution,' was released on the platform last month to positive reviews." Rolling Stone (4/27, Shaffer, 12.8M), People (4/27, Carlson, 50.07M) and Vanity Fair (4/27, Desta, 9.08M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45.6%, and his disapproval at 52%. The President's approval is down by 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is unchanged.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (4/23-4/25) finds Trump's approval at 44%, with 54% disapproving.

EU To Follow Fed In Offering Banks Capital Relief.

Reuters (4/27, Jones) reports European banks will "receive more capital relief so they can help companies struggling in the coronavirus pandemic, without having to make crippling loan provisions to reflect a looming deep recession, sources said on Monday." EU financial services chief Valdis Dombrovskis is expected on Tuesday to propose that the bloc "emulate in some form" a move by the US Federal Reserve "to allow banks to ease how they calculate their leverage ratio, sources familiar with the package said." The Fed "proposed that until March 2021 banks do not have to include holdings of U.S. government bonds and deposits parked at the central bank in their assets tally for calculating the leverage ratio," freeing up their balance sheets to provide more loans to virus-hit companies.

BOJ Broadens Stimulus, Pledges Unlimited Bond-Buying.

Reuters (4/27, Kihara, Kajimoto) reports the Bank of Japan on Monday expanded monetary stimulus and pledged to purchase an unlimited amount of bonds in order "to keep borrowing costs low, as the government tries to spend its way out of the growing economic pain from the coronavirus pandemic." The BOJ will increase by "three-fold the maximum amount of corporate bonds and commercial paper it buys to 20 trillion yen ($186 billion)." The BOJ also "sharply cut its economic forecast and projected inflation would fall well short of its 2% target for three more years, suggesting its near-term focus will be to battle the crisis."

The Financial Times (4/27, Lewis, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports the BOJ's move could leave it owning one-sixth of Japan's corporate bonds and half its outstanding commercial paper.

WSJournal: Central Bank Corporate Debt Purchases Can Hurt Adaptation To Post-Pandemic Economy. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) condemns the Bank of Japan's expanded purchases of corporate debt and equities as exacerbating the already extent problem of its ownership of an outsize portion of the country's listed equity distorting prices by investors betting on the BOJ instead of corporate managers or the economy. With the Fed, ECB, and Bank of England also buying more corporate-debt, they move towards market suffocation, preventing investors purchasing from sending signals about companies' preparations for post-pandemic supply chains and social distancing.

Inflation Targeting May Lose Its Appeal To Central Bankers After COVID-19.

CNBC (4/27, Taylor, 3.62M) reports, "Central banking mandates could be permanently refocused away from inflation after the coronavirus crisis, economists have told CNBC." Oxford Economics global strategy services head Gabriel Sterne said the pandemic would "almost certainly" shift the focus of central banks away from inflation targets. Sterne said in a phone call, "I think coronavirus will definitely have a big impact on inflation and views towards policy – I think it could tip the monetary frameworks over the edge. ... Most central banks do inflation targeting, but the problem with inflation targets is that they are both too high and too low." The Financial Times (4/27, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) editorializes that deflation is currently a more frightening prospect for the world than hyperinflation.

IMF Official: Mideast Sovereign Wealth Funds Should Work To Boost Regional Economies.

Reuters (4/27, Barbuscia) reports IMF Middle East and Central Asia Department Director Jihad Azour said Monday that Middle Eastern countries should use their sovereign wealth funds to boost growth in the region amid the economic slowdown caused by the pandemic. Azour "said oil exporters needed to find new areas of growth amid the current downturn caused by plunging oil prices and the new coronavirus outbreak," saying during a virtual conference, "Sovereign wealth funds can play a role, regional institutions can play a role."

Leading International News

More Than 3M Worldwide Have Tested Positive For Coronavirus.

Reuters (4/27, Cadell) reports that "global confirmed coronavirus cases surpassed 3 million on Monday, as the United States neared 1 million cases." The 3 million confirmed infections "in less than four months are comparable in number with the roughly 3-5 million cases of severe illness caused by seasonal influenza around the world each year, according to the World Health Organisation." The death toll from the virus, meanwhile, "stood at more than 205,000 as of Monday, and almost one in seven reported cases of the disease has been fatal."

Trump: US Investigating Chinese Response To Coronavirus Outbreak.

Breitbart (4/27, Wong, 673K) reports resident Trump said at a White House news briefing Monday that the Administration "is conducting 'serious investigations' to hold China accountable for the spread of the coronavirus that originated from within its borders and has killed hundreds of thousands around the world." Speaking to reporters, Trump said, "There are a lot of ways you can hold them accountable. We're doing very serious investigations, as you probably know. And we are not happy with China. We are not happy with that whole situation, because we believe it could have been stopped at the source. It could have been stopped quickly, and it wouldn't have spread all over the world."

Navarro: China Exporting Faulty Antibody Tests. Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (4/27, 831K), Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said, "One of the things that's on my radar that's really troublesome is there is a lot of these antibody tests coming in from China now that are low-quality, false readings and things like that. We have to be really careful. Those are the kinds of things I'm watching...as we try to ramp up our medical supply chain to meet all the needs we need."

Navarro, on CNN (4/27, 918K), said, "One of the things I'm very concerned about right now the antibodies testing is we're seeing an influx of poor quality Chinese tests coming in to the market, and that...threatens the American people." Navarro added that in the US, "there's numerous companies, as we speak, moving through the FDA process" to get their tests approved, so that "we will be able to ramp up rapidly in the testing just as we did in ventilators."

The Washington Times (4/27, Sherfinski, 492K) reports Navarro also accused China of "profiteering" off the coronavirus pandemic. Said Navarro, "They hid it for six weeks. They could have contained it in Wuhan. They vacuumed up the world for personal protective equipment – over two billion masks – depriving public health care workers around the world from the defenses they need, and today China's profiteering, basically, from this situation."

China: "Sinister" Pompeo "An Enemy Of World Peace." Breitbart (4/27, Martel, 673K) reports China's state media "urged the world on Sunday to ignore 'sinister' Secretary of State Mike Pompeo's assertions that the Communist Party could have stopped the Chinese coronavirus outbreak from becoming a pandemic," deeming him "the worst U.S. secretary of state in its history." The state-run publication Global Times published "a scathing editorial on Sunday accusing Pompeo of 'a string of violent attacks' on China, despite Pompeo never calling for any violence against the Chinese state, merely an investigation into how the pandemic grew."

ABC Criticized For Report On Wuhan "Success" Battling Coronavirus. Townhall (4/27, Rosas, 177K) reports ABC News "came under fire on social media on Sunday for uncritically sharing Chinese propaganda about the country's 'success' on combating" the coronavirus. ABC News reported Wuhan "no longer has hospitalized COVID-19 patients," citing a report from China's state-run media organization Xinhua, "who was citing Mi Feng, a spokesperson for China's National Health Commission."

Azar Speaks With Taiwanese Counterpart About Pandemic Response.

Bloomberg (4/27, 4.73M) reports HHS Secretary Azar on Monday "spoke to his Taiwanese counterpart about fighting the coronavirus outbreak," which Bloomberg says was "a rare Cabinet-level contact between the two governments that's certain to anger Beijing." Azar "discussed giving Taiwan a bigger role in the global fight" against COVID-19 in a telephone call with Minister of Health and Welfare Chen Shih-chung, and "also discussed U.S. support for Taiwan's inclusion in the World Health Organization, according to a summary of the meeting released by Taiwan's foreign ministry." To Bloomberg, the call "signals a strong display of support for Taiwan given that successive U.S. administrations have limited high-level contacts."

The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Taiwan's outbreak response should serve as a model to other nations. The nation of 24 million has just 429 confirmed cases and only six deaths and expects to declare the virus eradicated by June.

House Panel Probing Administration's Defunding Of WHO.

Reuters (4/27, Zengerle) reports the House Foreign Affairs Committee has "launched an investigation...of President Donald Trump's blocking of funds for the World Health Organization, giving the State Department a week to provide information about the decision as the world faces the coronavirus pandemic." Chairman Eliot Engel "said the U.N. health agency is 'imperfect' and that he would support reforms. 'But, certainly, cutting the WHO's funding while the world confronts the COVID-19 tragedy is not the answer,' he said in a letter" to Secretary of State Pompeo.

The Washington Times (4/27, Meier, 492K) reports Engel said in his letter that "attacking the WHO, rather than the COVID-19 outbreak, will only worsen an already dire situation by undermining one of our key tools to fight the spreading disease."

HUD Secretary Carson said on Cheddar TV (4/27), "Certainly the mission of the World Health Organization is a very good mission. There's some indication that there may be some corruption there. Is it time to pause and take a look at what's going on there, evaluate it? I think there is very good reason to do that. It doesn't mean that we're not going to support them in the future, but it may be necessary to make some changes there so that it works the way it's supposed to."

China Pledged $30M To WHO After Trump Halted Funding. The Washington Post (4/27, Rauhala, 14.2M) reports, "Days after President Trump announced he would freeze U.S. funding to the World Health Organization, China made a very different statement: a $30 million pledge to the group." The President "and his allies argue the WHO's response to the novel coronavirus has been ineffectual and 'China-centric' – and some outside the administration agree." Trump's "largely unpopular decision this month to suspend funding to the global health agency for 60 days in the middle of a pandemic could have impacts that reverberate beyond the current crisis: Enhancing China's standing in the world while reinforcing perceptions of the United States as an unpredictable partner."

WPost: Administration's Strategy Against WHO Dangerous, Based On Skewed Information. In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) says not only is the Administration's strategy to starve the WHO "of funds and support from the United States" amid the pandemic "misguided and potentially harmful to millions of people, it is also based on skewed claims about the agency's role, notably by" Pompeo. The Post calls on Republicans to "join with Democrats to block the administration's counterproductive moves," and urges Trump and Pompeo "to quit making the WHO a scapegoat for their own management failures in combating the virus."

Italy And Spain Among Countries Loosening Lockdown Restrictions.

Reuters (4/27, Vagnoni, Faulconbridge) reports that "countries from Italy to New Zealand have announced the easing of coronavirus lockdowns." Italy, "which has the world's second-highest number of coronavirus deaths at more than 26,000, will allow factories and building sites to reopen from May 4 and permit limited family visits as it prepares a staged end to Europe's longest coronavirus lockdown." In Norway, "schoolchildren from first to fourth grades returned to classes for the first time since mid-March, while a range of small businesses, including hairdressers, were allowed to open." In addition, Spain "cautiously prepared further steps to loosen one of Europe's toughest coronavirus lockdowns on Monday and played down concerns that letting children outside after six weeks had led to crowds forming in public spaces."

Johnson Says UK Not Ready To Ease Lockdown.

Reuters (4/27, Faulconbridge, Holton) reports British Prime Minister Boris Johnson "returned to work on Monday after recovering from COVID-19 and warned that it was still too dangerous to relax a stringent lockdown wreaking havoc on Britain's economy, for fear of a deadly second outbreak." With British unemployment "soaring, many companies crippled and a recession looming, Johnson said he understood the concerns of business and would consult with opposition parties pressing for clarity on a pathway out of lockdown. But with Britain posting one of the world's highest death tolls – 21,092 hospital deaths and thousands more yet to be quantified in care homes – he stressed it was still a time of maximum risk."

The New York Times (4/27, Landler, Castle, 18.61M) reports Johnson returned to work, "declaring that the coronavirus that nearly killed him was like an 'unexpected and invisible mugger' the British people had begun to wrestle to the floor but had not yet fully disabled." To the Times, "Johnson's message to his lockdown-weary nation was somber, underscoring the hard choices that Britain faces as the economy languishes and the death toll from the virus soars above 21,000."

The AP (4/27, Lawless) reports that "despite the death toll, Johnson's government is under mounting pressure to set out a blueprint for easing the lockdown." ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 7, 0:55, Muir, 11.02M) likewise reported Johnson "was out of action for weeks after catching coronavirus, but he has a lot of work to do. His government has faced a lot of criticism for how it's handled this crisis." The Washington Post (4/27, Booth, Adam, 14.2M), among other news outlets, also reports Johnson's remarks.

Sweden Relying On Herd Immunity As Economy Remains Open.

NBC Nightly News (4/27, story 8, 2:30, Holt, 8.35M) reported that to date, "Sweden has seen over 2,000 COVID deaths in a population of 10 million, similar to the mortality rate per capita as the US. And polls suggest the softer policies are popular here. Sweden's policy relies on herd immunity, protecting the elderly and sick who do face lockdowns and testing, while leaving everything else more or less alone so they catch the virus and are in theory better defended against it later. Sweden has more deaths than its neighbors, but says its is a long-term solution with little economic impact, and its education and healthcare system in tact."

Japan's Early Response Relied On Contact Tracing Amid Lack Of Testing.

The Washington Post (4/27, Denyer, 14.2M) reports that the "centerpiece of Japan's coronavirus strategy has been identifying clusters of infection, tracking them to their source – and then tracing and isolating people who might have been exposed. But the virus detectives running Japan's infection control team eventually found a series of cases they couldn't crack." Bars, clubs and gambling halls have become "weak links in Japan's efforts" to control COVID-19, but they are "only one part of a much broader story – of a government reluctant to impose blanket lockdown and desperate to minimize the economic pain of its virus response." Japan's response has "also been limited by a lack of testing capacity, and the government's initial reluctance to allow private-sector testing."

Scientists Fear Brazil Could Emerge As Next Coronavirus Hotspot.

The AP (4/27, Biller) reports "Brazil is emerging as potentially the next big hot spot for the coronavirus amid President Jair Bolsonaro's insistence that it is just a 'little flu' and that there is no need for the sharp restrictions that have slowed the infection's spread in Europe and the US." The country has "officially reported about 4,500 deaths and almost 67,000 confirmed infections." However, "the true numbers there, as in many other countries, are believed to be vastly higher given the lack of testing and the many people without severe symptoms who haven't sought hospital care." To that end, "some scientists said over 1 million in Brazil are probably infected."

Latin America's Prisons At Risk For Becoming Hot Spots.

The AP (4/27, Vergara, Verza) reports the "spreading specter of the new coronavirus is shaking Latin America's notoriously overcrowded, unruly prisons, threatening to turn them into an inferno." The Puente Alto prison in Santiago, Chile, has already had "the largest of Latin America's largest prison virus outbreaks so far, with more than 300 reported cases." Latin America's prisons hold 1.5 million inmates, and "so far, national officials have reported close to 1,400 confirmed cases of COVID-19 among inmates and prison staff."

Jordan Eases Curfew, Reopens More Businesses.

Reuters (4/27, Al-Khalidi) reports Jordan on Monday "eased restrictions on movement aimed at containing the spread of the coronavirus and allowed more businesses to reopen to help jump-start the cash-strapped economy, officials said." Amman residents "can now drive their private vehicles as of Wednesday between 0800 and 1800 in the first such move since a nationwide curfew nearly 40 days ago that ordered the country's population of 10 million to stay at home." Minister of Trade and Industry Tariq Hammouri also "said barbershops, beauty parlors, dryclean and cosmetics shops could now open" as well.

King Abdullah: World Must Work Together To Defeat Virus. In a Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) op-ed, Jordan's King Abdullah II writes, "I cannot recall a time when every leader on the planet had the exact same item at the top of his or her agenda. This captures how truly surreal this moment in history is. But common concern does not necessarily translate into coordinated action." He adds, "If we wish to defeat [the coronavirus], we must do what seems counterintuitive: Put politics and popularity aside. We must also do the exact opposite of what the doctor ordered: Come together and get to work. To face this single threat, we must have singular focus – the survival and well-being of human lives everywhere."

US Military Announces Somalia Strike Campaign Killed Two Civilians.

Stars And Stripes (4/27, Vandiver, 30K) reports, "A review of civilian casualties connected to its airstrike campaign in Somalia found two noncombatants were killed during a February 2019 attack, US Africa Command said Monday." AFRICOM "said it's likely that two civilians were unintentionally killed and three were injured as a result of an airstrike on Feb. 23, 2019." That strike also "killed two al-Shabab terrorists, who were the intended targets, AFRICOM said." The AP (4/27, Baldor) says "the deaths...mark only the second time Africa Command has determined that civilians were killed in a military strike in Somalia." The AP also reports "US airstrikes against the al-Qaida linked al-Shabab extremist group this year are increasingly outpacing 2019 totals. Already there have been 39 airstrikes in 2020, compared to last year's total of 63."

The New York Times (4/27, Cooper, 18.61M) reports that "for years, Africa Command had maintained that no civilians had been killed in American airstrikes and raids in Somalia, disputing charges from human rights organizations that President Trump's decision to relax rules for preventing civilian casualties during American counterterrorism operations had led to more civilian casualties." While the US "has carried out occasional counterterrorism airstrikes in Somalia for more than a dozen years...the frequency has risen considerably under the Trump administration and continues to increase." The Hill (4/27, Budryk, 2.98M) and Al Jazeera English (4/27, English, 80K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Separatists' Declaration Splits Anti-Houthi Coalition In Yemen.

The Washington Post (4/27, Raghavan, 14.2M) reports that "a declaration of self-rule by the most influential Yemeni southern separatist group has triggered concerns that Yemen's conflict could escalate just as the United Nations is seeking a nationwide cease-fire to prevent the spread of the novel coronavirus." The United Arab Emirates, "the separatists' main backer, said Monday it opposes the declaration and urged the group to honor a peace deal it signed last year with the internationally recognized government affirming shared control of the south." Saudi Arabia "called for the separatists to reverse their move, describing it as 'an escalatory action.'"

The AP (4/27, Gambrell) reports that "the statement by Saudi Arabia comes after the separatists' Southern Transitional Council again claimed sole control on Sunday of Aden, a Red Sea port that serves as the seat of the internationally recognized government as Yemen's Shiite rebels, known as Houthis, hold the country's capital, Sanaa." The AP says the Saudis "urged the council to return to the terms of the November 2019 Riyadh agreement, which ended earlier fighting between the separatists and the government forces – ostensible allies in the war against the Houthis – after the council seized control of Aden just a few months earlier."

Libya's Haftar: National Army Accepting "Popular Mandate" To Rule Country.

Reuters (4/27, Al-Warfali) reports, "Libya's eastern-based military leader Khalifa Haftar said on Monday his Libyan National Army (LNA) was accepting a 'popular mandate' to rule the country, apparently brushing aside the civilian authorities that nominally govern eastern Libya." Reuters adds that Haftar "did not spell out in his brief televised speech on Monday what form the new power structure would take and the wider political ramifications were not immediately clear."

Administration Vows To "Enforce And Expand" Pressure On Iran.

The Washington Free Beacon (4/27, Kredo, 78K) reports the Administration is "working on new efforts to 'enforce and expand' its maximum pressure campaign on Iran in the wake of increased military threats, including Tehran's launch last week of a spy satellite." A "senior Trump administration official" told the Free Beacon the White House will continue to increase economic pressure on Iran until it comes to the table for "comprehensive negotiations." The official said, "The President has been clear that the United States will enforce and expand maximum pressure to impose costs on Iran's malign behavior so the regime will enter comprehensive negotiations." Officials are said to be contemplating "an array of options including sanctions on Iran's sponsorship of regional terror groups operating in Iraq, Yemen, Syria, and Lebanon."

South Korean Officials, "Senior US Defense Official" Say Kim Is Not Dead.

Reuters (4/27, Shin, Smith) reports that South Korean officials "emphasise they have detected no unusual movements in North Korea and caution against reports" that Kim Jong-un "may be ill or is being isolated because of coronavirus concerns." Reuters adds, "At a closed-door forum on Sunday, South Korea's Unification Minister Kim Yeon-chul, who oversees North Korea engagement, said Seoul had the intelligence capabilities to say with confidence there were no indications of anything unusual." Martha Raddatz reported on ABC World News Tonight (4/27, story 8, 0:50, Muir, 11.02M), "President Trump says he knows 'relatively speaking' what is going on with Kim Jong-un, but he can't say now." At any rate, "a senior US defense official [said] the reports that Kim Jong-un is dead are 'hogwash,' but said that something is clearly up."

USA Today (4/27, Shesgreen, 10.31M) also reports on the South Korean assurances, while the AP (4/27, Hyung) recounts that "the rumors about Kim's health began to swirl after he missed the April 15 commemoration of the 108th birthday of his grandfather, North Korea founder Kim Il Sung." North Korea's "state media has since made no mention of Kim's health or his public activities, though they said he had received some messages of greeting from foreign countries." Yesterday, "North Korea's state TV said Kim sent his thanks to workers and officials at a tourist resort construction site on the east coast." The Washington Times (4/27, Meier, 492K) also reports on the story, while the CBS Evening News (4/27, story 7, 0:25, O'Donnell, 5.63M) recounted that "as proof of life, the North is [also] offering letters it claims Kim has written in recent days, including one at President of South Africa."

The AP (4/27, Tong) says, "At the heart of the intelligence shortcomings about North Korea is its extremely closed nature. But there is also plenty of blame leveled in South Korea at efforts there." The AP goes on to report that "supporters of South Korea's current liberal government, which remains eager for inter-Korean engagement, lament the previous decade of conservative rule there, when exchanges between diplomats, government and business leaders, aid groups and others stopped under hard-line policies toward North Korea's nuclear ambitions. This, they say, deprived spies of high-quality information sources."

Townhall (4/27, Vespa, 177K) also reports on the latest developments in a story titled "Sorry, Liberal Media, Kim Jong Un Is Still Not Dead."

UK Government Again Insists Brexit Deadline Will Not Be Extended.

The AP (4/27) reports that the British government yesterday "insisted...that it won't extend the deadline for striking a post-Brexit deal with the European Union, despite the upheaval caused by the coronavirus." UK Cabinet Office Minister Michael Gove "said 'it is still entirely possible' to seal an agreement by the Dec. 31 deadline." The AP adds that the EU is "considerably more pessimistic," and Michel Barnier, "chief negotiator for the 27-nation bloc, called a round of negotiations last week 'disappointing' and accused the U.K. of refusing to 'engage seriously' on fundamental issues."

WPost: Under MBS, Saudi Regime Most Repressive And Reformist In Recent History.

The Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) editorializes that the "current Saudi regime, controlled by Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, has the strange distinction of being both the most repressive in recent Saudi history – and also, in some respects, the most reformist." To the Post, that "seeming paradox was on vivid display last week when, after the death in prison of one of the kingdom's foremost liberal activists, authorities disclosed the abolition of flogging of criminals and capital punishment for crimes committed by children." MBS "would have it both ways: free to brutally suppress all independent voices in the kingdom while reaping credit at home and abroad for reforms he dispenses as a benevolent despot," but "it's not a workable strategy in the 21st century."

Freddie Mac, Fannie Mae, And FHFA Clarify: GSE Borrowers Are Not Required To Pay A "Lump Sum" Following Forbearance Period.

Bloomberg (4/27, 4.73M) reports in a potentially paywalled piece carried by American Banker (4/27, Subscription Publication, 31K), "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac's regulator said Monday that borrowers benefiting from programs that let them skip mortgage payments due to the coronavirus pandemic won't have to make lump-sum repayments when the crisis passes." FHFA Director Calabria said the announcement was meant to "combat ongoing misinformation" about forbearance options that homeowners are entitled to seek.

DS News (4/27, Welborn) reports Calabria said, "No lump sum is required at the end of a borrower's forbearance plan for Enterprise-backed mortgages. To help homeowners navigate the forbearance process, FHFA partnered with CFPB on the Borrower Protection Program to provide homeowners accurate information about forbearance and address concerns noted in some consumer complaints. While today's statement only covers Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac mortgages, I encourage all mortgage lenders to adopt a similar approach." Providing Mortgage News Daily (4/27, Swanson) reports, "Freddie Mac has laid out options that borrowers who have been granted forbearance on its loans have when it comes to repayment. The company's CEO David Brickman stressed that borrowers will never be asked to repay missed payments in one lump sum." HousingWire (4/27, 23K) reports Brickman said, "Simply put, if you are a homeowner seeking forbearance and Freddie Mac owns your loan, you are never required to make up missed payments in a lump sum. Our policies offer a number of options to bring borrowers current, including repayment plans, resuming normal payments or lowering your monthly payment through a modification. We encourage homeowners facing hardship to work with their servicer to identify the plan that's appropriate for their unique situation."

Mortgage Orb (4/27, Bates) reports, "Freddie Mac borrowers facing a hardship are entitled to up to 12 months of forbearance. Servicers will start with a shorter plan and reassess to see if an extension for up to 12 months is necessary." Fannie Mae "has also made it clear that lump-sum payments are not required."

Forbes (4/27, Williams, 9.71M), another Forbes (4/27, Williams, 9.71M) piece, National Mortgage Professional (4/27), and Seeking Alpha (4/27, Kiesche, 512K) provide similar coverage. Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (4/27, Hollier, Muolo, Subscription Publication) recaps the statements made by the FHFA Director and GSE CEOs.

Freddie Mac's Total Mortgage Portfolio Grew An Annualized 0.2% In March, Hitting $2.37T.

Seeking Alpha (4/27, Kiesche, 512K) reports, "Freddie Mac's total mortgage portfolio increases at annualized rate of 0.2% in March to $2.37T." According to Seeking Alpha, "Single-family refinance-loan purchase and guarantee volume was $33.3B in March, representing 63% of total single-family mortgage portfolio purchases and issuances." The single-family delinquent rate "remained flat at 60 basis points" and the multifamily delinquency rate "also remained flat at 8 bps during the month." The measure of FMCC's "exposure to changes in portfolio value averaged $150M in March," and the "duration gap averaged 1 month."

GSEs Reportedly Considering Yanking MSR Portfolios.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (4/27, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "Special servicers that can deal in COVID-19-related forbearance programs, especially those of the Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac variety, are now looking at a growth industry, one that could last for half a decade or more. And although the two mortgage giants aren't ready to entertain questions from the media on the topic, it's common knowledge among servicing professionals that Fannie and Freddie are contemplating yanking a handful of portfolios away from their current contractual owners." According to IMF, "One advisory veteran, requesting anonymity, said he has a client that recently struck a deal to process government-sponsored enterprise loans for a price of $150 per unit. This source maintains that Fannie and Freddie are actively looking for well-capitalized sub- and specialty servicers that can survive the economic damage that's currently blistering the U.S. economy."

MBA: Almost 7% Of US Mortgages Were In Forbearance As Of April 19.

Reuters (4/27) reports, "About 3.5 million mortgage borrowers have had their payments paused or reduced as the novel coronavirus outbreak in the United States continues to throw millions out of work, a survey from the Mortgage Bankers Association showed on Monday. The share of mortgage loans in forbearance rose to 6.99% from 5.95% from April 13-19, the industry lobbying group said. The number of new requests for relief fell relative to the prior week but were still 100 times greater than in early March." Ginnie Mae loans increased the most, rising 1.47% from last week. Ginnie loans "also had the highest percentage of loans in forbearance by investor type, at 9.73% of loans." According to Reuters, "For FHA and VA borrowers, the share of loans in forbearance stood at roughly 10 percent." Meanwhile, HousingWire (4/27, 23K) reports that "the share of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac loans in forbearance also increased, rising from 4.64% to 5.46%. The share of other loans (those included in private-label securities or held in portfolio) in forbearance rose from 6.43% to 7.52%."

National Mortgage News (4/27) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "Forbearance requests fell relative to the prior week, but remain roughly 100 times greater than the early March baseline. While the pace of job losses have slowed from the astronomical heights of just a few weeks ago, millions of people continue to file for unemployment." Bloomberg Law (4/27, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports Fratantoni said, "We expect forbearance requests will pick up again as we approach May payment due dates." On a more optimistic note, National Mortgage Professional (4/27) reports Fratantoni added, "The combination of stimulus payments, expanded unemployment insurance benefits, further fiscal and monetary actions, and states reopening will hopefully begin to stabilize forbearance requests and the overall economy." Providing additional coverage of the MBA's survey are Yahoo! Finance (4/27) and Dodd Frank Update (4/27).

Continuing Coverage: Black Knight Reported On Thursday That 5.6% Of GSE Loans And 6.4% Of All Mortgages Were In Forbearance. While the MBA's survey highlights forbearance levels for the week ending April 19, M Report (4/27, Welborn) says Black Knight reported on Thursday that 6.4% of all mortgages have entered forbearance. Mortgage Orb (4/27, Bates) reports, "As of April 23 more than 3.4 million homeowners...had entered into COVID-19 mortgage forbearance plans," representing "$754 billion in unpaid principal and includes 5.6% of all GSE-backed loans and 8.9% of all FHA/VA loans, according to the firm's McDash Flash data set."

Mortgage Professional America (4/27, Smith) reports Black Knight Director of Public Relations Mitch Cohen said, "At today's level, mortgage servicers would need to advance a combined $2.8 billion [per] month to holders of government-backed mortgage securities on COVID-19-related forbearances. Another $1.3 billion in lost funds will be faced each month by those with portfolio-held or privately securitized mortgages (some 5.7% of these loans are in forbearance as well)." Even with Ginnie Mae's recently-announced pass through assistance program and the FHFA's capping of P&I advance payments at four months for servicers of GSE loans, Cohen says that "given today's number of loans in forbearance (and these numbers are climbing every day), servicers of GSE-backed loans still face more than $7 billion in advances over that four-month period."

CFPB's Kate Fulton Joining FHFA As New COO.

DS News (4/27, Welborn) reports, "The Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) has announced that Kate Fulton will join FHFA as COO on May 26, 2020. Fulton comes to FHFA from the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) where she currently serves as COO under Director Kathy Kraninger." Bringing "extensive experience in federal agency operations, including personnel law, administrative operations, information technology, and financial management," Fulton joins the agency as it deals with the COVID-19 crisis. This week, the FHFA "reiterated that borrowers in forbearance with a Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac-backed mortgage are not required to repay the missed payments in one lump sum."

Latest DS5 Podcast Focuses on What Fed's Plan For MBS, Recent Actions By FHFA And GSEs.

In the latest DS News (4/27, Welborn) DS5 podcast, PCMA CEO John Lynch and NerdWallet mortgage specialist Holden Lewis discuss the ways that the mortgage industry is working with borrowers to mitigate disruptions in servicers. According to Lynch, "we're waiting for the Fed to step in and support non-agency RMBS," but this is likely not at the top of the Fed's list of priorities. Lewis believes that the Fed's purchases of agency MBS will help to stabilize the market. In addition, DS News says, "Mortgages that are delinquent for more than four months, historically, were purchased out of MBS pools by the GSEs. Loans with COVID-19 payment forbearance shall be treated 'like a natural disaster event' and will remain in the MBS pool."

Multifamily Financing

- Hunt Real Estate Capital Provides $24point5M Freddie Mac Acquisition Loan For SC Apartments. REBusiness Online (4/27) reports that Hunt Real Estate Capital "has provided a $24.5 million Freddie Mac acquisition loan for Lullwater at Saluda Pointe, a 280-unit apartment complex" in Lexington, South Carolina. MidlandsBiz (4/27) also covers the deal.
- Berkadia Arranges Freddie Mac Financing For Sun Holdings' Acquisition Of San Antonio Garden-Style Community. Multi-Housing News (4/27, Inizian) reports, "Sun Holdings Group has purchased Tradehouse at Bulverde Marketplace, a 330-unit, Class A, garden-style community in San Antonio. Berkadia secured acquisition financing through Freddie Mac."

Trepp: CMBS Late Payments Are Rising Sharply.

Multi-Housing News (4/24) reports, "Although the federal government has mandated that loans originated through government-sponsored enterprises Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac must be afforded 120 days of forbearance, servicers of non-agency CMBS must review each request individually. Some servicers say borrowers are going too far in their requests. For one thing, borrowers must prove that the loss of property income is due only to the impact of the pandemic." According to Trepp's CRE Finance Council, as of April, more than a fifth of hotel loans and a tenth of retail loans in CMBS pools were more than 30 days late on mortgage payments. In March, less than two percent of loans in each of these categories were delinquent.

FHFA Likely Prepping LLPAs On Forbearance Loans.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (4/27, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "The FHA this week is expected to release some type of statement detailing its policy on guaranteeing residential loans in progress that are the subject of COVID-19-related forbearance requests," industry lobbyists said. According to IMF, the "big question" is how much it will cost the lender. One mortgage insurance official said, "One thing's for certain: They're taking on a lot more risk." IMF reports, "Last week, the Federal Housing Finance Agency announced that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will begin purchasing single-family mortgages that are in COVID-19-related forbearance, but at a cost: 500 basis points for mortgages made to first-time homebuyers and 700 bps for 'all other loans.' It's unclear, at this point, what type of loan-level price adjustments, if any, the FHA might charge on forbearance loans. It's possible that some other fee may be assessed."

First American: Real House Prices Fell 1.6% From January To February.

Mortgage Orb (4/27) reports that First American's February Real House Price Index (RHPI) "shows that real house prices decreased 1.6 percent between January 2020 and February 2020 and declined 5.8 percent between February 2019 and February 2020. These figures suggest real house prices are 19.8 percent less expensive than they were in January 2000." According to Mortgage Orb, homebuying power rose 2.5% from January to February, climbing 14.6% year over year. Unadjusted, house prices "are now 10.3 percent above the housing boom peak in 2006." However, "real, house-buying power-adjusted house prices remain 42.8 percent below their 2006 housing boom peak." First American Chief Economist Mark Fleming said, "As the coronavirus outbreak continues to affect the domestic and global economy, the housing market has shown that it is not immune to its impact. While mortgage rates have fallen due to the current economic uncertainty, stay-at-home orders have made it more difficult for potential home buyers to take advantage of the affordability boost, and first-time home buyers may have an even more difficult time as lenders have tightened credit availability."

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (4/17, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.663 percent.

Dollar Holds Steady.

Reuters (4/28, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar steadied on Tuesday as currency markets entered a holding pattern ahead of U.S. Federal Reserve and European Central Bank meetings later this week and as a fresh tumble in oil prices cautioned against risk taking." The dollar "held steady against a basket of currencies at 100.100 – about where it has been parked for a month." The dollar "was a fraction softer against the yen at 107.17 yen per dollar and tad firmer on the euro and pound."

Gold Falls 1%.

Reuters (4/28, Singh) reports, "Gold fell nearly 1% on Tuesday as risk appetite was boosted by some countries easing coronavirus-induced restrictions, although recession fears and hopes for more stimulus kept the bullion near the $1,700 level." Spot gold "eased 0.7% to $1,702.00 per ounce by 0701 GMT, after falling as much as 1.4% during the session." US gold futures "fell 0.4% to $1,716.20 per ounce."

Oil Drops.

Reuters (4/28, Paul) reports, "Oil prices slumped again on Tuesday amid concern about dwindling capacity to store crude worldwide, heightened by fears that fuel demand may be slow to pick up once countries ease curbs imposed on business and social life to combat the coronavirus pandemic." West Texas Intermediate crude futures "fell to as little as $10.64 a barrel on Tuesday, and were off 12.8%, or $1.64, at $11.14 a barrel as of 0635 GMT." Brent crude futures "fell to a low of $18.85 and were last down 4.3%, or 85 cents, at $19.14 a barrel."

Cybersecurity

Pandemic Response Will Lead To Lasting Security Changes.

Government Computer News (4/27, Kanowitz) reports, "The changes to government security practices wrought by the COVID-19 pandemic are unlikely to dissipate when the virus does, current and former government officials said during a recent webinar. 'Public safety and in particular the intelligence community has access to more data ... than they ever had,' former FBI Assistant Director Kevin Brock said. 'The question becomes should they collect it and can they collect it constitutionally.'" Brock "spoke during one panel an April 23 webinar titled 'Flattening the Curve,' hosted by Carbyne, a public-safety technology firm. The event gathered state, local and federal officials to discuss how government's response to the virus has revealed areas for improving cybersecurity, data sharing and emergency preparedness."

Florida State Attorney Candidate Reports Racial Slurs, Nazi Imagery During Zoom Event.

The Miami Herald (4/27, Ovalle, 1.09M) reports, "The lawyer challenging Miami-Dade's longtime state attorney says a campaign Zoom meeting was interrupted by hackers who broadcast racist slurs and 'Nazi imagery.'" Melba Pearson, "a former prosecutor and deputy director of Miami's American Civil Liberties Union, said on Monday that she reported the incident to the FBI, as well as Zoom. The incident happened Friday night during an online event, which was simultaneously broadcast on Facebook." Cybersecurity "has become a major issue for Zoon, the popular video conferencing site that has skyrocketed in use as the coronavirus pandemic has forced huge swaths of the world's labor force to work from home. The technology has become particular vital for the public sector: Across South Florida, court hearings, city council meetings and teacher gatherings are all regularly being held on Zoom. But the virtual meetings have attracted online trolls bent on disruption in what have become called 'Zoom bombs.'"

Cyberspace Solarium Commission Recommendations For Military's Cyber Operations Progressing.

Politico (4/27, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that the Cyberspace Solarium Commission's publicity tour "for its sweeping report might have been drowned out somewhat by the coronavirus pandemic, but in the next few months Congress is likely to approve many of its recommendations for boosting the military's cyber operations and protecting national security networks from hackers." A congressional aide and a tech industry representative "said the Armed Services panels plan to include many, if not most, of the commission's military-related recommendations in the fiscal 2021 National Defense Authorization Act." The tech industry representative "said that these recommendations... 'will be part of the base text of the NDAA.'" It's still unclear "exactly which military-focused recommendations will make it into the NDAA...but the tech industry representative said commissioners and staffers want to include 'as much' of the military section 'as possible.'"

Hackers Publish Pharma Giant's Data After Ransomware Attack.

TechCrunch (4/27, Whittaker, 605K) reports US pharmaceutical giant ExecuPharm “has become the latest victim of data-stealing ransomware.” ExecuPharm “said in a letter to the Vermont attorney general’s office that it was hit by a ransomware attack on March 13, and warned that Social Security numbers, financial information, driver licenses, passport numbers and other sensitive data may have been accessed.” But TechCrunch has “now learned that the ransomware group behind the attack has published the data stolen from the company’s servers.” It’s an increasingly “popular tactic used by ransomware groups, which not only encrypts a victim’s files but also exfiltrates the data and threatens to publish the data if a ransom isn’t paid.” The data was “posted to a site on the dark web associated with the CLOP ransomware group.” The site contains “a vast cache of data, including thousands of emails, financial and accounting records, user documents and database backups, stolen from ExecuPharm’s systems.”

Trump’s 2021 Budget Proposes $237M For Quantum Information Science.

CNBC (4/27, Wood, 3.62M) reports, “The Trump administration’s 2021 budget request...proposes slashing the overall funding for scientific research by nearly 10 percent but boosts spending on quantum information science by about 20 percent, to $237 million.” According to CNBC, “A quantum network would offer decisive advantages for certain applications: Researchers could use it to develop drugs and materials by simulating atomic behavior on networked quantum computers, for instance, and financial institutions and governments would benefit from next-level cybersecurity.”

NSA Offers Agencies Guidance For Choosing Videoconference Tools.

NextGov (4/27, Baksh) reports NSA is offering guidance “to help federal workers choose commercial telework tools for ‘safely using collaboration services.’” The guide, which NSA released Friday, “applies only to commercial applications, and one strong recommendation from the agency is that, when possible, workers use US government services such as Defense Collaboration Services, Intelink Services and others, which were designed specifically for secure government communications.” But government workers still need “to interact with external entities which might be sending them invitations via commercial applications, and the NSA has detailed a number of factors for them to weigh in deciding which ones to facilitate.”

Federal Reserve

Fed Expands Municipal Bond-Buying Program To Smaller Cities And Counties.

Reuters (4/27, Schneider) reports the Federal Reserve on Monday announced the expansion of its municipal bond-buying program to include “counties with as few as 500,000 residents and cities with as few as 250,000 residents,” as well as all state governments and some “multistate” entities. The facility, through which the Fed is buying $500 billion of state and local government bonds, was originally restricted “to about two dozen of the largest local governments when it was announced earlier this month.” The Fed also expanded the duration of bonds it will purchase from two years to three years and said the facility will remain open until December instead of September’s planned closing date.

The Financial Times (4/27, Politi, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), The Hill (4/27, Lane, 2.98M), Barron’s (4/27, Scaggs, 1.07M), The AP (4/27, Rugaber), The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), CNBC (4/27, Cox, 3.62M), MarketWatch (4/27, Robb, 1.67M), and American Banker (4/27, Subscription Publication, 31K) also report.

Fed Likely To Hold Off On More Pandemic Relief Initiatives, Assess Impact Of Past Moves.

CNBC (4/27, Cox, 3.62M) reports the Fed “is likely to pause any additional initiatives until it has more information about how those moves are working and what lies ahead.” The Fed already cut its benchmark rate to near zero in addition to launching a host of other programs that seek to get funds to households and businesses affected by the pandemic. The central bank is expected “to keep a lid on interest rates into the foreseeable future and continue to run its liquidity and lending programs for as long as it takes to get the U.S. economy back on its feet and financial markets running smoothly.” Some of its intentions “could be revealed when the Federal Open Market Committee wraps up its meeting Wednesday,” at which economists and experts potentially expect “more explicit guidance about how long rates will stay low, some tinkering with other rates to make sure the benchmark funds level is where it should be, and asset purchases targeted toward driving down longer-term rates.”

Fed Taking Previously Taboo Actions To Support Economy Amid Pandemic.

The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Timiraos, Hilsenrath, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that, in seeking to mitigate the economic effects of the coronavirus pandemic by lending widely to businesses, states, and cities the Federal Reserve is crossing red lines that sought to prevent politicization and controversy by choosing who gets money, with what terms, and how to deal with localities that unable to pay it back. Fed leaders don’t like the moves but see littler alternative. However, the Fed risks blowback should programs fail to help, politicians seeking to use the Fed to solve problems its tools aren’t designed to address, and the erosion of its authority.

Fed, FDIC Mull Changes To Bank ‘Living Will’ Deadlines.

Reuters (4/27) reports federal banking regulators “announced Monday they were considering changing deadlines for when banks submit ‘living wills’ in response to the coronavirus pandemic.” In a statement, the Federal Reserve and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. “said they were extending by 30 days a comment period for guidance on resolution plans submitted by large foreign banks, including Barclays, Credit Suisse and Deutsche Bank.”

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Banks Under Scrutiny For Prioritizing Certain PPP Applicants.

American Banker (4/27, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, “As lenders dole out a new round of financing under the Paycheck Protection Program, banks are being scrutinized for where they direct loans following criticism that they prioritized high-profile firms.” The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) last week encouraged banks to “prudently document their implementation and lending decisions,” as well as to “identify and track the PPP loans made to small-business borrowers that have annual revenues of $1 million or less and are located in low- and moderate-income areas.” But as agencies attempt to tweak the PPP to ensure that the right businesses receive emergency funding, “some say the reports that banks prioritized wealthy clients over smaller businesses highlights a fundamental issue with the PPP structure – that banks are involved in executing a government loan program.”

AML Enforcement Drops To Record Low In 2019.

The Money Laundering (4/27, Bethencourt, Pasquali) reports that US anti-money laundering enforcement actions “dropped to a record low again in 2019,” while “sanctions enforcement stayed robust” and New York’s Department of Financial Services “slapped the industry for hundreds of millions of dollars in penalties.” Last year, FinCEN, the OCC, the Fed, and the FDIC “concluded only 22 AML enforcement actions last year, down from the 36 they completed in 2018 and their previous low of 28 in 2017, according to data compiled by ACAMS moneylaundering.com.”

Study Shows PPP Loans Didn’t Go To Businesses Most Affected By Coronavirus.

Bloomberg (4/27, Dmitrieva, 4.73M) reports that a new paper from researchers at MIT, the University of Chicago, and the National Bureau of Economic Research found that about 15 percent of regions hit hardest by Covid-19 received funds from the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) so far, while the districts least affected saw twice that amount. The data suggests that funds went to “areas with better employment outcomes, fewer Covid-19 related infections and deaths, and less social distancing.” The researchers used SBA data paired with a database of payroll and scheduling support. The study also found that the four biggest banks accounted for less than three percent of the distributed PPP loans, which could be in part because their branches are located in areas that received less funding. Meanwhile, KeyCorp “made up a greater share of total PPP volume than Bank of America, Wells Fargo, and Citigroup combined – even though its share of small business loans is usually much less, according to the analysis.”

Opinion: US Big Banks Should Be Ashamed Of Their COVID-19 Response.

In The Hill (4/27, Marks, 2.98M), Gene Marks, founder of The Marks Group, a small-business consulting firm, writes that US big banks should be ashamed of themselves. Marks writes, “For all these years, America’s big banks have been telling America’s small businesses just how much they care about them and how much they want their business. But now, when the chips are down, we get to see their true colors.” Marks adds, “Turns out they couldn’t care less about small businesses. Which is why I hope many small businesses take their business to smaller community, independent and regional banks and consider other fintech providers that provide quicker, more affordable service.”

JPMorgan Pauses PPP Applications To Work Through Existing Backlog.

Bloomberg (4/27, 4.73M) reports JPMorgan Chase ceased taking Paycheck Protection Program loans before the program relaunched on Monday, telling its customers that it was attempting to work through the backlog of existing applications. Head of JPMorgan’s consumer business-banking division Jennifer Roberts said in a note to clients, “I wish we could help every business through this program, but funds could run out again quickly and we have preexisting applications in our queue.” The relaunched program carries a fresh $320 billion over the initial $349 billion that ran out in 13 days.

Wells Fargo Names BNY Mellon Exec As New Operations Head.

American Banker (4/28, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Wells Fargo has hired Lester Owens, global head of operations at BNY Mellon, “as part of its ongoing effort to implement a more unified structure across the 260,000-person company.” Lester Owens will serve in the newly created position of Wells Fargo’s head of operations, reporting to COO Scott Powell. Owens “will lead a team of employees who will drive consistent execution across Wells Fargo’s business operations functions, Powell said in a press release Monday.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Republicans, Who Do You Think Is Bailing Out Your State?” A New York Times (4/27, 18.61M) editorial says the idea of “red states propping up blue states has long been a Republican canard.” The Times says New York receives 91 cents for “every dollar in federal taxes it pays.” Connecticut “receives 84 cents for each dollar,” and New Jersey and Massachusetts “both receive 90 cents per dollar.” Meanwhile,

Kentucky, McConnell's home state, "rakes in $2.41 for every tax dollar it sends Washington," which means Kentucky "is effectively subsidized by blue states like New York and New Jersey." The Times argues, "Allowing state budgets to collapse is shortsighted and counterproductive. Democratic lawmakers need to hold the line in this round of relief negotiations."

Washington Post.

"Trump And Pompeo Need To Stop Making The WHO A Scapegoat For Their Failures." In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) says not only is the Administration's strategy to starve the WHO "of funds and support from the United States" amid the pandemic "misguided and potentially harmful to millions of people, it is also based on skewed claims about the agency's role, notably by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo." The Post calls on Republicans to "join with Democrats to block the administration's counterproductive moves," and urges Trump and Pompeo "to quit making the WHO a scapegoat for their own management failures in combating the virus."

"The MBS Paradox Is On Full Display." The Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) editorializes that the "current Saudi regime, controlled by Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, has the strange distinction of being both the most repressive in recent Saudi history — and also, in some respects, the most reformist." To the Post, that "seeming paradox was on vivid display last week when, after the death in prison of one of the kingdom's foremost liberal activists, authorities disclosed the abolition of flogging of criminals and capital punishment for crimes committed by children." MBS "would have it both ways: free to brutally suppress all independent voices in the kingdom while reaping credit at home and abroad for reforms he dispenses as a benevolent despot," but "it's not a workable strategy in the 21st century."

"Nursing Homes Are Flying Blind During A Pandemic. They Deserve Better." In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) laments that despite elder-care facilities seeing almost a quarter of identified US COVID-19 cases, they suffer from "government negligence and lack of transparency." Governments have largely made no effort to test inside and around such facilities, and when the disease hits one some states refuse to disclose the information. This leaves many homes unsure whether they are dealing with the virus, families unsure whether they should have their relatives in a nursing home, and hospitals transferring patients to homes with outbreaks. The Post concludes, "The government's abdication has left most nursing homes flying blind in a pandemic that has made them uniquely vulnerable."

"The Country Is Paying A Lot For The GOP's Obamacare Sabotage." The Washington Post (4/27, 14.2M) editorializes that the Supreme Court ruling "caps a run of Republican Obamacare sabotage that turned out to be not just counterproductive but also expensive and wasteful. ... This is just one more bad result that could have been avoided if Republicans had tried to fix and adjust, rather than cripple, the Affordable Care Act."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Chief Justice Ducks On Gun Rights." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes the court's ruling as an abandonment of its Constitutional responsibility, musing that Chief Justice Robert may have acted out of fear of Democrats' anger. To the Journal, yesterday's decision cements Roberts' image as a very political chief justice.

"ObamaCare's Latest Taxpayer Beating." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that the Supreme Court ruling illustrates the ACA's staggering price tag for taxpayers, and predicts the court's decision will lead to an increase in lawsuits and demands for government payments.

"The Central Bank That Ate Japan." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) condemns the Bank of Japan's expanded purchases of corporate debt and equities as exacerbating the already extent problem of its ownership of an outsize portion of the country's listed equity distorting prices by investors betting on the BOJ instead of corporate managers or the economy. With the Fed, ECB, and Bank of England also buying more corporate-debt, they move towards market suffocation, preventing investors purchasing from sending signals about companies' preparations for post-pandemic supply chains and social distancing.

"Taiwan's Coronavirus Example." The Wall Street Journal (4/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Taiwan's outbreak response should serve as a model to other nations. The nation of 24 million has just 429 confirmed cases and only six deaths and expects to declare the virus eradicated by June.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "From the beginning of this crisis, Donald Trump has been saying a lot of not smart things. He said the coronavirus would disappear like a miracle. He said people had nothing to lose by experimenting with hydroxychloroquine, and he even said that the virus can't see you if you don't move. I think he was confusing it with 'Jurassic Park.'"

Trevor Noah: [On President Trump suggesting injecting disinfectants into the body will work against coronavirus] "President Trump...created shock waves of stupidity with his latest and probably greatest unlicensed medical opinion yet. ... This is maybe the first time in documented history that we've seen someone not thinking out loud. Injecting disinfectant into your body? This is the problem when the dumbest person in the room thinks they're the smartest person."

Trevor Noah: "Trump is like Neville Longbottom, but with Hermione's confidence."

Trevor Noah: "I almost don't even blame Trump, because there's no way he even understands what bleach is. Like, do you think Donald Trump has ever cleaned anything in his life? You think he's ever actually used disinfectant? Cleaning supplies might as well be magical potions to him."

Trevor Noah: "As crazy as the disinfectant line was, I don't think we should be so quick to dismiss Trump's UV lights idea. Because Trump spends most of his time under UV lights, and other than looking like hickory-smoked bacon, he's the healthiest man in the world. I mean, he's even outlived Kim Jong-un."

Trevor Noah: "People were actually calling their local health departments to ask if they should try to cure themselves with disinfectant. Because that means that even the people who are dumb enough to drink bleach are still smart enough not to trust something Donald Trump says."

Jimmy Kimmel: "I'm actually feeling great today. This morning, I woke up, I rolled up my sleeves, and I injected a big syringe of formula 409 into my arm, and I am now coronavirus-free. The Tide pods appear to be turning against President Wackadoodle. Dr. Donald Jingleheimer Trump spent the weekend trying to pretend he wasn't really suggesting that maybe we should inject disinfectants into our bodies. He claimed he was being sarcastic with reporters. ... Can we claim we were being sarcastic when we elected him President?"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Trump's own Environmental Protection Agency quickly posted guidelines for using disinfectants that included the phrase 'do not ingest disinfectant products.' ... Even the company that makes Lysol put out a statement. They wrote, 'As a global leader in health and hygiene products, we must be clear that under no circumstance should our disinfectant products be administered into the human body.' ... I think this might be the first President ever to embarrass a cleaning product."

Jimmy Kimmel: "So then usually when a human being says something that is dangerous and dumb and gets a ton of backlash for it, they either apologize, or at the very least, reel it in. But when you're Donald Trump, you don't do that. You just keep talking and talking and try to bury it all under a mountain of nonsense."

Jimmy Kimmel: "There was a story in the New York Times that said [President Trump] has been watching a ton of TV and eating fast food. ... His new chief of staff, this lucky fellow named Mark Meadows, ran to the New York Post to tell them that Trump is so busy working he often misses lunch. Well, not according to his pants, he doesn't. If Trump misses lunch, it's only because he's still eating breakfast."

Stephen Colbert: "One of the most frustrating aspects of this whole lockdown is that there isn't one consistent message from our leadership. How come I'm still grounded and Georgia gets to go out and play? It's not fair! We both made the mistake of being mortal! I'm sorry!"

Stephen Colbert: [On President Trump suggesting injecting disinfectants into the body will work against coronavirus] "He's suggesting injecting bleach to fight coronavirus. It's not enough that his supporters are all white on the outside."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump got so much heat for the comment that he threatened to stop doing press briefings at all, tweeting, 'What is the purpose of having White House news conferences when the lamestream media asks nothing but hostile questions, and then refuses to report the truth or facts accurately. They get record ratings, and the American people get nothing but fake news. Not worth the time and effort! Yes, it's so hostile to quote the President to himself!"

Stephen Colbert: "[President Trump] didn't show up for the press briefing yesterday, although the White House explained that it was Melania's birthday. They celebrated by spending a quiet evening in separate rooms. They were social distancing years before it was cool."

Stephen Colbert: "In June, Trump will travel to West Point to speak at the US military academy graduation. Unless he comes down with throat spurs."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that the CDC has added six new possible coronavirus symptoms to its list that includes chills, shaking, and a headache. So, if you're experiencing any of those, you either have the virus, or you're Dr. Birx watching Trump's press conference."

Seth Meyers: "After facing criticism for suggesting last week that injecting disinfectants and light could work as treatments for the coronavirus, President Trump claimed he was just being sarcastic. Like when he took the oath of office. 'Uh, yeah, I'll uphold the Constitution.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump claimed yesterday that people who know him and the history of our country say he is the, quote, 'hardest working President in history.' You've got to be kidding me. Abraham Lincoln worked harder than you after he went to that play."

Seth Meyers: "According to the New York Times, President Trump rarely attends the coronavirus task force meetings that precede the press conferences, which isn't surprising at all. Trump is like the kid in your group project in high school who didn't do any of the work. But the only difference is that kid never volunteered to give the presentation. He just stood in the back and held up a Styrofoam planet or something. ... Fauci, get him a Styrofoam planet."

Seth Meyers: "Following a New York Times report last week that President Trump stays in his bedroom until noon each day, White House aides have defended Trump's work habits and said there are days when he doesn't even have lunch. Yep, it's just breakfast, brunch, and straight on 'til dinner."

Treasury in the News

Treasury Issues New Guidance On Small Business Loans, Prompting Large Companies To Return Funds.

Bloomberg (4/23, Niquette, 4.73M) reports, "Companies seeking aid from the next round of small business relief will be required to attest to their need for the loan and could be asked to prove it, as the Trump administration seeks to prevent mom-and-pop operations from being crowded out." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has said the fund is intended for small businesses, and large companies that have already taken loan funding are being given until May 7 to return it without penalty amid an uproar over Shake Shack Inc. and the operator of Ruth's Chris steak houses and other firms getting relief aid." The Treasury Department and SBA released new guidance Thursday emphasizing that companies must "certify in good faith" their economic need for PPP financing.

The New York Times (4/23, Rappeport, Smialek, 18.61M) reports Mnuchin "has warned businesses that they will be investigated and could face penalties if they improperly accept small-business money" and "has urged businesses to return those funds." Treasury's new guidance "does not, however, force companies to return the money or accelerate repayments." The Times says it "remains unclear how the Treasury Department or the Small Business Administration will pursue investigations of loans that were given to borrowers that should not have been eligible." Business seeking to have the loans forgiven "are required to demonstrate to banks that they met requirements to maintain staffing levels for eight weeks. The documentation that they provide could be subject to audits by the Internal Revenue Service."

Additional news outlets reporting include Reuters (4/23, Lawder, Lambert, Delevingne), The Hill (4/23, Lane, 2.98M), MarketWatch (4/23, Reklaitis, 1.67M), The Los Angeles (CA) Times (4/23, Wire, Haberkorn, 4.64M), USA Today (4/23, King, 10.31M), The Financial Times (4/23, Weaver, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and Axios (4/23, Allassan, 521K).

Commentary: Oversight Of Relief Fund Dispersal Highly Lacking. In his column for Bloomberg Opinion (4/23), Timothy L. O'Brien writes the initial $349 billion PPP fund "evaporated in just a couple of weeks, and perhaps only about 5% of the nation's 30 million small businesses – and possibly significantly less – got their hands on it." O'Brien says, "Upon learning that Shake Shack disgorged its $10 million in public aid, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who stewards the small-business program, took to Twitter on Monday to note that he was 'glad' the company did so." However, O'Brien says Mnuchin "might stow his joy for the moment" given that it "was his team's responsibility to make sure banks properly vetted and prioritized borrowers to avoid foul-ups before taxpayers' money went out the door, not after." O'Brien adds that Mnuchin "has used selective data to spin the first round of aid as a success," and that he and the SBA "haven't released enough information about exactly who was funded, and how much they received, to convince outside observers to agree with him."

New Jersey Governor Blasts Relief Fund Limitations, Says Mnuchin's Assurances "Were Empty."

Politico (4/23, Friedman, 4.29M) reports Gov. Phil Murphy (D) on Thursday "blasted the Trump administration for its 'empty assurances' on how New Jersey could use billions of dollars of Covid-19 rescue funds after the U.S. Treasury Department issued guidance on how the money could be spent." The guidance "specifically bars state and local governments from using the funds as a form of revenue replacement."

NJ News (4/23, Johnson, Salant, 1.72M) reports Murphy "said he was assured during a recent discussion with U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, that states would have more flexibility in how they spent the money." Murphy said, "I was assured this funding would be able to be used flexibly by states, filling holes that we now must deal with. Those assurances apparently were empty." Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ), "a member of the Senate Finance Committee that also oversees Treasury, said Mnuchin told him the same thing." Menendez said, "I took Secretary Mnuchin's word in good faith when he told Governor Murphy and me that states would have flexibility to use these stabilization funds to address their urgent needs and maintain essential services. The Treasury guidance also flies in the face of the president's recent commitment that any fiscal relief to hard-hit states be allowed to cover lost revenues as a result of COVID-19."

The Hill (4/23, Carney, 2.98M) reports both Mnuchin and President Trump "have indicated they are open to including additional state and local assistance in the next coronavirus relief bill, which is not expected to pass Congress until at least May."

The AP (4/23, Mulvihill) also reports.

Administration May Use $10B Loan As Leverage To Force Changes At USPS.

The Washington Post (4/23, Bogage, Rein, 14.2M) reports, "The Treasury Department is considering taking unprecedented control over key operations of the U.S. Postal Service by imposing tough terms on an emergency coronavirus loan from Congress, which would fulfill President Trump's longtime goal of changing how the service does business." According to "two people familiar with the matter," officials have warned USPS in recent weeks that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin could use the $10 billion loan "as leverage to give the administration influence over how much the agency charges for delivering packages and how it manages its finances."

Other outlets reporting include Reuters (4/23, Bartz), The Los Angeles Times (4/23, Megerian, Bierman, 4.64M), The Hill (4/23, Moreno, 2.98M), and Business Insider (4/23, Panetta, 3.67M).

Treasury Department Unsure It Can Disburse Funds To Tribes By Sunday.

The AP (4/23, Fonseca) reports Treasury Department said late Thursday that Alaska Native corporations are eligible to receive part of $8 billion in COVID-19 relief funds earmarked for tribes, "setting the stage for a court battle." A group of Native American tribes "have sued the federal government to try to keep the money out of the hands of the corporations" under the contention that "it should go only to the 574 tribes that have a government-to-government relationship with the United States." The Treasury Department "said a plain reading of the CARES Act makes the corporations set up under a 1971 settlement among the U.S., Alaska Natives and the state of Alaska eligible for the funding."

Law360 (4/23, Westney, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "told a D.C. federal judge Thursday that Alaska Native Corporations can claim a share of $8 billion in funding for tribal governments fighting the COVID-19 pandemic, saying it would be unfair to cut them out in favor of federally recognized tribes." Mnuchin "asked the court to reject a bid by a group of eleven tribes to prevent any of the $8 billion in direct tribal funding in the $2 trillion Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security, or CARES, Act from going to the for-profit corporations, which were created to resolve indigenous land claims in Alaska."

Mnuchin Considering Lending Program For Oil Industry.

Bloomberg (4/23, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin is weighing whether to provide a lending facility for US oil companies seeking federal aid. The secretary "would not say whether the lending program would be housed at his agency or at the Federal Reserve." Were his department to take the lead on lending to the oil industry, Mnuchin would "need permission from Congress to loan funds directly from the $2.2 trillion coronavirus stimulus passed last month." Speaking on specifics, Mnuchin said, "Investment-grade companies will be able to either access the normal capital markets or will be able to access the Fed's investment-grade facility. ... That's the priority." For those that "aren't credit-worthy enough to tap the Fed, Mnuchin said he is discussing 'alternative structures with banks.'" Reuters (4/23, Venkat) reports that last week, Energy Secretary Brouillette "told Reuters he was working with Mnuchin to roughly double the size-limit on loans available to mid-tier U.S. energy companies under the recently passed CARES Act stimulus package to $200 million-$250 million." Law360 (4/23, Cooper, Subscription Publication, 8K) also reports.

Mnuchin: Companies Critical To National Security Must Offer Equity Stakes To Receive COVID-19 Aid.

Bloomberg (4/24, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "will require public companies deemed critical to national security that seek a share of $17 billion in virus-related relief to offer an equity stake to the government." For private companies, Mnuchin "may, in his discretion, accept senior debt instruments" or other financial interests, according to a Treasury Department loan application posted to its website late Thursday. The requirements "are similar to those for passenger and cargo airlines seeking payroll assistance from the $2.2 trillion coronavirus stimulus package passed by Congress." Borrowers "must have a priority level contract with the government and currently operate under a 'top secret facility clearance,' according to the application on Treasury's website late Thursday." Mnuchin said in an interview Thursday, "This pot of money was designed to consider the needs of defense contractors, key suppliers to DOD and other companies that carry classified information."

Mnuchin: US Has No Plans To Create Fed Funding Facility For Mortgage Servicers.

Bloomberg (4/23, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said the U.S. has no current plans to create a Federal Reserve facility to inject funding into non-bank mortgage servicers, as recent government moves will help the firms get through the risk of millions of borrowers missing their mortgage payments." Mnuchin "pointed to Ginnie Mae's decision last month to facilitate payments to mortgage bondholders themselves, thus covering an obligation that would have fallen on servicers. That combined with steps taken this week by the Federal Housing Finance Agency, which regulates mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, will 'deal with liquidity concerns,' he said in a Bloomberg News interview on Thursday."

Senate Dems Press Mnuchin To Ensure COVID-19 Relief Payments Quickly Reach Social Security Recipients.

The Hill (4/23, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports, "A group of Democratic senators are urging the Trump administration to ensure that Social Security recipients quickly receive the full amount of their coronavirus rebate, after an IRS deadline passed for beneficiaries to act in order to promptly receive the payments for their children." The senators wrote to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Social Security Commissioner Andrew Saul on Thursday, saying, "To continue assisting struggling families during the COVID-19 crisis, we strongly urge your agencies to ensure that non-filers receive their stimulus payments – including additional payments for dependent children – as quickly as possible." The senators "said they are concerned that many families may not receive the full amount of cash assistance that they are entitled to until 2021," writing, "Many eligible families will not have been able to meet this short, 48-hour deadline."

Rubin: Policies Pushed By Trump's "Millionaire Advisers" Show How "Out Of Touch" He Is.

In her column for The Washington Post (4/23, Rubin, 14.2M), Jennifer Rubin writes, "It is a measure of just how out of touch President Trump is: His retinue of millionaire advisers (e.g., National Economic Council director Larry Kudlow, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin) and the right-wing media collectively decided it would be good politics to goad governors into reopening businesses, schools and public spaces while the pandemic still raged with no cure, vaccine or even testing/tracking/quarantine program in place." Rubin asks, "Did they really expect people to risk their lives so the Dow Jones would pick up?" Rubin adds in an "aside" that this is "a good example of why it is a mistake to surround yourself with finance guys rather than those who have spent time with middle-class workers, families and local government officials."

On Economy, Poll Shows Two-Thirds Of Americans Trust Their State Governor, 51% Mnuchin, 47% Trump.

The Hill (4/23, Johnson, 2.98M) reports over two-thirds of Americans "have confidence in their state's governor when it comes to handling economic matters, higher than any other elected official in the country, a recent Gallup poll finds." The survey results show "68 percent of those polled said that they either had 'a great deal' or a 'fair amount' of confidence in their state's top official to make the right economic decisions." Fed Chair Jerome Powell and Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin "ranked next at 58 and 51 percent, respectively, while President Trump came in at 47 percent."

Pre-paid Card Providers Want To Take Part In Stimulus Payments Disbursement: Industry Groups.

Reuters (4/23, Johnson) reports, "Industry groups for U.S. providers of pre-paid cards and mobile wallets are in talks with the U.S. Treasury Department about allowing stimulus payments designed to help millions of Americans struggling due to coronavirus lockdowns be made via their products, the groups said." Jodie Kelley, chief executive of the ETA, "said talks took a step forward last week when the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) waived a rule that hinders agencies from requiring that a consumer receive government payments through a specific third-party." The agency "still has to work through other issues," including "whether to take competitive bids for the contract or potentially use emergency powers to quickly pick a provider, according to the ETA, which represents companies including PayPal Inc, Visa and Mastercard, and two lawyers familiar with the discussion."

Sen. Scott: All Americans "Have A Role In Responsibly Re-Opening The Economy."

In an op-ed for The Tampa Bay (FL) Times (4/23, 742K), Florida Sen. Rick Scott (R) writes that if all Americans "take responsibility and create a clear plan, we can put our country and our economy back on a path to recovery." The federal government, he says "must support efforts by state and local governments to expand testing capacity, including monoclonal antibody testing and contact tracing," allowing for anyone "who wants to be tested...to get tested." Scott also says the Treasury Department and the SBA "must provide more clarity to banks and small businesses about the Paycheck Protection Program and protect against potential fraud."

Leading National News

State Department Report: China, Russia, Iran Working Together To Blame US For Coronavirus Pandemic.

Business Insider (4/23, Orecchio-Egresitz, 3.67M) reports that according to a State Department report, "China, Iran, and Russia are each using the COVID-19 pandemic as an opportunity to spread disinformation related to the United States." According to a Politico report from earlier this week, all three countries are pushing similar narratives, including the baseless claim that the coronavirus is an American bioweapon being spread by US troops, the US is using the crisis to score political points, and that unlike the US, the three countries are managing the crisis well.

Townhall (4/23, Rosas, 177K) reports that during an April 15 briefing, the State Department "confirmed to staff members of the House Committee on Oversight and Reform" that the state-run media in the three countries "are working in together to blame the Wuhan coronavirus pandemic on the United States, according to an internal GOP Oversight and Reform Committee report." The report "also laid out how the World Health Organization and China had been misleading on the severity of COVID-19 during the early stages of the pandemic."

Al Jazeera English (4/23, 80K) reports China's Ambassador to the UK Liu Xiaoming said Thursday that China did not cover up the coronavirus outbreak and that the US should not seek to bully his country. Liu said, "I hear quite a lot of this speculation, this disinformation about China covering up, about China hiding something – this is not true. ... The Chinese government was transparent and very quick to share data. ... Some politicians, some people, want to play at being the world's policeman – this is not the era of gunboat diplomacy, this is not the era when China was a semi-colonial, semi-feudal society. ... China is not an enemy of the United States – if they regard China as an enemy they chose the wrong target."

US Begins Shifting WHO Funds To Other Groups. In what The Hill (4/23, Kelly, 2.98M) casts as "an escalation in President Trump's fight with the WHO," the US has started to shift its contributions to the agency "to other health-focused groups." Jim Richardson, Director of Foreign Assistance at the State Department, said at a news briefing Wednesday, "For every contract or dollar flowing today, we're just taking WHO off the table. ... We're going to provide that assistance to these other organizations in order to get the job done. Our system simply can't wait." The Hill adds that Secretary of State Pompeo "has started laying the groundwork for a U.S. exit from the WHO, accusing the agency's leadership of failing to exercise authority over China for its handling of the outbreak."

Townhall (4/23, Pavlich, 177K) says that in remarks to reporters at the State Department this week, Pompeo "warned the Wuhan Institute of Virology, where the Wuhan coronavirus likely originated, is not the only lab in the country conducting experiments." Pompeo said "these labs are still open inside of China, these labs that contain complex pathogens that were being studied. It's not just the Wuhan Institute of Virology. There are multiple labs inside of China that are handling these things. It's important that those materials are being handled in a safe and secure way such that there isn't accidental release. ... So this is an ongoing obligation that the Chinese Government has as well as an ongoing obligation of the World Health Organization that has responsibility for compliance with the rules."

Pompeo said on Fox News' Hannity (4/23, 535K), "I am very confident that the Chinese Communist Party will pay a price for what they did here, certainly from the United States. I don't know what form that will take. Our focus today isn't on that. It's on making sure we keep America safe, take down the health risks, keep people healthy as we can, and get this economy going back, but I'm confident."

Reuters (4/23, Brunnstrom, Pamuk) reports that on Fox News' Ingraham Angle on Wednesday night, Pompeo "said a fundamental reform of the World Health Organization was needed following its handling of the coronavirus pandemic and that the United States, the WHO's biggest donor, may never restore funding to the U.N. body." The Washington Times (4/23, Scarborough, 492K) reports that Pompeo told Laura Ingraham that WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus "may have to step down before Washington restarts suspended contributions of nearly $1 billion of WHO's $2.4 billion annual budget." Asked about a demand for Tedros' ouster, Pompeo said, "Even more than that, it may be the case that the United States can never return to underwriting, having US taxpayer dollars go to the WHO. We may need to have even bolder change than that."

Pompeo said on the Larry O'Connor Show (4/23) Thursday, "It is important for everybody to remember that this isn't the first time that the World Health Organization has failed in its mission to help the world stay safe. You'll recall the SARS challenge that the world faced previously. Here too, the World Health Organization didn't get this information right at the beginning. They talked about how China was being transparent when it was blatantly clear that they were not being. So, we have done reforms there before. That clearly has been insufficient to ensure that the WHO can perform its primary function. So, we are looking at how else we might do this."

State Department spokeswoman Morgan Ortagus said on CNN International (4/23) that the US "gave between $400 and $500 million to the WHO last year. That money is only four percent of all of the money that we give in global health each year. So 96 percent of the funds that the American people give around the world for global health is still going unimpeded. ... What State and USAID...announced yesterday is that we are looking to directly fund global health programs around the world. ... So every penny of global health funding that the Congress has allotted to State Department, USAID will continue to go to global health." Ortagus told Fox News' Fox & Friends (4/23, 831K), "We need what Secretary Pompeo is calling for: real transparency out of China." Ortagus was also interviewed on WLW-AM Cincinnati (4/23, 19K) Thursday.

Australia Calls For International Investigation Of Coronavirus' Origins. The Washington Post (4/23, Deyoung, 14.2M) reports that Australia has joined the US in calling for "an international investigation into the origins and spread of the novel coronavirus, focusing on the behavior of China and the World Health Organization."

Democrats Call On Trump To Restore WHO Funding. Democrats have called on the President to restore funding to the WHO. According to the Washington Times (4/23, Meier, 492K), the Democrats argue "the funding freeze was an attempt to shift blame away from the administration's 'failed response' to the coronavirus pandemic within its borders." In a letter to Pompeo and Acting USAID Administrator Barsa, Democrats led by House Foreign Affairs Chairman Eliot Engel wrote, "Halting funding to the WHO at this time is like cutting funding to the fire department in the middle of a blaze. ... Retreating from global health institutions at this time will only hinder our ability to fight the coronavirus, thus putting our national security and American lives at risk."

China Pledges Additional $30M To WHO. The New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) reports that China announced Thursday "that it would donate an additional $30 million to the World Health Organization after President Trump's order this month to suspend American funding to the agency." The Times says US "donations to the organization have historically outstripped China's: Of the $5.6 billion that the agency received in 2018 and 2019, the United States contributed about $893 million and China gave $86 million."

NYTimes: Pandemic Is "Shaking Fundamental Assumptions About American Exceptionalism." A New York Times (4/23, Bennhold, 18.61M) analysis says "images of America's overwhelmed hospital wards and snaking jobless lines" have people "on the European side of the Atlantic...looking at the richest and most powerful nation in the world with disbelief." The Times says the pandemic "is shaking fundamental assumptions about American exceptionalism – the special role the United States played for decades after World War II as the reach of its values and power made it a global leader and example to the world." It has "exposed two great weaknesses that, in the eyes of many Europeans, have compounded one another: The erratic leadership of Mr. Trump, who has devalued expertise and often refused to follow the advice of his scientific advisers, and the absence of a robust public health care system and social safety net."

China's Medical Goods Supply Chain Becoming A Free-For-All. The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Lin, Xiao, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that China's medical goods supply chain is becoming a free-for-all as governments, hospitals, and businesses vie for masks, ventilators and other protective gear. The Journal says the situation highlights countries' desperation to obtain the supplies amid the coronavirus pandemic.

China Imposes New Restrictions On Some Northern Cities. The New York Times (4/23, Mozur, Myers, 18.61M) reports that Chinese officials "have imposed new limits on movement in some northern parts of the country following a spate of new coronavirus infections, in a sign of how difficult it will be to fully recover from an outbreak that virtually paralyzed the country." Restrictions imposed over the past week "include the city of Harbin, a city of 10 million in northeastern China where a number of new infections have been reported." According to the Times, "other cities in the region have also imposed restrictions, which include preventing outsiders from visiting other neighborhoods and warning residents to stay away from high-risk areas."

Romney: Free Nations Must Develop A Strategy To Counter China. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M), Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) writes that "from medicines to masks" the US is "at Beijing's mercy. Embarrassed by the revelation of this vulnerability, politicians in Washington will certainly act to remedy our medical dependence," but "China's stranglehold on pharmaceuticals is only a small sliver of its grand strategy for economic, military and geopolitical domination." Romney calls for "a unified strategy among free nations to counter China's trade predation and its corruption of our mutual security." Romney argues, "When the immediate health crisis has passed, the United States should convene like-minded nations to develop a common strategy aimed at dissuading China from pursuing its predatory path."

House Passes $484B Relief Package As Battle Lines Are Drawn Over State Aid.

The Washington Post (4/23, Werner, 14.2M) reports the House "overwhelmingly passed a $484 billion spending package Thursday as the unemployment crisis deepened, a stark illustration of how policymakers continue trying to rescue an unraveling economy amid growing despair." The AP (4/23, Taylor, Fram) reports, "Anchoring the bill is the Trump administration's $250 billion funding request to replenish a fund to help small- and medium-size businesses with payroll, rent and other expenses. ... It also contains $100 billion demanded by Democrats for hospitals and a nationwide testing program, along with a $60 billion set-aside for small banks," and "$60 billion for small-business loans and grants delivered through the Small Business Administration's existing disaster aid program."

Politico (4/23, Caygle, Ferris, 4.29M) reports that President Trump "offered a strong endorsement of the legislation earlier this week and is expected to quickly sign the aid bill after House passage." USA Today (4/23, Hayes, 10.31M) reports the measure passed 388-5, with Reps. Andy Biggs (R-AZ), Ken Buck (R-CO), Jody Hice (R-GA), Thomas Massie (R-KY), and Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) voting against the measure. Rep. Justin Amash (I-MI) voted present. According to the article, "House leaders applauded the near-unanimous vote, with Democrats noting the additional provisions they negotiated into the bill." Republicans also "praised the passing of the measure but blamed Democrats for the delay in getting the funds to businesses."

According to the AP (4/23, Taylor, Fram), "Easy passage of the measure belies a potentially bumpier path ahead as battle lines are being formed for far more ambitious future legislation that may prove far more difficult to maneuver through Congress." Likewise, the Washington Post (4/23, Werner, 14.2M) reports that "lawmakers from both parties are already talking about pursuing more large spending bills...but the measure on Thursday could be the last one for at least several weeks as divisions emerge between the parties about how much further to go." The Post adds, "Congress has now committed almost $3 trillion in emergency spending...but there are fresh signs that policy makers are becoming more wary of the public backlash that has begun over some of their decisions." The Post reports that President Trump and Democrats are "pushing for quick action on another giant rescue bill that would include funding for cities and states," but Senate Majority Leader McConnell "has expressed opposition," and indicting that "perhaps some states should have the option of falling into bankruptcy," which the Post says "elicited fury from some governors and House Democrats."

The Washington Post (4/23, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that McConnell "drew flak Thursday from governors in both parties after suggesting that states hit hard by the coronavirus outbreak should be allowed to seek bankruptcy protections rather than be given a federal bailout." The Post adds, "McConnell's comments, made during a radio interview Wednesday, came amid a renewed push from states for help from Washington to cover lost tax revenue that has been among the dire consequences of the ongoing pandemic. 'This is really one of the dumb ideas of all time,' New York Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo (D) said during a briefing in Albany in which he warned that bankruptcy declarations by multiple states would lead to 'a collapse of this national economy.'" Reuters (4/23, Zengerle, Cowan) reports that the President "has said he supports more funding for states, and has promised to back it in future legislation," but Republicans in Congress "have resisted."

The New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) reports that the National Governors Association "wrote federal officials this week pleading for $500 billion to help them make up for lost tax revenues during what they called 'the most dramatic contraction of the U.S. economy since World War II.'" On Thursday, NGA Chairman Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) "said in an interview...that he thought Mr. McConnell would come to 'regret' his remarks. 'The last thing we need in the middle of an economic crisis is to have the states all filing bankruptcy all across America and not able to provide services to people who desperately need them,' he said."

Politico New York (4/23, Niedzwiedek) quotes Cuomo as saying, "You want to see [the] market fall through the cellar – let New York state declare bankruptcy." According to Politico, Cuomo "said tersely that he has not been in contact with McConnell, nor does he plan to reach out to him." Politico goes on to report that McConnell "also drew a rebuke" from Rep. Peter King (R-NY), who tweeted that McConnell's remarks "were 'shameful and indefensible' and called McConnell the 'Marie Antoinette of the Senate.'" New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D), "who attacked McConnell over the bankruptcy comments on Wednesday, doubled down during his daily press briefing on Thursday afternoon, saying that the revenue shortfalls his state faces...apply to 'many of our sister states, red and blue alike.'"

Reuters (4/23, Chiacu) reports that House Speaker Pelosi "has said more money for state and local governments would be included in the next coronavirus relief package in Congress," and Senate Minority Leader Schumer "said the federal government must help cities and states or risk 'huge mayhem.'"

Carl Hulse of the New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) says Democrats "have now blocked two consecutive coronavirus rescue packages pushed by Republicans and withstood withering criticism to win concessions – and hundreds of billions of dollars – they said were vital." Hulse points out that "at nearly $500 billion, the latest measure to move through Congress this week ended up being almost twice the size and much broader in scope than the original bill" McConnell "tried to ram through two weeks earlier without negotiations." Hulse notes that on Thursday, McConnell said, "My overall observation is it's pretty hard to win a spending contest with a Democrat. They always want to spend more on everything." According to Hulse, McConnell "has evidently had enough of a dynamic that seems to be empowering Democrats."

The New York Times (4/23, Hulse, 18.61M) reports, "States are facing severe financial strain, as sales tax revenues dry up amid quarantines that have shuttered restaurants, movie theaters, gyms and nail salons. That pain has been compounded by the number of people losing their jobs and filing for state unemployment benefits." According to the Times, "at least three states – California, New York and Ohio – are expected to deplete their trust funds within two weeks, with Kentucky, Texas and Massachusetts close behind."

Waters Dedicates Bill To Sister Infected With Coronavirus. The Hill (4/23, Axelrod, 2.98M) reports House Financial Services Chairwoman Maxine Waters "dedicated Congress's $484 billion relief package to her sister, who she said is dying from the coronavirus." On the House floor, she said, "I not only rise in support of this legislation. I also would like to rise in support of what we're doing for the healthcare enhancement act in this bill. And I'm going to take a moment to dedicate this legislation to my dear sister who is dying in a hospital in St. Louis, Missouri right now infected by the coronavirus."

Pelosi Blames Republicans For Delay In Coronavirus Relief Funds. The Washington Times (4/23, Muñoz, 492K) reports Pelosi "defended the delay on passing emergency coronavirus relief funds Thursday, saying Republicans refused to spend much-needed money in other areas." Pelosi said, "What we have on the floor today is the result of – not the time we delayed the legislation – but the time that the Republicans refused to accept the facts that we needed $100 billion for our hospitals and our testing. I think it's really important for people to understand what this fight is about."

Frustrations Mount Over Delays In Stimulus Checks. The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Rubin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports people who are still waiting for their stimulus checks are growing more frustrated, as the IRS deals with electronic payments bouncing back. Taxpayers are also complaining of error messages on the IRS website, which has seen an increase of 77 percent in traffic from an equivalent week last year.

Whitehouse, Doggett: Real Estate Businesses Unjustly Benefit From "Corrupt Tax Provision" In CARES Act. In an op-ed for USA Today (4/23, 10.31M), Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-RI) and Rep. Lloyd Doggett (D-TX) call attention to the "corrupt" tax provisions inserted in the CARES Act by Republicans. The provisions "allow certain investors – particularly real estate speculators and hedge fund managers – to cut their tax bills by shifting losses to prior tax years." The "giveaway" amounts to $195 billion, with "43,000 million-dollar-plus income earners" receiving "over 80% of the windfall." The lawmakers are "offering legislation to unwind this massive tax giveaway, to recover the lost revenues and to use them to combat the pandemic and help small businesses and those truly in need during this challenging time."

WPost: States Deserve, Need More Support From Washington. In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) says that McConnell "churlishly spoke of governors trying to get 'free money' and mused about passing a new law to let distressed states go through bankruptcy, as Puerto Rico and Detroit have done." The Post says "there is no issue of 'moral hazard' – rewarding bad behavior – when it comes to providing federal aid to state and local governments, just as there was no such issue in coming up with aid to the private sector." The Post concludes that "objective analysis will show that state and local governments need and deserve more emergency support from Washington."

Another 4.4M Applied For Jobless Benefits Last Week.

The AP (4/23) reports that the Labor Department revealed Thursday that "more than 4.4 million laid-off workers applied for U.S. unemployment benefits last week as job cuts escalated across an economy that remains all but shut down." According to the AP, "Roughly 26 million people have now filed for jobless aid in the five weeks since the coronavirus outbreak began forcing millions of employers to close their doors." The AP adds, "About one in six American workers have lost their jobs in the past five weeks, by far the worst string of layoffs on record. That's more than the number of people who live in the 10 largest U.S. cities combined." The AP (4/23, Cray, Cano, Charlton) in a separate story said, "Unemployment in the U.S. is swelling to levels last seen during the Great Depression of the 1930s, with 1 in 6 American workers thrown out of a job by the coronavirus."

ABC World News Tonight (4/23, story 3, 2:10, Muir, 10.29M) reported, "More than 26 million Americans have now filed for unemployment benefits since this outbreak began." ABC added, "Tonight, unemployment in America has gone from bad to worse. The toll across this country visible in those massive lines at food banks, from Florida to New Jersey, and Texas, where many...are going to a food bank for the first time."

NBC Nightly News (4/23, story 3, 2:15, Holt, 8.03M) reported on "the staggering toll on the work force, with another 4.4 million Americans filing for unemployment just last week." NBC's Jo Ling Kent added, "Tonight, the number of workers devastated by unemployment continues to skyrocket. More than 26 million jobless claims have been filed since March, and it's hitting low income workers especially hard. More than half say they or someone in their household lost a job or has taken a pay cut. Among the states hurting the most, Florida." NBC also reported, "One problem plaguing many states, those decades-old computer systems simply overwhelmed."

The CBS Evening News (4/23, lead story, 3:40, O'Donnell, 5.54M) reported, "We're going to begin with two staggering numbers that illustrate the devastating toll the coronavirus is having on American life. As we come on the air tonight, one in every six American workers has lost a job since this crisis began. In the last week alone, 4.4 million people filed for unemployment benefits. That's more than 26 million Americans that are now out of work." Also, "More than 47,000 Americans have now been killed by the virus, and confirmed cases in the US now top 860,000. But there is some surprising new evidence tonight suggesting even more people may have been infected. Test results in New York City show one in five people appear to have antibodies for COVID-19." CBS (Strassmann) added, "Eight states have bled at least 20 percent of their work forces. 37 states, at least 10 percent."

According to the New York Times (4/23, 18.61M), "The report is likely to intensify the debate over when to lift restrictions that have helped fight the virus's spread but placed the economy in a stranglehold." The Washington Post (4/23, Siegel, Van Dam, 14.2M) reports that "economists estimate the national unemployment rate sits between 15 and 20 percent, much higher than it was during the Great Recession in 2008 and 2009." The Post adds that "the new weekly jobless claims figure came in around economists' predictions, which were expected 'to be staggering, but not growing, which is a small mercy,' said Julia Pollak, a labor economist at ZipRecruiter. For comparison, 5.2 million people filed unemployment claims for the week ending April 11."

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Chaney, Guilford, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that some economists think that unemployment claims hit the top in March, while others are expecting a new boom in the coming weeks. The Federalist (4/23, Justice, 126K) reports the country is "on course to hit between 15 to 20 percent unemployment when new jobs figures are revealed on May 8." Politico (4/23, 4.29M), Reuters (4/23, Mutikani), The Hill (4/23, Lane, 2.98M), and Bloomberg (4/23, Pickert, 4.73M) also cover the new unemployment data.

Unemployment Claims Skyrocket In Key Midwestern Swing States. Politico (4/23, Cassella, 4.29M) reports that "battleground states that handed Donald Trump the presidency four years ago are seeing higher-than-average layoffs amid an economic downturn wreaking havoc across the country – a dynamic that could hold major implications for November's election." According to Politico, "Job losses are piling up in places like Michigan, where more than one in four workers applied for unemployment benefits in the past five weeks. ... In Pennsylvania, another key Rust Belt state that voted for Trump in 2016, nearly one-fourth of the workforce has filed an unemployment claim since mid-March. Ohio is seeing more than 17 percent of workers filing jobless claims, outpacing the national average of 16.1 percent, as is Minnesota, a state Trump narrowly lost."

Scalia: People Must Leave Work Involuntarily To Be Eligible For Unemployment. Labor Secretary Scalia was asked on CNBC's The Exchange (4/23, 366K) if the extra $600 per week in unemployment benefits the federal government is providing could provide an incentive for companies to lay people off. Scalia said, "That concern has been expressed. I think providing a generous benefit that got workers as near as we could to the income that they were losing was considered important, given the sacrifice they were making, really for our national health. That said, people need to be leaving work involuntarily. We can't have people quit to take that benefit and they're not eligible for it. We're certainly reinforcing that with the states and of course, this is the short-term. We are very focused on reopening, as the President is and bringing employees back to work and keeping them safe once they're there, as well."

WPost Analysis: Millions Of Americans Still Waiting For Unemployment Benefits. The Washington Post (4/23, Romm, Long, 14.2M) reports "more than 26 million workers nationwide" are "seeking unemployment benefits," and many are "still waiting for approval." There is "a national backlog of at least 3 million unpaid jobless claims, according to a new analysis by the Washington Post, threatening Americans around the country with even more financial hardship than they anticipated." The Post adds that "the true backlog is likely far greater, following the release of new federal data Thursday showing an additional 4 million people filed for unemployment just last week."

Florida Lags In Processing Unemployed Claims. The New York Times (4/23, Mazzei, Tavernise, 18.61M) reports, "Many states are scrambling to process an avalanche of jobless claims, struggling with overloaded websites and phones that don't answer. But Florida has emerged as one of the slowest in the nation." According to the Times, "the debacle has become an embarrassment" for Gov. Ron DeSantis (R), "who has had to repeatedly address the shortcomings." DeSantis "called the system 'cumbersome' last week and acknowledged that only 4 percent of 850,000 pending claims had been paid. He appointed an unemployment czar and signed executive orders waiving some requirements to ease the traffic on the website." However, "the fixes follow what experts say has been an intentional weakening of the unemployment system over a decade, aimed at reducing taxes on employers, that has left Florida particularly ill-equipped to handle the crisis."

SBA Clarifies Rules Barring Big Companies From Accessing Aid Meant For Small Businesses.

CNBC (4/23, Son, 3.62M) reports on its website that the Small Business Administration on Thursday "issued new guidance...making it less likely that big publicly traded companies can access the next round of funding for the U.S. government's small business relief program," and "also stepped up pressure on public companies that have tapped funds to return the money." According to CNBC, "The update comes after a public furor that large companies tapped the facility, known as the Paycheck Protection Program, for hundreds of millions of dollars in loans while thousands of small businesses have yet to receive funding." CNBC adds, "While the spirit of the PPP, a key component of the Trump administration's $2 trillion-plus economic response to the coronavirus pandemic, was to help small businesses, the rules during the program's initial round allowed large restaurant and hotel companies to apply for loans of up to $10 million."

ABC World News Tonight (4/23, story 3, 2:10, Muir, 10.29M) reported, "It's a move to try and make sure that this money ends up in the hands of those small businesses who need it most. But experts tell us that this fund, because the need is so great, could run out of money again within a week." NBC Nightly News (4/23, story 3, 2:15, Holt, 8.03M) reported, "Even with an additional $310 billion in the Paycheck Protection Program, some small businesses worry they'll miss out again, after the first round allowed bigger restaurant chains with fewer than 500 employees per location to qualify."

The Washington Post (4/23, O'Connell, Gregg, 14.2M) reports the guidance states, "All borrowers must assess their economic need for a PPP loan under the standard established by the CARES Act and the PPP regulations at the time of the loan application. Borrowers still must certify in good faith that their PPP loan request is necessary." The guidance says that borrowers "must make this certification in good faith, taking into account their current business activity and their ability to access other sources of liquidity sufficient to support their ongoing operations in a manner that is not significantly detrimental to the business."

According to Politico (4/23, Warmbrodt, 4.29M), "The guidance doesn't change the formal rules of the program and wouldn't necessarily stop large companies from continuing to seek the loans, which are so attractive because they can be forgiven if a company maintains its payroll. But it marked the SBA's first public response to revelations that big public firms including Shake Shack, Ruth's Hospitality Group and Potbelly were among the first to receive the government-backed loans, which were intended to fight layoffs" during the COVID-19 outbreak. Politico added, "The loans were aimed at businesses with fewer than 500 employees, but the law included exemptions for larger restaurant and hotel operators to access the money as well."

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Rudegeair, Simon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Ruth's Hospitality Group, the owner of the Ruth's Chris Steak House chain, said Thursday it would return $20 million.

Bankers Warn That Most Or All New Small Business Aid Is Already Spoken For. According to the AP (4/23), small business owners "still applying for loans under the government's coronavirus relief program may end up disappointed" because "the $310 billion being added to the program may already be spoken for." The AP adds, "Banking industry groups say the volume of applications already sent to the Small Business Administration makes it likely that much, if not all, the new money will go to those already in the queue. ... 'The majority if not all of the funding Congress is considering right now is already exhausted,' said Nick Simpson, a spokesman with the Consumer Bankers Association." The AP goes on to report that Bank of America analysts "say businesses will ultimately need as much as $900 billion in aid."

Hotels Run By Sondland, Trump Donor Bennett Received PPP Funds. Bloomberg (4/23, McLaughlin, Clark, Brody, 4.73M) reports, "A Dallas hotel executive and major donor" to President Trump "has emerged as the biggest winner from the coronavirus bailout for small businesses. A combined total of $59 million from the small business lending package went to three lodging companies chaired by Monty Bennett, according to regulatory filings." Bennett "donated $150,000 in the last six months to a fundraising committee for Trump's reelection campaign and for Republicans," according to Federal Election Commission records. Ex-US Ambassador to the EU Gordon Sondland "was also a beneficiary of the small-business relief package. Provenance Hotels, the hotel chain he founded, received a PPP loan, according to a spokeswoman."

Roy, Knight: Federal Relief Program Does Little For Small Restaurants. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (4/23, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Rep. Chip Roy (R-TX) and Emily Williams Knight, President/CEO of the Texas Restaurant Association, write that the Payroll Protection Program does little to help small restaurants because of its restrictive conditions. Moreover, restaurant owners who are looking to hire are finding that the Cares Act created a disincentive to work, because of the additional $600 a week in unemployment benefits.

Carson: HUD Eager To Help Renters, Landlords And Loan Servicers.

In an interview with WNYW-TV New York Good Day New York (4/23, 91K), HUD Secretary Carson said, "We are obviously very concerned about people's dwelling places. The last thing they need to be worried about is whether they might lose that when they are worried about losing their lives and their loved ones. Very early on, one of the first things we did obviously was impose a moratorium on foreclosures, but also on evictions. For multi-tenant properties that are receiving some of the emergency funding, they're not permitted to evict tenants while they receiving the emergency funds. We are really kind of looking at the whole cascade of events, because it's not just the renter – it's also the landlord, it's also the servicer. So unless we keep all that intact, we destroy our infrastructure and that's going to be very difficult to repair."

Carson said on WIBC-FM Indianapolis (4/23, 6K), "What we have to do is not panic and do things that will destroy the infrastructures that exist, including the whole housing finance system. If you have tenants who generally pay their rent but now they've fallen on hard times, obviously we've made provisions so that they cannot be evicted and we've been in contact with various landlords the PHAs about other things that they can do. ... When it comes to mortgages, the same thing. If you have having trouble, contact the servicer and the servicer can provide a whole cascade of options for you."

Administration's Plan To Send Extra Farm Goods To Needy Faces Challenges.

The Washington Post (4/23, Reiley, 14.2M) discusses the challenges the Trump Administration must overcome to "purchase...$3 billion in dairy, produce and meat products that will go to food banks and those in need." The plan comes amid an "unprecedented disconnect...between where food is produced and the food banks and low-income neighborhoods that desperately need it." The Post says the challenges include transporting fresh produce and dairy "from farms to food banks in refrigerated trucks." Then, there must be refrigerator and freezer storage space "available on the receiving end to accommodate a surge of frozen meat." These and other measures must "occur while maintaining social distancing and without increasing the demand for labor because food banks, while running low on supplies, are running even lower on volunteers."

Plant Closures Raise Fears Of Meat Shortage. The Wall Street Journal (4/23, A1, Bunge, Nassauer, Kang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that grocers are bracing for a meat shortage as they struggle to secure supplies amid rising consumer demand. Retailers are paying higher prices and finding that some orders are being delivered incomplete as operations at major plants are hobbled by the coronavirus.

Another Meat Plant Halts Operations Due To Coronavirus Concerns. Bloomberg (4/23, Munshi, 4.73M) reports, "Another huge meat plant has been closed indefinitely in the U.S., with experts saying the country is just weeks away from shortages." Tyson Foods "said Thursday it was shutting its beef facility in Pasco, Washington, while team members undergo testing" for COVID-19. The plant "produces enough beef in one day to feed four million people, according to the company."

Restaurants Step Up To Feed The Hungry. On the CBS Evening News (4/23, story 5, 1:50, O'Donnell, 5.54M), Meg Oliver reported that a CBS story about a food pantry that had run out of supplies spurred a restaurant owner to take action with the help of World Central Kitchen, led by celebrity chef José Andrés. According to Oliver, "The partnership is part of World Central Kitchen's commitment to purchase one million meals from small local restaurants during the crisis."

Volunteers Trucking Food From Farms To People In Need. On ABC World News Tonight (4/23, story 6, 1:45, Muir, 10.29M), Steve Osunsami reported that ABC's story "about farmers who were pouring milk down the drain and watching vegetables rot in their fields" prompted John Botti, a money manager, to come up with a plan to "send semi-trailers to the nation's farms and bring back free food to people in need." Osunsami added, "This has now grown into an operation, with three large trucks, hundreds of volunteers, and even small businesses donating their relief money from the federal government."

UAW Says It Is Not Ready To Reopen North American Auto Plants.

The Detroit News (4/23, Hall, 825K) reports on Thursday, United Auto Workers President Rory Gamble issued a statement saying, "At this point in time, the UAW does not believe the scientific data is conclusive that it is safe to have our members back in the workplace." Gamble's statement "comes as General Motors Co. on Thursday sent out alerts to some workers notifying them that the automaker is 'actively preparing plans to safely restart our operations.'" GM, Ford Motor Co., and Fiat Chrysler all said they were working with the UAW to ensure workers were safe when plants reopened, though Fiat Chrysler "is the only Detroit carmaker to publicly set a target to begin restarting plants: May 4." Gamble said the UAW is "happy with the auto companies' response and cooperation on working through the health and safety protocols we will need in the workplace when it is appropriate to restart."

Volatility In Oil Prices Continues With Huge Jump On Thursday.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Wallace, Hodari, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports oil prices soared Thursday, as traders brace for further volatility in the coming weeks. Reuters (4/23, Disavino) reports oil extended "its rebound after major oil-producing nations said they would accelerate planned production cuts to combat the dramatic slump in demand due to the COVID-19 pandemic." Brent rose 5.8 percent to $21.56 a barrel, while West Texas Intermediate rose 22 percent to $16.78.

Drillers Dismissive Of Trump's Plan To Fill Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Reuters (4/23, Kumar) reports that President Trump's "plan to fill the U.S. emergency crude oil stockpile has become the centerpiece of his administration's strategy to shield drillers from a meltdown in energy demand – but company officials and industry groups say the program has been too slow and won't be enough to save them." Reuters says that on March 13, Trump "announced his intention to fill the U.S. Strategic Petroleum Reserve 'to the top'...as global oil prices went into freefall amid the coronavirus outbreak as governments issued stay-at-home orders that have obliterated fuel demand." According to Reuters, drillers "say they are balking at the government's offer to take their oil because it is hard for them to move it from inland fields to the SPR delivery sites on the Gulf Coast, and because they worry placing it in the reserve could compromise the oil's quality."

WSJournal: Exxon Mobil Helping In Fight Against Coronavirus. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/23, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) pushes back against anti-carbon activists that target oil companies, pointing out that Exxon Mobil has ramped up production of a key ingredient used in disinfectants and hand sanitizer amid the pandemic. Exxon is also boosting production of a material used in medical masks and gowns.

Administration Task Force Outlines Steps To Support US Uranium Miners.

The AP (4/23, Knickmeyer) reports that the Trump Administration has "urged government intervention to rescue U.S. uranium mining and nuclear fuel industries in a tough global marketplace, from making it easier to mine public lands out West to blocking some imports of foreign nuclear fuel." According to the AP, "The recommendations, which include [President] Trump's earlier request to Congress for $1.5 billion over 10 years to buy domestic uranium to create a national stockpile, are meant to 'pull America's nuclear industrial base back from the brink of collapse,' a task force" appointed by Trump in July said in Thursday's report. The AP says Energy Secretary Brouillette warned that the US "risked losing position in the industry globally, costing it leverage when it comes to encouraging safe nuclear use around the world." On Thursday, Brouillette said that "threatens our national interest and our national security."

Reuters (4/23, Gardner) reports that the task force "recommended granting U.S. energy regulators the ability to block imports of nuclear fuel from Russia and China and detailed plans for setting up a government stockpile of uranium sourced from domestic miners." Reuters says Trump established the task force in July after he "rejected a request by two U.S. uranium mining companies, Energy Fuels Inc and Ur-Energy Inc., seeking quotas for domestic uranium production to protect them against foreign competition."

Amazon Used Third-Party Data To Design, Sell Competing Products.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Mattioli, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Amazon has used third-party data to develop its own products, a practice that goes against its stated policy. An analysis of documents and interviews with former Amazon employees by the Journal found that the company has used data from third-party merchants selling on its site to design and market competing products. Amazon has long maintained that it does not use third-party information it collects from its platform to create its own products.

Europe Sees Unprecedented Collapse In Economic Activity.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Hannon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports economic activity in Europe tumbled in April as governments ordered social distancing restrictions to limit the spread of the coronavirus. According to data firm IHS Markit A measure of activity in the eurozone's private sector dropped to a record low of 13.5 in April from 29.7 in March.

EU Recovery Fund Expected To Top $1T. The AP (4/23, Cook) reports, "European Union leaders agreed Thursday to revamp the EU's long-term budget and set up a massive recovery fund to tackle the impact of the coronavirus and help rebuild the 27-nation bloc's ravaged economies, but deep differences remain over the best way to achieve those goals." The AP (4/23, Cray, Cano, Charlton) reports that "while no figure was put on the plan, officials said 1-1.5 trillion euros ($1.1-1.6 trillion) would be needed."

The New York Times (4/23, Stevis-Gridneff, 18.61M) reports while European Union leaders "did approve the bailout package in a teleconference on Thursday night, they also shifted their attention to what more still needs to be done, asking the bloc's executive arm to come up with a proposal for a recovery fund from what is set to be an economic calamity unseen on the continent outside wartime." However, "what that fund will do, how big it will be, when it will be introduced – and virtually every other detail pertaining to its function – is still to be determined, and those gaping blanks lay bare just how far away the bloc's leaders are from agreeing on a bolder joint effort."

The New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) reports that "southern European countries led by Italy and Spain are calling for a recovery fund of more than a trillion euros that will be able to extend grants to nations rather than loans. But the idea of grants does not appeal to northern countries." EC President Ursula von der Leyen is quoted as saying, "There will be a sound balance of grants and loans and this will be a matter of negotiation with member states, so we find a good mixture."

Trump Says He Disagrees With Fauci On Status Of US Testing.

The Washington Examiner (4/23, Brest, 448K) reports President Trump said Thursday that he disagreed with NIAID Director Fauci, "who said the United States is not where it should be regarding coronavirus testing." Trump said, "As I've said many times, we are very advanced in testing. ... When they look at statistics, statistically, we are doing phenomenally, in terms of mortality, in terms of all of the different elements that you can judge. If he said that, I don't agree with him."

Pence: US Has Tested Nearly 5M People. Vice President Pence said on the Rush Limbaugh Show (4/23, 165K), "It is remarkable to think that one month ago our nation had tested 80,000 people for the coronavirus. And as we sit here today, we are rapidly approaching having tested five million people in our nation. The only reason it happen is because President Trump early on in this process brought in all of the top commercial laboratories in the country and basically created an alliance between them to scale up testing at a level that had never been seen in the history of this country."

Hahn Says FDA Has "Approved 62 Diagnostic Tests." FDA Commissioner Hahn said on CNN (4/23, 2.16M), "We've approved 62 diagnostic tests. That includes both the antibody test as well as the diagnostic test. Of those 62, four are antibody tests. But we have 390 laboratory test developers, academic labs as well as commercial labs, in line working with us on their laboratory tests. So, what I can provide assurance to the American people is that those tests that we have reviewed and that we have authorized have gone through the criteria established for validity, reliability and reproducibility by the FDA."

Rasmussen Poll: Voters Think Trump Puts Country's Interests First In Coronavirus Response.

Breitbart (4/23, Starr, 673K) reports, "Voters believe putting the interest of Americans first is more important" to President Trump than House

Speaker Pelosi "when it comes to handling the coronavirus crisis, according to a recent poll." The Rasmussen Reports poll "revealed that voters are split along party lines pretty evenly when it comes to who better to handle the crisis – 45 percent say Trump, while 44 percent pick Pelosi – however, 50 percent of respondents believe putting the best interest of Americans first is more important to Trump than Pelosi (47 percent)." Also, "the poll found that Republicans are more firmly behind Trump on his handling of the coronavirus and its impact on the country (82 percent) than Democrats are in their support for Pelosi (69 percent)."

Federalist's Marcus: Data Suggest Trump Was Right About Coronavirus Fatality Rate.

David Marcus writes in The Federalist (4/23, 126K) that while President Trump "was lambasted" for saying on Sean Hannity's show in early March that "he had a hunch the coronavirus fatality rate, which the World Health Organization pegged then at 3 to 4 percent, was in fact much lower, under 1 percent," it "looks now like the president might well have been right." Data from random antibody tests conducted in New York State "suggest that as many as 2.7 million people statewide have had the coronavirus. That along with the just over 15,000 deaths that have occurred leads to a fatality rate for the virus of .5 percent" according to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D).

Aides Say Trump Is Focused on Media's Portrayal Of His Coronavirus Response.

The New York Times (4/23, Rogers, Karni, 18.61M) reports that President Trump "arrives in the Oval Office these days as late as noon" after watching cable television in the White House master bedroom from as early as 5 a.m. The Times says Trump "sees few allies no matter which channel he clicks. He is angry even with Fox, an old security blanket, for not portraying him as he would like to be seen." The Times cites "more than a dozen administration officials and close advisers who spoke about Mr. Trump's strange new life," who said that he "is isolated from the supporters, visitors, travel and golf that once entertained him." His "primary focus, advisers said, is assessing how his performance on the virus is measured in the news media, and the extent to which history will blame him." Trump "frequently vents about how he is portrayed."

Glasser: Trump "Refuses To Mourn" COVID-19 Victims. Susan Glasser of the New Yorker (4/23, 5.82M) writes under the headline "Fifty Thousand Americans Dead From The Coronavirus, And A President Who Refuses To Mourn Them" that President Trump "has offered his opinion on matters small and large. ... Despite the flood of words, though, what has struck me the most this week is what Trump does not talk about: the mounting toll of those who have died in this crisis. So voluble that he regularly talks well past dinnertime at his nightly briefings, the President somehow never seems to find time to pay tribute to those who have been lost."

Trump Campaign Uses Newsom's "Promises Kept" Comment In Videos.

Politico (4/23, White, 4.29M) reports that California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said in a briefing Thursday that "the federal government had sent California 90,000 testing swabs out of a promised initial shipment of 100,000 – assistance that Trump had committed to during a Wednesday conversation with Newsom." Newsom said, "Promise made, promise kept," which is a phrase that "Trump's election campaign has regularly deployed to make his case for a second term." Politico adds that a Trump campaign account "recogniz[ed] that echo" and "swiftly blasted out a clip of Newsom's praise to more than 600,000 followers with the hashtag #PromisesMadePromisesKept." Trump's campaign "has already turned Newsom's praise into videos seeking to showcase bipartisan support for the president's coronavirus leadership – the type of development that would have been unthinkable months ago."

Study: Coronavirus Deaths Of Elderly Trump Voters Could Cost Him The Election. Politico (4/23, Cadelago, 4.29M) reports, "Mass casualties from the coronavirus could upend the political landscape in battleground states and shift contests away" from Trump, according to a new analysis. Academic researchers writing in Administrative Theory & Praxis "conclude that when considering nothing other than the tens of thousands of deaths projected from the virus, demographic shifts alone could be enough to swing crucial states to Joe Biden in the fall." Andrew Johnson, the lead author and a professor of management at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi, said in an interview, "The pandemic is going to take a greater toll on the conservative electorate leading into this election – and that's simply just a calculation of age. The virus is killing more older voters, and in many states that's the key to a GOP victory."

Biden's Strength With Older Voters Could Threaten Trump's Reelection Chances. The Washington Post (4/23, Olorunnipa, 14.2M) reports, "A string of recent polls show troubling signs for President Trump with older voters, a group central to his reelection effort that appears to be drifting away from him amid a pandemic that has been especially deadly for senior citizens." Biden, "whose support from older voters helped him lead the primaries, appears to be carrying over some of that appeal into the general election. With Trump seeing sagging approval ratings over his handling of the coronavirus crisis, Biden's campaign is attempting to capitalize with a group that has traditionally leaned Republican."

CDC's Schuchat: "Vaccine Work Is Moving Faster Than Ever."

CDC Principal Deputy Director Anne Schuchat said on WIVB-TV Buffalo, NY (4/23, 43K), "The vaccine work is moving faster than ever, but faster than ever isn't as fast as everybody would like. There are clinical trials of more than one vaccine going on right now, and as soon as those results come in, they can move to larger-scale testing. But to have large, large amounts of vaccine for the whole country is going to take some time."

Clinical Trial Underway For Coronavirus Vaccine. NBC Nightly News (4/23, story 6, 2:10, Holt, 8.03M) provided a look "inside the clinical trial for a coronavirus vaccine and the volunteer who signed up after losing someone close to him." NBC's Richard Engel reported the vaccine is "being produced by a Pennsylvania based company called Inovio. Their approach is to inject part of the virus' DNA code to fool our bodies into thinking we've been infected for real and start producing virus fighting antibodies." Engel added, "The Gates Foundation gave $5 million to support the research."

Gilead Disputes Report That Remdesivir Failed To Help COVID-19 Patients In Chinese Trial.

Reuters (4/23, Banerjee, Joseph, Venkat) reports Gilead Sciences' remdesivir "failed to help patients with severe COVID-19 in a clinical trial conducted in China, but the drugmaker said the study's results were inconclusive because it was terminated early." Reuters adds that "in the Chinese trial remdesivir, given by intravenous infusion, failed to improve patients' condition or reduce the pathogen's presence in the bloodstream, according to draft documents published accidentally by the World Health Organization (WHO)," however, "details were thin and suggested limitations in interpreting the data that has not yet been fully reviewed."

STAT (4/23, Sheridan, 24K) reports Gilead spokesperson Amy Flood "said the company believes 'the post included inappropriate characterization of the study.' Because the study was stopped early because it had too few patients, she said, it cannot 'enable statistically meaningful conclusions.'" However, Flood said, "trends in the data suggest a potential benefit for remdesivir, particularly among patients treated early in disease."

Ousted HHS Official Hires Blasey Ford's Lawyers To Represent Him In Whistleblower Complaint.

The Washington Free Beacon (4/23, Goodman, 78K) reports Rick Bright, "the federal health official who claims he was demoted for opposing the Trump administration's alleged politicization of coronavirus treatments has hired Christine Blasey Ford's legal team to represent him in a whistleblower complaint against the government." Bright, who was "ousted on Tuesday as director of the Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Authority (BARDA)," has "has retained prominent Democratic activist lawyers Debra Katz and Lisa Banks, who previously represented Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh's sexual assault accuser Christine Blasey Ford. Bright said he plans to file a whistleblower complaint with the HHS inspector general."

The Daily Caller (4/23, Talcott, 716K) says a New York Times report about Bright, "who claims he was fired for opposing hydroxychloroquine," has "quickly fallen apart." Times reporters Michael D. Shear and Maggie Haberman "pushed Bright's 'scorching statement' following his dismissal, but heavily downplayed other key reports that contradict the former director's claims." According to March 28 release from the FDA, in March, Bright requested that the agency "issue an Emergency Use Authorization (EUA) for emergency use of oral formulations of chloroquine phosphate and hydroxychloroquine sulfate" for treatment of COVID-19. In addition, according to Politico, "three people with knowledge of HHS' recent acquisition of tens of millions of doses of those drugs say that Bright had supported those acquisitions in internal communications."

Politico (4/23, Diamond, 4.29M) reports, "Administration officials had discussed removing Bright from his post last year amid management complaints, according to interviews that Politico conducted in January." Joel Pollak writes on Breitbart (4/23, 673K) that according to information tweeted by Politico reporter Dan Diamond, Bright "was already going to lose his job months before" the hydroxychloroquine controversy.

Pallone Calls On HHS IG To Investigate Bright's Ouster. The Hill (4/23, Weixel, 2.98M) reports House Energy and Commerce Chairman Frank Pallone "is calling for an investigation" into Bright's ouster. Pallone wrote a letter Thursday asking the HHS Office of Inspector General "to investigate Bright's abrupt transfer to a more narrow role at the National Institutes of Health. Pallone said he is concerned that the Trump administration has been politicizing public health agencies."

Eshoo To Hold Hearings On Bright's Removal. The New York Times (4/23, Haberman, Stolberg, Vogel, 18.61M) reports Rep. Anna Eshoo (D-CA), Chairwoman of the House Energy and Commerce health subcommittee, said on Thursday that she plans to hold hearings into Bright's removal. Eshoo said, "I know that life is difficult for members to travel, but we can't let that get in the way and I'm sure that other members would want to be a part of a hearing as well." Eshoo said she would like to hear from HHS Secretary Azar as well as HHS Assistant Secretary for Preparedness and Response Robert Kadlec, who supervised Bright.

Hahn: FDA Will Focus On Clinical Trials In Assessing Hydroxychloroquine. FDA Commissioner Hahn said on CNN (4/23, 2.16M), "With respect to hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine, there are anecdotal reports, and we've seen one this week that suggests that there is benefit, but also that suggest that there might not be benefit. These are observational studies. They're not actually clinical trials. And what we're going to use at the FDA are actually the results of randomized clinical trials to help us make the best decision. Of course, we want to include all the data that comes forward to us, including this real-world evidence from observational studies and that's really important for individual physicians to take into account as they make decisions for their patients."

WPost Criticizes Trump's "Reckless" Promotion Of Hydroxychloroquine. A Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) editorial says "it is important to grasp the lessons of President Trump's reckless recommendation of a drug without evidence of efficacy. Especially at a time of grave distress, the lesson is: demand evidence, seek proof and don't listen to quacks anywhere." The Post says the US "has built a process of drug testing and approvals considered the gold standard around the world, involving three phases of clinical trials to test safety, dosage, efficacy and possible side effects of a new drug or vaccine. The fear inspired by the coronavirus must not undermine this rigorous procedure."

US Nursing Homes Lack Access To Tests For Staff And Residents.

The AP (4/23, Condon, Sedensky, Mustian) reports that "after two months and more than 11,000 deaths that have made the nation's nursing homes some of the most terrifying places to be during the coronavirus crisis, most of them still don't have access to enough tests to help control outbreaks among their frail, elderly residents." According to the AP, "Neither the federal government nor the leader in nursing home deaths, New York, has mandated testing for all residents and staff," and "an industry group says only about a third of the 15,000 nursing homes in the U.S. have ready access to tests."

Latinos "Disproportionately Impacted" By Coronavirus.

Norah O'Donnell reported on the CBS Evening News (4/23, story 4, 2:05, 5.54M), "Like the African American community, the nation's Latinos are being disproportionately impacted by the coronavirus. The CDC says Latinos represent more than 27 percent of COVID deaths in hot spots, even though they are just 18 percent of the population." CBS' Adriana Diaz spoke with some members of the community about their concerns.

Many Americans Increasingly Worried About Second Wave Of Coronavirus.

NBC Nightly News (4/23, story 5, 2:20, Holt, 8.03M) reported on "the growing concern about a second wave of COVID-19 infections this fall, as many Americans are concerned about lifting stay-at-home orders too soon during this current outbreak." NBC's Tom Costello reported that "as the world's health experts warn a second wave of the coronavirus is very likely in the fall and winter, President Trump is down playing those risks." Costello added, "A CBS News poll finds if stay-at-home orders were lifted, 48 percent say they would not return to public places until the outbreak is over."

Researchers: Many More Infected In US On March 1 Than Previously Thought.

Citing Northeastern University researchers, the New York Times (4/23, Carey, Glanz, 18.61M) reports that "by the time New York City confirmed its first case of the coronavirus on March 1, thousands of infections were already silently spreading through the city." In addition, "hidden outbreaks were also spreading almost completely undetected in Boston, San Francisco, Chicago and Seattle, long before testing showed that each city had a major problem." The Times adds, "In five major U.S. cities, as of March 1 there were only 23 confirmed cases of coronavirus. But according to the Northeastern model, there could have actually been about 28,000 infections in those cities by then."

On NBC Nightly News (4/23, story 4, 1:55, Holt, 8.03M), Miguel Almaguer reported a study of New Yorkers found "nearly 14 percent of the 3,000 residents randomly tested had COVID-19 antibodies, meaning they had the virus. With nearly 20 million people in the state, some 2.7 million New Yorkers may have already been infected."

On ABC World News Tonight (4/23, story 4, 2:00, Muir, 10.29M), Kaylee Hartung reported that "the discovery of an early death" is "rewriting the timeline of the COVID outbreak in America." Patricia Dowd "died in Santa Clara County, California back on February 6, three week before the first documented COVID death in the country." California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) is now "telling coroners statewide to investigate cases as far back as December."

States Each Tackling Their Own Health Crisis.

ABC World News Tonight (4/23, lead story, 5:50, Muir, 10.29M) reported the coronavirus "is still moving through this country at a dangerous pace." ABC reported, "At least 47,000 lives now, more than 900 deaths in just the last 24 hours." ABC's Eva Pilgrim added, "Across the country, each state battling its own challenge. California marking its deadliest day yet, 117 people dying overnight."

Governors, Scientists Hope Warmer Weather Slows Coronavirus Transmission.

The Washington Times (4/23, Howell, 492K) reports, "The COVID-19 pandemic is entering a critical phase, with governors and scientists hopeful that warmer, wetter weather tamps down transmission while cautioning that it's too soon to ease social distancing and other social restrictions." Spring and summer humidity "yanks infectious droplets to the ground. The moisture that surrounds the virus when it is expelled from an infected person tends to evaporate quickly in colder months, allowing the virus to float in the air. Dry air can also make it harder for people to clear the virus from their nasal passages."

ABC World News Tonight (4/23, story 2, 0:45, Muir, 10.29M) reported President Trump on Thursday announced "some hopeful results of a new DHS study...which could give us new clues about what could happen with this virus as the weather gets warmer." ABC's Eva Pilgrim reported "sunlight seems to have an effect on killing the virus, the same with warmer temperatures and even humidity," according to a top DHS official.

Polls Find Majority Of Americans Support Maintaining Lockdown Restrictions.

The AP (4/23, Pace, Fingerhut) reports that a new AP-NORC poll has found that "just 28% of Americans say they're regularly getting information from [President] Trump about the coronavirus, while as many do so on occasion. Twenty-three percent say they have high levels of trust in what the president is telling the public, and another 21% trust him a moderate amount." The AP adds that while "confidence in Trump is higher among his supporters," only about "half of Republicans say they have a lot of trust in Trump's information on the pandemic."

Another "30% trust information he provides a moderate amount," and "22% say they have little or no trust in what he says about the COVID-19 outbreak." The AP also reports that the poll "found the vast majority of Americans – 80% – continue to back requiring Americans to stay in their homes, and a majority doubt that it will be safe to ease restrictions soon."

Politico (4/23, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that a CBS News poll published Thursday found that "70 percent of respondents believe the country's top priority should be to 'try to slow the spread of coronavirus by keeping people home and social distancing, even if the economy is hurt in the short term.'" On the other hand, "only 30 percent think the top national priority should instead be to 'try to get the economy going by sending people back to work, even if it means more people might be exposed to coronavirus.'"

Paula Reid said on the CBS Evening News (4/23, story 3, 2:20, O'Donnell, 5.54M) that according to the CBS poll, "over 80 percent of Americans think governors and local officials should choose when to reopen for business, not the President. Part of the reason is the contradictory messaging from the President and his top health officials." Reid added that Trump "regularly claims the country has the testing capacity needed to reopen," but on Thursday, NIAID Director Fauci "said the opposite."

Antibody Survey Shows Wide Exposure To Coronavirus In New York.

The AP (4/23, Matthews, Caruso) reports, "More evidence is emerging that far more New Yorkers have had the coronavirus than the number confirmed by lab tests, officials said Thursday, offering insight that could help authorities decide how and how quickly to let people stop isolating from friends and return to work." The New York Times (4/23, Goodman, Rothfeld, Ferré-Sadurní, 18.61M) reports Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) announced that preliminary results from coronavirus antibody testing suggest around 14 percent of New York State residents have been infected by the virus. Around 3,000 people were tested and the results suggest that 21 percent of those in New York City have been infected compared to 16.7 percent on Long Island, 11.7 percent in Westchester and Rockland counties, and 3.6 percent in the rest of the state.

Politico New York (4/23, Young) reports the samples were "collected over a two-day period at grocery and big box stores in 19 counties and 40 localities across New York." Reuters (4/23, Goldberg, Layne) reports the results would suggest that "2.7 million residents across the state may have been infected with the disease," which is far more than the number of confirmed cases in the state." However, Cuomo said the results "may not be representative of the state, since those tested were out shopping, rather than at home."

Study: Nearly All Hospitalized Coronavirus Patients In New York City Had Chronic Health Issues. The New York Times (4/23, Rabin, 18.61M) reports, "A new study of thousands of hospitalized coronavirus patients in the New York City area, the epicenter of the outbreak in the United States, has found that nearly all of them had at least one major chronic health condition, and most – 88 percent – had at least two." Only six percent of the patients "had no underlying health conditions." Karina Davidson, Senior Vice President at the Feinstein Institutes for Medical Research, who was the paper's senior author, said, "The number of patients who had chronic comorbidities surprised us."

NYTimes Profiles NYC's Food Deliverers. The New York Times (4/23, Stewart, Bhaskar, 18.61M) has a feature on food drivers in the city, working "to feed the city's hungry" by delivering to food pantries "and to people stuck at home more essential than ever."

Michigan Republicans Take Aim At Whitmer's Emergency Powers.

The AP (4/23, Eggert, White) reports, "Republicans who control the Michigan Legislature said they will meet Friday to pass bills to rein in the emergency powers" of Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) "and create a committee to oversee the state's response to the coronavirus outbreak, a dramatic strike against the Democrat amid the health crisis." A spokeswoman for Whitmer "promised a veto and said Republicans were 'playing dangerous partisan games' while the governor is focused on saving lives and controlling the spread of the virus." According to the article, "the flap could explode into a legal fight because one state law gives the governor broad authority to unilaterally declare an emergency, while another one requires input from the Legislature. In issuing her stay-home orders, Whitmer has cited both laws."

Georgia Leads States In Reopening Businesses.

NBC Nightly News (4/23, lead story, 3:45, Holt, 8.03M) reported Georgia is "calculating it's better to send people back to work, even as President Trump questions whether their plans to reopen tomorrow go too far." NBC's Blayne Alexander reported, "One new model shows Georgia is set to hit the peak next week, days after businesses open their doors." Alexander added, "And more states to follow. In Tennessee and Ohio, some businesses start reopening May 1, and tomorrow, openings in Alaska and Oklahoma, where spas, salons, and pet groomers will see the first business in weeks."

The Washington Examiner (4/23, Brest, 448K) reports Oklahoma Gov. Kevin Stitt (R) "announced certain nonessential businesses will be allowed to open starting on Friday, in an effort to restart the economy." Stitt "explained at a Wednesday press conference the state's three-phase plan to reopen the economy, which is based on coronavirus testing and tracing." The first phase of the state's plan "allows for personal care businesses to reopen starting on Friday for appointments only, while following strict sanitation protocols." The businesses "included under the plan include hair salons, barbershops, spas, nail salons, and pet groomers, and these guidelines are only applicable in communities that do not have more restrictions in place."

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (4/23, Olson, 1.04M) reports, "An estimated 80,000 to 100,000 employees could return to work Monday under a plan" by Gov. Tim Walz (D) "to dial back the state's stay-at-home order, which was imposed to reduce or delay the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic." The plan is "tailored to manufacturers and offices that don't have face-to-face interaction with clients and weren't deemed critical industries that were exempt from the stay-at-home order." According to the Star Tribune, "Minnesota appears nowhere near its peak in the COVID-19 pandemic, with the Health Department reporting one-day records Thursday of 21 deaths and 221 new lab-confirmed infections."

On NBC Nightly News (4/23, story 2, 2:25, Holt, 8.03M), Steve Patterson reported from Las Vegas, where "another day along an eerily empty strip representing millions in lost revenue." Patterson reported Las Vegas Mayor Carolyn Goodman, "who has no jurisdiction over the Strip, has repeatedly pressed for its swift reopening, but on CNN Wednesday, didn't offer any guidance on how businesses could do that safely."

The Washington Post (4/23, Stanley-Becker, Weiner, 14.2M) reports, "Governors preparing to roll back restrictions put in place to slow the spread of the novel coronavirus are in some cases acting without the input and against the wishes of their own medical and emergency management staff." Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp (R) announced his plans "to reopen without receiving guidance from the panel of doctors tapped to advise him and without giving advance notice to regional health departments responsible for carrying out his orders, according to physicians and state officials." In Utah, the Post says, "the governor lifted a statewide lockdown on elective procedures before his medical supply team had finished estimating how quickly hospitals would exhaust their supply of personal protective equipment, according to members of the state's response team." The Post says "the apparent rush in Georgia and other states has alarmed some local leaders, who fear political considerations are overriding detailed assessments of the data."

Deputy HHS Secretary Eric Hargan said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (4/23), "The federal government's role in this is to provide advice and recommendations to the state and local leaders. They are the ones who are primarily responsible for the restrictions on businesses, on social activities that they put in place there. ... The governor, the mayors and the county officials take that advice and then they look at their local system and decide what they think is best for their own population. ... That is a decision that local leaders, state leaders make for themselves using federal guidelines. The President expressed his opinion about what is going on there. The governor made his decision."

Vice President Pence said on the Rush Limbaugh Show (4/23, 165K), "There's no one in America that wants to reopen this country more than President Donald Trump. And that was the reason why one week ago today the President directed the White House Coronavirus Task Force to lay out guidelines for opening up America again. And it's all reflective of the President's sense, all of our sense, that America works when America is working." Pence added, "I have to tell you, seeing protests around the country, seeing people stepping forward, I share their passion. I know the President shares their passion for reopening America, getting America working again. But we want to do it in a way that ensures that we won't have a resurgence of the coronavirus and that once we open America again, that we'll keep America open. That's what we're working toward every single day."

NEC Director Kudlow was asked on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (4/23, 49K) if the money the federal government is putting into the economy will be enough. Kudlow said, "That's a very hard question to answer. ... Health and safety must come first. President Trump repeats that again and again. ... The numbers, new case numbers have come almost to the flattening point. They are plus three percent daily rate of increase. There was 45 percent a month ago. That gives me hope in terms of your question. ... That gives me hope we are entering a transition period. Some states may come in before May 1. But May will be a transition period and that will get us to a reopening. Hopefully, that will lead to better economic conditions."

CDC Principal Deputy Director Anne Schuchat WIVB-TV Buffalo, NY (4/23, 43K), "the CDC has worked with the White House task force to identify guidance, indicators or metrics that we can follow to see whether things are going in the right direction for long enough with sufficient testing capacity for us to move from phase zero to phase one to phase two to phase three and we really want to follow the data and follow the preparedness. We don't want to reopen everything all at once. We want to understand what the risks and benefits are."

Hannity Criticizes Georgia Governor For Reopening State. The Washington Examiner (4/23, Brest, 448K) reports Fox News host Sean Hannity criticized Kemp "over his plans to have certain nonessential businesses reopen later this week." Hannity, during an interview with Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "criticized the order because he thought it could end up hurting the Republican Party." Hannity said, "If this guy in Georgia, Kemp, he's a Republican, I don't care – he does this wrong, they are going to bludgeon him and not want to open anything. We don't need the tattoo parlors open yet, that's a dumb idea, and some other of his ideas are pretty dumb. They are going to bludgeon him to stop all openings in this economy can't survive until we open safely. There's a way to open safely just like the guys stocking the shelves."

DC Mayor Forms Advisory Group On Lifting Coronavirus Restrictions. The Washington Post (4/23, Olivo, Nirappil, Cox, 14.2M) reports District of Columbia Mayor Muriel Bowser (D) "announced plans Thursday for an advisory group focused on when and how to lift" COVID-19 restrictions, a day before Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) "plans reveal his blueprint for reopening the economy and pulling the Washington region back toward normalcy." Bowser "said the 'Reopen D.C. Advisory Group' will include a dozen committees that will focus on health disparities in the city and what reopening would mean for restaurants, food retailers and the real estate and construction industries."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump's Inconsistent Positions Keep Governors On Their Toes. The New York Times (4/23, Fausset, Rojas, 18.61M) reports on President Trump's "seemingly contradictory series of positions regarding when to relax social distancing measures and reopen American businesses." According to the Times, "the result is that governors, even those allied with Mr. Trump, are all but forced to pay close attention to the administration's guidance on the timing of opening up their economies." Critics say the guidance is "all over the place."

Gates Outlines Tools US Needs Before Economy Can Be Reopened. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M), Bill Gates, a co-chair of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, outlines the "innovative new tools" the United States needs to help "detect, treat and prevent" COVID-19 before it "can return to business and life as usual." First, "to reopen the economy, we need to be testing enough people that we can quickly detect emerging hotspots and intervene early." Next, the US needs innovation in contact tracing. Finally, the US needs to develop treatment options and a vaccine.

Wisconsin's Partisan Divide Sharpens Over Coronavirus.

The New York Times (4/23, Epstein, 18.61M) reports in Wisconsin, "officials from both parties rushed to familiar corners this week, with Democrats rallying behind" Gov. Tony Evers (D) for deciding "to extend the state's stay-home ordinance through May 26, while Republicans are stoking anger over what they depict as an assault on civil liberties." The state's "decade-long partisan war will once again be on display Friday, as right-wing protesters prepare to mass outside the State Capitol in Madison to assail Mr. Evers and the restrictions he put in place to curb the spread of the virus." Republicans, "in need of a show of force after badly losing a State Supreme Court contest this month, have sued Mr. Evers to block the extension, discussed removing his public health secretary and, in recent days, amplified protesters' calls to reopen the state while covertly helping to coordinate the Madison rally and other satellite gatherings across the state."

Obama: Still No "Coherent National Plan" On COVID-19.

The Washington Times (4/23, Chasmar, 492K) reports former President Obama "took a subtle dig at his successor on Twitter, saying the country is still waiting for President Trump to outline 'a coherent national plan' for combating the coronavirus pandemic." In a tweet, Obama on Wednesday "praised the states that are taking their own initiatives in tackling the pandemic." He tweeted, "While we continue to wait for a coherent national plan to navigate this pandemic, states like Massachusetts are beginning to adopt their own public health plans to combat this virus – before it's too late."

Warren's Oldest Brother Dies Of Coronavirus.

The Boston Globe (4/23, Bidgood, 972K) reports Donald Reed Herring, the oldest brother of Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), "died on Tuesday night in Norman, Okla., about three weeks after testing positive for the coronavirus. Herring, a 20-year veteran of the US Air Force, was 86." Warren said, "I'm grateful to the nurses and other front-line staff who took care of my brother, but it is hard to know that there was no family to hold his hand or to say 'I love you' one more time. And now there's no funeral for those of us who loved him to hold each other close. I will miss my brother."

WSJournal Urges Adoption Of Coronavirus Liability Reform Legislation.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that attorneys are eyeing the healthcare and economic crises brought about by the coronavirus pandemic, and urges congressional Republicans to pass liability reform legislation.

Durham Expands Team Of Investigators.

The Washington Examiner (4/23, Dunleavy, 448K) reports US Attorney John Durham "has expanded his team as his review of the Trump-Russia investigators ramps up." In recent weeks, Durham has added "agents from the FBI as well as the chief of the Violent Crimes and Narcotics Trafficking Section for the U.S. attorney's office in Washington, Anthony Scarpelli."

Steele Told UK Court He No Longer Has Documents Used In Dossier.

The Daily Caller (4/23, Ross, 718K) reports Christopher Steele "told a British court last month that he no longer has documents and other information from his meetings with the main source for his Trump dossier, suggesting that the former British spy has no way of backing up his side in a dispute" with the Justice Department Inspector General, according to a deposition transcript. Steele "also told the court that his communications regarding the dossier, including with Fusion GPS, were 'wiped' in December 2016 and January 2017."

Trump Signs Executive Order Suspending Immigration.

President Trump retweeted his Monday night tweet announcing "an Executive Order to temporarily suspend immigration into the United States," writing, "Fully signed and ready to go!" Breitbart (4/23, Binder, 673K) reports Trump "signed an executive order slowing some green card processing, though a prior draft of the order was much more expansive and broad." The executive order "halts a modest level of legal immigration from employment-based green card categories and extended family green card categories while exempting all visa worker programs."

Labor Secretary Scalia said on CNBC's The Exchange (4/23, 366K), "The President, really from the time he ran for office, has been focused maybe more than anything else on preserving jobs for American workers and rebuilding our economy. ... The President recognizes...that among the things that might make it a little bit harder for American workers to get back into jobs, is competition from people coming in from abroad. So this is a 60-day suspension of permanent immigration to make it easier, as businesses reopen, for American workers to get into those jobs."

Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said on Fox News' The Story (4/23), "I think what we see here is this is a targeted approach that the President has taken. It affects new immigrants that are coming to the US. These are individuals that are competing with Americans for jobs, basically any job in any industry. That's really what the President is targeting. ... We have 26 million Americans that are filing unemployment claims. We want to make sure those individuals can rejoin the economy, maintain their jobs, regain their jobs.”

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (4/23, 831K), Acting DHS Deputy Secretary Ken Cuccinelli said of the executive order, “The goal, of course, is for the President to be able to focus on rebuilding the American labor pool. And he doesn’t want to be enlarging that pool artificially with foreign workers right now when Americans are filing unemployment claims at a record level.” Cuccinelli said on WMAL-AM Washington (4/23), “The President has made abundantly clear that after health and safety, his first priority is getting American citizens back to work. ... I think he knows what he is doing on the economic side and certainly those of us in DHS are going to be aggressive in laying before him an entire menu of options going forward.”

White House Mulling Restricting H-1B Visas. Reuters (4/23, Hesson) reports the executive order “included a number of exemptions and was not a full suspension of legal immigration, as suggested by a Trump tweet late on Monday night.” Reuters reports that a “senior administration official” said the White House is “considering a separate action that could deal with skilled workers who enter the country on H-1B visas and others affected by U.S. immigration policy.”

High Court Rules Legal Immigrants Who Commit Crimes Can Be Deported.

The AP (4/23) reports the Supreme Court is “making it harder for noncitizens who are authorized to live permanently in the United States to argue they should be allowed to stay in the country if they’ve committed crimes.” The AP says the decision “split the court 5-4 along ideological lines.” Reuters (4/23, Chung) reports that the majority “found a legal permanent resident from Jamaica named Andre Martello Barton ineligible to have his deportation canceled under a U.S. law that lets some longtime legal residents avoid expulsion.” According to Reuters, Barton “was targeted for deportation after criminal convictions in Georgia for drug and gun crimes.” Reuters says the ruling “could affect thousands of immigrants with criminal convictions – many for minor offenses – who reside legally in the United States.”

The Washington Examiner (4/23, Leonardi, 448K) says the ruling “broaden[ed] the scope of crimes that make immigrants, including green card holders, ineligible to have their deportation orders canceled.” Justice Brett Kavanaugh wrote for the court, “The immigration laws enacted by Congress do not allow cancellation of removal when a lawful permanent resident has amassed a criminal record of this kind.” In dissent, Justices Stephen Breyer, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Elena Kagan, and Sonia Sotomayor “argued that the majority decision was at fault for ‘contorting the statutory language,’ and that the laws did not apply to Barton as a permanent resident who was already admitted.”

US Adds Surveillance Cameras, More Troops To US-Mexico Border.

The AP (4/23, LaPorta, Watson) reports the Administration “has been quietly adding military surveillance cameras at the U.S.-Mexico border in response to the coronavirus pandemic.” According to documents it obtained, the AP adds, the Defense Department, at the request of DHS, “sent 60 mobile surveillance cameras and 540 additional troops to the southwest border this month.” In addition, CDC Director Redfield “has extended the rules largely shutting down the asylum system until May 20.” CBP spokesman Matthew Dyman said the cameras are there only for the duration of the pandemic.

Around 32,000 ICE Detainees Include Some Held Since They Were Minors.

The New York Times (4/23, Kanno-Youngs, 18.61M) reports that “around 32,000 migrants remain in custody on civil charges” as ICE “faces growing pressure to address the health concerns posed by the spreading coronavirus, including scores...who were initially taken into custody as minors, then held long enough to age into the adult detention center.” The Times says ICE “has confirmed 253 cases of the virus among detainees and 32 cases among staff members.” Earlier this year, lawyers representing two migrants argued in a class-action suit that DHS and ICE “had violated a statute that mandates how migrant children should be protected,” and, “as a result, instead of minors going to a group home, they are ending up in ICE jails.”

NYTimes: Nonviolent Offenders Should Be Considered For Release During Pandemic.

In an editorial, the New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) says inmates in prison for nonviolent or minor offenses should be considered for release during the coronavirus pandemic. Writing that “the first inmate in a federal prison known to have died” of COVID-19 “was serving time for a nonviolent drug offense,” the Times argues that incarceration may amount to a death sentence for some of these offenders.

WPost: SCOTUS Correct To Reverse “Anomaly” On Convictions By Non-Unanimous Juries.

The Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) editorializes that in 1972, the Supreme Court “gave its blessing to [an] anomaly” in Louisiana and Oregon that “allowed non-unanimous juries to convict people – in major cases, up to two jurors can dissent. ... This week the court renounced that decision and restored a core constitutional protection to defendants in all states.” The Post backs the decision, writing that while “the court must avoid flip-flopping whenever possible...doing so was justified in this case.”

Caputo Deleted Tweets Featuring “Racist And Derogatory Comments.”

CNN (4/23, Kaczynski, McDermott, Steck, 83.16M) reports on its website that new HHS Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs Michael Caputo “in a series of now-deleted tweets made racist and derogatory comments about Chinese people, said Democrats wanted the coronavirus to kill millions of people and accused the media of intentionally creating panic around the pandemic” to hurt President Trump. Caputo, “a prolific user who often tweeted insults and profanity, recently erased nearly his entire Twitter history from before April 12.”

Tata Reportedly Trump's Choice To Be Next Pentagon Policy Chief.

Politico (4/23, Lippman, Seligman, 4.29M) reports that Anthony Tata, “a retired Army brigadier general, novelist and Fox News regular, will be tapped as the next Pentagon policy chief.” Politico says Tata “would replace John Rood, who was forced out in February” as part of President Trump’s “loyalty purge.”

Trump Organization Seeks UK Government Aid For Furloughed Scotland Workers.

The National (UK) (4/23, Learmonth) reports, “Billionaire Donald Trump has asked the UK Government to bail out his golf courses in Scotland as they struggle to cope with the economic chaos of the coronavirus crisis.” The Trump Organization “is looking to furlough workers at its Ayrshire and Aberdeenshire courses.” The company is reportedly “seeking government aid to pay most of the salaries of bartenders, bagpipers and other employees at its three money-losing golf resorts in Scotland and Ireland.”

USA Today (4/23, Hjelmggaard, 10.31M) reports, “There is nothing improper about the applications. Companies across Ireland and the United Kingdom are making use of the government programs that fund up to 80% of workers’ salaries, with a $3,100 monthly cap, if they are put on leave and not laid off. But the easy access to state aid for financially struggling Trump Organization golf resorts in Europe stands in contrast” to US economic relief for the President’s “family company – to which it is mostly barred.”

Democrats Press GSA Over Trump Hotel Lease.

The Washington Post (4/23, O’Connell, Fahrenthold, Partlow, 14.2M) reports, “Congressional Democrats are pressing the General Services Administration for information about President Trump’s D.C. hotel lease, after Trump’s company said it asked the federal government to include it in any accommodations it may make for private tenants during the coronavirus shutdown.” In a Thursday letter, Sen. Chris Van Hollen (D-MD) asked GSA Administrator Murphy “to produce the agency’s policies governing possible changes to its lease agreement with the Trump Organization, which rents the D.C. hotel building from the federal agency.” House Oversight Chairwoman Carolyn Maloney and Rep. Gerald Connolly (D-VA) “previously called on the GSA not to modify the lease.”

Supreme Court Rules Against Trump Administration In Clean Water Case.

The AP (4/23, Sherman) reports that the Supreme Court ruled Thursday “that sewage plants and other industries cannot avoid environmental requirements under landmark clean-water protections when they send dirty water on an indirect route to rivers, oceans and other navigable waterways.” The AP says that in a 6-3 vote, the court “reject[ed] the Trump administration’s views,” and instead found “that the discharge of polluted water into the ground, rather than directly into nearby waterways, does not relieve an industry of complying with the Clean Water Act.” According to the AP, “The decision came in a closely watched case from Hawaii about whether a sewage treatment plant needs a federal permit when it sends wastewater deep underground, instead of discharging the treated flow directly into the Pacific Ocean.”

The Washington Post (4/23, Barnes, 14.2M) reports that Justice Stephen Breyer’s “compromise language said an Environmental Protection Agency permit is required when a discharge is “the functional equivalent” of a direct release into navigable waters.” According to the Post, “The decision was a step back from a victory that environmentalists had won in a lower court, but one they were happy to accept. ‘This decision is a huge victory for clean water,’ said David Henkin, an attorney for Earthjustice who argued the case.” The Post says Breyer was “joined by Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. and Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Sonia Sotomayor, Elena Kagan and Brett M. Kavanaugh.”

USA Today (4/23, Wolf, 10.31M) reports the court “sided loosely with environmentalists” and “devised a compromise interpretation of federal law under which Hawaii’s Maui County could be found in violation of the Clean Water Act for injecting treated sewage into groundwater that later reached the Pacific Ocean.” USA Today said the “four liberal justices” were joined by Roberts and Kavanaugh “in a ruling that threatens business and municipal polluters,” so long as the discharge is the “functional equivalent of a direct discharge.” USA Today adds that “the ultimate impact will be left to lower courts that will have to determine whether pollution that starts above or below ground before reaching navigable waterways is indirect or the ‘functional equivalent’ of direct pollution.” Justices Samuel Alito, Neil Gorsuch, and Clarence Thomas “dissented, accusing the court’s majority of making up a new regulatory standard.” Alito wrote, “The court makes up a rule that provides no clear guidance and invites arbitrary and inconsistent application.”

The Hill (4/23, Kruzell, 2.98M) reports the court “sided with environmentalists by giving a broad reading to the types of water-borne pollution covered by the Clean Water Act.” Thomas was joined in his dissent by Gorsuch, while Alito wrote a separate dissent.

The New York Times (4/23, Liptak, 18.61M) reports, “The decision was on balance a victory for environmental groups,” though Breyer “rejected both sides’ positions in the case as too extreme.” Breyer stated, “Virtually all water, polluted or not, eventually makes its way to navigable water,” so, he added, the question is whether “the addition of the pollutants through groundwater is the functional equivalent of a direct discharge from the point source into navigable waters.”

Axios (4/23, Knutson, 521K) reports the court ruled “that sewage plants and other industries must abide by environmental requirements under the Clean Water Act when sending dirty water on an indirect route to rivers and oceans.”

Reuters/Ipsos Poll: Biden Leads Trump In Michigan, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin.

Reuters (4/23, Kahn) reports that a Reuters/Ipsos poll shows President Trump trailing Joe Biden "among registered voters in three Midwestern battleground states that he narrowly carried in 2016 and are seen as crucial to winning November's election." The survey of registered voters, conducted "from April 15-20 in Michigan, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania," shows Biden leading Trump 45%-39%. In the individual states, the survey shows Biden with "an advantage of 3 percentage points among registered voters in Wisconsin, 6 points in Pennsylvania and 8 points in Michigan." The survey "was conducted online with 612 registered voters in Michigan, 578 in Pennsylvania and 645 in Wisconsin." USA Today (4/23, Cummings, 10.31M) also reports on the Reuters/Ipsos poll, as well as several other surveys that showed Biden leading Trump in Florida, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

Separate Pennsylvania Poll: Biden Leads Trump 48%-42%. PoliticsPA (4/23, Cole) reports that a FOX43/Susquehanna Polling and Research survey of 693 Pennsylvania voters, taken April 14-20, shows Biden leading Trump 48%-42%.

New Jersey Poll: Biden Leads Trump 54%-38%. The New Jersey Globe (4/23, Wildstein) reports on a Monmouth University poll (4/23) of 635 New Jersey voters, taken April 16-19, that shows Biden leading Trump 54%-38%. The Hill (4/23, Manchester, 2.98M) reports, "The Garden State is considered a reliably blue state, with the nonpartisan Cook Political Report rating New Jersey as safe for the Democratic Party in 2020. Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton won the state handily in 2016, with roughly 55 percent of the vote to Trump's 41 percent."

Bloomberg Analysis: Number Of Undecided Voters Rising Amid Pandemic. Bloomberg (4/23, 4.73M) says that Trump's "handling of the coronavirus pandemic and the economic collapse has shaken voters' confidence in him, with the percentage of undecided voters more than doubling in the last two weeks." Bloomberg says Biden "is also seeing voters take a second look at their support. ... Three weeks ago, only 5% of voters overall were undecided in the 2020 race. That number has jumped to 12% and in one Fox News poll, 16% as voters appear to find both candidates wanting during a national emergency." Bloomberg adds, "Pollsters caution that it's too early to draw conclusions, given the seven months still to go before the November election and deep uncertainty about where the country will be in terms of the pandemic and the economy."

Politico Analysis: Biden Sexual Assault Accusation Poses Challenge To #MeToo Movement.

Politico (4/23, Otterbein, Caputo, 4.29M) reports on the response among those aligned with the #MeToo movement to the claim by Tara Reade, a former aide to then-Sen. Joe Biden, that Biden sexually assaulted her in 1993. Politico says, "After making it more socially acceptable for sexual assault survivors to come forward and helping bring down dozens of powerful men, the #MeToo movement is facing a new challenge: how to grapple with the allegations against Biden without tearing itself apart." Supporters of President Trump, "who has been accused of sexual assault and misconduct by multiple women, have seized on Biden and other Democrats' past comments about believing women's accusations as proof of hypocrisy. And victims fear that what they see as the botched handling of Reade's allegations by fellow activists, the media and politicians has threatened one of the movement's hardest-fought gains."

Progressives Call On Biden To Be Transparent About His Transition Team.

Bloomberg (4/23, 4.73M) reports that "thirty progressive and good-government groups are urging Joe Biden to commit to transparency and strict ethics rules around his White House transition team, which the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee has indicated he is beginning to build." In a letter released Thursday, the groups "call[ed] on Biden to announce the leaders of his transition team in the coming days or weeks and demand that he outline its governance policies and appoint an 'ethics czar' by June 1." Bloomberg says the groups include Americans for Financial Reform, Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, Common Cause, MoveOn and the Revolving Door Project.

Abrams: Trump "Afraid" Of Mail-In Ballots, Is "Illegitimate And Should Not Hold Office."

The Washington Examiner (4/23, Miller, 448K) reports that Stacey Abrams "said Thursday that President Trump is an 'illegitimate' leader and that he opposes mail-in ballots because he's 'afraid' it will increase voter turnout." Appearing on David Axelrod's podcast, Abrams said, "When Donald Trump says he doesn't like vote-by-mail, he says it despite the fact that he has used it himself. And he dislikes it despite the fact that there is no evidence of fraud. ... The challenge that he sees is that it will increase the likelihood of those that are confined to home actually using that time to participate in the election. And anytime a leader is afraid of people speaking their minds and making their selections, he is illegitimate and should not hold office."

McClatchy Analysis: African Americans, Liberals Don't Want Klobuchar As Biden's Running Mate.

McClatchy (4/23, Catanese, 19K) reports that the vice presidential prospects of Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) "are facing stiff headwinds from progressives and African American activists who are increasingly vocalizing their opposition" her "joining the Democratic ticket." McClatchy says Klobuchar "is widely thought to be near the top of Joe Biden's running mate list due to her moderate political profile, midwestern roots and timely endorsement of the former vice president ahead of his string of Super Tuesday primary victories. But to her most ardent critics," selecting "Klobuchar would amount to a stinging snub of two of the Democratic Party's most vital constituencies: liberals and women of color."

Trump Endorses 12 Republicans For Reelection On Twitter.

Kansas GOP Chief Urges Pair Of Republican Senate Candidates To Drop Bids.

The Kansas City Star (4/23, Lowry, 549K) reports that Kansas GOP chief Mike Kuckelman "sent letters Thursday to two Republican candidates" bidding to succeed retiring Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) "asking them to drop out of the" contest "for the good of the party. In nearly identical April 23 letters to Kansas Senate President Susan Wagle and former Johnson County Commissioner Dave Lindstrom, Kuckelman cited poor fundraising and polling data to argue that the candidates lack a viable path to the Republican nomination" and "that continuing their campaigns will endanger the party's ability to hold the seat" this fall. The concern, alluded to in the letters, is that GOP ex-Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach, who lost to now-Gov. Laura Kelly (D) in 2018, could win a crowded Republican Senate primary and then lose the general election.

Porter Has Raised Nearly $4.6M For CA45 Reelection Bid.

CQ Roll Call (4/23, Bowman, 154K) reports that freshman Rep. Katie Porter (D-CA) "has built up a massive campaign war chest, ending the first fundraising quarter of 2020 with nearly $4.6 million on hand. That's more than 30 times the total" of her CA45 GOP challenger, Mission Viejo Councilman Greg Rath, "who had $151,000 in the bank on March 31."

NYTimes Urges Support For Fresh Air Fund.

In an editorial, the New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) urges readers to support the Fresh Air Fund during the current pandemic, writing that the organization "hopes to reach thousands of New York City children from low-income families this year." It is "exploring ways to adapt its traditional summer programming if needed."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 46%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 46%, and his disapproval at 51.5%. The President's approval is unchanged since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.8.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (4/20-4/22) finds Trump's approval at 44%, with 55% disapproving.

UN Body Proposes Cancelling $1T Of Developing Countries' Debt.

Reuters (4/23, Bavier) reports the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) has proposed a global deal to cancel around $1 trillion in debt owed by developing countries "to help them overcome the impact of the coronavirus pandemic." Developing economies, "which were already struggling with a rapidly growing debt burden, must now confront a record global downturn, plummeting prices for their oil and commodities exports and weakening local currencies." Simultaneously, "they need to spend more money on healthcare and to protect their economies. Some 64 low-income countries currently spend more on debt service than their health systems, according to UNCTAD." UNCTAD Division on Globalisation and Development Strategies Director Richard Kozul-Wright said during a video press conference, "This is a world where defaults by developing nations on their debt is inevitable."

ECB To Keep Junk Bonds Outside QE Scope For Now.

Bloomberg (4/23, Vossos, 4.73M) reports, "Junk bonds will remain outside the European Central Bank's quantitative easing universe for now, even after changes to rating criteria that make recently downgraded bonds eligible as collateral for liquidity operations." An ECB spokesman said Wednesday's decision only applies to lending operations, adding, "We do not exclude that we make further changes in the future but for now, BBB- remains one of the criteria for the CSPP." The ECB "said Wednesday it would accept debt ranked as low as BB, two steps below the investment-grade threshold, as collateral for its loans to banks, as long as they held an investment-grade rating on April 7." However, "for the time being at least, the ECB's support for junk bonds remains implicit, rather than direct."

India Requires Banks To Submit Daily Reports To Boost Lending.

Reuters (4/23, Anand, Ahmed) reports that in an effort to push banks to boost lending amid the nationwide lockdown, India's government is demanding that lenders "submit a daily report detailing the volume and scale of loans sanctioned." In an April 17 letter, the finance ministry "asked banks to furnish detailed data on new loans, including particulars on what sectors were getting them."

Ukraine Central Bank Head Expects IMF Deal In May.

Reuters (4/23, Zinets, Williams) reports Ukrainian Central Bank Governor Yakiv Smoliy "said on Thursday he expected the government to sign a new loan deal with the International Monetary Fund in May and the first loan tranche to be disbursed no later than June. Speaking after the central bank sharply cut its key interest rate, Smolij also said he expected inflation to remain below 3% in April."

Bosnia Receives $361M Loan From IMF Despite Spending Plan Dispute.

Reuters (4/23, Zuvella) reports the IMF "transferred a $381 million loan to Bosnia on Thursday, the central bank said, even though the Balkan country's government has yet to formally approve borrowing plans to help fight the coronavirus crisis." Bosnia's central cabinet "said on Monday that Bosniak, or Bosnian Muslim, cabinet ministers had delayed approval of the plans over demands they meet local requirements on borrowing, debt and guarantees by the state." Finance Minister Vjekoslav Bevanda on Tuesday "called the demands unacceptable and said they could indefinitely delay the disbursement of funds approved under the IMF's Rapid Financing Instrument."

Pompeo: State Department Has Repatriated Nearly 70,000 Americans Since Pandemic Began.

Secretary of State Pompeo said on the Larry O'Connor Show (4/23) that since the coronavirus pandemic began, the State Department has helped repatriate nearly 70,000 Americans. Pompeo said, "We are proud of the work we have done. We have still got folks who are out there, and we are working to make sure we get everybody back just as safely and as quickly as we can."

State Department spokesperson Morgan Ortagus said on CNN International (4/23), "American citizens, green cardholders will always be able to come home to the United States. ... Just today we're at over 65,000 Americans from over 100 countries, where airports were closed, the country's borders were closed and we had to repatriate them. That effort continues." Ortagus was also interviewed on WLW-AM Cincinnati (4/23, 19K).

US Considering Adversaries' Possible Use Of Coronavirus As Bioweapon.

Politico (4/23, Bertrand, Lippman, Seligman, 4.29M) reports the Defense Department and US Intelligence Community "are more forcefully investigating the possibility that adversaries could use" the coronavirus "as a bioweapon, according to defense and intelligence officials, in a shift that reflects the national security apparatus' evolving understanding of the virus and its risks." However, "officials emphasized that the change does not mean they believe the virus was purposefully created to be weaponized – the intelligence community is still investigating the virus' potential origins, but there is currently no hard intelligence or scientific evidence to support the theory that it spread from a lab in China, people briefed on the matter said."

WHO: Nursing Homes Account For Up To Half Of Europe's COVID-19 Deaths.

The Washington Post (4/23, Birnbaum, 14.2M) reports the World Health Organization said Thursday that "up to half of coronavirus-related deaths in Europe are taking place in long-term care facilities such as nursing homes," an assessment that "suggests public health authorities may have allowed the pandemic to rage among some of their most vulnerable populations as they focused on hospitals and other aspects of their response." According to the Post, "Many European countries have banned family visits to nursing homes. ... But those bans, though well-intentioned, may have deprived the elderly of advocates as conditions swiftly deteriorated."

Italy Charting Path To Reopen Economy.

The Washington Post (4/23, Harlan, Pitrelli, 14.2M) reports "Italy in the coming days is expected to map out the specifics of how it might emerge from the West's longest lockdown, and it is considering measures that would fundamentally alter how people commute, work, vacation and think about their privacy."

Study Suggests Coronavirus Was Circulating In Spain By Mid-February.

Reuters (4/23, Laudette, Landauro) reports "Spain's government apologized for causing confusion over new lockdown rules for children on Thursday, while a scientific study suggested the new coronavirus may have been circulating among the population longer than previously thought." Earlier this week, "after initially ruling out recreational walks for children, the government bowed to public pressure – including pot-banging protests on balconies – and allowed short, supervised outings for the first time in more than a month."

Pandemic "Still At The Beginning," Merkel Warns.

Reuters (4/23, Carrel, Martin) reports German Chancellor Angela Merkel on Thursday urged "endurance and discipline to get through the coronavirus pandemic that is 'still at the beginning.'" Merkel expressed concern "that Germans are relaxing their social distancing efforts after the federal and regional governments agreed to reopen some shops this week." She also "called for a bigger European Union budget to support economic recovery in the bloc."

UK Economy "Crumbling," Government Borrowing Soars.

Reuters (4/23, Faulconbridge, Bruce) reports the British economy "is crumbling under the strain of the coronavirus lockdown and government borrowing is soaring to the highest levels in peacetime history, increasing pressure on the government to set out an exit strategy." Prime Minister Boris Johnson, "recuperating at his country residence after being seriously ill with COVID-19, is facing criticism from opposition politicians and some epidemiologists for reacting too slowly to the novel coronavirus outbreak."

Critics Allege UK Government's Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies Lacks Transparency. The New York Times (4/23, Landler, Castle, 18.61M) discusses the reported secrecy of the UK government's Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies, which "operates as a virtual black box." That is, "its list of members is secret, its meetings are closed, its recommendations are private and the minutes of its deliberations are published much later, if at all." SAGE's "lack of transparency has become a point of contention, as officials struggle to explain why they waited until late March to shift from a laissez-faire approach to the virus to the stricter measures adopted by other European countries."

Russian Rights Groups Call For Regulation Of Expanded Surveillance Measures.

Reuters (4/23, Marrow) reports Russian rights groups Agora and Roskomsvoboda warned Thursday that "expanding surveillance measures to police Russia's coronavirus lockdown... need regulating to ensure they are temporary and proportionate," Police say Moscow's "178,000 facial recognition cameras had caught 200 people breaking coronavirus lockdown restrictions by mid-March. The cameras are capable of tracking individuals using just their silhouette and of detecting groups standing too close to each other, according to the firm which supplied them."

Epidemic In Ecuador "Even Worse" Than Many Realize.

The New York Times (4/23, Cabrera, Kurmanaev, 18.61M) reports that in Ecuador, where the coronavirus outbreak "is among the worst in the world," the epidemic "is even worse than many people in the country realize. The death toll in Ecuador during the outbreak was 15 times higher than the official number" of deaths reported by the government, according to an analysis of mortality data by the Times. By Thursday evening, the country had more than 11,000 official cases, with 560 deaths.

Haiti May Face Coronavirus Surge Due To Workers Returning From Dominican Republic

The New York Times (4/23, Porter, Dugan, 18.61M) reports that while "coronavirus has been slow to come to Haiti, partly because protests and political violence virtually shut down tourism and drove away the foreigners who could have brought the disease to the country," an "influx of workers returning from the Dominican Republic, where there have been 5,044 cases and 245 deaths" from COVID-19, may set up the island for a surge in cases.

Pakistani Imams Defy Ban On Gatherings During Ramadan.

The New York Times (4/23, Abi-Habib, Ur-Rehman, 18.61M) reports that "while clerics and governments across the Muslim world will greet Ramadan this week under lockdown, working together to shut mosques and urging worshipers to pray at home, in Pakistan, some of the most prominent imams have rallied their devotees to ignore the anti-pandemic measures." According to the Times, in Pakistan, "pandemic or no pandemic, hard-line clerics are calling the shots, overriding the government's nationwide virus lockdown, which began late last month."

Ramaphosa Says Trump Pledged To Help Africa Combat Pandemic.

Bloomberg (4/23, 4.73M) reports that South African President Cyril Ramaphosa said that in a Thursday phone call, President Trump "pledged to help South Africa and Africa in its fight to stop the spread of coronavirus." The AP (4/23) reports that Africa "registered a 43% jump in reported COVID-19 cases in the last week, highlighting a warning from the World Health Organization that the continent of 1.3 billion could become the next epicenter of the global outbreak." The AP adds, "The surge in infections on the continent is almost certainly under-reported and even higher in reality, say medical experts."

Spanish Police Arrest ISIS Fighter.

The New York Post (4/23, Brown, 4.57M) reports Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary, 29, "a British rapper turned notorious suspected ISIS fighter, who was once pictured proudly holding up a severed head, has been arrested in Spain." The Post adds that his father "is serving 25 years for bombing US embassies in Kenya and Tanzania." Bary was arrested in Almeria, Spain. An unnamed official said, "At this point, we have no evidence on whether he was planning to stay in Spain or continue his trip." Turkish police, adds the Post, "said they lost track of him by late 2015."

Iran Responds To Trump's Threat To Destroy IRG Boats.

The AP (4/23) reports that Gen. Hossein Salami, the leader of Iran's Revolutionary Guard, warned Thursday "that he has ordered his forces to potentially target the U.S. Navy after President Donald Trump's tweet the previous day threatening to sink Iranian vessels." According to the AP, Iran "also summoned the Swiss ambassador, who looks out for America's interests in the country, to complain about Trump's threat coming amid months of escalating tensions between the two countries." Salami is quoted as saying, "We have ordered our naval units at sea that if any warships or military units from the naval force of America's terrorist army wants to jeopardize our commercial vessels or our combat vessels, they must target those warships or naval units."

The Washington Post (4/23, Cunningham, 14.2M) reports that the Pentagon has "said that vessels belonging to the Revolutionary Guard came dangerously close to U.S. ships in the area last week," but Salami "blamed the incident on U.S. forces, accusing the American ships of 'unprofessional and dangerous behavior.'"

Reuters (4/23, Hafezi) reports Salami said, "I am telling the Americans that we are absolutely determined and serious in defending our national security, our water borders, our shipping safety, and our security forces, and we will respond decisively to any sabotage."

The Washington Times (4/23, Meier, 492K) says Iran "hit back at" Trump, as Salami said on state TV, "I have ordered our naval forces to destroy any American terrorist force in the Persian Gulf that threatens security of Iran's military or non-military ships."

Pompeo Says Trump Wants Navy To Defend Itself. Secretary of State Pompeo said on Fox News' Hannity (4/23, 535K), "This Administration behaves totally different than the previous one. You'll recall when they took our Navy sailors, made them kneel down, and [then-Secretary of State John] Kerry apologized to get them back. This President has taken a completely different approach. He's told the Iranian regime, 'Enough, we are not going to permit this, we are going to defend our soldiers, our sailors, our airmen, and Marines.' I think the Iranians understand that as well."

US Believes Iranian Satellite Launch Was Overseen By Officer Involved In Attacks On US Targets.

Reuters (4/23, Holland) reports, "The United States believes an Iranian military satellite launch this week was overseen by" Amir Ali Hajizadeh, the head of the Revolutionary Guards Aerospace Force, who was "involved in past attacks on American targets," including "the downing of a U.S. military drone in the Gulf last June, a missile attack on U.S. service members in Iraq in January, and the downing of a Ukrainian Airlines flight near Tehran the same month."

Pompeo Says Iran Spending Money On Terror While Claiming Poverty. Secretary of State Pompeo said on the Larry O'Connor Show (4/23) that Iran is "spending all this money on all of these dangerous activities while claiming that the regime doesn't have enough money to take care of its own people, demanding sanctions relief, claiming they don't have money for medicine for their own people when we know they are really taking the wealth that they have and spending it on terror."

Former Syrian Official Who Defected To Opposition On Trial In Germany.

The Washington Post (4/23, Morris, 14.2M) reports that a regional court in the German town of Koblenz "began to hear a landmark case against two alleged former Syrian regime officials" Thursday. According to the Post, "German prosecutors used the principle of 'universal jurisdiction' – which allows the prosecution of serious international crimes committed in another country – to bring charges against the two Syrian nationals who had claimed asylum in Germany." Anwar Raslan, "alleged to have been head of investigations at a branch of Syria's General Intelligence Directorate, has been charged with crimes against humanity, 58 murders, rape and sexual assault." Eyad al-Gharib "is charged with aiding a crime against humanity." Syrian

According to the New York Times (4/23, Hubbard, 18.61M), "Complicating Mr. Raslan's status is his defection to the opposition in 2012, less than a year into the war. In 2014, he even joined the opposition delegation to peace talks sponsored by the United Nations in Geneva." Some legal advocates "fear that prosecuting someone like Mr. Raslan could dissuade other former Syrian officials from serving as inside witnesses to help build other cases because they might fear facing trial themselves."

US To Open Greenland Consulate, Offer $12M In Development Aid.

The Washington Post (4/23, Morello, 14.2M) reports the US "will open a consulate in Greenland and give $12 million in development aid to the Arctic island, which President Trump mused about buying from Denmark last year. Danish and U.S. officials jointly announced the financial and diplomatic package Thursday, in what the Trump administration characterized as an effort to counter growing Russian and Chinese interest in the Arctic."

Guaidó Denies Talks On Power-Sharing Agreement.

The Washington Times (4/23, Meier, 492K) reports Venezuelan opposition leader Juan Guaidó "shot down reports Thursday he and his aides were negotiating with the regime of socialist President Nicolas Maduro on a power-sharing deal that could lead to new elections. ... 'No, there are no negotiations or remediations whatsoever,' Mr. Guaido said via translator during a virtual conversation hosted by the Atlantic Council."

WSJournal: China May Be Using Pandemic To Exert South China Sea Strength.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that China may be taking advantage of the world's focus on the coronavirus pandemic to exert military strength in the South China Sea. The Journal backs the US decision to respond to Chinese provocations with the Seventh Fleet, and urges continued vigilance.

Many Homeowners Fear A Ballooning Payment Due Once Forbearance Period Ends.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that many homeowners are not getting the relief they were hoping for, as mortgage forbearance policies cemented in the CARES Act do not specify when their forbearance period ends. As a result, many homeowners fear that they will be forced to come up with a lump-sum payment. An FHFA spokesman said that borrowers with loans backed by Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae are not required to pay their forbearance back in a lump sum, and the FHFA encourages borrowers to contact the CFPB if they feel their servicer is taking advantage of them and misrepresenting payment options.

Montgomery: FHA May Soon Have “Something Similar” To GSEs’ Purchasing Of Loans In Forbearance.

American Banker (4/24, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, “Currently, FHA is considering whether it should follow in the footsteps of the Federal Housing Finance Agency and insure loans in forbearance.” After the FHFA “announced Wednesday that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would begin purchasing loans in forbearance in order to ease origination pressure,” FHA Commissioner Brian Montgomery said, “I expect we’ll probably have something next week that will help address some of that issue relative to borrowers who have closed but haven’t been securitized yet and go into forbearance.” Meanwhile, American Banker says Ginnie Mae’s recently-launched PTAP program “allows Ginnie to advance the payments to investors that can’t be met by mortgage servicers.” M Report (4/23, Albanese) interviewed Montgomery on a range of issues relating to the pandemic and the FHA’s response.

State Attorneys General Want FHFA, HUD To Further Delay Mortgage Borrowers’ Payments.

American Banker (4/23, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, “A bipartisan coalition of state attorneys general is recommending that homeowners who skip mortgage payments because of the coronavirus pandemic be allowed to delay those payments until the end of the loan’s term.” The attorneys general sent letters on Thursday to FHFA Director Mark Calabria and HUD Secretary Carson, “urging them to revise current forbearance programs to help borrowers remain in their homes.” According to American Banker, “Currently, once the forbearance period ends, borrowers are being asked either to repay the missed payments in a lump sum or enter into a more permanent loss mitigation agreement. Although Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have announced a deferral program allowing borrowers to wait until the end of a term to make skipped payments, that program may not get off the ground until next year.” The Reno (NV) Gazette-Journal (4/23, 183K) provides additional coverage.

Freddie Mac: 30-Year FRM Average Rises From 3.31% To 3.33%.

The Washington Post (4/23, Orton, 14.2M) reports, “Rates continued to level off this week as the federal government stepped in to help mortgage companies concerned about the increasing number of borrowers who have stopped making payments.” According to “the latest data released Thursday by Freddie Mac,” the 30-year FRM average rose from 3.31% a week ago to 3.33% this week. Meanwhile, the 15-year FRM average rose from 2.80% to 2.86%, and the 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.34% to 3.28%. The Post says that the FHFA “announced this week that it will allow Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to buy mortgages that go into forbearance. However, there are restrictions on which loans they will buy.” The AP (4/23) reports, “Fannie and Freddie, which are under government control, together back about half the home mortgages in the $11 trillion U.S. market. They put the mortgage relief programs in effect several weeks ago to help homeowners hit by the economic shutdown, giving borrowers relief on payments for up to one year and suspending late charges and penalties.”

National Mortgage News (4/23) reports Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, “Mortgage rates have stabilized over the last few weeks as the market searches for direction in the fog of economic data. While financial markets initially rallied on the news of Federal Reserve support and are improving due to the Senate’s passage of a new small business stimulus, we continue to see a deep economic contraction amidst uncertainty about the recovery formation.” Providing similar coverage are HousingWire (4/23, 23K), M Report (4/23, Albanese), National Mortgage Professional (4/23), the Orange County (CA) Register (4/23, 546K), Seeking Alpha (4/23, Kiesche, 512K), and a MoneyWise piece carried by Yahoo! Finance (4/23, Whiteman).

MarketWatch (4/23, Passy, 1.67M) reports, “Mortgage rates rose this week in spite of the 10-year Treasury note’s yield, which fell in response to major volatility in energy markets globally. Historically, mortgage rates have roughly followed the direction of long-term bond yields, but that relationship has weakened amid the coronavirus crisis.”

FHFA Stands By COVID-LLPAs, Saying Pricing Is Better Than Private Market Would Offer.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (4/23, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, “The Federal Housing Finance Agency is standing by the new loan-level price adjustments it established that allow Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to purchase single-family loans subject to COVID-19-related forbearance.” IMF says, “The LLPAs – a hefty 500 basis points for mortgages made to first-time homebuyers and 700 bps for ‘all other loans’ – have been heavily criticized by trade group officials, lending executives and their investment bankers. If a seller/servicer agrees to pay the LPA charge it will result in a steep loss on each transaction.” However, an FHFA spokesman told IMF that the pricing is “fair and reasonable,” adding, “We have heard these loans would sell for much lower prices (15-20% discounts) in private markets.” IMF says that the spokesman “also noted lenders have no obligation sell COVID-19 forbearance loans to Fannie and Freddie.”

Urban Institute Researchers: GSEs’ Verification Of Employment Changes Are A Step In Right Direction.

Mortgage News Daily (4/23, Swanson) reports, "Two Urban Institute (UI) researchers pose a pertinent question in a recent paper. Laurie Goodman and Aaron Klein ask, 'What is the purpose of the Fed lowering short term rates to zero and buying hundreds of billions of mortgages to lower mortgage interest rates if people cannot functionally access a mortgage?'" The researchers "point out that the mortgage process, whether to purchase a home or refinance it, has a long to-do list," and if "any of those items cannot be checked off, the ability to get a mortgage is jeopardized." Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae are "temporarily allowing email verification by the employer as well as use of a current pay stub or bank statement and for verification to be provided up to the time of loan delivery. UI says these are important steps and ones that probably should not be temporary." However, "lenders are also expected to verify continuity of income for their GSE loans and Goodman and Klein say this is a burden on lenders and one that may not be possible to achieve. This could result in the self-employed having difficulty getting refinancing." Goodman and Klein also "urge" the FHFA and GSEs to "prioritize their social purpose over profitability."

- Citadel Lande $25M Freddie Mac Acquisition Loan For SC Community. Multi-Housing News (4/23, Cazacu) reports, "Citadel Real Estate Group has received a $24.5 million acquisition loan to purchase Lullwater at Saluda Pointe, a 280-unit property in Lexington, S.C. Hunt Real Estate Capital originated the 12-year Freddie Mac loan."
- NKF Arranges $22M Freddie Mac Loan For CO Apartments. REBusiness Online (4/23, Works) reports, "Newmark Knight Frank (NKF) has arranged a $22.4 million Freddie Mac loan to refinance Copper Ridge Apartment Homes, located at 240 McCaslin Blvd. in Louisville."
- Universe Holdings Gets $17M Freddie Mac Small Balance Loan For Inglewood Portfolio. Real Estate News Television (4/23) reports, "Freddie Mac's Small Business Loan (SML) program provided Universe Holdings with a $16.93 mil blended rate loan with three years interest-only to refinance a portfolio of six properties with a total of 77 units in Inglewood."

FHFA: FHLBanks To Provide More Liquidity For PPP Lenders.

American Banker (4/23, Long, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "The Federal Home Loan banks will begin accepting loans made through the Small Business Administration's Paycheck Protection Program as collateral when making advances to their members, the Federal Housing Finance Agency said Thursday." The FHFA said that the move should give small and community banks more liquidity to "support the small businesses in their communities." According to American Banker, "It is designed to serve smaller members who don't have access to the Federal Reserve's Paycheck Protection Program Liquidity Facility." The FHLBanks "will be able to accept loans made under the SBA program as collateral, as long as the loans are in compliance with certain safety and soundness requirements outlined by the FHFA." The FHFA is "mandating that Home Loan Bank System members have a Camels rating of 3 or better in order to pledge PPP loans as collateral," and has "limited the amount of loans that FHLB members can pledge to no more than $5 billion." The move came on the heels of the FHFA's Wednesday announcement "that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would begin purchasing mortgages in forbearance." The ABA Banking Journal (4/23) provides additional coverage.

NCUA Allows Credit Unions To Delay Appraisals Until Four Months After Mortgage Closing.

HousingWire (4/23, 23K) reports, "Federal banking regulators last week moved to allow banks to delay getting an appraisal on a property for as many as 120 days after a mortgage closes, and now, credit unions can do the same thing." The National Credit Union Administration "will allow credit unions to postpone obtaining an appraisal until four months after a mortgage closes." According to HousingWire, "As with the bank rule, the credit union rule only applies to loans held in credit unions' portfolios. Loans sold to or guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Department of Veterans Affairs, Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac will still require an appraisal before closing, per each agency's or company's rules. And just as the banking regulators did, the NCUA cited a need to ensure liquidity in the mortgage market as a reason for making this change."

Pence Holds Conference Call With Mortgage Industry Representatives.

M Report (4/23, Albanese) reports Vice President Pence "addressed business and mortgage leaders during a conference call on Thursday, discussing the federal government's response to COVID-19." Pence "told the mortgage and business leaders that 'we are making real progress' in slowing the spread of COVID-19, and that social-distancing efforts are helping to flatten the curve." He said, "As of this morning, I am pleased to report that the numbers on the west coast continue to be low and steady but even in the New York metro area, including New Jersey and Connecticut and of course all of New York City's broader area we believe that we are past the peak." He continued, "Every single day we are one day closer to putting this epidemic in the past and I want to assure you that we are going to continue to use the full weight of the local government to support."

Black Knight: Pandemic Causes Mortgage Defaults To Rise, But Eviction Moratoriums Send Foreclosure Starts Down.

National Mortgage News (4/23, Centopani) reports, "After two months of default totals sitting at 15-year lows, the number of mortgaged properties in default or foreclosure rose in March, according to Black Knight. It marked the first time default rates notched an increase in March since the turn of the century, said the company, which credited COVID-19's economic impact for the spike." According to NMN, "Default or in-foreclosure properties totaled over 2.01 million in March, with 37,000 added month-over-month. There were 155,000 fewer defaults in March 2020 than there were at the same time last year." Black Knight "anticipates significant jumps in the coming months." Despite the rise in delinquencies, "foreclosure starts decreased to the lowest level on record with help from coronavirus moratoriums."

Pandemic Reportedly Accelerating Digital Mortgage Innovation.

National Mortgage News (4/23, Finkelstein) reports, "If anything good were to come out of the coronavirus outbreak for the mortgage industry, it is that the pandemic was a catalyst that finally drove broad-based industry acceptance of e-mortgages, e-notes and digital closings."

Armando Falcon, CEO of Falcon Capital Advisors, which is working with Ginnie Mae on its digitization efforts, commented, "It has incredibly accelerated both the interest and need for digital mortgages." According to Docutech EVP Harry Gardner, the SECURE Act could pave the way for widespread acceptance of remote online notary closings around the country. He explained, "The key question that determines RON is whether the investor will purchase a RON-signed e-note (for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, that's now 42 states plus the District of Columbia), and whether the county recorder will record a RON-notarized deed of trust. If the SECURE Act passes, ensuring national coverage for RON, it would certainly help adoption by providing all players with broader assurance in RON e-closings."

AICPA: American Personal Financial Satisfaction Plummets In Q1 Due To Pandemic.

DS News (4/23, Welborn) reports, "The COVID-19 pandemic has caused the largest drop in American financial satisfaction in nearly a decade, according to The American Institute of CPAs (AICPA) Q1 2020 Personal Financial Satisfaction index. The report measured 32.9, a 20% (8.29 point) decrease from the previous quarter." According to DS News, "This is the largest quarterly drop the PFSi has experienced since the Great Recession (Q4 2009)." Due to the pandemic, "Many Americans are struggling to pay for things including their rent and mortgage." Black Knight "reports that as of April 16, more than 2.9 million homeowners, or 5.5% of all mortgages," and a "new survey by the Mortgage Bankers Association (MBA) found that the number of home loans in forbearance rose from 2.73% to 3.74% during the week of March 30 to April 5. Mortgages backed by Ginnie Mae had the largest weekly growth of 1.58% and the highest overall share in forbearance requests (5.89%)."

Real Capital Analytics: CRE Deals Are Falling Apart Due To Pandemic.

Mortgage Professional America (4/23, Johnston) says, "Commercial real estate deals are collapsing amid the coronavirus outbreak and market players are fewer and further between, with the worst yet to be seen. A new report by Real Capital Analytics says signs of the COVID-19 crisis are starting to appear in the U.S. market for commercial property assets." Real Capital Analytics SVP Jim Costello said, "There are a number of steps that buyers and potential sellers will go through before adjusting their expectations in the light of an economic shock. Deals that fail to close and a reduction in market players are leading indicators for changes in market pricing."

New-Home Sales Fell By More Than 15% In March, According To Census/HUD Data.

MarketWatch (4/23, Passy, 1.67M) reports, "Sales of new U.S. homes fell by more than 15% in March as the coronavirus pandemic weighed on buyer traffic. New home sales dropped to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 627,000, according to the monthly report from the U.S. Census Bureau and the Department of Housing and Urban Development." Realtor.com Chief Economist Danielle Hale said, "Because new home sales are based on contract signings, an early step in the home buying process, they showed a larger decline than existing home sales data, which came out earlier this week."

NAR: Pandemic Not Taking A Toll On Listing Prices So Far.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (4/23, Volkova, Subscription Publication) reports, "Despite the COVID-19 pandemic complicating the sale of homes and the closing of mortgages, homeowners selling their properties, for the most part, are remaining calm, according to a new study published by the National Association of Realtors. NAR found that 74% of sales agents working with sellers this week reported their clients are not reducing listing prices, a sign that panic has yet to seep in." NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun said, "Consumers are mostly abiding by stay-in-shelter directives, and it appears the current decline in buyer and seller activity is only temporary, with a majority ready to hit the market in a couple of months. The housing market faced an inventory shortage before the pandemic. Given that there are even fewer new listings during the pandemic, home sellers are taking a calm approach and appear unwilling to lower prices to attract buyers during the temporary disruptions to the economy."

Opinion: Government Needs To Realize That Risk Management Is A Critical Function.

Bloomberg Opinion (4/23) columnist Justin Fox argues that the federal government must "embrace its role" as the "ultimate risk manager." Historian David Moss "raised the concern that three huge government firefighting efforts within 20 years might indicate a certain failure of risk management." Moss speculated that one factor "could be a continued unwillingness to accept in normal times that risk management is a key government role." Fox explains, "There's a sense in which we try to deny ex ante that this is something we would want to do ex post. People wanted to deny that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac had a government guarantee, until the federal government had to guarantee them. There are some similar factors here. If government is going to provide extensive bailouts and support after a crisis strikes, there needs to be a lot of work done on gaming it out in advance. We need to think hard about the risk management piece beforehand."

Opinion: Mortgage Forbearance Should Require Borrowers To Provide Documentation Of Hardship.

National Review (4/23, 731K) trustee David Bahnsen argues that mortgage forbearance as mandated by the CARES Act is "seriously flawed," and that applicants "should be required to provide at least basic documentation for their claim that COVID-19 has affected them." Bahnsen says, "I do understand that included in those with 'Federally backed mortgage loans' (these include loans sponsored by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and the Federal Housing Administration, so roughly 65 percent of all American mortgages) are some who would genuinely and perhaps even desperately need mortgage forbearance. ... However, where such legitimate need exists, the actual codification that they not be required to document their need whatsoever is simply surreal."

Opinion: CARES Act Provides Only Temporary Help For Renters.

Writing for The Conversation (4/23, 62K), University of Kansas Professor of Urban Planning Kirk McClure says renters are "still left out in the cold," despite "temporary coronavirus protection" from emergency relief measures. According to him, moratoriums on evictions "won't last for long," and "millions of families and individuals" will struggle to "pay their landlords." According to McClure, the CARES Act "provides considerable support to homeowners but much less to renters. Homeowners with government-supported mortgages such as those that are guaranteed by Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, accounting for 70% of all outstanding mortgages, can skip mortgage payments for up to 12 months without risk of foreclosure. Missed payments will instead be added to their mortgage balances. Renters are afforded some protection. ... But rental protection is unlikely to last more than a few months – less if stays on eviction are not enforced, as has been the case in a number of states."

Markets

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (4/17, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.604 percent.

Dollar Gains.

Reuters (4/24, Chatterjee) reports, "The dollar gained on Friday and is set for its biggest weekly rise since early April as the euro weakened after a European Union meeting on Thursday to build a trillion euro emergency fund fell short of satisfying investors' concerns." The euro "weakened broadly on Friday, falling 0.4% against the U.S. dollar to a one-month low at $1.07275 and a three-year low versus the yen at 115.55 yen." The euro's losses sent the dollar "on track for its biggest weekly rise since early April." Against a basket of its rivals, the dollar "was up 0.2% at 100.72. On a weekly basis, it has strengthened more than 1%."

Gold Eases.

Reuters (UK) (4/24, Singh) reports, "Gold eased on Friday as investors booked profits after a 1% rise in the previous session, but weak economic data from the United States and Europe due to the novel coronavirus kept bullion on track for a weekly gain." Spot gold "slipped 0.4% to $1,724.05 per ounce by 0619 GMT, but was up over 2.3% for the week so far." US gold futures "were little changed at $1,745.10 per ounce."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (4/24, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil prices climbed on Friday, adding to gains from earlier sessions after producers such as Kuwait said they would move to cut output and the United States approved another package to cope with the turmoil caused by the coronavirus outbreak." Brent crude "was up 24 cents, or 1.1%, at $21.57 by 0622 GMT, after rising more than $1 earlier and jumping 5% on Thursday." West Texas Intermediate "was up 38 cents, or 2.3%, at $16.88 a barrel, having surged 20% in the previous session."

Cybersecurity

FBI Warns Social Media Trends Can Expose Data To Cybercriminals.

The Pittsburgh Tribune-Review (4/23, Erdley, 380K) reports the FBI is warning that "games" being played on social media platforms "could benefit identity thieves," quoting acting Pittsburgh SAC Eugene Kowel saying, "This is a hard time for everyone and we know social media has been a boon to help people stay connected, but it also can create new vulnerabilities." The paper highlights as an example "the popular movement on Facebook to post your high school graduation pictures as a gesture of support for the Class of 2020," noting that "Kowel said friends sharing high school graduation pictures might also unwittingly be sharing the name of their school, the year they graduated and their high school mascot. Those are all common security retrieval questions for password-protected online accounts, Kowel said." KPIX-TV San Francisco (4/23, 110K) reports FBI officials in San Francisco issued a similar warning Thursday.

Massachusetts Police Launch Hate Crime Investigation After Online Church Service Is Zoom-Bombed.

The Salem \(MA\) Patch (4/23, 1.03M) reports police in Salem, Massachusetts, "are investigating a possible hate crime after hackers played a Ku Klux Klan video and made racist comments" during a local church's online service on Sunday. The number of such attacks has risen as the coronavirus pandemic has driven more meetings "online to platforms like Zoom. Last month, the FBI's office in Boston said it was seeing an increase in reports of so-called 'Zoom-bombing.'"

Activists Report Spike In Child Pornography During Pandemic.

NBC News (4/23, 6.14M) reports child safety activists and law enforcement officials say there is "a flood of child sexual exploitation material that has risen during the coronavirus pandemic. And with tech companies' moderation efforts also constrained by the pandemic, distributors of child sexual exploitation material are growing bolder, using major platforms to try to draw audiences." Meanwhile, "distributors of child sexual abuse images are trading links to material in plain sight on platforms including YouTube, Facebook, Twitter and Instagram using coded language to evade the companies' detection tools, according to child safety experts and law enforcement." The article quotes Brian Herrick, assistant chief of the FBI's Violent Crimes Against Children and Human Trafficking Section, saying, "Activity is peaking on the platforms where it takes place, very similar to how it peaks around holiday time when people are off work."

Apple: No Evidence Email App Flaw Has Been Used Against Users.

Reuters (4/24) reports Apple said Thursday that "it has found 'no evidence' a flaw in its email app for iPhones and iPads has been used against customers, and that it believes the flaw does 'not pose an immediate risk to our users.'" However, Zuk Avraham, CEO of San Francisco-based security firm ZecOps, "on Wednesday detailed a flaw that it said may have left more than half a billion iPhones vulnerable to hackers," saying that "he found evidence the vulnerability was exploited in at least six cybersecurity break-ins."

TFI/Sanctions

Rosneft Nears Sale Of Trading Arm Impacted By US Sanctions.

The Financial Times (4/23, Foy, Hume, Sheppard, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports Russian state-controlled oil company Rosneft is nearing the close of its trading arm, following two months under US sanctions for handling Venezuelan oil.

Federal Reserve

Fed To Publish Monthly Reports On Economic Relief Programs' Performance.

The AP (4/23, Crutsinger) reports the Fed announced Thursday that it will publish monthly reports on some of its economic relief programs supported by the $2 trillion CARES Act. Fed Chair Jerome Powell said the central bank is "committed to transparency and accountability by providing the public and Congress detailed information about our actions to support the economy during this difficult time," and will supply details about participants in the programs including names, amounts borrowed, and interest charges, as well as other costs. The programs have "come under criticism after disclosures that some major publicly traded companies had obtained forgivable loans from the government's Paycheck Protection Program."

Also reporting are Reuters (4/23, Saphir, Schneider, Dunsmuir), Politico (4/23, Guida, 4.29M), The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Timiraos, Patterson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Bloomberg (4/23, Saraiva, Torres, 4.73M), MarketWatch (4/23, Robb, 1.67M), The Hill (4/23, Lane, 2.98M), and American Banker (4/23, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K).

Fed To "Shortly" Announce Rules Expanding PPP Facility Access.

Reuters (4/23, Schneider) reports the Fed "said on Thursday it will 'shortly' announce new rules to expand access to a small business lending program beyond banks, so that a broader set of institutions can participate." The SBA's Paycheck Protection Program loans "are being made by an array of institutions, including many deposit-taking banks but also Community Development Financial Institutions, financial technology firms and others." The Fed program "currently allows only banks to use their PPP loans as collateral to borrow from the Fed."

Fed To Focus On Lending Program Implementation As Big Policy Questions Loom.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Fed next week will move from announcing new initiatives to planning and implementing the new emergency lending programs it has created. Big question will need to be addressed on such topics as the Fed's bond-buying moves and other decisions.

States See Fed's Municipal Bond Moves As Helpful But Inadequate, Turn To Congress For Fiscal Aid.

Politico (4/23, Mejdric, 4.29M) reports the Fed's move this month "to bail out the municipal bond market with $500 billion in short-term debt was a historic step by the central bank to directly intervene in local government finances for the first time." However, "It's just not nearly enough, local officials say." The Fed's action "will barely make a dent in resolving local government needs caused by the coronavirus pandemic, which is threatening to create thousands of fiscal disasters nationwide. Officials say Congress must provide hundreds of billions more – but this time in direct federal grants – in the next economic rescue package."

Fed Relaxes Rules To Increase Availability Of Intraday Credit.

Reuters (4/23, Schroeder) reports the Federal Reserve "on Thursday temporarily eased requirements for banks to access intraday credit from Fed banks to ensure that lending continues during the coronavirus pandemic." The Fed "said in a statement it was temporarily waiving limits on uncollateralized intraday credit and overdraft fees for banks that are eligible for its primary credit program." The central bank "also streamlined the process for secondary credit banks to seek collateralized credit."

New York Fed $293M Of Agency-CMBS Thursday.

Reuters (4/23, Marte) reports the Federal Reserve Bank of New York "purchased $293 million in agency commercial mortgage-backed securities out of more than $1.4 billion offered by primary dealers on Thursday."

Fed Buys $59.9B Agency MBS, Sells $4.25B.

Reuters (4/23) reports that the Federal Reserve bought $59.909 billion of agency MBS in the week from April 16 to 22, compared with $59.403 billion purchased the prior week, the New York Fed said on Thursday. The New York Fed "said on its website the Fed sold $4.25 billion in mortgage securities" guaranteed by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, or Ginnie Mae in the latest week. It sold $1 billion the prior week.

WPost: Fed Must Set Clear Rules For Main Street Lending Program.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) urges the Federal Reserve to set clear rules for its Main Street Lending Program, which is "necessary and appropriate" to help the economy. Without clear rules, the Post warns, "the Fed faces the risk of favoritism and arbitrary selection, actual or perceived, in the allocation of credit." In order "to inject as much money as possible, as fast as possible, into areas of the economy that need it most, while minimizing unwarranted discretion," the Post says the Fed must "set clear and consistent rules right from the start – then get on with the program."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Big Banks Gain Record $1T In Deposits In Q1.

The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Benoit, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports US banks were flooded with a record $1 trillion in deposits in the first quarter as markets plunged and the economy shut down in response to the novel coronavirus. The $590 billion in deposits that flowed into the four largest banks – JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, Wells Fargo, and Citigroup – in the first quarter nearly doubled the entire US banking industry's previously quarterly record, according to Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. data.

Bankers, Borrowers Fret Over Details Of Middle-Market Rescue Plan.

American Banker (4/22, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that "ever since the Federal Reserve announced a $600 billion loan program to help midsize companies survive in a pandemic-stricken economy, bankers have been trying to make sense of how exactly it will work." Details of the Main Street Lending Program are still being written, leaving many lenders and borrowers "hesitant to dive into the program with the same enthusiasm shown for the federal government's highly sought-after Paycheck Protection Program for small businesses" as they grow concerned that strings attached such as a requirement that banks hold 5% interest in each loan "might be too much to bear."

Small-Business Owners Seek Suspension Of Wells Fargo's Virus Relief Loans Policy.

Law360 (4/23, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports two small-business owners "asked a Texas federal judge on Wednesday to block Wells Fargo from limiting eligibility for its federal coronavirus relief lending, seeking an emergency court order against the bank similar to one that Bank of America avoided last week." The plaintiffs urged the judge "to issue a temporary restraining order" suspending Wells Fargo's "policy of allowing only its preexisting business checking clients to apply for a Paycheck Protection Program loan from the bank."

Zoom Use Soars, But Some Banks Forbid Use Over Security Worries.

American Banker (4/23, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the popularity of teleconferencing service Zoom has skyrocketed as the coronavirus pandemic has meant that most employees able to work remotely are now doing so. Bank security teams are now concerned with threats accompanying the use of the service, including "Zoombombings," in which hackers play intrusive and sometimes obscene material in a video conference. Standard Chartered is among banks who have banned the platform due to security concerns, and a survey from Blind found that 28 percent of financial employees were concerned they'd been compromised through videoconferencing platforms, while 12 percent stopped using Zoom and 10 percent decreased usage. 56.6 percent of Visa employees reported they'd stopped using Zoom altogether, as did 55.6 percent of surveyed American Express employees.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“No Death Sentences For Minor Offenses.” In an editorial, the New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) says inmates in prison for nonviolent or minor offenses should be considered for release during the coronavirus pandemic. Writing that “the first inmate in a federal prison known to have died” of COVID-19 “was serving time for a nonviolent drug offense,” the Times argues that incarceration may amount to a death sentence for some of these offenders.

“A Breath Of Fresh Air.” In an editorial, the New York Times (4/23, 18.61M) urges readers to support the Fresh Air Fund during the current pandemic, writing that the organization “hopes to reach thousands of New York City children from low-income families this year.” It is “exploring ways to adapt its traditional summer programming if needed.”

Washington Post.

“The Supreme Court Should Respect Precedent. But This Is One Decision It Was Right To Overturn.” The Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) editorializes that in 1972, the Supreme Court “ave its blessing to [an] anomaly” in Louisiana and Oregon that “allowed non-unanimous juries to convict people – in major cases, up to two jurors can dissent. ... This week the court renounced that decision and restored a core constitutional protection to defendants in all states.” The Post backs the decision, writing that while “the court must avoid flip-flopping whenever possible...doing so was justified in this case.”

“States Aren’t Angling For ‘Free Money,’ Sen. McConnell. They’re Trying To Stay Afloat In A Time Of Crisis.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) urges the Federal Reserve to set clear rules for its Main Street Lending Program, which is “necessary and appropriate” to help the economy. Without clear rules, the Post warns, “the Fed faces the risk of favoritism and arbitrary selection, actual or perceived, in the allocation of credit.” In order “to inject as much money as possible, as fast as possible, into areas of the economy that need it most, while minimizing unwarranted discretion,” the Post says the Fed must “set clear and consistent rules right from the start — then get on with the program.”

“The Fed Needs To Set Clear Rules For Its New Lending Program. And Then Get The Money Flowing.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) urges the Federal Reserve to set clear rules for its Main Street Lending Program, which is “necessary and appropriate” to help the economy. Without clear rules, the Post warns, “the Fed faces the risk of favoritism and arbitrary selection, actual or perceived, in the allocation of credit.” In order “to inject as much money as possible, as fast as possible, into areas of the economy that need it most, while minimizing unwarranted discretion,” the Post says the Fed must “set clear and consistent rules right from the start — then get on with the program.”

“The Lessons From Trump’s Reckless Recommendation Of Hydroxychloroquine.” A Washington Post (4/23, 14.2M) editorial says “it is important to grasp the lessons of President Trump’s reckless recommendation of a drug without evidence of efficacy. Especially at a time of grave distress, the lesson is: demand evidence, seek proof and don’t listen to quacks anywhere.” The Post says the US “has built a process of drug testing and approvals considered the gold standard around the world, involving three phases of clinical trials to test safety, dosage, efficacy and possible side effects of a new drug or vaccine. The fear inspired by the coronavirus must not undermine this rigorous procedure.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Stopping A Lawsuit Epidemic.” The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that attorneys are eyeing the healthcare and economic crises brought about by the coronavirus pandemic, and urges congressional Republicans to pass liability reform legislation.

“Big Oil To The Coronavirus Rescue.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (4/23, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) pushes back against anti-carbon activists that target oil companies, pointing out that Exxon Mobil has ramped up production of a key ingredient used in disinfectants and hand sanitizer amid the pandemic. Exxon is also boosting production of a material used in medical masks and gowns.

“Watch Out In The South China Sea.” The Wall Street Journal (4/23, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that China may be taking advantage of the world’s focus on the coronavirus pandemic to exert military strength in the South China Sea. The Journal backs the US decision to respond to Chinese provocations with the Seventh Fleet, and urges continued vigilance.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Ever since coronavirus started, nothing has been the same. ... But there's one thing that's remained surprisingly constant, and that's been the chaos within the Trump Administration. Because where most administrations would be galvanized by an external threat, they seem to think of chaos as an essential service that they need to keep providing."

Trevor Noah: "We're in the middle of a pandemic, and Trump's people are squabbling like they're on an Andy Cohen reunion show."

Trevor Noah: "Trump [said he] has never heard of the guy in charge of finding a vaccine. And you know what? To be honest, part of me is not surprised. 'Sir, do you want to meet the top scientist working on a vaccine?' (As Trump) 'Scientist? Eww, gross. I'd rather meet my son Eric.'"

Trevor Noah: "Last week, Trump encouraged the governors to reopen their economies. But now that Georgia's Trump-loving governor Brian Kemp did exactly that, Trump was, 'Oh, snap, you on your own, son.' ... Trump didn't just throw Brian Kemp under the bus. He looked up the bus schedule in advance and then told Brian Kemp to meet him in the road at 3:15. And then guess who was driving?"

Stephen Colbert: "Last night, I talked about the governors who have decided to reopen their states in opposition to the federal guidelines, but one day later, I'm happy to report that cooler heads have prevailed in our nation's leadership, because the Insane Clown Posse is calling off its annual gathering of the Juggalos festival. ... Yesterday, the Clown Posse's record label, Psychopathic Records, issued a statement: 'With thousands of deaths during the Covid-19 outbreak, we refuse to risk even one juggalo life by hosting a gathering during these troubling times.' So, these guys respect science more than the governor of Georgia. Makes sense."

Stephen Colbert: "You know who I wish believed in science as much as the Insane Clown Posse? The insane clown President."

Stephen Colbert: "During the pandemic, Congress has been approving money for states that are struggling. But that could all end soon, thanks to Senate Majority Leader...Mitch McConnell. Yesterday, McConnell said that instead of getting any more money from the federal government, states should consider bankruptcy. Bankruptcy? Really? They're American states, not Trump casinos."

Deal On Small Business Aid Not Yet Reached; Progressives Signal Their Opposition.

The AP (4/20, Yen, Mascaro) reports the Administration and Congressional leaders "indicated Monday they were working toward agreement on a coronavirus aid package the Senate could take up as soon as Tuesday, with more than $450 billion to boost a small-business loan program that's out of money, help for hospitals and virus testing." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin – "the administration's point man in the talks with Democrats – said he was hopeful of a deal that could pass Congress quickly and get the Small Business Administration program back up by midweek." However, "optimism regarding an immediate deal was tempered."

Politico (4/20, Everett, Caygle, Levine, 4.29M) reports that "while Democrats and the Trump administration say they have nearly clinched a deal to provide roughly $300 billion in new money for the exhausted Paycheck Protection Program, there is still a fight behind the scenes on several key components." Politico says Democrats "have not relented on demands for more money for state and local governments, despite Republicans insisting that is a red line in the current talks." Politico adds that "there's angst among some progressives about the bill. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) said she will not support the deal."

Reuters (4/20, Chiacu, Cornwell) reports Democrats have "sought more funds for state and local governments and hospitals, as well as food aid for the poor." And "the lack of more funds for state and local governments was one reason a leading progressive Democrat...Ocasio-Cortez, said she expected to oppose the bill." CNBC (4/20, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports Speaker Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Schumer have "argued for more funds for community-based lenders and Small Business Administration disaster assistance loans and grants." According to CNBC, "The developing deal would put $60 billion toward relief for rural and minority-owned businesses, and another $60 billion into the SBA's Economic Injury Disaster Loan program."

Bloomberg (4/20, House, Litvan, Wasson, 4.73M) reports that "a person familiar with the negotiations said Monday that Democrats and Republicans still had a disagreement over the formula to distribute health-care aid to the states. But House members have been put on notice of a possible vote on Wednesday, indicating leaders in both parties anticipate reaching an agreement." According to Bloomberg, Pelosi is "coming under pressure from her party's liberal wing to wring more concessions, including aid for state and local governments that the GOP is resisting putting in the package. 'It is going to be very difficult to support a package that doesn't have what we need in terms of help for state and local governments,' Pramila Jayapal, head of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, said on a conference call."

The Washington Post (4/20, A1, Werner, 14.2M) is reporting Pelosi "told lawmakers on a conference call Monday evening that she expected an agreement to be clinched within hours." The package includes $25 billion for testing, which it says "emerged on Monday as one of the last things to resolve." Schumer said Democrats want "free testing for all, and expanding reporting and contact tracing." However, according to the Post, Secretary Mnuchin "and other Trump administration officials were seeking a 'state-driven approach and flexibility,' according to a senior administration official." The Post adds, "The differing approaches echoed the dispute growing nationally, as governors blame the federal government for the shortage of tests, while President Trump and other administration officials insist there have been record numbers of tests performed and that governors need to try harder."

American Banker (4/20, Yacik, Subscription Publication, 31K), Fox Business (4/20, Henney, 1.73M), The Hill (4/20, Bolton, 2.98M), and Vox (4/20, Zhou, 2.27M) also report.

Revelations That Large Chains Got Money Meant For Small Businesses Sparks Outrage. The Washington Post (4/20, A1, O'Connell, 14.2M) reports that "the federal government gave national hotel and restaurant chains millions of dollars in grants before the $349 billion program ran out of money Thursday, leading to a backlash that prompted one company to give the money back and a Republican senator to say that 'millions of dollars are being wasted.'" According to the Post, "Thousands of traditional small businesses were unable to get funding from the program before it ran dry," and "as Congress and the White House near a deal to add an additional $310 billion to the program, some are calling for additional oversight and rule changes to prevent bigger chains from accepting any more money." The Post says Ruth's Chris Steak House, "a chain that has 150 locations and is valued at $250 million, reported receiving $20 million in funding from...the Paycheck Protection Program," and "the Potbelly chain of sandwich shops, which has more than 400 locations and a value of $89 million, reported receiving $10 million last week." Shake Shack, "a $1.6 billion burger-and-fries chain based in New York City, received $10 million." However, "after complaints from small business advocates when the fund went dry," Shake Shack "announced Sunday evening that they would return the money." Reuters (4/20, Bhalla, Balu) reports Secretary Mnuchin "in a tweet said he was 'glad to see' that Shake Shack would return the loan."

The AP (4/20, Rosenberg, Dee) reports that "the government program, which is overseen by the Treasury and administered by the Small Business Administration, limits loan recipients to businesses with fewer than 500 employees and revenue of less than $2.5 billion. But it makes an exception for restaurants and other food service businesses that employ fewer than 500 people per location, meaning that restaurant chains are as eligible for the loans as a neighborhood restaurant or bar.”

The Hill (4/20, Elis, Lane, 2.98M) reports the Treasury Department “was still putting out rules and regulations the night before” the small business loan program “was set to launch. Banks and lenders struggled to adapt, and many initially offered the loans only to their existing clients, freezing out entire swaths of the business community.” Democrats “have since called for rules that would ensure smaller, community banks, particularly those that service minority and underbanked populations, have a leg up in the lending process.” The centrist Blue Dog Democrats wrote in a letter to Secretary Mnuchin on Monday: “If these smaller institutions are not able to help their communities, we fear the PPP will fail to achieve the goal of keeping small businesses afloat, and instead, leave small businesses and farmers in rural and underserved communities without access to necessary capital to survive.”

CNBC (4/20, Hirsch, 3.62M) reports the retail industry “is reeling, as stores shutter and thousands of people lose their jobs while the coronavirus spreads.” Now the Treasury Department “must decide whether the risk of the industry toppling is worth putting taxpayer money where many others would not.” Secretary Mnuchin “has shown little appetite for risk and losses, even as he attempts to support a cratering economy.” According to CNBC, the small business lending program’s risk “will be borne by the Treasury Department, which is using taxpayer money to backstop the loan programs offered by the Federal Reserve.” Mnuchin, “himself a former banker, has demonstrated limited tolerance for risk in the program and keen focus on ensuring taxpayers get their money.”

Politico (4/20, Warmbrodt, 4.29M), The Financial Times (4/20, Politi, Fedor, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), American Banker (4/20, Prior, Subscription Publication, 31K), Fox Business (4/20, Gasparino, 1.73M), Law360 (4/20, Dixon, Subscription Publication, 8K), and Newsweek (4/20, Hutzler, 1.53M) also report.

Carranza: SBA, Treasury Working “Day And Night” To Add Lending Capacity. In an op-ed for USA Today (4/20, 10.31M), SBA Administrator Jovita Carranza said the SBA has approved 1.6 million forgivable loans since the launch on April 3 of the small business relief program. Carranza says the SBA “has been working day and night, seven days a week, to add capacity and to identify and correct technical challenges. We are working with the Treasury Department to provide legal and regulatory guidance to thousands of financial institutions and, most important, to maintain the overall functionality and stability of the program.”

Treasury Reviewing Whether It Can Prevent Banks Seizing Stimulus Payments.

The Washington Post (4/20, Stein, Merle, 14.2M) reports that according to “a person familiar with the internal deliberations” at the Treasury Department, Treasury is examining “whether it has the legal authority to prevent banks and private debt collectors from seizing $1,200 government stimulus payments.” The review comes amid a growing “blowback...over private lenders clawing back parts of the emergency financial relief package.” The Post’s source said the review is being conducted by the Department’s legal counsel and it is unclear when a determination would be made. The Post says the Treasury Department “was warned weeks ago about the potential danger of letting the payments be siphoned off” after Sens. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) and Josh Hawley (R-MO) sent a joint letter to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “urging him to prevent the funds from going to private collectors settling prior debts.” The Hill (4/20, Jagoda, 2.98M) also reports.

States Quickly Burning Through Unemployment Trust Funds. The Wall Street Journal (4/20, A1, Chaney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that an analysis of Treasury Department data shows states are rapidly burning through funds set aside for unemployment programs as millions of people apply for benefits. According to the Journal, since the end of February, nearly half of US states have seen double-digit percentage declines in their trust fund balances.

Tribe Representatives Urge Judge To Order Mnuchin To Send Relief Money Directly To Tribes.

Law360 (4/20, Westney, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, “A group of federally recognized tribes urged a D.C. federal judge Monday to block any of the $8 billion allocated for tribes combating the coronavirus from going to Alaska Native corporations, saying the Treasury Department is planning to illegally send ‘desperately needed funds’ meant for tribal governments to the for-profit companies.” Six tribes, three each from Alaska and the lower 48, “asked U.S. District Judge Amit P. Mehta for a preliminary injunction and temporary restraining order, after filing their suit Friday challenging Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin’s plan to let the corporations, known as ANCs, share in $8 billion in direct tribal funding in the $2 trillion CARES Act. The tribes’ motion “urged Judge Mehta to order that Mnuchin this week send the entire $8 billion to the 574 federally recognized tribes, saying rapid action is needed because Treasury is expected to distribute the money by Friday.” Mother Jones (4/20, 881K) also reports.

Treasury Says Paper Checks Are Already Being Sent Out.

ABC News (4/20, Vann, 2.97M) reports the Treasury Department “has confirmed that economic impact paper checks from the $2.2 trillion coronavirus stimulus relief package have already started going out and are in the mail.” Treasury officials “are walking back Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin’s comments at a White House gaggle with reporters where he said they would start going out ‘next week.’” A Treasury Department spokesman told ABC in an emailed statement, “There is no delay whatsoever. We encourage people to go to IRS.gov/coronavirus/get-my-payment to sign up for direct deposit to get their payment fast. To the extent that paper checks are needed, millions of them are on the way, hitting mailboxes over the next few days if they haven’t begun to arrive already.” Axios (4/20, Knutson, 521K) and Fox News (4/20, Singman, 27.59M) also report.

Coronavirus Relief Package Oversight Systems Said To Still Be Largely Dormant.

The Los Angeles Times (4/20, Haberkorn, 4.64M) reports that "oversight systems are still largely dormant for the $2 trillion in coronavirus economic relief passed by Congress last month, leaving gaping holes in accountability just as the Treasury Department prepares to give hundreds of billions of dollars in aid to corporations." Democrats' biggest area of concern "is the nearly $500-billion fund that the Treasury Department – with significant control by Secretary Steven T. Mnuchin – will use to buoy corporations." Moreover, critics "say the White House's frequent past refusals to respond to congressional inquiries make the oversight bodies' work all the more important."

Rubin: Trump Administration Displaying "Cavalier" Indifference To American Lives.

In her column for The Washington Post (4/20, Rubin, 14.2M), Jennifer Rubin writes President Trump has "for weeks now...led a jaw-dropping, cavalier display of indifference to human life. He has boosted efforts to characterize opening the economy – and tolerating covid-19 deaths on a possibly massive scale – as the lesser of two evils compared to a recession, an ideology shared by senior advisers and others, such as: Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin" and numerous others.

Businesses Welcome Delay In Tariff Payments, But Say More Relief Is Needed.

Reuters (4/20, Shalal, Mason, Ahmann) reports that retailers and business groups welcomed the Administration's decision "to allow importers to defer for three months any tariff payments they owe the government, but said they needed more tariff relief to deal with the pandemic." While the President signed an executive order Sunday "allowing deferral of payments of some tariff," the order "does not extend to importers of goods caught up in several trade conflicts, such as solar panels, steel, aluminum and a range of Chinese products," the Treasury Department said.

Treasury Department Has Disbursed $2.9B To Airlines.

Reuters (4/20, Shepardson) reports the Treasury Department "said on Monday it had disbursed $2.9 billion in initial payroll assistance to 54 smaller passenger carrier and two major passenger airlines, while it finalized grant agreements with six major airlines." Treasury said it had "finalized grant agreements with Allegiant Air, American Airlines Group Inc, Delta Air Lines Inc, Southwest Airlines Co, Spirit Airlines Inc, and United Airlines Holdings Inc." Bloomberg (4/20, Mohsin, 4.73M) also reports.

Coronavirus-Related Cyberattacks Jump In April.

The Hill (4/20, Miller, 2.98M) reports research released Monday by software group Check Point "found cyberattacks targeting COVID-19 relief checks shot up in recent weeks, while hackers in general continued using the ongoing pandemic prey on individuals." According to The Hill, "One key aspect of these attacks has involved targeting COVID-19 relief checks currently being sent out to the public by the Treasury Department as part of the $2 trillion stimulus package signed into law by President Trump last month." Check Point reported "seeing an average of 14,000 coronavirus-related cyberattacks per day over the past week, six times the average daily attacks seen in the second half of March." This number "jumped further to 20,000 attacks per day since April 7." The vast majority of these attacks "were through phishing emails, in which a hacker tries to tempt the individual targeted to click on a link or download an attachment in order to access their network."

Hassett: Q2 GDP Likely To Be "One Of The Biggest Negative Numbers" We've Seen.

Senior Adviser to the President Kevin Hassett said on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (4/20), "I think it is quite likely that the second quarter is going to be one of the biggest negative numbers that we have ever seen and it is because we basically stopped the economy. I think the question is what happens to the quarters around that. ... Ultimately, I think what is going to happen is it is going to depend on bounce back. What we've done with all of these policies, is we have kind of built a bridge to the other shore. We don't know exactly where the other shore is, but hopefully we are going to get there soon and then once we get there because we built this good bridge, the hope that is we can take off pretty sharply right away."

Researchers Predict Recession Will Cause Millions To Fall Below Poverty Line.

The Washington Post (4/20, Ingraham, 14.2M) reports that Columbia University researchers are warning that "the coronavirus recession" is "likely" to "drive U.S. poverty rates to five-decade highs." The Post adds, "If unemployment hits 30 percent and stays there, as a recent Federal Reserve report has warned, one widely used measure of poverty would skyrocket more than 50 percent, from 12.4 percent to 18.9 percent, according to report by Zachary Parolin and Christopher Wimer at the Center on Poverty and Social Policy." According to the Post, "This would add more than 21 million people to the poverty rolls and mark the highest recorded poverty rate since at least 1967," and "even under a best-case scenario, where employment levels recover rapidly after the summer, the annual poverty rate will reach levels comparable to the Great Recession."

Companies Reducing Executive Pay During Economic Downturn.

The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Francis, Jones, Pulliam, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that as companies have laid off workers and reduced other costs during the economic downturn caused by the coronavirus pandemic, many have reduced the salaries of top leaders and given them new equity grants.

Automakers, UAW Discussing Safety Measures To Reopen Plants.

Reuters (4/20, Carey) reports Detroit automakers and the United Auto Workers "are in talks about safely restarting U.S. production halted by the coronavirus pandemic, but local union leaders said on Monday any workers who feel sick must be allowed to self quarantine without losing pay." While the parties have yet to announce a deal, "the Detroit automakers all are aiming to restart at least some U.S. assembly plants in early May." According to the article, "the safety practices and sick leave policies the automakers and the UAW agree to would offer a template for auto suppliers and potentially other manufacturing industries."

Boeing Among US Manufacturers Restarting Production.

The AP (4/20, Long) reports, "Boeing and at least one other U.S. heavy-equipment manufacturer resumed production" Monday. Boeing "said it is putting about 27,000 people back to work this week building passenger jets at its Seattle-area plants." In addition, Doosan Bobcat, "a farm equipment maker and North Dakota's largest manufacturer, announced the return of about 2,200 workers at three factories around the state." The companies "that start operating again are likely to engender good will with the Trump administration at a time when it is doling out billions to companies for economic relief." However, "reopening carries major risks, especially since people can spread the virus without even knowing they are infected."

Amazon Workers Plan "Mass Call Out" To Demand Coronavirus Protections.

CNBC (4/20, Palmer, 3.62M) reports on its website that Amazon warehouse workers are staging a "mass call out" this week to "call attention to what they call a lack of protections for employees who continue to come to work amid the coronavirus outbreak." According to the worker rights group United for Respect, "more than 300 Amazon workers across at least 50 facilities have signed up to take part in the protest." To participate, workers will call out of work "en masse across the country" starting Tuesday and through the week.

Lord & Taylor Considers Filing For Bankruptcy Protection.

Reuters (4/20, Dinapoli, Spector) cites "people familiar with the matter" who say Lord & Taylor is considering filing for bankruptcy protection "after it was forced to temporarily shut all of its 38 U.S. department stores in the wake of the coronavirus outbreak." Some of the sources said bankruptcy is one of several options under consideration along with "trying to negotiate relief from creditors and finding additional financing."

NYTimes: "Essential" Workers Need Better Coronavirus Protections.

The New York Times (4/20, 18.61M) says in an editorial that grocery store and warehouse workers deemed "essential" during the coronavirus pandemic "say not enough is being done to protect them from exposure." The Times says it is "apparent that not nearly enough is being done to protect these front-line workers, even as their continued labor ensures that a semblance of normality endures for their fellow Americans." The Times says OSHA "has taken a largely hands-off approach to the pandemic," and calls on the agency to "go beyond C.D.C. guidelines to require measures such as staggered shifts and lunch breaks and construction of barriers to protect employees in jobs like manufacturing and meatpacking that require close quarters." The Times concludes, "If the spread of the disease is to slow, millions of workers deserve far better protection."

Rubio: US Economy Must Be More Resilient.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (4/20, 18.61M), Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) writes that while "resilience is one of the defining traits of an American," it has been "absent from our public policy for too long. And this has become devastatingly clear in the current crisis." Rubio writes that "many of the serious problems we face originated in our economic relationship with China. ... For decades America made the conscious choice to facilitate offshoring to China. ... And look at what happened the moment the world faced a pandemic. ... Having monopolized those critical supply chains, the Chinese Communist Party pointed them inward." Rubio argues that America will overcome the pandemic, but "the society that follows should not be what it was before. ... We need a new vision to create a more resilient economy," including "the re-shoring of supply chains integral to our national interest – everything from basic medicines and equipment to vital rare-earth minerals and technologies of the future."

Trump Tweets He Will "Temporarily Suspend Immigration," Offers No Details.

President Trump tweeted at 10:06 p.m., "In light of the attack from the Invisible Enemy, as well as the need to protect the jobs of our GREAT American Citizens, I will be signing an Executive Order to temporarily suspend immigration into the United States!"

In its brief report, the AP (4/20) says Trump "offered no details as to what immigration programs might be affected by the order. The White House did not immediately elaborate on Trump's tweeted announcement." The Washington Post (4/20, Iati, Beachum, Taylor, 14.2M) similarly says, "It was not immediately clear what Trump was referring to or whether such an order would be possible."

NBC News (4/20, Stelloh, 6.14M) reports on its website, "Trump previously barred travel from China and Europe to stop the spread of the coronavirus." The New York Times (4/20, 18.61M) reports, "In recent weeks, the Trump administration has moved swiftly to bar asylum seekers and undocumented immigrants from entering the country, alarming immigration advocates who have said Mr. Trump and his advisers are using a global pandemic to further hard-line immigration policies." The Hill (4/20, Samuels, 2.98M) writes, "The decision to suspend all immigration is sure to draw fury from Democrats and immigrant rights groups, some of whom argue the president has continued to push controversial parts of his agenda even as the coronavirus pandemic receives the bulk of public attention."

Breitbart (4/20, Binder, 673K) says the "upcoming executive order to pause immigration to the U.S. is widely supported by American voters. An Ipsos poll released this month" found that 79 percent of Americans "want a full halt on immigration" to the U.S. Reuters (4/20, Singh), the Wall Street Journal (4/20, Ballhaus, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the Washington Times (4/20, Swoyer, 492K), and the Washington Examiner (4/20, Halaschak, 448K) also have very brief items on the tweet.

Trump Says Democrats Playing "Very Dangerous Political Game" With Testing.

On Twitter, President Trump said Monday, "Last month all you heard from the Radical Left, Do Nothing Democrats was, 'Ventilators, Ventilators, Ventilators.' They screamed it loud & clear, & thought they had us cold, even though it was the State's task. But everyone got their V's, with many to spare. Now they scream.... .." (4/20, 16.75M) "Testing, Testing, Testing," again playing a very dangerous political game. States, not the Federal Government, should be doing the Testing – But we will work with the Governors and get it done. This is easy compared to the fast production of thousands of complex Ventilators!"

On ABC World News Tonight (4/20, story 2, 2:50, Muir, 11.02M), Whit Johnson reported there is "growing consensus that the key to reopening the country is ramped-up testing." But across the nation, "the demand" is "outweighing the supply," and governors are "pleading for help." On the CBS Evening News (4/20, story 2, 1:45, O'Donnell, 5.74M), Weijia Jiang reported governors are "still begging the White House to help them get testing supplies. One senior official who works for a Democratic governor who listened in on that call said it is quote, 'insane and criminal the Administration is not doing more to help.'" However, "once again, the President said the burden is on the states."

The Hill (4/20, Samuels, Weixel, 2.98M) reports, "President Trump on Monday lashed out at governors who have clamored for more widespread coronavirus testing, accusing them of playing politics or simply being ignorant of resources in their own states." Trump and other Administration officials spent "a significant portion of the daily coronavirus press briefing to outlining efforts to scale up the production of testing materials as governors across the country warn more federal help is needed to increase capacity." According to the article, "the briefing at times appeared intended to rebuke the criticism directly, with Trump insisting his administration had already done a commendable job and that those who disagreed were trying to score political points."

The Washington Examiner (4/20, Halaschak, 448K) reports, "President Trump said his administration has provided governors with lists detailing information on laboratories and additional coronavirus testing sites after some 'didn't understand' their state's capacity." During a Monday news conference, Trump said, "Vice President Pence spoke with governors from all 50 states about our unified effort to defeat the virus. He had a great call. Prior to the call, we provided each governor with a list of the names, addresses, and phone numbers of the labs where they can find additional testing capacity within their states."

The Washington Post (4/20, Deyoung, 14.2M) reports that during the news conference, "Trump directed some of his ire" at Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R), the head of the National Governors Association, "who he said 'didn't understand much about what was going on' when he criticized the federal government's performance in addressing the testing issue." Pence "said he assured governors that there was sufficient testing capacity for all and that the federal government would continue to assist them 'in every way.'"

According to Politico (4/20, Cook, 4.29M), President Trump is "preparing for a long battle with America's governors to save himself from the political fallout from coronavirus." Politico says the President "has said the onus for reopening states lies with their leaders, but he has simultaneously tried to pressure governors into restarting businesses and relaxing health guidelines as soon as possible." Politico goes on to report that "senior administration officials and Trump advisers say the level of hostility between the president and governors will probably only increase in the coming days, in part because Trump sees so much political opportunity in stoking those divisions during his reelection campaign."

The New York Times (4/20, Rojas, 18.61M) reports, "Governors facing growing pressure to revive economies decimated by the coronavirus said on Sunday that a shortage of tests was among the most significant hurdles in the way of lifting restrictions in their states." In interviews on Sunday morning talk shows, governors "said they needed the swabs and reagents required for the test, and urged federal officials to help them get those supplies." They "bristled at claims from the Trump administration that the supply of tests was adequate."

The AP (4/20, Suderman) reports that "governors from both parties pushed back hard Monday after... Trump accused Democrats of playing 'a very dangerous political game' by insisting there is a shortage of tests for the coronavirus." According to the AP, the governors "countered that the White House must do more to help states do the testing that's needed before they can ease up on stay-at-home orders." The AP says the governors' "plea for stepped-up coordination came on the latest day when the Trump administration provided discordant messaging: Trump blasted state leaders on Twitter for being too dependent on federal government, while Vice President Mike Pence assured governors the government was working around-the-clock to help them ramp up testing."

The Washington Post (4/20, Nirappil, Cox, Vozzella, 14.2M) reports Hogan said Monday the state spent $9 million to acquire 500,000 test kits from South Korea over the weekend. Hogan "said he turned abroad in late March in the absence of support from the federal government, and was able after weeks of efforts to procure about one test for every 12 Marylanders." Hogan said, "The administration made it clear over and over again they want the states to take the lead and we have to go out and do it ourselves. So that's exactly what we did."

The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Calfas, Calvert, Dvorak, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports New York on Monday began tests to help determine what percentage of its population has been infected. California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said the state aimed to run 25,000 tests per day by the end of the month.

Fauci: Expansion Of Testing Capacity Requires Federal-State Partnerships. Appearing on ABC's Good Morning America (4/20, 3.87M), NIAID Director Fauci said, "What we need to do is make a better connectivity with the tests that are available as well as the capacity that in some cases is not used, through no fault of the governor or the local people. There are now, or should be, between one and a half to two-plus million tests per week. There are people out there who say we need more, we need maybe two or three times that. We're striving for that goal, but in the meantime, with what we have, if it is used strategically, we feel we would be able to have most people enter into Phase One after they pass that 14-day gating period. ... We need a partnership between the federal government and the local people including the governors to help them get to things that they maybe may not have any access to."

Trump To Meet With Cuomo At White House On Tuesday.

Politico (4/20, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports President Trump "said he would meet with New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) at the White House on Tuesday." Trump told reporters at a coronavirus news briefing Monday, "He's coming to the Oval Office tomorrow afternoon. Andrew is going to be coming in with some of his people so we look forward to that."

The New York Post (4/20, Bowden, Hogan, 4.57M) reports the meeting "comes after the two leaders traded blows on Friday – with Trump telling Cuomo he needed to do less complaining and get on with his job. An angry Cuomo immediately snapped back, throwing the president's projections back at him and mocking him for his stint as the host of 'The Apprentice' TV series."

Trump Says He Is Working With Walz To Provide Him With Everything He Needs. On Twitter, President Trump on Monday said he had "a very nice call" with Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz (D). Trump continued, "We are working closely on getting him all he needs, and fast. Good things happening!"

Trump Congratulates Florida's The Villages.

On Twitter, President Trump said Monday, "Congratulations to all of my many friends at The Villages in Florida on having done so well, and with such great spirit, during these rather unusual times. So proud of everyone! Mark Morse & Gary Lester have really stepped up to the plate. Hope to see everyone soon."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Spreading "Anti-Government Message."

Under the headline "Trump, The Head Of Government, Leans Into An Anti-Government Message," the New York Times (4/20, Haberman, 18.61M) reports that "with his poll numbers fading after a rally-around-the-leader bump as the coronavirus spread, the president is stoking protests against stay-at-home orders and nursing grievances." The Times says that "in the past few days, President Trump has nurtured protests against state-issued stay-at-home orders aimed at curtailing the spread of the coronavirus." The Times adds that "when Mr. Trump on Friday tweeted 'LIBERATE,' his all-capitalized exhortations against strict orders in specific states – including Michigan – were in keeping with how he ran in 2016: saying things that seem contradictory, like pledging to work with governors and then urging people to 'liberate' their states, and leaving it to his audiences to hear what they want to hear in his words."

Reuters (4/20, Layne, Goldberg) reports New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "said on Monday he understood why some people were protesting against the lockdowns imposed to stem the coronavirus outbreak, but said restrictions must be lifted in a way that prevented further outbreaks. ... 'You don't need protests to convince anyone in this country that we have to get back to work and we have to get the economy going and we have to get out of our homes. Nobody,' Cuomo told a daily briefing."

Networks Draw Attention To Polls Showing Strong Support For Social Distancing. In the lead story for CBS This Morning (4/20, 3.01M), Gayle King reported, "Over the weekend, America surpassed 759,000 reported cases of this virus. The reported nationwide death toll is now more than 40,000, and that's nearly double what it was a week ago." Anthony Mason reported that "despite those terrible numbers, the economic strain is driving some Americans to protest stay-at-home orders. But there are questions about how the rallies consisting largely of the President's supporters were organized." Mason added, "Florida is already moving to reopen nonessential businesses." Manuel Bojorquez reported from Miami, "Many of those protesters across the country say for them, this is about civil liberties, but, at the end of the day, a lot of it is also about jobs. And as the lockdowns linger, the demonstrations continue to grow. ... President Trump weighed in on the protests during his Sunday White House briefing."

On ABC's Good Morning America (4/20, 3.87M), Whit Johnson reported that "frustration is boiling over. Protests erupting coast to coast with calls to end stay-at-home orders. Thousands lining the streets of Wisconsin. ... Rallying cries from Washington to Colorado to Maryland." At the opening of NBC's Today (4/20, 3.64M), Hoda Kotb said, "The death toll topped 40,000 in the US, with more than 755,000 confirmed cases. Despite that surge, protests against stay-at-home orders have expanded to more than a dozen states, including a large rally in Colorado yesterday that saw demonstrators being confronted by health care workers." Kotb added that a new NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll found that "58 percent of voters worry the US will move too quickly to loosen restrictions leading to another spike in cases and deaths."

Conway: Protesters Are The "Forgotten Men And...Women Economically." Appearing on Fox News (4/20, 896K), White House

Counselor Kellyanne Conway said, "First and foremost, we want people to adhere to the COVID-19 guidelines. People should read those guidelines. We need physical distancing of six feet. ... But at the same time some of these governors have physically distanced from common sense. In Michigan, you can basically smoke grass but not cut your grass. This doesn't make sense to many people. ... This is not fomenting domestic rebellion."

The New York Post (4/20, Golding, 4.57M) reports Conway said, "I look at those people and I see the forgotten men and forgotten women, economically." Conway continued, "They're saying, 'Look, I'm in a low-infection area, I'm asymptomatic, not exposed, I want to get back to work.'"

Fauci Warns Reopening Too Early Could Crush Any Economic Recovery. Bloomberg (4/20, 4.73M) reports that in an appearance on ABC's Good Morning America, NIAID Director Fauci "pushed back against protesters demonstrating against stay-at-home orders, saying the U.S. economy won't recover until the virus is 'under control.'" According to Bloomberg, Fauci "said his message to the protesters is that 'this is something that is hurting from the standpoint of economics' but that re-opening too soon could cause even more harm." Fauci is quoted as saying, "Unless we get the virus under control, the real recovery economically is not going to happen. ... So what you do if you jump the gun and go into a situation where you have a big spike, you're going to set yourself back."

Reuters (4/20, Renshaw, Resnick-Ault) also reports that Fauci "told ABC News there would be no real economic recovery until authorities got the virus under control and that jumping the gun could lead to a big spike in cases. 'It's going to backfire, that's the problem,' he said."

Protests Demanding End To Coronavirus Restrictions Intensify. Reuters (4/20, Renshaw) reports, "The U.S. debate over when to lift restrictions to curb the coronavirus outbreak intensified on Monday, with protesters describing mandatory lockdowns as 'tyranny' and health workers and officials portraying them as a matter of life and death." President Trump "has said state governors should have the final say but has favored an early end to the lockdowns, and many protesters in the past week have sported pro-Trump signs and campaign gear." Reuters adds that "Republican lawmakers in several states have also backed the protesters, some of whom have failed to wear face masks and practice the social distancing that health officials say is key to getting the virus under control."

On NBC Nightly News (4/20, story 2, 1:50, Holt, 7.96M), Stephanie Gosk reported protests have "spread across the country. In some cases, organized by anti-government groups, anti-vaxxers, and gun rights activists." Gosk added, however, "there are also those who show up to the protests to express real concerns about the economy and the toll the shutdown is already taking on their families."

About 2,000 Rally In Support Of Lifting Coronavirus Restrictions In Pennsylvania. USA Today (4/20, Jansen, 10.31M) reports, "About 2,000 people honked, cheered and jeered against coronavirus restrictions Monday in Harrisburg, Pa., the latest and one of the largest rallies in a growing movement nationwide against governors balancing healthcare and economic concerns." The Harrisburg \(PA\) Patriot-News (4/20, Marroni, 427K) reports the Reopen PA rally was held to call on Gov. Tom Wolf (D) "to allow businesses to reopen and people to go back to work, but organizers say it was also an exercise in civil liberties, and that they have the right to gather, despite stay-at-home orders." Several Republican lawmakers "spoke at the rally, too, calling for Wolf to either roll back his restrictions or sign the Senate bill that would reopen a significant number of businesses across the state – a bill Wolf pledged to veto."

Kentucky Sees Highest Increase In Coronavirus Infections After Lockdown Protests. The New York Post (4/20, Salo, 4.57M) reports, "Kentucky experienced its highest single-day spike in coronavirus cases after protests broke out in the state to lift lockdowns, according to reports." Kentucky Gov. Andy Beshear (D) "announced there were 273 new cases Sunday, bringing the total to 2,960, news station WCPO reported." The article adds that "it's unclear whether the protests had any impact on the surge of deaths reported Sunday in the state."

Wyoming Urging Caution As Protests Call For Coronavirus Restrictions To Be Lifted. The Washington Post (4/20, Klemko, 14.2M) reports that while coronavirus "has been linked to more than 42,000 U.S. deaths, there were protests" in Cheyenne, Wyoming on Monday "arguing that all restrictions should be lifted in the Cowboy State, which has seen the lowest number of confirmed cases" and deaths in the country "in part because of its low population and wide open spaces." Still, amid "rising calls for a return to normalcy, there are notes of caution, as the state has experienced a few worrisome outbreaks."

Facebook Removes Pages Of Anti-Lockdown Protest Organizers. Politico (4/20, Overly, 4.29M) reports that Facebook is "blocking anti-quarantine protesters from using the site to organize in-person gatherings that violate states' stay-at-home orders – a move that had brought an immediate backlash from conservatives including" Donald Trump Jr. and Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO). According to Politico, Facebook "has removed protest messages in California, New Jersey and Nebraska from its site, a company spokesperson said Monday, after days of rallies across state capitals where protesters – many carrying pro-Trump signs – called for an end to the health restrictions." Politico reports that a Facebook spokesperson "said that 'events that defy government's guidance on social distancing aren't allowed on Facebook' and had been removed following guidance from individual states."

WPost: Trump Recklessly Endangering Lives With Call To "Liberate" States. In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) says President Trump was "exceedingly reckless to incite protests with three tweets on Friday saying 'LIBERATE' Michigan, Minnesota and Virginia, all of which have Democratic governors." By doing so, Trump "undermined his own published public health guidelines and his own reopening plan." The Post raises concerns "his comments could inspire additional disobedience and spark new outbreaks and another round of restrictions that would be even harder to impose." In contrast, the Post says, "a responsible leader would express empathy with the millions of Americans who have followed the rules, reinforce why they are necessary and offer reasonable expectations about what comes next. To fail at this is to fail at a central function of the presidency."

WPost Examines Daily “Trump Show” Of Coronavirus News Briefings.

In a fairly critical 2,100-word feature, the Washington Post (4/20, Zak, Terris, Ellison, 14.2M) examines the evening “Trump show” that begins each afternoon around 5 p.m. as the President begins his daily coronavirus news briefing. The Post writes, “Theaters are closed, sports are iced, the news has tunnel vision, and Donald Trump has a captive audience. TV viewership for these briefings has sometimes exceeded 10 million. ... The briefing is also a pity party, a patriotic pep talk, a media scrum, a tantrum, a sermon, a mood ring, an infomercial, an airing of grievances, a rally without ralliers, a wrestling match without chokeholds, a glimpse of an alternate reality, a hard look at actual reality, and a jargon-filled lecture on epidemiology.”

Eugene Robinson writes in his Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) column, “In theory, regular updates from the commander in chief at a time of grave crisis could help forge national unity and resolve.” But Trump’s “daily ‘briefings’ ...offer an unprecedented challenge to both the media and the general public. If journalists take seriously our responsibility to report truth rather than falsehoods, we need to devise some sort of filter.”

O’Brien Outlines Administration’s Key Coronavirus Decisions.

National Security Adviser O’Brien, in a Wall Street Journal (4/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, lists seven key decisions he says the Administration has made since January to stem the spread of the coronavirus, including barring foreign nationals who had recently been in China from entering the US, the initial “15 Days to Slow the Spread” initiative, and making remdesivir available to patients in emergency situations and in a clinical trial.

Perdue: Infected Food Processing Workers Causes Concern Over Food Supply Chain.

Agriculture Secretary Perdue was asked on Fox News’ Your World (4/20, 1.04M) about concerns over the safety of the food supply given that workers in food plants have contracted the coronavirus. Perdue said, “The health of the workers is paramount. That is what companies have been doing, trying to protect their workers. ... These companies are providing barriers in between the workers, face shields and other protective equipment for them. But there is a concern over the food supply chain. If we don’t have enough food processing workers to manage these plants, then that backs up our food supply.” Perdue made similar comments on Newsmax TV (4/20, 431K).

Coronavirus Outbreaks Shut Down Meat Plants. The Minneapolis Star Tribune (4/20, Hughlett, 1.04M) reports JBS USA “said Monday it is indefinitely idling its sprawling Worthington pork plant, laying off over 2,000 workers and dealing a big blow to Minnesota’s hog farmers.” It became the latest meat processor “to temporarily close after COVID-19 began racing through many facilities.” On Saturday, Hormel Foods “closed two plants, one each in Kansas and Illinois.”

On NBC Nightly News (4/20, story 6, 2:25, Holt, 7.96M), Blayne Alexander spoke with a worker at the Smithfield pork processing plant in South Dakota, which is “now a coronavirus hot spot, linked to nearly 900 cases.” The worker described the conditions at the facility, saying that practicing social distancing is “nearly impossible,” according to Alexander.

On ABC World News Tonight (4/20, story 5, 1:55, Muir, 10.32M), Matt Gutman reported “employees who say they might have to go back to work” at the Smithfield plant “or plants across the Midwest tell us they’re concerned of additional outbreaks, that they could be infected by fellow employees who are asymptomatic.”

Coronavirus Impacts Packaged-Food Production. The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Newman, Gasparro, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the pandemic has resulted in packaged-food plant closures and infected farmworkers at a time when demand for foodstuffs is increasing. Production at facilities for Frito-Lay, Kraft Heinz, Conagra, Cargill, JBS, and Empire Kosher Poultry have all been impacted by infected workers. Farmworkers that supply packaged-food companies are also falling ill.

Wilkie Says VA Is Carefully Rationing Equipment To Meet COVID-19 Challenge.

NPR’s All Things Considered (4/20) reported that VA Secretary Wilkie says the VA is “competing for the same scarce resources as the rest of the country and the world.” Wilkie: “As the national emergency kicked in, the normal supply chains that we have dried up.” NPR added that Wilkie “says no VA hospital has run out but that’s because the VA has been forced to carefully ration equipment.” Wilkie: “For those who are on the front lines in the emergency rooms and the COVID wards, who are in the nursing homes, they have the normal supply of equipment. It is those who do not have that direct contact with patients that we’ve asked to follow CDC guidelines.” Wilkie added that “in following those CDC guidelines we are ensuring that those on the front lines have what they need. Does everyone in hospital have all of the changes in gear that we would have in a normal situation? No.”

GAO Preparing At Least 30 CARES Act Audits.

White House Tells Federal Agencies To Start Preparing To Reopen Offices.

Bloomberg (4/20, Sink, 4.73M) reports the White House "ordered federal agencies on Monday to begin preparing to return workers to offices, telling them to align their coronavirus reopening plans with those of the states and municipalities where they're located." OMB Director Vought wrote in a memo, "Agencies are encouraged to allow federal employees and contractors to return to the office in low-risk areas." However, "the memo said to allow employees to work from home until state and local authorities begin reopening their economies under the three-phase plan the White House outlined last week."

CMS To Require Nursing Homes To Provide Data On COVID-19 Cases, Deaths.

The Washington Post (4/20, Cenziper, Jacobs, Mulcahy, 14.2M) says almost "one in ten nursing homes in America has a publicly reported case of the coronavirus, a count that has soared in the past three days as several hard-hit states released the names of facilities after weeks of pressure from families, journalists and watchdog groups." Data compiled by the Post indicate more than 1,300 nursing homes have reported a death linked to COVID-19. The total figure is in the thousands. On Sunday, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services "announced new reporting requirements, mandating that nursing homes inform residents, their families and the federal government" about cases of COVID-19. And on Monday, CMS Administrator Verma said "the data, including deaths among residents and staff members, would be publicly released 'in short order.'"

The AP (4/20, Choi) reports that, referring to nursing homes as "ground zero of the coronavirus crisis, federal officials said Monday they plan to start tracking and publicly sharing information on infections and deaths in such facilities to help spot trends and early signs the virus is spreading in communities." This "move comes as critics, industry officials and local leaders have called for more aggressive actions by the federal government to track infections in homes and contain outbreaks by helping them get greater access to testing and masks, especially given the vulnerability of elderly residents." Commenting on the matter, Verma said, "It's our intention to make that information public." The AP says its own analysis has found "at least 8,426 deaths linked to coronavirus outbreaks in nursing homes and long-term care facilities nationwide."

CDC Says Nursing Home Workers Diagnosed with COVID-19 Can Return To Work. The CBS Evening News (4/20, story 6, 2:20, O'Donnell, 5.74M) reported the CDC is "taking a controversial step to try and ease staff' shortages at nursing homes. CBS' Jonathan Vigliotti said "COVID-positive health workers could be allowed to return to their jobs as last resort." Vigliotti added that the CDC says "it is now up to nursing homes to decide to let sick staff back to work, but without proper PPE, how they will do so safely remains unclear."

CMS To Release Data On Medicare COVID-19 Patients In Early May.

CQ Roll Call (4/20, Clason, 154K) reports CMS Administrator Verma told reporters Monday that "data on the ethnicity of COVID-19 Medicare patients will likely be released in early May." Verma said the Medicare "billing code for COVID-19 only went live on April 1," so it will not be till early May that there will be "data that are sufficient to evaluate and publish."

Politico Analysis: Administration Has Not Explained How It Will Pay For Coronavirus Treatment.

Politico (4/20, Luthi, Roubain, 4.29M) reports that "over two weeks ago," the White House "pledged...to cover coronavirus treatment for uninsured Americans – but the administration still doesn't have a plan for how to do it." According to Politico, "Trump officials are still grappling with key questions about how exactly to implement the treatment fund, including how to determine if a patient qualifies for the new federal dollars, an administration source said." Politico says "there was little time to fully vet the plan before President Donald Trump announced it earlier this month," and the Administration "still hasn't explained how the federal government will pay out a separate funding pot covering diagnostic testing for uninsured Americans," which was "approved a month ago by Congress, about two weeks before the administration also promised to cover treatment for the uninsured."

Politico Analysis: Trump Has Not Touted Malaria Drug In Almost A Week.

Politico (4/20, Forgey, 4.29M) says President Trump "and his allies in conservative media have subtly scaled down their hyping of hydroxychloroquine as a potential cure for the coronavirus." According to Politico, "Although Trump had repeatedly promoted the decades-old malaria drug since the early days of the disease's outbreak in the United States, his public statements regarding hydroxychloroquine have diminished significantly over the past week for reasons that remain unclear." Politico says Trump's "most recent mention of the drug at the White House's daily coronavirus news conferences came last Tuesday, when the president announced his administration had deployed roughly 28 million doses of hydroxychloroquine from the federal government's Strategic National Stockpile."

Pentagon Extends Troop Travel Restrictions Through June.

The AP (4/20, Burns) reports, "The Pentagon is extending military travel restrictions through June, indicating a concern that the coronavirus remains a threat to troops even as the Trump administration pushes for some states to begin opening up in May." The restriction, which Defense Secretary Esper "ordered in March, had been set to expire May 11."

Pentagon Expecting Three-Month Delay On Major Projects. The Washington Times (4/20, Glenn, 492K) reports, "Pentagon officials anticipate a three-month delay across several of its big-ticket projects as a result of the manufacturing closures brought on by the coronavirus pandemic." Ellen Lord, the Defense Department's acquisitions chief, on Monday "told reporters the impact is hitting both the largest defense contractors and smaller vendors." Lord "said 106 major companies and 427 vendor-based operations had to shut down."

Hospitals Moving Toward Restarting Elective Surgeries, Procedures.

The Washington Post (4/20, Sellers, Goldstein, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports that "some hospitals in communities less affected by coronavirus moved cautiously Monday toward resuming non-emergency surgeries and procedures – a hopeful sign for patients awaiting that care and a medical system badly in need of the revenue those services provide." Acting on guidance released Sunday night by federal officials, medical centers with relatively few COVID-19 patients "readied some cancer, heart and other care that has been postponed by a nationwide call to halt such procedures." CMS Administrator Verma said, "This is a phased process." She "noted the recommendations are intended for communities where the incidence of COVID-19 is low, new cases are relatively sparse, and hospitals have adequate capacity in case of a surge." She also "emphasized the decision whether to resume elective work rests with state or local officials."

Emergency Physicians Having Pay Cut As Hospitals Lose Money From Postponed Elective Procedures. The CBS Evening News (4/20, story 7, 2:00, O'Donnell, 5.74M) reported, "We spoke with ER doctors in nearly a dozen states who say they're taking pay cuts of up to 40 percent. The American College of Emergency Physicians says cutting benefits and shifts could force some emergency rooms to shut down." CBS (Battiste) added, "Thousands of hospitals across the country [are] losing money fast. Most make half or more of their revenue from elective procedures, which have been put on hold. Add to those losses at least a 30 percent decline in emergency room visits."

COVID-19 Causing Blood Clots, Heart Damage.

ABC World News Tonight (4/20, story 4, 1:50, Muir, 10.32M) reported on "growing data that" COVID-19 "also could have an effect on the heart." ABC's Steve Osunsami added, "Doctors trying to save the lives of patients fighting the coronavirus are seeing more of what happened to Broadway actor Nick Cordero, a blood clot, that in his case cost the Tony nominee his right leg." ABC continued that in addition to blood clots, "we're also learning that the virus itself can do damage to the muscle layers of the heart." Because of the danger of clots, Spanish physicians have begun "prescribing blood thinners to all patients who are admitted to hospital with COVID-19. Here in the US, many hospitals tonight are choosing to do the same thing."

Pandemic Disrupting Healthcare For Many With Other Health Problems.

The New York Times (4/20, Grady, 18.61M) reports that as the pandemic overwhelms the healthcare system, many people with other health problems are struggling to receive treatment. The Times quotes physicians describing how the pandemic is interfering with patient care and shares stories of people who have died while awaiting treatment that was delayed due to the pandemic. For example, earlier this year, Patrick Carr "suffered a relapse of the blood cancer that he has had for eight years," and later died as blood supplies were being rationed in Philadelphia "and he couldn't get enough of the transfusions needed to alleviate his anemia and allow chemo to begin." Maria Kefalas, Carr's widow, says the pandemic "expedited his death."

Vaccine Trials Being Run At Emory University Hospital.

NBC Nightly News (4/20, story 8, 2:00, Holt, 8.35M) reported, "In the search for solutions, tonight, we're going inside the race for a vaccine." NBC (Costello) added, "At Emory University Hospital in Atlanta, volunteers are receiving the first injections for a potential vaccine against COVID-19." NBC continued, "researchers think they could have a COVID-19 vaccine for widespread rollout in 12 to 18 months." At present, "there are dozens of vaccine candidates with two clinical trials underway in the US." NBC concluded, "Because the study seems to be going well, researchers are now opening the study up to elderly participants, as well."

Some Areas Show Signs Of Worsening.

The New York Times (4/20, 18.61M) reports some regions are showing "signs that things are getting worse, not better," including Massachusetts, Chicago, and Los Angeles County. Also, "there have been significant workplace-based clusters in Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee and other states, suggesting that the pandemic is just beginning to sink into some communities." Additionally, "nursing homes and prisons also continue to be hot spots."

Coronavirus Cases In Massachusetts Surge. The AP (4/20, Richer) reports, "Massachusetts has become a hot spot of coronavirus infections, drawing the concern of federal officials and promises of aid from hard-hit New York as the state's death toll prepares to double in less than a week." COVID-19 fatalities are "expected to surpass 2,000 this week in Massachusetts, where officials are scrambling to boost hospital capacity and trace new infections to curb the spread of the disease." Vice President Pence "said the White House is closely watching the Boston area, and the coordinator of the federal coronavirus task force, Dr. Deborah Birx, said officials are 'very much focused' on Massachusetts."

Three Southern States Take Steps To Ease Lockdown Measures.

On NBC Nightly News (4/20, lead story, 3:10, Holt, 7.96M), Miguel Almaguer reported "the fight over how and when to safely reopen the country" is "intensifying ten days before the national guidelines on staying home are set to expire." ABC World News Tonight (4/20, lead story, 3:40, Muir, 10.32M) reported, "The President saying we're going to have an economic resurgence. He said it's critical to continue the medical war, but we must to reopen carefully, and Americans should follow the guidelines." On the CBS Evening News (4/20, lead story, 4:40, O'Donnell, 5.74M), Janet Shamlian reported the moves to reopen come "amid increasing protests across the country, people demanding their economies reopen."

The New York Times (4/20, 18.61M) reports South Carolina "allowed retail shops to open on Monday with social distancing guidelines, and the governors of Georgia and Tennessee announced plans to ease restrictions on businesses in their states in the coming days." South Carolina "allowed retail shops ranging from department stores to flea markets to reopen Monday afternoon, shortly after" Gov. Henry McMaster (R) "signed an executive order reversing some of the closings he ordered earlier this month." According to the Times, "Tennessee's stay-at-home order will expire April 30, allowing most businesses there to reopen on May 1," Gov. Bill Lee (R) said on Monday. Georgia "will allow gyms and other indoor facilities to open later this week," said Gov. Brian Kemp (R), "who made a point to say that local officials would not be able to impose their own rules."

Some South Carolina Business Allowed To Begin Reopening. The Columbia State (4/20, Schechter, Bustos, 390K) reports, "Rolling back an executive order issued just two weeks ago to curb the spread of the coronavirus," McMaster on Monday "reversed restrictions on some businesses, allowing some retail stores to reopen as state public health officials continue to fight the novel virus that has so far claimed more than 100 lives in the state." McMaster described "the move that took effect Monday" as "a gradual step, saying repeatedly during a press conference that data and science are guiding him." However, when "asked by reporters on Monday to elaborate on what data and evidence specifically are informing officials that reopening some businesses is a safe for the public," McMaster responded "the public's 'compliance' with social distancing recommendations and South Carolinians' 'common sense' were guiding his decision, not any specific data point."

Many Tennessee Businesses To Reopen Next Week. The Tennessean (4/20, Allison, 458K) reports Lee "announced Monday that his stay-at-home order will not be extended past April 30, and that some businesses around the state will begin reopening next week." He did not say "what types of businesses will be targeted to reopen first next week." However, "the green light to quickly reopen businesses doesn't necessarily extend to Tennessee's largest cities, where local authorities must still determine when restrictions can be eased."

Georgia To Allow Some Businesses To Reopen. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (4/20, Bluestein, 895K) reports Kemp "outlined plans Monday to allow some businesses shuttered amid the coronavirus pandemic to reopen by the end of the week, as he starts to ease restrictions that have ravaged the state's economy to stem the spread of the disease." Kemp's "order will allow gyms, bowling alleys, salons and some other indoor facilities closed under his shelter in place order to resume operations by Friday if they comply with social distancing requirements and meet other safety standards." Also restaurants, "which were banned from in-person dining, will be allowed to reopen on April 27 if they meet guidelines his office will release later this week."

Florida Governor Looks To Reopen Economy. The Washington Post (4/20, Rozsa, 14.2M) reports Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) is "in a hurry to open the state for business and gave a specially appointed committee five days to come up with ways to do it." DeSantis on Monday "announced a 'Re-Open Florida Task Force' as a stay-at-home order due to the novel coronavirus is set to expire." DeSantis "said Florida can 'bounce back in a very thoughtful, safe, and efficient way,' and having fast, reliable coronavirus tests available is the key to doing so." He mentioned that President Trump had "floated the possibility of sending DeSantis a rapid testing machine, which states have been desperately trying to procure."

Scalia: States Should Be Start Preparing For Reopening Economies Using White House Guidelines. Labor Secretary Scalia said on the Larry O'Connor Show (4/20) that the President's guidelines for reopening the economy is "really an excellent document that sets forth a process based on the data that governors can use to take stock of illness levels and what their hospital capacity is and the like and then gradually us getting back open to business. We know that some governors of feel ready to go and obviously we are we're looking toward others moving forward as soon as it's safe to do so." Scalia added, "It's certainly time for everybody to be planning for the day when we get these places back open and that's what the President has laid out."

Adams Urges States To Reopen In Phases. In an interview with Sinclair Broadcasting Group (4/20, 40K), Surgeon General Adams was asked if he is concerned that discussing moving through the phases of reopening the economy will cause people to believe they can begin relaxing the rules. Adams said, "To be perfectly honest with you, that is going to be a worry, but that is going to happen whenever we decide to reopen. So, we have to make sure we are messaging the people that look, this is a thought process we are going through right now. This doesn't mean go out and shoot hoops. It doesn't mean go out and get together in these large gatherings." Asked about the protests occurring around the country, Adams said, "The right to protest is one of the most cherished rights in our country. But if you are going to do it, please, for heaven's sake, do it in a safe manner."

Nexstar Media Group (4/20, 46K) correspondent Jessie Turnure reported that Adams "is urging governors to reopen their states in phases." Adams: "That's how we deal with resurgences." Turnure added, "Last week, the Trump Administration said states should reopen when they have adequate testing, contact tracing and healthcare capacity." Adams: "To make sure when these blips occur, we can quickly deal with them and they don't turn into large outbreaks." Turnure added, "Once more of the country starts to reopen, the Surgeon General worries about divisions growing between groups of various risk factors." Adams: "We don't want to stigmatize anyone for having the virus or not having the virus." Turnure also reported, "Adams says it is still unknown whether antibodies will protect recovered patients for a few months, a few years or for the rest of their life." Adams: "That, again, is why we can't rely solely on an antibody test or a singular test to say, look, you're safe, you can go back to what you were doing before."

Adams told Gray Television (4/20, 49K), "There is not just one test. It is making sure we have surveillance for influenza-like activity like we do for the flu. It is making sure we have diagnostic testing for people who have symptoms. It is making sure we are testing people who are asymptomatic in certain areas, that we are doing sampling so that we know what the spread is like even among people who are not symptomatic. And it is antibody testing. So, there is going to be a package that communities need to look at based on their burden of disease to figure out a comfort level with reopening."

Hearst Television (4/20, 87K) correspondent Sally Kidd reported, "Governors from both parties continue to plead for federal help in meeting supply-chain demand for testing materials. ... Adams says the Administration is working on it." Adams: "What happens in Omaha, Nebraska is going to look different from what happens in New York City. So, it really has to be locally led, but it has to be federally supported. I don't want anyone to hear me saying that the federal government doesn't have a strong responsibility and role here."

Newsom Resists Calls To Ease Coronavirus Restrictions.

The Los Angeles Times (4/20, Willon, 4.64M) reports California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) on Monday "acknowledged that pressure from Californians and local governments is building to modify the statewide stay-at-home order carried out to stem to spread of the coronavirus, but he said restrictions will remain in place until the threat to public health subsides and adequate testing and other safeguards are implemented." He "said that while areas across the state have been affected differently by the pandemic, the 'virus knows no jurisdiction, knows no boundaries' and could easily spread into neighboring counties if restrictions are eased prematurely." Newsom "promised that his administration will discuss each" request "with local officials 'to make sure it's a health-based decision. Not any other type of decision-making. Health first, science and data. Everything else follows from that.'"

Daily New York Deaths Below 500 For First Time Since April 2.

The New York Times (4/20, 18.61M) reports New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) announced Monday that "478 more people had died in New York, the first time the one-day toll was below 500 since April 2." The Times adds that "after saying in recent days that the virus appeared to have reached or passed a peak in the state, Mr. Cuomo said the authorities were now trying to ascertain how gradual the decrease in infection might be in the weeks to come." The Times goes on to report that the "three-day average in the number of hospitalized virus patients" was "also down for the sixth straight day, to 16,428, from a peak of nearly 19,000." In addition, "The state reported that 4,726 more people had tested positive for the virus, the lowest one-day figure since March 21."

As New York Begins Antibody Testing Questions Are Raised About Reliability. NBC Nightly News (4/20, story 3, 2:50, Holt, 8.35M) reported, "Health officials continue to say that widespread testing is the key to reopening America safely, but there is growing concern about the quality of some antibody tests." NBC (Nguyen) added, "New York health officials are beginning antibody tests on 3,000 New Yorkers," but "there is also a new warning about some of the rapid antibody tests available right now." According to one "diagnostic lab...70 percent of the tests gave inconsistent results." NBC added that Denver's police have "seen a high level of accuracy with the antibody test they're using," though "Denver's test has not been approved by the FDA." The agency "has only approved four antibody tests." NBC also reported that NIAID Director Fauci "says it's reasonable to assume recovered patients have some level of immunity, but right now that's still unproven."

ABC World News Tonight (4/20, story 3, 2:35, Muir, 10.32M) reported that according to "a large-scale antibody test in Los Angeles County...the number of COVID-19 cases may be 55 times higher than first thought." ABC (Hartung) added, "USC testing nearly 900 people for antibodies, now estimating as many as 442,000 in the county had the virus as of April 9." But, ABC also reported, "questions remain about whether antibodies provide immunity," and "critics say the FDA is allowing these tests, many coming from China, too quickly before being proven reliable."

The CBS Evening News (4/20, story 5, 2:30, O'Donnell, 5.74M) reported, "Health officials say these tests are key to reopening the economy, but there are concerns about the accuracy of these tests." CBS' Mola Lenghi added, "New York State kicked off the most aggressive antibody test survey in the nation, randomly sampling 3,000 people for evidence they've been infected by the coronavirus," and, continued CBS, "Already, more than 35,000 New Yorkers have reached out to Mount Sinai to see if they qualify for the antibody test." Meanwhile, "demand has spawned dozens of tests on to the market, and the FDA is being criticized for allowing them to be sold without scrutiny."

Poll: Michigan Residents Prefer Whitmer's Coronavirus Handling Over Trump's.

The Detroit News (4/20, LeBlanc, 825K) reports, "Michigan residents favor Gov. Gretchen Whitmer's handling of the coronavirus over that of President Donald Trump," according to a new poll released Monday. A survey of 600 Michiganians found 57 percent approved of Whitmer's "handling of the COVID-19 pandemic compared with 37% of respondents who disapproved." By contrast, the poll conducted for the Detroit Regional Chamber found 44 percent approved of Trump's "handling of the COVID-19 crisis while 50% disapproved."

Trump Golf Tweeted Video Of Daly Saying Vodka Can "Kill This Coronavirus."

The Hill (4/20, Coleman, 2.98M) reports, "President Trump's golf company tweeted out a video earlier this month in which pro golfer John Daly suggested that drinking a bottle of vodka a day can 'kill this coronavirus.' Trump Golf tweeted a video on April 9 of Daly telling viewers to 'be healthy and be smart' before they can resume golfing." He continued, "But I kind of got a cure for this. I only drink one drink a day – it just happens to be a bottle – of good old Belvedere." Public health experts "have said drinking alcohol does not protect people from the virus and that heavy consumption could weaken the immune system."

Andrés Calls For Appointment Of Food Czar To Address Food Crisis.

José Andrés, owner of ThinkFoodGroup and founder of World Central Kitchen, writes in the Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M), "until reliable supplies of food and medicine are guaranteed, people cannot return to normal." Andrés contends that "we have a food crisis," and "our food supply should be a national security priority." He calls for the appointment of "a food czar who sits on the National Security Council," and proposes an "America Eats Now plan" that includes using "shuttered arenas and convention centers" as "large-scale food banks and community kitchens," and restaurants "to prepare and deliver food to the elderly and sick."

Zuckerberg: Facebook Can Help Provide Data To Combat COVID-19.

Facebook founder and CEO Mark Zuckerberg writes in the Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M), on the necessity of good data to combat COVID-19, saying, "better data can help governments determine where to send resources...and eventually which areas are safe to start opening up again." Zuckerberg argues that "with a community of billions of people globally, Facebook can uniquely help researchers and health authorities get the information they need to respond to the outbreak and start planning for the recovery."

Gates Asks To Serve Remaining Sentence At Home.

Reuters (4/20, Acharya) reports President Trump's "former deputy campaign chairman Rick Gates has asked to serve his remaining 45-day 'intermittent' prison sentence from his home over fears of contracting the coronavirus." Gates said that "he fears that he could carry the virus home from the prison, posing a heightened risk to his wife, who is getting treated for cancer." Gates "was one of several former Trump aides and advisers to be charged in Robert Mueller's investigation," and "pleaded guilty in February 2018 to conspiracy against the United States and lying to investigators."

DeVos: Communities, Educators Working Together To Continue Teaching Students.

Education Secretary DeVos said on the John Fredericks Show (4/20), "It has been very, very heartening to hear about how local communities have banded together and educators and education leaders have worked really hard to meet the needs of their students." Asked about school districts in which students do not have access to the Internet, DeVos said, "Learning does not have to happen only via the Internet. There are schools and districts and communities that are doing distance learning in a more traditional, more paper and packets oriented way, with teachers calling their students and having office hours by phone and various approaches that are more low-tech. ... In the meantime there many communities that are also working hard to get that additional technology to their students."

WPost Examines Giroir's "Ouster" From Texas A&M.

The Washington Post (4/20, Kranish, 14.2M) reports HHS Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir, who is "the federal official overseeing coronavirus testing efforts, says that his experience working on vaccine development projects at Texas A&M University helped prepare him for this historic moment." However, the Post says that "after eight years of work on several vaccine projects, Giroir was told in 2015 he had 30 minutes to resign or he would be fired." The Post adds that governors "have blasted the lack of federal help on testing," and the criticism "has focused attention on Giroir and whether he can deliver results under pressure." The Post says Giroir "blamed his ouster on internal politics at the university, not on any problems with the project."

Politico Analysis: Administration Reducing Surgeon General's Public Appearances.

Politico (4/20, Diamond, 4.29M) reports in an analysis that the Administration "took Surgeon General Jerome Adams off television last week after his controversial remarks" on COVID-19's "threat to minorities," and he "made just one TV appearance last week," compared to "the ten-plus TV appearances he made the prior week" and "hasn't made an appearance at a White House press briefing since April 10," while Adams had been criticized by liberals for his April 10 comments which they said were "racially insensitive," others "fear that minimizing Adams means the White House is retreating from questions about its work on behalf of minority communities." An unnamed HHS official said, "No one at the task force is really talking about this, consistently, but Jerome."

Supreme Court Rules State Juries Must Be Unanimous In Criminal Cases.

The Washington Post (4/20, Barnes, 14.2M) reports on Monday in a 6-3 decision, the Supreme Court ruled "that state court juries must be unanimous to convict a defendant of a serious crime," which the Post says "scrambled...usual ideological lineups and prompted soul-searching among some justices about when to overturn precedent." Justice Neil Gorsuch wrote for the court "in a decision that overrules a 1972 decision finding that unanimous verdicts were not required by the Sixth Amendment at a state trial. Justice Gorsuch was joined in his decision, though not all of his opinion, by Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Stephen G. Breyer, Sonia Sotomayor, Clarence Thomas, and Brett

M. Kavanaugh. Dissenting were Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr., and Justices Samuel A. Alito Jr., and Elena Kagan." The case is Ramos v. Louisiana.

The New York Times (4/20, Liptak, 18.61M) reports "the decision was badly fractured." The Times also reports that Louisiana no longer allows non-unanimous verdicts in criminal cases. Justice Alito in his dissent joined by Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Kagan criticized the ruling for following a current trend in that it "attempts to discredit an argument not by proving that it is unsound but by attacking the character or motives of the argument's proponents." The Times says the dispute among the justices was "mostly a debate over respect for precedent." Gorsuch wrote that "the Apodaca decision was not entitled to be treated as precedent" while Thomas agreed with the result "but would have applied a different provision of the 14th Amendment," and Sotomayor wrote that "while overruling precedent must be rare, this court should not shy away from correcting its errors."

WSJournal: Case Shows Diversity Of Conservative Justices. The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes on Ramos v. Louisiana, saying that Democrats have accused conservative judges of all being uniform partisans, but the Ramos decision and many others show a good deal of diversity among conservative jurists. The Journal says that Gorsuch and Thomas have shown themselves quite willing to overturn precedents they conclude are in conflict with the original understanding of the Constitution, while Alito and Roberts have been more attentive to the dangers of instability and unpredictability when precedents are freely overturned.

Supreme Court Refuses Appeals From Death Row Inmates In Nebraska And Missouri.

The AP (4/20) reports on Monday, the Supreme Court "declined to hear appeals brought by Nikko Jenkins and Craig Wood" death row inmates in Nebraska and Missouri respectively who contended that "juries must find all facts necessary to impose a death sentence."

Drudge Denies Trump's Claim That He Is Losing Readers.

The Washington Times (4/20, Chasmar, 492K) reports that in response to President Trump's Saturday tweet claiming that Matt Drudge's Drudge Report was losing readers, Drudge "said his web traffic is better than ever." He wrote to CNN, "The past 30 days has been the most eyeballs in Drudge Report's 26 year-history." According to CNN, web data show "no significant traffic dips since January 2019."

NBC/WSJournal Poll: Biden Leads Trump 49%-42%.

In an online article, NBC News (4/20, Murray, 6.14M) reports that an NBC News-Wall Street Journal national poll of 900 US voters, taken April 13-15, shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 49%-42%, down from a 52%-43% edge the Democrat held in a similar poll taken in March. NBC added that "when the race is reduced to 11 swing states – Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin" – Biden leads Trump 49%-43%.

Harvard CAPS/Harris Poll: Biden Leads Trump 54%-46%. The Hill (4/20, Easley, 2.98M) reports that a Harvard CAPS/Harris national online poll of 2,394 US voters, taken April 14-16, shows Biden leading Trump 54%-46%. The Hill says, "When the field of voters was narrowed to only 'very likely' voters, Biden's lead narrowed to 4 points – 52 to 48 – suggesting Trump's voters are more energized." The Hill adds that the survey "found Trump's job approval rating at 49 percent, the highest since March 2017."

National Security Action Poll: Undecided Voters Say Trump Has Made US "Less Respected." Axios (4/20, Lawler, 521K) reports, "A poll designed to test President Trump's vulnerabilities on foreign policy finds that 56% of voters in 12 battleground states believe he has made America less respected in the world, compared to 31% who say America is now more respected. ... Among the 16% of voters who remain undecided ahead of November's election, 59% agree that Trump is making the U.S. less respected, compared to 16% who say the U.S. is now more respected." The poll was commissioned by National Security Action, "a group founded by former Obama administration officials to advise Democrats on foreign policy."

Trump Campaign Video Mocking Biden Features Faux Obama.

President Trump on Monday tweeted out a campaign video featuring Joe Biden making some odd comments about his time as a lifeguard. As Biden speaks on television, a group of four men, one of them with former President Obama's head digitally superimposed in place, look on incredulously from a living room and turn their eyes to the faux Obama, who shrugs and asks, "What?"

WTimes Analysis: Team Trump Aims To Link Biden To Hillary Clinton. The Washington Times (4/20, McLaughlin, 492K) reports that when Biden's "top campaign advisors" planned "the rollout of key endorsements this spring, Hillary Clinton's name flew under the radar." The Times says Clinton "has gone from being the face of her party to being persona non grata among Democrats. 'There is too much at stake to be fighting old political battles, which is why I think figures like Obama, [Sen. Bernie] Sanders, and [Sen. Elizabeth] Warren will play a great role between now and November,' said a major Democratic fundraiser." However, President Trump "and his reelection team are intent on keeping Mrs. Clinton in the mix," viewing "her as an albatross around the neck of Mr. Biden and down-ticket Democrats."

Biden Raised $46.7M In March, Entered April With $26.4M.

Reuters (4/21, Lange, Smith) reports that Joe Biden "raised $46.7 million in March for his campaign, his largest one-month haul yet despite the coronavirus health crisis that has disrupted fundraising and hit donor finances. The sum for his fundraising in March, announced in an email by his campaign, was well above the $18.1 million Biden gathered in February." Politico (4/20, Bland, 4.29M) reports that the March haul, "prompted by Biden's strong win in South Carolina's primary on the last day of February and a cascade of Super Tuesday victories, amounted to more than half of what Biden had raised in the entire campaign prior to that month. Biden raised just over $88 million from the second quarter of 2019 through the end of February. Biden spent $32.5 million and ended March with $26.4 million in his campaign account."

Pro-Biden Super PAC Reserves $65M In Ad Time Across Six Battleground States. The Hill (4/20, Easley, 2.98M) reports that Priorities USA, a Democratic-aligned super PAC backing Biden's candidacy, "has reserved $65 million in airtime across six battleground states." The group on Monday announced "it has made reservations of $17 million in Michigan, $13 million in Pennsylvania, $13 million in Florida, $10.4 million in Wisconsin, $6.5 million in Arizona and $4.8 million in North Carolina." The Hill added that "the largest pro-Trump outside group, America First Priorities, recently announced its first wave of spending, with nearly $40 million in air time reserved in Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, North Carolina and Florida."

Congressional Black Caucus PAC Endorses Biden. The AP (4/20, Stafford) reports on Monday, the Congressional Black Caucus PAC backed Biden for president in a unanimous decision, "further cementing his support among the nation's influential black political leadership."

Media Analyses: Democrats Disagree On Whom Biden Should Tap As Running Mate.

Writing for the Los Angeles Times (4/20, 4.64M), Janet Hook says that as Joe Biden starts "his search for a running mate, it seems everyone has an opinion about what kind of woman he should pick," arguing "his vice president should be an African American. Or a Midwesterner. A leftist. Someone with the youth and pizzazz Biden lacks. Biden, however, has made it clear that he's starting with more basic concerns: He wants a running mate who is ready to step into the role of president on a moment's notice. He wants someone who is 'simpatico,' someone he is comfortable with. He is, in short, thinking more about whom he'd like to run the country with than about the short-term political benefits of a running mate's race, ideology or regional ties."

Politico (4/20, Caputo, 4.29M) reports that Biden's search for a running mate "is already taking shape along familiar fault lines, mirroring the ongoing debate over whether the Democratic Party should focus more on winning back the white working class Rust Belt voters it lost to Donald Trump in 2016 or re-energizing the minority-powered coalition that elected Barack Obama to two terms." Politico adds, "Most of the pool of a dozen or so candidates that are either known or figure to be in consideration divide neatly into those geographical and demographic camps." Sens. Tammy Baldwin (D-WI) and Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), and Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D-MI), "are white and hail from the industrial Midwest – all from states that figure to be closely contested." Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) and Stacey Abrams "are African-American." And Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto (D-NV) and Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham (D-NM) "are Latina."

Politico Analysis: Democrats Pining For Michelle Obama To Be Biden's VP Choice. In a separate story, Politico (4/20, Caputo, 4.29M) reports that a "strong sentiment is commonplace among party leaders, operatives, [and] rank-and-file voters" that Michelle Obama should "be Biden's vice presidential pick." Politico adds, "Of the roughly dozen or so names Biden is seriously considering, Mrs. Obama isn't one of them. She has made clear that she would rather focus on her work to register and turn out voters through her new organization 'When We All Vote.'" Even so, Obama's "refusals haven't stopped Democrats from asking her to reconsider."

Democrats Raised $533M Via ActBlue In Q1.

Politico (4/20, Bland, 4.29M) reports that ActBlue, the Democrats' "digital money machine, had its biggest quarter ever to start this year, as online donors poured cash into the presidential primary and helped congressional Democrats build a financial advantage in many of their biggest House and Senate races." According to Politico, "More than 4.3 million donors gave $533 million through ActBlue, the online donor platform used by thousands of Democratic candidates and organizations, in the first three months of 2020." Politico adds, "Democratic presidential candidates accounted for a large portion of the first-quarter fundraising. ... But even taking the presidential candidates out of the equation, Democrats saw a big fundraising jump via ActBlue last quarter – a huge boon to Democratic Senate challengers and House incumbents, after predictions that the presidential campaign would siphon away the online money that powered so many Democratic victors in the 2018 midterm elections."

RNC Raised $24M In March.

Politico (4/20, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports the Republican National Committee "raised a record $24 million last month, an early indication that President Donald Trump's fundraising machine could be able to withstand the economic collapse brought on by the coronavirus." Politico says it was the RNC's "best March fundraising performance in history," although "slightly less than the $26 million it raised in February." Politico goes on to report that "Trump's fundraising success has not necessarily filtered down to Republicans running down-ballot," and "an array of Republicans in competitive House and Senate races were out-raised by their Democratic opponents in the first quarter."

RNC Chief Says Party Currently Moving "Full Steam Ahead" With Plans For Convention. In an online article, CNN (4/20, Klein, 83.16M) reports the RNC, Trump campaign, and host committee "are moving 'full steam ahead' in planning the 2020 convention in Charlotte later this summer, but will assess in late June or early July as to whether contingencies need to be made due to the coronavirus, GOP Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel said Monday." McDaniel, during a briefing call with reporters, said, "We are full steam ahead planning a traditional convention, working with our team on the ground, (2020 Convention CEO) Marcia Lee Kelly, to conduct a traditional convention. We do not think at this time we have to switch to an alternative plan, but of course, we will monitor circumstances and adjust accordingly." The Hill (4/20, Coleman, 2.98M) reports that McDaniel "added the RNC will reassess in late June or early July to see if adjustments need to be made because of the coronavirus pandemic, but that the convention is required by bylaws to be held in-person."

Bloomberg Spent Over $1B On Presidential Bid.

Politico (4/20, Montellaro, 4.29M) reports Michael Bloomberg spent over $1 billion in seeking the Democratic nomination for president, according to the latest report he filed with the Federal Election Commission. Politico says Bloomberg "spent more than $17 million for each delegate acquired." Meanwhile, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) "spent a total of $198.5 million on his campaign through the end of March." Joe Biden "has not yet filed his campaign finance report covering March."

Politico Analysis: Senate Majority "Within Reach" For Democrats.

Politico (4/20, Arkin, 4.29M) says Republicans "started this election cycle as heavy favorites to keep their Senate majority, with a lineup of elections mostly in red-tinted states and GOP incumbents favored over a slate of relatively unknown and untested challengers." However, according to Politico, "Now, nearly six months out from the election, Democrats are making them sweat." Politico goes on to report that Republicans are "still more likely than not to maintain control, but Democrats strengthened their hand with a slate of challengers raising massive sums of money in races that represent the heart of the battle for the majority, putting control of the Senate within reach."

Trump Tweets Endorsements Of GOP Candidates In CA25, WI7 Special Elections.

President Trump on Monday tweeted his "Complete and Total Endorsement" of GOP military veteran Mike Garcia, who is battling Democratic California Assemblywoman Christy Smith in the May 12 special election to replace ex-Rep. Katie Hill (D-CA) in CA25. Trump wrote, ".@MikeGarcia2020 will be a tremendous fighter for the U.S. and the State of California. An Annapolis graduate, he served our Country as a highly decorated Navy Fighter Pilot and will be a great Congressman (#CA25). Loves our Military, and Vets. ... He is Strong on Crime, the Border, and Second Amendment. Mike has my Complete and Total Endorsement! Turn your Ballots in now and track them, watching for dishonesty. Report to Law Enforcement."

The President on Monday also tweeted his "Complete and Total Endorsement" of GOP Wisconsin state Sen. Tom Tiffany, who faces Democratic Wausau School Board President Tricia Zunker in the May 12 special election to succeed ex-Rep. Sean Duffy (R-WI) in WI7. Trump wrote, "Tom Tiffany (@TomTiffanyWI) is a Great Advocate for the incredible people of Wisconsin (WI07). We need Tom in Congress to help us Make America Great Again! He will Fight for Small Business, supports our Incredible Farmers, Loves our Military and our Vets. ... He is Strong on Crime, the Border, and Second Amendment. Tom has deep roots in Wisconsin, is a big Tax Cutter, and will help me DRAIN THE SWAMP! Tom has my Complete and Total Endorsement. Vote for Tom Tiffany!"

WPost Urges Congress To Reform Postal Service.

The Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) editorializes in favor of a postal service as "an essential element of any advanced nation's infrastructure," and urges Congress to undertake "structural reform" of the US Postal Service in order to prevent it from being "forced to scrounge for cash indefinitely." The Post says Congress must address the Postal Service's major problems, "the decline of first-class mail, over-regulation and vast unfunded retiree benefit liabilities." Congress should, the Post argues, offer "generous financial assistance...in return for substantial structural reform" that includes "an end to mandatory Saturday mail delivery...greater regulatory latitude to set prices and develop new products; closing or consolidating underutilized postal facilities; and shifting retiree health benefits to Medicare."

WSJournal Criticizes Removal Of Native American Woman From Land O'Lakes Package.

The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes against Land O'Lakes removing the figure of a Native American woman from its butter packaging, adding that the current figure was the work of an Ojibwe artist in the 1950s, whose son lamented the disappearance, suggesting that political correctness was likely the reason for its going.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 46%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 46%, and his disapproval at 50.9%. The President's approval and disapproval are unchanged since yesterday.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (4/15-4/19) finds Trump's approval at 46%, with 53% disapproving.

Georgieva: Developing Countries Will Likely Bear Worst Of Pandemic's Economic Impact.

Reuters (4/20, Tsovala, Lopatka) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva said Monday that developing countries will likely take the hardest economic hit from the COVID-19 pandemic, and that the IMF is ready to help. The IMF and the World Bank "have appealed for rapid international action to help African countries and other emerging markets respond to the pandemic." According to Georgieva, the IMF, "with $1 trillion in lending capacity, has already approved emergency funding for 21 of 103 countries which have asked to for it and prepared different instruments to help its members." Georgieva said, "The countries that are now worst hit by the pandemic are not necessarily the ones that will be worst hit economically. I am most worried about the developing and emerging countries."

Malpass: Pandemic Has Caused “Deep” Recession, Hurting Poorest Countries Most.

Fox Business (4/20, Henney, 1.73M) reports World Bank President David Malpass said Monday that as a result of the pandemic, “I’m afraid there’s a deep recession. That’s pretty clear. It’s the poorest countries [that are hurt] the most.” Malpass “estimated that at least 50 million people will fall into ‘extreme poverty’ as a result of the outbreak, leading to higher infant mortality rates and stunted growth rates for children. The length of economic recovery in the world’s poorer nations hinges on advanced economies, he said.” Malpass added, “I think it’s urgent that we find a way to shorten the time to get going.”

World Bank Projects First Global Poverty Jump Since 1998.

Politico (4/20, Ward, 4.29M) reports the World Bank on Monday “predicted that 2020 would see the first increase in global poverty in more than two decades.” World Bank economists “calculate that the pandemic will push 40 million to 60 million people into extreme poverty, with its ‘best estimate being 49 million,’ according to a post on the bank’s Data Blog.” Such an increase in global poverty “would be the first since 1998, when the Asian financial crisis hit.”

Analysts Say Debt Relief For Developing Economies More Difficult Than It Sounds.

Reuters (4/20, Jones, Arnold) reports, “Some high-profile sovereign creditors are signalling a tentative willingness to help poorer countries with debt relief during the coronavirus pandemic – but many also caution that it won’t be as simple as it sounds.” Last week’s G20 agreement “to freeze as many as 77 poorer nations’ debt payments for the rest of the year came with a warning from the head of the World Bank that private investors shouldn’t expect a ‘free ride.’” Brazil Central Bank Says Bond-Buying Will Aim To Fix Market Dysfunction.

Reuters (4/20, McGeever) reports Brazil central bank president Roberto Campos Neto on Monday “said any bond-buying the bank conducts will be to fill liquidity gaps and ensure smooth market functioning, rather than flatten the yield curve and reduce longer-term borrowing costs.” Campos Neto, speaking in a virtual debate, “said blanket ‘quantitative easing’ bond purchases are more effective when official interest rates are near zero, which is not where Brazil is, adding that monetary policy in emerging markets is different from developed economies.”

WHO Chief: Nothing Hidden From Member States, CDC Experts.

Reuters (4/20, Nebehay, Farge) reports WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said Monday that “US experts have been an important part of the...fight against COVID-19 since the outbreak began, and nothing has been “hidden” from any member state.” Said Tedros, “Having US CDC staff means there is nothing hidden from the US, from day one.”

Milbank: US, WHO Officials In China Were “In Constant Contact.” Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) columnist Dana Milbank writes that “as President Trump, his advisers and his allies in Congress continue to try to frame the World Health Organization for Trump’s failure to prepare for the pandemic, new evidence shows that US and WHO officials in China were in constant contact with each other in the crucial days of January, as the virus spread.” According to Milbank, “US personnel working in the US Embassy in Beijing met extensively with WHO officials there in the month of January, the time when Trump accuses the WHO of conspiring with China to hide the true danger” of the outbreak.

Navarro: China “Vacuumed Up” PPE After “Hiding” Outbreak.

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said on Fox Business’ Lou Dobbs Tonight (4/20, 49K), “One of the things that I find troubling about the whole thing besides spawning the virus and hiding it from us for six weeks behind the shield of the World Health Organization, China vacuumed up all the personal protective equipment around the world while it was hiding the virus. I have evidence directly from the Chinese government customs duty union that shows that in the months of January and February, they bought 18 times more amount of masks, it was over two billion masks alone. ... All these countries now, India, Brazil, Europe, others getting infected, the reason why they don’t have adequate PPE there and in New York City and Boston and Chicago and Detroit is because China basically is hoarding it. And now they are also selling it back to the world at prices that are obscene.”

Breitbart (4/20, Hanchett, 673K) reports Navarro also “suggested that China might have hidden coronavirus data from the US so they can create a vaccine first and they view it as ‘a business proposition so that they can sell the vaccines to the world.’”

Wuhan Lab Director Rejects Linkage To “Patient Zero.” The New York Times (4/20, 18.61M) reports the Administration has “suggested that a Chinese laboratory may have been the source of the coronavirus outbreak, but a senior scientist at the lab in question has rejected the accusations, saying there are no signs that the virus was the product of human tampering.” Yuan Zhiming, “the director of a high-security virus research lab that is part of the Wuhan Institute of Virology, pushed back against the surge of speculation that the lab may have accidentally leaked the virus or was part of a conspiracy to release it.” Referring to Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR), Yuan said, “Without any evidence, and without any relationship to logic, he makes these allegations that are totally founded on speculation.”

Bloomberg (4/20, 4.73M) reports Yuan “rejected theories that the yet-to-be identified ‘Patient Zero’...had contact with the institute, saying none of its employees, retirees or student researchers were known to be infected.” According to Bloomberg, Yuan “said...Cotton and

Washington Post journalists were among those 'deliberately leading people' to mistrust the facility and its 'P4' top-level-security pathogen lab."

Poll: 60% Of Democratic Voters Blame Trump Not China For Coronavirus Crisis. The Washington Times (4/20, Harper, 492K) reports that the coronavirus pandemic has "sparked a partisan blame game. Most Democratic voters – 60% – now blame President Trump rather than China, for the health emergency now underway nationwide, according to a Rasmussen Reports survey released Monday." Among "all voters, 42% also pointed the finger at the president," but "not so Republicans. The poll found that 71% disagreed with the idea, along with 46% of independents."

WPost: China Using Pandemic As Cover For More Repression In Hong Kong. The Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) editorializes that in "a sign of these remarkable, pandemic-afflicted times, and of the determination of China's Communist regime to exploit them," 15 Hong Kong democracy activists were arrested over the weekend. The Post calls the arrests a "major new effort by the government of Xi Jinping and its puppet administration in Hong Kong to crush the pro-democracy movement, using the novel coronavirus outbreak as a cover."

South Korea Relaxes Social-Distancing Rules.

Reuters (4/20, Shin, Yang) reports South Koreans are "returning to work and crowding shopping malls, parks, golf courses and some restaurants as South Korea relaxes social distancing rules amid a continued downward trend in coronavirus cases." According to Reuters, "Parks, mountains and golf courses brimmed with visitors over the weekend, while shopping malls and restaurants were slowly returning to normal." Reuters says the South Korean government "extended its social distancing policy for another 16 days on Sunday but offered some relief for religious and sports facilities previously subjected to strict restrictions."

NYTimes Analysis: Most New Cases In Singapore Are Migrant Laborers.

The New York Times (4/20, Beech, 18.61M) reports that "after recording its first coronavirus case on Jan. 23," Singapore "meticulously traced the close contacts of every infected patient, while keeping a sense of normalcy on its streets." The Times says, "Borders were shut to populations likely to carry the contagion, although businesses stayed open. Ample testing and treatment were free for residents." However, "over the past few days, Singapore's coronavirus caseload has more than doubled, with more than 8,000 cases confirmed as of Monday, the highest in Southeast Asia." According to the Times, "Most of the new infections are within crowded dormitories where migrant laborers live."

Number Of New Cases In Italy Continue To Fall.

Reuters (4/20) reports, "Deaths from the COVID-19 epidemic in Italy rose by 454 on Monday, slightly up on Sunday's tally, while the number of new cases dropped to 2,256, the lowest level in well over a month." Reuters adds that Italy's "total death toll stood at 24,114, the second highest in the world after that of the United States, while the number of confirmed cases, which includes those who have fully recovered and those who have died of the disease, was 181,228. ... New cases on Sunday totalled 3,047, while on Saturday, the figure stood at 3,491. Monday's tally was the lowest since March 10."

Rate Of New Infections In Spain Falling More Than Officials Anticipated.

Reuters (4/20, West, Allen) reports that the coronavirus "has infected more than 200,000 people in Spain, although the spread of the disease is slowing, ... The cumulative death toll from the virus rose to 20,852 after 399 fatalities were recorded in the previous 24 hours." However, Health Emergency Chief Fernando Simon "told a news conference that the rate of new infections continues to fall despite an increase in testing, suggesting the overall prevalence of the disease could be lower than expected in the population."

France's Death Toll Exceeds 20,000, But Hospitalizations And ICU Cases Continue To Fall.

Reuters (4/20) reports that France on Monday "officially registered more than 20,000 deaths from the coronavirus, becoming the fourth country to pass that threshold after Italy, Spain and the United States, and the pace of increase in fatalities and infections sped up again after several days of slowing." However, France's public health chief Jerome Salomon "said the number of people in intensive care had fallen for the 12th consecutive day, to 5,683 – the lowest since March 31 – suggesting the national lockdown is having positive effects in containing the disease. Another encouraging signal was a decline for the sixth day in a row in people hospitalized for COVID-19, even though the total, at 30,584 versus 30,610 on Sunday, is going down only slowly."

Johnson Accused Of Failing To Adequately Prepare UK For Pandemic.

According to the Washington Post (4/20, Booth, 14.2M), "The coronavirus epidemic in Britain has reached the blame phase, with Prime Minister Boris Johnson and his ministers coming under criticism that they underestimated the threat, were slow to act and are bungling the response." The Post says that "over the weekend, the most-talked-about article was a Sunday Times report, headlined '38 days when Britain sleepwalked into disaster,' which revealed that Johnson failed to attend five high-level emergency meetings." The Post goes on to report that "the most damning, most tweetable quote came from an anonymous source, described as a 'senior adviser to Downing Street,' who complained that Johnson 'didn't chair any meetings. He liked his country breaks. He didn't work weekends. ... There was a real sense that he didn't do urgent crisis planning. It was exactly like people feared he would be.'"

Reuters (4/20) reports Finance Minister Rishi Sunak said the government was "following scientific advice by allowing major sporting events such as the Liverpool-Atletico Madrid soccer match and Cheltenham horse racing festival to go ahead days before the coronavirus lockdown." The AP (4/20) reports, "Four weeks after the British government ordered most people to stay indoors to slow the spread of the coronavirus, health care workers across the country complain they still do not have enough masks, face shields, gowns and other protective equipment." According to the AP, "Health care workers worldwide have reported similar shortages, but the frustration is heightened in Britain because of the revered position held by the National Health Service."

Germany Allows Small Shops To Reopen.

The Washington Post (4/20, Noack, 14.2M) reports that, along with South Korea, Germany has been a "role model...in handling the outbreak," and is also "slowly reversing some of the restrictions put in place weeks ago, embarking on a careful and long path back to normality that could serve as a template for other nations." According to the Post, "In Germany, some scientists have argued that the country should ramp up restrictions until new infections reach a rate that makes tracking and contact tracing more easy, a strategy they say will allow for a greater degree of freedom in the long run. But political pressure has been mounting for a return to normality, with some German states pushing for greater freedoms as shops under 8,600 square feet began to open Monday."

Denmark Reopens Schools As Europe Eases Lockdowns.

ABC World News Tonight (4/20, story 8, 1:30, Muir, 10.32M) reported, "Back to school. These Danish students are back in class after weeks in lockdown. Some of the first in Europe, a continent slowly crawling back to life. Germany, Italy, and Spain among other countries easing restrictions, but nowhere more so than Denmark." The WHO chief, however, "says the worst is yet to come. Now, it's not clear what he means by this, but a lot of countries are worried about a second wave."

NYTimes Analysis: Death Toll In Turkey May Be Higher Than Publicly Stated.

The New York Times (4/20, Gall, 18.61M) reports that "for weeks," President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan "has presented Turkey's performance in handling the coronavirus as one of the world's most successful, as he maintained strict control over information about the outbreak." But data compiled by the New York Times "from records of deaths in Istanbul indicate that Turkey is grappling with a far bigger calamity from the coronavirus than official figures and statements would suggest." The city recorded "about 2,100 more deaths than expected from March 9 to April 12, based on weekly averages from the last two years, far more than officials reported for the whole of Turkey during that time."

"Immunity Passport" To Allow Recovered Patients In Chile To Return To Work.

The Washington Post (4/20, Bartlett, 14.2M) reports Chilean officials said Monday they are moving ahead with plans to issue "the world's first 'immunity passports,' cards that would allow people who have recovered from the coronavirus to return to work, over the concerns of physicians who warned" that much about COVID-19 immunity "remains unknown." Paula Daza, an undersecretary in the Chilean health ministry, "said more than 4,600 people have recovered from the virus, and will now be eligible to receive physical or digital cards." Other applicants will "be tested for the presence of antibodies to determine eligibility."

India's Lockdown Eased To Allow Farms And Manufacturers To Reopen.

The AP (4/20) reports that India "recorded its biggest single-day spike in coronavirus cases on Monday as the government eased one of the world's strictest lockdowns to allow some manufacturing and agricultural activity to resume." According to the AP, "An additional 1,553 cases were reported over 24 hours, raising the national total past 17,000. At least 543 people have died from COVID-19." According to the AP, "Starting Monday, limited industry and farming were allowed to resume where employers could meet social distancing and hygiene norms, and migrant workers were allowed to travel within states to factories, farms and other work sites."

Erdoğan Accuses Syria Of Violating Idlib Ceasefire.

Reuters (4/20) reports Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan "said on Monday that the Syrian government was violating a ceasefire in the northwestern Idlib region," and "warn[ed] that Damascus would suffer 'heavy losses' if it persisted." Turkey and Russia "agreed on March 5 to halt hostilities in northwestern Syria."

Amid Pandemic, US Warns Rivals Not To Seek Advantage.

The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Lubold, Nissenbaum, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that amid the coronavirus pandemic in recent week, President Trump and his top military officials have voiced concerns that the nation's adversaries could take advantage of the crisis. China, for example, has conducted naval operations in the South China Sea.

Reports: Kim Recovering From Cardiovascular Procedure.

Reuters (4/20, Shin) reports North Korean leader Kim Jong-un is "receiving treatment after undergoing a cardiovascular procedure early this month, a South Korean media report said, amid speculation over Kim's health following his absence from a key anniversary event." North Korea marked the anniversary of the birthday of its founder and Kim's grandfather, Kim Il Sung, "as a national holiday on April 15, but Kim was not seen in attendance."

On its website, CNN (4/20, Sciutto, 83.16M) reports the US "is monitoring intelligence that [Kim] is in grave danger after a surgery, according to a US official with direct knowledge." The South Korean-based newspaper Daily NK reports Kim underwent the procedure because of "excessive smoking, obesity, and overwork," and is "now receiving treatment in a villa in Hyangsan County." CNN cited an anonymous US official who said Kim was in "grave danger." The AP (4/20, Kim) reports, "South Korea's presidential office says no suspicious activities have been detected in North Korea" amid reports that Kim "was in fragile condition after recent heart surgery."

US Ambassador Denounces Russia's "Secret" Trial Of American Veteran Charged With Spying.

Reuters (4/20, Balmforth) reports US Ambassador to Russia John Sullivan "accused Russian authorities on Monday of making a mockery of justice after he was turned away for a second time from what he called a 'secret' trial behind closed doors of an ex-U.S. Marine charged with espionage." In March, Russia began the trial of Paul Whelan "on charges of spying after his arrest by Russian security agents in a hotel room sting operation in December 2018." The Russian court "had said the trial would involve classified information and would therefore not be open to the public, but...Sullivan said he had tried to attend the hearing in Moscow on Monday and had been turned away. 'The fact that it is a closed hearing, that it is a secret trial – Paul hasn't seen the evidence against him – it makes a mockery of justice,' Sullivan said."

NYTimes Probes Potential Mission Of Doomed Russian Sub. The New York Times (4/20, Glanz, Nilsen, 18.61M) reports, "There could hardly have been a more terrifying place to fight a fire than in the belly of the Losharik, a mysterious deep-diving Russian submarine. Something, it appears, had gone terribly wrong in the battery compartment as the sub made its way through Russian waters 250 miles north of the Arctic Circle on the First of July." According to the Times, "The only thing more mysterious than what exactly went wrong that day is what the sub was doing in a thousand feet of water just 60 nautical miles east of Norway in the first place." The Times says the accident "may offer yet another a clue to Russia's military ambitions in the deep sea, and how they figure into a plan to leverage Arctic naval power to achieve its strategic goals around the globe – including the ability to choke off vital international communication channels at will."

Netanyahu And Gantz Form Power-Sharing Unity Government.

Reuters (4/20) reports Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his "centrist election rival" Benny Gantz on Monday signed an agreement "to form an emergency coalition government that would end a year of political deadlock." According to Reuters, "Israeli media reported they would take turns as prime minister, with Netanyahu going first." The AP (4/20, Goldenberg) says "the power-sharing agreement means that Netanyahu will almost certainly remain in office for the duration of his upcoming trial on corruption charges."

The New York Times (4/20, Kershner, Halbfinger, 18.61M) says the deal "extends Mr. Netanyahu's tenure as Israel's longest-serving leader and, coming after his conservative coalition failed to win a majority, cements his reputation as a canny political survivor who can never be counted out." For Gantz, however, the agreement "may end up having the opposite effect. The move was a stunning turnabout after his repeated campaign vows that he would never serve with a prime minister under criminal indictment, and a disappointment to many of his supporters who see it as a capitulation to a leader they had wanted to oust."

Likewise, the Washington Post (4/20, Hendrix, 14.2M) says the deal "represents a triumph for Netanyahu." The Post adds, "Critics have bemoaned and observers marveled that Israel's longest-serving prime minister has once again outrun the political obituaries written for him after his party and its allies failed to regain their majority in three straight national elections and he was indicted on corruption charges along the way."

Trudeau To Push Gun Control Following Mass Shooting.

The CBS Evening News (4/20, story 8, 0:20, O'Donnell, 5.63M) briefly reported that "investigators in Nova Scotia are trying to find a motive for a weekend shooting rampage." Reuters (4/20) reports the death toll from "the worst mass shooting in Canadian history rose to 19, including a police officer and the gunman, Canadian police said on Monday, adding that they expect fatalities from the weekend killings to rise further." The AP (4/20) reports Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superintendent Chris Leather "told a news conference Monday that police expect to find more victims once they are able to comb through all the crime scenes, some of which were left in smoldering ruins."

In wake of the shooting, the Washington Post (4/20, Coletta, 14.2M) reports Prime minister Justin Trudeau "said Monday his government would move ahead on the gun control legislation he promised during last year's election campaign." Trudeau said his government had been "on the verge" of introducing legislation to ban "assault-style weapons" when the coronavirus pandemic hit Canada. The New York Times (4/20, Magra, Austen, 18.61M) reports that because of the pandemic, "Trudeau said that a national vigil for the victims will be held online Friday."

Sources: FHFA Considering Letting GSEs Buy Loans In Forbearance.

The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Ackerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that sources close to the matter say that the FHFA is considering allowing Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to help servicers navigate a cash crunch by buying loans that have entered forbearance due to the pandemic. According to The Journal, nonbank mortgage companies would benefit from this, but the GSEs recently announced that they would not buy loans in forbearance any longer. The Journal's sources said that details were still being worked out, but the FHFA should announce an update as soon as this week.

MBA: Forbearance Level Rises To 5.95%.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (4/20, Maloney, Gopal, 4.73M) reports, "Almost 6% of U.S. mortgage borrowers have stopped making their payments following the passage of the CARES Act, which allows for easy forbearance. The share of home loans in forbearance jumped to 5.95% during the week ended April 12, up from 3.74% the previous week, according to a survey from the Mortgage Bankers Association. Only 0.25% of all loans were in forbearance during the week of March 2." Ginnie Mae-backed loans "again showed the largest weekly growth, with the share in forbearance climbing 2.37 percentage points to 8.26%. However, loans backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac increased almost as fast – by 2.20 percentage points – to 4.64%." HousingWire (4/20, Hall, 23K) provides similar coverage.

NPR (4/20, Arnold, 3.12M) reports that forbearance measures under the CARES Act cover "the vast majority of outstanding home loans – those backed by various government agencies or by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac," while the "biggest increase in forbearances is happening with loans backed by the Federal Housing Administration and the Department of Veterans Affairs." CBS News (4/20, 3.68M) and National Mortgage News (4/20, Centopani) provide similar coverage.

National Mortgage Professional (4/20) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "With over 22 million Americans filing for unemployment over the past month, homeowners are contacting their mortgage servicers seeking relief, leading to a sharp increase in the share of loans in forbearance across all loan types. Mortgage servicers continue to receive a very high level of forbearance requests, but volumes were down somewhat compared to the prior week."

Dodd Frank Update (4/20) also reports.

Continuing Coverage: Black Knight Reported Nearly 3M Mortgages Were Already In Forbearance. Mortgage Professional America (4/20, Smith) reports that the rise in forbearance "could put a strain on mortgage servicers, who must make advance principal and interest payments on the loans they service each month, regardless of the loans' forbearance status." Black Knight recently reported that more than 2.9 million mortgages were already in forbearance, making up 5.5% of all mortgages in the country. Together, these loans account for $651 billion in unpaid principal, including 4.9% of GSE-backed loans and 7.6% of FHA/VA loans. DS News (4/20, Welborn) provides similar coverage.

Continuing Coverage: Servicers Still Hoping For Liquidity Backstop. American Banker (4/20, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that despite "recent comments" by FHFA Director Mark Calabria, who "questioned the need to aid the mortgage sector, servicers are holding out hope that a government liquidity backstop could still be rolled out within days." According to American Banker, "Some servicers and other mortgage industry observers say a federal liquidity facility appears to be on the table to cover skipped payments by homeowners hit by the coronavirus pandemic. But several obstacles remain before a plan can be announced, they said."

DS News (4/20, Welborn) reports, "Ed DeMarco, President of the Housing Policy Council (HPC), has released a statement describing the challenges of funding the CARES Act's mortgage forbearance program and urging federal agencies to quickly announce liquidity support for nonbank mortgage servicers." DeMarco said, "HPC supports quick government action to affirm its support of financially sound nonbank mortgage servicers' liquidity needs in an effort to reassure markets, ease building systemic risk, and ensure continued mortgage origination activity."

The Real Deal (NY) (4/20, 124K) reports that in late March, "MBA, the Housing Policy Council and the Structured Finance Association urged federal regulators to provide relief." However, "their pleas appear to have fallen on deaf ears. Federal Housing Finance Agency director Mark Calabria said the agency has no plans to provide liquidity through its mortgage agencies Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to those nonbank lenders."

CMBS Borrower Relief Requests Climb; Requests From Borrowers With Freddie Mac Loans Spike 500 Percent.

The Commercial Observer (NY) (4/20) reports, "The number of commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) borrowers who are searching for relief from their servicers nearly doubled in the first two weeks of this month, bringing the total volume of CMBS debt in question to north of $100 billion. Additionally, requests from borrowers with securitized Freddie Mac, federally-insured loans have jumped a staggering 500 percent over the period as these sponsors sought to capitalize on COVID-19 relief efforts being deployed by the government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs)." The Real Deal (NY) (4/20, 124K) also reports.

UI: Pandemic Starting To "Constrict The Mortgage Credit Box."

DS News (4/20, Albanese) reports that an analysis from the Urban Institute "says the COVID-19 health crisis is beginning to 'constrict the mortgage credit box' similar to what happened during the period following the Great Recession from 2010 to 2013." Urban's report "adds that for the past six years, Fannie Mae and Freddie, along with the Federal Housing Administration, have made strides in expanding the credit box to borrowers." According to Urban, as of March, borrowers with credit scores of 720 and above received rates as much as 78 basis points lower than borrowers with credit scores of 660 and lower.

- Berkadia Arranges Freddie Mac Financing For Houston Apartments. Mostly behind a paywall, Commercial Real Estate Direct (4/20, Moynihan) reports, "One Real Estate Investment has bought the Sunswept Townhomes, a 211-unit apartment property in Houston. The buyer and purchase price were not disclosed. Berkadia arranged Freddie Mac financing on behalf of One Real Estate."
- Twin Real Estate Gets $2point3M Freddie Mac SBL Refi For Michigan Apartments. REBusiness Online (4/20) reports, "Twins Real Estate has received a $2.3 million Freddie Mac small balance loan for the refinancing of Hidden Lane Apartments in Battle Creek, about 25 miles east of Kalamazoo."

LBA Ware Report: LO Commissions Soar In March.

National Mortgage News (4/20) reports, "The average commission earned per loan officer in March was over $8,000 higher than compared with January's average – even as housing market activities were affected by the coronavirus spread, a report from LBA Ware found. ... The 9,042 loan officers tracked in the study pulled in nearly $171 million in total commissions during March, earned from $16.7 billion in funded loan volume. That worked out to an average per-loan commission of $18,907." NMN says, "The expected shift to a refinance market – Freddie Mac recently forecast $1.26 trillion of refis versus $1.1 trillion of purchase volume for 2020 – will likely result in lower average compensation for the rest of the year."

Remax: Annual Home Sales Rose In March.

National Mortgage News (4/20) reports, "Annual home sales rose in March for the fourth consecutive month, though the coronavirus inhibited what's typically the biggest monthly boost of the year, according to Remax. Closed transactions increased 2.7% from March 2019 and 23.8% from February 2020. The growth into March from February is normally the largest monthly spike of the year, as the spring home-buying season heats up." Remax CEO Adam Contos said, "As expected, the strong market of January and February continued into March, setting up a very good first quarter. But then the coronavirus and the initial mitigation measures arrived, disrupting our industry along with everything else."

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (4/17, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.579 percent.

Dollar Edges Up Against Key Rivals.

Reuters (4/21, White) reports, "The dollar gave up some gains against the currencies of oil producers after U.S. crude futures pared some of their massive losses in Asia, but the historic collapse in energy demand is likely to keep safe-haven assets well supported." The dollar "edged up slightly to 107.70 yen," while the euro "held steady" at $1.0863. Separately, Reuters (4/21, Narayanan) reports the dollar "rose against key rivals."

Gold Eases.

Reuters (4/21, Narayanan) reports, "Gold slipped on Tuesday due to a stronger dollar, but losses were capped by falling equities after U.S. crude futures plunged below zero for the first time ever in the previous session." Spot gold "eased 0.2% to $1,689.17 per ounce by 0611 GMT, having jumped as much as 1% on Monday as the oil market crash increased safe-haven demand." US gold futures "fell 0.3% to $1,706.70."

WTI Rises, While Brent Falls.

Reuters (4/20, Chung) reports, "U.S. oil prices hobbled back into positive territory on Tuesday after sinking below $0 for the first time ever, but international benchmark Brent dipped as the global coronavirus crisis severely reduces demand for crude." West Texas Intermediate crude for May delivery "was up $38.99 in thin trade at $1.36 a barrel by 0622 GMT after settling down at a discount of $37.63 a barrel in the previous session." The more-active June contract "rose 94 cents, or 4.6%, to $21.37 a barrel." Meanwhile, global benchmark Brent crude for June delivery "was down 48 cents, or 1.9%, at $25.09 per barrel."

FBI Sees Cybercrime Reports Increase Fourfold During Pandemic.

Engadget (4/20, England, 437K) reports the FBI announced "instances of cybercrime appear to have jumped by as much as 300 percent since the beginning of the coronavirus pandemic." The bureau's Internet Crime Complain Center (IC3) "said last week that it's now receiving between 3,000 and 4,000 cybersecurity complaints every day, up from the average 1,000 complaints per day the center saw before COVID-19 took hold." The FBI "says a lot of the increased cybercrime is coming from nation states seeking out COVID-19-related research." Deputy assistant director of the FBI's Cyber Division, Tonya Ugoretz, said that "Countries have a very high interest in information on the virus ... such as information on a vaccine. We have certainly seen reconnaissance activity and some intrusions into some of those institutions, especially those who have identified themselves as working on COVID research.”

Trenton Police Suffers Two Cyberattacks In Last Six Months.

The Trentonian (NJ) (4/20, 106K) reports the Trenton Police “suffered another serious cyberattack over the weekend, the second since October, according to sources.” The police department hadn’t “fully recovered from the first one, a ransomware attack in which hackers demanded $50,000 to unlock the encrypted data, according to sources, when it was hit by this second, less serious one.” While the Administration “never made public the first attack, city spokesman Connor Ilchert on Monday confirmed the police department’s network has been compromised again.” Mayor Reed Gusciora “told The Trentonian in a phone interview that the city’s IT department was forced to ‘reinvent the wheel’ to try to overcome the last attack.”

FBI Warns About Sharing Personal Data On Social Media.

The Fayetteville (NC) Observer (4/20, Brown-Peyton, 151K) reports the FBI Charlotte office on Monday “said social media users should pay close attention to the information they share online.” The FBI said in a news release, “A number of trending social media topics seem like fun games, but can reveal answers to very common password retrieval security questions. Fraudsters can leverage this personal information to reset account passwords and gain access to once-protected data and accounts.” The high school support photo trend “encourages people to share their high school photo to support the class of 2020.” Many people are “including the name of their schools and mascots, and the year they graduated.” The FBI said, “All three are answers to common password retrieval security questions.”

FBI Warns COVID-19 Researchers Targeted By Foreign Hackers.

ExecutiveGov (4/20) reports Tonya Ugoretz, deputy assistant director of the FBI’s cyber division, “said at an online panel discussion that nation-state hackers have targeted US medical research institutions that are studying COVID-19 and developing vaccines against the novel coronavirus.” She “told participants during the Aspen Institute-hosted virtual event Thursday the bureau has traced reconnaissance activity and cyber intrusion into organizations that have publicly disclosed R&D efforts related to the novel coronavirus.” Ugoretz noted, “Countries have a very high desire for information ... about how other countries are responding – about things like research on vaccines, what’s happening in the US healthcare sector in our research institutes.”

Pandemic Spurring Cyberattacks On Hospitals, Infrastructure.

The Washington Post (4/20, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that attempted cyberattacks “against several hospitals and an airport in the Czech Republic show the coronavirus pandemic has not slowed down the West’s digital adversaries.” Czech leaders “fear more attacks from highly sophisticated adversaries are on the way.” The nation’s top cybersecurity agency “has warned it expected imminent ‘serious cyberattacks’ against its health-care sector aimed at disabling computers and destroying data.” Czech officials “didn’t name the suspected attacker but the language they used suggested greater concern about hackers backed by a national government rather than criminals.” The attacks should be “a warning sign for the US that global hacking conflicts have not only continued even as the public health crisis rages – but have become even more dangerous as they threaten to disrupt medical care and cost patients’ lives.”

Cybercriminals Target Bay Area Residents As Online Shopping Surges Amid Pandemic.

KGO-TV San Francisco (4/20, Finney, Yip, 144K) reports that cybercriminals are targeting Tampa Bay residents as at-home workers move to online shopping amid the pandemic. Rick Holland of Digital Shadows says, “This is almost like Black Friday, November and December, all over again. Just like some of the commercial legitimate businesses are talking about spikes in sales they’re seeing on e-commerce. This is an unseasonable opportunity for cybercriminals.” It’s something the “San Francisco office of the FBI is already noticing.” Sanjay Virmani of the FBI said, “They know people are online more now, looking for shopping. So they’re looking. Clearly the online shopping sector is something they’re looking at.” Holland “says his team at Digital Shadows is monitoring the dark web and watching cybercriminals excitedly discuss increased opportunities to steal your credit and debit card numbers.”

TFI/Sanctions

Treasury Acknowledges Sanctions Compliance Difficulty Amid Pandemic.

Law360 (4/20, Godoy, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Department “told companies on Monday that it ‘understands’ they may be running into issues covering their compliance bases amid the global pandemic and that if a shift in resources leads to a violation, the government will take that into account in any eventual enforcement.” OFAC “issued a statement on Monday encouraging companies to continue taking a risk-based approach to complying with U.S. sanctions, which may mean shifting resources to account for difficulties that arise because of the novel coronavirus.” OFAC “said that it ‘understands’ companies may be ‘facing technical and resource challenges’ because of the pandemic. As such, companies may respond by ‘reallocating’ sanctions compliance resources.” OFAC said it will “evaluate this as a factor in determining the appropriate administrative response to an apparent violation that occurs during this period.”

Chevron's Venezuela Waiver Set To Expire Wednesday.

Bloomberg (4/20, Biesheuvel, Crowley, Bochove, 4.73M) reports Chevron and four oilfield-service providers will learn "in the coming days whether they may continue operating in Venezuela as a 90-day sanctions waiver comes up for renewal." Since late 2018, the waiver has been renewed four times. The current waiver expires April 22. The US Treasury Department's decision "has become a fraught quarterly ritual for the companies, which also include Baker Hughes, Halliburton, Schlumberger and Weatherford International Ltd." With oil prices low due to the coronavirus pandemic, "the Treasury's assessment comes at a time of extreme stress both for Venezuela and the companies involved." The Trump Administration "is seeking to replace President Nicolas Maduro's regime in the country that's home to the world's largest crude reserves."

US Fast-Tracks Coronavirus Assistance To North Korea.

Newsweek (4/20, O'Connor, 1.53M) reports "the United States has fast-tracked assistance to North Korea in response to the coronavirus pandemic."

Rouhani Denounces US Sanctions During Pandemic As "Barbaric Crime."

Reuters (4/20) reports Iranian President Hassan Rouhani "said on Monday that American pressure on Iran in the middle of the coronavirus pandemic was 'inhumane.'" In a call with Italian Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte, Rouhani said, "In these difficult conditions, American pressure on the people of Iran is more inhumane than at any other time and the continuation of it is a barbaric crime against a great people and against all human principles and international regulations." The Washington Times (4/20, Meier, 492K) reports "Iranian officials have blamed the crippling US sanctions for the massive spread of the virus and high death toll."

The AP (4/20) reports Iran yesterday "began opening intercity highways and major shopping centers to stimulate its sanctions-choked economy, gambling that it has brought under control its coronavirus outbreak – one of the worst in the world – even as some fear it could lead to a second wave of infections."

Federal Reserve

Fed May Soon Expand Plans To Buy Municipal Bonds, Potentially Entering Fraught Territory.

The New York Times (4/20, Smialek, 18.61M) reports the Federal Reserve "could soon expand its plans to buy municipal bonds, as lawmakers from both parties pressure the central bank to do more to support smaller cities and counties suffering amid fallout from the coronavirus." Fed officials "said on April 9 that they would begin purchasing municipal bonds using their emergency lending powers, pledging to buy up to $500 billion in bonds from states and the biggest cities and counties. In doing so, they crossed a line they have long treated as sacred: buying local bonds is potentially charged territory for the politically independent Fed." These plans "have been met with both hope and criticism. ... Lawmakers and analysts have been blasting the program for not going far enough. It is open only to states, counties with populations of more than two million, and cities of one million or more." The Fed "made it clear from the outset that it could push the program further, saying in a statement on April 9 that it would continue monitoring markets and would 'evaluate whether additional measures are needed to support the flow of credit and liquidity to state and local governments.'" Fed Chair Jerome H. Powell "reiterated that message on Monday, telling a Democratic lawmaker that the central bank was looking at how it could make the program broader."

Reuters (4/20, Beech) reports Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer "said he had urged Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell in a phone call on Monday to open Fed's Main Street Lending program to nonprofits and local governments." Schumer, in a statement, said Powell "indicated to me that the Fed is actively working on solutions, and nonprofits will very likely be included." Schumer also said Powell "assured me that the Fed was similarly working to make the program directly accessible to more cities and counties."

Chicago Fed's National Activity Index Falls To Recession Levels.

Reuters (4/20, Schneider) reports the Chicago Fed's National Activity Index "plunged to recessionary levels in March as the [US] responded to the coronavirus pandemic, a broad and swift turnaround from growth that had been well above trend just weeks before." In just a month, the index has already reached "near the bottom it hit over 19 months during the 2007 to 2009 Great Recession." If the index is at 0, the economy is growing more or less at its estimated trend rate.

Minneapolis Fed Research Shows US Shutdown May Be Twice As Strong As Necessary.

Reuters (4/20, Schneider, Saphir) reports research from the Minneapolis Fed released Monday shows current economic restrictions in the US may be twice as strong as necessary to balance economic needs with the risks of the pandemic. The paper containing the research "was explicit in its topic and its methodology, setting the 'value of a statistical life' at $11.5 million, in line with other federal agencies like the Department of Transportation. It used that figure to analyze the trade-offs between keeping more workers idled and easing social distancing." The research concluded that the current restrictions "are shifting benefits from younger workers, who would be better off with looser rules, to older individuals for whom protection from the coronavirus is more vital. A middle ground, with more modest restrictions left in place until the end of July, produces the 'optimal' outcome, it said."

Internal Revenue Service

IRS Focused On Coronavirus Relief Payments.

Politico (4/20, Lorenzo, 4.29M) reports "the coronavirus pandemic has nearly crippled" the IRS "just as it is most needed to help pump money into the ailing economy." It has closed "all of the agency's processing and taxpayer assistance centers" and "turned most of its attention to implementing" the coronavirus relief payments under the CARES Act. Politico says that means "millions of individual taxpayers and businesses could face lengthy delays before they receive refunds they desperately need," while those "disputing how much they owe or waiting to see if they qualify for tax credits also could have to wait indefinitely." Politico adds that the IRS has "another big test next week" as it is expected to begin sending paper checks next week for coronavirus relief for those the agency does not have bank accounts for. Meanwhile, Politico says, this year's returns "along with refunds, are still being processed, at least the ones that are filed electronically."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Appoints Blake Paulson As New Chief National Bank Examiner.

ABL Advisor (4/20, Perer) reports Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting has "announced that Blake Paulson would become the agency's Chief National Bank Examiner at the end of the month." Paulson will continue to serve as Senior Deputy Comptroller for Midsize and Community Bank Supervision.

Rep. Meeks: CRA Rewrite Would Increase Banking Deserts In Communities Of Color.

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (4/20, Subscription Publication, 31K), Rep. Gregory Meeks (D-NY) writes that the OCC and FDIC's proposed CRA reform "fundamentally undermines the law's original civil rights intent." The proposal "is expected to worsen the prevalence of banking deserts, further limit access to mortgage and small-business loans for low-income communities, and communities of color across the country."

Similarly, NeighborWorks America President and CEO Marietta Rodriguez writes in the National Mortgage News (4/20) that making major changes to the CRA amid the coronavirus pandemic could cause more harm to lower-income communities, which usually "experience the most severe consequences" when "health and economic crises strike." Rodriguez says, "Because it may be impossible to accurately account for the unprecedented nature of this situation in the regulations, reconsidering the proposal to revise and instead delay implementation of a new CRA rule during this time of economic turmoil could play a critical role in safeguarding communities."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"'You're On Your Own,' Essential Workers Are Being Told." The New York Times (4/20, 18.61M) says in an editorial that grocery store and warehouse deemed "essential" during the coronavirus pandemic "say not enough is being done to protect them from exposure." The Times says it is "apparent that not nearly enough is being done to protect these front-line workers, even as their continued labor ensures that a semblance of normality endures for their fellow Americans." The Times says OSHA "has taken a largely hands-off approach to the pandemic," and calls on the agency to "go beyond C.D.C. guidelines to require measures such as staggered shifts and lunch breaks and construction of barriers to protect employees in jobs like manufacturing and meatpacking that require close quarters." The Times concludes, "If the spread of the disease is to slow, millions of workers deserve far better protection."

Washington Post.

"Congress Gave The Postal Service A Band-Aid. It Needs A Permanent Fix." The Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) editorializes in favor of a postal service as "an essential element of any advanced nation's infrastructure," and urges the Congress to undertake "structural reform" of the US Postal Service in order to prevent it from being "forced to scrounge for cash indefinitely." The Post says Congress must address the postal service's major problems, "the decline of first-class mail, over-regulation and vast unfunded retiree benefit liabilities." Congress, should, the Post argues, offer "generous financial assistance...in return for substantial structural reform" that includes "an end to mandatory Saturday mail delivery...greater regulatory latitude to set prices and develop new products; closing or consolidating underutilized postal facilities; and shifting retiree health benefits to Medicare."

"The Xi Regime Is Taking Aim At Democracy In Hong Kong, Using Covid-19 As A Cover." The Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) editorializes that in "a sign of these remarkable, pandemic-afflicted times, and of the determination of China's Communist regime to exploit them," 15 Hong Kong democracy activists were arrested over the weekend. The Post calls the arrests a "major new effort by the government of Xi Jinping and its puppet administration in Hong Kong to crush the pro-democracy movement, using the novel coronavirus outbreak as a cover."

"Trump's Reckless Incitement To 'Liberate' States Endangers Lives." In an editorial, the Washington Post (4/20, 14.2M) says President Trump was "exceedingly reckless to incite protests with three tweets on Friday saying 'LIBERATE' Michigan, Minnesota and Virginia, all of which have Democratic governors." By doing so, Trump "undermined his own published public health guidelines and his own reopening plan." The Post raises concerns "his comments could inspire additional disobedience and spark new outbreaks and another round of restrictions that would be even harder to impose." In contrast, the Post says, "a responsible leader would express empathy with the millions of Americans who have followed the rules, reinforce why they are necessary and offer reasonable expectations about what comes next. To fail at this is to fail at a central function of the presidency."

Wall Street Journal.

"Care To Store Some Oil?" A Wall Street Journal (4/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says downward pressure on oil prices will continue until the pandemic passes. The Journal says demand will resume when global growth returns.

"The Court's Conservatives Clash." The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes on Ramos v. Louisiana, saying that Democrats have accused conservative judges of all being uniform partisans, but the Ramos decision and many others show a good deal of diversity among conservative jurists. The Journal says that Justice Gorsuch and Justice Thomas have shown themselves quite willing to overturn precedents they conclude are in conflict with the original understanding of the Constitution, while Justice Alito and Chief Justice Roberts have been more attentive to the dangers of instability and unpredictability when precedents are freely overturned.

"Mia Land O'Lakes, 1928-2020." The Wall Street Journal (4/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes against Land O'Lakes removing the figure of a Native American woman from its butter packaging, adding that the current figure was the work of an Ojibwe artist in the 1950s, whose son lamented the disappearance, suggesting that political correctness was likely the reason for its going.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "You may have heard the $350 billion relief fund for small businesses quickly ran out of money just before most businesses could get their loans. Well, now we're finding out why the money dried up so fast. It turns out, a lot of those loans were claimed by businesses that are, uh, how do we say it, not actually small. ... Meanwhile, Harvard University is also coming under fire because, even though they have a $41 billion endowment fund, they still decided to take $9 million from the relief package. Yeah, $9 million. Last time Harvard got that much money out of the blue, they had to accept Jared Kushner."

Trevor Noah: "All around the country over the weekend, protests popped up, demanding an immediate end to lockdowns. Let's be honest, people, this is both insane and counterproductive, because the more you gather in groups, the longer the lockdown will have to go on. ... Now, it would be a lot easier to not take these protests seriously if they were just being fueled by Fox News and internet conspiracy theories. The problem is, all these morons also have the support of the moron in chief. ... What makes what Trump is doing particularly vile is that on Thursday, he announced guidelines for when states should open back up, and then he spends the rest of the weekend urging his followers to fight back against the same guidelines that he released. Which is insane. It's like Trump is the head coach who told his team to kick a field goal, but now he's on the sidelines heckling them for doing it. 'Boo! What a bunch of losers! You should have gone for the touchdown!'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The governor of Florida reopened the beach in Jacksonville, and of course, no one followed the rules. Fortunately, there are no old people living in Florida who might be at risk."

Jimmy Kimmel: "And thousands of Americans in more than a dozen states have gathered to protest 'stay at home.' ... In Denver, Colorado, there was a standoff between protesters and an angry healthcare worker. Well, you know what they say: It ain't over till the fat lady screams crazy right-wing talking points at a medical professional who's trying to save her family's lives."

Jimmy Kimmel: "A big reason why these protesters are gaining steam is because our President is encouraging them. Despite everyone who works for him telling people to stay at home, despite the official White House mandate being shelter in place, over the weekend, the guy who runs the White House tweeted, 'Liberate Michigan, liberate Minnesota, and liberate Virginia.' This from a man who refuses to even liberate Melania."

Jimmy Kimmel: "I'm starting to think that these characters who support Trump might be suicidal. They seem to fight hardest for the things that will kill them. They want freedom to gather in large groups during an epidemic. They want guns. They want pollution. I figured it out. They want to die and they're taking us down with them. It's like if the Titanic was headed toward the iceberg, and half of the passengers were like,

'Can you please speed this thing up?'

Jimmy Kimmel: "You remember a guy named Hunter Biden? You may recall the President had some concerns about him getting paid because his father was Vice President. Well, turns out the Trump campaign has been paying the wife and girlfriend of Trump's sons $180,000 a year apiece. Those donations people make to his MAGA campaign, $30,000 a month of that goes to Lara Trump and Kimberly Guilfoyle. Which I guess makes sense. I mean, did we really expect a woman to date Donald Trump Jr. for free?"

Stephen Colbert: "We've all been self-isolating for over a month now, and some of us are starting to go a little kooky. Like a handful of idiots who were out this weekend protesting against social distancing. For instance, this man in Washington state, carrying the sign 'Give me liberty, or give me Covid-19.' Buddy, you're in a large crowd, you're not wearing a mask, you're not six feet away from people – you might not need to choose."

Stephen Colbert: "Many of the protesters lamented the loss of their everyday activities, like this woman in Wisconsin with the sign 'I want a haircut.' Looks like your sign has an error, here's a fixed one for you. It says, 'I want to endanger the lives of your grandparents in exchange for frosted tips.'"

Stephen Colbert: "I get that this is a land of liberty, but these protesters aren't just putting themselves at risk. The whole reason we are social-distancing is to prevent spreading the virus, especially to our older relatives. I mean, there's a reason the Boston tea partiers didn't throw Nana in the harbor."

Stephen Colbert: "On Thursday, even Trump encouraged social distancing. And the next day, he tweeted in support of the protests. 'Liberate Minnesota!' 'Liberate Michigan!' And 'Liberate Virginia! And save your great Second Amendment. It is under siege!' Yes, the Second Amendment. So important right now 'cause if you run out of Lysol, you can shoot your groceries with an AR-15."

Stephen Colbert: "Thanks to the pandemic, small businesses are suffering more than ever, which is why last month, the President signed off on $349 billion in grants known as the Paycheck Protection Program, or PPP. Of course, Trump's top advisers have their own Paycheck Protection Program known as DAD."

Jimmy Fallon: "Last night, ESPN aired the first two parts of their Michael Jordan docuseries, 'The Last Dance.' ... President Obama was interviewed for the series, and a lot of people laughed at the description the filmmakers gave him. ... They just call him 'former Chicago resident.' That's like calling Jesus 'former carpenter.' And they were like, 'Our mistake, it should have just said 'Michelle's husband.'"

Georgieva Names Former Liberian Finance Minister As IMF Deputy Managing Director.

Reuters (2/25, Lawder) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva on Tuesday "nominated former IMF official Antoinette Sayeh to become a deputy managing director at the Fund." Sayeh, of Liberian origin, was IMF African Department Director in 2008-16 and has since "been at the Center for Global Development think tank in Washington, having served as Liberia's finance minister from 2006 to 2008 and spent 17 years at the World Bank." Sayeh "would serve as one of four deputy managing directors under Georgieva, but would not replace David Lipton as first deputy managing director, the Fund's No. 2 role, which has strong influence over policies." Geoffrey Okamoto, "a 35-year-old U.S. Treasury acting assistant secretary has emerged as a leading candidate to replace Lipton, backed by U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin."

Trump Announces $3B Arms Deal, Declines To Comment On Indian Citizenship Law.

As he completed his two-day stay in India yesterday, President Trump announced India will buy $3 billion worth of military equipment from the US and said the two nations made progress in talks on a bilateral trade deal. Media reports, however, focused largely on the President's decision not to comment on a controversial new citizenship law in India that is at the center of deadly protests.

Reuters (2/25, Holland, Ahmed) reports the Trump announced "that India will buy $3 billion worth of military equipment, including attack helicopters, as the two countries deepen defense and commercial ties in an attempt to balance the weight of China in the region." Following one-on-one talks with Prime Minister Narendra Modi, Trump "said his visit had been productive with the conclusion of deals to buy helicopters for the Indian military." According to Reuters, India is buying "24 SeaHawk helicopters from Lockheed Martin equipped with Hellfire missiles worth $2.6 billion and also plans a follow-on order for six Apache helicopters."

In the 17th paragraph of a report focused on the controversial immigration law, the New York Times (2/25, Baker, Crowley, Gettleman, 18.61M) briefly mentioned the deal, writing, "While the two leaders were together, it was all sunshine, long on florid language about the strength of their relationship and short on concrete results. Mr. Trump and Mr. Modi celebrated a series of modest agreements that were set before the visit, including a $3 billion arms purchase and a letter of cooperation between Exxon Mobil and India's energy sector."

The Washington Post (2/25, Slater, 14.2M) reports Modi and Trump yesterday "once again praised each other," but "the praise could not mask the fact that Trump's 36-hour visit was long on symbolism and short on substance. A much-discussed deal to resolve long-standing differences over trade remains elusive." However, the Post says the "prospects for partnership remain promising in the security realm, where both the United States and India are looking to counter a rising China. While in India, Trump announced that the two countries were moving ahead with a $3 billion sale of American military equipment including maritime helicopters."

The New York Times (2/25, Baker, Crowley, Gettleman, 18.61M) reports the President also said he and Modi "had made progress toward what he hopes will be a landmark trade agreement between the two economic giants. But there was no breakthrough to announce after formal talks on the second and final day of the president's visit." Trump told reporters, "Our teams have made tremendous progress on a comprehensive trade agreement, and I'm optimistic we can reach a deal that will be of great importance to both countries." The Times, however, writes that while "Trump had said before departing the United States that 'we may make a tremendous deal there,' the two sides appeared far apart on major points of a trade pact."

Politico (2/25, Kumar, 4.29M) likewise reports Trump "will close out his 36-hour trip to India...without striking a long-coveted trade deal to ease tariffs – but that won't stop him from selling it as a victory." Politico says "the self-proclaimed master deal-maker is arguing that he is holding out for a bigger and better deal." A "senior Administration official" is quoted as saying, "The trade and economic relationship with India is critically important to the United States, and I think also access to the United States market is critical to the Indian government. ... We do want to make sure that we get this balance right. We want to address a bunch...of concerns, and we're not quite there yet."

Trump yesterday shared a tweet from Modi, who wrote, "Yet another excellent meeting and talks with my friend @realDonaldTrump. Relations between India and USA are not merely ties between two governments. Ours is a friendship that is people-driven and people centric. Our nations are cooperating extensively, which is a great sign."

White House Deputy Director of Communications Adam Kennedy said on "The Kuhner Report" on WRKO-AM . Boston (2/25, 9K) that "the major goal" of Trump's India trip "is to reassure and to shore up the foundations of such a strong relationship that we have with the Indian government and the Indian people. I think we have seen both here in the United States and now in India that the President really resonates with that community. We have incredibly strong trade relationships. We have incredibly strong national security relationships and protecting a free and open Indo-Pacific. The President wants to make sure that that relationship with one of the most important countries in the world remains strong and continues to get stronger."

Axios (2/25, Lawler, Basu, 521K), meanwhile, reports that "while President Trump enjoys a hero's welcome in India, that nation's capital is being torn apart by violent protests between Hindus and Muslims." The AP (2/25, Lemire, Colvin), however, says Trump, "defending the host who has showered him with pageantry...refused...to speak out publicly against an Indian citizenship law pushed by...Modi that has sparked deadly protests over discrimination against Muslims during the president's visit." With "at least 10 people killed in violent protests during his two-day visit, Trump told reporters that he didn't want to discuss" the measure. Said the President, "I want to leave that to India and hopefully they will make the right decision."

To the Washington Times (2/25, Boyer, 492K), "Trump refused to be drawn into a public debate...over a new citizenship law in India," Politico (2/25, Kumar, 4.29M) and USA Today (2/25, Subramanian, 10.31M) both say he "sidestepped questions" about the law, and the Los Angeles Times (2/25, Stokols, Bierman, 4.64M) says he "declined...to condemn India's new citizenship law" during a news conference in which he "appeared visibly uncomfortable and tentative at times as he tried to deflect thorny questions."

To the Washington Post (2/25, Gearan, Slater, Kim, Masih, 14.2M), Trump "avoided any public criticism of his host – whose political biography is also built partly on religious and cultural divisions – along with any comparison of Modi's policies with his own treatment of Muslim immigrants." Said the President, "We did talk about religious freedom, and I will say that the prime minister was incredible in what he told me. He wants people to have religious freedom and very strongly."

The New York Times (2/25, Gettleman, Raj, Yasir, 18.61M) reports that on Tuesday, "In one part of New Delhi, President Trump was sightseeing and talking about his warming relationship with...Modi," while "in another, a neighborhood was ripping apart in flames, along religious lines." Reuters (2/25, Ghoshal, Kumar) says New Delhi "has been a hotbed of protests against the new Citizenship Amendment Act (CAA), which eases the path of non-Muslims from three neighboring Muslim-dominated countries to gain Indian citizenship."

AP Analysis: Ahmedabad Rally A Recognition By Modi Of What Trump Likes. An analysis by the AP (2/25, Sullivan) says Monday's "Namaste Trump" rally in Ahmedabad attended by "more than 100,000 people" was not only a sign that "Trump is genuinely popular in India," but also "about Asian geopolitics, China's growing power and a masterful Indian politician who gave his American visitor exactly what he wanted." Modi "is doing this not necessarily because he loves Trump," said Tanvi Madan, the Director of the India Project at the Brookings Institution in Washington. "It's very much about Trump as the leader of the US and recognizing what it is that Trump himself likes," Madan added.

Bond Yields Drop As Worries Mount Over Global Growth.

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, A1, Ostroff, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that bond yields around the world dropped on Tuesday as investors crowded into safe debt instruments amid fears that the coronavirus outbreak will hurt global growth. The yield on the 10-year Treasury slid to 1.347 percent, nearing the July 8, 2016, historic low of 1.364 percent.

NLRB Reverses Obama-Era Rules Making Companies Responsible For Franchisees' Actions.

The Washington Examiner (2/25, Higgins, 448K) reports the National Labor Relations Board "rolled back an Obama administration-era effort to help unions organize franchisor corporations such as McDonald's through the so-called joint employer rule, dealing a blow to organized labor." The Labor Department readopted the pre-Obama standard last month and the NLRB "followed suit Tuesday." NLRB Chairman John Ring said, "This final rule gives our joint-employer standard the clarity, stability, and predictability that is essential to any successful labor-management relationship and vital to our national economy."

The New York Times (2/25, Scheiber, 18.61M) reports that the rollback "makes it harder to challenge companies over their labor practices, potentially affecting the rights of millions of workers." According to the Times, "The rule, which will take effect on April 27, scales back the responsibility of companies like McDonald's for labor-law violations by their franchisees, such as firing workers in retaliation for attempts to unionize. The rule also applies to workers employed through contractors like staffing agencies or cleaning services." The Times says the new regulation "is a reversal of the doctrine that the board adopted late in the Obama administration, which had made it possible to deem a much wider range of parent companies to be so-called joint employers."

Democrats Propose Legislation To Tighten FAA Oversight After Boeing 737 Max Crashes.

The Washington Post (2/25, Duncan, 14.2M) reports, "Three Democratic senators introduced legislation Tuesday to tighten federal oversight of aircraft manufacturers following the deadly crashes of two Boeing 737 Max jets, saying the current setup allowed the company to prioritize profits over safety." The "sweeping" legislation "targets the Federal Aviation Administration's relationship with industry, which lawmakers have said has been revealed to be too cozy." The three sponsors of the legislation, Sens. Richard Blumenthal (D-CT), Edward Markey (D-MA), and Tom Udall (D-NM), are members of the Senate Commerce Committee, "which oversees aviation," and the bill "has the support of the Air Line Pilots Association and other major transportation unions." However, its "ultimate prospects of success in the Republican-controlled Senate are not clear."

Former Boeing Manager Suspected Of Spying For China Claims Investigation Was Flawed.

The Washington Post (2/25, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports, "A former Boeing manager suspected of spying for China is charging that a secret government warrant to search his house for evidence was riddled with errors, raising fresh concerns about the classified process used to carry out national security investigations." The Justice Department in 2014 acquired "a secret warrant seeking evidence that Keith Gartenlaub facilitated the theft of material on Boeing's C-17 military transport plane." However, "Gartenlaub says documents he has reviewed strongly suggest the classified warrant – which neither he nor his lawyers have been allowed to see – was based on inaccurate assertions, including that he had access to the stolen data as part of his job at Boeing."

NTSB Chairman Slams Regulators For "Scant Oversight" Of Tesla's Autopilot Technology.

The Los Angeles Times (2/25, Mitchell, 4.64M) reports, "The chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board slammed Tesla and unnamed 'government regulators' for jeopardizing traffic safety by not taking measures to prevent 'foreseeable abuse' of Tesla's Autopilot driver-assist feature." Robert Sumwalt, Chairman of the NTSB, said at a board meeting Tuesday that "government regulators have provided scant oversight" of Autopilot and other driver-assist systems.

The New York Times (2/25, Chokshi, 18.61M) reports "the board's staff and members issued sharp criticism for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, which they accused of taking a 'misguided' and 'hands-off' approach to regulating such technology." In a statement, NHTSA "said that all crashes caused by distracted driving, including those in which driver-assistance systems were in use, were a 'major concern' and that it planned to review the board's report."

The Washington Post (2/25, Laris, 14.2M) reports Sumwalt also warned drivers who use Autopilot as if it were a self-driving system, pointing to a "lack of system safeguards to prevent foreseeable misuses of technology." Sumwalt said, "Industry keeps implementing technology in such a way that people can get injured or killed. If you own a car with partial automation, you do not own a self-driving car. Don't pretend that you do."

NBC Nightly News (2/25, story 10, 0:40, Holt, 6.45M) reported the hearing centered on "a deadly crash" while a Tesla was "operating in Autopilot mode." The NTSB says there was no alert before the crash, and the emergency braking system did not engage.

Disney CEO Iger Steps Down.

The CBS Evening News (2/25, story 9, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.63M) reported that after 15 years as Disney CEO, Bob Iger "resigned on Tuesday, effective immediately." Iger will "stay on as executive chairman through next year." ABC World News Tonight (2/25, story 5, 2:20, Muir, 7.48M) reported that "stepping in as CEO will be Bob Chapek, who had been chairman of Disney Parks, Experiences, and Products."

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, A1, Watson, Flint, Fritz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that Chapek's experience in key leadership roles at Disney over three decades put him over the top of other potential successors, including the executive who runs the company's streaming service, Kevin Mayer.

Amazon Opens First Cashierless Supermarket, Looking To License System To Other Retailers.

NBC Nightly News (2/25, story 12, 1:40, Holt, 6.45M) reported Amazon opened "its first full-sized grocery store without cashiers" on Tuesday. NBC's Jo Ling Kent reported the store uses technology to allow shoppers to pick up merchandise and leave without stopping to check out. Kent added that a major labor union raised alarms that the technology presents a "danger to millions of good jobs" if the system becomes widespread.

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Herrera, Tilley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Amazon is hoping the new store will serve as a showcase for other retailers interested in adopting the concept. The company plans to license the system to other businesses.

Bezos' Climate Pledge Raises Concerns Private Sector Will Have Outsized Influence On Issue.

The Washington Post (2/25, Kaplan, Freedman, 14.2M) reports that while the announcement that Jeff Bezos will provide $10 billion in funding to fight climate change opens new possibilities for those in the field, some are also concerned "about the implications of one person funding the fight against a problem that affects many." According to the article, "as federal funding for climate research has stagnated and the U.S. government has forfeited its leadership on the issue, Bezos is one of a growing cadre of philanthropists who see an opportunity to set the agenda for climate mitigation and adaptation." While the funding is welcome, scientists and activists express "caution against private individuals driving climate science and the search for solutions."

Lawsuit Claims Waldorf Astoria Hotel In California Used Mole To Steal Secrets.

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Karmin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a lawsuit filed Tuesday claims a Hilton luxury brand hotel in California stole corporate secrets and guest information in a plot to win business from VIP clients. The Peninsula Beverly Hills claims that the former general manager of the Waldorf Astoria Beverly Hills conspired with a Peninsula employee who acted as a mole for over a year, and that the employee stole more than 45,000 documents.

FBI Raids Offices Of Fashion Executive Nygard In Sex-Trafficking Probe.

The New York Times (2/25, Barker, Porter, 18.61M) reports, "Federal agents and New York Police detectives raided the Manhattan headquarters of the fashion company run by a Canadian fashion executive on Tuesday morning, seeking evidence in a sex-trafficking investigation, according to two law enforcement officials who spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss an ongoing investigation." Peter Nygard has been "under investigation for at least five months by a joint child-exploitation task force of the F.B.I. and the New York Police Department, an inquiry overseen by the U.S. attorney's office based in Manhattan. At least four women who have accused Mr. Nygard in a recent lawsuit of sexually assaulting them when they were 14 and 15 in the Bahamas have also met with the task force."

Pence Promotes Administration Trade Record In Address To Michigan Farmers.

The Lansing \(MI\) State Journal (2/25, Thompson, 206K) reports Vice President Pence "brought an optimistic message to Michigan Farm Bureau members on Tuesday, addressing a crowd at the Lansing Center on East Michigan Avenue." The State Journal adds that "touting tax cuts, regulatory roll-backs and a re-written North American trade agreement," Pence praised President Trump "and promised the administration would continue pushing agricultural interests." Said Pence, "We're willing to go to work to make sure America's farmers and ranchers prosper like never before." MLive \(MI\) (2/25, Barrett, 925K) indicates "Pence thanked Michigan framers for 'standing strong' with the Trump administration while facing financial hardship under the president's trade wars," and said "past administrations stood by while China took advantage of the United States." Pence also "acknowledged the dueling tariffs imposed by China and the U.S. created some 'uncertainty,' but argued it was necessary to level the playing field." Said Pence, "The era of economic surrender to China is over. ... We stood strong. Michigan Farm Bureau and farmers across this country stood strong with us. The way farmers really stood in the pocket was inspiring."

WOOD-TV Grand Rapids, MI (2/25, Albin, 138K) says on its website that "selling Trump as a strong negotiator," Pence, "praised phase one of a new trade deal with China...and the replacement of the North American Free Trade Agreement with the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement, which he said would expand U.S. access to the Canadian agriculture market." Said Pence, "The man that wrote 'The Art of the Deal' got a great deal for the American people. The USMCA is here and it's a huge win for American farmers." The Detroit News (2/25, LeBlanc, 825K) quotes Pence as saying, "This President and this entire Administration have supported agriculture from the very beginning. ... And just as you've stood with us...we will always stand with you."

To the Washington Examiner (2/25, Doyle, 448K), Pence scored "face time with voters in an effort that could help secure the state for...Trump in 2020 – and maybe for Mike Pence in 2024." Pence "has been dispatched to Wisconsin and more recently to Pennsylvania, where he addressed a diner packed with local supporters, taking the president's message on the road in states the campaign hopes to keep in its column in November." The Examiner adds that "at the Fleetwood Diner on Tuesday, a packed crowd chanted 'Trump-Pence' and called for 'four more years.' ... Many attendees said they had never seen the place so full." The Lansing \(MI\) City Pulse (2/25, Ashley) also reports "Pence was spotted at the Fleetwood Diner during his busy trip to Mid-Michigan."

US Trade Panel Rejects Duties On Fabricated Steel.

Reuters (2/25, Lawder) reports the US International Trade Commission "on Tuesday threw out the U.S. anti-dumping and anti-subsidy duties on fabricated structural steel from Canada and Mexico, ruling that such imports do not harm U.S. producers," in a vote of 3 to 2. The ruling is "a rare rejection of U.S. duties imposed by the U.S. Commerce Department in an anti-dumping and anti-subsidy case." The decision "eliminates U.S. anti-dumping and anti-subsidy duties on imports of steel structures prefabricated from beams, girders, columns, plates, and flanges for use in construction."

Trump Accuses Schiff, Democrats Of Leaking Information To Hurt Him And Sanders.

The New York Times (2/25, Sullivan, 18.61M) reports that in India Tuesday, President Trump accused House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff "of leaking information about Russia's efforts to interfere in the 2020 election, dismissed the intelligence as 'exaggerated' and refused to acknowledge that Moscow was behind similar efforts in 2016." According to the Times, "without evidence," Trump said, "Schiff leaked it, in my opinion – and he shouldn't be leaking things like that. ... And if they don't stop it, I can't imagine that people are not going to go after them and find out what's happening." Similarly, the AP (2/25, Lemire, Riechmann) says Trump "suggested" that "Democrats who don't want Bernie Sanders to win their party's presidential nomination tried to hurt the senator's chances by leaking information about Russian activities promoting his campaign," but "gave no evidence for his claim." Trump said, "Bernie is probably winning – looks like he's winning and he's got a head of steam. ... And they maybe don't want him for obvious reasons. ... So they put out a thing that Russia is backing him."

Bloomberg (2/25, 4.73M) reports that the President's comments suggested that he "still disputes official U.S. conclusions that Russia interfered in the 2016 election to help secure his election."

Trump Says He Doesn't Want And Didn't Get Election Help From A Foreign Country. Reuters (2/25, Holland) reports that during a news briefing in India Tuesday, President Trump "said...that no country was trying to help him win the November election." Trump said, "I want no help from any country and I haven't been given help from any country." His comment came "after a top intelligence official told lawmakers Russia was interfering in the 2020 presidential vote to help Trump win a second term."

Trump To CNN's Acosta: "You Ought To Be Ashamed Of Yourself." Politico (2/25, Okun, 4.29M) reports that during Tuesday's news conference, Trump "couldn't resist a...spat with an old standby from back home: CNN's Jim Acosta." After Trump "took aim at CNN's credibility," Acosta said, "Mr. President, I think our record on delivering the truth is a lot better than yours sometimes, if you don't mind me saying." Trump said, "Let me tell you about your record. ... Your record is so bad you ought to be ashamed of yourself." Acosta replied, "I'm not ashamed of anything, and our organization's not ashamed," as Trump continued, "You probably have the worst record in the history of broadcasting."

The Daily Caller (2/25, Caruso, 716K) says the exchange came after Acosta asked Trump to "pledge to the American people that you will not accept any foreign assistance in the upcoming election." Trump said, "First of all, I want no help from any country. ... And I haven't been given help from any country, and if you see what CNN, your wonderful network, said, I guess they apologized in a way for – didn't they apologize for the fact that they said certain things that weren't true? Tell me, what was their apology yesterday? What did they say?" USA Today (2/25, 10.31M) posted video of the exchange on its website.

Warzel: Attacks Over Election Meddling Play Into Russia's Hands. In the New York Times (2/25, 18.61M), opinion writer-at-large Charlie Warzel says that while recent reports about Russian interference in the 2020 election "offered very little information about the scope of the interference," that "hasn't prevented the scant news from being weaponized by interested parties." Warzel argues that "play[s] directly into the hands of adversaries already seeking to divide." Warzel adds, "If we don't adapt to this information war, our panic over election meddling could become self-fulfilling. And we will become useful idiots in the undermining of our own electoral legitimacy."

Barr Discusses FISA Reforms With Republican Senators.

The AP (2/25) reports that Attorney General Barr met with Republican senators Tuesday "to discuss the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act and other government intelligence laws." The AP adds that "some of those lawmakers supporting Barr are pushing for reforms to the government's secret surveillance program for those posing a national security risk." Those efforts "have intensified after the Justice Department's inspector general in December issued a scathing report that detailed significant errors and omissions in four applications to the secretive Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court to eavesdrop on former Trump campaign aide Carter Page as part of the FBI's Russia investigation."

The Washington Times (2/25, Mordock, Muñoz, 492K) reports that following the "closed-door lunch meeting," GOP senators said Barr "is set to make internal reforms to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) process, but the details are still up in the air." Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham said, "He's going to do internal attorney general regulation changes, which he has the power to do. ... I'll let you talk to him about what they are." Graham "said the attorney general appeared to be in favor of a House bill that will give a three-year extension to the FISA provisions." Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) said Barr "is considering several FISA changes." Cruz said, "He was discussing a number of reforms he was working on within the Department of Justice in response to the inspector general and the very significant abuses we saw. ... I'll let him make his own announcements."

McConnell Says Barr Has GOP Senators' "Overwhelming Support." Reuters (2/25, Zengerle, Brice) reports that Senate Majority Leader McConnell said after the meeting that the Attorney General still has the support of Senate Republicans. McConnell told reporters that Barr has their "overwhelming support."

Graham: McCabe Needs To Explain How He Knew FBI Field Office Had Steele Dossier.

The Washington Examiner (2/25, Chaitin, 448K) reports Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham said Monday that former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe needs to explain to lawmakers how he knew an FBI field office had the so-called Steele dossier. On Fox News' Hannity, Graham discussed "his review of the FBI's Crossfire Hurricane investigation and Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act orders targeting onetime Trump campaign adviser Carter Page." Graham said he wants to ask McCabe about July 2016, when, "they apply for a FISA warrant for Carter Page; it's turned down. McCabe says, 'Why don't you go to New York, they've got a document that may help you.' It turned out to be the Steele dossier." Graham said he wants to know how McCabe knew the dossier was in New York and "why didn't they check it out before they used it" to obtain FISA warrants to wiretap Page.

Attorney Questions Whether Obama's DOJ Leaked Flynn's Calls With Kislyak.

Attorney Wilson Miller writes at The Federalist (2/25, 126K) that "one of the great mysteries of the Trump-Russia saga" is "who leaked Gen. Michael Flynn's calls with Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak." Miller questions whether then-Deputy Attorney General Sally Yates or anyone else at DOJ "leak[ed] or arrange[d] the leak of Flynn's call with Kislyak to get around the FBI's efforts to keep secret the investigation of Flynn? And did they confirm to the Washington Post that Flynn was under investigation for Logan Act violations?"

Judge In Stone Trial Says Trump Comments Helped Fuel Threats To Jury.

Politico (2/25, Samuelsohn, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports US District Court Judge Amy Berman Jackson on Tuesday "swung back" at President Trump "over his heated criticism" of the Roger Stone case, "warning that the president's commentary about his longtime associate's conviction had helped fuel threats to the jury." Jackson "cited Trump's public comments and Twitter posts, as well as an accompanying campaign from the president's conservative media allies to identify and critique the jury, as one of the reasons for her decision to clamp down on public access to a hearing on Stone's request for a new trial." Reuters (2/25, Lynch) reports Jackson "warned" Stone's lawyers "to protect the privacy of the jurors who found him guilty ahead of a hearing in which the defense was seeking a new trial." Jackson "told Stone's lawyers and journalists covering the case that the safety of the jurors could be put at risk if their identities are made public." She said, "Any attempt to invade the privacy of the jury or harass and intimidate them is certainly antithetical to our entire system of justice."

The New York Times (2/25, Montague, Lafraniere, 18.61M) reports that Jackson "agreed in part" to a request from Stone's lawyers "to open to the public a hearing on whether to grant him a new trial over allegations of juror misconduct." Jackson "said that because of the high-profile nature of the case, and the flood of attempts to identify jurors throughout the trial, additional precautions were called for to protect them. She said that to shield the jurors' identities, she would allow members of the public and journalists only to listen to the proceedings from another room and would not allow any courtroom sketch artists to be present."

USA Today (2/25, Phillips, 10.31M) says Stone's attorneys "asked for a new trial after the president took to Twitter to attack one of the jurors who convicted Stone. At issue is whether the juror, who ended up becoming the forewoman in Stone's jury, falsely answered questions in the jury questionnaire and whether she failed to follow instructions during the trial and deliberations." Stone attorney Seth Ginsberg "said the juror did not disclose her political views. He said the juror made either false or intentionally misleading answers to questions about fairness and neutrality in the jury questionnaire during the trial." Ginsberg "cited social media posts in which the juror retweeted criticisms of Stone, shared stories about his arrest and posted about the president and the special counsel's Russia investigation. Ginsberg said the posts implied bias against Stone." Bloomberg (2/25, Larson, 4.73M) says Jackson "did not issue a ruling at the end of a Tuesday hearing on Stone's request," but she "said a juror's social media posts criticizing President Donald Trump did not necessarily mean she was biased against Stone."

The Washington Post (2/25, Hsu, Zapotosky, Duggan, 14.2M) reports that Trump "doubled down on those attacks while the hearing was ongoing Tuesday." Trump tweeted, "There has rarely been a juror so tainted as the forewoman in the Roger Stone case. Look at her background. She never revealed her hatred of 'Trump' and Stone. She was totally biased, as is the judge. Roger wasn't even working on my campaign. Miscarriage of justice. Sad to watch!"

Trump also retweeted a post by Andrew Napolitano which included a link to a story on the Fox News website about his interview on Fox Nation with former Democratic Party lawyer David Schoen, who suggested that Jackson "may have jeopardized the trial by injecting her own personal bias into the proceedings." Trump wrote, "A total miscarriage of justice!"

Juror Says Stone Got A Fair Trial. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M), Seth Cousins, a juror in the Stone trial, says the forewoman "was actually one of the strongest advocates for the rights of the defendant and for a rigorous process." Cousins adds, "There is no factual basis to say that the Stone jury was tainted or otherwise biased against the defendant."

Attorney Says Assange Tried To Call White House, Hillary Clinton About Dump Of Diplomatic Cables.

Reuters (2/25, Holden) reports that Julian Assange's attorney told Assange's London extradition hearing Tuesday that the WikiLeaks founder "tried to contact Hillary Clinton and the White House when he realised that unredacted U.S. diplomatic cables given to WikiLeaks were about to be dumped on the internet." Attorney Mark Summers also denied allegations that Assange helped Chelsea Manning, then a US soldier known as Bradley Manning, break a government password and "encouraged the theft of secret data and knowingly put lives in danger." Summers called the allegations "lies, lies, and more lies."

Reuters, NYTimes Analyses: Justices Skeptical Of Law Against Encouraging Illegal Immigration.

Reuters (2/25, Chung) reports "US Supreme Court justices on Tuesday signaled skepticism toward a federal law that made it a felony to encourage illegal immigrants to come or stay in the United States as they heard a bid by President Donald Trump's administration to revive the measure after it was struck down by a lower court." The court heard arguments in the Administration's appeal after the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in 2018 "invalidated the law as a violation of the US Constitution's First Amendment guarantee of free speech." Yesterday, "conservative and liberal justices alike expressed concern that the decades-old law may be too broad, repeatedly pressing the administration about what kind of speech could be criminalized." The New York Times (2/25, Liptak, 18.61M) also points out "several justices appeared skeptical, saying that the ordinary meaning of the word 'encourage' could subject countless people to criminal liability."

High Court Bars Mexican Family's Lawsuit Against Border Patrol.

Reuters (2/25, Chung, Hurley) reports the Supreme Court on Tuesday "barred a lawsuit against a Border Patrol agent for fatally shooting a 15-year-old Mexican boy on Mexican soil from across the border in Texas, refusing to open the door for foreign nationals to pursue civil rights cases in American courts in such incidents." Reuters adds that "with its conservative justices in the majority and its liberal justices dissenting, the court voted 5-4 to uphold a lower court's dismissal of the lawsuit against the agent, Jesus Mesa, who was standing on the U.S. side of the border when he shot Sergio Adrian Hernandez Guereca in the face in 2010." USA Today (2/25, Wolf, 10.31M) says Justice Samuel Alito "wrote the opinion and was joined by the court's four other conservatives." Wrote Alito, "A cross-border shooting claim has foreign relations and national security implications. ... In addition, Congress has been notably hesitant to create claims based on allegedly tortious conduct abroad."

The Washington Post (2/25, Barnes, 14.2M) reports "courts have struggled with the cross-border implications of the case," and "Hernández's parents were attempting to sue under a 1971 precedent from the court, Bivens v. Six Unknown Fed. Narcotics Agents." In that case, the court "allowed people to sue over unconstitutional actions by federal officials, even if such suits had not been explicitly authorized by Congress. But since then, the court has been more likely to restrict so-called Bivens complaints than expand them." The New York Times (2/25, Liptak, 18.61M) points out that "in a concurring opinion, Justice Thomas, joined by Justice Gorsuch, called on the court to overrule the" lower court decision "entirely," and CQ Roll Call (2/25, Ruger, 154K) that Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, "in a dissent joined by the three other justices who make up the court's liberal wing, wrote that the boy's exact location...when he was shot 'should not matter one whit' when the United States has jurisdiction to govern a Border Patrol agent's conduct in this country." The Los Angeles Times (2/25, Savage, 4.64M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

ICE Using Subpoenas In Battle Against Sanctuary Jurisdictions.

Reuters (2/25, Hesson) reports the Administration is "turning to federal courts to force state and local officials to turn over records about immigrants in custody in a novel effort to circumvent so-called 'sanctuary' policies." According to the article, "ignoring a subpoena for documents or evidence can result in a fine or jail time, making it difficult for local law enforcement to push back." A spokeswoman for ICE "said the agency will continue using the strategy if it proves effective."

ICE: 86% Of Deportations Biden Would Halt Involve Criminal History.

The Washington Examiner (2/25, Bedard, 448K) reports Joe Biden's "new promise to halt deportations" during his first 100 days in office "would keep free thousands of serious criminals with long rap sheets sought by Immigration and Customs Enforcement, a government report on removals suggests." A report by ICE Enforcement and Removal Operations "said that 86% of those seized in fiscal 2019 were 'aliens with criminal convictions or pending criminal charges.'" The report said that the agency "made 123,128 arrests and that 'the criminal history for this group represented 489,063 total criminal convictions and pending charges.'"

Illinois Sheriffs Say Under New Policy, Criminals Facing Deportation Are Being Set Free.

The AP (2/25) reports the Illinois Sheriffs' Association "said Tuesday that some violent felons who had faced deportation are instead being released into local communities after their prison terms end as a result of a policy change" by the Administration of Gov. J.B. Pritzker (D). Sheriffs took issue with the cancellation of a process under which convicted felons were transferred to detention center under contract with the Immigration and Customs Enforcement. However, "an immigration expert said the practice violates the state Trust Act, the 2017 law that limits local law enforcement agencies' cooperation with federal immigration officials."

WPost Agrees With Mulvaney's Claim That US Needs More Immigrants.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M) says Acting Chief of Staff Mulvaney "let slip" a few days ago in England "that the United States needs more immigrants, lest severe labor shortages and anemic birth rates sap economic growth." The Post says Mulvaney's comments are "in line with the views of most economists and employers in an array of worker-hungry industries, not to mention Republican orthodoxy until Donald Trump, having weaponized nativism, devoured the GOP." The Post argues that "it makes sense to recalibrate immigration policy to meet the labor market's future demands, including by admitting more high-skilled workers," and "it's self-defeating to use immigration as a political whipping boy, which will only put Mr. Mulvaney's self-evident prescription further out of reach."

Esper To Defend Trump's Pentagon Budget Request Before Lawmakers Wednesday.

The Washington Times (2/25, Meier, 492K) reports that when Defense Secretary Esper appears before the House Armed Services Committee Wednesday to make "his first public defense of President Trump's Pentagon budget request," he is "likely to face questions on a range of hot-button issues from shipbuilding cuts and troop withdrawals in Africa and Afghanistan to the president's decision – again – to tap the Pentagon's budget to pay for his wall along the border with Mexico." The Times adds, "Lawmakers are expected to zero in on President Trump's plans to redirect some $7.2 billion in Defense Department money earmarked for construction, health and other military programs for the border wall project, a shift that has angered lawmakers of both parties."

Gramm, Early: Despite Democrats' Claims, Rich Do Pay Their Fair Share Of Taxes.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (2/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), ex-Sen. Phil Gramm (R-TX) and John Early, who served twice as assistant commissioner at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, that despite claims from Democrats that the rich do not pay their fair share in taxes, the average household in the top one percent pays more than 219 times as much in taxes as the average household in the bottomquintile.

US Health Officials Urge Preparation For Coronavirus “Pandemic,” Disruption Of Daily Life.

David Muir opened ABC World News Tonight (2/25, lead story, 4:00, 7.48M) by reporting on the “new warning from the CDC about the coronavirus here in the US, saying it is not a question of if, but when, and saying Americans should prepare. Tonight, the CDC reports the number of those sickened stands at 57 in the US, all of them in quarantine and in treatment.” President Trump said Tuesday that “he thinks it’s going to work out fine, but lawmakers on the Hill [are] asking questions.” National Center for Immunization and Respiratory Diseases Director Nancy Messonnier: “We are asking the American public to work with us to prepare and the expectation that this could be bad.” ABC’s Steve Osunsami: “In their most clear warning yet, the CDC all but promises that the coronavirus will spread here, and that Americans need to prepare.” Messonnier: “We expect we will see community spread in this country. It’s not so much a question of if this will happen anymore, but rather more a question of exactly when this will happen, and how many people in this country will have severe illness. We really want to prepare the American public for the possibility that their lives will be disrupted because of this pandemic.”

Lester Holt said in the lead story on NBC Nightly News (2/25, lead story, 2:35, 6.45M), “Americans are being told today it’s just a matter of time before the coronavirus begins spreading in this country. The CDC stressing the current risk here is low, but warning in the bluntest of terms major disruptions to daily life could be in our future.” National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Director Anthony Fauci: “When you have influx of individuals who are infected from multiple countries, then the danger of that outbreak in this country increases substantially.” NBC’s Tom Costello said the CDC “is now advising employers and schools to think about planning for widespread disruptions like limiting travel and large meetings, allowing workers to telework, and closing schools or allowing Internet schoolwork.” Fauci said on Fox News’ Special Report (2/25, 1.53M), “It would be unrealistic not to realize that when you have multiple countries in which you have sustained outbreak, that the chances of there being spillover into our country, namely a pandemic if you want to use that terminology, which will involve virtually every country in the world, you have to be prepared for it.” Fauci said on CNN’s Situation Room (2/25, 934K), “If you have community spread of multiple generations of infections in a variety of different countries, you have the makings of a potential pandemic.”

On NBC Nightly News (2/25, story 3, 0:30, Holt, 6.45M), medical correspondent John Torres said, “The CDC is hoping the coronavirus turns into a seasonal-type virus that goes away when the warm weather hits, much like the flu does. But officials are preparing in case it becomes a year-round issue. With more infections showing up around the globe, they say it’s not a matter of if, but when, we’ll get more outbreaks in the US.”

USA Today (2/25, Bacon, 10.31M) reports Messonnier “said the coronavirus has caused sickness and death and sustained person-to-person transmission. That’s two of the three factors for a pandemic, she said.” On the CBS Evening News (2/25, story 3, 2:25, O’Donnell, 4.63M), Kris Van Cleave reported Messonnier “said she told her own children to prepare for a significant disruption, and parents should ask their schools about plans for dismissal if the illness becomes serious in their communities.” The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Abbott, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Messonnier encouraged communities, businesses, and schools to begin preparing for potential outbreaks, and the New York Times (2/25, Belluck, Weiland, 18.61M) reports Messonnier “said that cities and towns should plan for ‘social distancing measures,’ like dividing school classes into smaller groups of students or closing schools altogether. Meetings and conferences may have to be canceled, she said. Businesses should arrange for employees to work from home.” The Daily Caller (2/25, Safi, 716K) has a story based on the Times report.

Breitbart (2/25, Caplan, 673K) reports, “The illness that originated in the Chinese city of Wuhan has now infected more than 80,000 people globally. 77,000 cases have been confirmed in China with others in parts of Europe and the Middle East. To date, 57 cases have been confirmed in the U.S., including 40 cases of people who the government transported from the Diamond Princess cruise ship from Japan.” The New York Post (2/25, Salo, Lapin, 4.57M) headlines its report “CDC Urges Americans To Prepare For Coronavirus Outbreak: ‘This Might Be Bad.’” Bloomberg (2/25, Langreth, Cortez, Jacobs, 4.73M), Politico (2/25, Ehley, 4.29M), and The Hill (2/25, Weixel, 2.98M) also cover the CDC warning.

Trump Says “Whole Situation Will Start Working Out.” The Washington Post (2/25, Werner, Abutaleb, Bernstein, Sun, 14.2M) reports the warnings about coronavirus from the CDC and other agencies “contrasted sharply with assessments from President Trump and other White House officials, who have largely dismissed concerns about the virus.” USA Today (2/25, Subramanian, Fritze, 10.31M) reports Trump on Tuesday “downplayed concerns of the global outbreak of coronavirus, saying it was ‘very well under control in our country,’ a day after the White House requested $2.5 billion in emergency funding to deal with the epidemic.” At a news conference in New Delhi, Trump said, “We have very few people with it. The people are getting, they’re all getting better. ... I think the whole situation will start working out.” The Los Angeles Times (2/25, Stokols, Bierman, 4.64M) also reports Trump “tried to downplay the threat” even though “the reach of the deadly virus has increased quickly and there is no known cure or vaccine.” However, Jim Acosta said on CNN’s Situation Room (2/25, 1.37M), “Sources say behind the scenes, the President has been ripping into Administration officials over how they are handling the spread of the virus.”

The New York Times (2/25, Baker, Crowley, Gettleman, 18.61M) reports Trump “also addressed growing alarm over the coronavirus and the return of 14 Americans infected with coronavirus to the country last week. He defended that action, even though he was privately furious about it.” The President said, “I felt that we should bring them back. They’re Americans – we should bring them back.”

The Hill (2/25, Wise, 2.98M) reports NEC Director Kudlow also “sought to downplay the significance of the coronavirus outbreak, claiming that the virus had been contained in the U.S. and that the economic consequences would be limited." Kudlow said on CNBC's The Exchange (2/25, 255K), "We have contained this. We have contained this – I won't say airtight, but pretty close to airtight. We have done a good job in the United States. Hats off to our public health people." Kudlow added that while this is a "human tragedy," on "the business side and the economic side, I don't think it's going to be an economic tragedy at all."

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (2/25), "The President has been working on this from the day that he pulled down the planes from China on January 29. We're focused like a laser beam on this to keep the public secure. We're hoping for the best, preparing for the worst, and we are doing it all on Trump time." White House Deputy Director of Communications Adam Kennedy similarly said on "The Kuhner Report" on WRKO-AM Boston (2/25, 9K) that "from the very beginning, the President has taken the coronavirus incredibly seriously. We have been prepared. We had systems in place from the very beginning."

The Washington Post (2/25, Stein, Dawsey, 14.2M) says, "The rosy sheen that Trump, Kudlow and other White House officials have tried to express about the economic impact of the coronavirus outbreak has now collided with reality: The coronavirus is spreading, quickly, to more countries. The death toll is rising, and the outbreak is wreaking havoc on global supply chains." The Week (2/25, 1.94M) headlines a report "White House's Rosy Coronavirus Comments Are The Exact Opposite Of What Career Health Officials Are Saying."

GOP Senators Criticize Administration Officials Over Handling Of Coronavirus.

The AP (2/25, Alonso) reports, "Senators of both political parties questioned Tuesday whether the White House's request for $2.5 billion is enough to prepare the United States for a possible coronavirus outbreak." During a budget hearing, Senate Appropriations Chairman Richard Shelby said to HHS Secretary Azar that "if the virus keeps spreading, 'it could be an existential threat to a lot of people in this country.'" The Hill (2/25, Hellmann, 2.98M) reports Shelby said "he is concerned the Trump administration is 'low-balling its request for emergency funding to respond to the coronavirus outbreak.'" Azar "defended the government's response, even as [President] Trump hours earlier sought to minimize fears about the virus spreading" throughout the US. But on the CBS Evening News (2/25, story 3, 2:25, O'Donnell, 4.63M), Kris Van Cleave reported Azar said HHS "has only stockpiled 30 million respirators or face masks. They'll need 300 million for healthcare workers alone in an outbreak."

Politico (2/25, Roubein, Ollstein, 4.29M) reports Sen. John Kennedy (R-LA) criticized Acting DHS Secretary Wolf "for not providing enough information about risks from the outbreak." Kennedy said, "You're supposed to keep us safe, and the American people deserve some straight answers on the coronavirus, and I'm not getting them from you." The Hill (2/25, Bolton, 2.98M) reports Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) "confronted administration officials at a private briefing on Capitol Hill," saying he "does not think the administration has done enough to prepare for the infectious virus spreading widely among the domestic population." Romney said, "I'm very disappointed in the degree to which we've prepared for a pandemic, both in terms of protective equipment and in terms of medical devices that would help people once they are infected."

Azar said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (2/25, 49K), "Our messaging has been consistent throughout. From Day One, we said we'll have additional cases in the United States. But thanks to President Trump's historically aggressive containment efforts, we have actually contained the spread of the virus here in the United States at this point." Asked about the CDC's warning about the prospect of a pandemic, Azar said, "What we have said and what the CDC said...is there is a progression. If we see additional cases as we think we will here in the United States and if we see and ask community-based transmission...we will work aggressively to mitigate the impact of that."

Schumer Seeks At Least $3.1B For Coronavirus Response. CQ Roll Call (2/25, Siddons, Sword, 154K) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer "took to the floor Tuesday to call for at least $3.1 billion upfront, including more reimbursements to state and local health officials and to avoid cutting other programs." Reuters (2/25, Cowan) reports Schumer said the "additional money 'is the amount our public health organizations say is necessary.'" In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (2/25, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Schumer's figure is arbitrary and that he and other Democrats have not backed up their calls for more funding with specifics.

The President tweeted, "Cryin' Chuck Schumer is complaining, for publicity purposes only, that I should be asking for more money than $2.5 Billion to prepare for Coronavirus. If I asked for more he would say it is too much. He didn't like my early travel closings. I was right. He is incompetent!" The President later tweeted, "CDC and my Administration are doing a GREAT job of handling Coronavirus, including the very early closing of our borders to certain areas of the world. It was opposed by the Dems, 'too soon', but turned out to be the correct decision. No matter how well we do, however, the Democrats talking point is that we are doing badly. If the virus disappeared tomorrow, they would say we did a really poor, and even incompetent, job. Not fair, but it is what it is. So far, by the way, we have not had one death. Let's keep it that way!"

Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (2/25), House Minority Leader McCarthy discussed the Administration's funding request in response to the coronavirus outbreak. McCarthy said, "We will make sure we have enough money to take care of this, no question. ... I think you will look at probably from [the $3 billion to $4 billion] range...because we don't want to have to look back at this say that we didn't have enough for the opportunity to stop it early."

Dow Down More Than 879 Points On Coronavirus Concerns.

David Muir reported on ABC World News Tonight (2/25, story 3, 0:50, 7.48M) that the coronavirus warning from the CDC is "fueling new fears on Wall Street. The Dow plunging for a second day now, falling 879 points, nearly 2,000 points in two days." The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Ostroff, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Dow Jones Industrial Average closed down 879.44 points at 27,081.36, while the

S&P 500 was down 97.68 points to 3,128.21 and the Nasdaq down 255.67 points to 8,965.61. The AP (2/25, Veiga, Choe) reports the "benchmark S&P 500 has lost 7.6% over the last four days," which represents its "worst such stretch since the end of 2018. Tuesday also marked the first back-to-back 3% losses for the index since the summer of 2015."

The New York Times (2/25, Phillips, Bradsher, 18.61M) says, "For weeks, American investors had largely shrugged off the economic risks of the virus even as it disrupted global supply chains and shut down factories in China. As recently as last Wednesday, the S&P 500 was at a record high. But since then, growing outbreaks in Europe and elsewhere in Asia have raised fears that the virus will continue to drag on the global economy." Bloomberg (2/25, Hajric, Ballentine, 4.73M) reports that according to Federal Reserve Vice Chairman Richard Clarida, officials are "closely monitoring the spreading coronavirus, but it is 'still too soon' to say whether it will result a material change to the outlook."

The Washington Post (2/25, Siegel, 14.2M) reports that "increasingly worrisome forecasts about the coronavirus, which is spreading faster and more broadly than thought," are "renewing recession anxiety." According to the Post, "The blue chip index went into full retreat after health officials warned it was only a matter of time before the deadly virus becomes a public health threat in the United States." Reuters (2/25, Carew) also reports on the stock market plunge.

Trump Predicts Market Crash If He Is Not Reelected. Reuters (2/25, Holland) reports President Trump "said on Tuesday the U.S. stock market will crash if he loses the election this year. During a trip to India, Trump told business leaders stocks will jump higher if he is re-elected, but 'if I don't win you're going to see a crash like you've never seen before.'"

Zandi: Outbreak Will Reduce US Growth By 0.6% In Q1. USA Today (2/25, Davidson, 10.31M) reports, "As the coronavirus spreads and raises the risk of recession, some analysts are further downgrading their forecasts for the U.S. economy." Mark Zandi of Moody's "estimates the outbreak will reduce growth during the first three months of 2020 by six-tenths of a percentage point to 1.3%, more than his previous forecast of a four- to five-tenths of a point."

NYTimes Analysis: Democratic Presidential Candidates See Opening On Economy. The New York Times (2/25, Vigdor, 18.61M) reports, "With the Dow Jones industrial average suffering its worst two-day loss in history on fears of the spread of the novel coronavirus, the Democratic presidential contenders on Tuesday night tried to turn the tables on President Trump in an area long perceived as one of his strengths: the economy." Michael Bloomberg accused Trump of undermining the CDC, while Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) said Trump "was ill informed about the scope of the public health threat, which has disrupted supply chains and prompted a stock sell-off."

Faulty Component Restricts CDC's Testing Capability.

The Washington Post (2/25, Johnson, McGinley, Sun, 14.2M) reports that "problems with a government-created coronavirus test have limited" US capacity "to rapidly increase testing," and "experts are increasingly concerned that the small number of U.S. cases may be a reflection of limited testing, not of the virus's spread." While South Korea "has run more than 35,000 coronavirus tests, the United States has tested only 426 people, not including people who returned on evacuation flights. Only about a dozen state and local laboratories can now run tests" outside of the CDC "because the CDC kits sent out nationwide earlier this month included a faulty component."

Europe, Asia Confront "Rising Death Toll."

NBC Nightly News (2/25, story 2, 2:10, Holt, 6.45M) reported that as US officials "make plans to deal with any [coronavirus] outbreak, Europe and Asia are in the throes of it, dealing with the rapid spread of the disease and a rising death toll." Reuters (2/25, Hafezi, Woo) reports, "Iran's coronavirus death toll rose to 16 on Tuesday, the highest outside China, increasing its international isolation." The AP (2/25, Winfield) reports Italy "reported a 45% one-day increase in people infected with the coronavirus as other countries in Europe recorded their first cases Tuesday, producing evidence that travelers are carrying the virus from the European outbreak's current epicenter." On the CBS Evening News (2/25, story 4, 1:10, O'Donnell, 4.63M), Mark Phillips reported, "The bulk of the virus cases in Italy have been from within [a] cordoned-off area, but there have been a few cases reported now elsewhere in the country."

The Wall Street Journal (2/25, Cheng, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that on Tuesday, Chinese officials say the number of new coronavirus cases at the epidemic's epicenter in Hubei province fell to nine, raising hopes that the outbreak has peaked there. Still, the AP (2/25) reports Secretary of State Pompeo said Tuesday, "Had China permitted its own and foreign journalists and medical personnel to speak and investigate freely, Chinese officials and other nations would have been far better prepared to address the challenge."

Death Toll In China Rises To 2,666. The AP (2/25, Geller, Tong) reports, "As of Tuesday, the spread of the illness had sickened some 80,000 people worldwide and caused about 2,700 deaths." According to the AP, "The vast majority of those infections remain in China, where 518 new cases were reported Tuesday and another 71 deaths, 68 of them in the central city of Wuhan, where the epidemic was first detected in December. The updates bring mainland China's totals to 77,780 cases and 2,666 deaths, according to the World Health Organization," which "said the fatality rate was between 2% and 4% in Wuhan and 0.7% elsewhere in China."

South Korea Not Implementing Extreme Measures China Has Turned To.

The Washington Post (2/25, Kim, Denyer, 14.2M) reports that "when a spokesman for South Korea's ruling party suggested Tuesday that the government would be rolling out a 'maximum lockdown' on the coronavirus-hit southern city of Daegu, the backlash was immediate and the political retreat swift." Hong Ihk-pyo "soon clarified that he didn't mean a 'Wuhan-style lockdown' or any blockade on travel into and out of the city – along the lines that China's Communist Party has imposed on Wuhan and surrounding areas at the center of the covid-19 outbreak." The Post says President Moon Jae-in "soon chimed in. There would be no regional blockade, he said, only a full-scale effort to contain the spread of the virus."

US Soldier In South Korea Tests Positive For Coronavirus. The AP (2/25) reports the US military "says one of its soldiers based in South Korea tested positive for a new virus, the first U.S. service member infected." The "23-year-old man is in self quarantine at his off-base residence," according to a statement.

South Korean Coronavirus Official Says He Is Member Of Cult Linked To Outbreak. Business Insider (2/25, Mahbubani, 3.67M) reports, "A senior health official in Daegu – the city that lies at the center of South Korea's coronavirus outbreak – confessed to being a follower of a controversial doomsday church cult after testing positive for the virus. The unnamed official leads the Infection Preventive Medicine Department in the city that is home to 681 of the 833 COVID-19 cases in the country. ... Over 450 of those Daegu residents have been found to be members of the Temple of the Tabernacle of the Testimony, a fringe religious sect that belongs to the Shincheonji Church of Jesus."

Senate Democrats Block Two Late-Term Abortion Measures.

The Washington Times (2/25, Swoyer, 492K) reports that Senate Democrats on Tuesday blocked two bills "aimed at criminalizing the failure to give medical aid to babies born after a failed abortion, as well as banning some abortions after 20 weeks, displaying their support for unlimited abortion rights." One measure, by Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "would have imposed criminal penalties, including a fine or a possible five-year prison term, for medical providers who perform abortions after a fetus reaches five months gestation. ... The vote rejecting to move forward with the 20-week ban was 53- to 44." Another measure, by Sen. Ben Sasse (R-NE), "was blocked 56 to 41." It would have "required health care workers to give medical care to a baby born alive after a botched abortion, ensuring the child is admitted to a hospital."

Healthcare Facilities Use Temporary Doctors To Cope With Physician Shortage.

The Washington Times (2/25, Tan, 492K) reports that a survey by the healthcare staffing firm Staff Care found that 85 percent of healthcare facilities "had used temporary doctors in the past year to fill in gaps caused by a national shortage of physicians." According to the survey, "an estimated 52,000 doctors, about 6% of all active and licensed physicians, worked on a temporary basis in 2019." Temporary physicians "are filling openings that can last from a few days to more than a year as health care facilities grapple with trying to find primary care physicians and specialists. Temporary doctors also are called on when health care facilities experience turnover of their medical staff," according to Staff Care President Jeff Decker.

New Mexico Governor: Sheriffs Should Enforce New Red-Flag Gun Law Or Resign.

The AP (2/25, Lee) reports that New Mexico Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham (D) on Tuesday "signed a red-flag gun bill...that will allow state district courts to order the temporary surrender of firearms, and she urged sheriffs to resign if they still refuse to enforce it." The Times says some sheriffs "from mostly rural areas opposed the bill in committee hearings as a violation of constitutional guarantees to due process, free speech and the right to bear arms." While Lujan Grisham "said sheriffs should have the opportunity to oppose any recommended policy change," she said "they cannot not enforce. ... If they really intend to do that, they should resign as a law enforcement officer and leader in that community."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Budget Reflects Administration's Lack Of Support For Charter Schools.

The New York Times (2/25, Green, 18.61M) reports that "public charter schools – caught between growing Democratic disenchantment and a Trump administration shift toward private schools – are preparing for political battle, as the long-protected education sector finds itself on the verge of abandonment." Education Secretary DeVos "proposed major changes this month to a federal education fund that for decades has driven growth of charter schools." In President Trump's budget proposal for the next fiscal year, "the stand-alone charter schools fund would be dissolved into a broad educational block grant to the states." The Times adds that the Administration's "shift in emphasis toward private school support comes at a precarious time" because "Democratic lawmakers have targeted the same federal charter fund."

Trump: Purge Of Disloyal Staffers Is For "Good Of The Country."

The Washington Times (2/25, Boyer, 492K) reports President Trump "said Tuesday that his new White House director of personnel is ferreting out disloyal administration staffers" because "we want to have people that are good for the country." Speaking at a news conference in India, Trump "acknowledged that Director of Presidential Personnel Johnny McEntee is looking at various agencies for people who oppose the president." Said Trump, "I don't think it's very many people. We want to have people that are good for the country, that are loyal to our country. Because that was a disgraceful situation."

House Panel Requests Documents On McEntee's Security Clearance. The Hill (2/25, Marcos, 2.98M), meanwhile, reports the House Oversight Committee on Tuesday "demanded that the White House turn over documents regarding the security clearance" of McEntee. McEntee, it notes, "was fired in March 2018 for undisclosed security reasons but rehired earlier this month." House Oversight Chairwoman Carolyn Maloney sent a letter to White House Counsel Pat Cipollone "renewing a request for documents the panel had previously requested last year about McEntee's security clearance and background check," pointing "to reports that McEntee was fired from the White House two years ago because of a gambling addiction and that he was under investigation by the Department of Homeland Security for financial crimes."

Top McEntee Aide A College Senior. Politico (2/25, Lippman, McGraw, 4.29M), meanwhile, reports "the White House has hired a college senior to be one of the top officials in its powerful Presidential Personnel Office, according to three administration officials familiar with the matter." James Bacon, a 23-year-old senior at George Washington University, is "acting as one of the right-hand men" to McEntee, "according to the officials." According to Politico, Bacon "worked for McEntee on the Trump campaign's earliest days and also did some work on the advance team. He later did operations on the Trump transition."

Sources: Ratcliffe Again Under Consideration For DNI.

Citing unnamed sources, The Hill (2/25, Beavers, 2.98M) reports Rep. John Ratcliffe (R-TX) is "back under consideration as a potential pick to serve as President Trump's next Director of National Intelligence." Ratcliffe was considered for the role last year, "but he withdrew from consideration in August amid media scrutiny about his résumé and questions about his experience." At the time, Trump "blamed the media for derailing Ratcliffe," but he "also faced resistance from key GOP senators."

Grenell Asks Pierson To Remain In Post.

The New York Times (2/25, Barnes, 18.61M) reports acting DNI Grenell "has asked an intelligence official who angered some lawmakers with a briefing about Russian interference in the 2020 election to stay on in her role." To the Times, Grenell's move is "a peace offering to the 17 intelligence agencies he oversees." According to the Times, "some administration officials feared that the official who briefed the lawmakers, Shelby Pierson, would be removed" after she "was subjected to withering criticism" following "her briefing to a classified hearing of the House Intelligence Committee on Feb. 13 touched off a fierce partisan debate over the nature of Russia's interference in the 2020 election." In a brief interview Tuesday, Pierson "would not address the substance of her briefing, noting that it was classified, and said only that she would keep her job." Said Pierson, "Ambassador Grenell has not asked me to leave. In fact, he has encouraged and affirmed his support for my position here in the organization."

German Lawmakers Ask That Grenell Be Replaced As Ambassador. The Los Angeles Times (2/25, Kirschbaum, 4.64M) reports Grenell "will hold onto his post at the U.S. Embassy in Germany while leading the coordination of intelligence agencies in Washington. That has drawn criticism from some German leaders, who fear the lack of a full-time ambassador shows the US has downgraded the relationship." Nils Schmid, a leader in Parliament for the center-left Social Democrats, told Der Spiegel, "President Trump should name a successor who isn't a biased propaganda machine but instead will present Germany's position in Washington." Alexander Lambsdorff, another leader in Parliament for the opposition Free Democrats, said, "It's just not possible to coordinate 17 intelligence agencies and work on German-American relations at the same time, no matter how hard you work. In times like these, we need a full-time US ambassador."

Barr Names Carvajal As New Federal Prison System Director.

The AP (2/25, Balsamo) reports exclusively that Attorney General Barr has named a new director of the federal Bureau of Prisons, "months after shaking up the agency's top leadership following the death of wealthy financier Jeffrey Epstein, three people familiar with the matter" said. Barr reportedly named Michael Carvajal as the new director on Tuesday, replacing Kathy Hawk Sawyer, "who he had personally asked to return to run the agency in the wake of Epstein's death." Carvajal is currently the assistant director of the department's correctional programs division.

Report Finds State Department Struggling To Increase Diversity In Hiring.

The Washington Post (2/25, Morello, 14.2M) reports the State Department has "struggled to recruit and promote women and minorities despite a nearly three-decade effort and lags behind the average for the federal government as a whole, according to a federal report released Tuesday." The report, published by the Government Accountability Office, found Latinos "working for the government's premier Cabinet agency rose from 5 percent to 7 percent of the workplace, while African Americans dropped from 17 percent to 15 percent." It also found "women and minorities were promoted to management and executive ranks at a lower rate than their white and male counterparts."

TSA Freezes Hiring In Order To Pay For Cost-Of-Living Raises.

The Washington Post (2/25, Duncan, 14.2M) reports the Transportation Security Administration "has temporarily frozen hiring and overtime so it can afford across-the-board cost-of-living raises for employees, a move that leaders of the agency's employee union said could lead to long waits at airport checkpoints during spring break." The Post adds that Hydrick Thomas, "the union's president, said agency officials told him last week that the freezes would be in place until April or May." Said Thomas, "You're going to have long lines," adding, "That's just the way it works." According to the Post, "While the TSA said in its statement that it was prioritizing resources for the busiest time of the year, information from the Bureau of Transportation Statistics shows passenger counts jumped last March after the two quietest months of the year in January and February."

Mallinckrodt Agrees To $1.6B Deal to Settle Opioid Lawsuits.

The Washington Post (2/25, Zezima, Mettler, 14.2M) reports Mallinckrodt Pharmaceuticals, "one of the largest manufacturers of generic opioids," has "tentatively agreed to pay $1.6 billion to settle thousands of lawsuits in a major federal case attempting to determine who should pay for the ravages of the opioid crisis." Under the agreement, Mallinckrodt's generics division would file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, and "plaintiffs would also receive warrants for 20 percent of the generic company's outstanding shares." Mallinckrodt "reached the agreement with a group of lawyers representing thousands of municipalities that have sued companies up and down the opioid supply chain."

Trump: Sotomayor And Ginsburg Should Recuse Themselves From "Trump Related" Cases.

The AP (2/25, Sherman) reports that "a month before the Supreme Court takes up cases over his tax returns and financial records," President Trump yesterday "made the unusual suggestion that two liberal justices," Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor, "should not take part in those or any other cases involving him or his administration." Supreme Court justices "decide for themselves when to step aside from cases the court is considering, and it is highly unlikely either justice would sit out cases involving Trump, including two cases the court will hear on March 31 over subpoenas for Trump's tax, bank and financial records." The President "wants the justices to reject demands for the records issued by House committees and the Manhattan district attorney." Politico (2/25, Okun, 4.29M) recounts that on March 31, the Supreme Court "will hear back-to-back oral arguments on cases that ask whether the president must comply with congressional subpoenas for his financial records and if he is immune from state criminal investigations while serving in the White House."

The New York Times (2/25, Baker, 18.61M) says Trump "seized on a dissenting opinion last week by" Sotomayor and "a years-old comment" from Ginsburg to "demand" that they recuse themselves from "Trump-related" cases. On Twitter, the President quoted Fox News' Laura Ingraham, who wrote, "Sotomayor accuses GOP appointed Justices of being biased in favor of Trump." Trump wrote, "This is a terrible thing to say. Trying to 'shame' some into voting her way? She never criticized Justice Ginsberg when she called me a 'faker'. Both should recuse themselves on all Trump, or Trump related, matters!" According to the Times, "Besides ignoring the entreaties of" Attorney General Barr, the President's "attack on the two justices also risked provoking a reaction from" Chief Justice Roberts, who, in 2018, "admonished Mr. Trump for calling a Supreme Court justice who ruled against one of his administration's policies, 'an Obama judge.'"

NBC Nightly News (2/25, story 5, 1:40, Holt, 6.45M) recounted that "in a rare move for a Supreme Court Justice, back in 2016...Ginsburg criticized then candidate Trump as a faker, saying, 'I can't imagine what this country would be with Donald Trump as our President.' Ginsburg later said those remarks were ill-advised." NBC added, "Sotomayor in a dissent last week accused the court's conservatives of putting a thumb on the scale in favor of the Trump Administration, but never specifically accused anyone of bias."

The Washington Post (2/25, Flynn, Shammass, 14.2M) reports that Trump "doubled down on his criticism during a news conference Tuesday in New Delhi, telling reporters that the basis for his belief that the justices should recuse themselves was very obvious." Trump told reporters, "I always thought, frankly, that Justice Ginsburg should do it, because she went wild during the campaign when I was running. I don't know who she was for – perhaps she was for Hillary Clinton, if you can believe it – but she said some things that were obviously very inappropriate. ... She later sort of apologized. I wouldn't say it was an apology, but she sort of apologized. And then Justice Sotomayor said what she said yesterday. You know very well what she said yesterday. It was a big story. And I just don't know how they can not recuse themselves for anything having to do with Trump or Trump-related." Reuters (2/25, Holland), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Trump Highlights Weinstein's Ties To Top Democrats Including Michelle Obama, Hillary Clinton.

The New York Times (2/25, Baker, 18.61M) reports that in India on Tuesday, President Trump "called the conviction of...Harvey Weinstein on two felony sex crime charges 'a great victory' for women that 'sends a very strong message' about sexual misconduct, even as he sought to highlight the defendant's ties to Democrats." The Times says Trump "stressed that he had never liked Mr. Weinstein even though they knew each other through New York circles," and "then noted that the Hollywood producer had been an active friend and fund-raiser for Democratic politicians over the years. 'I was just not a fan of his,' Mr. Trump told reporters." Trump added, "I will say the people that liked him were the Democrats. Michelle Obama loved him, loved him. Hillary Clinton loved him. And he gave tremendous money to the Democrats, and I guess my question is will the Democrats be asking for that money back because he gave a lot of money to the Democrats." NBC Nightly News (2/25, story 6, 0:25, Holt, 6.45M) showed Trump saying, "I was never a fan of Harvey Weinstein, as you know. In fact, he said he was going work hard to defeat me in the election. How did that work out, by the way?"

The Washington Examiner (2/25, Crilly, 448K) reports that "Trump, who himself has denied inappropriate relations with several women, said it was a 'great victory' for women that 'sends a very strong message' for the #MeToo movement." The Washington Post (2/25, Wagner, 14.2M) also highlights that Trump "has denied accusations of sexual misconduct against him leveled by more than a dozen women." Under the headline "Trump Says He Was 'Never A Fan' Of Harvey Weinstein Despite Photo Of Them Together," Business Insider (2/25, Epstein, 3.67M) reports Trump "claimed that he did not know the disgraced Hollywood mogul." The Insider similarly reports that "more than 20 women have accused president Trump of sexual misconduct or assault over the years." Vice (2/25, Blest, 2.11M), among other news outlets, also reports the story under the headline "Trump Turned The Weinstein Verdict Into A Slam On Democrats."

Trump Says Fox News Leading Cable Ratings Because Of Favorable Coverage.

On Twitter, President Trump on Tuesday commented on Fox News Channel's record viewership numbers. Trump said, "That is because they cover your favorite President relatively well. @CNN & MSDNC are dying in the ratings!"

Trump Proposal To Cut Environmental Reviews Draws Criticism.

The AP (2/25, Knickmeyer) reports the White House's Council on Environmental Quality at a Tuesday hearing in Washington heard objections to its proposal "to cut back environmental reviews and restrict public comment on new highways, pipelines and other projects under the 1970 landmark National Environmental Policy Act, or NEPA." Many of those raising concerns about the proposed rollback at the hearing were "African American, Latino and tribal local activists from communities already dealing with pollution from oil refineries, chemical plants, government facilities and other big sources." On the other hand, "business representatives at Tuesday's hearing complained about yearslong environmental reviews under the current rules."

WTimes Analysis: Environmentalists Refuse To Credit Trump As US Leads World In Reducing Emissions. The Washington Times (2/25, Richardson, 492K) reports the United States under President Trump "led the world in reducing carbon-dioxide emissions in 2019," but "International Energy Agency data released earlier this month showing that U.S. emissions dropped by 2.9% last year failed to make an impression with Democrats, environmentalists and climate activists, who either shrugged off the data or argued that Mr. Trump's climate-denialism was somehow thwarted." According to the article, "such responses drew an eye-roll from Republicans." But "at the same time, the climate skeptics who have backed Mr. Trump's push to boost coal, bring back manufacturing, and pull out of the Paris agreement warned against doing backflips over the continued U.S. decline in greenhouse gases."

Rubio Anticipates Administration Will Not Try To End Offshore Drilling Moratorium.

Reuters (2/25, Gardner) reports that Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) yesterday "said he was confident" the Trump Administration "will extend a ban on oil and gas drilling off Florida, despite its enthusiasm for opening much of the country's coasts to petroleum development. 'I expect that the Trump Administration will not act to oppose or defeat my efforts to extend the offshore drilling moratorium in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico beyond its current expiration in 2022,' Rubio...said in a statement." Reuters adds that in December, Rubio "lifted a hold he had placed on the confirmation of Katharine MacGregor as deputy secretary of the Interior Department. He had voiced concern that MacGregor, a proponent of Trump's expansive oil and gas production policy, would work to lift the ban off Florida."

After Trump Mocks New York Sea Wall, Study Is Halted.

The New York Times (2/25, Barnard, 18.61M) reports the Administration has "unexpectedly halted a project to protect the New York City region from flooding during dangerous storms like Hurricane Sandy – a decision that came six weeks after President Trump took to Twitter to ridicule the study's most expensive proposal, a giant sea wall that could have cost billions of dollars." The announcement by the Army Corps of Engineers "that the project was 'indefinitely postponed' surprised some of its own officials, and local politicians and advocates said the decision was stunning at a time when climate change is threatening New York's future with intensifying storms." According to the article, while Trump "cannot single-handedly cancel a Corps project – the funding is allocated by Congress, and its work plan is determined jointly by Corps officials, the Department of Defense and the White House Office of Management and Budget – the unusual suspension of an ongoing project quickly led to speculation that politics had played a role."

Pence Blasts Sanders' Comments On Castro.

Todd Starnes (2/25) reports on his website that in an interview on his radio show Tuesday, Vice President Pence "slammed" Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) for "doubling down on his defense of the murderous Cuban dictator Fidel Castro." Sanders is "facing massive backlash" for saying in an interview with CBS that Castro "had a massive literacy program. Is that a bad thing, even though Fidel Castro did it?" Pence told Starnes, "I think there were jaws dropping all over the country. ... Castro had a literacy program so people could read Karl Marx. It was so he could indoctrinate the youth of Cuba into Marxism and Communism. ... People across the country know that what was once one of the most prosperous in our hemisphere has been (impoverished) by decades of dictatorship and socialism. And we are happy to have that debate and put out those facts." Pence "said the Trump administration will continue to stand strong for the people of Cuba."

Mary Bruce said on ABC World News Tonight (2/25, story 4, 2:25, 7.48M) that Sanders' comments created "shock waves. A spokeswoman for the DNC says, 'We are very clear in the Democratic party that we speak out against brutal dictatorships like those of Castro.'"

Morgan Radford reported on NBC Nightly News (2/25, story 4, 1:55, Holt, 6.45M) that Sanders is "doubling down on his controversial comments about Fidel Castro." Sanders: "Teaching people to read and write is a good thing. I have been extremely consistent and critical of all authoritarian regimes all over the world, including Cuba."

Cuban Press Praises Sanders' Comments. The Miami Herald (2/25, Torres, 1.09M) reports that Sanders' comments on Castro "received glowing, front-page reviews" in Cuba. The Communist Party newspaper Granma "prominently displayed a report about Sanders and his praise of 'some of the social programs implemented by the historic leader of the Cuban Revolution Fidel Castro.'" The paper said Sanders, "today one of the strongest candidates for the nomination of the Democratic Party to the November presidential elections, recognized Cuba's role in sending doctors worldwide." Several other state media outlets reported on Sanders' comments but they all "left out the senator's reference" to "the authoritarian nature of Cuba."

Trump Nominee To Federal Court Once Argued For Elimination Of Social Security, Federal Agencies.

The Washington Post (2/25, O'Harrow, 14.2M) reports, "A Trump nominee to serve on a court that hears claims against the government once argued that several federal agencies should be eliminated and that Social Security should be abolished because economic disparity 'is a natural aspect of the human condition.'" Stephen Schwartz, nominated to the US Court of Federal Claims, "spelled those ideas out 15 years ago in a student newspaper as an undergraduate at Yale." Schwartz argued "that the departments of Transportation, Agriculture and Education lack a 'constitutional basis,' and that Social Security benefits were intended to prevent 'outright starvation' but had become a 'standard component of most retirement programs.'" Bipartisan Group Of Former Senators Bemoans Focus On Judicial Confirmations.

The Washington Post (2/25, Kane, 14.2M) reports, "A bipartisan group of 70 former senators is trying to stage what amounts to an intervention with their counterparts of today, believing the Senate is withering away as an institution that is no longer an equal branch of government." The group "contends that the Senate has lost relevance over the past decade, particularly the past two years when the chamber has shied away from almost any contentious debate in favor of confirming President Trump's nominees to sub-Cabinet positions and the federal judiciary." In a letter published Tuesday as an op-ed in the Washington Post (2/25, 14.2M), they write, "The Senate – and the proper functioning of our Republic – are simply too important to be allowed to continue on their present course." According to the article, "the group's main complaint is that the Senate no longer holds wide-ranging debate on prominent issues of the day – in 2019, 75 percent of all votes pertained to confirming Trump's nominees, a dramatic increase from a decade earlier when less than 10 percent of roll calls related to confirmations."

Oregon Republicans Stage Walkout To Block Climate Legislation.

The Washington Times (2/25, Richardson, 492K) reports, "The Oregon state legislature adjourned Tuesday after House Republicans joined their Senate counterparts in walking out over cap-and-trade bills designed to combat climate change." The move "came as Republican legislators accused the majority Democrats of attempting to ram through the aggressive emissions restrictions on industry and business, arguing that the proposed limits should be placed on the ballot for the voters to decide." According to the article, "the House walkout came a day after Senate Republicans staged their own exit, denying Democrats the two-thirds majority needed to reach a quorum and conduct floor business, including reading and passing bills."

Louisiana Evaluating Projects To Restore Coastline.

The New York Times (2/25, Schwartz, Luong, 18.61M) reports on "an ambitious project to rebuild Louisiana's vanishing coast, which is rapidly being lost to rising seas and sinking land." Engineers have constructed "a scale model of a bend in the river in Louisiana" to test whether "their design for a river 'diversion' – an enormous mechanism for restoring eroded wetlands – will work." Louisiana "developed a $50 billion-dollar, 50-year master plan for coastal restoration and protection," but "planners have come to realize that they cannot restore all of the land lost over the decades, and have had to become strategic about what areas can be protected and how."

First Woman Expected To Join Army's Green Berets.

The New York Times (2/25, Gibbons-Neff, 18.61M) reports, "A National Guard soldier is set to become the Army's first female Green Beret in coming weeks, according to military officials, following the Pentagon's opening of all combat and Special Operations jobs to women in 2016." The enlisted soldier is "in the final stage of training before graduating from the roughly yearlong qualification course, or Q Course, as a Special Forces engineer sergeant. Her graduation is almost guaranteed, officials said, although occasionally soldiers have failed the course this late in the training or withdrawn because of injuries."

"Miracle On Ice" Team Face Backlash After Wearing "Keep America Great" Hats At Trump Rally.

The Washington Times (2/25, Chasmar, 492K) reports, "The 'Miracle on Ice' hockey team that famously defeated the Russians during the 1980 Olympics is facing fire for wearing 'Keep America Great' hats during a campaign rally for President Trump in Nevada." Trump "honored 14 of the 20 players from the legendary team in Las Vegas on Friday to celebrate the 40-year anniversary of their shocking win over the Soviet Union, which paved the way for their gold medal victory over Finland." A Twitter account claiming to represent the team "responded to the flurry of criticism against the photos, claiming that the team did not mean to make a political statement."

The Washington Post (2/25, Nakamura, 14.2M) reports that "if he had to do it again," Mike Eruzione, who served as the team's captain said he would not put on the hat. Eruzione, now serving as the director of special outreach at his alma mater, Boston University, "said he has received angry calls and messages from the school's alumni." Eruzione said, "If we knew we were going to p--- off this many people, we probably would not have put the hats on. That's the big question here. A lot of the stuff I got was, 'You guys said it's not political, but when you put the hats on, you made it political.'

USA Today (2/25, Bumbaca, 10.31M) reports Eruzione added, "I just put (the hat) on. I wasn't thinking. Maybe this shows I'm naive, shows I'm stupid. I don't know. I don't follow politics. I know he's had some issues and said a lot of things people don't like."

McConnell: GOP Shouldn't Speculate On Which Democrat Will Be Easiest To Beat.

The Washington Times (2/25, Swoyer, 492K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell "said Tuesday it's 'foolish' for Republicans to speculate which Democratic presidential hopeful is the easiest to beat in November, adding the field has moved too far to the left as a whole." He said, "It looks like moderate Democrats are an endangered species, or may have disappeared already." McConnell added, "There is not a whole lot of difference between any of them. They all look pretty much the same to me."

Ocasio-Cortez Suggests Voters Should Disregard Cynicism Over Politics To Defeat Trump.

The Washington Times (2/25, Ernst, 492K) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "says voters who are tired of broken promises should embrace a 'suspension of disbelief' for one day if they want to defeat President Trump's reelection bid." During an appearance on "The Breakfast Club" Tuesday morning, Ocasio-Cortez "pitched a temporary abandonment of reality as a means of securing victory." She said, "I understand the cynicism of not voting 10,000 percent, because how many politicians have come through and promised things and then just ended up being major disappointments? Ultimately, at least, if we're not suspending our disbelief for one day, or two days, on Election Day, you know – we can go back to the cynicism [afterward], we're just asking for two days out of the year to just cast a vote because the system that we have now is with the electorate that we have now."

Conservatives Urge Republicans To Vote In South Carolina's Democratic Primary.

The New York Times (2/25, Rojas, 18.61M) reports that while the Republican Party of South Carolina canceled the state's presidential primary, "some conservative activists, eager to unearth any political advantage, are encouraging Republicans to vote this weekend anyway – for a Democrat." Backers of the effort are encouraging Republicans to take advantage of the state's open primary system. While organizers "conceded that they relished the chance to roil Democrats," they "said they were motivated by a larger mission: For years, conservative activists have sought to close South Carolina's open primaries, and this election offered ideal circumstances for creating a live demonstration of the flaws they see in the system."

Media Analyses: Frontrunner Sanders Faces Fierce Attacks During Chaotic Debate.

Coverage of Tuesday night's Democratic presidential debate in Charleston, South Carolina largely casts the event as a chaotic and feisty affair, in which the candidates – particularly frontrunner Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and to a somewhat lesser degree, Michael Bloomberg – faced fierce attacks from their rivals. The Charleston (SC) Post and Courier (2/25, Lovegrove, 290K) reports, "In a cacophonous two-hour debate," the "seven 2020 Democratic presidential candidates sparred over gun control, healthcare, their voting records and which of them would be most likely to defeat President Donald Trump. The combative" event, "which at many times was overrun by crosstalk as the contenders yelled over each other, underscored the high stakes in South Carolina's 'First in the South' primary this Saturday, with several campaigns on the ropes." Although Joe Biden "has led polls in South Carolina," it was Sanders "who took the most incoming fire" after having "emerged as the frontrunner in the overall race."

Under the headline "Bernie Sanders Absorbs Brunt Of Rivals' Attacks in Debate Free-For-All," Bloomberg (2/25, Niquette, Epstein, Pager, 4.73M) reports that Sanders "felt the burden of his front-runner status in the Democratic presidential race as all six of his rivals delivered an onslaught of attacks" designed to slow "his momentum." The article says Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "accused Sanders of stealing details of her health-care plan," Bloomberg "said Russia's intelligence services favor" Sanders "because Vladimir Putin wants President Donald Trump to be re-elected," Biden hit Sanders over his "past stances on gun control," and Pete Buttigieg "accused him of living in the past. 'I've been hearing my name mentioned a little bit tonight,' Sanders said."

The Washington Post (2/25, Viser, Linskey, Sullivan, Wootson, 14.2M) reports that during the debate, Sanders "came under withering and sustained criticism," with his opponents launching "urgent attempts to stop the candidate who has the clearest path to the Democratic nomination." The Post says Sanders "faced attacks from all sides on matters including his inconsistent record on gun control, his praise for leftist dictators, the cost of his signature Medicare-for-all plan and the damage other candidates believe he would inflict on the Democratic Party if he were the nominee. 'I'm hearing my name mentioned a little bit tonight!' Sanders...said, with a mixture of glee and sarcasm. 'I wonder why?'"

Politico (2/25, Caputo, McCaskill, 4.29M) reports that during the debate, Sanders "got a taste of being the frontrunner," while Bloomberg "was once again in the hot seat," and Biden "slid under the radar without too much trouble." Still, Politico says the event "probably didn't do much to change the race, which could be good news for Sanders and Biden. Sanders, who won the most votes in the first three nominating states, has established himself as the one to beat – and the candidate the others needed to stop but haven't. Biden is staking his candidacy on a win in South Carolina in its Saturday primary, and judging by the applause in the audience, he's still the favorite in the Palmetto State."

The AP (2/25, Peoples, 1.04M) reports that Sanders' Democratic rivals "unleashed a roaring assault" against him "and seized on...Bloomberg's past with women in the workplace during a contentious debate....that tested the strength of the two men at the center of the party's presidential nomination fight. As the undeniable Democratic front-runner, Sanders faced the brunt of the attacks," including "for one of the few times" from "fellow progressive...Warren," who "pressed the case that she could execute ideas that" Sanders "could only talk about." The AP adds, "A group of moderates, meanwhile, fought to emerge as the chief Sanders alternative." However, they "did little to draw separation among themselves, a dynamic that has so far only benefited" Sanders.

The New York Times (2/25, Martin, Burns, 18.61M) reports that delivering "a barrage of criticism against their party's emerging front-runner," Sanders' rivals portrayed "him as a divisive figure with unrealistic ideas, even as they continued to batter...Bloomberg for his extreme wealth, his record on policing and his alleged behavior toward women." The Times says Sanders "cut a combative but perhaps not a commanding figure, firmly defending his left-wing agenda on subjects like health care and foreign policy against attacks from all sides. The forum plunged repeatedly into an unsightly spectacle of flailing hands and raised voices, and even outright chaos, with candidates talking over one another and the moderators struggling and failing at times to direct an orderly argument."

Under the headline "Rivals Question Front-Runner Sanders' Electability At Rowdy South Carolina Democratic Debate," Reuters (2/25, Renshaw, Hunnicutt) reports that Sanders, the "surging Democratic presidential front-runner," drew "withering fire in a boisterous debate." with his rivals attacking "the high cost of his ambitious economic agenda and warn[ing] he would cost the party the White House and control of Congress. In a debate that featured candidates repeatedly shouting over one another and ignoring their time limits, Sanders' opponents united in attacking the...self-avowed democratic socialist as a risky choice to lead Democrats against Republican President Donald Trump in November."

USA Today (2/25, King, Behrmann, Groppe, Collins, 10.31M) reports that Sanders "felt the burn during Tuesday's debate. The frontrunner for the Democratic presidential nomination took fire...from his Democratic rivals on a number of fronts – his comments about Fidel Castro's Cuba, his harsh words against a prominent Jewish lobby, his general electability against...Trump if he wins the nomination." USA Today adds, "Facing pressure to prove both why they should stay in the race and why Sanders shouldn't get the nomination, other candidates attacked him on the practicality of his plans, his ability to implement his promises and whether he would cause Democrats to lose not just the White House but Congress as well."

In a "news analysis," the New York Times (2/25, Flegenheimer, Ember, 18.61M) reports, "Onstage for the first time as the unambiguous front-runner and object of his peers' attention, Mr. Sanders made clear in the debate...that the changing circumstances – strong showings in South Carolina and on Super Tuesday could propel him to a runaway delegate lead – would not much change the man. He was never surprised, never entirely smooth and, when it was done, not necessarily looking any less the favorite than he did going in." Even so, says the Times – citing his remarks on Cuba and Castro – Sanders "at once reinforced the reservations that many in the party still have about him and laid bare the power and peril of his politics: his own unyielding worldview – and just how unlikely he is to adapt it to anyone else's definition of electability."

The Washington Times (2/25, McLaughlin, Swoyer, 492K) reports, "Fearing Mr. Sanders is poised to run away with the nomination, his" rivals "took their best shots" at him, "hoping to convince his growing number of supporters that he is political suicide for Democrats. But they also swarmed...Bloomberg, fearing the billionaire is too well-positioned to be the Sanders alternative in next week's Super Tuesday primaries, where the nomination could be settled."

The Los Angeles Times (2/25, Barabak, Mason, 4.64M) reports, "With Sanders threatening to run away with the" race for the Democratic presidential nomination, "other candidates did all they could to trip him up." But while he "seemed peeved at times," Sanders "largely parried the attacks by falling back on staples such as the virtues of his Medicare for all plan. ... In fact, it was the audience that got deepest under Sanders' skin, when they booed his answer explaining his praise for Cuba's literacy programs. 'Really?' he shouted over the jeers. 'Really?'" The Times adds that after "his widely panned debate performance last week in Las Vegas," Bloomberg "for the most part...cleared the rather low bar set by his previous performance."

The New York Post (2/25, Bowden, 4.57M) reports that Sanders "refused to retreat from his romantic views on Cuba and its late dictator...Castro, even as the audience of the Democratic presidential debate in Charleston loudly booed him." Sanders "took repeated incoming fire from fellow candidates on stage after he lauded Castro's literacy program in the 1960s in a CNN town hall on Monday and '60 Minutes' the night before. 'What I said is what Barack Obama said in terms of Cuba – that Cuba made progress on education,' Sanders said to loud boos from the audience. 'When dictatorships, whether it's the Chinese or Cubans, do something good, you acknowledge that,' he continued."

In a separate story, the New York Post (2/25, Report, 4.57M) reports that Sanders "withstood a barrage of attacks – some withering – Tuesday night from his six rivals, who mounted the last best effort to slow his momentum heading into the South Carolina primary, said Post debate expert Monica Klein," who is quoted as saying, "Bernie was the one to beat on the stage and no one landed a real lasting punch as we head into South Carolina. Without Bloomberg on the stage, Bernie would have received the brunt of everyone's attacks. Instead, they had a second target to shoot at, which helped insulate Bernie."

USA Today (2/25, Morin, 10.31M) reports that Sanders "was hit harder than he has been in any other debate," but "ended the night on a high note. He received loud applause after quoting Nelson Mandela for the motto 'that moves me the most.' 'Mandela said, 'Everything is impossible until it happens,' Sanders said.'" He "prefaced the quote by saying that the biggest misconception about him is that 'the ideas I'm talking about are radical.' 'They're not,' he said. 'In one form or another, they exist in countries all over the world.'"

Writing for The Atlantic (2/25, 3.47M), Russell Berman says, "Well, that was loud," adding that the candidates "shouted their way through the...debate." Berman says, "They interrupted one another, bickered over one another, and bitterly accused one another of all manner of political and moral failings." Berman adds, "For Biden, and indeed for several of the candidates onstage," the debate "was perhaps their final opportunity to rejigger the Democratic race before... Sanders can dramatically widen his delegate lead next week in the Super Tuesday contests. ... In their voices you could hear not only anger but panic."

Writing for the New Yorker (2/25, 5.82M), Eric Lach says that Sanders entered the debate "as the undisputed front-runner for the Democratic nomination. And, from the jump, he got treated that way by his opponents." However, "there were six of them, and one of him, and the dynamic that has defined the past few weeks of the race – all of the non-Sanders candidates being unable to claim the mantle of strongest non-Sanders candidate – played out onstage. There were simply too many voices, and not enough time, which led to long stretches of muddy argument and several episodes of unintelligible shouting."

Politico (2/25, 4.29M) reports that Sanders "had to defend his record on guns, his words about authoritarian countries around the world, and how he would pay for his plans" as his rivals "tried to knock the frontrunner down a peg. But Sanders was also able to lean on well-worn campaign slogans and even faded into the background for large portions of an ill-tempered debate marred by cross-talk and marked by a number of other conflicts."

Axios (2/25, Basu, 521K) reports, "A revitalized sense of urgency permeated the performance of nearly every candidate on stage, as Sanders threatens to run away with an insurmountable delegate lead after Super Tuesday." Axios says that Buttigieg, "who clashed with Sanders several times, said: 'If you want to keep the House in Democratic hands, check with the people that turned the House blue. 40 Democrats are not running on Sen. Sanders' platform – they're running away from it as fast as they possibly can.'" Axios adds, "The coronavirus, the humanitarian catastrophe in Idlib, and President Trump's interference in the rule of law have been among the biggest global storylines over the past few weeks, but they received little to no attention at Tuesday's debate."

The New York Post (2/25, Lapin, 4.57M) reports that Bloomberg and Sanders, "the only two Jewish candidates in the Democratic primary race, spoke about Israel and whether they would relocate the American embassy from Jerusalem back to Tel Aviv, if elected." Sanders "said he would consider reversing... Trump's controversial action, but didn't commit to making the change." For his part, Bloomberg "said he wouldn't move the embassy. 'You can't move the embassy back,' Bloomberg, 78, said. 'It was done, and you will have to leave it there.'"
