Telecom Italia Excludes Huawei From 5G Core Equipment Tender In Italy, Brazil. Reuters (7/9, Pollina) reports two sources familiar with the matter "said on Thursday. Telecom Italia (TIM) has excluded Huawei from a tender for 5G equipment for the core network it is preparing to build in Italy and Brasil." One of the two sources "said the list of invited suppliers comprises Cisco, Ericsson, Nokia, Mavenir and Affirmed Networks, a company recently acquired by Microsoft." The move comes "amid reports that Italy is considering whether to exclude Huawei from building its 5G network over concerns it could open the way for China to spy on key Western telecoms infrastructure."

UK's Huawei VP Insists Staff "Free To Express Views." The Independent \(UK\) (7/9, Cowburn, 1.36M) reports Huawei's UK vice president "has insisted employees at the company are free to express their views – before claiming he did not have a view on China's imposition of a new draconian security law for Hong Kong." It comes as Boris Johnson and senior ministers "consider reversing a major decision in January to give the Chinese telecommunications giant the green light to help develop the UK's mobile network, despite protests from the US and Tory MPs." Appearing at Westminster's Science and Technology Committee, senior executives at Huawei "were asked by chairman and former Conservative minister Greg Clark whether employees and directors at the company in the UK 'free to express their views.'"

UK Reportedly May Face Mobile Blackouts If Huawei Ban Rushed. BBC News Online \(UK\) (7/9, 1.02M) reports BT and Vodafone have "said their UK customers would face mobile phone signal blackouts if they are given three years or less to strip Huawei's equipment out of their 5G networks." Executives from the network providers "told MPs that they wanted at least five years, and ideally seven, if such an order is made." The government is expected "to announce new curbs on the use of the Chinese firm's kit within the next two weeks." Huawei has "urged it to take more time." Huawei's UK vice president Jeremy Thompson said, "There isn't a burning bridge."

Herman: How The US Can Help The West Compete In 5G Without Huawei. Forbes (7/9, Herman, 9.71M) contributor and Hudson Institute fellow Arthur Herman writes, "The competition between the U.S. and China over who will dominate the world's 5G networks is fast reaching a boiling point." Though China's "crackdown on Hong Kong is bound to give some pause" to governments who are considering using Huawei telecom equipment, the supplier's "slick marketing, low-cost contracts, and Beijing-backed financial incentives has convinced ninety-plus countries to sign some part of their 5G future over to Huawei, despite that company's questionable record on everything from security and reliability to alleged links to the Chinese military and intelligence services." Herman discusses how the US can potentially compete with Huawei, a "question that bedevils policy-makers as well as engineers and corporate leaders."

WSJournal Welcomes British Plans To Exclude Huawei From 5G Network. A Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial praises a planned move by British Prime Minister Boris Johnson to end Huawei's role in Britain's 5G rollout.

Op-Ed: Strong Cybersecurity Strategy Is No Longer A Luxury For Small Businesses.

In an op-ed on the CNBC (7/9, 3.62M) website, Sen. Jim Risch (R-ID) writes, "The pandemic has seriously impacted the health of businesses everywhere, and for most employers, getting back to business cannot come soon enough. But while businesses across the country prepare to welcome back their customers, hackers and cyber criminals are actively infiltrating and exploiting small business databases. Cyberattacks have skyrocketed worldwide as criminals capitalize on the confusion and anxiety surrounding the coronavirus pandemic. In a recent press release, the FBI characterized the number of online schemes to swindle both businesses and individuals out of money and personal data as 'truly breathtaking.'" He adds, "Earlier this year, I introduced the bipartisan SECURE Small Business Act to help small business owners access information on data protection best practices and enable them to band together to purchase cybersecurity products at lower prices. A strong cybersecurity strategy is no longer a luxury – it is a necessity."

Implications Of FERC Grid Cybersecurity Review For Power Companies.

Law360 (7/9, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports that, "since the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic, utilities have experienced an increase in ransomware and other cybersecurity attacks, and federal authorities have advised the energy sector to remain vigilant to these threats." The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on 18 June "issued a notice of inquiry, or NOI, seeking comments on potential cybersecurity enhancements to the Critical Infrastructure Protection, or CIP, reliability standards." These enhancements are the "result of FERC's recent comparison of the current CIP reliability standards with the National Institute of Standards and Technology, or NIST, Cybersecurity Framework."

Experts Say Cybersecurity Safeguards Should Extend To Supply-Chain Partners.

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Pellathy, Stank, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the dramatic shift of millions of Americans to remote work has allowed many companies to maintain operations under the enormous strain of the Covid-19 pandemic, but it has also opened them up to a wider range of cyber threats.

UN Rules Require Cybersecurity Guarantees For Connected Cars.

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Stupp, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a new United Nations regulation will require automobile manufacturers to secure connected vehicles against cyberattacks in regions including the European Union, Japan, and South Korea. Manufacturers must also guarantee that their suppliers have cybersecurity protections in place, and will be required to implement technology to analyze attempted cyberattacks. The European Union plans to begin implementing the rules in 2022.

State And Local Officials Scramble To Prepare For Upcoming Election.

The Washington Post (7/9, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that state and local election officials are scrambling "to prepare for November's general election." The officials were "summoned by the Election Assistance Commission...to pore over the good, the bad and the ugly from more than three months of primaries since the coronavirus pandemic struck in March." They described elections that "were completely revamped in a matter of weeks and massive shortages of poll workers, since many were not willing or able to risk their health by showing up on Election Day. "The percentage of absentee voters "climbed to 10 and even 20 times their typical levels in many states." The public hearing was "among just a handful of instances when election officials from different states will gather before November, in hopes the lessons learned will help the general election run more smoothly."

Germany Warns Personal Data Vulnerable Via Chinese Apps.

The AP (7/9) reports that Germany's BfV domestic intelligence agency "is warning consumers that personal data they provide to Chinese payment companies or other tech firms could end up in the hands of China's government." In its annual report, the BfV "noted that Chinese government offices have access to data stored in China by companies such as Tencent, Alibaba 'as well as other apps, web services and mobility providers such as for example (bike sharing) providers' that operate in Germany."

TFI/Sanctions

India's Reliance Permitted To Load Venezuelan Oil Under Fuel Swap Deal Despite Sanctions.

Reuters (7/10, Saul, Psaledakis, Parraga) reports, "India's Reliance will load its first cargo of Venezuelan crude in three months this week in exchange for diesel under a swap deal the parties say is permitted under the U.S. sanctions regime on the Latin American country, according to a Reliance source and a shipping document from state oil firm PDVSA." Reliance "gave the U.S. State Department and the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) notice of the diesel swap and received word back that the policies that allowed the transaction were still in place, the Reliance source told Reuters."

Federal Reserve

NYTimes Examines Perceived Flaws In Fed's Main Street Loan Program.

The New York Times (7/9, Smialek, 18.61M) looks at the example of Philadelphia-based La Colombe, a "purveyor of fancy coffee and canned draft lattes," in seeking aid from the Federal Reserve's Main Street loan program. The Times says the program suffers from "a Goldilocks design: Firms won't use it if credit conditions are healthy and banks won't use it if they are too unhealthy. It could help companies access credit if the situation is just right – for instance, if credit conditions tighten with a second virus wave in the fall, but banks and borrowers expect the economy to recover before long."

San Francisco Fed To Launch Biweekly Seminars On Economics Of Climate Change.

Reuters (7/9, Saphir) reports the San Francisco Fed, "which last year hosted the U.S. central bank's first conference on the economics of climate change, said Thursday it will next week launch a series of biweekly research seminars on the topic." The announcement "suggests the potential implications of climate change for monetary, supervisory and trade policy are of concern for the Fed even as it put much of its research power in recent months into understanding and battling the coronavirus pandemic." According to Reuters, the Fed "has lagged its global peers in attention to the impact of climate change on the economy and in crafting responses."

Fed's Balance Sheet Dips Below $7 Trillion.

Reuters (7/9, Burns) reports the Fed's balance sheet shrank for the fourth week in a row, reaching below $7 trillion. The "use of one of its key emergency liquidity measures dropped to zero for the first time since September," and its "total balance sheet size declined by about $88 billion to $6.97 trillion as of July 8 versus $7.06 trillion a week earlier."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Fintech Lender SoFi Applies For National Bank Charter With OCC.

Reuters (7/9, Irrera) reports student lender SoFi announced Thursday it has applied for a national bank charter with the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency. The company "previously filed for a bank license in 2017, but withdrew the application that same year following the departure of senior executives, including co-founder and former CEO Mike Cagney."

American Banker (7/9, Wack, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "SoFi, which was one of the first fintechs to achieve a $1 billion-plus valuation, currently offers student loans, mortgages, personal loans, investment services and a cash management account." CEO Anthony Noto in a statement "said...that a bank charter will allow SoFi to expand its menu of offerings." According to American Banker, "One benefit of becoming a bank is that SoFi would be able to operate under a single set of regulatory standards, rather than the 50-state scheme that applies to nonbank lenders, which should result in cost savings." CNBC (7/9, de León, 3.62M) reports a bank charter would also "allow SoFi to lend money and accept deposits independent of the partner banks it currently works with, as well as offer more competitive interest rates for its suite of loans, checking and savings offerings."

Law360 (7/9, Subscription Publication, 8K), Business Insider (7/9, Defrancesco, 3.67M), Finextra (7/9), and Forbes (7/9, Fuscaldo, 9.71M) provide similar coverage.

Analysis: CRA Overhaul Implementation Still Murky.

In an analysis, the ABA Banking Journal (7/9, Shonk) says, "While the events and the politics surrounding the rulemaking process" of the OCC's CRA overhaul "have provided ample fodder for political pundits and industry observers, three important points have gone largely unnoticed." These are that the new performance measures under the CRA will only "affect a limited number of banks," performance benchmarks are still unconfirmed, and "much work remains – for all agencies." The OCC "will also need to issue guidance on various aspects of the rule, including the documentation needed to demonstrate that a consumer loan qualifies for CRA credit, as well as guidance to standardize how examiners apply performance context in CRA evaluations."

S&P Global: PPP May Be Big Revenue Boost For Banks, But Carries Risk And Cost.

CU Today (7/9) reports that at least 30 US banks "will earn as much in income from the Paycheck Protection Program as they reported in net revenue for all of 2019, according to one new analysis." However, the PPP has been a "massive headache" and carries both risk and cost. "Policymakers have repeatedly changed the guidance, several small businesses have filed lawsuits alleging banks favored larger clients, technical issues forced long hours, and the forgiveness process remains deeply uncertain – raising financial, legal and reputational risks," said S&P Global Market Intelligence in a new report. S&P Global "added the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency flagged PPP lending as a potential distraction for compliance with the bevy of regulations banks have to follow on a regular basis."

JPMorgan Dropped Clients That Got Deutsche Bank Into Regulatory Trouble.

Bloomberg (7/9, 4.73M) reports, "The trio of clients that got Deutsche Bank in regulatory trouble this week had a shared back story: They were all castoffs of JPMorgan Chase." Deutsche Bank, which was hit with a $150 million fine earlier this week for missing or disregarding compliance red flags for years, "moved millions of dollars across the globe for convicted sex offender Jeffrey Epstein in the past decade, and billions on behalf of international lenders Danske Bank A/S and FBME Bank Ltd." JPMorgan "stepped away from handling money for FBME in 2009" and "distanced from the others around 2013," after the OCC ordered the bank to clean up its anti-money-laundering controls.

Wells Fargo Planning To Cut Thousands Of Jobs.

Bloomberg (7/9, Levitt, 4.73M) reports Wells Fargo "is preparing to cut thousands of jobs starting later this year, potentially setting a bleak precedent for an industry that's been resisting mass layoffs as the coronavirus pandemic worsens." Pressure to cut costs "is coming to a head inside the bank, prompting executives to draft plans that may ultimately eliminate tens of thousands of positions, people with knowledge of the confidential talks said." CEO Charlie Scharf since taking the helm in October "has been reviewing Wells Fargo's businesses and developing strategy changes that were widely expected to include some reductions," but the bank still joined others "in pledging to suspend new job cuts when the pandemic began upending commerce and markets this year." While some including Goldman Sachs "have indicated they'll maintain their pledge through the end of the 2020," Wells Fargo "has been more conservative, implementing a shorter moratorium and then adjusting it, people with knowledge of the planning said."

Reuters (7/9), The Financial Times (7/9, Noonan, Armstrong, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and Business Insider (7/9, 3.67M) provide similar coverage.

Wells Fargo Pledges Its $400M In PPP Fees To Help Small Businesses.

Reuters (7/9, Moise) reports Wells Fargo "will donate over $400 million toward helping small businesses recover from the coronavirus pandemic, giving away all proceeds from its participation in the Payroll Protection Program." At least $28 million "is earmarked for non-profit community lenders catering to Black entrepreneurs, the bank said."

American Banker (7/9, Kline, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, and Citigroup have made similar pledges but "haven't said how much they plan to give away in total." Wells' $400 million "will be split into three areas, according to Jenny Flores, head of small-business growth philanthropy. Flores said most of the money – $250 million – will be allocated to CDFIs, with a focus on Black and African American-owned small businesses." About $100 million in grants "will be distributed through economic development agencies and other organizations to help small businesses with long-term recovery, Flores said. The final $50 million is being directed to nonprofits that will assist small businesses with training, mentoring and other education so that those companies can adapt their business models as necessary."

Bloomberg (7/9, Levitt, 4.73M) provides similar coverage.

Wells Fargo Raises Balance Requirement For New Customers Seeking Jumbo Refinancing.

CNBC (7/9, Son, 3.62M) reports that for jumbo mortgage refinancing, "Wells Fargo is raising the bar for new customers" requiring them to "bring at least $1 million in balances if they want to refinance a jumbo mortgage, up from a previous level of $250,000." The bank also "did away with the $250,000 requirement for existing customers."

Wells Fargo Names New Head Of Home Lending.

HousingWire (7/9, Falcon, 23K) reports, Wells Fargo "announced Kristy Fercho will join the company as the new head of Wells Fargo Home Lending, beginning in August." The current head, Michael DeVito, is retiring. Fercho has been "president of the mortgage division at Flagstar Bank since 2017."

American Banker (7/9, Sinnock, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Fercho "is also the vice chair of the Mortgage Bankers Association," and was "a senior vice president in Fannie Mae's single-family division."

Big Banks Back Climate Finance Center.

American Banker (7/9, Alix, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, Wells Fargo, and Goldman Sachs "have joined with a clean energy nonprofit to help accelerate the transition away from fossil fuels." The banks have provided financial support to launch the Rocky Mountain Institute's new Center for Climate-Aligned Finance, which "will focus broadly on developing practical solutions to help financial institutions navigate the challenges involved in the shift to renewable energy – as lenders, power consumers and corporate citizens."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Supreme Court Lets Trump Run Out The Clock." The New York Times (7/9, 18.61M) editorializes that President Trump "has again figured out how to game the legal system to his advantage," and "the bottom line is that" he "will almost certainly get to keep hiding his tax returns...and his other financial records from the American people."

Washington Post.

"The Court Rejects Trump's Imperious Arguments On Subpoenas, But It Doesn't Go Far Enough." In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/9, 14.2M) says the Supreme Court "effectively rewarded [President] Trump's policy of total noncooperation with Congress and other investigators, allowing him to foil attempts to scrutinize his behavior before the November election."

"The Sissi Regime Is Employing Hostage-taking To Interfere In U.S. Justice." The Washington Post (7/9, 14.2M) editorializes that former Egyptian Prime Minister Hazem el-Beblawi is the subject of a US lawsuit filed by an American citizen previously held as a political prisoner in Egypt, Mohamed Soltan. After Soltan filed the lawsuit, the regime of Abdel Fatah al-Sisi "seized five of Mr. Soltan's cousins and informed their families that they will not be freed unless the suit is dropped. Its embassy in Washington is meanwhile demanding that the State Department intervene in the lawsuit on Mr. Beblawi's side, while warning that if it does not, the U.S.-Egyptian 'strategic relationship' will be endangered." The Post argues that "in effect, the Sissi regime is employing hostage taking and blackmail in an attempt to interfere with the U.S. judicial system."

Wall Street Journal.

"A Bad Day For The Presidency." The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that while President Trump can take solace in the fact that his records are unlikely to be public any time soon, Thursday's Supreme Court ruling weakens the presidency as an institution.

"Hating Clarence Thomas." A Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes Twitter for failing to curb what it says were racist attacks against Justice Clarence Thomas Thursday in response to his dissenting votes in two Supreme Court decisions on Trump's tax records. The Journal calls on Twitter to label such racist tweets as hate speech.

"A U.K. Reversal On Huawei?" A Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial praises a planned move by British Prime Minister Boris Johnson to end Huawei's role in Britain's 5G rollout.

"Joe Biden Vs. The Nuns." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) accuses Joe Biden of acting in a highly divisive manner as he threatens – in the Journal's view – to further harass a group of nuns and drag them back to court in order to defend controversial ACA provisions.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Billy Eichner, Guest Host For Jimmy Kimmel: "Hollywood is under a lot of pressure to get back to work. But as Governor Gavin Newsom said today, 'Even with COVID rates spiking all over California, it's all worth it if we can achieve herd immunity among the cast of 'Barry.'"

Billy Eichner: "Now as you may have heard, Donald Trump's niece Mary Trump is releasing a tell-all book about the President which is already selling well. And she just announced she's working on a series of children's books about the President, including 'Horton Withdraws from WHO,' 'The Taking Tree,' 'Cloudy With a Chance of White Supremacy,' and 'Goodnight Mooch.'"

Billy Eichner: "Joe Biden has opened up a double-digit lead over Trump in many polls. Although Trump does a little better among likely voters, and he's actually leading among voters likely to eat cascade. And pundits are saying it's Trump's failed response to COVID which has helped Joe Biden make such a big leap in the polls. That's because the virus has exposed Trump's flaws, and because it's forced Biden to wear a mask, which has allowed him to hide the fact that he looks like a Halloween decoration. Now don't get me wrong, I'm praying the man wins, but he looks like if you get too close to him, his eyes will turn red and he'll start singing 'Monster Mash' until you take out his batteries. And by that, I mean he'd be a major improvement."

Billy Eichner: "People are saying Biden's choice of a vice president will be critical. But I mean, really? We all know that it's going to be one of a handful of people. Do you think right at the last minute he's gonna throw us a curveball and pick, like, Christina Applegate?"

Treasury in the News

Lawmakers Press Mnuchin On Opportunity Zone Misuse.

Black Enterprise (7/8, McKinney, 2.57M) reports the House Oversight Subcommittee on Economic and Consumer Policy "is investigating the potential misuse of the Opportunity Zone Program." Reps. Raja Krishnamoorthi (D-IL) and Rashida Tlaib (D-MI), chair and member of the subcommittee respectively, "submitted a letter to U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin." The lawmakers said in the letter, "In particular, we are concerned about possible abuses in the Department's designation of certain census tracts as Qualified Opportunity Zones in Detroit, Los Angeles, and Oklahoma City. These areas appear unqualified for the program, and raise questions about whether Treasury's designations were done to benefit individuals or entities with a personal or political connection to President Trump."

Mnuchin's LA Country Club Got Millions In PPP Loans.

The Daily Beast (7/8, Bredderman, 1.39M) reports that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin's country club, the Riviera County Club, "received $2 million to $5 million in assistance through the Paycheck Protection Program – a multibillion-dollar initiative intended to carry small businesses and their employees through the COVID-19 pandemic." The article says the club "reported that the federal aid preserved 159 jobs." Mnuchin, "whose Department of the Treasury has assisted in the operation of the program, disclosed his membership in the elite institution to the U.S. Senate during his confirmation process in 2017."

MarketWatch Analysis: Over 500,000 PPP Loan Recipients Are Listed As Retaining Zero Jobs.

MarketWatch (7/8, Passy, 1.67M) reports the PPP loan data "suggests that hundreds of thousands of businesses across the country got access to funds without indicating how many jobs would be saved." The SBA "has said the program has helped support about 51 million jobs. Yet, wrinkles in the data point to issues the federal government will face when keeping businesses accountable once it comes time to verify whether the loans they received will be forgiven. A MarketWatch analysis of the government data found that just over 554,000 small businesses who got PPP funds reported retaining zero jobs. Nearly 50,000 of these business had received loans larger than $150,000, and more than 300 have received loans between $5 million and $10 million."

Axios (7/8, Primack, 521K) reports the Treasury Department "is pointing the finger at lenders for errors discovered in Monday's PPP data disclosure." A "senior administration official" is quoted: "Companies listed had their PPP applications entered into SBA's Electronic Transmission (ETran) system by an approved PPP lender. If a lender did not cancel the loan in the ETran system, the loan is listed." That explanation "makes the most sense for phantom loans like the one listed for e-scooter company Bird, given that the SBA shouldn't otherwise have its financial information." However, it is still not known "how many errors were made."

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Winkler, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Trump, Mexican President Meet At White House To Celebrate USMCA.

Coverage of President Trump's meeting at the White House Wednesday with Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador casts it as politically motivated, and devotes little attention to the purpose of the visit: start of the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA). The story was not mentioned Wednesday night on the major network newscasts.

The Los Angeles Times (7/8, Wilkinson, 4.64M), for example, calls the visit "something of a head-scratcher," and says, "López Obrador has the most to lose," while Trump "has little to lose." Referring to "an enormously controversial trip," the Times says that "for Trump, the visit is a chance to mark a rare, concrete achievement – the trade agreement," while for López Obrador, it is "aimed at flattering Trump and minimizing the potential damage an American president can do."

The AP (7/8, Riechmann) reports in advance of the White House visit, "critics in Mexico worr[ie]d their leader is being used [as] a political pawn to bolster Trump's reelection effort." NEC Director Kudlow said the two leaders "intended to sign a joint declaration of friendship and cooperation" and that "the trade deal would benefit automobile and other manufacturing, agriculture and dairy farmers and cattle ranchers."

The New York Times (7/8, Ahmed, Crowley, 18.61M) reports López Obrador "has avoided fighting the Trump administration," and "critics say he is too willing to bend to the American president's will." Before leaving for the US, López Obrador "vowed to be strong and not embarrass Mexico on his first trip abroad to meet President Trump." Many Mexicans, however, "have been angry at his decision to meet with Mr. Trump." The visit "is officially intended to celebrate the new trade agreement between the United States, Canada and Mexico," but Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "decided not to come."

The Fox News (7/8, Shaw, 27.59M) website reports Trump and López Obrador held a bilateral meeting "before signing a joint declaration in the Rose Garden, where both leaders paid tribute to the U.S.-Mexican relationship." Said Trump, "The relationship between US and Mexico has never been closer than it is right now. ... Today we celebrate the historic victory we achieved together just days ago when NAFTA was officially terminated, one of the worst trade deals in history, and replaced with a brand new beautiful USMCA."

For his part, Reuters (7/8, Alper, Mason) reports López Obrador "lavished praise on...Trump at their first meeting on Wednesday, saying the U.S. leader treated Mexico with respect." He is quoted as saying, "What I most appreciate is that you have never tried to impose anything on us that violates or damages our sovereignty. You have never attempted to treat us like a colony. I am here to say to the people of the United States that your president has treated us with kindness and respect."

USA Today (7/8, Jackson, Subramanian, 10.31M) similarly highlights the mutual praise expressed by the two leaders. Trump, it says, "couldn't have been nicer" to López Obrador, who "returned the favor...thanking his host for 'the help you have given us' on issues ranging from trade to battling COVID-19." The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Lubold, Montes, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) runs a similar report under the headline "Trump, López Obrador Tout Cooperation."

National Security Advisor O'Brien said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (7/8, 49K) that the meetings were "extraordinarily cordial between the presidents and the two delegations. We're making a lot of progress on various issues." O'Brien added that "nobody thought this would be possible. President López Obrador said this, he said people wouldn't believe this. But when you look at what President Trump has done, he's built the wall. Immigration is down dramatically. Part of that is the wall, part of it is also because the Mexicans have deployed 27,000 troops to their border. ... We've got a lot in common with Mexico. And, of course, a lot of folks in the media would ignore that." O'Brien told Nexstar (7/8, 7K) the two Presidents were discussing the coronavirus response as well as "how we get our economies moving again post-corona." O'Brien was also interviewed on the Larry O'Connor Show (7/8).

AFP (7/8, Tandon, Tandon, Navarro) reports that "despite coming from opposite sides of the political spectrum, Trump and López Obrador have also been cooperating in the US leader's efforts to stop Central Americans seeking asylum in the United States as they flee violence." Forbes (7/8, Roberts, 9.71M), however, says "it's a safe bet they didn't talk a great deal about" how "US-Mexico trade was off 53.58%, a greater percentage than for any top 20 US trade partner."

Bloomberg (7/8, Sink, Martin, 4.73M) reports the meeting came "as both leaders are grappling with questions over their approach to a coronavirus pandemic that continues to rage in their countries." To the Washington Post (7/8, Nakamura, Lynch, 14.2M), Wednesday's ceremony "represented an attempt from the White House at counterprogramming as Trump has faced tumbling public approval over his handling of the pandemic and the mass demonstrations for racial justice across the country."

Along similar lines, the New York Times (7/8, Crowley, 18.61M) says the visit "provides a welcome distraction for Mr. Trump and Mr. López Obrador, who have both been criticized for inadequate responses to the pandemic." Politico (7/8, Bade, Rodriguez, 4.29M) has a similar report under the headline "Pandemic Looms Over Trump Trade Day With Mexican President."

Kudlow: Data Shows V-Shaped Recovery, USMCA Will Provide "Huge Boost." Asked on CNBC's Squawk Box (7/8, 220K) if the "negative news" regarding the pandemic might "translate into the economy decelerating in its recovery," Kudlow said, "I don't see it yet, but one cannot rule out." Instead, he added, "virtually every piece of data shows a v-shaped recovery now." He concluded, "It's a big country most of it's doing rather well; some of it is in trouble here. I get that."

On Fox News (7/8, 27.59M), Kudlow said, "I think we'll get out of this pretty well and it will not stop the v-shaped recovery." Also, Kudlow said, "We're getting along very well with President Obrador, and they are going to sign a joint declaration today with friendship and cooperation. More to the point, the USMCA deal is like it gets no respect, it's NAFTA 2.0 or whatever you want to call it, it is far more important in terms of dollars and cents and trade than frankly the China Phase I deal. In fact it's about two times, maybe a little more than two times as important."

Nexstar (7/8, 7K) Washington correspondent Trevor Shirley reported that Commerce Secretary Ross "says the pandemic should not hurt the trade deal's rollout." Ross: "The USMCA is a long term agreement its not just for the next few months." Shirley added that Mexico's manufacturing sector is "only working at about 50% because of the coronavirus." Ross: "Obviously at 50%, nobody makes any money." Shirley added that Ross "admits USMCA's full benefit might arrive more slowly than expected." Ross: "So there is a little bit of a time delay that will occur."

US Ambassador to Mexico Christopher Landau told Sinclair Broadcasting Group (7/8, 16K), "The USMCA creates a much more level playing field by really building on Mexico's recent changes in its labor laws which brought trade unionism to Mexico, real trade unionism for the first time in its history. so we know this agreement is going to protect American jobs and make sure that there's fairness in trade, not just free trade but fair trade." Landau told Gray Television (7/8, 32K), "I think one of the things we have learned through this health and economic crisis is essentially the reevaluation and realignment of our supply chains. One of the things that we had to deal with was whether from the health sectors or the defense sectors to really look where these supply chains are based. Obviously, those that were east to west from China have created national security complications for us."

López Obrador Visits Lincoln Memorial. President López Obrador tweeted, "Ofrenda en el Monumento a Abraham Lincoln, desde Washington, EE. UU." The tweet also included a picture of the Mexican leader standing in front of the Lincoln Memorial.

Trump Touts Job Growth, Economic Recovery.

President Trump took to Twitter Wednesday to write, "Economy and Jobs are growing MUCH faster than anyone (except me!) expected. Job growth is biggest in history. China Virus Mortality Rate is among the LOWEST of any country. Shaping up for a good third quarter, and a great next year! NASDAQ at new record high, 401k's way up!!!!"

Trump Says He Would "Absolutely Veto" New Stimulus Package Without Payroll Tax Cut.

Jessi Turnure of Nexstar (7/8, 3K) reported that "a priority in the next and likely final round of coronavirus relief [that] President Trump said is not up for negotiation is a tax cut. The President is insisting on a payroll tax cut that would make paychecks larger but reduce funding for government programs like social security and medicare." Asked if he would veto a measure that did not include a payroll tax cut, Trump said, "If it didn't include what we think we need for the economy and for jobs, I would absolutely veto it. Yes."

DOJ Looking Into Whether Wirecard Played A Role In Alleged Bank Fraud Conspiracy.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, O'Brien, Chung, Kowsmann, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Justice Department is investigating whether German payment company Wirecard had a role in an alleged $100 million bank fraud conspiracy tied to online marijuana sales. The Manhattan US Attorney's office and the New York field office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are probing whether Wirecard provided services as a payment processor and an offshore merchant bank.

Judge Tosses GM's Racketeering Lawsuit Against Fiat Chrysler.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Colias, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a federal judge on Wednesday dismissed a General Motors civil racketeering lawsuit against Fiat Chrysler Automobiles. GM in November had filed a lawsuit accusing Fiat Chrysler of bribing United Auto Workers officials to gain advantages on labor costs.

The Detroit News (7/8, Hall, 825K) reports GM said in a statement: "We strongly disagree with the District Court's order and will pursue our legal remedies. There is more than enough evidence from the guilty pleas of former FCA executives to conclude that the company engaged in racketeering, our complaint was timely and showed in detail how their multi-million dollar bribes caused direct harm to GM. The district court's opinion is contrary to well-settled RICO case law and would let wrong-doers off the hook for the massive harm caused by their criminal conspiracy."

GM Names Cadillac Boss To Lead North America. The Detroit Free Press (7/8, LaReau, 1.52M) reports General Motors has named Steve Carlisle, president of Cadillac, to replace Barry Engle, who is leaving the company and his position as executive vice president and president of North America. With the leadership change, "GM will have one sales, service and marketing leader across its full portfolio of automotive and connected services brands in North America, including Chevrolet, Buick, GMC, Cadillac, OnStar, ACDelco and GM Genuine Parts." Carlisle will report to GM President Mark Reuss.

United Airlines To Notify 36,000 Employees Of Possible Furlough Beginning October 1.

The Washington Post (7/8, Aratani, 14.2M) reports, "United Airlines announced Wednesday that despite receiving billions in federal aid, it may furlough as many as 36,000 employees," or "more than one-third" of its employees. Under the CARES Act, airlines are required "to keep front-line workers on the job through Sept. 30." The proposed furloughs would take effect October 1. The company announced, "United simply cannot continue at our current payroll level past October 1 in an environment where travel demand is so depressed." The number of furloughs would be reduced by employees accepting "early retirement, voluntary separation or other programs."

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Cameron, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports United would furlough nearly half of its US employees. The company has 95,000 employees worldwide. Jo Ling Kent of NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 7, 2:00, Holt, 5.84M) reported, "every part" of the company "would be hit hard," including, "15,000 flight attendants, more than 11,000 customer service and gate agents, 5,500 mechanics, and more than 2,000 pilots along with hundreds of food service workers and reservations agents."

The AP (7/8, Koenig) reports that United is receiving "$5 billion...as its share of $25 billion in federal aid to help airlines cover payroll costs."

Reuters (7/8, Rucinski) reports the company also said that while it will send 36,000 furlough notices, the final result will depend on demand for airline travel "and how many employees accept early exit packages and temporary leaves."

USA Today (7/8, Gilbertson, 10.31M) reports the company "has been warning employees for months that mass layoffs loom if travel doesn't rebound."

Brooks Brothers Files For Bankruptcy.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Kapner, Biswas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Brooks Brothers, owned by Italian businessman Claudio Del Vecchio, has filed for bankruptcy. The company is seeking a buyer. The AP (7/8) reports the company is "one of the few national chains that produced its clothing in the U.S."

The Washington Post (7/8, Bogage, Bhattarai, 14.2M) reports it will "close 51 of its 250 North American stores and will halt production at its factories in Massachusetts, North Carolina and New York in mid-August, which produce less than 7 percent of its finished goods."

Tesla's Soaring Stock Has Musk In Reach Of $1.8B Payday.

Reuters (7/8, Randewich) reports Tesla's "blistering stock rally is putting Chief Executive Elon Musk in reach of a payday potentially worth $1.8 billion, his second jackpot from the electric car maker in about two months." Driven by "stronger-than-expected car deliveries, shares of Tesla have surged over 40% in the past seven sessions, elevating the company's market capitalization to $259 billion." The automaker's "six-month average market capitalization has reached a record $138 billion," and "hitting a six-month average market capitalization of $150 billion would trigger the vesting of the second of 12 tranches of options granted to the billionaire to buy Tesla stock as part of his 2018 pay package."

WPost: Despite Some Questionable Loans, PPP Helped Save Jobs.

The Washington Post (7/8, Board, 14.2M) says in an editorial that data released this week on the "largest beneficiaries" of the Paycheck Protection Program "proved that millions of dollars worth of forgivable low-interest loans – tantamount to grants – landed at not-so-small and not-so-obviously-needy firms and nonprofits." While the Post highlights several such examples, it says the "declining unemployment rates of the past two months suggest this broad approach did indeed help save jobs, mostly at small firms." The Post adds that in the "next economic support package, Congress should target a narrower range of small businesses – while allowing those firms to spend the money for a wider range of purposes, beyond maintaining payroll."

Gramm, Solon: Voters Face Choice Between Growth Or Stagnation.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/8, Gramm, Solon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), ex-Sen. Phil Gramm (R-TX) and Mike Solon, a partner of US Policy Metrics, write that before the pandemic, the US economy was booming because of President Trump's pro-growth policies of tax cuts and deregulation. Now, Joe Biden is proposing "to transform" the economy, including a rollback of tax cuts, but that will only result in a repeat of the stagnation during the Obama-Biden years, the authors argue.

US Registered Record 60,000 New COVID Cases Wednesday.

USA Today (7/8, Cava, Ortiz, 10.31M) reports the US "now has 3 million documented cases of COVID-19." USA Today adds that while it took "a little more than three months to hit 1 million cases on April 28," and "44 days, to get to 2 million on June 11, and only 26 days to reach 3 million on July 8." Meanwhile, "the number of those killed by the virus – 131,000 – hasn't spiked." The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Ansari, Lucey, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the US reported about 60,000 new coronavirus cases, a single-day record, on Wednesday.

David Muir reported on ABC World News Tonight (7/8, lead story, 4:30, 6.99M) that the "sobering milestone" of three million cases comes "after a record 60,000 cases reported in just 24 hours in this country. More than 132,000 lives have been lost; more than 800

Americans dying in just the last 24 hours." On the CBS Evening News (7/8, lead story, 4:20, 4.23M), Norah O'Donnell reported, "A surge of new infections in Florida, Texas, Arizona, and California pushed the US past three million confirmed cases today, but didn't stop President Trump from ignoring the advice of his own health experts, threatening to pull federal funding from schools that don't fully reopen this fall."

The Washington Post (7/8, Janes, Stanley-Becker, Bernstein, Partlow, 14.2M) reports, "In pandemic hot-spot states such as Florida, Arizona, California and Texas, hospitals are adding new intensive care unit beds and special air flow systems to treat the growing demand as virus hospitalizations set records almost daily." The New York Times (7/8, Jacobs, 18.61M) reports, "Hospitals, nursing homes and private medical practices are facing a problem many had hoped would be resolved by now: a dire shortage of respirator masks, isolation gowns and disposable gloves that protect front-line medical workers from infection." The CBS Evening News (7/8, story 4, 2:05, O'Donnell, 4.23M) reported that in Texas, Gov. Greg Abbott (R) "previously warned that a 10% rate of positive test would be a red flag for the state. ... The rate there is even higher, and that is being felt in the state's hospitals."

On the CBS Evening News (7/8, story 5, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.23M), Carter Evans reported, "In California there is a dwindling supply of protective equipment." One nurse "says she is wearing donated gear and has to wipe down her gown between patients. ... She gets one mask per shift, seeing both COVID patients and people who are not infected."

HHS Secretary Azar said on Fox News @ Night (7/8), "We are seeing a serious surge in cases. It's a serious healthcare situation. But it's a very different situation than what we saw a couple of months ago, say in New York. The average age of individuals testing positive is decades younger than what we've been used to. Many governors are reporting average cases in their thirties. ... We don't want anyone to get coronavirus, but younger individuals do much better from a health perspective in terms of their prognosis and recovery."

Fauci Says US Is Seeing "Exponential Growth" In New COVID Cases. USA Today (7/8, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports NIAID Director Fauci said Wednesday that states "need to face problems with their coronavirus responses because 'if you don't admit it, you can't correct it.'" Fauci told a Wall Street Journal podcast, "What we're seeing is exponential growth, it went from an average of about 20,000 to 40,000 and 50,000. That's doubling."

Trump Says He Is "Very Flexible" About GOP Convention Plans.

McClatchy (7/8, Osasio, 19K) reports President Trump "says he's now 'flexible' on his original plans to hold a large Republican National Convention in Jacksonville." In an interview with Gray Television's Greta Van Susteren, Trump said, "We're always looking at different things. When we signed in Jacksonville, we wanted to be in North Carolina. ... We're very flexible. We can do a lot of things, but we're very flexible."

Tulsa Health Official Links Rise In Cases To Trump Rally. USA Today (7/8, Santucci, 10.31M) reports President Trump's June 20 Tulsa, Oklahoma rally, "along with protests at the time, were 'likely' a contributing factor in a recent surge of cases" in the city, according to Tulsa Health Department Executive Director Bruce Dart. The New York Times (7/8, Astor, 18.61M) reports Tulsa County "reported 206 new confirmed cases on Tuesday and 261 – a record high – on Monday." Dart said at a news conference, "The past two days we've had almost 500 cases, and we know we had several large events a little over two weeks ago, which is about right. So I guess we just connect the dots."

Pence: White House Sees "Early Indications" Florida Outbreak Is Slowing.

The Miami Herald (7/8, Chambers, 1.09M) reports Vice President Pence said Wednesday that the White House coronavirus task force "sees 'early indications' that the COVID-19 outbreak in Florida is abating." The state "reported 9,989 additional cases on Wednesday, making it the fourth highest single-day total on record for COVID-19 cases in the state."

Navarro Says Hydroxychloroquine Study May Prove Trump Was Right.

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said on Newsmax TV (7/8, 431K) that hydroxychloroquine is "a medicine that has been used for more than 60 years, safely. ... The Detroit study last week was path-breaking. ... It works, according to that study. If that study is right, Donald Trump was absolutely right that this is an important medicine."

Azar: Federal Government Sending Medical Teams To Texas.

KTVT-TV, Dallas (7/8, 83K) reported that HHS Secretary Azar says "the federal government is sending medical teams to north Texas and San Antonio as well. This as coronavirus cases and hospitalizations continue to rise." Azar: "And we are continuing to advance on getting additional DOD and HHS personnel in their in addition to supporting Texas with hiring contract doctors, nurses, and nurses' aides from elsewhere in the country to surge in and make sure those facilities are available."

TSA Administrator Orders New Safety Precautions After Whistleblower Meeting.

The Washington Post (7/8, Duncan, 14.2M) reports TSA Administrator Pekoske "ordered new coronavirus safety precautions last week after meeting with a whistleblower who alleged that the agency wasn't doing enough to protect employees and travelers, according to the whistleblower's attorney." The new measures "require officers to wear eye protection when they are in close contact with travelers" and are not protected by a plastic screen. Officers "must also change their gloves or sanitize them after patting down passengers, handling identification documents or checking in luggage."

White House Cites Pandemic As Reason For Delay In Trump's Financial Disclosure.

The New York Times (7/8, Eder, Protes, 18.61M) reports President Trump's required annual financial disclosure report "was due to be released more than a week ago. But the filing, the only official public document detailing his personal finances, was not published, and neither the White House nor federal ethics officials offered a public explanation." On Wednesday evening, a White House official said the President "had requested a deadline extension because the report was 'complicated' and the president had 'been focused on addressing the coronavirus crisis and other matters.'"

Americans Face Delays In Processing COVID-19 Tests.

The AP (7/8, Weber, Coronado) reports on COVID-19 testing, saying that Americans "are facing long lines at testing sites and going a week or more without receiving a diagnosis," due to "shortages of materials" and "workers to process the tests." The US is processing "about 640,000 on average, an increase from around 518,000 two weeks ago," while "new confirmed infections per day in the U.S. are running at over 50,000." NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 4, 2:45, Holt, 5.84M) ran a feature on testing woes in several states.

States Find That Testing Alone, Once Virus Has Spread, Is Less Useful.

The New York Times (7/8, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports states are finding that once they get sufficiently high spreading of coronavirus in their borders, no amount of testing can adequately address the impact and allow a state's economy to reopen faster. Assistant HHS Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir has warned "that testing without other public health interventions – contact tracing, isolating the sick, social distancing and wearing masks – would be of little use."

Website Launched To Enroll Volunteers For Vaccine Trial.

The Washington Post (7/8, Johnson, 14.2M) reports, "A network of more than 100 clinical trial sites at hospitals and medical clinics across the United States will take on the unprecedented challenge of testing covid-19 vaccines and other preventive treatments." The COVID-19 Prevention Trials Network "launched with a website for volunteers to join the roster of people to be considered when the first trials begin later this month."

Pharmaceutical Executives Call For Plan To Develop New Drugs To Fight "Superbugs."

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/8, Ricks, Kutay, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), David A. Ricks, Chairman and CEO of Eli Lilly & Co., and Kasim Kutay, CEO of Novo Holdings A/S, warn about the growing threat of antimicrobial resistance, which in 30 years, is projected to cause 10 million deaths annually around the world. They call for leadership, from both governments and businesses, to meet the challenge of developing new antibiotics to combat superbugs.

Study Finds Common Heartburn Medication Can Increase COVID Risk.

The CBS Evening News (7/8, story 9, 0:30, O'Donnell, 4.23M) reported, "Heartburn medication used by millions can increase the risk of coronavirus. Researchers at Cedars-Sinai say patients who use proton pump inhibitor medications have between two and nearly four times the risk of testing positive for COVID-19 when exposed."

Cuomo Under Scrutiny Over Coronavirus Deaths In New York Nursing Homes.

The New York Times (7/8, Ferré-Sadurni, Harris, 18.61M) reports the effort to make sense of New York's high nursing home death toll amid the pandemic has "become politically charged, with Republican lawmakers using the deaths to try to undermine" Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D), "who has largely been praised for helping New York State to rein in the outbreak." A directive that Cuomo ordered in late March "effectively ordering nursing homes to accept coronavirus patients from hospitals" has spurred calls "for hearings and independent investigations to determine if the state's actions played a role in the high death toll." On Monday, the Cuomo Administration returned fire, releasing a report that blames "the 37,500 nursing home workers – about a quarter of the state's total nursing home staff – who became infected since mid-March, unknowingly transmitting the virus to residents."

Fox Analysis: CNN Glossed Over Report On Nursing Home Deaths In New York. Fox News (7/8, Flood, 27.59M) reports on its website, "CNN continues to ignore or downplay news that is harmful" to Cuomo, "whose younger brother anchors the network's most popular show, failing to mention a new report linking a controversial decision by Gov. Cuomo to thousands of deaths inside his state's nursing homes." The AP reported on Monday that "New York hospitals released more than 6,300 recovering coronavirus patients into nursing homes during the height" of the pandemic under a "controversial, now-scrapped policy." But "a search of transcripts revealed that CNN completely ignored the AP report on air Monday and Tuesday with absolutely zero coverage."

NYTimes Analysis: Churches Responsible For More Than 650 Cases.

The New York Times (7/8, Conger, Healy, Tompkins, 18.61M) reports, "Weeks after President Trump demanded that America's shuttered houses of worship be allowed to reopen, new outbreaks of the coronavirus are surging through churches across the country where services have resumed." The Times adds, "More than 650 coronavirus cases have been linked to nearly 40 churches and religious events across the United States since the beginning of the pandemic."

Ivy League Cancels Fall Sports.

On the CBS Evening News (7/8, story 3, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.23M), Ben Tracy reported the Ivy League has "cancelled all sports programs until January due to coronavirus concerns." Other major college conferences are "still hoping to play," but "it is just not clear how they will make that happen."

Disney World Set To Reopen Thursday With Strict Safety Rules.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Schwartzel, Watson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Disney World is set to welcome back guests on Thursday under a phased reopening plan, amid soaring coronavirus cases in Florida. The theme park will open with a strict capacity limit and a mandatory mask rule.

Give Essential Links Essential Workers With Donors.

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 12, 2:00, Muir, 6.99M) ran a feature on Give Essential, an organization started by a group of college students to link "essential workers in need with donors across the country. Since launching in April, they have now connected more than 15,000 essential workers and donors in 49 states, nearly $500,000 in donations."

Trump: "People Should Stand Proudly For The National Anthem."

In an interview with Nexstar (7/8, 3K) Washington Correspondent Jessi Turnure, President Trump said of the NFL's consideration of playing the "Black national anthem" before games in the first week of its season, "When you say the Black national anthem, I know we're playing the National Anthem and I think people should stand proudly for the National Anthem."

Trump: NASCAR's Confederate Flag Ban Violates First Amendment.

Nexstar (7/8, 3K) Washington Correspondent Jessi Turnure reported that in a one-on-one interview with President Trump "told me when it comes to his stance on the Confederate flag, he relies on the First Amendment." Trump: "It's freedom of speech. You do what you do." Turnure added, "Even though President Trump has suggested with tweets that NASCAR made a mistake in banning the flag." Trump: "Well, I don't think they were critical. I was just talking about the fact that NASCAR chose to go a certain way, and that's going to be up to them. That is up to them. I'm very friendly with NASCAR. I know the people there. I know drivers. I know a lot of them, but I view it as freedom of speech."

Barr: Lafayette Square Was Not Cleared "To Set Up A Photo-Op."

In an interview with ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 3, 2:45, Muir, 6.99M), Attorney General Barr discussed the clearing of Lafayette Square on June 1. Barr said, "The plan was to move the demonstrators up toward I Street. It was not done to set up a photo-op." Asked about systemic racism in law enforcement, Barr said, "I do think that it is a widespread phenomenon that African American males, particularly, are treated with extra suspicion and maybe not given the benefit of the doubt."

Rights Groups: DC Police Aided Clearing Of Lafayette Square. The Washington Post (7/8, Hsu, Hermann, 14.2M) reports "civil rights groups on Wednesday accused D.C. police of assisting federal authorities who forcibly cleared Lafayette Square on June 1 ahead of President Trump's visit to a nearby church." In a federal lawsuit "that added the District government and officers as defendants," the groups suing on behalf of protesters accuse the Administration of violating demonstrators' constitutional rights in an "unprovoked and frankly criminal attack."

Wolf: State And Local Leaders Can Request Help To Combat Increase In Crime.

Maria Bartiromo on Fox Business (7/8, 152K) asked Acting DHS Secretary Wolf about the rising violence in large American cities. Wolf said the events are "a direct effect" from talking "about defunding police or law enforcement, attacking law enforcement, politicizing what law enforcement does. Criminals are really taking notice of this. Criminals at core are violent opportunists seeing that opportunity to take advantage to do violent acts across the country." Wolf added, "The President has been clear" that if the state and local governments "can no longer protect cities they need to call federal government." Wolf also said that "if they don't want to go through the National Guard, we can provide civil law enforcement."

The Washington Times (7/8, Boyer, 492K) reports the Administration is "surging federal law-enforcement agents into Kansas City, Missouri, to fight a wave of violent crime, the White House said Wednesday." Attorney General Barr is "launching the operation within the next 10 days with FBI agents, U.S. marshals, Drug Enforcement Administration agents and officials from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives to help suppress what the White House called a 'tragic' rise in violence."

Tim Scott Says Police Reform Bill Is Not Dead.

The Washington Times (7/8, Mordock, 492K) reports Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC) said Wednesday a bill he authored on police reform “is not dead and he expects an agreement with the Democrat-controlled House in the next few weeks.” Speaking with reporters at a press event with Attorney General Barr, “Scott said he has talked with House Democrats about reaching a deal.” Said the senator, “Folks are now calling me about the legislation from the other side, suggesting perhaps it is not dead. We may have a Lazarus moment.”

Biden Says Police Have “Become The Enemy,” Should Be Defunded.

Townhall (7/8, Pavlich, 177K) reports, “It’s clear Joe Biden’s far left advisers are starting to change his stance on policing in America.” During an interview Wednesday with This Now, “Biden said the police are over militarized, have ‘become the enemy’ and said funding should ‘absolutely’ be reallocated elsewhere. In other words, he’s advocating for the defunding of law enforcement,” just three weeks after he “claimed he did not support defunding the police.”

Ferguson: Calls To Defund Police “Ludicrous.” Rep. Drew Ferguson (R-GA) said on the John Fredericks Show (7/8), “Americans don’t want mob rule. They don’t to go down this pathway. They want to add to our history, not take away from it. They want to feel safe in their homes. We still have a lot of people in this country that intend to do harm to our fellow Americans. ... We have a dedicated group of men and women that are willing to put their lives on the line every single day in law enforcement to gout and defend our safety.” Ferguson said calls to defund the police are “ludicrous and we have to go in a different direction.”

Sen. Kennedy Labels “Squad” Members “Marxists.”

The Washington Times (7/8, Richardson, 492K) reports, “Not surprisingly,” Sen. John Kennedy (R-LA) “didn’t mince words when asked about defund-the-police legislation proposed by” Reps. Ayanna Pressley (D-MA) and Rashida Tlaib (D-MI), “describing the two left-wing Democrats as ‘Marxists.’” On Fox News’ The Story, Kennedy said, “I think it’s great that we live in a country where the two congresswomen have the right to say what they want, but we also have the right to disagree with them. I believe in free enterprise. They’re Marxists.”

Breitbart (7/8, Bleau, 673K) reports Pressley and Tlaib and are leading an effort by the “far left” to push a measure called the “BREATHE Act.” The legislation “aims to overhaul the U.S. criminal justice system, providing a range of radical changes – from defunding the police and Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) to establishing a commission tasked with designing reparations for victims of ‘mass criminalization.’”

Poll: Republican Support For Protests Waning.

The New York Times (7/8, Russonello, 18.61M) reports that “most Americans continue to support the nationwide protests against racial injustice, but with President Trump issuing an ever-more-combative barrage of attacks, new polling shows that some Republicans have grown wary of demonstrators’ demands and retreated toward saying that racism is not in fact a big problem in the United States.” Early last month, “many polls showed the emergence of a rare consensus around calls for racial justice and changes to policing,” but a Monmouth University survey released Wednesday “found that at the end of last month, just 40 percent of Republicans still said racism was a big problem, a drop of 15 percentage points from four weeks earlier.”

Transcripts: Floyd Warned Police He Would Die Because He Couldn’t Breathe.

The Washington Post (7/8, A1, Bailey, 14.2M) reports George Floyd “repeatedly begged police officers not to shoot him and complained of being claustrophobic as they tried to place him in a squad car in the minutes before he was killed,” according to transcripts of police body camera footage from the scene released Wednesday. The transcripts “make clear that Floyd was trying to cooperate with police but was deathly afraid of them, at times telling them that he had had covid-19 and was worried that he was going to die because he couldn’t breathe.” As officers sat atop him, Floyd said according to the transcripts, “They going to kill me. They’re going to kill me man.”

The New York Times (7/8, Oppel, 18.61M) reports the transcripts show “Floyd told officers more than 20 times that he could not breathe.” To the Times, the transcripts “offer one of the most thorough and dramatic accounts yet of the moments before Mr. Floyd’s death.”

The CBS Evening News (7/8, story 6, 0:25, O’Donnell, 4.23M) said the transcripts also show that former officer Thomas Lain, “who held Floyd’s legs while fellow officer Derek Chauvin held a knee to Floyd’s neck,” asked Chauvin “whether Floyd should be turned on to his side. Chauvin refused.” NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 8, 0:30, Holt, 5.84M) said, “At one point Floyd cries out for his late mother saying, quote, ‘I love you. Tell my kids I love them. I’m dead.’”

New York AG Calls For Stripping NYPD Control From Mayor.

The New York Times (7/8, Watkins, 18.61M) reports a series of police misconduct by the NYPD at protests “were described in a lengthy report that the state attorney general released Wednesday after hearings.” Saying the protests had “shaken New Yorkers’ belief in the Police Department, the attorney general, Letitia James, recommended that an independent panel – not the mayor – should appoint the police commissioner and oversee the hiring and firing of officers.” Said James, “It is impossible to that many New Yorkers have lost faith in law enforcement. I believe we need to bridge the undeniable divide between police and the public.”

Man Accosted In Central Park Confrontation Refuses To Cooperate With Police.

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 10, 0:30, Muir, 6.99M) reported on a “new turn after that Central Park confrontation. Amy Cooper facing charges for calling police on a Black man, a bird watcher, accused of falsely reporting he was threatening her. The man, Chris Cooper, now says he will not cooperate with the prosecution.” Appearing on “The View,” Cooper said “he has accepted her apology.”

Indiana Prosecutors Reviewing Racist Attack On Black Man.

NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 9, 2:00, Holt, 5.84M) reported, “Growing outrage in Indiana is sparking protests and demands for justice after the release of a disturbing video capturing what some say was a racist attack.” NBC (Patterson): “Video captured by a bystander and posted online by Vauhxx Booker appears to show him pinned on a tree on all fours in what he described as an attempted lynching. ... Authorities say they responded to the scene for a report of a battery. No arrest were made, but an investigation is ongoing. Tonight the prosecutor’s office tells NBC News once the investigation is complete, it will review the case and determine what charges are appropriate.”

Tech CEO Launches Verbal Racist Attack Against Asian American Family.

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 7, 1:25, Muir, 6.99M) reported on video “of the CEO of a tech company lashing out an Asian American family while at a restaurant in California.” ABC (Hartung): “The Orosa Chan family were celebrating a birthday...on the Fourth of July, when they say a man at the table next to them began berating them.” The man, identified as Michael Lofthouse, “unleashing a string of racist obscenities at the group.” Lofthouse, the CEO of a tech company called Solid8, “later apologized, writing, ‘My behavior in the video is appalling. This was clearly a moment where I lost control and made incredibly hurtful and divisive comments.’”

The CBS Evening News (7/8, story 7, 2:00, O'Donnell, 4.23M) reported that “since the COVID crisis began, many Asian Americans have been targeted by racial slurs and even physical attacks. And incidents like these are now at an all-time high.”

Vox Employees React After Journalist Signs “Cancel Culture” Letter.

The Fox News (7/8, Wulfsohn, 27.59M) website reports that “several staffers at Vox have taken to Twitter after journalist Matthew Yglesias signed the open letter decrying ‘cancel culture.’” Yglesias was “one of 150 signatories” of a letter to Harper’s Magazine, “including other liberal writers, professors and activists who came together to defend civil debate in the face of social media callouts that have become ubiquitous in recent years.” However, “Vox critic at large Emily VanDerWerff released a letter of her own that she had written to Vox editors voicing her concerns of Yglesias’ inclusion in the anti-cancel culture letter.”

US Protests Spark Debate Over Racism In Arab World.

The Washington Post (7/7, Dadouch, 14.2M) reports the “global uproar over racism, prompted by the police killing in Minneapolis of George Floyd, has contributed to heightened dismay over the treatment of these often darker-skinned migrant workers from Africa and Asia and sparked wider debate among Arabs about racism in their own societies.”

Bai Criticizes Efforts To Remove Statues Of Washington And Jefferson.

Washington Post (7/8, Bai, 14.2M) columnist Matt Bai argues that calls to remove statues of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson are playing “a reckless game when it comes to the nation’s history.” Bai says that “if activists can’t acknowledge the intellectual perversion in going after statues of American statesmen, then they should at least consider the breathtaking political negligence.”

Barr Defends Stone Prosecution.

Pierre Thomas said on ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 3, 2:45, Muir, 6.99M) that when he interviewed Attorney General Barr, Barr said the prosecution of Roger Stone “was righteous and he deserves the three years in prison the judge sentenced him to. But [he] admits it’s going to be the President’s call as to whether to commute the prison term or pardon him.”

Vindman Retires From Army, Accusing Trump Of “Bullying, Intimidation, And Retaliation.”

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 11, 0:20, Muir, 6.99M) reported, “A key witness in President Trump’s impeachment trial, Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman, has revealed he is retiring, ending his 21-year military career.” NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 6, 0:25, Holt, 5.84M) recounted that Vindman “was ousted from the National Security Council after the President’s acquittal.” The New York Times (7/8, Schmitt, Cooper, 18.61M) indicates that Vindman “is among scores of officers who have been picked to be promoted to full colonel this year,” but “the White House had made clear to officials in the Pentagon’s Office of Personnel and Readiness, which handles such matters, that Mr. Trump did not want to see Col. Vindman promoted, officials said.”

USA Today (7/8, Brook, Wu, Shesgreen, 10.31M) reports Vindman announced his retirement “citing intimidation from the White House,” and the AP (7/8, Colvin, Baldor) that his attorneys’ “scathing statement...accused the president of running a ‘campaign of bullying, intimidation, and retaliation.’” The statement from attorney David Pressman said, “Through a campaign of bullying, intimidation, and retaliation, the President of the United States attempted to force LTC Vindman to choose: Between adhering to the law or pleasing a President. Between honoring his oath or protecting his career. Between protecting his promotion or the promotion of his fellow soldiers."

The Washington Post (7/8, Ryan, Harris, 14.2M) also reports that "the White House had not taken any action to strike Vindman's name," but "officials have said that Trump strongly disliked Vindman and might move to block him." The Post adds, "If Vindman hadn't retired, he would either have been promoted or, if not promoted, would have been eligible again for potential promotion in a year."

Reuters (7/8, Stewart, Ali) reports Vindman "provided some of the most damaging testimony during an investigation by the US House of Representatives into Trump's dealings with Ukraine." Reuters adds that last week, Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) "said she would put a hold on the confirmation of over 1,000 military promotions until Defense Secretary Mark Esper provided assurances on not blocking the promotion of Vindman." Axios (7/8, Perano, 521K), The Hill (7/8, Chalfant, 2.98M), the Washington Examiner (7/8, Yilek, 448K) and the Washington Times (7/8, Meier, 492K), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Supreme Court To Rule On House Democrats' Push For Trump Tax Records.

USA Today (7/8, Wolf, 10.31M) reports "the Supreme Court will complete its 2019 term Thursday with rulings on President Donald Trump's effort to keep his tax returns and other financial records away from congressional investigators and New York prosecutors." Said Terry Moran on ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 5, 0:40, Muir, 6.99M), "Oh, it's huge. Three committees in the House of Representatives and the Manhattan district attorney want to look at years of the Trump financial records. The President is declaring [that] as president, he has immunity from these kinds of investigations. The court looked at the claim against the House, on his side, but in oral arguments they seemed very skeptical that President Trump could stop a local district attorney from subpoenaing his accountants to help a grand jury investigate potential crimes."

The Washington Post (7/8, Barnes, 14.2M) recounts that "federal judges in New York and Washington, DC...moved swiftly by court standards and repeatedly ruled against Trump and to uphold Congress's broad investigative powers," while "in Washington, a divided panel of the US Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit in October rejected Trump's assertion that Congress's subpoena was an unconstitutional attempt to harass the president that lacked a 'legitimate legislative purpose.'" The AP (7/8, Sherman) also says "Trump has so far lost at every step, but the records have not been turned over pending a final court ruling."

Politico (7/8, Gerstein, Cheney, 4.29M) says "a decision to reject Trump's legal challenges" tomorrow "could result in voters getting to see the tax returns he has resisted disclosing since launching his presidential campaign in 2015."

UK Court Orders Steele To Pay Damages To Russian Bankers.

The Washington Examiner (7/8, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that a UK court has ordered Christopher Steele "to pay thousands in damages to two Russian bankers named in the former MI6 agent's dossier as having 'illicit' financial ties to Russian President Vladimir Putin." Justice Warby of the Queen's Bench Division of the British High Court of Justice, who "presided over a weeklong March hearing in the defamation lawsuit brought by the owners of Russia's Alfa Bank, Petr Aven, Mikhail Fridman, and German Khan, against Orbis Business Intelligence, Steele's private intelligence firm," ruled, "I have found that the 'illicit cash' allegation was inaccurate. ... The personal data about the delivery of 'illicit cash' to Mr. Putin did amount to sensitive personal data about alleged criminality ... My conclusion is that I should award each of the first and second claimants compensation in the sum of £18,000." The Washington Times (7/8, Scarborough, 492K) provides similar coverage.

WTimes Analysis: Media Pushed Unfounded Stories About Flynn, Russian-Born Scholar.

The Washington Times (7/8, Scarborough, 492K) reports that while former national security advisor Michael Flynn "is nearing victory in his battle with the FBI," the "liberal media raised rumors in a parallel operation about the career intelligence officer, his appearance at a dinner in Cambridge, England, and a Russia-born, British citizen scholar." The Times says that "like so many Trump-Russia allegations, the news stories about Mr. Flynn and historian Svetlana Lokhova proved unfounded." The Times cites "a newly disclosed document" which "shows the FBI officially cleared both of improper Russia contacts weeks before the Flynn/Cambridge news stories began appearing in 2017 and continued into 2018." Asked about the media stories that claimed Flynn "somehow violated protocol by attending the Cambridge dinner and speaking with Ms. Lokhova," Flynn attorney Sidney Powell said, "It was a total lie. ... They knew it. He always passed his polygraph tests, and he kept his clearance consistently with no issues ever."

Solomon: DOJ Activity Suggests Durham Is Working To Bring Indictments.

The Washington Examiner (7/8, Chaitin, 448K) reports that Justice Department activity indicates US Attorney John Durham "is working to bring the first indictments as part of a criminal investigation into the Russia inquiry, according to investigative journalist John Solomon." Solomon said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight Tuesday, "My sources tell me there's a lot of activity. I'm seeing, personally, activity behind the scenes of the Justice Department." Solomon added that Durham's team "is trying to bring those first indictments, and I would look for a time around Labor Day to see the first sort of action by the Justice Department." The Examiner said Solomon "insisted" he is "seeing a lot of activity consistent with building prosecutions and preparing for criminal plea bargains," but, "That doesn't mean it'll happen. ... Until someone signs and until they bring them before the grand jury. You never know if it's going to happen."

Judicial Watch Sues University Of Delaware For Access To Biden's Senatorial Papers.

The Washington Times (7/8, Mordock, 492K) reports that Judicial Watch has filed a lawsuit against the University of Delaware, which stores and owns Joe Biden's senatorial papers, claiming the university has ignored its FOIA requests and those of the Daily Caller News Foundation. The university denied the requests "citing a provision in Delaware law that exempts the school from FOIA requests not related to public funds. They appealed the decision to Delaware's chief deputy attorney general, who sided with the university." Judicial Watch and DCNF "say the school hasn't supported its claim that public funds were not used to store and house Mr. Biden's papers."

Wolf: DHS Is Prepared To End DACA.

Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (7/8) asked Acting DHS Secretary Wolf about a coming executive order regarding DACA. Wolf said, "Two things I would say about the DACA decision from the Supreme Court: one, none of the justices said that the program was lawful" and two, the "court said the department had every right to rescind the program." Wolf concluded, "We are taking a look at the opinion and we have are drawing up the paperwork. Should the President be ready to end the DACA program, we will be ready to do that."

Biden Plan Would Grant Citizenship Rights To 11M Migrants.

The Washington Times (7/8, Dinan, 492K) reports that Joe Biden "on Wednesday formally embraced citizenship rights" for 11 million migrants and a "full erasure of all of President Trump's get-tough border policies, as part of the party's new unity platform. He would expand sanctuary locations, limit ICE's ability to deport criminals in local jails, and reverse deportations for some military veterans already ousted because of criminal records."

WPost: Administration Again Considering Separating Migrant Families.

A Washington Post (7/8, Board, 14.2M) editorial says the Administration is again considering "separating migrant children from their families." The "latest threat to break up families arises from a federal court order last month by U.S. District Judge Dolly M. Gee, in Los Angeles," who gave ICE "until next Friday to release scores of children held at the facilities." Gee's jurisdiction "does not cover detained adults, which afforded an opening to the administration to present migrant parents with a perverse choice: give up their children to sponsors, or remain with their children inside facilities where the pandemic is tightening its grip." The Post argues, "Compassion and decency compel a clear path forward: releasing parents and children together from ICE custody. Sadly, very little in this administration's makeup suggests it will do the right thing."

Ip: Continued Chinese Trade Surpluses Pose Risk Of Trade Wars.

Greg Ip writes in the Wall Street Journal (7/8, Ip, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that while President Trump's trade war with China has succeed in reducing the US trade deficit with China to its lowest since 2012, the risk of future trade wars will remain as long as China's trade surpluses continue.

High Court Rules For Administration, Little Sisters Of The Poor In ACA Case.

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 4, 0:50, Muir, 6.99M) reported last night on the Supreme Court "siding with President Trump, allowing employers to opt out of the Obamacare mandate of providing contraceptive coverage if those employers have religious or moral objections. ... This was a big win for religious conservatives and the President." NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 5, 1:00, Holt, 5.84M) also referred to "a victory for the Trump administration involving Obamacare and birth control." NBC (Williams) added "the vote was 7-2, with Justices Ginsburg and Sotomayor dissenting." The AP (7/8, Gresko) called the decision "a sizable, election-year victory for President" Trump. White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said, "Today's Supreme Court ruling is a big win for religious freedom and freedom of conscience."

The Washington Examiner (7/8, Rowan, 448K) McEnany also said, "This administration will continue working to protect healthcare, including contraceptive healthcare, for the American people. ... Unlike the last administration, however, we have the courage of our convictions: We are allowing women who lack access to contraceptive coverage because of their employer's religious beliefs or moral convictions to more easily access such care through the Title X program at little to no cost."

The Washington Post (7/8, A1, Barnes, 14.2M) recounts that the opinion by Justice Clarence Thomas stated, "We hold that the [Administration] had the authority to provide exemptions from the regulatory contraceptive requirements for employers with religious and conscientious objections." Thomas was joined by Chief Justice John Roberts, and Justices Samuel Alito, Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh. Justices Elena Kagan and Stephen Breyer "agreed with the decision, but did not join the opinion." The ruling, says the New York Times (7/8, A1, Liptak, 18.61M), "upheld a Trump administration regulation that lets employers with religious or moral objections limit women's access to birth control coverage under the Affordable Care Act." The Washington Times (7/8, Swoyer, 492K) reports Justice Thomas also wrote, "The plain language of the statute clearly allows the Departments to create the preventive care standards as well as the religious and moral exemptions."

The New York Times (7/8, A1, Liptak, 18.61M) says "many religious groups praised the contraception decision," while "organizations seeking to protect access to birth control and abortion denounced the ruling as an assault on women." The CBS Evening News (7/8, story 8, 1:40, 4.23M) reported, meanwhile, "As many as 125,000 women could lose contraceptive coverage from their employer-sponsored health insurance after a Supreme Court ruling," and the AP (7/8, Gresko) that the ruling "could leave more than 70,000 women without free contraception." USA Today (7/8, Wolf, 10.31M) says the case is "the latest but not the last challenge to the Affordable Care Act" as it "will hear a third challenge in the fall – one in which the Trump administration recommends the entire law be struck down." The case was also "one of three major religious freedom cases heard by the court this term and won by conservatives."

HHS Secretary Azar said on Fox News @ Night (7/8), "Donald Trump is the greatest defender and protector of religious liberty of anyone who's ever occupied the White House, and today the Supreme Court vindicated his defense of Catholic nuns who said they should not be forced to pay for insurance that has to be able to buy contraception or be bankrupted for failing to do so."

The Los Angeles Times (7/8, Savage, 4.64M), Reuters (7/8, Hurley), the Wall Street Journal (7/8, A1, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), CQ Roll Call (7/8, Raman, 154K), The Hill (7/8, Kruzell, 2.98M), the Washington Free Beacon (7/8, Daley, 78K), the Washington Examiner (7/8, Rowan, 448K), and Bloomberg (7/8, Stohr, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

E.J. Dionne writes in the Washington Post (7/8, Dionne, 14.2M), "You would think a functioning democracy could work this issue out in a reasonable way that respected the rights of women as well as the rights of those with religious objections to contraception." To Dionne, "giving large businesses expansive rights to invoke religion to deny employees a particular benefit creates serious dangers. The Trump rule falls far short of balancing legitimately competing interests."

The Washington Post (7/8, Board, 14.2M) editorializes that "the majority opinion was notably silent on the extent and strength of the exemption or accommodation that religious freedom laws may require the government to provide to religious objectors," and as a result "a new administration could move to narrow or eliminate the Trump administration's recklessly broad exemption. To make clear its intent, Congress, too, could get involved, specifying explicitly that women must have free contraception coverage through their health plans except in very narrow circumstances."

In an editorial, the New York Times (7/8, Board, 18.61M) writes that "the Supreme Court under Chief Justice John Roberts reminded Americans once again that it is no friend to reproductive rights, or to the vast majority of women who will use some form of birth control in their lifetime."

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), meanwhile, editorializes favorably on the ruling, which it sees as a victory for religious freedom.

DOJ Moving Forward With Plan To Resume Executions Next Week.

The AP (7/8, Long, Balsamo) reports that "despite the coronavirus pandemic raging both inside and outside prisons and stagnating national support for the death penalty," the Justice Department is moving forward with its plan "to resume federal executions next week for the first time in more than 15 years." Beginning on Monday, "three people are scheduled to die by lethal injection in one week at an Indiana prison," and Bureau of Prisons officials "insist they will be able to conduct the executions safely." The AP says members of the victims' and inmates' families "will be able to attend but will be required to wear face masks." Prison officials "will take temperature checks" and will "make personal protective equipment, including masks, gloves, gowns and face shields, available for witnesses, but there are no plans to test anyone attending the executions for COVID-19, officials said."

Tropical Storm Expected To Form South Of New England.

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, Story 9, 0:15, Muir, 6.99M) reported on a "tropical threat off the Carolinas" which has "a 70% chance now of growing into Tropical Storm Fay." It is "expected to move up the coast tomorrow and Friday, reaching New England Friday night into Saturday."

Trump Threatens To Withhold Funding From Schools That Do Not Reopen This Fall.

The President tweeted Wednesday morning, "In Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and many other countries, SCHOOLS ARE OPEN WITH NO PROBLEMS. The Dems think it would be bad for them politically if U.S. schools open before the November Election, but is important for the children & families. May cut off funding if not open!" About 15 minutes later, he tweeted, "I disagree with @CDCgov on their very tough & expensive guidelines for opening schools. While they want them open, they are asking schools to do very impractical things. I will be meeting with them!!!"

On the CBS Evening News (7/8, story 2, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.23M), Ben Tracy reported, "President Trump tonight once again at odds with his own medical experts as he continues to relentlessly push America's schools to reopen." Trump: "You want to learn in the classroom, so our schools, we want them open in the fall." Tracy: "He's also threatening to defund schools that don't open, though he has little power to do so, and criticizing the CDC school safety guidelines, calling them very 'tough and expensive.'" Vice President Pence: "We don't want the guidance from CDC to be a reason why schools don't open." Tracy: "Pence said the CDC will issue new guidance next week because getting kids back to school is essential to parents going back to work and helping the economy."

On ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 2, 2:50, Muir, 6.99M), Stephanie Ramos reported, "Those CDC guidelines call for safety measures like masks, six feet of spacing between desks, open windows, avoiding the cafeteria, and playground equipment, if possible. But tonight, mixed messages from the White House coronavirus task force." CDC Director Redfield: "I want to make it very clear that what is not the intent of CDC's guidelines is to be used it as a rationale to keep schools closed."

On NBC Nightly News (7/8, lead story, 2:05, Holt, 5.84M), Peter Alexander said Trump "is escalating his push for schools to reopen.

... The President is also now threatening to cut off federal funding for those that don't open their doors. Although most school budgets are funded by state or local dollars. Pointing to students already back in classrooms in Europe, the President says any opposition is politically motivated."

The AP (7/8, Binkley) reports on Wednesday, Trump "threatened to withhold federal money if schools don't reopen in the fall, and he lashed out at federal health officials over school reopening guidelines that he says are impractical and expensive." USA Today (7/8, Collins, Jackson, 10.31M) reports, "Trump called again Tuesday for the nation's schools to reopen this fall and warned that his administration would put 'a lot of pressure' on governors and others to get children back in the classroom." Reuters (7/8, Chiacu) reports Trump "threatened to cut off funding to schools that do not open in the fall."

The New York Times (7/8, Baker, Green, 18.61M) reports Trump "assailed his own federal public health experts for recommending school-reopening precautions that he deemed too onerous and expensive. ... The latest burst of threats and criticisms issued in a flurry of morning Twitter messages came as the president made a concerted push to pressure states and localities to resume in-person classes even though coronavirus cases are rising in most of the country." Fox News (7/8, Phillips, 27.59M) reports White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said Wednesday that the President "was looking to 'substantially bump up' funding for education in the next coronavirus relief bill, but added that 'this money should go to the students.'"

The Washington Post (7/8, Wagner, 14.2M) reports Education Secretary DeVos "offered perhaps the most concise message of the administration officials," saying, "Ultimately it's not a matter of if schools should reopen, it's simply a matter of how." The Washington Examiner (7/8, Mastrangelo, 448K) reports DeVos has "indicated she is eyeing withholding federal funding from public schools that do not fully reopen for in-person instruction this fall." DeVos said Tuesday on Fox News, "There is no excuse for schools not to reopen again and for kids to be able to learn again full-time. ... This is more an issue of adults who are more interested in their own issues than they are about serving their students."

Townhall (7/8, O'Brien, 177K) reports DeVos on Wednesday used Fairfax County, Virginia "as an example of what a 'disaster' a virtual education can be for students. The school district recently offered parents the option to keep their kids home, or to send them to school for just a few days a week." DeVos said, "They offered families a so-called choice for this fall: either zero days in schools for their students or two days. And their springtime attempt at distant learning was a disaster. This cannot happen again in the fall."

HHS Secretary Azar said on Fox News @ Night (7/8), "The danger to our children is not being in school. The danger to their health is not being in school. Our kids get healthcare. They get mental health services. Many of them get nutrition services. They get mandatory reporting of child abuse from school officials. That's in addition to the social, physical, and intellectual development these children need from being in a physical education environment."

The Washington Times (7/8, Muñoz, Boyer, 492K) reports the National Education Association said the Administration lacks a credible plan to reopen schools. NEA President Lily Eskelsen Garcia said, "If Donald Trump and Betsy DeVos have proven anything over the past four years, it's that they do not care about students. They have zero credibility for how to best support students, and how to reopen classrooms safely."

Leana Wen of the Washington Post (7/8, Wen, 14.2M) writes, "The single most important requirement for resuming in-person instruction is suppressing the level" of COVID-19 infections in the community. She says this is why "the White House's own guidelines prohibit schools from reopening until the community has reached Phase 2 – defined, at minimum, as recording a consistent decline in new infections."

Joy Pullmann of The Federalist (7/8, Pullmann, 126K) writes, "Government schools and their unions are attempting to hold K-12 children hostage for billions more taxpayer dollars by claiming children shouldn't fully go back to school this fall due to coronavirus." Tax revenues "are already going to take a massive hit from the forced economic shutdowns, but unions see this as an opportunity to get more of scarcer money for themselves, and thus the Democratic Party." Bloomberg (7/8, Court, 4.73M), the Wall Street Journal (7/8, Leary, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Politico (7/8, Forgey, 4.29M), and The Hill (7/8, Samuels, 2.98M) are among the other outlets covering the President's comments.

New York City Schools Will Offer Hybrid Classroom Plan. The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Brody, Hawkins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on Wednesday, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) announced a plan for the city's schools to offer both in-person and online classes, under which most of the students would be in school two to three days each week, while receiving online instruction for the remaining schools days. Students will also be required to wear masks. Politico New York (7/8, Durkin) reports de Blasio said, "Most schools will not be able to have all their kids in school at the same time."

The New York Times (7/8, Shapiro, 18.61M) says the "decision to opt for only a partial reopening, which is most likely the only way to accommodate students in school buildings while maintaining social distancing, may hinder hundreds of thousands of parents from returning to their pre-pandemic work lives, undermining the recovery of the sputtering local economy."

Harvard, MIT Sue Federal Government Over ICE International Student Rules.

The AP (7/8, Binkley) reports Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Wednesday sued the federal government, "challenging the Trump administration's decision to bar international students from staying in the U.S. if they take classes entirely online this fall." They argue that the decision "violates the Administrative Procedures Act because officials failed to offer a reasonable basis justifying the policy and because the public was not given notice to comment on it." The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Korn, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the suit seeks a temporary restraining order prohibiting the government from enforcing rules laid out by ICE on Monday.

The Washington Times (7/8, Dinan, 492K) reports, "The schools said the new rule violates the Administrative Procedure Act, which requires major policy changes to go through the correct hoops such as notice and comment." The schools said ICE "didn't have an adequate justification for the policy and didn't allow for a notice and comment period."

High Court Sides With Religious Schools On Federal Anti-Discrimination Laws.

The Los Angeles Times (7/8, Savage, 4.64M) reports the Supreme Court, in a 7-2 decision, announced Wednesday ruled that "the Constitution's protection for religious liberty exempts church schools from state and federal anti-discrimination laws." The case concerned "two elementary school teachers at Catholic schools in Los Angeles County" and ruled that since these teachers "helped carry out the mission of teaching faith as part of their jobs, the schools are free to hire and fire them without concern for antidiscrimination laws." The Times adds the ruling "effectively closes the courthouse door to tens of thousands of teachers nationwide in religious and parochial schools" with respect to "workplace discrimination based on their gender, age, disability or sexual orientation." Writing for the majority, Justice Samuel Alito said, "The 1st Amendment protects the right of religious institutions to decide for themselves, free from state interference, matters of church government as well as those of faith and doctrine." Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor dissented.

The Washington Post (7/8, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the ruling "affirms the 'ministerial exception' that protects religious organizations from some lawsuits invoking federal anti-discrimination laws." The AP (7/8, Gresko) indicates, meanwhile, that Justice Alito "wrote in his majority opinion Tuesday that allowing courts to consider workplace discrimination claims against the schools would interfere with the schools' constitutionally guaranteed religious independence."

The New York Times (7/8, Liptak, 18.61M) said the ruling means that "federal employment discrimination laws do not apply to teachers whose duties include instruction in religion at schools run by churches." The cases were Our Lady of Guadalupe School v. Morrissey-Berru, No. 19-267, and St. James School v. Darryl Biel, No. 19-348. Both "were brought by teachers in Catholic schools in California who sued their employers for job discrimination." USA Today (7/8, Wolf, 10.31M), the Washington Examiner (7/8, Rowan, 448K), and The Hill (7/8, Kruzell, Neidig, 2.98M), among other news outlets, also cover the ruling.

Pentagon Scrambles To Fill Vacancies Following High-Level Resignations.

The Washington Times (7/8, Wolfgang, 492K) reports that following a "rash of resignations," military leaders are "scrambling to fill vacancies in key positions throughout the Pentagon." Over the past three weeks, the Pentagon "has been given at least four high-level resignations, including from top officials who had privately raised concerns with some of Mr. Trump's foreign policy moves, most notably the decision last year to temporarily halt military aid to Ukraine." The Times says the resignations have "sparked a standoff with lawmakers who are convinced that President Trump's personal politics drive hirings, firings and promotions inside the Defense Department."

Politico Analysis: More Than 80 Former Administration Officials Have Taken Lobbying Jobs.

Politico (7/8, Meyer, Kahn, 4.29M) reports "at least 82 former Trump administration officials...have registered as lobbyists, according to an analysis of lobbying disclosure filings." President Trump has "also hired a large number of former lobbyists to serve in his administration – including the current Defense, Energy, Labor and Interior secretaries; the acting Homeland Security secretary; the EPA administrator; and the U.S. trade representative – and some of them have already gone back to K Street." According to Politico, "the mass migration to K Street highlights how little effect...Trump's campaign pledge to 'drain the swamp' has had on Washington's revolving door 3 1/2 years into his presidency."

Widow Of Trump's Friend Refutes Mary Trump's Claim About SATs.

Fox News (7/8, Re, 27.59M) reports on its website, "President Trump's niece Mary L. Trump alleges in her new tell-all book that her uncle paid a friend to take a college admissions test more than 50 years ago so he could gain acceptance into the elite Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania." However, a new video from the widow "of the now-deceased friend tells a very different story." In the video, Pam Shriver "said her late husband met Trump after he was already enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania."

Barr Sees "Opportunity For Mischief" In By-Mail Voting.

In an interview with ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 3, 2:45, Muir, 6.99M), Attorney General Barr was asked about by-mail voting during the COVID-19 pandemic. Barr: "I was very concerned about the integrity of elections, because I feel we're a very divided country. I think there's a lot of opportunity for mischief and that makes me concerned." ABC's Pierre Thomas: "But shouldn't we be making it easier for people to vote in a pandemic?" Barr: "Well, I think the states have a lot of latitude as to what form of voting they're going to have. I'm expressing concern over voter fraud, and I do think it increases the opportunity for fraud."

Appeals Court Ruling Leaves Issue Of Voting Rights Of Some Felons In Florida Unresolved.

The Washington Post (7/8, Rozsa, 14.2M) reports, "Voting rights advocates scrambled this week to understand the impact of an appeals court decision blocking some Florida felons' eligibility to participate in elections – a blow to efforts to restore voting rights to as many as 1.4 million people in the state." Last week, the US Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit in Atlanta, stopped an order by US District Judge Robert Hinkle "from May that had cleared the way for hundreds of thousands of felons in the state to register to vote." The appeals court has "scheduled a hearing on the issue for Aug. 18 – the same day as Florida's primary election," and "voting rights activists worry the uncertainty of the issue may discourage 'returned citizens' from trying to register even if they're eligible."

GOP Lawmakers Invite Parler CEO To Testify Before House Judiciary Committee.

Politico (7/8, Swan, 4.29M) reports that Reps. Jim Jordan (R-OH) and James Sensenbrenner (R-WI) have asked Parler CEO John Matze "to weigh in on the House Judiciary Committee's bipartisan antitrust investigation into tech giants." In a letter to Matze, the lawmakers wrote, "Parler differentiates itself on the quality and features of its platform – namely, its commitment to not 'cancel or editorialize, share or sell user data.' ... This commitment positions Parler in stark contrast to Twitter, which has made increasingly clear in recent weeks and months that only users who refrain from expressing certain disfavored political beliefs are welcome to fully participate on its platform. In turn, Parler's commitment to free expression takes the place of price as an incentive driving consumer behavior." They also "sent a letter to Twitter's CEO asking for a host of materials, including explanations of all moderating decisions made in the U.S. over the last year."

Facebook Audit Criticizes Company For Prioritizing Free Expression.

The New York Times (7/8, Isaac, 18.61M) reports an "independent audit" of Facebook's "policies and practices" found that the company "has not done enough to fight discrimination on its platform and has made some decisions that were 'significant setbacks for civil rights.'" The audit faulted the company "for prioritizing free expression on its platform over nondiscrimination." The auditors accused the company of failing to "seek civil rights expertise" and so "setting a 'terrible' precedent that could affect the November general election and other speech issues."

USA Today (7/8, Guynn, 10.31M) reports the audit "warns that Facebook's failure to rein in toxic speech, racism and misinformation could have serious repercussions on the presidential election." The report from the auditors "took particular exception with the company's decision not to take down inflammatory rhetoric and false claims from President Donald Trump." The report stated, "The prioritization of free expression over all other values, such as equality and non-discrimination, is deeply troubling."

The AP (7/8, Ortutay) reports Facebook hired former American Civil Liberties Union executive Laura Murphy to conduct the review and write the report. COO Sheryl Sandberg responded, "This audit has been a deep analysis of how we can strengthen and advance civil rights at every level of our company – but it is the beginning of the journey, not the end."

The Washington Post (7/8, Dwoskin, Zakrzewski, 14.2M) reports called it a "scathing indictment of the social media giant's decisions to prioritize free speech above other values."

Facebook Removes Accounts Tied To Roger Stone For Manipulation. The Washington Post (7/8, Timberg, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports, "Facebook took down a network of more than 100 pages and accounts on Wednesday it said was affiliated with convicted felon and former Republican operative Roger Stone for 'coordinated inauthentic behavior' dating back to around the 2016 election and its aftermath, the company said." Facebook officials said Stone "used fake accounts and other deceptive measures to manipulate public debate." Nathaniel Gleicher, head of security policy for Facebook, "said that Stone's personal accounts were among 54 Facebook accounts, 50 Facebook pages and four Instagram accounts closed Wednesday for policy violations."

ABC Notes Roberts' Brief Hospitalization Last Month.

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 6, 0:20, Muir, 6.99M) reported on "word that Chief Justice John Roberts was hospitalized for a night last month after falling and injuring his head walking at a country club." Roberts "has suffered seizures before but doctors say this was likely due to light-headed from dehydration."

Rasmussen Reports National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 50%-40%.

The Washington Times (7/8, Boyer, 492K) reports that a Rasmussen Reports national poll of 1,500 likely voters, taken July 5-7, shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 50%-40% "in a poll often cited by the president as being fair to him." The Times adds that "nearly one in five Republicans in the survey, 19%, said they would vote for Mr. Biden today." Meanwhile, "Biden has the support of 79% of Democrats," and independents "favor Mr. Biden 48% to 36%."

Gidley: Trump Will Win Reelection, Because People Will Not Be Denied. Fox News (7/8, 27.59M) featured Hogan Gidley, National Press Secretary for the Trump 2020 campaign, who said, President Trump's "first run for politics, he won the presidency of the United States. He will do it again regardless of what the media and the detractors try and take away from him. The American people cannot be denied all the success and the positive things that have occurred because of this President's policies."

NYTimes Analysis: Regarding Turnout At Saturday Rally, Trump Campaign "Has No Idea What To Expect."

The New York Times (7/8, Haberman, Karni, 18.61M) reports that ahead of President Trump's Saturday rally in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, "the only thing that seems clear is that the president's team has no idea what to expect." The Times says Gov. Chris Sununu (R) "has said he will not be attending. It isn't clear how many other Republican elected officials will come. The number of attendees could be low, or it could be expansive. There could be lots of people drifting in from" nearby states. The Times says, "Campaign officials believe they will be able to prevent the kind of ticket prank that helped turn Mr. Trump's rally last month in Tulsa, Okla., into a far smaller event than expected – but they still cannot say for sure. And most significantly, there is the looming threat of the coronavirus spreading in a crowd where attendees will be in relatively close quarters, despite being mostly outdoors.”

GOP Miami Mayor Declines To Commit To Voting For Trump.

Politico (7/8, Cohen, 4.29M) reports that GOP Miami Mayor Francis Suarez “refused to commit on Wednesday to voting for President Donald Trump in November.” Suarez told Politico, “I want to see what both candidates have to offer for the urban communities before making up my mind on who I’m going to support.” Politico adds, “The noncommittal answer from a swing state Republican elected official provides a look into Trump’s uphill battle to win Florida for a second time. ... Joe Biden leads Trump by 5 percentage points in Florida, according to the Real Clear Politics polling average. Trump narrowly won the state by 1.2 percentage points in 2016.” Politico adds that Suarez, “who said he has been a Republican since age 18, was elected mayor of Miami in 2017. He is the son of former Miami Mayor Xavier Suarez, a Cuban immigrant.”

Sherman: Ingraham, Others Skeptical Trump Capable Of Turning “Things Around” To Win Reelection.

Writing for Vanity Fair (7/8, Sherman, 9.08M), Gabriel Sherman says that last month, “Roger Ailes’s widow, Elizabeth, invited Fox News host Laura Ingraham and a few others for dinner at her $36 million Palm Beach home. ... With COVID cases hitting record highs and Donald Trump’s poll numbers going in the opposite direction, guests agreed that Trump is probably incapable, or unwilling, to take steps to turn things around. ‘We have to be prepared for Trump losing,’ Ingraham told her dinner companions, according to [a] source. Perhaps anticipating that Fox News could pivot in a post-Trump media environment, Ingraham said she’s been in talks to take over for Rush Limbaugh, who recently revealed his Stage 4 lung cancer might force him off the radio.” Citing “sources,” Sherman says that “Trump has told people he wants to commute [Roger] Stone’s sentence before Stone reports to prison on July 14.”

Nicholas: Pence Seeks To Boost Trump In 2020 And Himself For 2024.

Writing for The Atlantic (7/8, Nicholas, 3.47M), Peter Nicholas says that President Trump has privately “told aides that he rescued Mike Pence from a potentially embarrassing defeat by pulling him out of a tough reelection bid in the 2016 Indiana governor’s race and putting him on the ticket, a former White House official told me. Now it’s Vice President Pence’s turn to see what, if anything, he can do to rescue Trump from a more momentous loss – and” preserve his own White House hopes. Nicholas writes, “In the coming months, [Pence] will spend several days a week visiting crucial swing states, a campaign adviser told me. Pence will approach each state as if he’s running to be its governor, zeroing in on local issues important to voters’ daily lives, the adviser said, and he’ll try to showcase the federal grants and other benefits the Trump administration has dished out.”

Biden “Unity” Task Force Disagrees On Police Immunity, Legalizing Marijuana.

Politico (7/8, Otterbein, Barrón-López, 4.29M) reports that Joe Biden created “unity” task forces in an effort “to bring the progressive wing of the Democratic Party into the fold after the sting of Bernie Sanders’ defeat.” But on “the biggest issue of the day – criminal justice – the left flank got rolled.” The criminal justice panel “got into heated debates in recent weeks over qualified immunity, a legal doctrine that shields police from being sued for misconduct. Progressives pushed to end it, but Biden appointees agreed only to sign onto a commitment to rein in the rule.” the discussion of marijuana “ended similarly: Sanders’ team argued in private meetings that they should legalize cannabis, but that idea was rejected.”

The New York Times (7/8, Ember, Kaplan, 18.61M) reports that allies of Biden and Sanders “unveiled a sweeping set of joint policy recommendations on Wednesday, a significant if tentative sign of cooperation among Democrats as Mr. Biden’s campaign continues its appeals to the progressive left. Mr. Biden is expected to adopt many of the recommendations, which were submitted by six policy task forces and cover a wide range of issues including health care, criminal justice, education and climate change.” The Times adds that “the lengthy recommendation document amounted to a collection of widely acceptable liberal proposals, many of which Mr. Biden has already embraced in his bid for party unity.” Still, says the Times, “the policy recommendations will also most likely frustrate some in the Democratic Party’s activist wing who believe they do not go far enough.”

Under the headline “Democrats’ Joint Policy Proposals Largely Eschew Sanders’ Agenda,” Bloomberg (7/8, Pager, 4.73M) reports, “The task forces created to forge a united platform from the policies of [Biden and Sanders] largely sidestepped the most sweeping proposals at the core of Sanders’s presidential campaign. ... There is no mention of Medicare for All, tuition-free public college or the Green New Deal, three of Sanders’s signature proposals that call for remaking the American health care system and the economy and significantly increasing access to college. Some of the progressive proposals that the task forces did advocate for include eliminating carbon emissions for power plants by 2035, banning for-profit charter schools, prohibiting government contracts to companies that pay less than a $15 minimum wage and new guidelines for use of force by police.”

WPost Analysis: Liberals Skeptical Of Biden’s Commitment To Progressive Agenda. The Washington Post (7/8, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports that as progressives “envision what Biden’s agenda as president would look like amid historic national crises, many...question his commitment to the transformational Franklin D. Roosevelt-style presidency he says he aspires to, pointing to a lack of specifics and an abundance of caution on certain policies. ... 'If I am to accept him as being a transformative leader, then I need to see evidence of his own transformation, and I haven't,' said LaTosha Brown, the head of the civil rights group Black Voters Matter." The Post says Biden has refused "to adopt polarizing positions such as defunding the police or removing statues of the Founding Fathers that the activist wing of his party has championed." Biden "does not favor Medicare-for-all. And his plans to battle the novel coronavirus have stopped short of the ideas advanced by left-leaning members of Congress."

Rove: Democrats Making Mistakes That May Boost Republicans This Fall. In his Wall Street Journal (7/8, Rove, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column, Karl Rove says that Democrats are making errors that may possibly benefit Republicans this fall. Rove cites as examples of those errors: Democrats' blocking of law enforcement reform legislation by Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC), and Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) saying in response to a question on whether statues of George Washington should be removed, "I think we should listen to the argument there."

Donald Trump Jr. said on Fox News' Hannity (7/8, 535K) that "the radical left entirely controls Joe Biden and the party. ... No one believes Joe Biden is going to ever actually be the guy in charge if he pulls this thing off, do they?" Trump Jr. added, "The reality is Joe Biden doesn't know where he is. That is not even fiction anymore. On a daily basis he forgets where he is, he confuses his wife and his sister, he forgets the office he's running for. If Donald Trump did anyone of those things, every television psychologist would be on the airwaves nonstop saying, 'He's way past his prime. He is in the later stages of Alzheimer's and dementia combined.' And yet with Joe Biden, 'There's nothing to see here, folks.' Let's not pretend. It would be sad if it wasn't so scary that this could be the guy that's actually in charge."

West Says He Has Lost Confidence In Trump.

Forbes (7/8, Lane, 9.71M) reports that Kanye West denies that his presidential campaign "is a publicity stunt for his upcoming album." West said President Trump "the closest president we've had in years to allowing God to still be part of the conversation," but he "insists he's lost confidence" in the President. Of Joe Biden, West said, "Like come on man, please. You know? Obama's special. Trump's special. We say Kanye West is special. America needs special people that lead. Bill Clinton? Special. Joe Biden's not special."

Breitbart (7/8, Kent, 673K) reports that West told Forbes, "That is a form of racism and white supremacy and white control to say that all Black people need to be Democrat and to assume that me running is me splitting the vote. All of that information is being charged up on social media platforms by Democrats. ... And Democrats used to tell me, the same Democrats have threatened me. ... The reason why this is the first day I registered to vote is because I was scared. I was told that if I voted on Trump my music career would be over. ... And that's what the Democrats are doing, emotionally, to my people. Threatening them to the point where this white man can tell a Black man if you don't vote for me, you're not Black."

Citing West's "rambling" interview with Forbes, USA Today (7/8, Yasharoff, 10.31M) quotes him as saying, "I am taking the red hat off. ... It looks like one big mess to me. I don't like that I caught wind that he hid in the bunker... One of the main reasons I wore the red hat as a protest to the segregation of votes in the Black community. Also, other than the fact that I like Trump hotels and the saxophones in the lobby."

West: White Supremacists Put Planned Parenthood In Cities To "Do The Devil's Work." The Federalist (7/8, Duffy, 126K) reports that West told Forbes he opposes abortion rights. West said, "I am pro-life because I'm following the word of the Bible." he added that he believes "Planned Parenthoods have been placed inside cities by white supremacists to do the Devil's work."

NYTimes Analysis: Carlson Attacked Duckworth With "Nativist Smears."

The New York Times (7/8, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that "Thai-American" Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL), "a potential vice-presidential nominee, was targeted with nativist smears for the second night in a row on Tuesday by Fox News's Tucker Carlson." The Times says Carlson "attacked" Duckworth after she suggested "during a Sunday interview on CNN...that it was worth discussing the value of removing monuments of George Washington, the nation's slave-owning first president. ... 'There are many of us here who do like this country,' Mr. Carlson said, as a graphic on the screen read, 'We have to fight to preserve our nation & heritage.'" Carlson added, "We have every right to fight to preserve our nation and our heritage and our culture. And when vandals like Tammy Duckworth and Ilhan Omar tell us that we're not allowed to question their patriotism, even as they scream about how horrible America is, we have every right to laugh in their faces, and we should."

Establishment Republicans Seeking To Boost Marshall In Kansas Senate Race.

The AP (7/8, Hanna) reports, "Establishment Republicans who'd been coy for months about the GOP primary" in the race to succeed retiring Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) "are increasingly" seeking to boost Rep. Roger Marshall (R-KS) to the nomination instead of ex-Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach, a "polarizing conservative." The AP says, "A new GOP super-PAC this week launched what it promised will be a $3 million advertising campaign against Kobach with a spot that says he has ties to white supremacists." The group's director "previously worked for a Republican congressman and the state's GOP attorney general, and the group shares a media company" with Senate Majority Leader McConnell's reelection campaign. Meanwhile, Marshall "has racked up key business and anti-abortion endorsements. Even President Donald Trump stepped in last month, persuading the anti-tax, free-market Club for Growth to abandon a multi-million-dollar ad campaign against Marshall ahead of the Aug. 4 primary, a spokesman for the group confirmed.”

NYTimes Analysis: Black GOP Hopeful James Struggling Because He Won't Criticize Trump On Race.

The New York Times (7/8, Peters, Gray, 18.61M) reports that GOP businessman John James, who is challenging Sen. Gary Peters (D-MI), “still feels the sting from the harrowing encounters and indignities he has experienced as a young Black man crossing paths with the police.” Yet, “many Michigan voters aren't drawn to Mr. James, in no small part because” he “has refused to utter anything but the most gentle and equivocating criticism of President Trump, sticking to a playbook that he hopes will keep Michigan's white, Trump-supporting conservatives from turning against him.” The Times says James’ “cautious approach has stirred a debate among African-American supporters and opponents alike. Hasn't the time long passed for hedged and ambivalent responses to the president's remarks on race? And what defines someone like Mr. James first: being Black or being a Republican?”

Shepard Smith Heads To CNBC To Anchor Evening Program.

The Washington Examiner (7/8, Brest, 448K) reports former Fox News anchor Shepard Smith is joining CNBC to “anchor a new one-hour evening news program titled The News with Shepard Smith, according to the Wall Street Journal.” The broadcast, “which will debut in the fall, will fill the 7-8 p.m. time slot on the cable news business channel.”

Giuliani Called NYPD Over “Spoof Interview.”

Page Six (7/8, 1.6M) reports that Rudy Giuliani called the NYPD on Sacha Baron Cohen when the “Borat” star “tried to prank him into a spoof interview.” Giuliani “went to the Mark Hotel on Tuesday for what he thought was a serious interview about the administration's response to COVID-19.” After a female interviewer asked “a few softball questions.” Giuliani said, “This guy comes running in, wearing a crazy, what I would say was a pink transgender outfit. It was a pink bikini, with lace, underneath a translucent mesh top, it looked absurd. ... This person comes in yelling and screaming, and I thought this must be a scam or a shake-down, so I reported it to the police. He then ran away.” Giuliani added, “I only later realized it must have been Sacha Baron Cohen. I thought about all the people he previously fooled and I felt good about myself because he didn't get me.”

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 41.5%, and his disapproval at 56.3%. Trump's approval is down 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 “likely voters” (7/5-7/7) finds Trump's approval at 44%, and his disapproval at 54%.

A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 952 “registered voters” (7/6-7/7) shows Trump with a 40% approval and 57% disapproval.

An Economist/YouGov survey of 1,165 “registered voters” (7/5-7/7), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 42%, with 57% disapproving.

IMF Head Says Fund Must Adjust Lending Instruments For Poorest Nations.

Reuters (7/8, Shalal) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva said Wednesday that the Fund must improve its instruments for lending to low-income countries. Georgieva “told an online debt conference that emerging markets with strong fundamentals issued $124 billion in bonds in the first six months of 2020, but others with poor fundamentals had no affordable access to capital markets.” Georgieva “said the Fund was working with member countries in advanced economies to shift some of their Special Drawing Rights – the IMF's own special currency – to low-income countries that had been particularly hard hit by the pandemic and its economic fallout.”

Reuters (7/8, Farge) reports Georgieva also “urged policymakers on Wednesday to use their response to the coronavirus pandemic to tackle climate change.” Georgieva said, “Looking ahead, policies should lay the foundation for a low-carbon, resilient recovery that would create millions of jobs while help address the climate crisis,” adding that the Fund is “especially concerned that the crisis will jeopardise the important development gains of the last years.”

World Bank Head Urges Debt Freeze Extension, Permanent Reduction For Poorest Countries.

Reuters (7/8, Shalal) reports World Bank President David Malpass said Wednesday that G20 countries should extend through 2021 a freeze on official debt payments of the world's poorest countries, along with permanently reducing the debt loads of the most heavily-indebted states. Malpass said in a G20 debt conference that simply delaying the debt payments would fail to solve the problems in countries with already-high debt levels pre-pandemic. Malpass said, “In such cases, we need to not merely reduce debt service today, but reduce debt service tomorrow and permanently.” Malpass added, “This will create light at the end of the debt tunnel for the poorest countries. For some of the hardest hit, a systematic reduction of sovereign debt stocks is the only way to restart growth, make new investment possible and profitable, and avoid an even longer poverty trap.”

IMF Official Urges Nations To Pursue Fiscal Reform Once COVID-19 Ends.

Reuters (7/8, Kajimoto) reports IMF Deputy Managing Director Mitsuhiro Furusawa said Wednesday that the Fund is worried about ballooning debt in emerging and advanced economies alike resulting from COVID-19 stimulus spending, and it urges countries to address fiscal reforms once the pandemic has ended. Furusawa said in an online panel, "Once the economy gets back on track, (a) medium to long-term fiscal framework must be created to manage public finances accordingly. ... That will be among the utmost priorities for our policy recommendations."

Christine Lagarde's Learning Curve: ECB Boss On 'Brutal' Coronavirus Crisis.

Ortagus Says US Won't Fund WHO After It "Screwed Up" On Major Disease Outbreaks.

State Department spokesperson Morgan Ortagus said on Fox News' Bill Hemmer Reports (7/8), "There is no one more generous than the American taxpayer. We have given close to $200 billion for the global health infrastructure that currently exists on the planet. We will continue to do it. But what we won't do is fund an organization that screwed up on COVID-19, screwed up on SARS, screwed up on Ebola and screwed up on HIV/AIDS. ... We are, by far, the most generous country on the face of this planet and we will continue to be, but were going to be good stewards of American taxpayer dollars."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/8, Editorial Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that now that the Administration has notified the UN that the US will withdraw from the WHO in July 2021, President Trump and Secretary of State Pompeo should lay out the conditions for the US to rejoin. The Journal adds that if reform of the WHO cannot be achieved, the White House should support the creation of an alternative pandemic response agency.

Trudeau: Canada Handled Pandemic Better Than US.

Reuters (7/8, Ljunggren) reports, "Canada handled the novel coronavirus outbreak better than many of its allies, including the United States, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said on Wednesday, in a rare public comment on the faltering US effort." Said Trudeau, "We were able to control the virus better than many of our allies, particularly including our neighbor."

Bolsonaro Says He Is Doing Well Using Hydroxychloroquine.

Reuters (7/8, Simoes) reports that on Wednesday, Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro said he is "doing very well" despite testing positive for COVID-19, and said, "To those who root against hydroxychloroquine but don't present alternatives, I hate to say I'm doing very well using it and, thank God, I will still live much longer." The New York Times (7/8, Londoño, 18.61M) says Bolsonaro's "attitude during convalescence is consistent with his widely-discredited contention that the virus poses little threat to people who are healthy, and his endorsement of the drug, though studies have found no evidence that it works on Covid-19 patients, but have shown possible danger in taking it."

The AP (7/8, De Sousa, Biller) recounts that "Brazil, the world's sixth-biggest nation, with more than 210 million people, is one of the outbreak's most lethal hot spots. More than 65,000 Brazilians have died from COVID-19, and over 1.5 million have been infected."

UN Chief: Foreign Meddling In Libya Conflict At "Unprecedented Levels."

Reuters (7/8, Nichols) reports UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres warned the Security Council on Wednesday "that the conflict in Libya has entered a new phase with 'unprecedented levels' of foreign interference and mercenaries." Said Guterres, "The conflict has entered a new phase with foreign interference reaching unprecedented levels, including in the delivery of sophisticated equipment and the number of mercenaries involved in the fighting."

Walter Russell Mead writes in his Wall Street Journal (7/8, Mead, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column that there is no end in sight to the fighting in Libya as US engagement wanes and over half a dozen powers struggle for power.

UN Report To Say US Killing Of Soleimani, Iranian Reprisals Both Illegal.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Rasmussen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Agnes Callamard, UN special rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, is set to issue a report on Thursday in which she concludes that the killing of Iranian Maj. Gen. Qassem Soleimani in January was unlawful, and that Iran's missile strikes in response were also unlawful.

McKenzie Predicts Smaller But Enduring US Troop Presence In Iraq.

The AP (7/8, Baldor) reports CENTCOM Commander Gen. Frank McKenzie "is talking optimistically about keeping a smaller but enduring military presence there." Meeting Tuesday with Iraq's new prime minister, Mustafa al-Kadhimi, McKenzie "said afterward that he believes the Iraqis welcome the U.S. and coalition troops, especially in the ongoing fight to keep Islamic State militants from taking hold of the country again." Said McKenzie, "I believe that going forward, they're going to want us to be with them. I don't sense there's a mood right now for us to depart precipitously. And I'm pretty confident of that."

Administration Investigating Who Leaked Russia Bounty Intelligence.

The Washington Examiner (7/8, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that the Administration has opened an investigation to determine "who disclosed classified intelligence reports related to an alleged plot by the Russians to pay bounties to Taliban fighters who kill U.S. or coalition forces in Afghanistan." The Examiner cites a Politico report which said the Administration had "opened an internal investigation" and "believes it has narrowed down the universe of suspects to fewer than 10 people."

CENTCOM Commander: Bounty Intelligence Was Unproved But A Cause For "Worry." The Washington Times (7/8, Meier, 492K) reports CENTCOM commander Gen. Frank McKenzie "said Tuesday that while it was a cause for worry, he has not seen direct evidence from the field to back up" the intelligence finding that Russia was paying bounties to Taliban soldiers to kill American soldiers. McKenzie "said that he has not been convinced that the deaths of any American personnel serving in the region were directly linked to Russian bounties offered to Taliban militants on U.S. soldiers." He said, "The intelligence case wasn't proved to me. ... It was proved enough to worry me. It wasn't proved enough that I'd take it to a court of law. That's often true in battlefield intelligence."

Russian Ambassador: Bounty Reports Are "A Downright Lie." The Washington Post (7/8, Deyoung, 14.2M) reports Moscow's ambassador in Washington Anatoly Antonov said Wednesday that media reports of the Russian bounties are a "downright lie" and are "poisoning the atmosphere of cooperation" between the US and Russia on Afghan peace. Antonov said, "No concrete evidence has been presented" and authors of the reports are "trying to create an impression that our country is an enemy of the United States." Antonov also said US-Russia relations overall are in a "deplorable state." He said, "It would be no exaggeration to say that arms control issues have always been a core of the U.S.-Russia relations. ... We are deeply concerned about the United States actions leading to the collapse of strategic stability."

Reuters/Ipsos Poll: 60% Believe Reports Of Russian Bounties. The Washington Times (7/8, Meier, 492K) reports that a Reuters/Ipsos poll released Wednesday found that "most Americans believe that Russia had placed bounties on U.S. soldiers in Afghanistan last year, while more than half support placing sanctions on Moscow in response." According to the poll, 60% of Americans said they believe reports of the Russian bounties are "very" or "somewhat" credible, "while 21% said they were not and 20% were unsure." In addition, nearly 40% "said they believe Mr. Trump 'did know' about Russia's placement of bounties on U.S. soldiers prior to the reports last month, while 26% said Mr. Trump was unaware of the targets." The Times adds that 54% "said the U.S. should impose sanctions on Russia in response for the bounties."

Taliban Suicide Bomber Kills Three Amid Rising Violence.

Reuters (7/8, Amani, Sediqi) reports a Taliban suicide bomber "detonated an explosive-packed military vehicle on the approach to the provincial governor's residence and police headquarters in the Afghan province of Kandahar on Wednesday, killing at least three people, authorities said." The Taliban claimed responsibility. The attack comes as violence is "escalating anew in Afghanistan even as the United States tries to broker a peace deal between the Taliban and Afghan government after almost two decades of war."

Pompeo: China Took "Incredibly Aggressive Action" In Recent Clash With India.

Reuters (7/8, Pamuk, Landay) reports Secretary of State Pompeo on Wednesday accused China of taking "incredibly aggressive action" in a recent clash with India over a disputed section of their shared border. Speaking to reporters, Pompeo said of the June 15 incident that left 20 Indian soldiers dead, "The Chinese took incredibly aggressive action. The Indians have done their best to respond to that. I'd put this in the context of General Secretary Xi Jinping and his behavior throughout the region, and indeed, throughout the world."

US Admirals: China Sea Carrier Operation Meant As Message To Beijing.

The Washington Times (7/8, Gertz, 492K) reports the commanders of two Navy aircraft carrier strike groups sailing in the South China Sea "say their operations demonstrated support for the idea of freedom on the seas." Rear Adm. Jim Kirk, commander of a battle group headed by the USS Nimitz, said, "Our training exercises enhance our ability to provide regional air defense, and expand our reach of operations to respond to those who challenge regional stability," making "a clear but indirect reference to China." Rear Adm. George Wikoff, who heads the Reagan strike group, similarly said the operations "reinforce international norms that support the free and open Indo-Pacific."

Chinese Secret Police Open Office In Hong Kong.

The Washington Post (7/8, Crawshaw, 14.2M) reports, "Early Wednesday, under a heavy police presence and before any public announcement about the matter," Chinese state security officials "inaugurated the Office for Safeguarding National Security of the Central People's Government in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region at a ceremony that took place behind water-filled barricades." The move marked "the first time the Chinese government's state security apparatus has been permitted to operate in Hong Kong, marking a milestone in officials' efforts to dismantle the firewall that separated the city from the authoritarian mainland." The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Strumpf, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the swift arrival of China's secret police highlights how quickly Hong Kong is changing.

Hong Kong Bans Protest Song, Other Political Expression In Schools. The New York Times (7/8, Mullany, 18.61M) reports

Hong Kong's education secretary on Wednesday "banned students from singing the protest anthem 'Glory to Hong Kong,' posting slogans with political messages or forming human chains, saying 'the schools are obliged to stop' such activities." To the Times, the statement by Secretary Kevin Yeung "ratcheted up the pressure on the pro-democracy movement."

WSJournal: US Should Not Weaponize Dollar To Undermine Hong Kong Currency. A Wall Street Journal (7/8, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial argues that while the Administration is mulling its response to China's actions in Hong Kong, one idea should not be under consideration: weaponizing the US dollar to undermine Hong Kong's currency.

Official Says US Ready To Renew Talks With North Korea.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Martin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on Wednesday, Deputy Secretary of State Biegun said during a visit to Seoul that the US is prepared to renew talks with North Korea over its nuclear weapons. Biegun said, "Dialogue can lead to action, but action is impossible without dialogue."

The AP (7/8, Kim, Kim), meanwhile, reports Biegun also "accused a senior North Korean nuclear negotiator" of being "locked in an old way of thinking," days after the negotiator said Pyongyang won't resume talks with Washington. The AP says Biegun's comments "were a rare case of a senior U.S. official directly criticizing North Korea since the two countries launched now-stalled diplomacy" in 2018.

Mexican Drug Cartel Attacks Public Officials.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Montes, de Córdoba, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on the Jalisco New Generation Cartel, saying that it is the most important cartel in Mexico and has mounted direct assaults on Mexican officials and law enforcement. According to the Journal, the group is responsible for the deaths of over 100 officials. The US Drug Enforcement Administration is offering $10 million for information leading to the arrest of the group's leader Nemesio Oseguera.

Statue Of Melania Trump Set On Fire In Slovenia.

The Washington Examiner (7/8, Soellner, 448K) reports that a wooden sculpture of First Lady Melania Trump was "set aflame on the Fourth of July in her hometown of Sevnica, Slovenia."

Turkey's Moves To Turn Hagia Sophia Into A Mosque Again Spark International Outcry.

The New York Times (7/8, Gall, 18.61M) reports Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan is making moves to convert Hagia Sophia, "one of the world's most potent symbols of Christian-Muslim rivalry," into a "working mosque once more, fulfilling a dream for himself, his supporters and conservative Muslims far beyond Turkey's shores – but threatening to set off an international furor." According to the Times, "the very idea of changing the monument's status has escalated tensions with Turkey's longtime rival, Greece; upset Christians around the world; and set off a chorus of dismay from political and religious leaders as diverse as Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Patriarch Kirill of the Russian Orthodox Church." Erdoğan's rivals "say he has raised the issue of restoring Hagia Sophia as a mosque every time he has faced a political crisis, using it to stir supporters in his nationalist and conservative religious base."

Al Jazeera's Oueiss: Twitter Must Project Journalists Against Authoritarian Regimes.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (7/8, Oueiss, 14.2M), Ghada Oueiss of Al Jazeera Arabic writes that recent online attacks against her appear to be a coordinated campaign in retaliation for her critical reporting on Saudi Arabia. In Oueiss' view, the attacks against her, and her colleague Ola Al-Fares, a Jordanian news anchor, were based not "only as journalists but as women who dared to be critical." Oueiss urges Twitter and other social media sites to "take action to protect journalists such as myself and ensure that its platform is no longer misused by authoritarian regimes."

Critics Of FHFA Proposed Rule Say It Could Effectively Kill CRT.

Bloomberg (7/8, 4.73M) reports that the FHFA recently proposed a rule that would "drastically cut Fannie and Freddie's incentive to continue selling" CRT bonds, and likely "shrink the market significantly, in effect leading the companies to keep as much risk as they did when the housing market collapsed more than a decade ago, according to the proposal's detractors." Structured Finance Association CEO Michael Bright said, "We think it might kill CRT, and that this might be their intent." According to Bloomberg, former Freddie Mac CEO Don Layton "released a separate white paper this week in which he wrote that FHFA Director Mark Calabria has expressed skepticism in private conversations over the effectiveness of CRT."

Apartment List: In July, Number Of Americans Not Making Full Housing Payments Surges To All-Time High.

Fox Business (7/8, Henney, 1.73M) reports, "Roughly one-third of households – 32 percent – have not made their complete housing payment in July, according to a survey published Wednesday by Apartment List, an online rental platform. That's up from 30 percent in June and 31 percent in May." Fox Business says that the "federal eviction moratorium, which covers individuals in properties backed by Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, has been extended" until August 31." In 2019, roughly 43 percent of new mortgages were federally backed." Data from the MBA suggests that 4.2 million American homeowners are currently in forbearance plans.

DS News (7/8, Albanese) reports that while 32% of Americans did not make a full housing payment on time in July, this is up "slightly from 30% in June." However, "of those that missed the payment in June, 89% said they paid that month's bill as of the first week of July."

ARRC Chair Tom Wipf said, "Transitioning from LIBOR involves complex challenges for many institution's internal systems and processes. This publication provides a clear taxonomy for organizing one's strategy for moving to SOFR and overcoming associated transition challenges."

IPO Filing Reveals Rocket Homes Is Under Investigation Over Potential RESPA Violations.

According to Inside Mortgage Finance's (7/8, Hollier, Subscription Publication) paywalled Short Takes, "The IPO filing for Rocket Companies also revealed an investigation of Rocket Homes by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau for potential violations of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act." IMF says Rocket Homes' core business "consists of referring homebuyers, who have been pre-qualified for a mortgage by Quicken, to a network of third-party partner real estate agents that assist in the home purchase."

Quicken Loans Vice Chairman: RON And Digital Mortgage Flexibilities Helping Industry Through Pandemic.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/8, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports, "The coronavirus pandemic may trigger a permanent shift in how mortgage lenders do business, according to participants in a webinar hosted by Moody's Investors Service last week." Quicken Loans Vice Chairman Bill Emerson "said borrowers still aren't comfortable having contact with others during closings or appraisals." However, "steps taken by legislative bodies, regulators and the government-sponsored enterprises have helped lenders do business amid social distancing requirements, Emerson noted." For example, "A number of states temporarily approved remote online notarizations beginning in March and April, enabling digital closings." Housing Finance Strategies President Faith Schwartz "said the challenge for lenders will be to convince regulators, the GSEs and FHA to make permanent changes that are only temporarily in place due to the coronavirus."

FSOC To Meet On July 14.

Politico Morning Money (7/8, O'Donnell, Weaver, 4.25M) reports that the Financial Stability Oversight Council will meet on Tuesday, July 14, to "discuss the latest market developments as the coronavirus pandemic rages on, with a focus on secondary mortgage market liquidity." The docket also indicates there will be an "update on Federal Reserve stress tests." According to Politico, "the Fed last month examined how big banks might perform under three possible futures for this recession, which the central bank said was cause for optimism but didn't publicly release how individual lenders performed."

MBA: Purchase Applications Rose 5% Last Week, As Conventional Refis Fueled Bump In Refi Activity.

HousingWire (7/8, 23K) says the MBA reported purchase applications rose 5% last week from the prior week, reaching their "highest level in almost a month." Meanwhile, the Market Composite Index "increased 2.2% on a seasonally adjusted basis from one week earlier as mortgage rates continued to drop across the country." Refinance applications rose 0.4%, with overall refi activity "up 111% from last year." According to HousingWire, "The slight increase in refinancing was most likely driven by a 2% gain in conventional refinances." National Mortgage News (7/8, McCullom) reports the ARM share rose from 3.2% to 3.4%. The FHA share fell from 11.7% to 10.9%, and the VA share fell from 10.8% to 10.4%. The average rate for 30-year FRMs with conforming loan balances fell from 3.29% to 3.26%, while that for jumbos fell from 3.59% to 3.52%. The 15-year FRM average fell from 2.81% to 2.77%. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.04% to 2.98%.

Mortgage News Daily (7/8, Swanson) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "Mortgage rates declined to another record low as renewed fears of a coronavirus resurgence offset the impacts from a week of mostly positive economic data, such as June factory orders and payroll employment. The 30-year fixed rate slipped to 3.26 percent – down 53 basis points since late March. Borrowers acted in response to these lower rates, after accounting for the July 4th holiday.” According to Kan, “Purchase applications continued their recovery, increasing 5 percent to the highest level in almost a month and 33 percent from a year ago. The average purchase loan size increased to $365,700 – also another high – as borrowers contend with limited supply and higher home prices.”

Equity Analysts Believe Mortgage Earnings Should Be Strong In Q2.

National Mortgage News (7/8) reports equity analysts “generally” believe that Q2 mortgage earnings are expected to be solid, despite the pandemic-induced weakness of the broader economy. According to Wedbush Securities’ Henry Coffey, “The mortgage market remains ‘hot as a pistol’ and is likely to remain so into the third quarter.” Keefe, Bruyette & Woods (KBW) analyst Bose George said, “You’ve got this huge refi surge that is overwhelming the fact that you probably did have a tightening of the credit box.” According to NMN, “mortgage forecasts suggest that if rate-driven refinancing remains strong, originations overall will still be higher this year. Total volume is expected to rise nearly 26% in 2020, according to KBW’s second-quarter mortgage earnings preview, which averaged its own estimates with those of the Mortgage Bankers Association, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.”

PPP Loans Save More Than 60,000 Mortgage Industry Jobs.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/8, Hollier, Subscription Publication) reports, “Data released reluctantly by the Small Business Administration on Monday reveals that more than 1,000 mortgage-related companies have received loans exceeding $150,000 through the Paycheck Protection Program. Applicants claimed that these loans helped save 61,235 jobs.” According to IMF, “at least two categories of mortgage-related companies received PPP loans. The first group includes mortgage companies, mortgage bankers and home equity lenders. PPP loans went to 409 members of this group, saving 32,332 jobs, according to the companies’ applications.” IMF says that nine of the mortgage companies that received PPP loans “saved more than 400 jobs.”

Fannie Mae Boosts Productivity By Embracing The Cloud.

Network World (7/8, Cooney, 17K) reports that around a year and a half ago, some Fannie Mae employees in Texas were “leaving work early to work at home over the enterprise [VPN] because it gave them better application performance and less congestion than the office network.” Because of this, Fannie “started moving toward a cloud-first environment and away from its legacy hub-and-spoke WAN (wide area network).” According to Fannie Mae’s Ken Reddick, Fannie is “moving to is a cloud-edge environment where user traffic is now sent directly where it needs to go without hitting the data center, and what that has brought us is a four-fold increase in network performance and cut latency by 50%.”

DS News (7/8, Albanese) reports that on July 22, the American Mortgage Diversity Council will host a webinar titled, “Leading Beyond a Crisis: Driving Sustainable Homeownership in Diverse Communities.” According to DS News, “The webinar will also outline the steps mortgage professional can take to build a sustainable, equitable, and diverse housing ecosystem.” Industry leaders participating in the webinar include: “Dionne Cuello, VP, Diverse Market Segments, Citi; Suzy Lindblom, COO, Planet Home Lending; Alanna McCargo, VP, Housing Finance Policy Center, Urban Institute, and Lenny McNeil, EVP, U.S. Bank Home Mortgage.”

RentCafe: Nearly Half Of Renters Changed Plans To Buy Homes Due To Pandemic.

National Mortgage Professional (7/8, Persaud) says that a “report from RentCafe revealed that while 11% of renters were ready to purchase a home at the start of 2020, 43% of prospective homebuyers have changed their plans.” RentCafe’s report suggested that nearly half of “millennials, the most likely demographic to purchase a home, were forced to give up the dream of owning a home in 2020.” RentCafe found that 56% of renters were “optimistic” about buying within the next five years, but “as many as 23% said that they’re never buying, according to the report.”

Urban Institute: Lack Of Housing Supply Is Fueling Gentrification.

HousingWire (7/8, Falcon, 23K) reports that a “recent study from the Urban Institute reveals that higher housing costs as a result of the shortage of housing inventory is leading affluent buyers to seek out low- or moderate-income neighborhoods,” fueling an acceleration in gentrification. To decrease gentrification disparity, the Urban Institute suggests boosting housing supply, as well as easing local land use, building, and zoning restrictions. Mortgage News Daily (7/7, Swanson) reported, “The authors conclude that encouraging growth in the housing supply by easing restrictions on building and boosting alternatives such as manufactured housing and accessory dwelling units, the pace of gentrification could be slowed.”

Zillow: High-End Housing Market Started To Bounce Back In June.

National Mortgage News (7/8, Centopani) reports that the "top end of the housing market started rebounding in June, according to Zillow." The prices of the "top fifth of listings" jumped 8.4% from May to June, while the "bottom fifth saw a 9.3% decline in listings in June from May and 29.2% drop year-over-year. Median list prices jumped 2.9% month-over-month to $337,160 because of this disparity." Zillow economist Jeff Tucker said, "The way unemployment has hit in this recession – with more layoffs in service, retail, food, entertainment and other jobs unable to be done remotely – could result in vastly different experiences on either end of the housing price spectrum. Millions of Americans who lost jobs or income are only able to stay in their homes right now thanks to extraordinary forbearance programs, which means they likely have to pause their plans to trade up or move to a new city."

NMHC: 77.4% Of Renters Made Full Or Partial Rent Payments By July 6.

Multi-Housing News (7/8) reports that 77.4% of the country's renters "made full or partial rent payments by July 6, according to the latest report from the National Multifamily Housing Council. The figure is a slight decrease from the same time period last month and the same time period last year." NMHC's report "comes as the industry eyes the looming July 31 expiration date for supplemental federal unemployment benefits."

Homebuilder Taylor Morrison Saw A Surge Of Sales In June.

CNBC (7/8, Olick, 3.62M) reports, "Ultra-low mortgage rates, a shortage of existing homes for sale and strong demand for new high-tech houses catapulted homebuilder Taylor Morrison's sales into record territory in June." The homebuilder "saw its net sales increase 94% annually last month, a record pace. It also posted a record sales pace per community." CNBC (7/8, Clifford, 3.62M) reports Taylor Morrison CEO Sheryl Palmer told CNBC on Wednesday that sales were strongest in Texas, Arizona, Florida, and California – states with recent spikes in COVID-19 cases.

DocuSign Buys Liveoak, Notarize Raises $35M In Series C Funding Thanks To Higher RON Demand.

According to HousingWire (7/8, Azevedo, 23K), DocuSign on Tuesday "announced it had acquired Austin-based startup Liveoak Technologies for $38 million in an all-stock transaction." In the announcement, DocuSign said its purchase comes "amid increasing demand for solutions that enable the remote completion of agreements that traditionally required in-person contact." Meanwhile, HousingWire reports, "digital notary platform Notarize on Tuesday announced that it had closed on a $35 million Series C round of funding in March, bringing its total funding to date to $82 million." According to HousingWire, Notarize "[said] that it is expanding the market for mortgage lenders considering that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have permanently eliminated the waiver requirements for lenders to perform RON mortgage closings."

Notarize Partners With Title365; Optimal Blue Announces Integration; TowerHouse Launches Home Management Platform.

In its latest Housing Tech Rundown, HousingWire (7/8, Roha, 23K) reports that Notarize on Wednesday "announced its partnership with Title365, a division of Xome, that will allow the companies to offer hybrid and fully digital residential real estate closings. As part of the collaboration, Title365 will collect, organize and retain mortgage documents via the Notarize platform." Meanwhile, Optimal Blue on Wednesday "released its integration with Nasdaq's Contributor API enabling the Optimal Blue Mortgage Market Indices on Nasdaq's Global Index Data Service platform," and TowerHouse "announced the launch of its flagship home management platform HomeEgg.com."

Truist Expands Use Of Black Knight Mortgage Technology Suite.

Mortgage Professional America (7/8, Mendoza) reports Truist "has announced expanding its use of Black Knight's mortgage technology suite" to "support its mortgage servicing operations." Truist, which was "formed last year through the merger" of BB&T and SunTrust, "renewed its use of the Empower loan origination system (LOS), LendingSpace correspondent lending system, and the MSP mortgage servicing platform."

Reports Suggest Allstate Will Acquire National General Holdings.

M Report (7/8, Albanese) says "numerous reports" suggest "the Allstate Corporation will acquire National General Holdings Corp. for $4 billion." According to M Report, "Allstate will acquire National General Holdings Corp. in its entirety, which includes National General Lender Services." This would make Allstate part of "one of the largest insurers in the world." M Report says that ABC News "reported that the National General Holdings Corp. has already approved the deal, which is expected to close in early 2021. National General said that no fewer than 40% of its voting shares have also committed to approving the deal."

10-Year Yield Ticks Up.

MarketWatch (7/2, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.655 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (IND) (7/9, White) reports, "The dollar fell against most currencies on Thursday as a rally in riskier assets such as global equities and commodities put a dent in safe-haven demand for the U.S. currency." Against the euro, the dollar "fell 0.3% to $1.1365, reaching a one-month low." The dollar "was little changed at 107.27 yen."

Gold Holds Steady.

Reuters (7/9, Aranya) reports, "Gold steadied above the key $1,800/oz level on Thursday, as worries over mounting COVID-19 cases offset hopes of a swift global economic recovery." Spot gold "was little changed at $1,812.35 per ounce by 0729 GMT, after rising to its highest since September 2011 at $1,817.71 on Wednesday. U.S. gold futures inched up 0.1% to $1,822.10."

Oil Edges Lower.

Reuters (7/9, Paul) reports, "Oil prices drifted lower on Thursday as concerns about renewed COVID-19 lockdowns in the United States outweighed signs of a recovery in U.S. gasoline demand." US West Texas Intermediate crude futures "fell 14 cents, or 0.3%, to $40.76 a barrel by 0229 GMT, after rising 0.7% on Wednesday." Brent crude futures "slipped 7 cents, or 0.2%, to $43.22, after gaining 0.5% on Wednesday."

O'Brien: Trump Weighing TikTok Ban.

The New York Post (7/8, Nelson, 4.57M) reports President Trump is considering whether to ban Chinese-owned social media platform TikTok, National Security Advisor O'Brien said Wednesday. O'Brien told reporters, "The President is looking very closely at TikTok and WeChat, and some of these other applications that the Chinese are using to obtain data – personal private intimate data on Americans and then taking it back to Beijing, where they can use it for malign purposes." The Administration, he added, is preparing "a significant rollout of measures with respect to China."

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Wells, Li, Lin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports TikTok is facing growing scrutiny in Washington amid concerns that the app's Beijing-based parent company could share information with the Chinese government.

Reuters (7/8, Pamuk) reports on Wednesday, Secretary of State Pompeo said the Administration "will take steps to ensure the Chinese government does not gain any access to the private information of American citizens through telecommunications and social media." He "also praised U.S. technology giants Google, Twitter Inc. and Facebook Inc for 'refusing to surrender' user data to the Hong Kong government and urged other companies to follow suit."

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro similarly said on Newsmax TV (7/8, 431K) that "you can expect over the coming weeks significant actions related to the Chinese Communist Party and its attack, essentially, both on the American economy as well as on the American people by propagating that China virus."

State Department spokesperson Morgan Ortagus said on Fox News' Bill Hemmer Reports (7/8), "What were trying to do is to look at the Chinese Communist Party and Chairman Xi for who they really are. I think we are guilty in Washington, both sides of the foreign policy aisle, for many years, for decades, for almost 40 years, in fact, of not seeing the Chinese Communist Party for who they really are. So, when we look at social media companies that are based in China. When we look at technology like Huawei or 5G or ZTE, anything that this Administration has been talking about, this isn't because we have some sort of animus towards these Chinese companies, but rather we have American national security, of course, in the forefront of our minds. We are also very concerned about the American people's private data."

Pompeo Says Administration May Ban Chinese Tech Companies In US That Could Steal Data. The Washington Examiner (7/8, Gehrke, 448K) reports Secretary of State Pompeo indicated that the Trump Administration is "considering banning a variety of Chinese tech companies from operating in the US due to privacy concerns." Pompeo told reporters Wednesday, "We are now evaluating each instance where we believe that US citizens' data that they have on their phones or in their system or in their healthcare records. We want to make sure that the Chinese Communist Party doesn't have a way to easily access that." Pompeo "confirmed earlier this week that the Administration might ban Beijing-based TikTok, a popular social media app that China hawks regard as a Chinese Communist portal into American cell phones." His latest comments "raised the likelihood that President Trump's Administration will follow India in banning dozens of Chinese companies over national security fears."

TikTok Boosts Lobbying Team As US Government Scrutiny Intensifies. CNBC (7/8, Hirsch, 3.62M) reports TikTok is "bulking up its lobbying team as the US government intensifies its oversight of the social media company." The hires include people "with deep experience in government and public policy." Last year, the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States, or CFIUS, "began an inquiry into the application over concerns Beijing could access its data and use it to threaten US national security." President Trump "told Grey TV's Greta Van Susteren the administration is looking at banning TikTok, citing its size and his dissatisfaction with how China has handled the coronavirus."

House Appropriators Adds $500M In FY2021 Funding For Election Security Grants.

Politico (7/8, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that the Democratic-controlled House Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Services and General Government "is poised to approve fiscal 2021 spending legislation that would include $500 million in election security grants, a $75 million hike over fiscal 2020." Republicans have in recent years "sought less than Democrats, or rejected the idea of new funding altogether if there still was money in the pipeline, so that dollar figure probably amounts to just a starting point." Even $500 million, an election security expert "pointed out, is unlikely to be enough." Rep. Mike Quigley (D-IL), chair of the subcommittee, "said that the bill 'continues investment in election infrastructure and security to help our state and local governments conduct safe and secure elections.'" Full committee chair Rep. Nita Lowey (D-NY) "touted that the bill 'increases funding to improve election security and integrity, because our democracy belongs in the hands of American voters.'"

Study Finds "15B Stolen Passwords" On Sale On The Dark Web.

The Independent \(UK\) (7/8, Cuthbertson, 1.36M) reports a new study has "revealed there are more than 15 billion stolen account credentials circulating on criminal forums within the dark web." Researchers at cyber security firm Digital Shadows "discovered usernames, passwords and other login information for everything from online bank accounts, to music and video streaming services." The researchers found the "majority of exposed credentials belong to consumers rather than businesses, resulting from hundreds of thousands of data breaches." Rick Holland, CISO at Digital Shadows, said, "The sheer number of credentials available is staggering. Some of these exposed accounts can have (or have access to) incredibly sensitive information. Details exposed from one breach could be re-used to compromise accounts used elsewhere."

CISA's New Strategy For Securing Industrial Control Systems Relies On Private-Sector Collaboration.

NextGov (7/8, Baksh) reports the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency's "newly released strategy to invest in technology to protect industrial control systems from cyberattacks relies on private-sector entities sharing information about risks they face with the government but doesn't include liability protections companies are asking for in exchange." Industrial control systems "are used to automate processes in sectors such as electricity, water, transportation and manufacturing." CISA's five-year plan "to protect these systems is to work with their private-sector owners and operators to identify the threats they're encountering and assess where they're vulnerable, so the government can ultimately prioritize investments to improve their defenses." The strategy doesn't note "where the government's share of the investments would come from." A bill approved by a House Appropriations Committee Tuesday "would provide $2.25 billion in funding for CISA in 2021."

Cyberspace Solarium Commission Advisor Says Better Data Collection Key To Improved Cyber Defense.

MeriTalk (7/8, Weingarten) reports federal cybersecurity officials "working on the policy and operations fronts agreed this week that better collection of data about vulnerabilities is key to fostering improved network defenses." Brandon Valeriano, a senior advisor to the Cyberspace Solarium Commission, "said at a July 7 event...that the US needs to collect better international cyber threat data, and that the public and private sectors need to cooperate more fully in data collection and sharing." He pointed to "several metrics-related Solarium recommendations to improve cybersecurity in the US, including the creation of a Bureau of Cyber Statistics." Valeriano "said the lack of a private sector breach notification law makes it difficult to know the full scope of threats." He said, "It's very problematic for us to start to talk about cybersecurity when we don't even have a conception of what the basic defense is."

Amazon Settles Allegations Of US Sanctions Violations.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Sun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Treasury Department stated on July 8 that Amazon reached a deal to settle accusations it violated numerous US sanctions regulations. Amazon reportedly gave goods and services to individuals or entities subject to US sanctions. The deal with Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) indicates the actions were largely caused by weaknesses in Amazon's automatic screening processes.

Fox Business (7/8, Fordham, 1.73M) reports Amazon "will pay $134,523" under the settlement "after violating U.S. sanctions by selling goods to people in Crimea, Iran and Syria, although the low penalty amount reflects 'that Amazon's apparent violations were non-egregious and voluntarily self-disclosed,' the Treasury Department said Wednesday." Additionally, Treasury "said Amazon has already taken steps to fix its automated system that flags possible sanctions violations."

Fed Leaders Mixed, But Mostly Negative On Near-Term Economic Recovery.

Reuters (7/8, Schneider) reports, "Federal Reserve officials raised fresh doubts on Wednesday about the durability of the U.S. recovery, while new business surveys highlighted developing risks from the relentless coronavirus pandemic." Richmond Fed President Thomas Barkin characterized the US economy as facing "air pockets" of businesses not refilling orders and households' unemployment benefits drying up.

Barkin said, "Businesses like construction had pretty good pipelines and kept going," in the first phase of the pandemic, but "new orders are not coming on line in the same way. We have fiscal payments...that are coming to an end and it is not clear what is going to replace them." Meanwhile, St. Louis Fed President James Bullard said he believed many jobs lost would be regained by the end of 2020, but he "may be the outlier among his colleagues at the central bank." Boston Fed President Eric Rosengren said, "I do expect unfortunately that the economy is going to remain weaker than many had hoped through the summer and fall."

CNBC (7/8, Cox, 3.62M) reports Bullard said he could see unemployment reaching as low as 7 percent within a few months.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Atlanta Fed President Raphael Bostic on Wednesday said signs are emerging that the US economic recovery could be stumbling as reopenings in some states have been accompanied by rising infection rates. Bostic said some economic data suggest economic activity and businesses reopening is leveling off, adding that previous positive outcomes now seem less likely as infections mount.

Big Banks Show Little Interest In Making Loans Through Fed's Program For Main Street.

The New York Times (7/8, Smialek, 18.61M) reports, "The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston on Wednesday released a list of lenders that have signed up for the central bank's midsize business lending program and are willing to make loans to new customers through the initiative." The Times points out only Bank of America has "so far agreed to participate and take on new clients, based on the Boston Fed's map," and "lenders like JPMorgan Chase, Citigroup and Wells Fargo are not listed." Many lenders say "that they are hearing of only limited borrower interest in the program."

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and The Washington (DC) Post (7/8, Siegel, 14.2M) also report.

Fed Official Says Emergency Facilities Helped Markets Despite Low Usage.

MarketWatch (7/8, Oh, 1.67M) reports Daleep Singh, head of the New York Fed's markets group, said the Fed could slow corporate debt purchases if financial markets continue to improve. Still, Singh "said the central bank stands ready to tweak its approach given the uncertainty around a potential wave of bankruptcies from the economic impact of the coronavirus."

Reuters (7/8, Marte) reports Singh said the Fed's emergency lending facilities helped to stabilize markets after the coronavirus-induced volatility in March, adding that the central bank will adjust its approach if necessary. Despite some programs' low usage, the "backstops still helped to improve market functioning."

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Fed Withdraws From Repo Market After 10 Months.

The Financial Times (7/8, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports, "The US Federal Reserve's unprecedented 10-month intervention in short-term borrowing markets has been wound down, after the central bank..."

Payday Lender Trade Group Chairman Praises CFPB For Easing Restrictions Amid Pandemic.

D. Lynn DeVault, Chairman of payday lender trade group the Community Financial Services Association of America, writes in a BankThink piece for American Banker (7/8, Subscription Publication, 31K) that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's decision to rescind payday limits came at the right time, as "the coronavirus pandemic has both revealed and dispelled a number of assumptions about consumer-spending habits during difficult times." DeVault argues that because some states have seen payday loan requests decline during the pandemic rather than increase, this indicates that many consumers "are knowledgeable about their own financial lives and managing it to their best ability."

TIGTA Report Says IRS Correctly Calculated 98% Of Virus Payments.

Law360 (7/8, van den Berg, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration released a report Wednesday saying the IRS "correctly computed about 98% of economic impact payment amounts, but some dead people and prisoners got money, some people got two payments, and others who should've gotten payments didn't." The IRS "told Law360 in response to TIGTA's report that during the pandemic, it has processed more than 126 million returns and more than 93 million refunds totaling over $257 billion." The agency "also said it coordinated delivery of more than 160 million economic payments totaling over $270 billion 'in record time' and that more than 30 million of the payments went to people who aren't ordinarily required to file returns."

House Panel Advances Spending Bill With Funding Boost To IRS.

The Hill (7/8, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports the House Appropriations Committee's financial services and general government subcommittee on Wednesday "advanced a financial services spending bill for fiscal 2021 that would increase the IRS's budget by roughly $600 million." The measure "now heads to the full committee, where lawmakers will give it further scrutiny and debate amendments." The article says the bill

"covers portions of the federal government that include the Treasury Department, the federal judiciary, the executive office of the president, the Small Business Administration, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Communications Commission."

PPP Lending Pushes Community Banks Toward Fintech Partnerships.

Bloomberg Law (7/8, Beyond, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports the Paycheck Protection Program has pushed more community banks to embrace fintech partnerships. Community banks want regulators such as the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency to issue clear guidance about onboarding new service providers, said Chris Cole, ICBA's EVP and Senior Regulatory Counsel. That "could include a system where banks share due diligence on fintech and other service providers, such as their financial health or cybersecurity practices, Cole said. Or the regulators themselves could conduct reviews." But with regulators reluctant to do so, small banks remain "at a disadvantage compared to larger ones that have the resources to do it," he said.

Coinbase Names New Chief Legal Officer After Brooks' Departure For OCC.

Bloomberg Law (7/8, Baxter, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports cryptocurrency exchange Coinbase has hired Facebook's Paul Grewal to serve as its new Chief Legal Officer. Grewal replaces Brian Brooks, who left the firm in March after being appointed First Deputy Comptroller at the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency. Brooks in May "effectively became Wall Street's top watchdog after he was named acting head of the OCC."

New York Times.

"The Roberts Court Curtails Birth Control Access. Again." In an editorial, the New York Times (7/8, Board, 18.61M) says that that "the Supreme Court under Chief Justice John Roberts reminded Americans once again that it is no friend to reproductive rights, or to the vast majority of women who will use some form of birth control in their lifetime." The Times says the ruling "dealt another blow to the birth control mandate under the Affordable Care Act."

Washington Post.

"Trump Is Shouting For Schools To Reopen. He Needs An Actual Strategy." The Washington Post (7/8, 14.2M) editorializes, "President Trump has seized upon a new campaign battle cry to reopen the schools this fall, not with distance learning but in person. Mr. Trump's call reflects a genuine need, felt by parents, teachers and students, to get back to the classroom. In any calculus of recovery, schools must be a priority. But it is important that reopening be done smartly, avoiding Mr. Trump's previous bungling and leadership bankruptcy." The Post editorial board writes, "Reopening will also require major new resources that states and localities do not have. Ninety percent of school funding is local, and the governments are struggling under crushing pandemic burdens and tax revenue falloff."

"The Contraception War Is Not Over." The Washington Post (7/8, Board, 14.2M) editorializes that "the majority opinion was notably silent on the extent and strength of the exemption or accommodation that religious freedom laws may require the government to provide to religious objectors," and as a result "a new administration could move to narrow or eliminate the Trump administration's recklessly broad exemption. To make clear its intent, Congress, too, could get involved, specifying explicitly that women must have free contraception coverage through their health plans except in very narrow circumstances."

"The Huge And Hasty PPP Was Destined To Make Dubious Loans. Now Congress Must Fix It." The Washington Post (7/8, Board, 14.2M) says in an editorial that data released this week on the "largest beneficiaries" of the Paycheck Protection Program "proved that millions of dollars worth of forgivable low-interest loans – tantamount to grants – landed at not-so-small and not-so-obviously-needy firms and nonprofits." While the Post highlights several such examples, it says the "declining unemployment rates of the past two months suggest this broad approach did indeed help save jobs, mostly at small firms." The Post adds that in the "next economic support package, Congress should target a narrower range of small businesses – while allowing those firms to spend the money for a wider range of purposes, beyond maintaining payroll."

"Undeterred By The Last Uproar, Trump Is Again Considering Family Separation." A Washington Post (7/8, Board, 14.2M) editorial says the Administration is again considering "separating migrant children from their families." The "latest threat to break up families arises from a federal court order last month by U.S. District Judge Dolly M. Gee, in Los Angeles," who gave ICE "until next Friday to release scores of children held at the facilities." Gee's jurisdiction "does not cover detained adults, which afforded an opening to the administration to present migrant parents with a perverse choice: give up their children to sponsors, or remain with their children inside facilities where the pandemic is tightening its grip." The Post argues, "Compassion and decency compel a clear path forward: releasing parents and children together from ICE custody. Sadly, very little in this administration's makeup suggests it will do the right thing."

Wall Street Journal.

"Religious Liberty Lives At The Supreme Court." In editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/8, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) praises the Supreme Court rulings on religious liberty issued Wednesday, calling them victories for religious freedom, and says Americans who are religious can take comfort in the decisions.

“How Not To Punish China.” A Wall Street Journal (7/8, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial argues that while the Administration is mulling its response to China's actions in Hong Kong, one idea should not be under consideration: weaponizing the U.S. dollar to undermine Hong Kong's currency.

“Bonfire Of The Liberals.” The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues in an editorial that society benefits when both the left and right accept basic free-speech principles.

“After The WHO Withdrawal.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/8, Editorial Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that now that the Administration has notified the UN that the US will withdraw from the WHO in July 2021, President Trump and Secretary of State Pompeo should lay out the conditions for the US to rejoin. The Journal adds that if reform of the WHO cannot be achieved, the White House should support the creation of an alternative pandemic response agency.

Late Night Political Humor.

Billy Eichner, Guest Host For Jimmy Kimmel: “As you may know, wearing face masks that help prevent COVID-19 has weirdly become some kind of political issue. Angry Americans have been sending death threats to health officials who’ve been advocating for mask requirements. Which I think is such a waste of time. You’re already not wearing a mask in the middle of a pandemic; we know you want to kill us! We knew that back when you kept wearing guns to Chipotle.”

Billy Eichner: “America, what are we doing? Americans weren’t even able to take the virus seriously as a public health threat for as long as they took James Franco seriously as a short story writer. Look, I get it. I do. You’re over it. Quarantine is hard. I live alone and I’m a little sick of people telling me not to socialize. I mean, easy for you to say – you have a husband and kids. I’ve been sitting at home alone for four months watching the Jeffrey Epstein doc on Netflix and saying ‘How did that we let that happen?’ to my broom.”

Treasury in the News

WPost Report: PPP Now Showing Signs Of Helping The Economy After A Rocky Start.

In a lengthy report on the PPP, the Washington Post (6/9, O'Connell, Whalen, Stein, Werner, 14.2M) reports that following "a flood of complaints, balky computer systems, changed rules and frantic calls to the Treasury Department," the program "is suddenly looking like a measured success." The report cites two unnamed sources as saying Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "appeared either lukewarm or skeptical about the effort and was more focused on the loan programs for airlines and large corporations during the drafting of the legislation." The report adds, "Publicly, Mnuchin has heralded the program as a successful answer to the nation's greatest downturn since the Great Depression."

Trump: "Buffalo Protester Shoved By Police Could Be An ANTIFA Provocateur."

President Trump tweeted Tuesday, "Buffalo protester shoved by Police could be an ANTIFA provocateur. 75 year old Martin Gugino was pushed away after appearing to scan police communications in order to black out the equipment. @OANN I watched, he fell harder than was pushed. Was aiming scanner. Could be a set up?"

The tweet sparked widespread outrage from Democrats and media analysts, with even the Trump-friendly Breitbart (6/9, 673K) accusing the President of making an "unsubstantiated claim." Fox News (6/9, Olson, 27.59M) also says on its website that "the backlash to Trump's tweet was swift," and adds that Chuck Ross of the conservative Daily Caller wrote on Twitter, "My God this is a bad tweet. There's no evidence to support this and the guy looked like he fell as hard as he was pushed." Reports indicate that most Republicans, however, declined to comment. The Washington Post (6/9, Parker, Wagner, 14.2M), for example, refers to "a now-familiar dance from many Republicans claiming not to have seen a tweet," though Axios (6/9, Treene, Ayes, 521K) reports that "privately, Trump administration and Senate Republican aides acknowledge the absurdity and danger of a tweet such as this."

News stories recount that that Trump wrote his tweet shortly after an OANN report on Gugino. The Buffalo News (6/9, Zremski, 391K) indicates the OAN segment said the incident "could be a result of a false flag provocation by far left group ANTIFA," and that "newly released videos appear to show Gugino using a police tracker on his phone, trying to scan police communications during the protest. ... The tactic known as skimming is an old trick used by ANTIFA to locate police officers and plan violent activities." The News adds "the reporter on the OANN piece was Kristian Rouz – who, according" a Daily Beast story that ran in 2019, "also works for the Russian propaganda outfit Sputnik." OANN also said its story is "based its reporting on an account in the Conservative Treehouse blog post that, without evidence, labeled Gugino a '75-year-old professional agitator and ANTIFA provocateur.'" The New York Post (6/9, Steinbuch, 4.57M) reports "neither outlet has provided evidence that the theory is true – and a lawyer for Gugino said it is baseless." The New York Times (6/9, Grynbaum, 18.61M) also reports Rouz "is a Russian native."

All three major network newscasts also covered Trump's tweet, which they cast as exemplifying the President's absence from any constructive debate on police violence. Kristen Welker of NBC Nightly News (6/9, story 3, 2:25, Holt, 6.89M) reported, for example, that "while the nation mourned George Floyd...Trump sparked outrage, tweeting out a baseless conspiracy theory." ABC World News Tonight

(6/9, story 3, 2:50, Muir, 7.93M) said "there is a growing acknowledgment of the need for change from both parties on Capitol Hill," but the President "was not part of that conversation," and Weijia Jiang of the CBS Evening News (6/9, story 5, 1:50, O'Donnell, 3.41M) similarly referred to "a conspiracy theory without evidence," and showed critical comments by Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) and New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D).

Across the media landscape, the tone was uniformly critical of Trump. The Daily Beast (6/9, Ross, 1.39M) reports Trump "pushed a baseless conspiracy theory – with absolutely no supporting evidence," while the AP (6/9, Thompson, Colvin) refers to Trump as "peddling yet another unfounded conspiracy theory." The Hill (6/9, Samuels, 2.98M) as sharing "an unfounded conspiracy theory," Business Insider (6/9, Sheth, 3.67M) as "spreading a baseless conspiracy theory" and People (6/9, Carlson, 50.07M) as "contradicting the footage" of the incident.

Politico (6/9, Forgey, 4.29M) titles its analysis piece on the tweet "Trump's Conspiracy Theory On 75-Year-Old Protester Draws Sharp Backlash," while The Intelligencer (6/9, Chait, 1.1M) describes Trump as "real-estate heir, reality television host, cable news junkie, swindler, and titular president of the United States," and Vanity Fair (6/9, Lutz, 9.08M) says that "surely, suggesting that a hospitalized 75-year-old protester injured by police deserved what he got...is not the message of 'healing, rebuilding, restoring, recovering' that his advisers had hoped to steer him toward as he falls further behind Joe Biden in the polls." Likewise, to the Los Angeles Times (6/9, Bierman, 4.64M), the tweet "provided the latest example of the lack of discipline and empathy that has worsened the president's political plight five months before election day."

Yahoo! News (6/9, Stableford, 12.82M) reports "the officers, Robert McCabe and Aaron Torgalski, were initially suspended without pay," but "were later arrested and charged with second-degree assault," and the Daily Beast (6/9, Ross, 1.39M) recounts that "all members of the Buffalo Police Department Emergency Response Team resigned from the unit last week in support of the officers who were suspended for their aggression toward Gugino."

The Religion News Service (6/9, Shimron, 8K) reports, meanwhile, that "friends of the retired computer scientist described Gugino as a devout Catholic and a graduate of Canisius High School, a private Jesuit school in Buffalo, who is a passionate advocate for multiple causes on behalf of the poor and disenfranchised." Gugino "spent his retirement lending a hand to multiple causes, among them Black Lives Matter." The Buffalo News (6/9, Becker, 391K) says Gugino "has been involved in a broad array of issues ranging from nuclear disarmament to climate change and Guantanamo. He had a YouTube channel which had 35 subscribers as of Friday in which he discussed such issues." It "has since been taken down along with his Twitter account which has drawn intense scrutiny."

The New York Times (6/9, Feuer, 18.61M) reports, "It is true, his friends admitted, Martin Gugino was an activist, a seasoned peacenik who in a lifetime of protest had taken part in demonstrations against military drones, climate change, nuclear weapons and police brutality." However, "Gugino was also a football fan, they said, a mild-mannered bachelor and a Buffalo native who returned to his hometown some years ago to care for his ailing mother."

The Guardian (UK) (6/9, Gabbatt, 4.19M) reports that "Trump has often embraced conspiracy theories, most notoriously his pushing of 'birtherism' – the completely false and racist theory that former president Barack Obama was not born in the US."

Reuters (6/9, Caspani, Goldberg) indicates "Erie County District Attorney Erie County District Attorney John Flynn, who is prosecuting the officers, declined to comment on Trump's tweet about Gugino, who remains hospitalized." Attorney Tom Burton said Tuesday, "This case is going to get tried in court before someone in a black robe and I have no further comment."

Townhall Report Stands By Trump. One of the very few news stories that appeared sympathetic to Trump ran in Townhall (6/9, O'Brien, 177K), which asked, "Is there more to the story? ... As it turns out, this wasn't his first protest" and "some describe him as a 'professional agitator.'" Townhall adds that "Tom Burton, an attorney for the Police Benevolent Association, also reminded spectators that this incident occurred a few days after Buffalo police officers were the targets of flying bricks and bottles. Three officers were even run over by rioters in an SUV." Burton, "and many others with him, argue that the DA's charges were way out of bounds."

Handful Of Republicans Criticize Trump. Frequent GOP critics of Trump weighed in Tuesday on this controversy, though as Jonathan Karl put it on ABC World News Tonight (6/9, story 3, 2:50, Muir, 7.93M), "the only Republicans willing to comment were those who have already been written off by the President." ABC showed Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) saying, "It just makes no sense that we are fanning the flames. This is not good." Romney said, "It was a shocking thing to say, and I won't dignify it with any further comment." ABC added that "not even the President's own chief of staff would defend the tweet." Chief of Staff Meadows was shown saying, "I learned a long time ago not to comment on tweets."

The Buffalo News (6/9, Zremski, 391K) reports ex-Sen. Jeff Flake (R-AZ) tweeted, "This was a 75 year-old-man shoved to the ground, left bleeding from a head wound. Trafficking in conspiracy theories like these is beneath your office, Mr President."

The New York Times (6/9, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports that "having grown accustomed to Republican lawmakers' favorite excuse for refusing to comment on President Trump's latest incendiary tweet, reporters resorted to a rare tactic." Reporters "printed out copies of Mr. Trump's post...for any Republican who might try to fall back on what has become a stock response: 'I didn't see the tweet.'" But "it did not work. Even faced with documentary evidence of the president's inflammatory remark, most Republicans averted their gaze on Tuesday." The Hill (6/9, Carney, 2.98M) recounts that "presented with a copy of the tweet," Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) "told reporters that she thought 'it would best if the president did not comment on issues that are before the courts.'"

CNN (6/9, Raju, Foran, Fox, Zaslav, 83.16M) reports on its website that "a number of Republican senators dodged questions or were silent on Tuesday," and USA Today (6/9, Jackson, 10.31M) that "Ari Fleischer, a Republican and a former press secretary for President George W. Bush, also slammed the tweet." Fleischer wrote on Twitter, "The President's penchant for trafficking in conspiracy theories is, politically speaking, going to ruin him. This is reckless. He doesn't know when to stop." Senate Majority Whip Thune, meanwhile, "questioned why Trump even raised this issue," telling reporters, "It's a serious accusation, which should only be made with facts and evidence. And I haven't seen any yet."

The AP (6/9, Thompson, Colvin) reports that "asked by reporters if the president should not be making it, Thune said: 'Well, I think that's a given,'" and that Murkowski's reaction upon being told about the tweet was, "Oh lord. Ugh. ... Again, why would you fan the flames? That's all I'm going to say." Politico (6/9, Levine, Everett, 4.29M) says that "though the moderate Murkowski was nearly rendered speechless, the missive mostly failed to get a rise out of Senate Republicans."

Biden: "No Greater Sin Than Abuse Of Power." Joe Biden took to Twitter Tuesday to write, "My Dad used to say there's no greater sin than the abuse of power. Whether it's an officer bloodying a peaceful protester or a President defending him with a conspiracy theory he saw on TV. I'm a Catholic – just like Martin. Our faith says that we can't accept either."

Cuomo: Tweet "Reckless," "Crude," "Disgusting." The Buffalo News (6/9, McShea, 391K) reports Cuomo "called the tweet 'reckless,' 'irresponsible,' 'crude' and 'disgusting,'" and "said there was 'no proof whatsoever' to support" Trump's case. The News adds that "Cuomo, whose voice rose in anger during his comments, implored the president to 'show some decency.'" The Washington Times (6/9, Boyer, Howell, 492K) quotes Cuomo as also saying, "What does that even mean? Fell harder than he was pushed?. ... You think the blood coming out of his head was staged?"

Gugino's Lawyer Bemoans Trump's "Dark, Dangerous And Untrue Accusations." The Buffalo News (6/9, Zremski, 391K) indicates that "in reaction to Trump's tweet, Gugino's lawyer, Kelly Zarcone, said in a statement that her client is out of the intensive care unit but in need of rest." Said Zarcone, "Martin has always been a PEACEFUL protester because he cares about today's society. ... No one from law enforcement has suggested otherwise so we are at a loss to understand why the President of the United States would make such dark, dangerous and untrue accusations against him." USA Today (6/9, Jackson, 10.31M) reports that "reached by text, Gugino replied to the USA Today Network – New York that he had 'no comment other than Black lives matter. Just out of the ICU. Should recover eventually. Thx.'"

Politico Analysis: Pence Working To "Neutralize Trump's Antagonistic Outbursts." Politico (6/9, Orr, 4.29M) reports that Vice President Pence is "quietly changing his message to fit a new moment without appearing to be in conflict with his boss." According to Politico, "As [Trump] and other senior administration officials dispute the very notion of systemic racism within local and federal law enforcement agencies, Pence has acknowledged that a nationwide conversation is needed on those topics." Politico says "the adjustment in Pence's approach comes as he works to neutralize Trump's antagonistic outbursts...and chart his own course as a compassionate conservative who could expand the MAGA base if he ran on his own in 2024."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Reminiscent Of George Wallace. The New York Times (6/9, Baker, 18.61M) reports "the president's Twitter feed has been filled with phrases famous from the Nixon lexicon like 'LAW & ORDER' and even 'SILENT MAJORITY,'" but "if anything, Mr. Trump seems to be occupying the political lane held that year by George Wallace, the segregationist former governor of Alabama who ran as a third-party candidate to the right of Nixon. While he does not share Wallace's extreme positions, Mr. Trump is running hard on a combative pro-police, anti-protester platform, appealing to Americans turned off by unrest in the streets."

Twitter Says "Speculative" Trump Tweet Did Not Violate Its Policies. The Washington Post (6/9, Parker, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that "Twitter, which has recently taken a more aggressive stance in policing the truth of Trump's tweets, said this one had not violated its policies because it was 'speculative.'"

Buffalo Police Dispatcher Suspended Over Post Calling For Allowing Officers "To Shoot To Kill." Newsweek (6/9, Palmer, 1.53M) reports, "An employee at the Buffalo Police Department in New York has been suspended for an alleged social media post in which he called for...Floyd protesters to be killed." Bob Marth, "a dispatcher at the department, is accused of posting an explicit Facebook post regarding the protesters which have gathered in the state for several days." Marth "allegedly" wrote, "Enough is enough!!! ... What is going on is uncalled for. F*g wild animals...and what do you do to an animal that's rabid and out of control – you take it out!! ... Mayor stop being a pasty to these fs ad give the order!!! Allow the officers to shoot to kill."

Trump Underwhelmed By Poll Showing Him Leading Biden By 21 On Economy.

President Trump tweeted Tuesday, "Poll: Trump Better Than Biden On Economic Growth, 55% to 34%. That's all? Who are the 34%?"

Biden: Trump's Policies Caused Recession. The Washington Times (6/9, Swoyer, 492K) reports Joe Biden "said Tuesday...Trump has 'squandered' the economic expansion created during the Obama-Biden administration, causing an economic recession." Biden said the President "had forgotten about the middle class long before the COVID-19 pandemic hit the nation, causing millions of people to fall unemployed and businesses to be shuttered." Said Biden, "Trump drove manufacturing into a recession across the Midwest. And Trump systematically stacked the deck against working families who were struggling to get ahead."

Trump Announces Anti-Homelessness Funding.

President Trump tweeted Tuesday, "I am allocating $2.96 BILLION in Emergency Solutions Grants to support homeless Americans and those at risk of becoming homeless because of job or wage loss, or illness due to COVID-19. We are taking care of our Nation's most vulnerable citizens. Thanks @SecretaryCarson!"

Trump Announces Transportation Funding For Utah.

President Trump took to Twitter Tuesday to write, "Relief is on the way to Utah! I'm proud to send $187.18M in CARES Act funding to @RideUTA. This money will keep people moving and support a swift and smooth economic recovery for the GREAT people of Utah!"

Hassett Attributes Improved Jobs Report To Stimulus Policies.

White House economic adviser Kevin Hassett said on WMAL-FM Washington (6/9), "I think the success of the jobs report is really the success of the policies that Congress passed and the President signed into law. Because we stopped the economy basically dead in its tracks in order to control the virus, then we had the biggest negative shock to the economy that we have ever seen. ... But while we did that, we also had incredible bipartisan support for three phases of stimulus policies that filled the hole and made it so that we could sort of get to the other side."

CBO Director Praises Administration, Congress For Fast Action On Stimulus. The Washington Times (6/9, Dinan, 492K) reports Congressional Budget Office Director Phillip Swagel "had high praise for the Trump administration Tuesday, saying its agencies managed to speed out coronavirus aid 'incredibly quickly,' helping moderate the worst economic effects of the COVID-19 downturn." Swagel "said Capitol Hill moved speedily to approve aid, and then the Treasury Department moved 'quickly and effectively' to process the stimulus payments to Americans. Same with the Small Business Administration, he said, which has pumped out assistance for firms."

US Layoffs Slow From March To April.

The AP (6/9, Boak) reports the Labor Department said Tuesday that "job openings plummeted and hiring all but disappeared in April." Available jobs fell to five million, and hiring declined to 3.5 million. US employers laid off 7.7 million workers in April, down from 11.5 million in March. The AP says the report "shows how employers responded quickly to the pandemic by furloughing or laying off workers in March, though that slowed the following month as consumer spending appeared to bottom out and even recover slightly." Reuters (6/9, Mutikani) also reports.

WSJournal Analysis: Pandemic Ends Promising Economy For African Americans.

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, A1, Morath, Omeokwe, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the coronavirus pandemic has brought an end to a promising economy for African Americans, as the end of the decade-long expansion saw unemployment at record lows and modest increases in wages.

Lieber, Siegel Bernard: "Racial Inequity" Endemic In Personal Finances. Ron Lieber and Tara Siegel Bernard, under the headline "The Stark Racial Inequity Of Personal Finances In America," write in the New York Times (6/9, 18.61M), "Dollars are like air – crucial to vitality. And when it comes to wealth, black Americans have less at nearly every juncture of life, from birth to death. Perversely, having less can cost more. Black students borrow more to go to college, don't finish as often and more frequently default on their student loans. They earn less, and generally have lower credit scores – so they pay higher interest rates. It's harder for them to save for retirement, and they leave less to the next generation when they die."

Adidas Says 30% Of All New US Hires Will Be African American Or Latino.

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Safdar, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Adidas said Tuesday that a minimum of 30 percent of all new US positions at Adidas and Reebok will be filled with African Americans and Latinos after some ex-employees criticized the company for inaction on racial issues. Adidas also vowed to invest $20 million in black communities and to finance 50 university scholarships for black students each year over five years.

Coresight Projects Up To 25,000 Store Closures In 2020.

The Washington Post (6/9, Siegel, 14.2M) reports US retailers "will shutter 20,000 to 25,000 stores this year, according to projections released Tuesday by Coresight Research, with as much as 60 percent of those closures occurring in malls." CNBC (6/9, Thomas, 3.62M) reports on its website that several major retailers have declared bankruptcy in the last several weeks, and Coresight also predicts more retailers will do so, potentially leaving more retail property vacancies. USA Today (6/9, Tyko, 10.31M) also reports.

AMC Theaters Says "Almost All" Of Its US And UK Locations Will Reopen Next Month.

The New York Times (6/9, Barnes, 18.61M) reports AMC Theaters announced Tuesday that "almost all" of its locations in the United States and Britain would reopen next month. Over all, theaters in 90 percent of overseas markets will be running again by mid-July, according to the National Association of Theater Owners. ... The question, however, is whether people – even while watching movies in well-sanitized theaters with limited capacity – will feel safe from the coronavirus."

Class Action Suit Alleges Meatpackers Conspired To Artificially Inflate Prices.

WCCO-AM Minneapolis (6/9, 14K) reports on its website that a class action lawsuit filed in federal court in Minneapolis "accuses the nation's top meatpackers – Cargill, JBS, National Beef, and Tyson – of conspiring to artificially increase the price of beef and thereby boost their profit margins." The suit "says that the meatpackers, which together control more than 80% of the industry, used their position to limit the supply of cattle and fix the price of beef, leading to 'historically high' margins in the market."

NYTimes Analysis: US AI Industry Relies On Chinese-Educated Researchers.

Under the headline "A U.S. Secret Weapon In A.I.: Chinese Talent," the New York Times (6/9, Mozur, Metz, 18.61M) reports, "New research shows scientists educated in China help American firms and schools dominate the cutting-edge field." According to the Times, "Of 128 researchers with undergraduate degrees from Chinese universities whose papers were presented at the A.I. conference, more than half now work in the U.S." The Times adds, "Now industry leaders worry that worsening political tensions will blunt that edge."

Suspected 1MDB Mastermind Moved Easily Inside Kuwait.

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Bisserbe, Viswanatha, Hope, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) examines how fugitive financier Jho Low, who stands accused of leading the effort to defraud state investment fund 1Malaysia Development Bhd, was able to enter Kuwait and transfer millions of dollars under the protection of the Kuwaiti royal family.

Trump: Minneapolis Should Have "Brought In National Guard On Day One."

President Trump on Tuesday retweeted a post by former Australian diplomat Mark Higgie, which said, "Minneapolis, looking like the aftermath of a war." Higgie's tweet included video of burned out buildings and other destruction in the city. Trump wrote in his tweet, "Should have let police do their job and brought in National Guard on Day One, not Day Four!"

Meadows Says Trump Wants Police Reform "Sooner Rather Than Later."

Politico (6/9, Sherman, 4.29M) reports Chief of Staff Meadows said Tuesday that President Trump "wants to overhaul police laws 'sooner rather than later,' the first signal that the administration is interested in engaging in the conversation dominating the country." Politico says the White House "has been curiously silent until now. On Monday, Trump hosted a law enforcement roundtable during which he said '99 percent' of police are 'great people.'"

Deputy Assistant to the President Ja'Ron Smith said on Fox News' Hannity, "We are still looking at a whole host of different issues that law enforcement feels is important and some communities feel it is important. So we will continue to evaluate those pieces, but I think it's important...that we work with our law enforcement officers, we work with community leaders, because it is really about relationships on the ground and creating public safety."

Miller Reportedly Drafting White House Speech On Race Relations.

American Urban Radio Networks (6/9) reports on its website, "The White House is preparing a speech on race relations written by Stephen Miller, who crafted the Trump Administration's immigration plan along the southern border with Mexico."

Trump Reportedly Considered Firing Esper, Who Himself Mulled Resignation.

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Lubold, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports President Trump considered firing Defense Secretary Esper after Esper expressed disagreement with using the military against demonstrators last week, and consulted with several advisers before deciding against it. The Journal says Esper also considered resigning, partly on principle and partly due to the President's disapproval, but was persuaded not to do so by his own advisers.

Barr Expects More Arrests At Organizing Level Of Protests.

Attorney General Barr said in an interview with Fox News' Special Report (6/9, 1.53M), "We have extreme right groups trying to look like extreme left groups. We have extreme left groups masquerading as extreme right groups. We have players on both sides trying to spin up violence. It's a complicated situation." Asked if he expects more arrests at the organizing level, Barr said, "Yes. ... I can't put a time limit on these investigations but I think we are very much focused on getting on top of these groups."

Barr: Televised Images Of Riots Gave Impression US Was Losing Control Of Capital. USA Today (6/9, Johnson, 10.31M) reports that in a letter Tuesday to District of Columbia Mayor Muriel Bowser (D), Barr argued that televised images of rioting "conveyed the impression that the United States was on the brink of losing control of its capital city." In the letter, Barr "defend[ed] the federal government's aggressive response to protests sparked by the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police."

McConnell Criticizes Democrats For Alleged Selectivity On Free Speech During Pandemic.

CQ Roll Call (6/9, Lesniewski, 154K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell on Tuesday "went on the attack against Democrats using a familiar and comfortable ground for him, the First Amendment." McConnell said on the Senate floor, "I have no criticism for the millions of Americans who peacefully demonstrated in recent days. Their cause is beyond righteous. It is the inconsistency from leaders that has been baffling." CQ Roll Call says McConnell "singl[ed] out" District of Columbia Mayor Muriel Bowser (D) "for what he says is selectively allowing racial justice protests but not church services during the COVID-19 pandemic."

The Washington Examiner (6/9, Rowan, 448K) reports McConnell "warned that since Democratic governors, mayors, and other top officials began encouraging and participating in the protests over the death of George Floyd, 'our national life during this pandemic has slid toward a double standard.'" The Washington Times (6/9, Muñoz, 492K) quotes McConnell as saying, "For weeks, the mainstream media heaped scorn on any small citizen protest, outdoor gathering, or even the suggestion that other important values might require a reappraisal of certain restrictions. ... But now, many Americans feel they've just seen those fastidious regulations and that puritanical zeal disappear in an instant because a new cause has emerged that powerful people agree with."

Hawley Seeks DOJ Probe. The Daily Caller (6/9, Olohan, 716K) reports Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) is calling "for an investigation into free speech double-standards, saying that state officials have favored protests while targeting religious freedom." In a letter to Attorney General Barr, Hawley called for "a 'full civil rights investigation' into violations of 'free exercise and free speech rights of religious Americans.'"

NYTimes Analysis: Capitol Hill GOP "Caught Flat-Footed" By Public Shift On Policing Issues.

The New York Times (6/9, A1, Edmondson, Fandos, 18.61M) reports congressional Republicans, "caught flat-footed by an election-year groundswell of public support for overhauling policing in America to address systemic racism, are struggling to coalesce" around a response. Having "long fashioned themselves as the party of law and order, Republicans have been startled by the speed and extent to which public opinion has shifted under their feet in recent days. ... Adding to their challenge, President Trump has offered only an incendiary response." Senate Majority Leader McConnell said Tuesday "that Republicans had yet to fashion their response." McConnell told reporters, "We are still wrestling with America's original sin. ... And I think the best way for Senate Republicans to go forward on this is to listen to one of our own who has had these experiences."

McConnell Turns To Tim Scott For Police Reform Effort. Axios (6/9, Swan, 521K) reports Senate Republicans "are crafting a package of police reforms that would make lynching a federal crime and threaten to cut federal grants if states don't force their police departments to report significantly more detail on officers' use of force, according to two sources familiar with the internal conversations." McConnell has turned to Sen. Tim Scott (R-SC), "the only African-American in the Republican conference and a senator with a substantial history of proposing criminal justice and police reform legislation."

The Washington Post (6/9, Debonis, Kim, Itkowitz, 14.2M) says "Senate Republicans, increasingly nervous about holding their majority in November, seemed to sense a societal shift, announcing their effort a day after House and Senate Democrats unveiled a sweeping package of proposed changes, including a ban on chokeholds, establishment of a national database to track police misconduct and a prohibition on certain no-knock warrants, among other initiatives." Reuters (6/9) also reports.

Veteran Diplomats Want Pompeo To Make A Statement On Floyd Killing.

Politico (6/9, Toosi, 4.29M) reports that "a prominent group of veteran U.S. diplomats is calling on the State Department to recruit and promote more minorities, pointing to the widespread fury over the death of a black man in police custody as a time for institutional soul-searching." The call from the American Academy of Diplomacy "comes as many State Department staffers are questioning why they've heard nothing about the killing of George Floyd" from Secretary of State Pompeo. Although "deputies to Pompeo have sent notes to the department about the sensitive topic, the secretary himself has not reached out to its 75,000 employees."

Biden Says Systemic Racism Is "In Everything We Do."

The CBS Evening News (6/9, story 4, 1:50, 3.41M) previewed the network's prime time special "Justice For All" by showing excerpts of Norah O'Donnell's interview with Joe Biden on racism in the US. O'Donnell: "Do you believe there is systemic racism in law enforcement?" Biden: "Absolutely. It's not just in law enforcement. It's across the board. It's in housing. It's in education. It's in everything we do. ... Look, not all law enforcement officers are racist. My lord, there are some really good, good cops out there. But the way in which it works right now, we've seen too many examples of it." Asked if the events of the last two weeks have changed his calculus about a running mate, Biden said, "No, they haven't, except it's put a greater focus on urgency on the need to get someone who is totally simpatico with where I am. ... I want someone strong and someone who is ready to be president on day one."

Later on the CBS (6/9, 3.92M) special, O'Donnell asked Biden, "What specifically, as president of the United States, will you do to end systemic racism?" Biden: "I've laid out a whole plan how I would do that. Number one, you have to start off by insisting that the police departments meet a national standard of what constitutes policing that is appropriate, and all police departments are going to have to adopt it. ... Secondly, we have to make sure that you have police officers who, in fact, when they act inappropriately, are, in fact, not only fired, but held accountable if there's a criminal offense, and be held accountable for that offense. Thirdly, we have to, in my view, change the way the entire criminal justice system functions and the prison system. It should turn into a rehabilitation system, not into just punishment."

At Funeral, Biden Links Floyd Death To Civil Rights Struggle, Sharpton Takes Aim At Trump.

USA Today (6/9, Jansen, 10.31M) reports that in a video message delivered at George Floyd's funeral Tuesday, Joe Biden "recounted a wrenching conversation with George Floyd's daughter, Gianna," in which she "told him she missed the bear hug that only Floyd could give, the joy of riding on his shoulders, the countless hours they spent playing games. ... But she also asked why Floyd had to die." Biden said, "You're so brave. ... No child should have to ask questions that too many black children have asked for generations: Why? Why is daddy gone? In looking through your eyes, we should also be asking ourselves why the answer is so often too cruel and painful." In the lead story for NBC Nightly News (6/9, lead story, 4:50, Holt, 6.89M), Biden was shown saying, "We cannot leave this moment thinking we can once again turn away from racism. It stings at our very soul. When there's justice for George Floyd, we will truly be on our way to racial justice in America. And then, as you said Gianna, your daddy will have changed the world."

The Washington Post (6/9, Chiu, Flynn, Armus, Elfrink, Wagner, Beachum, Iati, Mettler, 14.2M) reports that Al Sharpton "used his eulogy at George Floyd's funeral service to take aim at President Trump after... Biden in a somber video linked Floyd's death in police custody to the nation's enduring struggle for civil rights."

In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (6/9, lead story, 3:45, O'Donnell, 3.41M) described "a stunning outpouring in the streets" as "hundreds of mourners came to this church in the blazing Texas heat to remember Floyd, whose death in police custody in Minneapolis set off nationwide protests." In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (6/9, lead story, 4:50, Muir, 7.93M) described a "moving service." Floyd's family, friends and loved ones "now believe his name here in Houston, here in the US and around the world will stand for something else – for justice and for the push for change." On NBC Nightly News (6/9, story 8, 0:50, Holt, 6.89M), Lester Holt described Floyd as "the icon for this moment, for this chapter of an old story."

The AP (6/9, Lozano, Merchant) says Floyd was "lovingly remembered" as "more than 500 mourners wearing masks against the coronavirus packed a Houston church." The funeral "capped six days of mourning for Floyd in three cities: Raeford, North Carolina, near where he was born., Houston, where he grew up, and Minneapolis, where he died. The memorials have drawn the families of other black victims whose names have become familiar in the debate over race and justice – among them, Eric Garner, Michael Brown, Ahmaud Arbery and Trayvon Martin."

Reuters (6/9, Hiller, McWilliams) reports, "Underscoring the impact his death had on the world, the funeral was broadcast live on every major U.S. broadcast and cable news channel and the New York Stock Exchange observed 8 minutes 46 seconds of silence that was broadcast in silence on business news channel CNBC."

Arbery's Mother Attends Floyd Funeral. On ABC World News Tonight (6/9, story 8, 2:00, 7.93M), David Muir reported that the mother of Ahmaud Arbery, who "was shot and killed while jogging in Georgia," was among those attending Floyd's funeral. Wanda Cooper Jones: "I needed to come out to support Mr. Floyd, who unfortunately lost his life the same way that my son, Ahmaud, did. And just to know that you have people that are standing with you makes it much easier on the heart."

NPS To Remove Fencing Around Lafayette Square.

The Washington Post (6/9, 14.2M) reports that on Tuesday, the National Park Service indicated that it "will remove most of the tall metal fencing surrounding Lafayette Square by Wednesday." According to the Post, "Officials erected the fence early last week to bar access to the park near the White House, which sits south of it." The Post says that "when night fell days ago, demonstrators occasionally rattled the fence, shouting at law enforcement officers lined up behind it – but more recently, protesters have converted the fencing to a crowdsourced memorial wall, filled with posters, names and paintings of black men and women who died during encounters with police."

National Guard Pulling Back Its Presence In States.

Fox News (6/9, Singman, 27.59M) reports on its website that the National Guard has started to "pull back its presence in states across the country after its historic response to unrest over the death of Minneapolis man George Floyd in police custody last month." According to a "Pentagon official," there will be a "very steady decline" in the coming days as states "out-process" forces activated by governors and mayors in the last month. The official told Fox that as of Tuesday, there were still 38,498 active National Guard soldiers, which is a decline from 43,300 on Saturday.

Calls To Reform, Defund Police Departments Growing Louder.

Alex Perez said on ABC World News Tonight (6/9, story 2, 3:25, Muir, 7.93M) that "cries to reform, or even defund, police departments and procedures grow louder." Los Angeles has announced "major cuts to police funding. Seattle considering a 50 percent reduction. And New York redirecting funds to youth programs and moving a bill forward that would ban chokeholds. With criticism mounting, police unions in New York and across the country defending officers."

Politico Analysis: Biden "Succeeded" In Distancing Himself From "Defund The Police" Effort. Joe Biden was asked in an interview with CBS (6/9, O'Donnell, 3.92M) if he supports defunding the police. Biden said, "No, I don't support defunding the police. I support conditioning federal aid to police based on whether or not they meet certain basic standards of decency and honorableness and, in fact, are able to demonstrate they can protect the community and everybody in the community."

Politico Contrasts Trump And Biden's "White Identity Politics." Politico (6/9, Thompson, 4.29M) says President Trump "has stuck with his brand of white identity politics that won him the White House." According to Politico, "While he has condemned the killing of [George] Floyd, he has retweeted people saying 'Floyd was not a good person' and was a 'symbol of a broken culture in black America today.'" Politico says, "In contrast," Biden "has deployed a sort of white identity politics for the people whose consciences have been shaken – the woke or, perhaps, woke-curious."

Wolf: Calls To Defund Police Are "Absurd" And "Dangerous." Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said on Fox News' Hannity, "When we talk about defunding the police, it is absolutely absurd but most importantly, it is dangerous. Again, a core tenet of this country is about law and order, not about chaos, crime, and our anarchy in the streets. You are really concerned about law enforcement practices or the culture, you don't want to defund them, you want to provide law enforcement more training, more oversight, and more leadership and slashing budgets and cutting budgets is not the way to do that. So, it is really just a very ineffective approach to a very serious issue."

Two Biden VP Possibilities Haven't Shut Down Calls To Defund Police. The Washington Times (6/9, Swoyer, 492K) reports that by "embracing aspects of the 'defund the police' movement," Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) and Rep. Val Demings (D-FL), both of whom are reportedly being considered for Biden's vice presidential nod, are "taking bigger risks" than Biden, "further complicating his decision." Neither has "completely shut down activists' calls to gut law enforcement," while Biden "is opting to condition federal aid on certain standards of policing."

Ocasio-Cortez Says Some Democrats Trying To "Repackage" Push To "Defund The Police." Fox News (6/9, Shaw, 27.59M) reports on its website that Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) warned Tuesday "about Democrats and others trying to 'repackage' the push to 'Defund the Police' to make it more 'palatable' to affluent swing voters, amid an ongoing debate on what the left-wing rallying cry actually means."

Giuliani: "Defund The Police" Movement Is "Infantile." Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (6/9), Rudy Giuliani was asked about the "defund the police" movement. Giuliani said, "It's so ridiculous, so infantile. ... Suppose somebody got held hostage in my building last night. Who are we going to call? Social workers? The mayor? Some politician?" Giuliani added, "We have to start blaming crime on somebody other than the police. We have to blame it on the ridiculous Democrats that we elected. And maybe some day somebody's going to wake up and say, 'Oh, I wonder why the only place that really blew up are cities run by progressive Democrats?' ... This country went up in flames like the '60s, but only in Democratic cities."

WPost: Calls To Defund Police Are A Welcome Call Top Reimagine Public Safety. The Washington Post (6/9, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the call to defund the police "at its most constructive represents a welcome call to reimagine public safety in the United States." The Post asks, "Are we really safer in a world where armed police respond to mental-health emergencies, or can we imagine communities in which those struggling with mental illness are met with expert and reliable services? Are we safer when homelessness is met with criminalization, not compassion and housing?" To the Post, "the call to defund the police should be understood as a call to reinvest in communities and explore new solutions."

De Blasio Backs Package Of Proposed NYPD Reforms.

Politico New York (6/9) reports that New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) "will support legislation making it a crime for a police officer to put someone in a chokehold – a measure he previously fought and threatened to veto." The Mayor "announced his support for the measure along with a package of legislation under consideration in the City Council, which includes bills to affirm New Yorkers' right to record police activity, require public standards for police discipline and require police officers to make their shield numbers visible. He also suggested he'd look to transfer some funds from the police department to youth services." The AP (6/9, Sisak, Mustian) reports that New York state legislators "striving for a new era of police accountability are poised to repeal a state law that has long kept police officers' disciplinary records secret."

De Blasio: "Black Lives Matter" Will Be Painted On Streets In Every NYC Borough. The Washington Examiner (6/9, Colton, 448K) reports that de Blasio announced at a news conference Tuesday that "Black Lives Matter" will be painted on major streets in each of the city's boroughs. De Blasio said, "A proposal put on the table was to name streets in each borough and to paint the words on the streets of this city. In each borough, at a crucial location. ... What will be clear in the street name and on the streets of our city is that message that now our city must fully, fully, deeply feel, and this nation must as well, that Black Lives Matter."

Top De Blasio Aide Resigns Over His Defense Of NYPD. Politico New York (6/9) reports that Alison Hirsh, "a senior official in the de Blasio administration, has left the mayor's office over his handling of recent protests across the city – the first departure of a high-ranking aide since the start of the demonstrations demanding police reform." Politico says Hirsh was "so troubled by de Blasio's near-unconditional defense of the NYPD amid incidents of violence against protesters, she decided to step down from the job she was hired for last fall."

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (6/9, Sherfinski, 492K) says New York police union officials on Tuesday "fumed over public treatment of law enforcement in recent weeks, which included...de Blasio's asking for a light touch from the NYPD as protests engulfed the city." NYC Police Benevolent Association President Patrick Lynch said, "Ask yourselves, why did they feel emboldened to do it? Because there's no consequence, there's no cops, and we're held back." De Blasio "had said he wanted to see a 'light' touch from the NYPD as officers tried to quell recent protests."

NYPD Officer Arrested, Charged With Assaulting A Protester. The New York Times (6/9, Southall, 18.61M) reports NYPD officer Vincent D'Andrea "was arrested on Tuesday and charged with misdemeanor assault, 11 days after he was recorded on video shoving a woman to the ground and cursing at her during a protest against police brutality." The Brooklyn district attorney's office charged D'Andrea "in a criminal complaint with misdemeanor assault, criminal mischief, harassment and menacing over the May 29 incident."

NYPD Officer On Modified Duty After Opening Car Door Into Protester. The New York Post (6/9, Moore, 4.57M) reports that another NYPD officer "was stripped of his gun and shield because he opened a car door on a protester during George Floyd marches in Brooklyn." Police Commissioner Dermot Shea said in a statement, "As I've pledged to do, I want to share additional information regarding a troubling incident involving a member of the department related to demonstration activity that the NYPD is actively investigating."

Harris Supports Garcetti's Plan To Cut Funds For LAPD.

The Washington Times (6/9, Sherfinski, 492K) reports that on ABC's Good Morning America Tuesday, Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "said she applauds Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti (D) for his move to cut about $150 million from a planned increase to the city's police budget" but added that calls for law enforcement reforms do not mean getting rid of the police. Harris said, "I support investing in communities so that they become more healthy and therefore more safe. ... I applaud Eric Garcetti for doing what he's done." Asked if the nation need fewer police on the streets, she said, "It means we need to invest in communities. ... We need to recognize that if you invest in communities, they will be healthy, they will be strong, and we won't have a need for militarization of police. ... But that doesn't mean we get rid of police – of course not."

Police Have Killed 886 People, Overwhelmingly Non-White, in Los Angeles County Since 2000. The Los Angeles Times (6/9, Staff, 4.64M) reports police have killed 886 people in Los Angeles County since 2000. Almost all "were men, nearly 80% were black or Latino. More than 98% were shot to death. ... Since 2000, only two officers have been charged as a result of shooting a civilian while on duty."

DC Council Approves Sweeping Police Reform Measures.

The Washington Post (6/9, A1, Zauzmer, Nirappil, 14.2M) reports that the District of Columbia Council "passed sweeping reform measures Tuesday that prohibit hiring officers with a history of serious misconduct on other police forces and require the city to swiftly make public the names of officers who use force on citizens." The measures "passed unanimously, with a veto-proof majority, despite a stern letter that Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) sent the Council during its meeting, in which she urged lawmakers to slow down and hold public hearings before passing the legislation." However, lawmakers "acknowledged that the bill does not address some of the core demands of demonstrators to overhaul policing."

The Washington Times (6/9, A1, Kaplan, 492K) reports that in a statement Monday, the DC Police Union said the measure will increase crime and cause personnel to leave the Department. The union said, "The proposed language in this bill erodes many of the rights that police officers in the city are currently afforded and creates a dangerous path to unchecked violence in the District. ... We understand there are voices in this community that are asking for continued reform to the police policy. The union is and always has been willing to have serious discussions about this kind of reform."

Florida Police Union Leader Suspended From Sheriff's Office Over Facebook Post.

USA Today (6/9, Sassoon, 10.31M) reports Brevard County, Florida Fraternal Order of Police President Bert Gamin "has been suspended with pay from his position with a local sheriff's office, pending an internal affairs investigation into the 'unprofessionalism' of a Facebook post recruiting officers disciplined and charged in violent incidents, an official announced Tuesday." Brevard County Sheriff Wayne Ivey called the post by Gamin, a lieutenant in Ivey's office, "'despicable' and 'disgusting.'"

Political Leaders, Police Officers Turn Out To Honor Retired Officer Killed During Protests.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (6/9, 685K) reports "a large contingent of political leaders and police officers" were among those who attended the public visitation for retired St. Louis police Capt. David Dorn, who was killed last week at age 77 "after a night of peaceful protests turned destructive." Dorn had been hired to provide security at a pawn shop. Missouri Gov. Mike Parson (R) and Attorney General Eric Schmitt (R) "were among the officials who attended the visitation."

Northam Vows To Fight Temporary Injunction Blocking Removal Of Lee Statue.

The Washington Post (6/9, Vozzella, Schneider, 14.2M) reports Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) vowed Tuesday "to fight a temporary injunction from a Richmond Circuit Court judge that prevents the state from immediately removing the statue of Robert E. Lee" from the state's capital city. Northam said at a news briefing, "We've been preparing for this for a year. This is a statue that is divisive; it needs to come down and we are on very legal solid grounds to have it taken down."

Navy To Ban Confederate Flag Displays.

CBS News (6/9, 3.68M) reports on its website, "The U.S. Navy announced Tuesday that it is working on an order to ban the display of the Confederate flag, less than a week after the Marine Corps issued its directive to do so." The USMC "issued its order Friday, directing commanders to 'identify and remove the display of the Confederate battle flag or its depiction within workplaces, common-access areas and public areas on their installations.'"

Mississippi Lawmakers Begin Effort To Remove Confederate Flag From State Flag. Mississippi Today (6/9, Ganucheau)

reports, "A bipartisan group of Mississippi lawmakers, with the blessing" of state House Speaker Philip Gunn (R), "began whipping votes and drafting a resolution on Monday to change the state flag, which was adopted in 1894 and is the last in the nation containing the Confederate battle emblem."

Poll: 74% Support Protests; 50% Say Police Handle Peaceful Protesters "About Right."

The Washington Post (6/9, Clement, Balz, 14.2M) reports that a new Washington Post-Schar School poll found that Americans "overwhelmingly support the nationwide protests that have taken place since the killing of George Floyd at the hands of police in Minneapolis, and they say police forces have not done enough to ensure that blacks are treated equally to whites." According to the poll, "74 percent of Americans say they support the protests that have been carried out in cities and towns across the country. ... On the question of whether police have done enough to address issues of inequitable treatment of blacks and whites, 81 percent said police need to continue to make changes to assure equal treatment of whites and blacks, with 13 percent saying they have made the needed changes." Meanwhile, President Trump "receives negative marks for his handling of the protests, with 61 percent saying they disapprove and 35 percent saying they approve."

The Washington Times (6/9, Sherfinski, 492K) reports, "Half of Americans – 50% – said police have been handling demonstrations by peaceful protesters 'about right,' while 44% said law enforcement has used too much force." Asked about "people who have been looting or vandalizing businesses, a plurality – 47% – said police have not used enough force. Thirty-four percent said police have handled episodes of looting and vandalism about right, while 16% said too much force has been used."

New Videos Show Black Men Dying At Hands Of Police. NBC Nightly News (6/9, story 2, 3:00, Holt, 6.89M) reported that there are "troubling new incidents that have come to light." NBC (Gutierrez) added that "newly released videos of black men dying during encounters with police are sparking more outrage." The CBS Evening News (6/9, story 3, 1:50, O'Donnell, 3.41M) reported that "video has surfaced of a deadly encounter between" Texas "sheriffs deputies and an African American man who was repeatedly tased while telling officers he couldn't breathe." CBS' Omar Villarreal added, "Police body cam footage released by the Austin police department shows deputies from the Williamson County sheriff's office pursuing 40-year-old Javier Ambler during a 22-minute chase that included five crashes." The deputies "struggled with Ambler, a black man, for several minutes, tasing him several times. As they tried to handcuff former college football player who repeatedly told officers he couldn't breathe. When Ambler lost consciousness, officers started performing CPR for four minutes because they couldn't find a pulse." His death "was ruled a homicide by the state's attorney general's office, which also noted that it was justifiable homicide."

In a separate story, NBC Nightly News (6/9, story 4, 1:55, Holt, 6.89M) reported, "The growing demand for accountability includes calls to police the police. ... The New York cop who shoved a demonstrator to the ground cursing her during a protest for police brutality, was charged [Tuesday] with misdemeanor assault, harassment, and menacing, a rare step but likely not the last officer to face charges for abusing their power."

WTimes Analysis: 2015 Data Show High Public Satisfaction With Police.

The Washington Times (6/9, Sherfinski, Miller, 492K) reports, "The overwhelming share of U.S. residents who in the past several years initiated contact with the police to request assistance said they were satisfied with the interaction." The Times bases its assertion on data from the 2015 Bureau of Justice Statistics' Police-Public Contact Survey, which found that "among the millions of people who call police for help...an estimated 83% said they were satisfied with the police response and 59% said the police improved the situation."

WPost Examines Evolution Of Mainstream Acceptance Of "Black Lives Matter."

The Washington Post (6/9, Real, Samuels, Craig, 14.2M), under the headline "How The Black Lives Matter Movement Went Mainstream," looks at how "the three words [that] were once a controversial rallying cry against racial profiling and police violence" are now "painted in bright yellow letters on the road to the White House" and embraced by "celebrities and chief executives" and "even" Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT).

WSJournal Examines Doctrine Of Qualified Immunity.

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Bravin, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) examines the doctrine of qualified immunity, first recognized by the Supreme Court in 1967 and since strengthened, that protects police officers from the threat of litigation for most law enforcement actions. The doctrine is being reconsidered in the wake of the death of George Floyd, and by coincidence may be taken up by the Supreme Court in its next term. The White House has said President Trump backs the continuation of qualified immunity as it stands.

Statue Of Slave Trader Removed From London Site.

Reuters (6/9, Sibley, Thomas, Russell) reports in a brief item that "a statue of Robert Milligan, an 18th century slave trader, was being removed from its plinth outside a London museum on Tuesday after officials decided it was no longer acceptable to the local community. The previously obscure statue...came into focus after demonstrators taking part in a global anti-racism protest movement tore down the statue of a slave trader" elsewhere in Britain. ABC World News Tonight (6/9, story 4, 1:25, Muir, 7.93M) reported on the removal as part of a report on the call for further removals of statues and monuments in the US and abroad.

Belgian Protesters Want Statues Of King Léopold II Removed.

The Washington Post (6/9, Birnbaum, 14.2M) reports "thousands of protesters" in Belgium are calling for the removal of statues of King Léopold II, who "presided over the deaths of millions of Congolese people during a rule that was notably brutal even for an era when European powers were industriously subjugating African populations at gunpoint. ... In at least five cities across the country, Léopold statues have been splashed with red paint in the past week."

Chauvin, Floyd Worked Together, Had A History Of Not Getting Along.

The CBS Evening News (6/9, story 2, 2:30, O'Donnell, 3.41M) reported that "a coworker tells CBS News" that George Floyd and Derek Chauvin, who is charged with second degree murder in his death, "worked together at a nightclub, and he says they had a history of not getting along." CBS' Jeff Pegues added, "Coworker David Pinney is breaking his silence, telling us that the two men had a history. ... The Floyd family says it believes what happened on May 25 was in part personal."

CrossFit CEO Resigns Over Floyd Tweet.

Axios (6/9, Rummler, 521K) reports CrossFit CEO Greg Glassman resigned Tuesday "following massive backlash against a tweet he made over the weekend that referenced George Floyd's killing. ... Glassman tweeted on Saturday, 'FLOYD-19' in response to the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation saying that discrimination and racism are crucial public health issues, apparently linking the coronavirus pandemic to Floyd's death."

"Cops" Cancelled After More Than 30 Years.

The New York Times (6/9, Sperling, 18.61M) reports that "Cops," the "long-running reality show that glorified police," has been cancelled after more than three decades. The show, which premiered on Fox in 1989, was expected to launch its 33rd season on the Paramount Network next week.

O'Brien: US Intel Underplayed Seriousness Of Coronavirus In Early Trump Briefings.

The Washington Times (6/9, Gertz, 492K) reports US intelligence agencies "missed reporting on the seriousness of the coronavirus outbreak in late January that would soon lead to a deadly global pandemic," according to National Security Adviser O'Brien. O'Brien "indicated that the agencies continued to play down the danger" through January 28, until O'Brien "said he 'elevated the issue' for the president, who immediately grasped the magnitude of what would eventually become the disastrous COVID-19 pandemic." O'Brien said, "Within two days of the President being told by the NSC that COVID-19 constituted a serious national security risk, on [January 30], he had made the decision to ban travel from China."

Fauci Calls COVID-19 His "Worst Nightmare."

The New York Times (6/9, 18.61M) reports NIAID Director Fauci "delivered a grim assessment of the devastation wrought around the world by the coronavirus" on Tuesday, describing COVID-19 "as his 'worst nightmare' – a new, highly contagious respiratory infection that causes a significant rate of illness and death." Fauci, addressing a Biotechnology Innovation Organization conference, said, "In a period of four months, it has devastated the whole world. And it isn't over yet."

Verma: Administration Correctly Identified Threat Posed By Coronavirus In Nursing Homes.

CMS Administrator Verma said on the Brian Mudd Show (6/9), "The President from the very beginning identified that we all needed to concentrate on nursing homes, and if you will recall, one of the early steps that we took was saying, 'Hey, we shouldn't have visitors into nursing homes,' because we knew that they were particularly vulnerable. I can tell you that my department has been working on putting out guidelines and getting nursing homes best practices. We have been doing investigations when there have been outbreaks. So we've made sure that those nursing homes have had the best possible information."

Hassett: Trump Open To Helping States Facing Budgetary Challenges.

White House economic adviser Kevin Hassett said on WMAL-FM Washington (6/9), "The President has said that he will absolutely not support a bailout of states that sort of came into this problem with really, really long-run problems. ... But, if as we look at how the economy is doing and the variation across states and how their budgets are doing, if Democrats feel like they want to negotiate over having some support for states to help them with their COVID-related costs – which we have already done, we gave them $150 billion in previous bills – then the President is willing to talk to them about that."

HHS To Give $25B To Hospitals That Have Not Received Aid.

Reuters (6/9) reports HHS "said on Tuesday it would distribute about $25 billion to hospitals that have not previously received relief funds as they grapple with a rise in COVID-19 cases." According to Reuters, "The agency said it would provide about $15 billion of the total to hospitals serving patients covered by federal Medicaid program for low-income individuals and children's health insurance program, and $10 billion to safety net hospitals that treat patients regardless of their insurance status." Reuters says the US government "has earmarked $175 billion for hospitals and medical providers to meet the increased expenses from rising COVID-19 cases and cover lost revenues due to suspension of medical procedures and routine visits."

FDA Official Underestimated How Much US Relies On China For Drugs.

Bloomberg (6/9, Edney, 4.73M) reports that the FDA "had to walk back testimony by an official at a Senate hearing last week after he downplayed the scale of China's dominance of the drug supply chain" in the US. According to Bloomberg, "Some in Congress and the Trump administration to question China's role as the global supplier of key ingredients." Asked "how much of the active pharmaceutical ingredients, or API, in drugs in the U.S. are made in China, Douglas Throckmorton, deputy director for regulatory programs in the FDA's Center for Drug Evaluation and Research, said "for active pharmaceutical ingredients, the U.S provides about 28%, China about 13% and India 18%." Bloomberg says "the problem with his response was that those percentages are for the number of API facilities in China and India that export ingredients to the U.S., not the volume they ship, the FDA clarified to Bloomberg following his testimony."

Senators Call For Investigation Into Deliveries Of Protective Equipment.

The Washington Post (6/9, Brittain, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer and Sens. Richard Blumenthal (D-CT) and Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) on Monday "requested an independent investigation into the arrangement forged between the federal government and six for-profit companies to rapidly transport protective medical gear from overseas to the front lines of the U.S. coronavirus pandemic." Project Airbridge, which was created "to ease crippling shortages of personal protective equipment," has drawn "scrutiny and criticism from federal and state lawmakers, who said it lacked oversight and sapped taxpayer dollars while allowing market forces to dictate distribution of much-needed supplies." In their letter, "the senators said they were seeking an investigation because they still lacked insight into key aspects of Project Airbridge, including pricing and distribution."

NYTimes Analysis: Vaccines Usually Take At Least Five Years To Develop.

The New York Times (6/9, Mukherjee, 18.61M) reports that "in the history of medicine, rarely has a vaccine been developed in less than five years," but "the oft-cited target for creating a vaccine" against COVID-19 is "12 months, 18 at the outside." According to the Times, "Pulling that off is arguably the most important scientific undertaking in generation."

Coronavirus Hospitalizations Rising In Areas That Reopened Early.

On NBC Nightly News (6/9, story 6, 2:00, Holt, 6.89M), Gadi Schwartz reported there has been "a dramatic rise in coronavirus hospitalizations in some states among the first to reopen." In Arizona, the state is "urging hospitals to keep emergency plans activated after seeing COVID-19 cases more than doubled." Schwartz added that Texas is "seeing a record breaking number of hospitalizations, even as the government moves to open bars, restaurants, and amusement parks to 50 percent capacity."

On ABC World News Tonight (6/9, story 5, 1:55, Muir, 7.93M), Matt Gutman reported 21 states and Puerto Rico are "registering a rise in COVID. And 14 states, including Arizona, have seen their highest seven-day average growth since the pandemic began." Gutman added that according to FEMA, "community transmission is the highest driver of growth in nearly two-thirds of the hot spots in 31 states."

The Washington Post (6/9, Pell, Buckner, Dupree, 14.2M) reports, "Data from states that are now reporting some of their highest seven-day averages of new cases are disproving the notion that the country is seeing such a spike in cases solely because of the continued increase in testing, according to data tracked by The Washington Post." The Post adds that "many of these states that have experienced an increase in cases have also had an increase of hospitalizations, with a handful of states also nearing bed capacity."

Verma "Encouraged" By Reopening Despite Case Upticks In Some Areas. CMS Administrator Verma said on the Brian Mudd Show (6/9) that "while we are seeing an uptick in some places of the country, a lot of that is around outbreaks. ... There is a big difference between an outbreak and what we call community spread. ... I think it is more important to look at our hospitalizations. That's where you get a better sense of what the impact has been. So, we're still encouraged you know that the reopening is working well. That being said, I think it's important that every American still adhere to those guidelines."

WPost: Second Wave Of Infections Can Be Averted. The Washington Post (6/9, 14.2M) editorializes that "a devastating second wave" of coronavirus infections is "possible – but could be averted." The Post says "available evidence" shows that people "should be as relentless as the virus" in "wearing face masks, washing hands and avoiding crowded, closed enclosures." In addition, local governments must build "a robust testing, contact tracing and isolating regime as soon as possible."

Keck: America Can Safely Reopen, Protecting Lives "While Also Preserving Livelihoods." In an op-ed for the New York Times (6/9, 18.61M), Alan Keck, the mayor of Somerset, Kentucky, writes that his rural community took the threat of the pandemic seriously, instituting "aggressive measures" and largely avoiding the devastation in other areas. Now, Keck is "deeply concerned that if we do not take aggressive action now – if local leaders in Middle America are not given a voice or trusted to make appropriate decisions for their own communities – we will fail at our economic recovery efforts." Keck argues "local leaders should be empowered to advance their economies when risk-mitigation efforts have proved effective."

New York's Westchester And Rockland Counties Now In Phase Two Of Reopening.

Bloomberg (6/9, 4.73M) reports that Westchester and Rockland counties in New York "entered the second phase of reopening Tuesday, while Long Island is set to do so on Wednesday." Bloomberg also reports that "ridership on New York City's subways and buses rebounded Monday, after plummeting during the pandemic." Bloomberg says that "about 800,000 people rode the subway network, up 17% from the week before, Sarah Feinberg, interim president of New York City Transit, told reporters Monday." Bloomberg also reports that New York cases "rose 0.2% to 379,482, compared with the average increase of 0.3% in the past seven days, according to the state's health department."

New Jersey Lifts Stay-At-Home Order.

Bloomberg (6/9, 4.73M) reports New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) on Tuesday "lifted the state's stay-at-home order, while urging residents to wear masks and maintain social distance." Murphy is also "raising the limit on gatherings. Indoors, gatherings must be at 25% of a building's capacity or 50 people, whichever is lower. Outside, crowds of as many as 100 will be allowed." Politico (6/9, Sutton, 4.29M) says that "with the exception of New York, no state has been hit harder" than New Jersey, "which has been virtually shut down since Murphy's March 21 executive order that instructed residents to stay home, closed nonessential retail businesses and barred most indoor and outdoor gatherings."

Northern Virginia To Move Forward With Next Step Of Reopening Plan On Friday.

The Washington Post (6/9, Sullivan, Hedgpeth, Vozzella, 14.2M) reports, "Northern Virginia will move to the next phase of recovery starting Friday," Gov. Ralph Northam (D) said Tuesday, "as data shows the novel coronavirus virus appears to be slowing its spread across the region." The easing of restrictions includes "opening restaurants for indoor dining at half capacity and allowing gyms and fitness centers to reopen indoors at 30 percent capacity." According to the Post, "Virginia, Maryland and the District reported 1,072 new coronavirus infections on Tuesday, but the number of people hospitalized remained below 200 and the rolling seven-day average of newly reported deaths remained below 70."

AP Analysis: Democratic State Legislators More Likely To Wear Masks.

The AP (6/9, Lieb) reports that "many Democratic lawmakers are wearing them amid the coronavirus outbreak while many Republicans refuse." The AP adds, "As legislatures around the country resume work following coronavirus suspensions, Democrats and Republicans also have split over social distancing, remote voting and the extension of emergency powers for governors who had ordered businesses to close and residents to remain home." According to the AP, "Lawmakers have become ill from the coronavirus in nearly half the states, with Democrats accounting for about two-thirds of the 40 confirmed COVID-19 cases."

Amazon Instituting More Coronavirus Safety Measures, Including Employee Testing.

The New York Times (6/9, Weise, Fremson, 18.61M) reports Amazon invited Times reporters to tour its fulfillment center in Kent, Washington, to get a first-hand look at working conditions amid the coronavirus pandemic. While 600 to 800 employees staff each shift at the facility, "much of the building naturally has little human interaction because the work areas are spaced far apart." Workers have their temperatures taken at the start of each shift, and Amazon is also piloting a self-administered coronavirus testing program for its workers.

Tesla Workers Reportedly Tested Positive For Coronavirus.

The Washington Post (6/9, Siddiqui, 14.2M) reports that California Tesla workers "tested positive last month for the novel coronavirus following chief executive Elon Musk's defiant reopening of the company's main production facility in Fremont." The Post cites "employees with knowledge of the situation." The Post says "two workers" revealed that "supervisors held meetings with their teams to disclose the company had reported several cases of the coronavirus, and the employees affected were told to stay home. One of the workers said a supervisor confirmed two positive cases to a group at the Fremont-based seat assembly facility."

Barr Says He Is "Very Troubled" By Revelations From Durham Probe.

The Daily Caller (6/9, Ross, 716K) reports Attorney General Barr said in a Fox News interview that he is "'very troubled' by revelations from an investigation that U.S. Attorney John Durham is conducting into the origins of the Trump-Russia probe. Many outlets 'drove' some of the 'sensational' allegations of collusion between the Trump campaign and Russian government," Barr said.

The Washington Examiner (6/9, Dunleavy, 448K) reports Barr said Durham's team "has been working 'very aggressively' despite the coronavirus pandemic." The New York Post (6/9, Garger, 4.57M) reports Barr "would not comment on potential criminal charges resulting from the probe, but noted 'the wheels of justice grind slow.'"

Barr said on Fox News' Special Report (6/9, 1.53M), "This isn't being driven by producing a report. We are trying to get to a point where we can hold accountable anyone who crossed the line and committed a criminal violation. That's I think what would be the initial stage of a resolution of Durham's investigation. I also think there will be public disclosure in some form of report at the appropriate time."

Barr: Flynn Judge "Trying To Set Himself Up As An Alternative Prosecutor." Barr said in the interview with Fox News' Special Report (6/9, 1.53M), "Decisions whether to pursue an individual to the prosecution process or holding them criminally accountable is vested in the executive branch and not the courts." Barr said the judge in former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn's case "is essentially, in our view, trying to set himself up as an alternative prosecutor."

Chicago Politicians Clash In Heated Argument Following Violent Weekend.

The Federalist (6/9, Justice, 126K) reports that Chicago suffered its worst Sunday for violence, with 18 murders on May 31, "as another round of ruthless rioting hit the streets following the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody which sparked the worst outbreak of nationwide civil unrest in decades." Meanwhile, "leaked audio from a May 31 conference call between the mayor and 50 alderman shows the meeting escalated into a profanity-laced shouting match." Alderman Raymond Lopez is said to be heard demanding Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot provide "answers on how the city was caught so unprepared and responded so poorly to riots, allowing businesses to go up in flames."

WSJournal: Lack Of Police Presence To Blame For Chicago Violence. While some progressives want to defund the police, the Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Chicago's worst day of violence in at least 60 years shows that cities need police to protect the peace.

Homicides In Los Angeles Rose 250% In First Week Of June.

Axios (6/9, 521K) reports the Los Angeles Police Department "announced Tuesday that homicides in the city jumped 250% in the first week of June – and the number of people shot rose by 56% compared to the previous week." The LAPD "outlined in its statement posted to Twitter how gun violence has continued this week, in addition to the rise in homicides and shootings recorded through the week of May 31 to June 6." The Washington Examiner (6/9, Soellner, 448K) reports that "violence amid national unrest has been a major concern as the country grapples with the death" of George Floyd.

Senate Confirms First African American Service Chief In US History.

Axios (6/9, Rummler, 521K) reports "the Senate unanimously confirmed Gen. Charles 'CQ' Brown Jr. as Air Force chief of staff in a historic vote presided over by Vice President Mike Pence on Tuesday." Brown, "commander of Pacific Air Forces, is the first African American chief of a military service branch in US history and will sit on the elite Joint Chiefs of Staff." President Trump took to Twitter to write, "My decision to appoint @usairforce General Charles Brown as the USA's first-ever African American military service chief has now been approved by the Senate. A historic day for America! Excited to work even more closely with Gen. Brown, who is a Patriot and Great Leader!"

ABC World News Tonight (6/9, story 6, 0:25, Muir, 7.93M) also reported "the US military is making history tonight."

The Washington Post (6/9, Lamothe, 14.2M) reports "Brown said in a statement that he is honored and humbled to serve as the next Air Force chief of staff, and that he and his wife, Sharene, look forward to building on what Goldfein and his wife, Dawn, and other Air Force leaders have done." Said Brown, "It is an absolute privilege for Sharene and I to serve our Airmen and families. ... We are committed to building upon our foundation and legacy to ensure we remain the most respected and capable Air Force in the world."

The New York Post (6/9, Nelson, 4.57M) says Sen. Dan Sullivan (R-AK) "previously placed a 'hold' on Brown's nomination, stalling the vote, to press the Air Force to base KC-46 aerial refueling tankers at the Eielson Air Force Base in Alaska. Sullivan lifted the hold last week."

Brown Reflects On Country's "History Of Racial Issues." ABC World News Tonight (6/9, story 6, 0:25, Muir, 7.93M) reported that Brown "recently released video about his experiences with racism in the military, calling his new role a 'heavy burden,' saying he can't fix centuries of racism in our country, but that he can make improvements."

The New York Times (6/9, Broadwater, 18.61M) also reports the Senate confirmation "came a week after General Brown released a video in which he spoke in starkly personal terms about his experience as a black man in America, his unequal treatment in the armed forces and the protests that have gripped the country after the killing of George Floyd in an encounter with Minneapolis police officers."

NBC Nightly News (6/9, story 7, 1:50, Holt, 6.89M) showed Brown saying of the recent protests over George Floyd's death, "I'm thinking about how full I am with emotion, not just for George Floyd, but the many African-Americans that have suffered the same fate as George Floyd, and thinking about a history of racial issues and my own experiences that didn't always sing of liberty and equality. ... I'm thinking about my Air Force career, where I was often the only African-American in my squadron or as a senior officer, the only African-American in the room. I'm thinking about wearing the same flight suit with the same wings on my chest as my peers, and being then questioned by another military member, are you a pilot. I'm thinking how these airmen view racism, where they don't see it as a problem since it doesn't happen to them or whether they're empathetic."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) praises US officials for their selection of Brown as well as the new Air Force Secretary. In particular, the Journal lauds Brown's video and his rhetoric on race.

Trump: "Some Day I Will Tell Real Story" On Mattis "And Others."

President Trump took to Twitter Tuesday to write, "Mattis was our Country's most overrated General. He talked a lot, but never 'brought home the bacon.' He was terrible! Someday I will tell the real story on him and others – both good and bad!"

State Department Accuses Linick Of Violating Terms Of His Leave.

Fox News (6/9, Edson, 27.59M) reports on its website, "A top State Department official has accused Steve Linick, the department's fired inspector general, of contacting a former colleague, obtaining official documents and returning to his former office – all in violation of the terms of his administrative leave, Fox News has learned." Fox adds that in "a letter to Linick's attorney" which it has "obtained," State Department Under Secretary for Management Brian Bulatao says "in the days before his Congressional testimony, he sent a text message to the Deputy Inspector General, Diana Shaw, requesting a copy of the DOD IG report on the origins of a leak of a draft State OIG report to the media last fall. Without informing her own chain of command...Ms. Shaw then contacted the DOD Office of Inspector General to request a copy of the report on Mr. Linick's behalf."

Trump Praises Senate GOP For Confirming His Nominees, Says "154 To Go."

In a tweet Tuesday afternoon, President Trump praised Senate Republicans for confirming "some big nominees" but add that there are "154 to go" and expressed hope that the Senate will not adjourn "until the job is done." Trump wrote, "Great work in the Republican Senate on some big nominees. Still 154 to go, hope they don't adjourn until the job is done! @senatemajldr"

Barr: Social Media Platforms Are Censoring Particular Viewpoints.

Attorney General Barr was asked in an interview with Fox News' Special Report (6/9, 1.53M) if social media forums are censoring the President and his supporters. Barr said, "These entities are now engaged in censorship and they originally held themselves out as open forum where third parties could come and express their views and they've built up a tremendous network of eyeballs, a lot of market power based on that presentation and now they are acting much more like publishers because they are censoring particular viewpoints, putting their own content in there to diminish the impact of various peoples views." Asked if he considering any action, Barr said, "We are looking as many others are at changing section 230, which is a rule that provides protection for these companies."

Some Companies Withhold Advertising From Facebook Over Zuckerberg's Stance On Trump Posts. The New York Times (6/9, Hsu, Kang, 18.61M) reports that some companies are withholding advertising from Facebook after chief executive Mark Zuckerberg "defended the platform's hands-off policy toward posts by President Trump that contained misinformation or promoted violence." While "many companies have cautiously returned to advertising, after having pulled back during the height of the pandemic in the United States," some "have decided not to advertise on Facebook, now that it has become clear that Mr. Zuckerberg will give the president a wide berth."

Administration Reinstates Banned Hunting Techniques In Alaska.

The New York Times (6/9, Friedman, 18.61M) reports that hunting methods "banned as barbaric by the Obama administration will be legal again on millions of acres of Alaskan wilderness in time for the warm July weather." The National Park Service published new rules Tuesday "reversing Obama administration rules and giving trophy hunters, outfitters and Alaskans 30 days to prepare to return to national preserves in Alaska with the revived practices," which include "killing wolves and coyotes, including pups, during the season when mothers wean their young, and using dogs to hunt bears." The Times says the expansion of hunting rights on federal lands has been a Trump Administration priority, "and an issue championed by" Donald Trump Jr., "an avid hunter." the Obama-era restrictions were opposed by "hunting advocates and Alaska state leaders" as "an encroachment on states' rights and an infringement on their livelihoods."

FCC Votes To Spend $16B To Bring Broadband To Unserved Rural Areas.

Reuters (6/9, Shepardson) reports that the FCC voted Tuesday "to adopt auction procedures to provide up to $16 billion to areas that lack broadband service, including nearly 6 million unserved rural homes and businesses." The FCC "voted to commence the auction on Oct. 29. Auction applicants will be required to offer voice and broadband services in unserved locations in exchange for receiving monthly payments over 10 years." According to Reuters, "The three FCC Republican commissioners approved the proposal, while the two Democrats dissented in part."

Lott Fired From Squire Patton Boggs.

Politico (6/9, Meyer, 4.29M) reports that former Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott has been fired by the lobbying firm Squire Patton Boggs. The firm gave no reason for Lott's departure "and declined to answer questions about it." Squire Patton Boggs Chairman and Global Chief Executive Mark Ruehlmann said the firm had "decided that it is the right time to make a change in the leadership" in its public policy practice. CQ Roll Call (6/9, Ackley, 154K) reports that Lott says the firm "took the low road" in firing him.

Trump Says He Could Resume Holding Rallies Next Week.

Bloomberg (6/9, Parker, Jacobs, 4.73M) reports that President Trump "may resume holding large campaign rallies as soon as next week, reviving the raucous events as he lags Democrat Joe Biden in polls and the coronavirus outbreak persists." Bloomberg says Trump "tweeted Tuesday that the rallies will be 'starting up again soon,' after campaign officials said Monday they were looking to hold the first of the signature events since the US began social-distancing measures to curb the spread of the virus in March. 'BIG DEMAND!' Trump tweeted over a re-post of a conservative political commentator who said it 'seems reasonable' for the president to resume the events and suggested they could be held outdoors. 'Maybe next week!' the president added."

Trump “On Track” To Rake In At Least $10M At First In-Person Fundraiser Since Start Of Pandemic. In an online article, CNBC (6/9, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports that Trump’s “first in-person fundraising event in the wake of his campaign going fully virtual due to the coronavirus pandemic is on track to raise at least $10 million. The massive total, described to CNBC by those familiar with the event, is set to be raised at a gathering on Thursday in a private home in Dallas” that the President “is expected to attend. The funds are set to go toward the Trump Victory committee.”

Trump Campaign Bringing Back More 2016 Aides. Politico (6/9, Kumar, 4.29M) reports that Trump, “increasingly nervous about the direction of his campaign as he struggles in general election polls, is considering bringing back more loyal aides from his successful campaign in 2016,” according to “five Republicans who speak to the president.” Politico says Trump “wants lobbyist David Urban, a former senior adviser who was pivotal in helping him win Pennsylvania, to play a more prominent role,” and is “considering rehiring Susie Wiles, who managed his Florida campaign but was unceremoniously fired last year.” Politico adds that the Trump campaign also “just hired senior advisers Jason Miller to focus on overall strategy and coordinate between the campaign and White House and Boris Epshteyn to be strategic adviser for coalitions.”

WPost Report: GOP “Tentatively” Settles On Jacksonville To Host “Premier Festivities” Of Convention.

The Washington Post (6/9, Linskey, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports, “Seeking a city willing to allow a large-scale event amid the coronavirus pandemic, Republicans have tentatively settled on Jacksonville, Fla., as the new destination for the premier festivities of the Republican National Convention in August, according to three Republican officials briefed on the plans. The details of the arrangement are still in flux and RNC aides are scrambling to determine whether” Jacksonville has enough hotel rooms to accommodate the convention. GOP officials “were in Jacksonville on Monday looking at the city and the surrounding areas. The convention’s more routine and lower-profile meetings still would take place in Charlotte, the original host site for the convention, according to two officials. Those smaller meetings are intended to honor the RNC’s contractual obligation to hold its convention in North Carolina and shield the party from lawsuits for moving the large events elsewhere.”

RNC Chief: Decision On New Host City For GOP Convention Likely Coming “Within The Next Week.” USA Today (6/9, Garrison, 10.31M) reports, “Republicans are nearing a decision on a new city to host the party’s convention, where they will nominate President Donald Trump for a second term.” RNC chief Ronna McDaniel “said Tuesday a decision will probably come ‘within the next week,’ as party officials continue to tour locations that could host the celebration instead of Charlotte, North Carolina, the original host city. The RNC backed out of Charlotte last week, saying North Carolina officials could not guarantee full use of their facilities in late August over concerns about the coronavirus. The Republican National Convention is scheduled for Aug. 24 to Aug. 27. McDaniel mentioned Oklahoma, Georgia, Florida, Texas and Tennessee as possibilities – in that order.”

George P. Bush Says He Will Vote For Trump.

The Hill (6/9, Wise, 2.98M) reports Texas Land Commissioner George P. Bush (R), nephew of former President George W. Bush and son of ex-Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, said Tuesday that he intends to vote for President Trump this year. Bush said in a statement, “Trump is the only thing standing between America and socialism.” The Hill says the statement came “just days after a New York Times report revealed that some prominent Republicans were struggling with whether to endorse Trump in the upcoming election. People familiar with George W. Bush’s thinking told the newspaper that he would not back the president’s reelection. Jeb Bush is unsure how he will vote come November, The Times reported.” President Trump tweeted a link to the article, writing, “Thank you George, great honor!”

NYTimes Analysis: Biden Polling Better Than Any Presidential Challenger Since 1992.

Nate Cohn of the New York Times (6/9, 18.61M) says Joe Biden “appears in a stronger position to oust an incumbent president than any challenger since Bill Clinton in the summer of 1992.” Cohn says President Trump’s approval rating “has fallen to negative 12.7 percentage points among registered or likely voters, down from negative 6.7 points on April 15,” and “now a wave of new polls shows...Biden with a significant national lead.” Cohn says Biden “leads the president by around 10 percentage points in an average of recent live-interview telephone surveys of registered voters,” which is “a four-point improvement over the six-point lead he held in a similar series of polls in late March and early April.”

Democratic Super PAC Airing First Ads In Arizona.

Politico (6/9, Schneider, 4.29M) reports that Priorities USA Action, “a major Democratic super PAC, is out in Arizona and other states with new TV and digital ads attacking President Donald Trump – totaling $4 million in spending.” The ads – “slamming Trump for his response to the coronavirus pandemic and the ongoing protests over the death of George Floyd by Minneapolis police – will also air in Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Michigan, part of an existing buy in those states.” Politico says, “The month-long expansion into Arizona – after the super PAC briefly aired TV ads there in March – reflects a shift in recent public polling, which has showed the state increasingly competitive.” Politico adds that a Fox News poll released last week showed Joe Biden leading Trump 46%-42% in Arizona.

Sanders Says He Has “Better Relationship” With Biden Than He Did With Clinton.

CNBC (6/9, Higgins, 3.62M) reports on its website that Joe Biden's "close relationship with" Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), as well as his "willingness to engage with progressives, could spell a difference between the 2020 presidential contest and former Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton's failed 2016 bid, Sanders said in an interview in The New Yorker magazine published on Tuesday." Sanders is quoted as saying, "I think the difference now is that, between you and me, I have a better relationship with Joe Biden than I had with Hillary Clinton, and that Biden has been much more receptive to sitting down and talking with me and other progressives than we have seen in the past." CNBC says Sanders "told The New Yorker that he did everything he could to get Clinton elected. But he said there was a misconception about how much influence candidates, on their own, can have on their supporters' votes."

Sanders, Ocasio-Cortez Break With DSCC In Backing Booker In Kentucky Senate Primary.

The Louisville (KY) Courier-Journal (6/9, Kobin, 368K) reports that Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) on Tuesday endorsed state Rep. Charles Booker in Kentucky's Democratic Senate primary. Most of the Democratic establishment, including the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, is backing veteran Amy McGrath in the primary, which also features veteran Mike Broihier. The eventual Democratic nominee will face off against Senate Majority Leader McConnell this fall.

The Hill (6/9, Klar, 2.98M) reports, "In the primary, Booker is facing McGrath, a retired Marine Corps fighter pilot who has raised millions of dollars for her campaign. The DSCC endorsed McGrath in February. McGrath is running on a more moderate agenda than Booker. Booker accused McGrath of identifying herself as a 'pro-Trump Democrat' and said she 'doesn't have a clue about the challenges we face,' in an interview Monday night with MSNBC." CQ Roll Call (6/9, Jackson, 154K) reports that in endorsing Booker, "who is black," Ocasio-Cortez and Sanders broke "with the party's senatorial committee on the best choice to challenge...McConnell." The report adds, "Inside Elections with Nathan L. Gonzales rates the Kentucky Senate race Solid Republican."

Sanders Endorses Primary Challengers To Clay, Engel. Politico (6/9, Arkin, 4.29M) reports that Sanders on Tuesday "endorsed a half-dozen insurgent candidates in upcoming primaries," including "two challengers running against incumbent House Democrats." Politico says Sanders backed primary challengers to House Foreign Affairs Chairman Eliot Engel and Rep. Lacy Clay (D-MO). Sanders "endorsed Jamaal Bowman, who is challenging Engel in New York, and Cori Bush, a nurse and activist running for the second straight cycle against Clay." Reuters (6/9, Cowan) reports that Sanders "tweeted that Bowman, a school principal, would 'fight to invest in public schools, end mass incarceration, and address the housing crisis.'" The New York Democratic primary will be held on June 23, with the winner likely to be victorious in November in the heavily Democratic district."

NYTimes Profiles Controversial Democratic Frontrunner In NY15 Race.

The New York Times (6/9, Goldmacher, 18.61M) profiles Rubén Díaz Sr., who is bidding to succeed retiring Rep. Jose Serrano (D-NY) in the NY15. The Times says, "The single most Democratic congressional district in America could next be held by a Democrat who opposes abortion rights, has a history of endorsing Republicans and making homophobic remarks and is still considering voting for President Trump in November." In 2019, "Díaz, a cowboy-hat-wearing Pentecostal minister and New York City councilman, was ignoring calls to resign his seat after saying the Council chamber was 'controlled by the homosexual community.'" Today, he's "seen as the front-runner in the 12-person contest." A Díaz victory "would create a headache for the party" and House Speaker Pelosi, "handing an otherwise reliable Democratic seat to an apostate who would gleefully buck party leadership."

Georgia Democrats Convinced Party Can Flip State In 2020.

The New York Times (6/9, Herndon, 18.61M) reports that Georgia Democrats have been arguing their state was a competitive battlefield for several years, only to come up short in key races. However, "with two Senate seats in play and [President] Trump on the ballot in November, Georgia Democrats are telling anyone who will listen: This time, it's real. State elected officials are urging national Democrats, including [Joe Biden] to make a big investment in the state, pumping the type of staffing and advertising money into Georgia that is usually reserved for the Wisconsin and Michigan. The dream scenario, which would include presidential and Senate victories but also wins in the state Legislature, could upend the balance of power in Washington and provide a road map for other Southern Democrats, who are seeking to make gains after years of being shut out."

Georgia Primary Elections Marred By “Full-Scale Meltdown Of New Voting Systems.” Tuesday's primary elections in Georgia were reportedly marred by problems with voting machines that led to long lines for those seeking to cast ballots. On NBC Nightly News (6/9, story 5, 1:30, 6.89M), Lester Holt reported, "Tonight, there is outrage in Georgia after a voting meltdown on this primary day, particularly in areas with higher black populations." NBC's Blayne Alexander added, "This is primary day in Georgia. Lines in Atlanta stretching for blocks, some standing in the rain, forced to wait for hours to cast a ballot. ... Georgia unveiling new voting machines statewide, right in the midst of a pandemic." Unidentified Speaker: "Several of the machines were broken. It seemed like maybe half of the machines were down."

On the CBS Evening News (6/9, story 6, 1:30, 3.41M), Norah O'Donnell reported that "voters in Georgia were met with long lines and confusion at polling place as they tried to cast ballots in the state's primary elections. There are already calls for an investigation, while the mayor of Atlanta is warning this could be a preview of the general election in November." CBS' Ed O'Keefe added, "Georgia, a key battleground state in November, had rescheduled its primary twice because of the coronavirus pandemic. Health concerns kept many longtime poll workers from showing up today, leaving inexperienced volunteers to run new voting machines for the first time."

The New York Times (6/9, Fausset, Epstein, Rojas, 18.61M) reports, "Georgia's statewide primary elections...were overwhelmed by a full-scale meltdown of new voting systems put in place after widespread claims of voter suppression during the state's 2018 governor's election. Scores of new state-ordered voting machines were reported to be missing or malfunctioning, and hourslong lines materialized at polling places across Georgia. Some people gave up and left before casting a ballot, and concerns spread that the problems would disenfranchise untold voters, particularly African-Americans. Predominantly black areas experienced some of the worst problems."

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (6/9, Brasch, 895K) reports, "It started bad for Fulton County voters Tuesday and didn't get much better. Before the sun rose, it became clear that poll workers were unable to handle the new equipment and voting machines were being delivered late. That left voters in long lines all day trying to shield themselves from sun and rain. ... Georgia's most populated county is now the subject of at least three investigations into its shoddy elections management."

Politico (6/9, Montellaro, Barrón-López, 4.29M) reports GOP Georgia Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger's "office placed the blame on local officials – particularly in two majority-minority counties in and around Atlanta – not the voting machines. Georgia bought some 30,000 new voting machines for 2020 to address election security concerns." CQ Roll Call (6/9, Akin, 154K) reports, "The problems were an ominous sign for November, when Georgia is expected to be a battleground for the White House and, with both seats on the ballot, control of the Senate." USA Today (6/9, Santucci, 10.31M) and The Hill (6/9, Axelrod, 2.98M) also report on the story.

WPost: Internet Archive Should Negotiate With Publishers To Make Books Available.

The Washington Post (6/9, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the Internet Archive's "National Emergency Library," a "storehouse of scanned physical copies of books," is "possibly illegal" because "the organization isn't paying licensing fees to publishers at all." The Post says the Archive's approach "is much like piracy and less like a library," and suggests it "negotiate with publishers to get more books to more people – but also more money to more authors who've rightfully earned it." The Post adds that the situation "has revealed" a "library problem. The legal and business landscape lags a public that more and more is reading digitally. Publishers impose fees and conditions that they consider necessary to stay afloat and librarians consider draconian. It's past time to catch up: The National Emergency Library isn't really a library, but libraries are facing a bit of a national emergency."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 42.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 42.6%, and his disapproval at 54.4%. The President's approval is down 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (6/4-6/8) finds Trump's approval at 44%, and his disapproval at 55%.

IMF Head Warns Debt Service Suspension Needed To Prevent "Disorderly Defaults" In World's Poorest Countries.

Bloomberg (6/9, Martin, Curran, 4.73M) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva on Tuesday "called on private creditors to join the Group of 20 in providing debt relief for the world's poorest nations, saying that the alternative to suspension and restructuring is defaults." Georgieva said a suspension of debt service would provide time needed to restructure debt on a case-by-case basis for countries whose debt sustainability must be restored. Georgieva added that failure to do so "would lead to inevitably a much worse option, which is disorderly defaults. ... We can prevent that."

IMF Approves $5B Loan Deal For Ukraine, Will Immediately Disburse $2.1B.

Reuters (6/9, Lawder, Williams) reports the IMF's executive board "approved on Tuesday a $5 billion loan deal for Ukraine that Kiev says is needed to stave off default as the coronavirus pandemic plunges the Eastern European country's economy into recession." The IMF said in a statement that $2.1 billion will be immediately disbursed to Ukraine as part of the 18-month Stand-By Arrangement. Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy said Tuesday on Twitter, "That's $200 mln more than originally planned. The new program funding will help us to overcome the challenges caused by #COVID19. The #IMF has proven itself to be a reliable partner to a friend in need." IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva, in a statement, said the program's remaining funds would be spread across four reviews over its duration, focusing more on stability rather than deep structural reforms. Bloomberg (6/9, Krasnolutska, Martin, 4.73M) also reports.

IMF Highlights Hong Kong's Importance As Global Financial Hub.

Reuters (6/9) reports IMF First Deputy Managing Director Geoffrey Okamoto said Tuesday that Hong Kong retaining its status as a financial hub for the world "is important not just to China but to rest of world." Okamoto said Hong Kong "is underpinned by a very strong financial sector...and a monetary system that is anchored to rules, and well governed and well understood by the world. ... We want to retain Hong Kong's (status) as a financial hub." Okamoto "added that the IMF expected to issue a revised update to its world economic outlook on June 24."

WHO Walks Back Assessment Of Asymptomatic Spread Threat.

The Washington Post (6/9, Wan, Berger, 14.2M) reports that the World Health Organization “moved Tuesday to clarify its position on whether people without symptoms are widely spreading the new coronavirus, saying much remains unknown about asymptomatic transmission.” The Post says “a comment by a WHO official on Monday – calling such asymptomatic transmissions ‘very rare’ --- touched off a furious scientific debate over the unresolved question and attracted widespread criticism of the organization.” The Post says “less than 24 hours later, WHO convened a special news conference to walk back its comments, stressing that much remains unknown. But the comment from Monday had already spread widely and been seized upon by conservatives and others to bolster arguments that people do not need to wear masks or maintain social distancing precautions.”

USA Today (6/9, Rodriguez, 10.31M) reports that in an effort to clarify her comments, Maria Van Kerkhove, “WHO’s technical lead, said in a video posted on the organization’s Twitter feed that she was referring to a small subset of studies and unpublished information from member states when making the comments.” Kerkhove said, “I wasn’t stating a policy of WHO or anything like that, I was just trying to articulate what we know. And in that I used the phrase ‘very rare,’ and I think that’s a misunderstanding to state that asymptomatic transmissions globally is very rare.”

The New York Times (6/9, Mandavilli, 18.61M) reports the WHO is “failing to take stock of rapidly evolving research findings and to communicate clearly about them, several scientists warned on Tuesday.” The WHO has also diverged from “scientific opinion” on the efficacy of masks and the transmissibility of the virus through aerosols. The Times says that “these scientific disagreements have wide policy implications,” and “some scientists are suspicious that W.H.O.’s stance on masks and aerosols may stem less from scientific research than from a concern over supplies of personal protective equipment for medical workers.”

Satellite Imagery Suggests China’s Outbreak Began Spreading Much Earlier Than Thought.

The Washington Times (6/9, Gertz, 492K) reports, “Satellite photographs of hospital traffic and data on local internet searches indicate the coronavirus outbreak in China may have begun as early as last summer, months earlier than previously thought, according to a new study published by the Harvard University.” Medical researchers “analyzed high-resolution satellites images of six hospitals in Wuhan, China, and data from internet word searches for such terms as ‘cough’ and ‘diarrhea’ in concluding the virus began before the official Dec. 1 date of the first known case.” They “stated in a non-peer reviewed report that ‘while we cannot confirm if the increased volume was directly related to the new virus, our evidence supports other recent work showing that emergence happened before identification at the Huanan Seafood market.’”

Lewandowski: China Lied To US And The World. Former Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski said on Fox Business’ Evening Edit (6/9), “We know that the people of China have not only been dishonest with the United States but with the people of the world. We need to make sure they’re held accountable for that. Either they lied to the World Health Organization or the World Health Organization didn’t do their due diligence when they said this virus couldn’t be spread from person-to-person contact. ... We know that they have lied about when and where this coronavirus started.”

Canada And US Have Two Weeks To Decide On Border Reopening.

Politico (6/9, Gardner, 4.29M) reports that the “Canadian and U.S. governments must decide before June 22 whether to extend, amend or end land border restrictions” – a COVID-19 response “that is splitting families, disrupting tourism and upending life in border towns.” Politico says “even with its provinces reopening, Canada is expected to push for maintaining restrictions on cross-border travel to all but essential travel.” Prime Minister Justin Trudeau “announced Monday that border officials will begin admitting immediate family members of Canadian citizens and permanent residents – but those travelers will be required to observe a 14-day quarantine, and thus must be able to stay in Canada for at least 15 days.”

Health Experts Concerned As Lockdowns Are Lifted In Developing Countries.

The AP (6/9, Cheng, Savarese) reports that “as many countries gingerly start lifting their lockdown measures, experts worry that a further surge of the coronavirus in under-developed regions with shaky health systems could undermine efforts to halt the pandemic, and they say more realistic options are needed.” According to the AP, Brazil, Mexico, South Africa, India and Pakistan are “among countries easing tight restrictions, not only before their outbreaks have peaked but also before any detailed surveillance and testing system is in place to keep the virus under control,” which “could ultimately have devastating consequences, health experts warn.”

Iran To Execute Man Convicted Of Spying For US, Israeli Intelligence.

Reuters (6/9, Hafezi) reports, “An Iranian who spied for U.S. and Israeli intelligence on slain Revolutionary Guards commander Qassem Soleimani has been sentenced to death, Iran said on Tuesday, adding the case was not linked to Soleimani’s killing earlier this year.” Judiciary spokesman Gholamhossein Esmaili said, “Mahmoud Mousavi-Majd, one of the spies for the CIA and the Mossad, has been sentenced to death. ... He had shared information about the whereabouts of martyr Soleimani with our enemies.” Esmaili said, “He passed on security information to the Israeli and American intelligence agencies about Iran’s armed forces, particularly the Guards.”

Iran Has Constructed Replica Of US Carrier.

The AP (6/9, Gambrell) reports that "as tensions remain high between Iran and the US, the Islamic Republic appears to have constructed a new mock-up of an aircraft carrier off its southern coast for potential live-fire drills." According to the AP, "The faux foe, seen in satellite photographs obtained Tuesday" by the AP, "resembles the Nimitz-class carriers that the U.S. Navy routinely sails into the Persian Gulf from the Strait of Hormuz, its narrow mouth where 20% of all the world's oil passes through." The AP adds, "While not yet acknowledged by Iranian officials, the replica's appearance in the port city of Bandar Abbas suggests Iran's paramilitary Revolutionary Guard is preparing an encore of a similar mock-sinking it conducted in 2015."

WSJournal: Iran Must Guarantee Transparency In Nuclear Activities.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the International Atomic Energy Agency's recent report raising concerns that Iran is denying access to certain sites undermines the 2015 nuclear deal. Under President Trump's "maximum-pressure" strategy, the US has gained leverage to renegotiate a new nuclear agreement, and the Journal urges whoever wins the presidential election to not waste this newfound leverage and ensure that Iran guarantees a transparent accounting of its nuclear activities in a new accord.

Trump Orders Construction Of Icebreaker Fleet For Polar Regions.

The Washington Times (6/9, Boyer, 492K) reports President Trump "ordered his administration on Tuesday to develop a polar icebreaking fleet for the Arctic and Antarctic by the end of the decade, saying it's necessary for national security." Trump said in the order, "To help protect our national interests in the Arctic and Antarctic regions, and to retain a strong Arctic security presence alongside our allies and partners, the United States requires a ready, capable, and available fleet of polar security icebreakers that is operationally tested and fully deployable by fiscal year 2029." Trump also "wants to identify two new bases in the U.S. for the fleet, and two international bases."

US Officials Were Not Told About Trump's Decision To Cut Troops In Germany.

Reuters (6/9, Landay, Shalal, Mohammed) reports that President Trump's decision to cut US troop levels in Germany "blindsided a number of senior national security officials." Reuters cites "five sources familiar with the matter." According to Reuters, the Pentagon "had yet to receive a formal order to carry it out," but Trump "decided to remove 9,500 troops from Germany...reducing the number there to 25,000." Reuters reports that a "senior U.S. official" indicated that the decision "was the result of months of work by the U.S. military leadership and had nothing to do with tensions between" Trump and German Chancellor Angela Merkel, but "other sources...said a number of U.S. officials at the White House, State Department and Pentagon were surprised by the decision and they offered explanations ranging from Trump's pique over the G7 to the influence" of former US Ambassador to Germany Richard Grenell, "a Trump loyalist."

US To Begin Talks With Russia On Nuclear Arms Control Treaty.

The Washington Post (6/9, Sonne, Dixon, 14.2M) reports, "The last major treaty limiting U.S. and Russian nuclear might hangs in the balance as the Trump administration pushes to replace it with a long-shot arms-control pact that also includes China five months before the U.S. presidential election." The New START accord is "set to expire in February" and if the Administration declines to extend it, the US and Russia will be "left without any significant limits on their nuclear forces for the first time in decades." On Monday, Marshall Billingslea, Trump's new special envoy for arms control, "said in a tweet he had agreed on a time and date this month to meet with Russia's main arms-control negotiator." On Tuesday, Billingslea "said China declined to take part in the negotiations, and accused Beijing in a tweet of maintaining a 'Great Wall of Secrecy on its nuclear buildup.'"

Senate Investigators Fault Oversight Of Chinese Telecoms.

The Washington Examiner (6/9, Dunleavy, 448K) reports, "Senate investigators concluded the federal government had failed to oversee the operation of Chinese state-run telecom companies inside the United States properly for years, a failure that poses a threat to national security." The Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations released a report on Tuesday "which details how the federal government 'has provided little-to-no oversight of Chinese state-owned telecommunications carriers operating in the United States for nearly twenty years' and how China is targeting U.S. communications the same way it has targeted education, research, and personal data." The investigation "found the Chinese government 'exerts control over China's domestic telecommunications industry and state-owned carriers' while it 'engages in cyber and economic espionage efforts against the United States' and 'may use telecommunications carriers operating in the United States to further these efforts.'"

WSJournal: US, China Face Off In Battle For Future Of Technology. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) sees US sanctions against Huawei as a move to sever computer technology supply chains from China, splitting the world economy into two competing blocs. Looking to the long-term, the Journal argues the US should rely on private enterprise and the free market, not government-directed investment, to ensure they win the tech war against China.

Marchers Marking Anniversary Of Pro-Democracy Protests Arrested In Hong Kong.

The AP (6/9, Soo) reports that on Tuesday, "hundreds of people marched in Hong Kong's streets...to mark a year since the start of anti-government protests." The AP says protesters "marched in Hong Kong's central district...and shouted slogans including 'Hong Kong independence, the only way out' and 'Fight to the end.'" According to the AP, "They marched despite police warnings that force could be used to disperse participants and that they faced up to five years in prison." The AP says "riot police later charged at a group of protesters...tackling some to the ground," and "at least 25 people were arrested for participating in unauthorized assemblies, disorderly conduct and other offenses, police said. Some protesters were also stopped and searched by police."

Reuters (6/9, Jim, Chow) reports that the marchers "defied a government ban on gatherings of more than eight people due to the coronavirus, as well as a heavy riot police presence on the streets, with officers repeatedly seen conducting searches on those passing through the area." Reuters says "earlier on Tuesday, protesters gathered in several shopping malls to chant pro-democracy slogans, dispersing peacefully after an hour." Reuters reports that on June 9, 2019, "an estimated more than one million protesters took to the streets against proposed legislation to allow extraditions to mainland China, where the courts are controlled by the Communist Party."

UK-Based Investor Questions Banks On Hong Kong Stance. The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Clark, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a top investor in HSBC Holdings and Standard Chartered has criticized the London-based banks for backing China's plan to impose a new national security law on Hong Kong, calling on them to speak out if it leads to an abuse of democratic freedoms. Aviva Investors, an asset management firm based in the UK that holds substantial stakes in both banks, raised concerns that the banks had signaled support of the law despite a lack of clarity about potential ramifications.

North Korea's Decision To Cut Links With South Attributed To Kim's Sister.

The Washington Post (6/9, Kim, Denyer, 14.2M) reports that North Korea "said it would shut telephone hotlines with South Korea on Tuesday and ultimately sever all communications with its neighbor, hardening its policy as it attempts to gain concessions from Seoul." According to the Post, "The escalation came five days after Kim Yo Jong," the younger sister of Kim Jong-un, "took charge of relations with South Korea and threatened to shut a joint liaison office and factory park in the border town of Kaesong." The Post says Kim Yo Jong "has been taking an increasingly high-profile role in Pyongyang," and "had demanded that Seoul prevent activists from sending leaflets across the border intended to promote democracy and undermine the nuclear-armed regime."

UN Expert Warns Sanctions Exacerbating Widespread Food Shortages And Malnutrition In North Korea. The Washington Times (6/9, Meier, 492K) reports, "A United Nations human rights expert is calling on the 15-member U.N. security council to reconsider economic sanctions on North Korea after expressing concern over starvation and malnutrition in the hermit nation." UN special rapporteur on human rights in North Korea, Tomas Ojea Quintana, on Tuesday warned "that 'widespread food shortages and malnutrition' has been exacerbated by economic sanctions." Quintana also "called on the international community to allow humanitarian assistance to be delivered 'without restrictions.'"

Israel's Top Court Repeals Law Legalizing Settlements On Palestinian Land.

Reuters (6/9, Ayyub) reports that Israel's Supreme Court on Tuesday struck down a law "that had retroactively legalised about 4,000 settler homes built on privately owned Palestinian land in the occupied West Bank." A nine-judge panel, in a 8-1 decision, "voted to repeal the 2017 measure, under which settlers could remain on land if they built there without prior knowledge of Palestinian ownership, or if homes were built at the state's direction." Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's Likud party "said it was 'unfortunate' that the court had intervened on 'an important law for settlement activity and its future' and that it would work to re-enact it." However, "Likud's new coalition partner, Blue and White, said the law 'in its format runs counter to the constitutional situation in Israel, and its legal problems were known at the time of its approval'."

FHFA's Calabria: GSEs' Forbearance Rate Plateauing At "Manageable" Level.

HousingWire (6/9, Howley, 23K) reports that FHFA Director Mark Calabria "told the Senate Banking Committee on Tuesday that forbearance requests for loans backed by the GSEs have begun to level off." The GSEs' forbearance rate has "plateaued at about 6.6%," a level Calabria says is "manageable." He explained, "We've seen over the last few weeks those numbers start to stabilize. Within the GSE portfolio, you see as many borrowers canceling their forbearance programs as you see rolling on." Calabria said that he had been concerned with April's rapid spike in forbearances, but he has not seen any further spikes in the GSEs' books in May and June. Calabria is also encouraged by data indicating that around a third of borrowers with forbearance agreements are continuing to make payments. Calabria also expressed optimism regarding the state of the housing market, explaining, "The home sales activity and the mortgagee purchase activity have been far stronger than anyone projected. Apparently a lot of people in quarantine spent their time looking at homes online because a number of them decided to buy homes, coming out of this."

DS News (6/9, Welborn) reports, "Calabria says there is still much more work to be done, stating that the COVID-19 pandemic provided enough evidence that there are critical vulnerabilities in the mortgage system that put taxpayers and the housing market at risk." But RISMedia (6/9, 2K) reports that Calabria also said that the FHFA "acted swiftly and prudently to respond to COVID-19," working in "close partnership with FHA and Ginnie Mae" to develop policies. Joining Calabria at the SBC hearing was HUD Secretary Carson, HUD Deputy Secretary Montgomery, and Acting Ginnie Mae President Seth Appleton.

Some Senators Press For Extension Of Foreclosure And Eviction Moratorium. American Banker (6/9, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that Tuesday's hearing "focused in part on what happens to borrowers when relief such as loan forbearance plans and enhanced unemployment compensation end." Lawmakers "grilled" Calabria and Carson on the "possibility of an imminent housing cliff approaching in August, with fear evident on both sides of the aisle but no clear consensus about what comes next." Both housing regulators "faced some pressure to extend the foreclosure and eviction moratorium" at the FHFA and the FHA. According to American Banker, "Calabria told the committee to expect an announcement on FHFA's foreclosure moratorium 'within a week,' but that the agency would likely only extend it a month at the most." He explained, "I don't think we'd want it to be any more than two months just because we can always extend it again, as we start to see how the economy evolves, so my preference here is to give people enough certainty without necessarily locking us in."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (6/9, 895K) reports Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) "told Carson and Calabria their agencies 'are making things worse, whether it's through budget cuts to affordable housing or trying to make mortgages more expensive or hard to get or dismantling fair housing protections,' and warned of mass evictions when [eviction] moratoriums expire."

WHIO-TV Dayton, OH (6/9, Manning, 109K) reports that the CARES Act's moratorium on evictions and foreclosures for properties with federally-backed mortgages will remain in place until July 24, but housing experts are expecting a "surge in renter evictions as states are reopening and eviction moratoriums are expiring." Calabria said of the moratorium, "Importantly, we mandated that tenants cannot be evicted for the non-payment of rent and forbearance." But according to National Housing Law Project Director of Litigation Eric Dunn, as relief measures expire, "We could be looking at homelessness on a scale that people in the United States haven't seen before, definitely not since the Great Depression."

NAR Calls For Federal Rental Assistance. HousingWire (6/9, Falcon, 23K) reports that the National Association of Realtors is "urging Congress to take action on emergency rental assistance, both for renters and the owners of their housing." According to the trade group, "Direct federal rental assistance to housing providers will help alleviate some of the financial strain on the industry and stop the cascading effects on local economies." NAR said in a statement, "We also believe that any extension of the eviction moratorium should be narrowly tailored to provide relief to renters who are financially impacted due to COVID-19, as is required for housing providers seeking relief. Furthermore, the eviction moratorium should be matched with mortgage forbearance relief for housing providers."

Calabria, Carson Discuss Servicer Liquidity And State Of Secondary Market. Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (6/9, Hollier, Subscription Publication) reports Calabria said that significant liquidity problems for MBS servicers would only arise if "forbearance uptake rates get over 30%." IMF says, "In other words, it doesn't look like an industry train wreck is in the cards, at least not anymore." Calabria also "tried to reassure the panel that the agency (via Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac) has done its best to support renters and mortgagors during the pandemic. The government-sponsored enterprises, he reminded them, own or guarantee $5.7 trillion in mortgages, a figure that includes 43% of multifamily units."

National Mortgage Professional (6/9) reports on the testimony of Calabria and Carson. Touching on the Administration's continued push for housing finance reform, Calabria reiterated that the GSEs "lack the capital to withstand a serious housing downturn," adding that this lack of an adequate buffer "undermines their countercyclical role and jeopardizes their important mission." Meanwhile, HUD Secretary Carson touted Ginnie Mae's Pass-Through Assistance Program (PTAP). Carson said, "The timely payment of P&I to MBS holders, consistent with Ginnie Mae's statutory guaranty, is essential to the liquidity of the MBS market and the confidence of investors who finance housing through the Ginnie Mae program."

In its coverage of Calabria's testimony, the ABA Banking Journal (6/9) reports, "FHFA last month re-proposed changes to the existing capital framework for Fannie and Freddie, and Calabria noted that additional legislative changes will likely be needed to end the conservatorships and to ensure that FHFA has adequate tools and authorities to regulate the enterprises going forward."

CQ Roll Call (6/9, Saks, 154K) provides additional coverage of the hearing, and a mostly-paywalled Dodd Frank Update (6/9) piece covers Calabria's testimony. In its Tuesday morning Finance 202 rundown, the Washington Post (6/9, Newmyer, 14.2M) reported that Calabria and Carson were set to testify before the SBC. The Daily Kos (6/9, 240K) highlighted the hearing in its Today In Congress rundown.

CUNA Wants FHFA, Congress To Create Servicer Liquidity Facility. Credit Union National Association (6/9) said in a release that it is "increasingly concerned about the impact a large number of mortgage forbearances will have on the liquidity of mortgage servicers." Because of this, CUNA "wrote to the Senate Banking Committee Tuesday," calling for "guidance or clarity on several issues." In part, CUNA said that it believes the FHFA "should support and work with Congress to create a financing program, or liquidity facility, for mortgage servicers in need of assistance in order to preserve their ability to respond to the unprecedented levels of payment forbearance required to help families affected by COVID-19."

MBA: Mortgage Credit Availability Falls To Six-Year Low In May.

National Mortgage News (6/9) reports that the Mortgage Banker Association's Mortgage Credit Availability Index fell for a sixth-straight month in May, falling 3.1% to 129.3 from April's level of 133.5. According to NMN, "This is the tightest credit's become since June 2014," and "moves by the GSEs have lightly contributed to the tightening of credit." In early May, "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac suspended bulk sales and limited their remaining secondary market purchases in order to curb negative financial impacts from the pandemic."

National Mortgage Professional (6/9) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "There was a reduction in supply across all loan types, driven by further pullback in investors' appetites for loan programs with low credit scores and high LTVs. Credit tightening was observed at both ends of the market, with less availability of low down payment programs designed for first-time homebuyers, as well as for conforming and nonconforming jumbo loans.”

Bloomberg Releases Agency MBS Prepayment Model To Help Investors Through Pandemic.

Bloomberg Business (6/9, 4.73M) announced its release of the Bloomberg Agency MBS Prepayment Model (BAM), which “incorporates the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic and government response on unemployment rates and home prices; delinquency and forbearance; and mortgage rates, home sales and refinancing activity.” With unemployment high and the CARES Act’s mortgage forbearance policies, “the BAM model has been adjusted to assume an increase in nonpayment of mortgages, especially in the government mortgage sector (GNMA). It also factors in the delay that CARES Act forbearance policies imply for the ultimate resolution of these mortgages and its impact on prepayments and MBS performance.” Bloomberg says that MBS yields have “fallen dramatically in response to Federal Reserve rate cuts and MBS purchase programs. According to the Freddie Mac Primary Mortgage Market Survey, however, this has not led to the same reduction in mortgage rates as observed in previous ‘low-rate’ environments.”

Multifamily Financing

- Squiretown Properties Gets $50M Freddie Mac Refi For NJ Multifamily Property. Commercial Observer (NY) (6/9) reports that Greystone “has provided a 10-year Freddie Mac refinance for ParkVue at Livingston, a five-building multifamily property” in Livingston, New Jersey. In a mostly paywalled piece, Commercial Real Estate Direct (6/9, Moynihan) also covers the deal.
- Archway Holdings Gets $30M Freddie Mac Refi For Nashville Apartments. Multi-Housing News (6/9) reports that Archway Holdings “has received a $30.4 million refinancing package for Mosaic and Axis, two communities totaling 363 units” in Nashville, Tennessee. CBRE Capital Markets “provided two Freddie Mac loans” that will mature in 2030.
- Columbus Multifamily Community Refinanced With $11M Freddie Mac Loan. REBusiness Online (6/9) reports, “RED Mortgage Capital, a division of ORIX Real Estate Capital, has provided an $11.4 million Freddie Mac loan for the refinancing of Redwood Reynoldsburg” in suburban Columbus, Ohio.
- Continuing Coverage: Queens Transitional Housing Facility Gets $35M Freddie Mac TAH-CME Refi. According to Real Estate Weekly (6/9), Merchants Capital secured $35.4 million in Freddie Mac Targeted Affordable Housing Capital Markets Execution (TAH-CME) financing for Jamaica Apartments, a “133-unit multifamily transitional housing facility” in Queens. Merchants Capital VP Michael Milazzo said, “A project of this magnitude and significance, especially during the COVID-19 crisis, is needed now more than ever.”

Democrats Seek Investigation Into Denial Of Federal Housing Loans For DACA Recipients.

BuzzFeed News (6/10, Prakash) reports a group of Congressional Democrats are asking the “federal housing agency’s inspector general to investigate why federal housing officials have told lenders to deny DACA recipients government-backed home loans, and why agency officials misled Congress and the public.” The letter to the Department of Housing and Urban Development Inspector General Rae Oliver Davis “was signed by 13 Senate and 32 House Democrats, headed up by Sen. Bob Menendez, Rep. Pete Aguilar, and Rep. Juan Vargas.” In their letter, Democrats “pointed to Wolfson’s responses, Carson’s testimony, and the internal documents and emails that show that a specific decision was made to interpret a requirement for legal residency for the loans to exclude DACA recipients.” They wrote, “The above timeline and documents demonstrate what we believe was a change of policy without sound and unambiguous legal reasoning, without an opportunity for public input under Section 553 of the APA, and without communication to FHA-approved lenders and Congress.”

MarketWatch (6/9, Passy, 1.67M) reports the lawmakers wrote, “We are concerned that HUD imposed a new, nonpublic, and legally erroneous policy prohibiting the issuance of FHA-insurance loans to Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) recipients and knowingly misrepresented to Congress the implementation and enforcement of this new policy.”

Ron McCord Indicted In Mortgage Fraud Case.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (6/9, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, “A federal grand jury in Oklahoma City late last week returned a 24-count indictment charging veteran mortgage banker Ronald J. McCord, 69, with defrauding two local warehouse banks, Fannie Mae and others, according to Timothy Downing, U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma.” The charges “cover a three year period,” alleging “bank fraud, money laundering and making a false statement to a financial institution.” McCord was the 1997 annual chairman of the MBA, and “once headed First Mortgage Col, a now-defunct nonbank based in Oklahoma City that’s at the center of the alleged conspiracy.” According to IMF, “The allegations center on the misappropriation of warehouse lines totaling at least $40 million, the double pledging of collateral, and the theft of escrow funds on servicing accounts tied to Fannie Mae-backed loans.” McCord bounced checks to “more than 60 taxing authorities, and borrowers throughout the Oklahoma City area and elsewhere missed making their real estate tax payments,” IMF says prosecutors allege.

The Oklahoman (6/9, 381K) reports, “This case is the result of an investigation by the Federal Housing Finance Agency’s Office of the Inspector General, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.’s Office of Inspector General, and the FBI’s Oklahoma City Field Office.” McCord faces “up to 30 years in prison and a fine of up to $1,000,000 on each count related to bank fraud and false statement to a financial institution,” as well as “up to 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine on each of the money laundering counts.” National Mortgage News (6/9) carries The Oklahoman’s coverage.

Podcast: Equifax Executive Discusses How Federal Government Could Help Servicers.

In the latest DS5 Podcast by DS News (6/9, Welborn), Equifax executive Jeremy Serfling discusses “how the federal government can better assist mortgage servicers,” as well as how servicers can use tech to “ensure prospective buyers have an equitable path to homeownership.” According to Serfling, “Servicers more than ever are taking advantage of the insights that come from deploying data-drive technologies.”

Pandemic-Related Forbearance May Be Affecting Borrowers’ Credit Scores, Some Experts Believe.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (6/9, Yang, Subscription Publication) says that “some industry stakeholders” believe that borrowers’ credit scores are taking a hit from pandemic-related relief. The CARES Act “requires lenders and servicers to report any account with a COVID-19 forbearance as current to credit bureaus as long as the borrower was not in arrears when relief was granted.” Because of this, “creditors are using a natural disaster code for loans that receive relief during the pandemic, which indicates the borrower isn’t at fault and it won’t affect credit scores.” IMF reports, “According to Francis Creighton, president and CEO of the Consumer Data Industry Association, the adoption of the CARES Act went smoothly, but it’s too early to tell what impact the pandemic will have on consumer credit because those who made their March payment but had issues in April won’t be reported 30-day delinquent until May.”

STRATMOR Survey Highlights Misconceptions Regarding Mortgage Relief.

Mortgage Professional America (6/9, Jarvis) says STRATMOR Group “recently released the findings of its COVID-19 Homeowner Experience Report.” Regarding mortgage relief, 13% of survey respondents “said they were under the impression that either the government would be making their mortgage payments for them (five percent) or that they could simply skip them (eight percent).” MPA says that STRATMOR’s survey results also suggest that the lack of clarity regarding mortgage relief options “has been exacerbated every time borrowers have been told to contact their lenders if they have questions or concerns about forbearance and the current state of their mortgages, not their mortgage servicers.” STRATMOR contends that educating borrowers on pandemic relief options, as well as “general financial literacy,” would be beneficial.

KBW Downgrades Mortgage Insurers, Warning Of Potential Capital Shortfall In Early 2021.

National Mortgage News (6/9, Finkelstein) reports Keefe, Bruyette & Woods “downgraded its stock ratings for the four stand-alone private mortgage insurers, noting that they could face a capital shortfall in the first quarter of 2021 in a rising delinquency scenario.” KBW’s Bose George “said he has not changed his view that the private mortgage insurers are well-positioned to handle an economic downturn,” but he “still lowered the sector’s rating from outperforming to market perform.” George believes that Essent, MGIC, National MI and Radian “should have enough capital surplus” under the PMIERS to manage rising delinquencies through the rest of 2020.

NMHC: 80% Of US Market-Rate Renters Paid Their Rent In June.

Multi-Housing News (6/9) reports, “Rental payments in the U.S. reached 80.8 percent as of June 6, according to a just-released report from the National Multifamily Housing Council.” This is a “slight increase from last month’s numbers.” As of May 6, “80.2 percent of renters had made a payment, while 81.5 percent of rental households had made a payment through the same time period last year.” The Real Deal \(NY\) (6/9, 124K) reports that the Community Housing Improvement Program “found that 25 percent of New York City renters had not made payments in May – and that figure grew by 10 percent at buildings where renters had gone on strike. At least 55 buildings were on rent strike in May, according to organizers.”

Analysis: GSEs’ Documentation Standards For Self-Employed Borrowers’ Income Could Impact ATR Requirements.

According to a LexBlog (6/9) analysis by Mayer Brown attorneys Laurence Platt and Kris Kully, the GSEs “recently issued enhanced documentation requirements and considerations for verifying and predicting the income of a self-employed applicant for a mortgage loan.” According to the duo, “While the GSEs’ documentation requirements apply via contract to approved lenders/sellers, whether those requirements will morph into legal requirements under the Dodd-Frank Act’s ‘ability to repay’ requirements is something to watch in the coming months.”

Opinion: Housing Counseling Can Help Borrowers Through Forbearance.

In a HousingWire (6/9, 23K) Pulse guest piece, Framework CEO Danielle Samalin discusses former CFPB Director Richard Cordray’s recent HousingWire blog regarding “challenges and disorganization of the 2008 housing crisis.” According to Samalin, “While Cordray is correct that government regulation can help streamline the loss mitigation assistance that will be offered to the 4 million homeowners who are currently in a forbearance, he neglects to take note of the critical role that the nonprofit housing counseling industry played as trusted advisors in the last crisis." Urban Institute research indicates that "borrowers with counseling in the 2008 crisis were 67% more like to be current after nine months than homeowners without counseling. Having a trusted advisor – for example, an unbiased housing counselor – also made it more likely that an at-risk borrower would respond to loss mitigation efforts."

Analysis: "Forbearance Scrutiny" Is Hitting The Mortgage Industry.

In a Law360 (6/9, Subscription Publication, 8K) piece, Troutman Sanders LLP attorneys Ashley Taylor, John Lynch, and Nick Ramos say that the mortgage industry should brace itself for "forbearance scrutiny." The CFPB "states that forbearance repayment options might include repayment in one lump sum at the end of the forbearance period, adding the missed payments onto existing monthly payments for a set number of months, or adding the amount to the end of the loan as additional payments or a lump sum." In addition, in mid-April, the CFPB and FHFA "announced a new, joint borrower protection program," which involves "consumer complaint, analytical tool and other information sharing between the two agencies." The attorneys say, "This is significant because the CFPB relies on this information to inform its supervisory and enforcement work."

Biden: Trump Undermining Fight Against Systemic Racism By Suspending AFFH.

In an opinion piece for USA Today (6/10, 10.31M), former Vice President and current 2020 presidential candidate Joe Biden says that Americans must "urgently root out systemic racism," especially in housing and policing. Biden argues that "President Trump has actively undermined progress on all these issues, including suspending the Obama-Biden administration's rule on Affirmatively Furthering Fair Housing, which required communities to proactively examine housing patterns and identify and address policies that have a discriminatory effect."

Markets

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (6/10, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.799 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (6/10, White) reports, "The dollar fell against most currencies on Wednesday amid some speculation the U.S. Federal Reserve could take steps to curb a recent rise in bond yields in a policy decision later in the day." The dollar "fell to 107.54 yen on Wednesday following a 0.6% decline in the previous session." The euro "rose 0.22% to $1.1364."

Gold Gains.

Reuters \(UK\) (6/10, Patel) reports, "Gold extended gains on Wednesday as global equity markets eased after a recent rally, while investors awaited the outcome of a Federal Reserve meeting expected to shed light on the state of the U.S. economy and potential further stimulus measures." Spot gold "was up 0.1% at $1,716.11 per ounce, as of 0702 GMT, after posting its best day in a month on Tuesday. U.S. gold futures rose 0.2% to $1,725."

Oil Falls.

Reuters \(UK\) (6/10, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil prices fell on Wednesday after a rise in crude and fuel stockpiles in the United States revived fears about oversupply and falling fuel demand in the world's largest crude consumer amid the coronavirus outbreak." Brent crude futures "fell 67 cents, or 1.6%, to $40.51 a barrel by 0636 GMT after gaining nearly 1% on Tuesday." West Texas Intermediate futures "dropped 80 cents, or 2.1%, to $38.14 a barrel, having risen about 2% in the previous session."

Cybersecurity

US Probing Hacker Ring Allegedly Paid To Target Corporations.

Bloomberg (6/9, Turton, 4.73M) reports, "U.S. authorities are investigating a vast hacking-for-hire operation that involves attempts to pilfer confidential communications from investigative journalists, short sellers and advocacy groups fighting climate change, according to law enforcement officials, court documents and cybersecurity officials who have tracked the scheme for years." Bloomberg adds, "The overall operation was stunning in scale and in some instances successful, according to several cybersecurity researchers who have been tracking the hackers. Among the thousands of entities allegedly targeted were hedge funds Coatue Management LLC and Blue Ridge Capital LLC, nonprofit groups fighting telecommunications companies over control of the internet, and journalists from multiple news organizations, according to several cybersecurity researchers including the Toronto-based research group Citizen Lab, which tracks illegal hacking and surveillance."

The New York Times (6/9, Hong, Meier, Bergman, 18.61M) says a report released by Citizen Lab on Tuesday revealed that federal prosecutors in New York are investigating a hacker-for-hire operation that targeted environmental groups that were engaged in a public battle with ExxonMobil over climate change. The report "said that thousands of people on six continents had been targeted by phishing emails for at least four years in the same operation." As part of the "investigation, federal prosecutors in Manhattan conducted interviews earlier this year with environmental groups that received the emails, including the Rockefeller Family Fund, some of the people familiar with the inquiry said." Prosecutors "are investigating the hackers behind the operation and who hired them, the people said, speaking on the condition of anonymity so they could discuss an ongoing investigation." ExxonMobil "has not been accused of any wrongdoing."

Major Cyber Attack Halts Operations At Honda Factories Worldwide.

The Independent (UK) (6/9, Smith, 1.36M) reports Honda is suffering "a cyber attack on its network, hitting its operations across the world." The company's manufacturing plants "have shut down and its customer service work has been forced to stop." Honda "said that the problem is affecting its computer servers, email systems, and other internal programs." It has also "affected systems outside of Japan because of a 'virus' that has spread through the network, but did not provide further information on the nature of the attack." A spokesperson told the BBC, "Honda can confirm that a cyber attack has taken place on the Honda network. We can also confirm that there is no information breach at this point in time."

The Telegraph (UK) (6/9, Cook, Tovey, 956K) reports the shutdown came after "a report that Ekans malware had infected one of the company's servers on Monday." Ekans is a "type of ransomware that targets industrial control systems used for operating factories, and demands payment to open them up again." Honda posted on Twitter Monday that "its customer service and financial services divisions were experiencing technical difficulties and were unavailable."

New Deputy Commander Named For US Cyber Command.

Defense News (6/9, Pomerleau, 21K) reports the DOD announced Air Force Maj. Gen. Charles Moore "will be the next No. 2 at US Cyber Command." Moore, who will also "receive his third star, is expected to take the reins from Vice. Adm. Ross Myers." In his current role as the director of operations, J-3 at Cyber Command, Moore "has helped bring the command's strategy of persistent engagement to operations, which is how the organizations seeks to implement the DOD's 2018 cyber strategy's call to 'defend forward.'" The defend forward policy is "best described as DOD working on foreign networks to prevent attacks before they happen." Cyber Command meets those goals "through persistent engagement, which means challenging adversary activities wherever they operate."

Numerous Challenges Confront Moving Forward With Internet Voting.

Politico (6/9, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column "about the many risks of Internet voting, how vendors defend it and what needs to happen before it's safe to use." Advocates of Internet voting "defend the idea by citing its limited use and the complexity of the systems' defenses – not that the latter argument wins over experts and other critics". Making it viable "will require end-to-end encryption and technology that allows voters' devices to demonstrate they are malware-free." That might "take a while." Dan Wallach, a computer science professor at Rice University who is an authority on election security, said, "Will we be in a different world 10 years from now? Almost certainly. But 10 years is a long time. We're nowhere near ready for this today."

Cyber Command Creates New Malware Sharing Portal With National Guard.

Fifth Domain Cyber (6/9, Pomerleau) reports a new portal "created by US Cyber Command and the National Guard provides a two-way interface for sharing malware and gain better insights into cyber threats facing the nation." The portal, called Cyber 9-Line," allows participating Guard units from their perspective states to quickly share incidents with Cyber Command." Cyber Command's elite Cyber National Mission Force, "which conducts operations aimed at disrupting specific nation state actors, is then able to provide analysis on the malware and offer feedback to the states to help redress the incident." Brig. Gen. William Hartman, commander of the Cyber National Mission Force and the lead for Cyber Command's election security group, said, "This level of cooperation and feedback provides local, state and Department on Defense partners with a holistic view of threats occurring in the United States and abroad."

Phishing Attack Targeted German COVID-19 Task Force Firm.

Gov Info Security (6/9, Palli) reports cybersecurity researchers at IBM X-Force Incident Response and Intelligence Services "say an ongoing phishing campaign has targeted top officials at a German multinational company tasked with the procurement of personal protective equipment during the COVID-19 pandemic." IBM X-Force IRIS Research and Operations Lead Nick Rossmann told Information Security Media Group, "It's possible that attackers could collect information associated with the production of PPE, communications between suppliers, details surrounding logistics and transport routes, all of which could support broader objectives to gather intelligence on certain nations or companies' strategies and resources."

GSA's CISO Credits CDM With "Government-Wide" Cybersecurity.

MeriTalk (6/9, Weingarten) reports Bo Berlas, CISO at the at the General Services Administration (GSA), "lauded DHS' government-wide cybersecurity program and its effects in automating cybersecurity tasks for GSA." The Continuous Diagnostics and Mitigation (CDM) program "run by DHS' Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) gives the agency a view of cybersecurity across the Federal government." Berlas said, "The very singular notion that we need to treat the Federal government as a singular enterprise, and have broader visibility across agencies cybersecurity postures, that's an incredible and powerful capability," said B"CDM, as a whole, has had a tremendously positive impact on the Federal cybersecurity at-large." Berlas "said CDM ensures that fundamental and basic security capabilities are implemented within government networks."

CISA Issues Warning On Anti-5G Public Activities.

ExecutiveGov (6/9, Rivers) reports the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) is "urging the public to remain vigilant of 'anti-5G activists' that seek to destroy 5G equipment that allegedly render the human immune system susceptible to COVID-19." CISA "said in a confidential memo...that telecommunications providers must report suspicious activities such as drone flights within their properties and deploy appropriate security technologies to prevent intrusions." DHS component "added that telecom companies need to protect 5G cell towers following recent attacks in the US and UK fueled by COVID-19 conspiracy theories."

DHS' Cyber Wing Pledges To Invest More In Industrial Control Systems Security.

CyberScoop (6/9, Lyngaas) reports DHS' cybersecurity division Tuesday "unveiled a strategy to help protect industrial control systems that support energy, transportation, and other critical sectors from being hacked." The goal is to use "data analytics, enhanced training, and better technology to help guard US critical infrastructure operators from foreign hacking groups that have shown a steady interest in their networks." Chris Krebs, head of DHS's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, said, "We're going to ask more of the ICS community, but we're also going to deliver more to you." He "said that a better understanding of cybersecurity risk in the industrial space can lead to 'being out in front of the adversary...putting friction into their plans so that they have to...develop new capabilities. We're going to develop deep data capabilities to analyze and deliver information the community can use to disrupt the ICS kill chain."

Op-ed: The Pandemic Is Catalyzing Changes In Cybersecurity.

In an op-ed on the CNBC (6/9, Fortinet, Council, 3.62M) website, Phil Quade, CISO of Fortinet, writes, "The coronavirus pandemic will reshape and redefine how we connect and do business. ... More than ever before, we need a new vision on the future of work and resiliency and how these two things are linked. ... Telecommuting might not be perceived as the 'electronic Pearl Harbor' that serves as a catalyst for revolutionary change in how we architect the security of networks, but if we have the courage and clarity this moment demands, the current telework requirements might be the catalyst for change that leads us to an advanced spot." He concludes, firms will need to "adopt a cybersecurity architecture that's optimized to support the new business architecture. Data privacy, confidentiality and integrity must be protected across the company's 'distributed edge' through the core networks inside its headquarters and into the cloud with broad, integrated and automated cybersecurity."

Obscure Indian Cyber Firm Spied On Politicians, Investors Worldwide.

Reuters (6/9, Stubbs, Satter, Bing) reports a "little-known Indian IT" company called BellTroX InfoTech Services "offered its hacking services to help clients spy on more than 10,000 email accounts over a period of seven years." Targets included "government officials in Europe, gambling tycoons in the Bahamas, and well-known investors in the US including private equity giant KKR and short seller Muddy Waters." Muddy Waters founder Carson Block "said he was 'disappointed, but not surprised, to learn that we were likely targeted for hacking by a client of BellTroX.'"

Cyber Criminals Release Phony Recovery Tool For Ransomware Victims.

Forbes (6/9, Mathews, 9.71M) reports a new tool decryption tool "released for one of the most widely-distributed strains of ransomware is not what it appears." There are about "150 variants of the Stop DJVU ransomware and researchers at Emsisoft estimate that it has infected nearly 500,000 computers." It's most commonly "distributed inside cracks or key generators for popular games." Unsuspecting victims wind up "with folders full of unusable files, encrypted with Stop DJVU and held for ransoms of nearly $1,000." Emsisoft's researchers "figured out how to break the ransomware's encryption." The company last year "released a free tool that could decrypt files for around 70% of victims." MalwareHunterTeam spotted "another tool that claimed to be able to decrypt files that were infected by Stop DJVU." Those unfortunate enough "to run the tool discovered the unpleasant truth."

State Department Seeks "Clean Path" 5G Networks.

FedScoop (6/9) reports the Department of State is "exploring how it can adopt what it calls 'clean path' 5G networks free of any dependencies on untrusted foreign vendors like Huawei and ZTE in its supply chain." In a new request for information, the department "defines a clean path as 'an end-to-end communication path that does not use any 5G transmission, control, computing, or storage equipment from an untrusted vendor.'" State wants to hear "from industry sources on how it can achieve such a 5G environment both at home and abroad in line with the 2019 National Defense Authorization Act, which prohibits government use of Huawei, ZTE, Xiaomi, and other untrusted vendors from China."

US Moves To Expand Sanctions Against Tankers Cooperating With Venezuela.

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Talley, Hope, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports US officials are widening efforts to block oil and fuel trade between Iran and Venezuela through new sanctions against numerous tankers while pressing firms linked to those vessels. The Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control intends to add up to 50 tankers to its blacklist for cooperating with Venezuela's government.

Tankers Shun Venezuela Due To US Sanctions Threat. Reuters (6/9, Parraga) reports that "two tankers that were sailing toward Venezuela to load crude have turned around since the weekend and three other vessels have left Venezuelan waters as the United States considers blacklisting dozens of ships for transporting the country's oil." According to Reuters, the Trump Administration is "considering imposing sanctions on tankers involved in exporting Venezuela's oil as the U.S. government seeks to choke off the main source of revenue for socialist President Nicolas Maduro." Reuters says "previous rounds of sanctions have reduced Venezuelan oil exports to a 17-year low while deepening the country's economic crisis but Maduro has held on, frustrating the administration."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC's Brooks Hopes To Change How Banks View Crypto.

CoinDesk (6/9, 41K) reports that since Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks took office at the end of May, he has "publicly suggested a federal payments charter for fintech companies, asked state and local governments to consider lifting COVID-19 lockdowns to protect the banking system and published a request for public input on how banks look at crypto." The first proposal may be "Brooks' most ambitious: creating a federal regulatory framework for tech firms offering some services traditionally offered by banks, something industry advocates have long sought but recognized as politically hazardous." Ultimately, Brooks "said he hopes to reform how banks treat crypto companies in the U.S., and help "legitimate" companies access banking relationships." He said, "I think there is a perception at banks that somehow crypto is a disfavored asset class... And so what I want to do is make sure that we systematically identify what the impediments are to legitimate companies getting banking relationships."

In a piece about the possibility of regulators allowing investments in cryptocurrencies through ETFs, CQ Roll Call (6/9, Feltman, 154K) reports, "There is no shortage of supporters for fintech around Washington, which could add pressure on regulators. One of them is the top regulator of national banks, Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks. He was chief legal officer at crypto exchange Coinbase Global Inc. before heading to the OCC."

Brooks Liquidated $4.6M In Coinbase Stock For OCC Job.

Bloomberg Law (6/9, Hamilton, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports behind a paywall that Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks "liquidated $4.6 million in Coinbase Inc. stock options when he left the cryptocurrency exchange earlier this year to join the government, according to financial disclosures he was required to file." Brooks, who became interim chief of the OCC last month, "has said he intends to leverage the experience he gained at San Francisco-based Coinbase and other tech firms to push a financial technology agenda at the 157-year-old agency, including opening up banking charters for tech firms."

Warren Urges OCC's Brooks To Scrap CRA Rewrite.

The Hill (6/9, Lane, 2.98M) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) is urging Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks to scrap his agency's rewrite of the Community Reinvestment Act and recuse himself from efforts to issue new rules. The OCC released its CRA overhaul "on May 20 less than five months after first proposing the changes" and "just a day before former Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting abruptly resigned." The overhaul came without the support of the Federal Reserve and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. In a letter to Brooks Tuesday, Warren wrote, "You now have an opportunity to undo this damage, and you should do so immediately. First, you should withdraw the final CRA rule to provide clarity to all stakeholders that the implementation of these regulations will never see the light of day."

Reuters (6/9, Engler) reports, "Last month, at a Senate banking committee hearing, several senators voiced strong opposition to the proposed CRA overhaul, particularly given the economic crisis from COVID-19 and the disproportionate harm inflicted on lower-income workers and those infected with the coronavirus." When Otting pushed ahead with a final version of the CRA overhaul, the FDIC "did not join the OCC in finalizing the rule, saying that smaller banks were already facing a 'Herculean effort' in helping businesses weather a global pandemic." Reuters says, "The resulting picture is one of division among the top U.S. banking regulators over a rule that affects millions of low-income black and minority consumers."

Banks Including JPMorgan Say Consumer Loans Are Faring Better Than Expected.

Bloomberg (6/9, Davis, 4.73M) reports JPMorgan Chase "is seeing early signs that the American consumer is bouncing back even as unemployment hovers close to the highest level since the 1940s." Although consumer defaults in loan products typically track the unemployment rate, "the performance that we see in those delinquency buckets is meaningfully better than what you would've expected with unemployment anywhere close to these levels," JPMorgan Co-President Gordon Smith said Tuesday at Morgan Stanley's Virtual US Financials Conference. Of the 1.5 percent of JPMorgan customers who requested forbearance on credit-card bills, about 80 percent have made payments, Smith said, calling it "a positive." The bank is also "starting to see an increase in interest for auto loans and mortgages after volumes slumped in the first few weeks of the pandemic."

American Banker (6/9, Prior, Alix, Kline, Anason, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports executives at Truist Financial and other banks similarly "said Tuesday during [the] virtual investor conference...that commercial customers are showing renewed interest in seeking credit, consumers are managing their loan payments relatively well and loss-reserves may not rise as much as had been expected." Truist Chairman and CEO Kelly King said the "vast majority" of the bank's clients "are struggling" but "doing fine." King added, "I've heard three times in the past 24 hours regional presidents and others say to me that clients are doing fine relative to what's going on."

Morgan Stanley's Gorman Promotes Two Black Staffers, Creates Diversity Unit, Donates $5M To NAACP.

The New York Post (6/9, McEnery, 4.57M) reports Morgan Stanley CEO James Gorman "has been so moved by the protests that have gripped New York City that he's shaking things up at his firm, he said Tuesday." In an internal email posted to LinkedIn, Gorman "wrote that the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police and the ensuing global outrage has pushed him to promote two black women at the $895 billion bank, create a new $25 million institution inside Morgan Stanley dedicated to diversity and donate $5 million to the NAACP." Gorman fast-tracked the promotion of Carol Greene-Vincent, head of internal audit, "to the firm's operating committee, making her the first and only black member of that powerful executive panel that helps run the brokerage and Wall Street bank." He also promoted Susan Reid, global head of diversity and inclusion, to the firm's management committee.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"Free Books Online? Who Could Be Against That?" The Washington Post (6/9, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the Internet Archive's "National Emergency Library," a "storehouse of scanned physical copies of books," is "possibly illegal" because "the organization isn't paying licensing fees to publishers at all." The Post says the Archive's approach "is much like piracy and less like a library," and suggests it "negotiate with publishers to get more books to more people – but also more money to more authors who've rightfully earned it." The Post adds that the situation "has revealed" a "library problem. The legal and business landscape lags a public that more and more is reading digitally. Publishers impose fees and conditions that they consider necessary to stay afloat and librarians consider draconian. It's past time to catch up: The National Emergency Library isn't really a library, but libraries are facing a bit of a national emergency."

"'Defund The Police' Is A Call To Imagine A Safer America. We Should Answer It." The Washington Post (6/9, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the call to defund the police "at its most constructive represents a welcome call to reimagine public safety in the United States." The Post asks, "Are we really safer in a world where armed police respond to mental-health emergencies, or can we imagine communities in which those struggling with mental illness are met with expert and reliable services? Are we safer when homelessness is met with criminalization, not compassion and housing?" To the Post, "the call to defund the police should be understood as a call to reinvest in communities and explore new solutions."

"A Devastating Second Wave Is Possible. But There Are Ways To Avert It." The Washington Post (6/9, 14.2M) editorializes that "a devastating second wave" of coronavirus infections is "possible — but could be averted." The Post says "available evidence points" shows that people "should be as relentless as the virus" in "wearing face masks, washing hands and avoiding crowded, closed enclosures." In addition, local governments must build "a robust testing, contact tracing and isolating regime as soon as possible."

Wall Street Journal.

"Huawei And The US-China Tech War." The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that US sanctions against Huawei are a move to sever computer technology supply chains from China, splitting the world economy into two competing blocs. Looking to the long-term, the Journal argues the US should rely on private enterprise and the free market, not government-directed investment, to ensure they win the tech war against China.

"General Brown's Wisdom." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) praises US officials for their selection of Gen. Charles 'CQ' Brown Jr. as the new Air Force Secretary. In particular, the Journal lauds Brown's video and his rhetoric on race.

"Iran's Pre-Deal Deceptions." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the International Atomic Energy Agency's recent report raising concerns that Iran is denying access to certain sites undermines the 2015 nuclear deal. Under President Trump's "maximum-pressure" strategy, the US has gained leverage to renegotiate a new nuclear agreement, and the Journal urges whoever wins the presidential election to not waste this newfound leverage and ensure that Iran guarantees a transparent accounting of its nuclear activities in a new accord.

"Life And Death In Chicago." While some progressives want to defund the police, the Wall Street Journal (6/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Chicago's worst day of violence in at least 60 years shows that cities need police to protect the peace.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "The Democrats...unveiled police reform legislation that would make some pretty big changes. ... And one of the biggest measures this legislation proposes is making it easier to prosecute police who use excessive force. As opposed to now, wherein it is almost impossible to convict a police officer. You need to catch them on video, then have a DA that's willing to prosecute them, then have a jury that actually wants to hold cops accountable. And even if you get all that, you still need to find the cop's horcrux and destroy it."

Trevor Noah: "I always find it amazing how Trump manages to always see the good in the groups that he likes. He says that the police are 99 percent great, great people. Charlottesville, he said there people who were good on both sides. He said the armed protesters in Michigan, the same people who stormed the state house, were very good people who were just frustrated. Clearly, if you're on Trump's good side, he will find a way to interpret anything you do in the best way possible. Like, if Trump likes you, he could walk in on you in bed with his wife, and he'd be like, 'My wife and my best friend taking a nap together! Good people!'"

Trevor Noah: "Trump is so desperate to defend the police that instead of admitting that maybe they used excessive force and that none of them helped a person who was bleeding out on the ground, he turns around and blames the old man from that video for being an Antifa provocateur who busted his head open on purpose. ... I mean, how do you look at that video, see an old man, and think that he's an Antifa provocateur? ... Who sees that? I feel like Trump is the kind of person who watched the movie 'Up' and he thinks it's about an elderly activist who hijacked a balloon house."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President is excited that things are opening up. Buoyed by what he claims is 'big demand,' Trump could be back on the rally trail as early as next week, to bask in the glow of his fans, coronavirus be damned. ... All he wants is the roar of the crowd. Maybe instead of running for a second term, we should book him a yearlong run at Madison Square Garden like Billy Joel."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President is said to be so upset about recent polls that show him losing bigly to Joe Biden that he hired a consulting firm to challenge the results of those polls. And that's a bad sign. You think he won't contest the election if he loses? He won't even accept a meaningless poll! They are going to have to drag him out of the White House by his heels."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This was a text from the Trump campaign. It said, 'President Trump set aside a limited edition Trump coloring book just for you, friend!' ... This is all real. The official Trump coloring book. Featuring our super President. Doing super stuff. Truth is his kryptonite."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Each image of our nation's 45th President is single sided, 'allowing you to remove and proudly display your art piece around your home or workplace.' Could you imagine coloring this in and hanging it? At that point, you just hang yourself."

Jimmy Kimmel: "They even included a page for Mike Pence. Who, unfortunately, was too white to be outlined."

Stephen Colbert: "According to polls, two in three Americans say the killing of Floyd represents a broader problem within law enforcement. The third American couldn't be reached because she was busy calling the police on a black bird watcher."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, another poll found that 53 percent of registered voters now say they support Black Lives Matter, up from 42 percent a few weeks ago. So, just over half of Americans voters believe black people have the right to live."

Stephen Colbert: "Defunding the police might sound a little scary to some people. Like CBS. They'd have to change their entire primetime lineup. ... 'NCIS' would stand for 'No Cops! Instead, Soup!' It would still have a lot of murder in it, but there's also a lot of bisques and chowders."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, this protest movement is really popular. But what has taken a hit in popularity are monuments to America's racist history, like Confederate statues and Donald Trump. Trump's latest approval rating is just 38 percent. ... These polls are a tough reality, and like all reality, Trump is denying it."

Stephen Colbert: "The President is looking where to aim his blame, and he's considering White House senior adviser...Jared Kushner. ... If Trump's looking for someone to blame, he should check out his reflection in the riot shields, because that new poll also says that 61% disapprove of his handling of the protests. That's not fair. He's handling them just as well as he handles a bible."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump is desperate to turn this thing around, so desperate that the White House is considering a Trump speech to the nation on race and unity. Yes, they're considering it. Yes, considering! A heroic contemplation of the possibility of leadership. It reminds me of Dr. King's immortal words: 'I'm thinking about having a dream.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump wants to improve his numbers by getting his campaign team from 2016 back together. Trump was like, 'We can do it. They're all out of prison now.'"

James Corden: "The recent protests have had far-reaching effects from raising money to help fight inequality to reforming the criminal justice system, and they've finally had a monumental impact on the President himself. Victor Willis, one of the original members of the Village People, told Donald Trump...that, in light of his response to the protests, the Village People will no longer allow Trump to use the songs, 'YMCA' or 'Macho Man' at his rallies. ... It's finally happened. The cops have turned on Trump. And the construction workers, and the cowboys, and the leather daddies."

Seth Meyers: "A New York woman was arrested recently after she allegedly handed out baby raccoons outside a convenience store. In her defense, Trump had just suggested them as a coronavirus cure."

Senate Passes Fixes To Small Business Loan Program, Overcoming Republican Resistance.

The Washington Post (6/3, Werner, 14.2M) reports that the Senate on Wednesday approved legislation "to provide more flexibility to small businesses that have received forgivable loans under the Paycheck Protection Program, giving them more time to use the money just ahead of a deadline to forgive the first round of payments." The Treasury Department "initially established that 75 percent of the loan had to be spent on payroll for the money to be fully forgiven," but the bill "changed that figure to 60 percent." The bill will also "allow businesses 24 weeks – instead of eight – to spend money they receive...and have the loans forgiven." The measure "passed by unanimous consent and now goes to President Trump's desk, following House passage of the bill last week. The White House has not said whether Trump will sign the bill, but the president has indicated support for the goals of the legislation."

Politico (6/3, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports that the bill "would relax rules under the $670 billion Paycheck Protection Program to give borrowers more time to spend the money and use it on a broader set of expenses while still qualifying to have the loans forgiven – a key feature offered in exchange for employers maintaining payrolls." Additionally, Politico says Sens. Marco Rubio (R-FL) and Ben Cardin (D-MD) "on Wednesday sent a letter to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Small Business Administration Administrator Jovita Carranza urging them to disclose more information on loans issued under the Paycheck Protection Program, including the names of borrowers." Rubio and Cardin wrote, "Given the grave nature of this crisis and the unprecedented level of funding that has been appropriated, it is critical that the public and Congress have timely and complete information about where these funds are going, and the committee expects an increased level of transparency and accountability from the SBA."

The Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (6/3, Wire, 4.64M) reports that earlier Wednesday, the US Chamber of Commerce "urged the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee – tasked with overseeing trillions of taxpayer dollars provided by Congress to prop up the economy – to push for more clarity and consistency in the program." Chamber officials "pointed out that the Treasury Department has changed the rules and guidance governing the loans repeatedly during in the past eight weeks." Chamber Chief Policy Officer Neil Bradley said, "Businesses, individuals and state and local governments should be held to account for complying with the rules and guidance as they existed at the time of their action, not as subsequently modified."

Majority Of COVID-19 Relief Funding Has Been Distributed, Data Indicate.

The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Davidson, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports about two months after Congress approved the largest economic relief package in US history in an effort to mitigate the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, most of that funding has been distributed. Data indicate about $1.11 trillion out of a total of $1.6 trillion has been allocated.

CNBC (6/3, Cox, 3.62M) reports the Treasury Department said Wednesday that Americans have received over $267 billion in stimulus payments as part of an effort to weather the COVID-19 crisis. Treasury "said 159 million Economic Impact Payments have been made in the two months since Congress appropriated the money. The funds were sent to all Americans for whom the IRS has the relevant information." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said, "These payments are an integral part of our commitment to providing much-needed relief to the American people during this unprecedented time." Although the Treasury Department "touted the aggressive effort to get the payments out, it noted that there are still those who haven't received benefits to which they are entitled. That group is primarily made up of those who haven't filed a tax return in the past two days. The department said those individuals can submit their information to the IRS and receive payments." CBS News (6/3, Picchi, 3.68M) also reports.

Mnuchin, Neal To Negotiate Additional COVID-19 Relief Bill, Potential Infrastructure Inclusion.

Law360 (6/4, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and House Ways and Means Committee Chair Richard Neal (D-MA) "will meet this week to continue negotiations on another round of coronavirus relief legislation that could include major infrastructure spending, Neal said Wednesday." Neal also "said he would lay out Democrats' plans to pursue a major infrastructure spending package and would hope to reach an accord with the Trump administration. He said he conferred with House Democratic leaders to determine what infrastructure policies should be pitched to the White House, but it remains unclear whether Mnuchin will want to include an infrastructure plan in the next coronavirus legislation." Neal said in a webinar, "I intend to raise the outline on Friday with him of what we intend to do; whether or not they want to include that in the next round of negotiations...or whether they want to do it separately, we intend to press forward on that legislation."

Treasury Tells Judge Tribes Submitted Wrong Data, Causing COVID-19 Funding Delay.

Law360 (6/3, Westney, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Department "expects to take an additional week past its planned date to begin sending $3.2 billion in COVID-19-related funding to tribal governments, telling a D.C. federal judge Wednesday it needs the extra time because hundreds of tribes have not submitted the right data to receive the much-delayed money." A government attorney, Jason

C. Lynch, "representing Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said during a teleconference that the department won't be able to meet its anticipated June 5 date to deliver the funds, and now plans on June 12 to start to distribute the remaining $3.2 billion of $8 billion in direct tribal government funding provided by the CARES Act." Lynch "told U.S. District Judge Amit P. Mehta that 'several hundred submissions' from tribes were incomplete, and that any tribe that fails to fix those problems by Saturday 'does risk not getting any data-based payment from the remaining 40 percent tranche' of the $8 billion in funding."

Senate Dems Unload On OMB Nominee.

CQ Roll Call (6/3, Krawzak, 154K) reports Senate Budget Committee Democrats "denounced the nomination of Russell Vought to be director of the Office of Management and Budget at a hearing Wednesday, with their primary focus on what they say was an illegal withholding of foreign aid to Ukraine." Sen. Patty Murray (D-WA) "accused Vought of not being involved in the negotiations between the White House and Congress over pandemic aid legislation." Murray said Vought "is nowhere to be found. How can that be?" Vought "told Murray he has a 'great relationship' with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, the White House point man in the talks, and that they 'talk multiple times a day and he and I are constantly working together on these issues.'" Vought also "said his door is always open 'to build a closer relationship with you and other members of this committee.'"

Treasury Told Tax Regulations Should Better Reflect Multinational Companies' Business Models.

Behind a payroll, Law360 (6/3, Olivo, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Department's "proposed regulations for determining income sources from inventory property sales should better reflect multinationals' business models, which often involve U.S. personnel managing offshore production activities."

Trump Reportedly Angry With Esper Over Perceived Break On Use Of Military Against Protesters.

Comments by Defense Secretary Esper distancing himself from the use of active-duty troops to quash demonstrations receive wide coverage, with most reports saying President Trump is reportedly angry with Esper about the perceived break with the President's stance. Several outlets speculate that the President could dismiss his second Pentagon chief. Meanwhile, Esper's predecessor James Mattis issued a rare and forceful condemnation of the President, leading Trump to tweet that he "had the honor of firing Jim Mattis, the world's most overrated General."

On ABC World News Tonight (6/3, story 3, 3:25, Muir, 7.94M), Jonathan Karl called it "a significant break between the President and his Defense Secretary over the issue of deploying active duty troops to crack down on violent protests in American cities. The President had threatened to do just that earlier this week. ... The Defense Secretary flatly said today he opposes that." Esper: "The option to use active duty forces in a law enforcement role should only be used as a matter of last resort and only in the most urgent and dire of situations. We are not in one of those situations now. I do not support invoking the Insurrection Act." Karl: "Esper's words were not welcomed today at the White House." On NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 4, 2:50, 6.86M), Lester Holt similarly called Esper's remarks a "remarkable voice of dissent...within the Trump Administration."

Norah O'Donnell reported on the CBS Evening News (6/3, story 3, 2:40, 4.98M) that there are "questions how long Mark Esper will remain as Secretary of Defense after he broke with President Trump on using active duty military in American cities." CBS' Paula Reid: "Esper's decision to publicly disagree with President Trump over the use of active-duty military did not go over inside the White House."

The AP (6/3, Miller, Lemire, Balsamo, Laporta) reports Esper "declared on Wednesday he opposes using military troops for law enforcement in containing current street protests, tamping down threats" from the President. The AP adds, "Less than 48 hours after the president threatened to use the Insurrection Act to contain protests if governors were not able to get a handle on unrest, Esper said the 1807 law should be invoked in the United States 'only in the most urgent and dire of situations.'" and added, "We are not in one of those situations now." USA Today (6/3, Cummings, 10.31M) calls Esper's remarks "a break with [Trump], who threatened to deploy federal troops to 'dominate the streets.'"

Reuters (6/3) reports White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said Esper "was still in his post on Wednesday as speculation swirled" that the President "wanted to remove the Pentagon chief over his comments on nationwide protests." McEnany said at a news briefing, "As of right now, Secretary Esper is still Secretary Esper, and should the President lose faith we will all learn about that in the future." The Hill (6/3, Kheel, 2.98M) reports McEnany "sidestepped questions" on whether the President "still has confidence" in Esper after he "publicly broke with Trump on using active-duty troops to quell nationwide protests."

The New York Times (6/3, Schmitt, Cooper, Gibbons-Neff, Haberman, 18.61M) reports Trump "was angered by Mr. Esper's remarks, and excoriated him later at the White House, an administration official said." CQ Roll Call (6/3, Donnelly, 154K) says Esper's "implicit rebuke" of the President "may have landed Esper in hot water and is revealing splits within GOP ranks on the question. ... A handful of Republicans have come out in support of Esper's position and in opposition to Trump's, while many have remained silent on the thorny question. Esper's division with the commander in chief on the issue has fueled speculation – and numerous media reports – that the secretary may not be long for this administration.”

Bloomberg (6/3, 4.73M) reports that Esper’s “remarks generated pushback at the White House, where three Trump aides who asked not to be identified said the secretary should have moderated his comments to draw less of a distinction with the president.” Citing “an aide and two people close to the discussions,” Politico (6/3, Seligman, 4.29M) also reports that White House officials are “unhappy with Esper’s comments to reporters,” although, according to Politico, Esper “did not specifically contradict the president, who threatened on Monday to deploy the active-duty military in the future if state and local officials did not quell the protests.” Breitbart (6/3, 673K) reports Esper also “paid his condolences to George Floyd’s family and said that he and members of the military swore an oath to protect freedom of speech.”

Axios (6/3, 521K) reports “multiple sources close to the president [said] that they were perplexed by comments Esper made to NBC News Tuesday night and wondered what Esper was trying to achieve. The combination of that interview plus Wednesday’s press conference – in which he undercut the president – has the secretary of defense in precarious standing with the White House.” McClatchy (6/3, 19K) similarly says Esper’s “public disapproval of the use of military troops against protesters in the nation’s capital caught the White House by surprise, angered the president and frustrated top aides hoping to move on from Monday’s clash in Lafayette Square, according to two senior administration officials.”

The Washington Post (6/3, Lamothe, Ryan, 14.2M) reports the Pentagon “has brought active-duty units, including an infantry battalion from the Army’s Immediate Response Force, to the Washington, D.C., area to remain on standby, and pulled in other states’ National Guard forces to assist in the nation’s capital.” The Daily Caller (6/3, 716K) says “multiple reports...claim that Trump is privately backing away from the idea of full military mobilization, as the increased National Guard and law enforcement presence in Washington, D.C. has seemed to slowly stem violence distracting from the protests.”

However, the AP (6/3, Baldor) reports that “in an abrupt reversal,” Esper on Wednesday “overturned an earlier Pentagon decision to send a couple hundred active-duty soldiers home from the Washington, D.C., region.” Army Secretary McCarthy told the AP that the reversal “came after Esper attended a meeting at the White House, and after other internal Pentagon discussions.” On NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 4, 2:50, 6.86M), Geoff Bennett reported, “In an abrupt reversal today, Esper overturned an earlier Pentagon decision to send home hundreds of active-duty soldiers who had been rushed to bases around Washington, DC with a military show of force already on full display in the nation’s capital.” The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Youssef, Lubold, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that even without federal forced on hand, downtown Washington has appeared militarized throughout the week.

Jonathan Stevenson of the International Institute for Strategic Studies writes in the New York Times (6/3, 18.61M) that as Esper “asserted on Wednesday, the military must remain an apolitical institution. If Mr. Trump does decide to use the military for political intimidation, it will fall to the military itself to show restraint, even if it means disobeying orders. ... We may be close to the moment at which active-duty service members need to consider disciplined disobedience.”

Pentagon In Talks With House Armed Services Committee About Esper, Milley Testimony. Axios (6/3, Treene, 521K) reports “the Pentagon is in talks with the House Armed Services Committee to arrange for” Esper and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Mark Milley “to testify next week about President Trump’s threats to federalize forces to respond to protests across America. ... ‘The department has acknowledged the request, but details are still to be determined, including the date,’ a source with familiar with the conversations tells Axios.”

Mattis Denounces Trump As Deliberately Dividing Americans. The Atlantic (6/3, Goldberg, 3.47M) reports ex-Defense Secretary James Mattis, who has “kept studiously silent about Trump’s performance as president” since resigning in protest in December 2018, “has now broken his silence, writing an extraordinary broadside in which he denounces the president for dividing the nation, and accuses him of ordering the U.S. military to violate the constitutional rights of American citizens.” In a lengthy written statement, Mattis wrote, “I have watched this week’s unfolding events, angry and appalled. ... Donald Trump is the first president in my lifetime who does not try to unite the American people – does not even pretend to try. Instead, he tries to divide us. We are witnessing the consequences of three years of this deliberate effort. We are witnessing the consequences of three years without mature leadership.”

O’Donnell said on the CBS Evening News (6/3, story 3, 2:40, 4.98M) that Mattis “is turning on the President, accusing him of misusing military and dividing the country.” The Washington Post (6/3, Lamothe, 14.2M) calls the statement “an extraordinary shift for Mattis, a retired Marine general who said he felt it was his duty to stay out of politics after resigning. ... He has broadly been criticized for it, in light of his service in the Trump administration and knowledge of the president. But recent unrest in the country, and Trump’s response to it, changed the dynamics.”

The New York Times (6/3, Schmitt, Cooper, Gibbons-Neff, Haberman, 18.61M) reports Trump “responded late Wednesday on Twitter to Mr. Mattis’s rebuke, saying that he had had ‘the honor of firing’ Mr. Mattis. In reality,” Mattis “resigned in protest...over Mr. Trump’s decision to withdraw American troops from eastern Syria.”

On ABC World News Tonight (6/3, story 4, 2:35, 7.94M), David Muir reported that in addition to the “scathing words” from Mattis, “other military leaders, in a rare move, [are] speaking out, too.” ABC shared comments from ex-JCS Chairs Gen. Mark Dempsey and Adm. Mike Mullen, and showed Navy Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Michael Gilday saying, “I will never know what it feels like when you watch that video of Mr. Floyd’s murder. And I can’t imagine the pain and the disappointment and the anger that many of you felt when you saw that.”

Cotton Calls For “An Overwhelming Show Of Force.” Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) writes in the New York Times (6/3, 18.61M), “One thing above all else will restore order to our streets: an overwhelming show of force to disperse, detain and ultimately deter lawbreakers. ... The pace of looting and disorder may fluctuate from night to night, but it’s past time to support local law enforcement with federal authority.

Some governors have mobilized the National Guard, yet others refuse. ... In these circumstances, the Insurrection Act authorizes the president to employ the military 'or any other means' in 'cases of insurrection, or obstruction to the laws.'"

Axios (6/3, Perano, 521K) reports Times employees on Wednesday "posted en masse on social media saying that the editorial board's decision" to run the Cotton op-ed "put black Times' staff members in danger. ... The Times' staff social media posts appeared to be a coordinated effort, publishing simultaneously and including variations of the line: 'running this puts Black @nytimes staff in danger' alongside a photo of Cotton's headline."

Rushdie Warns Dictatorship Can Come To America. In a Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) op-ed, novelist Salman Rushdie writes, "In my life, I have seen several dictators rise and fall. ... Extreme narcissism, detachment from reality, a fondness for sycophants and a distrust of truth-tellers, an obsession with how one is publicly portrayed, a hatred of journalists and the temperament of an out-of-control bulldozer: These are some of the characteristics. President Trump is, temperamentally, a tinpot despot of this type. But he finds himself in charge of a country that has historically thought of itself – by no means always correctly – as being on the side of liberty. ... Beware, America. Don't believe that it can't happen here."

Trump: Economy Is In "Early Stages" Of Recovery And "Next Year Will Be One Of The Best Ever."

On Twitter, President Trump on Wednesday posted, "I feel more and more confident that our economy is in the early stages of coming back very strong. Not everyone agrees with me, but I have little doubt. Watch for September, October, November. Next year will be one of the best ever, and look at the Stock Market NOW!"

ADP Finds Far Fewer Were Laid Off In May Than Forecast.

Reuters (6/3, Mutikani) says that according to the ADP National Employment Report, "US private payrolls fell less than expected in May, suggesting layoffs were abating as businesses reopen." The ADP report "showed private employers laid off another 2.76 million workers last month after a record 19.557 million in April." Reuters adds that "economists polled by Reuters had forecast private payrolls dropping by 9 million in May."

The AP (6/3, Rugaber) cautions, however, that "the epic damage to America's job market from the viral outbreak will come into sharper focus Friday when the government releases the May employment report: Eight million more jobs are estimated to have been lost. Unemployment could near 20%. And potentially fewer than half of all adults may be working." Moreover, "economists foresee unemployment remaining in double-digits through the November elections and into 2021."

Analysts: State Revenue Could Start To See Recovery In Q3.

Reuters (6/3, Pierog) reports, "US state tax revenue, which plunged due to the economic fallout from the coronavirus pandemic, could start to slowly recover this summer as long as the outbreak does not undergo a resurgence, analysts said." Said Sarah Crane, a Moody's Analytics economist, "We definitely expect the second quarter (of 2020) to be the worst and that things will start to increase in the third quarter slowly." Lucy Dadayan, "who tracks state tax revenue at the Urban Institute," is also quoted as saying, "June is going to be bad and starting with July, if the pandemic doesn't get any worse, then we will slowly see some improvement."

Comer: Enhanced Unemployment Benefits Sideline Workers, Hurting Economic Recovery.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Rep. James Comer (R-KY) writes that the increase in unemployment benefits at the peak of the pandemic was an emergency measure, but now, unintended consequences of the unemployment payments threatens to stall the economic recovery. The extra benefits are keeping workers sidelined when businesses need workers to return to their jobs as they reopen, Comer says. He opposes Democratic efforts to extend the benefits, and argues the payments should be allowed to expire July 31.

Chao: DOT Is Not Inclined To Impose Safety Rules On Airlines.

Politico (6/3, Mintz, 4.29M) reports that Transportation Secretary Chao "said Wednesday that airlines and their employees should determine how to protect workers and passengers" against COVID-19, "underscoring the Trump administration's decision not to mandate masks or social distancing on planes." According to Politico, "Despite calls for a mandate from unions and congressional Democrats," Chao said COVID-19 protections "are more 'labor management' issues than anything else and that airlines have been able to figure out the best solutions by talking to their employees." Chao is quoted as saying, "When the federal government gets involved, we tend to be much more heavy handed."

NBA Expected To Approve Restart Of Season.

ESPN (6/3, Wojnarowski, 14.75M) reports the National Basketball Association Board of Governors "intends to approve a league proposal on a 22-team format to restart the season in Orlando, Florida" in a vote Thursday. Commissioner Adam Silver "and the league's advisory/finance committee have shared the broad details of a plan with teams to play at the Walt Disney World Resort, sources said."

AMC Theater Chain Warns It Has “Substantial Doubt” Of Surviving Fallout From Pandemic.

USA Today (6/3, Bomey, 10.31M) reports that movie theater chain AMC “warned Wednesday that it may not survive the fallout from the coronavirus pandemic.” AMC “issued the warning in a public filing, saying that that crisis has significantly undermined its finances and introduced profound uncertainty about its future.” The statement constituted a “going concern” warning that is “typically required of publicly traded companies that are facing dire circumstances that jeopardize their business, though many live on.”

Chicken Industry Executives Indicted For Price-Fixing.

The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Kendall, Bunge, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the CEO of Pilgrim’s Pride, one of the country’s biggest chicken producers, and three other industry executives were indicted Wednesday on charges of price fixing. A grand jury indicted current and former senior executives at Pilgrim’s Pride and Claxton Poultry Farms on a count of conspiring to fix prices from 2012 to 2017.

Former UAW President Pleads Guilty To Embezzlement.

The New York Times (6/3, Boudette, 18.61M) reports, “The former president of the United Auto Workers Union, Gary Jones, on Wednesday pleaded guilty to embezzling union funds, becoming the highest-ranking union official to admit wrongdoing in a wide-ranging federal investigation that has involved more than a dozen senior union officials and at least three executives from Fiat Chrysler.” Under a cooperation agreement, Jones “acknowledged using more than $1 million in union funds for vacation rentals, golf outings, clothing, liquor and expensive meals.” Jones is “scheduled to be sentenced Oct. 3. Federal guidelines call for a prison sentence of 47 to 56 months.” The US attorney’s office in Detroit has “agreed to seek a lesser sentence if Mr. Jones cooperates fully, said David Gardey, chief of the office’s public corruption unit.”

WSJournal: Study Shows Welfare Benefits Can Lock People Into Poverty.

The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that a study published by the National Bureau of Economic Research shows how welfare benefits distort the incentive to work, making it more difficult for people to climb out of poverty. Researchers found that under the US system, with its multitude of tax and benefit programs, the poor can face a lifetime marginal net tax rate exceeding 70 percent.

Trump Blasts Media’s Portrayal Of Protesters, His Coronavirus Response.

In a pair of tweets and a radio interview Wednesday morning, President Trump lashed out at the media for its portrayal of protesters and for his Administration’s response to the coronavirus pandemic. Early Wednesday, Trump tweeted, “Really sick to watch the Fake and totally Slanted News(?) coming out of MSDNC and CNN. It bears NO relationship to the Truth or Facts. They are merely offshoots of the DNC, much like the @nytimes and the Amazon @washingtonpost. Just like 2016, but worse. Sad, but we will win big!”

Later in the morning he tweeted, “If you watch Fake News @CNN or MSDNC, you would think that the killers, terrorists, arsonists, anarchists, thugs, hoodlums, looters, ANTIFA & others, would be the nicest, kindest most wonderful people in the Whole Wide World. No, they are what they are – very bad for our Country!”

In an interview with the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3) Wednesday, Trump said that “the fake news makes everything look bad. No matter what you do – like we did a great job on ventilators. We’re giving them now to countries all over the world – we’re making them. When I started, we had practically none. The cupboards were bare. The Obama Administration left us practically nothing. You don’t hear those stories; they don’t write about that. We tested number 16 million yesterday. Much more than anybody else. You don’t hear that we’ve done well in testing. ... So we’ve done a great job, but we don’t get credit for it. But hopefully the people understand.”

WPost: Some Americans, But Not Trump, Are Showing Leadership. The Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) in an editorial cites examples of what it called “the best of America” in which “people who were angry and scared have acted with peace and compassion, defusing situations by protecting and embracing – sometimes literally – those whom others in their position might have feared.” The Post adds, “Today, we don’t have a president capable of such leadership. But other Americans, both famous and unknown, are stepping up and modeling an honorable way to fight for justice.”

Trump Says Most Religious Leaders “Loved” His Visit To St. John’s Church.

Fox News (6/3, Musto, 27.59M) reports on its website that in an interview with the Brian Kilmeade Show Wednesday, President Trump “pushed back on criticism of his walk Monday to the historic St. John’s Episcopal Church.” Asked about religious leaders’ criticism of the visit, Trump said, “Well, my response is simple: most religious leaders loved it.” Fox says Trump “cit[ed] positive reactions from Franklin Graham and Robert Jeffress.” He added, “And, it’s on the other side that didn’t like it. You know, the opposition party, as the expression goes. They burned down the church the day before. I heard how nice and wonderful the protesters were over there. Really? Then why did they burn down the church the day before?”

The Daily Beast (6/3, 1.39M) reports that during a Newsmax interview with Sean Spicer, the President said he visited the church “because ‘somebody suggested it was a good idea’ before insisting that ‘everything was handled really well’ and that ‘religious leaders loved it.’ When Spicer asked him if he’s “grown in his faith” during his time in office, the president said, ‘So I think maybe I have, from the standpoint that I see so much that I can do. I've done so much for religion.”

Axios (6/3, Allassan, 521K) reports White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany also “defended” Trump’s visit to the church on Wednesday. McEnany compared the visit “to Winston Churchill inspecting bombing damage during World War II and George W. Bush throwing out the first pitch after 9/11.” She “called the display a ‘message of resilience and determination,’ and said it was important for Trump to make the visit because rioters had set a fire in the basement of the historic church the night before.” The Hill (6/3, Chalfant, 2.98M) quotes McEnany as saying, “Through all of time, we have seen presidents and leaders across the world who have had leadership moments and very powerful symbols that were important for a nation to see at any given time to show a message of resilience and determination. ... Like Churchill, we saw him inspecting the bombing damage. It sent a powerful message of leadership to the British people.”

McEnany Defends Law Enforcement Officers’ Right To Defend Themselves. Townhall (6/3, Pavlich, 177K) says that during a briefing Wednesday, McEnany “explained to reporters, specifically CNN’s Jim Acosta, that the police and other law enforcement officers have the right to defend themselves. Her comments came after the Trump administration was accused of having ‘peaceful protestors’ tear gassed and physically removed from Lafayette Park on Monday evening.”

Hemingway: Media Claims Tear Gas, Pepper Spray Are Identical. Mollie Hemingway writes in The Federalist (6/3, 126K) that the Park Police “explicitly denied” media reports that it used tear gas to disperse protesters in front of the White House. Hemingway adds that “it was smoke canisters, not tear gas. And pepper balls explained the irritating effect that some protesters reported.” Trump’s campaign “requested corrections for the rampant publishing of false news.” Instead, media outlets “claimed that they were essentially correct.”

Trump: Media Knew Photo Of Hitler With Bible Was Fake And Used It Anyway. Trump retweeted a post from a Twitter user named Robby Starbuck which said a viral photo of Adolf Hitler holding a Bible that has been compared to the photo of Trump holding a Bible in front of St. John’s Church is “totally faked” and “photoshopped” and Twitter would be adding a “manipulated media” label to tweets sharing it. Trump wrote in his tweet, “The knew it was Fake and went with it anyway. Lamestream Media is CORRUPT!”

Trump Says He Only Entered White House Bunker For An “Inspection.”

Fox News (6/3, Musto, 27.59M) reports on its website that in an interview with the Brian Kilmeade Show Wednesday, President Trump “denied that he was taken to an underground White House bunker during tumultuous protests in Washington D.C. this past weekend.” Trump said, “Well, it was a false report. I wasn’t [there]. I went down during the day and I was there for a tiny little short period of time and it was much more for an inspection.” Trump “explained he had only ever visited the bunker two or three times and ‘all for inspection’ because ‘someday [he] may need it.’” Politico (6/3, Forgey, 4.29M) says Trump “also maintained that the Secret Service did not order him to the bunker.” According to Trump the Secret Service “said it would be a good time to go down, take a look, because maybe some time you’re going to need it.”

Bloomberg (6/3, 4.73M) reports that “a person familiar with the matter described the situation differently...saying Trump was moved to a secure area late Friday as a condition ‘red’ was declared at the White House amid violent protests.” Bloomberg adds, “In a condition ‘red,’ nobody is allowed in or out of the White House complex, staff are directed to minimize movements inside and enhanced protections are put in place for the president’s family.” The Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) provides similar coverage.

Trump: Cities Having Problems With Protesters “Are Not Run By Republicans.”

President Trump said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3), “You notice that all of these places that have problems are not run by Republicans, they’re run by liberal Democrats. So, there is something into that philosophy, and yet, they’re also they ones keeping everybody locked up in their apartments and their homes for a long – too long a period of time. So, it’s very interesting how that changes.”

Gidley: If Governors Won’t Protect Their Citizens, Trump Will. White House Deputy Press Secretary Hogan Gidley said on Bloomdaddy (6/3) that the President “stands with those are exercising their First Amendment right to peacefully protest. But, at the same time, what this has devolved into is some kind of lawless hellscape in so many cities across this country.” The President “said, ‘I have seen enough. This is America. This cannot happen. You at the state level have to protect your citizens. That is what the government is set up to do. We at the federal level have the same responsibilities and if you guys aren’t going to do it at the state level, than we are going to step in and help.’ That is what he has decided to do because the American people deserve safety and security. They deserve protection from their government.” Gidley was also interviewed on the Lars Larson Show (6/3).

Likewise, Rep. Michael Waltz (R-FL) said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (6/3, 831K), “I think the President’s message to the governors and mayors is that if you’re not going to do the job, if you’re not going to step up, he will and he will have to. And he does have the authority to federalize the National Guard and then also send in active duty troops.”

Police Have Made More Than 13,500 Protest-Related Arrests. Kris Van Cleave reported on the CBS Evening News (6/3, story 2, 3:10, O’Donnell, 4.98M) that “there have been more than more than 13,500 arrests in 43 cities, all related to protests. Los Angeles, Dallas, and Washington, DC saw spikes in arrests Monday night as police enforced curfews.” ABC World News Tonight (6/3, story 2, 2:30, Muir, 7.94M) reported that Wednesday evening, protesters were “taking to the streets across America for a ninth day, expressing anger but also hope.” On NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 3, 2:50, Holt, 6.86M), Miguel Almaguer said, “Cities across the nation are teetering on the edge of unrest.”

Trump: Anarchists, Looters Delivering Rocks To Be Used During Protests.

President Trump said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3), "You have protesters, but you also have anarchists and looters and a lot of people that are bad. You know, bad people, OK? A lot of bad people. We have a lot of proof and information and proof, you'll be seeing it in time to come, where they're delivering rocks and stones to certain locations and dumping them so they have – that's their ammunition and that hurts people very badly, including National Guard people or even military people."

Federal Officials Investigating Whether "Criminal Actors" Are Coordinating Protest Violence. On its website, Fox News (6/3, Gibson, 27.59M) cites "a senior Department of Justice official" who said that federal law enforcement officials are investigating whether "criminal actors" are coordinating violent activities during protests. The official said the officials are looking into reports that "rocks and bricks" have been placed to throw at police and other law enforcement. The official said, "You see the hallmarks. ... We're trying to see if there's a coordinated command and control, you see those bread crumbs and that's what we're trying to verify." Fox cites "another DOJ official" who "said the feds have seen signs of 'very organized' coordination from 'professional' agitators, some linked to Antifa."

The Washington Times (6/3, A1, Gertz, 492K) reports that according to "a law enforcement official with access to intelligence" about Antifa, activists from the group "began planning to foment a nationwide anti-government insurgency as early as November as the U.S. presidential campaign season kicked off in earnest." While the official "would not speak on the record on Antifa's plans as the U.S. election season heats up...longtime analysts of the group say such a move would be entirely in character."

DHS Analysis: Looting And Violence Driven By Opportunists, As Well As Antifa. Reuters (6/3, Hesson, Hosenball, Rosenberg, Heath) reports that although President Trump "has blamed leftwing extremist groups for instigating nights of looting and violence in cities across the United States...an intelligence assessment offers limited evidence that organized extremists are behind the turmoil." In a "June 1 internal intelligence assessment of the protests," DHS officials "said most of the violence appears to have been driven by opportunists." Reuters adds that the assessment "said there was some evidence based on open-source and DHS reporting that the anti-fascist movement Antifa may be contributing to the violence, a view shared by some local police departments."

Barr Orders DOJ Agencies To Help Local Authorities "Dominate" The Streets.

The Washington Post (6/3, A1, Barrett, 14.2M) reports on a "broad push" by the Justice Department "to boost investigations and prosecutions of violence and vandalism surrounding national protests over police misconduct." Attorney General Barr is pushing "to seek tougher sentences for those who have sown violence after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody." Barr "has vowed to use federal force to help local authorities 'dominate' the streets, and he has ordered Justice Department agencies to aid in those efforts."

The New York Post (6/3, Feuerherd, 4.57M) reports that Barr "ordered the deployment of special tactical units from the federal Bureau of Prisons to respond to protests in Washington, DC, and Miami, an agency spokesperson said." BOP spokesperson Scott Taylor said in a statement that the units "are highly trained tactical units capable of responding to prison disturbances, and providing assistance to other law enforcement agencies during emergencies." The Post says the units "include disturbance control teams, which are trained to deal with crowd control."

DC Mayor Criticizes Administration Response To Demonstrations.

The Washington Post (6/3, Natanson, Olivo, Tan, Jackman, 14.2M) reports District of Columbia Mayor Muriel Bowser (D) "pushed back against the Trump administration's response" to demonstrations in the city. The Post says DC police "weren't even sure how many federal agencies were patrolling city streets." Bowser said at a news conference, "We should all be concerned about who is giving the orders." The Post adds that Wednesday morning, "after a night in which there were no clashes at Lafayette Square and 19 arrests citywide, mostly for violating the curfew, Bowser shifted the curfew from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m."

The New York Times (6/3, Leibovich, 18.61M) reports that the city "has been on edge, hovered over by low-flying helicopters and patrolled by law enforcement agents from a stew of federal agencies – the F.B.I., the Defense Department, the Department of Homeland Security, Customs and Border Protection, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, the Bureau of Prisons and more – dressed in an assortment of uniforms, riot gear and military fatigues."

In an analysis, the Washington Post (6/3, Kennicott, 14.2M) is highly critical of a "photograph of members of the District's National Guard on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial," which "began racing around Twitter and other social media Tuesday." In the photo, troops can be seen "standing resolutely, perhaps provocatively, on the memorial's wide and inviting steps, as if they owned it. To many, it symbolized the militarization of Washington, of our government and country, and the terrifying dissolution of old boundaries between partisan politics and the independent, professional military." While a spokesman for the DC National Guard said the troops were called in to protect the memorial after it had been damaged over the weekend, the Post says it "was a chilling image nonetheless, and it speaks to the difficult position the military is now in, and how carefully it must think about the nuance and optics of its behavior."

Trump Says He's Done More For African Americans In 3 1/2 Years Than Biden Did In 43 Years.

In a tweet Wednesday morning, President Trump wrote, "In 3 1/2 years, I've done much more for our Black population than Joe Biden has done in 43 years. Actually, he set them back big time with his Crime Bill, which he doesn't even remember. I've done more for Black Americans, in fact, than any President in U.S. history, with the possible exception of another Republican President, the late, great, Abraham Lincoln...and it's not even close. The Democrats know this, and so does the Fake News, but they refuse to write or say it because they are inherently corrupt!" Trump's tweet also referred to a tweet he posted Tuesday, which said, "My Admin has done more for the Black Community than any President since Abraham Lincoln. Passed Opportunity Zones with @SenatorTimScott, guaranteed funding for HBCU's, School Choice, passed Criminal Justice Reform, lowest Black unemployment, poverty, and crime rates in history. ... AND THE BEST IS YET TO COME!"

In an interview with the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3) Wednesday, Trump said, "As a Republican I'm doing very well with African-Americans...in polls and everything – especially I mean I haven't seen one very recently because you had the plague come in from China. So, that changed things up, but we had the best economy ever. We had the best numbers for African-American on employment and unemployment in history. Best homeownership – best everything. We had the best numbers in everything – not only African-American, but the African-American numbers were great."

HUD Secretary Carson was asked on Fox News' Bill Hemmer Reports about discussions of a "listening tour" of African-American communities. Carson said, "We're looking at the various possibilities, what is the best way to take advantage of this situation, start a national dialogue. ... Here's the thing. Our nation is very strong. The underlying economic fundamentals are strong. We'll get back on the right track again." Carson was also interviewed on NPR's Here and Now (6/3).

Transportation Secretary Chao said in an interview with Politico Playbook (6/3, 4.31M), "What we need to do is to come together as a people, have legitimate dialogues about racial differences and more than anything else, we need to get back to normalcy. We need to restore the economic vitality of this country and of this economy because under the vitality of this economy which existed prior to the pandemic...African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, Asian-Americans were actually seeing the best economic times within recent memory."

WPost Analysis: Trump Seeking To Dispel Americans' Belief That He Is Racist. A Washington Post (6/3, Scott, 14.2M) analysis says that whether Trump is reelected or not, "what is happening now will be a definitive part of his legacy." Trump "risks cementing a status among the most racially divisive presidents in American history – and at the top of that list in recent history." The Post says that "as a result," Trump "has sought to argue he's done a lot for black Americans, as a way to dispel a belief held by the majority of Americans: The president of the United States is racist."

WPost Analysis: Biden Shifts Toward Transformative Agenda After Campaigning As Pragmatist.

The Washington Post (6/3, A1, Viser, 14.2M) says Joe Biden "has begun to sketch out a dramatically different sort of presidency than the one he had envisioned when he secured the nomination two months ago. The turmoil across the country, punctuated this week with authorities' use of force against peaceful protesters near the White House, has caused a rethinking for a candidate who once promised donors that under his administration 'nothing would fundamentally change'" and who campaigned as a pragmatic alternative to Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT). Biden is now previewing "a transformational era in which government would play a bigger role in curing the country's public health, economic and racial woes," with Franklin Roosevelt as a model.

Biden Plans To Attend Floyd's Funeral. The Texas Tribune (6/3, Ferman, Svitek, 23K) reports Biden "plans to attend the funeral for George Floyd in Houston next week," according to Floyd family attorney Ben Crump.

Trump Says Biden "Didn't Do A Thing" On Race While In Power. President Trump said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3), "A guy like Sleepy Joe Biden was in there for 43 years, and he says, 'I think we should do this' – I saw [Wednesday] he took his mask off for the first time in a while, I haven't seen his face for a long time – and he said, 'I think we should do this, or I think we should do that.' ... I said, he's been there for 43 years, he was vice president for eight years, he didn't do a thing. His crime bill was a disaster. ... What he did with Clarence Thomas was a disaster, it was a disaster the way he treated Clarence Thomas. A black man, a great justice as it turns out."

Charlamagne Tha God Says Biden Must Redeem "Racist" Legislative Record If Elected. Fox News (6/3, Phillips, 27.59M) reports on its website that radio host Charlamagne tha God on Wednesday criticized Biden's "'racist' legislative record in the Senate, just weeks after the presumptive Democratic nominee made waves on his show by saying 'you ain't black' if you are figuring out whether to vote for him or President Trump." Charlamagne told CNN, "If Barack Obama was JFK, then Joe Biden needs to be Lyndon B. Johnson. You know, he has the opportunity to be as progressive as Lyndon B. Johnson. ... Biden's record in the Senate actually reflects very racist legislation, but he has a chance to correct that by doing right by black people."

The Washington Examiner (6/3, Simonson, 448K) highlights the Police Officer's Bill of Rights, sponsored by Biden in May 1991 "that would have provided greater protections to cops accused of misconduct." The bill "also would have restricted when and how misconduct investigations could take place."

Obama Calls On Mayors To Review Use-Of-Force Policies And Back Reform.

USA Today (6/3, Groppe, King, 10.31M) reports former President Barack Obama, in a livestreamed discussion of police reform Wednesday, "urged every mayor in the country to review use-of-force policies by law enforcement and commit to report on any needed changes." Obama said that most of the needed changes have to take place at the local level. "Obama said his administration compiled a number of reforms from a task force his administration created" following the 2014 killing of Michael Brown in Ferguson, Missouri. Many local officials "supported the report, 'but then there wasn't enough policy,'" Obama said. He continued, "Let's go ahead and start implementing those. We need mayors, county executives, others who are in positions of power to say this is a priority."

The New York Times (6/3, Thrush, 18.61M) reports Obama "said the unrest after [George] Floyd's death was 'unlike anything I have seen in my lifetime' and threw his support behind peaceful protests that could prompt a political 'awakening' to unite the country around racial justice and police reform." Obama, "who has tried to avoid a one-on-one battle with his successor, did not directly address [President] Trump's bellicose comments" since Floyd's death, but instead "expressed optimism that the reform effort could transcend political divisions."

Even so, the AP (6/3, Pace) reports under the headline "Obama Steps Out As Nation Confronts Confluence Of Crises" that the former President "is taking on an increasingly public role as the nation confronts a confluence of historic crises that has exposed deep racial and socioeconomic inequalities in America and reshaped the November election. In doing so, Obama is signaling a willingness to sharply critique his successor...and fill what many Democrats see as a national leadership void."

On NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 2, 2:30, Holt, 6.86M), Peter Alexander reported, "America's first black President directly addressing the families of George Floyd and other African Americans whose deaths have wounded the country...[and] condemning the violence and looting in recent days, urging demonstrators to channel their anger toward making a change. ... While never mentioning President Trump by name, President Obama is drawing a clear contrast between his efforts to build trust between police and communities of color after Michael Brown's killing in Ferguson, Missouri and the current Administration."

Four Living Ex-Presidents Address Floyd Killing. On the CBS Evening News (6/3, story 4, 1:50, O'Donnell, 4.98M), Ed O'Keefe said Obama's comments "follow remarkably frank statements from his predecessors. Former President George W. Bush, whose relationship with black Americans was strained by the federal response to Hurricane Katrina, said he was 'anguished by the brutal suffocation of George Floyd.' Bill Clinton, who enjoyed strong support from African Americans, said, 'No one deserves to die the way Floyd did, and the truth is, if you're white in America, the chances are you won't.' Former President Jimmy Carter said today, 'As a white male of the South, I know all too well the impact of segregation and injustice to African Americans.' In times of crisis, presidents often lean on their predecessors for advice or help raise awareness or charitable support. But in the last three years, President Trump has done very little of that."

The Washington Post (6/3, Rucker, 14.2M) reports, "Four U.S. presidents spoke this week about systemic racism and injustice. They used their platforms to illuminate the humanity in all Americans and to decry the dehumanization of some. And they summoned the nation to confront its failures, make change and come together." A fifth "spoke instead this week about using military force to dominate Americans who are protesting racial injustice. He declared winners and losers among state and city officials trying to safeguard their streets. ... The outlier was President Trump."

Three More Officers Charged In Floyd's Death; Chauvin's Charge Upgraded.

The New York Times (6/3, 18.61M) reports that Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison, announced Wednesday that he has "charged three more former police officers...in the death of George Floyd, and added a higher charge to those already lodged against the former officer who held his knee to Mr. Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes." Thomas Lane, J. Alexander Kueng, and Tou Thao "were charged with aiding and abetting murder." Derek Chauvin, "who was arrested last week, faces an increased charge of second-degree murder." Reuters (6/3, O'Brien) says the new charge against Chauvin "can carry a sentence of up to 40 years, 15 years longer than the maximum sentence for third-degree murder."

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (6/3, Montemayor, Xiong, 1.04M) reports that Ellison said at a news conference, "We strongly believe these developments are in the interest of justice for Mr. Floyd, his family, this community and our state. ... George Floyd mattered. He was loved, his family was important and his life had value," Ellison said. "We will seek justice for him and for you and we will find it." USA Today (6/3, Reyes, 10.31M) and the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Tangel, Belkin, Collins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provide similar coverage.

The AP (6/3) reports that "earlier Wednesday, in a visit to a makeshift shrine at the street corner where Floyd died, his family again called for the arrests of Lane, Kueng and Thao, a demand echoed by their attorney." CNBC (6/3, Higgins, Mangan, 3.62M) reports on its website that Ellison "predicted that the prosecution of the officers could take months, and urged the public to be patient as his office builds cases." CNBC says Ellison cautioned that winning the cases "will not be an easy thing. Winning a conviction will be hard." In the lead story for the CBS Evening News (6/3, lead story, 4:20, O'Donnell, 4.98M), Jeff Pagues said Ellison "warned the public that this is going to be a challenge convicting police officers." However, Alex Perez reported in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (6/3, lead story, 3:45, Muir, 7.94M) that "they say with the evidence they're collecting right now, they feel they have a case. They're building a case where they will be able to get a conviction."

In the lead story for NBC Nightly News (6/3, lead story, 3:15, 6.86M), Lester Holt called the new charges "an answer to the passionate and desperate calls for justice that have echoed across cities large and small for more than a week." Holt added that news of the charges "spark[ed] a new wave of tearful emotion from so many who have marched in George Floyd's name."

Law Enforcement Tactics Reportedly Cause Concern.

NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 5, 2:00, Holt, 6.86M) reported, "There is growing concern about the military-style tactics being adopted by some local law enforcement." NBC's Tom Costello added, "Across the country peaceful protests have too often devolved into standoffs with heavily-armed police using military-style tactics: flashbangs, tear gas, rubber bullets, helicopters, armored vehicles, and 30,000 National Guard troops in 31 states and DC trying to quell the violence." In Tucson, police "remain in their regular beat uniforms and work to deescalate tensions, but when officers faced bricks, bottles and gunfire, the chief says departments must switch to tactical gear." NBC concluded, "A fine line between protection and provocation.”

Poll Shows 69% Of Americans, But Just 36% Of African Americans, Trust Police.

The Washington Free Beacon (6/3, Lehman, 78K) reports an Axios/Ipsos poll conducted May 29 to June 1 found that 69 percent of Americans “say they trust the police even amid nationwide protests over a Minneapolis officer’s killing of an unarmed black man.” Police had the trust of a majority of members of “both parties, all age groups, both genders, and both white and Hispanic respondents, but just 36 percent support among black respondents.”

Law Professors Urge Cities To Take Civilian Complaints About Police Officers Seriously. Kyle Rozema of Washington University School of Law and Max Schanzenbach of Northwestern School of Law write in the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) to offer their suggestions on how to prevent police brutality. According to their research, about 5 percent of police officers in Chicago accounted for one-third of civilian complaints, and these officers were most likely to have large civil judgments against them. They argue that civilian complaints are reliable measures by which officers should be removed from active policing. However, the authors argue that cities fail to take these civilian complaints seriously.

Cuomo Apologizes To NYPD After Criticizing Response To Looting On Monday.

Politico New York (6/3, Anuta and Gronewold) reports, “Wednesday brought a cooling of tensions between protesters and police” and between New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) and the New York City Police Department. Cuomo is reported to have “apologized to NYPD brass privately” following his statement Tuesday that “the police in New York City were not effective at doing their job last night.” USA Today (6/3, Spector, 10.31M) reports, “Cuomo apologized privately to top New York City Police administrators late Tuesday” after having called their response to riots on Monday a “disgrace.”

Healthcare Workers At New York Hospital Kneel For Protesters. ABC World News Tonight (6/3, story 9, 0:55, Muir, 7.94M) reported that “in New York at 7:00 p.m. every night, you hear the cheers from windows for healthcare workers,” but “last night...outside Manhattan’s Lenox Hill hospital, doctors, nurses, healthcare workers...taking a moment to kneel, saying ‘you cheered for us, we kneel for you,’ a message to Americans who want change.”

LAPD Chief Criticized Over Comments About Looters.

The Los Angeles Times (6/3, Winton, Chang, Oreskes, 4.64M) reports that LAPD Chief Michel Moore is “facing a growing political storm over comments he made Monday night – but quickly retracted – about looters.” Moore, speaking during a news conference call with Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti (D) said, “We didn’t have protests last night – we had criminal acts,” and added, “We didn’t have people mourning the death of this man, George Floyd – we had people capitalizing. His death is on their hands as much as it is those officers.” He said “minutes later,” that he “misspoke when I said his blood is on their hands.” State Sen. Holly Mitchell (D) said, “We have every right to be outraged and that our voices deserve to be heard and not hijacked by outside agitators nor by a police chief who infers that our actions can be compared to the murders we have witnessed and experienced.”

Garcetti Promises Cuts To Police To Increase Spending In Black Community. The Los Angeles Times (6/3, Mejia, Pineda, Reyes-Velarde, Wick, 4.64M) reports, “As protests over police brutality and the death of George Floyd stretched into a sixth day, Los Angeles officials said Wednesday that they will look to cut $100 million to $150 million from the city’s police budget” in order to “reinvest more dollars into the black community.” Mayor Eric Garcetti promised to “identify $250 million in cuts so we can invest in jobs, in health, in education and in healing.” Garcetti said the cuts would be found in “every department, including the Police Department, because we all have to be part of this solution together.” Meanwhile, the Times reports that “more than 60 people now face criminal charges in Los Angeles County stemming from their alleged roles in the looting and violent clashes that marred protests this week.”

Protesters In Charlotte Reportedly Surrounded By Police Firing Tear Gas.

The New York Post (6/3, Brown, 4.57M) reports, “A protester in North Carolina was arrested with an AR-style rifle with two 30-round magazines – as cops used ‘chemical agents’ in a shocking confrontation decried by local politicians.” That confrontation is described as “disturbing” as “protesters marching through Charlotte on Tuesday” were “penned in from all sides by riot police as tear gas filled the air around them, with the narrator saying pellets were also being fired from a car park to the side.” Charlotte Mayor Vi Lyles called it “a horrible incident.” State Rep. Chaz Beasley (D) said, “This video shows [police] firing upon peaceful protestors with tear gas, flash bangs, and pepper balls from THREE sides.” In response, Charlotte-Mecklenburg police said that police had been “assaulted with bottles, rocks, and chemical agents” and had allowed “multiple avenues to leave the area.”

Philadelphia Small Businesses Worried They Will Not Reopen After Looting.

The Wall Street Journal (6/3, A1, Calvert, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports from Philadelphia on the effect of looting on small businesses in the 52nd Street corridor – many owned by African Americans, many already economically stressed by the pandemic, and many lacking savings and insurance to cover the loss from looting. They also generally did not benefit from the federal Paycheck Protection Program because they had no employees or for other reasons. Many are concerned they will not be able to reopen for months, if at all.

Milwaukee Protests Reportedly Peaceful During Day, But Become Tense In Evening.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (6/3, Barton, Glauber, 632K) reports, "As demonstrations in Milwaukee against police brutality stretched into a sixth day Wednesday, interactions between police and protesters" have followed the pattern of "peace...during the daylight hours, but by the evening, tensions mount," and some demonstrators "seem determined to ramp up tensions and bait officers into using force."

Northam To Announce Removal Of Lee Statue From Richmond.

The Washington Post (6/3, Schneider, Vozzella, 14.2M) reports that Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) will "announce Thursday that he will remove the statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee from its site on Monument Avenue and put it into storage," according to an unnamed official in Northam's Administration.

African American Professionals Cope With Strife While Trying To Work.

Under the headline "For Black Professionals, Unrest Lays Bare A Balancing Act At Work," the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Chen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) looks at how African Americans in white-collar jobs are coping with the current wave of racial anguish, quoting one who said, "I'm still having to dial in and perform as though nothing is wrong." The Journal says just eight percent of people employed in professional roles are African American.

NBC Examines Ways To Discuss Race With Children.

NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 7, 2:35, Holt, 6.86M) aired a feature on how parents can talk "with their kids about race and dealing with law enforcement."

Protesters Clash With Police Outside British PM's Residence.

NYTimes Analysis: Many Canadians Now See US As "A Crazy, Erratic And Dangerous Stranger."

The New York Times (6/3, Porter, 18.61M) reports, "From their perch above the United States, Canadians have been watching in shock as the country they've long considered their closest friend and protector now seems like a crazy, erratic and dangerous stranger. Most of the country's horror has been focused" on President Trump, with even conservative newspapers criticizing the American President. The Times says Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's "21 uncomfortable, televised seconds" when asked to comment on Trump's "call for military action against American protesters and the tear gassing of peaceful demonstrators to make way for a photo-op" has become a quick symbol among Canadians.

Pope Laments "Sin Of Racism."

USA Today (6/3, Yancey-Bragg, 10.31M) reports, "Pope Francis prayed for George Floyd in his weekly Wednesday audience called his death 'tragic' and racism a 'sin.' ... Francis said he is joining the church in St. Paul and Minneapolis and across the U.S. 'in praying for the repose of the soul of George Floyd and of all those others who have lost their lives as a result of the sin of racism.'"

WPost Blames Trump For Attacks On Press.

The Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) in an editorial says that "increasing numbers of reporters and photographers covering the nationwide demonstrations against police brutality and racial injustice report being arrested, harassed or assaulted by police." The Post comments that such behavior "might have been expected given the relentless campaign President Trump has waged against the media." The Post adds that "governors, mayors and police chiefs need to...hold to account those who violate" the safety of the press.

Attiah: #BlackOutTuesday Failed Due To Confusion.

Karen Attiah writes in her column in the Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) about "#BlackOutTuesday," which, Attiah says, was "intended to let black people rest for the day, to take a break for their mental health's sake, while white and non-black people were supposed to do the work to amplify black voices, share resources, link to organizations, share book recommendations and post books, music, anything by black people." But instead, "thousands of people decided for some reason to just post black squares rather than helpful information or cultural pointers." Attiah advises, "The best course of action is to check in with experienced organizers and activists as to what most aids the cause of social justice.”

Medical Experts Raise Concerns Protests Will Spark Second Pandemic Wave.

On ABC World News Tonight (6/3, story 6, 1:35, Muir, 7.94M), Steve Osunsami reported, “Health authorities have been trying to get the message to the mostly young people marching in the streets, that the coronavirus is marching with them.” Osunsami added, “Experts say that the tear gas and pepper spray make you more susceptible to respiratory disease.”

On the CBS Evening News (6/3, story 7, 1:30, O'Donnell, 4.98M), Carter Evans reported, “At packed protests around the country, thousands shoulder to shoulder, many without masks, exactly what we've been told not to do in this time of COVID.” Evans added, “That concern now highlighted in a new study in The Lancet, which found without a mask the risk of transmitting COVID is more than 17 percent. With a mask it drops to three percent.”

The New York Times (6/3, Bosman, Harmon, 18.61M) says “for those sympathetic to a growing movement, deciding whether to attend protests has been complicated: Some people have avoided them entirely, reasoning that the chance of contracting the coronavirus in a crowd is too high.” The Times adds, “No one has studied the precise dynamics of how the virus may be transmitted under the mix of conditions that prevail at mass protests. And because of delays between exposure to the virus and the start of symptoms, and then hospitalizations and deaths, the impact of the protests on virus spread will not be known for several weeks.”

New York City Health Committee Chair: “Blame Racism” If Coronavirus Cases Rise After Floyd Protests. The Washington Examiner (6/3, Neale, 448K) reports, “A New York City Council Democrat is blaming racism for a potential rise in cases of the coronavirus after a week of nationwide protests over the death of George Floyd.” In a social media post on Wednesday, Mark Levine, Chairman of the council's health committee, “instructed those worried that mass gatherings would lead to an uptick in COVID-19 cases to ‘blame racism’ instead of a lack of social distancing.” Levine tweeted, “Let's be clear about something: if there is a spike in coronavirus cases in the next two weeks, don't blame the protesters. Blame racism.”

Autopsy Shows Floyd Had Coronavirus. The Washington Times (6/3, Morton, 492K) reports, “An autopsy released Wednesday showed that George Floyd, the black man killed by a Minneapolis police officer, had the coronavirus.” The Hennepin County Medical Examiner said Floyd, “whose death has sparked worldwide protests, tested positive for the virus on April 3.”

WPost Analysis: Minority Communities Have Been Disproportionately Hit By COVID-19.

The Washington Post (6/3, Robert Samuels, Williams, Jan, Del Real, 14.2M) reports, “Interviews with nearly 60 public health experts, lawmakers and community leaders show that many of the first coronavirus testing sites went up in areas that happened to be whiter and more affluent, despite the requests of black leaders.” In addition, “poor reporting of data, which initially masked the fact that the disease was disproportionately affecting black communities, remains spotty even as states move to reopen their economies.” According to the Post's analysis of census and other data, “today, Americans living in counties with above-average black populations are three times as likely to die of the coronavirus as those in above-average white counties.”

Miami Gardens, Florida's Largest Majority-Black City, Struggles To Combat Coronavirus. The Washington Post (6/3, Wootson, 14.2M) reports on community activist Betty Ferguson's efforts to help “Miami Gardens – the largest majority-black city in the state --” wage “a fight against the novel coronavirus.” The Post highlights that the coronavirus “has disproportionately attacked black Americans regardless of where they live, how much money they make or how well they've galvanized their communities.”

Administration Identifies Five Most Promising Vaccine Candidates.

The CBS Evening News (6/3, story 6, 0:07, O'Donnell, 4.98M) reported the Administration has selected five companies as “among the most likely candidates to produce a coronavirus vaccine.”

The New York Times (6/3, 18.61M) reports it is “a critical step in the White House's effort to deliver on its promise of being able to start widespread inoculation of Americans by the end of the year.” According to the Times, “The five companies are Moderna, a Massachusetts-based biotechnology firm,” which NIAID Director Fauci said he “expected would enter the final phase of clinical trials next month; the combination of Oxford University and AstraZeneca, on a similar schedule; and three large pharmaceutical companies: Johnson & Johnson, Merck and Pfizer. Each is taking a somewhat different approach.” The Times says Fauci “hinted at the action when he told a medical seminar on Tuesday that ‘by the beginning of 2021, we hope to have a couple of hundred million doses.’”

USA Today (6/3, Rodriguez, 10.31M) reports Fauci “said he's ‘cautiously optimistic’ a coronavirus vaccine will provide some protection against SARS-CoV-2 and COVID-19, the illness it causes, but is concerned about how long that protection could last.” Commenting on the “durability” of candidate vaccines in an interview with JAMA editor-in-chief Howard Bauchner on Tuesday, Fauci said, “If you look at the duration of protection when you recover from one of the several benign coronaviruses that cause the common cold, the durability of infection is only measured in a year or less as opposed to the other infections where you can get 15 to 20 years of protection.”

NIH Director Says Coronavirus Vaccine Development Advancing At “Unprecedented Speed.” NIH Director Collins said on NPR's All Things Considered (6/3) that the development of a coronavirus vaccine “is moving at an unprecedented speed, recognizing that we really only knew about this virus back in January. But some of the trials are getting ready to be initiated in large scale, which would be roughly 30,000 volunteers for each vaccine, half of them receiving the vaccine, half of them receiving a placebo that looks and feels just like the same thing so that we can really begin to assess whether these works. That is what you call a Phase 3 trial and there are some of the vaccines that are ready to get started into that phase as early as the beginning of July. That is a phenomenal thing to be able to say considering these things usually take several years."

WPost Analysis: US-China Race To Develop Vaccine Is An Echo Of The Cold War. The Washington Post (6/3, Johnson, Dou, 14.2M) says that "with testing underway on five experimental vaccines in China and four in the United States, the race to produce a vaccine" has taken on "political dimensions that echo jockeying for technological dominance during the Cold War." The Post adds, "Both countries are also taking huge financial risks to scale up production of possible vaccines before they know any are safe and effective – a gambit to ensure their citizens won't have to wait." According to the Post, "The nation that produces the first safe and effective vaccine will gain not only bragging rights but also a fast track to put its people back to work, a powerful public health tool to protect its citizens and a precious resource to reward allies."

Hydroxychloroquine Fails To Prevent COVID-19 In Large Trial.

The AP (6/3, Marchione) reports hydroxychloroquine "proved ineffective" in preventing COVID-19 "in the first large, high-quality study to test it in health workers and others closely exposed to people with the disease." Results published Wednesday by the New England Journal of Medicine "show that hydroxychloroquine was no better than placebo pills at preventing illness from the coronavirus." However, "the drug did not seem to cause serious harm," with about 40 percent showing side effects, "mostly mild stomach problems."

The Washington Post (6/3, McGinley, Cha, 14.2M) reports researchers "enrolled more than 800 adults in the United States and Canada who were exposed to someone" with COVID-19 because of their jobs as healthcare workers or first responders, "or because they lived with someone with the disease." In what is considered as the "gold standard for clinical trials," the study was "a randomized placebo-controlled trial, and was double-blinded, meaning neither the participants nor the researchers knew what the participants received."

The New York Times (6/3, Grady, 18.61M) reports the "trial was the first to test whether the drug could prevent illness in people who have been exposed to the coronavirus."

NYTimes Analysis: CDC Failed To Adequately Confront Pandemic.

In an article titled "The C.D.C. Waited 'Its Entire Existence For This Moment.' What Went Wrong?" the New York Times (6/3, Lipton, Goodnough, Shear, 18.61M) reports that many medical professionals' "confidence in the C.D.C. was shaken as it confronted the most urgent public health emergency in its 74-year history." According to the Times, the CDC, which was "long considered the world's premier health agency, made early testing mistakes that contributed to a cascade of problems that persist today as the country tries to reopen." The Times says the CDC "failed to provide timely counts of infections and deaths, hindered by aging technology and a fractured public health reporting system. And it hesitated in absorbing the lessons of other countries, including the perils of silent carriers spreading the infection."

Nearly 3,000 Postal Workers Have Tested Positive For Coronavirus.

The Washington Examiner (6/3, Giaritelli, 448K) reports, "Some 2,800 United States Postal Services workers have tested positive for the coronavirus, forcing the federal agency to hire replacements and worsening an internal financial crisis that could stamp out the government service." House Homeland Security Chairman Bennie Thompson "said that 4,000 USPS employees have been directly impacted by the virus." According to Thompson, "on top of the 2,800 confirmed cases, 1,200 workers have unconfirmed cases." Just under "70 employees have died amid the pandemic."

Trump Slams US Attorney Who Oversaw Clinton Email Probe.

The New York Post (6/3, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports, "President Trump blasted a little-known US attorney from Utah who oversaw an investigation into issues related to former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, saying the top federal prosecutor 'did absolutely nothing.'" Former Attorney General Sessions "tapped Huber, who has served as Utah's chief prosecutor since 2015, in November 2017 to evaluate 'certain issues' involving the ties between the Clinton Foundation and the sale of Uranium One, a Canadian uranium company with ties to mining stakes in the US, to a Russian nuclear agency." Huber "was also tasked with reviewing Clinton's handling of classified emails during her tenure as secretary of state." The President tweeted, "Undercover Huber is a great spoof, funny, but at the same time sad, because the real @JohnWHuber did absolutely NOTHING. He was a garbage disposal unit for important documents & then, tap, tap, tap, just drag it along & run out of time. A.G. Jeff Sessions was played like a drum!"

Rosenstein Says He Should Not Have Approved Carter Page Surveillance.

The AP (6/3, Tucker) reports that in an appearance before the Senate Judiciary Committee Wednesday, former deputy attorney general Rod Rosenstein testified that "he would not have approved an FBI surveillance application for" Carter Page, "a former Trump campaign aide, during the Russia investigation had he known at the time about the problems that have since been revealed." The AP says that "amounted to a striking concession that law enforcement officials made mistakes as they scrutinized ties between Russia and Donald Trump's 2016 presidential campaign." However, "even as he acknowledged the legitimacy of anger from Trump and his allies, he defended his appointment of" Robert Mueller. Rosenstein is quoted as saying, "I do not consider the investigation to be corrupt...but I certainly understand the President's frustration given the outcome, which was in fact that there was no evidence of conspiracy between Trump campaign advisers and Russians."

The Washington Post (6/3, Zapotosky, 14.2M) says, "Conservatives are likely to seize on the admission, and others from Rosenstein, as more ammunition for their attacks on the Russia investigation." Rosenstein "offered some defense of steps he took in the case...but at times he was conciliatory toward Republicans skeptical of the investigation." However, Rosenstein defended then-Attorney General Jeff Sessions' "recusal from the case, which put Rosenstein in charge, calling Sessions 'one of the most principled people I've ever met in Washington.'"

Fox News (6/3, Singman, 27.59M) reports on its website that Rosenstein said "the FBI was supposed to be following protocols to ensure that every fact was verified," and went on to "cite Justice Department inspector general findings released last year that the FBI actually 'was not following the written protocols, and that "significant errors" appeared in applications filed in connection with the Crossfire Hurricane investigation.'"

The New York Times (6/3, Savage, Benner, Fandos, 18.61M) reports that Republicans "found Mr. Rosenstein's explanations unpersuasive and as the hearing went on, began to openly criticize him for obfuscating and failing to correct what they argued were blatant abuses of the system he oversaw." Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) told Rosenstein that there are "only two possible conclusions: either that you were complicit in the wrongdoing, which I don't believe was the case, or that your performance of your duties was grossly negligent." The Times also reports that Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham and Senate Homeland Security and Government Affairs Chairman Ron Johnson "both plan to ask their respective panels on Thursday to empower them to subpoena reams of records related to the Russia investigation and for testimony from dozens of current and former law enforcement and national security officials, including prominent members of the Obama administration."

Politico (6/3, Desiderio, Swan, 4.29M) reports Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO), "one of Trump's allies pushing to aggressively investigate the origins of the probe, expressed frustration during the hearing Wednesday over efforts to hold those officials and others accountable – specifically, Rosenstein's criticisms of the FBI, which some Republicans viewed as a deflection. 'I'm sure this committee will take every pain not to hold [Rosenstein] accountable or responsible. Apparently we can't hold anyone accountable, Mr. Chairman,' said Hawley, a member of the panel." Reuters (6/3, Morgan), The Hill (6/3, Carney, 2.98M), the Washington Examiner (6/3, Dunleavy, 448K), Bloomberg (6/3, Strohm, Dennis, 4.73M), and Townhall (6/3, Vespa, 177K), among other news outlets, also cover Rosenstein's appearance.

McCabe Accuses Rosenstein Of Giving "False" Testimony. Fox News (6/3, Singman, 27.59M) reports on its website that "former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe accused...Rosenstein of giving 'false' testimony Wednesday about James Comey's memos documenting his interactions with...Trump." Rosenstein "suggested that McCabe should have shared details about...Comey's memos on his conversations with the president earlier, claiming that he didn't tell him about their existence until right before they were leaked." McCabe said in a statement, "Mr. Rosenstein's claims to have been misled by me, or anyone from the FBI, regarding our concerns about President Trump and the Trump campaign's interactions with Russia are completely false. ... I personally briefed Mr. Rosenstein on Jim Comey's memos describing his interactions with the President mere days after Mr. Rosenstein wrote the memo firing Jim Comey."

Police Shooting Exacerbates Tensions In Louisville.

The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Cutter, Campo-Flores, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports under the headline "Another Police Shooting In Louisville Inflames Racial Tensions" that the death of David McAtee after an exchange of gunfire with police and National Guard troops Monday has exacerbated tensions in the city where Breonna Taylor was killed by police in March. The Journal says rather than being shocked, most African American residents of the city see the incident as confirmation of their mistrust of police. The Louisville Courier-Journal (6/3, 368K) reports Mayor Greg Fischer (D) "announced several initiatives regarding the city's police department Wednesday, including a 'top-to-bottom' review."

Family Says Officer Restrained Chicago Woman By Kneeling On Her Neck.

The Chicago Tribune (6/3, Jackson, 2.65M) reports the family of Mia Wright, who "was parking near a looted mall Sunday when Chicago police surrounded the vehicle, broke the windows and searched Tate and a group of four friends and relatives," say an officer restrained Wright by placing a knee on her neck "while she was prone on the ground. Wright was charged with disorderly conduct and released Monday." The Tribune says "the use of kneeling to restrain someone in police custody has been under scrutiny nationwide since George Floyd died after being held down by an officer in Minneapolis who used his knee to restrain Floyd."

Gambia Seeks Investigation Into Police Killing Of Citizen In Georgia.

The Washington Post (6/3, Paquette, 14.2M) reports the government of Gambia "is calling for a 'transparent, credible and objective' investigation into the death of one of its citizens who was fatally shot by police" on May 29 northeast of Atlanta. The Georgia Bureau of Investigation says officers tried to pull over Momodou Lamin Sisay, "the son of a retired Gambian diplomat, for a vehicle tag violation. ... The agency said in a statement that Sisay attempted to flee, aimed a gun at officers and then died after exchanging fire with a SWAT team that had arrived to provide backup."

Ferguson, Missouri Elects First Black Mayor.

NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 8, 1:40, Holt, 6.86M) reported, "There's been a lot of change in Ferguson, Missouri nearly six years since the death of Michael Brown shook the nation." NBC's Steve Patterson reported, "The fires of revolution gave way to change, including body cameras and more minorities on the police force. ... Last night Ella Jones became the city's first black and first female mayor." Jones: "People have been feeling like they've been left out the government, and now they feel like they have elected a person who is for the people."

Cristobal Poses Threat To US Gulf Coast After Making Landfall In Mexico.

NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 9, 0:15, Holt, 6.86M) reported Tropical Storm Cristobal made landfall on Mexico's Gulf Coast on Wednesday, "causing severe flooding." ABC World News Tonight (6/3, story 7, 0:15, Muir, 7.94M) reported the storm is "expected to hit" the US Gulf Coast "as soon as this weekend."

Gaynor Says How FEMA Responds To Hurricanes Will Be Different During Pandemic. Gray Television (6/3, 34K) reported that FEMA Administrator Gaynor says that while his agency's "mission is the same" this hurricane season amid the coronavirus pandemic, "how they do the work will be a little bit different. They're going to have social distancing guidelines in effect for emergency shelters. Evacuations...could take a little bit longer to get folks out. They are also encouraging you to have hand sanitizer, cleaning supplies, wipes any of those items in addition to the regular emergency kits on hand."

White House Releases Results Of Trump's Annual Physical.

The Washington Examiner (6/3, Yilek, 448K) reports the White House released the results of President Trump's "third physical on Wednesday, months after he spent a November afternoon at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland, beginning the process." The President "gained a small amount of weight since his physical early last year but 'remains healthy,' according to the White House doctor." The report also says that Trump completed a round of hydroxychloroquine without any side effects.

Administration Discussing Military Flyover At Mount Rushmore On July 3.

Politico (6/3, Seligman, 4.29M) reports the Administration is "working with the South Dakota governor's office to plan a military flyover at Mount Rushmore during President Donald Trump's visit to the national landmark on July 3 as part of Independence Day celebrations, a spokesperson for the governor confirmed to Politico." The flyover and a planned fireworks display at Mount Rushmore will "kick off this year's Independence Day celebrations across the country, but the main event will be a 'Salute to America' on the National Mall on July 4." According to Politico, "the news that the administration is planning large military demonstrations for the second year in a row to celebrate the Fourth of July comes at a moment of heightened concerns about politicization of the military."

Snapchat Will No Longer Promote Trump's Account.

The New York Times (6/3, Kang, Conger, 18.61M) reports that Snap, the company behind the Snapchat app, "said on Wednesday that it had stopped promoting the Snapchat account of President Trump after determining that his public comments off the site could incite violence." According to the Times, Snap "said Mr. Trump's account would remain intact but would not be promoted on its Discover home page for news and stories." Trump's account was "previously regularly featured on Discover, along with the accounts of other high-profile users." The Washington Post (6/3, Lerman, 14.2M) points out that Snapchat "has 229 million daily active users," which is "even bigger than Twitter's 166 million daily active users." Trump "has 1.5 million followers on Snapchat, a number that tripled over the past eight months."

Under the headline "Snapchat, Long Criticized As A 'Haven' For Child Pornography, Chooses Instead To Censor Trump," The Federalist (6/3, Justice, 126K) reports the Trump campaign "fired back," with Brad Parscale saying in a statement, "Snapchat is trying to rig the 2020 election, illegally using their corporate funding to promote Joe Biden and suppress President Trump. ... Snapchat hates that so many of their users watch the President's content and so they are actively engaging in voter suppression. If you're conservative, they do not want to hear from you, they do not want you to vote. They view you as a deplorable and they do not want you to exist on their platform."

Politico (6/3, Overly, 4.29M) says Snap's "action is notably stronger and more sweeping than the fact-checking and warning labels Twitter slapped on Trump's account last week, especially because Snap is reacting to statements the president has made elsewhere." Reuters (6/3, Paul), the New York Times (6/3, Kang, Conger, 18.61M) and Wall Street Journal (6/3, Herrera, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Early Facebook Employees Denounce Zuckerberg's Stance On Trump Posts.

The New York Times (6/3, Isaac, 18.61M) reports Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg "faced fresh criticism on Wednesday as nearly three dozen people who worked at the social network in its early years called out his decision to leave President Trump's aggressive posts on the site unaltered." In an open letter, the former employees said that Zuckerberg's position was "a 'betrayal' of Facebook's ideals and urged him to reconsider it." The employees included Facebook's first chief of communications, as well as some who "had helped write the social network's original community guidelines, which govern what can and cannot be posted."

Trump, Kushner Reportedly Encouraged National Enquirer To Pursue Klausutis Story In 2017.

The Daily Beast (6/3, Suebsaeng, 1.39M) reports President Trump, "via his son-in-law Jared Kushner, encouraged his pals" at the National Enquirer in 2017 “to push the debunked conspiracy theory that MSNBC host Joe Scarborough murdered a female congressional aide, Lori Klausutis. ... According to two people with direct knowledge of the matter,” by mid-2017, Trump “started asking White House aides if he should tweet about ‘the dead girl’ – as one of the people recalled the president phrasing it – to get back at his friend-turned-foe ‘Psycho Joe.’” While Trump “remained mostly silent in public, he was more active behind the scenes. His son-in-law and senior White House adviser asked the National Enquirer to pursue the story.”

House Democrats Unveil $494B Transportation Package.

Reuters (6/3, Shepardson) reports the House Democrats on Wednesday “introduced a $494 billion five-year surface transportation bill” that “aims to fix crumbling roads and highways and reduce carbon pollution.” The bill would “provide $319 billion to fix 47,000 structurally deficient bridges and make other repairs, $105 billion for mass transit and invest nearly $30 billion in passenger railroad Amtrak and rail infrastructure.” House Transportation Chairman Peter DeFazio said, “For decades, Congress has repeatedly ignored the calls for an overhaul and instead simply poured money into short-term patches. The result? We’re still running our economy on an inefficient, 1950s-era system.” Republicans on the Transportation Committee “said both parties must work together to enact new spending and criticized the plan’s ‘outsized funding increases for urban areas.’”

The Washington Post (6/3, Duncan, 14.2M) reports, “In addition to new funding, the legislation would make major changes to national transportation policy: It would require the government prioritize fixing existing roads and bridges over building new ones, make states with the deadliest roads for cyclists and pedestrians spend money to tackle the problem, and incentivizes states to spend money on projects that reduce greenhouse gas emissions.” However, “for all its ambition, the bill will be taken up in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic, which has caused transit ridership to plummet and left state transportation departments struggling with lost gas tax revenue.” In light of the current situation, “the bill would seek to provide a boost to the finances of transportation networks for a year and delay the policy changes until October 2021.”

Chao: Coordinated, Long-Term Plan Needed To Address Nation’s Infrastructure Needs. Transportation Secretary Chao said in an interview with Politico Playbook (6/3, 4.31M), “The Administration sent our infrastructure proposal on Feb. 12 of 2018 and we believe very firmly that infrastructure should be a bipartisan effort. So, as we go forward, we will continue to talk about the need to invest in our infrastructure. We do invest, but we need more money.” Chao added, “We need a coordinated, long-term plan to address the infrastructure needs of our country. ... We don’t want to have shovel-ready projects only because that is not necessarily a strategic long-term view about how to invest. ... We should be thinking longer-term – on a 10-year basis, for example – so that we can address, truly, the long-term infrastructure needs and the competitiveness, productivity aspects of our economy.”

Trump Had To Resubmit Florida Voter Registration Application.

The Washington Post (6/3, Roig-Franzia, 14.2M) reports that President Trump “originally tried to register to vote in Florida while claiming his ‘legal residence’ was in another part of the country – Washington, DC – according to Florida elections records.” The Post adds “that created a potential problem for Trump: Florida law requires voters to be legal residents of the state. A month later, Trump resubmitted his application to use a Florida address and in March he voted by mail in Florida’s Republican primary.”

RNC Says Trump Will Not Deliver Acceptance Speech In Charlotte.

The AP (6/3, Anderson) reports that the Republican National Committee “unveiled plans on Wednesday to proceed with certain convention activities in Charlotte,” even though President Trump “will deliver his nomination acceptance speech somewhere else.” The RNC released a statement reading: “Due to the directive from the governor that our convention cannot go on as planned as required by our rules, the celebration of the president’s acceptance of the Republican nomination will be held in another city. Should the governor allow more than 10 people in a room, we still hope to conduct the official business of the convention in Charlotte.” The AP says the RNC’s “move comes in response to growing concerns” from North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper (D) “that the full capacity convention Trump had requested is ‘very unlikely’ to happen in light of the COVID-19 pandemic.”

USA Today (6/3, Jackson, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports Trump “will not accept the Republican nomination for president in Charlotte,” because “North Carolina officials could not guarantee full use of their facilities in late August over concerns about the coronavirus.” RNC officials “were expected to tour a Nashville site Thursday.” Cooper wrote to the RNC on Tuesday, stating “neither public health officials nor I will risk the health and safety of North Carolinians by providing the guarantee you seek.”

Poll: Biden, Trump In Tight Races In Six Battleground States.

The Hill (6/3, Manchester, 2.98M) reports that a Change Research poll of 1,457 likely voters in Arizona, Florida, Michigan, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, taken May 29-31, shows Joe Biden and President Trump “are neck and neck in battleground states won by Trump in 2016.” According to the poll, Trump leads in Arizona 45%-44%, Biden leads in Florida 48%-45%, Biden leads in Michigan 48%-46%, Biden leads in North Carolina 46%-45%, Trump leads in Pennsylvania 50%-46%, and Biden and Trump are tied at 45% in Wisconsin. The Hill adds, “The same survey showed Biden with a national lead of” 48%-41%.

Arizona Poll: Biden Leads Trump 46%-42%; Democrat Kelly Leads McSally 50%-37% In Senate Race. In an online article, Fox News (6/3, Blanton, 27.59M) reports that a Fox News poll of 1,002 Arizona voters, taken May 30-June 2, shows Biden leading Trump 46%-42%. The same poll shows Democrat Mark Kelly leading appointed Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) 50%-37% in this fall's special election.

Ohio Poll: Biden Leads Trump 45%-43%. On its website, Fox News (6/3, Blanton, 27.59M) reports that a Fox News poll of 803 Ohio voters, taken May 30-June 2, shows Biden leading Trump 45%-43%. Fox News says, "Voters extremely interested in the election go for Biden by 6 points (51-45 percent). More Democrats (61 percent) than Republicans (55 percent) are extremely interested in the election."

Texas Poll: Trump Leads Biden 44%-43%. The Dallas Morning News (6/3, Gillman, 946K) reports that a Quinnipiac University poll of 1,166 Texas "self-identified" voters, taken May 28- June 1, shows Trump leading Biden 44%-43%. The Morning News says, "Trump's support in Texas seems to have a hard ceiling, with 48% of voters saying they definitely won't vote for him in the fall, 35% saying they definitely will, and 14% holding it out as a possibility. Trump beat Hillary Clinton by 9 percentage points in 2016." The report adds, "The new poll tracks findings from a month earlier in a Dallas Morning News/University of Texas at Tyler poll, which showed Biden and Trump locked in a tie at 43% each."

The Corpus Christi (TX) Caller-Times (6/3, Moritz, 153K) reports, "Quinnipiac's numbers appear to vindicate the message the Texas Democratic Party has sought to push since the start of the 2020 election cycle, which is that the nation's most reliably red state in every national election since 1980 is ripe for the flipping."

Wisconsin Poll: Biden Leads Trump 49%-40%. On its website, Fox News (6/3, Blanton, 27.59M) reports that a Fox News poll of 801 Wisconsin voters, taken May 30-June 2, shows Biden leading Trump 49%-40%, "up from a 5-point advantage in January." Fox News says, "A big reason Trump trails Biden is lack of party support: 85 percent of Republicans back him, while 93 percent of Democrats support Biden. Eight percent of Republicans defect to Biden. In addition, only 87 percent of those who approve of Trump's job performance support his reelection."

Monmouth National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 52%-41%. Politico (6/3, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that a Monmouth University national poll of 742 voters, taken May 28-June 2, shows Biden leading Trump 52%-41%. In a similar poll taken earlier in May, Biden led Trump 50%-41%. And in March, a Monmouth poll showed Biden leading Trump by three points.

Trump Says He Has Polls That Show Him Beating Biden. President Trump was asked Wednesday on the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3) about polls showing Biden beating him by 10 points. Trump said, "I have other polls where I'm winning, and you've seen them, too, I guess. But, I have polls. Just like last time, I was losing to Hillary [Clinton] in every state, and I won every state, OK. I won Michigan, I won Wisconsin, I won places that they didn't even think were pollable, they didn't even want to go bother. We have tremendous support. I've seen many polls – CNN – didn't CNN just have a poll, which they didn't want to use, where I was winning every single swing state?" Trump added, "I saw another poll where I'm winning every swing state, substantially. And why wouldn't I?"

NYTimes Report: Trump Camp's Private Polls Show President "Well Behind" Biden. The New York Times (6/3, Burns, Haberman, 18.61M) reports that Trump "is facing the bleakest outlook for his re-election bid so far, with his polling numbers plunging in both public and private surveys and his campaign beginning to worry about his standing in states like Ohio and Iowa that he carried by wide margins" in 2016. Trump's "campaign has recently undertaken a multimillion-dollar advertising effort in those two states as well as Arizona in hopes of improving his standing, while also shaking up his political operation and turning new attention to states like Georgia that were once considered reliably Republican. In private, Mr. Trump has expressed concern that his campaign is not battle-ready for the general election." The Times adds, "In private polling conducted by Mr. Trump's campaign, the president is now well behind Mr. Biden, according to people briefed on the most recent round of results."

Biden Surges Past Trump in Betting Markets. On its website, CNBC (6/3, Higgins, 3.62M) reports that Biden "has surged past... Trump in online betting markets tied to the outcome of the 2020 presidential race." CNBC says that Biden "has taken his biggest lead over Trump to date in Smarkets, a UK-based online gambling platform, as well as PredictIt, an online betting platform established by researchers in New Zealand. As recently as last week, Trump was favored to win on both platforms. Biden's chances have risen to 50%-43% on Smarkets and 53%-46% on PredictIt. Spokespeople for both companies confirmed that trading volume has risen to levels unseen since March, when the US began shutting down major portions of its economy to halt the spread of coronavirus."

Clyburn: Klobuchar's Ties To Troubled Minneapolis Police Hurt Her VP Odds.

Appearing Wednesday on CNN (6/3, 736K), House Majority Whip Clyburn was asked about his contention that the unrest in the wake of George Floyd's death in Minneapolis makes it less likely that Joe Biden will choose Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) as his running mate. Clyburn replied, "I think that we have to agree that in this business of politics, a lot of times things happen around us of which we have absolutely no control. ... I like Amy Klobuchar. ... But the fact of the matter is the aura around Minneapolis and what we begin to see now is a civil rights complaint being filed by the state of Minnesota against the police department that really is kind of serious to me."

NRSC Launches Cycle's First Major TV Ad Campaigns.

Politico (6/3, Arkin, 4.29M) reports that the National Republican Senatorial Committee "launched its first round of TV ads in three races this week and will be on air in six battleground states by early July." Politico adds, "The long-planned effort represents an earlier-than-usual investment for the GOP's official campaign arm, but Republicans acknowledge that it is coming after a prolonged period of essentially unanswered Democratic attacks." Politico also reports that "Democratic campaigns and outside groups have outspent Republicans on the airwaves in Arizona, Colorado, Iowa, Maine and North Carolina – in some cases by a more than 2-to-1 ratio, according to data from Gonzales: King's Loss Greatly Increases GOP's Odds Of Retaining IA4 Seat.

Writing for CQ Roll Call (6/3, 154K), Nathan Gonzales says that with veteran Rep. Steve King (R-IA) having been unseated by state Sen. Randy Feenstra in Tuesday's IA4 GOP primary, "the rating of the race changes from Tilt Republican to Solid Republican." Gonzales explains that President Trump won IA4 by 27 points "in 2016, yet King only narrowly won reelection" in 2018 by three points "over Democrat J.D. Scholten. That demonstrated that King's presence and problems were major factors in making the seat vulnerable for the GOP. Scholten is running again and is a credible candidate, but he will have a decidedly more difficult race against Feenstra."

The Hill (6/3, Brufke, 2.98M) reports that House Republicans "said King's loss could help them beyond" IA4, "arguing that the controversies surrounding King could have had a negative impact on other districts in the state and on" Sen. Joni Ernst (R-IA), who is up for reelection this fall.

In Tweet, Trump Congratulates Feenstra On Primary Win. Politico (6/3, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that President Trump "on Wednesday congratulated...Feenstra for his" defeat of King – "an outcome that will unseat the incendiary nine-term congressman with a history of racist rhetoric. Congratulations to Randy Feenstra on your big win in the Iowa Republican Primary. You will be a great Congressman! Trump wrote on Twitter." The Hill (6/3, Chalfant, 2.98M) also reports on the story.

WPost Analysis: King's Conservative Views On Immigration "Stand To Live On Inside The GOP." Meanwhile, the Washington Post (6/3, Debonis, 14.2M) reports, "The resounding defeat of...King at the hands of Iowa Republican voters Tuesday signaled the political demise of one of the GOP's most polarizing figures, an archconservative culture warrior who frequently veered into outright bigotry that tarred his entire party. The ideas King promoted, however, stand to live on inside the GOP – adopted by President Trump and his followers, who have enthusiastically embraced and pushed forward elements of King's agenda, none more so than sharp restrictions" on immigration.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 43.5%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 43.5%, and his disapproval at 53.8%. The President's approval is down 0.6 since yesterday; his disapproval is down by 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (5/31-6/2) finds Trump's approval at 44%, and his disapproval at 54%.

An Emerson poll of 1,431 "registered voters" (6/1-6/2) shows Trump's approval at 43%, with 50% disapproving.

An Economist/YouGov poll of 1,244 "registered voters" (6/31-6/1) finds Trump's approval at 43%, and his disapproval at 55%.

A Politico/Morning Consult poll of 1,181 "registered voters" (5/29-6/1) shows Trump's approval at 41%, and his disapproval at 55%.

A CNBC survey of 1,451 "registered voters" (5/29-5/31), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 44%, and his disapproval at 56%.

IMF Head Says Poor Countries Could Need Debt Restructuring Rather Than Freeze Alone.

Reuters (6/3, Shalal) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva said freezing debt payments for emerging market economies and the world's poorest nations may be insufficient, and that they may need debt restructuring in the future. Georgieva "said some emerging market countries that pursued prudent and sustainable debt policies were weathering the coronavirus crisis better than others, but a small universe of countries with high debt burdens would likely need help going forward." Georgieva also "said the Fund had disbursed about $260 billion of its $1 trillion in lending power at this point, with emergency financing provided thus far to 63 of 103 countries that had asked for help since early March."

G7 Finance Ministers Say Emerging Country Debt Relief Could Last Through 2020.

Reuters (6/3, Shalal) reports G7 finance ministers on Wednesday "said a debt relief initiative for the world's poorest countries could be extended beyond the end of the year to help deal with economic fallout from the coronavirus pandemic." The officials, in a joint statement, "urged all official creditors to join the initiative, called for strengthened reporting of public debt data, and said all creditors – public and private – should make responsible lending decisions in line with debt sustainability guidelines." The officials "also said creditors should fully disclose terms of public debt and limit use of confidentiality clauses, including for state-owned enterprises," in an "apparent reference to practices reportedly used by China, a major creditor for low-income countries."

ECB Expected To Ramp Up Economic Response To COVID-19 Crisis.

The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Fairless, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that after initial divergence in the scale of the US and European responses to the economic crisis resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic, the EU has begun to take steps more closely aligned with those taken by the Federal Reserve and the Treasury Department. The ECB is expected Thursday to raise its bond purchases to nearly €1.5 trillion, placing its actions on a similar level with the US response.

Reuters (6/3, Koranyi, Canepa) reports the ECB "is certain to give the ailing euro zone economy another shot in the arm but, with arguments split over its timing, the only question is whether it will act on Thursday or hold out until July." The ECB "has made it clear it will do its part and the severity of the slump argues for earlier action," but "a still-elusive political deal on European Union-wide fiscal support strengthens the case for patience." Berenberg economist Holger Schmieding said, "[W]e see a 60% probability that the ECB will raise its asset purchase target on Thursday, probably by 500 billion euros."

Germany Reportedly Planning New $112B Stimulus Package.

Business Insider (6/2, Sardana, 3.67M) reports, "Germany could launch a fresh package of stimulus of as much as 100 billion euros ($112 billion)," according to Bloomberg. Germany is reportedly considering measures including aid for families and car subsidies. Meanwhile, German newspaper Bild "said the total amount of the package will range between 75 billion euros ($83.9 billion) and 80 billion euros ($89.4 billion)."

WHO To Resume Hydroxychloroquine Study.

Reuters (6/3, Shields, Farge) reports that the World Health Organization "will resume its trial of hydroxychloroquine for potential use against the coronavirus...after those running the study briefly stopped giving it to new patients over health concerns." Reuters says the WHO "paused the part of its large study of treatments against COVID-19 in which newly enrolled patients were getting the anti-malarial drug to treat COVID-19 due to fears it increased death rates and irregular heartbeats," but WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus "said its experts had advised the continuation of all trials including hydroxychloroquine."

Politico (6/3, Wheaton, 4.29M) reports that WHO officials had "cited a large, observational study in the Lancet – echoing smaller studies – that suggested the malaria and lupus medication increased the risk of heart disease and death." However, the Lancet study "has since come under fire, with the prestigious medical journal issuing an 'expression of concern' about various problems with the data collection and methods." Bloomberg (6/3, Gretler, Lauerman, 4.73M) also covers the announcement.

WPost: Trump's WHO Pullout Threatens Progress In Less Developed Nations. The coronavirus pandemic is "surging into the less developed parts of the world," the Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) editorializes, threatening "progress in health, education and economic well-being." Public health experts are worried "that as nations throw limited resources into fighting the pandemic, there will be less for fighting HIV/AIDs, malaria and tuberculosis." According to the Post, "all of this will put extra demands on the WHO, which has been at the front lines of fighting disease in the developing world – and it's more evidence that President Trump's decision to abandon the WHO is irresponsible and damaging."

WSJournal: WHO's Stance On China Hurts Its Credibility. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says internal recordings that show World Health Organization members privately raising concerns about China's transparency about the coronavirus when it was publicly praising Beijing's response damages the agency's credibility. The Journal questions whether the world needs a global health agency that can't be candid during a pandemic.

WSJournal: Lancet's Publication Of Hydroxychloroquine Study Could Be Politically Motivated. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says a study published by the Lancet last month suggesting that hydroxychloroquine is dangerous may be based on questionable data, and the decision by the respected journal to publish without appropriate vetting shows it could have been politically motivated. The Journal also points out that Lancet editors published an editorial last month urging voters to not reelect President Trump, and concludes that politics should be left out of medicine.

Architect Of Sweden's No-Lockdown Strategy Acknowledges Missteps.

Politico (6/3, Duxbury, 4.29M) reports, "The debate over Sweden's controversial no-lockdown coronavirus strategy flared again after its architect, state epidemiologist Anders Tegnell, appeared to suggest the country's approach had been flawed." In an interview that aired Wednesday, Tegnell said, "If we encountered the same disease, with what we know about it today, I think we would end up doing in between what Sweden did and what the rest of the world did. Clearly there is room for improvement." However, at his daily news briefing, Tegnell "pushed back against the idea that he was changing tack and reiterated his view that Sweden's overall strategy had been correct." He said, "We continue to believe the strategy is good but then there are always improvements we can make."

Latin American Countries Fail To Contain Coronavirus Despite Having Time To Prepare.

The Washington Post (6/3, McCoy, 14.2M) reports that it appears Latin American countries, despite having time to prepare for the arrival of coronavirus, have been unable to stop the spread of the disease. The article suggests, "Latin America's efforts to stall the disease were undone by...poverty, inequality, corruption, [and] plunging faith in institutions." Moreover, "countries that tried to enforce complete lockdowns haven't been able to maintain them for long as hunger mounts, misinformation spreads and distrust grows."

Documents Detail Huawei's Prohibited Dealings In Iran.

Citing "newly obtained documents," Reuters (6/3, Stecklow, Dehghanpisheh) reports that Huawei "acted to cover up its relationship with a firm that had tried to sell prohibited U.S. computer gear to Iran, after Reuters in 2013 reported deep links between the firm and the telecomequipment giant's chief financial officer." According to Reuters, Huawei "has long described the firm – Skycom Tech Co Ltd – as a separate local business partner in Iran," but "documents obtained by Reuters show how the Chinese tech titan effectively controlled Skycom." The documents "could buttress a high-profile criminal case being pursued by U.S. authorities against Huawei and its chief financial officer, Meng Wanzhou, who is also the daughter of Huawei's founder." The US "has been trying to get Meng extradited from Canada, where she was arrested in December 2018."

Trump Says Before Pandemic, China Was Having Worst Year "In 66 Years" Because Of Him.

President Trump said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3), "The trade deal is done, but the trade deal got finished and the ink wasn't dry when the virus floated over from China and started killing everybody in the world." Trump added, "Before the plague, China was having the worst year they've had in 66 years. That's because of me." Trump added, "I'm not excited about anything with respect to China right now because of what happened. They could have sealed it. They could have closed it off. And I ask this. Why isn't Wuhan – it came out of Wuhan. Why is it that it didn't go to China, but it went to the rest of the world?"

Transportation Department To Bar Chinese Airlines From US Airports. Reuters (6/3, Shepardson) reports that on Wednesday, the Administration "barred Chinese passenger carriers from flying to the United States starting on June 16 as it pressures Beijing to let U.S. air carriers resume flights amid simmering tensions between the world's two largest economies." The move announced by the US Department of Transportation "penalizes China for failing to comply with an existing agreement on flights between the two countries." Delta Air Lines and United Airlines "have asked to resume flights to China this month, even as Chinese carriers have continued U.S. flights during the pandemic." The AP (6/3, Koenig) says the Administration "had hinted at Wednesday's move last month, when it protested to Chinese authorities that Beijing was preventing US airlines from competing fairly against Chinese carriers."

The Washington Post (6/3, Aratani, 14.2M) reports that "US carriers applauded the Trump administration's move. 'We support and appreciate the U.S. government's actions to enforce our rights and ensure fairness,' said Lisa Hanna, a spokeswoman for Delta Air Lines, which hopes to resume flights June 11. Added Katherine Estep, a spokeswoman for Airlines for America, an industry trade group: 'We believe DOT's order will ensure fair and equal opportunity for passenger airlines with respect to service to and from China. We hope that this process will protect the rights afforded to U.S. carriers under the current U.S.-China Air Transport Agreement.'"

The New York Times (6/3, Chokshi, Swanson, 18.61M) indicates "China's aviation authority told American officials that it was considering amending its rule, but it has not said 'definitively' when that might happen, the Transportation Department said in the filing on Wednesday announcing its decision to suspend flights." The DOT statement reads, "In light of these facts, which present a situation in which the Chinese aviation authorities have authorized no U.S. carrier scheduled passenger operations between the United States and China, we conclude that these circumstances require the department's action to restore a competitive balance."

Bloomberg (6/3, 4.73M) reports that the DOT order "stops short of an outright ban, allowing Chinese carriers to operate one flight to the U.S. for each flight that China grants to American carriers." The order is "aimed at Air China Ltd., China Eastern Airlines Corp., China Southern Airlines Co. and Xiamen Airlines Co." Bloomberg adds that "it isn't clear how the order could impact burgeoning air-freight operations between the US and China." The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Sider, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

State Department: China Militarizing Stolen US Tech. The Washington Free Beacon (6/3, Kredo, 78K) reports "the Chinese government is militarizing sensitive U.S. technology and research that it stole from American institutions in recent years, according to the State Department." A "senior State Department official" told reporters, "The People's Republic of China for a number of years now has very deliberately been targeting sensitive technologies in the United States. ... These technologies have been put to the use of modernizing China's military to the detriment of our national security and that of our friends and allies."

Commerce Department: Restriction On Chinese Entities Will Take Effect On Friday. Reuters (6/3, Shepardson, Freifeld) reports that the Commerce Department announced on Wednesday that "new restrictions on 33 Chinese firms and institutions it announced last month will take effect Friday." According to Reuters, the Commerce Department "has added the companies and institutions to an economic blacklist, accusing them of helping China spy on its minority Muslim Uighur population in Xinjiang or because of alleged ties to weapons of mass destruction and China's military." Reuters says "the move will restrict the sales of U.S. goods to the companies and institutions on the list, as well as certain items made abroad with U.S. content or technology."

US To Designate Additional Chinese Media Outlets As Foreign Embassies. Reuters (6/3, Zengerle, Spetalnick, Pamuk, Brunnstrom) reports the US "is expected to designate at least two additional state-run Chinese media outlets as foreign embassies as soon as Thursday, increasing restrictions on their operations on American soil, three people familiar with the matter said on Wednesday." Reuters adds "the planned move, which is sure to further inflame US-China tensions, follows President Donald Trump's announcement on Friday of retaliatory action against Beijing over its tightened grip on Hong Kong." These "new designations are expected to include China Central Television (CCTV), the top state-owned network in mainland China, and China News Service, the country's second-largest state-owned news agency."

Johnson: Millions On Hong Kong Can Immigrate To UK If Autonomy Is Lost. Reuters (6/3, Faulconbridge, Roantree) reports that British Prime Minister Boris Johnson said Wednesday that the UK "will not walk away from the people of Hong Kong if China imposes a national security law that would conflict with its international obligations under a 1984 accord," and which the UK says "risks destroying one of the jewels of Asia's economy while ruining the reputation of China." In the Times of London, Johnson wrote, "If China proceeds, this would be in direct conflict with its obligations under the joint declaration, a legally binding treaty registered with the United Nations. ... Many people in Hong Kong fear that their way of life – which China pledged to uphold – is under threat.”

The New York Times (6/3, Landler, 18.61M) reports that Johnson is “promising to allow nearly three million people eligible for a British overseas passport to live and work in Britain if Beijing were to impose a new security law on the former British colony.” According to the Times, Johnson’s “promise...would open the door to a significant influx of people fleeing Hong Kong, should the situation in the city deteriorate further. But it left unanswered questions about how difficult it would be for those arrivals to obtain British citizenship.”

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) lauds the British government’s move toward Hong Kong, and urges the Administration to follow suit. The Washington Post (6/3, Mahtani, 14.2M) reports that the US, Canada, Australia “and others face pressure from lawmakers and human rights groups to offer residency to Hong Kong people fleeing deteriorating political circumstances in the former British colony.” The Post adds, “London’s move, which Johnson said he would implement when China formally enacts the security law, could emerge as among the most significant ramifications of Beijing’s effort to undercut Hong Kong’s freedoms and bring the city more closely under the Communist Party’s authoritarian rule. It would potentially grant British residency and working rights to up to 40 percent of Hong Kong’s population, raising the specter of a brain drain from the Asian financial center.”

According to the New York Times (6/3, Stevenson, Wang, 18.61M), “In pushing for a new national security law that many fear will curtail the city’s liberties, the Chinese Communist Party is calculating that control and stability outweigh the benefits the city has long provided.” The Times adds, “But Beijing sees its position as strong while the rest of the world is divided and still recovering from the coronavirus pandemic. ... And when it comes to the global economy, the Communist Party is wagering that the world needs China, with or without Hong Kong.”

US, China Postpone Summit Due To Coronavirus Pandemic. The AP (6/3) reports “Germany says the European Union and China have agreed to postpone a summit planned for Sept. 14 because of the coronavirus pandemic.” The summit, “to be held in the German city of Leipzig, was seen as a key moment in EU relations with China.”

Trump: Inviting Putin To G7 Is “A Question Of Common Sense.”

President Trump was asked on the Brian Kilmeade Show (6/3) about reports that he wants to invite Russian President Vladimir Putin to the G7 meeting. Trump said, “It’s not a question of what has he done. It’s a question of common sense. So we have a G7. ... Half of the meeting is devoted to Russia, and if he was there, it’d be much easier to solve. He used to be. It used to be the G8, and Obama got taken over to the cleaners. I mean, Obama had his pockets picked, and as you know, Putin did something that he shouldn’t have done because he didn’t respect Obama, perhaps. And Obama got upset and the United States said, ‘We don’t want to be here if Putin’s going to be there.’ The problem is many of the things that we talk about are about Putin. ... And I say have him in the room. Have him in the room.”

Fitch Report: Pandemic May Delay GSEs’ Exit From Conservatorship.

National Mortgage News (6/3) reports Fitch Ratings believes that the pandemic has reduced the chances of meaningful GSE reform coming to fruition in the next two years. According to Fitch, “The GSEs’ ability to raise the massive amounts of capital that they would likely need to fully exit government control could be further challenged by the grim and highly uncertain economic outlook.” The FHFA’s repropoed GSE capital rule requires “significantly higher charges for delinquent loans,” NMN says, meaning that “Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac may need to have significantly more capital than the previously expected amounts calculated, which were based on Sept. 30, 2019 data.”

FHFA Creates GSE CRT Capital Retention Spreadsheet.

National Mortgage News (6/3) reports that the FHFA has “created a spreadsheet to provide clarity regarding capital amounts the government-sponsored enterprises will have to retain for credit risk transfer deals under its repropoed rule.” The FHFA explained that the tool “shows how CRT formulas work and allows users to input assumptions and calculate the amount of capital the enterprises are required to hold across retained risk exposures in different types of CRT transactions.” NMN says, “There are five tabs in the spreadsheet: generic single-family CRT, Freddie Mac’s Structured Agency Credit Risk and Agency Credit Insurance Structure programs, Fannie Mae’s Connecticut Avenue Securities and Credit Insurance Risk Transfer programs, Fannie’s multifamily Delegated Underwriting and Servicing program, and Freddie’s multifamily K-Deals.”

Majority Of GSEs’ Forbearance Requests Coming Through Self-Serve Digital Portals.

National Mortgage News (6/3, Sinnock) reports that although borrowers “aren’t always willing to use digital mortgage technology on a self-serve basis,” with options “limited by remote work, more than half did when it came to coronavirus-related forbearance requests.” Freddie Mac SVP of Portfolio Management Kevin Palmer said at a recent MBA event, “What we’re hearing from our servicers is roughly 50%-60% of all new forbearance plans were launched through self-serve digital portals. We’re even hearing from some servicers that it’s as high as 95%.”

Agency Mortgages Have Represented Around 98% Of RMBS Issuance Throughout Pandemic.

MarketWatch (6/3, Wiltermuth, 1.67M) reports that the federal government has guaranteed almost all mortgages in the months since the pandemic emerged, “a situation that isn’t likely to change soon, according to Barclays.” Although the Administration has sought to return the GSEs to private ownership, Barclays credit researcher Dennis Lee told clients on Monday, "this dynamic was completely upended with COVID-19. Over the past two months, agency mortgages represented approximately 98% of total RMBS issuance, up from 91% in all of 2019."

MBA: Mortgage Applications Fall 3.9% Week-Over-Week, Dragged Down By Dip In Refis.

M Report (6/3, Albanese) reports that mortgage applications "fell 3.9% week-over-week" in the week that ended on May 29, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association. Overall activity was dragged down by a "14% decline in the Refinance Index." However, purchase applications "rose 5%" weekly. M Report says last week, Freddie Mac announced that the 30-year FRM average fell to 3.15, an all-time low. Last week, Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said that the "unprecedented rates have certainly made an impact as purchase demand rebounded from a 35% year-over-year decline in mid-April." Refi activity also "remains elevated," and "low mortgage rates have been accompanied by a $70,000 decline in the average loan size of refinancing borrowers this year," Khater said.

National Mortgage Professional (6/3) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan "pointed out that unlike the upswing in purchase activity, refinance applications fell for the seventh consecutive week, despite all-time low rates such as the 3.37% 30-year fixed-rate, which happened to be an MBA survey low. He stated refinance activity did reach a peak of 76% of total activity, but now accounts for less than 60%." Mortgage News Daily (6/3) reports that this MBA's data shows that this week, the ARM share rose from 3.4% to 3.5%. The FHA share of total applications was "unchanged from the previous week at 11.2 percent," while the VA share "dipped to 12.0 percent from 12.4 percent." The average contract interest rate for 30-year fixed-rate mortgages (FRM) with conforming balances "fell to 3.37 percent from 3.42 percent." The average for 30-year jumbos fell from 3.71% to 3.66%. The 15-year FRM average fell from 2.87% to 2.85%. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.08% to 3.05%. Business Insider (6/3, 3.67M) provides additional coverage.

Don Layton Shares His Thoughts On Government's Efforts To Stabilize The Mortgage Market.

DS News (6/3, Welborn) interviewed Don Layton, a senior industry fellow at Harvard's Joint Center for Housing Studies and former CEO of Freddie Mac. Layton discusses his concerns regarding the state of the mortgage market, his thoughts on the Fed's attempts to stabilize the MBS market, and how the government is responding to liquidity gaps tied to mortgage forbearance.

New American Funding CEO Concerned Over What Is In Store For Borrowers In Forbearance.

Mortgage Professional America (6/3, Smith) reports New American Funding CEO Rick Arvielo is warning of what could "happen with all the borrowers who are currently forborne, and how that's going to impact the value of servicing, and in turn the value of loans." Arvielo said, "When this first started, your option was a lump sum, or if you did three months' forbearance, you could do a 50% larger payment for six months to catch up. Neither of those options were really realistic." According to NMP, the FHFA "only clarified in April that borrowers would not be required to pay a lump sum when their forbearance plans ended." Arvielo also supports "loosening the restrictions on refinancing for borrowers in forbearance."

Multifamily Financing

- Acento Real Estate Partners Gets $114M Freddie Mac Loan To Expand Portfolio. Potentially behind a paywall, the Baltimore Business Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 842K) reports, "Three suburban Class B apartment developments changed hands last month as part of a portfolio sale that was pushed through despite Covid-19." The developments "have a total of 774 units" in Cantonville and White Marsh. Acento Real Estate Partners' purchase of the apartments was "financed through a $114 million, 10-year Freddie Mac deal with an interest-only payment for the first five years and a fixed-rate financing structure for the remainder of the loan."
- Berkeley Point Writes $75M Freddie Mac Loan Against Jacksonville, FL Apartments. Commercial Real Estate Direct (6/3, Moynihan) reports, "Berkeley Point Capital has provided a $74.8 million Freddie Mac loan against the 820-unit Bentley Green apartment property" in Jacksonville, Florida. The 10-year loan "allowed the property's owner, Starwood Capital Group, to retire a $56.3 million Freddie mortgage that was securitized through FREMF, 2017-KSW3."
- KeyBank Provides $67M Freddie Mac Refi For Baltimore-Area Community. REBusiness Online (6/3) reports, "KeyBank has provided a $66.7 million Freddie Mac refinancing loan for Verde at Howard Square, a 344-unit multifamily community in Elkridge."
- JLL Provides $32M Freddie Mac Refi For Orlando-Area Apartments. REBusiness Online (6/3) reports that JLL "has provided a $32.3 million loan through Freddie Mac for the refinancing of Lake House, a 240-unit apartment complex in Davenport."
- Greystone Provides $30M Freddie Mac Financing For Indiana Garden-Style Community. Multi-Housing News (6/3) reports Lightstone Group "has received a $29.9 million loan to fund the purchase of Autumn Breeze Apartments, a 280-unit garden-style community" in Noblesville, Indiana. Greystone "provided the Freddie Mac note, which carries a 10-year term with a 30-year amortization. The financing will also be used to complete the renovation of the property. Yardi Matrix identified the seller as Passco Cos."

FHFA Updates FHLBanks' Housing Goals.

HousingWire (6/3, 23K) reports that the FHFA on Wednesday "issued a final rule for the housing goals of the nation's network of Federal Home Loan Banks aimed at boosting mortgage lending to low-income neighborhoods." The rule "eliminates the $2.5 billion volume threshold" set in 2010, and now "all mortgage purchases are subject to the guidelines." The rule also "limits the extent that banks can use loans to higher-income borrowers to meet the housing goals." Following the change, "Only 25% of mortgages to borrowers with income above 80% of an area's median income can qualify." FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "By creating housing goal targets that are achievable for the Federal Home Loan Banks, the final rule helps ensure they make meaningful contributions to affordable homeownership. This rule will expand responsible homeownership opportunities for underserved communities across the country."

According to National Mortgage News (6/3), "FHFA's proposal aims to make it easier for smaller financial institutions to sell mortgages to an FHLBank. The small member participation housing goal's target level of 50%, is designed to encourage use of the Acquired Member Asset program by community-based institutions that often lack other connections to the secondary mortgage market and that are statistically more likely to serve low-income borrowers and families in low-income areas." It also "allows mortgages guaranteed or insured by a government agency sold to an FHLBank through MPP or MPF to count for goals purchases," as long as they are "sold by a financial institution with total assets of less than $1.224 billion." This threshold will be "adjusted annually for inflation."

Experts Share Predictions For CRE Market's Recovery.

Mortgage Professional America (6/3, Jarvis) shares economists' view of the future of commercial real estate in the wake of the pandemic. Moody's Analytics senior economist Barbara Byrne Denham believes that the commercial market will not recover until late 2021 or 2022 "at the earliest." CBRE's Richard Barkham believes that unemployment will not shrink below five or six percent for around five to ten years. Marcus and Millichap CEO Hessam Nadji believes that some asset classes, like apartments, industrial warehouses, and self-storage facilities, are faring better than other commercial asset classes like hotels and older shopping malls. CoStar Group economist Andrew Zola similarly warns that the economic recovery will not be consistent across the nation's metros.

Podcast: Wipf Discusses Shift Away From Libor.

Potentially behind a paywall, in a Bloomberg (6/3, 4.73M) podcast, Alternative Reference Rates Committee Chairman Tom Wipf discusses the need for transitioning away from Libor, and how regulators and the industry are responding. Wipf's interview highlights the "effort to replace an interest rate that is entrenched in millions of financial contracts," and what progress is being made.

Researchers Face Challenges In Quantifying The Impact Of COVID-19 On Minority Communities.

The Hill (6/3, Moreno, 2.98M) reports, "As the country reels from days of unrest in major U.S. cities as Americans protest police brutality and racial inequality, researchers are working toward quantifying the disproportionate impact the coronavirus pandemic has had on minority communities." The researchers are finding "that pre-existing racial disparities in the United States contribute to more coronavirus-related deaths among minority groups while also making it difficult to quantify the differences." Many "minority Americans tend to live in multigenerational housing in densely populated areas," according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), which might be one of several factors impacting the spread of coronavirus.

Reuters (6/3, Biron) reports, "Activist Winsome Pendergrass has an explanation for why the coronavirus is disproportionately affecting African Americans and fuelling the anger that has exploded onto U.S. streets – housing." Pendergrass is "among a number of activists and residents warning that the protests over race and policing that have roiled the United States for more than a week are driven in part by housing inequalities exacerbated by the coronavirus pandemic." Pendergrass said, "The ones who feel it most are the black and brown people. That's why COVID runs so prevalent in our area – you have eight people in a one-bedroom apartment. COVID has blown the lid off to show that we're all living one paycheck away from the side of the street."

MarketWatch (6/3, Passy, 1.67M) reports that black Americans are "twice as likely to die from COVID-19 in America," and a "recent report from the Urban Institute" indicates that the pandemic "may also cost many of them their homes." The May report, based on US Census Bureau data, suggests "that nearly one in four black and Latino renters didn't pay or deferred their rent in May, compared with just 14% of white renters. And the problem may soon get worse: Nearly half of black and Latino rents expressed concern about being able to pay their rent in June." Urban Institute VP Alanna McCargo said, "Black and Latino people have been hardest hit by stay-at-home orders and other public-health measures put in place to slow the spread of COVID-19 because of a legacy of occupational segregation." DS News (6/3, Welborn) also reports on the Urban Institute's research.

NAREB Calls For Removal Of Barriers To Black Homeownership.

HousingWire (6/3, 23K) reports that on Wednesday, National Association of Real Estate Brokers President Donnell Williams "release a statement" in response to the "national civil unrest America is currently facing." Williams said, "It's a new day. If nothing else, the year 2020 has shown us that business as usual is over and some rules were made to be broken. The National Association of Real Estate Brokers pivots to embrace these changes as we continue to work to have a positive impact upon black lives across the country." According to HousingWire,

"NAREB called for the elimination of obstructive systemic barriers that hinder or preclude the increase of black homeownership, including 'lending discrimination and the despair fueled by racial discrimination that obstructs black homeownership.'" Cybersecurity

CISA Providing Local Support As Election Primaries Test Cybersecurity Efforts.

SIGNAL Magazine \(6/3, Underwood\) reports CISA Tuesday "provided a cyber situational awareness room for local agencies to use, and many did on the day of the primaries, the agency indicated." A CISA official said, "Of course, within that room we also have our partners from the Election Infrastructure ISAC [Information Sharing and Analysis Center], as well as the EAC [Election Assistance Commission], the FBI and other agencies, and we're seeing our partners being able to work with us quite effectively in this kind of different operating environment." Another CISA official explained that, "on the classified side, cybersecurity monitoring to detect any nefarious activity also continues with intelligence community partners." In addition, the official "noted the District of Columbia and every state does have cyber intrusion detection systems in place and each one is receiving some kind of service from CISA."

Politico \(6/3, Matishak, 4.29M\) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that, "in one of the last warm-ups before November's general election, eight states and Washington, DC, held their primaries on Tuesday." It also marked the "biggest voting day since the coronavirus pandemic upended the election calendar in March." And while voters "cast their ballots during a time of crisis, Election Day went off without a hitch – not that agencies responsible for election security weren't watching." A senior CISA official said Tuesday, "Every state and the District of Columbia has an intrusion detection system, in place. So we're in a good posture for visibility and every state is receiving some kind of service." The official "noted that Covid-19 and the civil unrest gripping several American cities were new factors to overcome, but election officials felt prepared based on past experiences."

MSU Continues To Investigate Data Breach, Will Not Pay Bounty.

The Detroit Free Press \(6/3, 1.52M\) reports Michigan State University does not intend to pay ransom to hackers "threatening to publish students' personal records and university financial documents" obtained in a data breach last week. Speaking on the university's response to the attack, MSU Police Chief Kelly Roudebush said, "Paying cyber-intrusion ransoms perpetuates these crimes and provides an opportunity for the group to live another day and prey upon another victim." WILX-TV Lansing, MI \(6/3, 10, 105K\) reports MSU Chief Information Officer Melissa Woo said, "The safety and security of our IT systems and the people who use them are of paramount importance to MSU. It is why MSU continues to work diligently to strengthen and improve our information security systems and share best practices with our campus community." MLive \(MI\) \(6/3, 925K\) reports MSU "said the university is in the process of identifying the information that was compromised and will begin notifying individuals who may be impacted by the intrusion in the coming days and weeks."

New Study Says Cyberattacks Cost Trillions Of Dollars In Last Two Years.

Fox News \(5/31, DeCiccio, 27.59M\) reports ForgeRock's 2020 Consumer Identity Breach Report indicates "relentless cyberattacks against organizations across the US have cost over $1.8 trillion and exposed more than 7.8 billion consumer records over the last two years." Eve Maler, the chief technology officer at ForgeRock, "told Fox News that the main form of cyberattack (40 percent of the data breaches last year) takes place as so-called unauthorized access attacks." Maler said, "Unauthorized access means that cybercriminals were actually getting into people's online accounts using previously stolen usernames and passwords or possibly other personal data about them." She underscored that the "health care industry was the most hard hit, with 45 percent of attacks occurring in the sector in 2019."

San Francisco Pension Data Breach May Have Exposed City Retirees' Personal Data. The San Francisco Chronicle (6/3, Li, 2.67M) reports the San Francisco Employees' Retirement System, the city workers' pension fund, "reported a data breach affecting around 74,000 members." The pension system's vendor, 10up Inc., "said an outside party accessed a test data server with members' information on Feb. 24." The server "was closed and 10up Inc. said there was no evidence information was removed, but could not confirm whether the data was viewed or copied." The Fund "said the data may have included first names, home addresses, dates of birth, designated beneficiary information, and SFERS website user names and passwords."

Op-Ed: Strengthening Supplier Ownership Key Element In Defending Supply Chains.

In an op-ed in Federal Computer Week (6/3, 263K), Erik Ekwurze, chief technology officer for Dun & Bradstreet Government Solutions, writes, "The Defense Department supply chain has become an attractive target to adversaries looking to compromise US military capabilities, critical infrastructure, national security intelligence and intellectual property. ...The NCSC warned in its 2018 report, Foreign Economic Espionage in Cyberspace, of 'pervasive threats posed by foreign intelligence services and other threat actors' against US research, development and manufacturing sectors." To address the issue, "the biggest recent development has been the Defense Department's effort to develop a standardized, accredited risk assessment regime, called the Cybersecurity Maturity Model Certification (CMMC)." He contends, "The CMMC initiative is critical because it makes cybersecurity a far more prominent factor when assessing supply chain risk. But that, by itself, is not sufficient at a time when there is so little visibility into who actually owns the sub-tier suppliers of our defense industrial base."

Cyberspace Solarium Commission White Paper Calls For Expand Connected Device Security Bill.

NextGov (6/3, Baksh) reports the congressionally established Cyberspace Solarium Commission "said in a new white paper that legislation requiring manufacturers of connected devices to enable reasonable cybersecurity measures should apply not just to products they sell to the federal government but to all customers." In releasing the 'pandemic annex' Tuesday, the commission "is capitalizing on the attention focused on responding to the public health crisis to emphasize and augment its recommendations for digitizing critical services." The annex reads, "The proposed Internet of Things Cybersecurity Improvement Act of 2019 provides a viable model for a federal law that mandates that connected devices procured by the federal government have reasonable security measures in place, but should be expanded to cover all devices sold or offered for sale in the US."

Europe Moving Toward New Sanctions On Russia For Hacking.

Politico (6/3, Cerulus, 4.29M) reports the EU is getting ready "to slap sanctions on a group of Russian hackers, according to three diplomats involved – a move that would mark a turning point in the bloc's efforts to address foreign hacking." The sanctions, which may take place before yearend, "come after the German government announced it 'had evidence' tying members of a Russian hacking group to the cyberattack on the Bundestag in 2015." Diplomats arrived in Brussels to "discuss the Bundestag hack and whether they should respond using a new cyber sanctions regime." European countries have weighed "sanctioning foreign nationals and entities involved in hacking for months, but talks were mired in secrecy as governments weighed their options." That shifted after Chancellor Angela Merkel "said last month that Berlin could not 'simply ignore' an 'outrageous' attack, and her government called for an EU response."

Federal Reserve

Fed Approves Expansion Of $500B Municipal Lending Facility.

The AP (6/3, Crutsinger) reports the Federal Reserve approved an expansion of its Municipal Liquidity Facility, a $500 billion emergency funding program for state and local governments. The Fed's board approved the change on Wednesday 5-0. The program was previously expanded after initially being limited to larger counties and cities. Some in Congress "complained that the Fed's population restrictions would keep more lower population areas from participating."

Reuters (6/3, Dunsmuir) reports the Fed also said Wednesday that it would permit transit agencies, airports, utilities, and others to borrow from the program. The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Gillers, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports more than 380 issuers could draw from the program, up from about 260 before the recent changes.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC's Brooks: Swaps Margin Relief, Volcker Rule Overhaul Nearly Done.

Bloomberg (6/3, Hamilton, 4.73M) reports federal banking regulators are set to resume easing Wall Street rules after focusing on helping the financial system weather the coronavirus pandemic, according to Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks. Their first steps “include the resumption of work on plans to dial back lenders’ margin requirements by billions of dollars,” as well as “finishing an overhaul of Volcker Rule curbs on banks’ involvement in certain investment funds.” In an interview, Brooks said the OCC, the Fed, and the FDIC could issue new rules as soon as this month. Brooks, who came to the OCC from Coinbase Inc., said he aims to be the “first fintech comptroller.” He said, “I think we can charter a number of institutions, some of whom are current applicants that have their roots in technology.” After approving bank charters for fintechs “fairly far along in the pipeline,” the OCC “will further explore more specialized fintech charters and charters for payments firms, he said.”

Consumer Groups Criticize OCC For “Madden Fix.”

CU Today (6/3) reports consumer groups “are blasting” the OCC for a final rule they say “encourages online non-bank lenders to launder their loans through banks so they can offer high-cost triple-digit loans in states where such loans are illegal.” The rule is intended to clarify legal uncertainty created by the “Madden” decision. According to the groups, the rule could facilitate predatory lending or “rent-a-bank” schemes to evade state interest rate caps.

Challenger Bank Varo Money Raises $241M In New Funding.

American Banker (6/3, Cross, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports challenger bank Varo Money closed a new funding round totaling $241 million, bringing its total-to-date to $419.4 million. CEO and founder Colin Walsh says the funding will enable the firm to complete its banking charter. Walsh said in a press release, “Varo was founded first and foremost to make a powerful impact on systemic financial inequality in communities across this country. ... This new investment will enable us to complete the chartering process and leverage our modern banking technology to build on our track record of innovation and inclusion.” The firm expects to be approved as a national bank this summer, and is working to meet conditions from the Office of the Comptroller of Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and the Federal Reserve. Varo would be the first fintech “among several similar applicants to get the green light from federal regulators.”

Big Banks See More Than $11B In Overdraft Fees In 2019.

The New York Times (6/3, Walsh, 18.61M) reports large US banks took $11.68 billion in overdraft fees in 2019, according to research by the Center for Responsible Lending. The research found that vulnerable customers were by far the hardest hit, with nine percent of account holders paying 84 percent of the overdraft fees. The organization is pushing for banks to halt overdraft fees during the pandemic.

Banks Focus On Cost Cutting To Protect Bottom Line.

American Banker (6/3, Dobbs, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports banks will put cost cutting front and center in an effort to boost their bottom lines amid limited growth opportunities. Bruce Van Saun, chairman and CEO of Citizens Financial Group, said, “You’ve got to keep looking at your expense base,” adding, “We’ve got to go back again and look for even more [cuts] because clearly we didn’t anticipate that the Fed was going to go” so low with rates. Kevin Fitzsimmons, an analyst at D.A. Davidson, said, “Banks will focus on what they can control – as opposed to taking any undue risks as they work through all this,” adding, “Given the difficult revenue environment, and inevitable credit challenges, costs will be the one area that banks can control.”

BofA’s Moynihan: Urgent Response Needed By Business Community To George Floyd Killing.

Bloomberg (6/3, 4.73M) reports Bank of America CEO Brian Moynihan said in an interview Wednesday that an urgent response is needed to the killing of George Floyd by a Minneapolis police officer. Moynihan said, “Things aren’t going to quiet down. ... We should not let it quiet down as a business community. We have to redouble our efforts to make progress” on social and economic issues. The interview follows the bank’s pledge on Tuesday of $1 billion over four years toward addressing racial and economic inequality.

Citi Chair: Virus Crisis Allows Banks To “Change The Narrative.”

American Banker (6/3, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, “The coronavirus crisis has the potential to flip the narrative for banks and improve the industry’s reputation that has suffered greatly since the 2008 financial crisis, said Citigroup Chairman John Dugan.” In a recent podcast, Dugan said that unlike the 2008 financial crisis, this time around banks are part of the solution, having built up loan-loss reserves in anticipation of potential defaults. “In some ways, this crisis, the pandemic crisis, is an opportunity for banks to change the narrative. I think if they handle this well, they can get to the other side and point to a real-world stress test that they passed,” Dugan said.

Citi Chief Compliance Officer To Retire.

Reuters (6/3) reports Citigroup on Wednesday announced Chief Compliance Officer Mark Carawan will retire on June 8 after eight years with the firm. Mary McNiff, who currently serves as Citibank North America CEO, will take over the role, and Citigroup’s CEO Michael Corbat will serve as CEO of the Citibank division in addition to his current role.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

“The Virus Comes For The Most Vulnerable.” The coronavirus pandemic is “surging into the less developed parts of the world,” the Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) editorializes, threatening “progress in health, education and economic well-being.” Public health experts are worried “that as nations throw limited resources into fighting the pandemic, there will be less for fighting HIV/AIDs, malaria and tuberculosis.” According to the Post, “all of this will put extra demands on the WHO, which has been at the front lines of fighting disease in the developing world – and it’s more evidence that President Trump’s decision to abandon the WHO is irresponsible and damaging.”

“Literal Attacks On The Media.” The Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) in an editorial says that “increasing numbers of reporters and photographers covering the nationwide demonstrations against police brutality and racial injustice report being arrested, harassed or assaulted by police.” The Post comments that such behavior “might have been expected given the relentless campaign President Trump has waged against the media.” The Post adds that “governors, mayors and police chiefs need to...hold to account those who violate” the safety of the press.

“The Best Of America Shows Itself.” The Washington Post (6/3, 14.2M) in an editorial cites examples of what it called “the best of America” in which “people who were angry and scared have acted with peace and compassion, defusing situations by protecting and embracing – sometimes literally – those whom others in their position might have feared.” The Post adds, “Today, we don’t have a president capable of such leadership. But other Americans, both famous and unknown, are stepping up and modeling an honorable way to fight for justice.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Lancet, HCL And Trump.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says a study published by the Lancet last month suggesting that hydroxychloroquine is dangerous may be based on questionable data, and the decision by the respected journal to publish without appropriate vetting shows it could have been politically motivated. The Journal also points out that Lancet editors published an editorial last month urging voters to not reelect President Trump, and concludes that politics should be left out of medicine.

“Boris Johnson’s Freedom Lesson.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) lauds the British government’s move toward permitting Hong Kong residents to emigrate to the US, and urges the Administration to follow suit.

“Unrigging the Poverty Trap.” The Wall Street Journal (6/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that a study published by the National Bureau of Economic Research shows how welfare benefits distort the incentive to work, making it more difficult for people to climb out of poverty. Researchers found that under the US system, with its multitude of tax and benefit programs, the poor can face a lifetime marginal net tax rate exceeding 70 percent.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "People are still protesting all across America, and I mean all across America. The only other thing Americans agree on this much is pumpable cheese, which is only slightly less toxic than systemic racism."

Stephen Colbert: "[Minnesota Attorney General Keith] Ellison took over the [Floyd] case on Sunday, and today he announced he will elevate charges against the former Minneapolis police officer who knelt on George Floyd's neck to second-degree murder, and will add charges of aiding and abetting murder against the other three officers at the scene. So, activism works. Justice is possible, easy-peasy, hold-protests-for-nine-days-straight-in-380-American-cities, squeezey."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, the night Donald Trump was elected, you might recall I was somewhat emotional. I started drinking, and someday I plan to stop. What I was worried about deep down is that Trump is a dictator fanboy. He's a lifetime subscriber to 'Tiger Beat Down The Protesters.' Now we're teetering dangerously close to Trump making his dreams our nightmare. On Monday, just so Trump could hobble across the street for a photo-op, military police and park rangers fired rubber bullets, tear gas, and flash grenades at peaceful protesters. It was like a little Tiananmen Square-- or in Trump's case 'Tiny Man Square.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On law enforcement clearing protesters for Trump's photo-op] "Trump went on the Fox News radio, where you can only hear him lying, and explained it wasn't really as bad as it really was." Trump: "That story was fake. They didn't use tear gas. They didn't use -- they moved them out." Colbert: "Remind me to never ask for Trump's help when I'm moving. 'Okay, Steve, I boxed up your wine glasses and your old DVDs. Now run like hell and shove a wet rag in your mouth, 'cause it is gas time. You promised me pizza, buddy.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump claiming he was in the White House bunker just to inspect it] "That is an all-time great excuse. So he was just checking to make sure the bunker was okay. 'I didn't poop my pants. I just ran diagnostics on my boxers to see if they were load-bearing. They are.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump's claim he does well with African Americans] "'That's why they're in the streets. They're celebrating how much they love me, and I'm joining the party by tossing them a six-pack of love gas. Those are just tears of joy.'"

Stephen Colbert: "An anonymous source in the Administration felt the need to push back on reports that Trump wanted to use tanks against protesters, insisting that 'The President wasn't ordering tanks to roll down the streets, but was inquiring about 'the kind of hardware' that could be used in military shows of force, and at one point Trump threw out the word 'tanks.' That's an interesting defense. 'Your honor, I didn't order nobody to kill 'Joey the Snake.' I was just inquiring about the general nature of accidents, and then I just threw out the word 'wood chipper.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On reports Trump wanted to use tanks on protesters] "The same official also floated the theory that instead of an order, Trump was just free-associating, saying 'tank' 'is just one of the military words he knows.' Wow. The commander in chief just throws out one of the military words he knows. I believe he knows five: tank, bullet, Colonel Sanders, Cap'n Crunch, and bone spur."

Stephen Colbert: "One of the hallmarks of American democracy is the US Armed Forces' proud tradition of remaining out of politics to emphasize civilian control of the military. Yet, on the way to this photo op that – again-- was preceded by attacking peaceful protesters, Esper and Milley walked with Trump across the street. It reminds me of the old joke: 'Why did the Defense Secretary and the Chairman of the joint Chiefs cross the road? Because the President is a chicken.'"

Stephen Colbert: "A Republican congressional aide, who's also a veteran, said that Esper and Milley 'have squandered the moral legitimacy of a nearly 245-year-old institution in a single farcical, late-spring promenade. They have no honor, and to hell with them both.' Buddy, they work for Donald Trump. They're already in hell."

Stephen Colbert: [On walking Trump to a photo-op after peaceful protesters were forcibly moved] "Now, yesterday, Esper defended the indefensible, saying, 'I didn't know where I was going.' You're the Secretary of Defense, and your defense is that you didn't know where you were going? The rest of us could see exactly where you were going. It rhymes with 'Yahtzee!' though not as fun for the whole family."

Stephen Colbert: [On Esper telling governors to dominate the battlespace] "People who grew up with a military lexicon use that phrase in all kinds of situations. 'Natalie, you're the love of my life. Will you make me the happiest man on earth by letting me dominate your battle space?' ... Yes, we must not allow some to suggest he's militarizing just because he's using the military."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, if a military crackdown seems familiar to you, you may work for the CIA, because one former analyst said of Trump's response to the protests, 'I've seen this kind of violence. This is what autocrats do. This is what happens in countries before a collapse.' And if you've seen Trump, you know he is always on the brink of collapse."

Stephen Colbert: "And it's not just the military, because now ICE and Border Agents are being deployed to help with protest enforcement. Oh, good! Let's cool things down with some famously reasonable and laid-back ICE agents. If that doesn't work, they can de-escalate by sending in some rabid badgers strapped with running chainsaws."

Stephen Colbert: "The Border Police are supposed to help guard facilities and conduct arrests, but when asked for more specifics, 'neither ICE nor Customs and Border Patrol was able to provide details on the number of agents or other resources they have deployed.' 'Look, we don't like to fuss over details. As long as, at the end of the day, the cage is full of kids, job well done.'"

Stephen Colbert: "To provide live video of protests in Minneapolis, CBP flew a predator drone. Oh, nothing says 'protecting free speech' like 'predator.' I can't wait for them to roll out their line of 'xenomorph info booths' and 'Thanos brand medical tents.' Getting rid of protesters is a snap!"

Stephen Colbert: "Cops have been meeting unarmed protesters while decked out in full military riot gear. Like yesterday in DC, where masked troops stood guard outside the Lincoln Memorial, to which Lincoln replied, 'Oh, now you're gonna protect me? A little late, fellas! I hope everyone enjoyed the end of the play!'"

Stephen Colbert: "In DC large armored military vehicles drove down the streets of the nation's capital. Secretary Esper, do you see where we're going now? It's so close, you don't need a ride. You could walk – although, really more of a goose step."

Stephen Colbert: "And just last night, in New York city, hundreds of protesters attempted to cross the Manhattan bridge after curfew, but ended up trapped on the bridge with police waiting on both ends. Marchers were stuck with no way out for over an hour. That's horrifying. The only reason New Yorkers should be trapped on a bridge for an hour is if they're in traffic trying to get to their coworker's wife's baby shower."

Jimmy Kimmel: "There have been protests now in all 50 states. That is a big deal; we can't even get all 50 states on board for Daylight Savings Time."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The Chinese government said they hope the United States will take concrete measures to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination. And when China is giving you a lecture on human rights, not a great sign."

Jimmy Kimmel: [On the White House Press Secretary comparing Trump to Churchill] "The only thing Donald Trump has in common with Winston Churchill is they wore the same size bra."

Jimmy Kimmel: [On Trump's photo-op in front of St. John's Episcopal Church] "He treated it like taking your kid to see Santa at the mall. 'You got the picture? Okay, let's get the hell out of here.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Turns out, you know whose idea that walk from the White House to the church was? Ivanka's. Trump's chief of staff said it was Ivanka's idea. And as a result, Ivanka has been demoted to Eric."

Jimmy Kimmel: "And with all this going on, the President has been tweeting up a storm about what a gift he is to Black Americans. This morning he wrote, 'I've done more for black Americans than any President in US history with the possible exception of the late great Abraham Lincoln.' And it's not even close. Lincoln ended slavery. Trump thinks it's possible Lincoln did more. This would actually be funny if it wasn't at all."

Jimmy Fallon: "After nine days of protests, a new poll found that pretty much everyone thinks President Trump is not doing a good job. ... Even worse for Trump, that poll was taken among his kids."

Jimmy Fallon: "When Trump saw his numbers, he started crying and then he was like, 'I'm not crying, it's the tear gas for my church photo shoot blowing back in my face.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "At this point, Trump should just go for 100 percent disapproval and take credit for uniting the country."

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, former President George Bush released a statement that some people think is a shot at Trump. He wrote, 'Those who set out to silence those voices don't understand the meaning of America or how it becomes a better place.' You know it's serious if they got George W. Bush to write words."

Jimmy Fallon: [On Pat Robertson chastising Trump] "You know we live in crazy times when we're agreeing with the guy that said gay people cause hurricanes."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump had lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo today. Pompeo ordered the chicken, and Trump ordered the tear gassing of peaceful protesters."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump tweeted yesterday that the Republican national convention will not be held in Charlotte because of social distancing restrictions put in place by North Carolina Governor Roy Cooper. So now the only place left is that pool in the Ozarks."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump claimed on Twitter yesterday that his Administration had, quote, 'done more for the black community than any President since Abraham Lincoln.' Are you serious? You've been terrible for the black community. That's like Godzilla bragging he's done a lot for the Japanese community."

Seth Meyers: "When asked by reporters yesterday if President Trump was projecting calm to the country, Republican Senator John Thune said Trump 'has moments.' Damn, that's what you say about someone on their death bed."

Seth Meyers: "Republican congressman and white supremacist Steve King lost his race in yesterday's Iowa primary, which is tough for King, because his race is like his favorite thing."

Seth Meyers: "Former Vice President Joe Biden spoke in Philadelphia yesterday and criticized President Trump's response to the protests against police violence across the country. Said Biden, 'If anyone's going to act racist in this country, it's going to be me accidentally.'"

House Democrats Press Mnuchin To Ensure United, Delta, Jet Blue Do Not Reduce Worker Hours

The Chicago Sun-Times (5/27, Sweet, 875K) reports Reps. Jan Schakowsky (D-IL) and Jesus Garcia (D-IL) "led a group of 75 House Democrats pressing Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin on Wednesday to do more to make sure United and other airlines bailed out by the federal government because of the COVID-19 crisis do not reduce worker hours before the end of September." They wrote that reducing hours "goes directly against this goal and places these airlines out of compliance with the CARES Act." They added, "United, Delta, and JetBlue airlines have all unilaterally cut workers hours – in some cases significantly decreasing these employees' pay and benefits." Politico (5/27, Snyder, 4.29M) also reports in its daily "Morning Transportation" rundown.

Lawmakers Reach Bipartisan Agreement On Lowering PPP Usage Requirement.

CQ Roll Call (5/27, Saksa, Tully-Mcmanus, 154K) reports Rep. Chip Roy (R-TX) "said Wednesday that negotiators agreed to adjust a key ratio in a program to relieve small businesses from the COVID-19 pandemic, lowering to 60 percent the portion of loans that must be used for payroll, from 75 percent currently, and giving borrowers more time to use any loans." Roy said in an interview "that he expects House and Senate leaders to reach a deal on how small businesses can use a $660 billion lifeline provided in two previous economic relief laws through the Paycheck Protection Program administered by the Small Business Administration." Roy, who introduced the bill with Rep. Dean Phillips (D-MN), said, "Our belief is it's moving forward and moving forward well." Phillips "put out a press release Wednesday touting the support of 45 business groups." Roll Call calls the bill "a compromise between the initial draft that would have eliminated it and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin's position last week that it should stay at 75 percent."

Congress Adjusts To Pandemic By Moving Whipping Operations Online.

The Hill (5/26, Brufke, 2.98M) reports the COVID-19 pandemic "has forced House leadership in both parties to get creative in how they go about whipping votes as lawmakers largely work remotely during the crisis." Given that lawmakers are "spread out around the country due to the pandemic, the whip teams for both parties have been forced to adapt their tactics, shifting vote-tallying operations to digital platforms." Lawmakers "said that one upside to the pandemic forcing much of Congress' business to go online is that it's been easier to secure guest speakers for meetings in a virtual setting." Minority Whip Steve Scalise "said Republicans have similarly been bringing in speakers and guests to talk on relevant topics during weekly calls and video meetings." Scalise said, "We've had everybody from Treasury Secretary [Steven] Mnuchin, putting together the Paycheck Protection Program, to [White House] chief of staff Mark Meadows when he first started in his role, and we've had heads of some of the big trade associations like the head of the National Restaurant Association and the head of a hotel association. So there's people that can get really good context to the challenges we're facing."

Development Bank Leader Says Typical US Leadership Missing.

Politico (5/27, Heath, 4.29M) reports European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) President Suma Chakrabati on Wednesday "accused the United States – its biggest shareholder – of a lack of leadership, and called for a new global agreement for development financing to help repair economic damage from the Covid-19 pandemic." Chakrabati, during a virtual event put on by Politico and The Atlantic Council, "said the amount of private and public financing now required to fix economies battered by coronavirus is a quantum leap beyond the current capacity of multilateral financial institutions," adding, "We need to go back to the drawing board." Chakrabati "said the U.S. was a leading force behind 'nearly all of the big initiatives' in his four-decade development career, including his bank's expansion into the Middle East and North Africa, adding that 'I would love to see the United States back in that sort of mood.'" According to Politico, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "is officially the U.S. EBRD board governor," but the US "is represented on a day-to-day basis by an 'executive director' based in London," a post that "is currently vacant, after the resignation of Judy Shelton." The current nominee for the position, J. Steven Dowd, "is awaiting Senate confirmation. Until then the U.S. is represented by Colin Mahoney, a U.S. Treasury official who was an intern as recently as 2012, according to his LinkedIn profile."

Marijuana Banking Rules Become More Opaque Amid COVID-19 Pandemic.

American Banker (5/27, Cotney, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the COVID-19 pandemic "has added another wrinkle to navigating state versus federal regulations when it comes to gaining access to banking services by marijuana-related businesses." Before the pandemic, "more than half the states in the U.S. had authorized some form of legalized marijuana use," and most of those states "declared marijuana sales to be 'essential,' and for those businesses to remain open, or at least offer delivery or curbside pickup." However, COVID-19 relief programs, "like the Paycheck Protection Program meant to help small businesses, do not extend to marijuana-related businesses, as well as many indirect marijuana businesses." Due to the cash-heavy nature of the marijuana industry, "policymakers, regulators, tax authorities and law enforcement have stressed the need for moving cash from marijuana sales into the traditional banking system." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "recently testified that marijuana businesses' lack of access to banking services is problematic and places IRS workers at risk."

Rubin: McConnell Rejecting State Aid Despite Support From Mnuchin, Powell, Bipartisan Governors.

In her column for The Washington Post (5/27, 14.2M), Jennifer Rubin says Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell "initially flatly rejected the House's Heroes Act for more than a trillion dollars in state and local aid to mitigate the impact of the pandemic – despite a 14.7 percent unemployment rate as well as bipartisan support for more spending from governors, the Federal Reserve chair and" Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin. McConnell now "says he will have a response in weeks – but don't count on anything approaching the size of the House bill." Rubin argues that McConnell's refusal "to help keep state and local first responders on payroll makes little political sense," and his "stalling and skimping makes even less economic sense." Rubin concludes that it is "mind-boggling that the White House has yet to grab McConnell by the lapels and holler at him to get going."

Rattner: Americans Need More Assistance To Weather Downturn.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (5/27, Rattner, 18.61M), Steven Rattner says that, "Like dutiful soldiers, President Trump's top economic advisers have been ardently echoing their boss's optimism about the likelihood of a quick economic snapback, while downplaying the need for another rescue package." Rattner says that's "dead wrong on both counts, as even Mr. Trump's pick to head the Federal Reserve, Jerome Powell, has countered repeatedly." According to Rattner, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "swiftly pushed back on Mr. Powell's warning, then called for a 30-day pause on new efforts." However, Rattner says that "could not be more wrong. Drafting thoughtful legislation takes time; we are already late in starting to rebuild America."

Commentary: Are COVID-19 Relief Efforts Working?

In a column for Bloomberg (5/27, O'Brien, Kaissar, 4.73M), Timothy L. O'Brien and Nir Kaissar say Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Fed Chair Jerome Powell "are presiding over the most massive economic bailout in U.S. history, a Herculean effort to blunt the impact of the coronavirus by buttressing workers and families, businesses and credit markets, the health care and education systems, and state and local governments with at least $5.7 trillion in public funds and guarantees." The House's recently-passed HEROES Act "highlights questions central to the rescue: Will it work? Is the money getting into the right hands? And how much needs to be spent?" Mnuchin, in his Senate Banking Committee testimony last week, "said coronavirus lockdowns were easing and he expected the economy to begin rebounding by late summer." Mnuchin said, "I am proud to have worked with all of you, on a bipartisan basis, to get relief into the hands of hardworking Americans and businesses as quickly as possible. ... While these are unprecedented and difficult times, these programs are making a positive impact on people."

Commentary: Treasury, Congress Must Act To Prevent Garnishment Of Pandemic Relief.

In an op-ed for Law360 (5/27, Subscription Publication, 8K), John Culhane and Lori Sommerfield write that, in its haste to pass the CARES Act, Congress "appears to have overlooked an important issue: to provide exemptions from garnishment by private creditors for federal stimulus payments for individuals and Paycheck Protection Program loan proceeds for small business owners." They argue this "legislative omission is causing additional financial pain for American families and frustration for creditors and debt collectors – while the banking industry is caught in the middle of the issue." They also "believe that the U.S. Department of the Treasury has been given authority under the CARES Act to remedy it." The writers say, "Section 2201(a) of the CARES Act authorizes the treasury secretary to issue guidance or a rule implementing that section. The exercise by the treasury secretary of that authority could quickly resolve the issue by making EIPs exempt from garnishment by creditors." However, they say, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin – "who is reported to have known about the issue since April 1 – has chosen not to exercise that authority." They conclude that the Treasury Department or Congress "must act expeditiously to protect these much-needed funds from garnishment before the issue is moot and consumers and small business owners experience harm."

KPMG To Treasury: Treat COVID-19 Relief Loans Like Debt, Make Loan-Funded Expenses Deductible.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (5/27, Flesch, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports KPMG is asking the Treasury Department to consider guaranteed business loans provided by the CARES Act to be debt for tax purposes, and to deem expenses paid for by the loans as tax deductible.

Trump To Sign Executive Order On Social Media.

Fox News (5/27, Phillips, 27.59M) reports on its website that the White House said the President "will sign an executive order on social media on Thursday." While White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "said Wednesday she could not get ahead of the president to explain the purpose and intent of the order," she "confirmed it would be coming then." The Washington Times (5/27, Boyer, 492K) provides similar coverage.

Politico (5/27, Lima, 4.29M) says the announcement "revived fears within the online industry that the Trump administration will target a 24-year-old statute that protects the companies from lawsuits – an avenue that a growing number of Republican lawmakers have advocated in their bias allegations about Silicon Valley." Politico cites a "senior administration official familiar with the issue," who "said the order, which will be broad and high level, would address complaints that the online platforms are deceiving people by acting like content moderators – picking and choosing what content to allow or block – instead of politically neutral platforms."

The move comes after the President on Wednesday threatened social media platforms with regulation or shut downs if conservative voices are silenced. In a tweet Wednesday morning, Trump wrote, "Republicans feel that Social Media Platforms totally silence conservatives voices. We will strongly regulate, or close them down, before we can ever allow this to happen. We saw what they attempted to do, and failed, in 2016. We can't let a more sophisticated version of that happen again. Just like we can't let large scale Mail-In Ballots take root in our Country. It would be a free for all on cheating, forgery and the theft of Ballots. Whoever cheated the most would win. Likewise, Social Media. Clean up your act, NOW!!!!" Later in the morning, Trump tweeted, "Twitter has now shown that everything we have been saying about them (and their other compatriots) is correct. Big action to follow!"

The Washington Times (5/27, Sherfinski, 492K) reports that the threat came after "Twitter attached fact-checking context to Mr. Trump's tweets for the first time on Tuesday." Ben Tracy said on the CBS Evening News (5/27, story 5, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.93M) that Twitter "fact-checked two of his tweets that falsely claimed mail-in voting leads to fraud."

Reuters (5/27, Heavey, Bose) says Trump's threat "was his strongest yet within a broader conservative backlash against Big Tech." Reuters notes that the biggest tech companies "have been accused of anti-competitive practices and violating user privacy. Apple, Google, Facebook and Amazon face antitrust probes" by the Justice Department, Federal Trade Commission, state attorneys general, and a congressional panel. The AP (5/27, Miller) says that while the Administration "has shelved a proposed executive order empowering the FCC to regulate technology companies, citing concerns it wouldn't pass legal muster," that "didn't stop Trump from angrily issuing strong warnings."

NBC Nightly News (5/27, story 3, 2:05, Holt, 6.89M) described Trump as "escalating" his "battle with Twitter," but added that "a president has no authority to shut down a private company, and the First Amendment limits the government's ability to regulate free speech." Similarly, USA Today (5/27, Tyko, 10.31M) says Trump "can't unilaterally regulate or close the companies, which would require action by Congress or the Federal Communications Commission."

To the Los Angeles Times (5/27, Bierman, Megerian, 4.64M), "like many of Trump's threats on Twitter and elsewhere, this one appears mostly about political posturing." Trump "enjoys a headline-grabbing fight, even with those most helpful to him. He has lambasted Fox News, former members of his administration, and senior Republican lawmakers at times, either out of anger or to keep them in line." The Washington Post (5/27, Dvoskin, 14.2M) reports that the Wall Street Journal "reported last week that Trump was considering creating a White House panel that would examine complaints of bias against conservatives on social media and other online platforms."

Bloomberg (5/27, 4.73M) report that in comments to White House reporters on Wednesday, White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway "said social media helps conservatives skirt the mainstream news media." Conway said, "The President's saying, 'Please stop suppressing conservative voices.'" Conway said in an interview with WLW-AM Cincinnati (5/27, 19K), "The President is very clear about social media not being a suppression tool for conservative voices. I found it really rich and ironic that the fact-checkers, quote-unquote, that Twitter relied upon were CNN and the Washington Post. They need to be fact-checked themselves." Conway added, "I think the President realizes that he is responsible for what I call the democratization of information, that the same people get a presidential communication all at the same time. ... He wants to make sure that conservative voices are not suppressed."

On Fox News' Fox & Friends (5/27, 831K), Conway said, "So many conservatives feel like they don't have a voice in the mainstream media. You've seen the statistics; they are unignorable. Fact check: over 90 percent of mainstream media reportedly vote for the Democratic presidential candidate. So many conservatives and many non-liberals and many non-voters feel like they have a platform on social media that allows them for free to express themselves. So we turn around and we use the same people who are going to endorse Joe Biden for president, reluctantly, are constantly attacking the President and the people around him, ... And they are relying upon the same people to attack him all day long to fact check him." Conway was also interviewed on WSB-AM Atlanta (5/27, 52K).

However, Politico (5/27, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that "public-interest groups and civil liberties advocates say there is no clear evidence that tech companies suppress conservative viewpoints." The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues in an editorial that Twitter's decision to attach the fact-check label to Trump's posts gave him evidence to make his point that social media and tech firms are out to get him and his followers. Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey, the Journal argues is priming social media platforms for government regulation.

The New York Times (5/27, Conger, Alba, 18.61M) reports that Trump supporters "swung into action" soon after Twitter added the label to his tweets. Trump supporters "targeted one of the company's executives for old tweets in which he had criticized the president and other Republicans." Lawmakers including Sens. Josh Hawley (R-MO) and Marco Rubio (R-FL) "said they would move to regulate Twitter." Conservative pundits "such as Trish Regan and websites like the Gateway Pundit decried the decision and accused Twitter of bias. The furor quickly spread through dozens of Facebook groups, Reddit forums and YouTube videos." The Times says, "The right-wing backlash against Twitter built even as some researchers questioned how effective the labels on Mr. Trump's tweets would be."

Court Ruling Suggests Trump's Anti-Twitter Push May Not Be Well Received. Politico (5/27, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports that a ruling Wednesday by the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals "is strong evidence that the courts are unlikely to be receptive to President Donald Trump's claims that he and his political supporters are being silenced by social media platforms like Twitter." The court "resoundingly rejected a lawsuit the conservative legal organization Freedom Watch and right-wing provocateur Laura Loomer filed in 2018 against four major technology companies: Google, Facebook, Twitter, and Apple." The decision "is dismissive of a wide range of legal claims some conservatives and liberals have leveled at social media firms in recent months. The appeals court judges said that despite the companies' power, they cannot violate the First Amendment because it only regulates governments, not the private sector."

Zuckerberg Criticizes Twitter For Fact-Checking Trump. Fox News (5/27, Halon, 27.59M) reports on its website that Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg criticized Twitter for fact-checking Trump. In an interview set to air on Fox News' Daily Briefing Thursday, Zuckerberg said privately-owned digital platforms should not be the "arbiter of truth." Zuckerberg said, "We have a different policy than, I think, Twitter on this. ... I just believe strongly that Facebook shouldn't be the arbiter of truth of everything that people say online. ... Private companies probably shouldn't be, especially these platform companies, shouldn't be in the position of doing that."

Twitter's Top Censor Has Posted Anti-Trump Tweets. In a piece for The Federalist (5/27, Reynolds, 126K), Ellen Reynolds cites "anti-Trump tweets by Yoel Roth, Twitter's Head of Site Integrity since July 2018," as "the latest example of the extreme leftward slant and double standards held by those at the helm of Silicon Valley social media giants." On Election Night 2016, Roth tweeted, "I'm just saying, we fly over those states that voter for a racist tangerine for a reason." While Roth "is free to express his political views," the New York Post's Jon Levine, who resurfaced the tweets, "points out, Roth's job description means he 'leads the teams responsible for developing and enforcing Twitter's rules.'"

Twitter Allows Photo Falsely Linking Minnesota Cop To "Make Whites Great Again" Hat. Breitbart (5/27, Caplan, 673K) reports that Twitter has not taken action after "several verified accounts on Wednesday posted a photo falsely linking a Minneapolis police officer – infamous after he was caught on video kneeling on a now-deceased black man's neck – with a man wearing a 'Make Whites Great Again' baseball hat." Users upset with the officer, who is believed to be Derek Chauvin, "began sharing a photo collage which falsely suggests is wearing a red baseball hat that reads 'Make Whites Great Again.'" But "the man on the right is not Chauvin but appears to resemble former federal prisoner Jonathan Lee Riches."

Twitter Fact-Checks Chinese Official After Questions About Double Standard For Trump. The New York Post (5/27, Nelson, 4.57M) reports that amid "an apparent double standard in its lack of fact-check warnings on tweets by a Chinese government spokesman versus the hardline it took with President Trump this week, Twitter on Wednesday added notations to the postings, which falsely accused the US government of causing the coronavirus pandemic." When The Post "asked Twitter spokeswoman Liz Kelley whether the company would similarly annotate Zhao Lijian's dubious March tweets, she said they would not add fact-check warnings 'at this time.'" But Kelly "later said the company had changed its mind" and "after further review, we've added labels to these two tweets."

Twitter Facing Pressure After Trump Pushes Baseless Conspiracy Theory About Scarborough. On ABC's Good Morning America (5/27, 3.47M), Cecilia Vega said the Trump has "repeatedly spread a baseless murder conspiracy to smear MSNBC host Joe Scarborough." Paula Reid said on CBS This Morning (5/27, 2.79M) that Twitter "has been facing pressure" after the President "pushed a baseless conspiracy theory accusing" Scarborough "of killing his former staff member, Lori Klausutis." According to Reid, Klausutis "suffered a heart condition that caused her to fall and hit her head in Scarborough's office in 2001. A medical examiner ruled her death an accident." Peter Alexander said on NBC's Today (5/27, 3.33M) that Twitter is "under fire" for the "incendiary tweets falsely suggesting...Scarborough may have been personally involved" the death.

The New York Times (5/27, Grynbaum, Tracy, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports that "some of President Trump's most stalwart media defenders broke ranks with him...aghast at his baseless smears against" Scarborough. The Times says "the backlash even spread to the senior levels of Mr. Trump's party on Capitol Hill," where Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) said the President "should drop the matter." However, according to the Times, "The vast majority of Republican officials have kept silent...and the most prominent conservative voices on Fox News, like Sean Hannity, let the subject go unmentioned on recent broadcasts." The Times points out that Trump's repeated accusations against Scarborough have drawn criticism from right-of-center outlets including the Wall Street Journal, the New York Post and the Washington Examiner.

The Washington Post (5/27, Wagner, Kane, 14.2M) reports that House Minority Leader McCarthy "declined to weigh in...on a baseless conspiracy theory being promoted by...Trump, saying he did not serve with the former congressman whom the president has falsely linked to the death of a staff member."

Despite the criticism, Trump raised the issue again on Wednesday. The Hill (5/27, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports. Minutes before Scarborough's morning show concluded, Trump tweeted, "Psycho Joe Scarborough is rattled, not only by his bad ratings but all of the things and facts that are coming out on the internet about opening a Cold Case. He knows what is happening!"

A Washington Post (5/27, 14.2M) editorial argues that while Twitter "has provoked outrage for its refusal to remove disgraceful tweets" from Trump about the death of Scarborough's aide, "the debate shouldn't obscure the obvious: The bigger problem is the president." Trump's messages "are not only instructive in their vileness: They also have potential to do great damage. Twitter should develop a more coherent framework to deal with speech by world leaders; with real-world harm, including harassment; and with misinformation – and to articulate how they knit together in this case and in others."

Romney Defends Scarborough, Tells Trump "Enough Already." The Washington Times (5/27, Blake, 492K) reports Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) called on Trump to stop pushing the conspiracy theory. Romney "took to Twitter to defend Mr. Scarborough" and urge the President "to stop spreading the conspiracy theory to spare the aide's widower Timothy J. Klausutis the anguish it brings." Romney tweeted, "I know Joe Scarborough. Joe is a friend of mine. I don't know T.J. Klausutis. Joe can weather vile, baseless accusations but T.J.? His heart is breaking. Enough already."

Scalia: Americans Should Be Looking To Pivot From "$600 Plus-Up."

Labor Secretary Scalia said on Fox Business' Making Money (5/27), "When the CARES Act was enacted, one of the really important supports that it included for American workers that $600 plus-up on top of the regular state unemployment compensation. It was at a time where our governments, states and locales were prohibiting people from getting to the work place. We had never been in a situation like that and we wanted to tide people over for what we expected to be a short period of time when in many places they couldn't get to work. ... We're now in a very different phase. We're pivoting. We're reopening."

Boeing Laying Off More Than 12,000 Workers.

The AP (5/27, Koenig) reports that Boeing is "cutting more than 12,000 jobs through layoffs and buyouts as the coronavirus pandemic seizes the travel industry. And the aircraft maker says more cuts are coming." The AP adds that Boeing "had said it would cut 10% of a workforce that numbered about 160,000," and "a Boeing spokesperson said Wednesday's actions represent the largest number of job cuts, but several thousand additional jobs will be eliminated in the next few months."

Reuters (5/27, Shepardson) reports that in April, Boeing "recorded zero orders for the second time this year and customers canceled another 108 orders for its grounded 737 MAX plane, compounding its worst start to a year since 1962." According to Reuters, Boeing "said it expects to resume 737 MAX deliveries in the third quarter following regulatory approvals, with production re-starting at low rates in the second quarter before gradually increasing to 31 per month during 2021." Politico (5/27, Gurciullo, 4.29M) also covers Boeing's announcement.

GE Sells Light Bulb Business.

The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Gryta, Lombardo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports General Electric is exiting the business of making light bulbs after reaching a deal worth about $250 million to sell the unit to Savant Systems, a provider of smart-home technology. GE has recently been engaged in seeking buyers for some of its businesses in order to lower its debt burden.

Scrutiny Over Executive Compensation Could Intensify Amid Coronavirus Layoffs.

The AP (5/27, Choe) reports, "The typical pay package for CEOs at the biggest U.S. companies topped $12.3 million last year, and the gap between the boss and their workforces widened further, according to AP's annual survey of executive compensation." Median pay for CEOs in the survey rose 4.1 percent last year, while "for the typical worker at their companies, it rose 3.2%." The AP notes "the survey's results are from before the coronavirus pandemic upended everything." Now, there's a possibility "the outbreak will do what rising anger about income inequality has not in recent years: pull executive compensation lower."

Nissan, Renault Unveil Plan To Reboot Alliance.

The New York Times (5/27, Dooley, Ewing, 18.61M) reports, "Nissan and Renault, the quarrelsome main partners in the world's largest automaking alliance, announced a plan on Wednesday to try to reset their troubled relationship as they seek to survive the coronavirus's devastating impact on the car industry." The plan "seeks to more clearly delineate each company's turf so they can better absorb catastrophic declines in sales while developing new technologies they need to remain competitive." Under the reshaped alliance, "Nissan will be the dominant partner in Japan, China and the United States, while Renault will take the lead in Europe, Russia, Africa and Latin America." Also, Nissan will "take the lead on development of autonomous driving technology and Renault will be in charge of developing electric vehicles."

Arizona AG Files Lawsuit Accusing Google Of "Unfair Practices" To Gain Access To User Data.

The Washington Examiner (5/27, Neale, 448K) reports, "The attorney general of Arizona filed a consumer fraud lawsuit against Google, alleging the technology company uses 'unfair practices' to gain access to user data." Mark Brnovich announced the lawsuit "in a tweet posted Wednesday night that accused Google of exploiting data to fund its 'lucrative advertising business.'" He wrote, "Today we filed a consumer fraud lawsuit against Google for deceptive and unfair practices used to obtain users' location data, which Google then exploits for its lucrative advertising business."

US Surpasses 100,000 Deaths From Coronavirus.

On NBC Nightly News (5/27, story 2, 3:20, Holt, 6.89M), Miguel Almaguer reported that as the US "struggles to protect public health and open the economy, a grim reminder of what is at stake and already lost. The US coronavirus death toll now rising above 100,000." The CBS Evening News (5/27, lead story, 3:50, O'Donnell, 4.93M) reported "more than 100,000 lives have been lost to the coronavirus nationwide. ... 100,000 souls lost not to a war or to terrorism, but to a virus that didn't exist just a few months ago, to an illness that does not discriminate or show mercy." The AP (5/27, Johnson, Haigh, Pane) reports that early on, President Trump "downplayed the severity of the coronavirus and called it no worse than the common flu. He previously predicted the country wouldn't reach this death toll." Critics have said deaths soared "because Trump was slow to respond, but he has contended on Twitter that it could have been 20 times higher without his actions."

The Washington Post (5/27, A1, Parker, 14.2M) reports that as the US reached the "bleak milestone this week," President Trump has been "uncharacteristically silent." The President's "public schedule this week contains no special commemoration, no moment of silence, no collective sharing of grief." Instead, his "most direct comments so far on the number came in a pair of tweets Tuesday, amounting to a preemptive rebuttal." Trump wrote, "For all of the political hacks out there, if I hadn't done my job well, & early, we would have lost 1 1/2 to 2 Million People, as opposed to the 100,000 plus that looks like will be the number. That's 15 to 20 times more than we will lose."

The Washington Post (5/27, Fisher, 14.2M) reports, "Nearly three months into the brunt of the epidemic, 14 percent of Americans say they know someone who has succumbed to the virus." However, "the demise of these 100,000 people has had strangely little public impact in a country with a long history of honoring its fallen and committing to common cause in their memory." Americans have "responded to the coronavirus pandemic with outpourings of gratitude – New Yorkers' nightly chorus of cheers for health-care workers, for example – and widespread cooperation, including extraordinary, quick pivots to staying at home and wearing masks." However, "there have been few expressions of public grief – no gold stars in the windows of homes where people died, no outcry for national unity or memorials, as happened after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks."

On ABC World News Tonight (5/27, lead story, 4:10, Muir, 8.26M), Eva Pilgrim reported the President so far on Wednesday had not addressed the milestone, but Joe Biden did release a message, saying, "There are moments so heart-rending that are fixed in all of our hearts. A shared grief. Today is one of those moments."

Networks Remember Those Lost To Coronavirus. The CBS Evening News (5/27, story 7, 2:25, O'Donnell, 4.93M) reported, "We've heard so many numbers over the months, how many cases, how many deaths, but each one of those numbers represents a life that deserves to be remembered, not as a victim of COVID but as someone who was loved, with a unique life story." Likewise, ABC World News Tonight (5/27, story 4, 6:35, Muir, 8.26M) paid "respects to the Americans who lost their lives to coronavirus," and shared "some of their stories."

Trump Cites China Travel Ban In Disputing Criticism He Was Slow To Respond To Coronavirus. On Twitter, President Trump on Wednesday posted, "The Radical Left Lamestream Media, together with their partner, the Do Nothing Democrats, are trying to spread a new narrative that President Trump was slow in reacting to Covid 19. Wrong, I was very fast, even doing the Ban on China long before anybody thought necessary!"

Trump Touts US Testing. President Trump on Wednesday touted the US testing for coronavirus, tweeting, "We pass 15,000,000 Tests Today, by far the most in the World. Open Safely!"

Experts Say Coronavirus Will Impact Daily Life For Foreseeable Future. USA Today (5/27, Ortiz, 10.31M) spoke with "experts in a variety of fields, including public health, business, history, social sciences and the hospitality industry, to get an assessment of what the new normal may look like in the next 100 days. The consensus: It's going to be a bumpy ride." The article looks at the impact of the pandemic on the workplace, schools, and transportation. It also adds that the pandemic could further exacerbate "the country's deep political polarization."

In an article titled "Coronavirus May Never Go Away, Even With A Vaccine," the Washington Post (5/27, Wan, Johnson, 14.2M) reports "even after a vaccine is discovered and deployed, the coronavirus will likely remain for decades to come, circulating among the world's population," much like HIV, measles, and chickenpox. Experts say "embracing that reality is crucial to the next phase of America's pandemic response." They say "the long-term nature" of the disease "should serve as a call to arms for the public, a road map for the trillions of dollars Congress is spending and a fixed navigational point for the nation's current, chaotic state-by-state patchwork strategy."

Trump Planning Fourth Of July Parade In DC Despite Democrats' Concerns.

USA Today (5/27, Wu, 10.31M) reports President Trump "plans to push ahead with plans for a July 4 parade in Washington, D.C., despite objections from local lawmakers and the city's prohibition on gatherings of more than 10 people as it enters a phased reopening on Friday." White House spokesperson Judd Deere said, "As President Trump has said, there will be an Independence Day celebration this year and it will have a different look than 2019 to ensure the health and safety of those attending." On Tuesday, lawmakers representing the Washington region "sent a letter to the Secretaries of Defense and the Interior to state their opposition to the plan."

DC To Begin Reopening On Friday. The Hill (5/27, Sullivan, 2.98M) reports District of Columbia Mayor Muriel Bowser (D) on Wednesday announced "that the city will lift its stay-at-home order on Friday and enter phase one of reopening." She "said that the virus is still circulating but said the city had met its metrics of a 14-day decline in community spread of the virus as well as adequate testing and hospital capacity." Bowser "acknowledged that there are risks of an uptick in infections with reopening."

The New York Times (5/27, Steinhauer, 18.61M) reports, "The northern suburbs of Virginia will also begin limited reopenings on Friday, while suburban counties in Maryland remain shuttered, underscoring the challenges that the region faces with boundaries that its residents crisscross daily." The Washington metropolitan area is "among the most interconnected regions in the nation, with a shared public transportation system and entwined economies. The region's unusual symbiosis is further complicated by the movements of congressional lawmakers in and out of town and a mercurial White House, all posing difficulties for the governors of Maryland and Virginia and the mayor of the District of Columbia – a city that lacks the autonomy of states with the same or smaller populations – as they move to bring their economies back to life."

After Meeting With Trump, Cuomo Blasts Republicans Hesitant About Aid For States.

The Washington Post (5/27, 14.2M) reports that speaking to reporters after meeting with President Trump at the White House yesterday, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "delivered a fiery defense of federal funding to states that have been hit hard by the coronavirus," and mentioned critics such as Senate Majority Leader McConnell and Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) "by name." Said Cuomo, "Stop abusing New York. Stop abusing New Jersey. ... Stop abusing the states who bore the brunt of the COVID virus through no fault of their own." According to the Post, "At one point, Cuomo accused Republicans of misrepresenting data on which states receive more net federal funding each year." Cuomo is quoted as saying, "When they make it personal to New York and they're lying, I'm going to point it out. ... They get more money every year. Why should my state give a handout to Sen. McConnell every year?"

Reuters (5/27, Chiacu) reports Cuomo said his meeting with Trump "focused on how to 'supercharge' the economy by investing in infrastructure, and he called on Republicans to approve federal funding to state and local governments crippled by the coronavirus pandemic." Cuomo said, "Pass a piece of legislation that is honorable and decent and does the right thing for all Americans. Why is that so hard?"

The New York Times (5/27, 18.61M) reports that "among the projects on the agenda was the plan to build new rail tunnels under the Hudson River, a project known as Gateway; the expansion of the Second Avenue Subway; and an AirTrain to La Guardia Airport. Mr. Cuomo said. ... 'We have major infrastructure projects in New York that are ready to go, that are desperately needed, that were desperately needed 30 years ago,' Mr. Cuomo said." the Times adds, "All the projects discussed required some level of federal funding or approval," and Cuomo "urged Mr. Trump to help 'get the bureaucracy to move faster' so work could begin." Bloomberg (5/27, 4.73M) reports that New York "plans to fast-track LaGuardia Airport and Penn Station renovations, and Cuomo called for more renewable energy."

The New York Post (5/27, Bowden, Hogan, Feis, 4.57M) reports Cuomo is also "attacking The Post for shining light on his widely-panned state policy barring nursing homes from turning away coronavirus-positive patients, which may have fueled more than 5,000 deaths in the facilities." Cuomo told reporters, "There are columnists who made this point at The Post who are 100 percent supportive of Donald Trump and that's fine – but then believe, you know, we have to kill all Democrats."

Verma Disputes Cuomo's Claim About Federal Nursing Home Advisement. CMS Administrator Verma was asked on the Brian Kilmeade Show (5/27) if, as Cuomo claimed, the Administration advised states to put COVID-positive seniors back into nursing homes. Verma said, "Absolutely not. President Trump took very early action when it came to nursing homes. We prohibited visitors. We put out guidance to the nursing homes and the states and we had a call to action around states really focusing on their nursing homes because we knew they were the most vulnerable. The issue that the governor is bringing up, which I disagree with, is that somehow federal guidance said you should put people who are COVID-positive in a nursing home."

Fauci Warns About Hydroxychloroquine, Party Conventions.

Politico (5/27, Brennan, 4.29M) reports that in a Wednesday appearance on CNN, NIAID Director Fauci "became the first Trump administration official to say definitively that hydroxychloroquine is not an effective treatment for the coronavirus, based on the available data." Fauci is quoted as saying, "The scientific data is really quite evident now about the lack of efficacy." Politico says Fauci "stopped short of calling for an outright ban of the drug, which President Trump said he was taking last week as a preventative measure after a top White House aide was diagnosed with the coronavirus."

The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Restuccia, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Fauci also urged caution over party conventions planned for later this summer. Fauci said officials should "reserve judgment" on moving forward until they have a better idea on whether COVID-19 indicators are improving.

Fauci Says He Wears A Mask As A "Symbol" Of What People "Should Be Doing." USA Today (5/27, Wu, 10.31M) reports Fauci "said Wednesday he wears a mask as a 'symbol' of what 'you should be doing' during the coronavirus pandemic." During his appearance on CNN, Fauci said, "I want to protect myself and protect others, and also because I want to make it be a symbol for people to see that that's the kind of thing you should be doing." While Fauci "acknowledged masks aren't '100% effective,'" he said they are a "valuable safeguard" and part of "respect for another person."

Perdue: Trump Asked USDA To Develop "Farmers To Families Food Box" Program.

Agriculture Secretary Perdue said on WJAS-AM (Pittsburgh (5/27, 2K), "When the coronavirus hit, many people, frankly including me, didn't realize we had such dual supply chains. One supply chain, from production to processing, was used to serve the institutional market. ... It was heartbreaking to see good healthy wholesome vegetables being plowed under with no market.” Perdue added that the Farmers to Families Food Box program “is the solution to helping that kind of production move to families in need. ... The President was the one, when he started reading the press about products and produce having to be destroyed, he called me and said, ‘Sonny we have got to do something about this.’ He said, ‘We need a plan. Bring me a plan.’”

FDA Relaxes Food Labeling, Information Rules. The Washington Post (5/27, Reiley, 14.2M) reports the FDA “has temporarily loosened labeling and information rules for food manufacturers for the fifth time during the novel coronavirus pandemic.” The FDA’s rule changes “are intended to ease manufacturers’ supply-chain snags, but advocacy groups say they are concerned that the changes will become permanent and that they will present problems for consumers concerned about tracking the provenance of their food.” The new guidance “allows manufacturers to substitute hard-to-source ingredients in their products without changing the label. And it allows vending machine operators latitude to omit calorie information for foods sold.”

Hargan: Reopening Debate Is Not “Just About Health Versus Dollars.”

Deputy HHS Secretary Eric Hargan said on WRKO-AM Boston (5/27, 9K). “It not just about health versus the economy. ... It’s also a matter of different kinds of healthcare which are sorting themselves out in different ways as we move through prolonged lockouts at the state and local level. So it is not just about health versus dollars. It’s really about balancing health versus health is how we have been talking about it because a lockdown imposes its own costs from a healthcare point of view. ... The concern we have is that Americans aren’t getting themselves to those healthcare clinics and hospitals that are going to allow them to get care, necessary care for themselves.”

McConnell Defends Mask-Wearing, Social Distancing.

Politico (5/27, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell “made an extensive pitch for Americans to don face masks as a means to begin returning the country to normalcy while the coronavirus remains a threat.” McConnell said at a Kentucky event, “There’s no stigma attached to wearing a mask. There’s no stigma attached to staying six feet apart.”

CNBC’s Kernen Accused By Co-Host Of Trying To Boost Trump.

The Washington Post (5/27, Telford, 14.2M) reports that Andrew Ross Sorkin and Joe Kernen, the hosts of CNBC’s Squawk Box, on Wednesday “got into a shouting match” after Sorkin “accused his co-host of downplaying the dangers of the pandemic, including the loss of 100,000 American lives.” The Post says Kernen “retorted that Sorkin was being an alarmist and sparking undue concern, and maintained that his goal was to help investors keep a cool head.” According to the Post, Sorkin “interrupted, suggesting Kernen had repeatedly made light of the pandemic to support President Trump.” Sorkin shouted, “100,000 people died, Joe, and all you did was try to help your friend the President. ... Every single morning on this show you abused and used your position.”

Former Pelosi Aides Helped Dozens Of Companies Lobby On Relief Legislation.

The Washington Free Beacon (5/27, Goodman, 78K) reports former aides to House Speaker Pelosi have “raked in hundreds of thousands of dollars this year as registered lobbyists on coronavirus-related issues and legislation, according to federal disclosure records reviewed by the Washington Free Beacon.” At least seven former aides have “registered as lobbyists on behalf of dozens of companies seeking benefits from coronavirus-related legislation.” The records show how “coronavirus relief legislation sparked a lobbying bonanza in Washington, D.C., this spring, benefiting well-connected former political staffers on both sides of the aisle.”

NSF Spending Millions To Fund Coronavirus Research Projects.

The Washington Times (5/27, A1, Dinan, 492K) reports the National Science Foundation has “doled out more than $75 million in what is known as Rapid Response Research or ‘RAPID’ grant funding over the last couple of months, as it seeks to improve understanding of the pandemic.” There are “projects to test how to extend the life of the N95 masks that can filter out the coronavirus, or to use algorithms to try to figure out which already approved drugs can be repurposed to try to treat COVID-19. It is also funding “more experimental ideas such as testing whether drones can be used to apply disinfectant over a large area, or whether smarter ventilation in public buildings can reduce the spread of the virus. However, “the NSF is also spending millions of dollars on softer social sciences, such as sociology and cultural anthropology investigations that critics say look a lot like the sort of work journalists publish, free to taxpayers, every day.”

Researchers Racing To Develop Test For Coronavirus-Associated Syndrome Affecting Kids.

NBC Nightly News (5/27, story 7, 1:55, Holt, 6.89M) reported on the effort “to develop a new blood test to identify the mystery illness striking children likely related to COVID-19.” NBC’s Willem Marx added that “scientists say they are close to designing new blood tests to confirm the presence immediately.”

With Stay-At-Home Orders Lifted, Contact Tracing Ramps Up.

On NBC Nightly News (5/27, story 8, 2:25, Holt, 6.89M), Catie Beck provided a look at “an average day in the life of a contact tracer.” Beck reported, “Without stay-at-home orders in place, tracers become the best tool to flatten the curve.” Beck added, “Some estimates say the nationwide need for contact tracers could produce as many as 300,000 jobs. Many who find themselves unemployed are now applying for them."

Federalist's Justice: Democrats Skirting Lockdown Rules.

In a piece for The Federalist (5/27, Justice, 126K), Tristan Justice writes, "Those leading the charge to keep America closed seem to have a problem living under their own rules." On Tuesday, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) was "caught in hot water when her husband sought expedited boat service to take the family out on a lake in northern Michigan." Meanwhile, Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker (D) and "his family have been spending time on their farms in Florida and Wisconsin while Pritzker keeps the state on lockdown." In Virginia, Gov. Ralph Northam (D) was "spotted mingling with reporters and constituents on Virginia Beach without wearing a mask even as the governor urged residents to don face coverings when out in public." And in New Mexico, Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham (D) "stands accused of opening up a jewelry shop to buy an item after ordering all non-essential businesses closed."

KRQE-TV Albuquerque, NM (5/27, 35K) reports on its website that Lujan Grisham's spokesman said "the store was not opened for the governor and stated that 'turning the key inside a door to 'open' a store wouldn't violate the order....'" The governor's office also "says this was an unusual transaction and while 'of course the governor has been telling people to stay home to the greatest extent possible, it also true she's been urging New Mexicans to find ways to support local businesses."

Whitmer Accused Of Lying About Husband's Call To Dock Company. The Detroit News (5/27, Mauger, 825K) reports Senate Leader Mike Shirkey on Wednesday accused Whitmer of lying, "saying she had initially 'directed her team to deny' a story about her husband attempting to speed up the launch of his boat during the COVID-19 pandemic." During a speech on the Senate floor, Shirkey asked, "How can the citizens of Michigan trust the governor? What else is she willing to lie about if she lied about putting a boat into water?" In response, spokeswoman Tiffany Brown "said the Republican Senate majority leader's remarks were 'incorrect and unfair' and he owed the governor an apology."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on WLW-AM Cincinnati (5/27, 19K), "People are suffering right now. That is precisely why the President wants to reopen the country and he has given the states the latitude to do that" but "many of these red state governors and some of these powder blue state governors have done so and other ones refuse to. Look at hypocrite and now-caught liar [Whitmer]. She wants Michiganders to stay home indefinitely. ... Everything is closed except her ability to audition for Joe Biden's VP and her husband calling and looking for a special favor to get his boat in the water. .. It is fine for thee but not for me with some of these blue state governors and I fear that they're creating a pandemic within a pandemic." Conway was also interviewed on WSB-AM Atlanta (5/27, 52K).

California Coronavirus Cases Top 100,000.

The Los Angeles Times (5/27, Fry, Parvini, Luna, 4.64M) reports that the number of coronavirus infections in California "surpassed 100,000 Wednesday," marking the fourth state to surpass 100,000 confirmed cases.

Coronavirus Patients From Mexico Swamping Southern California Hospitals. The Washington Post (5/27, 14.2M) reports that "as Mexico's health-care system has strained under the coronavirus, small community hospitals in Southern California, some of the poorest in the state, have been flooded with Americans who have fallen ill and crossed the border." According to the Post, "They are retirees and dual citizens, Americans working in Mexico or visiting family there." The Post says that "approximately half of the coronavirus patients in several California border hospitals...are recent arrivals from Mexico."

Falwell Jr. Says He'll Only Wear A Mask With Virginia Governor's Blackface Photo.

The Week (5/27, Krawczyk, 1.94M) reports Jerry Falwell Jr. responded to the mask mandate announced by Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) by revealing on Wednesday "he'd ordered a mask printed with the blackface photo found on Northam's college yearbook page – something anyone who sees Falwell wearing the mask will likely not know." While the governor "said he had worn blackface before, he maintained that he wasn't either of the men in the photo, and a three-month investigation couldn't prove it was or wasn't him." The photo on Falwell's mask, "without any context or explanation," might mean "those unfamiliar with Northam's scandal will likely just think Falwell is wearing a racist photo."

NYC Faces Challenges As It Seeks To Recover From Coronavirus.

The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Hilsenrath, King, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on the challenges facing New York City as it seeks to recover from the impact of the coronavirus pandemic and that what happens in New York City may be insightful for other cities affected by the virus.

Chicago Releases Plan For Reopening Restaurants.

The New York Post (5/27, Feis, 4.57M) reports Chicago has released a "13-page list of guidelines for how its eateries can safely resume on-premises service amid the coronavirus pandemic. ... Tables will be placed at least six feet apart, or have a permanent barrier, such as Plexiglass, installed between them, while parties at one table should be capped at six people," according to the guidelines.

Disney World To Reopen On July 11.

USA Today (5/27, Tate, 10.31M) reports Walt Disney World plans to reopen July 11. Jim McPhee, Senior Vice President of Operations for Walt Disney World, "said the company plans a phased reopening of the park, with the Magic Kingdom and Animal Kingdom opening on July 11," and Epcot and Disney's Hollywood Studios reopening on July 15. Officials in Orange County, Florida and Gov. Ron DeSantis (D), however, "must approve Disney's plan."

The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Schwartzel, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that visitors and staff will be required to wear masks and undergo temperature checks before entering the park. In addition, parades and fireworks presentations will be suspended. The Washington Post (5/27, Zeitchik, 14.2M), among other news outlets, also reports the reopening.

MSNBC Reporter "Called Out" After Shaming Passerby About Not Wearing Mask.

The Washington Times (5/27, Chasmar, 492K) reports MSNBC reporter Cal Perry was "called out during a live segment over Memorial Day weekend after he attempted to shame a Wisconsin passerby for not wearing a mask, before the man quickly pointed out that neither was Mr. Perry's crew." Perry was "reporting live from Lake Geneva on Monday where he claimed that he hadn't met 'anybody' there who was concerned about their own personal safety, and that 'no one' there was wearing face masks to prevent the spread of the coronavirus." Directing the cameraman to a passerby, Perry said, "As you can see, no one is wearing them." The man retorted, "Half your crew's not wearing them."

Warren, Haaland: Federal Government Failing Native Communities During Pandemic.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and Rep. Deb Haaland (D-NM) write for the Washington Post (5/26, 14.2M) that thus far the US government has "failed to protect American Indians' and Alaska Natives' health" both before and during the coronavirus pandemic, chronically underfunding the Indian Health Service and continuing "a tragic pattern of broken promises to native nations" by shorting them on pandemic aid funding and access to the Strategic National Stockpile. Now, the coronavirus' "terrible impact in Indian Country underscores that the federal government must live up to its unique legal and moral obligations to native nations and act as a partner to help build security and resiliency," the authors write, actions that are supported by "a bipartisan majority of Americans."

Trump Says Obama Administration Spied On His Campaign And Senate.

President Trump tweeted Wednesday at 7:31 a.m., "New papers make CLEAR that the Obama Administration SPIED, in an unprecedented manner, on the Trump Campaign and beyond, and even on the United States Senate. Nobody would ever have believed that this level of illegality and corruption would be taking place in our beautiful USA!" Seven minutes later, the President tweeted, "OBAMAGATE MAKES WATERGATE LOOK LIKE SMALL POTATOES!"

Politico Analysis: Rubio Reluctant To Embrace Anti-Obama/Biden Probes. Politico (5/27, Desiderio, 4.29M) reports that as Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) "assumes the acting chairmanship of the Senate Intelligence Committee," he is "distancing himself from a GOP-led probe targeting Hunter Biden," and "has declined to embrace Trump's 'Obamagate' claims. And he is warning the Republicans spearheading the Biden investigation not to promote Russian disinformation in the process." Rubio said last week, "I'm not going to accuse any member who believes that they are exercising oversight to be colluding with a foreign power. I will say to you that I think it's pretty clear that the Russians are constantly pursuing narratives that they believe will drive conflict in our politics and divide us against each other."

Graham Says Rosenstein Will Testify On Russia Probe Next Week.

The AP (5/27, Tucker) reports Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham said Wednesday that ex-Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein will testify before the panel next week "on the Justice Department's Russia investigation. ... The hearings are part of a broader effort by allies" of the President "to call into question decisions and actions made during the Russia investigation." Reuters (5/27) reports Graham said Rosenstein "would offer 'new revelations' about federal surveillance practices." The Washington Times (5/27, Mordock, 492K) reports, "In a statement Mr. Rosenstein said he was 'grateful' for the opportunity to discuss the FBI and Justice Department's decision-making as it probed alleged ties between the Trump campaign and Russia."

The New York Times (5/27, Benner, 18.61M) says Graham "is among the Trump allies who have sought to conflate the broader Russia investigation with narrower aspects of it that an independent watchdog has faulted." Graham said that Rosenstein would address findings in a report by DOJ IG Michael Horowitz "that investigators' applications to wiretap a former Trump campaign adviser, Carter Page, were riddled with errors and other problems." The Washington Examiner (5/27, Dunleavy, 448K) and Politico (5/27, Desiderio) also have reports.

Tony Shaffer of the London Center for Policy Research writes in the Daily Caller (5/27, Shaffer, 716K), "The Democrats' 'Russian collusion' crusade was never about national security – and now the American people are finally learning the truth. ... The entire Russian collusion hoax was put in motion even before" Trump became the GOP presidential nominee, and after Trump's unexpected election, the Obama Administration "was left with no choice but to shift gears from insurance to vengeance. We're only beginning to scratch the surface of this scandal, but what we've already discovered should shock even the most cynical Americans."

AP Analysis: Russia Inquiry Probe Could Have Election Impact. The AP (5/27, Tucker, Balsamo) says in an analysis that while Attorney General Barr does not expect "a criminal inquiry into the origins of the Russia investigation to target" former President Obama or Joe Biden, "that doesn't mean the investigation. ... The inquiry could conclude this summer, meaning fresh revelations might be exploited by Trump in the heat of the election season to damage Biden or to attack the Obama administration."

FISA Bill "Collapsed" Due To Opposition From Trump, GOP.

The Washington Post (5/27, Nakashima, Debonis, 14.2M) reports the effort to pass the overhaul package "collapsed Wednesday evening, falling victim to presidential tweets, opposition from the Justice Department and the fracturing of a fragile coalition among liberals, moderates and conservatives." The pulling of the bill "came a day after the president tweeted his disfavor, ostensibly on grounds that it fails to address what he calls 'the greatest political, criminal, and subversive scandal in USA history.'"

The AP (5/27) reports the legislation was imperiled after President Trump, the DOJ, and congressional Republicans "all came out in opposition." The legislation "passed the House with bipartisan support in March" after Attorney General Barr "negotiated a deal with Republican and Democratic House leaders. But that consensus began to crumble after Trump signaled he would veto the latest version of the bill." The President tweeted Wednesday afternoon, "WARRANTLESS SURVEILLANCE OF AMERICANS IS WRONG!"

Politico (5/27, Ferris, Caygle, Cheney, Bresnahan, 4.29M) reports House Speaker Pelosi made "a last-ditch attempt to salvage [the] contentious bill...amid mounting opposition from Republicans and liberals in their own party." The Washington Examiner (5/27, Yilek, 448K) reported earlier that the DOJ said Barr would have recommend a presidential veto of the bill. The Hill (5/27, Rodrigo, Carney, 2.98M) and CQ Roll Call (5/27, Lesniewski, 154K) also report on the prospects for the bill.

Verma, Conway Tout Administration Plan To Cap Insulin Costs For Medicare Patients.

CMS Administrator Verma was asked on the Brian Kilmeade Show (5/27) about the Administration plan that will cap costs on insulin for Medicare patients. Verma said, "This is really a massive step in the President's efforts to lower drug pricing. We know that there has been just a lot of regulatory barriers. We had hoped that Congress would take action but because they didn't, we didn't want to wait. We wanted to do everything we could to lower prices. So, essentially what we have done is get rid of an Obamacare provision that prevents plans from lowering out-of-pocket costs for seniors and it essentially allows them to do this and also the manufacturers to increase their discounts for patients." Verma added that it is "really a historic step for the Administration and for drug proving because it shows that the private market can work when the incentives are appropriately aligned."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on WLW-AM Cincinnati (5/27, 19K) that the insulin agreement will "result in a 66 percent reduction in out-of-pocket costs for insulin users among our seniors. About one in three Medicare recipients say they have diabetes and millions use one or more forms of insulin. They will now see a maximum $35 a month co-pay. That gives them accessibility, affordability, and most importantly, it gives them consistency and predictability." Conway added, "This really comes on the heels of three consecutive years in which the Medicare Part D premiums have declined under President Trump." Conway was also interviewed on WSB-AM Atlanta (5/27, 52K).

Trump Jr.: Democrats Are "Official Party For Illegal Immigrants."

The Washington Examiner (5/27, Soellner, 448K) reports Donald Trump Jr. "dubbed the Democratic Party 'the official party for illegal immigrants' in an op-ed for the Hill, accusing the party's members of putting the interests of illegal residents" over citizens. Trump Jr. writes in The Hill (5/27, 2.98M), "It's far easier to acknowledge that the Democratic Party unequivocally supports illegal immigration and open borders than it is to do the mental gymnastics necessary to construct the fantasy that the Democratic Party actually believes in a lawful, limited immigration system."

CBP Seizes $2.4M Worth Of Methamphetamine In Border Vehicle Inspection.

The Washington Examiner (5/27, Ortiz-Lytle, 448K) reports Customs and Border Protection officers "seized 172 pounds of methamphetamine during a vehicle inspection" at the World Trade Bridge in Laredo, Texas on Monday. The drugs "have a street value of $2.4 million."

Huawei CFO One Step Closer To Being Extradited To US.

The New York Times (5/27, Sherlock, Bilefsky, 18.61M) reports that Meng Wanzhou, the chief financial officer of Huawei, "came one step closer to standing trial in the United States on sweeping fraud charges after a Canadian court ruled on Wednesday that prosecutors had satisfied a critical legal requirement for her extradition from Canada." Meng "will have another chance to fight for her release at a June 15 hearing on whether her rights were violated during her arrest at the Vancouver airport in December 2018." Meng's arrest has "thrust Canada into the middle of a diplomatic struggle between the United States and China – over trade, theft of technology secrets and whether Huawei's efforts in helping countries build 5G next-generation mobile networks present a threat to national security."

Reuters (5/27, Warburton, Vikander) reports that the Global Times, "published by the People's Daily, the official newspaper of China's ruling Communist Party, said the ruling 'will make Canada a pathetic clown and a scapegoat in the fight between China and the U.S.'" The Wall Street Journal (5/27, McNish, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the judge's ruling.

Trump Says He Has Asked For Floyd Investigation "To Be Expedited."

President Trump tweeted Wednesday, "At my request, the FBI and the Department of Justice are already well into an investigation as to the very sad and tragic death in Minnesota of George Floyd. I have asked for this investigation to be expedited and greatly appreciate all of the work done by local law enforcement. My heart goes out to George's family and friends. Justice will be served!" On ABC World News Tonight (5/27, story 2, 4:25, Muir, 8.26M), Alex Perez reports Trump addressed the case on Wednesday. Trump said, "I'm very sad about it. Very, very sad, sad event." The Washington Post (5/27, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports that Joe Biden also "condemned the death of an African American man after he was taken into police custody in Minnesota, referring to the incident as a 'horrific killing' that required a civil rights investigation by federal authorities."

On the CBS Evening News (5/27, story 4, 2:25, 4.93M), Norah O'Donnell reported on "new developments in the death of George Floyd, the unarmed Black man in Minneapolis who died while in police custody. ... The mayor says he wants the police officer who pressed his knee to Floyd's neck to be prosecuted." CBS' Jeff McCabe: "New cell phone video shows the initial arrest. Officers are seen taking George Floyd out of his vehicle. ... A handcuffed Floyd is walked across the street toward a police car. In the distance, you can see Floyd fall. In this newly circulated video, three officers have Floyd pinned on the ground, while another stands over them. You can hear Floyd pleading for air. ... The officer who pressed his knee to Floyd's neck has been identified as Derek Chauvin. He doesn't let up until the 46-year-old's listless body is put on a stretcher. ... He was later pronounced dead at the hospital."

Reuters (5/27, O'Brien) reports Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey (D) "called on prosecutors to file criminal charges" against Chauvin, who "along with three others involved in the apprehension of George Floyd" was "dismissed from the police force on Tuesday, the day after the deadly incident unfolded in Minnesota's largest city." Frey said at a news briefing, "Why is the man who killed George Floyd not in jail? If you had done it or I had done it we would be behind bars right now." The Washington Post (5/27, Chiu, 14.2M) reports, "Visibly emotional, Frey said precedent encouraged him 'not to speak out. Not to act so quickly. And I've wrestled with more than anything else in the last 36 hours one fundamental question: Why is the man who killed George Floyd not in jail?'"

The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Ailworth, Kesling, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports protests continued in the city on Wednesday evening, turning violent in some cases. On NBC Nightly News (5/27, lead story, 3:05, Holt, 6.89M), Gabe Gutierrez reported, "Crowds of protesters clashed with police" Tuesday night, and "hundreds of protesters gathered outside of [a] police precinct" on Wednesday. The Minneapolis Star Tribune (5/27, 1.04M) reports, "In a series of clashes at the Third Precinct, rocks and bottles were thrown at police Wednesday, and they responded with tear gas and flash grenades."

Civil rights and trial attorney Ben Crump writes in the Washington Post (5/27, Crump, 14.2M), "This cascade of recent cases – Ahmaud Arbery, jogging while black; Breonna Taylor, sleeping while black; and most recently, George Floyd, encountering police while black – has sharpened the focus of all Americans on two inescapable realities: Our society and its institutions place a perilously low value on black lives, and it's inherently dangerous to be black in America."

NYTimes Analysis: Minneapolis Police Have Been "Long Accused Of Racism." In an analysis piece titled "Minneapolis Police, Long Accused Of Racism, Face Wrath Of Wounded City," the New York Times (5/27, A1, Furber, Eligon, Burch, 18.61M) says "excessive force complaints against Minneapolis officers have become commonplace, especially by African-American residents." Chauvin "had several complaints filed against him, three of which led to reprimands for his language and tone." African Americans "account for about 20 percent of the city's population, but they are more likely to be pulled over, arrested and have force used against them than white residents." African Americans "accounted for more than 60 percent of the victims in Minneapolis police shootings from late 2009 through May 2019, data shows."

DeVos Says School Districts Will Have To Share CARES Act Funds With Private School Students.

The New York Times (5/27, Green, 18.61M) reports Education Secretary DeVos, "defiant amid criticism that she is using the coronavirus to pursue a long-sought agenda, said she will force public school districts to share a large portion of federal rescue funding with private school students, regardless of income." In a letter to the Council of Chief State School Officers last week, DeVos wrote, "The CARES Act is a special, pandemic-related appropriation to benefit all American students, teachers and families. There is nothing in the act suggesting Congress intended to discriminate between children based on public or nonpublic school attendance, as you seem to do. The virus affects everyone."

High Schools Innovate To Hold Graduation Ceremonies.

The CBS Evening News (5/27, story 10, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.93M) aired a feature on how some high schools are handling graduation ceremonies with schools shut down, focusing on a ceremony held at the Texas Motor Speedway, where social distancing was possible.

WPost: Congress Should Bring Internet To Those Who Lack It.

A Washington Post (5/27, Board, 14.2M) editorial says that while the digital divide "was a problem before the pandemic," it is now "an existential problem for students who can't access live-streamed classes, for the ill who can't virtually consult with a doctor, for isolated individuals who can't find human connection on their laptop screens." The Post calls on Congress to "do whatever it can during this crisis to bring the Internet to those who don't have it and to ensure that those who do have it don't lose it. But it should also be working for a country after the crisis, forged by the crisis, with resilient, secure and universally available connection."

White House Declines To Detail Reasons For Ouster Of IGs.

The AP (5/27) reports that the White House maintains that President Trump "followed the law when he fired multiple inspectors general in the last two months," but has "offered no new details about why the internal watchdogs were let go." Sen. Charles Grassley (R-IA), identified as "a longtime, self-appointed defender of inspectors general and congressional oversight...requested that the White House explain the basis for the firings in April and May of the inspectors general for the intelligence community and the State Department." White House Counsel Pat Cipollone's response "does not provide those details, instead making the points that Trump has the authority to remove inspectors general."

Pompeo's Board Of CIA Advisers Draws Scrutiny.

Politico (5/27, Bertrand, 4.29M) reports that when he was Director of the CIA, Secretary of State Pompeo "put together an undisclosed board of outside advisers...that some at the agency viewed as inappropriately weighted toward wealthy individuals and well-connected political figures." According to Politico, "The advisers were often treated to elaborate multiday experiences that included 'lavish' dinners, classified briefings, and at least one trip to the CIA's secret training facilities, the sources said." The events planned for Pompeo's external advisory board "didn't run afoul of any laws," but "several former senior CIA officials...said they thought the then-director 'crossed a line' in his use of the external advisory board to charm business leaders and influential political figures."

WSJournal Takes Issue With Criticism Of Hassett.

A Wall Street Journal (5/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial takes issue with criticism of White House economic adviser Kevin Hassett after he said in an interview, "Our human capital stock is ready to get back to work." The Journal points out that Democrats and liberal media outlets blasted Hassett for his use of the term "human capital stock" which they claim is rooted in slavery. The Journal says it is the term economists use for the knowledge and skills workers gain through education, training, and experience.

Complaint Alleges Pharmacy Retailers Were Complicit In Perpetuating Opioid Crisis.

The New York Times (5/27, Hoffman, 18.61M) reports, "Through years of lawsuits and rising public anger over the opioid epidemic, the big American pharmacy retailers have largely eluded scrutiny." However, "a new court filing Wednesday morning asserts that pharmacies including CVS, Rite Aid, Walgreens and Giant Eagle as well as those operated by Walmart were as complicit in perpetuating the crisis as the manufacturers and distributors of the addictive drugs." According to the complaint filed by two Ohio counties in federal court in Cleveland, "the retailers sold millions of pills in tiny communities, offered bonuses for high-volume pharmacists and even worked directly with drug manufacturers to promote opioids as safe and effective."

Trump Praises "Hard Work And Leadership" Of NASA And SpaceX After Launch Scrubbed.

Norah O'Donnell reported on the CBS Evening News (5/27, story 2, 2:10, 4.93M), "History will have to wait, at least a few more days. The first launch of astronauts on a private rocket was scrubbed late today because of the one thing SpaceX cannot control: the weather. Storms with lightning can pose a major threat to spacecraft, but they'll try again over the weekend." Gio Benitez reported on ABC World News Tonight (5/27, story 3, 1:45, Muir, 8.26M), "With less than 20 minutes to go," the launch was "aborted. The next time they can launch is Saturday at 3:22 p.m."

On NBC Nightly News (5/27, story 3, 2:05, Holt, 6.89M), Peter Alexander reported, "Ahead of today's scrubbed launch, President Trump tour[ed] NASA's campus, striking an uplifting note." Trump: "Great achievement for our country and our country is number one." Alexander: "Members of the President's family traveling with him wearing masks, the First Lady seen wearing her mask aboard Marine One."

The AP (5/27, Freking, Madhani) reports that Trump's "plan to celebrate the first space launch of American astronauts from U.S. soil in nearly a decade...hit a snag when the mission was postponed at the last minute because of bad weather." The President tweeted after the launch was scrubbed, "Thank you to @NASA and @SpaceX for their hard work and leadership. Look forward to being back with you on Saturday!" Politico (5/27, Bender, Feldscher, 4.29M) says the President "considers the mission a major step in revitalizing the space program and ushering in a new era for more routine trips not only for NASA but private entrepreneurs and eventually even average citizens."

Earlier in the day, several Administration officials discussed the significance of the launch. Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (5/27, 831K), NASA Administrator Bridenstine said, "We have put astronauts on brand new space craft four times...Mercury, Gemini, Apollo and the shuttle program. And now we are doing it on a SpaceX Falcon Nine rocket with a crew, Dragon. This is very significant. ... We quit flying humans back in 2011 with the retirement of the space shuttles. ... America has to lead in space. ... The President just has been so amazingly supportive of space in general. We are talking about exploration, but also national security and defense."

NBC Nightly News (5/27, story 5, 2:15, Holt, 6.89M) showed Bridenstine saying, "NASA is entrusting the lives of astronauts to SpaceX and NASA. So we have had our engineers and our technicians working side-by-side with SpaceX this entire time, and, yes, we're confident." Bridenstine was also interviewed on KOTV-TV, Tulsa, OK (5/27, 31K) and in two segments on the Weather Channel (5/27, 100K).

In an appearance on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (5/27), Commerce Secretary Ross said, "What has happened is that, in contrast to 2011 when President Obama took us out of the space launch business that ended our leadership in space launch, now we are going to get it back. ... We were paying the Russians up to $86 million per seat to take our astronauts to our space station. That's now over with, and it's important both commercially and militarily."

NASA Deputy Administrator James Morhard said on KYW-TV Philadelphia (5/27, 43K), "You think about NASA and throughout its history, we've designed, we've built, and then launched and operated spacecraft and rockets. And this is the first time that we're using a commercial entity to really develop and build this rocket in a partnership with us. That's never happened before." Morhard was also interviewed on WBAL-AM Baltimore (5/27, 25K) and WMAL-AM Washington (5/27). NASA Chief of Staff Gabe Sherman also discussed the launch on KPRC-TV Houston (5/27, 50K), KSNV-TV Las Vegas (5/27, 12K), and Newsmax TV (5/27, 431K).

Politico Analysis: Trump And Musk Have "A Lot In Common." Politico (5/27, Nguyen, 4.29M) says Trump and SpaceX founder Elon Musk have "a lot in common." According to Politico, Musk "has lost some of his fan base in recent months...due to his frequent statements downplaying the severity" of the coronavirus pandemic, "his deliberate actions defying stay-at-home orders and his threat to uproot Tesla from California." However, Politico says Musk has also "gained new admirers – thanks to his public spats with California lawmakers over his desire to reopen his factories in spite of government orders, his desire to keep the lights on and, crucially, his growing disdain for media outlets such as CNN."

Trump Tweets Video Of Dobbs Calling Him Greatest President In History.

In a tweet Wednesday evening, President Trump posted a video of Fox Business host Lou Dobbs saying, "This President is not a politician. He is arguably the greatest President in our history." Trump wrote, "He is arguably the greatest president in our history.' Thank you @LouDobbs!"

In Tweet, Trump Touts His Accomplishments As President. President Trump on Wednesday responded to a tweet from Erick Erickson titled "Ex-Never Trumper Erick Erickson on GOP elite dilemma." In a responding tweet, Trump wrote, "Who else gave the less than elite (We are the elite. We know how to WIN!) 260 great new Federal Judges, 2 SCJ's, Low Taxes, biggest ever REG. CUTS, Rebuilt Military, Choice, saved 2A & MUCH more? Not Sleepy Joe! Thank you Erick."

Senate Democrats Take Aim At Trump's Judicial Nominations Adviser.

CNBC (5/27, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports on its website that Senate Minority Leader Schumer and other Democrats are scrutinizing one of President Trump's "outside advisors and his multimillion-dollar 'dark money' network for its work on the president's judicial nominations." Senate Democrats on Wednesday "published a report...that said that Leonard Leo, a conservative activist, and his influential network have rigged the judicial nominating and approval process." According to CNBC, "Since Trump became president in 2016, he has turned to Leo to help guide his selections for judicial appointments, including to the Supreme Court."

"Whisper Campaign" Says Thomas Is Considering Retiring From Supreme Court.

The Hill (5/26, Kruzel, 2.98M) reports that "the question of whether President Trump will get to select a third Supreme Court justice hangs over the final weeks of the court's term." Recent statements by leading Senate Republicans who "said they would confirm a new justice if given the chance despite 2020 being an election year," have "revived the unsubstantiated whisper campaign that [Justice Clarence] Thomas was considering retiring now to allow Republicans to replace him with a like-minded, though younger, jurist to lock down conservatives' 5-4 majority." Rumors of Thomas' departure have circulated since Trump's election.

Book Claims Bill Clinton Had Affair With Ghislaine Maxwell.

The New York Post (5/27, Goodman, Halper, 4.57M) reports that former President Bill Clinton had an affair Ghislaine Maxwell, "who is accused of helping recruit underage victims for notorious pedophile Jeffrey Epstein," according to the "blockbuster" new book "A Convenient Death: The Mysterious Demise of Jeffrey Epstein," by Alana Goodman and Daniel Halper. Clinton "reportedly engaged in the romps during overseas trips on Epstein's private plane, a customized Boeing 727 that's since become known as the 'Lolita Express.'"

AIDS Activist Kramer Dies.

ABC World News Tonight (5/27, story 6, 0:25, Muir, 8.26M) reported that "playwright and AIDS activist, Larry Kramer, has died." Kramer "he worked tirelessly to force the country to recognized AIDS as a public health emergency." He was "the founder of the Gay Men's Health Crisis, and the group ACT UP." NBC Nightly News (5/27, story 9, 2:25, Holt, 6.89M) provided similar coverage.

State Officials Have A Short Time To Decide Whether To Shift To Mail-In Voting.

Bloomberg (5/27, 4.73M) reports election officials "have just weeks left to ensure that their states can handle a surge of mail-in votes in November in the face of fierce opposition" from President Trump and other Republicans. According to Bloomberg, "With just a little more than five months to Election Day, localities and states need to decide soon whether to buy new equipment to help sort, verify and count mail-in ballots – if they can afford it – or rely on staff to manually handle the crush of incoming mail." Bloomberg adds, "The problem is particularly acute in the battleground states of Wisconsin and North Carolina, which have not traditionally had high rates of vote-by-mail and where Democratic governors are at odds with Republican-led legislatures over whether to expand absentee balloting.”

Texas Court Says Lack Of Immunity To COVID-19 Not A Physical Disability To Vote By Mail. In what the Dallas Morning News (5/27, Benning, 946K) describes as “a major victory” for Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton (R), the Texas Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that “lack of immunity to COVID-19 is not a physical disability that qualifies people to vote by mail.” Paxton “had argued that only a physical illness or disability that prevented voters from going to the polls should qualify people to vote by mail.” The ruling “is a loss for the Texas Democratic Party and voting rights groups who had pushed for expanded mail voting during the coronavirus pandemic and had won temporary victories in lower courts.”

President Trump highlighted the ruling in a tweet Wednesday night. Trump’s post, which included a link to the Dallas Morning News story, said, “Texas Supreme Court: Lack of immunity to COVID-19 alone not enough to vote by mail ... Big win in Texas on the dangerous Mail In Voting Scam!”

Poll: Battleground Voters Favor Trump Over Biden On Holding China Accountable For Pandemic.

In an exclusive, the Washington Times (5/27, Boyer, 492K) reports, “Voters in nine battleground states trust President Trump more than [Joe Biden] to hold China accountable for the coronavirus crisis, and they overwhelmingly support Republicans’ proposal to shield small businesses from lawsuits related to the pandemic, according to” an America First Policies survey taken “in states expected to decide the November contest: Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Michigan, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin. ... The nonprofit group promotes policies aligned with Mr. Trump’s agenda and is affiliated with the pro-Trump super PAC America First Action.” In the poll, 57% of those surveyed “favor punishing China for its role in the coronavirus outbreak,” and voters “gave Mr. Trump a 17-point advantage over” Biden, “50% to 33%, on being better able to stand up to China and hold it accountable for spreading the virus.”

Arizona Poll: Biden Leads Trump 47%-45%; McSally Trails Kelly 51%-41% In Senate Race. In an online report, KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (5/27, Stone, 125K) says that a HighGround Public Affairs Consultants poll of 400 likely Arizona voters, taken May 18-22, shows Biden leading Trump 47%-45%. A release accompanying the poll results said, “In the wake of the most challenging and arguably worst three months of his term, President Trump has shown that he can remain competitive in Arizona.” KTAR-FM added that the same poll shows Democratic ex-astronaut Mark Kelly leading appointed Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) 51%-41% in this fall’s special election.

National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 54%-43%. The Hill (5/27, Easley, 2.98M) reports that a Firehouse Strategies-Optimus national poll of 1,557 likely voters, taken May 16-23, shows Biden leading Trump 54%-43%. The findings mark “a 3 point gain for Biden over the same poll in March when he led 51 to 43. A Quinnipiac University survey released last week also found Biden ahead by 11 points but most recent national surveys show a closer race. Biden leads Trump by 5.5 points in the RealClearPolitics average.”

McClatchy Analysis: As Few As Five Percent Of Voters May Be Undecided On 2020 Race. McClatchy (5/27, Catanese, 19K) reports that Biden and Trump “campaign officials estimate” the “crop of swing voters only makes up somewhere around 5 percent of the total electorate in 2020, a considerably smaller available slice than in the last election. One pre-election panel found as many as 21 percent of voters were undecided in late October 2016. Recent national surveys from Fox News and The Economist found just 5 percent of voters said they didn’t know who they would choose in the presidential race. Both campaigns have already identified most of the voters in this small universe and are heavily targeting them with ads.” McClatchy says, “The potential voters who sit on the fence in 2020 tend to be younger than 50, college-educated and in the middle to upper-middle class income bracket.”

Trump Campaign Chief Of Staff Was Arrested On Campaign Finance Charges In 2016.

Business Insider (5/27, Samuelsohn, Cook, 3.67M) reports, “The newly promoted chief of staff for Donald Trump’s presidential campaign was arrested in Oklahoma in 2016 and charged with conspiracy to violate state election laws after police seized her then-boyfriend’s phone in a cocaine bust.” The report says, “Stephanie Alexander, previously the Trump campaign’s Midwest political director, was bumped up to chief of staff Tuesday.” Before “joining the Trump campaign, Alexander was active in state GOP politics in Oklahoma, where charges filed in 2016 allege that she participated in a conspiracy to illegally coordinate dark money in a 2014 race for state superintendent of public instruction.” She “pleaded not guilty, and the state dropped the charges in 2017 without explanation. Last month, a state judge granted Alexander’s request to both expunge and seal the court records on the case.”

Politico: Some Trump Allies Think Attacks On Biden Are Falling Short.

Pelosi Says GOP Should Not Hold In-Person Convention For Trump’s “Ego Trip.”

NBC News (5/27, 6.14M) reports on its website that House Speaker Pelosi “slammed President Trump’s insistence that the Republican National Convention occur as planned despite the pandemic, and suggested neither party had any business holding its massive quadrennial gathering given the risks to public health." Pelosi said, "I don't think there's anyone who would say at this point that tens of thousands of people should come together for a political convention, no matter how great an ego trip it is for somebody."

Biden Says He Hopes To Choose A Running Mate By August 1.

The Washington Post (5/27, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports that Joe Biden "told supporters Wednesday night that his campaign has interviewed every candidate on his short list to be his running mate and hoped to name the woman by Aug. 1." Speaking "during a virtual fundraiser with former presidential primary opponent and now top surrogate, Pete Buttigieg," Biden "said he's looking for someone whose views align with his, but who also brings different qualities to the ticket." Biden "added that he wants someone who isn't afraid to be 'completely candid' with him."

Biden Hires Obama, Clinton Aides To Expand Coalition Building. The Washington Post (5/27, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports that Joe Biden "has hired two aides to helm a new coalitions department modeled on President Barack Obama's reelection strategy, a campaign expansion that adds more racial diversity to his effort to win the White House." Ashley Allison, "a veteran of the Obama White House who is African American, is joining the Biden campaign as national coalitions director. Her deputy will be Jason Rodriguez, who served as the national deputy Latino vote director for Hillary Clinton in 2016 and has worked with the Congressional Black Caucus."

CNN's Bash Criticized From Left And Right Over Biden Interview. In an online article, Fox News (5/27, Flood, 27.59M) reports that CNN's Dana Bash on Tuesday spoke with Biden "in an interview that has been condemned by critics on both sides of the aisle. 'Naturally, Trump-hating and fear-loving CNN served Tuesday as Joe Biden's first in-person interview since the coronavirus pandemic began and, right on cue, [Bash] fulfilled her role as a real-life Bashful, liberal foot soldier, and citizen of Zuckerville. Between softball questions and assisting Biden in touting anti-Trump conspiracy theories, it was mission accomplished,' NewsBusters managing editor Curtis Houck wrote." Bash "was criticized from the left, too." Mediaite's Tommy Christopher decried the "extremely stupid questions" Biden was asked by Bash.

Rove: Biden Needs To Offer Clearer, More Cogent Responses To Interviewers' Questions. In his Wall Street Journal (5/27, Rove, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column, Karl Rove criticizes Biden for having said in a Friday interview, "If you have a problem figuring out whether you're for me or Trump, then you ain't black." Rove says the remark was stupid and an insult to African Americans. Rove that unless Biden can offer clearer, more cogent responses to questions, he would be better served by remaining at his home in Delaware.

California Prosecutors Investigating Whether Reade Lied Under Oath In Court Appearances.

In an online article, ABC News (5/27, Levine, 2.97M) reports, "Prosecutors in Monterey County, California, have opened a probe into whether Tara Reade," a former aide to then-Sen. Joe Biden who has accused him "of sexual assault nearly two decades ago, lied under oath when testifying in recent trials focused on domestic violence, the district attorney's office said. 'We are investigating whether [she] gave false testimony under oath,' Monterey County chief assistant district attorney Berkley Brannon said in a statement." ABC News adds, "It's unclear exactly which portions of her in-court appearances prosecutors are currently reviewing, but trial transcripts obtained by ABC News suggest she may have misstated her credentials several times."

Politico (5/27, Korecki, 4.29M) reports that Reade, "under the name Alexandra McCabe, for years testified as an expert in domestic violence cases for the California D.A.'s office. Among the issues is whether she lied about her credentials to qualify as an expert." According to Politico, Brannon "said the office does not yet know in how many cases Reade testified as an expert. 'We have no database or search engine to use to determine in how many cases she testified,' Brannon said. 'However, that effort is ongoing.'"

North Carolina Senate Race Expected To Be Expensive, Closely Contested Affair.

Reuters (5/27, Cornwell) reports that the race between Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) and Democrat Cal Cunningham "is widely considered a toss-up, and millions of dollars are pouring in. 'It's most likely going to be the most expensive race in US history. ... It'll be close,' Tillis said in an interview. Leading Democratic and Republican 'super PACs' that focus on Senate races said in March they are investing a combined $47.4 million in ad buys in North Carolina this year, more than they have planned for any other state so far."

Media Analyses: Embattled King Faces Peril In IA4's June 2 GOP Primary.

On the same day, five major news outlets are out with reports on the reelection race of Rep. Steve King (R-IA), who has stirred controversy over the years with a string of incendiary remarks. The Des Moines Register (5/27, Gruber-Miller, 404K) reports, "Except for 2018, when King faced a tough November race," he "has cruised to reelection every two years since he was first elected in 2002. This year is different: Iowa and national Republicans and GOP-aligned groups are splitting with King – either by siding with [GOP state Sen. Randy] Feenstra or sitting on the sidelines as King faces a competitive five-way primary on June 2." The Register adds, "King's opponents have leaned into the argument that King can't be effective in Congress since he was stripped of his committees" in the House in January 2019 "following remarks he made to the New York Times about white nationalism."

Under the headline "Steve King Is On The Ropes," Politico (5/27, Mutnick, 4.29M) reports, "Republicans have wanted to excise...King from their ranks for years." In the June 2 GOP primary, "they will have their best shot. The Iowa Republican with a history of racially-charged – sometimes racist – rhetoric on white nationalism, immigration and multiculturalism is facing his toughest race since he was elected to the House almost 20 years ago. He is underfunded, abandoned by longtime allies and down in the polls as a formidable coalition mobilizes against him in the GOP primary. Major Republican power players in Washington and Iowa...have ganged up to take him down."

The New York Times (5/27, Gabriel, 18.61M) reports, "The problem for mainstream Republicans who would like to retire Mr. King in a June 2 party primary is that, with four challengers in the race, all sensing an opportunity and aggressively campaigning, the anti-King vote will be split four ways. 'Not to be Captain Obvious, but four people in the race always helps the incumbent,' said Rick Bertrand, who challenged Mr. King in the Republican primary in 2016 but is not running this year. 'If this was a mano a mano race, King would be in trouble right now.'"

CQ Roll Call (5/27, Bowman, 154K) reports, "While it's rare for incumbents to lose primaries," King "is facing a close race against...Feenstra, who has outraised him and has help from outside groups ahead of Tuesday's primary. King has a history of making controversial and racist comments, but he's in trouble this year because his colleagues decided to punish him" by stripping "him of his committee assignments last year after he questioned when terms like 'white supremacist' became offensive." CQ Roll Call adds that "Feenstra and his allies have emphasized King's loss of influence in their closing messages to voters. Outside groups involved in the race have an additional motive: making sure King doesn't become a drag on other Iowa Republicans, especially Sen. Joni Ernst, in November."

Writing for Vanity Fair (5/27, 9.08M), Eric Lutz says that King's "litany of racist, xenophobic, and otherwise repugnant rhetoric has made him a liability for the party, and – without the power and influence that has insulated Donald Trump from GOP mutiny – everyone from fellow right-wingers to comparatively moderate Republicans have been gunning for his Iowa congressional seat in recent years. Now, it seems Republicans smell blood in the water: Ostracized by the GOP leadership in Washington, facing formidable challengers in next week's primary at home, and on his heels in both polls and campaign resources," King "is in danger of losing the seat he's held since 2013." Lutz adds that "Feenstra, his top competitor, has pulled even with the incumbent in recent polls."

Authors: Republicans Defying Rules Of Electoral Survival.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (5/27, Hacker, Pierson, 18.61M), Jacob S. Hacker and Paul Pierson, authors of the forthcoming "Let Them Eat Tweets: How the Right Rules in an Age of Extreme Inequality," write that the Republican Party's "most prominent leaders – particularly" President Trump and Senate Majority Leader McConnell – "have dug themselves into positions that defy all conventional rules of electoral survival." Top Republicans "are pulling out all the stops to do unpopular things and avoid doing popular things."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 43.5%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 43.5%, and his disapproval at 54.5%. The President's approval is down by 0.5 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.6.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (5/24-5/26) finds Trump's approval at 42%, and his disapproval at 57%.

An Economist/YouGov of 1,157 "registered voters" (5/23-5/26) shows Trump's approval at 45%, with 53% disapproving.

A Politico/Morning Consult survey of 1,986 "registered voters" (5/22-5/26), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 40%, and his disapproval at 57%.

Financial International News

EU's €750B Rescue Plan Released, Hailed As "Turning Point."

The Financial Times (5/27, Dodd, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen laid out a €750 billion COVID-19 rescue plan Wednesday, in what economy commissioner Paolo Gentiloni called a "European turning point to face an unprecedented crisis." Bloomberg (5/27, Ainger, 4.73M) and Barron's (5/27, Briançon, 1.07M), among other outlets, also report.

Bank Of Korea Cuts Interest Rates, Forecasts Worst Growth Year Since Asian Financial Crisis.

Reuters (5/28, Kim, Roh) reports South Korea's central bank "cut interest rates to a record low on Thursday as it warned the coronavirus pandemic would be worse for Asia's fourth-largest economy than the 2008 global financial crisis." The Bank of Korea's board "voted unanimously to cut its policy rate by a quarter of a percentage point to 0.5%, the lowest since the bank adopted the current system in 1999." The BOJ "also downgraded its 2020 economic projection to a 0.2% decline from 2.1% growth forecast in February" for what would be "the biggest contraction since 1998, during the Asian financial crisis." BOK Governor Lee Ju-yeol "said the bank is ready to ramp up government bond buying to soak up the massive public debt needed to cover the cost of new stimulus."

IMF Spokeswoman: Constructive Talks Ongoing With Lebanon Over Economic Reform Plan.

Reuters (5/27, Shalal) reports an IMF spokeswoman said Wednesday that the Fund is having "constructive, ongoing discussions with Lebanon about the details of the government's economic reform plan." The spokeswoman said, "The discussions are constructive and cover many areas including capital controls, financial sector restructuring, and structural reforms to address losses in the economy and to create conditions for higher and more inclusive growth."

Leading International News

EU Probes China Disinformation Leak.

Politico (5/27, Burchard, 4.29M) reports the EU's diplomatic service has launched an investigation "into the leaking of an internal email criticizing how a report on Chinese disinformation was edited." The investigation follows criticism by EU foreign policy chief Josep Borrell, "who appeared to blame a member of his own staff for leaking the sensitive email, which was at the heart of a scandal about the EU allegedly bowing to Chinese pressure." The European External Action Service spokesperson Peter Stano "said Wednesday that the institution was now investigating who was responsible for leaking the delicate email."

EU Proposes $825B In Emergency Grants.

The AP (5/27) reports the EU has "proposed a 750 billion-euro ($825 billion) recovery fund to help countries weather a painful recession triggered by the coronavirus and sought Wednesday to bridge divisions over the conditions that should be attached for access to the money." The fund, "to be mostly made up of grants and tied to the common budget of EU's 27 member nations, comes as the world's biggest trading bloc enters its deepest-ever recession, weighed down by the impact of the virus pandemic." According to the AP, "Virtually every country has broken the EU's deficit limit while spending to keep health care systems, businesses and jobs alive."

The New York Times (5/27, 18.61M) reports European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen "laid out the details of the proposed recovery package for its 27 member economies, especially those hit hardest by the coronavirus pandemic, before the European Parliament in Brussels." The fund will "distribute €500 billion worth of grants – free money that will not be added to national debt – to all 27 member states, with Italy getting the largest slice, followed by Spain." To the Times, "This is a crucial element of the recovery effort, which was opposed by some of the bloc's wealthier nations like the Netherlands and Sweden, but supported by both Germany and France."

The Washington Post (5/27, Birnbaum, Morris, 14.2M) says, "The proposal came after a change of heart in Germany, Europe's most powerful economy." Chancellor Angela Merkel "has always fiercely guarded her country's bank accounts from the E.U.'s weaker members," but "now, she has dramatically shifted her stance and is encouraging the E.U. to abandon old constraints, borrow money in vast quantities and channel the cash toward the needy nations." The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Norman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

A Wall Street Journal (5/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial, meanwhile, warns that supporters of a federal Europe should be wary of the plan's borrow-spend-and-tax scheme.

Deaths In Italy Top 33,000 10 Days After Easing Of Lockdown.

The AP (5/27) reports that Italy's coronavirus death toll "topped 33,000 on Wednesday, with 117 more deaths registered nationwide since the previous day." However, "authorities acknowledge that the real number of deaths will probably never be known since many with coronavirus symptoms in care residences or in their own homes died without being tested in the past few months." Health Ministry and other government officials are "closely monitoring regions for any jump in new cases following the May 18 easing of many lockdown restrictions, including allowing all retail stores to re-open and cafes and restaurants to resume in-house service."

Johnson Defends Strategist Who Violated Lockdown Order.

The Washington Post (5/27, Booth, Adam, 14.2M) reports Prime Minister Boris Johnson "faced a tough round of angry queries, serious skepticism, and even mockery from British lawmakers on Wednesday over his continued support for his top political strategist, Dominic Cummings, who left his London home when he and wife were stricken by coronavirus to travel 260 miles to a family home." Cummings and his "alleged flouting of strict lockdown rules" have "dominated news cycles" in Britain for the past five days, and the "scandal has cost Johnson support in the polls, raised questions about fair play...and created backlash over the lockdown."

Russian Medical Workers Did Not Receive Bonuses Putin Promised.

The Washington Post (5/27, Dixon, 14.2M) reports that in March, Russian President Vladimir Putin "wanted to make a grand gesture: bonus payments for medical workers 'who are performing their duties with honor.'" However, the Post says that while "medical workers were dying in their hundreds – 308 according to an unofficial count by medics. Many who kept working were not getting paid long-promised bonuses until recently." According to the Post, "With Putin's promised bonuses, the instinct by regional leaders – ingrained over decades – was to minimize payments, fearing trouble from Moscow if they spent too much or paid people not entitled to bonuses."

Last COVID Patient In New Zealand Discharged From Hospital.

The New York Post (5/27, O'Neill, 4.57M) reports New Zealand's "last hospitalized coronavirus patient was discharged Wednesday as the country's infection rate dipped to below two dozen people, health officials said in reports." The patient left an Auckland area hospital as the nation "reported only 21 infected people remaining – and no new cases of the deadly illness in at least five days."

DOJ Alleges Venezuelan Cartel Conspired With Hamas, Hezbollah To Attack US.

The Miami Herald (5/27, Torres, 1.09M) reports that federal prosecutors in New York "accused a former Venezuelan lawmaker on Wednesday of participating in narcoterrorism in an indictment claiming that a cartel headed by government leaders conspired with the terrorist groups Hezbollah and Hamas to commit attacks against the US." The US Attorney's Office in Manhattan accused Adel El Zabayar of "conspiracy to commit narcoterrorist acts, conspiracy to import cocaine, and two weapons-related offenses." El Zabayar is the President of the Venezuelan Federation of Arab Associations and Entities and was a member of the country's National Assembly.

Venezuelan First Lady Could Face US Drug Smuggling Charges. Reuters (5/27, Berwick, Spetalnick) reports US prosecutors are set to charge Venezuelan First Lady Cilia Flores "with crimes that could include drug trafficking and corruption." If Washington moves ahead with an indictment, sources said, "the charges are likely to stem, at least in part, from a thwarted cocaine transaction that has already landed two of Flores' nephews in a Florida penitentiary." In March, the US charged President Nicolas Maduro "and over a dozen current and former Venezuelan officials on charges of narco-terrorism and drug smuggling."

US Navy Tests New Laser Weapon Ideal For Iranian Threats.

The Washington Times (5/27, Ernst, 492K) reports that "Iranian drones and gunboats may want to think twice before harassing US Navy vessels after a successful round of testing on a new laser weapon." Capt. Karrey Sanders of the "amphibious transport dock ship Portland recently commented on the Solid State Laser Weapons System Demonstrator," which he said is "redefining war at sea for the Navy." Capt. Sanders is quoted as saying, "By conducting advanced at-sea tests against UAVs and small craft, we will gain valuable information on the capabilities of the Solid State Laser Weapons System Demonstrator against potential threats."

Trump Reiterates Plan To Withdraw Troops From Afghanistan.

President Trump yesterday tweeted, "We are acting as a police force, not the fighting force that we are, in Afghanistan. After 19 years, it is time for them to police their own Country. Bring our soldiers back home but closely watch what is going on and strike with a thunder like never before, if necessary!"

Sources: Only 8,600 US Troops Left In Afghanistan. According to Reuters (5/27, Ali, Jain), "U.S. troop strength in Afghanistan is down to nearly 8,600, well ahead of a schedule agreed with Taliban militants in late February, in part because of concerns about the spread of the coronavirus." Citing US and NATO officials, Reuters reports that "a key provision of the Feb. 29 agreement between the Taliban and the United States, to which the Afghan government was not a party, involved a U.S. commitment to reduce its military footprint in Afghanistan from about 13,000 to 8,600 by mid-July and, conditions permitting, to zero by May 2021." However, "Two senior sources in Kabul said the 8,600 target was likely to be achieved by early June." On Tuesday, President Trump said "there were '7,000-some-odd' U.S. soldiers in Afghanistan but officials clarified that number was slightly over 8,600 troops."

The Washington Post (5/27, Lamothe, George, 14.2M), meanwhile, reports that the Pentagon "is preparing for President Trump to withdraw thousands of American troops from Afghanistan before the presidential election, as military leaders recommend keeping at least a small counterterrorism force in the country," current and former US officials said. While the deal signed on Feb. 29 called for the US to reduce the number of service members to 8,600 by mid-July, US officials "still expect Trump to cut more troops before Election Day, as he seeks to deliver on a promise to end America's 'forever wars.'"

Pompeo: Hong Kong No Longer Qualifies As An Autonomous Territory.

The CBS Evening News (5/27, story 8, 0:25, O'Donnell, 4.93M) reported that as "China [is] tightening its grip on Hong Kong," Secretary of State Pompeo "declared that Hong Kong is no longer free of Beijing's control. That opens the door for tariffs and sanctions against Chinese officials." Reuters (5/27, Brunnstrom, Pamuk, Wu) says Pompeo's move "follows China's announcement of a plan to impose new national security legislation on Hong Kong, which has triggered fresh unrest in the territory." According to Reuters, "it now falls to" President Trump to "decide to end some, all, or none of the U.S. economic privileges which the territory enjoys."

The Washington Post (5/27, Morello, 14.2M) reports that "under the proposed Chinese law submitted to the legislature, the Chinese Communist Party can deploy 'relevant national security organs' to Hong Kong, giving legal cover for the mainland security services to operate in the previously autonomous financial center." Pompeo said the bill would be a "death knell" for Hong Kong's autonomy.

CNBC (5/27, Higgins, 3.62M) reports on its website that the State Department was "required to issue a determination on Hong Kong's autonomy under pro-democracy legislation passed late last year." The law "also requires the president to impose sanctions on foreigners who undermine 'fundamental freedoms and autonomy in Hong Kong.'" In a statement, Pompeo said, "No reasonable person can assert today that Hong Kong maintains a high degree of autonomy from China, given facts on the ground." USA Today (5/27, Hjelmggaard, Shesgreen, 10.31M), the Wall Street Journal (5/27, Donati, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Politico (5/27, Palmer, 4.29M), and the Washington Free Beacon (5/27, 78K), among other news outlets, also report Pompeo's statement.

To the AP (5/27, Lee), the State Department announcement "brings the future of Hong Kong squarely into the administration's numerous battles with China that have put the world's two largest economies at odds." Shortly after the announcement, Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) "called for the Senate to enact penalties." Said Graham, "It is imperative the Senate act on bipartisan legislation sanctioning China for the destruction of Hong Kong's democracy and freedom."

The New York Times (5/27, Wong, 18.61M) reports that China "relies on" Hong Kong "for transactions with other countries," and "many Chinese and foreign firms use Hong Kong as an international or regional base." The Times warns that "if it proceeds with punishments, the Trump administration could impose the same tariffs on exports from Hong Kong that it puts on goods from mainland China."

Reuters (5/27, Spetalnick) reports the Administration is also "considering suspending Hong Kong's preferential tariff rates for exports to the United States as part of its response to China's plan to impose national security laws on the former British colony." To Reuters, "such a move...could put Hong Kong's goods under the same tariffs that...Trump has slapped on exports from the Chinese mainland."

Bloomberg (5/27, 4.73M) reports that China has "warned that it would retaliate if the U.S. put sanctions on Hong Kong or interfered in its affairs." Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Zhao Lijian said Wednesday, "If anyone insists on harming China's interests, China is determined to take all necessary countermeasures. ... The national security law for Hong Kong is purely China's internal affair that allows no foreign interference."

The New York Times (5/27, 18.61M) editorializes that the Administration "was left with no option but to acknowledge the new reality," but cautions that "how this latest showdown plays out could have major ramifications for the future of Taiwan and for China's behavior in its neighborhood and the world. The question is whether President Trump has the leverage, support or stomach for the fight."

On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (5/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) warns that the action could hurt the people of Hong Kong more than it will China, and instead urges the Administration to directly target those responsible for the assault on Hong Kong's autonomy.

Hong Kong Police Arrest 300 Protesters. The New York Times (5/27, Ramzy, May, Qin, Fei, 18.61M) reports that in Hong Kong yesterday, the protesters "wanted to surround the city's government offices, but a smothering police presence forced them to abandon that plan." The protesters "tried to block traffic in the financial district at lunchtime, but the police pelted the crowd with pepper balls," and "they gathered in malls to chant protest slogans, but were later rounded up and herded on to police buses." In total, Hong Kong police arrested "more than 300 people on Wednesday, including students in their teens and early 20s, most on suspicion of unauthorized assembly."

The Washington Post (5/27, Mahtani, 14.2M) reports that "preemptive arrests of democracy activists, stop-and-search inspections of passersby and the tight security presence helped authorities mostly stave off planned large-scale rallies Wednesday." However, the Post adds that "public fury continued to build over the anthem bill and, most notably, Beijing's plans to impose a far-reaching national security law on the former British colony." According to the Post, "New protest slogans – 'Hong Kong, build our nation!' and 'Independence, the only way out!' – suggested that Beijing's repression is shifting attitudes toward Hong Kong independence, until recently considered a fringe viewpoint." Likewise, the New York Times (5/27, Qin, 18.61M) says, "This year, there is a key difference. The protests are increasingly a direct challenge to China's ruling Communist Party rather than to the territory's leadership."

China Pursuing Sovereignty Claims On Multiple Fronts. Under the headline "Far From Being Weakened By Coronavirus, China Pursues Sovereignty Claims On All Fronts," the Washington Post (5/27, Fifield, Slater, 14.2M) reports, "Chinese maritime surveillance vessels have confronted a Vietnamese fishing boat and a Malaysian oil exploration ship in the South China Sea in recent weeks, sinking the Vietnamese boat." In addition, the Chinese navy "sailed an aircraft carrier through the Taiwan Strait twice last month, putting the self-ruled island on alert."

Oil Futures Down Amid US-China Tensions. Reuters (5/27, Sanicola) reports oil futures "tumbled" on Wednesday after President Trump "said he was working on a strong response to China's proposed security law in Hong Kong and as some traders doubted Russia's commitment to deep production cuts." Brent crude futures "fell $1.65 to $34.52 a barrel, a 4.6 percent loss."

Trump Offers To Mediate India-China Border Dispute.

President Trump yesterday tweeted, We have informed both India and China that the United States is ready, willing and able to mediate or arbitrate their now raging border dispute. Thank you!

Menendez: Administration Seeking To Strike Arms Deal With Saudi Arabia.

The Washington Times (5/27, Meier, 492K) reports Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ), the ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, on Wednesday "claimed that the State Department is attempting to strike another multi-million dollar arms deal with Saudi Arabia." The development comes "in the wake of the May 15 firing of State Department Inspector General Steve Linick, who was allegedly conducting a review of Mr. Trump's emergency declaration to push a controversial weapons deal with Saudi Arabia last year – which Democrats have suggested could be linked to the sudden ouster." Writing in a piece for the CNN (5/27, 83.16M) website, Menendez said, "The administration is currently trying to sell thousands more precision-guided bombs to the President's 'friend,' Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman."

Saudi Crown Prince Silencing Women's Rights Activists. The Washington Post (5/27, 14.2M) editorializes that that the arrest two years ago of Loujain al-Hathloul, a "prominent women's rights activist" in Saudi Arabia, it marked "the start of a wave of arrests of activists, journalists and bloggers who had peacefully campaigned for basic freedoms for women, including the right to drive." While the ban on women driving was lifted, "Hathloul and four other women remain behind bars," which the Post says "speaks to the arbitrariness and cruelty that characterize the rule of Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman."

Russian Jets Intercept US Reconnaissance Plane.

The CBS Evening News (5/27, story 9, 0:25, O'Donnell, 4.93M) reported briefly on what it called "dramatic video" of Russian fighter jets intercepting a US Navy reconnaissance plane. According to CBS, the incident marked "the third time they have done this in two months. The US accuses the Russians of flying in an unsafe and unprofessional manner."

Housing

Renters Could Be Facing “Avalanche Of Evictions.”

The New York Times (5/27, Mervosh, 18.61M) reports renters are “facing a wave of evictions as government relief payments and legal protections run out for millions of out-of-work Americans who have little financial cushion and few choices when looking for new housing.” The most vulnerable are “tenants who had low incomes and little savings even before the pandemic, and whose housing costs ate up more of their paychecks. They were also more likely to work in industries where job losses have been particularly severe.”

Buybacks Of GSE Loans Rise In Q1.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (5/27, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports that sellers of single-family mortgages to the GSEs were “pushed to repurchase more defective mortgages” in Q1. According to IMF, the “pipeline of unresolved buyback claims also grew” during the first quarter, although “repurchase activity in general remains at subatomic levels.” IMF reports that sellers “repurchased $223.9 million of home loans from Fannie and Freddie in the first quarter, up 21.3% from the previous quarter. Most of the buybacks were of loans securitized in 2019 and, to a lesser extent, 2018. The two GSEs issued $1.813 trillion of mortgage-backed securities during those two years.” Freddie Mac “continued to report substantially more repurchase activity than Fannie, which may be due to Fannie’s more robust waivers for loans processed through its Day One suite of technology tools.”

Multifamily Financing

- Nashville Community Gets $30M Freddie Mac Refi. Multi-Housing News (5/27, Morosanu) reports, “Capital One has originated a $29.7 million Freddie Mac loan for White Eagle Property Group’s 248-unit The Trails,” a property in Nashville, Tennessee. The 10-year financing package “retires two existing mortgages totaling $41 million – a $22.4 million Fannie Mae and an $18.5 million CMBS loan.”
- Continuing Coverage: JLL Arranges $35M Freddie Mac Loan For Charlotte Acquisition. In its Charlotte Multifamily Wrap-Up for the month of May, Multi-Housing News (5/27) reports, “PassiveInvesting.com purchased Hawthorne at Lake Norman, a 232-unit Class A community in Mooresville.” JLL Capital Markets “facilitated acquisition financing. The $35 million, fixed-interest Freddie Mac loan matures in 2030.”

MBA Asks Fed To Confirm That Nonbanks Can Access Main Street Lending Program.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (5/27, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports, “The Mortgage Bankers Association plans to send a letter to Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell today requesting guidance on the ability of nonbank lenders to access the Fed’s Main Street Lending Program.” According to IMF, “Initiatives within the MSLP provide financing to businesses with fewer than 15,000 employees and 2019 revenues of $5 billion or less.” In a draft letter viewed by IMF, the MBA requests guidance to confirm that nonbanks with “originate and sell” business models are eligible for the Main Street Lending Program. The MBA “also seeks clarifications regarding the interplay between the program and warehouse financing used by nondepository originators.” The trade group added, “MBA is concerned that unless the Fed issues the requested clarifying guidance, many independent mortgage banks that were in good financial standing prior to the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic would be unable to obtain the necessary funds to continue their vital operations.”

MBA: Mortgage Applications Rise For A Sixth Consecutive Week.

Reuters (5/27) reports mortgage applications “jumped last week, in a sixth straight weekly increase, suggesting the housing market could lead the economy’s recovery from the novel coronavirus crisis even as high unemployment is expected to linger.” National Mortgage Professional (5/27) reports, “The Mortgage Bankers Association’s Weekly Mortgage Applications Survey showed a 2.7% increase in mortgage apps over last week, for the week ending on May 22, 2020. The refinance index showed a small 0.2% decrease for the same period. It was 176% higher than the same week in 2019.” TheStreet (5/27, 362K) reports that the seasonally-adjusted Purchase Index rose 8.6%, with purchase activity up 9% from year-ago levels.

Mortgage Orb (5/27) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan said, “The housing market is continuing its path to recovery as various states reopen, leading to more buyers resuming their home search. Purchase applications increased 9 percent last week – the sixth consecutive weekly increase and a jump of 54 percent since early April. Additionally, the purchase loan amount has increased steadily in recent weeks and is now at its highest level since mid-March.”

Mortgage News Daily (5/27) reports that the FHA share fell from 11.5% to 11.2%, while the VA share fell from 13.4% to 12.4%. The “average size of a loan during the week increased from $310,600 to $314,900 and purchase loans grew to $340,200 from $330,700.” The average rate for 30-year FRMs with conforming balances rose from 3.41% to 3.42%, while that for jumbos rose from 3.66% to 3.71%. The 15-year FRM average fell from 2.88% to 2.87%. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.19% to 3.08%. MND says that the MBA “also reported that forbearance plans in place on May 17 were up from 8.16 percent of servicer portfolios during the week ended May 10 to 8.36 percent. The number of plans rose from 4.1 million to 4.2 million.” Ginnie Mae-backed mortgages “had the largest overall share of loans in forbearance by investor type,” at 11.60%. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac “had 6.36 percent of their loans in plans, up from 6.25 percent the prior week.”

RISMedia (5/27, 2K) provides additional coverage of the MBA’s mortgage applications and forbearance data, and behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (5/27, Muolo, Subscription Publication) covers MBA’s forbearance data.

Pandemic Reducing Access To Low Mortgage Rates For Those With Poor Credit.

Bankrate (5/27, Strohm, 311K) reports the pandemic is reducing access to low mortgages rates for borrowers with poor credit. An Urban Institute report showed borrowers with credit scores above 720 could get rates 78 basis points lower than those with scores of 660 and below. The Mortgage Bankers Association's (MBA) Mortgage Credit Availability Index also shows loan availability at its lowest since December 2014. MBA Associate Vice President Joel Kan said in a statement, "The abrupt weakening of the economy and job market and the uncertainty in the outlook drove credit availability down in April for the second consecutive month."

Warehouse Commitments Rise To New Record.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (5/27, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "As rates plunged at the end of March and refi applications swelled in the shadow of the COVID-19 pandemic, warehouse financiers found themselves in an odd position: Their nonbank customers were clamoring for additional credit amid an uncertain employment landscape for consumers." Warehouse commitments rose to $105 billion, a sequential improvement of 4%. IMF says, "It was the highest commitment tally ever seen by this publication, which began surveying the sector last decade. Compared to the same period a year ago, warehouse lines of credit to nonbanks increased by a mouthwatering 41.9%." First Horizon Bank EVP Bob Garrett said, "This is a great time for everyone. Our cup has runneth over."

Fannie Mae Secures Commitments For Two CIRT Transactions.

Mortgage Orb (5/27) that Fannie Mae "says it has secured commitments for two front-end Credit Insurance Risk Transfer (CIRT) transactions, CIRT FE 2020-1 and CIRT FE 2020-2, that together cover up to $39.6 billion in unpaid principal balance of 21-year to 30-year original-term, fixed-rate loans, including loans previously acquired from November 2019 through January 2020 and also loans to be acquired between February 2020 and January 2021." The two CIRT deals "transfer up to $1.3 billion of mortgage credit risk." Fannie Mae's Rob Schaefer said, "CIRT FE 2020-1 and FE 2020-2 secure approximately $729 million and $600 million of coverage, respectively. Both are record-high levels of coverage for a low and high loan-to-value ratio CIRT transaction." DS News (5/27, Welborn) also covers the transactions.

Experts Split On "Shape" Of Economic Recovery.

HousingWire (5/27, 23K) reports that as experts offer different views regarding possible timelines for economic recovery, ranging from one that is quick and "v-shaped" to a slower, protracted recovery resembling a "Nike swoosh," some fear that we may find ourselves in an "O-shaped recovery," where a "new wave of coronavirus infections disrupts the return to normalcy and brings the country back to where it started." MBA AVP Joel Kan said he believes the recovery will be somewhere "between the V to a check shape." Meanwhile, NAMB President Rocke Andrews believes it will be "W or a sawtooth version." ICBA SVP Ron Haynie believes that there will be a great deal of variation by region, although he believes that in general, the nation's recovery will be a "small W."

Markets

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (5/26, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.679 percent.

Dollar Holds Steady.

Reuters \(UK\) (5/27, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar held its own on Thursday as rising Sino-U.S. tension put crushing pressure on the Chinese yuan and proved a counterweight to optimism about the coronavirus recovery." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar "was steady at 98.863, a fraction above a two-month low hit overnight." The dollar "was marginally firmer against the Japanese yen, at 107.83 yen per dollar, and a touch weaker on the euro and pound." The euro "rose to an eight-week peak of $1.1031."

Gold Rises.

Reuters \(IND\) (5/28, Aranya) reports, "Gold rose on Thursday after hitting a two-week low in the previous session as the rift between Washington and Beijing over Hong Kong escalated, with prices also supported by central bank and government largesse to cushion the blow from the pandemic." Spot gold "was up 0.6% at $1,718.77 per ounce, as of 0544 GMT," while US gold futures "rose 0.5% to $1,717.80."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (5/28, Paul) reports, "Oil prices plunged on Thursday after U.S. industry data showed a surprise steep build in crude oil inventories, dampening hopes of a smooth recovery in demand as some countries begin to ease their way out of coronavirus lockdowns." West Texas Intermediate crude futures "were down 3%, or 98 cents, at $31.83 a barrel at 0709 GMT." Brent crude futures "were down 2%, or 71 cents at $34.03 per barrel, after dropping to as low as $33.63."

FBI Requests Public Help In Reporting Child Sexual Abuse Displayed On Zoom.

NBC News (5/27, Winter, Williams, and Kosnar, 6.14M) reports, "The FBI has received more than 240 reports of people disrupting Zoom sessions by broadcasting videos depicting child sexual abuse," and "is now enlisting the public's help in identifying more such incidents." The FBI has posted "an online questionnaire to be filled out by anyone who has been exposed to child abuse videos during a Zoom session." The FBI also "recommends requiring a password or using Zoom's waiting room feature to screen guests."

The Hill (5/27, Miller, 2.98M) reports the FBI "is seeking information on victims of so-called 'Zoom bombings' that contain videos of child sexual abuse."

The Daily Caller (5/27, Safi, 716K) reports, "The FBI has created an online questionnaire" that "asks for details about the Zoom meeting where child sexual abuse was shown and for other information to be used in a federal investigation."

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (5/27, Stevens, 895K) reports the FBI stated, "The FBI considers this activity to be a violent crime."

The New York Daily News (5/28, Theisen, 2.52M) reports, "In addition to sexual abuse, these Zoom-bombs have been known to include other kinds of pornographic or hateful messages."

Penn State's (PA) Onward State (5/27, Kasales) reports, "Penn State University Police and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are investigating at least six incidents of 'Zoom-bombing' that allegedly involved child pornography during Penn State remote meetings." Also, "both organizations are encouraging students and employees who've hosted Zoom meetings and witnessed criminal activity, including the display of child sexual abuse material, to report the incidents to Penn State Police" and the FBI.

House Science Committee Republicans Request Briefing On CISA COVID-19 Cyber Alert.

MeriTalk (5/27) reports eleven GOP members of the House Science, Space, and Technology Committee "have requested a briefing on a cyber alert issued by the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) and the FBI on May 13." The May 13 notice "warned that the Chinese government is attempting to hack US organizations conducting COVID-19 research to obtain US intellectual property and public health data." In a May 22 letter, "spearheaded by Ranking Member Frank Lucas (R-OK), the Republicans said that 'while this announcement is extremely concerning, it is not surprising' and applauded the FBI and CISA for issuing the alert." The representatives wrote to CISA Director Chris Krebs and FBI Director Chris Wray, "Given the critical nature of the COVID-19 research being conducted at US institutions, it is imperative they take the proper steps to secure their networks and take advantage of the resources your agencies have without delay."

Foreign Hackers Are Attempting To Steal Coronavirus Vaccine Research.

Axios (5/27, Dorfman, 521K) reports a wave of cyber-spying "around COVID-19 medical research is once more demonstrating the perils of treating cybersecurity as a separate, walled-off realm." US officials recently announced "an uptick in Chinese-government affiliated hackers targeting medical research and other facilities in the US for data on a potential COVID-19 cure or effective treatments to combat the virus." According to a recent FBI bulletin, "nation-state cyber actors are targeting COVID-19-related research as many foreign governments seek to accelerate their own R&D processes and clinical trials." The FBI "added that, since February, suspected foreign government hackers have compromised the systems of a 'healthcare-related' company, a 'US research entity,' and have targeted other medical, pharmaceutical, and academic institutions."

New FISMA Report To Congress Says Federal Cyber Incidents Maintain Downward Trend.

FedScoop (5/27, Mitchell) reports the latest annual Federal Information Security Management Act (FISMA) report to Congress "says the federal government as a whole continues to make solid strides in improving cybersecurity management and meeting goals set out by the White House." The report "shows there were 8% fewer cybersecurity incidents reported in fiscal 2019 across government." The report states that this is a "result of improved risk management, as 73 federal agencies now meet the highest rating of 'managing risks' in their CIO - assessed FISMA posture." That's up "from 62 agencies the year prior and 33 in 2017." Federal CIO Suzette Kent said in a statement, "This FISMA report reflects improvements in areas of focus under the President's Management Agenda and Federal Agency elements of the National Cybersecurity Strategy."

Canada's Cyber Defence Agency Found More Than 1,500 Fake Government COVID-19 Websites.

The National Post (CAN) (5/27, 75K) reports Canada's cyber defence agency "has identified over 1,500 websites falsely parading as Government of Canada COVID-19 pages that are in fact designed to scam Canadians." The Canadian Centre for Cyber Security (CCCS) in a new report "says healthcare and medical research facilities, Canadians employed in 'areas of strategic interest' working from home, and financial institutions are under increasing threat from cyber threat actors." The CCCS writes, relying on classified and unclassified sources, "Cyber threat actors of varying motivations and sophistication have taken advantage of the COVID-19 pandemic in recent months as a thematic lure or subterfuge for their malicious activities, such as cyberespionage and cybercrime." Canada's healthcare and medical research sector have been of particular interest.

Election Officials Confront Duel Challenges Of Pandemic And Cybersecurity.

NPR (5/27, Parks, 3.12M) reports on election officials taking steps to ensure voters "will be safe when casting a ballot," while maintaining vigilance on cybersecurity threats. NPR's Miles Parks reported, "the main focus has been on hardening our defenses and getting US election officials thinking like they're going to be targets this time around. ... The main focus has been on hardening our defenses and getting US election officials thinking like they're going to be targets this time around."

Russia Denies Allegations It Hacked German Parliament.

Reuters (5/27) reports Russia rejected allegations that "its military intelligence was responsible for a hacking attack on Germany's parliament, after media reports that data had been stolen including emails from Chancellor Angela Merkel's constituency office." The Russian embassy "said in a statement that German officials so far had not been able to present facts to underpin such accusations against Moscow." It said, "This hackneyed story is trying to put blame on Russia for cyber warfare, attempts at intimidation, destabilization and disinformation towards the EU." Der Spiegel magazine has "reported that Russia's GRU military intelligence service hacked into the German parliament in 2015 and appeared to have obtained many emails from Merkel's constituency office."

TFI/Sanctions

Sources: US To End Iran Sanctions Waivers.

Reuters (5/27, Mohammed, Pamuk) reports that the US "has decided to end sanctions waivers allowing Russian, Chinese and European firms to continue work at certain Iranian nuclear sites, a US official and another source familiar with the matter said on Wednesday." The decision was first reported by The Washington Post (5/27, Hudson, 14.2M), which says Secretary of State Pompeo and "a group of lawmakers led by Republican Sen. Tom Cotton of Arkansas pushed to exert even more pressure on Tehran and eliminate the vestiges of the Obama administration's signature foreign policy objective." According to "an internal State Department memo," Pompeo will "end the sanctions waiver covering JCPOA-related nuclear projects in Iran."

The New York Times (5/27, Jakes, 18.61M) says the move "abandons the last part of the 2015 nuclear agreement that [President] Trump had allowed to remain in place."

The AP (5/27, Lee), The Wall Street Journal (5/27, McBride, Norman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), and The Hill (5/27, Kelly, 2.98M) also report.

House Passes Uighur Human Rights Bill.

The New York Times (5/27, Edmondson, 18.61M) reports the House "voted overwhelmingly on Wednesday to pass a measure that would punish top Chinese officials for detaining more than one million Muslims in internment camps, sending President Trump a bill intended to force him to take a more aggressive stand on human rights abuses in China." That action "cleared legislation that would compel Mr. Trump to impose sanctions on Chen Quanguo, the top Communist Party official in Xinjiang, where the camps are, and mandate that the director of national intelligence produce a list of Chinese companies involved in the construction and operation of the camps." The bipartisan 413-1 vote "reflected broad congressional support to punish Beijing for its ruthless campaign against Uighurs," and to "press the administration into action to condemn China's mass detentions."

Federal Reserve

Fed's "Beige Book" Report Pessimistic About Economy Despite Administration's Optimism.

The AP (5/27, Crutsinger) reports a Fed survey released Wednesday said the central bank's business contacts are less optimistic about the economic outlook that President Trump, who forecasted "some great numbers" in the last three months of 2020 and strong recovery next year. The Fed said in its report (also known as the "Beige Book"), "Although many contacts expressed hope that overall activity would pick up as businesses reopened, the outlook remained highly uncertain and most contacts were pessimistic about the potential pace of recovery." Unemployment reached 14.7 percent in April, the highest since the Great Depression. GDP contracted by 4.8 percent from January to March, and some economists see a 40 percent decline in GDP for Q2.

The Hill (5/27, Lane, 2.98M) reports the Beige Book "painted a dire picture of the economic toll of the coronavirus pandemic as states began to gradually lift restrictions imposed to slow the spread of COVID-19." The article adds, "While banks reported strong demand for emergency Small Business Administration (SBA) loans, a sharp drop in residential home sales and evaporating revenue from missed commercial real estate rent payments pose other threats to the financial sector." The Fed also highlighted that the SBA's PPP loan program "helped 'many' businesses prevent layoffs, though the program did little to stem the collapse in employment in the leisure, hospitality, and retail sectors."

Reuters (5/27, Marte, Dunsmuir), The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Barron's (5/27, Beifuss, 1.07M), The Financial Times (5/27, Sevastopulo, Edgecliffe-Johnson, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and Fox Business (5/27, Henney, 1.73M) also report.

NYTimes Analysis: Actions By Federal Reserve Propping Up Stocks. The New York Times (5/27, Phillips, 18.61M) reports that "investors keep pushing stocks higher" despite expectations for continued weakness in earnings reports, "breaking the link between analyst forecasts and the direction of stock prices." While "plenty of explanations have been offered to help explain the market's blasé approach to a bleak reality facing corporate America," the Times says "the most powerful reason is simpler: It's the actions of the Federal Reserve." In essence, "the Fed's efforts to keep interest rates and bond yields low has more than offset the collapse in profits for S&P 500 companies, helping to keep the market aloft even though corporate profitability and the economy look like they will be gloomy for a while."

NY Fed Releases Municipal Lending Facility's Sample Purchase Rates.

Reuters (5/27, Marte) reports the New York Fed on Wednesday "released sample purchase rates for the upcoming municipal liquidity facility." Reuters says, "Actual transactions will be priced according to the specifics of the transaction and may differ."

Boston Fed Releases Main Street Lending Program Participation Forms.

Reuters (5/28, Marte) reports the Boston Fed "released loan participation forms for lenders interested in the Main Street Lending Program." Though the program's launch date "has not yet been announced," Boston Fed President Eric Rosengren "said on Sunday the facility should start issuing loans over the next two weeks."

Williams: Worst Of Economic Blow Could Be Over, But Challenges Lie Ahead.

The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports New York Fed President John Williams said Wednesday that the worst of the economic downturn may be over, but added that uncertainty still remains ahead. Williams said that despite signs of stabilization, the situation remains very challenging. The central bank is considering using a tactic called yield-curve control in which it would actively manage the costs for borrowing at different maturities.

Reuters (5/27, Marte) reports Williams said of yield curve control: "This is something that obviously we're thinking very hard about...We're analyzing not only what's happening in other countries but also how that may work in the United States." MarketWatch (5/27, Robb, 1.67M) also reports.

Bullard: Industries Adapting To Post-Pandemic Reality; Policies Should Incentivize Workers Returning To Jobs.

Reuters (5/27, Schneider) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard said Wednesday that the US economy may have hit its bottom in April, and that businesses are beginning to learn how to conduct operations while coping with the post-pandemic reality. Bullard said restaurants, hotels, and other "high contact" remain deeply hit, but "there is reopening occurring. There is adaptation occurring. We are at the beginning...and I would expect that process to be something that plays out over the next 120 days. There will be a learning process there by different businesses that keeps customers confident and keeps their own work force confident."

Reuters (5/27, Schneider) also reports Bullard said that expanded unemployment benefits, though appropriate during the COVID-19 lockdown, would not be appropriate during the recovery. Bullard said policymakers should instead consider incentivizing workers to return to their jobs, saying, "That 100% replacement rate is totally appropriate during the pandemic adjustment...It would not be appropriate as we come out of it. ... You want to incentivize people" to work.

Internal Revenue Service

Treasury, IRS Grant Renewable Energy Projects Extra Year To Qualify For Tax Credits.

The Hill (5/27, Frazin, 2.98M) reports the Treasury and the IRS "issued a notice Wednesday that said it would give some companies that started construction in 2016 or 2017 an extra year before they have to put their projects in service." The notice "also allows some companies additional time to receive materials for construction in order to meet a requirement to start construction." The IRS said in a statement that it "recognizes that COVID-19 has caused industry-wide delays in the supply chain for components needed to complete renewable energy projects otherwise eligible for important tax credits." The statement "added that the notice aims to 'provide tax relief to affected taxpayers.'"

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Amends Rule To Allow Banks Virtual Meeting Options Amid Pandemic.

The ABA Banking Journal (5/27) reports that "to facilitate banks' needs to hold meetings during the coronavirus pandemic," the OCC issued an interim final rule clarifying that banks "may hold virtual board, shareholder and (as applicable) member meetings using remote communication tools." The rule "permanently amends OCC rules about telephonic or electronic participation, as well as advance notice of meetings, to reflect the availability of today's advanced virtual meeting technology."

Republicans Urge Bank Regulators To Finish Rules, While Democrats Call For Pause.

American Banker (5/28, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "The coronavirus pandemic has hardened congressional views on bank regulation in both parties, with Republicans urging agencies to finish rules intended to foster economic growth and Democrats calling for a pause on loosening restrictions that protect consumers." The competing approaches "have intensified as Trump-appointed regulators aim to finish regulations dealing with issues from payday lending to mortgage underwriting to the definition of brokered deposits." Rep. Patrick McHenry (R-NC), the top Republican on the House Financial Services Committee, "has argued that rules under consideration will promote economic activity to counter the sharp downturn sparked by the pandemic." In a letter to the OCC, the Fed, the FDIC, the CFPB, and the

FHFA earlier this month, McHenry wrote, "In consideration of the limitations that businesses face today, and the magnitude of the costs imposed by the pandemic, I urge you and your staff to work expeditiously to create the most favorable conditions for growth and employment."

Sen. Perdue: CRA Reform Could Help Communities Recover From Virus Crisis.

Prior to the release of the OCC's final CRA rule, Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) writes for The Hill (5/27, 2.98M) in support of an update to the law, saying that bringing the regulatory framework into the 21st century "would help steer banking services and capital to underserved communities that have been devastated" by the coronavirus crisis. Perdue adds that modernizing the CRA will give rural and low-income communities "a critical lifeline to not only recover from this crisis, but come out even stronger than they were before."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Mr. Trump Should Stand by Hong Kong." The New York Times (5/27, 18.61M) editorializes that the Administration "was left with no option but to acknowledge the new reality" in Hong Kong, but cautions that "how this latest showdown plays out could have major ramifications for the future of Taiwan and for China's behavior in its neighborhood and the world. The question is whether President Trump has the leverage, support or stomach for the fight."

Washington Post.

"No Wonder Twitter Is Confused." A Washington Post (5/27, 14.2M) editorial argues that while Twitter "has provoked outrage for its refusal to remove disgraceful tweets" from President Trump about the death of Joe Scarborough's congressional aide, "the debate shouldn't obscure the obvious: The bigger problem is the president." Trump's messages "are not only instructive in their vileness: They also have potential to do great damage. Twitter should develop a more coherent framework to deal with speech by world leaders: with real-world harm, including harassment; and with misinformation – and to articulate how they knit together in this case and in others."

"Getting America Online." A Washington Post (5/27, Board, 14.2M) editorial says that while the digital divide "was a problem before the pandemic," it is now "an existential problem for students who can't access live-streamed classes, for the ill who can't virtually consult with a doctor, for isolated individuals who can't find human connection on their laptop screens." The Post calls on Congress to "do whatever it can during this crisis to bring the Internet to those who don't have it and to ensure that those who do have it don't lose it. But it should also be working for a country after the crisis, forged by the crisis, with resilient, secure and universally available connection."

"MBS Is No Friend To Progress." The Washington Post (5/27, 14.2M) editorializes that that the arrest two years ago of Loujain al-Hathloul, a "prominent women's rights activist" in Saudi Arabia, it marked "the start of a wave of arrests of activists, journalists and bloggers who had peacefully campaigned for basic freedoms for women, including the right to drive." While the ban on women driving was lifted, "Hathloul and four other women remain behind bars," which the Post says "speaks to the arbitrariness and cruelty that characterize the rule of Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman."

Wall Street Journal.

"Twitter Plays Into Trump's Hands." The Wall Street Journal (5/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues in an editorial that Twitter's decision to attach the fact-check label to President Trump's posts gave him evidence to make his point that social media and tech firms are out to get him and his followers. Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey, the Journal argues, is priming social media platforms for government regulation.

"Trump's Hong Kong Moment." On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (5/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) warns that the Administration's declaration that Hong Kong can no longer be seen as autonomous could hurt the people of Hong Kong more than it will China, and instead urges the Administration to directly target those responsible for the assault on Hong Kong's autonomy.

"Europe Seeks Its 'Hamilton Moment.'" A Wall Street Journal (5/27, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial warns that supporters of a federal Europe should be wary of the plan's borrow-spend-and-tax scheme.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Here in California, we are entering phase three of the governor's plan to reopen the state. [Los Angeles Mayor] Eric Garcetti announced all retail businesses are allowed to let customers in, provided they take the necessary precautions. Curbside Botox injections could start up again as soon as next week."

Jimmy Kimmel: "In Las Vegas, several casinos are set to open. They will be offering no-contact, curb-side delivery, which means you can drop off your money and drive away without ever having to go inside to lose.”

Jimmy Kimmel: "The governor of Nevada, Steve Sisolak, says they've taken every precaution possible and that he doesn't think you're going to find a safer place to come than Las Vegas. Here's the thing: You know things are messed up when Las Vegas is bragging about how safe it is. Before this, the slogan was, 'Even if you killed a hooker, no one will ever find out, right?'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "They canceled the [SpaceX] launch. Trump got very nervous. He thought they said they were canceling the lunch."

Jimmy Kimmel: "People are blaming the President for jinxing [the SpaceX launch] because he showed up to see it, just like they say he jinxed Alabama by showing up to their home game or how he's jinxed everything he's ever touched."

Jimmy Kimmel: [On the SpaceX launch] "They have to wait for Saturday, which is disappointing to Trump. He's been a big proponent of getting Americans the hell off this planet."

Jimmy Kimmel: "I guess it was only a matter of time before Donald Trump would be in a Twitter feud with Twitter."

Treasury in the News

Continuing Coverage: Mnuchin, Powell Diverge On Need For Additional COVID-19 Aid.

Politico (5/20, Zanona, 4.29M) reports in its daily "Huddle" rundown that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "testified on Capitol Hill yesterday that June is going to be another rough month for jobs numbers." Fed Chair Jerome Powell called the COVID-19 crisis "the biggest shock we've seen in living memory" and said "the question that looms in the air is: is it enough?" However, the GOP "is still standing firm on their position that another relief package isn't necessary yet." House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy told reporters yesterday, "I don't see the need right now."

The Washington Post (5/20, Newmyer, 14.2M) reports in its daily "The Finance 202" rundown that Mnuchin and Powell "joined hands, virtually, to defend the federal economic rescue effort they have co-captained in the face of the coronavirus pandemic." However, during their virtual testimony Tuesday, "the two diverged on the path the economy will take from here." Mnuchin's "outlook hewed to the increasingly rosy view of the White House he serves – part of an emerging Trump administration consensus that the economy is on the cusp of a sharp bounceback that will obviate the need for new Washington spending." Mnuchin noted, "the jobs numbers will be worse before they get better," and "emphasized the urgency of lifting restrictions," saying "there is the risk of permanent damage" to the economy as the shutdown drags on.

CNBC (5/20, Iacurci, 3.62M) reports in an analysis that Mnuchin "may be wrong about one element of unemployment benefits and its intersection with a forgivable loan program for small businesses." Mnuchin "said Tuesday that workers wouldn't be able to continue getting unemployment benefits if they were to refuse a job offer." Mnuchin testified, "If [businesses] offer back a worker and they don't take that job, they will be required to notify the local unemployment insurance agency because that person will no longer be eligible for unemployment." CNBC says Mnuchin's assertion – "that a worker refusing a job offer would be ineligible for unemployment benefits – is generally correct." However, "the CARES Act, the $2.2 trillion coronavirus relief package enacted in late March, offers several Covid-19-related reasons workers could continue collecting unemployment benefits, despite being offered a job."

In her column for The Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M), Jennifer Rubin says, quoting NPR, that Powell "reiterated his view that Congress may have to authorize additional spending to prevent long-term damage to the economy. 'What Congress has done to date has been remarkably timely and forceful,' Powell said." However, Rubin says, Mnuchin, "following the lead of Trump and other Republicans, seemed less enamored of passing new legislation."

Trump Tweets Threat To Withhold Funding From States That Move To Mail-In Voting, Tags Treasury.

The AP (5/20, Riccardi, Superville) reports that President Trump today “threatened to hold up federal funds for two election battleground states that are trying to make it easier and safer to vote during the coronavirus pandemic.” According to the AP, “The president’s tweets targeting Michigan and Nevada marked an escalation in his campaign against voting by mail, a practice that he has publicly worried will lead so many people to vote that Republicans will lose in November.” The AP says Trump “began by targeting Michigan, with a false description of Democratic Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson’s announcement Tuesday that she would send applications for absentee ballots to every voter in the state.” Trump Tweeted, “Michigan sends absentee ballots to 7.7 million people ahead of Primaries and the General Election.” The AP says that “about six hours after his original tweet, Trump corrected it to say ‘absentee ballot applications.’”

Reuters (5/20, Whitesides) reports that Trump added in his original tweet, “This was done illegally and without authorization by a rogue Secretary of State. I will ask to hold up funding to Michigan if they want to go down this Voter Fraud path!” Trump also tweeted, “State of Nevada ‘thinks’ that they can send out illegal vote by mail ballots, creating a great Voter Fraud scenario for the State and the U.S. They can’t! If they do, ‘I think’ I can hold up funds to the State.” Reuters notes that Nevada “has made its June 9 state primaries an all-mail election, sending absentee ballots to registered voters.” Reuters points out that in Nevada, “the state official responsible for elections is a Republican.”

The Washington Post (5/20, Wagner, 14.2M) reports, “In his tweet threatening to curtail federal funds, Trump flagged the Treasury Department as well as Russ Vought, the acting head of the White House Office of Management and Budget.” The Post adds that “amid the pandemic, Trump has repeatedly railed against mail-in voting, claiming with scant evidence that it is subject to widespread fraud and has hurt Republicans in previous elections.”

According to the New York Times (5/20, Epstein, Corasaniti, Karni, 18.61M), “The Twitter posts were the latest in a series of broadsides the president has aimed at a process that has become the primary vehicle for casting ballots in an electoral system transformed by the coronavirus pandemic.” The Times says that “as most states largely abandon in-person voting because of health concerns, Mr. Trump, along with many of his Republican allies, have launched a series of false attacks to demonize mail voting as fraught with fraud and delivering an inherent advantage to Democratic candidates.” The Times goes on to report that Republicans “have also recently begun to ramp up a multi-million dollar initiative to monitor polling places and challenge voters deemed suspicious, efforts that the G.O.P. says are need to prevent fraud but that Democrats say are intended to suppress turnout in a bid to aid Mr. Trump.”

Bloomberg (5/20, Wingrove, Beckwith, 4.73M) reports that White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany today “noted a March ProPublica story that said there was ‘bipartisan consensus’ that mail-in ballots are vulnerable to fraud. ‘The president’s right to look at this. We want a free and fair election,’ she said.” Politico (5/20, Forgey, 4.29M) reports McEnany “wouldn’t say what funding Trump was considering withholding, telling reporters that the tweets were merely ‘meant to alert Secretary Mnuchin and Mr. Vought, head of OMB, about his concerns with trillions of dollars going to these states’ given his concerns about mail-in voting.”

However, in an analysis The Atlantic (5/20, Graham, 3.47M) calls that justification “a little strange...since Trump could easily call Vought or Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and order him to withhold funds to Michigan or Nevada.” The Daily Beast (5/20, Wilstein, 1.39M) reports McEnany “was asked by another reporter why Trump didn’t just speak to Mnuchin and OMB Director Russell Vought directly instead tweeting his message to the world. ‘Because the president believes in unprecedented transparency,’ she said.”

Writing in The Washington Post’s (5/20, Sargent, 14.2M) “The Plum Line” opinion blog, Greg Sargent says that under the CARES Act, in which “states get allotted coronavirus aid money from the Treasury Department,” Trump “could try to instruct the Treasury Department not to dole out that money. Note that Trump actually cc’d the Treasury Department in his tweet-threat, an act that becomes a lot more disgusting when you understand that this is how the mechanism actually does work.”

The Hill (5/20, Chalfant, 2.98M), Newsweek (5/20, Stockler, 1.53M), The Independent \(UK\) (5/20, Bennett, 1.36M), and The Financial Times (5/20, Fedor, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

Commentary: Strong Demand For 20-Year Bond “Validates Mnuchin’s Patience.”

In his column for Bloomberg View (5/20, 4.73M), Brian Chappatta says the federal governments “first 20-year bond auction since 1986 is in the books, and it was a solid, if unspectacular, debut for the maturity. That should be music to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin’s ears.” Chappatta says that, “Judging by Wednesday’s auction, there should be no shortage of future demand.” Chappatta adds that such a result “validates Mnuchin’s patience in bringing a new maturity to market,” saying that Mnuchin “could have been rash and demanded 50- or even 100-year bonds to leave his mark – in May 2017, he said those kinds of maturities ‘could absolutely make sense for us at Treasury.’” Instead, Mnuchin “prudently stayed true to the department’s mission of predictable, regular issuance at the lowest cost to taxpayers.” CNBC (5/20, Domm, 3.62M) and The Financial Times (5/20, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

Restaurants Decry PPP’s Terms As Bipartisan Push For Tailored Relief Begins.

The Washington Post (5/20, Carman, 14.2M) reports, “Almost from the day it was announced, restaurant owners have been complaining that the $670 billion Paycheck Protection Program doesn’t work for their industry. Congress has clearly heard them.” Reps. Dean Phillips (D-MN) and Chip Roy (R-TX) last week “introduced the Paycheck Protection Flexibility Act, which would extend the period in which small businesses can use the money and ease restrictions on the amount they can spend on non-payroll expenses such as rent.” Additionally, Rep. Earl Blumenauer (D-OR) “introduced a bill Wednesday that aims to help restaurants ride out the pandemic as they face a future of limited dining capacity, public fear and rising costs to cover masks, gloves and cleaning products.” The RESTAURANTS Act “would create a $120 billion grant program to help an estimated 500,000 independent restaurants survive a potentially long period when they may earn only a fraction of their former revenue." Under the bill, "money would be administered by the Treasury Department and available only to independent establishments with fewer than 20 locations under the same name, a caveat designed to avoid a repeat of PPP embarrassments in which chains such as Potbelly, Shake Shack and Ruth's Chris received funds meant for small business."

Editorial: Feds Must Increase And Clarify Aerospace Support.

The Seattle \(WA\) Times (5/20, 935K) editorializes, "After suffering a triple-whammy – a trade war, the 737 MAX grounding and a pandemic – the aerospace supply chain is in a precarious situation." The Times argues, "One way to help is by adjusting the criteria for which companies may use a $17 billion loan fund, created in the March CARES Act, to help businesses critical to national security." Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-WA) "is rightly pressing the U.S. Treasury Department to extend it to the broader aerospace supply chain. That would require expanding eligibility beyond defense contractors with high-security clearances and extending the deadline for loan applications."

Senate Panel Votes To Subpoena Lobbying Firm Tied To Hunter Biden's Ukraine Dealings.

Coverage of a Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee's subpoena tied to Hunter Biden's Ukraine dealings reflects the sharp partisan chasm on the matter, with Democrats and some media analyses accusing Republicans of spreading Russian propaganda in an effort to help President Trump's campaign. Fox News (5/20, Kaplan, 27.59M) reports on its website that Chairman Ron Johnson said of Democrats' objections to the subpoena, "I think they protest a little bit too much," so "apparently we're hitting a nerve here. ... Maybe we're getting close to finding some important information." The story was ignored on the major network newscasts.

The AP (5/20, Jalonick) reports that the committee "voted to issue a subpoena as part of its investigation into" Hunter Biden. On a party-line 8-6 vote, the panel voted to subpoena Blue Star Strategies, "a lobbying firm that was a consultant to Burisma, a gas company in Ukraine that paid Hunter Biden to serve as a board member." Republicans are "questioning whether his highly paid job created a conflict of interest for Joe Biden as the former vice president worked on Ukraine policy in the Obama administration." The Washington Examiner (5/20, Soellner, 448K) recalls "the Burisma matter got wrapped up into the impeachment saga after...Trump pressed Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky to investigate the Bidens and other Democrats in a July 25 phone call," and the New York Post (5/20, Bowden, 4.57M) indicates Senate Republicans "say Joe Biden may have acted inappropriately when his son was given a high-paying seat on the board of Burisma, despite having no relevant experience."

The Washington Times (5/20, Sherfinski, Miller, 492K) reports that Johnson said "said if there's no wrongdoing, there's nothing to fear in moving forward." The One America News Network (5/20, 28K) website quotes Johnson as saying, "What we've witnessed here and we're gaining more evidence of is the corruption of that transition process, transition designed primarily to sabotage the incoming administration. ... The American people need to understand what happened so it can never happen again."

The New York Times (5/20, Fandos, 18.61M), meanwhile, quotes Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) as saying, "The public deserves to know how a guy who was vice president of the United States, who is currently trying to be president, got away with using the United States government to use a foreign country to stop investigating a company that was paying his son over $80,000 a month." NPR (5/20, Davis, 3.12M) notes Scott also said, "We need to get to the truth about the Bidens' relationship with Burisma, and these hearings will provide the Senate with the full picture."

Newsweek (5/20, Hutzler, 1.53M) reports Republicans "appeared to get a green light" from Senate Majority Leader McConnell "to investigate the previous administration." Speaking on the Senate floor this week, McConnell said, "No matter what some Washington Democrats may try to claim, you are not crazy or a conspiracy theorist if you see a pattern of institutional unfairness towards this President. ... You would have to be blind not to see one."

On the other hand, the New York Times (5/20, Fandos, 18.61M) asserts "Republicans are using their Senate majority to try to uncover evidence of wrongdoing that...Trump believes is pivotal to his re-election chances in November." The subpoena "was part of an emerging push by Republicans to use their Senate majority in ways intended to help Mr. Trump as he tries to rewrite the narrative of the Russia investigation to implicate his political rivals and divert attention from the coronavirus crisis."

The Washington Post (5/20, Debonis, 14.2M) says, meanwhile, that "Democrats have been critical" of Johnson, and "some, including the committee's top Democrat, have suggested that Johnson is serving as an unwitting pawn in a Russian disinformation campaign." Sen. Gary Peters (D-MI) said that the panel "is 'going down a dangerous road' at a time of a national crisis from the coronavirus pandemic." Senate Minority Leader Schumer, meanwhile, asserted that Republicans are "using Russian propaganda to try and damage a political opponent."

Axios (5/20, Knutson, 521K) also reports "the State Department said in 2014 that there was no conflict, noting Hunter Biden was a 'private citizen.'" Democrats "argue that the Republican-led probe is designed to damage...Trump's likely opponent...ahead of November's election," and Peters "even suggested that the probe is aiding a Russian disinformation campaign." Likewise, Politico (5/20, Desiderio, 4.29M) also points out Democrats "have accused their GOP counterparts of aiding Russian disinformation efforts and improperly using the Senate's resources to boost...Trump's political fortunes."

Moreover, The Hill (5/20, Carney, 2.98M) reports, "Democrats say that Blue Star was willing to comply with Johnson's request for documents without a subpoena – something Johnson disputed." Politico (5/20, Desiderio, 4.29M) says "a spokesman for Johnson rebutted those claims, saying the firm 'delayed our efforts for more than five months, and even refused to let our staff speak to their attorney until last week.'" Johnson's spokesman "added that Blue Star Strategies only signaled a willingness to cooperate after the panel announced the subpoena vote last week." The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Duehren, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Reuters (5/20, Zengerle) and Bloomberg (5/20, Dennis, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover the vote.

Zelensky Calls For Investigation After Release Of Biden Call Pushing For Prosecutor's Firing. The New York Post (5/20, Bowden, 4.57M) reports "the subpoenas come as recordings . . . have surfaced of leaked phone calls between then-Vice President Biden and then-Ukraine President Petro Poroshenko in which Biden was pushing for the ouster of the prosecutor general." The Post adds that "Andriy Derkach, who reportedly released the audio, has claimed he has proof that Burisma Holdings paid Joe Biden $900,000 in lobbying fees."

The Washington Post (5/20, Stern, Khurshudyan, 14.2M) reports that Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky "called on his law enforcement agencies...to investigate leaked audio of private phone calls several years ago" between Biden and Poroshenko, "and said the conversations 'might be perceived, qualified as high treason.'" According to the Post, "Zelensky's comments...could have been aimed at appeasing Trump, discrediting a rival in Poroshenko and deflecting to investigators all in one swipe." The Post says "the recordings showed that Biden, as he has previously said publicly, linked loan guarantees for Ukraine in 2015 to the ouster of Viktor Shokin, then the country's prosecutor general." Poroshenko "referred to the audio as 'bogus.'" The New York Post (5/20, Eustachewich, 4.57M) points out, however, that "Derkach said he received the leaked audio from 'investigative journalists' – and that the recordings were made by Poroshenko himself." The Daily Caller (5/20, Kerr, 716K) reports Biden spokesman Andrew Bates said "the release of the tapes was yet another instance of Russia's efforts to hurt Biden."

US News & World Report (5/20, Hagen, 2.4M) reports "one of Trump's closest allies pushed an allegation that Biden recommended then-Prosecutor General Viktor Shokin's removal because he was looking to investigate Burisma," though "no evidence of wrongdoing or misconduct by either Biden has emerged, and the claims have been largely debunked."

Johnson Aims To Release Biden-Burisma Probe Report As Early As Next Month. The Hill (5/20, Carney, 2.98M) reports Johnson "said Wednesday that he wants to release a report on his investigation into Ukrainian gas company Burisma Holdings and Hunter Biden as soon as next month." Said Johnson, "I'd like to get something out in the June timeframe, personally, certainly before the August recess."

Trump Praises Latino Community, Says Economy Will Be "Better Than Ever Before."

President Trump tweeted Thursday evening, "Great call with thousands of our Hispanic community, business, and faith leaders today. During this national trial, we have been uplifted by the grit, determination, prayers, and patriotism of Hispanic Americans. Together, we built the greatest economy in history. We will do it again – better than ever before!"

Trump Touts DOT Aid To Tulsa, Dallas Transit Systems.

President Trump tweeted Wednesday, "The Tulsa, Oklahoma area has been approved for a transportation loan from the @USDOT of up to $120M to help expand highway on the Gilcrease Expressway West Project. This will mean less congestion and faster routes to popular spots! @GovStitt". The President also tweeted, "Great news for the Dallas area! Dallas Area Rapid Transit (DART) will be receiving $229M in funding to keep front line workers, and the many riders that depend on transit, employed and safe. This will be critical to economic recovery! @GregAbbott_TX @dartmedia".

NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 4, 2:00, Holt, 7.5M) aired a feature on efforts to keep transit systems safe in the wake of the coronavirus pandemic.

Conway: Trump "Has Been The Deregulation President."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' America's Newsroom (5/20, 896K) that President Trump "has been the deregulation President. He has cut red tape and empowered our agencies to increase their rule-making authorities and the speed with which they act over the last three-plus years."

SBA's Bell Says Minority Entrepreneurs Do Not Always Get Needed Resources.

WSB-TV (Atlanta (5/20, 186K) reported SBA Region IV Administrator Ashley Bell "says too often minority entrepreneurs don't get the resources they need." Bell: "We have to make sure they have access to these funds while they are still there. ... The key is to know where the resources are, but also to know who to call to help the access to those resources." WSB added, "It is why he is joining with Atlanta rapper/actor TI along with elected officials, clergy, community activists, and others to reach out to 100,000 minority business owners to point them in the right direction."

Senate, House Preparing Legislation To Make PPP More Flexible.

The Washington Post (5/20, Werner, 14.2M) reports lawmakers "are preparing new legislation that would make it easier for the government to forgive emergency loans to small businesses impacted by the coronavirus pandemic after a lobbying blitz" by firms that say they need more assistance. The Senate and House bills "would give companies more time to use funding under the Paycheck Protection Program, allowing them additional flexibility to rehire workers later this year rather than rush to bring people back by June." However, the Post says, it is "unclear...whether a political compromise to rework" the PPP "is near, even as many businesses argue they are on the verge of shuttering for good." CQ Roll Call (5/20, McPherson, 154K) reports, "The House will vote next week on legislation changing terms" of the PPP "that have served as obstacles to some small businesses seeking relief under the forgivable loan program." House Speaker Pelosi said Wednesday, "We saw a quick fix on how we could make this work better. We couldn't ignore that."

Senate Passes Bill That Would Limit Chinese Companies' Access To US Markets.

CNBC (5/20, Franck, 3.62M) reports on its website that the Senate on Wednesday "passed legislation...that could ban many Chinese companies from listing shares on U.S. exchanges or raising money from American investors without adhering to Washington's regulatory and audit standards." CNBC says the bill, sponsored by Sen. John Kennedy (R-LA), "would require companies to certify that 'they are not owned or controlled by a foreign government.'" According to CNBC, "Specifically, the statute would require a foreign company to certify it's not owned or manipulated by a foreign government if the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board is unable to audit specified reports because the company uses a foreign accounting firm not subject to inspection by the board."

US Using Ties With Taiwanese Tech Firms To Pressure China.

The New York Post (5/20, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports on a New York Times article saying the Trump Administration is pressuring "the Chinese Communist Party by forging closer political and business ties with Taiwanese technology firms." In what is "seen as a challenge to China's trade relationship with Taiwan," a day after Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company (TSMC) announced it would build a factory in Arizona, the Department of Commerce announced a rule change prohibiting "global companies from using American technology to produce or design chips that are sent directly or through third parties to Huawei," which could limit the business it does with TSMC.

OSHA Issues Revised Guidelines For Workplace Safety.

Reuters (5/20, Hals) reports that the Labor Department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration "will expand inspections of businesses to reduce job-site hazards related to the new coronavirus as employees begin returning to work across the country, although the policy falls short of demands by worker advocates." Reuters adds, "The revised policy...expands inspections beyond those in healthcare facilities, which the agency said last month it was prioritizing to conserve resources." OSHA "also said it was requiring all businesses to record COVID-19 as a workplace illness where the employer could reasonably determine the infection occurred at work."

Airlines Roll Out New Safety Measures.

On ABC World News Tonight (5/20, story 6, 1:10, Muir, 8.39M), Gio Benitez reported on "what Delta says is the future of flying. ... Before every single flight, electrostatic spraying. The disinfectant clings to surfaces to kill viruses and bacteria. Then comes a full wipe-down, and an inspection by the on-flight crew. When it's time to board, passengers are asked to keep their distance, with the back of the plane boarding first." Delta Chief Customer Experience Officer Bill Lentsch: "What we have done today lays the foundation for where we're going to go in the future." Reuters (5/20, Rucinski, Shepardson) reports United Airlines and JetBlue also "announced fresh safety measures on Wednesday aimed at restoring confidence in air travel as several executives pointed to signs domestic demand is improving."

Air Travelers Frustrated About Inability To Get Refunds. The CBS Evening News (5/20, story 5, 2:00, 5.27M) aired a report on frustrated air travelers whose trips were cancelled due to the coronavirus who have been unable to get refunds. Norah O'Donnell reported, "As the number of airline flyers plummeted to record lows, customer complaints soared by more than 350 percent in March compared to a year earlier."

Two Ford Factories Temporarily Close After Workers Test Positive For Coronavirus.

ABC World News Tonight (5/20, story 2, 3:30, Muir, 8.39M) reported that two Ford factories shut down temporarily "just one day after opening, after some workers tested positive for the virus." Mola Lenghi reported on the CBS Evening News (5/20, story 2, 2:20, O'Donnell, 5.27M), "After being disinfected, both plants are now back online."

Chao: New Regulations Give Truck Drivers Greater Flexibility.

Transportation Secretary Chao said on Newsmax TV's Spicer & Co. (5/20) that truckers want "more flexibility. So just the other day...the [DOT], issued for the first time basically since 1937, greater flexibility to truck drivers so that when they are faced with increased traffic, congestion, problems with weather that will cause delays, the rules and regulations that govern how many hours they can drive will not be so prescriptive during a pandemic crisis like such as we are in now. So, these new regulations...give these drivers much greater flexibility so that they can take a rest, they can pull over at a time when they feel they need the rest."

Grocery Prices Surged In April.

USA Today (5/20, Selasky, 10.31M) reports the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index report indicates that "grocery store bills shot up April, showing the biggest monthly increase in nearly 50 years. ... While overall the April CPI declined 0.8%, consumers on average paid 2.6% more for groceries. It's the largest one-month increase since February 1974. During the last 12 months, grocery prices rose 4.1%."

Some Stores “Becoming Battlegrounds” Over Enforcing Safety Measures.

Lester Holt reported on NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 8, 1:45, 7.5M) that as “retailers reopen, some are becoming battlegrounds. Employees [are] now tasked with enforcing social distancing rules on shoppers, and it has led to some pretty tense moments.” NBC’s Jo Ling Kent reported, “Wearing a mask to shop is now a flash point for conflict.” NBC described an incident at a Costco between an employee enforcing face mask policy and a customer who refused to wear a mask. NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 7, 2:10, Holt, 7.5M) also ran a feature on how Macy’s has adapted for the times, with new social distancing protocols and rules for dressing rooms and makeup counters.

Target Reports Biggest Quarterly Sales Jump In 15 Years.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (5/20, Kumar, 1.04M) reports Target saw its “biggest quarterly sales jump in 15 years as the pandemic spurred millions of consumers to order items online and to use its curbside pickup service for the first time.” Reuters (5/20, Venugopal) reports net profit, however, “fell 64.3% in the quarter as operating costs rose 11%.” The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Nassauer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports adjusted earnings per share fell to $0.59 compared to $1.53 year-on-year, but beat analysts’ expectation of $0.44. Total revenue increased to $19.6 billion, a 11.3 percent increase from $17.6 billion a year ago. USA Today (5/20, Tyko, 10.31M) reports Target said Wednesday that “its Drive Up curbside pickup, in-store pickup and Shipt delivery grew by 278%” in the most recent quarter.

New Englanders Falling Behind On Mortgage, Rent Payments.

The Washington Post (5/20, Romm, 14.2M) reports on how financial hardship in New England is sparking concerns of foreclosures. In the region, “roughly 380,000 area homeowners and renters are at risk of falling behind about $540 million in payments each month, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.”

NYTimes Analysis: Live Event-Based Businesses May See Long-Term Peril.

The New York Times (5/20, 18.61M) reports the US economy’s “reliance on live events has been growing for years,” with recent booms in theme parks and professional sports. The economic output “associated with such diversions has ballooned,” and “all those new experiences created jobs, and over the same period, employment in the leisure and hospitality industries grew about 30 percent.” The Times says the prospects of recovery are dim in the wake of the coronavirus.

Apple Updating iPhone Face ID To Allow Passcodes For Masked Users.

The CBS Evening News (5/20, story 7, 0:15, O’Donnell, 5.27M) reported Apple is updating its software so that users who normally use Face ID to unlock their iPhones can alternately type in a passcode if their face is covered by a mask.

Luttig, Rivkin Argue For Business COVID-19 Liability Immunity.

Former Boeing General Counsel J. Michael Luttig and former White House Counsel’s Office and Justice Department employee David B. Rivkin Jr., in an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), call for Congress to pass temporary immunity for business from COVID-19 liability and make it a precondition for states and localities to receive rescue funds. Federal regulators can then use this time to create standards for long-term immunity. The two argue that the US tort system is generally broken and that it would be particularly bad at dealing with COVID-19 suits. Luttig and Rivkin argue that businesses don’t need to be held accountable because they are generally good actors and that consumers will punish those that are not.

WTimes Analysis: BlackRock To Face Heat At Shareholder Meeting.

In an analysis, the Washington Times (5/20, Richardson, 492K) reports that at its annual shareholder meeting on Thursday asset manager BlackRock will be “caught between activists...and conservatives.” In January the company announced “that it would embrace a climate change and social justice agenda” and activists will be “demanding that the firm walk the talk.” However, conservatives will be “condemning the emphasis on politics over profits” amid an economic crisis, as well as confronting CEO Larry Fink on pushing “holdings in China, the world’s biggest greenhouse gas emitter,” even while espousing the new philosophy. Conservatives are particularly concerned about bias in “BlackRock’s newly designated role as a bond-purchasing administrator of the CARES Act.”

WSJournal: Legislators’ Letter To Google Part Of Activist Employees’ Enforcement Of Political Orthodoxy.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) condemns members of the House Tech Accountability Caucus for writing to Google’s CEO on the company’s diversity and inclusion programs. The Journal casts the letter as part of the way activist employees force political orthodoxy on companies by creating overtly political programs and stopping changes through leaks that bring hostile coverage and congressional demands. The Journal warns against technology companies being distracted by ideology and adds that if they become vehicles for political interests they open themselves to punitive regulation.

Trump Says His Hydroxychloroquine Regimen Will End In “A Day Or Two.”

USA Today (5/20, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports President Trump "indicated" Wednesday that his preventative hydroxychloroquine regimen will finish in "a day or two." Trump said. "I think it's two days. Two days." Trump's statement Monday that "he had been taking the drug daily for about a week and a half as an added measure to avoid getting the coronavirus" set off "a storm online and on cable television, with an array of doctors, journalists and politicians issuing stern warnings to others after the president's revelation, pointing out the drug's ineffectiveness against the coronavirus in a few recent studies and long list of potentially dangerous side effects."

HUD Secretary Carson said on the Larry O'Connor Show (5/20) that hydroxychloroquine "has been used for 60 years for malaria, more recently for various types of inflammatory conditions...and it has a great safety record. But there are some contraindications and that is why it should be done in conjunction with a physician. It can be used off-label as almost any medication can be used off-label, It has been discovered that people who take it chronically seem to have some degree of protection against enveloped viruses like COVID-19. So, it is not at all an unreasonable thing that the President should be taking that, particularly since one of his close aides was diagnosed with the disease, and one of the Vice President's close aides."

Deputy HHS Secretary Eric Hargan said on WFTL-AM Palm Beach, FL (5/20, 2K) that Trump is "the right-to-try President. This is a President who wants Americans to have more access to more different kinds of things and remember, this is a drug that is commonly used by Americans every day. His doctor has prescribed it for him. That happens in millions of cases daily. ... As long as the President and his physician want to use this drug that is up to them like it is with every other single American."

White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said on The Pod's Honest Truth (5/20) podcast, "The doctor did prescribe it for him and he took it after having several discussions with [White House physician] Dr. [Sean] Conley about its efficacy and he believed that, Dr. Conley, that the benefits outweighed the risks for the President. Hydroxychloroquine it is worth mentioning, is a drug that has been approved for at least three other conditions... So, this is a drug that is out there that has been shown to be safe with these conditions."

The New York Post (5/20, Nelson, 4.57M) reports that McEnany said Wednesday that while CNN anchor Chris Cuomo "mocked" the President for taking hydroxychloroquine, he "took a less-safe version of the drug himself." McEnany said, "You had Chris Cuomo saying the President knows that hydroxychloroquine is not supported by science, he knows it has been flagged by his own people and he's using it. ... Cuomo mocked the President for this, [but] it turns out that Chris Cuomo took a less safe version of it called quinine, which the FDA removed from the market in 2006 because it had serious side effects, including death. So really interesting to have that criticism of the President."

NYTimes Report: Specialists Still Debating Hydroxychloroquine's Effectiveness. The New York Times (5/20, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports that Trump's "enthusiastic embrace of" hydroxychloroquine "appears to be interfering with legitimate scientific research into whether the medicine might work to prevent coronavirus infection or treat the disease in its early stages." According to the Times, the drug "has shown no real benefit for hospitalized coronavirus patients, and may have contributed to some deaths." The Times says "some bioethicists are even calling for the Food and Drug Administration – which has warned that the drug can cause heart problems – to revoke an emergency waiver it granted in March to accept millions of doses of hydroxychloroquine into the national stockpile." However, the Times goes on to report that specialists including NIAID Director Fauci "say the jury is still out on whether the drug might help prevent infection or help patients avoid hospitalization."

WHO Official Cautions Against Taking Hydroxychloroquine For COVID-19. The Washington Post (5/20, Armus, Farzan, 14.2M) reports that World Health Organization Executive Director Michael Ryan on Wednesday "indirectly pushed back against President Trump's touting of hydroxychloroquine as a treatment for the novel coronavirus, saying at a news conference Wednesday that the anti-malaria medicine should not be used beyond its officially tested prescriptions." According to the Post, the WHO "has also previously cautioned against the use of herbal remedies and antivirals that have not been rigorously tested to treat" COVID-19.

Doctors Say Trump's Medical Judgment Is Wrong. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M), Vinay Prasad of the Oregon Health and Science University, and Ezekiel Emanuel of the University of Pennsylvania and a member of Joe Biden's public health advisory committee, write that Trump's "medical judgment is wrong, and the example he is setting by his behavior is worse." They argue that hydroxychloroquine, "has never been shown to lower the rate of transmission of the coronavirus. Nor has it been shown to improve symptoms or speed recovery among those infected."

Bolsonaro Orders Brazilian Ministry To Ramp Up Production Of Chloroquine. Bloomberg (5/20, 4.73M) reports that "under orders of President Jair Bolsonaro," Brazil's health ministry on Wednesday "loosened protocols for the use of chloroquine, indicating it even for mild cases of the virus despite dangerous side effects, experts' warnings and no demonstrated success in clinical trials." Bloomberg says Bolsonaro "has ordered the military to ramp up production of the drug as he makes it a key element in the anti-virus fight, losing two health ministers in the process due in part to their objections to the plan." Bloomberg adds, "The controversy is just the latest twist in Brazil's erratic strategy to tackle the virus, with Bolsonaro pushing to restart the economy while local authorities try to enforce lockdowns and restrict activities to control it."

Pence Visits Central Florida As Tourism Industry Begins Revival.

The AP (5/20) reports Vice President Pence "visited central Florida to meet with tourism officials Wednesday as the region's biggest tourist destination – Walt Disney World – began reopening a shopping and entertainment complex." The AP says that "during his trip to Orlando, Pence dropped off protective equipment at an upscale complex that houses seniors in apartments and a nursing facility as tourism, the state's biggest industry, continued taking steps toward reopening." According to the AP, Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) "told Pence that the problem areas in Florida had been prisons and nursing homes, and he's not seeing spikes in the general public." The Washington Post (5/20, Armus, Farzan, 14.2M) says Pence's appearance was part of the Trump Administration's attempt to "focus on states' efforts to revive their economies."

Azar Offers Advice For Memorial Day Weekend Travel.

WTMJ-TV (Milwaukee (5/20, 85K) asked HHS Secretary Azar if people should alter their Memorial Day weekend travel plans due to the coronavirus pandemic. Azar said, "I'd encourage you, as always, evaluate and know your own circumstances. What's your own level of risk, as well as those of your household members?" WTMJ added that Azar said "if people take necessary precautions and follow local and state guidelines, they should be able to travel." Asked if it will be safe to hold large events in August, Azar said, "We're going to have to see what the actual situation is with the disease at that point. I think it is just a couple months ahead of time. It's really quite hard to tell what the parameters and advice will be then."

HHS Deputy IG Who Warned About Shortages To Testify Before House Panel.

The Washington Post (5/20, Debonis, 14.2M) reports that according to a congressional aide, Christi Grimm, the principal deputy inspector general for the Department of Health and Human Services, "who issued an early report documenting acute shortages of coronavirus tests and personal protective equipment at overwhelmed hospitals, will testify before the House Oversight and Reform Committee on Tuesday." Grimm "documented 'severe shortages' of supplies in late March and described hospitals' intense frustration with government authorities who were unequipped to address the scarcity." The Post adds that "after Grimm issued her report on April 3, President Trump criticized her for serving during the Obama administration and disputed the findings." Then, on May 1, Trump "nominated a permanent HHS inspector general to replace Grimm."

Navarro Says Phlow Contract Is Part Of Effort To Return Drug Manufacturing To US.

On CNN's The Lead (5/20, 1.32M), Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro touted the "awarding of one of the largest contracts in history to" Phlow Corporation of Richmond, Virginia that is "going to be the tip of President Trump's spear for bringing here advanced manufacturing of American pharmaceuticals, that's great news." Asked about criticism that the company is not qualified, Navarro said, "They've already produced over a million doses of various pharmaceuticals during the COVID-19 crisis. So clearly, they have the capability."

"Major Discoveries" Could Lead To Coronavirus Vaccines.

NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 2, 2:25, Holt, Costello, 7.5M) reported on "major discoveries at two top university hospitals that could expedite both vaccines and treatments." NBC's Tom Costello added that "at Harvard's Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center in Boston, more evidence that recovering from COVID-19 may lead to immunity against reinfection. Researchers say nine rhesus monkeys that recovered from virus-induced pneumonia developed antibodies to the virus and had near complete protection when reexposed a month later. That could suggest immunity from a second infection." NBC added that "at Emory University hospital in Atlanta, researchers believe they discovered the Achilles heel of the virus. It's right there on top of that notorious red hook that we've all seen." Mehul Suthar, Emory Vaccine Center Assistant Professor: "What this means is this is now an important target for development of much-needed vaccines." The CBS Evening News (5/20, story 3, 1:45, O'Donnell, 5.27M) provided similar coverage of the Harvard research.

Manufacturing, Distribution Will Be Hurdles For Coronavirus Vaccine. The New York Times (5/20, Zimmer, Sheikh, Weiland, 18.61M) reports that while scientists "are increasingly optimistic that a vaccine can be produced in record time," manufacturing and distributing it "will pose huge challenges." The Times highlights efforts to develop an effective vaccine, which it says "will be crucial to ending the pandemic." But the Times adds that "almost everyone on the planet is vulnerable to the new coronavirus" and "each person may need two doses of a new vaccine to receive protective immunity. That's 16 billion doses." Manufacturing vaccines "is profoundly more complex than manufacturing, say, shoes or bicycles. ... Also, no factories have ever churned out millions of doses of approved vaccines made with the cutting-edge technology being tested by companies like Inovio and Moderna."

In an op-ed for the New York Times (5/20, 18.61M), Elena Conis, a professor at the University of California, Berkeley, and Michael McCoy and Jessie Moravek, doctoral students at the university, recall the development of a polio-vaccine and write that "America's experience with polio should give us pause, not hope. The first effective polio vaccine followed decades of research and testing." Once it was approved, there were life-threatening manufacturing problems. Distribution problems followed." Eventually, enough Americans were vaccinated that cases plummeted – but they persisted in poor communities for over a decade. Polio's full story should make us wary of promises that we will soon have the coronavirus under control with a vaccine."

Scientist Leading Vaccine Effort Has Ties To Pharma Industry. The New York Times (5/20, Kaplan, Goldstein, Stevenson, 18.61M) reports that Moncef Slaoui, the "chief scientist brought on to lead the Trump administration's vaccine efforts has spent the last several days trying to disentangle pieces of his stock portfolio and his intricate ties to big pharmaceutical interests, as critics point to the potential for significant conflicts of interest." Most recently, Slaoui "sat on the board of Moderna, a Cambridge, Mass., biotechnology firm with a $30 billion valuation that is pursuing a coronavirus vaccine." The value of Slaoui's "stock holdings in Moderna jumped nearly $2.4 million, to $12.4 million when the company released preliminary, partial data from an early phase of its candidate vaccine trial that helped send the markets soaring on Monday." He "sold his shares on Tuesday, and the administration said he would donate the increased value to cancer research." The Times adds that Slaoui is not a government employee. He "is on a contract," which "leaves him exempt from federal disclosure."

Medical Experts Fear Anti-Vaccine Movement Could Hinder Efforts To Distribute Vaccine. The Washington Post (5/20, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports, "Some of the same online activists who have clamored to resume economic activity, echoing President Trump's call to 'liberate' their states from sweeping restrictions, are now aligning themselves with a cause on the political fringe – preemptively forswearing a vaccine." They have "seized on the brisk pace promised for the project, which the Trump administration has branded 'Operation Warp Speed.'" The Times says that while "both movements represent the views of a small minority of Americans," medical experts "fear that the ability of their adherents to spread misinformation online could plant seeds of confusion and distrust in the broader public – and undermine future efforts to distribute a vaccine."

Reliability Of Coronavirus Antibody Tests In Question.

On ABC World News Tonight (5/20, story 3, 2:15, Muir, 8.39M), Eva Pilgrim reported that there are "questions about the reliability of some of the crucial antibody tests on the market. At its peak, there were 170 different ones, most without FDA emergency use authorization." There are 12 such tests "on the FDA's emergency use authorized list."

Scientists Eye Barring Superspreading Events To Slow Coronavirus' Spread.

The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Pancevski, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that scientists looking for ways to prevent widespread coronavirus infections as lockdowns are lifted are focusing on avoiding superspreading events. Scientists theorize that prohibiting large public events at which hundreds of people can become infected in a short time, coupled with measures like face masks could slow the virus' spread.

WPost-Ipsos Poll: Mask Shortage For Healthcare Workers Continued Into May.

The Washington Post (5/20, Bernstein, Safarpour, 14.2M) reports that according to a Washington Post-Ipsos poll, "front-line health-care workers still experienced shortages of critical equipment needed for protection from the coronavirus into early May – including nearly two-thirds who cited insufficient supplies of the face masks that filter out most airborne particles." the poll found that "more than 4 in 10 also saw shortages of less protective surgical masks and 36 percent said their supply of hand sanitizer was running low. ... Roughly 8 in 10 reported wearing one mask for an entire shift, and more than 7 in 10 had to wear the same mask more than once."

US Has Resisted Out-Of-Home Quarantine Despite Apparent Effectiveness In Other Nations.

The Washington Post (5/20, Janes, 14.2M) reports that the US "has remained largely resistant to isolating people in government-run centers away from their homes," even though "centralized, out-of-home quarantine and isolation appeared helpful in breaking the chain of transmission in other countries." The Post adds that "in places where voluntary isolation facilities are available, local officials are finding fewer people taking advantage of them than expected." According to experts, this is "a reflection...of cost and conflicting priorities, of cultural norms and mistrust of government."

CDC: Coronavirus "Does Not Spread Easily" Via Touching Surfaces, Objects.

USA Today (5/20, Flores, 10.31M) reports recently updated Centers for Disease Control and Prevention guidelines say that the novel coronavirus "does not spread easily" by touching contaminated surfaces or objects, by animal-to-human contact, or vice versa. However, the agency warned that transmission via such routes "may be possible." Meanwhile, the CDC continues to warn "that the main way the virus is spread is through person-to-person contact, even among those who are not showing any symptoms," and that "the main way to prevent infection" is social distancing, hand washing with soap, and "cleaning and disinfecting frequently-touched areas."

Administration Keeping CDC Guidance On Reopening Churches On Hold.

The Washington Post (5/20, Sun, Dawsey, Boorstein, 14.2M) reports Administration officials say that "a battle between the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the White House" has federal guidance for reopening houses of worship amid the coronavirus pandemic on hold. They said some White House and coronavirus task force officials decided to hold back the draft CDC guidance, not wanting "to alienate the faithful" and believing some proposals "were too restrictive." However, public health experts said withholding "guidance for religious institutions puts some of the most vulnerable at risk" for contracting COVID-19. They point to a fatal coronavirus outbreak at an Arkansas church and "recent church closures in states at the forefront of reopening efforts" as "challenging the wisdom of the CDC not issuing guidance."

WSJournal Supports Minnesota Churches' Plans To Reopen In Defiance Of Restrictions. The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) supports Minnesota churches that plan to reopen in defiance of coronavirus pandemic restrictions. Gov. Tim Walz (D) is easing the restrictions on some businesses, but not churches. The Journal argues the churches are protected by the First Amendment and that they are seeking equal, not special treatment.

CMS Urges Governors To Caution When Easing Nursing Home Restrictions.

Anthony Mason reported on CBS This Morning (5/20, 2.71M) that CMS, which "oversees many of the nation's nursing homes is urging governors to use extreme caution in easing coronavirus restrictions." Jonathan Vigliotti went on to report CMS Administrator Verma "says the decision to allow visitors to return to nursing homes should depend on coronavirus cases in the community, inspections of especially hard-hit facilities and testing for staff and residents." Verma: "We've already seen governors across the nation taking action around testing in their nursing homes. We think that's a very important component toward reopening nursing homes." Vigliotti added that CMS "says a commission of industry experts will meet later this month to look back at the response and identify best practices," although "critics argue that panel should have met much earlier in this crisis."

GAO Report Details Pre-Pandemic Nursing Home Infection-Control Lapses. The AP (5/20, Alonso-Zaldivar) says a Government Accountability Office report says that even "before COVID-19 killed thousands of nursing home residents, about 4 in 10 homes inspected were cited for infection control problems." However, the GAO report "found that state inspectors who help enforce federal nursing home standards classified the overwhelming majority of violations as not severe, generally meaning there was no actual harm to residents." Nevertheless, Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR) is quoted as saying, "Warning signs were ignored and nursing homes were unprepared to face a pandemic. ... There need to be big changes in the way nursing homes care for seniors."

Administration Reportedly Preparing Plans To Extend National Guard Deployment.

Politico (5/20, Ollstein, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that in the wake of pressure from "scores of lawmakers," Administration officials are working on "plans to extend the federal deployment of more than 40,000 National Guard members performing coronavirus relief work," according to four people familiar with the matter. Such an extension would "help thousands of Guard members qualify for federal retirement and education benefits for which they would otherwise fall only one day short of obtaining." However, "White House spokesperson Hogan Gidley did not confirm or deny whether Trump planned to authorize an extension past the current cutoff date of June 24."

The Washington Examiner (5/20, Mahshie, 448K) reports National Guard Association of the United States President retired Brig. Gen. J. Roy Robinson said that the possibility the deployment would end a single day before becoming eligible for beneficent "makes me sick to my stomach." He added that, in the Examiner's words, "most of the letters he saw from governors requested an extension through June and some beyond June."

LATimes Analysis: "Growing Signs" Coronavirus Is Slowing In California.

The Los Angeles Times (5/20, Lin, Lee, Greene, 4.64M) reports that there are "growing signs" that the coronavirus is "ebbing" in California "even as the state death toll continues to climb past 3,400." The Times says "deaths remain a stubborn challenge," but "other metrics analyzed by the Los Angeles Times show significant progress – enough that even some of the most cautious local health officials have agreed to begin reopening the economy." the number of new cases in the state "has declined last week from the previous week, dropping to 12,229 cases from 13,041 the previous week. That's a notable achievement, given the amount of increased testing." In addition, "hospitalizations have dropped more than 15% from its peak six weeks ago."

Northam: "No Particular Timeline" For Northern Virginia To Begin Reopening.

The Washington Times (5/20, Zielonka, 492K) reports Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) said Northern Virginia leaders were "following the data" in their decision not to move into Phase 1 of the reopening plan with the rest of the Commonwealth. In a letter to Northam, local leaders said they would not be ready to enter Phase 1 until at least May 29. According to the Times, "the city of Alexandria and Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun and Prince William counties, which make up most of Northern Virginia...have the state's worst coronavirus case numbers." Northam said, "We haven't set any particular timeline. ... We will continue to follow that daily. We will be in communication with those (local) leaders, and when they are comfortable, and when the data supports a movement into Phase 1, we will do so."

Navajo Nation Hit Hard By COVID-19.

ABC World News Tonight (5/20, story 4, 3:30, Muir, 8.39M) reported that amid the coronavirus pandemic the Navajo Nation is "in dire need," with "almost no medical facilities at all" and the largest hospital nearby "already at capacity." ABC's Matt Gutman added the Navajo Nation's COVID rate is higher than New York's. The reservation "is larger than West Virginia, but 40 percent of the people who live here don't have electricity, 30 percent don't have access to running water." The tribe's tradition of large families has "made them vulnerable," as one member becoming infected almost always means the rest catch the virus, too.

GOP Operatives Seeking "Pro-Trump" Doctors To Push For Economy's Revival.

The AP (5/20, Biesecker, Dearen) reports, "Republican political operatives are recruiting 'pro-Trump' doctors to go on television to prescribe reviving the U.S. economy as quickly as possible," without waiting to meet guidelines proposed by the CDC. The AP cites a leaked recording of "a May 11 conference call with a senior staffer for the Trump reelection campaign organized by CNP Action, an affiliate of the GOP-aligned Council for National Policy," during which the plan was discussed. The AP adds that a revived economy "is seen as critical to boosting President Donald Trump's reelection hopes and has become a growing focus of the White House coronavirus task force led by Vice

HUD Secretary Carson said on the Larry O'Connor Show (5/20), “We don’t want to think that we are out of the woods yet because we are not. We are in a significant clearing. There is no question about that. But at the same time, I think there is a general realization that the cure could be worse than the disease itself if we don’t begin to act at this stage of the game. This is built upon a very strong economy. ... The infrastructure is still there. So all we have to do is bridge the gap, keep things going.”

Politico (5/20, Cancryn, 4.29M) reports that earlier this week, the CDC “quietly published detailed guidelines for reopening schools and businesses that have been shut down in the coronavirus pandemic.” The document “is the most extensive guidance yet offered by the health agency, which has spent weeks embroiled in controversy over how far it should go in influencing institutions’ decisions about how to open safely.” Politico says “the CDC guidance – which is still shorter than earlier leaked versions – was reportedly delayed for weeks over worries that it was ‘too prescriptive,’ and failed to align with the White House’s broader, more hands-off approach.”

The AP (5/20, Stobbe) reports that “as with other recently released guidance, religious organizations were not included. Instead, the document has advice for childcare facilities, schools, day camps, mass transit systems, restaurants, bars and other businesses and organizations that have workers at high risk of becoming sick from the coronavirus.” The CDC “gave White House officials a more detailed version,” more than a month ago. It “included detailed information for churches wanting to restart in-person services, with suggestions including maintaining distance between parishioners and limiting the size of gatherings.” Weijia Jiang of the CBS Evening News (5/20, story 4, 2:35, O’Donnell, 5.27M) reported that “CBS News has...learned through an Administration official that some CDC staffers worry their science is being squashed for the sake of reopening, and they are frustrated because they say President Trump, not medical experts, has control of public messaging.”

Reopened States Deliver Positive Economic News. The Washington Times (5/20, Boyer, 492K) reports that reopened states offered “positive economic news” Wednesday “as President Trump hosted the governors of Arkansas and Kansas at the White House.” Arkansas Gov. Asa Hutchinson (R) told the President in a White House meeting “that his state is ‘back to work’ and that the state’s sales tax revenue likely will bounce back faster than expected.” Hutchinson said, “All of our retail stores are open, all of our retail establishments totally are open, our gyms are open. ... Our barbers are open, our restaurants.” Hutchinson “said he now projects the state’s sales tax revenue will be down only 5%, instead of the 10% he had projected.” Nexstar Media Group (5/20, 49K) Washington correspondent Jessi Turnure reported that Hutchinson told the President that “his state is having an easier time restarting its economy because he was one of the few governors that did not issue a statewide stay-at-home order.” Hutchinson: “There were repercussions from it, but in terms of the economy, it’s all positive. ... If you look at any measuring stick, Arkansas is in a very good position.”

The New York Times (5/20, 18.61M) reports that as of Wednesday, “all 50 states had begun to reopen to some degree, two months after the outbreak thrust the country into lockdown. But vast variations remain in how states are deciding to open up, with some forging far ahead of others.” The Times says governors are “increasingly facing intense pressure to reopen, as millions of Americans have lost their jobs and the unemployment rate reached a staggering 14.7 percent.”

In a separate story, the New York Times (5/20, Mervosh, Harmon, 18.61M) says the “increasing” pressure to reopen businesses and outdoor spaces reflects “the immense political and societal pressures weighing on the nation’s governors, even as epidemiologists remain cautious and warn of a second wave of cases.” ABC World News Tonight (5/20, story 2, 3:30, Muir, 8.39M) that “despite all 50 states now easing restrictions, protesters arguing it’s not fast enough.”

Politico (5/20, Mays, Ward, 4.29M) reports that “tension that began with governors versus the federal government has now trickled down, pitting officials within their own states against each other in ways that have direct implications for the fight against the virus and have already landed in the courts.” According to Politico, “With cases increasing in some places and falling in others – and with a second wave predicted in the fall – the new pandemic battlegrounds will be increasingly localized.” Politico adds, “Experts say a one-size-fits-all approach for reopening is not an option – not when the number of new daily cases is changing at vastly different rates from city to city and state to state.”

NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 3, 2:15, Holt, 7.5M) reported that while “parts of all 50 states are now reopened,” Americans “remain highly conflicted, eager to get on with life but many still worried about the silent spread.” NBC (Almaguer) added, “A new poll finds more than half of Americans fear a new spike in COVID cases as restrictions are eased.”

Cuomo, De Blasio Urged To Lift Restrictions On New York City. In a front-page opinion piece for the New York Post (5/20, Marcus, 4.57M), The Federalist’s New York correspondent David Marcus writes that by “prolonging the coronavirus shutdown long after its core mission was accomplished, Gov. [Andrew] Cuomo and Mayor [Bill] de Blasio have plunged tens of thousands of New Yorkers into poverty.” Marcus argues that New York City “is dying. ... For two months, we have waited for Cuomo and de Blasio to tell us how this ends.” Marcus adds, “There is no longer any reasonable justification for the government to deprive us of our livelihoods. And our rights aren’t the government’s to grant or take away.”

Video Touting Coronavirus Conspiracy Theory Was Viewed More Than 8M Times.

The New York Times (5/20, Frenkel, Decker, Alba, 18.61M) reports on a 26-minute video called “Plandemic” that was posted on Facebook by “little-known film producer” Mikki Willis. The Times describes the video as “a slickly produced narration that wrongly claimed a shadowy cabal of elites was using the virus and a potential vaccine to profit and gain power.” It “featured a discredited scientist, Judy Mikovits, who said her research about the harm from vaccines had been buried.” After it was posted, the video “gathered steam in Facebook pages dedicated to conspiracy theories and the anti-vaccine movement, most of which linked to the video hosted on YouTube. Then it tipped into the mainstream and exploded." A week after its release, the video "had been viewed more than eight million times on YouTube, Facebook, Twitter and Instagram, and had generated countless other posts."

WSJournal: COVID-19 Risk To Children Doesn't Support Extending Lockdowns.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) calls for perspective on reports of inflammatory symptoms linked to the coronavirus in children, arguing that children are at less risk of develop the disease and largely appear to not spread it. The Journal concludes that the disease's risk to children doesn't justify continuing lockdowns.

High Court Halts Democrats' Push For Release Of Mueller Report Secret Grand Jury Material.

The Washington Post (5/20, Barnes, Marimow, 14.2M) reports, "The Supreme Court on Wednesday stopped House Democrats for now from seeing secret grand jury material from Robert S. Mueller III's investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election and whether President Trump obstructed the special counsel's work." The court, "without noted dissent, agreed to a request from the Justice Department to put on hold a lower court's decision granting the House Judiciary Committee some previously undisclosed material from Mueller's probe." The action "could mean that Congress will not receive the full Mueller report...until after the November election, or perhaps not even during lawmakers' current term, which ends Jan. 3." The New York Times (5/20, Liptak, 18.61M) points out "the Supreme Court's brief order gave no reasons for blocking an appeals court ruling ordering the release of the full report while the justices considered whether to hear the case."

The Washington Times (5/20, Swoyer, 492K) also says the court is "siding with the administration – for now," and the Los Angeles Times (5/20, Savage, 4.64M) that "the court's action means more delay" for the committee, "which first sought to see the evidence and documents after Mueller wrapped up his probe last year and before they began an impeachment." Axios (5/20, Basu, 521K) reports "Democrats say the material could help them determine whether President Trump obstructed the Mueller investigation, possibly requiring new articles of impeachment." The Wall Street Journal (5/20, A1, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Rubio Says Someone "Broke The Law" With Flynn Leak.

The Washington Times (5/20, Sherfinski, 492K) reports interim Senate Intelligence Chairman Marco Rubio said Wednesday that "someone 'broke the law' by leaking information about Michael Flynn's conversation with the former Russian ambassador to the U.S., and it's valid to ask more questions about how it happened." Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (5/20, 831K), Rubio said, "Someone took that information, gave it to members of the press and broke the law, and I think that alone is cause for accountability to find out who did it. ... You cannot have a law enforcement agency have people within it that break the law. This is a valid area of inquiry."

White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said on The Pod's Honest Truth (5/20) podcast, "What we know happened is that Michael Flynn's identity was unmasked and it was leaked. It is a criminal offense to leak the identity of an individual like Michael Flynn, a private citizen, to the press after it being unmasked. So we know that a crime was committed. Who did it is the question."

Flynn's Name Was Never Masked In FBI Document. The Washington Post (5/20, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports, "A Republican effort to determine who may have leaked the name of Michael Flynn in connection to his 2016 contact" with then-Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak "has centered on the question of which Obama administration officials requested his identity be 'unmasked' in intelligence documents. But in the FBI report about the communications between the two men, Flynn's name was never redacted, former U.S. officials said." One former official told the Post, "When the FBI circulated [the report], they included Flynn's name from the beginning. ... There were therefore no requests for the unmasking of that information." Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham "announced this week that he wants to subpoena witnesses over the unmasking of Flynn, as part of a larger effort to unearth information about the FBI's investigation of Trump campaign officials."

The Washington Examiner (5/20, Dunleavy, 448K) reports Senate Intelligence Vice Chairman Mark Warner sent a letter to Acting DNI Grenell on Wednesday asking him "to release a host of documents related to Flynn and the present unmasking controversy."

FBI Offered To Pay Steele To Collect Intelligence On Flynn. The Daily Caller (5/20, Ross, 716K) reports, "An FBI offer to pay former British spy Christopher Steele to collect intelligence" on Flynn in the weeks before the 2016 election "has been one of the more overlooked revelations in a Justice Department inspector general's report released in December. The reference to the FBI proposal, which was made in an Oct. 3, 2016, meeting in an unidentified European city, has received virtually no press attention."

More Than 1,100 Ex-Federal Prosecutors Condemn DOJ Attempt To Dismiss Charge. Reuters (5/20, Lynch) reports, "More than 1,100 former U.S. federal prosecutors on Wednesday blasted the attempt" by the Justice Department to dismiss a charge against Flynn, "saying the move puts Trump's personal interests ahead of the public good. The criticism came in a legal brief the nonprofit The Protect Democracy Project plans to file in federal court in Washington." The ex-prosecutors accused Attorney General Barr "of abusing his oath of office by asking to dismiss the criminal charge against Flynn."

USA Today (5/20, 10.31M) says in an editorial that US District Judge Emmet Sullivan's decision not to dismiss the case "is certainly unusual. In our legal system, only the executive branch may bring federal criminal charges. ... But nothing about this case is easy. If Sullivan's move to delay a decision – and to seek the input of a variety of legal experts as well as appoint a former judge to make the case why charges should not be dropped – raises a few eyebrows, Justice's actions are jaw-dropping."

Cohen To Serve Remainder Of Sentence In Home Confinement.

The New York Post (5/20, Feuerherd, 4.57M) reports "President Trump's former personal lawyer Michael Cohen will be released from federal prison because of the coronavirus outbreak and will serve the remainder of his time in home confinement." The New York Times (5/20, Weiser, Benner, Rashbaum, 18.61M) says Cohen "had been serving his sentence at a minimum-security camp next to a medium-security federal prison and detention center in Otisville, about 75 miles northwest of New York City."

"Hundreds" Of Children And Teenagers Have Been Deported Amid Pandemic.

The New York Times (5/20, Dickerson, 18.61M) has a 2,300-word feature on the "swift" deportation of "hundreds of migrant children and teenagers...amid the coronavirus pandemic without the opportunity to speak to a social worker or plea for asylum from the violence in their home countries – a reversal of years of established practice for dealing with young foreigners who arrive" in the US. The Times says the deportations "represent an extraordinary shift in policy that has been unfolding in recent weeks on the southwestern border." The Washington Times (5/20, Dinan, 492K) reports Latino Democrats in Congress "begged the Trump administration on Wednesday to stop all deportations, saying the U.S. could actually be spreading the coronavirus back to other nations by sending their citizens back home."

Families With Undocumented Members Hopeful About Federal Aid.

The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Hughes, Wise, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports some consumers who were deemed ineligible for the first round of stimulus payments hope they will qualify for the next round as Democrats and Republicans debate whether families which include someone undocumented can receive aid.

Higher-Than-Anticipated Costs Have Administration Canceling Part Of Border Wall.

The Washington Times (5/20, Dinan, 492K) reports Brigadier Gen. Glenn A. Goddard told the US District Court for the Northern District of California that the Administration "has canceled a portion of border wall it had planned to build near Yuma, Arizona," on land belonging to the Cocopah Indian Reservation, due to "difficult terrain" pushing construction costs higher than expected. Goddard "is handling two lawsuits challenging President Trump's attempt to use Pentagon money to build the wall."

NYTimes Analysis: Student Debt Bill Forces Trump To Choose Between DeVos And Veterans.

In an analysis, the New York Times (5/20, Green, 18.61M) reports that a "bipartisan resolution to overturn an Education Department rule that would make it considerably harder for students to have their federal loans forgiven, even if they could show they were victims of unscrupulous universities," poses a "dilemma" for President Trump, "with possible consequences" for his reelection. Signing the bill, which House Speaker Pelosi sent to his desk, would be "a humiliating defeat" for Education Secretary DeVos. However, standing by her "efforts to roll back loan forgiveness for students bilked by their colleges" could "enrage veterans groups," which strongly oppose her policy "and whose favor he has long courted."

Pompeo Says IG's Firing Should Have Come Sooner, Notes Criminal Prosecution Of Menendez.

The AP (5/20, Lee) reports that Secretary of State Pompeo "adamantly denied that he recommended firing the State Department's independent watchdog in retaliation for investigations into Pompeo's conduct," but "again declined to provide specific reasons for Steve Linick's dismissal as inspector general." Pompeo "took an unusually harsh shot at the top Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee." Sen. Robert Menendez (D-NJ), and "accused the senator's office of being behind allegations that Linick's ouster was motivated by revenge." Pompeo "said he would not take ethics lessons from Menendez, who was once prosecuted by the Justice Department on corruption charges." Pompeo is quoted as saying, "I don't get my ethics advice from Sen. Menendez." The CNBC (5/20, Breuninger, 3.62M) website indicates that Pompeo also said, "This is all coming through the office of Sen. Menendez. ... I don't get my ethics guidance from a man who was criminally prosecuted." CNBC says Pompeo then "abruptly end[ed] the briefing."

Reuters (5/20, Pamuk, Brunnstrom) reports that Pompeo "declined to say why he recommended firing [Linick], but added he should have done it earlier and rejected claims his decision was motivated by political retaliation." Pompeo said, "In this case, I recommended to the President that Steve Linick be terminated. Frankly should have done it some time ago." Reuters adds that "Congressional aides" have indicated that Linick was "probing whether Pompeo misused a taxpayer-funded political appointee to perform personal tasks for himself and his wife, such as walking their dog."

On the CBS Evening News (5/20, story 6, 1:50, O'Donnell, 5.27M), Nancy Cordes described Pompeo as "defiant," and added that "he downplayed reports that Linick had been investigating him." Pompeo was shown saying, "I've seen the various stories that someone was walking my dog to sell arms to my dry cleaner. I mean, it's all just crazy." NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 9, 1:40, Holt, 7.5M) showed Pompeo saying, "I couldn't possibly have retaliated for all the things. ... It's all crazy stuff. So I didn't have access to that information, so I couldn't possibly have retaliated. It would have been impossible." The Hill (5/20, Kelly, 2.98M), McClatchy (5/20, Lowry, Wilner, 19K), the Washington Times (5/20, Taylor, 492K), the Washington Examiner (5/20, Gehrke, 448K), and the Daily Caller (5/20, Kruta, 716K) also cover Pompeo's comments yesterday.

The New York Times (5/20, Jakes, Wong, 18.61M) reports, meanwhile, that Linick's office was "also investigating at least one policy issue tied directly to Mr. Pompeo, whether the Trump administration acted illegally last year in declaring an 'emergency' to bypass a congressional freeze on arms sales." The Times adds that "ending the freeze allowed American companies, including Raytheon, to sell at least $8.1 billion of arms to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates" even though "lawmakers from both parties had put a hold on the sales in 2017 because of reports of mass civilian deaths in the Saudi-led air war in Yemen." The Times adds that "in early March, investigators told senior State Department officials of their preliminary findings in the Saudi inquiry, which is customary before reports are released."

Politico (5/20, Toosi, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that Linick "had recently wrapped up an investigation into two...top aides to...Pompeo, determining that they had likely failed to report allegations of workplace violence." Politico continues, "The probe into Cam Henderson, who leads the department's Office of Protocol, and a deputy of hers, Mary-Kate Fisher, could have been another factor in what Pompeo and his deputies have described as mounting frustration with...Linick, and might have contributed to the secretary's push to oust him." Henderson "took over as the chief of the Office of Protocol last summer, after her former boss, Sean Lawler, was pushed out," and "some in that office accused Lawler of intimidating and harassing his staffers, and even carrying around a whip on the job."

The Hill (5/20, Lillis, 2.98M) reports House Speaker Pelosi yesterday "bashed...Pompeo for his role in the recent dismissal of his agency's top watchdog, calling the episode 'scandalous' and urging Pompeo to provide a justification before Congress."

Warner Blocks Interior Nominee Over Lack Of Information On Ghaisar Case.

The Washington Post (5/20, Jackman, 14.2M) reports Sen. Mark Warner (D-VA) on Wednesday "placed a hold on a nominee for a top Interior Department post as a protest of what he called the department's continued refusal to answer his questions about the fatal shooting of motorist Bijan Ghaisar by two US Park Police officers in 2017." Lanny Erdos is nominated "to serve as the director of the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement." Interior Department spokesman Nicholas Goodwin on Wednesday evening "said the department had responded to Warner's questions."

NASA Human Spaceflight Program Chief Resigns.

The New York Post (5/20, Steinbuch, 4.57M) reports, "Doug Loverro, head of NASA's human spaceflight program, has resigned abruptly after six months on the job – days before the agency plans to launch astronauts for the first time since the space shuttle retired in 2011." The Post adds "no official reason for Loverro's departure has been announced."

WPost Calls For Changes In Behavior Of US Attorney's Office For DC.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M) condemns the "degradation" of the US attorney's office in the District of Columbia, which has been "politicized in service to the interests of President Trump" and has an "increasing disconnect with the local community it is supposed to serve." Trump's announced nominee for the post, Justin Herdman, the US attorney in Cleveland, and Michael R. Sherwin, who has been chosen to hold the position until Herdman obtains Senate confirmation, "will have a special responsibility to prove that their commitment is to justice and professionalism, not personal loyalty to" Attorney General Barr or Trump. The Post calls for Sherwin and Herdman to address "the criminal-justice needs of the people of the District of Columbia" instead of "flashier national and international cases."

Trump Announces Federal Help After Michigan Flooding, Praises First Responders.

President Trump tweeted yesterday, "My team is closely monitoring the flooding in Central Michigan – Stay SAFE and listen to local officials. Our brave First Responders are once again stepping up to serve their fellow citizens, THANK YOU!" Trump later added, "We have sent our best Military &@FEMA Teams, already there. Governor must now 'set you free' to help. Will be with you soon!" The AP (5/20) points out Trump's "jab at [Democratic Gov. Gretchen] Whitmer, whom he has criticized for her stay-at-home orders." Bloomberg (5/20, 4.73M) says "the two have tussled over getting medical supplies to the state and Trump, along with Michigan Republicans, have pressed the Democrat to open businesses sooner."

The Detroit Free Press (5/20, Spangler, 1.52M) reports, meanwhile, that Trump said Wednesday that he spoke to Whitmer "about flooding in Midland County and plans to visit at some point in the future." Trump told reporters, "I just spoke with Gretchen Whitmer. I will be going to Michigan at the appropriate time. ... They have a big problem with the dams breaking. So that is a big, big problem. ... We've sent the FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency) and the Army Corps of Engineers out, and they're very good at dams." Trump "will be in Michigan on Thursday for a visit to a Ford Motor plant in Ypsilanti that makes ventilators but no other stops are expected."

The CBS Evening News (5/20, lead story, 3:25, O'Donnell, 5.27M) opened its broadcast with coverage of the "historic floods in Michigan, which tonight is under a state of emergency after torrential rains caused one dam to fail and another to breach." CBS (Shamlian) added, "We learned that Dow Chemical has enacted an emergency plan to keep flooded chemical ponds from spilling over."

The Washington Post (5/20, Cappucci, Freedman, 14.2M) says "the facility is associated with a Superfund site due to excess dioxins, which are known to cause cancer, in the riverbed downstream of the plant." The New York Times (5/20, 18.61M) reports a Dow spokesman "confirmed that as of 10 a.m. Wednesday, floodwaters had reached the site's outer boundaries, and were entering ponds designed to hold storm water runoff." In another article, the New York Times (5/20, Tabuchi, 18.61M) reports that "with much of Midland expected to be underwater by later on Wednesday, it was likely that the floodwaters would breach the levees designed to protect the Dow compound, said Allen Burton, a professor of earth and environmental sciences at the University of Michigan. This meant that, at the site itself, flooding could reach storage tanks, potentially releasing chemicals onto farmland and residential areas that line the river downstream, he said."

NBC Nightly News (5/20, lead story, 2:25, Holt, 7.5M) said "the water came fast and furious, a pair of dams in central Michigan failing, sending water gushing into homes and businesses." ABC World News Tonight (5/20, lead story, 3:10, Muir, 8.39M) reported that "complicating matters, Michigan remains under a stay at home order to prevent the spread of the coronavirus." ABC added the flooding "is heading south," and officials are "concerned about one of those dams failing further. This river has never been this high." The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Ailworth, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports on the devastation in Michigan.

EPA's Wheeler Defends Recent Deregulation Push.

The AP (5/20, Daly) reports that Democrats yesterday "blasted the Trump administration's moves to roll back environmental regulations during the coronavirus crisis, with one senator saying a 'pandemic of pollution' has been released." The Environmental Protection Agency "has weakened regulations dealing with fuel efficiency and mercury emissions and has waived enforcement on a range of public health and environmental mandates, saying industries could have trouble complying with them during the coronavirus pandemic." EPA Administrator Wheeler told the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee that the EPA is "open for business" and "at work meeting our mission of protecting human health and the environment." However, a staff report released by Sen. Tom Carper (D-DE), "the committee's senior Democrat, said the EPA under Republican Trump 'has continued its relentless march to weaken or repeal rules that were designed to remove greenhouse gas, soot, mercury and other pollution from our air.'"

Pelosi Defends Calling Trump "Morbidly Obese."

Politico (5/20, Ferris, 4.29M) reports that House Speaker Pelosi yesterday told reporter that "she was giving...Trump 'a dose of his own medicine' when she described him as 'morbidly obese' in a television interview earlier this week." Pelosi "made the comments in a Monday interview with CNN as she blasted Trump's decision to take hydroxychloroquine."

The New York Post (5/20, Nelson, 4.57M) reports, "This Capitol spat just keeps getting uglier." A day after Trump "said she has 'mental problems,'" Pelosi "likened the commander-in-chief to a child with 'doggie doo on his shoes.'" Pelosi said of Trump, "It's like a child who comes in with mud on their pants or something – that's the way it is, they're outside playing. He comes in with doggy doo on his shoes and everybody who works with him has that on their shoes, too, for a very long time to come." Pelosi "went so far as to claim she's spoken to doctors about Trump's mental state," saying, "I hear doctors talk to me about saying, 'What's matter with him?' The things he says are so inappropriate for a President of the United States." The Washington Times (5/20, Muñoz, 492K) also points "Pelosi's feud with...Trump dragged on Wednesday," and USA Today (5/20, Hayes, 10.31M) that "the war of words" between Trump and Pelosi "escalated" further.

Brzezinski Calls On Twitter To Remove "Sick, Disgusting" Trump From Platform.

Breitbart (5/20, Bokhari, 673K) reports "Mika Brzezinski, co-host of MSNBC's Morning Joe went off on a rant about President Trump [on Wednesday], calling him 'sick' and 'disgusting,' and calling on Twitter's Jack Dorsey to censor the President's tweets." Townhall (5/20, Rosas, 177K) recounts that "after the show had ended, Brzezinski continued to her quest to be heard from the CEO of Twitter, Jack Dorsey, on her own Twitter account," saying, "the world would 'be safer' if Trump's account is removed from the social media platform and said his tweets are 'libel.'"

Blue Angels Fly Over Navel Academy's Class Of 2020 Commencement.

The CBS Evening News (5/20, story 9, 0:20, O'Donnell, 5.27M) reported that in "a big surprise," the Blue Angels flew over the Naval Academy's class of 2020 when the graduates performed their traditional hat toss.

CNBC/Change Research Poll: Trump Leads Biden 48%-46% In Crucial Battleground States.

In an online article, CNBC (5/20, Higgins, 3.62M) reports that a CNBC/Change Research poll of 5,408 likely voters "in the key electoral states of Arizona, Florida, Michigan, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin," taken May 15-17, shows President Trump leading Joe Biden 48%-46%, "including a 41-32 lead among independents. He also leads Biden 51-40 in who would do a better job handling the economy. The two men are in a statistical tie over who would do a better job handling coronavirus. But the survey results also showed that independents are far more likely than Trump to be concerned about a potential second wave in coronavirus infections, and will put the blame on Trump if it does." Breitbart (5/20, Bleau, 673K) also reports on the poll results.

Quinnipiac National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 50%-39%. USA Today (5/20, Santucci, 10.31M) reports that a Quinnipiac University national poll of 1,323 "self-identified registered voters," taken May 14-18, shows Biden leading Trump 50%-39%, up from a 49%-41% edge the Democrat held in a similar poll taken "in early April." USA Today adds, "Of Democrats surveyed [in the new poll], 88% said they would vote for Biden while 5% said they'd vote for Trump. Of Republicans, 87% chose Trump while 8% chose Biden. Independents favored Biden over Trump 47%-36%."

Trump Reaches Out To Sanders Voters.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Crazy Bernie Sanders is not a fighter. He gives up too easy! The Dem establishment gets Alfred E. Newman (Mayor Pete) & @amyklobuchar to quit & endorse Sleepy Joe BEFORE Super Tuesday, & gets Pocahontas to stay in the race, taking thousands of votes from Bernie. He would have... beaten Sleepy Joe in a LANDSLIDE, every State, if these events didn't happen. Even if Warren just dropped out, he would have easily won. Dems did it to him with Crooked Hillary and now, even more so...and Bernie doesn't even complain. VOTE for Trump on TRADE, better than BS!"

Politico: Trump, Aides Eager To Schedule In-Person Campaign Rallies.

Politico (5/20, Orr, 4.29M) reports, "The Trump campaign has an order from the president: Find a way to get him back on the road and into megarallies to re-energize his base. In recent meetings with top campaign officials and White House aides, [President] Trump has questioned why he's avoiding campaign events if it's safe for him to travel in his official capacity." Politico says Trump's "2020 team is...keeping a close eye on regional reopenings, where modified campaign activities could soon be permitted." Politico adds that "some White House allies have encouraged the campaign to prioritize its plan for restarting rallies, worried that the optics and purpose of Trump's official travel – during which the president has sent mixed messages about his administration's response to the pandemic while surrounded by aides in face masks – is too morbid and lacks the showmanship his core base adores."

Conway: Trump Rally Held Under Social Distancing Rules "Would Look More Like A Biden Rally." The Washington Examiner (5/20, Doyle, 448K) reports White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway on Wednesday "joked that a Trump rally with social distancing in place and only 2 out of every 10 seats filled 'would look more like a Biden rally or a Clinton rally.'" Appearing on Fox News, Conway "said she hoped Trump's campaign rallies would return, but seeing an appropriately distanced crowd 'would be odd.'" Referring to the coronavirus pandemic, Conway also said she thinks Joe Biden "has benefited under the circumstances. 'We get a total of less than an hour of Joe Biden a week. That's great for Joe Biden. But there will be a campaign, there will be debates, hopefully many of them, more of them than usual, because we haven't had a normal election season so far,' she said."

Politico Analysis: As Trump Unites GOP, Biden Lagging In Outreach To Congressional Democrats.

Politico (5/20, Everett, Caygle, 4.29M) reports that President Trump "is lunching with Senate Republicans in the Capitol and prodding them to launch subpoenas against his enemies. Joe Biden is stuck in Delaware and has yet to hold even a conference call with House or Senate Democrats. At this point in a typical presidential campaign, Biden probably would have already visited with his old Senate colleagues and the House majority in the Capitol to begin the long and sometimes difficult process of syncing up his message with congressional Democrats and battleground candidates. But the coronavirus pandemic has changed all that – and given Trump an opening to unite his party at a critical moment."

USA Today Analysis: Biden Under Pressure To Choose Woman Of Color As Running Mate.

USA Today (5/20, Garrison, 10.31M) reports that Joe Biden "vowed in March to pick a woman as his vice presidential running mate. Leaders within crucial factions of the Democratic base – black and Latino voters – say that's not enough for the standard-bearer of a party that touts its diversity and relies on the steadfast support of voters of color to win. They urge him to" pick "the first woman of color as a running mate on a major party's ticket." USA Today adds that Biden, "77 and white, needs to balance the ticket with racial diversity and youth, advocates said, to energize the party's base, or he risks repeating the mistakes of Hillary Clinton, who failed to match [President] Obama's support in cities with large African American populations in her 2016 election loss to Trump."

The Hill (5/20, Wong, 2.98M) reports Rep. Lois Frankel (D-FL), "co-chairwoman of the Women's Caucus, is pushing her home-state colleague, Rep. Val Demings, for vice president." Rep. William Lacy Clay (D-MO) wants Biden "to select Gov. Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, who Clay believes would help Democrats win the all-important swing state – and the White House." Rep. Adriano Espaillat (D-NY), "a Hispanic Caucus member, said it's critical that Democrats have a strong woman of color on the ticket."

Sanders Asking His Delegates To Refrain From Attacking Democratic Leaders.

The Washington Post (5/20, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports that Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT), "whose delegates staged a raucous rebellion against Hillary Clinton at the 2016 Democratic convention, is trying to engineer a different outcome this year – by turning down the volume on his social media-driven army of 2020 delegates." Sanders' "campaign has told some supporters picked to represent him this year to sign agreements barring attacks on other candidates or party leaders, combative confrontations on social media or talking to reporters without approval. The move, which carried a threat of being removed as a delegate, has the effect of blunting one of the most powerful if divisive tools of Sanders's movement – its unrestrained online presence and tendency to stoke controversy through other media, which has at times spiraled into abuse of his opponents, perceived and real."

Rove: Biden Erred In Giving Sanders Clout In Deciding Stances On Key Issues. In his Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column, Karl Rove says that Joe Biden erred in agreeing to let Sanders choose some members to sit on a half-dozen task forces. Rove says that while Biden will select the majority of the task force members, allowing Sanders to pick some will likely lead to Biden having to adopt far-left stances that will turn off moderate voters.

NRSC Raises A Record $12.2M In April.

Townhall (5/20, McCarthy, 177K) reports that the National Republican Senatorial Committee "posted a huge fundraising haul in April, nearly doubling the previous record." The NRSC raised "$12.2 million in the month of April alone," bringing "the committee's total fundraising this year to $41.8 million" and leaving the group "with $37.8 million in cash-on-hand. This haul represents the NRSC's best April fundraising month to date; the previous record was $6 million, set in April of 2014."

Oregon GOP Senate Nominee Is Believer In QAnon Conspiracy Theory.

The Washington Post (5/20, Sonmez, Debonis, 14.2M) reports that businesswoman Jo Rae Perkins, "who believes in QAnon, the baseless conspiracy theory that has taken root among some far-right supporters of President Trump," on Tuesday won Oregon's GOP Senate primary. The Post says, "In a now-deleted video posted to her Twitter account Tuesday night, Perkins said she supports the conspiracy theory, which revolves around 'Q,' an anonymous Internet user claiming to be a government agent with top security clearance. 'Where we go one, we go all,' Perkins said in the video, reciting a QAnon slogan. 'I stand with President Trump. I stand with Q and the team. Thank you Anons, and thank you patriots. And together, we can save our republic.'" Perkins is a heavy underdog in her bid to unseat Sen. Jeff Merkley (D-OR).

The New York Times (5/20, Baker, 18.61M) reports that Perkins' win is "the latest sign that conservatives are increasingly willing to embrace a movement based on a baroque series of plotlines about... Trump battling a shadowy globalist cabal. ... The baseless conspiracy theory began in 2017 when someone claiming to have top-secret information began posting under a pseudonym to the online message board 4chan. Those continuing posts from the person identified as 'Q' have woven a fantastical plot about the planet's elites: a global cabal of politicians and celebrities controlling governments, media, banks and a child sex-trafficking ring."

The Washington Examiner (5/20, Neale, 448K) reports that Trump "has himself retweeted QAnon followers." The Examiner adds, "QAnon members have been spotted at many Trump rallies, and followers liken the president to John F. Kennedy, who they allege was the last president to take on corrupt elements in the intelligence community." In an online analysis for CNN (5/20, 83.16M), Chris Cillizza says that for the Oregon GOP, the situation "could have a negative effect on the party's image in the state long after Perkins loses in the fall." The Hill (5/20, Klar, 2.98M) and Axios (5/20, Allassan, 521K) also report on the story.

GOP Ousts Democrats In City Council Races In Democratic Stronghold Of Staunton, Virginia.

The Daily Caller (5/20, Morefield, 716K) reports, "Three Democratic members of the Staunton, Virginia, city council were ousted by Republicans on Tuesday despite receiving more votes than they did four years ago. Republican candidates Mark Robertson, Amy Darby, and Steve Claffey all joined incumbent Andrea Oakes in a four-seat GOP sweep." Local reporter Chris Graham wrote, "A city that voted for Barack Obama, twice, voted for Hillary Clinton, voted for Terry McAuliffe and Ralph Northam, even gave a solid majority to Jennifer Lewis in her 2018 congressional run against Ben Cline, is now controlled by Republicans."

WPost Blasts Texas AG For Impeding Voting By Mail.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M) condemns Texas state leaders for "encouraging" the coronavirus' threat to democracy. Allowing COVID-19 as a valid reason to get a mail-in ballot "is the least states can do to give their voters a fair shot at having their voices heard," but Attorney General Ken Paxton (R) "is fighting to keep tight limits on who qualifies for an absentee ballot." The Post adds, "Opposition to more absentee balloting is largely driven by open partisanship" and warns forcing Americans to "choose between voting and their safety" will cast doubt on the legitimacy of the November elections. The Post concludes, "States such as Texas should be reforming their election systems in preparation for November."

Convicted 9/11 Attacker Renounces Terrorism.

The AP (5/20, Barakat) reports that Zacarias Moussaoui, who is serving a life sentence as "the only man ever convicted in a U.S. court for a role in the Sept. 11 attacks," filed a handwritten court motion last month in which he wrote, "I denounce, repudiate Usama bin Laden." He added, "I also proclaim unequivocally my opposition to any terrorist action, attack, propaganda against the US" and expressed a desire "to warn young Muslim against the deception and the manipulation of these fake Jihadis." Moussaoui's petition is "seeking relaxation of the special administrative measures under which he serves his sentence."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 45.5%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 45.5%, and his disapproval at 52.5%. The President's approval is down 0.6 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.5.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (5/17-5/19) finds Trump's approval at 46%, and his disapproval at 53%.

A Quinnipiac poll of 1,353 "registered voters" (5/14-5/18) shows Trump's approval at 42%, with 53% disapproving.

An CNBC poll of 1,424 "likely voters" (5/15-5/17) finds Trump's approval at 46%, with 54% disapproving.

A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 957 "registered voters" (5/18-5/19) puts Trump's approval at 42%, and his disapproval at 55%.

World Bank Names Former Bear Stearns Crisis Expert As Chief Economist.

Reuters (5/20, Shalal) reports the World Bank on Wednesday "named former Bear Stearns executive Carmen Reinhart as its chief economist, tapping a financial crisis expert who also currently serves on advisory boards of the IMF and the New York Federal Reserve." World Bank President David Malpass "said in a statement Reinhart's experience and insights would prove invaluable as the coronavirus pandemic heaps economic pain on developing countries." IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva tweeted her congratulations, saying Reinhart was "a great choice, especially at this time of crisis." Reinhart's tenure will begin June 15. The Financial Times (5/20, Politi, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also reports.

BOE's Bailey Won't Rule Out Negative Rates.

Reuters (5/20, Bruce) reports, "Bank of England Governor Andrew Bailey said he was less opposed to negative interest rates than before the coronavirus crisis escalated, but that there were 'mixed reviews' about how well they had worked for other central banks." For the first time, Bailey said the BOE was not ruling out negative rates, but added it was "not ruling it in" either. He told lawmakers on Wednesday that the central bank is "looking very carefully at the experiences of those other central banks that have used negative rates, and a number of them are actually publishing quite interesting assessments at the moment." He added, "There are some pretty mixed reviews of it, I have to say."

UK Makes First Negative-Yielding Bond Sale.

Reuters (5/20, Milliken) reports the UK "sold a government bond with a negative yield for the first time on Wednesday, meaning the government is effectively being rewarded for borrowing after investors agreed to be repaid slightly less than they lent." The country joins Japan, Germany, and others in Europe "in selling debt yielding less than 0%, reflecting the prospect the coronavirus pandemic will cause a severe global recession and bond-buying by central banks to mitigate its impact." Wednesday's auction "saw 3.75 billion pounds ($4.6 billion) of gilts maturing in July 2023 sold at an average yield of -0.003%."

Trump Criticizes "Wacko" Chinese Official Over Coronavirus Statement.

The Washington Examiner (5/20, Neale, 448K) reports President Trump "ripped Chinese officials who he believes are responsible for failing to react quickly enough to the coronavirus." The President tweeted Wednesday morning, "Some wacko in China just released a statement blaming everybody other than China for the Virus which has now killed hundreds of thousands of people. Please explain to this dope that it was the 'incompetence of China,' and nothing else, that did this mass Worldwide killing!" Later, the President tweeted, "Spokesman speaks stupidly on behalf of China, trying desperately to deflect the pain and carnage that their country spread throughout the world. Its disinformation and propaganda attack on the United States and Europe is a disgrace.... It all comes from the top. They could have easily stopped the plague, but they didn't!"

Poll Shows Spike in Americans Who Consider China An "Enemy." Politico (5/20, Caputo, 4.29M) reports that since January, the percentage of US voters "who say China is an 'enemy' has risen 11 percentage points to 31 percent, while the percentage of voters who say China is either an ally or friend has fallen 9 points to a combined 23 percent, a new Politico/Morning Consult poll shows. The 30 percent who say China is unfriendly but not an enemy has held about constant in the past five months." The Washington Times (5/20, Sherfinski, 492K) covers the poll.

Asian Americans Report Increase in Abuse. USA Today (5/20, Phillips, Guerra, 10.31M) reports, "People of Asian descent have reported being shunned, verbally abused, name-called, coughed and spat on, even physically assaulted as the coronavirus pandemic continues to upend American life. As the political rhetoric blaming China for the pandemic escalates, law enforcement officials and human rights advocates have seen an increasing number of hate crimes and incidents of harassment and discrimination against Asian Americans." New York City "has seen 16 coronavirus-related hate crime incidents; many of which involved Asian victims."

The Washington Times (5/20, Morton, 492K) reports Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "has introduced a resolution condemning 'all forms of Anti-Asian sentiment as related to COVID-19.' ... Such anti-Asian sentiment includes referring to the virus...as the 'Chinese Virus' or the 'Wuhan Virus.' People also should not refer to the resulting illness as 'Kung Flu,' Senate Resolution 580 states."

USS Theodore Roosevelt Set To Return To Sea. The New York Post (5/20, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports the USS Theodore Roosevelt "will return to sea before Memorial Day after a coronavirus outbreak sidelined the aircraft carrier for roughly two months when more than 1,000 sailors tested positive, Navy officials said Tuesday. Since it headed into port in Guam to deal with the outbreak, China has taken advantage of its absence and ramped up its harassment of the US military and its allies in and around the South China Sea."

NYTimes Analysis: Xi Sees Pandemic "As An Opportunity In Disguise." The New York Times (5/20, Myers, Buckley, 18.61M)

looks at how Chinese President Xi Jinping “has seized on the pandemic as an opportunity in disguise – a chance to redeem the party after early mistakes let infections slip out of control, and to rally national pride in the face of international ire over those mistakes.” Beijing’s “propaganda machine is aggressively backing him up, touting his leadership in fighting the pandemic.”

Cabranes: Pharma Push For Puerto Rico Would Reduce Dependence On China. In a brief Wall Street Journal (5/20, Cabranes, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, Judge José Cabranes of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals urges a push to bring pharmaceutical manufacturing to Puerto Rico, which he says would both boost the territory’s economy and reduce US dependence on China for drugs.

WHO Decries Potential Loss Of US Funding As Global COVID-19 Cases Hit New High.

The AP (5/20) reports WHO Executive Director Michael Ryan warned Wednesday “that any end to sizable U.S. funding for the U.N. health agency will have a ‘major implication for delivering essential health services to the most vulnerable people in the world.’” Ryan “said the U.S. funding that reaches the WHO emergencies program was ‘on the order of $100 million a year’ and much goes to ‘humanitarian health operations all over the world, in all sorts of fragile and difficult settings.’” The AP says the comments “came on a day when a total of 106,000 COVID-19 cases were reported to the WHO over the last 24 hours, the most in a single day since the pandemic began.” CNBC (5/20, Lovelace, Feuer, 3.62M) reports on its website that “the majority of new confirmed cases are coming from the Americas, followed by Europe, according to WHO’s daily report.”

US Donating 200 Ventilators To Russia.

The Washington Times (5/20, Meier, 492K) reports Secretary of State Pompeo said Wednesday that the US “is donating 200 American-produced ventilators to Russia, where the number of new cases of COVID-19 have skyrocketed in recent weeks.” Pompeo tweeted, “The United States is donating 200 U.S.-produced ventilators to the Russian people to help fight COVID-19. We’ve committed over 15,000 ventilators to more than 60 countries and continue to be a global leader in contributions to fight this pandemic.”

COVID-19 Spreading Faster In Brazil Than Anywhere Else.

Lester Holt reported on NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 5, 1:35, 7.5M) that COVID-19 “is spreading faster in Brazil than anywhere else on earth.” The Washington Post (5/20, Lopes, 14.2M) reports São Paulo, “the largest city in the Western Hemisphere, is emerging as the coronavirus pandemic’s latest global hot spot.” Confirmed COVID-19 “cases in the city have soared 34 percent and at least 510 people have died in the past week as the public health infrastructure buckles and Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro continues to shrug off the crisis.” David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (5/20, story 5, 0:25, 8.39M) that Bolsonaro is “dismissing the virus as simply ‘a little flu,’ with hospitals and mortuaries there now overflowing.”

COVID-19 Rising Among Middle-Aged Men In Mexico City.

NBC Nightly News (5/20, story 6, 1:15, Holt, 7.5M) aired a report on the rising rate of COVID-19 cases among middle-aged men in Mexico City. NBC’s Richard Engel: “Doctors say what pushed them into critical condition was COVID combined with preexisting conditions, like obesity, diabetes, or smoking.”

Gulf Arab Nations Reinstating Some Restrictions After Rise In COVID-19 Cases.

The Washington Post (5/20, Dadouch, 14.2M) reports Kuwait, Qatar, and Saudi Arabia “are seeing a sharp spike in coronavirus cases, prompting governments to reimpose some restrictions that had been lifted late last month ahead of the holy fasting month of Ramadan. ... The three other Gulf Arab countries – the United Arab Emirates, Oman and Bahrain – had also eased restrictions at the onset of Ramadan.”

Prime Minister Warns Lebanon Is Facing Food Crisis.

Lebanese Prime Minister Hassan Diab writes in the Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M), “Once the breadbasket of the Eastern Mediterranean, Lebanon is facing a dramatic challenge that seemed unimaginable a decade ago: the risk of a major food crisis. ... Lebanon and its people have been struck by a triple crisis. First, as a result of decades-long political mismanagement and corruption, there has been a dramatic lack of investment in our agricultural sector.” Lebanon is also “going through an unprecedented economic and financial crisis that led the country to default on its foreign debt,” as well as the coronavirus pandemic.

UK Government Pledges To Roll Out Contact Tracing Program.

The AP (5/20, Pylas, Kirka) reports the UK government “pledged Wednesday to bring lawmakers back to the green benches of Parliament and have a ‘test, track and trace’ program for the coronavirus in place by June 1, hoping to persuade the country that it’s time to cautiously start to emerge from the COVID-19 lockdown.” The government “hopes the commitment can also pave the way for the reopening of schools for some younger children.”

Sweden’s COVID-19 Death Rate Far Below UK’s Despite Eschewing Strict Lockdown.

Politico (5/20, Duxbury, 4.29M) reports that Sweden “side-stepped a Europe-wide lockdown in mid-March, diverting from the path taken by neighboring states in the scramble to slow the spread of coronavirus,” and “since then, observers have been keen to see whether the Nordic state’s contrarian approach – which allowed businesses to keep running and children to keep going to school – was enlightened or badly misguided.” Sweden’s death rate from COVID-19 “of 364 per million is proving hard to interpret. It is well above some locked-down states like Finland at 54 but well below other countries with a much stricter regime, like the U.K. at 510.”

In a Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, economists Lars Jonung of Sweden’s Lund University and Steve Hanke of Johns Hopkins University write that the Swedish Constitution’s guarantee of freedom of movement is central to the country’s strategy.

WPost: Leaders “Have Accepted The Fact That Europe Is On Its Own.”

The Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M) editorializes, “The coronavirus epidemic has hit Europe hard. In fact, if the 27-nation European Union were a single country, it would have the highest death toll of any.” The Post says the Trump Administration “wavers between indifference and hostility to the European Union, despite the strong U.S. interest in a stable, prosperous Europe.” German Chancellor Angela Merkel and French President Emmanuel Macron “have accepted the fact that Europe is on its own as never before since World War II, and must act accordingly.”

Author: Coronavirus Spread Among “Low-Paid Foreign Workers” In Singapore.

In a 3,000-word piece for the New York Times (5/20, 18.61M), author Megan Stack, an American who lives in Singapore, writes that Singapore first “leveraged the tight controls for which Singapore is known – elaborate surveillance, police investigators, the threat of criminal prosecution – to trace and isolate anybody who caught the virus or had been in close contact with a confirmed patient. For a time, that seemed to work,” but the virus was still “being passed from one body to the next in the cramped dormitories where some 200,000 low-paid foreign workers sleep, wash and eat. The threat had not gone away; it was still gnawing at the city, unseen, from the margins.”

Iran Prolongs Temporary Release Of British-Iranian Woman.

The New York Times (5/20, Peltier, 18.61M) reports that family of Nazanin Zaghari-Ratcliffe, a British-Iranian woman Iran sentenced to five years in prison in 2016 and granted temporary release from prison in March amid fears of COVID-19 spreading among detainees, had her furlough extended indefinitely. The move raises “hopes that she could be granted clemency and return to Britain.” Western governments and human rights organizations “have long denounced” Iranian as seeking “to use dual citizens as a leverage in the repatriation of Iranian prisoners in other countries.” Zaghari-Ratcliffe’s husband, Richard Ratcliffe, said his wife is “now a ‘potential good news’ bargaining chip instead of a ‘possibly bad news’ bargaining chip.”

Iranian Navy To Continue Operating In Persian Gulf Despite US Warning.

The Washington Times (5/20, Meier, 492K) reports that despite a day earlier the US Navy warning Iran that ships coming within 100 meters of American ships will be “interpreted as a threat and subject to lawful defensive measures,” Iranian state agency ISNA quoted an unnamed military official as saying the country’s navy “will continue their regular missions” in the Persian Gulf

US Envoy Meets With Afghan President, Former Rival To Discuss Making Peace With Taliban.

Reuters (5/20, Sediqi) reports US Special Representative for Afghanistan Zalmay Khalilzad met with Afghan President Ashraf Ghani and his former rival Abdullah Abdullah to discuss making peace with the Taliban. It is the first time the three met since Ghani and Abdullah entered a power-sharing agreement on Sunday, ending their “months-long political impasse in which both claimed to be Afghanistan’s rightful leader” – which was “a major obstacle to the U.S.-brokered peace process.”

Trump Suggests Holding G7 Summit At Camp David As Previously Planned.

The AP (5/20) reports that President Trump said Wednesday “that he’s considering holding an in-person meeting in the U.S. with the leaders of the world’s major economies after all because it would be a ‘great sign to all’ of things returning to normal during the coronavirus pandemic.” The AP notes that the President was “scheduled the Group of Seven summit for June 10-12 at Camp David. ... But in March, he announced he was canceling the annual meeting because of the pandemic and that the leaders would confer by video conference instead.” Trump tweeted, “Now that our Country is ‘Transitioning back to Greatness’, I am considering rescheduling the G-7, on the same or similar date, in Washington, D.C., at the legendary Camp David. The other members are also beginning their COMEBACK. It would be a great sign to all – normalization!”

The Hill (5/20, Samuels, 2.98M) reports, “Public health officials have warned that the coronavirus is unlikely to go away and large gatherings, like the G-7, may not be safe until a vaccine is widely available.” Furthermore, it isn’t clear officials from other G-7 member countries would agree to attend with the pandemic ongoing.

Pompeo: Treatment Of Activists Makes Hong Kong Autonomy Assessment More Difficult.

Reuters (5/20, Brunnstrom, Pamuk) reports Secretary of State Pompeo said that the recent treatment of Hong Kong pro-democracy activists "make it more difficult to assess that Hong Kong remains highly autonomous from mainland China" – a requirement for the city's special treatment under American law. He added that a congressionally mandated State Department assessment on the matter was still pending, and "We are closely watching what's going on there."

Increasing Tensions Between US, China. The Washington Post (5/20, Shih, Dou, Gearan, 14.2M) reports on "fresh mudslinging" amid "rising tensions between the United States and China," with the "sharp dispute over responsibility for the novel coronavirus pandemic spills into new forums such as Taiwan." Pompeo opened a news conference "with a long list of complaints about China." Pompeo said the "whole world is waking up to" the fact that "we greatly underestimated the degree to which Beijing is ideologically and politically hostile to free nations." Meanwhile, "an animated 'credibility test' on Chinese state TV's Twitter feed mocked" Pompeo, who "has become the scapegoat of choice for Beijing officials and state media."

In a second article, the Washington Post (5/20, Shih, 14.2M) reports that Taiwanese President Tsai Ing-wen's second inauguration on Wednesday was "overshadowed...by a war of words between Beijing and Washington, underscoring how the US-aligned island has become a growing focus of the rivalry between the world powers."

Russia Proposes Summit Between US And Palestinians.

Barak Ravid of Israel's Channel 13 writes at Axios (5/20, 521K) that Western diplomats briefed a Russian initiative say the country offered to facilitate a meeting between the US and the Palestinian Authority. The two currently aren't talking, and new discussions could help "prevent escalation on the ground as Israel considers annexing parts of the West Bank." The diplomatic sources say the Russian initiative has the support of the UN and the EU, who see it as a way to slow or stop Israel's moves toward annexation. White House Special Envoy Avi Berkowitz, who met with Russian Deputy Foreign Minister for the Middle East Mikhail Bogdanov, "said the meeting would have to be framed around the Trump plan," according to sources briefed on the call.

Citing Israeli Annexation Plans, Abbas Declares End To Security Cooperation With Israel. The New York Times (5/20, Halbfinger, Rasgon, Najib, 18.61M) reports that, in "a desperate move to elicit international backing in Europe and the Arab world," Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas said that due to Israel's "determination to annex West Bank territory as soon as July 1" his government is ending security cooperation with Israel – which both "protected his government from more radical Palestinian elements, and Israeli citizens from acts of terrorism." The Times calls the move "acknowledgment that Mr. Abbas's strategy for the last 15 years" of opposing violence and pushing negotiations with Israel "failed" in the face of the Israel's Trump Administration-supported plans to annex occupied territory. Abbas' move "could remove impediments to more militant responses."

Israeli Troops Preparing For Potential War With Weakened Hezbollah.

The AP (5/20) reports that "twenty years after Hezbollah guerrillas pushed Israel's last troops from southern Lebanon, both sides are gearing up for a possible war that neither seems to want." According to the AP, "Israeli troops are striking Hezbollah targets in neighboring Syria and drilling for what could be an invasion of Lebanon." Meanwhile, Hezbollah is "beefing up its own forces and threatening to invade Israel if provoked." However, the AP says Hezbollah "can ill afford another massive clash with Israel" as its "finances are suffering because of U.S. sanctions imposed on it and Iran."

Burundi Holds Presidential Election.

The New York Times (5/20, Dahir, 18.61M) reports that, despite the ongoing coronavirus pandemic, on Wednesday Burundi held an election "to replace the country's long-reigning, autocratic president," Pierre Nkurunziza. The campaign, which "has been marked by arrests and the killings of political opponents," illustrates how the country is "caught in the grip of a political system focused more on preserving power than on protecting the public's health." Social media has been blocked with the country, and "human rights groups said they had received reports of harassment of opposition members and incidents of voter fraud" but unable to confirm them due to the social media blackout.

Powerful Cyclone Hits India And Bangladesh.

The Washington Post (5/20, Slater, Masih, 14.2M) reports that Cyclone Amphan, "one of the most powerful" in decades, made landfall in India and Bangladesh, leaving at least 14 dead. The storm, with "winds of up to 115 mph and surging waters as high as 16 feet," also "snapped power lines, blew roofs off buildings, destroyed crops and uprooted trees." Authorities in the two countries say that almost three million people evacuated their homes, moving to shelters. However, some evacuees "expressed misgivings" that hours in close quarters in the shelters risked exposure to the novel coronavirus.

Former Green Beret Tied To Ghosn's Flight From Japan Arrested.

The New York Times (5/20, Dooley, 18.61M) reports that "two men suspected of helping the former Nissan chief Carlos Ghosn flee Japan, where he was facing financial charges, were arrested in Massachusetts on Wednesday morning." According to the Times, Michael Taylor, "a former Green Beret, and his son Peter Maxwell Taylor are believed by Japanese authorities to have helped plan and carry out Mr. Ghosn's flight to Lebanon from Tokyo in December." The US District Court in Massachusetts "issued a warrant for the arrests on May 6, after a request from Japanese prosecutors."

Reuters (5/20, Raymond, Shepardson) reports that in January, Japan "issued arrest warrants for both men along with a third, George-Antoine Zayek, in connection with facilitating the Dec. 29, 2019 escape." Reuters says that "earlier this month, Turkish prosecutors prepared an indictment charging seven people, including four pilots, over Ghosn's escape via Istanbul to Beirut." Additional coverage includes the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Maremont, Kostov, Subscription Publication, 7.57M).

Alberta Premiere: Biden Won't Cancel Keystone XL If Construction Is Underway.

Politico (5/20, Gardner, 4.29M) reports that while Joe Biden's campaign said he would cancel the Keystone XL pipeline upon assuming the presidency, Alberta "has a billion dollars riding on the success of the pipeline" and its premier, Jason Kenney, "thinks he can call Biden's bluff." He said during a news conference, "I cannot imagine that a US president eight months from now, nine months from now, would require that thousands of miles of pipe be pulled out of the ground by the union workers who are now employed creating that project." However, "a slew of legal challenges that are still playing out in court could continue to stymie the project," which is on hold while the Administration defends its permits in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in California.

FHFA Releases New GSE Capital Rule, Calling For $240B In Held Capital For Return To Private Hands.

The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Ackerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the FHFA on Wednesday said that Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae should hold $240 billion in capital once they are returned to private ownership. FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "We must chart a course for the [companies] toward a sound capital footing so they can help all Americans in times of stress. More capital means a stronger foundation on which to weather crises."

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (5/20, 4.73M) reports, "The proposal is the latest sign of progress toward Calabria's goal of freeing Fannie and Freddie from nearly 12 years in federal conservatorship. Private shareholders, including hedge funds and other investment firms, could make billions of dollars when the companies are released, and the public stock offerings would likely be among the largest ever." Bloomberg says that a "senior FHFA official said the ultimate goal of the rule is to ensure that the companies are never leveraged more than 25 to 1, or 4%. As of September 2019, that would have meant they needed about $243 billion in capital, according to the FHFA."

Reuters (5/20, Schroeder) reports, "The new proposal is the FHFA's second attempt at creating a new capital plan, building on a previous proposal put out in 2018 under prior leadership." American Banker (5/20, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Comparatively, in the original 2018 proposal, drafted by former Director Mel Watt, the GSEs would have had a combined risk-based capital requirement of $180.9 billion, or 3.24% of the companies' total assets. (The earlier plan was based on Fannie and Freddie's 2017 book of business.) Calabria said in November that his agency would revisit the post-conservatorship capital framework developed by Watt, in part due to the fact that the agency had raised the GSEs' retained earnings cap after the release of Watt's plan."

DS News (5/20, Albanese) reports Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman said of the new capital rule, "The reproposal of this critical rule marks another important milestone in our path out of conservatorship. I thank Director Calabria for his leadership in moving this rule forward. As Freddie Mac takes unprecedented steps to assist homeowners and renters adversely affected by COVID-19, we remain focused on preparing for our responsible exit from conservatorship." Similarly, Fannie Mae CEO Hugh Frater called the new rule "the start of an important new chapter" for Fannie Mae. Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said, "Appropriate capitalization of the GSEs will be critical to protecting taxpayers, fostering market discipline, promoting stability in the housing finance system, and ensuring durable consumer access to mortgage credit."

The American Bankers Association (5/20, 1K) said in a statement, "We welcome FHFA and Director Calabria's revisiting of the GSE capital proposal. ABA has long advocated that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac require appropriate capitalization to reduce the risk to U.S. taxpayers, as well as a proper regulatory structure to allow for the efficient functioning of mortgage markets in all conditions." The National Taxpayers Union (5/20) said, "Given the parameters set in the Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008, FHFA can only do so much to administratively improve the GSEs. As such, we once again urge Congress to turn to the task of comprehensive housing finance reform as soon as is practically possible. Until then, we look forward to reviewing the details of the proposed rule and submitting written comments." The ABA Banking Journal (5/20) reports, "Comments will be due 60 days after publication in the Federal Register."

A Third Of Borrowers Who Sought Out Forbearance Are Not Using It.

The Denver Post (5/20, 720K) reports, "About one in 12 mortgage borrowers in the U.S. have sought a time-out on their monthly payments because of the pandemic, a helping hand made available for up to a year under the CARES Act. But a third of the 4.1 million borrowers who have requested a 'forbearance' agreement, as they are known, have remained current on their payments." According to the Post, "Whether they sought the agreements 'just in case,' got into one accidentally or found a way to scrape up the money to prevent delinquency, those borrowers could complicate efforts to refinance or take out a new mortgage, something federal officials are trying to head off." FHFA Director

Mark Calabria on Wednesday said, "Those who are making their payments should be treated as current when it comes to refinancing their loans." The Post says, "In the past, a forbearance would prevent a borrower from obtaining another government-backed mortgage for up to a year. But the federal government has stepped in, reducing the waiting period to three months, and allowing guarantors like Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae to refinance borrowers who sought forbearance."

Continuing Coverage: GSEs, FHFA Announce That Forbearance Borrowers Need Not Wait A Year To Refinance. CNN International (5/20, Bahney) reports, "Complaints filed with the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau have risen dramatically since the outbreak, and include several from homeowners who said they were placed in forbearance without requesting it, according to nonprofit advocacy U.S. Public Interest Research Group." Servicers "say they make it clear to homeowners who go into forbearance that they will be ineligible for a new home loan or to refinance an existing home loan until their payment suspension plan ends." And on Tuesday, "Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae provided guidance on this. The mortgage giants issued a clarification of the requirements for homeowners impacted by coronavirus who are in forbearance or recently out of forbearance, enabling some to still get new mortgages or refinance, according to the Federal Housing Finance Agency."

Realtor Magazine (5/20) reports that on Tuesday, FHFA Director Mark Calabria announced, "Homeowners who are in COVID-19 forbearance but continue to make their mortgage payment will not be penalized. Today's action allows homeowners to access record low mortgage rates and keeps the mortgage market functioning as effectively as possible."

Mortgage News Daily's (5/20, Chrisman) Pipeline Press rundown and RISMedia (5/20, 2K) provide additional coverage. National Mortgage Professional (5/20) reports on the new policy regarding refis, also discussing how the Federal Reserve's actions have helped drive mortgage rates down to record lows, according to Freddie Mac data.

The AP (5/20) advises readers on "what to know" about mortgage forbearance, discussing policies available to borrowers with loans backed by Freddie Mac, Fannie Mae, the FHA, and the VA. This piece also highlights the GSEs' "lookup tools" that determine "if they back your loan."

MBA Pushes For Market-Wide Liquidity Facility.

National Mortgage News (5/20) reports that on Tuesday, MBA CEO Robert Broeksmit "reiterated his call for a broad coronavirus-related liquidity facility akin to Ginnie Mae's, which could assist the industry at large." According to Broeksmit, the FHFA and GSEs took several steps to address servicers' liquidity struggles, but the Administration has so far not provided a liquidity facility for the GSE market. Broeksmit said, "The administration hasn't activated a broad liquidity facility yet as they wait to see how forbearance take-up rates change. The situation is evolving and discussions are ongoing. In the meantime, with our support, policymakers have provided relief in other important ways." MNM reports, "The MBA continues to work with government officials on ways to make that relief go further. Broeksmit said. This includes potentially expanding a measure that allows mortgage lenders to sell new home loans that go into the forbearance to the GSEs. Currently the measure excludes cash-out refinances, prompting calls to change the exemption in order to make these loans available to consumers." Broeksmit said that his organization is "working with Director Calabria to expand this program to cover cash-out refis."

MBA: Mortgage Applications Dip, Despite Bump In Purchase Volume.

CNBC (5/20, Olick, 3.62M) reports, "Mortgage applications to purchase a home rose 6% last week from the previous week, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association's seasonally adjusted index. Purchase volume was just 1.5% lower than a year ago, a rather stunning recovery from just six weeks ago, when purchase volume was down 35% annually."

However, National Mortgage News (5/20) reports that overall, mortgage applications "decreased 2.6% from one week earlier, as tighter underwriting drove the refinance index to its lowest level since March." The refinance share fell from 67% to 64.3%. The ARM share rose from 2.9% to 3.2%. The FHA share held at 11.5%, while the VA share fell from 13.7% to 13.4%.

Mortgage News Daily (5/20) reports, "The average origination balance of mortgages declined for both loans in general and purchase loans. The former fell $3,000 to $310,600 and the latter decreased to $330,700 from $332,300." The average rate for 30-year FRMs with conforming balances fell from 3.43% to 3.41%, while that for jumbos fell from 3.69% to 3.66%. The 15-year FRM average fell from 2.92% to 2.88%. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.26% to 3.19%. MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "Despite mortgage rates remaining close to record-lows, refinance activity slid to its lowest level in over a month. The average loan amount for refinances fell to its lowest level since January – potentially a sign that part of the drop was attributable to a retreat in cash-out refinance lending as credit conditions tighten. We still expect a strong pace of refinancing for the remainder of the year because of low mortgage rates."

TransUnion Study Shows Borrowers Seeking Assistance With Debt Payments Jumped From March To April.

Reuters (5/20, Moise) reports a TransUnion study released Wednesday showed the number of borrowers in the US seeking mortgage, credit card, and auto loan assistance "jumped between March and April in the economic fallout from the coronavirus pandemic." Serious delinquency rates changed little, "but forbearance programs and stimulus payments have been helping consumers stay liquid in the short term." TransUnion Vice President of Research and Consulting Matt Komos said, "While these programs are providing consumers with temporary relief, banks and lenders are looking for further regulatory guidance as to what next steps should be taken once stimulus packages dry up...We are likely to have a better sense of the true financial health of consumers impacted by COVID-19 in the coming months.”

Government Bond Yields Stagnate New All-Time Lows.

The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Goldfarb, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports government bond yields are near all-time lows in a sign investors anticipate a difficult economic recovery. For more than a month, the yield on the benchmark 10-year US Treasury note has hovered around 0.67 percent, just above its all-time low of around 0.5 percent set in March.

LoanCare's Worrall Discusses How Servicers Can Best Interact With Borrowers.

DS News (5/20, Welborn) interviewed LoanCare's Dave Worrall about "how he is applying his time at Fannie Mae to the current COVID-19 situation, and how to interact with struggling borrowers." Worrall said, "We have established programs with the GSEs and as a result, the service and community is very ready to respond and offer assistance to customers, and probably as important to make sure that our partners, like the agencies and the government, are informed about what's going on with the borrower community." According to him, "The important lessons from back then are just coordination, communication, and everybody working together to respond quickly. It is much easier now, because of everything that was put in place back in 2008 and then again as we've gone through these cycles of natural disasters over the last few years."

Census Bureau Data Shows Almost Half Of US Households Have Lost Income During Pandemic.

The Hill (5/20, Wilson, 2.98M) reports, "Nearly half of Americans say in a new survey that they or someone in their household has lost employment income because of the coronavirus pandemic, a devastating loss that has fallen most heavily on lower income workers. The Census Bureau's survey, meant to track the pandemic's impact on Americans, shows 47.5 percent of all households reporting job losses." Lower-income households have been especially hard-hit by the pandemic. According to The Hill, "More than half of households with incomes under $50,000 say they have seen their incomes slide, as have more than half of households in which no one has attained a bachelor's degree." In addition, "Ten percent of Americans said they had been unable to pay rent or their mortgages on time, and one-fifth of those who responded said they had little or no confidence they would be able to pay next month's rent or mortgage."

Many Cities At Risk Of Pandemic-Related Housing Crisis.

24/7 Wall Street (5/15, 89K) reports "housing markets nationwide are likely to struggle" under the pandemic-induced economic slowdown, and "some appear to be far more vulnerable than others." The article lists 30 US cities that are likely "at a greater risk of a COVID-19-driven" housing crisis based on "an index composed of the change in median home sales price over the past decade, housing affordability, unemployment, industry vulnerability to the impact of COVID-19, and other measures of housing market health." Cities in the top ten most affected include New York; Orlando, Florida; Los Angeles, California; and Las Vegas, Nevada.

Whalen Discusses What Post-Conservatorship GSEs May Look Like.

In an opinion piece for National Mortgage News (5/21), Whalen Global Advisors LLC Chairman Christopher Whalen shares his predictions on how the GSEs will "emerge from conservatorship," and how their business models could "dramatically" change. According to Whalen, "if the FHFA intends to push the GSEs out of conservatorship without explicit capital support from the US Treasury, then the likelihood is that Fannie and Freddie will see their cost of funds rise and their profits decline. This reality may force big changes in how the GSEs deal with conventional lenders. And it may impact how the FHFA regulates the capital requirements of the GSEs." According to Mortgage News Daily's Rob Chrisman, "The jungle drums are saying more changes are ahead which could possibly shrink Fannie and Freddie's footprint even farther through changing execution. But rumors often prove untrue."

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (5/21, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.669 percent.

Dollar Holds Firm.

Reuters (5/21, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar clawed back some of the week's losses on Thursday, as investors brought a more cautious tone to trade, while Sino-U.S. tensions and weak economic indicators dampened the mood." The euro "edged 0.2% lower to $1.0963 and the Japanese yen was steady at 107.64 per dollar." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar "rose 0.2% to 99.328 on Thursday."

Gold Falls.

Reuters (5/20, Verma) reports, "Gold fell on Thursday on hopes of a swift recovery in growth following easing of lockdowns and possibility of a coronavirus vaccine, but bleak data from major economies limited losses." Spot gold "slid 0.7% to $1,737.35 per ounce by 0625 GMT," while US gold futures "slipped 0.8% to $1,738.80."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (5/21, Obayashi) reports, "Oil prices rose on Thursday to their highest since March, as a drawdown of U.S. crude inventories and output cuts by major producers helped ease concerns about a supply glut, offsetting fears over the economic fallout from the COVID-19 epidemic." Brent crude futures for July delivery "were trading up 62 cents, or 1.7%, at $36.37 per barrel at 0550 GMT, rising for a second day." West Texas Intermediate crude futures for July "were up 61 cents, or 1.8%, at $34.10 a barrel, extending its gains into a sixth straight session."

FBI Warns Of Child Pornography Appearing In "Zoombombing."

The St. Paul (MN) Pioneer Press (5/19, Shaw, 407K) reports, "Coronavirus has caused a different kind of plague – child pornography popping up in online video meetings." According to the Pioneer Press, "The FBI on Wednesday warned against pornography appearing during meetings using the Zoom computer app. In the past few months, more than 195 reports of 'Zoombombing' have been reported in the U.S. and in other countries. Several incidents occurred in Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. The incidents occur when a Zoom participant broadcasts video depicting child sexual abuse. The 'Zoombombing' incidents have risen sharply, as millions of Americans follow stay-at-home orders and use Zoom for business or personal meetings. Anyone exposed to the pornography should contact the FBI."

WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (5/20, Staff, 239K) reports, "During the last few months, the FBI says it has received more than 195 reports of incidents in which a Zoom participant was able to broadcast a video depicting child sexual abuse." WMUR-TV adds, "In March, Boston's FBI office warned about online classroom and teleconferencing hijacking after two Massachusetts schools were targeted. Officials said reports of so-called Zoom-bombing are emerging nationwide. 'Others have used the term Zoom-bombing. We refer to it as VTC hijacking. It's essentially when an intruder joins a meeting whose not invited,' FBI Cyber Security Agent Doug Domin said."

WOAI-TV San Antonio (5/20, Antonio, 72K) , WJLA-TV Washington (5/20, Henney, 123K) , KFVS-TV Cape Girardeau, MO (5/20, Smith, 39K) , and KABB-TV San Antonio (5/20, 54K) also report.

Pennsylvania Borough Paid Thousands In Ransomware Attack.

The Harrisburg (PA) Patriot-News (5/20, Metrick, 427K) reports, "Perry County borough Duncannon paid tens of thousands of dollars in recent weeks after hackers held municipal data hostage." The Patriot-News adds, "According to a statement from the borough, which was posted to social media, all of the borough's e-files, data and emails were encrypted on April 10, 2020. Backup systems were also compromised, and the borough was unable to recover the data. The attack involved several servers maintained by the company Spashwire, which has a contract with the borough." According to the Patriot-News, "The hackers made a ransom request for $50,000, which was later lowered to $35,000, the borough said. The hackers threatened that if the money wasn't paid by April 23, the keys to decrypt the borough's data would be destroyed. Pennsylvania State Police was notified, and Spashwire's IT contractor notified the FBI, the borough said."

FBI Warns Of Sexual Predators Targeting Children During Online Learning.

WEWS-TV Cleveland (5/20) reports, "The FBI is warning that sexual predators are targeting children and trying to exploit kids online. Ohio schools moved to online learning amid the coronavirus crisis in March. According to the FBI, there is an increased threat to children. 'It is a ripe environment for predators right now,' said FBI Special Agent Vicki Anderson. 'Kids are online even more than they were before, even during school hours they are online, and we're concerned predators are going to take advantage of this,' she explained." WEWS-TV adds, "Predators posing as a child or young teenager visit apps, gaming and social media sites popular with kids. 'Predators study that, they know where to go and how to talk to kids,' said Anderson."

Iran Poses Cyber Threat To The US And Allies.

The Jerusalem Post (ISR) (5/20, Roule, 90K) reports Iran remains determined "to harm the interests of the US and its allies and exact revenge for the January 3 drone strike that killed Maj.-Gen. Qasem Soleimani." Iran still poses a "cyber threat to the US and her allies." The US national security apparatus "has warned that Iran is likely to pursue offensive cyberattacks targeting the US public and private sectors." Following the killing, both DHS and FBI "issued advisories warning of increased Iranian cyber reconnaissance activity and cautioning that Iran may be seeking disruptive attacks against critical US infrastructure." In a new report, United Against Nuclear Iran (UANI) "has documented the evolving nature of the Iranian cyber threat to the US." During the last decade, Iran "has stepped up its investment in cyberwarfare capabilities, which give it a low-cost means...to conduct espionage on, and strike, stronger adversaries in furtherance of its foreign policy and national security objectives."

Op-Ed: Iranian Hackers Remain A Threat To US Institutions. In a commentary in the Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M), Atlantic Council's Middle East Programs fellow Holly Dagrass writes, "Recent Iranian hacking efforts against her and others...was just the latest in a series of cyberattacks apparently staged by the same group – and it should set off alarm bells among US organizations and individuals." She contends, "It is critical that we understand the cyberthreat and take the necessary precautions. Given my professional focus on Iran issues at the Atlantic Council, I am a prime target for cyberattacks." She adds, "According to ClearSky, an Israeli cybersecurity firm, this phishing attack not only was Iran-linked, it bore the hallmarks of Charming Kitten, a notorious Iranian cyber-espionage group." She concludes, "My experience shows that there is a genuine cyber threat to US institutions. Even amid the covid-19 pandemic, Iran is planning for the future. Allied defenses must be equal to the task."

Japan Suspects Missile Data Leak In Mitsubishi Cyberattack.

The AP (5/20, Yamaguchi) reports officials "said Japan is investigating a possible leak of data including details of a prototype missile in a massive cyberattack earlier this year on Mitsubishi Electric Corp." The suspected leak involves "sensitive information about a prototype of a cutting-edge high speed gliding missile intended for deployment for the defense of Japan's remote islands amid China's military assertiveness in the region." Chief Cabinet Secretary Yoshihide Suga "told reporters that the Defense Ministry is investigating 'the possible impact of the information leak on national security.'" The Defense Ministry has been "studying a prototype missile known as HGV, which flies at supersonic speeds and is also being developed by the US, China and Russia."

Virtual Cybersecurity School Teaches Kids To Fix Security Flaws.

CNN International (5/20, Kelly) reports a school-based program "to teach kids a new skill is extending into a virtual cyber school." It's filled with "lessons and games to teach users how to fix security flaws on webpages, uncover trails left by cybercriminals and decrypt codes used by hackers." The program is now "available online for any student ages 13 – 18 for free in the UK, and $100 a year in the US." Nearly 8,000 middle school and high school students "have already enrolled in the virtual school since it was announced a little more than two weeks ago." Overall, the group is "expecting about 20,000 participants, who will go at their own pace." The original program started "as an effort funded by the UK government, in partnership with the US-based SANS Institute, a security training facility." It intends to "inspire young people...to acquire the interest and skill set needed for professional cybersecurity roles."

Members Of Open Networking User Group Seek Unified Cybersecurity, Cloud Data Protection Standards.

The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Nash, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports members of the Open Networking User Group, including Cigna, Raytheon, and FedEx, want Amazon Web Services, Google, Microsoft, and other cloud providers to establish standardized client data protections and cybersecurity measures. The Journal says that while an Amazon representative did not respond to its request for a comment, the company does provide customers with a toolbox that allows its clients to set up their own security features.

Cybersecurity Experts Identify Flaws In The UK's Contact-Tracing App.

Business Insider (5/20, Hamilton, 3.67M) reports cybersecurity experts identified seven flaws in the UK government's contact-tracing app, which is currently in trial with plans for further roll out in the next two weeks. The researchers, Chris Culpine and Vanessa Teague, said that unencrypted data stored on users' handsets could feasibly be accessed by law enforcement. Teague said, "The huge advantage of the Google/Apple decentralized API is that there's no central database that retains information about every infected person's contacts."

States Confront Challenges In Deciding How To Hold Elections Amid Pandemic.

The Washington Post (5/20, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that states are facing "far greater challenges preparing for the primaries and general election during the pandemic – and how some voters are in greater danger of facing a choice between casting their votes and protecting their health." Kentucky is one of "just 16 states where voters must typically provide an excuse before voting by mail." The state created "a temporary exception to that rule on April 24 but only after weeks of wrangling between Democratic Gov. Andy Beshear and Republican Secretary of State Mike Adams, who opposed expanding mail voting before the pandemic struck." It is not clear "whether officials will make a decision in time for all the necessary preparations, such as buying loads of envelopes, stuffing and sorting machines for mail ballots, and hiring poll workers who can manage the process." Voting security experts "say that it will be a massive undertaking."

Op-Ed: Congressional Support For Cyberspace Solarium Recommendations Will Help Protect Veterans From Cyber Threats.

In an op-ed in the Military Times (5/20, 772K), Kristofer Goldsmith, an associate director for policy and government affairs for the Vietnam Veterans of America, writes, "To slow the spread and prioritize critically ill patients, the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) has either cancelled or moved online the majority of outstanding appointments. But as the White House and VA push millions of veterans to be more connected to the Internet than ever before, new and increasing health threats await us in these cyber environments – threats that the Trump administration has done nothing to address." He contends, a recent "VVA report found 'persistent, pervasive, and coordinated online targeting of American service members, veterans, and their families by foreign entities who seek to disrupt American democracy.'" He concludes, "The upcoming National Defense Authorization Act would be an appropriate vessel to implement the recommendations provided by the Cyberspace Solarium Commission's and VVA's reports."

Researchers Use A Beer App To Track The Military And CIA.

Popular Mechanics (5/20, Mizokami, 7.77M) reports researchers have used “the beer app Untappd to follow the movements of military and intelligence personnel worldwide.” Using app data, researchers “have uncovered trips to sensitive places including Guantanamo Bay and Camp Peary, Virginia.” Researchers have also “discovered sensitive data that could be exploited, including photos of DOD documents, debit card numbers, and military IDs.” A beer networking app “with millions of followers inadvertently allowed security researchers to track military and intelligence personnel, including at a top secret CIA facility.” Researchers with the group Bellingcat “discovered check-ins at places as diverse as the Pentagon, Germany, and Greenland.” The researchers also “discovered shared photos that included shots of government ID cards, documents, and military hardware.”

TFI/Sanctions

Trump Administration Sanctions Iranian Interior Minister.

Reuters (5/20, Psaledakis, Heavey) reports the Trump Administration has “imposed sanctions on Iran’s interior minister...accusing him of engaging in serious cases of human rights abuse.” According to Reuters, the US Treasury Department alleges that Iranian Interior Minister Abdolreza Rahmani Fazli “gave orders authorizing the Law Enforcement Forces (LEF) of Iran to use lethal force in response to anti-government protests in November, leading to the killing of protesters, including at least 23 minors.” Secretary of State Pompeo released a statement reading, “His – and the regime’s – goal was to quash these peaceful protests and suppress the rights of peaceful assembly and freedom of expression at any cost.”

CNBC (5/20, Macias, 3.62M) reports that “the new penalties targeted a dozen individuals, including” Fazli, as well as “three entities. ... The LEF, separately sanctioned for supporting the regime of Syrian dictator Bashar Al-Assad, also uses its detention centers to recruit fighters for Iranian militias, according to Treasury.”

The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Faucon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), The Hill (5/20, Axelrod, 2.98M), and Daily Caller (5/20, Hukeri, 716K) also report.

WSJournal: Iran Betting That In Election Year Trump Won't Risk Stopping Aid To Maduro. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes that despite hits to the Iranian economy from the coronavirus pandemic and low oil prices the country is violating US sanctions by, at the least, sending tankers of fuel to aid Nicolás Maduro’s regime in Venezuela. The Journal warns that the tankers will provide income for Iran and create instability in South America. While President Trump can interdict the tankers, it could provoke a response from Iran, something the country is counting on him not gambling with in an election year.

Federal Reserve

Fed Meeting Minutes Paint “Relatively Bleak Picture” Of Path To Recovery.

The New York Times (5/20, Smialek, 18.61M) reports Federal Reserve officials “are painting a relatively bleak picture” of the economy’s “path forward amid the coronavirus pandemic, suggesting that activity may take time to bounce back even as lockdowns lift and warning that second-wave outbreaks could inflict serious damage on businesses and the labor market.” While the Administration “has been suggesting a more positive outlook” for the economy, the Fed “has taken a much more cautious view, warning that the bounce back may be halting and that a full recovery cannot take hold until the health threat posed by the deadly virus is under control.” Notes from the Fed’s April 28-29 remote meeting released Wednesday show that Fed officials “discussed ways in which the sharp economic decline already underway could create longer-lasting fallout.”

CNBC (5/20, Cox, 3.62M) reports on its website that minutes from an April 29 Federal Reserve meeting released Wednesday show that Fed officials “worried about longer-lasting impacts from the pandemic including a second round of infections and the burden that low-income households would face. ... ‘Participants commented that, in addition to weighing heavily on economic activity in the near term, the economic effects of the pandemic created an extraordinary amount of uncertainty and considerable risks to economic activity in the medium term,’ the minutes said.” According to CNBC, “One area of particular concern is what should happen in the event that coronavirus infections should surge later in the year. The minutes noted that the ‘more pessimistic’ outlook for a rebound was probably as likely as the baseline forecast for improvement.”

The AP (5/20, Crutsinger), The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Politico (5/20, Guida, 4.29M), The Financial Times (5/20, Politi, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), Reuters (5/20, Schneider, Dunsmuir), Fox Business (5/20, Henney, 1.73M), and Barron’s (5/20, Beilfuss, 1.07M) also report.

Fed Takes Bipartisan Criticism Over Stalled Lending Program.

Bloomberg (5/20, Mohsin, Davison, 4.73M) reports the Fed “received a bipartisan critique Wednesday from members of a congressional oversight panel who said the central bank has been slow to launch a key emergency lending program for mid-sized companies.” Reps. French Hill (R-AR) and Donna Shalala (D-FL) “expressed concern that the Main Street Lending Program – which targets companies too large for small business assistance and too small to qualify for corporate lending facilities – was not yet operational.” Hill said in an interview, “I’m disappointed that it’s taken as long as it has.”

Fed To Take First Requests For TALF Program Loans On June 17.

Reuters (5/20) reports the Federal Reserve Bank of New York on Wednesday "announced that the first requests for loans for the Term Asset-Backed Securities Loan Facility will be taken on June 17, with closings on June 25."

Bostic Unconcerned About Inflation; Bullard Optimistic About Potential Recovery In Second Half Of 2020.

The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Atlanta Fed President Raphael Bostic sees small chance of rising inflation due to potential economic impacts of various coronavirus mitigation efforts by the central bank. Bostic said his focus on is on the recovery rather than inflation. Meanwhile, St. Louis Fed President James Bullard believes the economy has a good chance of recovering in the second half of the year.

Kaplan: Consumer Confidence, Growth Unlikely To Rebound Without Additional Testing, Fiscal Stimulus.

Bloomberg (5/20, Saraiva, 4.73M) reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan said Wednesday that consumer confidence and economic growth will likely only return with more widespread testing and additional fiscal stimulus. Kaplan said, "Whatever the government says, until the consumer is willing to resume some of their previous activities, this recovery is not going to be as strong as it could be. ... Until they feel more comfortable they're not going to fully engage in previous activities, and that you can't legislate, you can't stimulate with money. That's behavioral." Kaplan added, "My guess is we are going to need to do more, but my guess is also you're going to need to do more fiscal action, whether it's aid to governments or other fiscal action as we go through this."

Social Security Recipients Await Stimulus Checks As IRS Struggles With Staffing Shortages.

CBS News (5/20, Picchi, 3.68M) reports a number of Social Security recipients "say they're still waiting for their stimulus checks, even though the Social Security Administration has said many of them should have begun receiving their payments a month ago in mid-April." Several also "continue to struggle with getting information from the IRS 'Get My Payment' site, leaving them unsure when the checks will arrive." One recipient, David Kemp of Maryville, Tennessee, "said he's also tried calling the IRS, but has only gotten an automated message, without an option to talk with a telephone representative about the $2,400 stimulus payment that he and his wife are still waiting to receive." The IRS "pointed to recent statements about timing of the checks, including the U.S. Treasury Department's announcement that 4 million taxpayers will receive prepaid debit cards loaded with their stimulus payments."

The Washington Post (5/19, Rein, 14.2M) reports the IRS "has made the government's most aggressive effort so far to recall its workforce." However, "like other federal agencies following President Trump's order to reopen the country, the IRS is struggling to ensure the safety of its employees as it tries to chip away at a crushing backlog and serve the public." The agency, "awash in sensitive taxpayer information, finds itself in a morass brought on by years of crippling budget cuts, cumbersome paper-based systems and resistance to telework." The staffing shortage "will prolong delays – refunds for paper tax filers, responses to amended tax returns, returns frozen after they were flagged for identity theft."

Newsweek (5/20, Kim, 1.53M) reports a Colorado man "says he got one in the mail for his mother despite notifying the IRS that she had died back in 2018." The man "received the check in an envelope that listed him as his mother's representative. 'I couldn't believe they sent it since my mom was deceased. I even filed a final tax return for her, so they have the data,' he said." The man "reportedly filed his mother's final tax return with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) earlier this year before the stimulus checks were sent out."

Newsweek (5/20, Palmer, 1.53M) reports the IRS "has announced it has added 3,500 telephone representatives to help deal with the demand in questions about the Economic Impact Payments." The IRS "said that answers for most of the common questions about the payments are available on IRS.gov website."

Tax Return Filings Plummet After Treasury, IRS Give Taxpayers Three Extra Months To File.

CNBC (5/20, Mercado, 3.62M) reports taxpayers who are "short on cash could use a tax refund, yet millions of households continue to sit on last year's tax returns." The IRS "received 128.2 million individual income tax returns as of May 8, reflecting a 9.4% decline from a year ago, according to IRS data. At this time last year, 141.5 million taxpayers submitted returns." CNBC adds that "since the Treasury Department and the IRS have given taxpayers and their preparers three more months to submit 2019 returns and pay last year's taxes, people seem to be taking their time to file."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Issues Final CRA Rule.

Reuters (5/20, Schroeder) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency on Wednesday said it had finalized efforts to modernize community lending standards for banks. The new rule "is an update to requirements stemming from the 1977 Community Reinvestment Act, which requires banks to support lower-income borrowers and their communities, and for regulators to grade them on that effort." The overhaul has been a top priority for Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting, who reportedly plans to step down soon.

The Hill (5/20, Lane, 2.98M) reports the OCC and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. "unveiled a joint proposal in December to update the CRA regulations," but neither the FDIC nor the Federal Reserve Board "joined the OCC's Wednesday proposal, raising the chance the banks may need to comply with different rules for different agencies under the same law." FDIC Chairman Jelena McWilliams said in a statement Wednesday that while her agency "strongly supports the efforts to make the CRA rules clearer, more transparent, and less subjective, the agency is not prepared to finalize the CRA proposal at this time."

Politico (5/20, Guida, 4.29M) reports the rule "will take effect in October, although compliance with the regulation" by OCC-supervised banks "will be phased in over a couple of years." The agency acknowledged that it will need more data "to set specific numerical thresholds for grading banks' lending and investment" and promised to issue another proposal "to calibrate more precisely" those requirements. In a call with reporters, OCC Chief Operating Officer Brian Brooks, who is set to take over as Acting Comptroller when Otting leaves, "defended the agency's decision to finalize the framework before it had the relevant data." Brooks said, "It's not an issue of gathering the data. The data doesn't exist." Implementing the new framework will allow banks to start collecting that data, he added.

According to American Banker (5/20, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K), the OCC's final plan "is a somewhat narrower reform framework that made several accommodations to critics." On the whole, the "changes to the rule tries to preserve a focus on qualitative judgments about a bank's CRA activity, rather than just focusing on quantitative measures." The final rule asks banks "to submit their CRA data to determine appropriate thresholds"; raises the asset threshold from $500 million to $2.5 billion for banks that "can choose to keep the current CRA regime instead of the new one"; and "give banks more credit for maintaining branches and ATMs in low-to-moderate income areas when it comes to a bank's branch distribution score."

The Hill (5/20, Lane, 2.98M) reports the banking industry "had mixed feelings about the OCC rules." American Bankers Association President and CEO Rob Nichols praised the agency for its commitment to the overhaul, "but expressed concerns about the data used to determine the rule's new benchmarks and the lack of universal uptake among regulators." Meanwhile, the Consumer Bankers Association touted the OCC's "needed improvements to qualifying activities, quantifying examination ratings, and providing incentives for outstanding ratings."

In an op-ed for American Banker (5/20, Subscription Publication, 31K), Otting writes that the final rule "will make evaluating national banks and federal savings associations for CRA performance more objective and transparent. And it will encourage those banks to lend, invest and provide more services to the communities they serve, including low- and moderate-income (LMI) neighborhoods, across the country."

Interagency Cohort Including OCC, FDIC Releases Small-Dollar Lending Guidance.

American Banker (5/20, Wack, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), the Federal Reserve Board, and the National Credit Union Administration on Wednesday released guidance providing a uniform framework for banks and credit unions on offering small-dollar loans to consumers without causing problems with regulators in DC. The "long-awaited" guidance says small-dollar loans should be "reasonably related to the financial institution's product risks and costs," though it "stop[s] well short of more concrete restrictions, such as a 36 percent interest rate cap, that many advocates favor." The guidance also says deposit advance product structures should "support borrower affordability and successful repayment" in a "reasonable time frame rather than reborrowing, rollovers, or immediate collectability in the event of default." Banks previously were first in line for any deposit into a customer's account, reducing borrowers' ability to prioritize payments.

Bloomberg Law (5/20, Weinberger, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports the guidance was "aimed at making sure consumers don't fall into debt cycles that characterize payday loans."

The Credit Union National Association (5/20) further details the specific provisions in the guidance, which was released in a document entitled: "Interagency Lending Principles for Offering Responsible Small-Dollar Loans."

Law360 (5/20, Subscription Publication, 8K) also reports.

BofA Says Security Glitch Leaked PPP Applicants' Data Through SBA's Platform.

ZDNet (5/20, Cimpanu, 299K) reports Bank of America said this week that a security glitch impacted affected its digital platform that processed Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) loans. The firm "says that information for some companies who applied for loans last month might have been viewed by other lenders or organizations." The potentially compromised data includes business addresses and tax ID numbers but also business owner names, addresses, and Social Security numbers, among other info. The firm "blamed the entire incident on a test platform managed by the US Small Business Administration (SBA), the government agency responsible for processing and approving PPP loan applications filed by the bank in the name of its customers." The bank said this happened April 22 and that they "contacted the SBA to remove its customers' data from the test platform on the same day."

Citi To Purchase Up To $50M In PPP Loans From Minority-Owned Banks.

American Banker (5/20, Reosti, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Citigroup plans to buy up to $50 million in Paycheck Protection Program loans from minority-owned depository institutions." In partnership with the National Bankers Association, Citi's loan-purchase program "aims to boost capital levels at participating minority institutions." In a press release Wednesday, Citi "said...that the originating banks will service the loans and can retain the fee income paid by the Small Business Administration." Laurie Vignaud, CEO of Unity National Bank in Houston, said in the release, "By moving these loans off our balance sheet, we are able to redeploy capital into further assisting our customers and supporting our local economy."

Citi Considers Satellite Offices Near New York HQ To Promote Social Distancing.

American Banker (5/20, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Citigroup is considering opening offices outside New York City amid uncertainty over when its employees will be able to return to its Manhattan headquarters, joining other large banks looking "elsewhere for space to let workers spread out and avoid commuting into the city." The bank is weighing short-term leases in Long Island, Westchester, and New Jersey.

JPMorgan To Keep Offices At Half Occupancy For "Foreseeable Future."

Bloomberg (5/20, 4.73M) reports JPMorgan Chase has been sealing up workers' personal items left behind before the coronavirus lockdown so they can safely retrieve them without the threat of contamination. The bank plans to keep offices at half occupancy for the "foreseeable future," allowing employees to return slowly and "in waves."

Reuters (5/20, Marshall) reports some JPMorgan employees "may be required to sit at common desks, or 'hot desks,' a temporary seating arrangement that management hopes will make it easier to clean." JPMorgan's plan to return employees to their offices is "in line with Goldman Sachs and other global banks."

Banks Prepare To Examine Debt Forbearance As Expiration Dates Near.

Bloomberg (5/20, Surane, Levitt, 4.73M) reports that US lenders "are preparing to take a closer look at consumers who have arranged to delay payments, potentially pushing some out of the programs, as the industry tries to get a clearer picture of how many customers are truly unable to keep up during the coronavirus pandemic." March forbearance programs are nearing expiration dates, "when many banks are set to decide whether to continue letting people put off roughly $150 billion of debt including credit cards balances, personal loans and car payments." Accenture Banking Senior Managing Director Alan McIntyre said, "A lot of the banks are in the dark a little bit in terms of how to treat customers. The measures they focus on to manage credit quality – those dials aren't moving. And those dials aren't going to move until the fall."

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"New Leadership Should Reconnect The U.S. Attorney's Office In D.C. With Its Community." In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M) condemns "the degradation of" the US attorney's office in the District., which has been "politicized in service to the interests of President Trump" and has an "increasing disconnect with the local community it is supposed to serve." Trump's announced nominee for the post, Justin Herdman, the US attorney in Cleveland, and Michael R. Sherwin, who has been chosen to hold the position until Mr. Herdman obtains Senate confirmation, "will have a special responsibility to prove that their commitment is to justice and professionalism, not personal loyalty to" Attorney General Barr or Trump. The Post calls for Sherwin and Herdman to address "the criminal-justice needs of the people of the District of Columbia" instead of "flashier national and international cases."

"The E.U. Has Realized It Is On Its Own – And Is Acting Accordingly." The Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M) editorializes, "The coronavirus epidemic has hit Europe hard. In fact, if the 27-nation European Union were a single country, it would have the highest death toll of any." The Post says the Trump Administration "wavers between indifference and hostility to the European Union, despite the strong U.S. interest in a stable, prosperous Europe." German Chancellor Angela Merkel and French President Emmanuel Macron "have accepted the fact that Europe is on its own as never before since World War II, and must act accordingly."

"Texas's Republican Leaders Are Fighting To Keep Voting Unsafe." In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/20, 14.2M) condemns Texas state leaders for "encouraging" the novel coronavirus' threat to democracy. Allowing COVID-19 as a valid reason to get a mail-in ballot "is the least states can do to give their voters a fair shot at having their voices heard," but Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton (R) "is fighting to keep tight limits on who qualifies for an absentee ballot." The Post adds, "opposition to more absentee balloting is largely driven by open partisanship" and warns forcing Americans to "choose between voting and their safety" will cast doubt on the legitimacy of the November elections. The Post concludes, "States such as Texas should be reforming their election systems in preparation for November."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Evidence On Kids And Covid." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) calls for perspective on reports of inflammatory symptoms linked to the novel coronavirus in children, arguing that children are at less risk of develop the disease and largely appear to not spread it. The Journal concludes that the disease's risk to children doesn't justify continuing lockdowns.

"The First Amendment Faithful." The Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) supports Minnesota churches that plan to reopen in defiance of Gov. Tim Walz's (D) coronavirus pandemic restrictions. Walz is easing the restrictions on some businesses, but not churches. The Journal argues the churches are protected by the First Amendment and that they are seeking equal, not special treatment.

"Google's Diversity Inquisition." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) condemns members of the House Tech Accountability Caucus for writing to Google's CEO on the company's diversity and inclusion programs. The Journal casts the letter as part of the way activist employees force political orthodoxy on companies by creating overtly political programs and stopping changes through leaks that bring hostile coverage and congressional demands. The Journal warns against technology companies being distracted by ideology and that as become vehicles for political interests they open themselves to punitive regulation.

"Iran's Gasoline For Maduro." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes that despite hits to the Iranian economy from the coronavirus pandemic and low oil prices the country is violating US sanctions by, at the least, sending tankers of fuel to aid Nicolás Maduro's regime in Venezuela. The Journal warns that the tankers will provide income for Iran and create instability in South America. While President Trump can interdict the tankers, it could provoke a response from Iran, something the country is counting on him not gambling with in an election year.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "We learned this week that Pompeo asked President Trump to fire an inspector general who was investigating him for improper arms deals and for using government employees to run personal errands. And now it turns out the IG was also looking into lavish dinners Pompeo was throwing on the taxpayer dime. Now, Pompeo says these were dinners to discuss foreign policy. The only issue with that story is the invite list included people like Reba McEntire, NASCAR driver Dale Earnhardt Jr., Fox News hosts, and the CEO of Chick-fil-A. So it sounds more like Pompeo was using the State Department like his own personal Make-A-Wish Foundation."

Trevor Noah: [On Trump discouraging mail-in ballots] "I guess in Trump's mind, voting should be like your wife smiling at you: once a year, in public, and never at home."

Stephen Colbert: "The big story all week has been Donald Trump boosting hydroxychloroquine. And he was asked about that yesterday at the cabinet meeting and, like the badger he wears on his scalp, he got angry when cornered. ... Now, Trump doesn't have the virus but says 'he takes hydroxychloroquine to prevent COVID-19.' So he's unwilling to wear a mask, but he will take a drug whose side effects include serious heart conditions, including death. Now, I'm no cardiologist, but death seems like a pretty serious heart condition."

Stephen Colbert: "According to the Mayo Clinic, [side effects of hydroxychloroquine] also include – and I'm not making any of these up – blistering; peeling; loosening of the skin; feeling that others can hear your thoughts; feeling, seeing, or hearing things that are not there; unusual behavior; and unusual facial expressions. Oh no! We're too late!"

Stephen Colbert: "It's hard to find a medical expert anywhere who agrees with Trump's plan to open the economy without meeting the CDC criteria, which is why GOP operatives are now recruiting 'extremely pro-Trump' doctors to go on television to prescribe reviving the US economy as quickly as possible, without waiting to meet safety benchmarks. Pro-Trump doctors, assemble! Dr. Doom, Dr. Lecter, Dr. Moreau, Dr. Frankenstein, Dr. Pepper, and Dr. I. M. Kooky!"

Jimmy Fallon: "Tomorrow, President Trump will be visiting a Ford plant in Michigan that requires face masks, but Trump said he's not sure if he'll wear one."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump actually loves Ford, especially 'cause the 'F' in the logo sort of looks like his hair."

Jimmy Fallon: "I think Trump might be a little disappointed when he gets to the Ford factory 'cause once he walks in, he's gonna be like,

'When I asked to see the new models, this is not what I meant.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Well guys, the election is coming up, and everyone's debating mail-in voting. Republicans are worried old people will be confused by a new system, while Democrats are worried young people won't know how to mail a letter."

Seth Meyers: "Former Vice President Joe Biden criticized President Trump yesterday for promoting unproven coronavirus treatments like ingesting disinfectants and taking an antimalarial drug, and said, quote, 'What in God's name is he doing?' Where, where have you been, Joe? Joe Biden is like your friend who wants to watch your favorite TV show with you but didn't see the first season. 'What? He's making meth? I thought this fellow was a high school teacher.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump said yesterday he's taken an unproven antimalarial drug as, quote, 'an additional level of safety.' Safety? You haven't worn a mask or practiced social distancing at all. You've been the least safe person this entire pandemic. I wouldn't be surprised if you gave your next press conference in the middle of a crowded bar, holding a cobra."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump today accused officials in Michigan of illegally sending out almost eight million absentee ballots and claimed he would withhold funding from the state if they, quote, 'want to go down this voter fraud path.' Yeah, you'd hate for us to get rid of our foolproof system of showing up to an abandoned library where an octogenarian looks for your name in a big binder, can't find it, then finally says, 'I don't know. Just go ahead.' Then you step into a portable shower and try to decipher the Da Vinci code on how to vote for your preferred candidate. ... By all means, let's just, you know, keep that sacred process intact."

Mnuchin Vows To Work On Extending PPP Loan Period As Trump Says Extension "Should Be Easy."

Reuters (5/18, Mason) reports that during a White House meeting with the National Restaurant Association and restaurant sector executives on Monday, President Trump said that it "should be easy" to extend "the amount of time borrowers in the Paycheck Protection Program have to spend their funds to 24 weeks from the current eight weeks." Trump made the comment after the executives "urged the extension." Reuters adds that Secretary Mnuchin "said he was working on a technical fix to the PPP program that could extend the time frame but it may not be for 24 weeks."

Bloomberg (5/18, Sink, Fabian, 4.73M) reports President Trump "assured restaurant owners that therapies and a vaccine for the coronavirus and a tax cut would restore their businesses, after they asked him to extend a small-business lending program." Several restaurateurs contended that the Paycheck Protection Program should be extended to help business. Trump "asked Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to investigate making the change," and he noted "an announcement by Moderna Inc. earlier Monday that its experimental vaccine was shown to be safe and to create antibodies in 25 human test subjects." Moreover, the President "mentioned that he has proposed restoring tax deductions for corporate spending at restaurants."

The Hill (5/18, Gangitano, 2.98M) reports Mnuchin, speaking at the same meeting, "said that the administration is working on expanding the loan period for the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) to give small businesses more time to spend funds." The piece quotes Mnuchin saying, "I'm not sure it's that long but I've spoken with the SBA committee and there is bipartisan support so we're working on that."

Politico (5/18, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports Trump and Mnuchin "signaled the administration would support giving companies more flexibility in how they use emergency small business loans, amid mounting complaints that restrictions on the aid are too onerous." The attendees at the meeting "urged the president to ease limits on the so-called Paycheck Protection Program." Businesses are "lobbying lawmakers and the administration to give businesses more time to spend the funds as shutdown orders across the country are lasting longer than expected."

The Washington Post (5/18, Golliver, 14.2M) reports that during the meeting, "Houston Rockets owner Tilman Fertitta expressed optimism that the NBA season will resume this summer while acknowledging that the novel coronavirus pandemic has 'definitely brought [my business] back to earth.'" Fertitta, "the billionaire CEO of Landry's Inc., asked President Trump and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to 'add a category' to the Paycheck Protection Program for the 'larger private restaurateur' and to 'do something with lease terminations' to provide his company financial relief during the pandemic." The Post says, "A sympathetic Trump referred to Fertitta as a 'friend' and said the businessman's restaurants 'paid me rent for a long time.'" Mnuchin "said qualifying for the PPP was a 'complicated issue.'" Among other news outlets, CNN (5/18, Vazquez, 83.16M), Barron's (5/18, Bozelko, Lo, 1.07M), and The Dallas \(TX\) Morning News (5/18, Benning, 946K) also report.

Majority Of PPP Loans Have Not Been Returned Ahead Of Monday Deadline. The New York Times (5/18, McCabe, 18.61M) reported on the debate facing companies on whether to return federal aid received through the PPP loan program. The Times notes, "The revelation that big companies got loans intended to help small businesses struggling with the coronavirus has prompted outrage and concern that the government's main program meant for mom-and-pop shops was being undermined. Lawmakers have opened congressional inquiries and demanded firms give the money back, while the Trump administration has tightened eligibility rules for the program and Steven Mnuchin, the Treasury secretary, has threatened to hold firms criminally liable if they did not meet the program's requirements. Mr. Mnuchin has given companies until Monday to decide whether to return their loans without repercussions." Thus far, "at least 61 public and private companies have returned their small-business loans," but the "majority of money extended to public companies has so far not been returned."

Bloomberg Law (5/18, Brewer, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports, "After it became known that many small-cap public companies, most notably national restaurant chains, had obtained millions in forgivable loans from the U.S. government while genuine mom & pop-type small businesses were shut out, a backlash ensued. Restaurant groups such as Shake Shack ($10 million) and Ruth's Chris Steak House ($20 million) have promised to return the money, but certain other companies are vowing to keep it. The Treasury Department has asked publicly traded companies that received these amounts to repay them to the government so that they can be freed up for smaller businesses."

Treasury May Not Be Able To Force Public Companies To Repay PPP Funds. The Washington Post (5/18, Gregg, 14.2M) reports small business advocates and analysts say that "there are questions about whether the administration can force companies that received money under the initial" Paycheck Protection Program to return it, despite the Treasury saying that publicly traded companies "with substantial market value and access to capital markets" were not the intended recipients. Part of the issue is that an April 6 Treasury regulation said that borrowers and lenders "should rely on the laws, rules and guidance available at the time of the relevant application." The Post casts the issue as illustrating "the chaotic way in which federal bailout programs were thrown together on the fly."

SBA Has Not Made Public Which Businesses Received Loans. The AP (5/18, Gordon) reports the "small, overlooked" SBA is "shouldering a massive relief effort for the nation's small businesses and their workers left reeling by the pandemic," adding the SBA has "committed to auditing every sizable emergency loan it approves." However, six weeks after the program was launched, "the agency has yet to make public the recipients of taxpayer aid." During a White House event last month with Secretary Mnuchin and SBA Administrator Jovita Carranza, President Trump said, "Our swift action supported or saved 30 million American jobs at least." The AP says a number of "news organizations, including The Washington Post and The New York Times, have sued the SBA in federal court over its not having released the loan data despite several FOIA requests." The news outlets "accuse the agency of violating the FOIA law." However, "Amid the public outcry, Mnuchin recently threatened criminal prosecution and warned companies they must return the money if they falsely certified that they needed federal aid to operate and couldn't get it elsewhere."

Oversight Panel: Fed Has Lent Very Little From $500 Billion Treasury Fund.

The AP (5/18, Daly) says that according to the Congressional Oversight Committee, the Treasury Department and Federal Reserve "have lent hardly any money under a $500 billion fund created by the economic rescue law passed in response to the coronavirus crisis." While the Treasury fund "is being used to guarantee new, expansive Federal Reserve lending programs to companies, states and cities that could be leveraged to reach as much as $4.5 trillion," so far, "only one of the new Fed programs has started operating, a lending fund likely to be tapped by large public companies." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "is set to testify along with Powell on Tuesday before the Senate Banking Committee." Mnuchin "says in prepared testimony that the Paycheck Protection Program to provide forgivable loans to small businesses has processed more than 4.2 million loans worth over $530 billion."

The New York Times (5/18, A1, Smialek, Rappeport, 18.61M) reports that although the report "was more questioning than critical, it comes as lawmakers and economists are beginning to suggest that the two policymakers at the helm of saving the economy, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and the Fed chair, Jerome H. Powell, may be proceeding too cautiously." Mnuchin and Powell "have been given buckets of money to gird the economy as the coronavirus lockdowns continue, tanking revenues and heightening the risk of long-term economic damage." The Times says Mnuchin "has resisted taking on too much risk, mindful of the optics involved in bailing out large companies or those already heavily indebted," and has "said he does not expect to lose the money that Congress has handed him to support emergency lending, which could be driving the Fed to be more cautious." While Mnuchin "has said the Treasury could take losses if the economy worsens, his base case scenario is that it will return all $454 billion."

Politico (5/18, Guida, 4.29M) reports the panel, which is "charged with supervising hundreds of billions of dollars in emergency lending programs for businesses and municipalities," established a "blueprint on Monday for where it will focus its oversight efforts." The panel

"pressed the Federal Reserve and Treasury Department on how they will measure the success of those lending programs – almost none of which have yet started." Although the "massive bailout is a centerpiece of the government's efforts to rescue the economy from the coronavirus crisis, Treasury has not begun lending to airlines and businesses important to national security, though it has received applications."

The Washington Post (5/18, A1, Werner, 14.2M), USA Today (5/18, Jansen, 10.31M), Bloomberg (5/18, Davison, House, 4.73M), Fox Business (5/18, Henney, 1.73M), ABC News (5/18, Haslett, 2.97M), and CQ Roll Call (5/18, Sword, 154K) also report.

Report Says Treasury Has Yet To Disburse $46B In Aid To Airlines. The Hill (5/18, Elis, 2.98M) reports the Treasury Department "has yet to disburse any of the $46 billion Congress allocated for airlines, according to a congressional oversight report released Monday." The CARES Act "included a special $46 billion allocation aimed primarily at rescuing airlines. Of that, $25 billion was for passenger airlines, $4 billion was for cargo carriers and another $17 billion was earmarked for businesses 'critical to maintaining national security,' widely seen as money directed at aerospace company Boeing." However, since the CARES Act became law seven weeks ago, "not a single cent has been sent out through that mechanism, the report found." The report said the Treasury Department "has not disbursed any of the $46 billion it can use to provide loans and loan guarantees to the airline industry and businesses critical to maintaining national security." Fox News (5/18, Singman, 27.59M) also reports.

Administration Reportedly Considering Tax Incentives For Companies Pulling Supply Chains Out Of China.

Reuters (5/18, Shalal, Alper, Zengerle) reports US lawmakers and officials "are crafting proposals to push American companies to move operations or key suppliers out of China that include tax breaks, new rules, and carefully structured subsidies." Reuters says interviews "with a dozen current and former government officials, industry executives and members of Congress show widespread discussions underway – including the idea of a "reshoring fund" originally stocked with $25 billion – to encourage U.S. companies to drastically revamp their relationship with China." President Trump "has long pledged to bring manufacturing back from overseas, but the recent spread of the coronavirus and related concerns about U.S. medical and food supply chains dependency on China are 'turbocharging' new enthusiasm for the idea in the White House."

The Hill (5/18, 2.98M) reports WPost economic reporter Jeffrey Stein "on Monday discussed White House proposals to cut corporate tax rates for companies that move their supply chains from China." Stein said the notion of a tax incentive "could have bipartisan appeal." Stein "added that White House trade adviser Peter Navarro has drafted an executive order that would require federal agencies to buy supplies manufactured in the U.S., but said the measure 'has languished' on President Trump's desk for weeks, because 'other people ... including Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, have warned the president that China could retaliate by cutting off the existing PPE [personal protective equipment] supply coming into the country.'"

"And then you have sort of a fascinating catch-22, because what Mnuchin and others have said is, we can't take these measures to confront China, because that will lead China to retaliate," he said. "By doing that they're sort of affirming the thesis that we are too dependent on China, that they can cut us off whenever they want."

Treasury To Begin Sending Millions Of Prepaid Debit Cards Loaded With COVID-19 Relief Funds.

The Hill (5/18, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports the Treasury Department "said Monday that it is starting to deliver nearly 4 million coronavirus relief payments to taxpayers via prepaid debit card, rather than by paper check." The announcement "comes after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin had indicated that the department planned to get some people their payments by sending them debit cards, in an effort to help get people their payments faster." Mnuchin, in a statement Monday, said, "Prepaid debit cards are secure, easy to use, and allow us to deliver Americans their money quickly. ... Recipients can immediately activate and use the cards safely." Fox Business (5/18, De Lea, 1.73M) also reports.

Mnuchin Tells Judge COVID-19 Relief Funds Meant For Tribes Will Go Out By June 5.

Law360 (5/18, Westney, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has told a D.C. federal judge that his department plans to send out the $3.2 billion it still owes tribal governments under the CARES Act by June 5, nearly six weeks after the law's deadline to distribute the money." The Treasury Department "had been ordered by U.S. District Judge Amit P. Mehta on May 11 to let him know what the Treasury Department's timetable would be to deliver the remaining $3.2 billion it owes tribes to fight the COVID-19 pandemic, as the judge denied a bid by the Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians and other tribes to force the department to distribute the money immediately." Mnuchin counselor Daniel Kowalski "said in a declaration accompanying the report that Treasury 'continues to work diligently toward disbursing the remaining $3.2 billion,' after the department made an initial distribution of $4.8 billion starting May 5."

Commentary: Returning Secret Service To Treasury Key Move In Protecting Financial System Against Cyber Threats.

In an op-ed in The Hill (5/18, 2.98M), former senior Treasury official Juan Zarate and Tim Maurer, co-director of the Cyber Policy Initiative at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, write, "Moving the US Secret Service from the Department of Homeland Security back to the Department of the Treasury is critically important in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic." They say Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "highlighted that the move would 'result in efficiencies that will maximize the Secret Service's effectiveness and better equip our government to anticipate and counter sophisticated and evolving threats of tomorrow.'" They contend the Treasury Department "should also seize this moment to build an international coalition to protect the financial sector" from rogue actors like North Korea. They conclude, "Such a process focused on protecting the financial system against cyber threats would build on what the Trump Administration has already done with its inter-agency focus on cyber threats."

Mnuchin To Sit For Interview With "The Hill" Editor At Economic Summit.

The Hill (5/18, Concha, 2.98M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "will join The Hill's Editor-in-Chief Bob Cusack for a one-on-one interview Thursday morning as part of the publication's virtual summit exploring efforts to safely reopen the country and restore the nation's economy amid the coronavirus pandemic." The Hill's summit "comes as more governors are reopening their states in various phases, with the economy suffering unemployment levels not seen since the Great Depression." The Hill says Mnuchin "has been the Trump administration's lead negotiator with congressional leaders on coronavirus legislation over the last couple months." The "Advancing the American Economy" summit "will be headlined by the Mnuchin interview and be followed with discussions with leading CEOs and national health experts. Additional speakers will be announced soon. Mnuchin is scheduled to be interviewed at 11 a.m. EDT."

Court Rules Treasury Must Refund Excise Taxes To Domestic Companies While Appealing Duty To Do So.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (5/18, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Department "must continue refunding excise taxes paid by domestic companies on imported goods while appealing its duty to pay the refunds, the U.S. Court of International Trade has said." The CIT, "in rejecting a request by Treasury to stay the court's January decision in favor of U.S. companies in a refunds dispute, said Friday that Treasury has a poor chance of winning an appeal." The court "previously sided with the National Association of Manufacturers in its suit, filed on behalf of domestic companies in April 2019, challenging the tax aspects of regulations from U.S. Customs and Border Protection and Treasury."

SCOTUS Declines To Hear Venezuelan Appeal Of Ruling Permitting Seizure Of Citgo Shares.

Reuters (5/18, Cohen) reports the Supreme Court on Monday "declined to hear Venezuela's appeal of a lower court ruling allowing Canadian gold mining company Crystallex to seize shares in U.S. refiner Citgo to collect on an unpaid arbitration award." The decision means "a 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling from last year that Crystallex could seize the shares in Citgo would stand." The ruling "marked a setback to Venezuelan opposition leader Juan Guaido, who is recognized as the country's interim president by the United States and dozens of other countries and has focused on protecting PDVSA's overseas assets from seizure by creditors or possible sale by President Nicolas Maduro." However, Crystallex "still faces obstacles in its quest to seize Citgo shares" because the Treasury Department, "which sanctioned PDVSA last year as part of the Trump administration's efforts to oust Maduro, has said claimants against Venezuela cannot enforce arbitral awards by seizing property without specific permission."

Optimism About Potential Coronavirus Vaccine Fuels Optimism, Boosts Stock Markets.

Media reports, including segments on all three network newscasts, sounded a cautiously optimistic note on Massachusetts biotech firm Moderna's coronavirus vaccine test. As NBC Nightly News (5/18, lead story, 2:30, Holt, 7.19M) put it in its lead story last night, "Hope is a powerful elixir for a coronavirus-weary nation, and...the early success of a potential vaccine, the first to be tested in humans, is raising that hope and generating a wave of optimism." Scientists, however, are "quick to point out there is still a long way to go, that the results are preliminary, yet acknowledging it's an important step."

Likewise, the New York Times (5/18, Grady, 18.61M) says "early results from a handful of test subjects may not seem like much to go on, but the world is desperate for good news." The CBS Evening News (5/18, story 2, 2:10, Lapook, 5.14M) reported, meanwhile, that Moderna's "announcement fueled optimism because all 45 people who received the trial vaccine from Moderna developed antibodies to coronavirus." Dr. Tal Zaks of Moderna Therapeutics was shown saying, "We had been hoping and anticipating for this day. Based on the experience that we've had with our platform, we anticipated that we should be generating an immune response and the right kind of immune response, but seeing the actual data is very reassuring." ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 3, 2:45, Osunsami, 8.72M) said "it's the break the whole world has been hoping for," but went on to show Dr. Todd Ellerin, Director of Infectious Diseases at South Shore Health, saying, "The fact that the Moderna vaccine has been shown to be safe and generate a robust immune response is very promising. But now it has to be proven in larger numbers."

Breitbart (5/18, Spiering, 673K) reports the President "voiced optimism about the testing results," saying, "It's incredible what they can do, and I've seen results and the results are staggeringly good." HHS Secretary Azar, meanwhile, was asked on Fox News' America's Newsroom (5/18, 896K) how confident he is that the Moderna vaccine could be "the game changer that could lead us to a vaccine by end of year." Azar said, "Some very promising data showing the vaccine provokes what are called neutralizing antibodies that attack the virus. Just really important advance and we are going to be putting other big bets on other vaccines so we are not going into battle with just one shot."

The AP (5/18, Marchione) recounts that "study volunteers given either a low or medium dose of the vaccine...had antibodies similar to those seen in people who have recovered from COVID-19." The AP adds that "in the next phase of the study, led by the U.S. National Institutes of Health, researchers will try to determine which dose is best for a definitive experiment that they aim to start in July." The New York Times (5/18, 18.61M) indicates that Zaks said "if those trials go well, a vaccine could become available for widespread use by the end of this year or early 2021." The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Grossman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Politico (5/18, Owermhle, 4.29M) and Bloomberg (5/18, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover Moderna's announcement. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) hails Moderna's steps toward developing a vaccine – even as it cautions against declaring victory before all the needed testing has been completed.

Under the headline, "US Stocks Rally On Hopes For Vaccine And Economic Recovery," the AP (5/18) reports that the US stock market "bounced back from its worst week in nearly two months...as optimism about a potential vaccine for the coronavirus and hopes for a US economic recovery in the second half of the year put investors in a buying mood." The S&P 500 "climbed 3.2%, its best day since early April," which "erased all of its losses from last week," but it is "still down 12.8% from its all-time high on February 19." The Dow Jones Industrial Average "climbed 911.95 points, or 3.9%, to 24,597.37," and the Nasdaq "rose 220.27 points, or 2.4%, to 9,234.83."

The Washington Post (5/18, Telford, 14.2M) also reports "a 'triple whammy' of good news – led by promising results from a coronavirus vaccine trial – buoyed investors Monday, powering Wall Street to strong across-the-board gains." Investors also "found comfort in comments made by Federal Reserve Chair Jerome H. Powell during a '60 Minutes' interview on CBS broadcast Sunday," in which "he said the central bank is 'not out of ammunition by a long shot' in its economic arsenal." USA Today (5/18, Menton, 10.31M) similarly notes the stock numbers under the headline "Stocks Rebound As Positive Moderna Vaccine Trial Boosts Optimism For Economic Recovery," while Axios (5/18, Brown, 521K) says the stock market had "its best day since early April." The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Ping, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Under the headline "'Very Positive Day': US Turns Corner In Coronavirus Recovery," the Washington Times (5/18, Boyer, Howell, Sherfinski, 492K) reports "Monday was perhaps the most hopeful day yet of the COVID-19 outbreak in the US, as a Massachusetts biotech company reported a promising vaccine trial, stocks rallied on the news, every state but one was reopening for business, Detroit's Big Three automakers restarted factories and Delta Air Lines announced it will resume flights for several major routes next month."

US Government Had "Placed A Big Bet On Moderna"; Fauci Involved In Clinical Trials. Reuters (5/18, Steenhuisen, Joseph) reports that the announcement "lifted shares of Moderna by 20%." According to Reuters, "The U.S. government in April placed a big bet on Moderna, backing its vaccine with $483 million from the Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Authority (BARDA), a part of the US Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). The company said that grant will enable it to supply millions of doses per month in 2020 and, with further investments, tens of millions a month in 2021 if the vaccine proves successful."

The New York Times (5/18, Grady, 18.61M) reports that Moderna "produced the vaccine in collaboration with the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, the institute led by Dr. Anthony Fauci, which has been leading the clinical trials."

Azar said on Fox News' America's Newsroom (5/18, 896K), "President Trump is leading Operation Warp Speed, which is going to put bets on several vaccines. This one, the Moderna vaccine, was actually invented here at NIH and within eight weeks, we brought that the to clinical trials. It is really historic."

Moderna Director Recently Joined "Operation Warp Speed." The Washington Post (5/18, Johnson, 14.2M) reports that on Sunday, one of Moderna's directors, Moncef Slaoui, "stepped down from the board to become chief scientist for Operation Warp Speed, a White House initiative to speed up vaccine development." The Post reports that SEC filings "show Slaoui's stock options in Moderna are worth more than $10 million," but Slaoui "will divest his Moderna stock holdings, effective Tuesday morning, according to a spokeswoman for the Department of Health and Human Services," and "will donate the value the Moderna stock gained since Thursday, before the announcement of his position leading Operation Warp Speed, to cancer research."

Gidley: Vaccine Development Unfolding On "Trump-Time," Not "Bureaucratic Time." White House principal deputy press secretary Hogan Gidley cautioned on the Lars Larson Show \(Radio\) (5/18), "We are still off from a vaccine. We don't know how long it is going to take. But we are moving faster than ever before. The President's leadership has really put people on that 'Trump-time' we always talk about, not government bureaucratic time. So, it looks really good. Optimism is something that this President is all about." Gidley was also interviewed on The Larry O'Connor Show \(Radio\) (5/18).

Trump Says Oil "Is Back."

In a tweet Monday morning, President Trump declared, "OIL (ENERGY) IS BACK!!!!"

Hassett: Administration Prepared To Provide More Coronavirus Aid If Necessary.

Reuters (5/18, Heavey) reports that White House economic adviser Kevin Hassett told CNBC's Squawk Box Monday that the Administration "is prepared to take further steps if needed to shore up the nation's economy during the novel coronavirus outbreak, but any final action will not look like House Democrats' proposed legislation." Hassett also said "that the administration understood state and local governments were hurting during the outbreak and that Trump previously has said he was open to additional funding for costs related to the pandemic.”

The Hill (5/18, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports that Hassett told reporters Monday “that a fourth stimulus package may not be needed.” Hassett said, “I think it’s possible that we will see a strong-enough economy that we don’t need a phase four.” Hassett “said the administration is currently in a ‘wait and see’ mode to assess the full impact of previous stimulus legislation on the U.S. economy before resuming formal talks on a fourth package.”

McCarthy Backs Payroll Tax Cut, Criticizes Pelosi’s Priorities.

House Minority Leader McCarthy was asked on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (5/18, 831K) about the potential for a payroll tax cut to stimulate the economy. McCarthy said, “That would help and keep more money in individual’s pockets. It would help business.” McCarthy added, “We’ve been able to...save more than 30 million jobs even though the Speaker, every single time we went to move a bill, held it up. ... The reasons why Speaker Pelosi held up the CARES bill that dealt with unemployment, gave the small businesses the loans, was able to give the state and the hospitals money, she held it up because she wanted to change election law. She wanted to focus on cannabis.”

US Automakers Begin Restarting Assembly Lines.

Reuters (5/18, Klayman) reports that “after a two-month coronavirus lockdown,” the “Detroit Three automakers and their suppliers began restarting assembly lines on Monday” in “a slow revival of a sector that employs nearly 1 million people in the United States.” Fiat Chrysler Automobile, General Motors Co, and Ford Motor Co have been “preparing for weeks to reopen their North American factories in a push to restart work in an industry that accounts for about 6% of U.S. economic activity.”

ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 4, 2:20, Pilgrim, 8.52M) reported that “more than 130,000 auto workers back on the job for the first time in eight weeks, some with mixed feelings.” Unidentified Speaker: “We shouldn’t be here. It’s not fair.” The AP (5/18, Long) says the Big Three automakers “as well as Honda and Toyota all had screening procedures in place at the dozens of factories that reopened from the Great Lakes states south to Tennessee and Texas and out west at Tesla’s factory near the San Francisco Bay.”

An NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 4, 2:30, Holt, 7.19M) report focused on Ford, which “called 59,000 workers back to nine plants” Monday morning. NBC (McFadden) added that “keeping the assembly line running requires parts, many of those parts made in Mexico, where some factories are struggling to reopen. The financial pressures on all the auto makers to reopen is massive. Ford poised to report $5 billion in losses.”

Lawmakers Say Auto Industry Could Need Federal Aid. Politico (5/18, Rodriguez, 4.29M) reports that while auto plants are resuming operations, it is “unclear whether production and consumer demand will ramp up enough for them to survive without federal aid.” Politico says “the auto industry has refrained from asking the Trump administration or Congress for aid during the coronavirus pandemic, but the decline in auto production and sales has caught the attention of lawmakers on Capitol Hill.” Last week, a “bipartisan group of more than 50 lawmakers from car-producing states...put Congress on notice that the auto industry, which was left out of House Democrats’ $3 trillion stimulus, will need economic help as part of future pandemic relief packages.” According to “auto industry sources in touch with lawmakers,” their main focus “is to build demand for autos, which could come from offering some form of incentives for Americans to buy a new car.”

Airline Passengers Will See Longer Waits, More Rules As Air Travel Enters New Age.

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Sider, Katz, Cherney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that air travel in the US is entering a new age as airports and airlines roll out new measures in response to the coronavirus. Many are rolling out temperature checks and thermal scans and are requiring face masks. In addition, passengers could experience longer waits due to fewer flights, more layovers, and more rules, including for using the bathroom and when and how passengers can enter and exit planes. The Journal adds that the Trump Administration is planning to begin temperature checks conducted by the TSA at some airports.

J.C. Penny Will Close 242 Locations As Part Of Its Bankruptcy.

USA Today (5/18, Tyko, 10.31M) reports J.C. Penny said it plans to close 242 locations – approximately 29 percent of its 846 stores – between the current fiscal year and next fiscal year. The announcement comes days after the company filed for bankruptcy and will leave the retailer with 604 remaining locations. J.C. Penny said in an SEC filing, “The approximately 604 future fleet represent the highest sales-generating, most profitable, and most productive stores in the network.”

Weekend Mall-Goers Say They Were Eager To Get Out Of The House, Get Taste Of Normalcy.

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Nassauer, McWhirter, Findell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) visited three shopping malls in Texas, Ohio, and Georgia over the weekend to gauge consumer interest in brick-and-mortar shopping during the coronavirus. The Journal reports that dozens of shoppers said they were eager to leave their homes and get a feel for normalcy. While some mall workers expressed feelings of anxiety, the Journal observed mask wearing, individual store rules, and food court and bathroom precautions aimed to keep people healthy.

Uber To Cut An Additional 3,000 Jobs, Close Three Dozen Offices.

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Rana, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Uber said on Monday that it will cut an additional 3,000 jobs, close three dozen offices, and reevaluate investments in areas such as freight and self-driving technology. Chief Executive Dara Khosrowshahi said in a note to employees, "We're seeing some signs of a recovery, but it comes off of a deep hole, with limited visibility as to its speed and shape." Uber's rides business in April was down 80 percent from the same time last year.

SoftBank Records Worst Results In Four-Decade History.

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Dvorak, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports SoftBank Group recorded its worst results in the company's four-decade history. The company said its Vision Fund posted an investment loss of almost $17 billion in the fiscal year ended in March, $10 billion of which was in the January-March quarter. In addition, SoftBank said Alibaba co-founder Jack Ma will step down from SoftBank's board after 13 years following SoftBank's continued paring of its Alibaba stake. SoftBank Chief Executive Masayoshi Son said the Vision Fund is now underwater and has little chance of recovery in the near future.

Apple To Require Masks, Temperature Checks As Company Begins Reopening Retail Stores.

The Washington Post (5/18, Lerman, 14.2M) reports that Apple is planning to enforce strict social distancing guidelines in its retail stores as the company reopens 100 of its stores globally, Apple retail and HR chief Deirdre O'Brien said. Apple will put a cap on the number of people allowed inside its stores to ensure six feet between everyone. In addition, the company will require masks and check customers' temperatures before they enter. Apple said customers may have to wait in line if the store reaches capacity.

Trump Says He Is Taking Hydrochloroquine Pills.

The New York Times (5/18, 18.61M) reports President Trump indicated yesterday that he "has been taking hydroxychloroquine, an antimalarial drug whose effectiveness against the coronavirus is unproven, for about a week and a half as a preventive measure, saying he had no symptoms of Covid-19. 'All I can tell you is, so far I seem to be OK,' he said, explaining that he takes a daily pill." The Times adds that hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine are "widely used to treat virus patients despite the lack of evidence that they work." Trump is quoted as saying, "There is a very good chance that this has an impact, especially early on. ... I'm not going to get hurt by it ... Front-line workers take it. A lot of doctors take it. I take it." USA Today (5/18, Subramanian, Fritze, 10.31M) quotes Trump as saying, "I hope to not be able to take it soon because I hope that they come up with some answer. But I think people should be allowed to."

The Hill (5/18, Samuels, 2.98M) reports "Trump said he consulted with the White House doctor about taking the drug, but it was not recommended for him." Said Trump, "I asked him what do you think. He said, 'Well if you'd like it.' I said, 'Yeah I'd like it. I'd like to take it.'"

Axios (5/18, 521K) reports "Rick Bright, the former head of a key government vaccine agency, testified last week that he believes he was ousted from his position because of his resistance to promoting hydroxychloroquine, which has long been touted by Trump and his allies in conservative media." The New York Post (5/18, Fredericks, 4.57M) says "Trump was responding to a question about...Bright" when he made the disclosure.

NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 2, 2:25, Holt, 7.19M) referred to an "astonishing disclosure" by Trump, and went on (Welker) to report the "stunning news" that he is taking the "controversial medicine" that he "has touted as a potential treatment for coronavirus, despite limited evidence to back that up, and research showing potentially dangerous side effects." Added NBC, "We have asked for more details and documentation, but still no response from the White House."

In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (5/18, lead story, 4:50, Muir, 8.52M) reported that Trump's words "led to immediate questions about why he's taking it, with the FDA warning," and added (Karl) that "the announcement came out of the blue" and "in response to a totally unrelated question." The CBS Evening News (5/18, lead story, 4:10, O'Donnell, 5.14M) also led with the story, reporting that "just last month, the FDA warned doctors about the risks of using that drug on coronavirus patients, including serious heart problems and said it had not been shown to be safe or effective." Trump "says he's been taking it for about a week and a half," which was "around the same time two White House aides, including the valet who serves his lunch, tested positive. And as we come on the air tonight, more than 1.5 million others have also tested positive nationwide. And more than 90,000 people have been killed right here in the US." CBS showed Dr. William Schaffner of the Vanderbilt University Medical Center saying, "There is no real indication, no evidence base for the use of hydroxychloroquine as a preventative of COVID-19. I think doctors ought to not be prescribing this medication to people across the country for this purpose."

On ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 2, 0:45, Muir, 8.72M), chief medical editor Dr. Jen Ashton also said that "according to the FDA, hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine have not been shown to be safe and effective for treating or preventing COVID-19. So in keeping with evidence-based medicine since there may be some risk, there's no data at this time to support its use for prevention."

USA Today (5/18, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports that "soon after" Trump's announcement, "'Flintstone Vitamins' began trending on Twitter," but "many doctors, journalists and politicians issued stern warnings after the president's revelation." The Washington Post (5/18, Sonmez, Olorunnipa, 14.2M) also points out "clinical trials, academic research and scientific analysis indicate that the danger of the drug is a significantly increased risk of death for certain patients, particularly those with heart problems." Trump "dismissed those concerns, saying he has heard about the drug's benefits from doctors and others he has spoken with."

Townhall (5/18, Vespa, 177K) predicted "there's going to be liberal media hysterics. You know it's coming. Right now, the halls of MSNBC, especially that of the Rachel Maddow show, are cooking up some InfoWars-lite conspiracy theory about Trump possibly having it and covering it up." Asked Townhall, "Why did Trump do this? Well, one could see him trolling for a liberal media freak out. He knows they overreact, overreach, or in the end, get stories dead wrong about his administration." The Daily Caller (5/18, Datoc, 716K), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

White House Physician Stands By Decision To Prescribe Drug To Trump. The Washington Examiner (5/18, Dibble, 448K) reports that "Sean Conley, the chief White House physician, confirmed that the president has been taking the drug following an outbreak of the coronavirus within the White House." Said Conley, "As has been previously reported, two weeks ago one of the President's support staff tested positive for COVID-19. The President is in very good health and has remained symptom-free. He receives regular COVID-19 testing, all negative to date. ... After numerous discussions he and I had regarding the evidence for and against the use of hydroxychloroquine, we concluded the potential benefit from treatment outweighed the relative risks."

Pelosi: "Morbidly Obese" Trump Should Not Take Hydroxychloroquine. The Washington Times (5/18, Morton, 492K) reports Speaker Pelosi "referred to...Trump as 'morbidly obese' during an appearance Monday night on CNN and said he shouldn't be taking hydroxychloroquine to stave off coronavirus." Pelosi "made the remark in an appearance on Anderson Cooper 360' during which she was asked about Mr. Trump's taking the drug hydroxychloroquine, which he'd revealed earlier in the day." The Washington Examiner (5/18, Dibble, 448K) quotes Pelosi as saying, "As far as the president is concerned, he's our president, and I would rather he not be taking something that has not been approved by the scientists, especially in his age group and in his, shall we say, weight group. Morbidly obese, they say. ... So, I think it's not a good idea."

Cavuto Slams Trump's Decision. After Trump announced he is taking hydroxychloroquine, Neil Cavuto said on Fox News, "The President of the United States just acknowledged that he's taking hydroxychloroquine. ... The President insisted that it has enormous benefits for patients either trying to prevent or already have COVID-19. The fact of the matter is, though, when the President said, what have you got to lose, in a number of studies, those certainly vulnerable, the population have one thing to lose, their lives." Cavuto added that "whatever benefit the President says this has – and certainly has had for those suffering from malaria, dealing with lupus – this is a leap that should not be taken casually by those watching at home or assuming, 'well, the President of the United States says it's okay,"

Later Monday, Trump retweeted a post from a Twitter user criticizing Cavuto's comments. Trump wrote, "@FoxNews is no longer the same. We miss the great Roger Ailes. You have more anti-Trump people, by far, than ever before. Looking for a new outlet!"

Trump Slams "Dumb" 60 Minutes "Hit Job On A Grandstanding Never Trumper." The President also took to Twitter yesterday to write, "So the so-called HHS Whistleblower was against HYDROXYCHLOROQUINE. Then why did he make, and sign, an emergency use authorization? @NorahODonnell said, 'He shared his concerns with a reporter.' In other words, he LEAKED. A dumb @60Minutes hit job on a grandstanding Never Trumper!"

Trump Touts WPost A1 Story On Testing Availability Exceeding Demand.

President Trump tweeted yesterday, "Wow! The Front Page @washingtonpost Headline reads, "A BOOST IN TESTS, BUT LACK OF TAKERS." We have done a great job on Ventilators, Testing, and everything else. Were left little by Obama. Over 11 million tests, and going up fast. More than all countries in the world, combined." Trump was referring to this story on yesterday's WPost.

Azar: Navarro's Comments About CDC Were "Inaccurate And Inappropriate."

Politico (5/18, Goldberg, 4.29M) reports that HHS Secretary Azar on Monday "rebuked" White House trade adviser Navarro, "who blamed the CDC for early coronavirus testing problems." On Sunday, Navarro charged that the CDC "really let down the country." According to Politico, Azar "conceded...that the CDC's initial test was problematic, but he contended it didn't set back the coronavirus response."

Azar appeared on Fox News' America's Newsroom (5/18, 896K) and discussed White House economic adviser Navarro's comments about the CDC. Azar said, "The comments regarding CDC are inaccurate and inappropriate. The CDC had one error, which was in scaling up the manufacturing of the tests that they had developed. There was a contamination that didn't affect the accuracy of the test, just led to inconclusive results. They fixed that within weeks and got it out. That was never going to be the backbone of testing in the US."

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Leonardi, 448K) says Azar "emphasized the need for the private sector to collaborate with the federal government on testing kits for COVID-19." He said, "What we need is the private sector to develop the tests. The Abbotts, the Roches, the Thermo Fishers, get them in the market."

Politico Contrasts White House Precautions With Trump's Optimistic Messaging.

Politico (5/18, Cook, 4.29M) reports that as President Trump "urges businesses across the country to reopen and Americans to return to work, he and his administration are projecting a sense of normal." Politico says the President is "spending the week meeting with governors and restaurant executives at the White House," and Vice President Pence "will travel to Florida to meet with Gov. Ron DeSantis and deliver personal protective equipment to a nursing home." On the other hand, Politico says "Trump's own top staffers are increasingly working from home," and the White House has "started to schedule more meetings by teleconference after two staffers tested positive for Covid-19." Politico adds that "even the White House mess, where staffers grab lunch and coffee, has shut down and is open only through the take-out window." The Washington Examiner (5/18, Doyle, 448K) provides similar coverage, citing the Politico report.

Verma: Administration Doing All It Can To Protect Nursing Home Residents.

CMS Administrator Verma said on Fox News The Story (5/18) that the Administration "started very early in making sure that we were doing everything we can to keep nursing home residents safe." Verma added that "we recognized that nursing homes were going to be vulnerable and we put out a series of guidance and recommendations to our nursing homes. We also have been working with state and local officials, just to level set the responsibility and oversight of both the federal and state government." Verma added, "One of the things that we called on weeks ago is a call to action for state and local leaders to emphasize and to work with nursing facilities to make sure that they had access to testing. One of the things we did on the federal level was to increase reimbursement for testing and actually for the first time pay for labs to go out to nursing homes to collect samples."

US Coronavirus Death Toll Exceeds 90,000.

The Hill (5/18, Weixel, 2.98M) reports that according to Johns Hopkins data, the US death toll from the coronavirus has exceeded 90,000 people, which is "by far the largest in the world, though numbers from China have been met with skepticism." The total of 90,312 "also far surpasses the number of people who died due to seasonal influenza this year, which the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates is 62,000 over a period of about six months."

Meanwhile, the CBS Evening News (5/18, story 10, 1:45, O'Donnell, 5.14M) reported, "Researchers estimate that more than 272,000 Americans have recovered from the coronavirus."

Washington County Finds "Probable" COVID-19 Cases Dating Back To December. The Washington Times (5/18, Richardson, 492K) reports that Snohomish County, Washington "has found two 'probable' cases of COVID-19 that date back to December, marking what may be the first time that the devastating illness has been traced in the United States before Jan. 1, before the Chinese government alerted the World Health Organization to the virus's existence on Dec. 31." Snohomish County health officer Dr. Chris Spitters said at a Friday press briefing, "I think it's reasonable to assume given the reports like the ones that we had and others around the country that the introduction may have occurred prior to mid-January, as we initially suspected." The Times adds, "From a public health perspective, the earlier the disease's date of U.S. onset, the greater the number of Americans who have likely been infected with the contagion. That would suggest that the disease is far more prevalent as well as less deadly than previously feared."

Azar Says Extended Lockdowns Have "Serious Health Consequences."

HHS Secretary Azar said on Fox News' America's Newsroom (5/18, 896K), "There are very serious health consequences from being locked down for extended periods. We've seen reductions in cardiovascular procedures. We have seen increases in suicide risk. We have seen reductions in cancer screenings and pediatric vaccinations. These are real and significant health consequences and we have got to balance that against the health benefit of stay at home. We believe thanks to the President's historic response that we can get back to work and back to school with appropriate mitigating steps to resume our lives and resume the great and important work of our economy."

Gidley: Shutdown Could Kill More People Than The Virus. White House principal deputy press secretary Hogan Gidley said on the Lars Larson Show \(Radio\) (5/18) that there are "studies coming out saying the shutdown itself could actually kill more people than the virus because of depression and anxiety and suicide and also not going in for your regular cancer screenings and heart check-ups and all that type of stuff. So, this thing is going to be long lasting in this society and this can end in this country for a while but together we can beat it." Gidley was also interviewed on The Larry O'Connor Show \(Radio\) (5/18).

CNN's Collins Takes Shot At Trump After He Calls Her A "Faker" For Removing Her Mask.

The Washington Times (5/18, Chasmar, 492K) reports that CNN White House correspondent Kaitlan Collins "fired back" at the President after he tweeted that she was a "faker" for removing her mask at the end of Friday's press briefing. The President's tweet followed a tweet from his son, Eric, which included a video showing Collins "removing her mask within seconds of White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany leaving the press briefing room." Collins "slammed the president for focusing on her despite the ongoing coronavirus pandemic and clarified that she only pulled her mask down for 'six seconds.'" Collins tweeted late Sunday, "Nearly 90,000 Americans have been killed by coronavirus, and the president is tweeting about me pulling my mask down for six seconds on Friday."

WPost Analysis: Administration Efforts To Address Mask Shortages Were Inadequate.

The Washington Post (5/18, Butler, Eilperin, Hamburger, 14.2M) reports that while the federal government has taken steps to address mask shortages, emergency management experts "say the efforts were distressingly inadequate." The Trump Administration "ignored early warnings that it needed to shore up its stockpile of masks and other personal protective equipment and has fallen behind several other Western nations in the race to secure them, documents and interviews show." Stephen Morse, an epidemiologist at Columbia University, is quoted saying, "The lack of preparation and coordination has been appalling. ... In past disasters, the federal government, with its enormous buying power, took the lead in procurement." He added, "This time, federal inaction forced states into competing with each other for these scarce products."

Report: Federal Government Ordering Riot Gear In Response To Pandemic.

The New York Post (5/18, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports that "multiple disclosures" show that the federal government "has been making expedited orders for riot gear, gas masks and other police-related equipment in response to the coronavirus pandemic." A report from The Intercept says two purchase orders made by the Department of Veterans Affairs "show requests for gas masks, disposable cuffs, ballistic helmets and riot gloves, as well as protective equipment to be used by federal police guarding VA facilities." The orders "are marked as emergency acquisitions as a result of President Trump's national emergency declaration." They "also mark that each were made under a special authorization 'in response to Covid-19 outbreak.'" In addition, the VA "offered federal contracts for coronavirus-related security services, mostly in the form of guards or personnel for outside some of the nearly 1,500 health care facilities the agency operates nationwide, according to the site."

Cuomo: Professional Sports Should Be Played Without Live Crowds.

CNBC (5/18, Higgins-Dunn, 3.62M) reports that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said Monday that "he's asked major league sports teams to start planning to reopen or start their seasons without fans." CNBC adds, "While the stadiums aren't allowed to have fans, he said the games could still be televised. Cuomo said he believes whether sports franchises choose to return will depend on if they're able to make money without fans, which is a sport-by-sport determination."

DeSantis Highlights Florida Reopening Efforts, Defends Unemployment System.

The Pensacola \(FL\) News Journal (5/18, Anderson, 170K) reports that in Florida Monday, "gyms, libraries and museums were allowed to welcome people again at 50% occupancy while retail establishments and restaurants expanded from 25% to 50% capacity." Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) said in a press conference, "I'm just looking forward to helping bring us back. ... Obviously we still have issues with public health; that's not going to go away, but I think we have a pathway to get Florida moving again." DeSantis also "offered a forceful defense...of the state's efforts to improve the unemployment compensation system for those who remain sidelined by coronavirus-induced layoffs." He "said the vast majority of eligible applicants have now been paid and suggested that many who aren't receiving unemployment checks did not properly fill out the application or are ineligible."

NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 3, 2:10, Holt, 7.19M) reported that "what leaders hope will not be a trend, a full on flouting of social distancing. This block party outside Orlando teaming with 3,000 people." In Miami Beach, "it's a soft launch on stores this week, and restaurants next. But access to the pristine beaches here are still off limits for the time being. The crowned jewel of the tourism industry that generates $18 billion a year for the county is bare, with no reopen in sight."

Newsom Loosens California's Reopening Rules.

The Los Angeles Times (5/18, Myers, Luna, Willon, 4.64M) reports that California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) on Monday "loosened rules on allowable coronavirus infection and related death rates – a change that could release most parts of the state from the tight rules of his stay-at-home order." The announcement "means that 'roughly' 53 of California's 58 counties can now move into the second of four stages toward reopening if they so choose, he said. It comes after a number of local leaders have pressed Newsom to loosen restrictions, arguing their communities are now safe enough to allow more commerce and more chances for residents to leave their homes."

Southern California Has Three-Quarters Of The State's COVID-19 Infections, Deaths. The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Carlton, Caldwell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that while Sacramento and the San Francisco Bay Area have about 10 million of California's 40 million residents, they have just 16% of the state's COVID-19 cases, and 14% of its COVID-19 related deaths. Meanwhile, Southern California has 22 million residents, and approximately 75% of the state's COVID-19 infections and deaths.

Whitmer Says Partisan Protests Will Not Change How She Runs Michigan.

The Washington Times (5/18, Morton, 492K) reports that in an interview with Fox News on Monday, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) "accused protesters against her stay-at-home orders of partisan politics" and said they will not change how "I run this state." The Times says Whitmer "struck a defiant note, saying she will not apologize for protecting public health despite demonstrators who have been besieging the state capital for weeks." She said, "But I've been focused on doing my job, and I'm going to keep doing that and I'm not going to apologize about that. I'm not changing the way I run this state because of some protests. ... There is a lot of politics at play here, unfortunately. ... The protests are very political in nature instead of being focused on the stay-at-home order."

The Washington Post (5/18, Balingit, Bellware, 14.2M) reports that an executive order Whitmer issued Monday allows businesses and restaurants in northern Michigan "to reopen at reduced capacity by week's end." The order "applies to the sparsely populated Upper Peninsula and 17 counties in the tourism-heavy northern tip of the Lower Peninsula." It "will allow bars and restaurants to operate at half-capacity, with face coverings required for servers and six feet of distance between customers. It also allows social gatherings of up to 10 people."

Judge Declares Oregon Governor's Emergency Orders "Null And Void."

The Washington Times (5/18, Richardson, 492K) reports that Baker County, Oregon Circuit Court Judge Matthew Shirtcliff on Monday declared Gov. Kate Brown's (D) pandemic-related emergency orders "null and void." In response to a lawsuit by churches and residents challenging the state shutdown, Shirtcliff "said in a seven-page decision that Ms. Brown's executive orders, including her 'Stay at Home and Save Lives' and 'Closure of Certain Businesses' shutdowns, exceeded the 28-day legislative time limits." Shirlcliff wrote, "Once the maximum 28-day period is exceeded, the governor's executive orders and all subsequent orders were rendered null and void."

Texas Governor Reopens Day Care Centers.

The Washington Times (5/18, Howell, 492K) reports Texas Gov. Greg Abbott (R) said Monday that "day care centers can reopen immediately and that bars and bowling alleys may open at 25% capacity on Friday." In addition, Abbott "said youth centers, including Boys and Girls Clubs and YMCAs, must open up to keep children occupied as their parents return to work. Restaurants can expand their capacity to 50% Friday, while youth sports and camps will resume on May 31." Texas "has documented over 48,000 cases, including over 1,300 deaths, from COVID-19," he state "recorded its highest single-day increase of 1,800 on Saturday even as it moves to open up again." ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 4, 2:20, Pilgrim, 8.52M) showed Abbott saying, "When we increase testing in hot spots, the number of people testing positive is going to spike. Then what we find is usually within a week or two, the flare-up is contained."

Abbott said on Fox News' Hannity (5/18, 535K), "Let me tell you what many, many outlets will not tell you and that is on today when Texas reopened even more for business, maybe as open as any state in the country, today also was the lowest number of COVID deaths since April 3. Yesterday was the lowest number of COVID related hospitalizations since the middle part of April. Texas has a downward trend of those testing positive for COVID-19 as a percent of all the people testing positive. All the trends are going good in Texas and Texas is opening up for business" The CBS Evening News (5/18, story 3, 2:55, Shamlian, 5.14M) reported that Abbott "says professional sports like golf, tennis and auto race canning resume at the end of the month."

Louisiana's Tourism, Energy Industries Battered By Pandemic.

The Washington Post (5/18, Montgomery, Webster, 14.2M) reports that Louisiana "is heavily reliant on two of the industries hardest hit by the coronavirus pandemic: tourism and energy." According to economists, "with the economic fallout from stay-at-home orders and other restrictions mounting nationwide, this state is perhaps the most vulnerable." The state "began a gradual reopening process last week," but "few people came out to experience the partial return of nightlife to the French Quarter on Saturday. Economic projections remain grim." In addition, "the oil money that lubricates the region's economy is drying up, too. With crude now scarcely $30 per barrel — break-even for an oil company is at least high $30s — half the companies surveyed this month by the Louisiana Oil & Gas Association said bankruptcy is likely."

NYTimes Analysis: Large Parts Of South Could Be "Especially Vulnerable" To Coronavirus Outbreaks.

The New York Times (5/18, Popovich, Singhvi, Conlen, 18.61M) reports that while large parts of the South and Appalachia have not seen major COVID-19 outbreaks, those areas "are especially vulnerable" to potential future outbreaks because a significant proportion of the population have diabetes, obesity, high blood pressure, and other chronic health conditions, according a new health-risk index created by PolicyMap for the New York Times. The index "for the first time identifies counties with high rates of the underlying conditions that increase residents' risk of becoming severely ill if they are infected with the coronavirus." The Times quotes Micaela E. Martinez, a professor at Columbia University's Mailman School of Public Health, as saying, "Places that have not seen a lot of infection yet should be thinking about what infection is going to mean once they have an outbreak there."

Illinois Business Owners Face Misdemeanor Citation For Opening In Violation Pritzker's Orders.

The Chicago Tribune (5/18, Pearson, Munks, 2.65M) reports Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker (D) "sought to downplay a new enforcement tool he quietly filed last week that allows the state to cite nonessential businesses with a misdemeanor for opening up to customers in violation of his executive orders dealing with the COVID-19 pandemic." Pritzker "dismissed Republican charges of overreach and said he merely altered his executive orders to take advantage of existing powers over law enforcement through the state health department."

State "Doomsday" Coronavirus Plans Called for "Lottery" To Determine Who Got Treatment.

The Washington Times (5/18, Lovelace, 492K) reports that state governments quietly developed plans "for how health care facilities must allocate life-sustaining treatment in a doomsday COVID-19 scenario, raising alarm that bureaucrats will decide who lives and who dies. Crisis standards of care in some states have scoring systems and a "lottery" to determine who would win medical treatment and who would lose out."

WPost A1: Public Restrooms Pose Obstacle To Reopening.

The Washington Post (5/18, A1, Fisher, 14.2M) reports on its front page that "one of the biggest obstacles to dining in a restaurant, renewing a doctor's appointment or going back to the office is the prospect of having to use a public restroom — a tight, intimate and potentially germ-infested space," and it's "a hurdle vexing many business owners as they prepare to reopen."

Professional Sports Are Starting Back.

NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 11, 1:00, Holt, 7.19M) reported that professional sports are starting back, "giving us all something to cheer." NASCAR held a race in South Carolina, though without fans in the stands. Professional golf returned on Sunday with a charity match, and on Tuesday the NFL will open up practice facilities.

NBC Contributor Joseph Fair Recovering From COVID-19, Discharged From Hospital.

NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 5, 2:05, Holt, 7.19M) reported that NBC News science contributor Joseph Fair, who has been battling COVID-19, is feeling better after being discharged from a New Orleans hospital on Sunday. Fair said, "Nice to have my first coffee and be able to taste it and smell it after two weeks." NBC Nightly News reported that Fair "ended up in intensive care with symptoms of COVID. Traveling the world researching viruses, he had malaria three times but said this was worse."

Crenshaw: Americans Are Responsible Enough To Confront Risks Associated With Reopening.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (5/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Rep. Dan Crenshaw (R-TX) writes that in the debate over when to reopen the economy, which is split along partisan lines, conservatives are more willing to confront risk head-on. He says that view is consistent with his experience in the military, where most special operators identify as conservatives. He adds that Americans are responsible enough to both live free and confront risk, and concludes saying it is time for America to reopen in a smart and intentional way.

Lawmakers Urged To Bring Medicine Supply Chain Back To US.

In an op-ed for Breitbart (5/18, Ortiz, Gray, 673K), Alfredo Ortiz, president and CEO of the Job Creators Network, and C.L. Gray, president and founder of Physicians for Reform, that the US is dependent on China, "the nation that unleashed this devastating pandemic, for the vast majority of medications we now use." That dependence "fuels the U.S. crisis of drug shortages, which are especially consequential during a pandemic." While the White House Office of Trade and Manufacturing Policy "is preparing rules to direct HHS, the VA, and the Department of Defense to buy U.S. manufactured medicines and supplies for their government contracts," lawmakers should "work to bring the supply chain back to American shores."

NYTimes: New York Should Consider Alternative Methods To Enforce Social Distancing.

The New York Times (5/18, 18.61M) editorializes that New York should consider methods other than the police intervention to enforce social distancing during the coronavirus pandemic. Of the 125 people arrested "over offenses that law enforcement officials described as related to the coronavirus pandemic, 113 were black or Hispanic." Meanwhile, photographs across social media show "crowds of sun-seekers packed into parks in wealthy, whiter areas of the city, lounging undisturbed as police officers hand out masks." The city "needs a different approach to enforcing public health measures during the pandemic." Mayor Bill de Blasio "seems to understand this, and he has promised to hire 2,300 people to serve as social distancing 'ambassadors.'" Another method to help social-distancing efforts "may be the community-based groups that have been effective in reducing gun violence in some of the city's toughest neighborhoods."

Barr: Durham Investigation Unlikely To Spark Criminal Probes Of Obama, Biden.

On ABC World News Tonight (5/18, lead story, 4:50, Muir, 8.52M), Jonathan Karl reported Attorney General Barr announced yesterday that "he does not expect there will be a criminal investigation of either former President Obama or former Vice President Biden." Asked to comment, President Trump said, "If it was me, I guarantee they'd be going after me. In his case, they're not, so I think it's just a continuation of a double standard. I'm surprised by it."

The AP (5/18, Tucker) says Barr "insisted that the Justice Department would not be swayed by political pressure to investigate the president's opponents and that the 'criminal justice system will not be used for partisan political ends.'" Barr's comment "seemed designed at least in part to defuse expectations among some Trump supporters that the investigation could ensnare Biden or Obama." Reuters (5/18, Lynch, Hosenball) quotes Barr as also saying, "As to President Obama and Vice President Biden, whatever their level of involvement, based on the information I have today, I don't expect Mr. Durham's work will lead to a criminal investigation of either man."

To Politico (5/18, Forgey, Gerstein, 4.29M), Barr "issued an apparent rebuke of...Trump's efforts in recent weeks to hatch vague accusations of misconduct by former Obama administration officials," and to the New York Times (5/18, Benner, Goldman, 18.61M), Barr "dismissed...Trump's attempts to rebrand the Russia investigation as a criminal plot engineered by" Obama, which the Times says "served as an unmistakable rebuttal to escalating efforts by Mr. Trump and his allies to reframe the Russia investigation as a plot to sabotage his presidency by Mr. Obama, Mr. Biden and officials in their administration." However, the Times adds, "while Mr. Barr was unwilling to fuel speculation that the Justice Department will target Mr. Obama and Mr. Biden, he himself has done perhaps more than any other Trump administration to undermine the overall credibility of the Russia investigation." Bloomberg (5/18, 4.73M) says that Barr "has criticized Trump at times and sought to distance himself from the president."

The Washington Post (5/18, Zapotosky, 14.2M) reports Barr's "assertion" that neither Obama nor Biden is likely to be prosecuted is "likely to dismay Trump and his conservative allies." The Post says Barr "specifically dismissed the idea that Connecticut U.S. Attorney John Durham – who has been examining how the FBI handled the 2016 investigation into possible coordination between the Trump campaign and Russia to influence the election – would look at Obama or Biden.” According to the Post, Barr “declined to say who Durham was focused on.” USA Today (5/18, Johnson, Phillips, 10.31M), Washington Times (5/18, Mordock, 492K), The Hill (5/18, Chalfant, 2.98M), Townhall (5/18, Pavlich, 177K), Wall Street Journal (5/18, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and the New York Post (5/18, Bowden, Fredericks, 4.57M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Barr: FBI Probe “Abhorrent” And “Great Injustice.” The AP (5/18, Tucker) reports Barr also “repeated his belief that ‘what happened to the president’ as a result of the FBI’s investigation into whether his 2016 campaign conspired with Russia was ‘abhorrent’ and a ‘grave injustice.’”

Harris Poll: Voters Back DOJ Move To Dismiss Flynn Charges 51%-49%.

The Hill (5/18, Manchester, 2.98M) reports, “A narrow majority of voters say they support the Justice Department’s decision to drop the case against President Trump’s former national security adviser Michael Flynn, according to a new Harvard CAPS/Harris Poll survey released exclusively to The Hill.” The poll found “fifty-one percent of voters polled said they supported the move, while 49 percent said they opposed it.” The Hill adds “the poll comes less than a week after a National Security Agency document made public on Wednesday showed 39 former Obama administration officials, including former Vice President Joe Biden, asked to ‘unmask’ the identity of an American who had come up in intelligence briefings based on his conversations with then-Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak.” The Washington Examiner (5/18, Soellner, 448K) also reports the poll numbers, drawing from the story on The Hill.

Turley Criticizes Sullivan’s “Judicial Overreach” In Flynn Case. George Washington University Law professor Jonathan Turley writes in USA Today (5/18, Turley, 10.31M) that the case of former national security adviser Michael Flynn “is fast becoming a case of gross judicial overreach as the court appears to assume both judicial and executive powers.” Turley argues that Judge Emmett Sullivan “can disagree with the exercise of prosecutorial discretion, but he cannot substitute his own judgment for it.” Turley writes that Flynn “has the curse of being useful. He was useful to investigate for officials like FBI special agent Peter Strzok, former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe and former FBI Director James Comey, though investigators found no underlying criminal conduct. He was useful to special counsel Robert Mueller,” and now, he “is useful to a court that seems intent on staging a criminal case of its own making.” Turley adds that “at some point, when Flynn stops being so useful, justice might be served with the dismissal of this abusive case.”

Attorney: Sullivan Doesn’t Have Authority To Sanction Flynn For Perjury. Leslie McAdoo Gordon, the principal of McAdoo Gordon & Associates, P.C., writes in the Federalist (5/18, Gordon, 126K) that Sullivan’s order appointing retired federal judge John Gleeson “directs him to advise Sullivan on whether he should issue a show-cause order to Flynn for criminal contempt for perjury.” McAdoo argues that Sullivan “lacks the authority to sanction Flynn for perjury.” Flynn’s “statements in connection with his plea did not obstruct the court in the performance of its duty. Thus, they simply cannot constitute contempt of court under long-standing precedent. Sullivan should therefore not embark on any contempt proceeding. Doing so would be a misuse of his contempt power.”

WSJournal Objects To Logan Act As Justification For Investigating Flynn. A Wall Street Journal (5/18, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes Justice officials’ use of the Logan Act, which prohibits private citizens from negotiating with foreign governments involved in disputes with the US, as a reason to investigate Flynn. The Journal argues that as President Trump’s choice for national security adviser in late 2016 and early 2017, Flynn had reason to talk with foreign officials.

Graham To Seek Authorization To Subpoena Trump Russia Investigators.

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that Senate Judiciary Chairman Graham “announced on Monday that he will soon be seeking broad authorization to subpoena dozens of key officials in the Trump-Russia investigation.” Graham “said his committee will debate and vote on subpoena authorization related to oversight of the FBI’s Crossfire Hurricane counterintelligence investigation into Russian interference and the Trump campaign as well as the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act process.” Graham said the subpoenas would cover “documents and communications referenced in and testimony at a hearing or deposition of any individual named or identified by pseudonym in” DOJ Inspector General Michael Horowitz’s December report on FBI’s Russia investigation.

IG Report: DOJ Has Not Resolved Recommendations From 2016 Election Investigation.

CQ Roll Call (5/18, Ruger, 154K) reports that a new inspector general report says the Justice Department “hasn’t resolved several recommendations from a 2018 internal probe into the FBI’s actions ahead of the 2016 presidential election, which included the mishandling of a probe into Hillary Clinton’s email server and controversial text messages between top employees about then-candidate Donald Trump.” The 2018 report from DOJ Inspector General Michael Horowitz “provided plenty of fodder for both political parties to air their wider concerns about the bureau’s behavior when it came to the election – as well as numerous recommendations for changes at the FBI.” But an IG report released Monday says that DOJ “still has not resolved recommendations to address those as of March 31, about seven months away from the 2020 presidential election.”

House Lawyers Tell High Court Investigators Need Mueller Grand Jury Evidence.

The Washington Post (5/18, Barnes, Marimow, 14.2M) reports that congressional lawyers told the Supreme Court Monday that a House committee’s investigation of President Trump “did not cease with the conclusion of the impeachment trial,” and it would be hindered if the Justice Department continues to withhold grand jury material. The lawyers' filing "comes in response to the department's request that the Supreme Court put aside court orders that Congress receive secret grand jury evidence from Robert S. Mueller III's special-counsel investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election." In March, the US Court of Appeals for the DC "upheld a lower-court finding that Congress can obtain grand jury materials in connection with impeachment proceedings." The Justice Department argued last week that the decision created "serious separation-of-powers concerns" that require the High Court's attention and asked that the release be put on hold "until the court decides whether to get involved."

Baker: FISA Should Prohibit Targeting Of Americans.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (5/18, Baker, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Thomas J. Baker, a retired FBI special agent and legal attaché, urges Congress to reform FISA to prohibit or limit the targeting of Americans.

Healthcare Sector Hit With "Devastating Financial Blow" Due To Lockdowns.

The AP (5/18, Murphy) reports, "The global coronavirus pandemic has created a huge need for health care in the U.S., but it also is delivering a devastating financial blow to that sector." The AP adds "health care provided the biggest drag on the U.S. economy in the first quarter," and "spending on care fell at an annual rate of 18%, the largest drop for that sector among records going back to 1959." The AP also says "hospitals that lose...profitable surgeries are gaining COVID-19 patients – and losing money on them," as "those patients may require hospitals to expand intensive care units, spend more on infection control and stock up on gowns and masks, among other items."

California To Provide Cash Coronavirus Assistance To Undocumented Immigrants.

The New York Times (5/18, Jordan, 18.61M) reports that a new state coronavirus relief program in California "will provide taxpayer-funded assistance to undocumented immigrants, who have been shut out of federal relief programs and unemployment assistance." The "$75 million cash assistance program, which will be awarded on a first-come first-served basis, will be conducted almost entirely by telephone to avoid hazardous in-person contacts." In unveiling the program, Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) said, "Every Californian, including our undocumented neighbors and friends, should know that California is here to support them during this crisis. We are all in this together."

Zoellick Urges US Avoid "New Cold War" With China.

Former World Bank president Robert B. Zoellick argues in the Wall Street Journal (5/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that in order to counter China, the US must avoid entering a "New Cold War" with China. Instead, Zoellick urges the US to promote freedom and seek to appeal to the Chinese public.

Illinois Supreme Court Disbars Blagojevich.

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Dibble, 448K) reports the Illinois Supreme Court disbarred former Gov. Rod Blagojevich "months after he was released from prison by President Trump." The court "agreed to disbar Blagojevich formally on Monday at the Illinois Attorney Registration and Disciplinary Commission's request after the former governor's prison sentence was commuted by Trump in February." Blagojevich "did not fight the commission's attempt to end his legal career permanently, saying that he would not be a good attorney after years behind bars and expressing no interest in returning to a legal practice."

Tropical Storm Arthur Heading Out To Sea After "Glancing Blow" To NC, VA.

ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 7, 0:10, Muir, 8.72M) reported Tropical Storm Arthur is now moving off the East Coast. A tropical storm warning is "in effect for North Carolina's Outer Banks." NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 9, 0:10, Holt, 7.19M) reported Arthur "dealt a glancing blow to coastal North Carolina and Virginia today, with heavy rain and strong winds." The storm is "heading out to sea, but rough surf and rip currents are likely for several days."

Meanwhile, the CBS Evening News (5/18, story 7, 0:15, O'Donnell, 5.14M) reported Tropical Storm Arthur brought "nearly five inches of rain, with winds topping 40 miles per hour." Arthur is "expected to lose strength later this week."

Free Beacon's Lehman: American Colleges Are Headed For A Financial Meltdown.

Charles Fain Lehman writes for the Washington Free Beacon (5/18, Lehman, 78K) that America's colleges "have never seen anything like the financial meltdown the coronavirus is about to bring to their campuses." Increased health fears, added costs, and lost tuition payments "could crush small colleges, many of which were already hanging by a financial thread." Those that can weather the crisis "in turn stand to gain big from the fallout." National Association of College and University Business Officers Vice President Jim Hundrieser said the emptying out of schools and the mass transition to distance learning has already been "the largest all-sector hit that we've ever seen."

Pediatricians: Children Should Go Back To School.

Dr. Robert Hamilton, who practices pediatrics in Santa Monica, California, writes in an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (5/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that as America begins to reopen, leaders should prioritize getting children back to school. While Dr. Hamilton cautions that wisdom and creativity are need to reopen safely, children's psychological and educational well-being are best served if they go back to school.

Democrats Tie State IG's Ouster To Saudi Arms Sale Probe.

The AP (5/18, Lee) reports that Congressional Democrats "say the State Department watchdog fired by President Donald Trump last week was investigating possible impropriety in a massive arms sales to Saudi Arabia last year." Democrats claimed yesterday that Steve Linick was "probing how the State Department pushed through a $7 billion Saudi arms sale over congressional objections." Rep. Eliot Engel (D-NY), the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, "said he was troubled that Linick was sacked before the completion of the Saudi investigation," which Engel "had called for...after" Secretary of State Pompeo "in May 2019 invoked a rarely used provision in federal law to bypass a congressional review of arms sales to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates."

Reuters (5/18, Zengerle) reports Sen. Bob Menendez (D-NJ), ranking member on Senate Foreign Relations, also "said Linick had been investigating Trump's declaration of a national emergency last year to clear the way for $8 billion in military sales, mostly to Saudi Arabia." According to Reuters, Trump "infuriated many members of Congress last May, including some fellow Republicans, by declaring a national emergency related to tensions with Iran in order to sidestep Congressional review of $8 billion in military sales." Reuters notes that both the House and Senate "passed resolutions to block the sales." The Hill (5/18, Bolton, 2.98M) indicates that Sen. Chuck Grassley (IA), "the most senior Republican in the Senate, is" also "pressing...Trump to explain why he fired the State Department inspector general, noting that Trump's notice on Friday that he would remove...Linick...did not include an explanation as required by law." Grassley "in a letter to Trump Monday warned inspectors general 'should be free from partisan political interference, from either the Executive or Legislative branch.'"

To Politico (5/18, Desiderio, Levine, 4.29M), "Senate Republicans find themselves in a familiar place: steamrolled by...Trump's purge of government watchdogs and offering little indication of how they plan to stop him." The Washington Post (5/18, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports "the letter from Grassley came amid criticism from Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.), who accused the Iowa Republican and other GOP senators of staying quiet out of fear of Trump." Said Schumer on the Senate floor, "Where are my Republican colleagues in the Senate? ... They are so afraid of President Trump they ... cling, almost, to his ankles."

To NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 8, 0:55, Holt, 7.19M), "There is bipartisan outcry...after President Trump fired another independent watchdog who was scrutinizing his Administration." NBC (Mitchell) added, "For the fourth time in six weeks, the President has fired an independent government watchdog." Pompeo is "saying that the firing was not retaliation, which would be illegal." In a phone interview with the Washington Post (5/18, Morello, 14.2M), Pompeo said, "I went to the president and made clear to him that Inspector General Linick wasn't performing a function in a way that we had tried to get him to, that was additive for the State Department, very consistent with what the statute says he's supposed to be doing. ... The kinds of activities he's supposed to undertake to make us better, to improve us." Added Pompeo, "I actually know how that works. ... I had an IG at the CIA, not the IG that I had chosen but an IG that was there before me. He did fantastic work. He made us better. Linick wasn't that."

The Washington Times (5/18, Howell, 492K) reports that the President said yesterday "he fired the State Department's inspector general at...Pompeo's request and it 'should have been done a long time ago' because the official was a holdover from the Obama era." Said Trump, "I was happy to do it, Mike requested that I do it. ... He's an Obama appointment and he had some difficulty."

ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 5, 1:45, Raddatz, 8.52M) asked, "So why did Pompeo fire Linick? He said Linick was not performing the way he wanted him to, and was not additive for the State Department." The New York Times (5/18, Wong, Sanger, 18.61M) reports, however, that "it remains unclear exactly what prompted the firing of Mr. Linick, since the inspector general's office conducts multiple, simultaneous investigations into the activities of the State Department and its officials." The Times adds "a State Department spokeswoman said the department could not comment on any open investigations by the inspector general, but noted that even with Mr. Linick's departure, investigations would be continued by an acting inspector general." Trump "appointed Ambassador Stephen J. Akard, the director of the Office of Foreign Missions, for that role." Akard, "an associate of Vice President Mike Pence, failed to get congressional support for a top State Department job under Mr. Pompeo's predecessor."

USA Today (5/18, Cummings, 10.31M) reports, meanwhile, that an anonymous "Democratic aide...said the inspector general was probing allegations that Pompeo used a political appointee at the State Department 'to perform personal tasks for himself and Mrs. Pompeo.'" Likewise, Politico (5/18, Desiderio, 4.29M) reports that "the revelation adds another layer to Trump's decision to sack...Linick, who was also looking into claims that...Pompeo and his wife improperly directed political appointees to run personal errands for him, including walking his dog and picking up his dry cleaning."

Commenting on that allegation, USA Today (5/18, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports, "Trump said Monday he preferred for government employees to wash...Pompeo's dishes if his wife or child weren't present, to allow him to do his work." Said the President, "And now I have you telling me about dog walking, washing dishes and, you know what, I'd rather have him on the phone with some world leader than have him wash dishes because maybe his wife isn't there or his kids aren't there, you know." Bloomberg (5/18, 4.73M), The Hill (5/18, Kelly, 2.98M), Washington Examiner (5/18, Halaschak, 448K) and McClatchy (5/18, Wilner, Lowry, 19K), among other news outlets, also cover Linick's investigations and his ouster.

The Washington Post (5/18, 14.2M) editorializes that the "blunt dismissal of a nonpartisan official whose job it is to provide an independent evaluation of just the sort of allegations Mr. Pompeo was facing would be shocking – if it were not just the latest step in a campaign by Mr. Trump to eliminate accountability across the federal government." The Post adds that "Congressional Democrats have promised an investigation of Mr. Linick's firing," but "the question, as always, for...Republicans is whether they will insist that Mr. Trump observe the rule of law – or simply roll over once again."

Clinton Campaign Criticized Linick's In 2016 Over Email Probe. The New York Post (5/18, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports that Linick "was the target of an earlier accusation that he engaged in partisan politics – from Hillary Clinton when she was running for president in 2016." Clinton's campaign "in 2016 attacked...Linick for criticizing her use of a private email server and allegedly leaking negative stories about her to the press." Clinton campaign chair John Podesta "said then that the anonymous source's accusations in one article" about Clinton's email use "raised 'serious questions about the independence of this office.'"

Trump Responds To "Loser" Romney's Criticism Of IG Firings.

The Washington Post (5/18, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that President Trump, "following sharp criticism by Sen. Mitt Romney over firing inspectors general," yesterday "attacked the Utah Republican as a 'LOSER' and shared a video montage of contrasting news coverage of their respective presidential election nights." On Saturday, Romney tweeted, "The firings of multiple Inspectors General is unprecedented; doing so without good cause chills the independence essential to their purpose." According to the Post, "The video included in Trump's Monday morning tweet showed news coverage of a dejected Romney as results rolled in on election night in 2012," and "also included coverage of Trump prevailing four years later...and later being sworn into office." The Washington Times (5/18, Boyer, 492K) also reports Trump "called...Romney a 'loser; Monday after the Utah Republican criticized the president's firing of government watchdogs." Romney was "the only Senate Republican to vote to convict the president in his impeachment trial."

Senate Panel To Vote On Ratcliffe Nomination Today.

The Hill (5/18, Carney, 2.98M) reports, "The Senate Intelligence Committee will vote Tuesday on Rep. John Ratcliffe's (R-Texas) nomination to be the next director of national intelligence." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell "announced the committee vote from the floor on Monday," saying, "This role is essential for monitoring and countering evolving threats from Russia to China to terrorist groups and for ensuring the intelligence community's important work is not tainted by partisan bias or political weaponization." The Washington Examiner (5/18, Ferrechio, 448K) indicates that "if confirmed by the Senate, which appears all but certain, Ratcliffe will take over for acting Director of National Intelligence Richard Grenell."

Personnel Changes At DEA And DC US Attorney's Office Draw Scrutiny.

The AP (5/18, Balsamo) reports that Tim Shea, "the US attorney who oversaw the reversal of a sentencing recommendation for Trump ally Roger Stone and the motion to dismiss charges against ex-national security adviser Michael Flynn," has been chosen to be the next administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration. Shea "will be replaced by Justin Herdman, the US attorney in Cleveland, who will move into the role as top federal prosecutor for the District of Columbia." DEA Administrator Uttam Dhillon "will take on a role as a senior official at the Justice Department."

The Washington Post (5/18, Hsu, Alexander, 14.2M) reports that Attorney General Barr "has installed a new top deputy at the federal prosecutor's office in Washington, raising concerns that a key US attorney's office handling multiple investigations of interest to President Trump is becoming further politicized." According to the Post, "The arrival of Associate Deputy Attorney General Michael R. Sherwin – who won the conviction of a Chinese trespasser at Trump's Mar-a-Lago Club in Florida in September – has triggered new accusations that Justice Department leaders are bypassing career prosecutors in the office and intervening in cases favoring the president's allies." The Post adds Barr "selected Sherwin, a career U.S. prosecutor from Miami who specializes in national security cases, after first meeting and being impressed by him during the investigation of a deadly December shooting at a naval air station in Pensacola." Reuters (5/18, Lynch), Politico (5/18, Oprysko, 4.29M) and Washington Examiner (5/18, Yilek, 448K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Whitaker: "Pockets" Of Career DOJ Employees Worked To Undermine Trump Agenda.

The Washington Times (5/18, Mordock, 492K) reports, "Former acting Attorney General Matthew Whitaker says he saw firsthand how 'pockets' of career Justice Department bureaucrats worked to undermine President Trump's immigration and health care agendas." Whitaker "said efforts to foil the president's plans went beyond the well-known, top-level officials at the FBI and Justice Department who pushed the Russian collusion allegations to include a cabal of lower-level bureaucrats working against Mr. Trump's agenda." Whitaker said in an interview, "There are pockets. I did see this especially on immigration policy where it was really hard to move the ball." Whitaker "detailed his experiences battling the 'deep state' in a new book, 'Above the Law,' which is scheduled for release Tuesday."

Brookings Researchers Document "Extraordinary" Trump White House Turnover.

Politico (5/18, Cook, 4.29M) reports that the White House is "seeing a historic pace of turnover among its highest-ranking aides, a musical chairs environment as the president faces his greatest leadership test and the biggest threat to his 2020 campaign. ... Trump's top officials – influential roles in the executive office of the president – have had a turnover rate of 86 percent since Trump took office, according to research by Brookings Institution senior fellow Kathryn Dunn Tenpas." Politico adds, "In new findings, Tenpas calls the rate of turnover for 11 pandemic-related positions in the administration from Trump's inauguration until December 2019 'extraordinary.'" Politico notes that "one of the key pandemic jobs, the deputy national security adviser, has been held by six separate Trump officials in less than three years, according to Tenpas' research."

Biden Would Rescind Keystone XL Permit If Elected.

Politico (5/18, Lefebvre, 4.29M) reports the Biden campaign indicated yesterday that the former vice president would "rescind" President Trump's permit "allowing the Keystone XL oil pipeline to cross the border into the US, a move that would effectively kill the controversial project." Politico says "Biden's opposition...raises the stakes for the TC Energy's efforts to start construction on the cross-border portion of the pipeline this year that would carry 830,000 barrels of crude oil from Canada to the US." Reuters (5/18, Inc.) recalls that "Trump, a Republican, had made building the pipeline a central promise of his presidential campaign," whereas "Biden was vice president in the Obama administration when it rejected the project as contrary to its efforts to combat climate change."

The Washington Post (5/18, Viser, Grandoni, 14.2M) reports Biden's "renewed opposition to the project is likely to make it a flash point in the November election, again testing the popularity of Trump's drive to reverse Obama-era environmental policies."

Esper To Deliver "Virtual" Keynote Address As Naval Academy Graduation.

The Washington Times (5/18, Glenn, 492K) reports, "Secretary of Defense Mark Esper will give a pre-recorded keynote address during a 'virtual' graduation ceremony on Friday at the US Naval Academy in Annapolis." The Times adds "the virtual ceremony will include segments from five in-person swearing-in events at the Academy that began on May 12 and will run through May 20."

McConnell Names Rubio As Acting Chair Of Senate Intel Committee.

USA Today (5/18, King, Hayes, 10.31M) reports "Sen. Marco Rubio has been named the acting chair of the Senate Intelligence Committee, replacing North Carolina GOP Sen. Richard Burr, who stepped aside while he's under federal investigation for stock sales made ahead of a coronavirus-driven market crash." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell "handed Rubio the gavel on Monday, calling the Florida Republican a 'talented and experienced' leader and noted his work on subjects ranging from China and Iran to Russia and North Korea." The Washington Post (5/18, Cassata, 14.2M) calls Rubio "a national security hawk who had been widely expected to take over the committee once Burr retires," and the Washington Times (5/18, Meier, 492K) indicates "McConnell said he is 'glad' Mr. Rubio accepted the offer to serve as acting chair and cited his 'care for our nation's security, advocacy for our values and interests, and vigilance toward threats have earned a national reputation.'"

Hill Says She "Cried" After "Devastating" Democratic Loss In CA25.

The Daily Caller (5/18, Olohan, 716K) reports "former Democratic California Rep. Katie Hill said Sunday that she cried for days when Republicans flipped her old congressional seat, calling the loss "[]ing devastating." Hill "tweeted Sunday after Republican former Navy pilot Mike Garcia flipped Hill's old seat red in the May 12 special election." Wrote Hill, "So yeah it really hurt to have my old seat flip back to Republican-for a ton of people & also for me. In fact, it was pretty f[]ing devastating. I went offline & cried for a few days but, as always, getting ready to stand back up & keep fighting. Hope you are too."

NYTimes Analysis: Justice Thomas "Symbol Of The Trump Era."

Under the headline "Passed By For Decades, Clarence Thomas Is A New Symbol Of The Trump Era," the New York Times (5/18, Casey, 18.61M) reports, "Among certain conservatives, an idea has started to take hold: Could Justice Clarence Thomas ever be the kind of pop-culture icon to his followers that Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg has become to hers?" Thomas, "the Supreme Court's most conservative member, is catching up in his own way at age 71," and "is newly in the public eye (or ear) as he regularly asks questions during oral arguments that are being conducted by conference call and broadcast live during the pandemic."

Secret Service Investigating Unemployment Fraud Scheme.

The CBS Evening News (5/18, story 4, 1:50, O'Donnell, 5.14M) reported on a "sophisticated international crime ring" that is "stealing hundreds of millions of dollars in unemployment benefits intended for Americans who have lost jobs during the pandemic. US authorities say many victims of the fraud are first responders, government workers, and school employees." CBS (Pegues) said it "has confirmed that the Secret Service is investigating a multimillion dollar fraud scheme led by a criminal organization with ties to Nigeria, targeting the unemployment insurance system." According to the Secret Service alert, "there are cases in Washington state, Florida, North Carolina, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Oklahoma, and Wyoming."

Journalists Miss Reference In Name Of Trump Camp's Web Site Attacking Biden.

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Larsen, 448K) reports, "A Trump campaign parody website that mocked one of Joe Biden's verbal stumbles caused confusion among journalists and commentators who did not understand the reference. The website and first video revealed Monday is titled 'Truth over Facts,' which a press release described as 'an investigative website aimed at uncovering the truth behind Joe Biden's never-ending, seemingly incomprehensible statements during his third, plodding campaign for president.' ... The title of the project is a reference to when" Biden, visiting Iowa in August of last year, said while criticizing President Trump, "We choose truth over facts." The Examiner adds, "Some journalists and commentators," including Vox's Ezra Klein and CNBC's Christina Wilkie, among others, "appeared to not get the reference, mistaking it to be a literal extension of...Trump's attacks on reporters and news outlets or a rejection of facts."

On its website, Fox News (5/18, Steinhauser, 27.59M) reports, "The video – made to look like a television investigative report – is hosted by Trump campaign communications director Tim Murtaugh, who's a former local TV anchor and reporter. 'The American people deserve to know the truth behind Joe Biden's delirious and nonsensical claims on the campaign trail,' Murtaugh said. 'When he's mangling the text of the Declaration of Independence or calling someone a 'lying, dog-faced pony soldier,' is he really speaking a language that only he and a select group of others understand?'"

Biden Tabs Trump "President Tweety."

Breitbart (5/18, Alic, 673K) reports that Joe Biden "took a shot at President Donald Trump's relentless social media use on Monday by wryly attempting to christen him 'President Tweety.' Biden, who just last week claimed he was resisting giving the president a nickname, floated the new epithet during a video appearance before the AAPI Victory Fund, a Super PAC working to mobilize Asian American voters ahead of the 2020 election. 'Trump is out there tweeting again this morning. I call him 'President Tweety,'" Biden said" before blasting "Trump's push to reopen the economy amid the COVID19 pandemic. 'How are we supposed to [reopen] if you're sitting on the money small businesses need in order to stay alive?' 'Stop tweeting about it,' the former vice president added. 'Get the money out to main street now.'"

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Campaign Trying To Depress Minority Voter Turnout.

The New York Times (5/18, A1, Wines, 18.61M) reports that "the Republican Party, the Trump campaign and conservative activists are mounting an aggressive national effort to shape who gets to vote in November – and whose ballots are counted." The Times says that the GOP "program, which has gained steam in recent weeks, envisions recruiting up to 50,000 volunteers in 15 key states to monitor polling places and challenge ballots and voters deemed suspicious." There is "a $20 million plan that also allots millions to challenge lawsuits by Democrats and voting-rights advocates seeking to loosen state restrictions on balloting." The Times says "its premise is that a Republican victory in November is imperiled by widespread voter fraud," but "Democrats and voting rights advocates say the driving factor is politics, not fraud – especially since [President] Trump's narrow win in 2016 underscored the potentially crucial value of depressing turnout by Democrats, particularly minorities."

Battleground-State Republicans Worried About Trump's Reelection Prospects.

Politico (5/18, Isenstadt, 4.29M) reports that "among swing-state Republicans" there is "widespread apprehension" regarding President Trump's re-election prospects. Politico says, "Many fret that Trump's hopes are now hitched to the pandemic; others point to demographic changes in once-reliably red states and to the challenge of running against a hard-to-define Democratic opponent who appeals to a wide swath of voters." Politico says "most of the GOP's attention is focused on a trifecta of Rust Belt states that catapulted Trump to the presidency, but where he now trails," and "Republicans, including Trump's own advisers, are most concerned about Michigan. A Fox News survey taken last month showed Biden leading by 8 percentage points." Politico adds, "Two recent internal Republican surveys similarly had Trump trailing, but by smaller margins."

McClatchy Analysis: Return Of Arpaio May Hurt Trump In Arizona. McClatchy (5/18, Catanese, 19K) reports that as Trump seeks reelection, "Joe Arpaio is back, mounting a campaign for his old job as sheriff of Maricopa County – the nation's fourth-most populous county that could determine the outcome of the presidential election not just in Arizona, but nationally. Republicans are warily eyeing the return of the 87-year-old Arpaio, who was pardoned by the president in 2017 for defying a court order and still calls Trump his 'hero.' Democrats, meanwhile, view Arpaio's crushing 13-point loss in 2016 as a harrowing omen for Trump this fall in a state that is quickly emerging as one of the most competitive 2020 battlegrounds." McClatchy says "the possibility of Arpaio reappearing on the Republican ticket with Trump could further alienate the moderate suburban women and voters of color Democrats need to mobilize to win Arizona for the first time since 1996."

Polls Show Trump Holds Voter-Enthusiasm Edge Over Biden.

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Ross, 448K) reports that polling shows "enthusiasm among Republicans surrounding [President Trump's] 2020 reelection campaign remains very high," while Joe Biden has been "struggling to stoke passion among the Democratic Party faithful." The Examiner says that a Rasmussen poll out last week found that among "Republicans, 70% believe Trump should be the nominee compared to 23% who believe another should take his place." Among Democrats, "54% believe Biden should be the nominee relative to 28% who would prefer someone else. A whopping 18% of likely Democratic voters remain unsure. ... At the end of March, an ABC News-Washington Post poll revealed that '74 percent of those supporting Biden are doing so enthusiastically, compared to 86 percent of Trump supporters.' And an April Emerson College poll showed that Republican voters are far more excited about voting for Trump than Democratic voters are for Biden."

WTimes Analysis: 2020 Race Becomes Obama-Trump Battle, With Biden In The Background. The Washington Times (5/18, McLaughlin, 492K) reports, "Forget about Joseph R. Biden. The race for The White House in 2020 looks more and more like a contest between President Trump and his predecessor Barack Obama," who "has returned to politics with a vengeance, inserting himself in ways previously unthinkable for those who have occupied the Oval Office and calling his successor a lawless incompetent." In doing so, says the Times, Obama "has upstaged his former sidekick and shifted the narrative of the 2020" contest "from 'Biden takes on Trump' to 'Obama era versus the Trump years.' It's a recast of the contest welcomed by Mr. Trump, who is more than happy to talk about how his administration's efforts have been held back by the failings and political machinations of" Obama "on everything from the economy to the coronavirus pandemic to the Russia investigation."

Under the headline "Obama's Trump Attacks Electrify Democrats, Anger GOP," The Hill (5/18, Parnes, 2.98M) reports, "In recent days, Obama, with his legacy on the line, has made a point of taking on Trump head-on after remaining quiet throughout much of the president's time in office. 'It basically amounts to more than three years of staying quiet and remaining on the sidelines building to this moment of 'Hey Trump, we're over your [expletive],' an Obama administration aide said of the former president's recent actions." The Hill adds, "Democratic strategists say Obama's public remarks are helpful to Biden and the party because they believe they draw a favorable contrast between his administration and Trump's White House." However, Trump "seems happy to have Obama as his main foil in the general election. He knows this election isn't just a referendum on his own White House but with Biden on the ballot, it is also about Obama's administration."

RNC Chief McDaniel: "We Will Not Be Holding A Virtual Convention."

The AP (5/18, Riccardi) reports that RNC chief Ronna McDaniel "said Monday that the party 'will not be holding a virtual convention,' pledging that the presidential nominating convention in late August will be conducted at least partly in-person. The coronavirus outbreak forced Democrats to move their convention from July to August, and it's still unclear whether that event will be entirely online. On a call with reporters about election lawsuits, McDaniel initially demurred when asked about the GOP gathering, slated for Aug. 24-27 in Charlotte, North Carolina." She said, "It's quite a ways away, and there's ample time for us to adjust, if necessary." However, "in response to a question about the Minnesota Republican Party's online convention possibly being disrupted by hackers, McDaniel said: 'We will not be holding a virtual convention.'"

The Hill (5/18, Klar, 2.98M) reports, "In April McDaniel said the GOP was 'full steam ahead' with a planned full-scale convention, renouncing an NBC report at the time that alterations were being considered." The Washington Examiner (5/18, Halaschak, 448K) reports, "In April, McDaniel said the process was still 'full steam ahead.' 'A virtual convention is not on the table for us. So, no matter what, we will be having a physical convention – or a physical nominating process,' she told the Washington Examiner at the time."

NYTimes Report: "Vast Majority" Of Democratic Delegates Don't Want To Attend Convention. The New York Times (5/18, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that "three months before their national convention is to kick off in Milwaukee, Democratic Party officials are planning for three scenarios depending on the severity of the coronavirus pandemic at the time," and "many of the delegates don't want to go." The Times says, "Interviews with 59 members of the Democratic National Committee and superdelegates...found that the vast majority of them don't want to risk their own health or the health of others by traveling to Milwaukee and congregating inside the convention facilities," and "even those who plan to go had reservations." The Times adds that Democratic officials "have outlined three contingencies, people familiar with the planning say: a full convention, if health conditions permit; a mostly virtual convention that features a limited in-person presence in Milwaukee, or an entirely remote convention."

Latest Hires Will See RNC With 1,100 Staff Members In Critical 2020 States.

In an online article, Fox News (5/18, Steinhauser, 27.59M) reports, "The RNC on Monday announced the hiring of 300 additional staffers for Trump Victory, which is the joint field effort between the national party and the Trump reelection campaign. The new wave of people – who will be deployed by June – will bring to 1,100 the number of staffers in nearly two-dozen states being targeted in November's general election." RNC chief of staff Richard Walters is quoted as saying, "The RNC continues to invest in the most expansive data-driven field program, digital operation and party infrastructure in history. These unprecedented efforts are building a political juggernaut that will deliver Republican victories up and down the ballot in November, starting with President Trump." Axios (5/18, Allen, 521K) briefly reports on the story.

Once Confident Liberals Suffer String Of Setbacks In Democratic Party.

Politico (5/18, Thompson, 4.29M) reports, "On the eve of the Nevada caucuses in February, Bernie Sanders and his supporters were feeling invincible," with the Vermont Senator writing in a tweet, "I've got news for the Democratic establishment. They can't stop us." Politico says, "Since then, not only did the 'establishment' stop Sanders – it stamped out the candidacies of a string of left-wing insurgents, leaving the progressive movement reeling and in a state of despair." Politico adds, "The abrupt reversal of fortune has prompted introspection among many left-wing activists, who only three months ago were confident that the future of the Democratic Party was theirs."

Wall Street Executives Lobbying For Top Defense, Treasury Posts In A Biden Administration.

Bloomberg (5/18, 4.73M) reports that "Wall Street's Democratic insiders, who have been cutting checks and winning access for decades, say they have plenty of sway in" Joe Biden's "orbit, despite his very public wooing of the progressive left. Some finance veterans have even begun to think about the spots they might land in Washington if Biden wins." Bloomberg adds, "If Biden wins in November, one top Wall Street executive is hoping to get a position in the Defense Department, and a veteran of a global bank wouldn't be interested in anything but the top Treasury spot, they said, asking not to be named."

Attorney For Reade Sends "Cease And Desist" Letter To Critic.

Politico (5/18, Korecki, 4.29M) reports that an attorney for Tara Reade, a former aide to then-Sen. Joe Biden who has accused Biden of sexually assaulting her in 1993, "have sent a 'cease and desist' letter to one of her most outspoken critics, the owner of a not for profit who has publicly accused Reade of being 'manipulative' and 'a liar.' Lynn Hummer, the owner of Pregnant Mare Rescue in Santa Cruz County, Calif. where Reade volunteered from 2014-2016, received a letter from Reade's lawyers dated May 17, calling on her to stop making comments 'to the media and online' about Reade, which they call false and defamatory." Politico says Hummer has cast "Reade as dishonest in media interviews...and on social media, accusing her of taking advantage of the not for profit. Hummer has said that Reade charged Pregnant Mare Rescue for a costly veterinarian bill that serviced Reade's personal horse."

Senate Leadership Fund Reserves Over $10M In TV Ad Time To Boost Daines.

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Drucker, 448K) reports that the Senate Leadership Fund, a super PAC run by allies of Senate Majority Leader McConnell, "is investing a sizable $10.1 million in Montana as Republicans move to rebuff the expanding Democratic threat to GOP control of the Senate." The group "is reserving television advertising to air across Montana beginning Sept. 8 that will run for the balance of the fall campaign," according to "an official with the super PAC." The move "comes on the heels of public opinion polling showing popular Gov. Steve Bullock, a Democrat, with a big lead over Republican Sen. Steve Daines less than six months ahead of Election Day."

The Hill (5/18, Wilson, 2.98M) reports that the term-limited Bullock "was a late entry into the race after his presidential campaign flamed out. His decision run has given Democrats the chance to put another seat in play as they seek to win back control. Bullock has received plaudits for a rapid response to the coronavirus crisis in Montana, where only 468 people have tested positive." Even so, Daines "will prove a formidable incumbent, especially with President Trump at the top of the ticket. Trump beat Hillary Clinton in Montana by a 20-point margin in 2016."

The New York Times (5/18, Corasaniti, 18.61M) reports Occupy Democrats, a Facebook page that Mexican immigrants Rafael and Omar Rivero started eight years ago, is "quickly emerging as a counterweight to the dominance of right-wing online sites." The twins have reached "a digital dominance rarely seen among liberals — one that keeps pace with viral news sites and regularly outperforms President Trump's own page, as well as the Daily Caller, Fox News and other right-wing websites or personalities." Now, "what was once a hobby between gigs has grown into a full-fledged, full-time operation with five additional staffers."

Michelle Obama And MTV To Host Virtual Proms For Graduating High School Students.

The New York Times (5/18, Hauser, 18.61M) reports that former first lady Michelle Obama is partnering with MTV to provide virtual prom celebrations for graduating high school students. The event is "being held in partnership with When We All Vote, a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization for which Ms. Obama is a co-chair, to increase voter participation in every election."

FBI: Pensacola Attacker Repeatedly In Contact With Al Qaeda During Planning.

The Pensacola (FL) News Journal (5/18, Robinson, 170K) reports "federal investigators have determined the gunman who carried out a deadly shooting at Naval Air Station Pensacola last year was in contact with al-Qaeda prior to the attack." Saudi Air Force 2nd Lt. Mohammed Alshamrani, "a Saudi-born aviation student enrolled in the international military training program, opened fire in a Navy educational facility the morning of Dec. 6, 2019. The gunman killed three people and wounded eight others before he was shot and killed by responding law enforcement." The AP (5/18, Tucker) also indicates the attacker "repeatedly communicated with al-Qaida operatives about planning in the months leading up to the attack." FBI Director Wray is quoted as saying, "He wasn't just coordinating with them about planning and tactics. He was helping the organization making the most it could out of his murders." Administration officials also "lashed out at Apple for refusing to help them open the shooter's phones so they could access key evidence." The AP adds "law enforcement officials discovered contacts between...Alshamrani and operatives of al-Qaida after FBI technicians succeeded on their own in breaking into two cellphones that had previously been locked and that the shooter...had tried to destroy before he was killed by law enforcement."

NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 7, 1:40, Williams, 7.19M) showed Wray saying, "We know enough now to see Alshamrani for what he was, a determined AQAP terrorist who spent years preparing to attack us." NBC added "US officials say information from the phones led to a recent strike targeting an AQAP terrorist in Yemen, but it took the FBI more than four months to unlock Alshamrani's phones." The CBS Evening News (5/18, story 5, 1:20, Martin, 5.14M) showed Attorney General Barr stating, "The phones contained information previously unknown to us that definitively establishes Alshamrani's significant ties to Al Qaeda and the Arabian peninsula. ... Unfortunately, Apple would not help us unlock the phones."

The Washington Post (5/18, Barrett, 14.2M) reports that Barr said yesterday, "Apple's decision has dangerous consequences for public safety and the national security," and Wray added, "We received effectively no help from Apple" when "we really needed it." Reuters (5/18, Lynch, Hosenball) says Barr "called on Congress to take action forcing Apple and other tech companies to help law enforcement agencies get through encryption during criminal investigations." Barr alleged that "many of the technology companies that advocate most loudly for warrant-proof encryption...are at the same time willing to accommodate authoritarian regimes." Reuters notes that in January, Saudi Arabia "withdrew its remaining 21 cadets from the U.S. military training program and brought them back to Saudi Arabia, after the Justice Department's investigation revealed that some of them had accessed child pornography or had social media accounts containing Islamic extremist or anti-American content."

The New York Times (5/18, Benner, Goldman, 18.61M) reports that in January, "when Mr. Barr designated the shooting an act of terrorism, Apple refused a Justice Department request to help open the iPhones, setting off fears that the government would seek a court order to force the company to comply." DOJ "said that it sought Apple's help in opening the phones only after other agencies, foreign governments and third-party technology vendors had failed, and it accused the company of slowing the investigation and allowing leads to go cold."

The Washington Post (5/18, Barrett, 14.2M) reports "officials declined to say how the FBI was able to access the phones, but a person familiar with the investigation said agents used a passcode-guessing machine – a process that still took months." The Post adds, "Privacy advocates charged that once again, the Justice Department had wrongly claimed their only way to get into a device was for the manufacturer to make it easier for them."

Politico (5/18, Seligman, 4.29M) points out that "despite the latest strong words, the Trump administration didn't take Apple to court to demand its cooperation in the Pensacola case," which was "in contrast to the Obama administration, which sued the company in 2016 to demand that it unlock an iPhone used by the perpetrator of a terrorist-inspired mass shooting in San Bernardino, Calif."

ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 6, 1:30, Thomas, 8.72M) said there was a "strong push back from Apple, claiming it did help the FBI and get data from the suspect's phones. Apple said law enforcement's claims are just an excuse to weaken iPhone encryption and the privacy of consumers." The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Gurman, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), The Hill (5/18, Chalfant, 2.98M), Washington Times (5/18, Glenn, 492K) and USA Today (5/18, Johnson, 10.31M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Trump To WSJournal Editorial Board: "I Am Not Acting Impulsively."

The Washington Post (5/18, Ryan, 14.2M) reports that in a series of tweets Monday, the President "pushed back against a May 17 Wall Street Journal editorial cautioning against abrupt decisions regarding Afghanistan."

On Twitter, President Trump wrote, "The Wall Street Journal Editorial states that it doesn't want me to act in an 'impulsive' manner in Afghanistan. Could somebody please explain to them that we have been there for 19 years, and while soldier counts are way down now, hardly impulsive. Besides, the Taliban is... mixed about even wanting us to get out. They make a fortune $$$ by having us stay, and except at the beginning, we never really fought to win. We are more of a police force than the mighty military that we are, especially now as rebuilt. No, I am not acting impulsively!"

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 46.3%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 46.3%, and his disapproval at 51.8%. The President's approval is down 0.1 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.3.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (5/13-5/17) finds Trump's approval at 48%, and his disapproval at 51%.

A Harvard-Harris survey of 1,854 "registered voters" (5/13-5/14), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 47%, with 53% disapproving.

IMF Head Says Poor Countries Reluctant To Embrace G20 Debt Relief Over Credit Rating Concerns.

Reuters (5/18, Shalal) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva said debt relief program backed by the G20 is giving pause to the world's poorest countries who fear it may harm their credit ratings and risk their market access in the future. Georgieva "told Reuters she was not pushing countries to seek suspension of debt payments from official bilateral creditors, but wanted them to have the option to free up funds to fight the new coronavirus pandemic."

Reuters (5/18, Shalal) reports Georgieva, in an interview, said the recovery will likely take much longer than expected, stressing the danger of protectionism. Georgieva "said the Fund was likely to revise downward its forecast for a 3% contraction in GDP in 2020, with only a partial recovery expected next year instead of the 5.8% rebound initially expected." Georgieva, in the interview, "said data from around the world was worse than expected," adding, "Obviously that means it will take us much longer to have a full recovery from this crisis." Georgieva "gave no specific target date for the rebound."

Lagarde Pledges ECB Will Continue QE Despite German High Court Ruling.

Bloomberg (5/18, Gordon, 4.73M) reports ECB President Christine Lagarde on Monday "said she'll continue with the institution's bond-buying programs despite Germany's top court questioning the legality of one of them." Lagarde said, "I am not at all worried, not about the program linked to the pandemic, and not about the previous program, under which the Eurosystem has been purchasing bonds since 2015. ... We remain undeterred in delivering on our price stability objective." Lagarde added, "All national central banks should fully participate in the determination and implementation of monetary policy in the euro area. Each national central bank in the euro area is independent and cannot take instructions from governments. This is laid down in the Treaty."

French Foreign Ministry Says Push For Digital Tax Will Happen Only If OECD Process Collapses.

Law360 (5/18, Thompson, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports France "will forge ahead with its planned digital services tax only if the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development fails to agree on a plan for taxing digital giants by 2021, the French finance ministry confirmed to Law360 on Monday." A ministry representative said France maintains its firm commitment to the OECD's push to design digital tax rules.

Comments From BOE Officials Suggest Openness To Negative Rates.

Reuters (5/18, Schomberg) reports, "A chorus of comments from top officials at the Bank of England about negative interest rates has revived talk that the British central bank might resort to cutting borrowing costs below zero to cushion the economy from the coronavirus shutdown." Investors on Monday "began to price in the possibility" of the BOE taking rates below zero after Chief Economist Andy Haldane on Sunday "said the central bank was looking more urgently at negative interest rates as well as at buying riskier assets." Rate-setter Silvana Tenreiro said Monday, citing the experience of other European countries, "that negative rates have had a positive effect in the sense of having a fairly powerful transmission to real activity."

WHO To Launch Investigation Of Its Handling Of Pandemic.

The AP (5/18, Keaten, Cheng) reports the World Health Organization on Monday "bowed to calls...from most of its member states to launch an independent probe into how it managed the international response to the coronavirus." According to the AP, the "comprehensive evaluation," sought by a coalition of countries, "is intended to review 'lessons learned' from WHO's coordination of the global response...but would stop short of looking into contentious issues such as the origins of the new coronavirus."

President Trump appeared to express support for the move yesterday tweeting, "We are with them!" The tweet included a post from Australia's SBS News, which reported, "India, Japan, Britain, Canada, New Zealand, Indonesia, Russia, and all 27 EU member states are backing Australia's push for a probe into the COVID-19 pandemic." Trump also tweeted a copy of a letter he sent to WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus outlining what he called "missteps" by the UN agency and threatening to make US funding cuts permanent if they are not addressed.

The Washington Post (5/18, Shih, 14.2M) reports that "for weeks China had been anticipating, and bitterly opposing," the calls for an international probe. However, according to the Post, "China's opposition has melted in recent days as international support for an inquiry grew to include Russia, Turkey and European and African countries, and as drafts of the proposed resolution showed a focus on international collaboration to manage the pandemic, with relatively limited emphasis on questioning its source." The Post says "the draft resolution, submitted by the European Union on Monday and supported by more than 100 nations, does not mention Wuhan or China."

The New York Times (5/18, A1, Jacobs, Shear, Wong, 18.61M) says the WHO meeting "that was supposed to chart a path for the world to combat the coronavirus pandemic instead...turned into a showcase for the escalating tensions between China and the United States over the virus." Reuters (5/18, Nebehay, Farge) reports HHS Secretary Azar, who addressed the meeting via video, "decried" what he called an "apparent attempt to conceal this outbreak by at least one member state." Azar "did not mention China by name, but made clear Washington considered the WHO jointly responsible." Azar is also quoted as saying, "We must be frank about one of the primary reasons this outbreak spun out of control. There was a failure by this organization to obtain the information that the world needed, and that failure cost many lives."

USA Today (5/18, Hjelmggaard, 10.31M) reports says Azar also "criticized the WHO's failures during the coronavirus outbreak," saying that it had cost "many lives."

Azar later said on Fox News' America's Newsroom (5/18, 896K) that "at the President's request" he delivered "an extremely stern warning and message to the World Health Organization today, which is that they are in need of significant structural reform. They've got to be held accountable. There needs to be an independent investigation of them." The Washington Times (5/18, Meier, 492K) reports that for his part, "Tedros warned Monday the pandemic is far from over, and 'the risk remains high,' but he is confident that the organization 'sounded the alarm early, and we sounded it often.'"

The Washington Post (5/18, 14.2M) editorializes that under pressure, Xi "agreed to a more global review led by the WHO, one that is less likely to cast blame on China alone." The Post asks, "Where was President Trump? He and his administration were still debating whether to ax some or all of the U.S. contribution to the WHO." Secretary Azar "parroted Mr. Trump, blaming China and the WHO for the crisis, a crude scapegoating intended to divert attention from Washington's own failures. Hasn't it occurred to Mr. Trump and his advisers that, if they really want to learn how the pandemic began, it would be far better to show up for the investigation than to walk away? Mr. Xi is opening his checkbook, just as Mr. Trump is gathering up his marbles to go home."

Trump Threatens To Permanently Stop Funding The WHO, Reconsider US' Membership. Reuters (5/19, Venkat) reports

"President Donald Trump threatened on Monday to permanently halt funding for the World Health Organization (WHO) if it did not commit to improvements within 30 days, and to reconsider the membership of the United States in the body." The President "suspended U.S. contributions to the WHO last month, accusing it of promoting China's 'disinformation' about the coronavirus outbreak, although WHO officials denied the accusation and China said it was transparent and open." Trump told the WHO's chief in a letter, "If the WHO does not commit to major substantive improvements within the next 30 days, I will make my temporary freeze of United States funding to the WHO permanent and reconsider our membership."

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Restuccia, Lubold, Hinshaw, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Trump said the WHO has demonstrated a lack of independence from China and did not properly respond to the pandemic. The article says HHS Secretary Alex Azar accused the organization of letting China hide the outbreak's severity early on.

The Hill (5/18, Samuels, 2.98M) reports Trump also said, "I cannot allow American taxpayer dollars to continue to finance an organization that, in its present state, is so clearly not serving America's interests." The Administration "is already in touch with the WHO about desired reforms, the president wrote, but he did not specify what those [reforms] would be other than to say they would have to be" made.

Politico (5/19, Choi, 4.29M) reports Trump's "letter claimed the WHO 'ignored credible reports of the virus' and accused the organization of acting in an obsequious manner toward the People's Republic of China, including shunting Taiwanese health assessments and caving into pressure from Chinese President Xi Jinping."

Also reporting on the story are Bloomberg (5/19, Fabian, Wadhams, 4.73M) and the New York Post (5/19, Garger, 4.57M).

Gaetz: Administration Considering Additional WHO Funding Cuts. The Daily Caller (5/18, Nieto, Rodgers, 716K) reports Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL) on Monday detailed the conversation he had with President Trump and other GOP congressional allies this weekend at Camp David. According to Gertz, the discussion "more funding cuts for WHO and investigating Chinese technology companies," according to audio obtained by the Daily Caller.

Pompeo Criticizes WHO For Excluding Taiwan. The Washington Times (5/18, Taylor, 492K) reports Secretary of State Pompeo "sharply criticized" the WHO on Monday for not granting Taiwan observer status at its virtual meeting this week, claiming the organization's director yielded to "pressure" from China not to invite Taiwan. In a statement, Pompeo said the US "condemns Taiwan's exclusion" from the annual the World Health Assembly, adding that WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus "had every legal power and precedent to include Taiwan." Instead, Pompeo said, he "chose not to invite Taiwan under pressure from the People's Republic of China."

Xi Pledges $2B To Battle Pandemic. Reuters (5/18, Nebehay, Farge) reports Chinese President Xi Jinping addressed the WHO's annual gathering Monday and "pledged $2 billion over the next two years to help deal with COVID-19, especially in developing countries," which Reuters says "almost matches the WHO's entire annual programme budget for last year, and more than compensates for Trump's freeze of U.S. payments worth about $400 million a year."

Politico (5/18, Press, 4.29M) reports Xi "said he also supported the idea of a comprehensive review of the global response to Covid-19." However, according to the New York Times (5/18, 18.61M), Xi "appeared to brush aside calls for an independent investigation into its origins – a demand the United States has been promoting among its allies." According to the Times, Xi "said such forensics should wait until the crisis had subsided." Xi, says CNBC (5/18, Meredith, 3.62M), also "insisted that China has been open, transparent and responsible all along in providing information to the WHO and other countries, and has shared the genome sequence of the coronavirus." Politico (5/18, Wheaton, 4.29M) notes Xi said China "will treat a coronavirus vaccine developed there as a 'global public good.'"

GOP Lawmaker Pushes Back On China's Threat Against Him. Townhall (5/18, Barkoukis, 177K) reports, "Republican lawmakers haven't been shy about holding China accountable for the coronavirus pandemic." Some of the GOP-led efforts include bills like Rep. Chris Smith's Compensation for the Victims of State Misrepresentations to the World Health Organization Act of 2020, which would "waive the Foreign Immunities Act to legally empower U.S. citizens to sue the government of China for monetary damages." In response, China "threatened several Republican lawmakers last week" with "punitive countermeasures." In particular, China "singled out" Smith for being a "frequent instigator on China-related topics, particularly on so-called human rights issues." Smith, however, responded, "Sanctions will not silence me or anyone who demands genuine accountability for this horrific pandemic."

China Imposes 80% Tariffs On Australian Barley Imports. The Hill (5/18, Coleman, 2.98M) reports China imposed 80 percent tariffs on Australian barley imports, the country announced Monday, "as relations between the two nations continue to sour." The tariffs, set to begin Tuesday and "continue for five years, are expected to effectively stop billions of dollars of trade between the nations." China implemented the tariffs after "concluding an investigation, beginning in 2018, that officials said found dumping by Australia that caused damage on its domestic industry."

The AP (5/18, McGuirk) reports Australia "is seen as a leader in rallying global support for an inquiry" into China's response to the pandemic. Monday's tariffs, the AP says, mark the "first time Beijing has used access to its huge markets as leverage in its campaign to deflect blame for the outbreak."

Poor Nations Seek Restructure Loans From China Amid Pandemic. The New York Times (5/18, Abi-Habib, Bradsher, 18.61M) reports that as the coronavirus spread around the globe, "Pakistan's foreign minister called his counterpart in Beijing last month with an urgent request: The country's economy was nose-diving, and the government needed to restructure billions of dollars of Chinese loans." Similar requests have also "come flooding in to Beijing from Kyrgyzstan, Sri Lanka and a number of African nations, asking to restructure, delay repayments or forgive tens of billions of dollars of loans coming due this year." The Times says that "with each request, China's drive to become the developing world's biggest banker is backfiring."

Life Returning To Normal In Wuhan After Lockdown Ends. The New York Times (5/18, Wang, 18.61M) reports that "for more than two months, the people of Wuhan, China, lived under lockdown as their city buckled beneath the weight of the coronavirus." On April 8, the lockdown was lifted. Now, "the residents of Wuhan are cautiously feeling their way toward an uncertain future, some of the first in the world to do so." The Times goes on to profile four residents of Wuhan.

The CBS Evening News (5/18, story 9, 0:20, O'Donnell, 5.14M), meanwhile, reports that "a new outbreak of coronavirus in northeast China has led authorities there to reimpose stay-at-home restrictions on more than 100 million people."

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that even the draconian lockdowns imposed in China were not totally effective as parts of the country are seeing a second wave.

Russia Looks To US For Medical Aid.

Reuters (5/18, Balmforth, Rodionov) reports Russia is "working on getting reciprocal medical aid from the United States, Moscow said on Monday after the country reported its lowest overnight rise in coronavirus cases since May 1." But Russia, "whose tally of 290,678 cases is the second highest after the United States, said the situation remained difficult after officials reported 8,926 new infections."

France And Germany Propose $543 Billion In Emergency EU Spending.

Reuters (5/18) reports France and Germany on Monday proposed "a 500 billion euro ($543 billion) Recovery Fund that would offer grants to European Union regions and sectors hit hardest by the coronavirus pandemic, pushing up the euro and bringing down Italian bond yields."

The AP (5/18) reports German Chancellor Angela Merkel and French President Emmanuel Macron "said the plan would involve the European Union borrowing money in financial markets to help sectors and regions that are particularly affected by the pandemic." The AP adds, "Crucially, the money would be disbursed in the form of grants rather than loans, with repayments made from the EU budget, an unprecedented proposal that overcomes long-standing objections in Berlin to the notion of collective borrowing."

NYTimes' Sauerbrey: Germany Faces Challenges As It Seeks To Re-Open. New York Times (5/18, 18.61M) opinion writer Anna Sauerbrey writes that Germany, for all its relative success in handling the initial outbreak and keeping a lower mortality rate than many of its neighbors, is now learning the challenges of re-opening given that "the economy is in disarray," evidenced by 10.1 million unemployed Germans currently receiving subsidies. Sauerbrey claims forecasts "suggest that the economy, which has officially entered recession, will shrink somewhere between 6 to 20 percent." This, she says, translates into nearly 100 billion euros of lost tax revenue, according to one estimate, worsening the country's debt burden.

Italy Begins New Phase Of Reopening.

NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 10, 1:10, Holt, 7.19M) reported on what it called "good news in hard hit Italy, which began a major new phase of reopening" on Monday. NBC (Bradley) added, "Cafes, restaurants, and bars [are] back open in Italy after the longest nationwide lockdown in the world. A welcome sight after a ten-week shutdown devastated the economy, but businesses hardly booming so far."

Pandemic Pushes Swedish Deaths In April To Highest Level Since 1993.

Reuters (5/18, Johnson) reports that "more Swedes died in April than in any one month since 1993, figures from the Statistics Office showed on Monday, as the outbreak of the novel coronavirus pushed the death toll higher." In Sweden, "which has stopped short of the strict lockdown measures enforced by many countries," the pandemic has caused "around 3,700 deaths since the first reported fatality in March."

The Washington Post (5/18, 14.2M) editorializes that "in terms of illness and death, it appears Sweden has paid a higher price for its approach. As of Monday, it had suffered 3,698 deaths in a country of 10 million. By contrast, Denmark, Norway and Finland, with a combined population more than 16.5 million, which all imposed tighter restrictions, have seen only 1,081 deaths."

Brazil Now Fastest-Growing Global Hotspot.

Bloomberg (5/18, Brice, 4.73M) reports Brazil is "now the world's fastest-growing coronavirus hotspot, accounting for 13% of all new cases globally in the past week. Just days after it overtook Italy and Spain in total number of cases," Brazil "claimed the No. 3 spot from the U.K., reporting 254,220 confirmed cases as of Monday." The country is also "quickly catching up to Russia, which trails only the U.S., according to data compiled by Bloomberg."

Nursing Homes Account For 81% Of Canada's Deaths.

The Washington Post (5/18, Coletta, 14.2M) reports that nursing homes "account for 81 percent of" Canada's "covid-19 deaths, according to Theresa Tam, Canada's chief public health officer, a far greater proportion than in the United States." The World Health Organization has "said half of Europe's covid-19 deaths occurred in such facilities," and "nearly 40 percent of all U.S. deaths have occurred in nursing homes, according to the Kaiser Family Foundation."

Local Mexican Governments Resist Calls To Re-Open Until June.

The AP (5/18, Rodriguez, Verza) reports "local governments across Mexico pushed back Monday against President Andrés Manuel López Obrador's call to reopen the economy in some 300 townships that do not have active cases of coronavirus, with leaders saying they preferred to wait until June before resuming normal activities."

Qatar Threatens Up To Three Years In Prison For Refusing To Wear Mask.

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Halaschak, 448K) reports Qatar announced over the weekend that "those who go out in public without a face covering now face up to three years in prison and a fine of about $40,000." Qatar, it notes, "has one of the highest per capita rates of infection in the world."

Outgoing Israeli Defense Minister: Iran Is "Evacuating" Syrian Bases.

Reuters (5/18, Rabinovitch) reports that "outgoing" Israeli Defense Minister Naftali Bennett indicated that Iran "has begun withdrawing its forces from Syria...without offering any evidence to support his assertion." Bennett is quoted as saying, "Iran is significantly reducing the scope of its forces in Syria and even evacuating a number of bases." Reuters says Bennett "also urged his successor, Benny Gantz, to maintain pressure on Iran, adding that the trend might otherwise reverse." Reuters says Israel, "which monitors neighbouring Syria intensively, has carried out hundreds of air strikes in Syria targeting suspected arms and troop movements by Iran and the Lebanese Hezbollah guerrillas it sponsors."

New Iranian "Anti-Zionism" Law Mandates Support For Palestinian Terror Groups.

The Washington Free Beacon (5/18, Kreda, 78K) reports Iran's parliament has adopted "a wide-ranging new 'anti-Zionism' law that seeks to bolster support for Palestinian terror groups and other entities conducting terrorism against Israel." Parliament adopted what it calls a "double urgency motion that outlines the manner of confrontation on the national and international scale against the Israeli regime," according to a copy of the measure published by Iran's state-controlled media on Monday.

Iran Hit By Second Wave Of Coronavirus After Reopening.

The New York Times (5/18, Fassihi, 18.61M) reports that "when Iran began to reopen late last month, commuters packed subways and buses, young people lined up for takeout hamburgers and pizza, and traffic snarled highways." Three weeks later, however, "the country has been hit by a new surge of coronavirus cases." Iran "reopened without meeting the benchmarks recommended by health experts, such as ensuring that widespread testing and contact tracing was in place, and recording a steady drop in cases for at least several weeks." The Iranian Health Ministry "said Monday that 2,294 people had tested positive in previous 24 hours. A day earlier, that number was 1,808. In the immediate aftermath of a strict, two-week lockdown in April, the number dropped to less than 1,000 a day."

High Court: Sudan Must Pay Al Qaeda Victims $4.3 Billion.

The Washington Post (5/18, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the Supreme Court yesterday ruled that "victims of the 1998 bombings by al-Qaeda of the US embassies in Kenya and Tanzania are entitled to billions of dollars in punitive damages from Sudan." The bombings "killed 224 people and injured thousands, and courts determined long ago that Sudan enabled them by letting Osama bin Laden operate from the country and providing passports to al-Qaeda members." The Post says "a judge in Washington awarded more than $10 billion in damages, of which $4.3 billion was for punitive damages," and "the question before the court concerned a 2008 amendment to the federal Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, which generally protects foreign governments from lawsuits but also details the exceptions to such protection," including "acts of terrorism." The AP (5/18, Gresko) points out "the more than 500 people involved in the case are mostly foreign citizens, either U.S. government employees or contractors injured in the bombings or relatives of those who died."

The New York Times (5/18, Liptak, 18.61M) reports "foreign nations are ordinarily immune from suits in American courts," but "Congress has made exceptions, including one in 1996 for acts of terrorism conducted by nations designated as state sponsors of terrorism. Under the 1996 law, plaintiffs were allowed to seek compensation for their losses but not punitive damages, which are meant to punish and deter wrongdoing." The Washington Times (5/18, Swoyer, 492K), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Haftar's Forces Lose Control Of Key Air Base Near Tripoli.

Reuters (5/18) reports that "forces aligned with Libya's internationally recognised government took control of an air base south-west of Tripoli" on Monday "after a sustained assault, in what could be their most significant advance for nearly a year. ... Forces aligned with the Government of National Accord (GNA) had taken full control of Watiya, Osama Juweili, a top military commander, was quoted as saying by official media." The Watiya air base "has been an important strategic foothold for forces loyal to eastern-based commander Khalifa Haftar, who launched an offensive to capture Tripoli in April 2019."

The AP (5/18, Magdy) says the development "is a heavy setback" for Haftar's forces, who have been "waging a campaign for over a year to take Tripoli." The Washington Post (5/18, Raghavan, 14.2M) likewise says it is "delivering a major blow to his year-long effort to oust the government."

US Envoy Set To Discuss US Withdrawal From Afghanistan With Taliban Officials.

Reuters (5/18, Chiacu, Brunnstrom) reports that on Sunday, US special representative for Afghanistan, Zalmay Khalilzad, "left for Doha and Kabul...to press Taliban and Afghan government officials to open peace talks that the United States hopes will allow it to withdraw from Afghanistan." Khalilzad "left one day after Afghan President Ashraf Ghani and his rival Abdullah Abdullah signed a power-sharing deal."

Pro-Beijing Lawmakers Seize Key Hong Kong Panel.

The New York Times (5/18, May, 18.61M) reports that "scuffles erupted Monday between lawmakers in Hong Kong as they debated the leadership of a committee that is to consider legislation that pro-democracy politicians fear would tighten China's control over the semiautonomous territory." According to the Times, "Hong Kong's pro-democracy camp has accused establishment lawmakers of illegitimately seizing control of the committee, which for months has been led by Dennis Kwok, a pro-democracy lawmaker. Chinese officials and pro-Beijing lawmakers have accused Mr. Kwok of blocking new legislation, including a bill that would criminalize disrespecting the Chinese national anthem." At least four pro-democracy lawmakers were "carried or dragged off the floor of the Legislative Council" by security agents.

Cruz Accuses Democrats Of "Apologizing For Communist Dictators."

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Mastrangelo, 448K) reports Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) "ripped Democrats for not being tougher on China and other communist dictatorships around the globe." During an interview with President Trump's "reelection campaign war room," Cruz said, "We won't prevail in that battle, that fundamental battle of systems, if we're too naive, if we're too oblivious to even be aware that there is a battle being waged, much less to stand up and defeat the Chinese aggression. One of the things that drives me crazy about Democrats is they have this nasty little habit of apologizing for communist dictators."

Jailed Saudis Hire Washington Lobbyists To Counter Crown Prince.

The New York Times (5/18, Vogel, Hubbard, 18.61M) reports that a "handful of prominent jailed Saudis and their allies, concluding they are unlikely to win release by pleading directly with their own government, are planning to press their cases in Washington, including by hiring lobbyists with connections in President Trump's orbit." The "unusual prospect of Saudis publicly airing the royal family's deep divisions comes at a challenging moment for Saudi Arabia" and Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman. In what the Times calls "an apparent effort to exploit the situation, allies of several Saudis in recent weeks have approached Washington lawyers and consultants about legal, lobbying and public relations campaigns to push for an end to what they say is political persecution by the kingdom."

Israeli Found Guilty Of Murdering Palestinian Family.

The New York Times (5/18, Halbfinger, Rasgon, 18.61M) reports that "an Israeli settler was convicted on Monday of murdering a Palestinian couple and their young son in a racially motivated arson attack in 2015 that enraged Palestinians, drew condemnation from Israeli leaders and prompted investigators to use harsh interrogation measures normally reserved for non-Jewish terrorism suspects." Amiram Ben-Uliel, 25, was found guilty "of planning and carrying out the firebombing, which mortally wounded Saad and Riham Dawabsheh and killed their 18-month-old son, Ali." The couple's other son, "who was 5 at the time, was badly injured but survived." Prosecutors "said a life sentence was mandatory in premeditated murder cases and that they would ask for additional prison time."

The Washington Post (5/18, Eglash, 14.2M) identifies Ben-Uliel as a "Jewish extremist," and "son of a prominent West Bank rabbi," notes that although he was found guilty on "three counts of murder and two counts of attempted murder," the court "stopped short of finding the perpetrator guilty of membership in a terrorist organization."

Trump Commemorates 100th Anniversary Of Saint John Paul II's Birth.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Today we commemorate the 100th Anniversary of the birth of Saint John Paul II. HAPPY BIRTHDAY!"

GSEs Looking For Financial Advisors To Assist Recapitalization And Exit From Conservatorship.

According to a potentially paywalled piece from Bloomberg (5/18, Hamilton, 4.73M), "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are seeking to hire financial advisers to help them through their eventual exits from U.S. control." The advisers will help bring the GSEs through "steps that are necessary to leave federal conservatorship, including formulating strategies for recapitalizing the companies and revamping their business plans, the mortgage giants said in statements released Monday." Bloomberg adds that the "announcements show that Fannie and Freddie are still working to leave conservatorship even as the coronavirus crisis sends shockwaves through the housing market and broader U.S. economy." Freddie Mac CEO said that the search for an adviser marks a "significant milestone" for Freddie. Meanwhile, Fannie Mae CEO Hugh Frater said that the GSE is ensuring a "responsible exit." Both GSEs reportedly "said the financial firms they hire will work closely with their regulator, the Federal Housing Finance Agency. FHFA retained Houlihan Lokey Inc. in February to advise it on ending the conservatorships. FHFA Director Mark Calabria has said since last year that he expected Fannie and Freddie would need to hire their own advisers."

American Banker (5/18, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Brickman said, "Even as we work to stabilize the housing markets during this unprecedented pandemic, Freddie Mac has remained focused on exiting conservatorship responsibly. Today we begin the competitive selection process for a financial advisor that will ultimately facilitate our return to full private capital ownership. This is a significant milestone, and we look forward to making a thoughtful selection quickly." Reuters (5/18) reports, "Fannie Mae said it would issue a request for proposals to hire an underwriting financial advisor, while Freddie Mac said it has begun the request for proposal process."

HousingWire (5/18, Howley, 23K) reports, "For the record, putting shares of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac up for sale wouldn't be "initial public offerings," because Fannie Mae began trading on the New York Stock Exchange in 1968, and Freddie Mac began trading on the same exchange in 1989. The "offering" would be the 80% of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac preferred stock held by the federal government since 2008. The remaining 20% trades over-the-counter. The size of the share offering may be as high as $200 billion, which would make it the largest offering in history." DS News (5/18, Welborn) reports, "FHFA Director Dr. Mark Calabria told FOX Business late last year that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are building the capital necessary to get out of conservatorship, but there is still a little way to go."

Also reporting are National Mortgage Professional (5/18) and Seeking Alpha (5/18, Kiesche, 512K).

FHFA: GSEs Completed 8,836 Foreclosure Prevention Actions In February.

DS News (5/18, Welborn) reports that Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae "completed 8,836 foreclosure prevention actions in February, according to the latest data from the Federal Housing Finance Association (FHFA). This brings the total to 4,424,910 since the start of the conservatorships in September 2008. Over half of these actions have been permanent loan modifications." According to DS News, "With a surge in foreclosures expected post-forbearance due to COVID-19, foreclosure and eviction moratoriums backed by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) have been extended to June 30. Deadlines for all foreclosure and eviction moratoriums were set to expire on Sunday." FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "During this national health emergency, no one should be forced from their home. Extending the foreclosure and eviction moratoriums protects homeowners and renters with an Enterprise-backed mortgage and provides certainty for families."

Despite CARES Act's Forbearance Options, Servicers Push Many Borrowers To Make Hefty "Lump-Sum" Repayments.

The Washington Post (5/18, Singletary, 14.2M) reports that many homeowners are confused and frustrated. After they "followed the advice of government officials and contacted their loan servicers to talk about payment relief if they couldn't pay their mortgage," they were supposed to be able to "ask for an initial forbearance of up to 180 days. If additional relief was needed, they were entitled to a 180-day extension. Interest still accrues, but fees and penalties are waived." Borrowers with loans backed by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, HUD, the FHA, the USDA, and the VA qualified for the relief policies, according to the Cares Act, but it seems the "details of the Cares Act got lost in translation." Instead, borrowers were "offered 90 days of forbearance, and...servicers told them that past-due mortgage payments would need to be paid in a lump sum once the forbearance ended." One borrower said, "If we can't make our monthly payments now, why would a mortgage company think we can make four months' payments at once?" According to The Post, a Freddie Mac script suggests that servicers allow affected borrowers to "resume making [their] normal monthly payment" so that the servicer may "leverage alternative ways of paying back the suspended payments in a manner that is affordable."

A separate piece in the Washington Post (5/18, Orton, 14.2M) covers what borrowers "need to know about asking for mortgage forbearance." According to the Post, "You first have to figure out whether you have a federally backed mortgage. If you have a mortgage backed by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), Veterans Affairs (VA) or Agricultural Department (USDA), you probably already have that information because of the way you originally qualified for the loan. To find out if your loan is backed by Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, use the tools on their websites." The CARES Act "stipulates that during the forbearance period, mortgage servicers of federally backed mortgages such as Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac cannot make negative reports about the borrower to credit bureaus."

MBA Survey Shows 8.15% Of US Mortgages Are In Forbearance.

According to the latest weekly survey from the Mortgage Bankers Association, Reuters (5/18, Dunsmuir) reports, "roughly 4.1 million U.S. mortgage borrowers have had their payments paused or reduced as the novel coronavirus outbreak hits household finances, but the increase in the number of people needing such help is slowing." MBA said that "the share of mortgages in forbearance rose to 8.16% from 7.91% in the May 4-10 period," which is "the smallest increase since March 16." in addition, "the number of new requests for relief also fell relative to the prior week for the fifth consecutive survey period."

HousingWire (5/18, Lane, 23K) reports, "Broken down by investor type, the share of Ginnie Mae loans (those insured by the Federal Housing Administration or Department of Veterans Affairs) in forbearance increased from 10.96% to 11.26%. Meanwhile, the share of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac loans in forbearance rose from 6.08% to 6.25% and the share of other loans (private-label securities and portfolio loans) in forbearance increased from 8.88% to 9.26%." MarketWatch (5/18, Passy, 1.67M) reports that when compared to those of the GSEs, Ginnie Mae's loans "tend to go to borrowers who are first-time homeowners with weaker credit – people who could be more exposed to the economic downturn the pandemic has caused." Providing similar coverage of the MBA's data are National Mortgage News (5/18) and

National Mortgage Professional (5/18)

In its coverage of the MBA's forbearance data, Fox Business (5/18, De Lea, 1.73M) reports, "Last week, the Federal Housing Finance Agency announced a new deferral repayment option for people who have put a pause on mortgage payments. Beginning July 1, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will allow borrowers who are able to resume making their monthly mortgage payments to make their missed payments either at the time the house is sold, refinanced or at maturity. That way, the amount due in monthly payments remains unchanged."

NAHB/Wells Fargo Housing Market Index Rises Following Steep Drop In April.

According to a potentially paywalled Bloomberg (5/18, Golle, 4.73M) piece carried by National Mortgage News (5/18), "Homebuilder sentiment rose in May by more than forecast following a record slump a month earlier as a pickup in sales and demand expectations pointed to stabilization in the real estate market." The NAHB/Wells Fargo Housing Market Index rose seven points to reach 37. In April, "the gauge plummeted 42 points, the most in records to 1985." According to NAHB Chief Economist Robert Dietz, "Low interest rates are helping to sustain demand. As many states and localities across the nation lift stay-at-home orders and more furloughed workers return to their jobs, we expect this demand will strengthen." MNM says that the 30-year FRM's average "dropped in April to the lowest in Freddie Mac records back to 1971, enticing buyers. At the same time, the industry will be challenged by the surge in layoffs that has occurred over the last two months as the coronavirus prompted state and local governments to close most nonessential businesses."

Fannie Mae: Refis Expected To Rise To 17-Year High In 2020.

HousingWire (5/18, 23K) reports, "Refinance volume is set to spike to a 17-year high this year as mortgage rates fall to the lowest levels ever recorded, Fannie Mae said. Even as other parts of the economy tank, lenders will originate $1.5 trillion in refis in 2020, a 51% jump from 2019, according to the forecast. That would be the highest level since 2003 when $2.5 trillion of mortgages were refinanced, according to data from the Mortgage Bankers Association." Record-low interest rates and the Fed's MBS purchases are expected to "bolster refis." Already, the "rate for a 30-year fixed mortgage fell to an all-time low of 3.23% at the end of April, according to Freddie Mac." Fannie Mae said in its forecast that refi originations will hit "levels similar to 2012, when the last refinance boom occurred." Fannie predicts that by dollar volume, 2020's refis will exceed those of 2012 by $74 billion.

MBA: Purchase Apps For New Homes Fell 25% In April From March.

National Mortgage News (5/18) reports, "April was likely the lowest point in coronavirus-impacted home buying activity, especially when it comes to purchasing newly constructed houses, the Mortgage Bankers Association said. Mortgage loan applications submitted to buy a new home fell by 25% in April compared with March and by 12% versus April 2019, the MBA's Builder Application Survey reported. The data is not seasonally adjusted." MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "New-home purchase applications severely weakened in April, which coincided with the peak of the social distancing efforts and restrictions on nonessential activities to help slow the spread of COVID-19. MBA estimates that new-home sales dropped to an annualized pace of 533,000 (seasonally adjusted) units, the slowest since December 2016. This decline was in line with data from our Weekly Applications Survey, which indicated a pullback in March and most of April." According to Kan, "There's evidence now that unrealized, pent-up demand is being released as states start to reopen. We expect that heading into the summer, more prospective homebuyers will gradually return to the market." National Mortgage Professional (5/18) says, "By product type, conventional loans composed 62% of loan applications; FHA loans 23.3%, RHS/USDA loans 1.2%, and VA loans 13.5%. The average loan size of new homes decreased from $344,556 in March to $334,641 in April."

Ginnie Mae Temporarily Shifts Its Delinquency-Rate Threshold.

National Mortgage News (5/18) reports that Ginnie Mae "is offering temporary relief related to its acceptable delinquency-rate threshold," in response to the "obligation on issuers to fulfill the forbearance requirements in the coronavirus rescue package." Ginnie Mae said that it "acknowledges that these requirements will cause a significant number of Ginnie Mae issuers to experience increasing delinquency rates that may exceed the maximum thresholds established by Ginnie Mae." MNM says that Ginnie "may exclude new issuer delinquencies starting with the April data in the May investor accounting report. The exclusion will be extended automatically to issuers with data that was compliant in the April investor accounting report reflecting March's data, but it can be withdrawn at Ginnie's discretion. Issuers with noncompliant April reports will need to inquire about their eligibility." MNM says, "The percentage of mortgages that have been delinquent for 90 days or more is generally factored into the minimum financial eligibility requirements for single-family loans at the government-sponsored enterprises. The GSEs' regulator had proposed additional requirements on companies that also service for Ginnie Mae prior to the coronavirus outbreak in the United States. However, it's not clear now whether the proposal will move forward."

Zillow Sees Rates Staying Low; Realtor.com Says They May Move Even Lower.

In a MoneyWise piece carried by Yahoo! Finance (5/18), Doug Whiteman says that Zillow economist Matthew Speakman believes mortgage rates will stay low, as the "combination of ongoing uncertainty and stabilization in some parts of the market suggest that average rates are likely to remain low, but rates associated with riskier mortgages are unlikely to fall much." However, Whiteman says that Realtor.com predicts in a new report that rates "may slide under 3% by the end of the year." According to Whiteman, "the site's economists say homebuyers will often find getting a loan now requires a larger down payment and a higher credit score” as lenders try to shield themselves against risks from economic uncertainty.

CBC Mortgage Agency President: HUD Still Looking Down On Down Payment Assistance Programs.

Mortgage Professional America (5/18, Jarvis) reports that the chaotic landscape facing first-time homebuyers as the pandemic spreads seems to present an “odd time for the Department of Housing and Development to move forward in their efforts to shut down national down payment assistance plans,” but that is “precisely what’s happening, according to CBC Mortgage Agency president Richard Ferguson.” Calling HUD’s stance “troubling,” Ferguson said that HUD sees companies like the Chenoa Fund, CBC’s down payment assistance program, and “start to get just a little worried that national down payment assistance programs could have the same kind of affect that they had in 2008.” But according to Ferguson, “down payment assistance isn’t what it was 12 years ago.”

Remax: April Home Sales Plummeted, But Buyers Prove Resilient.

National Mortgage News (5/18) says that according to Remax, annual home sales tanked in April as the pandemic took its toll, but April was not as bad as expected. NMN reports, “Closed transactions dropped 20.2% from April 2019 and 13.7% from March 2020. Typically, there’s a substantial jump in activity in April, which continues into the summer months. Only two of the 53 metro areas surveyed saw annual sales increases: Billings, Mont., jumped 9.9% and Minneapolis rose 3.6%. Meanwhile, Detroit, Miami, New York and San Francisco all posted decreases of over 40%.” Even so, Remax CEO Adam Contos said, “April results were better than many expected, as consumers continued to buy and sell real estate in one of the most challenging months for housing in memory. This was a headwind like no other – yet we still saw activity across the country. Even in the markets that dropped 40% in sales, people wanted or needed to move, which says something about resiliency and the power of homeownership.”

Podcast: Pandemic Threatens Black Homeownership.

The latest HousingWire (5/18, 23K) Digital Download podcast examines how the pandemic is hurting black homeownership. Census Bureau data shows that the black homeownership rate in 2Q19 fell to 40.6%, the lowest level since the Bureau began collecting quarterly data in 1994. According to HousingWire, “After the 1968 Fair Housing Act banned discrimination in real estate practices, the homeownership rate for black Americans climbed steadily to a record high of 49.7% in 2004’s second quarter and stayed near that level for two years, according to Census data. The downward trajectory began in 2007 when predatory home loans started going into default, sparking a financial crisis that spread across the globe as trillions of dollars in mortgage securities lost value.” Now, the pandemic is “likely to worsen prospects for Black Americans, which will lead to a larger gap in the homeownership rate.”

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (5/19, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.709 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (5/19, White) reports, “The dollar nursed losses against major currencies on Tuesday after encouraging results from the trial of a vaccine for COVID-19 improved sentiment in a boost to riskier assets.” The euro “held onto hefty gains against...the dollar following a proposal by France and Germany for a 500 billion euro ($543 billion) recovery fund offering grants to regions hit hardest by the coronavirus crisis.” The euro “bought $1.0913 on Tuesday, having gained 0.9% against the greenback in the previous session.” The dollar “was little changed at 107.39 yen.”

Gold Trades Flat.

Reuters (UK) (5/19, Aranya) reports, “Gold gave up early gains on Tuesday to trade flat below a 7-1/2-year high hit in the last session, as risk appetite improved on promising early-stage data for a potential COVID-19 vaccine.” Spot gold “was steady at $1,731.50 per ounce by 0650 GMT,” while US gold futures “fell 0.1% to $1,733.30.”

Oil Rises.

Reuters (5/19, Obayashi) reports, “Oil prices rose for a fourth straight session on Tuesday amid signs that producers are cutting output as promised just as demand picks up, stoked by more countries easing out of curbs imposed to counter the coronavirus pandemic.” Brent crude “climbed 25 cents, or 0.7%, to $35.06 a barrel by 0629 GMT,” while West Texas Intermediate crude “was up 43 cents, or 1.4%, at $32.25 a barrel.”

Cybersecurity

iPhone Spyware Allows Police To Log Suspects’ Passcodes.

NBC News (5/18, 6.14M) reports software called Hide UI, "created by Grayshift, a company that makes iPhone-cracking devices for law enforcement, can track a suspect's passcode when it's entered into a phone," according to two people in law enforcement. The spyware has been "available for about a year but this is the first time details of its existence have been reported, in part because of the non-disclosure agreements police departments sign when they buy a device from Grayshift known as GrayKey." Those NDAs have helped "keep Hide UI a secret." Because of the "lack of public scrutiny of the feature as well as its covert behavior, defense attorneys, forensic experts and civil liberties advocates are concerned that Hide UI could be used without giving owners the due process of law, such as a warrant."

Hackers Target Europe's Supercomputers.

BBC News Online (UK) (5/18, 1.02M) reports at least a dozen supercomputers "across Europe have shut down after cyber-attacks tried to take control of them." A pan-European supercomputing group "says they seem to have tried to use the machines to mine cryptocurrency." Staff "said they were working with the National Cyber Security Centre to restore the system, which had recently installed a pandemic modeling tool." The team said, "We now believe this to be a major issue across the academic community as several computers have been compromised in the UK and elsewhere in Europe." The NCSC said, "We are aware of this incident and are providing support. The NCSC works with the academic sector to help it improve its security practices and protect its institutions from threats."

The Cyberspace Solarium Commission Makes Its Case To Congress.

Lawfare (5/18, Ford) reports that, "during a videoconference on May 13, the Cyberspace Solarium Commission made its case to Congress that the US should adopt a strategy of layered cyber deterrence, a three-pronged plan to reduce the frequency of and the damage wrought by cyberattacks targeting America." The commission's members – two senators, two representatives, four executive branch officials and six private experts – "packed the report with scores of policy recommendations, including 57 legislative proposals, which delineate exactly how to execute the novel cyber strategy." The report's recommendations "are designed to be turned into bills, ushered swiftly through Congress, and implemented." To that end, the commission "transmitted its legislative proposals directly to the relevant House and Senate committees, some of which have begun the work of incorporating the commission's ideas into legislation."

Disney's Head Of Streaming Is Appointed New TikTok CEO.

The New York Times (5/18, Barnes, Nicas, 18.61M) reports the Walt Disney Company's top streaming executive, Kevin Mayer, "resigned on Monday to become the chief executive of TikTok." Mayer will also serve "as chief operating officer of ByteDance, the Chinese conglomerate that owns TikTok." He said, "The magnitude of this opportunity was just something I couldn't pass up." He cited "gaming and music as two expansion possibilities."

Beer Review App May Be Exploited To Track Military Personnel And Secret Locations.

Forbes (5/18, Solender, 9.71M) reports a study by digital investigative outlet Bellingcat "found that data from a beer-centric social media app can be used to track US military personnel, locate secret military installations and get a glimpse of sensitive military documents." The app, Untappd, "allows users to 'discover and share your favorite beer,' by posting photos, checking in at bars, rating beers, exploring bars and breweries and unlocking badges." Bellingcat reporter Froeke Postma "said he was able to track US military and intelligence personnel and discover other sensitive information with just 'a little bit of digging in Untappd's data and cross referencing it with other social media.'"

Dark Web Scammers Exploit Covid-19 Fear And Doubt.

BBC News Online (UK) (5/19, 1.02M) reports that, "since the beginning of the global pandemic, marketplaces on the dark web have seen a rise in Covid-19 related products and services." Last month, security software firm IntSights "found blood allegedly belonging to recovered coronavirus patients was even being offered for sale." Criminals hope "a heightened sense of fear will make people rush to buy these products, and as a result these items are not cheap; an Australian Institute of Criminology report found the average fake vaccine was being sold for about $370 (£300), while one supposedly sourced from China was selling for between $10-15,000 (£8-12,000)." One of the reasons "for the rise in such sales may be because many fraudsters are having to turn from their normal methods of making money on the dark web...because these industries are currently dormant."

Officials: Israel Linked To Cyberattack On Iranian Port Facility.

The Washington Post (5/18, Warrick, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports that on May 9, "shipping traffic at Iran's bustling Shahid Rajaei port terminal came to an abrupt and inexplicable halt. Computers that regulate the flow of vessels, trucks and goods all crashed at once, creating massive backups on waterways and roads leading to the facility." Iranian officials "acknowledged that an unknown foreign hacker had briefly knocked the port's computers offline," and "now, more than a week later, a more complete explanation has come to light: The port was the victim of a substantial cyberattack that U.S. and foreign government officials say appears to have originated with Iran's archenemy, Israel."

TFI/Sanctions

Huawei Chairman: US Sanctions Will Hurt Business.

The AP (5/18, Soo, McDonald) reports that the latest US sanctions on Huawei "threaten to devastate the company and escalate a feud with China that could disrupt technology industries worldwide." Huawei Technologies Ltd. is "one of the biggest makers of smartphones and network equipment, but that $123 billion-a-year business is in jeopardy after Washington announced further restrictions on use of American technology by foreign companies that make its processor chips." Huawei Chairman Guo Ping said at a conference Monday, "Our business will inevitably be impacted."

Reuters (5/18, Kirton) reports the chairman "said that Huawei spent $18.7 billion buying from U.S. suppliers last year and would continue to buy from them if the U.S. government would allow it. He said customers have stood by the company, but acknowledged it had become harder to win contracts since the company was added to the entity list." Guo stated, "We will try all we can to seek a solution. ... Survival is the key word for us at present."

Nikkei Asian Review \(JPN\) (5/18, Li; Ting-Fang) reports, "Huawei said Washington's move will affect not only Huawei but also a large number of global industries." The company said in a statement, "In the long run, this will damage the trust and collaboration within the global semiconductor industry, which many industries depend on, increasing conflict and loss within these industries." CNET News (5/18, Dayaram, 1.99M) reports Huawei added, "The U.S. is leveraging its own technological strengths to crush companies outside its own borders. This will only serve to undermine the trust international companies place in U.S. technology and supply chains. Ultimately, this will harm US interests."

Fox News (5/18, Blitzer, 27.59M), The Dallas \(TX\) Morning News (5/18, Cobler, 946K), and ZDNet (5/18, Yu, 299K) also report.

Federal Reserve

Powell: CARES Act "Critical" To Fed's Efforts To Support Economy During Pandemic.

Reuters (5/18, Schneider) reports that in prepared remarks to be delivered at a Senate Banking Committee hearing Tuesday, Federal Reserve Chairman Powell says that passage of the CARES Act was "'critical' to the Federal Reserve's ability to expand credit throughout the economy to help offset the economic blow from the coronavirus pandemic." In the remarks, Powell also "repeats his pledge to keep interest rates near zero until the economy has weathered the crisis, and reviews Fed actions to date that he says have helped keep financial markets functioning smoothly."

Bloomberg (5/18, Torres, 4.73M), The Washington \(DC\) Post (5/18, Newmyer, 14.2M), NPR (5/18, Horsley, 3.12M), The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), CNBC (5/18, Cox, 3.62M), and The Atlantic (5/18, Thompson, 3.47M) also report.

Powell Vows To Disclose Details About Entities Tapping Fed's Emergency Lending Programs.

The AP (5/18, Rugaber, Crutsinger) reports Fed Chair Jerome Powell pledged "to reveal the names and other details of the entities that borrow from the emergency programs the central bank has set up to offset the economic hit from the viral outbreak." In prepared testimony set to be given Tuesday at a congressional hearing, "Powell says the central bank will disclose the amounts borrowed and the interest rates it levies under its programs to provide credit for large corporations, state and local governments, and medium-sized businesses."

Fed's Muni Note Program "Open Today" As Fed Releases Application Materials.

American Banker (5/18, Wynn, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Fed's "short-term municipal note program is 'open today' to states and local governments struggling with financial woes during the pandemic, though it was reiterated that the program is a last resort." The NY Fed on Monday "released application materials for issuers interested in the program. Last week, the Fed announced it was accepting notices of interest – a form issuers must fill out to express interest in selling notes under the MLF. The Fed also released legal documents on Monday."

Bostic Not Inclined To Second-Guess Banks' Lending Choices During COVID-19 Crisis.

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Atlanta Fed President Raphael Bostic said Monday he doesn't intend to strongly second-guess banks' decisions on lending made during the coronavirus crisis.

Financial Regulatory Agencies

List: Five Ways CFPB Is Helping Industry Combat Virus' Effects.

American Banker (5/19, Subscription Publication, 31K) lists five ways the CFPB "is attempting to help institutions deal with the [coronavirus] crisis by relaxing regulatory expectations." One of the bureau's first actions during the crisis "was to postpone quarterly HMDA reporting indefinitely." The bureau has also given financial institutions flexibility on exams and enforcement; given credit card issuers a break on resolving billing disputes; issued relief from remittance disclosures; and issued a waiver from TRID waiting periods.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Otting Discusses OCC's Efforts During Coronavirus Crisis.

The Money Laundering (5/18) reports behind a paywall on Comptroller Otting's recent testimony before the Senate Banking Committee about the OCC's activities during the COVID-19 crisis. Otting "highlighted that the OCC published more than 25 bulletins, statements, press releases, and interim final rules to provide information aimed at clarifying institutions reducing risk to both consumers and the economy." He also noted the agency's efforts to streamline Bank Secrecy Act and anti-money laundering protections, saying that the coronavirus reinforced this priority because it underscored the need for better use of modern technology.

Operation HOPE CEO: CRA Reform Is “Next Software Upgrade” For Banking Regulation.

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (5/18, Subscription Publication, 31K), John Hope Bryant, founder, Chairman, and CEO of Operation HOPE, writes that Comptroller of the Currency Joseph Otting has described his agency's Community Reinvestment Act proposal “as reforming and modernizing the CRA – a vision that I support.” Bryant continues, “The CRA modernization has fueled much criticism and calls to delay the rulemaking process. However, it should be seen as simply the next software upgrade for where banking regulation and public policy need to go next.” The reform effort is “about data and measurement, impact and outcomes, real lending and real investments at scale, sustainability, and finally, appreciating the business case for underserved America. It's about giving banks the tools – and holding them accountable and responsible – to view the communities that I love as legitimate places for their business development and customer growth.”

Bankers Expect Recession To Last Into 2021.

American Banker (5/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports a recent survey has found that many banking executives “are bracing for a prolonged slowdown that could last at least into the first quarter of next year” even as states begin lifting their stay-at-home orders in hopes of jumpstarting their economies. The survey, conducted by Promontory Interfinancial Network, found that most banking leaders hold a bleak outlook for the year ahead, as “three in four executives surveyed expect the economy to sour further, with barely one in 10 expecting the economy to improve by the end of next year's first quarter.” Deposit growth has been a lone bright spot for the sector, as executives “report that the race for deposits has cooled off as workers fearing their job security are socking away more savings and businesses that have drawn down their lines of credit are holding that money in their accounts.”

Banks To Face Margin Pressure This Year And Next.

American Banker (5/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that with near-zero interest rates, “banks will struggle to generate bread-and-butter interest income and asset-sensitive lenders will face substantial net interest margin contraction this year and next, analysts say.” Piper Sandler analysts “estimated that, across their coverage universe of 200 banks, the median NIM will shrink 18 basis points in 2020, falling below the century's 2009 trough reached in the wake of the financial crisis, and then shrink another 11 basis points next year to 3.30%.”

Wells Fargo's Tech Chief Talks About Managing Virus Response, Tech Fixes Sought By Regulators.

American Banker (5/18, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports on its interview with Saul Van Beurden, head of technology at Wells Fargo, about how he is helping the bank run smoothly while nearly all of its employees work from home. Asked about tech fixes demanded by regulators, Van Beurden said, “[W]e apply new technologies like artificial intelligence, robotic process automation and optical character recognition where possible to remediate faster in a more sustainable way. Because if everything becomes manual, it could break again.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Social Distancing, Without The Police.” The New York Times (5/18, 18.61M) editorializes that New York should consider methods other than the police intervention to enforce social distancing during the coronavirus pandemic. Of the 125 people arrested “over offenses that law enforcement officials described as related to the coronavirus pandemic, 113 were black or Hispanic.” Meanwhile, photographs across social media show “crowds of sun-seekers packed into parks in wealthy, whiter areas of the city, lounging undisturbed as police officers hand out masks.” The city “needs a different approach to enforcing public health measures during the pandemic.” Mayor Bill de Blasio “seems to understand this, and he has promised to hire 2,300 people to serve as social distancing ‘ambassadors.’” Another method to help social-distancing efforts “may be the community-based groups that have been effective in reducing gun violence in some of the city's toughest neighborhoods.”

Washington Post.

“China Agreed To A Global WHO Review. Where Was Trump?” The Washington Post (5/18, 14.2M) editorializes that under pressure, Xi “agreed to a more global review led by the WHO, one that is less likely to cast blame on China alone.” The Post asks, “Where was President Trump? He and his administration were still debating whether to ax some or all of the U.S. contribution to the WHO.” Secretary Azar “parroted Mr. Trump, blaming China and the WHO for the crisis, a crude scapegoating intended to divert attention from Washington's own failures. Hasn't it occurred to Mr. Trump and his advisers that, if they really want to learn how the pandemic began, it would be far better to show up for the investigation than to walk away? Mr. Xi is opening his checkbook, just as Mr. Trump is gathering up his marbles to go home.”

“Trump's Latest Firing Is A Blatant Attempt To Shield Pompeo From Accountability.” The Washington Post (5/18, 14.2M) editorializes that the “blunt dismissal of a nonpartisan official whose job it is to provide an independent evaluation of just the sort of allegations Mr. Pompeo was facing would be shocking – if it were not just the latest step in a campaign by Mr. Trump to eliminate accountability across the federal government." The Post adds that "Congressional Democrats have promised an investigation of Mr. Linick's firing," but "the question, as always, for...Republicans is whether they will insist that Mr. Trump observe the rule of law – or simply roll over once again."

"Did Sweden Make The Right Call On Limiting Its Lockdown?" The Washington Post (5/18, 14.2M) editorializes that "in terms of illness and death, it appears Sweden has paid a higher price for its approach. As of Monday, it had suffered 3,698 deaths in a country of 10 million. By contrast, Denmark, Norway and Finland, with a combined population more than 16.5 million, which all imposed tighter restrictions, have seen only 1,081 deaths."

Wall Street Journal.

"Moderna's Vaccine Hope." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) hails Moderna's steps toward developing a vaccine – even as it cautions against declaring victory before all the needed testing has been completed.

"Chinese Lockdown Redux." The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that even the draconian lockdowns imposed in China were not totally effective as parts of the country are seeing a second wave.

"The Mueller-Rosenstein Logan Act." A Wall Street Journal (5/18, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes Justice officials' use of the Logan Act, which prohibits private citizens from negotiating with foreign governments involved in disputes with the US, as a reason to investigate Flynn. The Journal argues that as President Trump's choice for national security adviser in late 2016 and early 2017, Flynn had reason to talk with foreign officials.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "While most people are waiting for a vaccine, there are some people who think we may not even need one. People like Eric Trump, fetus in its 100th trimester and the President's fourth-favorite son. You see, according to baby Voldemort, coronavirus is actually a hoax that'll go away on its own. And the only reason the media is talking about it is to steal the White House from his dad."

Trevor Noah: "Now according to Eric, this whole coronavirus thing is a conspiracy to prevent his dad from doing big campaign rallies. I'm sorry, man, this makes no sense. Donald Trump is the President. So if he thinks coronavirus is all just a bunch of hype and he should be able to do a rally, then my man, go and do a rally. I swear, Trump is the most-powerful, least-powerful man in the world. (As Trump) 'I wanna do a rally, but I can't, 'cause the doctors will get mad at me!'"

Trevor Noah: "And by the way, we all know coronavirus is not a Democratic plot. Because if corona was a Democrat, we would've found a way to lose weeks ago."

Stephen Colbert: "Today, the President held a White House meeting with leaders in the restaurant industry. (As Trump) 'Before we begin, how about apps for the whole table? Jalapeno poppers, nachos, clam strips, and calamari, thanks. Oooh, garlic knots.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On President Trump saying that he is taking hydroxychloroquine because he's 'heard a lot of good stories' about it] "Of course, that's why anyone takes an experimental drug treatment. We've all seen the pharmaceutical ads: 'If you think hydroxychloroquine might be right for you, don't ask your doctor. Just ask around, and if you hear some good stories, eat it. Eat it, you coward.'"

Stephen Colbert: "On Friday, Trump removed the inspector general for the State Department. It's the third time in six weeks that such a move has been announced on a Friday night. 'Cause at the White House, 'TGIF' stands for 'Trump Got the Inspector Fired.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Yesterday, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo got a coronavirus test live on TV to show it's no big deal. They did the nasal swab, and he said it was fine, although for the rest of the briefing, he did speak with a British accent."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump claimed on Friday that the Defense Department had developed a, quote, 'super duper missile' that is 17 times faster than other missiles, which is great news unless our enemies develop a 'super duper infinity no-take-backs missile.'"

Seth Meyers: "New York Mayor Bill de Blasio said yesterday that he has ordered the police to stop people from partying outside bars amid the coronavirus pandemic. Though if de Blasio really wants people to stop partying, he should just show up."

Seth Meyers: "After former President Obama criticized the US response to the coronavirus pandemic in a virtual commencement address to college graduates this weekend, White House adviser Peter Navarro called the Obama Administration a, quote, 'kumbaya of incompetence.' Incidentally, 'kumbaya' is where Trump thinks Obama was born."

Companies Rush To Return PPP Loans Before Deadline As Officials Plan Overhaul.

Politico (5/17, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports that in the wake of "public outrage and Trump administration pressure," companies "are scrambling to give back the Paycheck Protection Program loans" before a Monday deadline, after which they could face audits over whether they need the money. However, the decision on keeping the money has been "wrenching," leaving them choosing between retaining employees or avoiding "questions from the public and government audits." Politico says the issue "illustrates the extraordinary confusion surrounding the" PPP.

Bloomberg (5/15, Niquette, 4.73M) reported businesses concerned about the repayment requirements "finally got more guidance from the Trump administration – but they didn't get the changes that many wanted." The Treasury Department and the SBA on Friday "released a new application and step-by-step instructions for how to calculate the portion of Paycheck Protection Program loans that can be forgiven." However, the instructions "don't change the requirement that at least 75% of proceeds must be spent on payroll within the eight weeks after the loan is received, even after small business groups lobbied to open up those restrictions." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has said the rule reflects the intent of Congress to keep workers on payrolls. But he indicated on Monday he'd be open to 'technical' revisions if both parties in Congress agree, especially for restaurants that are only now reopening."

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Hayashi, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that amid cooling demand and complaints by small businesses that they can't use the money, lawmakers and government officials plan significant changes to the Paycheck Protection Program. Expected alternations includes giving more flexibility on how the money is spent and increasing the time available to spend it, shifting the program's focus from keeping people employed to saving businesses.

Reuters (5/17, Cornwell, Singh) reports that changes "are expected to include more flexibility to spend funds and more time to spend loans beyond the two months originally set." Revisions to the program "are expected to be implemented in two phases." Reuters says "technical fixes in a new guideline on loan forgiveness from the Department of the Treasury and the Small Business Administration will be unveiled in the coming days."

Most Companies Taking Advantage Of PPP Loans Face Low Risk Of Punishment, Legal Experts Say. CNBC (5/17, Son, Franck, 3.62M) reports that public companies that "took advantage of the government's small business loan program are likely to avoid repercussions from the agencies running the effort, according to legal experts." While businesses have until May 18 to return funds from the Paycheck Protection Program with amnesty, "most of the public companies that got PPP loans are keeping them, including ones with access to other forms of fundraising like stock sales or bank credit lines, according to a CNBC analysis of regulatory filings." Lawyers "said that the certification required is so vague and open-ended that most companies qualify for the program."

Commentary: PPP Should Include More Small Businesses. Mario H. Lopez, President of the Hispanic Leadership Fund, wrote in The Hill (5/16, 2.98M) that "unclear rules and risk of government audits may keep qualifying businesses from applying for needed financial assistance" under PPP "and have a detrimental effect on state and local economies." Furthermore, "the potential for bad publicity is enough to make some businesses weigh the long-term ramifications of accepting federal funds – even if it means risking closure or letting go of employees." Lopez said that "to ensure the goal of full recovery, the benefits of small business funding should be distributed without discrimination and allocated with clear guidelines that keep the focus on intended recipients without picking market winners and losers."

Hubbard, Scott Call On Senate To Press Mnuchin, Powell On Lack Of Aid To Main Street.

Former Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers Glenn Hubbard and Committee on Capital Markets Regulation Director Hal Scott, in an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), call for the Senate Banking Committee, during its first quarterly hearing on the Cares Act, to press Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Fed Chair Jerome Powell on why small and midsize businesses aren't getting the help they need amid the pandemic. In particular, Hubbard and Scott argue the two should be asked who is responsible for designing small and midsize business relief programs, why so little money is being risked to help Main Street, and why Treasury is prioritizing not losing money.

WPost Analysis: Trump Leaving Leadership To Others In Next Phase Of Pandemic.

The Washington Post (5/17, Parker, Rucker, 14.2M) reports that while President Trump has called "the latest phase of pandemic response the 'transition to greatness,'" he "appears poised to preside over the eventual transition more as a salesman and marketer than a decider." To the Post, Trump "has inserted his ego squarely into the U.S. response while simultaneously minimizing his own role – deferring critical decisions to others, undermining his credibility with confusion and misinformation, and shirking responsibility in what some see as a shrinking of the American presidency." Trump has also "played a supporting role, at best, in negotiations to produce the four bipartisan bills enacted so far to address the pandemic." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "was a constant presence on Capitol Hill, running point for the administration on relief measures, while the president's suggestions – such as a payroll tax cut – were shrugged off and gained little traction, even among Republican allies."

CNN: Mnuchin Among Administration Officials Wearing Masks In West Wing.

CNN (5/16, Liptak, Collins, 83.16M) reported the White House last week "was a workplace transformed. Staffers now must wear masks inside the West Wing unless seated at their desks and appropriately distanced from their colleagues – a mandate Trump says he made himself." In the West Wing, unease over safety "persists, even as large blue signs appeared at entrances this week encouraging social distancing and nearly everyone started wearing a mask." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin was among the officials "spotted this week with their noses and mouths covered" – Mnuchin "wore a black cloth mask." However, "Trump himself remains to be seen in public wearing a mask, a step he's said privately might undermine confidence the nation is ready to emerge from the crisis."

Senate Democrats Propose Grant Program For Nonprofit Hiring.

Law360 (5/15, van den Berg, Subscription Publication, 8K) reported Senate Democrats "introduced legislation Friday that would create a U.S. Treasury Department-run $50 billion jobs grant program for charitable nonprofits to help them retain workers and provide jobs to the unemployed during the novel coronavirus pandemic." Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) is sponsoring the Work Opportunities and Resources to Keep Nonprofit Organizations Well Act, under which "nonprofit organizations could get millions of dollars in grants and would have to use much of the money for employee compensation costs." Klobuchar said, "We need to help charitable nonprofits keep their doors open, scale their invaluable services and provide opportunities for unemployed Americans to return to work serving their communities." According to Alexander Reid of Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, "the measure is a thoughtful attempt to support charities assisting the most vulnerable and avoids many of the pitfalls and legal challenges nonprofits have faced securing funds under the Small Business Administration's Paycheck Protection Program."

Leading National News

Trump Slams "Corrupt" And "Grossly Incompetent" Obama.

A day after former President Obama said "leaders" weren't "even pretending to be in charge" of handling the coronavirus pandemic, President Trump took to Twitter to write, "The Obama Administration is turning out to be one of the most corrupt and incompetent in US history. Remember, he and Sleepy Joe are the reasons I am in the White House!!!" The Harrisburg (PA) Patriot-News (5/17, Linder, 427K) indicates that "asked about Obama's comments Sunday, Trump first said that administration officials 'had a great weekend,'" but "when reporters followed up, Trump pulled no punches." ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 3, 1:55, Llamas, 5.48M) showed Trump telling reporters upon his return to the White House from Camp David, "He was an incompetent President, that's all I can say. Grossly incompetent. Thank you." ABC (Scott) referred to Trump "firing up his base, accusing Obama of committing unspecified crimes in an effort to undermine the 2016 election and his presidency."

The CBS Weekend News (5/17, lead story, 1:25, Killion, 2.93M) also reported that "Trump lashed out at his predecessor over US leadership in the pandemic fight. So far, 36 million Americans have filed for unemployment in the last two months. The virus has now claimed the lives of nearly 90,000 Americans – by far the world's highest death toll." CBS (Killion) added "both leaders have recently stepped up their attacks. In a call last week with former staffers, Mr. Obama called the Administration's COVID response 'anemic' and 'spotty,' while Mr. Trump blamed the Obama Administration for leaving an insufficient playbook, depleting federal stock piles, and even going so far as to accuse his predecessor of undefined and unspecified crimes." Trump was shown saying, "Obamagate. It's been going on for a long time."

NBC Nightly News (5/17, story 3, 1:20, Snow, 259K) said Trump was "responding to comments from former...Obama in a virtual graduation ceremony, where he accused the government of a real world failing on coronavirus." The Guardian \(UK\) (5/17, Lutz, Glenza, 4.19M) reports "it is rare for a former president to rebuke a successor, but Obama did so during an online speech to graduating university and high school students yesterday, although he did not name Trump in his comments." In "an online commencement address to graduates of historically black colleges and universities (HBCUs)," Obama said, "More than anything, this pandemic has fully, finally torn back the curtain that so many of the folks in charge know what they're doing. A lot of them aren't even pretending to be in charge." The HuffPost (5/17, Miller,

1.67M) says Obama also “took aim at ‘so-called grown-ups’ with ‘fancy titles’ who have ‘screwed up’ the country by acting irresponsibly.” Politico (5/17, Dugyala, 4.29M) indicates, meanwhile that “Trump calling his predecessor incompetent is not new,” but his comments yesterday “come as he pushes the unfounded ‘Obamagate’ conspiracy theory, alleging that officials in the previous administration sought to undermine Trump and target his top associates – like former national security adviser Michael Flynn – with the Russia investigation.”

The Hill (5/17, Klar, 2.98M) reports Trump “said he had not seen Obama’s remarks. He also did not expand on his comments about the former president.” The New York Daily News (5/17, Goldiner, 2.52M) says, meanwhile, that “Trump still hasn’t articulated what crime he believes Obama committed,” though “along with the Flynn debacle, Trump has stepped up efforts to point fingers at Obama as somehow being to blame for the coronavirus crisis.” For example, the President “has derided the previous administration’s pandemic playbook as inadequate and repeatedly claims Obama left the cupboards bare when it comes to medical equipment stockpiles.”

To CNN (5/17, Reston, 83.16M), “Obama’s harsh criticism of the Trump administration’s handling of the coronavirus pandemic this weekend brought renewed scrutiny of...Trump’s leadership, but administration officials defended the response as ‘historic’ Sunday as deaths neared 90,000.” Obama “offered a very different take on Saturday when he broke with the longstanding tradition that former presidents should avoid criticizing the current occupant of the office.”

Navarro Calls Obama “Biden’s Press Secretary,” Blasts “Kumbaya Of Incompetence” Speech. The Washington Times (5/17, Muñoz, 492K) reports “White House trade adviser Peter Navarro hit back at...Obama Sunday, after the former leader criticized the Trump administration’s handling of the coronavirus.” Navarro said on ABC News’ “This Week,” “I’m glad Mr. Obama has a new job as Joe Biden’s press secretary.” Navarro also “said he didn’t see any mention of China or manufacturing in Mr. Obama’s ‘kumbaya of incompetence’ speech Saturday, arguing that’s what the American public is concerned with.” The New York Post (5/17, Moore, 4.57M) points out Navarro also “said Americans will decide who’s stronger on the economy when they decide who they want in the White House this November.” Said Navarro, “So we’ll have Joe Biden, long friend of China, President Donald J. Trump, the only president in modern history to stand up to China going into November. And what this is going to be about, it’s not going to be about the pandemic, it’s going to be about jobs.”

Under the headline “Navarro Ties Obama, Biden And China Together In Coronavirus Attack,” Politico (5/17, Dugyala, 4.29M) also reports “Navarro came out swinging against former...Obama,” Biden “and China in a vigorous defense of the Trump administration’s handling of the coronavirus crisis.”

Navarro: Pelosi Bill “Has $1,200 Checks For Illegal Immigrants,” “Goes Downhill From There.”

Discussing the House coronavirus aid bill on ABC’s This Week (5/17, 2.81M), White House trade adviser Peter Navarro said, “Nancy Pelosi basically lost me with that package when she has $1,200 checks for illegal immigrants,” and “it goes downhill from there. What we have to do, is basically go with the fiscal and monetary stimulus that we have been going through. We have a lot coursing through the system now. We may need more. I’ll let others negotiate that. What I’m focused on, and this is the real key to success, is going to be the structural adjustments we have to make.” Added Navarro, “Basically this President going back to him as a candidate promised to bring our jobs home, that’s going to be key to the future within innovation.” The GM “plant for ventilators went up in 17 days in Kokomo, Indiana, through innovation. ... That was a miracle. We can replicate that throughout this economy.”

Forbes (5/17, Brewster, 9.71M) reports “many Republican lawmakers have echoed Navarro’s sentiment in recent weeks, preferring a wait-and-see approach for a next round of stimulus legislation, even as 36 million Americans have joined the unemployment rolls in the last two months and Fed chair Jerome Powell said more stimulus ‘could be costly’ but is ‘worth it if it helps avoid long-term economic damage.’” Along those lines, The Hill (5/17, Klar, 2.98M) points out “Senate Republicans have called the package ‘dead on arrival’ and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and others have called for a ‘pause’ in passing coronavirus relief bills.” The Washington Examiner (5/17, Yilek, 448K) recalls that “the House, which has a Democratic majority, passed the bill Friday, but the Senate has no immediate plans to take it up.”

Kennedy: Pelosi Measure A Liberal Wish List, Not A Coronavirus Bill. The Washington Examiner (5/17, Yilek, 448K) reports “Sen. John Kennedy [LA] suggested that Democrats are divorced from reality in wanting to pass a $3 trillion stimulus bill in response to the economic fallout of the coronavirus pandemic.” Kennedy “has described the package as ‘dead as fried chicken’ in the Republican-controlled Senate.” Kennedy, on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (5/17, 1.77M), outlined his position on the House’s bill, saying, “It’s $3 trillion, for one thing, every penny of which we would have to borrow. That’s $30 trillion. It’s not going to pass the Senate nor should it. My fellow Republicans in the Senate have tried to see things from the speaker’s point of view, but we can’t get our heads that far up our rear ends, and I think any fair-minded American would agree, once they read the bill. ... It’s not a coronavirus bill as much as it is an effort by the Speaker and her colleagues to rewrite the rules for American society. This bill, her bill would rewrite our immigration laws, her bill would federalize elections, our elections have always been run by states and local governments. Her bill would begin the process of federalizing the elections. It would allow federal prisoners to go free. It mentions dope more than it talks about jobs. I think it references cannabis like 68 times. It would expand Obamacare and let me end as I began. It would cost $3 trillion. That’s 3,000 billion. We just spent three trillion, we need to see how that works first.”

Pelosi Calls For Swift Passage Of Her Bill: “People Are Hungry Across America.” Speaker Pelosi, on CBS’ Face The Nation (5/17, 3.3M), discussed the bill recently passed by the House to address the economic fallout of the coronavirus. Pelosi said, “Time is of the essence. In the past bills, they put forth their proposal, and then we worked in a bipartisan way that we anticipate. Now, across the country, Republican and Democratic mayors and governors and the rest, all want this bill to happen in terms of the investments in state and local and tribal and territorial governments, and also in terms of the testing to be done across the country largely at this state level. Time is very important. We have lost time. Again, setting aside how we got here, we cannot take a pause. They may think it is okay to take a pause, but people are hungry across America. Hunger doesn't take a pause. People don't know how they're going to pay their rent across the country. We have to address this with humanity." Reuters (5/17, Chiacu) reports that "asked if there has been a Republican response or counteroffer to begin negotiations on the bill," Pelosi said, "No bill that is proffered will become law without negotiations, so, yeah."

The Washington Times (5/17, Muñoz, 492K) also reports "Pelosi said Sunday that she's ready to negotiate with Republicans on the next coronavirus bill." Pelosi "has pushed back against the partisan label on her Democrat-led bill, arguing its no different than the proposals put forth by the GOP on previous packages."

Discussing the virus on CBS' Face The Nation (5/17, 3.3M), Pelosi said, "The CDC was grossly cut in the President's budget. But setting aside how we got here, let's talk about how we go forward. It is important for us, the American people want the economy to open up. We all do. We want our society to open up. We all do. In order to do that, we have testing, tracing, treatment, and isolation. And that is the path. That's what the scientists advise. That is what we do in the Hero's Act."

Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT), on ABC's This Week (5/17, 2.81M), discussed his potential vote for the economic stimulus the House recently passed. Sanders said, "I would vote for it – very substantive piece of legislation. ... Now I think what Pelosi did in the House is significant. It's important. I have some disagreements with it. I want to see the Senate improve upon it. Among other things I happen to believe that we should go in the direction of paycheck security process, similar to what has been done in Europe, which says to every worker in America you'll continue to receive your paycheck and the other benefits which you had when you were on the job."

Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) said on MSNBC AM Joy (5/16, 1.35M), "The bill that we have focuses on those small businesses that have been elbowed out of a lot of the programs that we've already had. there is a bipartisan demand to get these community centers, these neighborhood pillar businesses that often are three employees, ten employees back up and running and what I simply want is there to be clear standards for what we should be doing to protect workers. ... This is not about giving corporations a pass for gross negligence. ... And so I'm a little frustrated because there is a bipartisan desire – you have all 50 governors joining together and saying we need help. ... So don't call this a partisan thing. Call this a Trump/McConnell thing. ... They're much more interested in bailing out corporations and keeping big business intact than bailing out the people who are putting their lives on the line every single day in our country. It's outrageous and unacceptable."

Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) was asked on MSNBC's Politics Nation (5/16, 848K) about her call to freeze rent, mortgage, and student loan payments during the pandemic. Omar said, "We're seeing nearly 30 million Americans who are currently unemployed because of this pandemic." Omar added that "so many people here in Minnesota weren't able to pay their rent on April 1, they weren't able to pay their rent on May 1 and now, as we are looking at June 1, so many more people are not going to be able to cover their rent payments. That is going to cause a huge displacement. We are going to see so many people as bills come due unable to pay them, and the kind of economic devastation that we are looking at is only going increase if we don't do real implementation of policy that is going to alleviate the kind of hurt people are feeling in our communities."

WSJournal: New York Has Been Mismanaged, Shouldn't Get Federal Aid. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes that the federal government should not offer coronavirus aid to states and localities. Citing some statistics about New York and Florida, the Journal argues that the former is in financial difficulty due to mismanagement and union power, that other states are doing well due to good management, and that federal aid would be unfairly forcing the latter to support the former.

Reopening Auto Industry Expected To Be Slow, Difficult.

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Foldy, Colias, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports auto industry executives and consultants say restarting the industry will be slow and difficult. Suppliers are facing financial difficulties and don't have enough business to recall most of their staff. Additionally, health fears and lack of child care may cause many workers to remain absent even if called back to work.

Oil Prices Rise Modestly.

The New York Times (5/17, Krauss, 18.61M) reports that increased demand and falling production "helped push up oil prices modestly in recent weeks." On Friday, oil futures rose "to nearly $30 a barrel, which is just enough for some of the best oil wells in the United States to break even." However, oil prices may fall again should there be a surge in coronavirus cases or when "tankers filled with more than 50 million barrels of crude oil from Saudi Arabia reach the United States in the next two months."

Restaurants Seeking To Adapt To Reopening Amid Pandemic.

Morgan Chesky reported on NBC Nightly News (5/17, story 8, 2:20, Snow, 259K) on how the pandemic is "rewriting the rules for all restaurants." Restaurants are creating extra space between tables and staff wearing masks and gloves. However, Cornell University Professor of Food & Beverage Management Alex Susskind warned, "Eight million people lost their jobs in the restaurant business, and a lot of operators are saying that they're not even going to be able to hire a lot of those people back."

The Washington Times (5/17, Varney, 492K) reports restaurants "took massive blows" during stay-at-home orders. In New Orleans, "restaurants are coping with the occupancy limits in different ways," including removing seating, strict reservation policies, and time limits on dining.

Pandemic Heightening Food Insecurity.

CEO of Feeding America Claire Babineaux-Fontenot, on CBS' Face The Nation (5/17, 2.64M), discussed the impact of the coronavirus on food supplies. Babineaux-Fontenot said, "We're seeing a marked increase in demand to the tune of 60 percent more people showing up in need of our services" even as donations and volunteers decrease. She added, "We're definitely seeing different people showing up." However, she added, "One of the things I think the American public simply wasn't aware of, was that even before this pandemic, there were nearly 40 million people who were food insecure, and over 11 million of them were children. This pandemic has just heightened that challenge."

Pandemic May Shift Tech Companies Further Toward Remote Work.

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, A1, Bindley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that as a result of the coronavirus pandemic, some tech companies say that being forced to work remotely will change the industry to be more permissive of the practice. Some executives see advantages in remote work, allowing work forces outside the high property prices and cost-of-living around Seattle and the San Francisco Bay Area and making it easier to recruit talent.

Klobuchar Blasts Possible Uber-Grubhub Merger.

Reuters (5/17, McWilliams) reports Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) "blasted merger talks between" Uber Technologies Inc and Grubhub Inc, which would give Uber Eats "a leg up on market leader DoorDash." Klobuchar tweeted such a move "it isn't good for competition and it isn't good for you," as "when big companies corner the market it usually means more for them and less for you, especially in a pandemic." She called for action by antitrust watchdogs.

Securities Industry Group CEO: SEC Database Plan Unneeded, Risky.

American Securities Association CEO Christopher A. Iacovella writes in an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that his group is suing the Securities and Exchange Commission, arguing its move to collect and store every US retail investor's personal information is unnecessary and risks identity theft.

House: Stakes High For US, Saudis In Oil Production Dispute.

Former publisher of The Wall Street Journal and author Karen Elliott House writes in the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that the stakes are high for the both the US and Saudi Arabia in their dispute over oil production levels as the industry has been hit hard by the coronavirus pandemic. House urges the two leaders to work together.

WPost: Facebook Oversight Board Must Be More Than Company's "Fig Leaf."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/17, 14.2M) writes that there are concerns that Facebook's oversight board may just be "a fig leaf of legitimacy that lets it avoid responsibility for controversial calls without actually changing much." In particular, the board currently doesn't deal with content that is not removed despite calls to do so. The Post calls for holding Facebook to expanding removing this limit and calls for the board to bring transparency to "determinations about who can say what" on Facebook, ensuring "those determinations are based on principle rather than profit," and that it applies to "all sorts of speech on Facebook, not just the kind the company chooses."

Trump Touts "Tremendous Progress" In "Working Weekend" At Camp David.

The New York Post (5/17, Moore, 4.57M) recounts President Trump "left the White House for Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Maryland mountains, on Friday," and "was accompanied by White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows and a number of Republican members of Congress." The Post adds that "asked what they discussed after arriving back in DC, "Trump said, "So I think we had a great weekend. We did a lot of terrific meetings. Tremendous progress is being made on many fronts, including coming up with a cure for this horrible plague that has beset our country. ... It was a working weekend, it was a good weekend. A lot of very good things have happened."

Trump also tweeted yesterday, "Doing REALLY well, medically, on solving the CoronaVirus situation (Plague!). It will happen! ... The number of Coronavirus cases is strongly trending downward throughout the United States, with few exceptions. Very good news, indeed!"

Zeldin On Weekend With Trump: He "Never Slows Down Or Sleeps. It's Incredible." Rep. Lee Zeldin (R-NJ) took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Returning now from a very productive weekend at Camp David with @realDonaldTrump and a few of my @HouseGOP colleagues. The man never slows down or sleeps. It's incredible. A lot of work on coronavirus response and other important topics to make our great nation even stronger."

Trump To Visit Ford Plant Making PPE On Thursday.

The Detroit Free Press (5/17, Howard, 1.52M) reports, "Ford Motor Company announced late Sunday that President Donald Trump will visit the automaker's Rawsonville Components Plant in Ypsilanti on Thursday," as "part of a national tour meant to highlight the importance of companies producing personal protection equipment (PPE) and other medical equipment during the pandemic." The Free Press adds "the Rawsonville plant, which currently produces ventilators, is working around the clock with hundreds of UAW members who are paid volunteers." The Detroit News (5/17, Mauger, Grzelewski, 825K) recounts "Trump last visited the state, which he won in 2016 by just 10,704 votes, on Jan. 30 when he spoke at a Dana Inc. plant in Warren." At Thursday's event, the President "is expected to discuss the collaboration between Ford and General Electric during the COVID-19 pandemic."

USA Today (5/17, Collins, 10.31M) reports "the trip to Michigan comes as Trump is urging states to reopen and has staged a number of events at the White House and elsewhere to project the image that life is returning to normal." USA Today adds that "last Thursday, Trump toured an Owens and Minor medical equipment factory in Allentown, Penn., that makes masks, gloves, and surgical gowns," and "used the event to highlight federal efforts to replenish the Strategic National Stockpile of critical supplies needed to combat the spread of the coronavirus."

Trump Blasts "60 Minutes" After Bright Interview.

President Trump lashed out at CBS' "60 Minutes" in a tweet Sunday after the show aired an interview with Dr. Rick Bright. Trump wrote, "@60Minutes & third place anchor, @NorahODonnell, are doing everything in their power to demean our Country, much to the benefit of the Radical Left Democrats. Tonight they put on yet another Fake "Whistleblower", a disgruntled employee who supports Dems, fabricates stories, &.....spews lies. @60Minutes report was incorrect, which they couldn't care less about. Fake News! I don't know this guy, never met him, but don't like what I see. How can a creep like this show up to work tomorrow & report to @SecAzar, his boss, after trashing him on T.V.?This whole Whistleblower racket needs to be looked at very closely, it is causing great injustice & harm. I hope you are listening @SenSusanCollins I also hope that Shari Redstone will take a look at her poorly performing gang. She knows how to make things right!"

Bright: Administration Focused On Containing Coronavirus Instead Of Preparedness. Norah O'Donnell reported on CBS' 60 Minutes (5/17, 8.24M), "Dr. Rick Bright is the highest-ranking government scientist to charge the federal government's response to the coronavirus pandemic has been slow and chaotic. He says it has prioritized politics over science, and has cost people their lives. It has cost Dr. Bright his job." Bright: "I have been trained my entire life to recognize these outbreaks and recognize viruses. I have a Ph.D. in virology. I knew that all of the signs for a pandemic were present. A novel virus, infecting people, causing significant mortality and spreading. ... I believe my concerns were shared by other scientists in the government. ... What struck me, though, was my sense of urgency didn't seem to prevail across all of HHS." O'Donnell added, "Bright says that lack of urgency started with the boss of his department, Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar." Bright: "Remember, the entire leadership was focused on containment. There was a belief that we could contain this virus and keep it out of the United States, containment doesn't work. Containment does buy time. It could slow, it very well could slow the spread. But while you're slowing the spread, you better be doing something in parallel to be prepared for when that virus breaks out." The rest of the story can be seen here .

The Washington Times (5/17, Muñoz, 492K) reports White House trade adviser Peter Navarro called Bright "a 'deserter' in the war against coronavirus Sunday." Navarro said on ABC's This Week ., "The tragedy, is George this man has talent, he's a smart man. We could have used him on the battlefield. He's not there now and it's because of decisions that he made."

Navarro Says Pandemic Shutdowns Will Kill More People Than Coronavirus.

White House trade adviser Peter Navarro told NBC's Meet the Press that the coronavirus shutdowns will "indirectly" kill more people than the actual virus. The Washington Examiner (5/17, Yilek, 448K) reports Navarro said, "If you lock people down, you may save lives directly from the China virus, but you indirectly – you're going to kill a lot more people." Navarro "said unemployment leads to more suicides, depression, and substance abuse." In addition, he "cited the disruptions the virus has caused to the health industry as many medical procedures and screenings have been put on hold during the pandemic." Said Navarro, "That's gonna kill people as well. So if you contrast this complete lockdown, where some people in the medical community want to run and hide until the virus is extinguished, that's gonna not only take a huge toll on the American economy, it's going to kill many more people than the virus – the China virus ever would."

Forty-Eight States Have Lifted Restrictions On Businesses. NBC Nightly News . (5/17, lead story, 3:05, Snow, 259K) reported in its lead story that as of Sunday, "all but two states [had] lifted at least some restrictions on businesses. Many recreation areas were opened this weekend. Some busier than public health officials would have liked. But the most noticeable steps forward, sports are coming back. There were two major event today, and now, a very real plan for Major League Baseball and the NFL moving forward." In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (5/17, lead story, 4:50, Llamas, 5.48M) described "the clearest signs yet America is making moves to reopen. ... It is a delicate new phase in the battle against COVID-19, with America balancing the reward of reopening with the potential risk to lives." ABC (Ault) added that HHS Secretary Azar is "discouraging reckless gatherings, but saying some level of irresponsible behavior is inevitable." Azar: "I think in any individual instance, you're going to see people doing things that's irresponsible, that's part of the freedom we have here in America."

Jamie Yuccas said on the CBS Weekend News (5/17, story 3, 2:10, Gianola, 2.93M) that "by Monday, 48 states will have relaxed stay at home orders. Over the weekend, at least five saw an uptick in coronavirus. But in Texas, it was a surge, the state reporting more than 1,800 new cases Saturday. The biggest single day jump since the pandemic began."

Azar: Reopening States Not Seeing A Spike In Cases. Also Sunday, Breitbart (5/17, Key, 673K) reports, Azar "said there has been no spike in coronavirus cases in the states that are reopening." Azar told CNN's State Of The Union ., "We are seeing that in areas that are opening, we're not seeing the spike in cases. We still see spikes in some areas that are, in fact, closed, very localized situations. And so this is going to be very important for us to watch the circumstances on the ground." Townhall (5/17, Stocking, 177K) says Azar "touted the importance of good surveillance and testing in allowing states the ability to safely reopen." Azar said, "First, we need to have good surveillance. So we need to look for influenza-like illness and other respiratory disease. We have a great surveillance system for that. We look for spikes and early indicators. We have adequate testing capacity. We need to make sure anybody who is symptomatic is tested and that we have adequate asymptomatic surveillance in areas of greatest burden."

Emergency physician Dr. Megan Ranney said on CNN's Inside Politics (5/17, 832K), "It is going to take two to three to even four weeks after reopening starts to figure out if we've moved too early, if we have to dial things back. As we know, this virus has about a two-week period of being asymptomatic after it gets transmitted and...the really bad symptoms don't start to show up for another one to two weeks after that. So, it's really between a two and four-week period after reopening until we know if we've done too much too soon."

Dr. Ashish Jha, Director of the Harvard Global Health Initiative, said on CNN's Inside Politics (5/17, 832K), "The way I see this is the science and the evidence are ultimately going to drive what happens. You can choose not to follow the signs. You can choose to take risks. And I don't understand the politics of all of it but, you know, the virus will behave the way it will behave."

Navarro: CDC "Let The Country Down With The Testing."

USA Today (5/17, Cummings, 10.31M) says White House trade adviser Peter Navarro "cast blame for how the coronavirus spread on the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, China and the Obama administration while defending the White House response to the outbreak." On NBC's Meet the Press, Navarro "pointed to the CDC's early challenges developing an accurate test for the virus." Navarro said, "Early on in this crisis, the CDC which really had the most trusted brand around the world in this space, really let the country down with the testing. Because not only did they keep the testing within the bureaucracy, they had a bad test. And that did set us back." USA today adds that on CBS' Face The Nation, HHS Secretary Azar "disputed Navarro's criticism of the CDC." Azar said, "I don't believe the CDC let this country down." The CBS Weekend News (5/17, story 2, 1:00, Gianola, 2.93M) and Breitbart (5/17, Key, 673K) provide similar coverage of Navarro's comments.

Highlighting Navarro's comments, ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 2, 2:20, Llamas, 5.48M) said the White house is "escalat[ing] the blame game," and the Washington Post (5/17, Sonmez, Fears, 14.2M) says that with Navarro's comments Sunday, tensions between the White House and the CDC "spilled out into public view." The comments "are the latest signal of how the Trump administration has sought to sideline the CDC," the agency that "typically plays the lead role in public health crises."

Also on CBS' Face The Nation, Axios (5/17, Knutson, 521K) reports, former FDA commissioner Scott Gottlieb "defended" the CDC's "early efforts to develop a coronavirus test" in the wake of Navarro's comments. Gottlieb said, "Even if the CDC had rolled out that test perfectly, there still wouldn't have been enough testing in place in the nation to do what we call 'sentinel surveillance' to try to detect this virus earlier." Gottlieb "argued that Department of Health and Human Services leadership should have picked up the phone in January or early February to engage large private labs." He said, "If they had asked the CEOs to do that, I'm willing to bet that they would have done it and you would have gotten the big labs in the game. That's what needed to happen."

Survey Finds States' Coronavirus Testing Capacity Outstrips Supply Of Patients.

The Washington Post (5/17, Thompson, Eilperin, Dennis, 14.2M) reports that four months into the pandemic, coronavirus tests "finally are becoming widely available, a crucial step toward lifting stay-at-home orders and safely returning to normal life," yet "while many states no longer report crippling supply shortages, a new problem has emerged: too few people lining up to get tested." A survey by the Post "of governors' offices and state health departments found at least a dozen states where testing capacity outstrips the supply of patients." The Post adds, "Experts say several factors may be preventing more people from seeking tests, including a lingering sense of scarcity, a lack of access in rural and underserved communities, and skepticism about testing operations."

WTimes Analysis: COVID-19 Testing Becoming More Convenient, Easier To Find In US. The Washington Times (5/17, Howell, 492K) reports that following "early stumbles and scrambles, testing for COVID-19 or an immune response to the disease is getting more convenient and easier to find." About 350,000 people a day are being tested in the US, which is "more than double the daily average from mid-April, and federal regulators are bringing new diagnostics and antibody, or 'serological,' tests to market every day." However, the Harvard Global Health Institute "estimates that the U.S. will need to triple its testing average, to 900,000 per week, to contain the outbreak, though states' needs vary."

USA Today Analysis: Roughly 200 Remote Counties Have Reported No Cases.

USA Today (5/17, Nichols, Allison, King, Pfannenstiel, 10.31M) reports that "in just four months, the deadly COVID-19 virus has infiltrated every state and major US city. But a scattering of remote counties continue without a single reported case, according to a USA TODAY analysis." The list "is getting shorter by the day, though. In the first half of May alone, 40 counties went from zero recorded cases of the virus to at least one." USA Today says the "long stretch without coronavirus cases in some counties likely reflects an undercount from limited testing. But in others it may also reflect the benefits of being relatively cut off." The analysis by USA TODAY "found a strong link between population density and official infection rates across the country."

Azar: Administration Is “Wringing The Inefficiency Out” Of Vaccine Development.

HHS Secretary Azar was asked on CBS' Face The Nation (5/17, 3.3M) if the Administration is pledging that all Americans will be able to get a vaccine by the end of the year. Azar said, “It is not a pledge. It is a goal of what we're going to mobilize the entire US government and private sector to achieve. ... These drug companies and vaccine-makers said it is going to make this amount of time because they're using their traditional approaches. You do phase one, phase two and phase three in sequence. Then you do manufacturing. The President said that is not acceptable. So what we are doing is wringing the inefficiency out of the development process to make the development side faster to get to safe and effective vaccines, and at the same time, we're going to scale up commercial-sized manufacturing and produce hundreds of millions of doses at risk. They may not pan out.”

Breitbart (5/17, Key, 673K) says Azar was asked on CNN's State Of The Union (5/17, 1.12M) whether reopening is dependent on a vaccine. Azar said, “So what the president was making the point on is, everything does not depend on a vaccine. We're committed to delivering a vaccine. We'll put the full power of the U.S. government and our private sector towards getting a vaccine, but that's one of a multifactorial response program. First is the testing we talked about before, broad surveillance to find cases, surge in and contain.”

Administration Officials Impressed By Birk's Political Skills.

Axios (5/17, Swan, 521K) cites “administration officials” who “say they've been taken aback by Deborah Birk's masterful political skills – including a preternatural ability to get what she wants while telling people what they want to hear.” Birk is “better than any of the other public health officials at talking to Trump.” She “has been far more adept at influencing the president and shaping the administration's response to the global coronavirus pandemic” than Dr. Anthony Fauci. According to colleagues, Birk “strategically emphasizes the points Trump wants to hear – and she can play multiple angles on any given issue.”

Eric Trump Says Democrats Are Milking Coronavirus To Hurt Trump's Campaign.

The Washington Times (5/17, Morton, 492K) reports that Eric Trump “predicted over the weekend that the nation's concern over coronavirus will ‘magically’ disappear once Democrats can no longer milk it for electoral purposes.” Trump “said in an interview on Fox News Justice that the coronavirus-related shutdowns are an effort to sabotage the Trump election campaign that presumed Democratic nominee Joseph R. Biden ‘loves.’” He said, “They think they're taking away Donald Trump's greatest tool, which is to go into an arena and fill it with 50,000 people every time. ... You watch. ... They will milk it every single day between now and Nov. 3. Guess what – after Nov. 3, coronavirus will magically, all of the sudden, go away and disappear and everybody will be able to reopen.” USA Today (5/17, Cummings, 10.31M) provides similar coverage.

Colorado Governor Takes Issue With CDC's Coronavirus Data.

The Washington Examiner (5/17, Colton, 448K) reports Colorado Gov. Jared Polis (D) “is pushing back against coronavirus data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, claiming people want to know who died directly from the COVID-19 virus rather than those who had tested positive at the time of their death.” Polis appeared on Fox News Sunday “after it was reported that 300 fewer people in Colorado have died directly from the coronavirus than was originally reported, according to revised data from the state.” Polis said, “The CDC criteria include anybody who has died with COVID-19, but what the people of Colorado and the people of the country want to know is, how many people died of COVID-19?” The Examiner adds that “people across the country” are questioning “the accuracy of coronavirus case data.”

On its website, Fox News (5/17, Blitzer, 27.59M) cites “three administration officials” who “said Dr. Deborah Birk, the task force response coordinator, has pushed for the CDC to exclude from the death count some who were presumed infected but did not have a confirmed lab result and those who had the virus but might not have died as a direct result of it, according to the Daily Beast.” However, “Dr. Anthony Fauci, the top U.S. infectious disease expert, said during testimony before the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee Tuesday that he believes the coronavirus death toll is “almost certainly higher” than currently being reported.”

A New York Times (5/17, 18.61M) editorial says President Trump and Administration officials “seem to suspect that the number of Covid-19 deaths is being overstated.” Debate over the accuracy of the CDC data “has become a hot topic at the White House, according to reporting this week from Axios, to the point that the task force is reassessing the mortality numbers as part of ‘a much larger review of data quality issues,’ an administration official told The Times.” The Times argues that there is “a pressing need for accurate information about the progress of the pandemic. If the White House thinks the death toll is too high and should be adjusted, it owes people an explanation of why it is taking a position contrary to the conclusions of its own public health experts.”

Trump Retweets Video Of CNN's Collins Removing Mask After White House Press Conference.

President Trump on Sunday evening retweeted a post from his son, Eric, which said, “Just a reminder that @CNN is a total joke: ‘Mask-police CNN reporter @kaitlancollins caught removing hers at presser, as soon as she thought cameras were off Cc: @brianstelter’ The tweet included video of Collins removing her mask as reporters were leaving the White House briefing room following a pres conference. In his tweet, President Trump wrote, “A CNN Faker!”

VA Testing Prostate Cancer Drug's Effectiveness Against Coronavirus.

The Washington Times (5/17, Glenn, 492K) reports that the Department of Veterans Affairs announced over the weekend that degarelix, a drug meant to treat prostate cancer "could be used as a treatment for patients infected with the coronavirus." The VA is launching clinical trials to determine if the drug, which is manufactured under the trade name Firmagon, "can be used to improve the outcome of almost 200 male veterans who have been hospitalized with COVID-19." VA Secretary Wilkie said in a statement, "Veterans who have contracted this virus are in need of immediate care. ... This trial is an important step in advancing knowledge of a potential treatment for those infected with COVID-19. We are here to do everything in our power to preserve and protect life."

Gottlieb: US Needs More Real Time Information To Combat Pandemic.

Former FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb writes in an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Gottlieb, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that there are still many unknowns about the coronavirus. Gottlieb calls for greater real-time reporting of coronavirus-related findings in order to slow the spread and resume normal life.

Scientists Believe US Is Unprepared For Pandemic's Second Wave.

USA Today (5/17, Wagner, 10.31M) reports that "many scientists" believe the coronavirus pandemic "will dissipate over the summer only to return late this year in a second wave that could be worse than the first." USA questions whether the US is prepared "medically, economically and emotionally" for that second wave, and the "leading answer from epidemiologists, economists and futurists: probably not. But tomorrow depends in part on what we do as individuals, communities and a nation."

Federal Government To Gather, Publish Data On COVID-19 Deaths In Nursing Homes.

The Washington Post (5/17, Sacchetti, 14.2M) reports that nursing homes were "directed to report the number of coronavirus infections and deaths to the federal government by midnight Sunday so that health officials can assess the damage the pandemic has inflicted on sick and elderly residents and their caregivers in more than 15,000 homes nationwide." According to federal officials, the data will be collected weekly and published online "along with the names of nursing homes, by the end of May. The data will offer a first look at the impact in such states as Texas and Virginia that have declined to identify nursing homes with covid-19 infections." CMS said in an alert Friday that it "will be taking swift action and publicly posting this information so all Americans have access to accurate and timely information on COVID-19 in nursing homes."

Research Trial Combines Remdesivir With A Second Drug.

The CBS Weekend News (5/17, story 5, 2:20, Gianola, Lapook, 2.93M) reported that "the drug remdesivir has been shown to modestly shorten recovery time. But now in a new trial, researchers are adding even more firepower to the battle against COVID-19." CBS (Lapook) added that early results of a global trial "showed remdesivir reduced average hospitalizations from 15 to 11 day days." In the next phase of the trial, Dr. Aneesh Mehta, who was the lead investigator of the NIH trial at Emory University, and his colleagues are now "combining remdesivir to stop the virus from multiplying with a powerful anti-inflammatory drug, baricitinib, a so-called immune modulator that aims to prevent organ damage by calming down an inflamed immune system." Dr. Mehta's team "is looking at whether this powerful combination could make recovery even faster and possibly reduce the mortality rate in a way remdesivir alone has not yet been shown to do."

Governors Cautiously Optimistic About Reopening Schools In The Fall.

Politico (5/17, Beavers, 4.29M) reports that in television interviews Sunday, Colorado Gov. Jared Polis (D), Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine (R), and California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) "expressed measured optimism about the possibility for schools in their states to reopen by the fall." On Fox News Sunday, Polis "outlined the most bullish vision of the three governors." Polis said, "Schools need to function, they are going to function. It's also going to be somewhat of a hybrid environment, meaning there might be times during the year there's an outbreak at a school that it has to convert to online for a period of weeks until it's reasonably safe to return to school. But by and large, I think, across our state and across our nation, kids are going to return to school in the fall, it's just not going to look like any other school year."

On CNN's State Of The Union (5/17, 1.15M), DeWine said, "What I have asked the schools to do is to assume they're going back, but to come up with all kinds of alternatives. Assume, if you're back, for example, how do you achieve some sort of distancing? ... But we hope to be open in August, when school starts back up in most places in Ohio, but we don't know yet, frankly."

Newsom said on CNN's State Of The Union (5/17, 1.12M) that the question of reopening schools is a "difficult one to answer in absolute terms. ... I think some schools will not be. Many schools will be. ... There's nuance. But we are moving forward, in hope and expectation that we can start that school year very strategically and methodically, again, based upon the health as a prime frame of reference in terms of those decisions."

Governors Weigh Reopening Amid Concerns About A Surge Of New Cases.

The New York Times (5/17, Rojas, Delkic, 18.61M) reports that "governors across the country are contemplating the risks of reopening, particularly if it produces a surge of new cases and deaths." While state officials "said that pressure was building to revive commerce and to chart a path for states to stagger back toward a semblance of normalcy," governors "acknowledged concerns about a fresh resurgence of the coronavirus, and they are haunted by images of restaurants and stores packed with patrons with uncovered faces."

PG County Lawmakers Criticize Hogan's Coronavirus Response.

The Washington Post (5/17, Natanson, Lazo, 14.2M) reports Prince George's County lawmakers on Sunday criticized Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan's (R) "response to the coronavirus outbreak, saying his administration has dismissed urgent requests for equipment and staffing needed to fight the virus in their county, which has a death toll among the highest in the Washington region." In a letter to Hogan, "the lawmakers cited numerous unmet promises from his administration regarding the allocation of resources to Prince George's, from personal protection equipment such as masks and gowns for hospital workers to testing kits and hospital beds." A Hogan spokesman "defended the state's response to the county, point-by-point, saying the letter 'lacks credibility.'"

As New Orleans Reopens, Residents, Tourists Hesitant To Go Out.

The Washington Post (5/17, Montgomery, Webster, 14.2M) reports that while the stay-at-home order in New Orleans has been lifted and the city "was supposed to begin coming back to life," residents "were hesitant to venture back out in a city that once was an epicenter of the novel coronavirus, even though social distancing has paid off with sharply decreased rates of infection." Likewise, "tourists were scarce." In what the Post describes as "a sign of the ambivalent nature of this reopening, several business owners said they were going to pass up the opportunity for now. To them, it's still too soon to bring customers in safely and make employees cook in cramped kitchens. And it doesn't make economic sense to operate at 25 percent capacity, they said, which all but guarantees they will lose money."

Transit Workers Suffering Amid Outbreak.

The Washington Post (5/17, George, Jaffe, 14.2M) reports that amid the coronavirus pandemic, essential workers such as doctors, nurses, and first responders have been called heroes, but "the lower-paid and largely minority transit workers said they are often abused by riders and insufficiently protected by their employers." With some areas reopening, "the return to normal life only exacerbates" transit workers' fears surrounding their exposure to COVID-19. Many transit and union officials "were slow to recognize the threat that the virus posed to their workforces" and "scrambled to implement new safety measures," but these "have not done much to lessen the anxiety of transit employees," who "are regularly being asked to take unprecedented risks" and have lost co-workers and brought to the disease to their families.

College Towns Feeling Impact Of Coronavirus Shutdowns.

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Baer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the pandemic has had a severe economic impact on college towns across the country as business have shut down and campuses have emptied out. The Journal story focuses on Blacksburg, Virginia, where business owners are now hopeful that the fall will see a return to in-person classes and home football games that bring business to local hotel rooms, bars, restaurants and other establishments.

People Breaking Social Distancing Amid "Quarantine Fatigue."

Kathy Park reported on NBC Nightly News (5/17, story 2, 2:30, Snow, 259K) that "quarantine fatigue [is] forcing people outside and on to beaches from coast to coast." Park details how people are going to beaches, parks, bars, and churches, often without masks or maintaining social distancing. "A church in northern California broke reopening rules and may have exposed nearly 200 people to the virus."

Teen's Suffering With Rare Coronavirus Condition Detailed.

The New York Times (5/17, Belluck, 18.61M) reports on how Jack McMorrow, 14, suffered the newly discovered severe inflammatory syndrome linked to the coronavirus, which "can cripple the heart," that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is calling Multisystem Inflammatory Syndrome in Children. The condition "has shaken widespread confidence that children were largely spared from the pandemic."

WSJournal Videos Shows How Easily Coronavirus Can Spread In Stadiums.

A video on the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) titled, "Why Stadiums Are Incubators for Coronavirus Spread" describes why health experts view stadiums as one of the highest-risk places for the coronavirus to spread.

WPost: Trump Should Announce Drug He Touted Against COVID-19 Doesn't Work.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/15, 14.2M) writes that two large studies indicate that the drug hydroxychloroquine, touted by President Trump and Fox News for fighting COVID-19, "was essentially useless against the virus." With the drug having gone "into shortage for those who take it for approved uses" after Trump promoted it, the Post calls for the FDA to "revoke the emergency use authorization" for it and for Trump "to use his bully pulpit to tell the American people that his 'game changer' was nothing of the sort."

Trump: Russia Probe Was "Greatest Political Crime" In American History.

In a prerecorded interview on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (5/17), President Trump said the Russia investigation "was the greatest political crime in the history of our country. If I were a Democrat instead of a Republican, I think everybody would have been in jail a long time ago, and I'm talking with 50 year sentences. It is a disgrace what's happened this is the greatest political scam, hoax in the history of our country. And people should be going to jail for this stuff and hopefully, a lot of people are going to have to pay. No other President should have to go through and I'll tell you, General Flynn and others are heroes, heroes, because what's happened to them, they went after General Flynn. They wanted him to lie about me, make up a story, and with few exceptions, nobody did that."

Toluse Olorunnipa of the Washington Post said on CNN's Inside Politics (5/17, 896K), "It's clear that the President sees this as a key part of his re-election message. He can't have his re-election be all about this pandemic and the fact that we have depression levels of unemployment and he's trying to essentially change the narrative to a comeback playbook, a playbook in which he's fighting against the Democratic resistance, fighting against Democratic governors who have decided not to open up their states and casting it as a political scandal by trying to throw things back to the Obama Administration and say that President Obama and...Joe Biden are essentially criminals, treasonists, saying that they tried to block him from becoming president. So, he's running a playbook that's very similar to what he did in 2016, sowing division, trying to sow scandal on his opponent."

Jackie Kucinich of The Daily Beast said on CNN's Inside Politics (5/17, 896K) that if Trump is "talking about Obama, he's not talking about the response to the coronavirus, the lack of testing, and the fact that his re-election is very closely tied today the economy. Right now, the economy is struggling because of this pandemic. ... This is about changing the subject and getting into a space where he's more comfortable, which is playing the victim, which is this idea that everyone is out to get him."

Guy Benson of Townhall.com said on Fox News MediaBuzz (5/17, 536K), "I think that [Trump is] angry at what we are learning about and I think he has a right to be angry based on recently declassified documents and, of course, the inspector general report which seems like ancient history but is quite relevant. I think there is some question about Barack Obama himself knew and when because we learned that Sally Yates, then at the DOJ, learned from the President, Barack Obama, herself, from the President himself that the Flynn investigation was happening and that seems interesting at the very least. I think we will know a lot more about what did what and if there were crimes were committed when John Durham swings into gear and either issues indictments or a report of some sort and I think that people should generally keep their powder dry and people until we hear from Mr. Durham."

Fox News correspondent Griff Jenkins said on Fox News MediaBuzz (5/17, 536K), "The crime that was committed that Flynn's name was leaked to the media, on January 12th, the exact day that Biden requested it. That's why President Trump was mentioning it. This list that includes top Obama officials that requested the unmasking of Flynn's name are simply possible suspects of who may have leaked it. We don't know and we may never know. On the other side of this is the view that this is the very common practice, the intelligence community uses. there were some 10,000 requests to unmask names last year." Jenkins added, "The Durham investigation should it find that there was some connection between this list of unmaskers and the name of Flynn being leaked to the Washington Post, that is going to be a prosecution."

Miranda Devine writes in the New York Post (5/17, Devine, 4.57M) that while the "presidential transition is supposed to be a peaceful handover of power from one administration to the next," but it is "a remarkable period of almost three months during which an unscrupulous administration can plant landmines for its successor to step on. And that, as becomes clearer each day, is what happened to the Trump administration." In their final days in power, the Obama Administration "used the intelligence agencies to trawl for dirt which they weaved into a barely plausible narrative that Trump was an 'asset' of Russian President Vladimir Putin." But "the landmines they planted for Trump in the transition are about to blow up on them."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) objects to Obama Administration officials' answers to questions about the Flynn unmasking, such as former DNI James Clapper's claim that it was "perfectly legitimate." The Journal says spying on Trump officials and leaking information to promote a false story about collusion is not legitimate and the public needs to know the complete story of what occurred.

Johnson Pushes Back On Tapper's Use Of Phrase "Crackpot Conspiracy Theory." The Washington Examiner (5/17, Mastrangelo, 448K) reports that on CNN's State Of The Union Sunday, Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) "shot back at CNN anchor Jake Tapper after the host used the phrase 'crackpot conspiracy theory' and asked about Johnson's requests for transparency on Hillary Clinton's emails and information on the 'unmasking' requests by Obama officials regarding retired Lt. Gen. Michael Flynn." Johnson said, "You keep calling it a crackpot conspiracy theory. ... I'm just trying to find out what happened. What we do know, because we got these records out of the National Archives, what President Obama saw when he got those emails from Hillary Clinton was not hillaryclinton.statedepartment.gov.classified, it was clinton.com."

The Daily Caller (5/17, Ross, 716K) report that Tapper said Johnson "suggested that Russian interference in the 2016 election was a 'hoax,'" but "a tape of the interview shows that Johnson, the chairman of the Senate Homeland Security Committee, instead told Tapper that the now-debunked theory of Russian collusion with the Trump campaign was the hoax." Johnson "asserted in the interview that leaks to the media fueled 'this entire Russian collusion hoax.'"

Tapper Draws Fire For Accusing Trump Of Launching A "Smear Campaign."

Breitbart (5/17, Pollak, 673K) says CNN's Jake Tapper "was hit by a wave of criticism on social media Sunday after he accused President Donald Trump of 'launching an unprecedented smear campaign against any rival,' with many accusing him and CNN of hypocrisy." During a monologue on CNN's State Of The Union (5/17, 1.12M) Sunday, Tapper said, "The criticism from Obama comes at a time when President Trump and his team are launching an unprecedented smear campaign against any rival. Leveling wild and false allegations against critics in the media and political rivals that range from bizarre false conspiracy theories to spreading false allegations of pedophilia to even suggesting one TV anchor committed murder. These smear campaigns are unmoored from reality. They're deranged and indecent and seem designed to distract from us from this horrific health and economic crisis." Critics pointed out that "Tapper and CNN had relentlessly pushed a variety of smears against Trump and his administration."

Trump retweeted a post from conservative operative Arthur Schwartz, which said, "CNN's Fake @JakeTapper Blasted for Hypocrisy After Accusing Trump of 'Smear Campaign' Against Rivals." Schwartz's post included a link to the Breitbart story. In his tweet, Trump wrote, "They, and the Lamestream Media (including Jake), have spent 3 1/2 years illegally smearing me. They got caught!"

Brennan Says He Has "Nothing To Hide" From Durham Probe.

The Washington Examiner (5/17, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that former CIA Director John Brennan told MSNBC's All In last week that "he has no reservations about speaking with U.S. Attorney John Durham" for his investigation. Durham said, "Well it's clear that I am in their crosshairs. Ever since Donald Trump was inaugurated, I have spoken out against what I think has been the corruption, the incompetence, the mischaracterizations that he and individuals around him have made to the American public, and I will continue to speak out. ... And yes, John Durham who is a well-respected individual from the Department of Justice, and many years in the business, is conducting this investigation – I guess it's an investigation – and looking at what happened during those last months of the Obama administration and the first year or two of the Trump administration." Brennan "said he has not yet been interviewed by investigators, but noted he welcomes the opportunity" because "for too long the American public have been misled" by the Trump Administration. He added, "I have nothing to hide."

Trump Touts 184 Miles Of New Border Wall.

President Trump took to Twitter yesterday to write, "Wall is going up fast. 184 miles as of today!"

USCIS Seeks $1.2B In Emergency Funding.

The New York Times (5/17, Jordan, 18.61M) reports US Citizenship and Immigration Services has asked Congress for a $1.2 billion cash infusion amid the coronavirus pandemic "that has caused applications to plummet and brought it to the brink of insolvency." A "precipitous drop in applications for green cards, citizenship and other programs has threatened the solvency of the federal agency." The agency, "which relies on the fees that it charges applicants to fund its operations, said that it could run out of money by the summer."

Analysts: Extremist Groups Promoting False Narratives Of Arbery Shooting Online.

The Washington Post (5/17, Mekhennet, 14.2M) reports organizations that monitor online extremist activity say that far-right and neo-Nazi groups, seeking to promote their agendas, "are spreading racist and false information" on social media platforms about Ahmaud Arbery, a black jogger who was fatally shot in Georgia. The groups are seeking "to create false narratives about his death, analysts said," with the two suspects arrested over the death – Gregory McMichael and his son, Travis McMichael – cast as victims "of alleged anti-white bias in the mainstream media and perceived injustice against white people."

Police Enlisted Help Of Arbery Shooting Suspect. The Washington Examiner (5/17, Soellner, 448K) reports that one of the suspects in the death of Ahmaud Arbery, retired local police officer Greg McMichael, had been referred to by a property owner within the neighborhood in case they needed help, according to the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. Officer Robert Rash texted McMichael's number to Larry English, the owner of a home construction site. McMichael's number was to be called "day or night" when a motion-activated camera system at the site activated. LaGrange Police Chief Lou Dekmar, former president of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, "said the text is concerning because it encourages a citizen to contact a former officer if actual assistance from police was needed" and "gave the perception that McMichael had a relationship with local law enforcement," who are investigating Arbery's shooting.

WPost Calls For Training To Defuse "Suicide By Cop" Situations.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/17, 14.2M) calls for police to be "properly trained to deal with" people seeking "suicide by cop." The Police Executive Research Forum created a protocol for such situations, "ground-tested and found to be safe and effective," that includes techniques such as "backing away, creating safe distances and engaging in conversation." In the wake of Finan H. Berhe's fatal shooting by Montgomery County, Maryland Police Sgt. David Cohen, the Post is encouraged that Police Chief Marcus Jones said "the department is looking at implementing the forum's protocol for managing 'suicide by cop' situations."

Texas School Works To Help Poorer Students.

The CBS Weekend News (5/17, story 6, 2:10, Gianola, 2.93M) reported, "The coronavirus crisis has exposed the disparities between the country's wealthy and poor communities." CBS (Villarreal) added that the Como Leadership Academy in Fort Worth, Texas, where most of the students are economically disadvantaged, has teachers making regular home visits, recording lessons and posting them on line, and distributed "150 Chromebooks and 11 internet hot spots to families in need."

WSJournal Blasts University Of California On Proposed Admissions Move.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes the University of California of moving towards debasing the value of its degrees by no longer using standardized tests in its admissions. The Journal cites a UC faculty senate report on the value of the tests and attributes the proposed move to progressive criticism of the SAT and ACT, as well as an effort by the UC bureaucracy to gain its desired racial composition of students.

Democratic Sources: Ousted State IG Was Investigating Pompeo's Use Of Staff To Run Errands.

At the tail end of its report on the firing of State Department Inspector General Steve Linick, NBC Nightly News (5/17, story 4, 0:55, Nichols, 259K) reported that "according to two congressional officials, the IG was looking into whether or not [Secretary of State] Pompeo made a member of his staff, a political appointee, walk his dog, pick up his dry cleaning, and make reservations for Secretary and his wife." The New York Times (5/17, Wong, 18.61M) also reports the story, citing "Democratic aides." The Times adds "the details of Mr. Linick's investigation are not clear, and it may be unrelated to the previous allegations" of misuse of State staff, but "Democrats and other critics of Mr. Pompeo say the cloud of accusations shows a pattern of misuse of taxpayer money – one that may mean lawmakers will be less willing to give the administration the benefit of the doubt as congressional Democrats begin an investigation into Mr. Linick's dismissal."

The Hill (5/17, Wise, 2.98M) reports that "according to multiple reports," Trump "removed the inspector general tasked with overseeing the State Department after receiving a recommendation to oust him from...Pompeo." An "anonymous White House official told NBC News and Reuters that Pompeo 'recommended' Linick's firing and that...Trump agreed."

Navarro: President Had "Legal Authority" To Fire State IG. White House trade adviser Peter Navarro, on ABC's This Week (5/17, 2.81M), discussed President Trump's decision to fire the State Department inspector general on Friday night. Navarro said, "That's way out of my lane here. The President has the legal authority to do that. What I can tell you, based on my experience here, there's a bureaucracy out there – tremendous problem with some people call it 'the deep state.' I think that's apt. I don't mourn the loss of people when they leave this. There's always going to be somebody better to replace them, someone more loyal to the Trump agenda. That's what's important, the Trump agenda. This President has transformed the Republican Party into the party of the working class. I'm here because the President loves creating good jobs for Americans. Anybody who hates buy America, they don't really belong here. I support whatever this President does in terms of his hiring and firing decisions."

Johnson: IGs "Serve At The Pleasure Of The President." Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI), on CNN's State Of The Union (5/17, 1.15M), said, "I'm very mindful of the fact that inspector generals don't work for Congress, they actually work for the Administration. They're part of the executive branch...and serve the President of the United States. I take a slightly different view of what they should be different from. They need to retain their independence from their agencies so they can provide information to their leadership. They serve at the President's will, that's true of every inspector general. Not all inspector generals are created equal. In our oversight work we've had two inspector generals resign. They left town ahead of the posse, so to speak. There are inspector generals that bring a political agenda as well as those that do a phenomenal job. So they're not all equal. In the end, they serve at the pleasure of the President and he's got the authority to hire and terminate."

Democrats Launch Investigation, Pelosi Says Administration Is "Supposed To Show Cause." USA Today (5/17, Shesgreen, 10.31M) reports, "Top congressional Democrats opened an inquiry Saturday into Secretary of State Mike Pompeo's ouster of a government watchdog and accused Pompeo of trying to shield himself from an internal probe." The Hill adds that "in a joint letter, Rep. Eliot Engel, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and Sen. Bob Menendez, the top Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called on the White House and the State Department to 'preserve all records related to the firing' of Inspector General Steve Linick." Axios (5/16, Rummler, 521K) notes Engel and Menendez wrote, "President Trump's unprecedented removal of Inspector General Linick is only his latest sacking of an inspector general, our government's key independent watchdogs, from a federal agency. ... We unalterably oppose the politically-motivated firing of inspectors general and the President's gutting of these critical positions."

Reuters (5/17, Lynch, Chiacu) reports Speaker Pelosi said on CNN's "State of the Union" yesterday, "The president has the right to fire any federal employee, but the fact is if it looks like it's in retaliation for something the IG, the inspector general, was investigating, that could be unlawful." Pelosi also said on CBS' Face The Nation, "This is new to us, and typical of the White House, announcing something that is very unsavory, and they would do it late on a Friday night. The fact is, as you indicated, it is the fourth inspector general. Inspectors general, that office was created after Watergate to make sure there was integrity in the departments, the agencies of government. They are supposed to show cause. Even Republicans in Congress are concerned about it."

Along those lines, the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Restuccia, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) headlines its report "Some Republicans Object To Trump's Ousting Of State Department Watchdog," and quotes Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) as saying, "The President has not provided the kind of justification for the removal of IG Linick required by this law." Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-IA) similar stated, "As I've said before, Congress requires written reasons justifying an IG's removal. A general lack of confidence simply is not sufficient detail to satisfy Congress." ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 4, 0:30, Scott, 5.48M) also reported "Trump says he fired...Linick because he lost confidence in him, but...Collins and...Grassley say that alone is not a sufficient reason."

USA Today (5/17, Cummings, 10.31M) reports "Sen. Mitt Romney of Utah, a Trump critic and the only Republican senator to vote to convict the president on one of the articles of impeachment, went further in decrying the firing, which marked the fourth government watchdog Trump has removed in the last three months." Said Romney, "The firings of multiple Inspectors General is unprecedented; doing so without good cause chills the independence essential to their purpose. It is a threat to accountable democracy and a fissure in the constitutional balance of power." Romney's reaction, adds USA Today, "echoed that of congressional Democrats, who immediately said they plan to investigate the reasons for Linick's ouster."

The Washington Times (5/17, Meier, 492K) and Politico (5/17, Beavers, 4.29M), among other news outlets, also cover Pelosi's comments. Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT), on ABC's This Week, said, "This President thinks he's above the law, above criticism, he wants to get away with anything that he can and he does not understand that in the function of government you have a Congress, you have inspector generals who say, by the way, Mr. President, what you're doing is wrong and it may be illegal. This has been his MO from day one."

Zinke: Some IGs Working "In Coordination" With Democrats.

The Washington Examiner (5/17, Smith, 448K) reports, "Ryan Zinke says he came to the Interior Department as a reasonable guy, but it became increasingly clear Washington was an unreasonable world." In an interview, Zinke "says he was unfairly targeted, part of a pattern of attacks on Trump administration officials from within the government, led by agency staff who are supposed to be impartial watchdogs." Said Zinke, "You have the investigative arms of our government that are not being referees. They're wearing uniforms." Zinke "pointed to the situation unfolding with former national security adviser Michael Flynn as another example," and added that "in his own case, Zinke said he thinks the inspector general's office 'was in coordination with the opposition.'" Zinke stated, "I think I got sued eight times in the first day, before I even knew where my desk was."

Politico Examines Process Of Miller Beating Lyons For DPC Head.

Politico (5/17, Kumar, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that in early May White House Staff Secretary Derek Lyons appeared to be chosen as the Acting Domestic Policy Council Director, but "a week later, though, Brooke Rollins got the job, according to five people familiar with the situation, including two White House officials." The change was due to "several typical Trump-era factors: an announcement that got out early, conservative anger and differing internal messages." Lyons' likely appointment "frustrated some conservatives" due to his former affiliation with Jeb Bush's 2016 presidential campaign, and Chief of Staff Mark Meadows and Jared Kushner, Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser, "had yet to have Trump sign off on Lyons' appointment when the news broke, according to two White House officials." Following Rollins' selection to lead the DPC, Lyons gained the title of counselor, which "was seen internally by some as a face-saving measure and by others as a Kushner attempt to diminish" Senior Counselor Kellyanne Conway's status.

White House: NYTimes Story "Reads Like A Joe Biden Press Release."

White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany called out the New York Times yesterday on Twitter for a story originally titled "Democrats Race To Assemble Governing Agenda For Pandemic Era" (as of last night, the story bore the headline "Seeking: Big Democratic Ideas That Make Everything Better.") Wrote McEnany, "The top of the New York Times website currently reads like a Joe Biden press release. This isn't journalism. These are DNC talking points." President Trump also weighed in, tweeting, "Fake Journalism. So bad for our Country!"

The New York Times (5/17, Burns, 18.61M) reports "the Democratic Party had all but settled on a conventional center-left agenda," but "the pandemic is forcing the Biden campaign and other leaders to redraw plans for 2021." With Joe Biden "leading...Trump in the polls, the former vice president and other Democratic leaders are racing to assemble a new governing agenda that meets the extraordinary times – and they agree it must be far bolder than anything the party establishment has embraced before." The Times adds Democrats say "they must be prepared to move to pump trillions more into the economy; enact infrastructure and climate legislation far larger than they previously envisioned; pass a raft of aggressive worker-protection laws; expand government-backed health insurance and create enormous new investments in public-health jobs, health care facilities and child care programs." Moreover, "discussions are also underway, some of them involving Republicans, about policies that would ban stock buybacks and compel big corporations to share more of their profits with workers."

Biden Team Will Not Respond To Attacks By Trump.

The Washington Post (5/16, A1, Scherer, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports on its front page that "in a return to his old fighting form last week, President Trump suggested that his electoral rival, Joe Biden, should go to prison for an unspecified offense." In response, "Biden did nothing, holding back in silence for hours...until the presumptive Democratic nominee's campaign finally sent out a tweet." It read, "There's nothing that the American people cannot accomplish when we stand together — one nation, united in purpose." To the Post, the "cheery non sequitur underscored a core presumption of Biden's senior team as it enters a new phase of the presidential campaign, one marked by hourly offensives from one of the most accomplished political pugilists in American history." Biden's advisers "describe themselves as dead set against being triggered by his provocations or engaging with him on his terms."

Trump Lauds Omar Challenger, Calls Incumbent "A Corrupt Disaster."

President Trump yesterday retweeted a post from conservative commentator Bill Mitchell, who wrote, "Lacy Johnson is going up against the incredibly corrupt #AmericaLast Ilhan Omar in MN this Fall. He's a #MAGA Candidate and BIG Trump supporter. If you'd like to help Lacy defeat Omar, please give generously! Every penny helps! :-)" The President wrote, "Lacy will do a great job. Omar is a corrupt disaster!"

Trump Retweets Praise From James Woods.

President Trump On Sunday retweeted a post from actor James Woods, which said, "Let's face it. Donald Trump is a rough individual. He is vain, insensitive and raw. But he loves America more than any President in my lifetime. He is the last firewall between us and this cesspool called Washington. I'll take him any day over any of these bums. #Trump2020" In his tweet, Trump wrote, "I think that is a great compliment. Thank you James!"

Trump Superimposes His Face On Pullman's "Independence Day" Speech.

USA Today (5/17, Alexander, 10.31M) reports that in a tweet Saturday, President Trump "borrow[ed] the soaring oratory of a fictional presidential speech from 1996's blockbuster 'Independence Day.'" Trump posted "a digitally altered video of the famous film speech on Saturday. The new speech featured his head superimposed over former fighter pilot and Gulf War veteran President Thomas J. Whitmore, played by Bill Pullman." In the video, "Trump is speaking the inspiring words about the coronavirus battle, rather than Whitmore rallying his ragtag collection of fighter pilots with the speech before they go into battle against deadly alien invaders." In addition, faces in the crowd watching were "superimposed with the president's supporters" including Fox News' Sean Hannity, Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX), Vice President Mike Pence, and Donald Trump Jr. Pullman "was not amused." In a statement to Deadline, he wrote, "My voice belongs to no one but me, and I'm not running for president – this year."

Republican, Conservative Outside Groups Coalesce Around King's Primary Challenger.

The Hill (5/17, Easley, 2.98M) reports, "Top Republicans and conservative outside groups are rallying around Rep. Steve King's (R-Iowa) challenger ahead of the June 2 primary election, worried that the nine-term lawmaker's record of inflammatory remarks will be a drag on the GOP everywhere." The Hill adds "Party leaders such as Karl Rove and Rep. Steve Stivers (R-Ohio), the former chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee (NRCC), have donated to businessman Randy Feenstra, who has emerged as King's top challenger for the Republican nomination in Iowa's 4th Congressional District." Meanwhile, "national groups, including the US Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Realtors and the Defending Main Street super PAC are spending heavily in favor of Feenstra. The challenger has also received endorsements from the National Right to Life Committee and the Republican Jewish Coalition." The Hill adds "Feenstra's internal polling shows he's within the margin of error and he's built a commanding money lead over King."

Politico Analyses: Growing Buzz For Demings As Biden Running Mate.

Politico (5/17, Caputo, 4.29M) runs a very favorable profile of "Rep. Val Demings, a favorite of House Speaker Nancy Pelosi" who "served as a House impeachment manager against President Donald Trump earlier this year." While Joe Biden's "shortlist for vice president is deep in Democratic talent, filled with governors, senators and former rivals for the presidential nomination," Demings, "one of the least-known among them," is "attracting an increasing amount of attention from Biden advisers, donors and Democrats in Congress." Demings "is African American – giving her an edge in the eyes of some activists and Biden backers – strong on television, and speaks in biblical cadences that can bring a black church to its feet and add a potential dose of energy to a campaign that lacks it, according to polls." She is also "a former police chief," which "would give the ticket a law-and-order sheen that Democrats often lack." Demings "told POLITICO that she's honored just to be considered by Biden."

Democratic Congressman From Nevada Admits Affair With Intern.

The New York Post (5/17, Brown, 4.57M) reports, "A married Nevada congressman has admitted having a longstanding affair with a former intern calling herself 'Love Jones' – after she exposed him in an explosive series of podcasts." Rep. Steven Horsford (D), "who had previously been Nevada's first African-American State Senate Majority Leader – came forward after Gabriela Linder detailed the affair in a podcast, 'Mistress for Congress.'" The Post indicates Linder told the Las Vegas Review-Journal that the affair "started in 2009 when she was a 21-year-old intern at then-Senator Harry Reid's Nevada office – and they only broke ties in April, the same month she started her podcast."

AOC Owes Back Taxes On Failed Business Venture.

The New York Post (5/17, Campanile, 4.57M) reports, "US Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez wants to raise taxes on the rich – just not pay her own," as "the Democratic socialist congresswoman from The Bronx still hasn't paid a 7-year-old tax bill leftover from a failed business venture." The Post adds "AOC had founded Brook Avenue Press, a publishing house that sought designers, artists and writers from urban areas to help paint The Bronx in a positive way in children's stories, in 2012." The state "dissolved the company in October 2016." as it does "when a business fails to pay corporate taxes or file a return." The Post also reports that "the state Tax Department then filed a warrant against her now-defunct business on July 6, 2017, over a $1,618.36 unpaid bill," and "as of Friday, the tax warrant had still not been satisfied, and the outstanding balance had grown to $2,088.78, the department said."

Sanders Expects Biden To Win Support From His Former Backers.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT), on ABC's This Week (5/17, 2.81M), discussed Joe Biden's efforts to win over former Sanders supporters. Sanders said, "At the end of day, I think they'll be voting for Joe. But he has to say to those working class people, I understand your situation, I understand that you're graduating college with tens of thousands of dollars in debt. I understand you don't have any health insurance. You're working at a job that's paying 12 bucks an hour. ... I understand that you're concerned about not only the pandemic but climate change. Make sure the world comes together to address the existential threats. I understand that you're concerned about the racism within our criminal justice system and our immigration system. So I think Joe and his staff understand that, I think they're going to reach out to our supporters and come up with agenda that speaks to the needs of working families, of young families, of minority communities."

"Young Turks" Founder: Biden Should Focus On Removing Corporate Money From Politics. Cenk Uygur, CEO, founder and host of "The Young Turks," writes in the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), to offer three suggestions for former vice president Joe Biden to gain the support of progressives. He urges Biden to stop saying that progressives will cost the Democrats the election; to pledge his support for Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand's Clean Elections Act; and to promise to work for a constitutional amendment to ensure public financing of election campaigns.

WTimes Analysis: Biden Betting Suburban Women Will Not Believe Tara Reade.

The Washington Times (5/17, McLaughlin, 492K) reports former vice president Joe Biden "is wagering that his advantage in the crucial battle for suburban female voters will hold despite Tara Reade's allegation of sexual assault." David Paleologos, director of the Suffolk University Political Research Center, said, "I would say that [suburban women] are a key demographic that he can't afford to lose." The Times adds that a survey by Marquette Law School "found that Mr. Biden has a 46% to 43% lead over President Trump" in Wisconsin, and that "Biden holds a 22-point lead among women, and Mr. Trump has an 18-point lead among men."

Army Using Esports To Recruit Amid Pandemic.

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Kesling, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that, unable to recruit soldiers in person, the Army is running video tournaments and having its full-time esports athletes on the Army Esports Team engage with potential recruits through computer games and online chat platforms.

NYTimes Contributor: Democrats In Montana Must Focus On Helping Voters.

Sarah Vowell, an opinion contributor, writes in the New York Times (5/17, 18.61M), that any Democrat running statewide in Montana must "persuade the skeptics east of the Rocky Mountain Front that you are a levelheaded, friendly, capitalist adult who won't be levitating the Pentagon." Vowell presents both Sen. Jon Tester (D-MT) and Gov. Steve Bullock (D-MT) as models, saying that for Bullock "good government and good politics are often indistinguishable." Bullock, Vowell adds, is "ahead but in a tight contest with" Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT). Vowell concludes by saying that Bullock "shows up in the news every day trying his hardest to help everybody. He has to. He needs every single vote."

NYTimes' Smith Sees "Shakiness" At Foundation Of Farrow's Reporting.

Ben Smith writes in the New York Times (5/17, Smith, 18.61M) that Ronan Farrow "has delivered stories of stunning and lasting impact, especially his revelations about powerful men who preyed on young women in the worlds of Hollywood, television and politics, which won him a Pulitzer Prize." But "some aspects of his work made me wonder if Mr. Farrow didn't, at times, fly a little too close to the sun. Because if you scratch at Mr. Farrow's reporting in The New Yorker and in his 2019 best seller, 'Catch and Kill: Lies, Spies, and a Conspiracy to Protect Predators,' you start to see some shakiness at its foundation." Farrow "does not always follow the typical journalistic imperatives of corroboration and rigorous disclosure, or he suggests conspiracies that are tantalizing but he cannot prove."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 46.4%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 46.4%, and his disapproval at 51.5%. The President's approval and disapproval are unchanged since yesterday.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (5/12-5/14) finds Trump's approval at 49%, and his disapproval at 50%.

A Gallup survey of 1,028 "adults" (5/1-5/13), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 49%, and his disapproval at 48%.

Commenting on the Gallup numbers on Twitter, Charlie Kirk wrote, "Presidential job approval after 1209 days in office, according to Gallup polling: George W. Bush—46% Barack Obama—47% Donald Trump—49% Imagine how much higher it would be if the media reported fairly and honestly on his administration." Trump also weighed in, tweeting, "Hard to believe considering the Lamestream Media is totally corrupt. The people understand!"

IMF Head Pushes Governments To Spend Big, Tech Companies To Demonstrate "Responsible Behavior."

Politico (5/15, Heath, 4.29M) reported IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva "predicts it could take until 2023 for the global economy to return to its pre-coronavirus levels." Georgieva, during a Politico virtual event Friday, said, "The most severe shock has already occurred." Georgieva also "said she expects the global economy to shrink further beyond the current IMF estimate of -3 percent GDP in 2020, before a 'partial recovery' in 2021." Politico says governments facing debt problems "have long-dreaded IMF conditions on lending, including strict limits on government outlays and privatizing assets." However, "while Georgieva still urges governments to 'spend wisely,' the emphasis is now very much on the spending," Georgieva added, "Spend as much as you can, and then spend a bit more for your doctors, for your nurses, for the vulnerable people in your society."

Reuters (5/15, Shalal, Lawder) reported Georgieva also told the event "that the crisis was devastating the global economy, but it also offered an opportunity to tackle persistent inequality and other priorities such as climate change, if recovery funds were properly focused." Georgieva said, "I very much hope that the leadership of tech companies will see this as a chance to demonstrate responsible capitalism, responsible behavior." Georgieva also "said that the big winners from the coronavirus pandemic were the digital economy, and providers of e-commerce, e-government and e-learning services," adding that these companies should act in a manner that "is good for everybody for society as a whole. ... It will be extremely important for all of us to watch whether there is further division in access to the internet, to the digital economy."

Kenya Rejects G20 Debt Relief Plan Due To Overly Restrictive Terms.

Reuters (5/15, Miriri) reported Kenya "will not seek a suspension of debt payments under a G20 initiative aimed at helping poor countries weather the COVID-19 pandemic, its finance minister said on Friday, saying the terms of the deal were too restrictive." Minister Ukur Yatani "told Reuters in an interview he was also concerned about the impact that debt relief might have on Kenya's credit rating." Yatani "said he was concerned that terms of the deal limiting countries' access to international capital markets during the standstill could hinder Kenya's ability to finance its deficit later in the year," adding, "We fear we might unnecessarily create a crisis." Kenya "is instead engaging creditor countries including Germany, Sweden, Japan, China and France individually with the goal of securing moratoriums on debt service payments lasting around a year." Yatani said, "We have not concluded (negotiations), but it is progressing well."

Lebanese Food Prices Rising As Economic Crisis Worsens.

The Washington Post (5/16, Dadouch, 14.2M) reported that Lebanon's "escalating economic crisis and its collapsing currency are putting the price of many foodstuffs beyond the reach of the Lebanese." The prices of meat and tomatoes, for example, have doubled since March.

Trump: China "Could Have Stopped" Coronavirus.

The Washington Times (5/17, Muñoz, 492K) reports President Trump said Sunday "that he doesn't want to speak with Chinese President Xi Jinping." During an interview with Fox's Maria Bartiromo, Trump said that despite his frustrations "he still has a good relationship with the Chinese president and doesn't plan to renegotiate the massive $250 billion trade deal they secured back in January."

Trump told Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (5/17, 1.77M), "We have a lot of information, and it's not good, but you know the worst of all – whether it came from the lab or came from the bats – it all came from China, and they should have stopped it. They could have stopped it at that source. Right there."

Navarro Accuses China Of Using Air Travelers To "Seed" Virus. Bloomberg (5/17, Geimann, 4.73M) reports the Administration "stepped up its campaign of blaming China for the deadly coronavirus pandemic," with White House trade adviser Navarro "suggesting Beijing sent airline passengers to spread the infection worldwide." On ABC's This Week (5/17, 2.81M), Navarro said, "The virus was spawned in Wuhan province, patient zero was in November. The Chinese, behind the shield of the World Health Organization, for two months hid the virus from the world and then sent hundreds of thousands of Chinese on aircraft to Milan, New York and around the world to seed that."

ABC News (5/17, 2.97M) reports Navarro "accus[ed] the country of hiding the virus from the world and subsequently taking down the American economy," but "stopped short of claiming the it was the Chinese's intention to harm the American economy."

Chinese Official Confirms Beijing Ordered Labs To Destroy Coronavirus Samples. The Daily Caller (5/17, Hasson, 716K) reports that a "senior Chinese government official confirmed Friday that authorities ordered laboratories to destroy samples of coronavirus in early January." Liu Dengfeng, an official at China's National Health Commission, "conceded at a briefing on Friday that the agency had ordered the labs to destroy the samples, but said that the order was given for safety reasons." Liu said, "If the laboratory conditions cannot meet the requirements for the safe preservation of samples, the samples should be destroyed on the spot or transferred to a professional institution for safekeeping."

Kennedy: Trump First US President To Stand Up To China. Sen. John Kennedy (R-LA), on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (5/17, 1.77M), said, "God created the world, but everything else is made in China. How did that happen? We let it. We allowed China to be admitted to the World Trade Organization on December 11, 2001. China started cheating December 12, and President Trump has been the first President to really stand up to them."

Collins: Congress Will Give Trump Tools To Sanction China. Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA), on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (5/17, 1.74M), said, "China has a problem and the problem is they can't be honest with themselves and honest with the international community so we're going to put it to give the President a way to sanction and not tie his hands but give him every tool in the tool box to get them to compete in a way that is fair in the international market and if they don't then fine they will suffer the consequences for it."

China Threatens To "Hit Back" At Lawmakers Seeking Sanctions. The Washington Times (5/17, Dinan, 492K) reports China is "lashing out at American lawmakers who are seeking to have the country face accountability in US courts for the coronavirus, according to a government-controlled newspaper that reported that Beijing is ready to 'hit back' with its own sanctions." China is "suggesting it could halt investments in states represented by those who attempt to blame China for the virus that originated in Wuhan." At least four members of Congress "will be put on China's sanctions list," the Global Times reported, citing "sources close to the matter."

Trump Campaign Asks Whether Biden Offered China Something In Exchange For Son's Deal. On Twitter last night, President Trump shared a post from the Trump Campaign, which wrote, "Joe Biden's deadbeat son Hunter inked a $1.5 BILLION deal with China while Joe was Vice President. What did the Biden's offer China in return?" Trump added, "Enjoy the campaign Joe!"

China Continues Testing Wuhan Residents. The CBS Weekend News (5/17, story 4, 1:40, Gianola, 2.93M) reported, "Health workers in Wuhan have begun testing its 11 million inhabitants after a limited new outbreak last week. The goal is to find and isolate asymptomatic carriers before they can start a new wave. This massive testing program should also give the authorities in Wuhan some idea of what proportion of their inhabitants have been exposed to the virus and therefore have some immunity."

Sources: Trump Leaning Toward Preserving Total Funding Cut To WHO.

Jonathan Swan reports for Axios (5/17, Swan, 521K) that according to three unnamed sources, President Trump is "leaning toward preserving his total funding cut for the World Health Organization after being on the brink of announcing he'd restore partial funding." However, a fourth source, "a senior administration official, cautioned that the decision-making was fluid and was still subject to change." Trump spent the weekend at Camp David "with some of his closest Republican allies in the House," and a "source familiar with the private discussions" said House members pressed Trump "to not give a dime to WHO."

WHO Envoy Warns Pandemic Will Worsen Without Unified Global Plan.

NBC Nightly News (5/17, story 5, 2:05, Snow, 259K) reported on "a new warning from the World Health Organization" that "without a coordinated plan, the virus could return with ferocity in places already hit." The WHO's David Navarro, "This virus will just come back. It will come back very loudly. Roaring. And it will cause further, further distress." NBC (Simmons) added Navarro "says without a unified global plan, the pandemic will only get worse. ... The new warning comes as the US is set to pull an estimated $300 million from the global organization." Navarro: "I just wish the political leaders could understand now is not the time to do this. Don't threaten the organization. Don't take away its money. Don't demonize it. Instead, give us the space to do the work that has to be done."

Global Race To Develop Coronavirus Vaccine Continues.

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Loftus, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on the ongoing race to develop a coronavirus vaccine with many governments, pharmaceutical companies, and other parties competing against each other.

British, Italian PMs: World Cannot Wait For Vaccine. The AP (5/17, Barry) reports Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte and British Prime Minister Boris Johnson "told their citizens that the world needs to adapt to living with the coronavirus and cannot wait to be saved by the development of a vaccine." Conte, who "is allowing restaurants, bars and beach facilities to open" today, said, "We are facing a calculated risk, in the awareness...that the epidemiological curve could go back up. ... We are confronting this risk, and we need to accept it, otherwise we would never be able to relaunch." Johnson also "speculated Sunday that a vaccine may not be developed at all, despite the huge global effort to produce one."

UK Sees Lowest Daily Increase In Death Toll Since March.

Reuters (5/17, Holden) reports "the number of people who have died in the United Kingdom after testing positive for COVID-19 rose by 170 to 34,636, business minister Alok Sharma said on Sunday, the lowest increase in the official death toll since March 24."

France's Death Toll Tops 28,000.

Reuters (5/17, Vidalon) says French health authorities "reported 483 new coronavirus deaths on Sunday, bringing the total to 28,108." The health ministry said the number of people in hospitals "fell to 19,361 from 19,432 on Saturday and the number of people in intensive care units dropped to 2,087 from 2,132 on Saturday."

Greece Reopening After Reporting Just 163 Deaths.

ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 7, 1:50, Llamas, 5.48M) reported, "Greece is emerging as Europe's unlikely hero on the battle against coronavirus. As its lockdown eases, its ancient sites prepare to reopen. The Parthenon will welcome local visitors again from tomorrow. But a modern miracle, its numbers. With nearly 11 million people, Greece has reported just 163 deaths and more than 2,800 cases." However, "major tests lie ahead: this is the first weekend Greeks have been allowed back onto the beach."

Brazil Surpasses Italy, Spain As Cases Surge.

Fox News (5/17, Aitken, 27.59M) reports Brazil has "now overtaken Spain and Italy in total confirmed coronavirus cases to become the world's fourth hardest-hit country during the pandemic." Brazil's Health Ministry announced "14,919 new confirmed cases on Saturday, bringing its total to 233,142 – fourth-most after the United States, Russia and the United Kingdom." Nationwide testing in Brazil, however, "lags far behind Europe, meaning the virus could be more widespread than what the numbers actually represent."

"Express Burials" Fuel Speculation Nicaragua Hiding Extent Of Pandemic.

The Washington Post (5/17, Ocampo, Sheridan, 14.2M) reports so-called "express burials" are becoming increasingly common in Nicaragua, "raising suspicions that the authoritarian government is trying to hide the extent of the coronavirus tragedy within its borders."

Khamenei: Americans To Be Expelled From Iraq And Syria.

Reuters (5/17, Dehghanpisheh) reports Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei said Sunday that Americans will be expelled from Iraq and Syria, according to his official website. Khamenei is quoted as saying, "The Americans won't stay in Iraq and Syria and will be expelled."

Ghani, Abdullah Strike Power-Sharing After Months-Long Stalemate.

Reuters (5/17, Sediqi, Shalizi) reports Afghan President Ashraf Ghani and "his rival" Abdullah Abdullah signed a power-sharing deal to end a months-long political stalemate, Ghani's spokesman said on Sunday, "a step that could smooth efforts to end the country's long-running war." Abdullah had "disputed the results of an election in September and announced the formation of a parallel government earlier this year, undermining Ghani's administration." Secretary of State Pompeo "welcomed the agreement but chided Ghani and Abdullah for taking so long."

The Washington Post (5/17, Hassan, George, 14.2M) reports that under the terms of the deal signed Sunday, Ghani will remain in his post as president while Abdullah "will lead peace negotiations with the Taliban and appoint half of the country's cabinet ministers." Also part of the deal, "controversial former vice president and former warlord, Abdurrashid Dostum will be promoted to the position of marshal and gain a seat on the national security council," Afghan officials said.

A Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial welcomes Sunday's deal and expresses hope it will bring the Taliban back to the negotiating table.

Pompeo Warns China Against Threats To "Interfere" With US Journalists In Hong Kong.

The Washington Examiner (5/17, Becker, 448K) reports Secretary of State Pompeo "issued a warning to China over threats to interfere with the reporting of U.S. journalists in Hong Kong." In a statement, Pompeo said, "It has recently come to my attention that the Chinese government has threatened to interfere with the work of American journalists in Hong Kong. These journalists are members of a free press, not propaganda cadres, and their valuable reporting informs Chinese citizens and the world." Pompeo added, "Any decision impinging on Hong Kong's autonomy and freedoms as guaranteed under the Sino-British Joint Declaration and the Basic Law would inevitably impact our assessment of One Country, Two Systems and the status of the territory."

After Delays, Israel Swears In Netanyahu-Led Government.

Reuters (5/17, Heller) reports Israel's parliament on Sunday approved Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's new unity government, "ending more than a year of political deadlock, but he still faces a trial starting next week for alleged corruption." The move also "opens the way for Netanyahu to proceed towards a pledged annexation of parts of the occupied West Bank."

The New York Times (5/17, Halbfinger, 18.61M) reports the new government pairs Netanyahu "with his erstwhile challenger, the centrist former army chief Benny Gantz," who holds the new title of "alternate prime minister," a "veto over most major decisions, control over half the government's ministries and an agreement to switch positions with Mr. Netanyahu on Nov. 17, 2021."

The AP (5/17, Heller) reports that over the weekend, both Netanyahu and Gantz "announced their appointments for the new government — the most bloated in Israeli history with an expected 36 Cabinet ministers and 16 deputies." The Washington Post (5/17, Eglash, 14.2M) says the power-sharing deal "could spare Israelis another round of elections for at least three years, but could also hamper its ability to function."

Chinese Ambassador Found Dead At Home In Israel. The New York Times (5/17, Halbfinger, Rasgon, 18.61M) reports China's ambassador to Israel, "who took up his post in February, was found dead at his home on Sunday morning in a coastal suburb north of Tel Aviv, officials said." Ambassador Du Wei was "found in his bed in Herzilya by an embassy worker, officials said," but the cause of death "was not immediately clear."

Egypt Arrests Prominent Journalist During Interview.

The Washington Post (5/17, Raghavan, 14.2M) reports Egyptian security forces arrested “a prominent Egyptian journalist on Sunday as she interviewed the mother of a political prisoner outside Cairo’s Tora Prison, the latest attack on press freedom by the government of President Abdel Fatah al-Sissi.” Lina Attalah, the editor in chief of “one of the country’s few remaining independent media outlets, was taken into custody Sunday afternoon as she tried to speak with Laila Soueif,” who imprisoned son, Alaa Abdel Fattah, is on a hunger strike. Attalah was questioned by prosecutors and “ordered released on about $125 bail.”

Pace Of Mortgages Going Into Forbearance Seems To Be Slowing.

CNBC (5/15, Olick, 3.62M) said, “Borrowers are piling into government and private lender mortgage relief programs, but the pace is finally slowing.” According to DS News (5/15, Welborn), nearly 9 percent of “active mortgage loans” are “in forbearance as of this week, according to the latest data from Black Knight’s McDash Flash.” That implies the number of homeowners in forbearance now stands at 4.7 million, an increase from the “4.5 million loans reported one week ago.” However, Black Knight’s data indicates “that the pace of loans entering forbearance appears to be on a downward trend.” DS News also said that “the total unpaid principal balance on loans in forbearance is $1 trillion,” adding that “servicers must continue to advance principal and interest payments along with tax and insurance payments on behalf of these loans.” Black Knight “noted that the Federal Housing Finance Agency will cap principal and insurance payments at four months for loans backed by the GSEs. However, this still amounts to $8.8 billion in advances to cover GSE loans currently in forbearance.”

HousingWire (5/15, 23K) said, “Broken out by investor type, loans backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac account for 7% of mortgages in forbearance, while loans backed the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration account for 12.4%”

Business Insider Highlights Questions To Ask Mortgage Lender When Payments Must Be Deferred Amid Pandemic.

Business Insider (5/16, Tarpley, 3.67M) presents questions for one’s mortgage lender when one must defer payments amid the coronavirus pandemic. One question is, “Is deferment even an option?” According to Business Insider, “If you have a government-backed loan through Freddie Mac, Fannie Mae, FHA, USDA, or VA, you should be able to request up to 180 days of forbearance – and then ask for another 180-day extension if you’re still financially struggling after your initial deferral period.”

Business Insider Presents Questions To Ask One’s Self Regarding Where Money Should Be Directed First During Crisis. In a separate piece, Business Insider (5/16, Loudenback, 3.67M) presents “five questions to ask yourself to figure out where your money should go first” during times of crisis. One question asks as to whether one’s current income is enough to pay for basic living expenses. Business Insider says to request payments assistance on bills if that’s not the case. The news outlet adds, “If you’re a homeowner with a federally backed mortgage, you have the right to ask your lender to defer your payments for up to 12 months. If your loan is from Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, you have options for when and how you want to repay those suspended payments.”

Banking Regulators Loosen Leverage Requirement.

Reuters (5/15, Schroeder) reported, “U.S. banking regulators announced on Friday they were temporarily easing a leverage requirement for depository institutions by allowing banks to ignore certain safer assets and continue lending.” With the move, banks now have “the option of excluding holdings in Treasury securities of deposits held at the Federal Reserve from calculating their ‘supplemental leverage ratio,’ which directs larger banks to hold more capital against their assets.”

Wade’s Nomination To Be Assistant Secretary Of HUD Drawing Applause.

DS News (5/15, Albanese) reports Dana Wade’s “nomination as the next Assistant Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development” is drawing praise. Housing Policy Council President Ed Demarco said, “Her past experience and tenure as Acting Federal Housing Commissioner and General Deputy Assistant Secretary for the Office of Housing will allow her to hit the ground running.” Demarco “added that upon full Senate confirmation, Wade is expected to continue the ‘important enhancements’ enabling FHA and mortgage servicers to continue servicing borrowers through COVID-19.” DS News adds that the Manufactured Housing Association for Regulatory Reform (MHARR) “sent a letter to the Senate Banking Committee pledging its support of Wade.”

Trump Dismisses State Department’s Inspector General, Who Was Previously IG Of FHFA.

The Washington Post (5/16, Rucker, Deyoung, Rein, Knowles, 14.2M) reports President Trump “accelerated his retaliatory purge of public servants by firing the State Department’s inspector general, who had played a minor role in the president’s impeachment proceedings and was said to have begun investigating alleged misconduct by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo." The Post adds that Trump, "acting on Pompeo's recommendation," terminated Linick on Friday, replacing him "with Stephen J. Akard, a trusted ally of Vice President Pence and the diplomat who directs the Office of Foreign Missions." Linick's past experience includes having been inspector general of the Federal Housing Finance Agency.

Morningstar Agrees To Pay $3.5M To Settle SEC Charges Regarding Alleged Conflict Of Interest Violations.

Reuters (5/15, Prentice) reported, "Morningstar Credit Ratings LLC has agreed to pay $3.5 million to settle U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission charges that it violated a conflict of interest rule, the agency said in a statement on Friday." The SEC "said that credit rating analysts of the Morningstar Inc unit who were dedicated to asset-backed securities also engaged in sales and marketing to prospective clients from mid-2015 to September 2016. The SEC said it found that the New York-based firm failed to maintain written policies and procedures that sufficiently separated the business development from analytical activities."

Some Homeowners Can't Take Advantage Of Benefit Available To Homeowners With Government-Backed Mortgages.

The New York Times (5/15, Bernard, 18.61M) said small business owner Edith Duran was permitted to halt her mortgage "payments for three months starting in early April, but the company that handles her mortgage made a seemingly impossible request: Pay back the $4,450 in skipped payments on July 1." While federal officials have enabled "borrowers with government-backed mortgages to suspend their payments for up to a year without immediately paying it back," roughly "30 percent of homeowners with mortgages are like Ms. Duran. Their loans are owned by banks or private investors and are not governed by the same rules." Among other news outlets reporting was Inside Mortgage Finance (5/15, Subscription Publication).

Report Sees Trend Of Homes Listed Since Coronavirus Pandemic Started Being Priced At Discounts.

HousingWire (5/15, 23K) reports that roughly 25 percent of "home sellers who listed their homes for sale since the outbreak of the coronavirus pandemic has priced them at discounts below pre-pandemic price levels, according to a new report from Weiss Analytics." The decreased prices are resulting in "market conditions that are more appealing to buyers." Weiss Analytics CEO Allan Weiss said, "These higher discounts for more expensive homes and current relative strength for lower-priced houses is significant," adding, "The implosion of the non-QM mortgage market is contributing to softer demand and more discounting by sellers at these higher price levels."

Landlords Threaten To Withhold Property Tax Payments As "Rent Strikes" Pop Up.

Real Deal \(NY\) (5/15, 124K) reported that the emergence of "rent strikes" around the country is prompting property owners to lobby for halts on property tax and mortgage payments. According to the Real Deal, some "even threatened to withhold property tax payments to put counter pressure on elected officials." While housing advocates argue that the CARES Act's relief "doesn't go far enough, real estate groups counter that little has been done for landlords, who have temporarily lost the ability to evict tenants in several states including New York, Florida, California, Pennsylvania and Colorado."

NAR Announces New Policy Addressing MLS Loophole.

HousingWire (5/15, 23K) reported, "The National Association of Realtors Board of Directors approved a new policy in Friday's board meeting, requiring MLSs to provide brokers with data feeds of their own listing content when requested." The policy "takes effect on Jan. 1, 2021, but according to NAR, MLSs could implement the policy earlier if they choose."

Wells Fargo Announces $175M Commitment To Housing Nonprofits.

According to M Report (5/17, Albanese), "Wells Fargo announced that it has provided funding for more than 500 nonprofits across the nation, as part of the Wells Fargo Foundation's $175 million commitment to keep people in their homes during the COVID-19 pandemic. More than 300 grants have been made since March to assist with urgent housing services for vulnerable populations." Wells Fargo Vice Chairman of Public Affairs Bill Daley said, "These grants for nonprofits across the U.S. will provide a critical safety net to help keep people housed and are part of our philanthropic focus to bring solutions to address housing security, small business stability, and consumer financial health."

Ted Tozer Sees Promise In Private Sector Of Mortgage Market Going Forward.

National Mortgage Professional (5/15) interviewed the Ted Tozer, senior fellow for the Milken Institute Center for Financial Markets and former head of Ginnie Mae. Tozer discussed "the current state of mortgage banking, why there could be a reduction in FHA and VA lending and the amount of lending to people with lower credit scores, the trouble with liquidity, why private-label securities need an overhaul," and more. According to NMP, "Tozer said there are a few options in talks to help the independent mortgage bankers. He questioned whether or not they can become an entity like American Express or Discover, where they do online deposits guaranteed by the FDIC or give them access to the Federal Bank system to borrow funds if they find themselves in financial difficulty. He believes that mortgage banking will be dominated by private sector companies that don't have any kind of support from the government at all."

NMHC's Rent Payment Tracker Shows Rent Payments Are Mostly Being Made.

The Denver Post (5/16, 720K) reports that despite the economic impact stemming from COVID-19, the National Multifamily Housing Council's (NMHC) Rent Payment Tracker "estimates 87.7% of apartment households made a full or partial rent payment for May as of May 13, based on a survey of 11.4 million professionally-managed apartment units across the country." Moreover, a survey from the Colorado Apartment Association indicates "Colorado apartment tenants are current at an even higher rate," with that survey having determined "that 88.8% of renters had paid something as of May 5."

Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency Report: Concern About Housing Affordability Growing.

National Mortgage Professional (5/15) reports a study by the Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency indicates concern regarding housing affordability is increasing among state residents. National Mortgage Professional also says the report determined "that this is especially true for low-income households and minorities who are disproportionately burdened by the cost of housing." PHFA Executive Director and CEO Robin Wiessmann said, "We are making this report public so that other public and private sector organizations can benefit from its insights."

More Than 90% Of Funds Meant To Help Arizonans With Rent Sitting Unused.

The Arizona Republic (5/15, 869K) reports Arizona Department of Housing data indicates that less than 400 renters in the state have gotten "money from an emergency state program designed to help people hurt economically by COVID-19 to stay in their homes." As such, 92 percent of the funding is "sitting unused while a record number of Arizonans are out of work and some struggle to pay rent." The Republic also provides several pieces of advice for people unable to pay their rent, among which is asking one's landlord whether their mortgage is federally supported. Should that be the case, "the property owner can receive assistance from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac in exchange for not evicting tenants" the COVID-19 breakout has adversely affected.

Demos: Investors Must Deal With Ramifications Upon Financial Firms Of Unmade Mortgage Payments.

In a Wall Street Journal (5/15, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column, Telis Demos said Congress provided homeowners with a government-backed mortgage the ability to halt monthly payments in the event they encounter hardship. However, not enough time has passed to tell whether the move by Congress will avoid a surge of defaults, and Demos adds that investors must contend with what millions of unmade payments entail for financial companies in the mortgage sector. Demos also says that Fannie Mae's and Freddie Mac's regulator indicated in April that servicers would have to advance no more than four months of payments, with Fannie and Freddie funding missed payments after that.

Analysis: Solution For Addressing "COVID-19 Related Hardships" Fails To "Address Long-Term Affordability."

A HousingWire (5/15, 23K) analysis said that "the tail of this pandemic won't look like a short-term disaster. The shadow and timeline for addressing COVID-19 related hardships will be measured in years, not months, especially with the FHFA's current approach to offer short-term relief options and deferral of forbearance payments." HousingWire added, "The solution offers some relief to servicers planning large staffing campaigns to address expected post-forbearance volume, but it does not address long-term affordability." A superior approach would entail utilizing technology to assess "and offer affordable payments, encourage continued payment behavior during the hardship, and gradually step the borrower up to scheduled payments."

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (5/18, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.644 percent.

Dollar Stays Firm.

Reuters (5/18, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar held its ground on Monday as concern about global tensions with China overshadowed improving sentiment from easing coronavirus lockdowns, while talk of negative interest rates pushed the pound to an almost two-month low." The dollar "was a touch firmer against the rangebound Japanese yen at 107.25 yen per dollar as Japan slipped into recession for the first time since 2015." The greenback was "flat against a basket of currencies at 100.380."

Gold Rises To Highest In More Than Seven Years.

Reuters \(UK\) (5/18, Aranya) reports, "Gold rose 1% on Monday to its highest in more than seven years as dismal U.S. data underscored how badly the COVID-19 pandemic has damaged the world's top economy, while palladium soared over 9% on better-than-expected demand outlook." Spot gold "was up 1% at $1,759.13 per ounce by 0708 GMT, after rising to its highest since Oct. 12, 2012 at $1,764.46 earlier." US gold futures "gained 0.9% to $1,772.70."

Oil Gains More Than $1.

Reuters (5/18, Tan) reports, "Oil prices climbed by more than $1 a barrel on Monday, supported by output cuts and signs of a gradual recovery in demand amid easing coronavirus curbs, with U.S. oil showing no signs of last month's contract expiry price rout." Brent crude "was up $1.33, or 4.1%, at $33.83 a barrel by 0634 GMT, after touching its highest since April 13." West Texas Intermediate crude "was up $1.65, or 5.6%, at $31.08 a barrel, after rising to its highest since March 16," while the "more active July contract CLc2 was at $31.05, up $1.53."

Cybersecurity

Celebrity Law Firm Targeted By Hackers Says Trump Was Never A Client.

The Hill (5/17, Bowden, 2.98M) reports Grubman, Shire, Meiselas & Sacks, PC, "the celebrity law firm targeted by a hacking group with a $42 million ransom demand said Sunday that it had no previous relationship with President Trump after the hackers threatened to release damaging information on Trump and others." A spokesperson for the firm "told CNN that the firm had never listed Trump among its list of high-profile clients, which include names behind top brands such as Vera Wang and Tommy Hilfiger."

The Hill (5/15, Seipel, 2.98M) reported in a previous article that the hackers "claimed in a post to the dark web on Friday that it had obtained documents on President Trump, and is threatening to release them and other hacked documents unless it receives a $42 million ransom." The hackers "are using ransomware attacks in which they lock up a network and demand payment to return access to systems and documents."

Forbes (5/15, 9.71M) contributor Davey Winder the "notorious" ReVIL hacking group "has claimed to have 'dirty laundry' on President Trump and has threatened to publish it next week if one of the biggest cyber-ransoms ever isn't paid." The group, "also known as Sodinokibi, has a long and inglorious history of attacks, including the devastating one against Travelex."

Wired (5/17, Barrett, 3.49M) reports last week the group "claimed to have stolen 756 gigabytes of data, and demanded a $21 million ransom to restore order." The firm refused to pay, and "REvil not only doubled the ransom to $42 million, but leaked what it says are 2.4 GB worth of Lady Gaga's legal documents." The group "also said they had 'dirty laundry' on Donald Trump, that they would release in a week if they weren't paid. Trump has apparently never been a GSMS client, though, making it entirely possible or even likely that REvil is bluffing." Also reporting are Fox News (5/15, 4.57M), NBC News (5/15, 6.14M), CNBC (5/15, 3.62M), and SFGate (CA) (5/15, 898K).

Texas Department Of Transportation Hit By Ransomware Attack.

The AP (5/17) reports the Texas Department of Transportation "has become the second part of the state government to be hit by a ransomware attack in recent days." The department said on its website that "some features are unavailable due to technical difficulties, but it is not clear what functions were affected by the attack." The agency was hacked "days after another ransomware attack took down the websites and case management systems of Texas' appellate and high courts. The courts and transportation agency both said they are working with the FBI to investigate."

Russian Rapper Turned Cybercriminal Profiled.

BBC World News (UK) (5/17, 3.28M) reports on the case of Maksim Boiko, a Russian rapper known as Plinofficial, who is in court in Pennsylvania on cybercrimes charges. The piece describes Boiko's career, saying he "fell into the hands of the FBI who had been studying his work and Instagram photos." The FBI says the Boiko "took up computer and banking fraud" in St. Petersburg. "They believe the rapper, who complained on social media that he kept forgetting to log out of his accounts on other people's computers, was turning into a significant cybercriminal."

FBI Reports Uptick In Number Of Child Sexual Extortion Cases.

The Paducah (KY) Sun (5/17, 58K) reports, "The FBI is reporting a significant increase in activity involving sexual extortion, also called sextortion," defining it as "a federal crime where an adult coerces a child to send them sexually explicit photographs over the internet." The piece reports that during the pandemic, children are online more, and quotes retired FBI Special Agent Scott Augenbaum saying, "Even before this happened, it was challenging to oversee what your children were doing."

TFI/Sanctions

Five Iran Tankers Sail To Venezuela In Circumvention Of US Sanctions.

The AP (5/17, Gambrell) reports that five Iranian tankers "likely carrying at least $45.5 million worth of gasoline and similar products are now sailing to Venezuela, part of a wider deal between the two US-sanctioned nations." The move comes after Venezuela's Nicolás Maduro "already turned to Iran for help in flying in chemicals needed at an aging refinery amid a gasoline shortage, a symptom of the wider economic and political chaos gripping" the nation.

Reuters (5/17, Dehghanpisheh), meanwhile, reports that Iran "summoned the Swiss ambassador, who represents US interests in the Islamic Republic, over possible measures Washington could take against an Iranian fuel shipment to Venezuela, the Mehr news agency reported." A senior Administration official "told Reuters on Thursday the United States was considering measures it could take in response to Iran's shipment of fuel to crisis-stricken Venezuela." Iran's Deputy Foreign Minister Abbas Araqchi "passed on a message to the ambassador on Sunday warning against any US threat against the Iranian tankers, according to a report on the foreign ministry website." Fox News (5/17, Aitken, 27.59M) also reports.

Senate Passes Bill Urging Sanctions On China Over Xinjiang Human Rights Violations.

The Hill (5/15, Pitofsky, 2.98M) reported the Senate last week "passed legislation urging President Trump to issue sanctions against those responsible for China's actions against its Uighur Muslim minority as the president and his GOP allies have ramped up pressure on China over its handling of the coronavirus." The legislation "introduced by Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) calls for the Trump administration to issue sanctions over the 'gross human rights violations' against Uighurs and other Muslim groups in the country." The bill "would condemn the internment of Uighurs and other Muslim groups in China's Xinjiang region and call for the country to close the camps." Rubio said in a statement, "The Chinese Government and Communist Party's systematic, ongoing efforts to wipe out the ethnic and cultural identities of Uyghurs and other Muslim minorities in Xinjiang is horrific and will be a stain on humanity should we refuse to act."

Federal Reserve

Powell Suggests Full Economic Rebound From Lockdowns May Take Until End Of 2021.

The New York Times (5/17, Smialek, 18.61M) reports "Jerome H. Powell, the Federal Reserve chair, said that the United States would have a slow recovery from what he called the 'biggest shock that the economy's had in living memory,' suggesting that a full rebound from virus-induced lockdowns could take until the end of 2021." During "an interview on '60 Minutes,' the CBS program, Mr. Powell reiterated that both Congress and the central bank may need to do more to help workers and businesses make it through the sudden and sharp slump caused by efforts to contain the coronavirus." Powell said, "This economy will recover; it may take a while. ... It may take a period of time, it could stretch through the end of next year, we really don't know."

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Powell said it is reasonable to predict that the country's unemployment rate would continue to increase through June and then start to drop as more businesses open once more.

The AP (5/17, Rugaber) reports "Powell expressed optimism Sunday that the U.S. economy can begin to recover from a devastating recession in the second half of the year, assuming the coronavirus doesn't erupt in a second wave." However, "he suggested that a full recovery won't likely be possible before the arrival of a vaccine."

The Hill (5/17, Lane, 2.98M) reports "Powell added that a full recovery would depend how soon people could feel confident gathering in close spaces, which may take until an effective COVID-19 vaccine is widely available." He also "acknowledged Sunday that the U.S. gross domestic product (GDP) would shrink at an annualized rate of close to 30 percent between April and June with the unemployment rate rising to nearly 25 percent."

Bloomberg (5/17, Bull, 4.73M), CBS News (5/17, 3.68M), CNBC (5/17, Cox, 3.62M), Newsweek (5/17, Zhao, 1.53M), Fox Business (5/17, Henney, 1.73M), BBC News Online (UK) (5/18, 3.28M), The Financial Times (5/17, Fedor, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and Reuters (5/17, Schneider) also report.

Fed Publishes Details Of Loans To Banks In Support Of PPP.

Bloomberg (5/16, Torres, Saraiva, 4.73M) reports the Fed on Saturday "published a spreadsheet of thousands of loans to regional banks in support of the Treasury Department's Paycheck Protection Program to aid small businesses during the Covid-19 pandemic." The PPP "is designed to encourage small businesses to keep workers on their payrolls for eight weeks, while much of the U.S. economy is shuttered to limit virus spread. The result has been historic plunges in sales, manufacturing output and employment, threatening the viability of thousands of enterprises." The Fed, "in an unusual act of fiscal cooperation, is providing banks with cash for the PPP loans to help free up bank balance sheet capacity." The spreadsheet – "published as part of the Fed's effort to be transparent about where virus assistance backed by taxpayer money is going – shows more than 3,000 individual advances by regional Fed banks to almost 600 lenders located across the nation."

Rubin: Powell, Unique Among Trump Appointees, Showing Independence Needed Amid Crises.

In her column for The Washington Post (5/17, 14.2M), Jennifer Rubin says the "temptation for President Trump's appointees is to engage in happy talk, amplifying the president's lies, exaggerations and wishful thinking. It is not easy to deliver bad news in an administration unwilling to hear anything but praise." However, Rubin says, Fed Chair Jerome Powell on Wednesday "did his best to level with Congress and the American people: There will be no 'V-shaped' recovery, and we need to spend a whole lot to prevent an even worse recession." Powell "reviewed the extraordinary steps the Fed has already taken, but warned: 'At the Fed, we will continue to use our tools to their fullest until the crisis has passed and the economic recovery is well under way. Recall that the Fed has lending powers, not spending powers.'" Rubin argues

Powell "has demonstrated the role that an independent, far-sighted Federal Reserve can play in steadying the economy in the midst of an economic catastrophe."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

CFPB Accused Of Using Coronavirus Crisis To Advance Pro-Business Agenda.

Politico (5/16, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reports the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau "is relaxing rules designed to shield Americans from abuse during the coronavirus crisis, saying the moves are necessary to give businesses flexibility during the pandemic." However, "lawmakers and consumer advocates charge that the bureau is exploiting the crisis to further a pro-industry agenda. They're demanding that it set aside all rulemaking unrelated to the crisis and take a more forceful stance toward businesses that could use the chaos to rip off consumers." Senate Banking Committee ranking member Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) told Politico, "The CFPB under President Trump has used this pandemic as an excuse to weaken protections for consumers – enabling predatory lending, watering down credit reporting protections and fair lending laws, and making it easier for credit card and debit card companies to rip off their consumers."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Banking Regulators Loosen Leverage Requirement For Big Banks.

Reuters (5/15) reported federal banking regulators "announced on Friday they were temporarily easing a leverage requirement for depository institutions by allowing banks to ignore certain safer assets and continue lending." With the move, banks now have "the option of excluding holdings in Treasury securities of deposits held at the Federal Reserve from calculating their 'supplemental leverage ratio,' which directs larger banks to hold more capital against their assets."

American Banker (5/15, Subscription Publication, 31K) reported the Fed, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. "said the change would allow banks to expand their balance sheets to continue lending to customers and businesses feeling the economic effects from the pandemic." The temporary rule change "will remain in effect until March 31, 2021, but the agencies are also accepting feedback on the rule change for 45 days" after it is published in the Federal Register.

BNN Bloomberg (CAN) (5/15) and Finadium (5/16) provided similar coverage.

Bureau of Engraving and Printing

Paper Money Under Fire As Coronavirus Contamination Threat Pushes Digital Payments.

The Washington Post (5/15, Greenberg, 14.2M) reported paper money's fundamental dirtiness compared with digital transactions has sped up the transition to digital payments amid the coronavirus pandemic. Central banks are quarantining currencies after they return to their countries of origin. In the US, regulators have attempted to remove money from circulation during outbreaks of illness. Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) in a proposal "called for the creation of 'digital dollars' for American citizens and residents," which "would reside in free digital wallets accessible through banks or post offices."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"How Many Covid Deaths? Don't Ask President Trump." A New York Times (5/17, 18.61M) editorial says President Trump and Administration officials "seem to suspect that the number of Covid-19 deaths is being overstated." Debate over the accuracy of the CDC data "has become a hot topic at the White House, according to reporting this week from Axios, to the point that the task force is reassessing the mortality numbers as part of 'a much larger review of data quality issues,' an administration official told The Times." The Times argues that there is "a pressing need for accurate information about the progress of the pandemic. If the White House thinks the death toll is too high and should be adjusted, it owes people an explanation of why it is taking a position contrary to the conclusions of its own public health experts."

Washington Post.

"Will Facebook's Oversight Board Actually Hold The Company Accountable?" In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/17, 14.2M) writes that there are concerns that Facebook's oversight board may just be "a fig leaf of legitimacy that lets it avoid responsibility for controversial calls without actually changing much." In particular, the board currently doesn't deal with content that is not removed despite calls to do so. The Post calls for holding Facebook to expanding removing this limit and calls for the board to bring transparency to "determinations about who can say what" on Facebook, ensuring "those determinations are based on principle rather than profit," and that it applies to "all sorts of speech on Facebook, not just the kind the company chooses."

"Police Jurisdictions Must Do Better At Managing 'Suicide By Cop' Situations." In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/17, 14.2M) calls for police to be "properly trained to deal with" people seeking "suicide by cop." The Police Executive Research Forum created a protocol for such situations, "ground-tested and found to be safe and effective," that includes techniques such as "backing away, creating safe distances and engaging in conversation." In the wake of Finan H. Berhe's fatal shooting by Montgomery County, Maryland Police Sgt. David Cohen, the Post is encouraged that Police Chief Marcus Jones said "the department is looking at implementing the forum's protocol for managing 'suicide by cop' situations."

“The Results Are In. Trump’s Miracle Drug Is Useless.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/15, 14.2M) writes that two large studies indicate that the drug hydroxychloroquine, touted by President Trump and Fox News for fighting COVID-19, “was essentially useless against the virus.” With the drug having gone “into shortage for those who take it for approved uses” after Trump promoted it, the Post calls for the FDA to “revoke the emergency use authorization” for it and for Trump “to use his bully pulpit to tell the American people that his ‘game changer’ was nothing of the sort.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Should Florida Bail Out New York?” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) writes that the federal government should not offer coronavirus aid to states and localities. Citing some statistics about New York and Florida, the Journal argues that the former is in financial difficulty due to mismanagement and union power, that other states are doing well due to good management, and that federal aid would be unfairly forcing the latter to support the former.

“Team Obama’s Unmasking Dodge.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) objects to Obama Administration officials’ answers to questions about the Flynn unmasking, such as former DNI James Clapper’s claim that it was “perfectly legitimate.” The Journal says spying on Trump officials and leaking information to promote a false story about collusion is not legitimate and the public needs to know the complete story of what occurred.

“California Defines Testing Down.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes the University of California of moving towards debasing the value of its degrees by no longer using standardized tests in its admissions. The Journal cites a UC faculty senate report on the value of the tests and attributes the proposed move to progressive criticism of the SAT and ACT, as well as an effort by the UC bureaucracy to gain its desired racial composition of students.

“Hopeful News In Afghanistan.” A Wall Street Journal (5/17, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial welcomes Sunday’s power-sharing deal between Afghan President Ashraf Ghani and rival Abdullah Abdullah and expresses hope it will bring the Taliban back to the negotiating table.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

John Oliver: "It feels like, as time goes on, we're about to find out more clear warning signs the Trump Administration flat-out ignored. I'm assuming we'll eventually learn Trump was personally delivered a report in January titled 'What To Expect When You're Expecting The Coronavirus To Kill 80,000 Americans In Four Months.'"

John Oliver: "Donald Trump posed with a gigantic Space Force flag while standing way too close to someone, referred to a 'super-duper missile,' and called the US 'the leader in space.' He truly has the spirit, brain, appetite, temper, patience, and wit of a child that you hate."

John Oliver: "There's also been a major scandal brewing in Washington surrounding North Carolina Senator and Chair of the Senate Intelligence Committee Richard Burr. ... The FBI seized Burr's cell phone on suspicion he may have used non-public information from coronavirus briefings to dump shares ahead of the market crash. Which, among other things, is a reminder that, at any moment, the FBI could barge into your house and confiscate your phone. So if the photo on your phone's home screen is something you don't want the FBI to see – like, I don't know, let's say a very tasteful image of a hamster in a Speedo – you should change it immediately."

House Approves Extension For Small Business Loan Program, Sends It To Trump.

The New York Times (7/1, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports that on Wednesday, the House “agreed to extend for five weeks a popular pandemic relief loan program for small businesses, sending President Trump legislation to give companies more time to apply for federal help under an initiative created by the stimulus law.” Hours prior to the House backing the legislation, the Senate “unexpectedly” concluded a deal for the extension. This “move to extend the Paycheck Protection Program through Aug. 8, which allows small businesses to secure low-interest loans to help maintain their payrolls, came as Republicans and Democrats remained divided over how much additional federal assistance to provide to businesses and individuals affected by the coronavirus and the economic hardship it has caused.” Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin “told lawmakers on Tuesday that he had been discussing the possibility of repurposing the funds left in the program for businesses whose revenues had dropped significantly, such as restaurants and hotels.”

CNN (7/1, Mattingly, 83.16M) reports, “The House passage completes a whirlwind several days for a program that was all but certain to shutter until bipartisan negotiations were sparked in the US Senate on Tuesday afternoon.” For most of “Wednesday, House Democrats also debated how to handle the extension, with some pushing for additional changes to the program, according to several aides involved in the discussions.” The AP (7/1, Taylor) reports Mnuchin and Senate Small Business Chair Marco Rubio (FL) “want to re-purpose the money in a way that’s more targeted for businesses suffering during the upswing in cases.”

USA Today (7/1, King, 10.31M) reports that this “extension came on the same day that House lawmakers were taking the Small Business Administration to task for another program designed to rescue mom-and-pop firms following the social distance guidelines instituted after the coronavirus landed on U.S. shores.”

Among other news outlets covering the story are the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Andrews, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Bloomberg (7/1, House, Wasson, 4.73M), The Hill (7/1, Moreno, 2.98M), and NPR (7/1, Neuman, 3.12M).

Treasury To Acquire 30% Of Trucking Company For $700M Loan In “Unusual Deal.”

The Washington Post (7/1, Stein, Gregg, 14.2M) reports the Treasury Department announced Wednesday that it will loan $700 million to YRC Worldwide, “a trucking firm that ships military equipment, in exchange for having U.S. taxpayers acquire an almost 30 percent stake in the company.” The Post adds “The U.S. government does not typically take ownership stakes in companies but was given permission to do so by Congress as a way to ensure taxpayer funds are not misspent.” The deal is “the first under a $17 billion loan program approved as part of the broader stimulus by Congress in March.” Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said in a statement, “We are pleased for Treasury to make this loan pursuant to the CARES Act. This loan will enable a critical vendor to the Department of Defense to maintain significant employment while providing appropriate compensation to taxpayers.”

The AP (7/1) reports that, by accepting the loan, YRC is required “to maintain employment levels and limit executive compensation, dividends and share repurchases.” The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the loan will allow YRC to keep about 30,000 trucking jobs and support the military supply chain and 200,000 US businesses. CFO (7/1, Sprouse, 1.19M) reports that in May, YRC “said there was ‘substantial doubt’ it could stay in business without federal help or a ‘meaningful stabilization’ of the economy.” In June, “it said per-day shipments were down 20% during the quarter”

CNN (7/1, Isidore, 83.16M) reports the loan “was also praised by James Hoffa, general president of the Teamsters union, who thanked President Donald Trump, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Congress for the assistance.” Hoffa said in a statement, “They recognized the urgency and acted swiftly to avoid our members’ health benefits from being cut and, in the long term, to protect 24,000 Teamster jobs.”

Reuters (7/1, DiNapoli, Spalding, Herbst-Bayliss) and the Financial Times (7/1, Politi, Indap, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

OECD Head Claims US Remains Committed To Digital Tax Talks Despite Pause Request.

Reuters (7/1, Thomas) reports OECD Secretary General Angel Gurría said Wednesday that the US, in spite of its call to pause, remains committed to global negotiations regarding digital services taxes. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin’s “suggestion last month that a break was needed sparked European concerns about Washington’s commitment to a deal on the first major rewriting of cross-border tax rules in a generation.” Gurría said, “To be clear, contrary to some earlier media reports, the U.S. has not pulled out of the negotiations. ... Indeed, the presence of the U.S. delegation here today, notwithstanding the U.S. request for a delay on pillar one, confirms their ongoing engagement in this important work.” Gurría added, “Pillar two will ensure that a minimum level of tax will be paid, no matter how much clever tax planning is undertaken by multinationals. This is why we need to reach an international agreement, whether partly in October and then later in 2021, or any other possible combination driven by the political agenda.”

Senate Democrats Request FinCEN Briefing On Russian Bounty Intelligence.

The Hill (7/1, Moreno, 2.98M) reports that Democratic Sens. Sherrod Brown (OH), Jack Reed (RI) and Bob Menendez (NJ) are “requesting a briefing on wire transfers intercepted by U.S. intelligence connected to reports of bounties being offered by Russian forces to incentivize Taliban-linked militants to kill U.S. troops in Afghanistan.” The senators – who are “the Democratic ranking members of the Senate Banking, Armed Services and Foreign Relations committees, respectively – are asking to be briefed on the evidence obtained by the Department of the Treasury.” The senators, in a letter Wednesday to FinCEN Director Kenneth Blanco, wrote, “We request to be briefed by you directly within the next two days on these reports, including any intercept evidence developed by Treasury or other US government analysts to which FinCEN has access that would shed light on these allegations.”

Trump Calls Russia Bounty Reports A “Hoax.”

President Trump on Wednesday called media reports of Russia offering bounties to Taliban-linked militants to kill American service members in Afghanistan a “hoax by the newspapers and Democrats” to “slander” him and Republicans. Media reports describe Trump as dismissing and playing down the reports while members of the Administration are portrayed as defending the response to the intelligence and seeking to quiet the controversy over what the President knew and when.

Early Wednesday morning, Trump tweeted, “The Russia Bounty story is just another made up by Fake News tale that is told only to damage me and the Republican Party. The secret source probably does not even exist, just like the story itself. If the discredited @nytimes has a source, reveal it. Just another HOAX!” About an hour later, he tweeted, “‘No corroborating evidence to back reports.’ Department of Defense. Do people still not understand that this is all a made up Fake News Media Hoax started to slander me & the Republican Party. I was never briefed because any info that they may have had did not rise to that level”

In an interview with Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M) Wednesday, Trump said that “we never heard about it because intelligence never found it to be of that level where it would rise to that – when you bring something in to a President, I see many, many things and I’m sure I don’t see many things that they don’t think rose to the occasion. This didn’t rise to the occasion, and from what I hear, and I hear it pretty good, the intelligence people didn’t even – many of them didn’t believe it happened at all. I think it’s a hoax. I think it’s a hoax by the newspapers and the Democrats.”

The Military Times (7/1, Shane, 772K) reports that Trump “dismissed the ongoing scandal,” and The Washington Times (7/1, Meier, 492K) says the Administration “is stepping up its pushback” on the reports. The AP (7/1, Jalonick, Miller, Laporta) says that as Trump “continued to play down the assessments,” his Administration is “stepping up the defense of its response” to them, while Reuters (7/1) reports that Trump “aides tried to quell controversy over what Trump knew and when he knew it.”

Secretary of State Pompeo was asked on Fox News’ Special Report (7/1, 1.53M) if the President should have been told if there was intelligence dealing with bounties on American troops. Pompeo said, “Most intelligence that is read, there is, in fact, a consensus. Almost all analytical product has a consensus across the entire intelligence community. It is often the case that it is not. That happens. When that happens, we need to make sure that we get it right. ... When the intelligence community feels like something rises to the level that needs to get to the President, I am very confident they will consistently present it to him." Asked how damaging the leak of the story was, Pompeo said that "when periodicals report this information, it breaks my heart because it puts our intelligence officers and our military men and women at risk. It is dangerous. It is unlawful, and I hope we can figure out who did it and they'll be brought to justice."

The Washington Post (7/1, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that National Security Adviser O'Brien "disclosed that options had been drawn up to present to Trump on how to respond if the allegations were corroborated." During an interview with Fox News' Fox & Friends, O'Brien "reiterated...that national security officials decided not to present Trump with unverified intelligence regarding Russia's purported plans but indicated that they took the situation seriously enough to prepare options for the president." O'Brien said, "If this eventually becomes something that's proven, or something that we believe, we need to have options for the President to deal with the Russians. I can tell you this, if this information turned out to be true, and now we may never know, but if it turned out to be true, we had options ready to go, and the President was ready to take strong action, as he always is." NBC Nightly News (7/1, story 5, 1:40, Holt, 6.42M) reported that while the White House "has maintained the President was not initially briefed, even though some members of Congress were, because of the credibility of the intelligence," O'Brien "may have muddled that message by saying the Administration was preparing options to respond if necessary." Weijia Jiang of the CBS Evening News (7/1, story 4, 2:05, Garrett, 4.8M) reported that "O'Brien said the raw intelligence was worrisome enough to share with the military." O'Brien: "Even though it wasn't verified, because we were concerned about it, we gave it to US forces."

The Washington Examiner (7/1, Doyle, 448K) reports that O'Brien "said he stands by the decision not to brief President Trump...saying the decision was made by a career, senior spy." Speaking to reporters at the White House, O'Brien said, "The person who decided early on whether the President should be briefed on this in the Oval [Office] intelligence briefing was a career senior servant, a CIA officer, and she made that decision because she didn't have the confidence in the intelligence that came up. ... She made that call, and you know what, she made the right call. And knowing the facts I know now, I stand behind that call."

The Hill (7/1, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports that when O'Brien was asked at the White House about Trump's tweets calling the story a hoax, he said, "I think what is a hoax is the initial reporting, and I believe this was in The New York Times, that the President had been briefed about this unverified and uncorroborated intelligence and chose not to take action on it. ... That was a hoax, and there is no question about it."

The New York Times (7/1, Crowley, Schmitt, 18.61M) reports that O'Brien "said on Fox News that Mr. Trump's C.I.A. briefer, the person who delivers an in-person briefing to him every few days, had not brought it to his attention." O'Brien said, "The President was not briefed, because at the time of these allegations, they were uncorroborated. ... And as a result, the President's career CIA briefer decided not to brief him." The Times says it would be "unusual, if not unprecedented, for intelligence with grave implications to be withheld from the president on the grounds that it lacked definitive consensus." Townhall (7/1, Baumann, 177K) provides similar coverage of O'Brien's comments.

Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 5, 1:00, Llamas, 7.23M) that while Trump called the reports a hoax, "none of his advisers are saying that. The White House Press Secretary this afternoon said the intelligence is still currently being assessed." On Thursday, "the top congressional leaders will be briefed by the President's national security team, including the Director of the CIA, the Director of the NSA." Karl added that "it is unlikely that those officials would be briefing the top congressional leadership about a, quote, hoax."

White House Has No Plans To Respond To Russia Bounty Intelligence. The Washington Post (7/1, Nakashima, Dawsey, Deyoung, Harris, 14.2M) cites "two senior administration sources" who say the White House "is not planning an immediate response to intelligence reports" of the bounties "because President Trump does not believe the reports are true or 'actionable.'" The Post says Trump "is not convinced he should do anything about the bounty issue," and cites an "administration official" who "said there is an internal White House dispute about how much information to declassify to support the president's skepticism of the intelligence." Citing the Post report, the Washington Examiner (7/1, Leonardi, 448K) also reports on the White House's plans.

Republican Lawmakers Defend Trump's Handling Of Russia Intelligence. The Hill (7/1, Bolton, 2.98M) reports that Senate Republicans "are defending" Trump's handling of the intelligence. They "argued that Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee had access to the same intelligence the president did and didn't sound an alarm, implying the recent controversy has a political motive with the election four months away." Sen. Todd Young (R-IN) said "major national newspapers" reported "on unverified and inconclusive intelligence as though it had been conclusively determined that Russia paid bounties on U.S. troops. ... Every single member, Republican and Democrat alike, of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence is aware, should have been aware of the intelligence that I was briefed on. It's long been available." Sens. Joni Ernst (R-IA) and Ron Johnson (R-WI) "both disputed media reports that Russia paid bounties for the targeting of U.S. troops."

Rep. Guy Reschenthaler (R-PA) said on Newsmax TV (7/1, 431K), "The fact that this is so politically expedient for so many people to throw this in the trump administration right now makes me very suspect. Now, if it is true, we have got to look at it. I suspect that if it is true, it probably dates back to when Joe Biden was the Vice President and not when you had the Trump Administration in power. But I am incredibly skeptical when it comes to these claims."

Vespa: NYTimes Story Is "Trash." Matt Vespa writes on Townhall (7/1, 177K) that the New York Times story provides "no details. None. It was an intelligence leak and it's becoming quite clear that it's trash." Vespa adds that the Defense Department "said there was no corroborating evidence. Russia has denied it, even the Taliban has denied the story. When you get this unholy alliance of people saying this story is fake, you'd think the liberal media double-check everything, especially since their track record on Russian collusion during the 2016 election was probably one of the biggest fiascos in recent memory."

NYTimes Analysis: Administration Lacks A Strategy For Pushing Back On Russia. A New York Times (7/1, Sanger, Schmitt, 18.61M) analysis says the "list of Russian aggressions in recent weeks rivals some of the worst days of the Cold War." But, "missing from all this is a strategy for pushing back – old-fashioned deterrence, to pluck a phrase from the depths of the Cold War – that could be employed from Afghanistan to Ukraine, from the deserts of Libya to the vulnerable voter registration rolls in battleground states." While Trump's national security strategy describes Russia as a "'revisionist power' whose efforts to peel away NATO allies and push the United States out of the Middle East have to be countered. But the paper strategy differs significantly from the reality." Trump "rarely talks about Russia strategy other than to say it would be good to be friends. ... So it is little surprise that after three and a half years, there is often hesitation to bring Mr. Trump damning intelligence about Russia."

Politico Analysis: Russia Bounty Revelations Put Focus On Trump's PDB. A Politico (7/1, Bertrand, Cheney, 4.29M) analysis says the "furor" of the Russia bounty revelations "is pulling back the curtain on a highly secretive process that has had to adapt to Donald Trump's whims – the delivery of the President's Daily Brief." Politico describes "a two-tier briefing process: the text of the PDB itself, which Trump isn't known to read, and what the briefer – and more importantly, the president's senior national security aides – chooses to say out loud." According to "former intelligence officials" that is "not how the briefing system normally works – intelligence would not be included in the PDB while simultaneously being too unreliable to brief the president verbally about, because the assumption is that the president will read the PDB."

Officials Say Afghan Distributed Russian Cash To Kill Americans. The New York Times (7/1, Mashal, Schmitt, Rahim, Callimachi, 18.61M) reports that Rahmatullah Azizi, who neighbors and relatives describe as "a lowly drug smuggler," is "a central piece of a puzzle rocking Washington, named in American intelligence reports and confirmed by Afghan officials as a key middleman who for years handed out money from a Russian military intelligence unit to reward Taliban-linked fighters for targeting American troops in Afghanistan, according to American and Afghan officials." US intelligence officials "believe the program is run by Unit 29155, an arm of the Russian military intelligence agency known as the G.R.U." According to US intelligence report, Azizi was "as a key middleman between the G.R.U. and militants linked to the Taliban who carried out the attacks. He was among those who collected the cash in Russia, which intelligence files described as multiple payments of 'hundreds of thousands of dollars.'"

Slotkin Says White House Explanation "Made No Sense." The New York Times (7/1, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports that Rep. Elissa Slotkin (D-MI), "a former White House national security aide and intelligence briefer whose tasks included ensuring that previous presidents were made aware of such potentially momentous reports," said in an interview, "If I had been at the National Security Council under either Bush or Obama, and this had come in, I would have slapped a cover note on top of it, sent it up the chain to the national security adviser and said, 'Sir, I want to flag this. ... There's some conflicting views. But it's important – I think we should flag it for the President ahead of his calls.'" To Slotkin, "the White House's explanation for Mr. Trump's ignorance of the intelligence...made no sense."

Clark: Trump's Inaction On Russia Bounties A "Dereliction Of His Duty." In an op-ed for USA Today (7/1, 10.31M), former NATO Supreme Allied Commander Gen. Wesley Clark writes that he finds it "galling that, as commander in chief of the U.S. armed forces, [Trump] has done nothing despite the fact Russia has put a bounty on U.S. troops in Afghanistan." Clark calls Trump's inaction "unfathomable," a "dereliction of his duty as commander in chief, an abandonment of the troops who depend upon him and a betrayal of leadership."

A USA Today (7/1, 10.31M) editorial is also critical of the President. The editorial asks if Trump has "expressed even an ounce of concern that a foreign leader...might have bought and paid for dead American troops? No." Trump's "first instinct was to tweet that the initial report about bounties was 'another phony ... Russia Hoax.'" USA Today suggests it is "more plausible that while Trump has been busy praising his relationship with Putin and urging that Russia be allowed back into the Group of Seven leading industrial nations...it would be politically damning to admit during a presidential election year that he was aware of Russian perfidy and did nothing?"

Trump Touts "Record Growth In 2nd Quarter," Predicts "Record 2021."

President Trump took to Twitter Wednesday to write, "WOW. Record Growth in 2nd Quarter! Under Corrupt Joe Biden and his MASSIVE Tax and Regulation increases, Markets, and your 401k's, will PLUNGE! Expect a Record 2021!" The New York Post (7/1, Fredericks, 4.57M) recounts "Biden told potential donors to his campaign Monday that his administration would end most of Trump's multitrillion-dollar tax cuts – even though 'a lot of you may not like that,' CNBC reported."

Trump was asked in an interview with Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M) about Biden's calls for taxes on the wealthy and corporate tax increases. Trump said, "I think what happens is if you do that, you are going to crash the market. ... You are going to crash the market. 401(k)s will be down the tubes. The wealth of the country will be down. No, he really wants to just to put it more accurately, he just wants to raise everyone's taxes because they want to spend it on nonsense. They want to spend it on things that don't work. They want to give the money away and I don't think people are going to stand for it." Trump added, "I think that frankly, the stock market is doing well, but it's an overhang. If he got elected, and they say this, if he got elected, that's an overhang over the market because the market would crash, would absolutely crash."

Stocks Finish Mixed. Reuters (7/1, Mikolajczak) reports "the S&P 500 and Nasdaq indexes closed higher on Wednesday to kick off the third quarter as increasing optimism for a safe and effective COVID-19 vaccine eased concerns that another round of business lockdowns was likely." The Dow "fell 77.91 points, or 0.3%, to 25,734.97, the S&P 500 gained 15.57 points, or 0.50%, to 3,115.86 and the Nasdaq Composite added 95.86 points, or 0.95%, to 10,154.63."

ADP: Employers Added 2.37M Jobs Last Month After Adding 3.1M in May.

The Washington Post (7/1, Denham, 14.2M) reports that "according to payroll services firm ADP, the nation's private employers expanded by more than 2.37 million positions in June." ADP "also revised its May figures to show a net gain of 3.1 million jobs instead of the loss of 2.76 million reported last month." The Post adds that the Labor Department's June jobs report "will be released Thursday, a day earlier than usual because of the shortened holiday week." AP (7/1) points out ADP said that "small businesses reported the biggest increase, adding 937,000 jobs. Among industries, construction firms, restaurants and hotels, and retailers posted large gains in hiring." CNBC (7/1, Cox, 3.62M) also reports on its website that "hiring was especially strong in the pivotal leisure and hospitality industry."

The Hill (7/1, Lane, 2.98M) quotes Mark Zandi, chief economist at Moody's Analytics, as saying, "It looks like an economic recovery began in June. ... This reflects rehiring of workers in industries hard hit by the pandemic, including the leisure and hospitality industry, retail, healthcare, construction and manufacturing." To Reuters (7/1, Mutikani), meanwhile, Wednesday's numbers strengthened "views that the labor market and broader economic recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic would be a long slog." The recovery is also "under threat from surging coronavirus cases across large parts of the country, including the densely populated California, Florida and Texas."

Fox Business (7/1, Henney, 1.73M) reports on its website that "the data is typically a good indicator of what to expect in the more closely watched jobs report from the Labor Department, which is predicted to show the US economy added 3 million jobs last month, up from May's gain of 2.509 million, a record high." Fox adds "analysts anticipate unemployment will edge down to 12.3 percent from May's 13.3 percent as the economy gradually starts to recover."

Politico (7/1, Cassella, Rainey, 4.29M) cautions, however, that "Thursday's jobs report will likely look great on paper," but "those numbers are a deceiving bump – with the resurgence of the virus and a fresh wave of shutdowns, the reality of the job market is likely far bleaker."

V-Shaped Economic Recovery Appears To Be Flattening Out.

The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Ip, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the rapid economic rebound seen from mid-April through mid-June appears to have stalled out in the past two weeks. The development may be the result of a reversal in consumer spending in states where coronavirus cases have risen, a weakening of demand that had been sparked by stimulus checks, or a pause in business activity after the first phase of low-risk workplaces were allowed to reopen.

The New York Times (7/1, Tankersley, Casselman, 18.61M) reports it is a "pattern economists have been dreading, and a departure from the 'rocket ship' recovery that President Trump promised in June." According to the Times, "the next few months of recovery could be rocky even if the current infection surge abates." The Times says that "close to half of all those who have lost jobs" are "still out of work, with no immediate prospects for a return."

Fed Officials Raised Concerns In June That Continued Spike In Coronavirus Cases Could Hurt Recovery. The Washington Post (7/1, Siegel, 14.2M) reports, "Federal Reserve officials raised concerns about additional waves of coronavirus infections disrupting an economic recovery and triggering a new spike in unemployment and a worse economic downturn, according to minutes released Wednesday by the central bank about its June 9-10 meeting." Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell has repeatedly stated "that the path out of this recession will depend on containing the virus and giving Americans the confidence to resume normal work and spending habits." But the minutes "from the two-day meeting reveal how interconnected Fed officials view an prolonged economic recession with the pandemic's continued spread."

Trump Says He Backs Additional Direct Payments, Changes To Unemployment Benefits.

CNBC (7/1, Breuninger, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Wednesday, President Trump "said...that he supports another round of direct payments to Americans – and claimed he wants to give out more money than Democrats have already proposed." The Washington Examiner (7/1, Krishan, 448K) reports Trump said during an interview on Fox Business, "I support it, but it has to be done properly. And I support larger numbers actually than the Democrats, but it's got to be done properly."

However, Reuters (7/1, Chiacu) reports Trump "said the structure of the last round of financial aid to struggling Americans created a disincentive for people to return to work." Trump said, "We want to create a very great incentive to work. So, we're working on that and I'm sure we'll all come together." His "remarks indicate the Trump administration will oppose an effort by Democrats in Congress to renew a $600 supplement to weekly jobless benefits set to expire at the end of July that was contained in earlier coronavirus relief legislation."

Politico (7/1, Guida, 4.29M) reports that also on Wednesday, Senate Minority Leader Schumer and Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR) "introduced legislation that would tie enhanced unemployment benefits to joblessness levels in each state, the most prominent effort yet to expand federal policies that kick in automatically during a recession." According to Politico, "Under the bill, the additional $600 a week that jobless workers have been receiving during this economic crisis would be phased out in stages in each state as its unemployment rate drops below 11 percent." The legislation "would also allow Americans out of work to continue getting 13 weeks of extended benefits, provided under the CARES Act, until March 27 of next year," and "would extend unemployment benefits designed for gig workers and others who are not eligible for traditional unemployment insurance until March 2021."

Reuters (7/1) reports that on Tuesday, Senate Majority Leader McConnell "said he supports continuing expanded unemployment insurance benefits during the pandemic but said the size of the $600-per-week payments have discouraged some workers from returning to their jobs.”

Trump Says He Will Release Statement On Minimum Wage In Next Two Weeks. President Trump was asked in an interview with Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M) about plans by states to raise the minimum wage. Trump said, “I’m going to have a statement on minimum wage. I feel differently than a lot of people on minimum wage. Some people in my own party but I will have a statement over the next two weeks on minimum wage. ... I think I’m going to have a very positive statement on minimum wage.”

Reuters (7/1, Beech) reports Trump did not offer details on “what would be in the statement, but Republicans generally have been opposed to increases in the minimum wage.”

Concerns Mount That Coronavirus Surge Could Halt Travel Sector Rebound.

The CBS Evening News (7/1, story 7, 1:50, Garrett, 4.8M) reported “part of a security checkpoint” at Atlanta’s Hartsfield-Jackson was “closed after a TSA agent there tested positive for COVID-19.” CBS’ Kris Van Cleave added, “There is concern soaring COVID cases could halt the travel rebound.” Van Cleave said, “The number of flyers in the US had been on the rise, and airlines expect to see a bump over the Fourth of July weekend, but they are still only averaging about 70 passengers a flight. That is down 75% from last year.”

SoftBank Seeks To Terminate Partnership With Wirecard.

The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Ostroff, Patrick, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports SoftBank is seeking to terminate a five-year partnership with Wirecard under which Softbank was to help Wirecard gain customers and expand in Asia. Softbank helped arrange a $1 billion investment into Wirecard last year, and the German payments company filed for bankruptcy protection last week.

Watchdog Faults FAA’s Handling Of Boeing 737 MAX Issues.

The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Pasztor, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports an investigation by the Transportation Department’s inspector general found the Federal Aviation Administration mishandled Boeing’s 737 MAX safety issues, wasting any opportunity US regulators could have had to prevent the second fatal crash. The watchdog’s report buttresses arguments by FAA critics in Congress who claim agency officials wasted their chance to act expeditiously to prevent the second fatal accident.

USMCA Goes Into Effect Amid Enforcement Questions.

The New York Times (7/1, Swanson, 18.61M) reports that on Wednesday, President Trump’s “promised rewrite of trade terms” between the US, Canada, and Mexico officially took effect. However, “many of the deal’s requirements, like expanding worker rights or opening up the flow of agriculture, have not been fully met,” and “industries as varied as automobiles and agriculture are still struggling to understand recent guidelines from the U.S. government and certify that their products satisfy the trade deal.” Politico (7/1, Rodriguez, 4.29M) also says the USMCA is “far from an assured success,” and “it’s also landing amid rising trade tensions with Canada and widespread concern about Mexico’s ability to enforce labor protections.” According to Politico, “Any economic benefits and job gains are years away.”

Agriculture Secretary Perdue said on Fox News (7/1, 896K) that the USMCA “changes things by leveling the playing field. President Trump knew instinctively, intuitively had for many years, actually, that the trade deals of the United States had almost given away jobs to foreign countries. ... We had the United States multinational corporations taking jobs away from the United States and sending them overseas or south of the border. That didn’t need to happen. This levels that playing field.” The President tweeted a link to an op-ed by Perdue on the USMCA from earlier in the week.

Energy Secretary Brouillette said on the Joe Pags Show (7/1), “This is the most comprehensive trade agreement that’s ever been negotiated. The President stated the very outset of this Administration he was will look out first and foremost for American workers and that’s what he’s done. ... What we have done with USMCA in the case of energy is really strengthen our relationship with both Canada and Mexico. ... What USMCA does is allows us to bring those relationships closer to ensure that our energy industries are more closely connected.” Brouillette was also interviewed on the Larry O’Connor Show (7/1).

Nexstar Media Group (7/1, 13K) showed a clip of USTR Lighthizer saying, “You’re going to see new access on dairy products into Canada. You’re going to see our wheat graded properly. You’re going to see new rules of origin on automobiles with both Mexico and Canada.”

Trump Says He Is “Not Happy” With China.

President Trump was asked in an interview with Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M) if he would make another trade deal with China if he is reelected. Trump said, “I will sort of hold that answer in abeyance. I’m not happy. We made a great deal, but the ink wasn’t dry when we got hit with the plague and the plague came in from China. So I’m not happy.”

Undersecretary of State for Economic Growth, Energy, and the Environment Keith Krach said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (7/1) that China’s “stated doctrine is to seduce with money and to reinforce with intimidation and retaliation.”

Trump Says He Will Veto Defense Bill Over Provision Renaming Military Bases.

The AP (7/1, Taylor) reports President Trump “is vowing to veto a massive defense bill to keep military bases such as Fort Bragg named after Confederate officers, swimming against sentiment in his own party and imperiling a 3% pay raise for the troops." Trump "took to Twitter late Tuesday to threaten a veto of a $741 billion annual Pentagon authorization bill because it would require a host of military bases named after Confederate figures to be renamed within three years." Politico (7/1, Forgey, 4.29M) recalls White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "previously told reporters at a news briefing last month that the president would not sign any legislation that includes provisions to rename the installations that honor Confederate military figures, describing such a bill as an 'absolute nonstarter.'"

The Washington Post (7/1, Bella, 14.2M) says "the measure, which was approved last month in a voice vote by the Republican-led Senate Armed Services Committee, has become a flash point at a time when nationwide protests over racial injustice and police brutality continue in the wake of the police killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis on Memorial Day."

The Washington Times (7/1, Meier, 492K) recounts that "a group of 36 Senate Democrats" led by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "introduced legislation to speed up the timeline to remove Confederate names from military bases and Pentagon assets within one year." However, "the Senate battle has extended beyond just the timing of when to implement the name changes as some Republicans are now seeking to remove any language that would mandate removing the Confederate honors." Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) "issued a counter push to the existing legislation and last week introduced an amendment to the NDAA that would eliminate the mandate and instead tasks a commission to hold public hearings, gather input from military families and veterans, and work with state and local communities to recommend a way forward."

Republicans "Shrug Off" Veto Threat, But McConnell Hopes Trump Will "Reconsider." Under the headline "Senate Republicans Shrug Off Trump's Veto Threat Over Renaming Confederate Bases," Politico (7/1, Desiderio, Levine, 4.29M) describes Senate Republicans as "unfazed Wednesday by... Trump's threat to veto the annual defense policy." Yet "the reactions from GOP senators reflected a political reality this week as the Senate prepares to pass the National Defense Authorization Act: That the provision is unlikely to be stripped from the final bill to placate the president." Senate Armed Services Chairman James Inhofe "acknowledged that it might be difficult to work through the amendment process on the behemoth yearly bill, but he noted that it would be several months before the legislation actually reaches Trump's desk, during which time it could be changed as a result of negotiations between the Senate and House."

Meanwhile, The Hill (7/1, Carney, 2.98M) reports, Senate Majority Leader McConnell "said he hopes... Trump does not veto a mammoth defense bill over" the renaming provisions. Said McConnell, "Well, I would hope the President really wouldn't veto the bill over this issue. ... I hope the President will reconsider vetoing the entire defense bill, which includes pay raises for our troops, over a provision in there that could lead to changing the names." McConnell's comments "are a break with Trump."

House Panel Approves Amendment Banning Use Of Confederate Flag On DOD Property. The New York Post (7/1, Fredericks, 4.57M) reports "the House Armed Services Committee on Wednesday approved an amendment to ban the display of the Confederate battle flag on all Defense Department property." The amendment to the National Defense Authorization Act was introduced by Rep. Anthony Brown (D-MD), "an Iraq War vet, and includes exceptions for museum exhibits, state-approved license plates and the gravesites of Confederate soldiers." The Military Times (7/1, Shane, 772K) points out the vote came "a week after Army officials announced they would not ban Confederate flags from service installations." Brown's proposal "would encompass military work spaces, break rooms, living quarters, bumper stickers and personal apparel. Individuals could face punishment for disobeying the order."

Trump Calls New York "Black Lives Matter" Mural A "Symbol Of Hate."

President Trump tweeted Wednesday, "NYC is cutting Police $'s by ONE BILLION DOLLARS, and yet the @NYCMayor is going to paint a big, expensive, yellow Black Lives Matter sign on Fifth Avenue, denigrating this luxury Avenue. This will further antagonize New York's Finest, who LOVE New York & vividly remember the horrible BLM chant, 'Pigs In A Blanket, Fry 'Em Like Bacon'. Maybe our GREAT Police, who have been neutralized and scorned by a mayor who hates & disrespects them, won't let this symbol of hate be affixed to New York's greatest street. Spend this money fighting crime instead!"

The Washington Post (7/1, Wagner, 14.2M) reports Trump "said painting 'Black Lives Matter' on New York's Fifth Avenue would be 'a symbol of hate' and wind up 'denigrating' the street outside Trump Tower, as he ratcheted up objections to a plan that he suggested the city's police could stop." The Post says Trump's comments "were his latest volley directed at New York Mayor Bill de Blasio (D), who last week ordered that the tribute to the Black Lives Matter movement be painted in large yellow letters in a move designed in part to antagonize the president." USA Today (7/1, Jackson, 10.31M) reports de Blasio "said he ordered the mural... to be placed right in front of Trump Tower for a reason." He told MSNBC Wednesday, "We're going to take this moment in history and amplify it by taking the 'Black Lives Matter' symbolism and putting it all over this city, including right in front of Trump Tower."

Townhall (7/1, Pavlich, 177K) headlines its brief report "President Trump Gives De Blasio Some Advice About How to Spend Taxpayer Money." ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 4, 0:30, Llamas, 7.23M) and the CBS Evening News (7/1, story 5, 0:35, Garrett, 4.8M) both briefly reported on the tweet. The Washington Times (7/1, Boyer, 492K), Politico (7/1, Cohen, 4.29M), and Breitbart (7/1, Bleau, 673K) also have reports.

Judicial Watch Sues DC Over BLM Mural. The Washington Times (7/1, Dinan, 492K) reports Judicial Watch "went to court Wednesday demanding access to paint the streets of Washington with its own political message after the city wrote 'Black Lives Matter' on one street and allowed protesters to paint 'Defund the Police' next to it. The conservative group said the city has effectively turned its roadways into a public forum, and so it must allow those with differing viewpoints than BLM protesters to have the same access."

Barr Commends Seattle Police Chief As Authorities Dismantle Violence-Ridden CHOP Zone.

The AP (7/1, Bellisle, Baumann) reports, "Seattle police turned out in force early Wednesday at the city's 'occupied' protest zone, tore down demonstrators' encampments and used bicycles to herd the protesters after the mayor ordered the area cleared following two fatal shootings in less than two weeks." The AP adds, "By late morning, police said 32 people had been arrested for failure to disperse, obstruction, assault and unlawful weapon possession." The Hill (7/1, Deese, 2.98M) reports Attorney General Barr "released a statement Wednesday praising Seattle Police Chief Carmen Best for leading authorities to retake control of the abandoned police precinct downtown near Capitol Hill." Said Barr, "I commend Police Chief Carmen Best for her courage and leadership in restoring the rule of law in Seattle. ... For the past several weeks, the Capitol Hill area of Seattle was occupied by protesters who denied access to police and other law enforcement personnel."

ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 8, 1:05, Llamas, 7.23M) described police as "clashing with protesters as they cleared out tents, arresting more than 30 people" and "reclaiming their precinct in the area that saw crime skyrocket by more than 500% and two teens fatally shot." Protesters blocked "police from responding to at least one of those deadly incidents." Best was shown saying, "Our job is to support peaceful demonstrations, but what has happened here on these streets is lawless, and it's brutal, and bottom line, it is simply unacceptable." The CBS Evening News (7/1, story 6, 1:35, Garrett, 4.8M) showed Best saying, "What has happened here, on these streets, is lawless, and it's brutal, and bottom line, it is simply unacceptable. ... Black lives matter. And I too want to help propel this movement forward, but enough is enough."

NBC Nightly News (7/1, story 6, 0:55, Holt, 6.42M) reported that "protesters say they plan to march across the city with police bracing for any signs of retaliation." The New York Times (7/1, Abrams, Mervosh, 18.61M) says "the continuing problems" in Seattle "had drawn the attention of President Trump, who blasted Democratic officials in Seattle and Washington State for failing to clear the area earlier. 'If they don't do the job, I'll do the job,' the president said last month."

Fox News (7/1, Flood, 27.59M) reports on its website that "as protesters and armed anarchists seized control last month of a swath of Seattle's downtown that includes a police station, dubbing it Capitol Hill Organized Protest, the local and mainstream media largely echoed elected leaders by insisting it was a peaceful protest – until people started getting killed."

USA Today (7/1, Miller, 10.31M) indicates "at least two fatal shootings occurred in the CHOP in recent weeks, and police said other shootings, robberies and violence have occurred since protesters took over the area after police abandoned their East Precinct nearby." Reuters (7/1, Wasson) reports "Harry 'Rick' Hearn, a protester who said he volunteered to provide armed security at CHOP for 24 straight days, told Reuters he supported the police crackdown '1,000 percent,'" adding that "he blamed the violence on outsiders who had marred an otherwise successful month-long occupation." Said Hearn, "The outsiders come in with guns, violence, rocks, sticks." To the Washington Post (7/1, Berman, 14.2M), meanwhile, CHOP "gave way to scenes as varied as peaceful gatherings, tense faceoffs with police and violence visited on demonstrators." The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Wernau, Carlton, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Politico (7/1, 4.29M), the Washington Times (7/1, Richardson, 492K), the Washington Examiner (7/1, Brest, 448K), Breitbart (7/1, Bleau, 673K), and Townhall (7/1, Rosas, 177K), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Carson: "Marxist-Driven Organization" Hijacking Floyd Protests.

HUD Secretary Carson said on Fox News' The Story (7/1), "We are really talking about two different things. Do Black lives matter? I think everyone would agree that they do. But we are talking about something else when we are talking about a movement that espouses things like taking down the model of Western family structure, talking about defunding the police, and there are a host of things on their websites, the Marxist influence. ... I think there are a lot of innocent and good people who think 'Black Lives Matter' just means, we should be taking care of our Black citizens and making sure they are not discriminated against, and that is noble and laudable. But we have an organization that is taking advantage of the fact that people don't really know what's behind a Marxist-driven organization."

Congressional Black Caucus Seeks Reparations Commission.

The Washington Examiner (7/1, Ferrechio, 448K) reports, "Members of the Congressional Black Caucus outlined a list of legislation aimed at ending racial injustices, including a reparations measure that one lawmaker said will come up for a House floor vote in the future." Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee (D-TX) "told reporters Wednesday that Democratic leaders have promised to advance a measure that would establish a commission to study reparations for slavery, Jim Crow laws, and other policies that have hurt blacks and other people of color over the decades."

Senate Republicans Weigh Replacing Columbus Day Holiday With Juneteenth.

The Hill (7/1, Bolton, Enjeti, 2.98M) reports "Republican senators are debating whether Juneteenth, a day that commemorates the end of slavery in the United States, should replace Columbus Day on the federal government's list of official holidays." The Hill adds "a bipartisan bill" sponsored by Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX) "to make Juneteenth a federal holiday is being held up by an internal Senate GOP squabble," as Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI), "an outspoken budget hawk, doesn't want to add another paid holiday to the calendar." Johnson "says if Juneteenth is made a federal holiday, another paid federal holiday should come off the schedule. He's proposing scrapping Columbus Day but is open to eliminating another holiday instead."

Columbus Statue Removed From Columbus City Hall. The Columbus \(OH\) Dispatch (7/1, 367K) reports "crews early Wednesday removed the statue of Christopher Columbus from in front of Columbus City Hall." The move "was hailed by groups that say Columbus statues depict the explorer's genocidal cleansing of the New World and exploitation of Native people, and opposed by Italian-Americans who say the statues are works of art that forge goodwill and should be preserved." The Federalist (7/1, Justice, 126K) points out "Democratic Mayor Andrew Ginther said the Columbus Art Commission had been tasked with replacing the Columbus statue with public artwork that more accurately represents the community, as if the Ohio capital were not named after the legendary explorer who changed world history."

House To Vote On Removal Of Segregationist Justice's Bust From Capitol.

Politico (7/1, Cohen, 4.29M) reports House Majority Leader Hoyer "said Wednesday the House will vote this month to remove the bust of one of the Supreme Court's most infamous justices from the Capitol building." The Washington Post (7/1, Sonmez, Kane, 14.2M) says the bill would replace the bust of Justice Roger Taney, a segregationist, "with a bust of Thurgood Marshall, the first African American member of the Supreme Court."

Richmond Mayor Orders Removal Of All Confederate Status From City.

ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 10, 0:20, Llamas, 7.23M) reported on "sweeping changes in Richmond, Virginia, once the capital of the Confederacy," with "the mayor using his emergency powers, to order the immediate removal of all Confederate statues on city grounds." The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (7/1, Robinson, 277K) describes "a crowd of an estimated thousand spectators stood in heavy rain Wednesday afternoon and watched as the bronze statue to Stonewall Jackson was removed from the granite base where it stood for more than 100 years."

Axios (7/1, Fernandez, 521K) recounts Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) "ordered the removal of the statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee in June," and that "protesters in Richmond also toppled the statue of Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy." The AP (7/1, Lavoie) and the Washington Post (7/1, Schneider, Vozzella, 14.2M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

GOP Ad Slams Attacks On Presidential Statues.

The Washington Times (7/1, Richardson, 492K) reports, "The Republican Attorneys General Association came Wednesday to the defense of presidential statues being vandalized by left-wing mobs with an ad warning of the dangers of the 'cancel culture.'" The Times adds "the one-minute ad called 'Erasing History' shows the four faces on Mount Rushmore fading, juxtaposed with news footage showing attacks on statues of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Theodore Roosevelt and Abraham Lincoln, as 'America the Beautiful' plays forlornly in the background." The caption at the end of the ad states, "Stop the madness. ... Defend the rule of law."

Wolf: DHS, DOJ Protecting Federal Property From "Violent Protesters, Rioters and Looters." Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/1, 831K), Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said, "What we have seen is really this lawlessness over the past four weeks in a variety of communities. And the President, the Administration, we are taking some really strong action. We surged federal resources here into the DC area...to put down a lot of these violent protests. ... We have seen an executive order from the President. And what the department is doing as we go into this July Fourth holiday, we want to make sure that federal properties, federal facilities, buildings, statues, monuments, that the Department of Homeland Security protects, we want to make sure that we have the personnel there and ready. ... We have seen the Department of Justice arrest over 100 of these violent protesters, rioters and looters. We have also seen them charge four individuals in federal court for attempting to tear down a statue here in DC."

Agriculture Secretary Perdue said on Fox News (7/1, 896K), "All of us agree that our First Amendment rights are very important and protests, peaceful protests, but vandalism and taking down structures and creating damage is not within the First Amendment. So, I hope that we can have a great Fourth of July celebrating the independence of our nation peacefully."

Three Cities Launch Commissions To Address Past Unjust Policing And Prosecution.

The Washington Post (7/1, Jackman, 14.2M) reports, "The district attorneys of Philadelphia, Boston and San Francisco on Wednesday announced the launch of local 'Truth, Justice and Reconciliation' commissions to hear from people who feel they were victimized by unjust or racist policing or prosecution." The prosecutors devised the restorative-justice project "as civil rights protests continue in cities throughout the country, as a way to address past injustices and determine ways to prevent similar occurrences in the future." It was unclear Wednesday "whether the U.S. commissions will seek to create or revisit prosecutions of cases or create different paths to justice."

New York Police Department's Budget Cut By $1B.

On ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 9, 1:00, Llamas, 7.23M), Janai Norman reported New York City's council has voted "to slash the NYPD's budget by $1 billion." Norman added, however, "the shootings in the city up by 40% from this time last year."

President Trump was asked in an interview with Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M) about the New York City Council's decision to cut the NYPD's budget by $1 billion. Trump said, "I'm a big fan of New York's finest. We call them New York's finest, policemen. What [New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio] has done to that group of incredible men and women is very sad. It's very sad. I don't mean just the billion dollars. That's a big thing. But even if you go long before this, when they turned around, they turned their backs, his relationship with the police of New York and these are incredible people, it's been very sad to watch, frankly."

The Daily Caller (7/1, Talcott, 716K) reports Paul DiGiacomo, President of the NYPD Detectives' Endowment Association (DEA), "raised concerns regarding policing moving forward." DiGiacomo said, "It's going to diminish the police department, which is going to affect policing moving forward for the people of New York City. And it, plain and simple, is going to be more victims of crime in New York City."

The New York Post (7/1, Bowden, 4.57M) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) and de Blasio are "engaged in another public spat – this time after Hizzoner called the lawmaker 'just wrong' when she accused him of fudging his $1 billion cut to the NYPD budget." During an interview on CNN on Wednesday, de Blasio disputed claims in a statement from Ocasio-Cortez "in which she said he was using 'budget tricks' and 'funny math' to make it look like he had defunded the city's police department." Ocasio-Cortez responded "with a tweet of a New York Times report that accused Big Apple officials of achieving the cuts with a 'budgetary sleight of hand: Moving school safety officers under the Department of Education.'"

In an op-ed for the New York Times (7/1, 18.61M), Mara Gay, a member of the editorial board, writes that a $1 billion cut to the budget of the New York Police Department is a reasonable ask. Gay admits "the budget cuts won't bring the kind of systemic changes in policing demanded by protesters and others in New York and in cities like Minneapolis." But "they represent a rejection of the department's once unquestioned political power in New York."

Los Angeles Cuts Police Spending, Hiring.

The Los Angeles Times (7/1, Reyes, 4.64M) reports the Los Angeles City Council on Wednesday voted "to cut hiring at the Police Department, pushing the number of sworn officers well below 10,000 and abandoning a budget priority once seen as untouchable by city leaders." Faced with a dour budget forecast and "deluged by demands for reductions in police spending, the council voted 12 to 2 to take the Los Angeles Police Department down to 9,757 officers by next summer – a level of staffing not seen in the city since 2008." The council's move "delivered a $150-million hit to the LAPD budget, much of it coming from funds earmarked for police overtime pay."

Minneapolis Sees Surge In Gun Violence.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (7/1, Walsh, 1.04M) reports, "In an especially violent day amid skyrocketing gun violence since George Floyd's May 25 death at the hands of Minneapolis police, nine people were shot across the city on June 22." A shooting at a Minneapolis park on that day "prompted Police Chief Medaria Arradondo to pledge Wednesday that 'our children must be protected, and those who would dare to bring harm their way must be held accountable.'" Other shootings "elsewhere in the city that day...came in the midst of a troubling surge in shootings in Minneapolis since Memorial Day."

Mississippi State Flag Retired.

ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 11, 0:20, Llamas, 7.23M) reported a crowd gathered in Jackson, Mississippi on Wednesday "to watch as the state flag was lowered from the capital for the last time." On Wednesday, Gov. Tate Reeves (R) "signed the bill, retiring the flag that featured the Confederate emblem."

Poll Shows More White Democrats Have Become Critical Of Police.

The AP (7/1, Stafford, Fingerhut) reports, "As a national reckoning over racism and policing grips the nation, white Democrats are far more likely now than they were a few years ago to think police brutality is a serious issue – a dramatic shift in public opinion that some say could shape the November presidential election." A majority of white Democrats "today say police officers are more likely to use deadly force against a Black person than against a white person, according to a recent poll from The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research, not unlike five years ago." However, "for the first time, the poll shows significant changes in how white Democrats view police brutality and the consequences: 64% now describe police violence against the public as very or extremely serious, compared with 29% in July 2015."

Black National Convention Scheduled For Late August.

The AP (7/1, Morrison) reports, "Thousands of Black activists from across the U.S. will hold a virtual convention in August to produce a new political agenda that seeks to build on the success of the protests that followed George Floyd's death. The 2020 Black National Convention will take place Aug. 28 via a live broadcast." According to an announcement by the Electoral Justice Project of the Movement for Black Lives, "a coalition of more than 150 organizations," the event "will feature conversations, performances and other events designed to develop a set of demands" ahead of this fall's elections.

FBI Gun Background Checks Jump To Record High In June.

The Washington Times (7/1, Mordock, 492K) reports, "Background checks for gun sales surged again in June, smashing the record for the highest number of background checks in a single month, according to FBI data released Wednesday." The FBI "said it conducted 3.9 million checks in the National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS), shattering the previous record of 3.7 million checks in March." According to the Times, "fueled by fears over the coronavirus and, more recently, the violent riots that followed the death of George Floyd in late May, the FBI is close to smashing last year's record for most background checks."

FBI Has Been Investigating Death Of McClain Since Last Year.

ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 7, 0:30, Llamas, 7.23M) reported the FBI and US attorney say they have been reviewing the "police-related death of Elijah McClain in Aurora, Colorado" for "a possible federal civil rights investigation since last year." On NBC Nightly News (7/1, story 7, 1:50, Holt, 6.42M), Gabe Gutierrez reported federal officials are "also now looking into whether some Aurora officers took potentially inappropriate pictures last week near this memorial."

Reports: Protests Do Not Seem To Have Spread Coronavirus.

The New York Times (7/1, Goldstein, 18.61M) reports that after "tens of thousands of New Yorkers poured into the streets, day and night, to protest police brutality and racism," some epidemiologists "braced for a surge of new coronavirus cases." However, according to the Times, "it has not come yet." The Times adds, "In interviews, several epidemiologists expressed either surprise or relief, and offered theories for what occurred. ... Conditions at the demonstrations may not have been conducive for transmission, mainly because the protests occurred outdoors, epidemiologists said."

Likewise, the AP (7/1, Stobbe, Forster) says that "according to public health experts," there is "little evidence that the protests that erupted after George Floyd's death caused a significant increase in U.S. coronavirus infections." The AP adds, "If the protests had driven an explosion in cases, experts say, the jumps would have started to become apparent within two weeks – and perhaps as early as five days. But that didn't happen in many cities with the largest protests, including New York, Chicago, Minneapolis, and Washington."

Tumulty: Biden's View On Flag Burning Has Evolved.

In her column for the Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M), Karen Tumulty writes that in 1989, Joe Biden, then a senator, supported measures to deter flag burning, a position he held throughout his career in the Senate. Biden campaign spokesman Andrew Bates now says "that Biden does not support a constitutional amendment to ban flag burning." In Tumulty's view, while Biden's "history on the flag burning issue is at odds with the Supreme Court's view of the First Amendment – and that of civil libertarians – it will make it harder for Trump to pin the former vice president as being in step with what the president terms liberal 'lowlifes.'"

Trump Says He Is "All For Masks," But Questions Need For Mandate.

Asked on Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M) about calls for a universal mask mandate, President Trump said, "I don't know if you need mandatory, because you have many places in the country where people stay very long distance. You talk about social distancing. But I'm all for masks. I think masks are good. I would wear – if I were in a group of people and I was close. ... I have. I mean, people have seen me wearing one."

All three broadcast networks covered what Major Garrett on the CBS Evening News (7/1, story 3, 2:10, 4.8M) called an "about-face" from the President "after months of mixed messages." On ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 3, 1:15, Llamas, 7.23M), Jonathan Karl reported GOP congressional leaders "are now joining the chorus of voices urging the President to set an example by wearing a mask. But he has recently suggested wearing a mask is politically incorrect, calling it a 'double-edged sword.'" Lester Holt on NBC Nightly News (7/1, story 4, 1:40, 6.42M) said "despite pleas by health officials to wear them," there is "still no consensus among political leaders."

USA Today (7/1, Collins, 10.31M) reports Trump "has resisted wearing a mask in public," and the Washington Times (7/1, Howell, 492K) says Trump "hasn't offered much praise of masks, often highlighting the fact it's optional." The New York Post (7/1, Bowden, 4.57M) reports Trump on Wednesday "stopped short of supporting a nationwide order to make them mandatory in public." The Washington Examiner (7/1, Morrison, 448K), The Hill (7/1, Chalfant, 2.98M), and the Daily Caller (7/1, Datoc, 716K) are among the other outlets covering the President's statement.

Axios (7/1, Fernandez, 521K) reports HHS Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir "urged Americans to wear masks and practice social distancing heading into July 4 weekend," and the Washington Times (7/1, Meier, 492K) reports White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway on Wednesday "backed calls for people to wear masks in public and when social distancing may be difficult and encouraged Americans to take steps to prevent the spread of COVID-19." Conway told Fox News, "Wearing masks, social distancing, all this stuff we know, it really does stop the spread. And I encourage people to do that."

Trump Again Says Coronavirus Will "Sort Of Just Disappear."

Axios (7/1, Axios, 521K) reports President Trump "told Fox Business in an interview Wednesday that he still believes the coronavirus will 'at some point just sort of disappear,' as he first claimed in February before the pandemic was declared." The President said, "We're heading back in a very strong fashion, with a V. And I think we're going to be very good with the coronavirus. I think at some point that's going to sort of just disappear, I hope. ... And I think we're going to have a vaccine very soon too."

Trump Plans Fourth Of July Celebration On National Mall Despite DC Mayor's Concerns.

The AP (7/1, Knickmeyer, Khalil) reports President Trump's Fourth of July "celebration on the National Mall will feature one of the largest fireworks displays ever and as many as 300,000 face masks will be given away to those who want them – but despite health concerns from D.C.'s mayor, no one apparently will be required to wear them." District of Columbia Mayor Muriel Bowser "doesn't have the right to shut down the holiday spectacle because it's on federal land," but she "warned the federal government about the obvious dangers of such a large crowd." Interior Secretary Bernhardt "said visitors would be encouraged to wear masks and keep a six-foot distance from one another."

The Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M) editorializes, "From the start of the outbreak of the novel coronavirus, President Trump has stubbornly and stupidly refused to follow the advice of health professionals." He has refused to wear a mask, "thumbed his nose at social distancing," and "now, as much of the country wisely cancels or scales back Fourth of July celebrations to protect people's health, Mr. Trump is ploughing full steam ahead with not just one – but two – massive events." The Post says "nothing – not health experts' concerns about large gatherings, not alarming spikes in recent days in virus case levels, not pleas from worried D.C. and Washington-area officials – gives pause to Mr. Trump about going ahead with these potentially dangerous events."

Pence Visits Arizona As It Sets Record For Cases, Hospitalizations And Deaths.

The AP (7/1, Coyle) reports that Arizona "recorded more coronavirus deaths, infections, hospitalizations and emergency-room visits in a single day than ever before Wednesday as the deepening crisis across the Sunbelt sent a shudder through other parts of the country and led distant states to put their own reopening plans on hold." The AP says "a masked" Vice President Pence visited the "increasingly dire" state on Wednesday.

The New York Times (7/1, 18.61M) reports Pence told Gov. Doug Ducey (R) "that the federal government would help the state with a request for 500 additional public health personnel by mobilizing doctors, nurses and technical personnel, and urged Arizonans to wear a mask 'when indicated by state and local authorities or when social distancing is not possible.'" CNBC (7/1, Kim, 3.62M) reports on its website that Ducey "rolled back the state's reopening plans and closed all bars, gyms, movie theaters and water parks Monday."

More Than 50,000 New COVID-19 Infections Reported Wednesday.

All three broadcast networks opened their Wednesday evening newscasts with the new surge in COVID-19 cases as the US surpassed 50,000 new cases in one day for the first time. On ABC World News Tonight (7/1, lead story, 5:10, 7.23M), Tom Llamas described the "major setbacks across America in slowing the spread of the coronavirus. Thirty-eight states now showing a rise in COVID-19 cases," and "more than 40% of the country has either halted or reversed reopening plans, just days before the Fourth of July." On the CBS Evening News (7/1, lead story, 3:25, 4.8M), Major Garrett said the nation is experiencing "a stunning surge in coronavirus cases across much of our country that is forcing states to close bars, beaches, and businesses, reimposing restrictions just days before the July Fourth holiday. Tonight, the number of new infections nationwide is nearly double what it was just two weeks ago. ... In what feels like a nightmarish flashback to the early days of this pandemic, overflowing emergency rooms in Houston are sending patients to other cities." Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (7/1, lead story, 3:00, 6.42M), "Sick and tired of closures, restrictions, and a virus that won't go away, Americans are confronted tonight with deeply troubling signs of how hard this country is being hit."

The Washington Post (7/1, Gearan, Hawkins, O'Grady, 14.2M) reports US COVID-19 infections "surged nearly 50 percent in June as states relaxed quarantine rules and tried to reopen their economies, data compiled Wednesday showed, and several states moved to reimpose restrictions on bars and recreation. More than 800,000 new cases were reported across the country last month, led by Florida, Arizona, Texas and California – bringing the nation's officially reported total to just over 2.6 million. ... More than 52,000 new cases were reported in the United States on Wednesday, the highest total since the start of the pandemic." NBC Nightly News (7/1, story 3, 2:10, Holt, 6.42M) aired a feature on the spread of COVID-19 infections.

The Washington Post (7/1, A1, Weiner, 14.2M) reports that "surging cases of the coronavirus across the Sun Belt are sparking unprecedented demand for testing, with lines stretching miles in the summer heat, supplies running out and medical workers left exhausted. ... There are also limits on collection sites, exacerbated by rising summer temperatures. Staff at testing sites, standing outside in full-body protective gear, must rotate more often to avoid heat stroke."

Deputy HHS Secretary Eric Hargan said on KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (7/1, 125K), "We knew early on that the virus was going to spread. We were very open about that. The idea is to slow the spread as we said then and continue to say to flatten the curve to make sure that we have hospitals and health systems generally prepared for expected surges of cases."

Pfizer, BioNTech Announce Hopeful Early Results From Vaccine Trial.

The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Hopkins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports researchers studying a vaccine candidate from Pfizer and partner BioNTech said a study showed healthy adult volunteers developed higher levels of antibodies to the novel coronavirus following a two-dose regimen than patients who had recovered from the disease and did not receive the vaccine. Saying the vaccine in question is among the most advanced of the vaccines currently under development, the Journal says much more testing will need to be done to verify its viability.

On ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 2, 2:20, Llamas, 7.23M), Eva Pilgrim said there is "new hope in the urgent race for a coronavirus vaccine," while on NBC Nightly News (7/1, story 2, 2:10, Holt, 6.42M), Stephanie Gosk said "researchers for Pfizer and its German partner say this is as good a result as they could have hoped for." Bloomberg (7/1, Fourcade, 4.73M) said the new results put the Pfizer-BioNTech candidate "in the lead pack for a pandemic shot." The Washington Post (7/1, Johnson, 14.2M) also reports.

FDA Commissioner Hahn discussed the search for a vaccine on WPEC-TV West Palm Beach, FL (7/1, 33K), saying, "My message to the American people is we have hope. It is not false hope. We have new therapies. More are on the way that we are evaluating." Asked on WWL-TV (7/1, 80K) if the FDA has felt any pressure to produce a vaccine before the presidential election, Hahn said, "We do not at all feel pressure with respect to when this vaccine or if this vaccine gets approved or authorized. ... We have unbelievable talent at FDA. ... They will not be influenced by outside pressure. They will not be influenced by political pressure. They will make the best decision on behalf of the American people."

WSJournal Profiles Vaccine Race Competitor Moderna. The Wall Street Journal (7/1, A1, Loftus, Zuckerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) has a 3,500-word front-page profile of Moderna, which is also a top competitor in the race for a coronavirus vaccine.

Public Health Experts Criticize US Remdesivir Acquisition.

The AP (7/1, Cheng) reports international public health experts are criticizing the US for securing a large supply of remdesivir, "the only drug licensed so far to treat COVID-19." HHS "said it had secured 500,000 treatments through September, which amounts to all but 10% of production in August and September." Ohid Yaqub of the University of Sussex "called the U.S. agreement 'disappointing news.'" Yaqub said, "It so clearly signals an unwillingness to cooperate with other countries and the chilling effect this has on international agreements about intellectual property rights."

Democrats Seek Transparency In Regards To HHS/Palantir Tracking Program.

The Washington Post (7/1, Albergotti, 14.2M) reports that "a growing number of Democratic lawmakers are sounding the alarm" about the HHS Protect Now program, intended to track the spread of coronavirus. The program "relies on technology from secretive and controversial Silicon Valley firm Palantir, better known for working with the U.S. military, national security agencies and immigration offices." In a letter sent to HHS Secretary Azar, Democratic senators "called for more transparency around the initiative," and "questioned whether any of the data gathered would be shared with [ICE] to round up undocumented immigrants."

Poll Finds Republicans Increasingly Concerned By Pandemic.

Reuters (7/1, Szekely, Bernstein) reports that a Reuters/Ipsos poll released on Wednesday "found that 81% of American adults said they are 'very' or 'somewhat' concerned about the pandemic, the most since a similar poll conducted May 11-12," and "concerns about the pandemic appear to be rising the most" among Republicans, who have "generally been less enthusiastic about imposing and maintaining restrictions to stop the spread of the virus such as sheltering at home or wearing face masks." According to Reuters, "About seven in 10 Republicans said they were personally concerned about the virus' spread, up from six in 10 Republicans in polls conducted over the past few weeks." Reuters adds, "About nine in 10 Democrats said they are similarly worried, a level of concern that has not changed over the past few weeks."

Poll: Asian And Black Americans Have Faced Heightened Discrimination Amid Pandemic.

Politico (7/1, King, 4.29M) reports, "The spread of the coronavirus has increased racial tensions across the country and Asian and African-Americans are facing the worst of it, according to findings from a new survey released on Wednesday." A poll conducted by the Pew Research Center found "40 percent of Black and Asian-American adults said they have been treated differently or subjected to slurs or jokes as a result of the pandemic." In the poll, "a plurality of both groups also expressed anxiety about wearing a mask in public out of fears that they would be viewed as a threat or physically attacked."

Autopsy Studies Indicate COVID-19 Attacks Various Parts Of Body.

The Washington Post (7/1, A1, Cha, 14.2M) reports, "Autopsies have long been a source of breakthroughs in understanding new diseases, from HIV/AIDS and Ebola, to Lassa fever – and the medical community is counting on them to do the same for [COVID-19], the disease caused by coronavirus." Since a vaccine is "likely many months away, autopsies are becoming a critical source of information for research into possible treatments." Among research "findings, consistent across several studies, is confirmation the virus appears to attack the lungs the most ferociously," although the pathogen has also been found "in parts of the brain, kidneys, liver, gastrointestinal tract, spleen and in the endothelial cells that line blood vessels, as some had previously suspected."

Newsom Reintroduces Some Parts Of California Lockdown.

The Washington Post (7/1, Farzan, 14.2M) reports that on Wednesday, California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D) "announced he was reviving parts of the state's sweeping lockdown, ordering bars to close and a range of other service-sector businesses in 19 counties to cease indoor operations amid a spike in coronavirus cases."

The Los Angeles Times (7/1, Willon, 4.64M) reports Newsom is "imposing the restrictions on indoor activities in advance of the July 4 holiday weekend, when officials fear disaster if Californians continue to ignore safety guidelines and businesses remain open in areas already experiencing significant spikes in COVID-19 infections." He is also "recommending the cancellation of all fireworks shows on the Fourth of July in the affected counties, and is urging all Californians to rethink having large get-togethers with friends and neighbors to celebrate the holiday."

USA Today (7/1, Daniels, 10.31M) reports, "The order is effective immediately and Newsom expects it to be in place for at least three weeks." Newsom said the restrictions are "designed to focus on indoor operations, which have been open for several weeks." California on Tuesday "reported 5,898 new COVID-19 cases and 110 virus-related deaths, with a positivity rate of 6% over the last 14 days, Newsom said. Two weeks ago, the state's positivity rate was 4.6%."

In an article titled "How Success Against The Coronavirus Turned To Crisis In California," the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Lovett, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports California was a success story in the fight against the coronavirus for most of the spring, but now, weeks after reopening, COVID-19 has exploded across the state. Public-health experts said the state may have wasted the work it did to contain the pandemic in March and April by giving counties too much control in decisions to reopen.

WSJournal: San Francisco Takes Wrong Approach To Homelessness During Pandemic. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights a pair of lawsuits against San Francisco, which it says illustrate the deterioration of public order in the city. The lawsuits take aim at the city's lax policies regarding the homeless population and drug use during the pandemic.

Texas LG Says He Will No Longer Listen To Fauci.

The Austin American-Statesman (7/1, Cobler, Subscription Publication, 343K) reports Texas Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick (R) told Fox News' Laura Ingraham on Tuesday that "he will no longer listen to" NIAID Director Fauci. Patrick said, "Fauci said today that he's concerned about states like Texas that skipped over certain things. He doesn't know what he's talking about. We haven't skipped over anything. The only thing I'm skipping over is listening to him. ... He has been wrong every time on every issue."

Texas Hospitals Flooded With Coronavirus Patients. On the CBS Evening News (7/1, story 2, 1:30, Garrett, 4.8M), Janet Shamlian reported from Houston, "where a dire situation is unfolding," as "a surge of COVID patients has some hospitals here scrambling to find beds in other Texas cities." Shamlian said, "New infections in Texas soared to an all-time high, of 8,076 cases [Wednesday], more than 6900 are hospitalized with the virus." Shamlian added, "The number of patients hospitalized here has nearly quadrupled since Memorial Day when officials say people became overconfident and stopped adhering to the guide lines. And that is why tonight there is so much concern over the upcoming Fourth of July weekend."

New York City Delays Plan To Restart Indoor Dining.

The New York Times (7/1, McKinley, Ferré-Sadurní, 18.61M) reports New York Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) announced Wednesday that the city will "not resume indoor dining at restaurants next week as scheduled." The reason is that city officials "are increasingly concerned that the increase in virus cases in more than 30 states could trickle back to New York." The mayor said, "It is not the time to forge ahead with indoor dining." New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) earlier announced that New Jersey will "halt a planned restart of indoor dining that was to have gone into effect on Thursday." The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Hall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that New York City has delayed its reopening of indoor dining due to evidence that it is leading to greater spread of coronavirus in other states where indoor dining has been resumed.

Whitmer Orders Most Michigan Bars To Halt Indoor Service.

The Detroit Free Press (7/1, 1.52M) reports Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) on Wednesday "ordered bars in south and central Michigan to halt indoor service, saying the step was needed to control an increase in the spread of the coronavirus. The change was to take effect at 11 p.m. Wednesday and applies to licensed establishments that earn more than 70% of their gross receipts from alcohol sales." Most restaurants that serve alcohol "can still do so indoors, provided the patrons are seated at tables that are socially distanced, at least 6 feet apart, according to the order."

Judge Throws Out Racine, Wisconsin Coronavirus Ordinance.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (7/1, Marley, 632K) reports Racine County, Wisconsin Circuit Judge Jon Fredrickson has thrown out Racine's "sweeping coronavirus ordinance Wednesday, saying it violated the state constitution because it interfered with the right to assemble and was so broadly written that ordinary citizens couldn't understand it." Fredrickson wrote, "It is likely the strictest, and most over-arching COVID-19 order or ordinance in the country. This court finds that no average person of ordinary intelligence can make sense of its sprawling breadth." The city immediately appealed the decision.

DOJ Official Says Former Aide's Testimony Was "Misleading."

Politico (7/1, Swan, 4.29M) reports that Makan Delrahim, the head of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, "has pushed back on eyebrow-raising testimony" that John Elias, his former Chief of Staff, "delivered to Congress last week – and, in the process, alluded to how flummoxed department attorneys were with an unusually thorny legal issue: marijuana mergers." In a letter "to the top Republican and Democrat on the House Judiciary Committee," Delrahim said Elias' testimony was "misleading and lacks critical facts." Elias testified that Attorney General Barr "called Antitrust Division leaders to his office for a meeting and then ordered them to scrutinize mergers of marijuana companies because he himself held personal animus toward the industry." Delrahim wrote that the division sought the meeting "for the purpose of resolving significant policy questions at this complex intersection of criminal and civil law enforcement."

Trump-Appointed Judge Strikes Down Asylum Ban On Procedural Grounds.

Politico (7/1, Mejdrich, 4.29M) reports that late Tuesday, US District Court Judge Timothy Kelly, who was nominated by President Trump, "struck down a Trump administration rule that would require migrants seeking to enter the U.S. to first seek asylum in countries they travel through on their way to the southern border." Kelly said the ban, which was published last summer "without a typical notice-and-comment period, failed to comply with the Administrative Procedure Act governing how agencies should implement rules." Reuters (7/1, Hesson) says Kelly's ruling "will likely have limited effect in the near term, since the administration instituted a separate coronavirus-related policy in March that allows U.S. border authorities to rapidly deport migrants without standard legal processes, cutting off a pathway to request asylum."

The New York Times (7/1, Kanno-Youngs, 18.61M) calls the ruling "the latest in a string of defeats the Trump administration has been dealt by judges who decided that administration officials, in their haste to make policy, violated federal law laying out how regulations must be carried out or rolled back. The Supreme Court last month preserved Obama-era protections for about 700,000 young undocumented immigrants known as Dreamers, ruling that the administration had violated procedures in rolling back the rule." The Washington Times (7/1, Dinan, 492K) similarly says this is "the second time in recent weeks that a major Trump immigration policy has succumbed" to a procedural argument in court.

Oklahoma Voters Approve Medicaid Expansion.

The New York Times (7/1, Kliff, 18.61M) reports that on Tuesday, voters in "deeply conservative" Oklahoma "narrowly approved a ballot initiative...to expand Medicaid to nearly 200,000 low-income adults, the first state to do so in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic." The Times adds, "The vote to expand the Affordable Care Act's reach once again put voters, many of them conservative, at odds with Republican leaders, who have worked to block it or invalidate it."

The Washington Post (7/1, Goldstein, 14.2M) says the "decision in a Republican-leaning state is rich in political significance. Oklahoma becomes the fifth state in which voters have passed ballot initiatives to expand Medicaid by employing a tool to circumvent the will of GOP governors and legislatures." The Post says the victory "shows that, even in red states, voters are significantly less hostile to the Affordable Care Act than President Trump."

Incubate's Stanford Argues Against Price Controls On Pharmaceuticals.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Stanford, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), John Stanford, Executive Director of Incubate, a Washington-based coalition of life-science venture capitalists, writes that the measure to expand the ACA passed by House Democrats would place a cap on the price of widely-used pharmaceuticals at no more than 20% more than the average prices paid in Australia, Canada, France, Germany, and Japan. Stanford argues that the price controls would reduce private investment in research and undermine biomedical innovation.

Senators Criticize US Global Media Chief Over Firings.

The AP (7/1, Lee) reports, "Seven U.S. senators, including two strong allies of President Donald Trump, harshly criticized Trump's new chief of U.S.-funded global media on Wednesday for firing the heads of several international broadcasters without consulting Congress." Led by Sens. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) and Marco Rubio (R-FL), the group "expressed concern that the independent agency may become politicized." The senators "questioned the leadership of Michael Pack, Trump's pick to head the Agency for Global Media, which runs the flagship U.S. broadcaster Voice of America, Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty, Radio Free Asia, Middle East Broadcasting Networks and the Cuba-focused Radio/TV Marti."

The Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the CFPB emerged from a Supreme Court challenge to its constitutionality "with its authority to regulate payday lending, debt collection, mortgages and other pocketbook issues intact." While the agency's leadership "is now somewhat more subject to the winds of politics," the Post says this is "not the end of the world in practical terms." The High Court's ruling "opens the way" for Joe Biden, "if elected in November, to fire and replace the acting CFPB director President Trump installed in 2018."

Judge Lifts Restraining Order On Publisher Of Trump Niece's Book.

The Washington Post (7/1, Kranish, 14.2M) reports that the New York appellate Judge Alan D. Scheinkman "on Wednesday lifted a temporary restraining order against the publication of a book by President Trump's niece, enabling publisher Simon & Schuster to continue printing and distributing the explosive insider account by Mary L. Trump." A state Supreme Court judge "agreed to impose the restraining order to allow the parties to present their arguments next week, raising doubts about whether it would be published." But "the Supreme Court's appellate division on Wednesday lifted the restraining order that had been imposed on Simon & Schuster, while leaving in place the one regarding Mary Trump."

The New York Times (7/1, Haberman, Feuer, 18.61M) says Scheinkman "ruled that Simon & Schuster was not a party to – and thus could not be bound by – the confidentiality agreement, which was signed by Ms. Trump, Donald Trump and the president's two siblings, Robert S. Trump and Maryanne Trump Barry." he wrote, "Unlike Ms. Trump...S&S has not agreed to surrender or relinquish any of its First Amendment rights." Politico (7/1, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports that a Simon & Schuster spokesman "did not directly address the company's plans, but suggested the firm was waiting to see how the original judge on the case, Poughkeepsie-based Justice Hal Greenwald, rules on a preliminary injunction barring the memoir."

Drug Overdoses Have Soared During Pandemic.

The Washington Post (7/1, Wan, Long, 14.2M) reports that "nationwide, federal and local officials are reporting alarming spikes in drug overdoses – a hidden epidemic within the coronavirus pandemic." An increasing body of "evidence suggests that the continued isolation, economic devastation and disruptions to the drug trade in recent months are fueling the surge." Due to "how slowly the government collects data, it could be five to six months before definitive numbers exist on the change in overdoses during the pandemic," but the "data obtained by The Washington Post from a real-time tracker of drug-related emergency calls and interviews with coroners suggest that overdoses have not just increased since the pandemic began but are accelerating as it persists."

Axios Report: Trump Regrets Listening To Kushner's Advice On Criminal Justice Reform.

Jonathan Swan of Axios (7/1, 521K) reported on Wednesday that President Trump "has told people in recent days that he regrets following some of son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner's political advice – including supporting criminal justice reform – and will stick closer to his own instincts." Swan cites "three people with direct knowledge of the president's thinking." Swan writes, "Behind the scenes: One person who spoke with the president interpreted his thinking this way: 'No more of Jared's woke s,'" and "another said Trump has indicated that following Kushner's advice has harmed him politically." Swan notes that "a few weeks ago," Fox News' Tucker Carlson, "in a brutal monologue...blamed Kushner for giving Trump bad advice." Carlson is quoted as saying, "The President's famously sharp instincts, the ones that won him the presidency almost four years ago, have been since subverted at every level by Jared Kushner."

Trump Mocks CNN And MSNBC Over Declining Ratings.

President Trump took to Twitter Wednesday to write, "Can't believe how badly @CNN has done in the newly released TV ratings. They are so far below @FoxNews (thank you President Trump!) that you can barely find them. Fredo should be given a big pay cut! MSDNC also did poorly. As I have long said, Fake News does not pay!!!" Trump also wrote, "Congratulations to @foxandfriends on completely dominating the just released morning TV Ratings. Morning Joke, starring Psycho Joe Scarborough on MSDNC, a Comcast Company, was a disaster. Even worse was the barely registering @CNN mess!"

Fox News Fires Ed Henry After Sexual Misconduct Investigation. USA Today (7/1, Ali, 10.31M) reports "Fox News fired Ed Henry following the completion of a sexual misconduct investigation, the news company announced Wednesday." Henry "was terminated after Fox News said they received a complaint on June 25 from a former employee's attorney regarding 'willful sexual misconduct in the workplace years ago.'" The Washington Free Beacon (7/1, Nester, 78K) recounts Fox "hired an independent law firm to investigate the claim and suspended Henry, according to a letter from CEO Suzanne Scott and president Jay Wallace." Scott and Wallace wrote, "FOX News Media strictly prohibits all forms of sexual harassment, misconduct, and discrimination. ... We will continue striving to maintain a safe and inclusive workplace for all employees."

The Washington Post (7/1, Barr, 14.2M) reports "the former colleague who accused Henry of sexual misconduct is represented by attorney Douglas Wigdor, who has represented women in a number of high-profile discrimination and sexual harassment cases, including 20 women who have leveled complaints over their treatment while working at Fox and several who made allegations against Hollywood producer Harvey Weinstein." Wigdor also "briefly represented Tara Reade, the former Senate staffer who accused Joe Biden of sexually assaulting her in 1993."

The New York Times (7/1, Grynbaum, 18.61M) says that "for Fox News, Mr. Henry's abrupt departure was an unfortunate echo of the network's past struggles with inappropriate workplace behavior by star personnel." The Daily Caller (7/1, Talcott, 716K), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Rumors Spread That Alito And Thomas May Retire.

Breitbart (7/1, Pollak, 673K) reports, "Supreme Court Justices Samuel Alito and Clarence Thomas may be planning to retire soon, according to rumors in the media Wednesday." In the Washington Post, Robert Costa reported that the White House and Senate Republicans are "preparing for the possible retirement of Justice Clarence Thomas." In response to that article, Hugh Hewitt said on the Hugh Hewitt Show "that he did not believe Thomas would retire, but that he had been told Alito was considering retirement."

The Washington Examiner (7/1, Chaitin, 448K) reports, "Hewitt also listed some judges he believes could be nominated to take Alito's place, including Raymond Kethledge, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit; David Stras, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit; or Donny Willett, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit." The Examiner adds that "one outside Trump political adviser told Costa that Judge Amul Thapar of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit is the favorite of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and others if Thomas does decide to retire."

Republicans Hope To Use Conservative Anger At Roberts To Turn Out Voters. The Washington Post (7/1, Costa, 14.2M) reports, "The White House is trying to capitalize on conservative anger at Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. over his latest decisions by telling evangelical leaders and other activists that they need to turn out voters for President Trump so he can use a second term to continue nominating conservative judges to the nation's highest court." Some recent polls have indicated a drop "in support for Trump among evangelicals, who have long been among the president's strongest supporters." However, Roberts' role in cases "advancing both gay and abortion rights is now seen in the White House as an opening to shore up that part of Trump's political base."

Levey: Roberts Has Turned Into Next Anthony Kennedy. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M), Curt Levey, President of the Committee for Justice, writes "the trio of recent votes by [Roberts] siding with the court's four liberal justices shows that Roberts has gone full Kennedy – that is, following in the disappointingly centrist footsteps of previous swing justice, Anthony M. Kennedy." Now, it appears that "short of adding a sixth GOP appointee to the court, the best conservatives can hope for is that Roberts's drift stops short of the example set by Justice David Souter, who was trumpeted by advisers to President George H.W. Bush as a 'home run' for conservatives but who turned out to be a liberal in disguise."

House Passes $1.5T Infrastructure Bill.

The Washington Post (7/1, Laris, 14.2M) reports that the House has passed "a $1.5 trillion far-reaching infrastructure bill that sharply increases spending on roads and transit, pushes for deep reductions in pollution, directs billions to water projects, affordable housing, broadband and schools, and upgrades hospitals and U.S. Postal Service trucks." While House Speaker Pelosi "said Democrats were making good on a promise to rebuild America" with "green, resilient, modern and job-creating infrastructure," House Republicans "objected to the bill's concentration on reducing carbon pollution and slammed the process that resulted in what they dismissed as the 'My Way or the Highway' bill." The bill "drew immediate criticism" from Senate Majority Leader McConnell, who said, "House Democrats appear addicted to pointless political theater. ... So naturally, this nonsense is not going anywhere in the Senate. It will just join the list of absurd House proposals that were only drawn up to show fealty to the radical left."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes House Democrats for passing a $1.5 trillion infrastructure spending bill on Wednesday that contains Green New Deal subsidies. The Journal adds that the package does not include a Republican amendment that would have required certification that child labor is not used in the supply chain used to produce electric vehicle batteries.

HUD Proposal Would Allow Shelters To Refuse Transgender People Access To Single-Sex Facilities.

The New York Times (7/1, Cameron, 18.61M) reports that HUD has "proposed allowing homeless shelters to deny transgender people access to single-sex shelters of their gender identity." The announcement said the changes accommodate the "religious beliefs of shelter providers." The Administration "has been pushing the change, arguing that it would prevent men from surreptitiously gaining access to women's homeless shelters to abuse residents or track down spouses and partners," but "advocates for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender rights and civil libertarians said the rule would mean transgender women, potentially even other women mistaken as transgender, could be referred to shelters that also accommodate men, where they could face abuse or assault."

The Hill Highlights Cheney's "High-Profile Breaks" With Trump.

The Hill (7/1, Wong, 2.98M) reports that Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY), "the highest-ranking GOP woman in the Capitol and the daughter of former Vice President Dick Cheney, has been challenging [President] Trump on key issues – from national security and his handling of the health crisis to his personal Twitter attacks – in an era where Republicans are expected to march in lockstep with Trump or risk facing political retribution." Cheney's "high-profile breaks with Trump have raised eyebrows on Capitol Hill, fueling speculation that" she "is positioning herself for a post-Trump world where there will be an all-out war for the soul of the" GOP. However, "some of her closest friends and colleagues say it" Cheney's "long-held convictions and principles that are guiding her moves – not any carefully laid political strategy."

CNBC/Change Research Poll: Biden Leads In Six Swing States.

CNBC (7/1, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports on its website that a CNBC/Change Research poll of 3,729 likely swing state voters, taken June 26-28, shows that in Arizona, Joe Biden leads President Trump 51%-44%; in Florida, Biden leads Trump 50%-45%; in Michigan, Biden leads Trump 48%-43%; in North Carolina, Biden leads Trump 51%-44%; in Pennsylvania, Biden leads Trump 50%-44%; and in Wisconsin, Biden leads Trump 51%-43%.

Trump's Approval Rating Among White Evangelicals Has Dropped Seven Percentage Points Since March. The Washington Post (7/1, Bailey, 14.2M) reports that Trump's approval rating "has dropped among his base of white evangelicals, though the vast majority still plan to vote for him," according to a Pew survey. The Post adds, "White evangelicals remain the religious group most supportive of the president, with 72 percent saying they approve of the way Trump is handling his job," but "that is a decline of seven percentage points from March, when Trump saw his highest level of support from the group since his election." The Post adds, "If the election were held today, 82 percent of white evangelicals said they would vote for Trump or lean toward voting for him," while 17% would support Biden.

Parscale: Trump "Dominating" Biden On Race's "Most Important Factor, Enthusiasm." In a Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M) op-ed, Trump Campaign Manager Brad Parscale says that like then-President George W. Bush did in 2004, President Trump is facing "a barrage of...headlines predicting likely defeat – pointing to national polling and an anxious population combating a global pandemic. But Trump is following through on his promises to the American people, and his reelection campaign is well positioned to spread his pro-growth economic agenda and contrast the president to 47-year career politician Joe Biden – who epitomizes the very system that has led to the current protests, and in many instances, civil unrest.” Parscale touts Trump’s “reelection war chest” and his campaign’s assembling of “the largest field program and data operation in Republican Party history,” then adds that “when it comes to the most important factor, enthusiasm, President Trump is dominating. The unprecedented enthusiasm behind” Trump’s “reelection efforts stands in stark contrast to the flat, almost nonexistent enthusiasm for Biden.”

Biden, DNC Raised $141M In June, Besting Trump And RNC's $131M Haul.

Axios (7/1, Falconer, 521K) reports, “Joe Biden and the Democratic Party raised $141 million in June, his campaign announced on Wednesday night.” The total represents “the most” Biden “has raised in a month. It’s also more than the record $131 million President Trump’s re-election campaign” and the RNC “raised last month. It’s the second month in a row Biden’s campaign has outraised Trump’s.”

The New York Times (7/1, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports that Trump “on Wednesday announced by far his biggest cash haul of the 2020 campaign in June, bringing in $131 million between his campaign and the” RNC, “showing that his money machine continues to hum even as he has slipped in the polls.” The June tally “represented a spike of $57 million more than Mr. Trump had raised in May, which was the first month that [Biden] had outraised the president. The Trump campaign said that it now had $295 million in the bank...and that it had raised nearly $950 million over the last two years.”

Politico (7/1, Schneider, 4.29M) reports, “Trump and the RNC announced in an email Wednesday evening that they brought in $266 million during the second fundraising quarter, after raising $212 million in the first three months of 2020.” Politico adds that at the end of May, Biden and the DNC “had about $122.2 million in cash on hand.” Reuters (7/1, Renshaw) reports that the President’s and RNC’s “fundraising numbers suggest the Trump campaign is still increasing its re-election war chest despite the health and economic damage done by the novel coronavirus pandemic and nationwide protests against racism that have deeply disrupted American life and hurt the president in opinion polls.” Said Trump Campaign Manager Brad Parscale, “The Trump campaign’s monumental June fundraising haul proves that people are voting with their wallets and that enthusiasm behind President Trump’s reelection is only growing.”

The Hill (7/1, Moreno, 2.98M) reports that RNC Chair Ronna McDaniel said in a statement, “After yet another haul of record-breaking support, the voters are speaking loud and clear – they support President Trump.” McDaniel added, “As Joe Biden remains hidden in his basement, President Trump is leading this country to a Great American Comeback that will reignite our economy, restore law and order, and usher in a new era of strength.” Bloomberg (7/1, Parker, Allison, 4.73M) also reports on the story.

WPost Report Details “Waves Of Fallout” From Trump’s June 20 Tulsa Rally.

The Washington Post (7/1, Dawsey, Leonnig, 14.2M) reports on the aftermath of President Trump’s June 20 rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma, saying that over “the past two weeks, the campaign has contended with waves of fallout from the rally.” The Post says that “hours before” the event, it was learned that a half-dozen “staff at the site had just tested positive for the coronavirus.” A couple “more advance staffers tested positive after returning to Washington. And dozens of Secret Service agents on the trip were ordered to self-quarantine at home because two of the staff who tested positive in Tulsa were Secret Service employees.” The Post says “some advisers now see the rally as ill-advised, an event that created a cascade of problems that have challenged the campaign and its staff.”

Kushner Shakes Up Trump Campaign In Wake Of Tulsa Rally. Politico (7/1, Isestadt, 4.29M) reports that White House senior adviser Jared Kushner “has engineered a shake-up” in Trump’s reelection campaign “in the aftermath of a botched Tulsa rally.” On Tuesday, Kushner “replaced chief operating officer Michael Glassner with Jeff DeWit, who held the same position in Trump’s 2016 campaign.” Politico adds that “the decision to remove Glassner, who has been overseeing the president’s rallies, is being seen internally as an effort to designate blame for the Tulsa disaster.” DeWit, “a former Arizona state treasurer, is a Trump loyalist who played a key role in the president’s 2016 win,” and was “later nominated him to serve as chief operating officer at NASA, a position DeWit stepped down from earlier this year.”

Reacting to the Glassner news in a statement to the New York Post (7/1, Jacobs, 4.57M), campaign spokesman Tim Murtaugh said, “This is not a reaction to Tulsa. ... Glassner is moving into the long-term role of navigating the many legal courses we face, including suits against major media outlets, some of which will likely extend beyond the end of the campaign. He is one of the founding members of Team Trump and his dedication to the success of the President is unmatched.”

Rove Suggests Steps Trump Camp Should Take To Change Dynamics Of Race. In his Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column, Karl Rove says that after a disastrous June and with polls showing President Trump trailing Joe Biden, the Trump camp needs to take steps to turn around the dynamics of the 2020 race. To do so, Rove suggests Trump deliver an address outlining new policy issues or strike a dramatic shift in tone that would give the White House an opportunity to argue the nation is pivoting in a new direction. Rove says Trump’s speech during the upcoming Republican National Convention would present the perfect opportunity for the President to take such a step.

Trump To Headline High-Dollar Fundraiser In Florida Next Week.

The Washington Post (7/1, Dawsey, Lee, 14.2M) reports “President Trump is set to hold a high-dollar dinner at a private residence in Hillsboro Beach, Fla., next week to raise money for his campaign and the Republican National Committee, according to an invitation sent to top GOP donors, his first in-person fundraiser since mid-June.” The Post adds “the invitation does not name the owner of the home hosting the $580,600-per-couple event,” and that “a person familiar with the fundraiser who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe the private event said all guests will be tested before interacting with the president.”

Trump: Biden Read Answers At News Conference From Teleprompter.

President Trump on Wednesday tweeted, “Biden was asked questions at his so-called Press Conference yesterday where he read the answers from a teleprompter. That means he was given the questions, just like Crooked Hillary. Never have seen this before!”

AP, Politico Analysis: Trump Claim False. In a “Fact Check” piece, the AP (7/1, Jaffe) reports that Trump, in a pair of Wednesday interviews, claimed Joe Biden had read answers to reporters’ questions from a teleprompter. The AP says that Trump “fabricated” the claim “Biden was fed questions at a news conference and read his answers from a teleprompter. This didn’t happen.” The AP asserts, “Biden did not read answers off a teleprompter. Nor did The Associated Press, which asked the first question at the briefing, submit questions in advance.” Under the headline “Trump Falsely Accuses Biden Of Being Fed Reporters’ Questions,” Politico (7/1, Forgey, 4.29M) similarly says Trump “falsely asserted that...Biden responded to questions from reporters...with pre-written answers displayed on a teleprompter – despite video footage of Biden’s interactions with the media demonstrably proving otherwise.”

Biden Says He Is “Constantly Tested” For Mental Decline. The Federalist (7/1, Gottschalk, 126K) reports that during Tuesday’s press conference, Biden “said he is ‘constantly tested’ for mental decline.” Biden was asked by a reporter from Fox News, “Some have speculated that you are subject to some degree of cognitive decline. I’m 65. I don’t have the word recollection that I used to have, I forget my train of thought from time to time. You got 12 years on me, sir. Have you been tested for some degree of cognitive decline?” Biden answered, “I’ve been tested, and I’m constantly tested.”

“Hundreds” Who Served In Bush Administration Reportedly Set To Back Biden.

Reuters (7/1, Reid) reports that “hundreds of officials who worked for former Republican President George W. Bush are set to endorse [Joe Biden], people involved in the effort said, the latest Republican-led group coming out to oppose the re-election of Donald Trump.” According to Reuters, “The officials, who include Cabinet secretaries and other senior people in the Bush administration, have formed a political action committee – 43 Alumni for Biden – to support the former vice president in his Nov. 3 race, three organizers of the group told Reuters.” The super PAC was to “launch on Wednesday with a website and Facebook page.”

The AP (7/1, Jaffe) reports that the super PAC “has recruited at least 200 former White House officials, campaign aides and Cabinet secretaries who worked under Bush to join the push against” Trump. The group plans “to roll out supportive testimonial videos featuring high-profile Republicans and launch a voter turnout effort in key states, aimed at turning out disaffected Republican voters.” The AP adds, “Kristopher Purcell, who worked in the Office of Communications in the White House and in the State Department during the Bush administration, said many of the members of the group still consider themselves Republicans but see the need to defeat Trump as beyond their personal politics.”

On its website, CNN (7/1, Duster, 83.16M) reports, “Karen Kirksey, the director of the committee and who worked on the Bush 2000 election campaign and in the Labor and Agriculture Departments, said the endorsement of Biden is ‘not necessarily in full support of his political agenda but rather in full agreement with the urgent need to restore the soul of this nation.’ ‘For four years, we have watched with grave concern as the party we loved has morphed into a cult of personality that little resembles the Party of Lincoln and Reagan,’ Kirksey said in a statement. ‘Once elected, we look forward to working in a bipartisan way through civil, spirited debate on the many important issues facing Americans today and for decades to come.’” she added.

The Hill (7/1, Axelrod, 2.98M) quotes Jennifer Millikin, “a committee member of the group who served in the General Services Administration under Bush and the Small Business Administration under Trump,” as saying, “We’re looking for the largest conglomerate of folks who want to help, whether it’s writing a check, making phone calls, helping to get out the vote, basic campaign 101. We just feel the time now is to restore dignity to the White House, and the current gentleman is not, so that’s why we’re supporting Joe Biden.”

NYTimes Highlights Voters Who Backed Trump In 2016, But Have Since “Soured On” Him. The New York Times (7/1, Miller, Quealy, Cohn, 18.61M) reports on voters who supported Trump in 2016, but have since “soured on” him, making it “highly unlikely they will vote for him again. These voters, who backed Mr. Trump in 2016 but say there’s ‘not really any chance’ they will this year, represent just 2 percent of all registered voters in the six states most likely to decide the presidency, according to New York Times/Siena College polls.” The Times adds, “In interviews, many said they initially backed Mr. Trump because he was a businessman, not a politician. In particular, he was not Hillary Clinton. But they have soured on his handling of the presidency. Several mentioned his divisive style and his firing of officials who disagreed with him, and especially his response to the coronavirus and to the unrest in the aftermath of the death of George Floyd in police custody.”

Poll: 72% Of Democrats Say It Is “Important” That Biden Select Woman Of Color For VP Slot.

USA Today (7/1, Page, Elbeshbishi, 10.31M) reports, “Seven of 10 Democrats in the new USA Today/Suffolk Poll say it is important to them that...Joe Biden picks a woman of color as his running mate. ... A third of Democrats, among both Blacks and whites, call it ‘very important.’” USA Today adds, “Among Democrats, 35% said it was ‘very important’ to them that” Biden’s “running mate be a woman of color; another 37% said it was ‘somewhat important.’ Only 26% said it was ‘not very’ or ‘not at all’ important.” The Hill (7/1, Johnson, 2.98M) reports, “The survey of 345 Democrats, conducted from last Thursday through Monday, has a margin of error of 5.3 percentage points."

Pro-Trump Group Sponsoring NASCAR Team For Next Nine Races, Beginning Sunday.

Newsweek (7/1, McDonald, 1.53M) reports, "The political action committee (PAC) called Patriots for America that supports the 2020 reelection of President Donald Trump will sponsor a NASCAR team for the next nine races, starting with this Sunday's event at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway." A filing "shows Patriots for America has paid $350,000 to Go Green Racing, Inc., and the car will be driven by Corey LaJoie." The filing "declares the federal candidate supported on the 'moving display' is Donald J. Trump." Newsweek adds, "LaJoie will drive the No. 32 Ford with Go Fas Racing at the Big Machine Hand Sanitizer 400 Powered by Big Machine Records on Sunday."

Politico Analysis: "Barrage Of Bad News" Hurting Senate GOP Ahead Of 2020 Election.

Politico (7/1, Bresnahan, Levine, 4.29M) reports, "The high point of 2020 for Senate Republicans – if there is one – may have been Feb. 6. The Senate had acquitted President Donald Trump in his impeachment trial the day before, and he held an hour-long 'victory celebration' in the East Room of the White House." Since then, "the coronavirus pandemic has killed nearly 130,000 Americans and decimated the US economy." Meanwhile, "Trump has slumped badly in the polls due in no small part to his erratic response to the crisis." Politico says Trump's response to the fallout after "the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police officers," and the "new scandal...over alleged Russian bounties paid to the Taliban to kill US soldiers," has also created havoc for Senate Republicans. The "seemingly unending barrage of bad news has made what was already going to be a tough cycle for Senate Republicans even more difficult."

After Claims Of Racism, College Democrats Force Leadership Changes.

The New York Times (7/1, Astor, 18.61M) reports, "The president of the College Democrats of America resigned on Wednesday, and members of the executive board pledged not to run for re-election, after the board's only Black member said he had experienced racism and classism from the organization's leadership. The Black board member, Matthew Nowling, who had been the group's communications director, will serve as interim president until a new election is held. In an open letter published Tuesday, 41 of the College Democrats' 47 federations...expressed solidarity with Mr. Nowling and said that if their demands were not met within two days, they would 'cut all ties with the organization and denounce it in its current form.'" Nowling "called the events of the past few days 'encouraging steps towards creating a more inclusive and accountable environment.'"

WSJournal: Whitehouse's Dealings With Clean-Energy Company Raises Questions About Corruption.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) draws attention to the relationship between Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-RI) and a green energy company that gives rise to questions about corruption. Top executives of Providence-based Utilidata in 2015 contributed to Whitehouse's Senate campaign, then, in 2016, Utilidata was represented in a roundtable co-hosted by Whitehouse with then-Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz on clean energy.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 41.5%.

World Bank Head Says COVID-19 Widening Inequality Gap.

Reuters (7/1, Lawder) reports World Bank President David Malpass "said on Wednesday that the coronavirus pandemic was exacerbating inequality throughout the world by hitting hardest those without a social safety net in developing countries while central bank asset purchases in advanced countries benefit the richest." Malpass "told a webcast event hosted by the Council of the Americas the coronavirus pandemic was a 'catastrophe' for the developing world that would bring long-term damage and global economic output would not recover to its pre-pandemic level for years."

IMF Official Tells UK To Invest In More Green Projects To Boost Economy.

The Guardian \(UK\) (7/2, Partington, 4.19M) reports IMF Chief Economist Gita Gopinath said the UK government should make green projects a spending priority to create jobs and boost the post-pandemic economic recovery. Gopinath, in comments to members of Parliament on the Treasury committee, "said that mounting unemployment triggered by the Covid-19 crisis would require swift action to prevent lasting damage, and that spending on low-carbon projects could be used in response." Gopinath also "said countries such as the UK had an opportunity to 'do public investment that also addresses the need for a greener planet, and at the same time as a jobs-rich recovery.'" Gopinath added, "For many countries we can see a very good argument for them to undertake public investment spending, because this is going to be a crisis where people are going to hold back spending for a while. The private sector will hold back from spending for a while, so there is a role for public investment."

Ukraine Central Bank Head Abruptly Quits, Citing "Systematic Political Pressure."

Reuters (7/1, Zinets, Williams) reports Ukraine's Central Bank Governor Yakiv Smoliy "unexpectedly submitted his resignation on Wednesday, citing 'systematic political pressure' on the bank's activities and attempts to curb its independence." Reuters says the decision, if accepted by Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy, "could derail a $5 billion loan programme that Ukraine agreed last month with the International Monetary Fund to fight a sharp economic slump, which is conditional on the central bank staying free of political meddling." Zelenskyy's office in a statement "gave reassurances that safeguarding the central bank's independence remained its 'unconditional priority,' but did not say whether Zelenskyy would accept the resignation or who a replacement might be."

Trump Says China Could Have Halted Spread Of Coronavirus To Rest Of World.

President Trump said in an interview with Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M), "We understand this disease now. ... They could have stopped it in China. And they did stop it going into China for the most part, but they didn't stop it. Beijing had a little bit of an outbreak, I understand, recently but I would view that as somewhat different. They stopped it from going into China, but they didn't stop it from going to the US and the world and they should have been able to do that."

US Diplomats' Planned Return To China Delayed. Reuters (7/1, Pamuk) reports that the US "has postponed flights for dozens of American diplomats who had planned to return to China later this month, after failing to reach agreement with Beijing over issues including COVID-19 testing and quarantine." Reuters adds, "Five months after the coronavirus epidemic forced the evacuation of some 1,300 U.S. diplomats and family members from China, Washington and Beijing remain locked in negotiations over conditions for their return."

Pompeo: Europeans Have Responsibility To Keep People Safe With Travel Ban.

Secretary of State Pompeo was asked on Fox News' Special Report (7/1, 1.53M) about the European Union's decision to block travelers from the US. Pompeo said, "Remember, we're not allowing Europeans to come here today either. We are in close conversation with countries all around the world, including European countries, to make sure that when we reopen our country to travel from their nations that we do so in a way that keeps the American people safe and reduces risk from COVID here in the United States. They have a responsibility to that do that for their nations as well."

Slow COVID Response Raises Concerns Over Safety Of Diplomats In Saudi Arabia.

The New York Times (7/1, Mazzetti, Wong, 18.61M) reports a coronavirus outbreak in the American Embassy compound in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia sickened dozens of embassy employees last month, "and more than 20 others were quarantined after a birthday barbecue became a potential vector for the spread of the disease." An assessment from within the embassy circulated last month "said the response from the Saudi government – a close partner of the Trump White House – was insufficient, even as hospitals were getting overwhelmed and health care workers were falling ill." The Times says "the episode, based on accounts from eight current and one former official, highlights the perils facing American diplomacy with a global pandemic still raging, and the frictions between front-line diplomats, intelligence officers and defense officials on one side and senior Trump administration officials on the other who are eager to preserve relations with nations like Saudi Arabia that have special ties with the Trump White House."

Tedros Urges US To Continue Working With WHO.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (7/1, Ghebreyesus, 14.2M), WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus writes that the US has been a "vital partner" of the WHO since its creation and if the US withdraws from the organization, there would be "consequences" for everyone. Tedros cites the COVID-19 pandemic as evidence that "we need more international cooperation to address global health crises, not less." He concludes, "We hope the United States will keep working with the WHO so we can jointly continue the important progress we have made. There is so much more we can do together."

Families Of US Troops Slain In Jordan Call On Congress To Press For Extraditions.

The AP (7/1, Lee) reports, "The families of three Special Forces troops slain by a Jordanian soldier at a military base in Jordan in 2016 are calling on Congress to suspend aid to the key U.S. Mideast partner until it extradites the killer." In addition, the families are "joining an effort to press Jordan to extradite a woman convicted in Israel of a 2001 bombing that killed 15 people, including two Americans." In their letters to lawmakers, the families of the US soldiers, "Matthew Lewellen, of Missouri, Kevin McEnroe, of Arizona, and James Moriarty, of Texas, said Congress should withhold or reduce foreign aid to Jordan unless both cases are resolved."

France Pulls Out Of NATO Mission To Enforce Libya Arms Embargo.

Politico (7/1, Momtaz, 4.29M) reports that France is "temporarily pulling out of a NATO naval operation in the Mediterranean, in a move that indicates there was not enough support from the alliance following an aggressive encounter with Turkish ships last month." France's Ambassador to NATO Muriel Domenach "sent a letter on Tuesday to NATO Secretary-General Jens Stoltenberg notifying him of the decision to pull out of Operation Sea Guardian, meant to control an arms embargo on Libya. In it she said a NATO report into an incident between a French ship and a Turkish ship in mid-June 'did not establish the facts,' according to a French defense ministry official."

Pentagon Report Says Areas Of Afghanistan Remain "Terrorist Sanctuaries."

The Washington Times (7/1, Wolfgang, 492K) reports that in a "sobering new report to Congress" Wednesday, the Pentagon warned that remote areas of Afghanistan continue to be home to "terrorist sanctuaries" and some Taliban members regularly cooperate with extremist groups like al Qaeda. The "congressionally mandated study," offers "a bleak picture of the security situation inside the country," as the Administration "forges ahead with a troop drawdown in Afghanistan, a central element of a landmark peace deal struck with the Taliban earlier this year."

Russians Overwhelmingly Back Extension Of Putin's Rule.

According to Reuters (7/1, Osborn, Soldatkin), "Russians appeared to have paved the way for Vladimir Putin to stay in power until 2036 by voting overwhelmingly for a package of constitutional changes which will also boost pensions, initial results of a nationwide vote showed on Wednesday." Reuters says "partial results, announced five hours before polls closed, indicate" Putin "who has ruled Russia for more than two decades as president or prime minister, will win the right to run for two more terms," which "means he could remain president for 16 more years." Russia's Central Election Commission "said just over 70% of votes counted across the world's largest country had supported changing the constitution," while "almost 29% had voted no of the 2.68% of ballots counted."

The AP (7/1, Isachenkov, Litvinova) reports that "with the nation's polls closed and 30% of all precincts counted, 74% voted for the constitutional amendments, according to election officials." The AP says that "for the first time in Russia, polls were kept open for a week to bolster turnout without increasing crowds casting ballots amid the coronavirus pandemic – a provision that Kremlin critics denounced as an extra tool to manipulate the outcome." According to the AP, "By the time polls closed in Moscow and most other parts of Western Russia, the overall turnout was at 65%, according to election officials. In some regions, about 90% of eligible voters cast ballots." The Washington Post (7/1, Khurshudyan, 14.2M) and Politico (7/1, Anderson, 4.29M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Pompeo Denounces China's Imposition Of Stifling Security Law On Hong Kong.

Reuters (7/1) reports that on Wednesday, Secretary of State Pompeo "said...the new security law China has imposed on Hong Kong was an affront to all nations and Washington would continue to implement President Donald Trump's directive to end the territory's special status." According to Reuters, Pompeo "told a news briefing the United States was deeply concerned about the safety of everyone in Hong Kong and said Article 38 of the law passed on Tuesday purported to apply to offenses committed outside Hong Kong and likely included Americans." Pompeo is quoted as saying, "This is outrageous and an affront to all nations. ... Free Hong Kong was one of the world's most stable, prosperous and dynamic cities. Now, now it will be just another Communist-run city where people will be subject to the party elites' whims. ... We will continue to implement President Trump's directive to end Hong Kong's special status."

Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M) reports on its website that the Trump Administration is "moving to end special trade terms given to the territory," and "has also said it will bar defense exports to Hong Kong and will soon require licenses for the sale of items that have both civilian and military uses." Pompeo "said the law's adoption 'destroys the territory's autonomy and one of China's greatest achievements.'"

The CBS Evening News (7/1, story 10, 0:20, Garrett, 4.8M) reported also on Wednesday "authorities in Hong Kong used water canons and pepper spray to disperse thousands of pro-democracy protestors." The New York Times (7/1, Wang, Stevenson, 18.61M) reports that police in Hong Kong "moved swiftly on Wednesday to enforce China's new national security rules with the first arrests under the law, as the city immediately felt the chilling effect of Beijing's offensive to quash dissent in the semiautonomous territory." The Times adds, "On Wednesday, the anniversary of Hong Kong's return to Chinese control – usually observed by huge pro-democracy marches – a scattered crowd of thousands protested, only to be corralled by the police and risk arrest for crimes that did not exist a day earlier." The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Strumpf, Bird, Wang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that by the end of the day, police had arrested about 370 people, including 10 for offenses created under the new national security law.

The Washington Post (7/1, Dou, Mahtani, 14.2M) says, "Overnight, Hong Kong's 7.5 million residents were put under the same speech restrictions as the mainland, with possible life imprisonment for those deemed guilty of subversion – a standard charge used to jail political dissidents and human rights activists in China." The Post adds, "Still, tens of thousands braved arrest Wednesday to protest in defiance as Beijing dismantles their freedoms." The Post goes on to say, "Equally striking in China's move was the realpolitik logic underlying the new law: It signaled that China sees no need to abide by international agreements it made from a position of weakness in earlier years as a poorer nation."

According to Bloomberg (7/1, 4.73M), "the law shows that Xi [Jinping] sees Hong Kong foremost as the one place under his control where citizens could openly undermine the Chinese Communist Party's grip on power, and that could not stand no matter the consequences. Consulting with Hong Kong on a law designed to intimidate its residents into silence, therefore, might make it less effective both as a tool of coercion and as a message to China's neighbors and the world, according to Rush Doshi, director of the Brookings China Strategy Initiative."

The AP (7/1, Hui) says, "From Tokyo to Brussels, political leaders have swiftly decried Beijing's move to impose a tough national security law on Hong Kong. ... But the rhetoric has more bark than bite. For people in Hong Kong, the question is: Will international anger and statements of concern make any difference?" The AP adds, "China routinely dismisses all such criticism as interference in its domestic affairs," and "one of the crimes in the Hong Kong security law explicitly outlaws receiving funding or support from overseas to disrupt lawmaking in Hong Kong or impose sanctions on the city."

Reuters (7/1, Murdoch, Chow) reports that the new national security law "punishes crimes of secession, subversion, terrorism and collusion with foreign forces with up to life in prison, will see mainland security agencies in Hong Kong for the first time and allows extradition to the mainland for trial." According to Reuters, "Authorities in Beijing and Hong Kong have repeatedly said the legislation is aimed at a few 'troublemakers' and will not affect rights and freedoms, nor investors' interests. But critics fear it will end the pro-democracy opposition and crush freedoms, including an independent legal system and right to protest, that are seen as key to Hong Kong's success as a financial centre."

Pelosi Declines To Commit To Holding Vote On China's Hong Kong Suppression. Politico (7/1, Bade, 4.29M) reports that on Wednesday, House Speaker Pelosi "spoke out against China's new national security law for Hong Kong...but did not commit to take up a Senate-passed sanctions bill to penalize the nation for violating the territory's autonomy." Politico reports that last week, the Senate "unanimously passed a sanctions bill to penalize individuals, banks and other entities that enable China's new security law." According to Politico, "while Pelosi called for bipartisan action to combat Beijing's move, including 'visa limitations and economic penalties,' she did not commit to taking up that bill or companion legislation introduced in the House."

Ross: US Will Be "Doing Away With Hong Kong's Special Status" In Regards To Trade. Appearing on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (7/1), Commerce Secretary Ross was asked about China's new national security law for Hong Kong that outlaws all pro-independence activities. Ross said, "We obviously think it's a gross violation of human rights and also gross violation of the original treaty under which they turned Hong Kong over from the British to the Chinese. And that's why...we are doing away with Hong Kong's special status in terms of our trade relations. China has made Hong Kong no longer a special haven. ... If it's not special to the Chinese, it couldn't be special to us."

WPost, WSJournal: China Has Betrayed Hong Kong. The Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M) editorializes "Hong Kong as it has been known – a bastion of free speech and rule of law, an autonomous, glittering capital of capitalism – has been smothered" after China's imposition of its new national security law. In doing so, "China has broken its promise to Britain on the handover of Hong Kong in 1997 to preserve the concept of 'one country, two systems' for 50 years." The development "makes it even more imperative for the West to stand by the vibrant democracy of Taiwan."

Likewise, the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes the world should be alarmed at China's imposition of its national-security law on Hong Kong because it shows that China's Communist leaders aren't afraid to violate international commitments. The Journal urges the US to accept Hong Kong refugees and warns governments around the world not to trust Beijing's promises.

NYTimes: Trump Must Stand Up For Human Rights. The New York Times (7/1, 18.61M) editorializes, "It is now for President Trump, who has shown little enthusiasm so far for tangling with President Xi Jinping over human rights, to use the tools that Congress has placed at his disposal to show Beijing that its transgressions have consequences." However, the Times says "Trump's commitment to using these tools of statecraft to change China's behavior...is uncertain." Yet, the Times asserts that "the unanimous, bipartisan support for these bills, and Mr. Trump's signature on them, even if unenthusiastic, are an appropriately direct and clear signal to China that its behavior is contemptible and will have serious consequences."

USCBP Seizes Human Hair Believed To Be Taken From Detained Chinese.

The AP (7/1, Mendoza) reports that in New York on Wednesday, Customs and Border Protection "seized a shipment of weaves and other beauty accessories suspected to be made out of human hair taken from people locked inside a Chinese internment camp." According to the AP, "13 tons (11.8 metric tonnes) of hair products worth an estimated $800,000 were in the shipment." The AP says "this is the second time this year that CBP has slapped one of its rare detention orders on shipments of hair weaves from China, based on suspicions that people making them face human rights abuses."

China Asks US Media Outlets To Submit Details Of Their Operations. Reuters (7/1) reports that on Wednesday, the Chinese Foreign Ministry "asked some U.S. media outlets present in the country to submit information about their China operations." Ministry spokesman Zhao Lijian "named the Associated Press, National Public Radio, CBS and United Press International news agency as companies asked to submit the requested information in writing within seven days."

The AP (7/1) reports Zhao said, "It should be pointed out that the above-mentioned measures by China are completely necessary countermeasures and are completely legitimate defenses compelled by unreasonable suppression of the US side on Chinese media agencies in the United States."

Israel Delays West Bank Annexation Amid Talks With White House.

According to Reuters (7/1, Heller, Williams), "Israeli annexation in the occupied West Bank might be weeks away, a government minister said as a start date on Wednesday for cabinet discussions of the move slipped by in the absence of a green light from Washington." Reuters says that in May, "Israeli leaders decided...that cabinet and parliamentary deliberations on extending Israeli sovereignty to Jewish settlements and the Jordan Valley in the West Bank, in coordination with Washington, could begin as of July 1." However, "with no agreement with Washington yet on the modalities of the move under a peace proposal announced by" President Trump in January, "and talks with the White House still under way, no cabinet session was scheduled for Wednesday."

The New York Times (7/1, Halbfinger, 18.61M) reports "scenarios that continue to be floated in the Israeli news media only raise new questions." For example, "the latest, described as a counterproposal by Mr. Netanyahu to the Trump administration's original 'conceptual map' for possible annexation, showed Jewish enclaves deep in Palestinian-designated territory growing, presumably to appease right-wing settlers who objected to being marooned inside a potential Palestinian state." However, "it also called for compensating the Palestinians by handing them some of the hills overlooking Ben-Gurion International Airport, which Israeli hawks had once considered too strategically vital to give away." The Times adds "other options mentioned include annexing a small, purely symbolic area, taking the entire 30 percent or doing it in phases."

British PM Urges Israel Not To Annex West Bank. Reuters (7/1, Faulconbridge, Heller) reports that British Prime Minister Boris Johnson "cautioned Israel on Wednesday against annexation in the occupied West Bank, saying it would violate international law and harm its drive to improve relations with the Arab world. ... 'Annexation would represent a violation of international law,' Johnson said in an opinion piece for Yedioth Ahronoth, Israel's top-selling daily, echoing remarks he made in parliament last month." Johnson added, "Annexation would put in jeopardy the progress that Israel has made in improving relationships with the Arab and Muslim world."

Politico Report: Human Rights Groups Increasingly Alarmed Over US Actions.

Politico (7/1, Toosi, 4.29M) reports that as the United Nations Human Rights Council in June debated "launching a special investigation of racism in America after the killing of George Floyd," US officials scrambled "to avert a public relations disaster, dispatching its diplomats to pull strings and call in favors." Their work was successful – "the 47-member council didn't order a U.S.-focused probe, instead requesting a broader report on anti-Black racism worldwide." However, "that it came so close to doing so illustrates how international activists, groups and institutions are increasingly focusing on the United States as a villain, not a hero, on the subject of human rights." According to Politico, "while the U.S. has never fully escaped such scrutiny – consider the post-9/11 fury over torture, Guantanamo Bay and drone strikes – former officials and activists say that, under President Donald Trump, American domestic strife is raising an unusual level of alarm alongside U.S. actions on the global stage."

Freddie Mac Drives Increase In GSE MBS Issuance In June.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/1, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "The mortgage-backed securities machines at Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac continued to run in overdrive in June, churning out $195.12 billion of new single-family product." According to IMF, GSE production was "up just 0.8% from May" in June, but it "still qualified as the third busiest month on record for the two secondary-market giants. While Fannie volume was down from May, Freddie recorded a solid 10.7% increase in June." IMF says refi activity "continued to drive Fannie/Freddie MBS issuance. However, purchase-mortgage activity has still not caught fire as the economic impact of the coronavirus dampens the peak season for home sales."

Trade Groups Want More Time To Comment On FHFA's GSE Capital Plan.

American Banker (7/1, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that in a letter to FHFA Director Mark Calabria, 17 trade groups on Tuesday indicated that they want the agency to "double the comment period for a proposal to require Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to hold more than five times their current capital levels." The American Bankers Association, Mortgage Banker Association, National Association of Realtors, Structured Finance Association, and 13 other groups said, "We believe that it is essential that market participants have time to focus on this complex proposed rule, which poses over 100 questions to respondents and has the potential to significantly affect both the cost and availability of mortgage financing, as well as affordability for homeowners and renters in both the single family and multifamily space."

CFPB Moving Quickly On QM Rule Rewrite.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg Law (7/1, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports that the CFPB "wants to provide more flexibility in determining what counts as a safer qualified mortgage, and is moving quickly to finalize a rule before a potential change in administrations." According to Bloomberg, the proposal to rewrite the QM standard "comes with a brief 60-day comment period and would take effect April 2021, a tight timeline for a major regulatory shift in how lenders underwrite mortgages." Bloomberg says that the quick turnaround "isn't an accident. The upcoming presidential election could result in the Democratic nominee, former Vice President Joe Biden, taking office in January and replacing CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled Monday that the bureau's director [is] an at-will employee of the president." Potentially behind a paywall, Law360 (7/1, Hill, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, "In a blog post announcing the publication of its latest regulatory agenda, the CFPB also highlighted other rulemaking activities that it is planning for the coming months, but didn't address when its overdue payday lending rule rewrite might cross the finish line."

GSEs Confirm Primary Mortgage Insurer Capital Requirements For Natural Disasters Apply To Pandemic-Related Defaults.

National Mortgage News (7/1, Finkelstein) reports that Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae have confirmed that private mortgage insurer capital requirements that apply in natural disasters "also apply to coronavirus-related delinquencies." As a result, the six insurers can hold "less liquidity against forbearances." US Mortgage Insurers President Lindsey Johnson said, "This type of forbearance is often used for natural disasters such as hurricanes or other shorter-term disasters that occurred in a specific geographic area, and generally have a definite period for the event. However, due to the unprecedented nature of the COVID-19 disaster, including its national scope and the ongoing duration of the health and economic effects, the PMIERS language needed additional clarity, which we are pleased FHFA, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac understood and provided."

CHLA Hires Craig Thomas As Communications Director.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/1, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports the Community Home Lenders Association "hired Craig Thomas as its new communications director." IMF says Thomas "joins the trade group from Freddie Mac, where he worked for roughly 30 years in a number of external relations and public policy roles."

Trump Says He "May End" Obama-Era Housing Rule.

Politico (7/1, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reports that President Trump is "threatening to revoke a sweeping Obama-era fair housing rule, stepping up his administration's efforts to gut anti-discrimination laws amid a national reckoning with race." According to Politico, Trump "cast the 2015 Affirmatively Furthering Fair Housing rule as a campaign issue with a thinly veiled warning to the 'great Americans who live in the suburbs' that...Joe Biden would bring chaos to their neighborhoods." Trump tweeted, "At the request of many great Americans who live in the Suburbs, and others, I am studying the AFFH housing regulation that is having a devastating impact on these once thriving Suburban areas. Corrupt Joe Biden wants to make them MUCH WORSE. Not fair to homeowners, I may END!" The New York Times (7/1, Thrush, 18.61M) provides additional coverage.

Regulators Urge FIs To Continue Transition Away From Libor.

Reuters (7/1, Jones, Jones) reports, "Disruption to markets caused by the COVID-19 pandemic must not stop banks from ending their use of the Libor interest rate benchmark by the end of 2021, the Financial Stability Board said on Wednesday." The FSB said the Libor transition "remains an essential task that will strengthen the global financial system," urging financial institutions to ditch the reference rate even as many regulators continue to use it in pandemic relief measures. According to Reuters, "Moody's said in a report on Wednesday that without a transition plan, otherwise manageable issues such as increased costs and inadequate hedging, become more material and make it difficult to quantify risks."

HUD Proposal Would Allow Homeless Shelters To Refuse Transgender People Access To Single-Sex Facilities.

The New York Times (7/1, Cameron, 18.61M) reports that HUD has "proposed allowing homeless shelters to deny transgender people access to single-sex shelters of their gender identity." In an announcement Wednesday, the Department said the proposed regulation would ensure that shelters "must not discriminate based on sexual orientation or transgender status." The announcement said the changes accommodate the "religious beliefs of shelter providers." The Administration "has been pushing the change, arguing that it would prevent men from surreptitiously gaining access to women's homeless shelters to abuse residents or track down spouses and partners," but "advocates for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender rights and civil libertarians said the rule would mean transgender women, potentially even other women mistaken as transgender, could be referred to shelters that also accommodate men, where they could face abuse or assault."

Former HUD Secretary Julián Castro Calls On Congress To Invest "$100B In Direct Rental Assistance."

The Hill (7/1, Moreno, 2.98M) reports former HUD Secretary Julián Castro believes Congress "should pass direct rental assistance to avoid a housing crisis amid the coronavirus pandemic." Castro proposes that Congress allocate $100 billion in "direct housing assistance." According to The Hill, "The CARES Act, signed in late March, included a moratorium on evictions for tenants in units with federally-backed mortgages or other assistance who were unable to pay rent, which only applies to about a fifth of renters. The rest are subject to local eviction moratoria, which have begun to expire." MSNBC (7/1, Tur, 7.86M) also covers Castro's proposal.

MBA: Mortgage Application Fall Again This Week, Dipping 1.8%.

National Mortgage News (7/1, McCullom) reports, "Mortgage application volume was down for the second consecutive week, this time by 1.8%, as a new record low for rates was not enough to overcome diminished demand, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association." That the Purchase Index fell 1% on a seasonally adjusted basis from the prior week, while the unadjusted Purchase Index fell 2%. The Refinance Index fell 2%. The refi share fell slightly, dipping from 61.3% to 61.2%. The ARM share fell from 3.2% to 3.1%. The FHA share rose from 11.4% to 11.7%, while the VA share fell from 11% to 10.8%. The average rate for 30-year FRMs with conforming balances fell from 3.30% to 3.29%, while that for jumbos fell from 3.62% to 3.59%. The 15-year FRM average held flat at 2.81%. The 5/1 ARM average fell from 3.09% to 3.04%.

Mortgage News Daily (7/1, Swanson) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "Mortgage applications fell last week despite mortgage rates hitting another record low in MBA's survey. Investors are contemplating the risks of the recent resurgence of COVID-19 cases to the labor market and economy, and Treasury rates and mortgage rates are moving lower as a result. After two months of strong growth, purchase applications declined for the second week in a row. The weakening in activity is potentially a signal that pent-up demand is starting to wane and that low housing supply is limiting prospective buyers' options. The average purchase application loan size increased to a record high in our survey – more proof that tight inventory conditions are leading to faster price growth."

Ellie Mae: Millennial Purchase Activity Picks Up As Mortgage Rates Hit All-Time Lows.

National Mortgage Professional (7/1, Persaud) reports Ellie Mae's Millennial Tracker "found that millennials are securing the lowest average interest rate on a 30-year mortgage since it began tracking the demographic in January 2016." With mortgage rates at record lows amid "peak homebuying season," Ellie Mae "reported a month-over-month increase in purchase share for the demographic." According to NMP, "The average interest rates for millennials dropped from 3.48% in April to 3.42% in May. Purchase share began to rise from 45% to 47%, which was the first month-over-month increase since November 2019, according to the report."

Surge In COVID Cases, Fed Comments Drive Mortgage Rates Down.

HousingWire (7/1, Howley, 23K) reports that a surge in coronavirus cases and the Fed's gloomy outlook on the US economy prompted a drop in mortgage rates. The average rate for a 30-year conforming FRM "fell to 3.12% on Monday and Tuesday, as measured by Optimal Blue. That's the second-lowest daily rate on record, following the 3.1% set on June 11." The drop in rates reflects increased investor demand for MBS.

Fannie Mae Releases Report On Its Multifamily Green Bond Program.

Mortgage Professional America (7/2, Johnston) reports that Fannie Mae "has been recognized as the largest issuer of green bonds in the world for the third consecutive year, with $22.8 billion issuances in 2019." According to MPA, "The GSE has issued $75 billion in green bonds and $9 billion in green securitizations over its decade-long life." Fannie Mae Multifamily EVP Jeffery Hayward said, "We are proud of the role our Green Financing program plays in building more sustainable and resilient communities and of what we have achieved for investors, lenders, borrowers, and the people who live in the properties we finance. We are excited to build upon the 10 years of progress we have made in green financing, and we will continue to look for new ways to advance this important work."

HECM Lending Plummeted In April After Surging In Q1.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/1, Bhatia, Subscription Publication) reports that HECM lending rose 23.5% in Q1 from 4Q19. YoY, HECM lending rose 38.1% to $3.87 billion. According to IMF, "By comparison, forward originations in the overall mortgage market fell 7.6% from the fourth quarter to the first. Traditional HECMs, which exclude purchases and refinances, accounted for 70.5% of FHA-insured reverse mortgages originated during 1Q20." However, "In April, with the coronavirus pandemic at its presumed peak, HECM lending fell a stunning 45% to $607 million compared to March's tally of $1.11 billion."

Mayopoulos Weighs In On Quicken, Fintech, And Innovation Catalysts Amid The Pandemic.

DS News (7/1, Albanese) interviewed Blend President Tim Mayopoulos about the "rise of fintech in housing," Quicken Loans' IPO, Quicken's role in the fintech space, and the impact of the pandemic on technology in housing. According to Mayopoulos, Quicken's fintech push has "served as a catalyst for the entire industry," and there is "clearly a great demand for technological innovation in the mortgage industry." Mayopoulos said the pandemic is an "additional accelerant on the transformational change that's happening in housing finance."

Freedom Mortgage CEO Discusses Helping Borrowers Exiting Forbearance.

DS News (7/1, Albanese) interviewed Freedom Mortgage CEO Stanley Middleman about how the industry can "best assist homeowners coming out of forbearance." Middleman also discusses the differences between the current economic downturn and the Great Recession.

Census Bureau: Construction Spending Falls 2.1% In May.

HousingWire (7/1, Howley, 23K) reports US construction spending fell 2.1% in May, though "the level of homebuilding was above the year-ago level, according to a government report on Wednesday." HousingWire reports, "Combined homebuilding and nonresidential construction outlays totaled $1.36 trillion at a seasonally adjusted annualized rate, down from $1.39 trillion in April, the Census Bureau report said." NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun predicts that low mortgage rates should give construction a boost in the second half of 2020. Freddie Mac reported that the 30-year FRM averaged just 3.13% last week, an all-time low.

First American: Millennials Likely To Fuel Huge Spike In Homebuying Demand.

National Mortgage News (7/1, Centopani) reports First American predicts a surge in homebuying demand, thanks to millennials. First American's Homeownership Progress Index shows that millennials make up the largest generational demographic in the country, and homeownership demand among millennials rose three percentage points on an annual basis in 2019. According to First American Chief Economist Mark Fleming, "Though the pandemic presents new challenges to achieving homeownership, millennial lifestyle decisions will continue to support potential homeownership demand in the years ahead, meaning millennials may be poised to fuel a 'roaring 20s' of homeownership demand."

MIT Study: Boston Evictions Disproportionately Concentrated In Black Neighborhoods.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (7/1, Capps, 4.73M) reports that a "new study" from MIT indicates that in Boston, eviction cases "filed since the start of the pandemic are overwhelmingly located in majority-Black neighborhoods." MIT's report shows that "78% of the Boston eviction cases currently suspended by the moratorium were filed in majority-minority neighborhoods."

Study Finds "High Levels" Of Discrimination Against Black Renters, Section 8 Vouchers In Boston.

The Springfield (MA) Republican (7/1, Bonner, 395K) reports a yearlong study has revealed high levels of discrimination against Black renters and those with Section 8 housing vouchers by landlords and real estate agents. Boston Foundation Senior Director of Housing and Neighborhoods Soni Gupta said, "The study demonstrates in vivid detail the added burden of discrimination that non-white and low-income families face when seeking housing. ... At a time when we know that access to a home is critical for a family's health and overall well-being, these findings underscore the need for equal rights and protections for all Greater Boston residents so they live in the homes and the communities of their choice."

Mr. Cooper Starts Hedging MSR's.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/1, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports that Mr. Cooper "is now actively hedging its positions" to "soften negative marks against its portfolio of 'owned' mortgage servicing rights." According to IMF, Mr. Cooper is also "maintaining a 'natural' hedge of running a high-volume call center focused on capturing run-off." IMF says Mr. Cooper likely "changed its mind" on hedging MSR's because of "30-year fixed-rate mortgages falling to 3.0%. The company's biggest concern, perhaps: By January 2021, thanks in part to the pandemic, rates may be even lower."

Pandemic Prompts Hope Now To Suspend Operations.

National Mortgage News (7/1, Sinnock) reports nonprofit Hope Now has suspended its operations, saying that its "primary approach to borrower assistance has been organizing and hosting large gatherings of consumers and servicers, an approach that is incompatible with the health risks posed by COVID-19." According to NMN, "Hope Now has provided in-person services to more than 200,000 families and hosted over 250 live events."

10-Year Yield Ticks Down.

MarketWatch (7/2, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.674 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (7/2, Chatterjee) reports, "The U.S. dollar slipped to a one-week low against its rivals on Thursday as upbeat U.S. and European economic data sharpened risk appetite, with hopes for a COVID-19 vaccine breakthrough also helping sentiment." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar "is on track for its biggest weekly drop in a month, of 0.4%." The euro "advanced 0.1% to $1.1264."

Gold Edges Lower.

Reuters (UK) (7/2, Patel) reports, "Gold edged lower on Thursday, easing from a near eight-year peak hit in the last session, as solid U.S. manufacturing data and promising results from a COVID-19 vaccine trial revived hopes for a quick economic recovery, denting demand for safe havens." Spot gold "was down 0.1% to $1,768.56 per ounce by 0703 GMT, after touching $1,788.96 on Wednesday, its highest since October 2012. U.S. gold futures fell 0.1% to $1,778."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (7/2, Paul, Peng) reports, "Oil prices rose on Thursday, reversing early losses, as a sharp drop in oil stockpiles outweighed concerns that a spike in U.S. coronavirus infections and revived lockdown measures in California could stall a recovery in fuel demand." West Texas Intermediate crude futures "rose 25 cents, or 0.6%, to $40.07 a barrel by 0632 GMT, adding to a 1.4% rise from Wednesday." Brent crude "was up 25 cents or 0.6% at $42.28 a barrel, after rising 1.8% in the previous session."

Beijing Lashes Out At US For "Oppressing Chinese Companies" After Huawei, ZTE Action.

The Hill (7/1, Bowden, 2.98M) reports Chinese officials on Wednesday "lashed out at the Trump Administration over actions the US has taken against two Chinese companies accused of close relationships with China's military." The Associated Press reported that "a spokesperson for China's foreign ministry accused the Trump Administration of 'abusing state power' to slander Chinese the Chinese companies Huawei and ZTE 'without any evidence.'" The spokesperson, according to the AP, said, "We once again urge the United States to stop abusing the concept of national security, deliberately discrediting China and unreasonably oppressing Chinese companies." Beijing's latest statement comes "as the FCC took action this week to block Chinese firms from receiving US government subsidies, and follows the body formally designating ZTE and Huawei companies as national security threats on Tuesday."

FCC Action Against Huawei Reflects Broader Split Between China And The West. The Washington Post (7/1, Marks, 14.2M) reports in the Cybersecurity 202 column that the US' move "to label Huawei as a national security threat and block it from billions of dollars in subsidies is its toughest move yet against the Chinese telecom." And with more allies "poised to follow suit, Washington's uphill diplomatic campaign to isolate the company is at a turning point – and it's a sign of deepening fissure between the West and China." US arguments are "gaining traction now amid Western anger over China's dissimulation about the initial spread of the coronavirus and more recently by its crackdown on Hong Kong." Huawei's reputation in the UK "is souring as Prime Minister Boris Johnson is increasingly signaling he'll step away from a plan to allow Huawei to build parts of the nation's next-generation 5G wireless networks." And other Western nations "such as Germany, Australia and Canada are expressing more concerns about Chinese influence over their computer networks."

Bitcoin Demand Drives $1.4B Ransomware Industry In The US.

Forbes (7/1, Tinianow, 9.71M) reports Bitcoin and other cryptocurrencies "are fueling a wave of ransomware attacks to the tune of $1.4 billion in the US." Hackers encrypt the victim's data "and then require the victim to pay a fee in bitcoin or certain other cryptocurrencies to obtain the decryption key needed to release the data." According to Coveware, which helps companies remediate ransomware, in Q4 2019, "victims who paid a ransom to receive decrypting software successfully decrypted 97% of their encrypted data." According to Liat Shetret, senior advisor for crypto policy and regulation for Elliptic, a blockchain analytics company, "privacy coins do not spur ransomware." She explains, "privacy coins are not the crypto asset of choice for ransomware because bitcoin is easier to obtain. With privacy coins, the cash-out options are more limited, and that minimizes the hackers ability to mobilize their money."

Hackers Say Voter Registration, Not Voting Machines, Are The Real Problem.

Digital Trends (7/1, Shwayder, 929K) reports white hat hackers "said the US is in no way ready to move any of its election processes online." Experts "said that, while a lot of attention has been focused on the vulnerability of new voting machines, the more imminent danger is the electronic infrastructure around elections." Jack Cable, a famed hacker and software expert now focused on the US elections, "said that the new voting machines that have attracted a lot of attention during the primaries aren't even the biggest concern." He "said voter registration system and election night reporting systems are far more vulnerable – and easy – to attack." While trying to register to vote, Cable "found massive vulnerabilities in the Illinois voter registration system that could have allowed hackers to see and potentially alter voter data." If a database of voters "is easily accessed and corrupted, election results could be unverifiable."

King Urges Congress To Create Of National Cyberdefense Program.

Government Technology (7/1, 2K) reports Sen. Angus King (I-ME) "took to the floor of the Senate on Tuesday to urge his colleagues to develop a national cyberdefense program that could fend off a potential 'catastrophic cyberattack' that could disrupt millions of lives and throw the country into chaos." King urged his colleagues "to consider the inclusion of vital cybersecurity amendments in the 2021 National Defense Authorization Act." King said during his speech before members of the Cyberspace Solarium Commission, "I want to describe a hypothetical threat: a threat that throws millions of people out of work almost overnight, causes a stock market collapse, cripples the airline industry, has people afraid to leave their homes, the state scrambling for materials to prepare and cope with the attack." King, who serves as co-chair of the Cyberspace Solarium Commission, "said such a cyberattack could disable the nation's electrical grid, its transportation system and the Internet."

Bipartisan Bill Could Revive Creation Of White House National Cyber Director.

CSO Magazine (7/1, Brumfield, 92K) reports a bipartisan group of US House of Representatives legislators last week "introduced the National Cyber Director Act to create the position of a national cyber director within the White House." The creation of this role is "one of the chief recommendations of an increasingly influential intergovernmental group known as the Cyberspace Solarium Commission." Two of the commission's leaders, "Cyberspace Solarium Chair Congressman Jim Langevin (D-RI) and Solarium Co-Chair Congressman Mike Gallagher (R-WI), introduced the bill."

Op-Ed: Protecting Undersea Cables Must Be Made A National Security Priority.

In a commentary in Defense News (7/1, 21K), Nadia Schadow, a senior fellow at the Hudson Institute, and Brayden Helwig write, "Protecting undersea cable infrastructure must become a priority for US officials and lawmakers. Luckily, there are several steps they can take to address the problem. First, the US government should take more responsibility for repairing undersea infrastructure. ... Second, as a 2017 report from the ODNI suggested, the US should push for stronger protections for undersea infrastructure in international law, including criminalizing attacks on submarine cables. ... Third, telecommunications companies must better secure cable infrastructure against potential attacks. ... Finally, the Trump Administration should sound a louder alarm on Huawei Marine. In order to reduce or prevent the exfiltration of data, telecommunications companies should be required to use undersea infrastructure from verified suppliers."

DOD IG Finds Pentagon Needs To Improve Artificial Intelligence Project Management.

C4ISR & Networks (7/1, Eversden) reports the DOD's IG "warned in a July 1 report that poor management of artificial intelligence projects in DOD could erode the US' competitive advantage in the emerging technology." The DOD inspector general "suggested the Joint Artificial Intelligence Center, established to facilitate the adoption of artificial intelligence tools across the department, take several steps to improve project management, including determining a standard definition of artificial intelligence, improving data sharing and developing a process to accurately track artificial intelligence programs." The JAIC missed "a March 2020 deadline to release a governance framework." The IG "started the audit to determine the gaps and weaknesses in the department's enterprise-wide AI governance, the responsibility of the JAIC." After starting its audit, the DOD IG "determined the organization had not yet developed an department-wide AI governance framework."

TFI/Sanctions

Administration Aims To Sanction Chinese Officials Tied To Persecution Of Minorities.

Bloomberg (7/1, Wadhams, Leonard, 4.73M) reports that the US is "preparing to roll out long-delayed sanctions to punish senior Chinese officials over human-rights abuses against Muslims in Xinjiang...part of a toughening of the Trump administration's stance toward Beijing." According to Bloomberg, "The sanctions are likely to target Communist Party officials responsible for the internment and persecution of minorities in Xinjiang." Bloomberg goes on to report that the Trump Administration is "acting under the 2016 Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act, which give the U.S. broad authority to impose human-rights sanctions on foreign officials." Bloomberg says the sanctions were "delayed amid negotiations over a U.S.-China trade deal."

Reuters (7/1, Lawder, Psadedakis, Brunnstrom) reports that on Wednesday, the Departments of State, Treasury, Commerce, and Homeland Security "issued an advisory warning U.S. companies about the risks they face from maintaining supply chains associated with human rights abuses in China's western Xinjiang province." According to Reuters, "The advisory said that companies doing business in Xinjiang or with entities using Xinjiang labor face 'reputational, economic, and legal risks' from human rights abuses, including forced labor, mass detention and forced sterilization." Secretary of State Pompeo is quoted as saying, "CEOs should read this notice closely and be aware of the reputational, economic and legal risks of supporting such assaults on human dignity."

According to Politico (7/1, Palmer, 4.29M), "The rising tensions raise questions about whether China will continue to honor its commitments under a 'phase one' trade deal with the United States, which the Trump administration has trumpeted as a landmark achievement." Politico points out that the Commerce Department "previously has put 37 Chinese enterprises on its 'Entity List' for engaging in or enabling human rights abuses in Xinjiang, a move that further restricts their access to U.S. goods and technology through much tougher licensing requirements."

The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Mauldin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

House Passes Hong Kong Sanctions Bill, Sending It To Trump. Behind a paywall, Law360 (7/1, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the House of Representatives on Wednesday "easily passed a bill to require sanctions on companies that help the Chinese government suppress Hong Kong's independence, sending the Senate-approved measure to the president for his signature." The Hong Kong Autonomy Act "would have the executive branch maintain a list of companies, individuals and other entities that 'materially contribute to the failure of the government of China to meet its obligations' to the semi-independent former British territory." The Chinese government "has recently moved to increase its control and restrict personal freedoms in the global financial hub."

Law360 Analysis: US Sanctions Developments In 2020.

In an expert analysis, Law360 (7/1, Adams, Hanifin, Siegle, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control "has remained active" in 2020 despite the COVID-19 pandemic. OFAC "has strengthened existing sanctions programs, issued a range of new guidance documents and announced enforcement actions that underscore OFAC's current sanctions compliance program expectations." These actions, "coupled with the prospect of new sanctions targeting China, presage an active second half of the year, underscoring that sanctions compliance efforts are indispensable, even in the face of a global pandemic."

Commentary: Increased Ukraine Assistance, Targeted Sanctions Should Be Response To Russian Bounties.

In an op-ed for The Hill (7/1, 2.98M), former State Department Office of Counterterrorism Finance and Designations Director Jason Blazakis says the NYTimes "report that the Russian Federation incentivized the Taliban to target U.S. and coalition personnel in Afghanistan is troubling if true." Blazakis writes, "U.S. policy options in response to the Russian bounty program are limited. Any response likely requires a congressional push, especially since the Trump administration denies knowledge of a bounty program and has labeled the Times story 'fake news.'" Therefore, if the Administration "does anything, it likely will want to take the measured approach and sanction G.R.U officials. Congress, though, can still help" by ramping up "Ukraine-related military and foreign assistance beyond the Trump administration's requests. Doing so, coupled with targeted sanctions, may just get Putin's attention, especially given that a weak Ukraine also weakens NATO." However, Blazakis cautions, "If the Russian gambit goes unanswered, the U.S. should gird for more provocations."

Federal Reserve

Trump "Getting More And More Happy" With Powell's Job As Fed Chair.

Reuters (7/1, Lambert) reports that during an interview on Fox Business (7/1, 1.73M), President Trump "indicated he was warming to Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell, whom he has harshly criticized for not cutting lending rates below zero," saying "he appreciated the central bank putting liquidity into the economy during the coronavirus pandemic." Trump said, "I would say that I was not happy with him at the beginning. And I'm getting more and more happy with him. I think he's stepped up to the plate. He's done a good job."

Bloomberg (7/1, Matthews, Jacobs, 4.73M) and Fox Business (7/1, O'Halloran, 1.73M) also report.

Fed Minutes Show Officials Considering Pledge To Leave Interest Rates Low.

Reuters (7/1, Dunsmuir, Saphir) reports Fed policymakers "are looking at reviving a Great Recession-era promise to keep interest rates low until certain conditions are met, in a bid to deliver a more rapid recovery from the recession triggered by the coronavirus pandemic." Minutes from the Fed's June 9-10 policy meeting released Wednesday showed "policymakers 'generally indicated support' for tying rate-setting policy to specific economic outcomes." The minutes said a "A number" favored a commitment to leaving rates low until inflation has met or exceeds the Fed's goal of two percent. The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), The AP (7/1, Crutsinger), CNBC (7/1, Cox, 3.62M), Fox Business (7/1, Henney, 1.73M), MarketWatch (7/1, Robb, 1.67M), the Financial Times (7/1, Politi, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and The Hill (7/1, Lane, 2.98M) also report.

Fed Hit By Thousands Of Requests To Expand Main Street Lending Program To Individuals.

Reuters (7/1, Saphir, Dunsmuir, Marte) reports the Fed on Wednesday revealed it received thousands of letters from people, businesses, and nonprofits asking for the central bank to expand access to its Main Street Lending Program, which currently serves mainly medium-sized businesses. The feedback "paints a picture of a central bank, which once closely guarded its secrets, newly open to public feedback and willing to respond by reshaping its policies."

The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and Law360 (7/1, Huffman, Wolverton, Subscription Publication, 8K) also report.

Daly: "Too Early To Tell" Whether US Economy Sees Best-Case Four To Five Year Recovery Scenario.

Reuters (7/1, Saphir) reports San Francisco Fed President Mary Daly on Wednesday "painted a grim picture of the U.S. economic outlook, saying that even under her best-case scenario unemployment will still top 10% at year's end and won't return to pre-crisis levels for four or five years." Daly, speaking in a Washington Post Live virtual event, said, "If we can get the public health issues under control either through a really robust mitigation strategy or a vaccine, then we can reengage in economic activity really quickly. Then it could take just four years or five years; but if we end up with a pervasive long-lasting hit to the economy, then it could take longer." Daly also "said so far it is 'too early to tell' whether her best-case scenario will play out, or something worse." Daly added, "In the next couple of months we are going to really get a lot more information about what the virus has in store for our economy."

Financial Regulatory Agencies

McWilliams Explains Why FDIC Wants To Eliminate Call Reports.

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (7/1, Subscription Publication, 31K), FDIC Chair Jelena McWilliams explains why the agency is seeking to get rid of banks' quarterly data reporting. McWilliams says that with second quarter results expected 120 days after the quarter began, there is an acute information gap. For big banks, the FDIC "uses technology to fill the gap between call reports with robust, granular data feeds on liquidity, security exposures and asset quality." That depth of reporting "is not necessary for community banks that individually represent little to no systemic risk." But because "financial conditions across all community banks can be key indicators of strain in the economy, growing stress across the financial system and emerging risk at individual institutions," regulators must find a way "to promote more regular reporting from community banks – where technology levels vary greatly – without increasing reporting burdens or costs." As such, the FDIC has developed a prototyping competition “to develop a new approach to financial reporting.”

Internal Revenue Service

IRS Chief Gives Taxpayers Two Weeks To Collect $1.5B In Owed But Unclaimed Refunds.

Bloomberg (7/1, Davison, 4.73M) reports the IRS “has $1.5 billion in unclaimed refunds for people who never filed a tax return for 2016 – and they have only two weeks to claim the money.” IRS Commissioner Chuck Rettig said Wednesday in a statement, “The IRS wants to help taxpayers who are owed refunds but haven’t filed their 2016 tax returns yet. Time is quickly running out for these taxpayers. There’s only a three-year window to claim these refunds, and the window closes on July 15.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“President Trump Has Tools To Pressure China. Will He Use Them?” The New York Times (7/1, 18.61M) editorializes. “It is now for President Trump, who has shown little enthusiasm so far for tangling with President Xi Jinping over human rights, to use the tools that Congress has placed at his disposal to show Beijing that its transgressions have consequences.” However, the Times says “Trump’s commitment to using these tools of statecraft to change China’s behavior...is uncertain.” Yet the Times asserts that “the unanimous, bipartisan support for these bills, and Mr. Trump’s signature on them, even if unenthusiastic, are an appropriately direct and clear signal to China that its behavior is contemptible and will have serious consequences.”

Washington Post.

“It Seems Nothing Will Stop Trump From Moving Ahead With His Dangerous Fourth Of July Events.” The Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M) editorializes. “From the start of the outbreak of the novel coronavirus, President Trump has stubbornly and stupidly refused to follow the advice of health professionals.” He has refused to wear a mask, “thumbed his nose at social distancing,” and “now, as much of the country wisely cancels or scales back Fourth of July celebrations to protect people’s health, Mr. Trump is ploughing full steam ahead with not just one – but two – massive events.” The Post says “nothing – not health experts’ concerns about large gatherings, not alarming spikes in recent days in virus case levels, not pleas from worried D.C. and Washington-area officials – gives pause to Mr. Trump about going ahead with these potentially dangerous events.”

“China Has Just Broken Its Solemn Promise To Hong Kong.” The Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M) editorializes “Hong Kong as it has been known – a bastion of free speech and rule of law, an autonomous, glittering capital of capitalism – has been smothered” after China’s imposition of its new national security law. In doing so, “China has broken its promise to Britain on the handover of Hong Kong in 1997 to preserve the concept of ‘one country, two systems’ for 50 years.” The development “makes it even more imperative for the West to stand by the vibrant democracy of Taiwan.”

“Its Director May Now Be Subject To Political Winds, But The CFPB Is Here To Stay.” The Washington Post (7/1, 14.2M) says in an editorial that the CFPB emerged from a Supreme Court challenge to its constitutionality “with its authority to regulate payday lending, debt collection, mortgages and other pocketbook issues intact.” While the agency’s leadership “is now somewhat more subject to the winds of politics,” the Post says this is “not the end of the world in practical terms.” The High Court’s ruling “opens the way” for Joe Biden, “if elected in November, to fire and replace the acting CFPB director President Trump installed in 2018.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Meaning Of Hong Kong.” The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes the world should be alarmed at China’s imposition of its national-security law on Hong Kong because it shows that China’s Communist leaders aren’t afraid to violate international commitments. The Journal urges the US to accept Hong Kong refugees and warns governments around the world not to trust Beijing’s promises.

“Sheldon Whitehouse’s Favors.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) draws attention to the relationship between Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-RI) and a green energy company that gives rise to questions about corruption. Top executives of Providence-based Utilidata in 2015 contributed to Whitehouse’s Senate campaign, then, in 2016, Utilidata was represented in a roundtable co-hosted by Whitehouse with then-Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz on clean energy.

“The Green New Deal In Action.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes House Democrats for passing a $1.5 trillion infrastructure spending bill on Wednesday that contains Green New Deal subsidies. The Journal points out that the package does not include a Republican amendment that would have required certification that child labor is not used in the supply chain used to produce electric vehicle batteries.

“Hotel San Francisco.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/1, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) highlights a pair of lawsuits against San Francisco, which it says illustrate the deterioration of public order in the city. The lawsuits take aim at the city’s lax policies regarding the homeless population and drug use during the pandemic.

Treasury in the News

Treasury Declines To Extend Tax Deadline Beyond July 15.

Politico (6/29, Faler, 4.29M) reports the Treasury Department "announced Monday that it will not be moving the tax-filing deadline for a second time, despite some pressure to do so because of the coronavirus pandemic." Following its consideration of an additional postponement, Treasury "said...that it is sticking with the current July 15 deadline, and that people who need more time can ask for a normal extension that would give them until mid-October to complete their returns." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said in a statement, "After consulting with various external stakeholders, we have decided to have taxpayers request an extension if more time is needed." Politico says Treasury's announcement "is sure to please many and disappoint others, all of whom had been anxiously awaiting the agency's decision after Mnuchin said last week he was considering an additional delay."

Fox Business (6/29, De Lea, 1.73M) reports Mnuchin said, "We are pleased that over 130 million taxpayers have filed returns and over 93 million refunds have been issued. ... I would encourage Americans to file their taxes as soon as possible, so those who are due refunds can receive them quickly."

The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Saunders, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Law360 (6/29, Rosenberg, Subscription Publication, 8K), USA Today (6/29, Rivera, 10.31M), and Reuters (6/29, Beech) also report.

Advocate Says IRS Has 20M Backlog Of Notices To Mail, Leading To Taxpayer Confusion. Fox Business (6/29, De Lea, 1.73M) reports, "Millions of taxpayers are receiving outdated correspondence from the IRS, which may send people into a panic due to expired response dates." National Taxpayer Advocate Erin Collins "wrote in a report released Monday that the coronavirus-related closure of notice production centers led to a backlog of 20 million letters that needed to be mailed." Collins wrote, "While the IRS is providing additional time for payment (July 10, 2020 or July 15, 2020), it will still lead to widespread taxpayer confusion about deadlines to take certain actions."

MarketWatch (6/29, Keshner, 1.67M) also reports.

EU Finance Ministers Write Mnuchin Suggesting Phased Approach To Digital Tax.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (6/29, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports finance ministers from France, Spain, Italy, and the UK wrote to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "saying that threats by the U.S. to impose tariffs in response to national tax policies of other countries could damage good relationships between allies." In the letter, seen by Law360 on Monday, the ministers "suggest that a phased approach to the more effective taxation of digital giants, which initially focuses on automated digital services, could be the key to unlocking an agreement among 137 jurisdictions, including the U.S., that are negotiating a fundamental rethinking of the rules for taxing multinationals."

WPost Report: Mnuchin Deputy's Departure Signals "Exodus" From Trump's Economic Team.

The Washington Post (6/29, Stein, 14.2M) reports the Trump Administration "is facing an exodus of at least a half-dozen senior economic officials even as the economy remains trapped in one of the most turbulent periods in decades." A top deputy of Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, Bimal Patel, "is departing the administration, according to three people familiar with the matter who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss internal matters. Patel, who will leave at the end of this week, has played a key role in overseeing the administration's $500 billion small-business rescue program and helps lead Treasury's efforts related to the banking system." However, NEC Director Larry Kudlow "said news of the administration's economic departures amounted to 'gossip' and that The Washington Post's reporting about the departures were 'inaccurate.'" Kudlow said, "Not only do we have a solid staff, Steve Mnuchin is still at Treasury; I'm still at the NEC; we can call Kevin Hassett whenever we want. ... CEA staff is doing a great job under Tyler Goodbody."

Commentary: GAO Report Criticizes SBA's Handling Of PPP Loans, Belies Lack Of Coordination.

In a column for Bloomberg Opinion (6/29), Timothy L. O'Brien and Nir Kaissar write, "Last week, the Government Accountability Office issued the first comprehensive analysis of how trillions of dollars of taxpayer money is being spent to protect Americans, the economy and public services from the ravages of Covid-19. Its broad conclusions aren't reassuring." The "problems and recommendations the GAO lays out expose a...fundamental issue: The rescue effort needs a unifying framework that would allow it to be more easily administered, documented and reported to taxpayers." However, "as the GAO lays bare, the bailout is a patchwork of programs run by far-flung federal agencies that don't seem to communicate with one another very effectively." Although Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "is meant to be a primary coordinating force in the bailout effort, there is not much coordination on display in the GAO report."

Also reporting is the American Spectator (6/29, Jiang, 160K).

AP Report: Over $140B In PPP Funds Unclaimed As Deadline Approaches.

The AP (6/29, Rosenberg) reports, "Billions of dollars offered by Congress as a lifeline to small businesses struggling to survive the pandemic are about to be left on the table when a key government program stops accepting applications for loans." The SBA as of Friday "had approved more than 4.7 million loans worth nearly $518 billion" under the PPP program. However, "more than $140 billion in loan money remained unclaimed out of $659 billion allocated by Congress." The PPP's "biggest appeal was its promise that loans would be forgiven, but confusion abounded about requirements owners had to meet to get that forgiveness." However, "Those requirements and information about the program kept changing: Between March 31 and June 15, the SBA issued 35 changes to program rules and its frequently asked questions," according to a GAO report issued last week. "It was not until May 22, seven weeks after the program began, that the SBA and the Treasury Department released the first instructions and applications for loan forgiveness."

White House Says Trump Was Not Briefed On Russian Bounty Intelligence.

On ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 9, 2:04, 7.78M), Tom Llamas reported President Trump is "pushing back against an explosive report accusing Russia of paying bounties to Taliban fighters for killing US troops in Afghanistan." Trump is "insisting he was never briefed." White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany: "Neither the President nor the Vice President were briefed on the alleged Russian bounty intelligence." ABC's Martha Raddatz: "Reporters then asking, 'Why not?'" McEnany: "There was not a consensus among the intelligence community. In fact, there were dissenting opinions within the intelligence community, and it would not be elevated to the President until it was verified."

The CBS Evening News (6/29, story 4, 2:33, Garrett, 4.6M) similarly reported, "The White House is insisting President Trump was never briefed on reports of a Russian plot to target Americans in Afghanistan." CBS' Weijia Jiang: "CBS News has learned the intelligence community knew about the allegations, and that while the CIA believed them to be legitimate, the National Security Agency questioned their validity. The White House says that's why President Trump did not hear about the assessment." Keir Simmons reported on NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 5, 1:51, Holt, 6.78M), "Officials familiar with the intelligence tell NBC News that the US gathered information showing that Russian operatives offered bounties to the Taliban. One official saying American service members and Afghan civilians died as a result – though other officials tell us the intelligence was uncorroborated."

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/29, 831K), McEnany said, "This President has been very tough on Russia, sanctioning innumerable Russian targets, closing Russian consulates." McEnany said the Russian bounty report is "based on anonymous sourcing that was just dead wrong." The AP (6/29, Miller, Laporta, Riechmann) reports McEnany "asserted that intelligence 'would not be elevated to the president until it was verified.'" The Washington Post (6/29, Wagner, Nakashima, 14.2M) reports the President "said late Sunday that he was not told of intelligence that a Russian military spy unit offered bounties to Taliban-linked militants to attack coalition forces in Afghanistan, including U.S. troops, because U.S. intelligence officials did not find it credible."

Politico (6/29, Oprysko, 4.29M) says McEnany's "insistence about the lack of 'consensus' on Monday contradicted the president," who said in his tweet that intelligence officials had concluded the information was not credible. The Hill (6/29, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) says McEnany "sidestepped questions about reports that Russia offered bounties," while Townhall (6/29, Pavlich, 177K) reports McEnany called on the Times "to 'give back their Pulitzers' after getting another story wrong on Russia."

The New York Post (6/29, Bowden, 4.57M) reports some intelligence officials say the New York Times report "about Russia paying the Taliban to kill US troops in Afghanistan does not match 'verifiable' Taliban activity and was never presented to President Trump because it was not deemed credible." CBS' Catherine Herridge tweeted, "An intelligence official with direct knowledge tells CBS News there was an intel collection report and 'NSA assesses Report does not match well established and verifiable Taliban and Haqqani practices' + 'lack sufficient reporting to corroborate any links.' The official said the intelligence collection report reached 'low levels' NSC but did not go further, not briefed POTUS, or VP because it was deemed 'uncorroborated' and 'dissent intelligence community.'" The Daily Caller (6/29, Kruta, 716K) covers Herridge's tweet.

USA Today (6/29, Subramanian, Collins, 10.31M) reports McEnany told reporters the White House "briefed members of Congress over the intelligence reports Monday. ... McEnany declined to say who attended the administration's briefing," but said Chief of Staff Meadows had asked Senate Majority Leader McConnell and House Majority Leader Hoyer "to extend a bipartisan invitation to eight members of relevant committees." The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Lubold, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports House Minority Leader McCarthy and Reps. Liz Cheney (R-WY) and Michael McCaul (R-TX) were among those briefed, according to sources. The Journal could not be determine if any Democrats had been briefed. The Washington Times (6/29, Boyer, 492K) adds Reps. Adam Kinzinger (R-IL) and Mac Thornberry (R-TX) to the list of those who were briefed.

Politico (6/29, Cheney, Ferris, 4.29M) reports, "Republican-only attendees of Monday's briefing began characterizing the intelligence and defending Trump over allegations he let the bounty allegations languish for months without action." In another report, Politico (6/29, Desiderio, Levine, 4.29M) says Senate Republicans "made clear on Monday that they will press the White House for answers about the intelligence assessments, and GOP senators pushed [Trump] to exact severe punishments on the Kremlin if the claims are true – even as the president asserts that he was never briefed on the matter."

CQ Roll Call (6/29, Donnelly, 154K) reports House Armed Services Chairman Adam Smith and Thornberry, the ranking member of the committee, "have pressed the Pentagon for a briefing by Tuesday." In addition, the New York Times (6/29, A1, Savage, Schmitt, Fandos, Goldman, 18.61M) reports House Speaker Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Schumer on Monday "each requested that all lawmakers be briefed on the matter and for C.I.A. and other intelligence officials to explain how President Trump was informed of intelligence collected about the plot." The Washington Times (6/29, Meier, 492K) reports Pelosi said, "Congress and the country need answers now. I therefore request an interagency brief for all House Members immediately."

House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff said on CNN's Situation Room (6/29, 1.91M), "We also want to look into this issue of whether the President was briefed on this, and if he was not briefed, why that was. Is this again a concern with speaking truth to power, that Donald Trump doesn't want to hear anything negative about Vladimir Putin." Pelosi said on CNN's The Lead (6/29, 1.68M) that the intelligence is "shocking" and "it would be my hope it isn't true. But it seems clear that the intelligence is real. The question is whether the President was briefed. If he was not briefed, why would he not be briefed? Were they afraid to approach him on the subject of Russia, and were they concerned if they did tell him, that he would tell Putin?"

The Washington Post (6/29, Board, 14.2M) says in an editorial that Trump's "reaction in recent days – that he wasn't told, that it is a hoax – has been utterly inadequate. ... Rather than address the highly disturbing news itself," Trump offered "distractions and denials. ... The intelligence reports, if true, demand a serious response. With Mr. Trump once again immobilized in the face of Russian provocation, Congress will have to step up."

Ratcliffe Says "Alleged Interference" Under Investigation. Axios (6/29, Falconer, 521K) reports DNI Ratcliffe "issued a statement Monday night after leading Republicans and Democrats demanded answers following reports that intel alleged Russian operatives placed bounties on U.S. troops, calling the leaking of sensitive information a 'crime.'" Ratcliffe said, "We are still investigating the alleged interference referenced in media reporting and we will brief the President and Congressional leaders at the appropriate time. ... Unfortunately, the unauthorized disclosures now jeopardize our ability to find out the full story with respect to these allegations."

CNN Report: Intel Was Included In President's Daily Brief "Sometime In The Spring." CNN (6/29, Starr, Leblanc, 83.16M) reports on its website that "the intelligence that assessed there was an effort by a Russian military intelligence unit to pay the Taliban to kill US soldiers" was included in one of Trump's "daily briefings on intelligence matters sometime in the spring, according to a US official with direct knowledge of the latest information. ... Trump is not known to fully or regularly read the President's Daily Brief, something that is well-known within the White House."

The New York Times (6/29, A1, Savage, Schmitt, Fandos, Goldman, 18.61M) reports, "A description of the intelligence assessment that the Russian unit had carried out the bounties plot was also seen as serious and solid enough to disseminate more broadly across the intelligence community in a May 4 article in the C.I.A.'s World Intelligence Review," according to two sources.

Mother Of Marine Killed In Afghanistan Seeks Investigation. CNBC (6/29, Mangan, 3.62M) reports on its website, "The mother of a Marine killed last year in Afghanistan said Monday that she wants a thorough investigation of reports that her son and two other Marines may have been the targets" of Taliban-linked fighters who collected a Russian bounty. Felicia Arculeo, "whose son Cpl. Robert Hendriks died in the April 8, 2019, attack, also told CNBC 'that the parties who are responsible should be held accountable, if that's even possible.'"

Kudlow: US Economy Headed For V-Shaped Recovery.

Reuters (6/29, Ahmann) reports, "The US economy still appears headed for a 'V'-shaped recovery despite some setbacks in efforts to reopen state economies that had been shuttered for the coronavirus, a top White House adviser said on Monday." NEC Director Kudlow told CNBC, "At the moment, the story looks very good. We're set for a V-shaped recovery. ... Might it change? Yes, it might and we'll be looking very, very carefully at this."

Pelosi And Schumer Demand McConnell Begin Talks On Additional Emergency Spending.

Politico (6/29, Levine, Ferris, 4.29M) reports that on Monday, House Speaker Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Schumer "reiterated their demands for Senate Republicans to immediately take up additional coronavirus relief." In a letter to Senate Majority Leader McConnell, Schumer and Pelosi "called the GOP 'missing in action,' noting that the House passed its own massive relief package 45 days ago." Politico says the House legislation "included over $3 trillion in aid for states and local governments, hospitals and front-line workers." According to Politico, McConnell "has dismissed the House bill as nothing more than a Democratic wish list," and "signaled the Senate will not consider coronavirus relief until after the chamber's two-week July 4 recess."

The Washington Post (6/29, Werner, 14.2M) reports that the White House and Senate Republicans "have been eyeing late July as the timeframe for putting together another coronavirus bill." The Post reports that "in response to the Pelosi-Schumer letter, a McConnell spokesman pointed to comments McConnell made Friday in Kentucky, when he said: 'In July, we'll take a snapshot of where the country stands, see how the jobs are coming back, see where we think we are.' The Post adds, "Meanwhile, some critical deadlines are approaching when relief measures will expire. Enhanced unemployment benefits passed as part of the $2 trillion Cares Act in March will expire on July 31," and the Paycheck Protection Program "will stop accepting new loan applications on Tuesday, even though about $100 billion is left in the program."

Reuters (6/29, Marte, Saphir) also notes that "the $600 supplement Congress added to weekly unemployment benefits is due to expire July 31." According to Reuters, "Without new support, recipients face a substantial loss of income – particularly devastating for those...who worked in hard-hit sectors like hospitality where new jobs are scarce." Reuters adds, "During high unemployment and a still-raging pandemic, the end of enhanced jobless benefits could drag on consumer spending, set off a wave of missed rent and mortgage payments and translate to a slower recovery, economists said."

Gore, Blood: Pandemic Presents Opportunity To Rework Capitalism. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Gore, Blood, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Al Gore and David Blood of Generation Investment Management write that as economies across the country reopen, the US must seize the opportunity to pursue an egalitarian, sustainable model of capitalism. In their view, that means corporate executives who make the welfare of workers a priority, and accelerating the transition to a zero-carbon economy.

Banks Pull Back On Consumer Lending Amid Difficulties In Determining Creditworthiness.

The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Andriotis, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports banks have slowed lending to US consumers during the coronavirus crisis, partly due to the increased difficulty in determining the creditworthiness of customers. Millions of Americans have lost their jobs and are behind on their debts, but postponed payments are not being reflected in credit scores.

Amazon To Pay $500M In Bonuses For Frontline Workers.

The Motley Fool (6/29, Hunt, 1.22M) reports Amazon is giving front-line workers one-time bonuses worth $500 million in a show of appreciation for employees continuing working amid the pandemic, the company said Monday. Only employees "who worked throughout the entire month" of June will qualify, "but the number eligible still runs into hundreds of thousands of individuals."

Protesters Set Up Guillotine Outside Home Of Amazon CEO Bezos. The Washington Examiner (6/29, Colton, 448K) reports, "Activists were recorded standing outside of Amazon CEO and founder Jeff Bezos's Washington, D.C., home demanding his company be abolished." Videos posted on social media on Sunday "show a pair of protesters standing next to a guillotine, which gained popularity during the French Revolution to carry out executions." One of the protesters said in the video, "When they become threatened, and we have no voice, the knives come out." A poster at the scene said, "Support our poor communities not our wealthy men."

Supreme Court Asks Administration To Offer Input On PennEast Pipeline Lawsuit.

Axios (6/29, Harder, 521K) reports the Administration is "expected to weigh in on a lawsuit in the next couple of months that questions the legality of eminent domain to build a natural-gas pipeline, following a request from the Supreme Court on Monday." The case "turns conventional political wisdom upside down," and "experts say they expect the administration to be more likely to side with the pipeline and federal government, though the decision is still unknown." The additional review is expected to "delay the high court's consideration of the lawsuit – and thus the project itself – until at least next year."

Trump Retweets Video Of Gun-Carrying Couple Warning Off Trespassers.

Reuters (6/29) reports that on Monday, President Trump "posted a video showing a Missouri couple brandishing guns towards protesters calling for police reforms, again accentuating racial tensions in America." According to Reuters, "Without comment, Trump on Monday retweeted an ABC News video video showing a white couple brandishing guns towards Black and white protesters marching past a St. Louis home."

The AP (6/29) reports that the attorney for the couple "who stood outside their St. Louis mansion and pointed guns at protesters who were marching toward the mayor's home to demand her resignation," indicated on Monday that they "support the Black Lives Matter movement and don't want to become heroes to those who oppose the cause." ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 8, 0:37, Llamas, 7.78M) reported that St. Louis' top prosecutor "announced that they are investigating, saying, quote, 'We must protect the right to peacefully protest and any attempt to chill it through intimidation or the threat of deadly force will not be tolerated.'" On its website, Fox News (6/29, Rosner, 27.59M) provides similar coverage of the couple.

Kirsten Welker said on NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 4, 1:58, Holt, 6.78M) that Trump "is again stoking tensions on Twitter" by sharing the video, and the New York Times (6/29, Karni, 18.61M) says Trump's "promotion of the St. Louis confrontation was the second time in two days that the president used his social media platforms...to exacerbate racial divisions as Americans have been protesting police brutality and demanding social justice reforms in the wake of the killing of George Floyd." The Times adds that on Sunday Trump "retweeted a video of one of his supporters at a retirement community in Florida yelling 'White power' during what appeared to be an angry clash over the president and race among white residents in the community."

Jonathan Karl reported on ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 7, 1:29, Llamas, 7.78M), "More than a day after the President tweeted video of his supporters that included one yelling 'white power,' the White House "has neither condemned the phrase nor the person who said it." White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany: "His point in tweeting out that video was to stand with his supporters who are oftentimes demonized." The Miami Herald (6/29, Neal, 1.09M) reports that the man heard yelling "White power" in the video "has been outed online" as former Miami-Dade County firefighter Roger Stokes. Stokes' former fire department, "took to Twitter to distance itself" from him.

Trump Criticizes Princeton For Distancing Itself From Woodrow Wilson.

President Trump took to Twitter Monday to write, "Can anyone believe that Princeton just dropped the name of Woodrow Wilson from their highly respected policy center. Now the Do Nothing Democrats want to take off the name John Wayne from an airport. Incredible stupidity!" The Washington Post (6/29, Wagner, 14.2M) reports "Princeton's board of trustees voted last week to remove Wilson's name, saying the late president's segregationist policies a century ago make him an 'especially inappropriate namesake' for a public policy school." The Post adds that Orange County Democrats "passed a resolution last week condemning...Wayne's 'racist and bigoted statements' made decades ago and called on the Orange County Board of Supervisors to remove his name and statue from the international airport in the county."

Politico (6/29, Cohen, 4.29M) says, "Trump's condemnation of Princeton's decision follows his recent defense of American historical figures whose place in society is being reevaluated." According to Politico, "At a rally with college students last week, Trump decried what he called the 'totalitarian' left for wanting to take down monuments to slave owners and Confederate figures."

McEnany Calls Questioning If Trump Is Glad South Lost Civil War "Absolutely Absurd."

The Daily Caller (6/29, Davis, 716K) reports that White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany told Politico reporter Ryan Lizza that his question was "absolutely absurd" after Lizza asked if President Trump "was happy with the outcome of the Civil War." During a White House press briefing, Lizza asked, "Does President Trump believe that it was a good thing that the south lost the Civil War?" McEnany said, "Your first question is absolutely absurd. ... He's proud of the United States of America." Lizza also asked if Trump would ban Confederate flags from his rallies. McEnany "said that was a question for the campaign, but reiterated the administration's opposition to tearing down statues of historical figures." She said, "Americans oppose tearing down our statues. ... [The President] stands on the side of preserving our history."

WPost Says Trump Was Wrong: Only 17 Of 20 Most Violent Cities Are Run By Democrats.

AWR Hawkins writes on Breitbart (6/29, Hawkins, 673K) that the Washington Post says it has disproven President Trump's charge that "the 20 most dangerous cities are Democrat-run" because just "17 of the 20 most violent have Democrat mayors." In an analysis, the Post's Philip Bump "cedes that Trump is only 'slightly wrong' before launching into a discourse on why making this comparison means nothing, anyway." Bump wrote, "It may be the case that cities with more crime are more likely to have Democratic leaders. ... To a large extent, of course, Trump isn't really trying to make a point beyond 'cities and Democrats are scary.'"

On its website, Fox News (6/29, Flood, 27.59M) is also critical of Bump's analysis. Fox News says the Post "was lampooned over the weekend" for running the story. Fox adds that the data "essentially backed up the president's case and the paper ran it anyway."

Officers Charged In Floyd Death Appear In Court.

ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 6, 1:19, Llamas, 7.4M) reported that the four officers charged in the death of George Floyd appeared in court in Minneapolis on Monday. ABC's Alex Perez reported the judge "admonish[ed] both sides, instructing them to limit pretrial publicity and argue this case in court, not the media. The former officers have not yet entered pleas, but court documents show J. Alexander Kueng intends to plead not guilty, arguing self-defense." The Minneapolis Star Tribune (6/23, Xiong, 1.04M) reports Hennepin County District Judge Peter Cahill said "public commentary on the case has reached inappropriate levels, specifically noting that people aligned with the prosecution are pushing it toward a change of venue."

Gabe Gutierrez reported on NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 3, 2:05, Holt, 6.78M), "Out on bail, two of the former Minneapolis officers stayed silent today as they left their pretrial hearing. Thomas Lane and Alex Kueng were rookie cops, their lawyers have said, and were following the lead of senior officer Derek Chauvin." The Washington Post (6/29, Bailey, Berman, 14.2M) reports Chauvin is charged with second-degree murder, while Kueng, Lane, and Tou Thao are "charged with aiding and abetting Chauvin." A March trial date has been tentatively set.

In the CBS Evening News (6/29, story 5, 1:48, Garrett, 4.6M) report on the hearing, Jamie Yuccas reported, "Floyd's last words of 'I can't breathe' sparked protests worldwide, with many asking for police reform. A recent New York Times study found that over the past decade, 70 people have died in law enforcement custody after saying those same words."

Minneapolis Park Police Say Child Was Sexually Assaulted In No-Police Encampment. The Washington Times (6/29, Chasmar, 492K) reports Minneapolis Park Police "say a child was sexually assaulted overnight Thursday in the ever-growing homeless encampment at Powderhorn Park, where neighbors have vowed not to call law enforcement" in the wake of recent protests. Police are "searching for a suspect accused of sexually assaulting a juvenile in the park. It is not clear whether the child was living in the encampment."

New Initiative Underway To Address Racial Bias In Military.

The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Youssef, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a new initiative is underway in the US military to eliminate discrimination and racial bias. While previous such efforts have failed, defense and military officials say the killing of George Floyd has prompted a conversation about discrimination and top officials have called on African American service members to come forward to describe their experiences.

Defense Bill Expected To Include Timeline For Renaming Bases Named After Confederates.

The Washington Post (6/29, Demirjian, 14.2M) reports that the Senate is "poised to challenge President Trump this week with legislation requiring the military to rename bases bearing the names of Confederate generals, a proposal that is shaping up to be one of the most contentious items in this year's annual defense bill." The bill "from the Republican-led Senate Armed Services Committee included a provision giving the Pentagon three years to come up with new names," while an amendment filed by Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and 35 other Senate Democrats last week "would speed up that process, requiring the name changes within a year." The Post adds that "although there is still vocal opposition to removing the Confederate names at all...Republican support for the change suggests that it will survive any challenges," which "could eventually pitch Congress into a showdown with the president over the entire defense bill."

Student Makes First Court Appearance On Charges Of Trying To Damage Jackson Statue.

The Washington Post (6/29, Jackman, 14.2M) reports that 20-year-old George Washington University student Connor Matthew Judd "made his first appearance in federal court on Monday after being charged with attempting to damage a statue of former president Andrew Jackson in Lafayette Square on June 22." In addition to Judd, three other men "were charged with destruction of federal property." They are Lee Michael Cantrell, 47, of Virginia, Ryan Lane, 37, of Maryland, and Graham Lloyd, 37, of Maine. According to authorities "the other three have not yet been apprehended." Judd "appeared in D.C. Superior Court on Saturday, was released and the case transferred to federal court, prosecutors said."

Reeves Will Sign Bill To Alter Mississippi Flag.

ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 13, 0:19, Llamas, 7.78M) reported Mississippi Gov. Tate Reeves (R) "says he will sign a bill to remove the Confederate emblem from the state flag 'in the coming days.' The state's Republican-led House and Senate vot[ed] in favor of its removal late Sunday night."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/29, Board, 14.2M) says the decision to remove the emblem from the flag is "a moment to be celebrated." The Post calls the flag a long-standing "source of controversy" and a "pain to African American residents of the state who saw it as an enduring reminder of white supremacy, terror, lynching and exclusion," but adds that "removing symbols that hurt and inflame is important but of course not enough. Laws, attitudes and practices all need to change to address police brutality, vote suppression and economic inequality," which is "why it is critical for people to get out and vote in November for candidates who will help lead the way."

De Blasio Agrees To Cut $1B From NYPD Budget.

Politico New York (6/29, Durkin) reports that New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) said Monday that he has agreed to cut $1 billion from the NYPD's budget. Politico says "activists and City Council members have been demanding a billion-dollar cut to the police department's roughly $6 billion budget," but de Blasio "initially resisted the push." However, at a press briefing Monday, he confirmed that "he sent a proposal to the Council that included the $1 billion in savings." De Blasio's announcement comes as "local politicians are facing an intense new wave of pressure from protesters demanding police budget cuts as they attempt to balance keeping order in their cities and enacting reforms," Fox News (6/29, Olson, 27.59M) reports on its website.

The New York Times (6/29, Watkins, Kim, 18.61M) reports that New York's City Council will vote on the proposal to cut the NYPD budget next week. In addition, New York's Police Commissioner "said he was disbanding the New York Police Department's notoriously aggressive plainclothes anti-crime units," and the Council "passed a longstanding piece of proposed legislation known as the POST Act, which will require the police department to disclose many of its electronic surveillance tools." However, many protesters believe "there was still more to accomplish. The staying power of the state's early reforms remains to be seen, they said."

Los Angeles CEO Proposes Cutting Police Budget.

Fox News (6/29, McKay, 27.59M) reports on its website that Los Angeles CEO Sachi Hamai "has put forward a proposed budget with recommendations to cut some $145.4 million allocated to local police." Hamai's proposal "recommends the following LASD units be eliminated: Safe Streets Bureau (Gang Enforcement), Parks Bureau, Special Victims Bureau (Sexual/Physical Abuse of Children, Rape, Human Trafficking), Community Partnership Bureau (COPS Team), Fraud and Cybercrimes Bureau, Major Crimes Bureau." The proposal "earned a sharp rebuke from County Sheriff Alex Villanueva over the weekend." Villanueva said, "The budget cuts are targeted specifically to hurt public safety while sparing virtually every other function of county government from any reductions. ... These cuts come at a time when jails were depopulated of over 5,000 inmates in order to combat the COVID-19 pandemic. Now that restrictions are lifting, violent crimes, such as murder, are on the rise across the County. Now is not the time to cut vital law enforcement services, that should be the last thing cut."

Teenager Killed, Another One Critically Wounded In Latest CHOP Shooting.

The Seattle Times (6/29, Brownstone, Clarridge, 935K) reports "a 16-year-old boy was killed and a 14-year-old boy was wounded early Monday morning when they were shot at 12th Avenue and Pike Street in the protest area known as CHOP, in Seattle's Capitol Hill neighborhood." The Times adds "Harborview Medical Center spokesperson Susan Gregg said two people were brought in with gunshot wounds, with one arriving in a private vehicle around 3:15 a.m. and the other brought in by Seattle Fire Department medics about 15 minutes later." KING-TV Seattle (6/29, 225K) recounts "detectives interviewed protesters who said they were in the CHOP at the time of the shooting," according to police "people are not cooperating" and "there is no suspect description at this time." This is "at least the fourth shooting in or near the CHOP in nine days."

The AP (6/29, Baumann) reports "witnesses reported seeing a white Jeep SUV near one of the makeshift barriers around the protest zone about 3 a.m. Monday, just before the shooting, a police statement said," and "callers to 911 said several people fired shots into the vehicle." The AP adds "the second victim, a 14-year-old boy," was "reported in critical condition." The police said in a statement, "Detectives searched the Jeep for evidence, but it was clear the crime scene had been disturbed."

The New York Times (6/29, Johnson, 18.61M) report "the city has said it wants a return to normal in the occupied protest zone, and a reopening of the Police Department's East Precinct, which was boarded up and abandoned as residents of the several-block area were left to police themselves." The Times adds "work crews with heavy equipment arrived on Friday to begin taking down barriers that were set up by protesters after the killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis in late May. But work was halted to avoid a confrontation." The New York Post (6/29, Steinbuch, Lapin, 4.57M), the CNN (6/29, Toropin, 83.16M) website, and The Hill (6/29, Bowden, 2.98M), among other news outlets, also report on the shooting.

Trump Slams "Seattle Looters, Agitators, Anarchists And 'Protesters.'" President Trump took to Twitter Monday to write, "Seattle Looters, Agitators, Anarchists and 'Protestors', are now refusing to leave the 'CHOP' Zone. They have ZERO respect for Government, or the Mayor of Seattle or Governor of Washington State! Not good!"

Prosecutor Says Virginia Police Officer May Have Made Racially Motivated Traffic Stops.

The Washington Post (6/29, Jackman, 14.2M) reports the Fairfax, Virginia Commonwealth's Attorney's Office said in a court filing that former Fairfax County police officer Jonathan Freitag "is under criminal and internal investigation by the Fairfax department on suspicion of lying about the reasons he stopped drivers, and there may have been a 'racial component' to his actions." According to the filing, the investigations also revealed "issues beyond and in addition to the unlawful stops," which have led to the FBI opening a "parallel criminal investigation." Freitag "has not been charged with any crimes and was not formally disciplined by the department, though he was suspended without pay during its investigation, a police spokesman said." Freitag "resigned last month after three years on the force."

WPost Editor Deletes Tweet Suggesting "Revenge" Against White Women.

The Federalist (6/29, Reynolds, 126K) reports that in a now-deleted tweet Sunday, the Washington Post's Global Opinions Editor Karen Attiah suggested that "white women are lucky that we are just calling them 'Karen's'. And not calling for revenge." In addition, she blamed the "'lies and tears' of white women for everything from a 1921 race massacre in Tulsa, Oklahoma to voting for President Trump." Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) called Attiah's words "sick, bigoted, racist, violent & wrong." Others "interpreted her tweet as a call for race-based violence." The Washington Free Beacon (6/29, Piro, 78K) reports that after Attiah deleted the tweet, she tweeted, "Non, je ne regrette rien," a French phrase that translates to, "No, I do not regret anything."

The Daily Caller (6/29, Talcott, 716K) reports that the Post's social media policy reads, "Post journalists must refrain from writing, tweeting or posting anything – including photographs or video – that could objectively be perceived as reflecting political, racial, sexist, religious or other bias or favoritism."

Coronavirus Surging Across More Than Half The Nation.

ABC World News Tonight (6/29, lead story, 2:53, Llamas, 7.78M) reported in its lead story that the coronavirus is "surging across more than half the country. At least 14 states pausing their reopening. Some putting newly lifted restrictions back in place. There are now more than 126,000 American lives lost. The WHO issuing a blunt warning, saying, quote, 'this is not even close to being over.'" ABC added that Florida has reported "thousands of new cases," while Texas has had "nearly 4,300 cases in 24 hours." ABC also described "alarming numbers in Los Angeles County," which now has "more than 100,000 cases after reporting its largest single-day increase." New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) is "considering delaying phase three of reopening because of the rapid rise in cases in other parts of the country."

The CBS Evening News (6/29, lead story, 3:33, Garrett, 4.85M) reported in its lead story that "as we head into the July Fourth weekend, the second big holiday of the summer, experts are warning we may be paying a price for how states handled the first one, Memorial Day." In its lead story, NBC Nightly News (6/29, lead story, 2:38, Holt, 6.78M) described "desperate measures" by "many states trying to wrestle a surge in coronavirus infections."

Amid Spike In Cases, Arizona's Ducey Orders Bars, Gyms, Clubs To Close For 30 Days. Arizona Gov. Doug Ducey (R) "has ordered the closure of bars, gyms, movie theaters, nightclubs and water parks across the state for 30 days in an effort to combat a spike in coronavirus cases," Fox News (6/29, Casiano, 27.59M) reports on its website. Ducey also reimposed a ban "on indoor and outdoor gatherings of 50 or more people," and "delayed the start of school until Aug. 17." Ducey said at a news conference Monday, "Our numbers continue to increase. ... In Arizona, they're going in the wrong direction and we're going to take some additional action today to contain this virus and get back on track." ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 5, 1:51, Llamas, 7.78M) reported that doctors in the state are "calling it a terrifying wave. Nearly 7,500 cases recorded this weekend alone. Hospitalizations have almost doubled in the last two weeks. ICU beds at 88% capacity."

Arizona Mayor Says He Won't Cancel Events Or Require Masks. The Arizona Republic (6/29, Jensen, 869K) reports Eagar, Arizona Mayor Bryce Hamblin "says he has no plans to cancel a slew of upcoming summer events or require masks, even as COVID-19 cases soar throughout the state." Hamblin said in a statement, "Over the past several weeks, I have been asked repeatedly what the Town of Eagar plans to do about COVID-19, masks, visitors, riots, etc. It is somewhat alarming how many expect and almost invite a more drastic infringement on their freedoms. ... My response from the onset of COVID-19 pandemic has been that we will err on the side of freedom."

Abbott Orders Texas Restaurants To Return To 50% Capacity. On NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 2, 1:55, Holt, 6.78M), Joe Fryer reported that in Houston, "strained hospitals are caring for more and more patients who are younger, many with underlying conditions." The CBS Evening News (6/29, story 2, 1:52, Garrett, 4.85M) reported that Texas Gov. Greg Abbott (R) "has ordered restaurants to return to 50% capacity." CBS added that there is "concern about what happens when school reopens. In one Texas district, 73% of parents said if cases keep growing, they will keep their children home."

Administration Secures 500K Doses Of Remdesivir.

Axios (6/29, Owens, 521K) reports that the Administration "has secured 500,000 doses of remdesivir, the first drug shown to be effective at treating hospitalized coronavirus patients, ensuring these doses will be for U.S. use." While the Administration "is not directly purchasing the drug," it will "use coronavirus hospitalization data to determine how to allocate it by state, and state health departments will decide which hospitals will get the drug."

HHS Secretary Azar told ABC's Good Morning America (6/29, 3.47M), "This is the drug that if you're hospitalized can reduce the length of your stay by a third, and we're working to make with our states to make sure it gets to the hospitals most in need." Azar said on CBS This Morning (6/29, 2.68M) that remdesivir "can reduce the length of stay by as much as one-third, and we're going to make sure that that drug gets to the hospitals that most need it to take care of American patients."

The Washington Post (6/29, Denham, 14.2M) reports that Gilead Sciences, the maker of remdesivir said Monday that "it will charge U.S. hospitals $3,120 for the typical patient with private insurance." The Post adds that the Administration "said it had secured nearly all of the company's supply of the drug for use in U.S. hospitals through September, with a contract for 500,000 treatment courses, which it will make available to hospitals at Gilead's price." CQ Roll Call (6/29, Kopp, 154K) says it is unclear "what uninsured patients will be charged, but senior Trump administration officials indicated on a call with reporters Monday that treatment for uninsured individuals could be paid for through a $100 billion fund approved by Congress to compensate hospitals for lost revenue." The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Walker, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage.

Reuters (6/29, Erman, Burger, Maddipati) reports that remdesivir is "believed to be" more "effective in treating patients earlier in the course of disease than dexamethasone, which reduced deaths in patients requiring supportive oxygen and those on a ventilator." Reuters adds, "Still, remdesivir in its currently formulation, is only being used on patients sick enough to require hospitalization as a five-day treatment course." According to Bloomberg (6/29, 4.73M), "Gilead's pricing decision is consequential because it sets a precedent for how much future Covid-19 treatments might cost. While it's higher than some patient groups had pushed for, it was close to a level that some drug-pricing watchdogs have said would be acceptable based on remdesivir's expected benefit."

Fauci Calls Large Crowds In Close Proximity "A Recipe For Disaster."

Politico (6/29, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that in an interview that aired on CNN Monday, NIAID Director Fauci "admonished Americans who have abandoned practicing personal mitigation measures to slow the spread of the coronavirus – asserting that such an 'all or none' approach has contributed to a surge of new Covid-19 cases across the country." Fauci said, "What has happened, I guess understandably, but nonetheless regrettably, [is] that people took the attitude in some places of either all or none. Either you're locked down, or you just let it fly and you just ignore many of the guidelines of social distancing, mask-wearing, abstaining from [not] shaking hands and avoiding large crowds." Fauci added, "Even in states that are telling their citizens to do it correctly. There are crowds. They are not physical distancing, and they're not wearing masks. That's a recipe for disaster." Reuters (6/29, Heavey, Caspani) reports that Fauci said, "Now we're seeing the consequences of community spread, which is even more difficult to contain than spread in a well-known physical location like a prison or nursing home or a meatpacking place."

Jacksonville, Site Of GOP Convention, Mandates Wearing Of Masks.

The Florida Times-Union (6/29, Hong, 203K) reports officials in Jacksonville, where the Republican National Committee will hold its convention, "announced Monday that people will be required to wear masks in public and indoor locations, as well as other places where they can't socially distance, beginning at 5 p.m." City officials "said Monday they haven't decided whether to mandate masks during the convention." It also remains "unclear exactly where people would be required to wear a mask," and "it's also unclear what measures the city will take to enforce the order."

Politico (6/29, Caputo, 4.29M) reports that Monday's announcement marks a reversal for Jacksonville Mayor Lenny Curry, who has "been ideologically resistant to passing government mandates." But "a final turning point for Curry came after the decisions by the Coast Guard and Navy, which has two facilities in Jacksonville, to order indoor mask-wearing." Curry is "determined to have the GOP convention take place safely in Jacksonville, and those familiar with his thinking say he wants to do what he can to once again reduce infection rates and rising hospitalizations." In a statement, the RNC "indicated it will abide by the mask order in Jacksonville – if it's still in place."

USA Today (6/29, Garrison, Hong, 10.31M) reports, "Face masks have become a flashpoint in the political fight surrounding the COVID-19 pandemic." Attendees of President Trump's "first two large public events since the coronavirus outbreak began a rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma and a gathering in Phoenix, included some people who wore masks but thousands who didn't." The Washington Examiner (6/29, Simonson, 448K) reports, "Wearing masks, which virtually every public health expert agrees is a way to cut down the transmission of the coronavirus, has been a sore spot for Trump, who is often seen in public not wearing one." The AP (6/29, Schmall, Kurtenbach) reports Trump has "refused to wear a mask on recent trips to states and businesses that require them."

The Washington Times (6/29, Howell, 492K) reports White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "said Mr. Trump believes mask-wearing should be a personal choice. But he also thinks people should follow local rules." McEnany said, "He encourages people to make whatever decision is best for their safety, but he did say to me he has no problem with masks and to do whatever your local jurisdiction requests of you."

The Hill (6/29, Samuels, 2.98M) reports, "Trump is scheduled to deliver his speech on Aug. 27 at the VyStar Veterans Memorial Arena, which holds around 15,000 people." Trump had "demanded the Republican convention be allowed to move forward without restrictions on crowd size, and he opposed the idea of requiring masks or spacing out attendees."

The New York Times (6/29, Mazzei, 18.61M) reports, "The resurgence of the virus in Florida, where the number of new cases has been rising nearly every day, has turned the convention into an even riskier gamble." Recent polls have "shown that Jacksonville residents do not want the convention." A online poll of 2,524 registered Duval County voters released last week "found that 58 percent of respondents opposed hosting the convention, with 71 percent concerned that it would lead to virus spread, and 61 percent worried that it would result in unrest."

Poll: Many Americans, Especially Republicans, Say Pandemic Has Been Overblown By Media.

Fox News (6/29, Casiano, 27.59M) reports on its website, "An increasing share of Americans – especially Republicans – believe the coronavirus pandemic is being overexaggerated and see news about the outbreak with partisan viewpoints, according to a new Pew Research study." When COVID-19 "dominated the news cycle in April to late May – just before the death of George Floyd and the nationwide protests that have erupted since – the share of Americans who said the outbreak has been exaggerated grew from 29 percent to 39 percent." A little "under 50 percent of Republicans felt this way in late April compared to 63 percent by early June, the study said. Among Democrats, the increase in the same time period saw a slight uptick from 14 percent to 18 percent."

Republican Leaders Urge Americans To Wear Masks.

Reuters (6/29, Chiacu) reports that "in a rare break with mask-averse...Trump, fellow Republican leaders are advocating for face coverings as COVID-19 cases surge in some Republican-leaning states." Senate Majority Leader McConnell is quoted as saying, "Wearing simple face coverings is not about protecting ourselves, it is about protecting everyone we encounter." Likewise, House Minority Leader McCarthy "said Americans should follow the recommendations of health officials to wear masks and socially distance themselves to help slow the spread of infection. 'They should wear a mask,' McCarthy told CNBC on Monday."

The Washington Times (6/29, Muñoz, 492K) reports McConnell on Monday "urged Americans to 'take small steps' to help combat the spread of coronavirus, and endorsed wearing face masks as a common-sense solution." McConnell said, "We must have no stigma – none – about wearing masks when we leave our homes and come near other people."

Azar: Americans Should Wear Face Coverings When Social Distancing Isn't Possible. In an appearance on ABC's Good Morning America (6/29, 3.47M), HHS Secretary Azar said, "We're experiencing in many of the counties in the southern parts of the United States very serious outbreaks. The governors are reporting that the average age of people testing positive is 35 or younger, many asymptomatic. This is a real call to action. We have all got to, as Americans, act responsibly. ... We've got to practice social distancing. We've got to use face coverings when we can't practice social distancing."

On CBS This Morning (6/29, 2.68M), Azar was asked, "Did America reopen too soon?" Azar said, "We're seeing surges in new cases, especially in counties in the southern United States, and our governors...are reporting that the majority of these new cases are under age 35, many are asymptomatic." Azar added, "We've got to get this under control because those individuals can spread this disease even unknowingly to those who are most vulnerable. We all have got to practice social distancing. We need to wear facial coverings when we can't social distance, and we've got to engage in appropriate personal hygiene."

Cuomo: Trump Should Issue Order Mandating Mask Wearing. Reuters (6/29, Caspani, Layne) reports that on Monday, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) said President Trump "should issue an executive order mandating that people wear masks in public and he should lead by example and cover his face." Cuomo is quoted as saying, "The other states are just starting to do it now, states that were recalcitrant, governors who said 'we don't need to do this, masks don't work. Now they're doing a 180...let the President have the same sense and do that as an executive order.'" According to Reuters, Cuomo also "once again criticized the federal government's handling of the coronavirus pandemic, saying the White House has been 'in denial' from the start of the public health crisis, and that it was not doing enough to tackle a surge of in COVID-19 cases in several U.S. states that has emerged over the past few weeks."

Clyburn Raises Concerns About Republicans' Refusal To Wear Masks During Coronavirus Hearing. The Washington Examiner (6/29, Heflin, 448K) reports House Majority Whip Clyburn "expressed 'profound disappointment' on Monday that Republican members of the Coronavirus Crisis Select Subcommittee refused to wear masks during a Friday hearing." Clyburn wrote to House Minority Whip Scalise, "I am writing to express my profound disappointment that the Republican Members of the Select Subcommittee on the Coronavirus Crisis refused to wear masks during Friday's hearing. ... The Attending Physician of the Congress has issued clear, unequivocal guidelines that require Members to wear masks at all committee hearings."

Johns Hopkins Tracker Team Call Attention To Virus' Impact On Minority Communities.

The Washington Post (6/29, Swenson, 14.2M) reports that team behind Johns Hopkins University's Coronavirus Resource Center "wrestles with doubts about whether the numbers can truly capture the scope of the pandemic, or whether the public and policymakers are failing to absorb the big picture." One of the concerns is that "if authorities fail to contextualize the virus with other factors – like Zip codes, race or Medicaid usage – the hardest-hit communities can go unseen." For Lauren Gardner, an associate professor at the Johns Hopkins Whiting School of Engineering, "the U.S. map put a spotlight on inequalities that made the pandemic more heartbreaking." She said, "When you actually start looking at the affected populations, the breakdown of race and age and ethnicity and socioeconomic demographics, it becomes so much more human."

Report: Trump Was "Ill-Prepared," "Delusional" In Calls With Foreign Leaders.

The Washington Examiner (6/29, Smith, 448K) reports that Carl Bernstein reported Monday "that many former officials within the administration saw the president as being woefully ill-prepared for calls with foreign leaders and said that he pandered in conversation with them." Bernstein said two sources told him "that Trump was often 'delusional' during such calls, which caused concern to former national security advisers H.R. McMaster and John Bolton, former Defense Secretary James Mattis, former Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, and former White House chief of staff John Kelly." Bernstein said Trump was "so consistently unprepared for discussion of serious issues, so often outplayed in his conversations with powerful leaders like Russian President Vladimir Putin and Turkish President Recep Erdogan, and so abusive to leaders of America's principal allies" that officials feared that he "posed a danger to the national security" of the nation.

Bernstein writes on the CNN (6/29, 83.16M) website, "In hundreds of highly classified phone calls with foreign heads of state, President Trump was so consistently unprepared for discussion of serious issues, so often outplayed in his conversations with powerful leaders...and so abusive to leaders of America's principal allies, that the calls helped convince some senior US officials – including his former secretaries of state and defense, two national security advisers and his longest-serving chief of staff – that the President himself posed a danger to the national security of the United States."

Barr Focusing On "Media Overkill" Of Russia Probe.

The Washington Times (6/29, Scarborough, 492K) reports that when Attorney General Barr says the media were doing "all they could to sensationalize and drive" the Russia scandal, he may be referring to the Mayflower Hotel. The press "wrote scores of stories in 2017 about candidate Donald Trump's foreign policy speech at the downtown D.C. landmark." Those stories "promoted scandalous Russia ties and supposed out-and-out lying. They centered on three men who were in the same room that April 27, 2016: Mr. Trump, Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak" and then-Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-AL). The Times says Barr is "zeroing in on what he considers liberal media overkill in light of the fact that special counsel Robert Mueller found no Trump-Russia election conspiracy."

Toobin: Trump Should Be Thanking Mueller. Jeffrey Toobin writes in a piece for the New Yorker (6/29, Toobin, 5.82M) that more than a year after Mueller submitted his final report, Trump "remains obsessed" with the investigation, which he has called the "Greatest Political Crime in the History of the U.S., the Russian Witch-Hunt." The Administration hold that "Mueller and his team displayed an unseemly eagerness to uncover crimes that never existed." But Toobin argues that "the opposite is true. Mueller had an abundance of legitimate targets to investigate, and his failures emerged from an excess of caution, not of zeal." When it came to the President, Mueller "avoided confrontations that he should have welcomed. He never issued a grand-jury subpoena for the President's testimony, and even though his office built a compelling case for Trump's having committed obstruction of justice, Mueller came up with reasons not to say so in his report." To Toobin, Trump "shouldn't be denouncing Mueller – he should be thanking him."

Schiff Says Republicans Are Boycotting Intel Committee Briefings.

The Washington Examiner (6/29, Chaitin, 448K) reports that on MSNBC's All In Monday, House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff "said Republicans are 'boycotting' briefings held by the panel. When talking about "a planned Trump administration briefing for Democratic lawmakers on Tuesday on alleged Russian bounties to Taliban militants to kill U.S. and coalition forces in Afghanistan after eight top Republicans were briefed by the White House about the intelligence on Monday," Schiff said, At the moment, the Republicans are boycotting the briefings that we are doing. ... They have been, yes, and we're not quite sure why. They don't have much of an explanation for it,"

Democrats' Proposal Would Strengthen Congress' Inherent Contempt Power.

Politico (6/29, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that House Democrats are "increasingly frustrated by the Trump administration for defying subpoenas" and have proposed "legislation that would ratchet up their power to punish executive branch officials who reject their requests." Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) and five other members of the House Judiciary Committee have offered a rule change "to formalize and expand Congress' power of 'inherent contempt' – its authority to unilaterally punish anyone who defies a subpoena for testimony or documents."

Pavlich: Biden Should Be Held Accountable For His False Statements On Flynn Probe.

Katie Pavlich writes on Townhall (6/29, Pavlich, 177K) that Joe Biden claimed in a May 12 interview with ABC News that he was "unaware" of the Obama era case and spying...against General Michael Flynn. ... When pressed, Biden changed his story, saying he was aware of an investigation but nothing more." However, "declassified documents, released in May, showed Biden as one of the Obama administration officials who unmasked Flynn during the 2016/2017 presidential transition period." Pavlich adds that Biden knew "about the details of the Flynn investigation" and suggested "ideas about how to go after him through the Logan Act." Pavlich questions "whether Biden will be held accountable for the discrepancies of his statements," and argues that he "should be asked about whether he plans, as President, to corruptly use the power of the federal government to go after his political enemies as members of the Obama administration regularly did."

Luttig: Court Of Appeals "Bungled" Flynn Case. In an op-ed for the New York Times (6/29, Luttig, 18.61M), former US Court of Appeals Judge J. Michael Luttig argues that the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia "bungled" former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn's case, and "the question now is whether the entire Court of Appeals will or should rehear this significant constitutional case." Luttig adds that "while the opinion of the three-judge panel is grievously wrong, and as premature and ill reasoned as its decision was, the court reached the result that almost certainly will be required by law after any hearing that the full court could constitutionally authorize Judge [Emmett] Sullivan to conduct."

High Court Declines To Hear Challenge To Border Wall Construction.

The AP (6/29) reports that the Supreme Court is "leaving in place a decision that rejected environmental groups' challenge to sections of wall the Trump administration is building along the US border with Mexico." On Monday, the court "declined to hear an appeal involving construction of 145 miles (233 kilometers) of steel-bollard walls along the border in Arizona, California, New Mexico and Texas." The Center for Biological Diversity, the Animal Legal Defense Fund, Defenders of Wildlife, and the Southwest Environmental Center "had challenged a federal law that allows the secretary of Homeland Security to waive any laws necessary to allow the quick construction of border fencing."

The Washington Times (6/29, Dinan, 492K) reports "Congress has given the executive branch wide authority to waive some of the country's most iconic laws in order to build border barriers, and past administrations have flexed that power." Trump, however, "has pushed the limits with his plans to construct more than 700 miles of new border wall." DHS "has cleared the way for construction by waiving everything from the Endangered Species Act and the Clean Water Act to the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, the Antiquities Act, the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act and the Eagle Protection Act."

Reuters (6/29, Wolfe) reports "the environmental groups argued that the law was unconstitutional because it gave too much power to the executive branch – in this case the Department of Homeland Security – to get around laws like the Endangered Species Act and the National Environmental Policy Act without congressional input." The San Francisco Chronicle (6/29, Egelko, 2.67M) quotes Jean Su, an attorney at the Center for Biological Diversity, as saying, "We're disappointed that the Supreme Court won't consider the Trump administration's flagrant abuse of the law to fast-track border wall construction. ... This administration has made a mockery of the Constitution to build an enormously destructive wall. We'll continue to fight these illegal waivers and do everything possible to prevent further damage to the beautiful borderlands."

CNN (6/29, Alvarez, 83.16M) indicates on its website that "Jason Rylander, senior endangered species counsel at Defenders of Wildlife, one of the other groups that brought the challenge," also "said they are 'disappointed' in Monday's decision." The Fox News (6/29, Blitzer, 27.59M) website, The Hill (6/29, Beitsch, 2.98M), and Bloomberg (6/29, Stohr, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Biden Tells Donors He Will Eliminate Most Of Trump's Tax Cuts.

On its website, CNBC (6/29, Breuninger, 3.62M) reports that Joe Biden on Monday "told potential donors to his campaign that his administration would end most of President Donald Trump's multitrillion-dollar tax cuts – even though 'a lot of you may not like that.'" The remarks came as Biden "laid out an ambitious suite of policy goals during a virtual campaign fundraiser" that raked in "at least $2 million." CNBC adds that "even before the coronavirus crisis effectively froze the US economy and sent unemployment skyrocketing, Trump's 'irresponsible sugar-high tax cuts had already pushed us into a trillion-dollar deficit,' Biden said. 'I'm going to get rid of the bulk of Trump's $2 trillion tax cut,' Biden continued, 'and a lot of you may not like that but I'm going to close loopholes like capital gains and stepped up basis.'"

WSJournal Criticizes Vacation Tax Credit Proposal.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes a proposal from Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) offering Americans a $4,000 tax credit to take vacations. The American Tax Rebate and Incentive Program Act is aimed at encouraging Americans to support the travel and tourism industries, which have been hit hard by the pandemic, but the Journal says the tax credit would subsidize spending that would have happened regardless.

House Set To Approve ACA Expansion Bill Trump Has Threatened To Veto.

The AP (6/29, Fram) reports that "a Democratic package expanding 'Obamacare' coverage approached House passage Monday, a measure doomed to advance no further that spotlights how the coronavirus pandemic and President Donald Trump's efforts to obliterate the law have fortified health care's potency as a 2020 campaign issue." House Speaker Pelosi said on CNN's The Lead (6/29, 1.68M), "We're in the middle of a pandemic. You would think in the middle of a pandemic, the President of the United States would uphold the law instead of going to overturn the law, which provides affordable care to so many millions of people in our country."

Wyden Ends Partnership With Grassley On Prescription Drug Pricing Bill.

The Hill (6/29, Sullivan, 2.98M) reports Senate Finance Committee ranking member Sen. Ron Wyden (D-OR) "will not co-sponsor an updated version of what had been a bipartisan measure to lower drug prices, as his partnership" with Chairman Charles Grassley on the issue "appeared to fall apart on Monday. Wyden last year introduced a bipartisan bill to lower drug prices that he negotiated with Grassley." In a Wall Street Journal (6/29, Grassley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, Grassley argues that the nation needs more leadership on the issue of prescription drug prices. He stresses that the time for Congress to act on this key issue is now.

Oklahomans Set Vote On Expanding Medicaid.

Politico (6/29, Roubein, Goldberg, 4.29M) reports that on Tuesday, "voters in deep-red Oklahoma...could order Medicaid expansion for at least 200,000 poor adults, defying state and Trump administration officials fighting to limit the Obamacare program." If voters "approve a ballot measure...Oklahoma would become the first state to broadly expand government-backed health insurance to many of its poorest residents since the beginning of a pandemic that has stripped many people of coverage." Gov. Kevin Stitt (R) "is warning the program would be unaffordable while the state suddenly confronts an estimated $1.3 billion shortfall."

Supreme Court Declines To Block Pending Federal Executions.

The AP (6/29, Sherman) reports that on Monday, the Supreme Court "refused to block the execution of four federal prison inmates who are scheduled to be put to death in July and August," which "would mark the first use of the death penalty on the federal level since 2003." The AP says the justices "rejected an appeal from four inmates who were convicted of killing children," although Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor "noted that they would have blocked the executions from going forward." The AP adds that "the court's action leaves no obstacles standing in the way of the executions, the first of which is scheduled for July 13."

Politico (6/29, Gerstein, 4.29M) recalls that in December, the Supreme Court "issued a surprise ruling halting the executions so that the prisoners could pursue their legal arguments in a federal appeals court." However, Justices Samuel Alito, Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh "signaled that they went along with the delay reluctantly, and that they considered the arguments being leveled by the inmates to be weak."

The Washington Post (6/29, Barnes, Berman, 14.2M) reports that a year ago, Attorney General Barr announced that the Justice Department "planned to resume executions using a new lethal-injection procedure that involves a single drug, pentobarbital." Solicitor General Noel Francisco "said that the lawsuit against the resumption of federal executions was simply a delay tactic, and that there was no argument that the proposed federal protocol was unsafe." USA Today (6/29, Wolf, 10.31M), Reuters (6/29, Hurley), The Hill (6/29, Kruzel, 2.98M), and the Washington Times (6/29, Swoyer, 492K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

American Academy Of Pediatrics Says Schools Should Aim To Reopen.

On NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 9, 1:53, Holt, 6.78M), Kate Snow reported, "Even as coronavirus cases spike, when it comes to school, the American Academy of Pediatrics says 'all policy considerations for the coming school year should start with a goal of having students physically present.' ... The AAP worries that without going to school, kids lose access to behavioral and mental health services, food programs, and are socially isolated. And students without Internet connections or devices are falling behind. But [some] parents...see things differently." Renee Parker, mother: "I will not allow my kids to go back to school in August, in the fall." Snow: "No matter what?" Parker: "No matter what." Snow: "The AAP suggests kids could be as close as three feet apart, particularly if wearing masks, assigned seating on school buses, doorways left open so no one has to touch the knobs."

DiSalvo: Teachers' Unions May Prevent School Reopenings. In a Wall Street Journal (6/29, DiSalvo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, Daniel DiSalvo of the City College of New York argues that while the American Federation of Teachers and the National Education Association have legitimate safety concerns about reopening schools, the two powerful unions may leverage the coronavirus crisis to win concessions. DiSalvo expresses concern that the unions will keep schools closed in order to do so.

Pandemic Driving Down Cost Of College For Some Families.

The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Mitchell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports colleges are showing a greater willingness to offer discounts on tuition, as enrollment numbers are forecasted to drop this fall amid the pandemic. Families are also increasingly questioning whether the high cost of college is worth it, as unemployment hovers near record levels.

Justices: CFPB Is Constitutional, But Director Can Be Fired By President.

CNBC (6/29, Mangan, Higgins, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Monday, the Supreme Court issued a ruling that "allowed the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to continue operating, but said that the director of the consumer watchdog can be removed by the president of the United States 'at will.'" Chief Justice Roberts' decision "agreed with a California-based law firm's argument that the CFPB's leadership by a sole director who was removable 'only for cause' violated the separation of powers rule under the U.S. Constitution. ... 'The agency may ... continue to operate, but its Director, in light of our decision, must be removable by the President at will,' Roberts wrote in his majority decision, in which he was joined the court's other four conservative justices." The New York Times (6/29, Liptak, 18.61M) calls the ruling "a victory for the conservative movement to curb the administrative state," and the Washington Examiner (6/29, Krishan, 448K) "a victory for business groups."

The New York Post (6/29, Fredericks, 4.57M) also reports the 5-4 ruling states that "the Constitution requires the president have unfettered discretion to fire the head of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau." Reuters (6/29, Hurley) notes that "under the 2010 Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform law that established the CFPB, the president could terminate a director only for 'inefficiency, neglect of duty or malfeasance in office,'" and the Washington Post (6/29, Marimow, Merle, 14.2M) indicates that Justice Elena Kagan, "writing for the court's liberals, said Congress should have the flexibility to impose limits on the president's power to get rid of agency heads," and "faulted the majority for second-guessing Congress that created the agency to 'address financial practices that had brought on a devastating recession, and could do so again.'"

USA Today (6/29, Wolf, 10.31M) quotes Kagan as saying, "Today's decision wipes out a feature of that agency its creators thought fundamental to its mission – a measure of independence from political pressure."

CQ Roll Call (6/29, Ruger, Saksa, 154K) reports that "in ruling the way it did, the Supreme Court stopped short of a decision that could have been a major disruption to the enforcement of consumer protection laws." To Politico (6/29, O'Donnell, 4.29M), "The decision could have significant implications for the future of the similarly structured Federal Housing Finance Agency, the overseer of mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Like the head of the CFPB, the FHFA director is appointed to a five-year term and can only be removed for cause." Politico says the CFPB is "the brainchild of" Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), who "cast the decision as a win for the agency even as she castigated the high court for 'ignor[ing] the intent of Congress' by giving the president greater power over the director." Warren is quoted as saying, "Let's not lose sight of the bigger picture: after years of industry attacks and GOP opposition, a conservative Supreme Court recognized what we all knew: the CFPB itself and the law that created it is constitutional. The CFPB is here to stay."

The Washington Post (6/29, Marimow, Merle, 14.2M) reports, meanwhile, that "the agency's director, Kathy Kraninger, said the decision 'brings certainty to the operations of the Bureau,'" and added, "We will continue with our important mission of protecting consumers with no question that we are fully accountable to the President." The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Kendall, Ackerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) hails the separation-of-powers ruling, but otherwise casts the court's decision as a lost opportunity to find the entire CFPB unconstitutional.

House Democrats Want USAID Political Appointee To Be Fired Over Islamophobic Statements.

Politico (6/29, Cohen, 4.29M) reports Reps. Joaquin Castro (D-TX) and Ilhan Omar (D-MN) on Monday "called for the firing of a controversial U.S. Agency for International Development appointee over his reported history of Islamophobic comments." Castro and Omar "wrote in a letter to acting USAID Administrator John Barsa that the agency's religious freedom adviser, Mark Kevin Lloyd, has a 'historical pattern of prejudice against the Islamic faith and the Muslim population' that is antithetical to the agency's mission." A 2016 investigation by the AP "revealed that Lloyd, then the Trump campaign's Virginia field director, shared a Facebook post calling Islam 'a barbaric cult.'"

Bedard: McEnany Draws Ire For Pushing Back Against Media.

In his column for the Washington Examiner (6/29, Bedard, 448K), Paul Bedard writes White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany is ruffling the feathers of "media bigs, one of whom Monday described her as a threat to journalistic 'credibility.'" McEnany has been "cheered by fans for her style and regular challenges to questions from reporters, like one Monday on whether President Trump thinks it was a good thing the North won the Civil War," but "critics have claimed she is evasive and too quick to note media errors." For example, Bill Grueskin, a professor at Columbia Journalism School professor, laments "McEnany's criticism of the media, a tactic he said she uses to pivot from questions she doesn't like."

Trump Jr. Seen At Maskless Party In The Hamptons.

Page Six (6/29, Coleman, 1.6M) cites a "Hamptons insider" who says they saw Donald Trump Jr. and girlfriend Kimberly Guilfoyle at a "packed party" at a house in Bridgehampton that looked "as if COVID had never happened." The source "estimated there were about 100 partiers, who our source says were maskless, at the bash."

WPost Analysis: Opioid Epidemic Hit Native Americans Hard From 2006 To 2014.

The Washington Post (6/29, Horwitz, Cenziper, Carioti, 14.2M) reports, "At the height of the opioid epidemic, Native Americans overdosed and died at a rate that rivaled some of the hardest-hit regions in Appalachia." Nationally, "from 2006 to 2014, Native Americans were nearly 50 percent more likely to die of an opioid overdose than non-natives, a Washington Post analysis found." While "more than 3,000 cities and counties – along with most states – pursue billions in settlement dollars from opioid manufacturers and distributors, tribal leaders are fighting for a fair share of the proceeds through a series of lawsuits filed by Indian tribes."

Roberts Joins With Liberal Justices To Strike Down Law Limiting Access To Abortions.

On Monday, Chief Justice John Roberts joined with the Supreme Court's four justices nominated by Democratic presidents to strike down a Louisiana law that limited access to abortion clinics. Though Reuters (6/29, Hurley) says Roberts "indicated his vote was a reluctant one and signaled he may back other abortion restrictions in future cases, with some legal challenges already in the pipeline," and the New York Times (6/29, 18.61M) editorializes that Roberts "appears to have decided that the circumstances of this case were not ideal for crippling reproductive rights" but "left the door open to doing so in the future," media reports reflect the anger at the Chief Justice on the part of anti-abortion activists.

The AP (6/29, Schor) reports that President Trump's reelection campaign "quickly invoked" the ruling "as part of a new appeal to voters – signaling its power to motivate religious conservatives who are a key part of his base ahead of November's election." Vice President Pence "summed up that argument, tweeting that the Supreme Court's decision made one thing clear: 'We need more Conservative justices on the US Supreme Court.'" The AP says "top pro-Trump religious conservatives noted pointedly that both justices he named to the high court dissented from Monday's decision, aligning with Pence in making the case that Trump should get another term in office to potentially tap more conservative nominees." Along those lines, Breitbart (6/29, Pollak, 673K) reports "many conservatives voted for...Trump in 2016 solely because the fate of the Supreme Court was at stake. They will have to do so again in 2020, because the Court remains liberal, and Democrats want to pack it further."

ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 10, 1:41, Moran, 7.4M) reported that once again "it was...Roberts who declined to go with the conservatives, choosing stability and precedent and caution in the law, rather than rapid change made by this court." The CBS Evening News (6/29, story 3, 2:05, Garrett, 4.85M) also indicated that "siding with Liberals is becoming a familiar pattern with Roberts in some of these big cases, going back to 2012 when he provided that key fifth vote to save Obamacare, to the recent ruling preserving DACA. All big disappointments for Conservatives." NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 6, 1:46, Holt, 6.78M) said, meanwhile, it was "another surprising ruling from this Conservative Supreme Court and a victory for women seeking abortion."

The Washington Post (6/29, A1, Barnes, 14.2M) says the ruling "was perhaps the most dramatic example of Roberts's new role as the pivotal member of the court, and indicated that while he supports restrictions on abortion, he is unready at this point to overhaul the court's jurisprudence supporting the right of a woman to choose the procedure." The Post adds, "Trump's nominees, Justices Neil M. Gorsuch and Brett M. Kavanaugh, dissented," and "each of the court's four most consistent conservatives wrote separately to describe their disagreement."

The Washington Post (6/29, 14.2M) editorializes that "it is cause for optimism that the Supreme Court has voted to strike down a law in Louisiana that would have imposed strict but medically unwarranted regulations on that state's abortion providers." The ruling "is a victory for the right to choose and for women who rely on it. Equally, if not more important, however, it is a triumph for adherence to precedent." To the Post, "Credit goes to the four justices appointed by Democratic presidents" and to Roberts, whose "adherence to precedent despite personal disagreement...is all the more remarkable given that the chief justice can expect another round of condemnation from Republicans already furious with him for thwarting their preferred outcomes in previous cases." In an editorial, along those lines, the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes Roberts' reasoning in this as well as other controversial rulings as eminently political, and predicts Monday's decision will hurt the judiciary by keeping political matters in the legal arena.

CNBC (6/29, Higgins, 3.62M) reports on its website that Nancy Northup, President of the Center for Reproductive Rights, "which challenged the Louisiana abortion law at the top court, said in a statement that 'we're relieved that the Louisiana law has been blocked today but we're concerned about tomorrow.'" CNBC says Louisiana Gov. John Bel Edwards (D), "who voted in favor of the abortion law while in the Louisiana House of Representatives, said in a statement that he was 'disappointed' with the Supreme Court's ruling but that he respected the decision 'and trust that Louisiana and our nation will continue to move forward.'"

Reuters (6/29, Hurley) says Marjorie Dannenfelser, President of the anti-abortion Susan B. Anthony List, said, "Today's ruling is a bitter disappointment," and Louisiana Attorney General Jeff Landry (R) "said the ruling continued a 'heartbreaking line of decisions that places 'access' to abortion above the health and safety of women and girls.'" Reuters reports that White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "also blasted the ruling, saying that 'unelected justices have intruded on the sovereign prerogatives of state governments by imposing their own policy preference in favor of abortion to override legitimate abortion safety regulations.'"

The Los Angeles Times (6/29, Savage, 4.64M) reports "it was the court's first abortion ruling since...Trump's two appointees took their seats, and it dashed hopes of abortion opponents who expected the more conservative court would move to repeal Roe vs. Wade or at least give states more power to narrow it." It also "marked the third major decision in the last two weeks in which the chief justice joined with the court's four liberals." USA Today (6/29, Wolf, 10.31M) also reports Roberts "has become the court's swing vote in recent years," and the New York Times (6/29, A1, Liptak, 18.61M) that he "has in the space of two weeks voted with the court's liberal wing in three major cases – on job discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender workers, on a program protecting young immigrants known as Dreamers and now on abortion."

The Washington Examiner (6/29, Rowan, 448K) reports Roberts "enraged social conservatives" Monday, the Daily Caller (6/29, Olohan, 716K) that “conservatives ripped into Roberts on Monday,” and Townhall (6/29, O'Brien, 177K) that “some argued that Justice David Souter was still the worst GOP-appointed SCOTUS justice, but agreed that Roberts is giving him a run for his money.” The Federalist (6/29, Zempel, 126K) says, meanwhile, that “in keeping with a string of other unconstitutional maneuvers,” Roberts “joined once again with the bench's leftists in...authoring” an opinion “that cut against the Constitution, life, and women.”

The Washington Examiner (6/29, Russell, 448K) refers to “another surprising and disappointing 5-4 ruling,” and adds “conservatives did presume Louisiana's law was legitimate.” The Washington Free Beacon (6/29, Daley, 78K) points out “the contested law, called Act 620, requires that any Louisiana abortion provider have admitting privileges at a nearby hospital. The law will not take effect following Monday's decision.”

The AP (6/29, Sherman) reports that Roberts and his “more liberal colleagues” ruled that “the law requiring doctors who perform abortions to have admitting privileges at nearby hospitals violates abortion rights the court first announced in the landmark Roe v. Wade decision in 1973.” However, “the outcome is not the last word on the decades-long fight over abortion with dozens of state-imposed restrictions winding their way through the courts,” even if it “was a surprising defeat for abortion opponents.” The AP adds Roberts “had always voted against abortion rights before, including in a 2016 case in which the court struck down a Texas law that was virtually identical to the one in Louisiana.”

Politico (6/29, Ollstein, 4.29M) reports that Justice Stephen Breyer, “in an opinion joined by rest of the court's liberal wing, wrote that the Louisiana law would make it ‘impossible for many women to obtain a safe, legal abortion in the State and [impose] substantial obstacles on those who could.’” Roberts, “in a separate concurring opinion, disagreed with the liberal justices' reasoning but said he was bound by the precedent the court set just four years ago when it rejected a similar law in Texas.” Roberts wrote, “The Louisiana law imposes a burden on access to abortion just as severe as that imposed by the Texas law, for the same reasons...therefore Louisiana's law cannot stand under our precedents.”

The Washington Times (6/29, Swoyer, 492K) indicates that “the conservative wing of the court, meanwhile, said the abortion providers did not have sufficient legal injury to bring the case, saying the doctors and abortion clinics are wrongly asserting the legal rights that belong to their patients.” Wrote Justice Samuel Alito, “The idea that a regulated party can invoke the right of a third party for the purpose of attacking legislation enacted to protect the third party is stunning. Given the apparent conflict of interest, that concept would be rejected out of hand in a case not involving abortion.” CQ Roll Call (6/29, Raman, 154K) reports that in his dissent, Justice Clarence Thomas “said the Roe v. Wade precedent should be overturned altogether,” writing, “Roe is grievously wrong for many reasons, but the most fundamental is that its core holding – that the Constitution protects a woman's right to abort her unborn child – finds no support in the text of the Fourteenth Amendment.” The Hill (6/29, Kruzel, 2.98M), Bloomberg (6/29, Stohr, 4.73M) and the Wall Street Journal (6/29, A1, Bravin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also cover Monday's ruling.

“Pipeline Of New Cases” On Abortion To Test Court's Majority. The AP (6/29, Schor) reports “abortion opponents vented their disappointment and fury,” and the New York Times (6/29, Tavernise, Dias, 18.61M) that their “larger goal will have to wait – but perhaps not for long,” as “the anti-abortion movement has a long pipeline of new cases that, if taken up by the Supreme Court, could present a more direct challenge to Roe v. Wade, the 1973 ruling that established federal protection for abortion. As of June, there were at least 16 abortion cases in federal appeals courts, the last step before the Supreme Court, according to lawyers at Planned Parenthood Federation of America.”

Collins' Challenger Dings Her On Kavanaugh Support. The New York Times (6/29, Astor, Stevens, 18.61M) reports that the ruling, “and Justice Brett M. Kavanaugh's dissent, may create new challenges for Susan Collins and other Republican senators up for re-election,” as “it did not take Sara Gideon long to leverage Monday's Supreme Court ruling on abortion in her race against...Collins,” who “cast a decisive vote to confirm...Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court...on the premise that he would uphold precedent to preserve abortion rights.” Gideon said on Twitter, “Do you still think Brett Kavanaugh believes Roe v. Wade is settled law, @SenSusanCollins?”

Reddit Shuts Down Pro-Trump Forum, Twitch Suspends Official Trump Channel.

Reuters (6/29, Culliford, Malara) reports Reddit has “shut down r/The_Donald, a forum used by supporters” of President Trump, while Amazon live-streaming platform Twitch “temporarily banned Trump's official channel for violating Twitch's policy on hateful speech.” Reddit CEO Steve Huffman “said in a post detailing changes to its content policies that communities and users that promoted hate based on identity or vulnerability would be banned. He said Reddit was banning about 2,000 subreddits, the majority of which were inactive.”

The New York Times (6/29, Isaac, 18.61M) reports r/The_Donald “is home to more than 790,000 users who post memes, viral videos and supportive messages” about the President. Reddit executives said the group, “which has been highly influential in cultivating and stoking Mr. Trump's online base, had consistently broken its rules by allowing people to target and harass others with hate speech.” The Washington Post (6/29, Timberg, Dwoskin, 14.2M) says, “racism, misogyny, anti-Semitism, glorification of violence and conspiracy theories that flourished” on r/The_Donald, whose “volunteer moderators and much of the community had left in recent months.”

Politico (6/29, Lima, 4.29M) reports Twitch “temporarily suspended [Trump's] channel and social media site Reddit banned a longtime forum used by his supporters in separate actions.” Twitch confirmed that it has “separately suspended Trump's campaign channel on the platform for posting videos that ran afoul of its rules against content that ‘promotes, encourages or facilitates discrimination, denigration, objectification, harassment or violence’ based on an individual's identity.”

Ford To Pause All Social Media Advertising. Reuters (6/29, Klayman) reports Ford said Monday that it will “pause advertising on all social media platforms in the United States for the next 30 days, joining a growing list of companies that have stopped spending” on Facebook in support of a “campaign that called out the company for not doing enough to stop hate speech on its platform.” The Washington Times (6/29, Lovelace, 492K) reports the advertising boycott “is gaining momentum and has already contributed to a shift by the social media giant toward more restrictive guidelines for posts about elections and voting.”

In an editorial headlined “Woke Capital Targets Free Speech,” the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Facebook has already acted against hate speech, and that such actions represent a troubling effort by big corporations to influence free speech.

Democrats Eye Filibuster Reform If They Win Senate Control.

The Hill (6/29, Bolton, 2.98M) reports, “Democrats are stepping up talks about reforming or abolishing the filibuster if they win back the Senate and White House in November.” Sen. Jeff Merkley (D-OR), “an outspoken liberal who has long championed revamping the procedural tactic,” is spearheading the discussions.

Grassley Criticizes Hannity For Not Following Up With Trump On Second-Term Agenda Question.

USA Today (6/29, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports Sen. Charles Grassley (R-IA) on Monday “expressed frustration with last week’s Fox News’ town hall with President Donald Trump, saying the network wasn’t working hard enough to get him reelected.” Grassley, speaking with reporters, “took particular issue with Fox News host Sean Hannity, for not pressing Trump during the town hall to answer a question about his agenda for a second term more directly.” Said Grassley, “Okay, so he says what’s your plans for the next four years? So the President starts to answer it. And then digresses a little bit. Hannity should have got him back on the subject. So it’s pretty simple: I just want the President to be reelected.” Grassley is also quoted as saying, “I would blame Fox more than I blame the President, because the President, it’s easy for him to digress here and there, but Hannity – you assume Fox wants him to get reelected.”

Trump Tweets He’s “Getting VERY GOOD Internal Polling Numbers.”

In a Monday tweet, President Trump wrote, “Sorry to inform the Do Nothing Democrats, but I am getting VERY GOOD internal Polling Numbers. Just like 2016, the @nytimes Polls are Fake! The @FoxNews Polls are a JOKE! Do you think they will apologize to me & their subscribers AGAIN when I WIN? People want LAW, ORDER & SAFETY!”

In Tweet, Trump Says He Has “95% Approval Rating” In GOP. Trump on Monday wrote in a tweet, “95% Approval Rating of President Trump in the Republican Party. I would imagine the 5% are the RINOS’ and stupid people who don’t want to see great Judges & Supreme Court Justice’s, a new & powerful Military, Choice for Vets, 2A Protection, big RegulationCuts, Life, & much more!”

Lotter Downplays Polls Showing Trump Trailing Biden. Trump 2020 Strategic Communications Director Marc Lotter, appearing Monday on Fox Business’ Varney & Co. (6/29, 64K), discussed polls showing Joe Biden leading Trump. Lotter said, “I think as we see the economy improve, as we see people recovering from the coronavirus and they see the President’s leadership on this, then you will see public sentiment change as well, but let’s not make any illusions here. Most of the major media outlets had Ronald Reagan losing by eight points a week or two before the election in 1980 to Jimmy Carter. They had Michael Dukakis beating George H.W. Bush. The only people that get it wrong more than pollsters is probably TV weather casters.”

Georgia Poll: Biden Leads Trump 49%-45%; Senate Race Tight.

In an exclusive, National Journal (6/29, Holt, Pisani, Subscription Publication, 35K) reports that a Public Policy Polling (D) survey of 734 Georgia voters, taken June 25-26, shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 49%-45%. In the crowded all-party special election to fill out the remaining term of ex-Sen. Johnny Isakson (R-GA), the same poll shows Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) leading with 23%, followed by appointed Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) at 21%, Raphael Warnock (D) at 20%, Matt Liebman (D) at 11%, and Ed Tarver (D) at 3%. If no candidate tops 50% in the November election, the top two finishers, regardless of party, will advance to a Jan. 5 runoff. In potential runoff matchups, Collins leads Warnock 43%-41%; Warnock leads Loeffler 43%-40%. The poll didn’t test a possible Collins-Loeffler runoff. The poll was commissioned by End Citizens United.

The Hill (6/29, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports, “The poll is another sign that Trump’s reelection prospects are on increasingly shaky ground. A Democrat hasn’t won a presidential contest in Georgia since 1992, and Trump carried the state in 2016 by 5 points.” The Washington Examiner (6/29, Simonson, 448K) also reports on the poll results.

CNBC Report: Trump Camp Reserves Over $16M In Swing-State TV Ads.

In an online article, CNBC (6/29, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports that President Trump’s campaign, “facing a growing disadvantage in polls, has started reserving spots for a television ad blitz set to run in several swing states during the final months of the race. The ad buy, worth more than $16 million, comes as some in the Trump campaign see warning signs in multiple key states, including Michigan, Georgia and North Carolina, according to” sources. CNBC says, “Ad tracking firms Advertising Analytics and Medium Buying announced that Trump’s campaign is reserving ad time starting in September in the key states of Arizona, Florida, Ohio, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and North Carolina. Trump won all six states in 2016.” CNBC adds, “The $16 million spend indicates that the Trump campaign is ramping up its defense in states he needs to win a second term.”

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Has Wooed GOP Base At Expense Of Appealing To Swing Voters.

The New York Times (6/29, Nagourney, 18.61M) reports that as commander-in-chief, President Trump “has pursued policies and practiced politics with a single-minded focus on bedrock Republicans, showing little interest in appealing to independent voters. That has made him one of the most powerful figures ever in his party, and rewarded him with strong conservative support in his re-election campaign. But Mr. Trump’s focus on his base at the expense of swing voters...is almost certainly not enough to win” reelection, “as even some Republicans concede.” The Times adds, “Whether Mr. Trump can still expand his support at this point, especially in the battleground states...is an enormous challenge that the president, to date, has shown little interest in meeting. Much of the nation has recoiled from Mr. Trump’s brash conduct and harsh language in office, and at the same time has moved to the left on health care, civil rights, same-sex marriage and other issues.”

Lotter: Trump Camp “Not Done With Rallies By Any Stretch Of The Imagination.” Trump 2020 Strategic Communications Director Marc Lotter was asked on Fox Business’ Varney & Co. (6/29, 64K) when the President’s next rally will be held. Lotter said, “We’re still putting those final decisions together. It takes weeks to get these things planned. We want to be very cognizant of what is going on in local communities, especially with the coronavirus. But trust me, we’re not done with rallies by any stretch of the imagination.”

Rasmussen Poll: 38% Of Americans Think Biden Has Dementia.

The Washington Free Beacon (6/29, Stiles, 78K) reports, “Nearly 4 in 10 Americans” think Joe Biden “is suffering from dementia, according to the results of a poll published Monday.” The survey, “conducted by Rasmussen, found that 38 percent of likely voters believe that Biden has dementia,” including “20 percent of Democrats and 30 percent of independent voters. Nearly two-thirds of Republicans said they thought Biden has” dementia. The article adds, “A significant majority of voters – 61 percent – said it was important that Biden publicly address the dwindling dexterity of his brain, with 41 percent saying it was ‘very important’ to hear from Biden on the issue.”

Seib: Biden Still Faces Series Of Crucial Tasks. In his Wall Street Journal (6/29, Seib, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column, Gerald Seib says that with polls showing Biden leading President Trump, Democratic analysts, in interviews, identified four tasks Biden needs to take care of in order to seal the deal and win the presidency. According to Seib, those tasks are: 1) Lay out a detailed and sweeping economic plan; 2) Create a message on China policy that can both attack Trump and deflect broadsides from the President; 3) Perform well in the presidential debates; 4) Choose a running mate that doesn’t turn off liberals, moderates or voters of color.

Trump Touts His Record Of Endorsing Winning Candidates In Congressional Special Elections.

In a Monday tweet, President Trump posted a virtual sign touting his record of endorsing winning candidates in special elections. The sign reads, “ENDORSEMENTS BY PRESIDENT TRUMP 6-0 Undefeated Record in Congressional Special Elections Since the 2018 Midterms.”

Despite Stumbles, Hickenlooper A Big Favorite In Tuesday’s Colorado Democratic Senate Primary.

Politico (6/29, Arkin, 4.29M) reports that the resume of former Colorado Gov. John Hickenlooper (D) “reads like a target list for the left: a moderate former elected official with a record of working with Republicans. But even a shaky performance down the stretch hasn’t knocked him out of pole position in Tuesday’s Colorado Senate primary.” Hickenlooper, who is seeking to take on Sen. Cory Gardner (R-CO) this fall, “stumbled in the past month after entering the Senate race as a big Democratic favorite, inviting criticism from some allies and from” his primary foe, “liberal” Democratic ex-state House Speaker Andrew Romanoff. Still, Hickenlooper “looks likely to turn back the challenge and advance to the general election.”

The Washington Times (6/29, Richardson, 492K) reports, “Once viewed as a can’t-miss candidate...Hickenlooper enters Tuesday’s Senate primary as damaged goods after a series of gaffes and missteps that have forced national Democrats to spend big to prop up his teetering campaign. Mr. Hickenlooper faced calls over the weekend to drop out of the primary race from activists after photos emerged of him wearing a feathered headdress and ‘squaw’ outfit at the One Shot Antelope Hunt, an annual sporting event in Lander, Wyoming.” But despite a series of “politically incorrect comments, outright flubs, and an ill-timed run-in with the state ethics commission,” Hickenlooper “is still the way to bet – a 9News/Colorado Politics poll released last week had him leading the primary race by 30 points.”

The Washington Examiner (6/29, Dibble, 448K) highlights the controversy over photographs of Hickenlooper emerging “showing him dressed as a Native American. Hickenlooper was first blasted in a Sunday open letter from the Native American leaders who were outraged by his attendance at the One Shot Antelope Hunt in 2018, an annual event that uses many Native American stereotypes. At the event, winners sported headdresses, while those who lost were called ‘squaw’ and forced to dress as female Native Americans as an ode to the derogatory term. Hickenlooper was photographed in both outfits mocking Native American culture.” Under the headline “#DropOutHick: Outcry From Indigenous Women, Allies Over Hickenlooper In Red Face,” The Hill (6/29, Srikanth, 2.98M) reports on the same controversy.

Huntsman In Tight GOP Utah Gubernatorial Primary Tuesday.

Politico (6/29, King, 4.29M) reports on the bid by ex-Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman Jr. (R) bid to succeed retiring Gov. Gary Herbert (R), saying that ahead of Tuesday's GOP primary election, "Huntsman, despite once owning 90 percent approval ratings as governor and a surname that's legendary in Utah, is" locked in a tight race with GOP Utah Lt. Gov. Spencer Cox in the four-way Republican contest. Highlighting that Huntsman served as Ambassador to China in the Obama Administration and Ambassador to Russia in the Trump Administration, Politico says his "willingness to serve in both Democratic and Republican administrations – as well as his reputation for moderation that includes his role as a co-chair of the bipartisan group No Labels – is testing Utah Republicans' tolerance for the kind of technocratic governance he represents. ... Recent polls show the primary as a near-tie between Huntsman and Cox."

NBC Examines States' Readiness To Expand Mail-In Voting.

On NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 7, 2:58, 6.78M), Lester Holt asked, "With coronavirus raising safety concerns at polling places, how prepared is this country to expand mail-in voting? We contacted all 50 states to find out." NBC's Cynthia McFadden reported that "NBC News has reached out to election officials in all 50 states to see what measures they have put in place and what kind of resources they require. Thirty-three states offer no-excuse-needed absentee ballots, while 17 others offer them with an excuse. At least 10 of those states, however, are expanding absentee voting due to the coronavirus. Michigan election officials tell us they need another $30 million for PPE, postage, mailings, and public education. Minnesota officials say they need 30,000 poll workers for what they expect to be a tidal wave of absentee ballot applications and actual ballots."

Judge Rejects Administration Bid To Hold Palestinian Man Who Completed Prison Term.

The New York Times (6/29, Rosenberg, 18.61M) reports US District Judge Elizabeth A. Wolford in Rochester, New York has "rejected a Trump administration effort to use the Patriot Act to indefinitely detain a stateless Palestinian man after he completed a 15-year prison sentence for sending support to Islamic militants in the 1990s." Wolford gave ICE until Thursday to free Adham A. Hassoun "from the Buffalo Federal Detention Facility in Batavia, N.Y. She ordered six months of supervised release at the home of his sister, with an ankle monitor and other restrictions, including not associating with known terrorists or extremists."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 41.2%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 41.2%, and his disapproval at 56%. Trump's approval is down 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (6/24-6/28) finds Trump's approval at 42%, and his disapproval at 55%.

IMF Official: G20 Debt Relief Program Needs Private Sector Buy-In, Year-End Extension.

Reuters (6/29, Shalat) reports IMF Chief Economist Gita Gopinath said Monday that participation from the private sector would be essential to the success of a G20 debt relief initiative. Gopinath also said the G20 offer of debt collection suspension for the poorest countries will likely need an extension through the end of 2020.

EU Considers Giving Regulators More Power To Help Troubled Banks.

Law360 (6/29, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall, "Europe's banking watchdog has said it is considering whether to give national regulators more power to help out troubled banks during the earlier stages of financial strife, after it found they are not making sufficient use of existing measures for rapid intervention." The European Banking Authority "said Friday it is launching a public consultation on proposals to strengthen so-called early intervention measures."

German Parliament Moves Toward Agreement Backing ECB On QE Moves.

Bloomberg (6/29, Jennen, 4.73M) reports, "A broad coalition of ruling and opposition parties in Germany has agreed on a draft motion to back the European Central Bank's bond buying program, according to officials familiar with the accord, likely ending a standoff that was triggered by the country's constitutional court last month." Representatives from a broad range of German political sectors, including Chancellor Angela Merkel's coalition partners, "agreed in principle on Monday to accept explanations the ECB provided on its so-called public sector purchase program, or PSPP, the officials said." The draft motion, seen by Bloomberg, says the German Bundestag "considers the ECB's statement to complete a proportionality check as comprehensive and the requirements of the ruling by the constitutional court thereby as fulfilled."

IMF Says South Africa Talks On $4.2B Loan Proceeding At "Measured Pace."

Bloomberg (6/29, Naidoo, 4.73M) reports the IMF's "discussions with South Africa over a $4.2 billion loan to support its fight against the coronavirus pandemic are taking place at a 'measured pace' because the country's deep and liquid capital markets ensure it still has access to financing," according to the IMF's Africa Department Director. Abebe Aemro Selassie said in a Monday virtual press conference, "The key is not so much urgency in us providing financing but rather because we are able to provide much cheaper financing than would otherwise be the case." Selassie said South Africa, under the rapid financing instrument, "would be able to access this financing at very low interest rates – almost negligible interest rates – relative to the higher cost of borrowing that South Africa faces.”

Second Senior Lebanese Finance Official Steps Down Amid Crisis.

The AP (6/29, Mroue) reports Lebanese Finance Ministry Director General Alain Bifani, a member of the team negotiating with the IMF on an emergency bailout, “resigned from his post on Monday amid a rapidly worsening economic and financial crisis.” Bifani “said he was protesting the way leaders were handling the crisis and that he refuses to be a partner in what is happening.” Bifani’s resignation “was the second in two weeks by a member of Lebanon’s negotiating team with the IMF – an indication of the gravity of the crisis and the difficulties facing those talks.” Bifani said Monday in a news conference, “I decided to resign because I refuse to be a partner or a witness to what is happening. Everyone should take a clear stance and my decision came after all efforts for the rescue have run out.”

Reuters (6/29, Perry) reports Bifani “said negotiations with the International Monetary Fund were not dead but a different approach was needed.”

Argentina Debt Talks “Only A Whisker Apart” On Valuation, Yet “Legal Wrangles” Remain.

Reuters (6/29, Strohecker, Garrison) reports Argentina’s debt talks “have gone cold with the country at loggerheads with its creditors over the legal terms of a $65 billion bond restructuring after coming tantalizingly close to a financial agreement.” Argentina’s government “extended a deadline for talks earlier this month to July 24, the biggest delay yet, to allow time to defuse tensions.” Reuters says the two sides are “only a whisker apart in terms of valuation of their proposals” and that now “the wrangling has shifted to the collective action clauses (CACs) which determine the requirements for any future changes made to the bond agreements.”

WHO Team To Travel To China To Study Pandemic’s Origin.

The Washington Post (6/29, Taylor, 14.2M) reports that the World Health Organization is “planning to send a team to China next week to try to understand the origins of the novel coronavirus.” On Monday, WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said, “We can fight the virus better when we know everything about the virus, including how it started. We will be sending a team next week to China to prepare for that.” According to the Post, “The statement came as Tedros and other WHO officials marked six months since the organization received the ‘first reports of a cluster of cases of pneumonia of unknown cause in China’ – what would eventually be categorized as SARS-CoV-2.”

China Locks Down 400,000 Due To “At Least A Dozen” New Cases. Bloomberg (6/29, 4.73M) reports that China “put 400,000 residents of a northern county under lockdown over the weekend after at least a dozen coronavirus cases associated with the Beijing outbreak were reported there.” Bloomberg adds, “In a sign that the resurgence of cases in the capital is proving difficult to stamp out even as officials say they’ve been largely contained, Hebei province’s Anxin county has been sealed off and each household can assign only one person to go out for necessities daily.” According to Bloomberg, “The containment measures in Anxin, located 140 km from Beijing, are more severe than in the capital itself where the cluster has grown to 311 people since it was first detected on June 12.”

New Flu Strain That Could Become Pandemic Identified In China. BBC News (6/29, Roberts, 1.02M) reports on its website, “A new strain of flu that has the potential to become a pandemic has been identified in China by scientists.” The virus “emerged recently and is carried by pigs, but can infect humans, they say.” While the virus is “not an immediate problem, they say, it has ‘all the hallmarks’ of being highly adapted to infect humans and needs close monitoring.”

EU Moving Toward Finalizing List Of Countries Whose Residents May Enter.

The AP (6/29, Cook) reports “the European Union is edging toward finalizing a list of countries whose citizens will be allowed to enter Europe again in coming days, with Americans almost certain to be excluded in the short term due to the number of U.S. coronavirus cases.”

According to Spain’s foreign minister, “the list could contain 15 countries that are not EU members and whose citizens would be allowed to visit from July 1.” EU diplomats expect “that the list would be made public on Tuesday.”

Pearl’s Killer Could Be Released This Week.

The New York Post (6/29, Fonrouge, 4.57M) reports that Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh, the British-born man “sentenced to death for kidnapping and beheading Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl in Pakistan could walk free this week, reports said Monday.” Saeed Sheikh “was found guilty in 2002 of being the mastermind behind Daniel Pearl’s brutal murder but his death sentence was overturned in April after Pakistani prosecutors failed to prove he was the killer. The Guardian reported at the time.” A court commuted his sentence to seven years for kidnapping and Saeed Sheikh was set to be released. Appeals were filed and Saeed Sheikh was instead held on a 90-day detention order, expiring Thursday.

Separatists Attack Karachi Stock Exchange.

The Washington Post (6/29, Khan, 14.2M) reports that in Karachi, Pakistan on Monday, “four gunmen armed with assault rifles and grenades stormed the stock exchange...but security officials said the attack was foiled within minutes.” According to the Post, “Police said one police officer and two private security guards who stopped the gunmen died. All four attackers were killed before they could enter the country’s oldest and largest stock exchange." The Post says the Baloch Liberation Army "claimed responsibility for the attack in a tweet from an account that was later suspended by Twitter." The Post reports that the same group "has carried out a number of similar attacks in recent years aimed at destabilizing Pakistan's economy and undermining Chinese influence."

Macron Blasts Russia For Sending Mercenaries To Libya.

Reuters (6/29) reports that on Monday, French President Emmanuel Macron "condemned the role of Russian mercenaries in Libya, days after it was revealed they had, along with others, entered the Sharara oilfield last week."

Iran Asks Interpol To Assist In Arresting Trump Over Soleimani Killing.

Iran has issued an arrest warrant for President Trump, along with 35 others, over the assassination of Qassem Soleimani in Iraq on January 3. Reuters (6/29, Dehghanpisheh) says Iran "has asked Interpol for help." Tehran prosecutor Ali Alqasimehr "said the warrants had been issued on charges of murder and terrorist action," and "said Iran had asked Interpol to issue a 'red notice' seeking the arrest of Trump and the other individuals the Islamic Republic accuses of taking part in the killing of Soleimani." According to Reuters, Alqasimehr "said the group included other U.S. military and civilian officials but did not provide further details."

The Washington Times (6/29, Wolfgang, 492K) reports, "There was virtually no chance that the arrest warrant for Mr. Trump and 35 other foreign officials to Interpol would ever be enforced outside Iran's borders, and Interpol officials said they would not act on Iran's request." However, the move "shows that Iran is once again stoking tensions with the U.S. and feeling the heat from a U.S. pressure campaign on its military and economy." According to the Times, "both sides are plotting their moves as time winds down before the U.S. election in November."

After Iranian Missile Facility Explodes, Conspiracy Theories Take Flight In Tehran.

The New York Times (6/29, Sanger, Bergman, Fassihi, 18.61M) reports that following "a major explosion" at an Iranian missile production facility last week, it remains "unclear whether the cause was an accident, sabotage or something else." US and Israeli intelligence officials "insist they had nothing to do with it." However, "in Iran, where curating conspiracy theories is a national pastime, the sight of a huge explosion in eastern Tehran quickly merged on social media with news of a power outage in Shiraz, nearly 600 miles to the south," even though "there is no evidence the incidents were related."

Mortar Strikes Kill At Least 20 Civilians In Afghanistan.

The New York Times (6/29, Shah, Abed, 18.61M) reports, "At least 20 civilians were killed and dozens of others wounded when mortar rounds struck a crowded livestock market in southern Afghanistan on Monday, with the government and the Taliban pointing blame at each other." According to the Times, "several local elders said that the mortars had been fired by the Second Brigade of the Afghan Army," but "the Afghan government denied that its forces were behind the attack," and a statement from President Ashraf Ghani's office, "condemning the strike, called it a 'terrorist attack.'" A Taliban spokesman "blamed the Afghan forces for Monday's attack and said the Afghan government 'threw dust in people's eyes' by describing the mortar-shelling as a car-bomb so they could attribute the violence to the Taliban."

NYTimes Profiles Young Afghan Activist Killed In Explosion Targeting Civilians.

The New York Times (6/29, Mashal, 18.61M) profiles Fatima "Natasha" Khalil, 24, a human rights worker, who was killed on Saturday "in another of the all-too-ubiquitous explosions targeting civilians in Kabul." Khalil's death came "at a deeply uncertain time for the country, when an endless war often still claims more than 50 lives on many days." According to the Times, "a generation of young Afghans has grown up with liberties and opportunities that now feel threatened by the prospect of the insurgents returning to government." The Times adds that as "the bloodletting has intensified," many of those at risk "represent elements of the new life that has taken root since 2001: journalists and moderate religious scholars, cultural figures and activists – and women in public roles."

SCOTUS Upholds Rule Requiring Overseas Recipients Of AIDS Funding To Pledge To Oppose Prostitution.

USA Today (6/29, Wolf, 10.31M) reports, "The Supreme Court ruled Monday that the fight against HIV/AIDS overseas may require foreign groups receiving federal funds to pledge to oppose prostitution and sex trafficking." Reuters (6/29, Hurley) reports challengers to the rule argued it was a violation of the First Amendment. They "said the restrictions, part of a law enacted under Republican former President George W. Bush, interferes with the ability to provide advice and counseling to sex workers about the risks of HIV infection."

The AP (6/29) reports the court ruled 5-3 with Justice Brett Kavanaugh writing for the court's conservatives that "plaintiffs' foreign affiliates are foreign organizations, and foreign organizations operating abroad possess no rights under the U. S. Constitution." Justice Elena Kagan was recused from the case, "presumably because she worked on an earlier version of it when she served in the Justice Department before joining the court."

Lawyers Urge Trump To Rescind Sanctions Against ICC Members.

The Washington Post (6/29, Nakashima, Morello, 14.2M) reports, "A group of 175 legal scholars and attorneys specializing in international law have urged President Trump to rescind his authorization of sanctions and visa denials for International Criminal Court staff members investigating war crimes in Afghanistan, including those allegedly committed by U.S. forces." In a statement, the lawyers "said that sanctioning prosecutors and investigators of alleged war crimes, rather than perpetrators, is 'wrong in principle, contrary to American values, and prejudicial to U.S. national security.'" Some of the signatories have "said they fear the order is so sweeping it could lead to sanctions against U.S. lawyers who have assisted the ICC and Americans who work on its staff," and others have raised concerns "the U.S. refusal to cooperate with the ICC would diminish American credibility."

US Curbs High-Tech Exports To Hong Kong In Response To China's National Security Law.

The New York Times (6/29, Swanson, 18.61M) reports the Administration "placed new restrictions on U.S. exports of defense equipment and certain high-technology products to Hong Kong on Monday, in response to a new Chinese law aimed at tightening Beijing's control over the territory." According to the Post, "in separate statements on Monday, the State Department said that it would end exports of U.S. military equipment to Hong Kong, while the Commerce Department said that Hong Kong would now be subject to the same types of controls on certain technology exports that apply to China." The impact of "the new restrictions announced Monday appears to be relatively limited in scope, given the small volume of trade the United States does with Hong Kong," but it "could have larger implications for some multinational companies, including some semiconductor firms, who now will be barred from sending products or sharing certain high-tech information with the territory."

AP Report: Muslim Women Imprisoned in China For Having Multiple Children. According to the AP (6/29, Press), China is "taking draconian measures to slash birth rates among Uighurs and other minorities as part of a sweeping campaign to curb its Muslim population, even as it encourages some of the country's Han majority to have more children." The AP says "the practice is far more widespread and systematic than previously known," and is "leading to what some experts are calling a form of 'demographic genocide.'" The AP goes on to report that Chinese authorities "regularly subject...minority women to pregnancy checks, and force...intrauterine devices, sterilization and even abortion on hundreds of thousands." The AP adds, "Having too many children is a major reason people are sent to detention camps...with the parents of three or more ripped away from their families unless they can pay huge fines."

Rick Scott: China Has Ambitions For "World Domination." In a "wide-ranging" interview with Ben Weingarten of the The Federalist (6/29, Weingarten, 126K), Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) discussed "the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) ambitions, partisanship on China and its effects on policy, the competition between our two nations for technological dominance, Wall Street's cozy relationship with the CCP, and a host of other topics." Scott said, "The Communist Party of China is in for world domination...and so it'll be a pretty dark world. ... I don't believe it'll happen...if we do our job."

India Bans Dozens Of Chinese Apps Following Border Clash.

The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Roy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports India on Monday banned dozens of Chinese mobile applications, including the popular platform TikTok, amid growing calls within the country to retaliate following a deadly border clash.

The Washington Post (6/29, Slater, 14.2M) reports "the prohibited mobile applications represent a threat to national security and the privacy of Indian citizens, the country's Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology said in a statement." The apps were "stealing and surreptitiously transmitting users' data" to servers outside the country, an activity that "ultimately impinges on the sovereignty and security of India," the statement said.

The New York Times (6/29, Abi-Habib, 18.61M) reports, "While India has vowed to retaliate, it lags far behind China in military and economic power, leaving it with few options." However, "Chinese telecommunication and social networking companies have long eyed India's giant market and its enormous potential."

EU Extends Sanctions On Russia Over Ukraine.

The AP (6/29) reports that on Monday, the European Union "prolonged economic sanctions against Russia for six months for failing to live up to its commitments to the peace agreement in Ukraine." According to the AP, "The measures target Russia's financial, energy and defense sectors, as well as goods that can be used for both civilian and military purposes." The AP says the EU imposed "a raft of sanctions...on Russia in 2014 after it annexed Ukraine's Crimean Peninsula."

Johnson: UK Take "Rooseveltian Approach" To Stimulus Spending.

The AP (6/29, Lawless) reports that on Monday, British Prime Minister Boris Johnson "acknowledged...that the coronavirus pandemic has been a 'disaster' for Britain, as he announced a spending splurge designed to get the country – and his faltering Conservative government – back on track." According to the AP, Johnson "promised a 'Rooseveltian approach,' invoking the New Deal policies of President Franklin D. Roosevelt that helped wrench the United States out of the Great Depression."

Johnson: Britons Are "Significantly Fatter" Than Other Europeans. Politico (6/29, Casalicchio, Gehrke, 4.29M) reports that Johnson also indicated that "with Britain 'significantly fatter' than other nations, the government will look at interventions to stem obesity." According to Politico, Johnson "is said to have attributed his tough battle with the disease to his weight, which topped" 242 pounds "when he went into hospital," and "has woken up to the idea that the government must help Brits lose weight." Johnson is quoted as saying, "When you compare us to other countries, we are significantly fatter – apart from the Maltese, for some reason."

Japan Expresses Opposition To Trump's Push To Include South Korea In G-7 Summit.

The Washington Times (6/29, Taylor, 492K) reports, "President Trump's push to include South Korea in an upcoming Group of Seven summit is triggering backlash from Japan and threatening to reignite tensions that soared between Tokyo and Seoul last year." A "high level" Japanese official is said to have "lamented that South Korea is not in lockstep with the G-7 on Chinese and North Korean issues." In response to the media report, South Korea's Yonhap News Agency "cited an anonymous official from President Moon Jae-in's office in Seoul as saying Tokyo's protest reflected typical 'shameless' behavior by Japan toward South Korea."

Israeli Official Says Annexation May Get Pushed Back.

The Washington Times (6/29, Taylor, 492K) reports Israeli Defense Minister Benny Gantz on Monday suggested "that Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's July 1 target date for a major annexation of West Bank territory is going to be delayed because of ongoing issues tied to the coronavirus pandemic." According to the Times, "while Mr. Netanyahu still clung to his vow to move ahead with the controversial annexation, Israeli media cited sources close to Mr. Gantz as saying the defense minister, who is also serving as alternative prime minister, told U.S. officials in a private meeting Monday to expect a delay." The developments were "the first major indication that the two men may now be feuding deeply behind the scenes over the annexation plan, which has triggered an international backlash, as well as sharp pushback from Arab powers across the Middle East."

In an article titled "Jericho Now Fears Israeli Annexation," the Washington Post (6/29, Eglash, 14.2M) reports, "In Jericho, the most populous town in the mainly agricultural Jordan Valley, there is concern among the 22,000 residents that expanded areas of Israeli control will make daily life unbearable." A map included in President Trump's Middle East plan "suggests that Israel will take control of the entire valley that runs along the border with Jordan southward to the Dead Sea." In such a scenario, "Israeli territory would encircle areas designated for the Palestinians and leave places like Jericho isolated."

Mexican President To Fly Commercial When He Visits US Next Week.

The Washington Post (6/29, Sieff, 14.2M) reports that next week, Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador will be "the rare foreign head of state to fly commercial to meet the U.S. president." The populist leader is standing by "his pledge to travel only on commercial airlines, telling supporters he's saving the government millions of dollars." The Post says that "in his decision to lead a delegation on an indirect commercial flight to Washington," many in Mexico "see yet another sign of an irresponsible response to the pandemic."

Cuba Urges Citizens To Grow More Of Their Own Food As It Faces Looming Crisis.

Reuters (6/29, Marsh) reports that as Cuba faces a "looming food crisis," the government is urging "citizens to produce more of their own food, including in big cities, in whatever spaces they can find, from backyards to balconies." Food imports have "nosedived in recent years as aid from ally Venezuela shrank following its economic implosion" and President Trump "tightened the half century-old U.S. trade embargo." The coronavirus pandemic has "only exacerbated the situation."

Donna Corley Named Head Of Freddie Mac Single-Family.

Mostly behind a paywall, the Mecklenburg (NC) Times (6/29, Report, 2K) reports that Freddie Mac "has announced that Donna Corley has been named executive vice president and head of the company's Single-Family business." According to the Times, "Corley brings to the position nearly 25 years of experience in the financial services industry as well as deep expertise in risk management, capital markets and pricing."

FHFA Extends GSE Multifamily Forbearance Period For Three More Months.

Forbes (6/29, Williams, 9.71M) reports Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae "announced that multifamily property owners currently in forbearance can extend the payment suspension period for three more months for a total of half a year. As long as forbearance lasts, owners cannot evict renters." The FHFA "announced...measures intended to assist renters and landlords as the coronavirus pandemic wears on but federal protections begin to expire." While the CARES Act "allowed only for three months of forbearance for multifamily buildings," with FHFA's new announcement, multifamily property owners with loans in forbearance "can extend the payment suspension period for three more months for a total of half a year." According to Forbes, "As a result of FHFA's action, renters in apartment complexes with Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac mortgages would be shielded from evictions as long as forbearance lasts." The ABA Banking Journal (6/29) reports that this is because "while properties are in forbearance, landlords must suspend all evictions for tenants unable to pay rent."

National Mortgage Professional (6/29) reports FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "During the pandemic, FHFA has been focused on protecting renters and borrowers while ensuring the mortgage market functions as efficiently as possible. The multifamily mortgage forbearance extension announced today will help renters stay in their homes and help property owners retain their properties."

HousingWire (6/29, 23K) reports, "According to Freddie Mac, any extension of the forbearance period will also extend the prohibition on evicting tenants solely for nonpayment of rent, which was part of its original forbearance program established in response to Hurricane Harvey in 2017."

Realtor (6/29, 25.12M) reports that the move "could potentially help about 4.2 million renters living in more than 27,000 properties that would qualify for this temporary relief, according to Freddie Mac." The Real Deal \(NY\) (6/29, 124K) reports Freddie Mac Multifamily EVP Debby Jenkins said, "Many borrowers are still facing hardship even though they may soon exhaust the 90-day forbearance granted in the initial iteration of our Covid-19 relief program. These additional relief options will provide more flexibility to borrowers and extend tenant protections for renters who also continue to struggle with the economic effects of the pandemic."

MBA: GSE Forbearance Rate Falls As Ginnie's Stays Flat.

HousingWire (6/29, 23K) reports, "The forbearance share of mortgages backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac dropped for the third straight week, while Ginnie Mae loans were unchanged, the Mortgage Bankers Association said in a report on Monday." The GSEs' forbearance rate fell from 6.31% to 6.26% in the week that ended on June 21, while the forbearance rate of FHA and VA loans in Ginnie Mae securities held flat at 11.83%. MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "The overall share of loans in forbearance declined for the second week in a row, led by the third straight drop in GSE loans. Many borrowers initially received a three-month forbearance term, and as of June 21, 17% of loans in forbearance have now been extended, with the largest share of those being Ginnie Mae loans."

Despite the MBA's encouraging data, DS News (6/29, Albanese) reports that "Black Knight's Director of Market Research told CNBC in an interview that rising forbearances may continue." Andy Walden "said a large number of forbearances were expected to expire at the end of June but borrowers could be deciding to stay in plans longer than expected." He also "said Black Knight will be watching [unemployment data] to see if it impacts the share of mortgages in forbearance." Black Knight's latest McDash Flash Forbearance Tracker indicated that 8.8% of all mortgages are in forbearance, up from 8.7% the prior week.

CFPB Research Shows Black Americans Still Struggle To Get Mortgages.

National Mortgage Professional (6/29) reports that "new research" from the CFPB "shows Blacks are more likely to be denied mortgages compared with white borrowers," although the numbers also "show an increase in the percentage of new home loans going to Black buyers." According to NMP, the "major reason for mortgage denial among the Black community is a reliance on debt-to-income ratios." The Urban Institute has said that DTI ratios are "much less significant predictors of loan performance than FICO scores and that many high-DTI loans have strong FICO scores." University of Buffalo professor Henry Louis Taylor Jr. told Marketplace that Black Americans are "not going to do well on that because of the low incomes that they have traditionally and because of the debts that they acquire just trying to make ends meet."

PACE Improvement Loans Become Harder To Pay During Coronavirus Pandemic.

The Los Angeles Times (6/29, Khouri, 4.64M) reports that "according to industry trade group PACENation, PACE-funded projects in California stood to save, over the lifetime of the improvements, 19.3 million gallons of water." But "the correct amount is 19.3 billion gallons of water." For many "years, the industry has been dogged by allegations that some home improvement contractors exploit a loan approval process with weak safeguards to mislead people into financing they can't afford, by telling them either that work would be free or that it would be less than it ultimately cost." Some "consumer attorneys say they were seeing PACE-driven foreclosures even before the current crisis and now fear a surge as the recession cuts off economic lifelines for people already living on the edge."

Fannie Mae Survey Highlights Lenders' Top Pandemic-Related Challenges.

According to M Report (6/29, Albanese), Fannie Mae "conducted of more than 200 senior mortgage executives in May," finding that "clarity on loan eligibility, supply chain disruption, and staff health" have been lenders' "primary challenges since the pandemic began impacting the U.S." Of those surveyed, 36% of loan originators cited "gaining clarity from secondary-market investors on loan eligibility guidelines" as their first or second top challenge tied to the pandemic. One executive said, "Many investors were making significant changes to guidelines. The changes were different from investor to investor and the timing of effective dates was also different. Very difficult to manage." HousingWire (6/29, 23K) provides similar coverage.

NAR: Pending Home Sales Surged 44% In May, Far Exceeding Expectations.

Reuters (6/29, Mutikani) reports that in May, "contracts to buy US previously owned homes rebounded by the most on record...suggesting the housing market was starting to turn around." The National Association of Realtors "said its Pending Home Sales Index, based on contracts signed last month, surged 44.3%, the largest gain since the series started in 2001. Still, contracts remain 10.6% below their level in February before businesses were shuttered in a bid to slow the spread of coronavirus." Reuters adds "economists...had forecast pending home contracts, which become sales after a month or two, rebounding 18.9% in May." According to CNBC (6/29, Olick, 3.62M), "Sales had fallen 22% for the month in April, as the economy shut down to slow the spread of the coronavirus." The AP (6/29, Ott) says "contract signings...have fallen 5.1% over the past year, but Monday's better-than-expected pending home sales data offers some optimism for the housing market, which was severely hampered by the coronavirus pandemic."

HousingWire (6/29, 23K) reports that the rebound came as "the average U.S. rate for a 30-year fixed mortgage fell to a record low of 3.15% at the end of May, as measured by Freddie Mac. Since then, rates in the last two weeks have set a new all-time low of 3.13%." NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun said, "This has been a spectacular recovery for contract signings, and goes to show the resiliency of American consumers. This bounce-back also speaks to how the housing sector could lead the way for a broader economic recovery." According to Yun, "The outlook has significantly improved, as new home sales are expected to be higher this year than last, and annual existing-home sales are now projected to be down by less than 10% – even after missing the spring buying season due to the pandemic lockdown."

Redfin: Affordable Segment Of Housing Market Continues Seeing Price Growth.

HousingWire (6/29, 23K) reports that housing demand is rising and boosting prices as inventory remains low, with the lower end of the segment seeing steep appreciation while the prices of higher-end homes are declining. According to HousingWire, "Between the date in March that the World Health Organization declared a pandemic and the week ending May 31, Redfin found that prices of houses ranked in the 6th to 35th percentile for value rose 5.5% year over year, while prices of homes in one of the top tiers – those from 66th-95th percentile – rose just 2%." Redfin Lead Economist Taylor Marr said, "Many Americans – especially Millennials – were already toying with the idea of buying their first house before the pandemic. Now they're actually taking the plunge because mortgage rates are so low and it's less attractive to live in a small apartment right next to the office." Redfin's data mirrors the YoY price gain of 5.5% reported by the FHFA in its House Price Index for the month of April.

Analysis: Appraisal Waivers Could Make Refinancing Cheaper.

Realtor (6/25, 25.12M) reports that appraisal waivers could help borrowers save money when they refinance. According to Realtor, "The guidelines for appraisal waivers are set by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." The GSEs offer "special underwriting software" that "evaluates properties by using data from millions of home sales, including appraisal reports," analyzes a loan, then "produces a simple yes or no recommendation for an appraisal waiver." From there, Realtor says, "your lender can choose to offer you the appraisal waiver or require an in-person appraisal."

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (6/29, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.632 percent.

Dollar Holds Steady.

Reuters (6/30, Sano) reports the dollar index on Tuesday "was little changed at 97.444." The dollar "climbed 0.1% to 107.70 yen, having touched a three-week high of 107.885 in the previous session, though it was capped by its 100-day moving average around that level." The euro "stood at $1.1244, having gained a tad against the U.S. currency on Monday."

Gold Remains Near Eight-Year High.

Reuters (IND) (6/30, Patel) reports, "Gold held close to a near eight-year peak on Tuesday, en route to its best quarter in more than four years, as worries over rising cases of the novel coronavirus and its economic fallout boosted safe-haven demand." Spot gold "was steady at $1,772.14 per ounce by 0703 GMT, just $6.92 shy of a near eight-year high of $1,779.06 hit last week. U.S. gold futures rose 0.3% to $1,787.30."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (6/30, Paul, Samanta) reports, "Oil prices slipped on Tuesday as traders took profits after sharp gains in the previous session and Libya's state oil company flagged progress on talks to resume exports, potentially boosting supply." Brent crude futures for September "fell 24 cents, or 0.6%, to $41.61 a barrel by 0610 GMT," while the August contract, which expires on Tuesday, "fell 24 cents to $41.47." West Texas Intermediate crude "was down 33 cents, or 0.8% at $39.37 a barrel."

FBI Warns Of Potential Increase In School Cyber Attacks.

KTVK-TV Phoenix (6/29, Hechanova, 302K) reports from Tempe, Arizona, "As school districts come up with plans to safely return to the classroom this fall, the FBI warns districts to be prepared in case of a ransomware attack." KTVK-TV adds, "According to an FBI alert sent to the University of Advancing Technology in Tempe, hackers targeting K-12 schools and infecting computer systems with ransomware is likely to increase during the COVID-19 pandemic." The FBI "advises school districts never give into a ransomware hackers demands, because it's not guaranteed you'll get your files back and the hackers might hit the district again in the future and ask for even more money."

Nigerian Instagram Star Busted In $431 Million Cyber Scam.

The New York Post (6/29, Salo, 4.57M) reports, "A Nigerian Instagram star who boasted online about his lavish lifestyle of private jets, designer clothes and luxury cars has been busted in a $431 million cyber scam, according to a report." Raymond Abbas, "known as Hushpuppi to his 2.4 million followers, was nabbed earlier this month in Dubai for an alleged scheme that involved ripping off credit card information overseas. The Times of UK reported. 'The suspects targeted victims overseas by creating fake websites for well-known companies and banks in a bid to steal victims' credit card information and then launder the stolen money,' Dubai Police Brigadier Jamal al-Jalaf said." The Post adds, "The FBI and Interpol raided his Dubai apartment as he slept and seized more than £30 million, or $37 million, in cash, the report said."

CISA Chief Discusses Efforts To Protect Health Sector During COVID-19 Crisis.

MeriTalk (6/29) is "chronicling the untold stories – and lessons – of Federal IT operations during three months of pandemic." In this chapter, MeriTalk explores "cybersecurity operations at the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA)." Bryan Ware, Assistant Director for Cybersecurity at CISA, "reveals the agency's massive efforts to protect the pharmaceutical, hospital, and public health agency sectors as the pandemic gathered force and slammed into the US." The agency has "identified and targeted 10,000 critical vulnerabilities, taken action to block 7,000 malware domains, and worked with the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to take down another 10,000 fraudulent domains." CISA has notified "more than 100 organizations that they are active threat targets, and offered help."

Hackers Extorted $1.14M From University of California San Francisco.

BBC News Online (UK) (6/29, 1.02M) reports a leading medical-research institution "working on a cure for Covid-19 has admitted it paid hackers a $1.14m (£910,000) ransom after a covert negotiation witnessed by BBC News." The Netwalker criminal gang "attacked University of California San Francisco (UCSF) on 1 June." Cyber-security experts "say these sorts of negotiations are now happening all over the world – sometimes for even larger sums – against the advice of law-enforcement agencies, including the FBI, Europol and the UK's National Cyber Security Centre." Netwalker alone has been "linked to at least two other ransomware attacks on universities in the past two months."

San Francisco News (6/29) reports UCSF is now "working with the FBI to investigate, and is also working to restore all affected systems." Student records, medical records, and research "were not released and still remain secure." According to a statement on UCSF's website, "Our investigation is ongoing, but, at this time, we believe that the malware encrypted our servers opportunistically, with no particular area being targeted. The attackers obtained some data as proof of their action, to use in their demand for a ransom payment. We are continuing our investigation, but we do not currently believe patient medical records were exposed. As additional facts become known, we will provide further updates."

Op-Ed: Effective Communication Steps State And City Governments Can Take To Better Manage Cybercrimes.

In a commentary in Forbes (6/29, 9.71M), David Fouse, a Partner and Lead Strategist with Pinkston, a Washington, DC-based strategic communications firm, writes, "While both the public and private sectors have been focused on containing the virus, cybercriminals have been using it as an opportunity to exploit long-standing weaknesses in cybersecurity infrastructure. Not long after the outbreak first took hold, dozens of hospitals, medical labs and health care organizations in the US and abroad were the victims of ransomware attacks. ... And today, with more Americans working from home, cybersecurity risks are at an all-time high." He contends, "Action during a crisis is difficult because the 'noise' level increases dramatically, so having a plan in place, not just for technical solutions but communication, is critical. Without it, recovery efforts and public confidence are hindered." Fouse offers "some key communication takeaways for state and municipal governments and agencies to consider."

Cyberspace Solarium Committee-Related Amendments On Deck In NDAA Debate.

Politico (6/29, Starks, 4.29M) reports in the Morning Cybersecurity column that Cyberspace Solarium Commission Co-chair Angus King (I-ME) this week "will push the Senate to adopt some of the panel's biggest recommendations." The 18 amendments "he filed last week to the fiscal 2021 defense authorization bill (S. 4049) include modifications that would create a Bureau of Cyber Statistics; designate a set term for the director of CISA; require cybersecurity risk reports from publicly traded companies; authorize the executive branch to declare a state of cyber distress; and propose a 'sense of the Senate' that it should establish a 'Select Committee of the Senate on Cyber.'" The Senate defense policy bill "already includes some of what the Solarium Commission sought, although it didn't embrace the most prominent commission recommendation to create a Senate-confirmed national cyber director.”

Australia To Invest Nearly $1B In Cybersecurity.

Reuters (6/29) reports Prime Minister Scott Morrison “said on Tuesday Australia will invest A$1.35 billion ($926.10 million) in cyber security, including recruiting more specialists, amid an increasing wave of hacking attempts against the country.” Morrison “said malicious cyber activity against Australia was increasing in frequency, scale and sophistication.” He said, “The federal government’s top priority is protecting our nation’s economy, national security and sovereignty. Malicious cyber activity undermines that.” The package will include “A$470 million to hire an extra 500 cyber security experts in the Australian Signals Directorate, which intercepts electronic communications from foreign countries.” Defence Minister Linda Reynolds “said that the funding, which will be spread over the next decade, is part of a A$15 billion investment in cyber warfare capabilities that will form part of the country’s 2020 defence plan.”

The Senate Seeks Answers About DISA’s Network Security System.

C4ISR & Networks (6/29, Eversden) reports a Senate committee’s version of the annual defense policy bill “would ban DOD from spending money to deploy a controversial cybersecurity program on its secret network.” The Senate Armed Services Committee’s version of the NDAA for fiscal year 2021 “would preclude the department from spending fiscal 2021 funds on the Joint Regional Security Stacks (JRSS) program for use on its Secret Internet Protocol Router Network.” JRSS, run by the Defense Information Systems Agency, “provides cybersecurity services for many DOD components through intrusion detection and prevention, enterprise management, and virtual routing.” The Senate bill authorizes “cuts of about $11.6 million from the JRSS, including $11.1 million in JRSS procurement funds for SIPRNet and about $500,000 in research, development, testing and evaluation.”

New Mexico State University Investigates Cyberattack On University Foundation.

The AP (6/29) reports New Mexico State University and the school’s foundation “are investigating a cyberattack on the foundation’s computers.” University officials “said Monday that unusual network activity was first noticed last week”. There’s no evidence of “any data theft, but officials said the investigation is ongoing.” Derek Dictson, president of the NMSU Foundation and NMSU’s vice president for university advancement, “said the foundation moved quickly to contain any possible data loss by removing all affected devices from the network as a precaution.”

US Interest In OpenRAN Growing As A Potential Alternative To Huawei’s Networking Equipment.

An 1800 word report in The Washington Post (6/29, Whalen, 14.2M) details how Idaho-based Inland Cellular has used OpenRAN technology to cut the cost of operating its rural wireless network. The Post says that “interest in this new technology is growing beyond this rugged corner of Idaho – in part because some U.S. officials and lawmakers see it as a way to challenge Huawei, the Chinese company that has dominated global sales of equipment for wireless networks for years.” Proponents of OpenRAN “say the ability to pick and choose hardware from different suppliers makes it cheaper than the complete equipment-and-software packages currently sold by Huawei and its two major rivals, Ericsson and Nokia.”

Former NSA Chief Michael Rogers Talks About Cybersecurity.

The Washington Exec (6/29, Degges) reports that, “as part of the Upfront Summit, former NSA director and head of the Cyber Command, Michael Rogers, recently shared his thoughts on the state of cyberwarfare, the nation’s approach to cybersecurity and the relationship between people and technology.” When asked about the current state of nation activity in cyberspace, Rogers “spoke of the various ways nations use digital attacks as an offensive tool.” He “said he has never seen any nation besides North Korea use cyberattacks to go after money.” Iran uses cyberattacks “as a low-risk way to change behavior of their adversaries.” Russia, on the other hand, “uses cyberattacks as a means to control the dynamic between cyber and information, while China uses this method for technological developments toward an economic advantage.” He “said he believes the US needs to focus on offensive cyber development rather than respond to adversaries.”

Federal Reserve

Fed Announces Opening Of Primary Corporate Credit Facility.

Bloomberg (6/29, Torres, 4.73M) reports the Fed “announced that the Primary Market Corporate Credit Facility opened for business Monday, the last of its nine pandemic emergency lending programs to become operational.” According to details released by the Fed, purchases include bonds issued by companies such as AT&T, UnitedHealth Group, and Walmart. Reuters (6/29, Marte) reports that in a statement, the Fed said, “By standing ready to provide credit to qualifying issuers of corporate bonds in periods of stress, the PMCCF serves as a funding backstop, supporting market liquidity and the availability of credit for large employers.”

The Washington Post (6/29, Siegel, 14.2M) reports the Fed’s disclosure that it “could purchase the debt of massive companies such as Apple and Microsoft,” triggered a “fresh debate about the central bank’s norm-shattering response to the economic crisis and whether its efforts are going to the neediest slices of the economy.” CNBC (6/29, Cox, 3.62M) reports Kathy Jones, Director of Fixed Income at Charles

Schwab, said, "It does sort of make you wonder if it makes sense for them to be buying bonds of Apple. Spreads are so tight and stocks are doing so well. You wouldn't think they would need support from the Fed." Jones added, "The reasoning I guess makes sense. But when you look at the outcome, you scratch your head and wonder whether this is where we need the money to go."

Fed Purchases Nearly $40 Million in Bonds From Energy And Utility Companies. Politico (6/29, Tamborrino, 4.29M) reports the Federal Reserve released data Sunday showing that as of June 18 the bank has purchased $17.5 million in bonds from energy companies and $19.5 million in bonds from utilities as part of an effort to help the companies cope with the economic impact of the coronavirus pandemic. The Fed's data shows that it "has bought bonds on the secondary market issued by Exxon Mobil, Duke Energy, Williams Co., Phillips 66, Sabine Pass Liquefaction, FirstEnergy Corp., DTE Electric, Florida Power & Light and Marathon Petroleum." The Fed is planning to purchase bonds from several other companies, including: Pioneer Natural Resources, Chevron, Sempra Energy, Cimarex Energy, Apache Corp., Concho Resources, ConocoPhillips, Parsley Energy, Hess Corp., and Marathon Oil Corp.

Food, Ag Companies Included In Fed's $7B Bond Program. Politico (6/29, McCrimmon, 4.29M) reports that on Sunday, dozens of food and farm businesses were included in the New York Federal Reserve's $7 billion "shopping list for individual corporate bonds and exchange traded funds, reports Pro Financial Services' Victoria Guida." The list included PepsiCo, Quaker Oats, Coca-Cola, AB InBev, Campbell Soup, Kellogg, JM Smucker, Conagra, Costco, Starbucks, Unilever, and others. The program "is part of the central bank's unprecedented efforts to pump money into the economy and keep cash moving through financial markets."

Walmart, Other Major US Companies Have Debt Purchased By Federal Reserve. CNN (6/29, Horowitz, 21.56M) reports Walmart is one of the many large US companies that have had its debt purchased by the Federal Reserve in mid-June as "part of the central bank's unprecedented intervention in credit markets." The Federal Reserve "disclosed hundreds of millions of dollars in purchases of individual corporate bonds on Sunday, while identifying nearly 800 eligible issuers whose bonds it could buy down the line" in an effort to ease credit markets as the economy continues to feel the effects of the coronavirus pandemic.

Strategists Surprised By The Fed's Purchases Of Auto Makers' Bonds. Barron's (6/29, Scaggs, 1.07M) reports many strategists were surprised to see so many large global auto makers appear in the Fed's latest balance-sheet release. Barron's says, "That suggests that the central bank's geographical requirements may not be as strict as some on Wall Street thought." It appears that the Fed classifies auto makers in the "consumer cyclical" sector, which is the "second-largest in the central bank's index, making up 16% of the total size."

Fed's Main Street Program Off To Slow Start, "Pretty Convoluted" For Business Owners.

The AP (6/29, Rugaber) reports a small business owner's "pretty convoluted" experience with the Fed's Main Street Loan Program "underscores banks' surprising lack of interest in the...program, as well as the challenges potential borrowers are having accessing the program." Fed officials "say more than 200 banks have signed up to participate since the program began two weeks ago, but that's a small slice of the nation's roughly 5,000 lenders. None have made any loans yet."

Reuters (6/29, Saphir) reports Fed Chair Jerome Powell "said in remarks prepared for a Congressional hearing on Tuesday that the central bank's Main Street lending facility may prove valuable 'in the months ahead' for firms hit by a dramatic drop in economic activity during the pandemic."

Powell Says Fed Will Keep Rates Low As Economy Faces Heightened Uncertainty.

The AP (6/29, Crutsinger) reports Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell "says the outlook for the U.S. economy is 'extraordinarily uncertain' and the success of the recovery effort will depend in large part on the country's ability to contain the spread of the coronavirus." In testimony he is scheduled to deliver Tuesday before the House Financial Services Committee, Powell says, "A full recovery is unlikely until people are confident that it is safe to reengage in a broad range of activities." In the testimony released Monday, "Powell repeats a pledge that the central bank will keep interest rates at their current ultra-low levels until it is sure the economy has weathered the pandemic crisis."

Daly: More Shutdowns A Threat To Economic Recovery.

Reuters (6/29, Saphir) reports San Francisco Fed President Mary Daly said it is "far too early" to gauge the strength of the US economic recovery as the coronavirus shutdown winds down. Daly "said...the outlook will depend in large part on whether widespread shutdowns are again imposed or whether current mitigation strategies are enough to keep the virus in check but allow people to be back at their jobs." Economists polled by Reuters expect unemployment to fall to 12.3 percent in June from 13.3 percent in May.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

House Passes Resolution To Overturn OCC's CRA Rewrite.

Law360 (6/29, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall that the House on Monday passed a resolution that would reverse the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency's controversial overhaul of the Community Reinvestment Act. The Democratic-sponsored measure "passed by a 230-179 vote strictly along party lines" and "would make use of Congress' regulatory lookback authority to nullify" the new rules.

Bloomberg Law (6/29, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports, "The House vote is the first step in eliminating the OCC's May 20 rule using the Congressional Review Act. The law requires simple majorities in the House and Senate plus the president's signature to kill a regulation within 60 legislative days of its finalization."

CQ Roll Call (6/29, Saksa, 154K) reports the resolution "faces long odds in the GOP-controlled Senate, and the White House said President Donald Trump would veto what is a rebuke of a Trump-chosen regulator's signature proposal." CQ Roll Call adds, "Even if the joint resolution dies in the Senate as expected, the rule change won't be completely in the clear: The National Community Reinvestment Coalition is suing to block it, saying the OCC didn't provide enough consideration to public feedback."

OCC: COVID-19 Elevated Risks To Banks' Profitability, Compliance.

American Banker (6/29, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency on Monday released its semiannual report on the US banking system, highlighting "risks to bank profitability resulting from tightening net interest margins and mounting loan-loss provisions." The OCC said the COVID-19 pandemic will continue to pressure bank earnings and credit quality, but the total impact remains uncertain. The agency said "provision expenses [are] expected to remain high while net interest income and margin pressures increase from the collapse of the yield curve."

Law360 (6/29, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the OCC also said the negative economic impacts of the pandemic combined with government programs such as the Paycheck Protection Program have elevated compliance and operational risks "as banks face economic woes tied to low interest rates and high loan volumes, according to the report." Banks "went into the pandemic in a strong position," but "recent conditions are weighing on them, the report suggested."

Justices Decline To Hear Attorney's Fight With OCC.

Law360 (6/29, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall that the US Supreme Court "declined Monday to review a D.C. Circuit decision that dismissed an ex-Greenberg Traurig LLP partner's First Amendment claims over allegations that the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency brought an unconstitutional enforcement action against him." Carlos Loumiet, who is "now a partner at Nelson Mullins Riley & Scarborough LLP, sued the OCC in July 2011, alleging he was maliciously prosecuted as revenge for his criticism of the agency's handling of a securities fraud investigation into a bank he audited in 2000 when he was at Greenberg Traurig."

Volcker Rule Changes Allow CLOs To Buy More Than Leveraged Loans.

Bloomberg Law (6/29, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports behind a paywall, "The $700 billion CLO market will soon be able to purchase junk bonds and potentially other, riskier securities alongside leveraged loans after U.S. regulators eased constraints on some of their biggest investors." The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. last week "approved changes to the Volcker Rule...that expand the types of securities that banks can invest in, paving the way for CLOs to once again include bonds in their pools of assets." The moves could even possible allow CLOs "to buy equity and equity-like securities, according to some initial interpretations."

Meanwhile, Forbes (6/29, 9.71M) reports that the changes to the Volcker Rule "should be positive for not only the banking sector...but also for early-stage startup and emerging company investment. This should bode especially well for FinTech ventures that seek long-term partnership and/or investment from the industry they serve."

Wells Fargo Cuts Dividend Under Fed Capital Demands.

The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Eisen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Wells Fargo said it expects it will cut its dividend payment for the first time in over 10 years due to the economic hardship wrought by the coronavirus pandemic. Wells Fargo said it would cut its dividend from the previously-planned 51 cents, and that it would announce the exact amount at its second-quarter earnings call on July 14. Meanwhile, JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, Citigroup, Morgan Stanley, and Goldman Sachs will hold dividend payments steady. Last week, the Federal Reserve said banks' dividends could not exceed their average quarterly earnings between the third quarter of last year and the second quarter of this year, meaning Wells Fargo had to cut its dividend as its earnings steeply fell last quarter.

CNBC (6/29, Pound, 3.62M) reports Wells Fargo CEO Charlie Scharf said in a press release that the bank expects to again increase its loan-loss provision to an amount "substantially higher" than last quarter's increase, which CNBC says "will put downward pressure on the bank's earnings." Scharf said, "These are certainly extremely challenging times for many and we remain committed to supporting our customers and communities, and we will continue to take appropriate measures to maintain strong capital and liquidity levels and to improve the earnings capacity of the company."

Barron's (6/29, English, 1.07M) and CNBC (6/29, Franck, Son, Pound, 3.62M) provide similar coverage.

Big Banks Boost Capital Buffer Following Fed Stress Test.

American Banker (6/29, Alix, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports big banks including JPMorgan Chase, Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley, and Capital One "said they would set aside a stress test capital buffer greater than the minimum of 2.5%." The announcement was "hotly anticipated after the Federal Reserve released stress test results last week." According to American Banker, "The lower the stress capital buffer, the better the bank is seen to have performed under the stress test, with the minimum being an 2.5% required to be held starting in October through September 2021." Citigroup, Bank of America, Wells Fargo, and State Street "reported 2.5% stress capital buffers," while Goldman "reported a 6.7% stress capital buffer requirement, meaning its businesses were considered riskier than other banks and would have to hold a larger cushion."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"John Roberts Is No Pro-Choice Hero." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/29, 18.61M) says "the Supreme Court upheld abortion rights on Monday, with Chief Justice John Roberts concurring with the liberals," and adds Roberts' "disapproval of abortion" did not "outweigh his desire for the court to respect its own very recent precedent." The Times argues that Roberts "appears to have decided that the circumstances of this case were not ideal for crippling reproductive rights" but "left the door open to doing so in the future."

Washington Post.

"Mississippi's Removal Of A Confederate Symbol From Its Flag Should Be Celebrated." In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/29, Board, 14.2M) says the decision by Mississippi lawmakers to remove the Confederate emblem from the state flag is "a moment to be celebrated." The Post calls the flag a long-standing "source of controversy" and a "pain to African American residents of the state who saw it as an enduring reminder of white supremacy, terror, lynching and exclusion," but adds that "removing symbols that hurt and inflame is important but of course not enough. Laws, attitudes and practices all need to change to address police brutality, vote suppression and economic inequality," which is "why it is critical for people to get out and vote in November for candidates who will help lead the way."

"The Report Of Russia Putting Bounties On US Soldiers Is Disturbing. Trump's Response Is Stupefying." The Washington Post (6/29, Board, 14.2M) says in an editorial that President Trump's "reaction in recent days" to reports on Russian bounties for the killing of US soldiers – "that he wasn't told, that it is a hoax – has been utterly inadequate. ... Rather than address the highly disturbing news itself," Trump offered "distractions and denials. ... The intelligence reports, if true, demand a serious response. With Mr. Trump once again immobilized in the face of Russian provocation, Congress will have to step up."

"The Outcome Of The Louisiana Abortion Case Was A Victory For The Rule Of Law." The Washington Post (6/29, 14.2M) editorializes that "it is cause for optimism that the Supreme Court has voted to strike down a law in Louisiana that would have imposed strict but medically unwarranted regulations on that state's abortion providers." The ruling "is a victory for the right to choose and for women who rely on it. Equally, if not more important, however, it is a triumph for adherence to precedent." To the Post, "Credit goes to the four justices appointed by Democratic presidents" and to Roberts, whose "adherence to precedent despite personal disagreement...is all the more remarkable given that the chief justice can expect another round of condemnation from Republicans already furious with him for thwarting their preferred outcomes in previous cases."

Wall Street Journal.

"One Man's Supreme Court." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes Chief Justice John Roberts' reasoning in the ruling on the Louisiana abortion law as well as other controversial rulings as eminently political, and predicts Monday's decision will hurt the judiciary by keeping political matters in the legal arena.

"The GOP's Lampoon Vacation." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Board, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes a proposal from Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) offering Americans a $4,000 tax credit to take vacations. The American Tax Rebate and Incentive Program Act is aimed at encouraging Americans to support the travel and tourism industries, which have been hit hard by the pandemic, but the Journal says the tax credit would subsidize spending that would have happened regardless.

"The Court's Missed Opportunity On Consumer Financial Protection." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) hails the Supreme Court's separation-of-powers ruling, but otherwise casts the court's decision as a lost opportunity to find the entire CFPB unconstitutional.

"Woke Capital Targets Free Speech." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Facebook has already acted against hate speech, and that advertising boycotts by large businesses represent a troubling effort by big corporations to influence free speech.

Treasury in the News

Mnuchin Dismisses Bolton Claim Of Treasury Weakness On Sanctions.

Bloomberg (6/22, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "rejected John Bolton's assertion in a new book that he's afraid of imposing economic sanctions on adversaries, noting that President Donald Trump has made frequent use of the tool in his foreign policy." Mnuchin, in a Fox Business (6/22, 1.73M) interview Monday, said, "We've done more sanctions under President Trump in this administration than the previous administrations combined. ... For John Bolton to say that I or the president or the Treasury Department were weak on sanctions is ridiculous." Mnuchin said Bolton's book is "full of inaccuracies," adding, "When it comes to Iran, the president, myself and Secretary Pompeo were 100% aligned. Yes, it's true that John Bolton was not necessarily 100% aligned. ... Let me tell you, it was the president's policy, not John Bolton's policy." Real Clear Politics (6/22, Schwartz, 825K) also reports.

Sanders Blasts Bolton In Book Excerpt, Calls Mnuchin "Team Player." Fox News (6/22, Singman, 27.59M) reports former White House Press Secretary Sarah Sanders "shared a scathing passage pertaining to Bolton" from her forthcoming book "in a lengthy Twitter thread Monday morning." Fox says Sanders described "one instance when the administration visited the United Kingdom, noting that multiple members of the president's Cabinet boarded a bus, including Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, then-acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, Deputy Chief of Staff Dan Walsh and other senior advisers." Sanders wrote, "Based on US protocol, Mnuchin, Mulvaney and Walsh all outranked Bolton. Mnuchin, one of the highest ranking officials in government, far outranked him. ... While en route, UK police directed us to pull to the side of the road because someone was coming through. ... we looked over to see who it was and sure enough here came Bolton and his motorcade." Sanders added that discussion on the bus "quickly moved from casual chit chat to how arrogant and selfish Bolton could be, not just in this moment but on a regular basis. If anyone on the team should have merited a motorcade it was Mnuchin, but he was a team player." The Hill (6/22, Bowden, 2.98M) and Axios (6/22, Allen, 521K) also report.

Mnuchin Calls China's Withholding Of COVID-19 Information "Not Acceptable."

Fox Business (6/22, Best, 1.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said Monday that there is a push within the Trump administration to hold the Chinese government accountable for its lack of transparency surrounding the coronavirus pandemic and the ensuing damage it wrought on America." Responding in an interview with Lou Dobbs to a question about whether the Administration has the "energy" to hold Chinese President Xi Jinping accountable for its handling of the COVID-19 pandemic, Mnuchin said, "I think there is energy. I would start with Secretary [Mike] Pompeo when he had his most recent meeting, was very clear in, 'We need answers.' So, it's not acceptable that China hasn't opened up, hasn't been forthright with what's gone on with this disease. And there's no question, the disease started there. How did it spread through the rest of the world, and it didn't spread through China? That's what we want to know."

Mnuchin Says Trump "May Consider" Decoupling From China. Newsweek (6/22, Villarreal, 1.53M) reports Mnuchin, in the same interview, "suggested that the Trump Administration may consider 'decoupling' itself from China." Mnuchin said, "There may be a time when we have decoupling, that's something that the president may consider."

Trump Projects More Stimulus Payments If Congress Can Pass Another Relief Deal.

Business Insider (6/22, Rapier, 3.67M) reports President Trump on Monday "said Americans would be receiving a second round of economic stimulus payments as part of a second bailout package, if it's passed." Although Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has floated the possibility of further payments, many Republican congressional leaders have opposed further individual aid, including the extension of a $600-per-week federal unemployment benefit which is set to expire at the end of July."

Democrats: Plan For PPP Disclosure "Inadequate."

The Hill (6/22, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports, "Three House Democratic committee chairs on Monday criticized the Trump administration's announcement that it will release certain information about Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) loan recipients, saying that the planned disclosures are insufficient." In a statement, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal (D-MA), House Financial Services Committee Chairwoman Maxine Waters (D-CA), and House Small Business Committee Chairwoman Nydia Velázquez (D-NY) said: "With this announcement, Treasury and [the Small Business Administration] have agreed to a minimum level of transparency, but still fall short of taxpayers' expectations." The article says the Trump Administration "announced its plans for disclosing this information after lawmakers criticized Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin for suggesting during a hearing that information about loan recipients wouldn't be made public."

Mnuchin, Powell Will Testify Before House Panel June 30 On COVID-19 Response.

Reuters (6/22, Beech) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Fed Chair Jerome Powell "will testify before the U.S. House of Representatives Financial Services Committee on June 30 about the coronavirus response, the panel said on Monday."

Tribe Slams Treasury's "Hyper-Technical" Position Over CARES Act Funds.

Law360 (6/22, Whitford, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Shawnee Tribe "urged an Oklahoma federal court Monday to freeze at least $12 million in federal coronavirus relief funds it was denied because of allegedly inaccurate population data, to ensure the money will still be there when the case wraps up." In its reply brief, the tribe "hit back at the U.S. Department of the Treasury, saying the government made a 'hyper-technical' argument opposing its request for a temporary restraining order and that the tribe properly notified the government that it intended to sue over distribution of funds made available by the Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security Act."

Leading National News

In Wake Of Pandemic, New Trump Order Temporarily Suspends Work Visas.

Media coverage of the President's executive order on immigration was largely unfavorable, with reports highlighting business opposition and casting Trump as using the coronavirus pandemic as an excuse to implement his agenda. Politico (6/22, McCaskill, 4.29M) indicates "the new order extends restrictions originally enacted in April due to the coronavirus pandemic and expands on the previous directive, which blocked most people from receiving a permanent residency visa – or green card." The new order also "prohibits visas for most guest workers who come to the US for temporary or seasonal work, but exempts farm workers, among others." The Washington Examiner (6/22, Giaritelli, 448K) estimates that "in all, the visas being suspended would prevent approximately 525,000 immigrants from entering the US through the end of 2020."

The Hill (6/22, Samuels, 2.98M) reports "a senior administration official said that the visa restrictions would free up more than half a million jobs for workers already in the country." However, adds The Hill, "many companies are laying off workers due to the pandemic, and economic experts have acknowledged some of those jobs may not return." Bloomberg (6/22, Sink, 4.73M) recounts that "Trump acted with the US facing an unemployment rate of 13.3% after businesses closed or reduced staff in response to the coronavirus pandemic." The order "won't affect immigrant workers who already hold the visas." Trump said in his order, "Under the extraordinary circumstances of the economic contraction resulting from the COVID-19 outbreak, certain nonimmigrant visa programs authorizing such employment pose an unusual threat to the employment of American workers."

Fox News (6/22, Shaw, 27.59M) says on its website that the new order also "extends the measure and goes further by pausing new H-1B tech worker visas, H-2B seasonal worker visas, certain J work and education exchange visitor visas and L executive transfer visas" – and "will be in effect until the end of the year and will not affect those who already have a visa." The New York Post (6/22, Bowden, 4.57M) recounts "Trump previously vowed to suspend all immigration to the United States but left guest worker programs in place which apply to immigrants who work on the nation's farms and meat processing plants, providing crucial labor." According to the NBC News (6/22, 6.14M) website, "Au pairs, university professors and people working in food processing, such as agriculture or seafood, are exempted from the visa suspensions." NBC News reports that "in all, the White House projects 525,000 American jobs will be saved or created by the executive order."

Reuters (6/22, Hesson) reports "critics of the measure say Trump is using the pandemic to enact his longstanding goal to limit immigration into the United States," and adds "Trump owned- or Trump branded businesses have used the H-2B program to hire seasonal guest workers." The Washington Post (6/22, Miroff, Romm, 14.2M) also says "critics of the moves say the president is using the pandemic to carry out the kind of border closures and immigration overhaul he has long extolled, allowing him to tout the measures on the campaign trail."

Axios (6/22, Kight, 521K) also says "Trump has leveraged emergency powers and economic concern from the coronavirus to slowly shut down large parts of the immigration system 00 even as he urges states to reopen." To the AP (6/22, Riechmann, Spagat), "the ban, while temporary, would amount to major restructuring of legal immigration if made permanent, a goal that had eluded the administration before the pandemic." USA Today (6/22, Jackson, Fritze, Collins, 10.31M) says "immigration groups, which have been bracing for the order for days, argue that Trump is targeting immigrants to placate his political base."

The New York Times (6/22, 18.61M) reports, meanwhile, that the order "is fiercely opposed by a broad swath of businesses – including high tech companies in Silicon Valley, manufacturers, and others – whose leaders say it will block their ability to recruit critically needed workers from overseas countries for jobs that Americans cannot or will not perform." Reuters (6/22, Hesson) also reports "businesses including major tech companies and the US Chamber of Commerce have said the visa suspension would stifle the economic recovery after the damage done by the novel coronavirus pandemic."

On the other hand, the Washington Times (6/22, Dinan, 492K) reports that "defying the Washington consensus that has long supported higher immigration, the White House said Mr. Trump is instead betting on American workers." The Washington Examiner (6/22, Bedard, 448K) also says "Trump's new moves" are "aimed at setting aside over half a million jobs for poor and middle class Americans laid off during the coronavirus crisis and stopping chain migration which substantially boosts immigration to the US."

On Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight, host Carlson said, "President Trump just signed an executive order today suspending most US work visas until at least the end of the year. Notably, the order that covers both H-2B guest workers and H-1B visas. Both of them...have been exploited for many years by Silicon Valley to drive down wages in the tech sector and prevent Americans from getting the jobs they train for at high expense."

Breitbart (6/22, Binder, 673K) and the Wall Street Journal (6/22, A1, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Graham: Order Will Have “Chilling Effect” On Economic Recovery. Axios (6/22, Perano, 521K) reports Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) “said on Monday that...Trump’s expansion of legal immigration restrictions – including a temporary ban on high-skilled H-1B visas – will have a ‘chilling effect’ on the country’s economic recovery.” Graham also wrote on Twitter, “Those who believe legal immigration, particularly work visas, are harmful to the American worker do not understand the American economy. ... Unfortunately, I fear the President’s decision today to temporarily shut down these programs will create a drag on our economic recovery.”

Trump Says He “Brought Back Cars & Jobs” And “Will Do It Again.”

President Trump, retweeting a tweet from cartoonist Scott Adams about Trump’s unexpected victory in Michigan in 2016, wrote, “I brought back Cars & Jobs. Will do it again for Michigan, & everywhere else!!!”

Trump Says He Backs Second Round Of Direct Aid.

Reuters (6/22, Heavey) reports in a very brief item that President Trump said Monday that he “supported the idea of giving Americans a second round of financial aid amid the novel coronavirus pandemic.” Trump told Scripps Networks “that he backed sending out a second check. ‘We will be doing another stimulus package’ with Congress, he added, saying the bipartisan measure would come ‘over the next couple of weeks probably.’” Breitbart (6/22, Hanchett, 673K) also briefly covered the interview, reporting that when asked what the amount of the checks would be, Trump replied, “You’ll find out about it.”

AP Poll: 63% Say Economy Is “Poor.”

The AP (6/22, Boak, Swanson) reports that according to a new AP-NORC poll, “Americans’ outlook on the national economy has improved somewhat from its lowest points during the early weeks of the coronavirus pandemic, but...Democrats and Republicans are living in alternate economic realities amid the sharpest recession in the nation’s history. Eighty-five percent of Democrats call economic conditions ‘poor,’ while 65% of Republicans describe them as ‘good.’” Overall, 63 percent of respondents say “the economy is in poor shape, down somewhat from the 70% who felt that way in May.”

Chao Says DOT Has Taken “Pro-Consumer Action” On Airline Refunds.

In a USA Today (6/22, 10.31M) op-ed, Transportation Secretary Chao says the “urgent need to protect” airline passengers from the coronavirus “and make them feel financially secure from flight cancellations and delays, cannot wait for years-long rulemaking or investigations. That’s why DOT has already taken pro-consumer action on refunds” and has distributed “nearly 100 million cloth facial coverings to airports and aviation workers.” Chao says she has “personally spoken with all the major airlines to reinforce the Department’s consumer protection rules and to emphasize the importance of consistently following public health requirements for the welfare of passengers and crew.”

Large Companies Rethink Investments Amid Economic Uncertainty.

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Driebusch, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports large companies are reconsidering investments as continued economic uncertainty has increased the importance of cash on hand. Sanofi recently sold its entire take in Regeneron Pharmaceuticals, for example, while SoftBank says it intends to sell most of its $30 billion stake in T-Mobile US.

T.J. Maxx Has Made Few Changes During Pandemic.

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Kapner, Nassauer, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports under the headline “Coronavirus Changed Everything. Except T.J. Maxx” that the discount chain, which includes HomeGoods and Marshalls as well as its namesake stores, has made few changes to its business model during the coronavirus pandemic. As of last week, about 85 percent of its stores had reopened.

In 8-1 Vote, SCOTUS Affirms SEC’s Ability To Recoup Profits Acquired Through Fraud.

The Washington Post (6/22, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the Supreme Court ruled 8-1 Monday that the Securities and Exchange Commission has the authority “to force defendants to forfeit money acquired through investor fraud, but placed new limits on the practice.” In a decision written by Justice Sonia Sotomayor, “the court said the money must be for the benefit of investors and cannot exceed the actual profits that came from the wrongdoing.” Only Justice Clarence Thomas dissented, “saying the law does not give authority to the SEC for the practice.”

Apple To Drop Intel Processors In Favor Of Its Own.

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Mickle, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Apple CEO Tim Cook said Monday that the company will stop using Intel processors in its Mac computers after 15 years, and will instead develop its own integrated chips. The Journal says the move is part of a plan to more fully integrate Macs with Apple’s iPhone ecosystem.

Trump, Kudlow Dispute Navarro's Claim That US-China Trade Deal Is "Over."

Axios (6/22, Swan, 521K) reports NEC Director Kudlow "disputed comments from Trump's trade adviser Peter Navarro, who said Monday night on Fox News the US-China trade deal is 'over.'" Kudlow told Axios, "The US remains engaged with China over the phase one trade deal signed last January and according to trade negotiator Bob Lighthizer the deal is going well. President Trump has made similar comments just recently." Trump tweeted "moments after Navarro's appearance on Fox News, 'The China Trade Deal is fully intact. Hopefully they will continue to live up to the terms of the Agreement!'"

EU Officials Urge China To Change Approaches To Trade. The AP (6/22, Cook) reports that in video talks with Chinese President Xi Jinping and Premier Li Keqiang on Monday, "top European Union officials...pressed China's leaders to open the country's markets further to European companies, show stronger leadership in reforming world trade's governing body and step back from the brink in Hong Kong." The AP adds, "With criticism mounting that the EU has been kowtowing to Beijing, European Council President Charles Michel and EU commission President Ursula von der Leyen attempted to strike a tougher tone than usual." Michel "fir[ed] off a list of outstanding issues like market access, subsidies, regulatory issues, public procurement, the forced transfer of technologies and WTO reforms." The New York Times (6/22, Erlanger, 18.61M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Brouillette: China Selling Reactors Made With Stolen US Technology. Energy Secretary Brouillette said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (6/22) that China is "competing to win, and it comes with it a number of different challenges. This is not just your basic economic challenge where you make a cheaper widget and that widget sells more in the marketplace than your higher priced widget. This is a situation in which the Chinese have in essence stolen intellectual property from the United States. And many of the reactors that they are selling around the world, it can be fairly argued, are US technology."

Supreme Court Rejects Challenge To Trump's Steel Tariffs.

Reuters (6/22, Hurley) reports that on Monday, the Supreme Court "turned away a challenge to President Donald Trump's tariffs on imported steel brought by an industry group that had argued that a key part of the law under which he imposed the duties violates the US Constitution." The justices "declined to hear the American Institute for International Steel's appeal of a February ruling by the US Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in favor of the administration." AIIIS is "a pro-free trade group that represents steel importers and users of imported steel."

Politico (6/22, Palmer, 4.29M) says, "The decision could embolden Trump to take further tariff actions without worrying that the Supreme Court will strike them down," and "puts the onus on Congress to decide whether it wants to rein in Trump's tariff powers." Bloomberg (6/22, Stohr, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also covers the decision.

Senate Democrats Threaten To Block GOP Police Reform Bill.

Politico (6/22, Everett, Levine, 4.29M) reports Senate Democrats are "strongly signaling they will filibuster Republicans' police reform bill later this week absent more concessions" from Senate Majority Leader McConnell, who "set the Senate on a path to consider the legislation on Wednesday." Sen. Jon Tester (D-MT) said, "If nothing changes, I'm voting no. I need some assurances that we're going to vote on amendments that will fix this bill. And it needs a lot of fixing." Senate Minority Leader Schumer called the GOP bill "deeply and fundamentally flawed," and Senate Minority Whip Durbin said, "There's no clarity in what we're being offered by Sen. McConnell. I've faced similar Sen. McConnell offers in the past, on [coronavirus legislation], and the best thing that happened is we didn't accept his offer. We demanded a bipartisan approach."

The Washington Post (6/22, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports that bill's "political future...has been thrown into doubt after a trio of influential voices urged senators to oppose the measure." The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund sent a letter to McConnell and Schumer on Monday "voicing opposition to the bill." Al Sharpton also issued a statement Monday urging senators to oppose the GOP bill, calling it "a nonstarter in the conversation to truly make a difference when it comes to the pervasive issue of over-policing Black communities."

Reuters Analysis: Neither Senate Nor House Police Reform Bill Likely To Become Law. Reuters (6/22, Morgan) reports that the Senate and the House "will vote this week on separate bills aimed at addressing police misconduct...but neither measure is likely to become law." The Senate "is expected to hold a procedural vote on a Republican bill by Wednesday, while the House is due to vote on more sweeping Democratic legislation on Thursday." However, Reuters says, "neither measure, as written, appears to have enough bipartisan support to win approval from both chambers and be signed into law."

The Hill (6/22, Carney, 2.98M) reports McConnell "will need 60 votes, including the support of at least seven Democrats, to overcome the hurdle," and "on Monday he urged Democrats to allow the bill to advance."

Trump Shares Video Of Attack On Macy's Employee By African American.

On Twitter Monday night, President Trump shared a video of a white Macy's employee being assaulted by an African American and wrote, "Looks what's going on here. Where are the protesters? Was this man arrested?"

Trump Calls Planned Removal Of Teddy Roosevelt Statue "Ridiculous."

The AP (6/22) reports, "The American Museum of Natural History will remove a prominent statue of Theodore Roosevelt from its entrance after years of objections that it symbolizes colonial expansion and racial discrimination," New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) said Sunday.

Reacting to the news on Twitter, President Trump wrote, "Ridiculous, don't do it!"

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) bemoans the move to remove the statue, casting it as part of a campaign to erase American history.

Interior IG To Probe Park Police's Clearing Of Protesters Near White House.

The AP (6/22, Knickmeyer) reports that the office of Interior Department Inspector General Mark Lee Greenblatt "will investigate law enforcement and security forces' violent clearing of protesters from a square in front of the White House earlier this month." The Interior Department's US Park Police "and other forces released chemical agents and at times punched and clubbed a largely peaceful crowd of demonstrators to drive the public from Lafayette Square on June 1." The AP adds that Sen. Roy Wyden (D-OR), and Reps. Raúl Grijalva (D-AZ) and Debra Haaland (D-NM), had asked Greenblatt "to investigate the actions that night of the Park Police," and Greenblatt "agreed late last week, telling the lawmakers that Interior Secretary David Bernhardt had also asked for the review."

DC Protesters Declare "Black House Autonomous Zone."

In what the Washington Times (6/22, Morton, 492K) calls an "apparent imitation of the secessionist enclave in Seattle," demonstrators outside the White House have declared it a "Black House Autonomous Zone." The demonstrators "are marking the Zone by, among other things, desecrating St. John's Episcopal Church" with the letters "BHAZ" spray painted on its columns.

USA Today (6/22, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports that protesters on Monday night also "worked to remove the Andrew Jackson statue in Lafayette Square." President Trump tweeted, "Numerous people arrested in D.C. for the disgraceful vandalism, in Lafayette Park, of the magnificent Statue of Andrew Jackson, in addition to the exterior defacing of St. John's Church across the street. 10 years in prison under the Veteran's Memorial Preservation Act. Beware!"

CNN (6/22, LeBlanc, 83.16M) reports on its website that the Secret Service on Monday evening "told members of the White House press corps to immediately leave the White House grounds, a highly unusual decision that did not immediately come with an explanation. The decision came during an ongoing demonstration in Lafayette Square...where protesters were trying to bring down" the Jackson statue.

HUD Secretary Carson said on Fox News' Hannity, "These people are not lovers of George Floyd or anything like that, they are anarchists. And what you do with anarchists, you have to control them. They are like bullies. If you just leave them alone, they will grow and grow and grow and continue to take over. And look how quickly things can change. Look at Venezuela. Look how quickly they went down. Believe me, the same thing can happen in this country."

Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) said on Fox News' The Story (6/22, 27.59M), "In some cases in Washington, DC, the police were standing by and watching. One can only assume that the left-wing mayors and governors of some of the cities and states have directed the authority is not to intervene. ... It is unfortunate that so many local authorities are not standing idly by, letting mob rule rain in the streets. But also, there is no legal consequences after the fact, the destruction of public or private property. So if the local authorities are not going to protect our citizens, then the federal government has a job to do."

Secretary of State Pompeo said on Fox News' Hannity (6/22, 27.59M), "When I watch this, it reminds me of what our Founders understood clearly, the primary purpose of our government is to secure freedom and liberty. When you watch the things happenings where mayors and governors refused to take actions to protect the innocent, to protect people who are trying to live their lives...to protect their property rights, this is the most fundamental duty of government, and to see that not happening in cities and states across America is disheartening, and its governments need to step up."

On Fox News' Hannity (6/22, 27.59M), host Hannity said, "You are watching a rapid deterioration and disintegration of our major cities. Democratic mayors and governors who have been in charge for decades are now clueless, unable, unwilling to fix it. These are our fellow American citizens. They have failed their constituents here in, year out; now Americans are suffering. We are watching this far left radical agenda play out in real time and frankly, it is a scary picture."

After New Shooting In CHAZ, Seattle Mayor Says Police Will Return Soon.

The AP (6/22) reports "police in Seattle said one person was wounded in a second shooting in the city's protest zone in less than 48 hours." The shooting "happened late on Sunday night in the area near Seattle's downtown area known as Chaz, for 'Capitol Hill Autonomous Zone', and involved a 17 year old, who later declined to speak with detectives." Police "tweeted that one person was at a hospital with a gunshot wound." KIRO-FM Seattle, WA (6/22, 235K) indicates on its website that Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan (D) says the police department "needs to return to the East Precinct to be able to respond to calls from the community." During a news conference Monday, the mayor "said SPD will return to the precinct, peacefully and in the near future."

The Seattle Times (6/22, Gutman, 935K) reports Durkan said the city "would not be using police to clear the zone. Rather, Durkan said, they'd be asking people to leave the area voluntarily at night." The Times recounts that "some organizers affiliated with the protest zone distributed an unsigned letter Sunday calling for 'suggested' CHOP hours of 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. to encourage the area 'to stop being a chaotic, immobile zone' in the overnight hours, though their plan called for some people to remain through the night."

Fox News (6/22, Casiano, 27.59M) reports on its website that "city leaders have faced mounting criticism – including from President Trump – over the protest zone amid reports of violence within the area and how police can respond to such incidents."

NYTimes Analysis: Antifa Rumors Show Ways Information Spreads Locally.

The New York Times (6/22, Alba, Decker, 18.61M) examines how in recent weeks, “residents in at least 41 U.S. cities and towns became alarmed by rumors that the loose collective of anti-fascist activists known as antifa was headed to their area, according to an analysis by The New York Times. In many cases, they contacted their local law enforcement for help. In each case, it was for a threat that never appeared.” On the local level, the analysis found that “the source of the false information has usually been more subtle, and shows the complexity of stunting misinformation online. The bad information often first appears in a Twitter or Facebook post, or a YouTube video there. It is then shared on online spaces like local Facebook groups, the neighborhood social networking app Nextdoor and community texting networks,” which “can fall under the radar of the tech companies and online fact checkers.”

Black Lives Matter Protests Spread To White, Rural Areas.

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Carlton, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the protests for racial justice sparked by the police killing of George Floyd have quickly spread from big cities to small, rural towns that are predominantly white.

NYTimes Analysis: Outcry Over Floyd's Death Compelling Americans To Acknowledge Racism. The New York Times (6/22, Harmon, Burch, 18.61M) reports that the “sustained outcry” over George Floyd's death “has compelled many white Americans to acknowledge the anti-black racism that is prevalent in the United States – and to perhaps even examine their own culpability for it. It is as though the ability of white people to collectively ignore the everyday experience of black people has been short-circuited, at least for now.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Floyd's killing has caused some useful reflection about race.

Public Lines Up To Pay Respects To Brooks Ahead Of Funeral.

NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 8, 1:45, Guthrie, 6.8M) reported, “Calls for racial justice are also growing in Atlanta today, where members of the public paid respects to Rayshard Brooks.” NBC (Alexander) added, “Lying in a shining gold casket, the body of Rayshard Brooks arrived at Atlanta's Ebenezer Baptist Church, where Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. once served as pastor. Tomorrow, his daughter will speak at Brooks' memorial service.” The CBS Evening News (6/22, story 6, 2:00, O'Donnell, 4.78M) reported, “The funeral for Rayshard Brooks will be held here tomorrow. As for the Atlanta police officer accused of shooting and killing him, he was expected to be in court tomorrow, but we found out late today that that hearing has been postponed.” ABC World News Tonight (6/22, story 5, 1:35, Muir, 7.94M), among other news outlets, also reported on Tuesday's funeral.

NYPD Officer Facing Charges For Chokehold.

ABC World News Tonight (6/22, story 6, 0:20, Muir, 7.74M) reported the New York City “DA is now investigating Officer David Afanador for allegedly using a banned chokehold during a confrontation with a man yelling at police this weekend. The officer has been suspended without pay. He was acquitted of pistol whipping a suspect in 2016.”

Shootings Rising Sharply In New York City. The New York Post (6/22, Moore, Celona, Feis, 4.57M), meanwhile, reports that shootings are occurring in “New York this month at a rate not seen in nearly a quarter century, according to the NYPD – and police sources warned that the recent run of gunplay may be the new normal.”

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) welcomes news that in Chicago last weekend, only 14 people were killed in shootings, compared to the 24 over the last weekend in May. On the other hand, shootings are soaring in New York City after police disbanded the plainclothes anti-crime units.

NYPD Commissioner Details Protesters' Violent Attacks On Police Officers.

Reuters (6/22, Allen) reports that on Monday, New York City Police Commissioner Dermot Shea “testified...that his officers had been attacked with bricks, knives, trash cans and bottles during recent protests...saying it was some of the ‘worst rioting’ in the city for years.” Shea's testimony “was part of a series of online public hearings held by New York Attorney General Letitia James, who is investigating the police response to widespread protests.” Reuters adds that last week, “scores of protesters testified that New York Police Department officers kicked or shoved them, hit them with night sticks, doused them with pepper spray or cuffed wrists so tightly that hands turned blue.”

YouGov Poll: Little Support For Defunding, Abolishing Police.

Breitbart (6/22, Bleau, 673K) reports, “A majority of Americans oppose defunding the police, and an even greater majority oppose “abolishing” the police, a recently released YouGov poll revealed.” The survey found 53 percent “indicated that they oppose defunding police, while 24 percent said they support the proposal. What is more, nearly three-quarters of Americans, 73 percent, said they oppose ‘abolishing’ the police altogether, with just 11 percent supporting the call.”

Bill To Allow Local Community To Abolish Police Reaches Georgia Governor's Desk.

The AP (6/22) reports, “A bill to let local voters decide whether to abolish the scandal-plagued Glynn County police department” has gone to Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp (R) for his approval or veto. The state House “voted 159-3 on Monday to approve Senate Bill 504, creating a nonbinding advisory referendum on whether to abolish the department and hand its law enforcement responsibilities back to the elected county sheriff in unincorporated parts of the coastal Georgia county.”

Chicago Mayor: Cutting Police Budget Will Make Force Less Diverse.

In an interview with the New York Times (6/22, Marchese, 18.61M), Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot (D) said of the “defund the police” movement. “In our police department, about 90 percent of the budget is personnel. When you talk about defunding, you’re talking about getting rid of officers. Most of our diversity lies in the junior officers. So when you’re talking about defunding the police, you’re talking about doing it in a context of a collective-bargaining agreement that requires you to go in reverse seniority, which means you’re getting rid of the younger officers. Which means you’re getting rid of black and brown people.”

Feds Investigating Noose Found In Nascar Driver's Garage Stall.

The AP (6/22, Fryer) reports “Federal authorities on Monday confirmed they are investigating the discovery of a noose found in the Talladega Superspeedway garage stall of Bubba Wallace, NASCAR’s only Black full-time driver who successfully pushed the stock car series to ban the Confederate flag at its venues less than two weeks ago.” US Attorney Jay Town “said his office, the FBI and the Justice Department’s Civil Rights Division were involved.” USA Today (6/22, Gleeson, 10.31M) reports DOJ released a statement Monday that read, “The US Attorney’s office for the Northern District of Alabama, FBI and the Department of Justice Civil Rights Division are reviewing the situation surrounding the noose that was found in Bubba Wallace’s garage to determine whether there are violations of federal law. Regardless of whether federal charges can be brought, this type of action has no place in our society.”

On ABC World News Tonight (6/22, story 3, 2:20, Muir, 7.94M), Victor Oquendo highlighted that at Talladega Superspeedway Monday, there was “an incredible show of solidarity with driver Bubba Wallace before the race. Drivers and pit crews from every team marching along with Wallace’s number 43 car.” NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 7, 2:05, Guthrie, 6.8M) similarly referred to “a moving and dramatic show of solidarity...at the Talladega speedway.”

The Washington Post (6/22, Brewer, 14.2M) reports, “Hate, not heritage. Pure hate. What else could prompt a person, or multiple people, to place a noose in the garage stall of Bubba Wallace, the man who nudged NASCAR into finally outlawing the Confederate flag? For such a racist, there is only one threat greater than a trailblazing black driver with aspirations of change: a trailblazing black driver who succeeds at change.”

The Washington Post (6/22, Bieler, Boren, Clarke, 14.2M) also reports “the noose was discovered Sunday afternoon by a member of the No. 43 race team, who reported it to NASCAR.” The Washington Times (6/22, Fryer, 492K) recounts that “disgruntled fans with Confederate flags drove past the main entrance to the Alabama race track prior to Sunday’s race, while a plane flew above the track pulling a banner of the flag that read ‘Defund NASCAR.’”

National Urban League President/CEO Marc Morial said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/22, 554K), “Great admiration for Wallace’s willingness to stand up in a sport that is overwhelmingly white and dominant among southerners in terms of audience that follows NASCAR. ... It was a positive sign to see the fact that NASCAR heeded the call, and eliminated the display of the Confederate flag at their events, and today to see all the drivers and the garage personnel stand with Bubba Wallace at a time in which his very integrity, his very life is threatened.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Beaton, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

CBC-Commissioned Study Found 73% Increase In Suicide Attempts By Black Teens.

NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 9, 2:55, Guthrie, 6.8M) reported on “a staggering rise in suicide attempts by black children.” NBC (Ellis) added, “A study commissioned by the Congressional Black Caucus shows in recent years, self-reported disease suicide attempts by black teens increased by 73 percent. The rate decreased for white teens. Black children younger than 13 were twice as likely to die by suicide than white children.”

Ex-Iraq Commander Sanchez Says Trump “Is A Racist.”

The Atlantic (6/22, Freed, 3.47M) reports under the headline “The First U.S. General to Call Trump a Bigot” that retired Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, who commanded coalition forces in Iraq in 2003-2004, said in an interview, “I believe the President is a racist. The statement has to be made.”

Kimmel Reportedly Used Racial Slur While Imitating Snoop Dogg In 1996.

Fox News (6/22, Re, 27.59M) reports online that Jimmy Kimmel “admitted years ago that he imitated rapper Snoop Dogg’s voice for a track in a 1996 Christmas album – an original song in which Kimmel used the ‘N-word’ several times.” The admission came in a January 2013 podcast “obtained this weekend by Fox News.”

Wine Organization Drops Use Of Term “Master.”

The New York Times (6/22, Morales, 18.61M) reports that a “prestigious wine organization will stop its common use of ‘master’ with a sommelier's surname as part of an effort to be more inclusive and to help diversify the wine industry." The Court of Master Sommeliers, Americas, said in a statement "that it wanted to play a part in diversifying the industry in the wake of nationwide unrest and conversations about institutional racism prompted by the killing of George Floyd."

Shaun King: "White Jesus" Images "Should All Come Down."

The Washington Times (6/22, Ernst, 492K) reports Shaun King said Monday that "it's time for anything resembling 'white Jesus' to be expunged from the public square." Said King, "All murals and stained glass windows of white Jesus, and his European mother, and their white friends should also come down. They are a gross form [of] white supremacy. Created as tools of oppression. Racist propaganda. They should all come down."

White House: Trump Never Asked For Slowdown Of Testing.

Reuters (6/22) reports that on Monday, White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany indicated that President Trump "has not directed any slowdown in coronavirus testing...after the Republican president said at a weekend rally he had directed that less testing be done so fewer cases are identified." McEnany said, "It was a comment that he made in jest. ... Any suggestion that testing has been curtailed is not rooted in fact." The AP (6/22, Freking) points out McEnany also "said that Trump's comments were an effort to criticize the media for its coverage of the coronavirus and its 'failure' to understand that 'when you test more, you also find more cases.'"

The CBS Evening News (6/22, story 4, 2:10, O'Donnell, 5.04M) showed Trump saying in Tulsa, "So I said to my people, slow the testing down, please." The White House, added CBS, "said that remark Saturday in Tulsa was made in jest, but the President did not deny it" Monday. The Washington Post (6/22, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that Trump himself "declined in an interview...to directly answer whether he had told his administration to slow down coronavirus testing but asserted that the United States has done 'too good of a job' on that front." The President "made his comments in an interview with Scripps Television in which he was asked about telling supporters at a campaign rally in Tulsa on Saturday that he had told officials to 'slow the testing down, please' because it was showing too many cases compared with other countries." Trump is quoted as saying, "If it did slow down – frankly, I think we're way ahead of ourselves, if you want to know the truth. We've done too good of a job. ... The reason we have more cases is because we do more testing."

Several Democrats criticized the President over his Tulsa remarks. Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) said on MSNBC's All In (6/22, 251K), "In this case, we see into the real Donald Trump. Frankly, he cares more about what testing numbers are than 120,000 dead Americans. That's the President of the United States. He's supposed to care about Americans who are sick and who are in danger of losing their lives, and he's worried about how testing numbers make his politics look. It's shameful."

Rep. Val Demings (D-FL) said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22, 1.22M), "The President's primary responsibility is the health, safety, and well-being of the American people. But since day one, his response to COVID-19 has been pitiful, and as we experience an increase in cases around the country, remember, we're talking about a President who is planning an in-person convention in Florida where we have seen 4,000 additional cases over the last few days. This President has time and time again demonstrated that he has no interest in putting the health, safety, and well-being of the American people first."

Ex-HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22, 1.22M), "I think the first time he talked about not wanting his numbers to be bad was early March when he was finally just admitting there might be a problem, and we're still in that same loop. Now, mind you, the President makes sure that every single person who gets anywhere near him daily in the White House, on the plane, dealing with his clothes, dealing with his rally, they get tested constantly, so he believes that testing is good to make sure he doesn't get the virus. He just doesn't believe that testing is good to make sure that the rest of America can be safe and secure."

The Washington Examiner (6/22, Brest, 448K), the New York Post (6/22, Nelson, 4.57M), Politico (6/22, Cohen, 4.29M), and The Hill (6/22, Hellmann, 2.98M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Two Trump Campaign Workers Who Attended Tulsa Rally Test Positive. The New York Times (6/22, Karni, 18.61M) reports, "Two Trump campaign staff members who attended the president's indoor rally in Tulsa...tested positive for the coronavirus, a spokesman said Monday, despite earlier assurances that a small outbreak among campaign workers had been contained and no staffers who had tested positive had entered the arena."

White House Visitors No Longer Have To Have Their Temperature Checked. The AP (6/22, Freking) reports that "visitors are able to enter the White House complex without having their temperatures checked for the first time since mid-March, although several other coronavirus precautions remain in place." According to the AP, "Those who come near the president will still undergo temperature checks and testing for the virus." The White House Correspondents' Association "told members Monday that restrictions on attendance for covering press briefings and other events within the complex will remain in effect to allow for social distancing."

The New York Times (6/22, Karni, 18.61M) reports that "in announcing the new guidelines, the White House followed the lead of the city of Washington, which began the second phase of its reopening on Monday, allowing restaurants and gyms, among other establishments, to fully open for business with capacity limits." However, "they also reflected Mr. Trump's continued emphasis on returning to normal, days after he staged a 'comeback' rally in Tulsa."

Amid Spikes In Cases, Kudlow Says "No Second Wave Coming."

In an interview with CNBC's Squawk Box (6/22, Quick, 53K) on Monday, NEC Director Kudlow said, "There is no second wave [of COVID-19] coming. It's just hot spots. They send in CDC teams, we've got the testing procedures, we've got the diagnostics, we've got the PPE. And so I really think it's a pretty good situation. ... Actually, I think nationwide the positivity rate is still quite low, well under 10 percent."

The Washington Times (6/22, Sherfinski, 492K) reports Kudlow "acknowledged that states such as Texas and Arizona are seeing recent upticks, but pointed out that numbers are trending down in other places like Colorado, Illinois, Michigan and the Washington, D.C., region."

A second Washington Times (6/22, Howell, 492K) report says White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany told reporters Monday that it's "a tragedy anytime a life is lost to coronavirus," but the Administration "was pleased to see fewer than 300 deaths reported the previous day." Said McEnany, "We are trending in the right direction. We are aware when there are rises here and there. And those embers, we are equipped to go in and handle and put [them] out and to save as many lives as possible."

Meanwhile, all three networks led their broadcasts Monday night with the increase in cases. NBC Nightly News (6/22, lead story, 2:40, Guthrie, 6.8M) opened saying, "The coronavirus is making a disturbing comeback. Twenty-three states reporting cases are up, in some, dramatically. Experts say it's not just because of more testing. It's sick people in hospitals. And after crowded scenes like these unfolding from California to Texas and Florida, young people are increasingly in the cross hairs." The CBS Evening News (6/22, lead story, 3:20, O'Donnell, 5.04M) similarly reported that "the US is seeing a dangerous increase in coronavirus cases in the South and West that could have implications for the entire country, especially as more young people are becoming infected." ABC World News Tonight (6/22, lead story, 4:05, Muir, 7.74M) too reported on what it called "alarming news on the coronavirus here in the US."

According to the AP (6/22, Lush, Eligren, Webber), "Alarming surges in coronavirus cases across the South and West raised fears Monday that the outbreak is spiraling out of control and that hard-won progress against the scourge is slipping away because of resistance among many Americans to wearing masks and keeping their distance from others." The AP adds, "Confirming predictions that the easing of state lockdowns over the past month and a half could lead to a comeback by the virus, cases surpassed 100,000 in Florida, hospitalizations are rising dramatically in Houston, and a startling 1 in 5 of those tested in Arizona are proving to be infected."

Politico (6/22, Sarkissian, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that officials in Florida "signaled concern Monday morning over a dramatic uptick in the state's coronavirus infection rate, urging residents – particularly young people – to stay vigilant about social distancing as the state prepares to host part of the Republican National Convention in two months. 'We are obviously extremely concerned,' Miami Mayor Francis Suarez, a Republican, said of the Sunshine State spike...noting that his city would not be moving into its third phase of reopening because of the increase in cases." Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) "warned Floridians that the virus is 'still deadly' and reiterated that it was imperative to stay focused on the continued threat."

Politico (6/22, Diamond, Wheaton, 4.29M) says, "Public health experts cited multiple factors for why the fortunes of the United States have differed from Western Europe – starting with the intense politicization that worked against a disciplined response, and the federal government's decision to let individual states take the lead in reopening." Politico adds, "The decisions of some states to end their lockdowns as early as possible – at levels of infection considerably higher than those that triggered reopening in Western Europe – appear to have consigned the United States to a far longer battle with the virus."

Azar Defends Trump On Testing. HHS Secretary Azar said on Newsmax TV's Spicer & Co. (6/22, 431K), "President Trump has led the creation of this historic testing system here in the United States where we lead the world in testing. ... He's driving us toward ever-higher levels of testing, penetration of testing, over 25 million tests done. We did three and a half million tests just last week."

Fauci To Warn Of "Tremendous Burden" On Health System During Flu Season Amid Pandemic.

Bloomberg (6/22, Edney, 4.73M) reports that US health agencies are "preparing for a flu season that will be complicated by the coronavirus pandemic, which they don't expect to be mitigated by a vaccine anytime soon." NIAID Director Fauci will tell a House panel Tuesday that the coronavirus is expected to "continue for some time" and "could place a tremendous burden" on what Bloomberg calls "an already stretched health care system" if coupled with the influenza season.

WSJournal Analysis: Contact Tracing Apps Falling Short As US Continues To Reopen.

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Winkler, Haggin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that local officials in Teton County, Wyoming, signed up for an MIT-developed coronavirus contact tracing app, but as tourists stream into local attractions, the app cannot accurately track location, is missing key features, and also faces data protection struggles.

Some Public Health Workers Leaving Positions Due To Political Pressure, Protests.

The Washington Post (6/22, Weiner, Cha, 14.2M) reports, "Public health workers, already underfunded and understaffed, are confronting waves of protest at their homes and offices in addition to pressure from politicians who favor a faster reopening." Even though "shutdown measures are broadly popular, a vocal minority opposes them vociferously," and "there have been attacks on officials' race, gender, sexual orientation and appearance."

Gilead Announces Plans To Test Inhalable Version Of Remdesivir.

The New York Times (6/22, Wu, 18.61M) reports Gilead Sciences announced Monday it "will soon start trials of an inhalable version of remdesivir, an antiviral drug that has shown promise as a therapeutic against the coronavirus in early trials." The drug "is currently given intravenously, which restricts its use to hospital settings."

Social Gatherings Fuel Rising Spread In Parts Of California.

The Los Angeles Times (6/22, Lin, 4.64M) reports that "elevated coronavirus transmissions and related hospitalizations are worsening in some parts of California, and a failure to wear masks in public and increased gatherings are partly to blame, health officials said." Both Riverside and San Bernardino counties have "recently appeared or reappeared on the state's list of counties needing targeted monitoring by state officials. In both counties, increases in gatherings were a factor in elevated disease transmission," as they were also a factor in "increasing hospitalizations in Santa Barbara, San Joaquin and Stanislaus counties."

Thermal Imaging Screeners Deployed At LAX. NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 10, 1:30, Guthrie, 6.8M) reported, "At LAX's international terminal today, a new layer of screening just before the TSA checkpoint: a thermal imaging camera now scanning thousands of passengers, both arriving and departing, all making a temperature reading within milliseconds. Anyone with a temperature above 100.4 will be approached for a secondary screening. If they have a fever, they will be asked not to fly. All information on arriving passengers showing fevers will be passed on to the CDC."

New York City Stores And Restaurants Reopen To Customers.

The AP (6/22, Peltz) reports that on Monday, New York City "ventured into a crucial stage of reopening as stores let people in...offices brought workers back, restaurants seated customers outdoors and residents both welcomed and worried about rebounding from the nation's deadliest coronavirus outbreak." Among the precautions in place: "Shoppers have to wear masks. Workers must undergo temperature checks. Makeup testing is temporarily banned, and clothes left in fitting rooms won't go back on the rack for 24 hours."

Reuters (6/22, Caspani, Layne) reports that "after more than 100 days of a coronavirus lockdown," the city was "the last region in New York state to move into Phase 2 of reopening with restaurants and bars offering outdoor service and many shops reopening." The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Li, Honan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that city officials estimate as many as 300,000 people could return to their offices during phase two, and the CBS Evening News (6/22, story 2, 1:25, O'Donnell, 5.04M) reported, "While this activity is one indication that the city is moving again, another perhaps more telling sign will be the New York City subway system, which before the outbreak averaged about 5.5 million riders a day. That then plummeted during the lockdown, but according to the transit authority, ridership is already back up to about two million a day."

NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 2, 1:45, Guthrie, 6.8M) reported that as some wonder "whether the state waited too long to reopen," Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) on Monday "defended the cautious approach," saying, "Following the science works. It saved the lives." NBC (Gutierrez) added: "And he says he's now seriously considering restricting travel from other states like Florida that are seeing an uptick in COVID cases."

Whitmer Won't Cooperate With GOP Inquiry On Nursing Homes.

The Detroit News (6/22, Burke, 825K) reports Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) "has declined a request by congressional Republicans to turn over records and brief committee staffers on the state's handling of the novel coronavirus in Michigan's nursing homes." Whitmer indicated to Republicans on a House coronavirus committee "that she wouldn't cooperate with their inquiry, saying the panel's investigatory authority does not lie with individual members and the committee's jurisdiction cannot be 'stretched' to include the health and safety of a state and its residents."

Arizona Imposes New Mask Rules As Cases Spike.

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Caldwell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Arizona has changed its public mask requirements amid a spike in coronavirus cases, but debate rages over whether residents of the state will comply, a sign of the issue's deep politicization.

South Carolina Activists Delay Protests As Some Demonstrators Become Infected.

The Washington Post (6/22, Shammass, Janes, Beachum, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports that South Carolina racial justice activists on Monday "said they would postpone future demonstrations or move them online after at least 13 people who took part in previous protests tested positive for the coronavirus." Organizers of "I Can't Breathe" protests in South Carolina "urged participants to get tested for the virus."

Mental Health And Addiction Services Appeal For Emergency Funding.

Politico (6/22, Roubain, Ehley, 4.29M) reports that mental health and addiction treatment centers and counselors "have been overwhelmed with work during the coronavirus pandemic and economic crash. But many are struggling to stay afloat amid confusion and delays over the federal bailout for the health care industry." According to Politico, "nearly a third haven't received any of the $175 billion HHS is doling out to hospitals and other health providers on the front lines of the coronavirus response. And now, they're appealing to the government for help."

McEnany Defends Trump's Reference To "Kung Flu."

The AP (6/22, Peoples, Lemire) reports that during his rally in Tulsa on Saturday, President Trump "add[ed] new fuel to the nation's culture wars...making racist references to the coronavirus, which originated in China and which he called 'kung flu.'" On Monday, White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "defended Trump's use of the term 'kung flu,' telling reporters..."What the president does do is point to the fact that the origin of the virus is China. It's a fair thing to point out as China tries to ridiculously rewrite history. ... What President Trump is saying, 'no China, I will label this virus for its place of origin.'" The Washington Examiner (6/22, Dibble, 448K) quotes McEnany as saying, "To be clear, I think the media is trying to play games with the terminology of this virus where the focus should be on the fact that China let this out of their country."

NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 4, 0:35, Guthrie, 6.67M) described Trump as "using a racial slur to describe the coronavirus crisis," and on ABC World News Tonight (6/22, story 2, 2:50, Muir, 7.74M), Terry Moran reported "Trump once again us[ed] racist language to describe the virus."

Politico (6/22, Oprysko, 4.29M) also points out "the phrase has been identified by many – including counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway – as racist," and adds that the President said on Saturday, "It's a disease that without question has more names than any disease in history. ... I can name kung flu, I can name 19 different versions of names. Many call it a virus, which it is. Many call it a flu, what difference?"

Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) said on CNN's OutFront (6/22, 409K), "I served on active duty in the United States military to defend the right of any American to say stupid, racist stuff. I just never imagined it would be the President of the United States saying it. This is not the first time. He's made a number of racist comments in three and a half years, and even now, instead of trying to unify our country, he is trying to divide us."

Rep. Val Demings (D-FL) said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22, 1.22M), "Maya Angelou said when people show you who they are, believe them. This President demonstrated before he was elected who he is. This is the President that demanded that the first African American president prove that he was born in America, in addition to all of the other racist things he said like s-hole countries, for example."

Dana Bash said on CNN's Situation Room (6/22, 554K), "It's a racist term. Full stop. That's it. The Press Secretary was obviously ready for the question. ... And it was about as canned and as expected as you would think from this White House."

Deputy Assistant to the President Ja'Ron Smith appeared on the Wayne DuPree Podcast (6/22, 51.8M) to discuss the rally and other issues.

White House Says Trump Signed Off On Berman Dismissal.

The CBS Evening News (6/22, story 5, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.78M) reported Attorney General Barr "is denying charges of political interference after he fired a key US attorney to make way for a nominee with no experience as a federal prosecutor. That firing has brought accusations that Barr is using the Justice Department to protect the President and his allies." CBS' Nancy Cordes reported Barr announced Friday that US Attorney Geoffrey Berman "was stepping down, but Berman...denied resigning and went to work on Saturday. ... Barr, with the President's blessing, then fired him outright." NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 6, 2:00, Guthrie, 6.8M) reported, "The questions are only growing tonight over the President's abrupt firing" of Berman, and "Democrats are crying foul."

Reuters (6/22) reports White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany indicated on Monday that the President "signed off on a request" by Barr to dismiss Berman, and "said the move was made to make space for U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Jay Clayton to take the job." The Washington Times (6/22, Sherfinski, 492K) reports McEnany said Berman "was not fired because of his role in overseeing investigations into associates of President Trump." The Hill (6/22, Samuels, 2.98M) reports McEnany "sought to downplay" the President's involvement, saying, "He was involved in a sign-off capacity."

Politico (6/22, Cheney, 4.29M) reports the House Judiciary Committee is preparing a subpoena to obtain Barr's testimony next week, Chairman Jerrold Nadler said Monday night. The Washington Times (6/22, Mordock, 492K) reports Senate Minority Schumer on Monday "demanded the investigation into the 'corrupt firing.'" But the Washington Post (6/22, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports Schumer's Republican colleagues "offered a muted response." Senate Majority Whip Thune said, "It's kind of like previous firings, I would say, but, these people all serve at the pleasure of the President." Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX) "describ[ed] the matter as a 'sideshow' and 'another tempest in the teapot.'"

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Gurman, O'Brien, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that one day before Barr announced plans to replace Berman, the DOJ asked Berman to sign a letter criticizing New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) over the city enforcement of social distancing rules to block religious gatherings but not protests, which Berman refused to do.

Ex-FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22, 1.22M), "The letter on Friday night clearly misrepresented the circumstances around Berman's leaving the post as the head of the southern district of New York, and the Attorney General's and President's conflicting stories about the firing on Saturday only made the matter even more confused. This repeated misrepresentation to the American people has to really undermine people's confidence in the Department of Justice in the way they are doing their job."

Berman's predecessor Preet Bharara said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22, 1.22M), "The saga dating back to Friday is incredibly unseemly. You have multiple people who understand that the chief law enforcement officer, federal enforcement officer in the country, made a misleading statement, some might say a lie, in an effort to oust Berman in a convenient way."

Top South Korean Official Blasts Bolton Book As “Inaccurate” And “Dangerous.”

The Washington Times (6/22, Meier, 492K) reports that “allies and adversaries alike are challenging some of the revelations in – and dealing with the fallout from – John R. Bolton’s controversial new memoir.” Officials in Israel, Japan and South Korea “are speaking out about revelations in the book, while China and Russia have issued notably muted reactions to some of the explosive charges.”

Reuters (6/22, Shin) reports South Korea’s national security adviser, Chung Eui-yong, said in a statement on Monday that “accounts by...Bolton of discussions between leaders of the United States and the two Koreas in his upcoming book are inaccurate and distorted.” While reports have cited Bolton as writing that South Korean President Moon Jae-in, “had raised unrealistic expectations with both” North Korean leader Kim Jong-un and President Trump “for his own ‘unification’ agenda,” Chung said Bolton’s book “does not reflect accurate facts and substantially distorts facts,” and warned that its publication sets a “dangerous precedent” because “unilaterally publishing consultations made based on mutual trust violates the basic principles of diplomacy and could severely damage future negotiations.”

The Washington Post (6/22, Kim, Hudson, 14.2M) reports Chung “accused Bolton of ‘being inaccurate’ in his memoir and ‘distorting the reality.’” However, according to the Post, Chung “did not specify which parts of Bolton’s memoir he claimed were inaccurate or distorted.”

Bolton Book Could Help Huawei CFO Avoid Extradition To US. Politico (6/22, Blatchford, 4.29M) reports that “allegations about President Donald Trump in a new book by...John Bolton could be a factor in Huawei executive Meng Wanzhou’s fight to avoid extradition from Canada to the United States.” According to Politico, “Passages from the book penned by Bolton... are likely to be explored as a way to boost arguments of political involvement in the case of the Chinese telecom giant’s chief financial officer.” Politico adds, “Of particular interest are moments in which Bolton says Trump linked the case to a potential U.S. trade deal with China. Bolton writes in the book that Trump viewed concerns raised by his advisers about Huawei and the ZTE telecom firm being national security threats as ‘an opportunity to make personal gestures to’ Chinese President Xi Jinping.”

Politico (6/22, Forrest, Gardner, 4.29M) also reports that on Monday, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau “doubled down...and insisted China has ‘made a direct link’ between that country’s detention of Michael Kovrig and Michael Spavor and Canada’s arrest of” Meng. Trump is quoted as saying, “It has been obvious from the beginning that this was a political decision made by the Chinese government and we deplore it and have from the very beginning.”

Trump: Bolton “Grossly Incompetent And A Liar.” President Trump on Monday tweeted, “I gave John Bolton, who was incapable of being Senate confirmed because he was considered a wacko, and was not liked, a chance. I always like hearing differing points of view. He turned out to be grossly incompetent, and a liar. See judge’s opinion. CLASSIFIED INFORMATION!!!”

NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 3, 1:15, Guthrie, 6.8M) reported Bolton is “unloading on the President...before the release of his new book” on Tuesday, but “President Trump [is] hitting back at Bolton, calling his former national security adviser a ‘wacko,’” “grossly incompetent, and a liar.”

Secretary of State Pompeo, meanwhile, said on Fox News’ Hannity (6/22, 27.59M), “The President and others, myself included, had to cut him out of meetings because he was leaking or he would twist things or he would lie. It was a really difficult situation where John Bolton thought he was more important than the President of the United States and the American people. ... This President’s policy is something that John Bolton should’ve been proud of, and instead he stepped away in a way that fundamentally misrepresents what we’ve done.”

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said on Fox News’ The Story (6/22, 27.59M), “What always surprises me about Dr. Strangelove here is that he never cared much about China, he was always trying to bomb Iran or send troops to the Middle East. ... You have a province of Muslims that China took over decades ago, and in a violent act, and what is going on now is an ongoing ethnic cleansing and culture like they are doing in Tibet. Here’s the thing: this President, Donald J. Trump, has actually done things about that. We have for example, decent restrictions on the people who run the camps. ... The President has been very aggressive, as has [Pompeo], about denouncing these concentration camps.”

Sarah Sanders: Bolton Was “Drunk On Power” At White House. The New York Post (6/22, Bowden, 4.57M) reports Bolton was “drunk on power” during his time in the White House, “acting like a diva on overseas trips and clashing with other officials, according to an upcoming tell-all book from former press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders.” Bolton was “unpopular with other Administration officials even before his new book” according to Sanders’ new memoir, previewed in an Axios report published Monday. Sanders writes, “Bolton was a classic case of a senior White House official drunk on power, who had forgotten that nobody elected him to anything.”

McEnany: Bolton Wanted The US To Go To War Against Both Iran And North Korea. Appearing on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (6/22, 831K), White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said, “John Bolton will be remembered as a failed national security adviser. He’s a warmonger, someone who would have had us at war with North Korea and Iran if it was up to him. The President brought him in to be a counterbalancing voice, because the President appreciates alternative opinions. But, ultimately, President Trump’s gut leads the way, and thank goodness it was President Trump at the helm who was able to deescalate tensions with those two countries, because John Bolton was a complete and utter disaster.”

State Spokesperson Muted Reporter Asking About Bolton. Politico (6/22, Cohen, 4.29M) reports State Department spokesperson Morgan Ortagus “muted the line of a reporter asking about John Bolton’s book during a briefing extolling press freedom.” The telephone briefing was convened ahead of the “designation of four additional Chinese news outlets as foreign missions. But when David Brunnstrom, a journalist from Reuters, asked whether U.S. allies had reached out to the assistant secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs in the wake of Bolton’s book, his line was muted.”

Bolton Won’t Rule Out Testifying Before House. ABC World News Tonight (6/22, story 7, 1:35, Muir, 7.94M) reported that during an interview Sunday with Martha Raddatz, Bolton was pressed "repeatedly why didn't he share the information in his book with the American people during the President's impeachment trial." Bolton told Raddatz that his testimony "would not have made any difference." Raddatz said that "Bolton isn't ruling out that he could still testify, and tonight, we know that top Democrats are seriously considering whether they should subpoena him."

In an interview with George Stephanopoulos for ABC's Good Morning America (6/22, 3.47M), Bolton was asked, "If Democrats subpoena you, will you testify?" Bolton replied, "The primary way that we rein presidents in is not through impeachment, it's through elections. And presidential behavior can be reckless, reprehensible, dangerous – doesn't necessarily make it impeachable. I think one of the mistakes the Democrats made – and they made plenty – is the idea that everything is resolved through the impeachment process. And they mishandled it badly. I called it 'impeachment malpractice' in the book."

House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff said on CNN's The Lead (6/22, 910K), "I think there's actually a lot of interest in Congress in hearing what [John] Bolton has to say, as incredibly belated as it is. And I hope, when we come back into session later this week, we will have an opportunity to make a decision on that. He's made some very serious allegations against the President, some of which were known. ... And yet there are other parts of this pattern of putting the President's interests, personal interests, above the country that are exposed for the first time, that he was reaching out to China."

Rep. Val Demings (D-FL) said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22, 1.22M), "He had an opportunity to put his country first, as opposed to his wallet, by coming before the impeachment trial, before the Senate, and testifying under oath. Mr. Bolton chose not to do that, and I'm very disappointed in him and his lack of patriotism. ... It would be great for the American people to hear John Bolton's testimony under oath."

More Than 6M Watched Bolton's ABC News Interview. The Washington Examiner (6/22, Brest, 448K) reports that "more than 6 million people" watched John Bolton's ABC News interview on Sunday night. However, the Examiner says "the audience size...paled in comparison to the ABC News interview former FBI Director James Comey got in 2018 in the run-up to the release of his tell-all book, A Higher Loyalty. Comey got 9.3 million viewers, according to Nielsen."

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/22, 831K), former Chief of Staff Mulvaney Mick Mulvaney said Bolton's interview with ABC was a "betrayal of confidence," and "really a classless display." Mulvaney added, "It was hard to watch. To have somebody in the Oval Office with the President almost every day sort of turn on him just because he didn't like the style, didn't like the policies. ... As a member of the inner circle of his team...you don't run and write a book about it and make a million bucks."

Trump On Steele Dossier: "We Caught Them."

The Washington Times (6/22, Scarborough, 492K) reports that "during an exclusive Oval Office interview last week," President Trump was asked about the so-called Steele Dossier. Trump "responded with an indictment of the FBI and his predecessor." Trump said, "It was an attempted overthrow of the government of the United States of America and duly elected President. And we caught them." Trump "did not directly address Russia's desire to smear him. Instead, he launched an attack on the agency that relied on the dossier, the FBI, and on [then-President] Obama's supposed involvement."

House Committee To Hold Hearing On Firing Of State IG Next Week.

Reuters (6/22, Zengerle) reports the House Foreign Affairs Committee has scheduled a July 2 hearing in its investigation of the firing of State Department Inspector General Steve Linick. Under Secretary of State for Management Brian Bulatao is expected to testify.

DOJ Defends FISA Warrant Requests In Court Filing.

The Washington Times (6/22, Mordock, 492K) reports the Justice Department "defended its record of submitting warrants under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, insisting that errors uncovered by a department watchdog were largely minor typographical errors that did not influence the court's decision, according to a court filing unsealed Monday." The DOJ's filing with the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court "said the errors 'were not capable of influencing the court's probable cause determination' and did not render the warrants invalid."

Trump To Mark Completion Of 200 Miles Of Border Wall In Arizona On Tuesday.

The Washington Examiner (6/22, Giaritelli, 448K) reports that on Tuesday, the President "will travel to the southern border...to attend a ceremony celebrating 200 miles of completed border wall construction under his administration." Trump "will visit Yuma, Arizona, for a roundtable briefing with US border officials on trade and travel operations and the progress of the southern border barrier's construction at the international boundary and then will participate in a wall 'commemoration' ceremony." The Examiner adds "the trip, less than five months ahead of the November election, gives Trump a chance to flout his success in following through on his campaign promise to secure the border with a wall."

On NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 5, 0:50, Guthrie, 6.8M), Geoff Bennett reported the event will take place "at an Arizona megachurch," where "leaders of that church in an online video today say they're using new technology they claim kills coronavirus." NBC added, "We reached out to the church for comment. So far no response, but organizers say they're requiring face masks at tomorrow's event."

Erin Burnett said on CNN's OutFront (6/22, 409K), "The President shows no signs of slowing down. Tomorrow he heads to Phoenix in Arizona for an event at a church that can hold 3,000 people. This is a state where hospitalizations are on the rise. Masks are not mandatory at Trump's campaign event in the church, though the city of Phoenix has made them mandatory. The President flaunting the rules that apply to everyone else in the city he is visiting."

Jonathan Reiner of the George Washington University School of Medicine and Health Sciences said on CNN's OutFront (6/22, 409K), "The risk here is accelerating this pandemic. People are worrying about a second wave, but we're squarely in the first wave in the South. Over the weekend, about 10 percent of the cases in the United States were recorded in Arizona. Why would we have a public gathering, particularly one that doesn't enforce basic social distancing or a mask, during the high point for the virus?"

Trump Objects To Fox Report On Wall, Touts 200-Mile Mark. The President took to Twitter Monday to write, "Could somebody please explain to reporter Doug Mckelway of @FoxNews that the Border Wall has long been under construction, the battle (war) is won, the Dems have FINALLY given in. In fact, I will be in Arizona tomorrow to celebrate the 212th plus mile of completion. @BretBaier." Trump also tweeted, "Rather hard to believe that @FoxNews didn't know that the Border Wall is well under construction, fully financed, & already over 200 miles long? Will soon be finished! They just reported that 'it is something that Dems are unlikely to budge on in this election year' @BretBaier."

The tweet referred to a comment McKelway made during a Fox News Special Report (6/22, 27.59M) story on DACA that "many Republicans would like to see permanent status for Dreamers tied to comprehensive immigration reform, including a border wall, something Democrats will be unlikely to budge on in this election year." Later in the broadcast, anchor Bret Baier, noting the President's tweet, said, "I think the President may be watching," saying the tweet "just popped up about a story that we did about DACA and some of the kids involved."

GOP Lawmakers Fear Push To Repeal ACA Could Imperil Them.

The New York Times (6/22, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports that increasingly, Republicans are concerned "their decade-long push to repeal the Affordable Care Act will hurt them in the November elections, as coronavirus cases spike around the country and millions of Americans who have lost jobs during the pandemic lose their health coverage as well." This "issue will come into sharp focus this week, when the White House is expected to file legal briefs asking the Supreme Court to put an end to" the ACA. House Speaker Pelosi, "seizing on the moment, will unveil a Democratic bill to lower the cost of health care, with a vote scheduled for next week in the House."

Pandemic Has Increased New York City Criminal Court Backlog To More Than 39K Cases.

The New York Times (6/22, A1, Feuer, Hong, Weiser, Ransom, 18.61M) has a 2,400-word report on what it calls New York City's "legal limbo," where "the backlog of pending cases in the city's criminal courts has risen by nearly a third" to 39,200 due to the coronavirus pandemic. The Times says "hundreds of jury trials in the city have been put on hold indefinitely," and "arraignments, pleas and evidentiary hearings are being held by video, with little public scrutiny."

Trump: Grenell Will Return To Administration "At A High Level."

The Washington Examiner (6/22, Leonardi, 448K) reports that in an interview with the Daily Caller conducted on Friday, President Trump said former Acting DNI Richard Grenell "will take up a 'high-level' position in his administration after a short 'breather.'" Trump is quoted as saying, "He'll come back in some form, at a high level. He was fantastic, the job he did."

White House Stands By Tata After Inflammatory Anti-Obama Tweets Resurface.

Townhall (6/22, McCarthy, 177K) reports "President Trump nominated retired one-star Army Gen. Anthony Tata to assume the third-highest position at the Pentagon, as the Undersecretary of Defense for Policy." The nomination's initial "glowing, bipartisan support...was upended when a handful of Gen. Tata's controversial tweets from 2018 resurfaced. In 2018, he deemed former President Obama a 'terrorist leader' and said that Islam is the 'most oppressive violent religion' that he knew of." However, "given his impressive resume, the White House stands behind Gen. Tata." Deputy White House Press Secretary Judd Deere told Townhall, "His education, background, and record has earned him bi-partisan praise, and the Senate should not delay his confirmation."

Hassett Leaving White House For Second Time.

The Washington Post (6/22, Stein, 14.2M) reports that Kevin Hassett, "one of President Trump's most trusted economic advisers, will leave the White House this summer." Hassett, "who returned to the White House as an unpaid volunteer in March, said in an interview that his departure is in line with the administration's initial plan when he was brought back." Hassett "said his agreement was to return to the White House for about 90 days, and he has already stayed for more than that amount of time." The Washington Examiner (6/22, Brest, 448K) reports that "another member of the National Economic Council, Andrew Olmstead, a special assistant to the president for financial policy, left his position on Friday." Reuters (6/22, Mason), among other news outlets, also covers Hassett's departure.

McEnany Denies Trump Was Angry Over Tulsa Rally Crowd Size.

On ABC's Good Morning America (6/22, 3.47M), Terry Moran said, "It was a rocky start for President Trump back on the campaign trail."

He bragged there wouldn't be an empty seat in Tulsa on Saturday night, his first big rally since March 2. ... But in the end, the President was a bit of a bust in Tulsa. ...Tulsa's fire department saying about 6200 people showed up in an arena that held 19,000 for the President. Afterwards, Trump was said to be furious. He won Oklahoma by 36 percent, so campaign manager Brad Parscale's job may be in some trouble. But the bottom line here is really this was evidence that perhaps the President's support has taken a hit in recent weeks. Polls certainly show that, but more than anything else, people may be wary in the middle of a pandemic of showing up at a large indoor event where masks were optional and a lot of people in there were maskless."

On CBS This Morning (6/22, 2.69M), Weijia Jiang said, "On Saturday, the President looked out into a sea of blue empty seats," and "sources familiar with the Trump Campaign tell CBS News that President Trump was frustrated and angry over the turnout." On NBC's Today (6/22, 3.24M), Craig Melvin said, "That event did not deliver in terms of the expected turnout, but this morning there's a big debate over precisely why." Geoff Bennett went on to report that "the President and his allies had ginned up expectations for a packed-to-the-rafters crowd...but that massive crowd he expected didn't materialize. ... Now a Trump adviser tells NBC News that Saturday's rally was 'a bad night for our effort,' adding, 'Everything was awful. Crowd size, lack of focus in the speech, way too many riff stories.'"

Appearing on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/22, 831K), White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany was asked "how angry was the President that there was just a sea of blue empty chairs" at the rally. McEnany said, "The President was not angry at all. The President was quite energized. I was with him after the rally. It was a huge success. His speech got rave reviews. He was in good spirits. ... He was in a great mood. It was a great night and there was a lot to celebrate. ... His speech was very good, focusing on all of the accomplishments of this Administration." Fox's Steve Doocy replied, "You're saying he was not furious? Because we've known Donald Trump – he was on this show every Monday for years. That guy, who used to be on our show, would have been furious that something went haywire."

Trump: Rally Gave Fox News Largest Saturday Night Audience Ever. President Trump tweeted, "WOW! The Trump Rally gives @FoxNews the 'LARGEST SATURDAY NIGHT AUDIENCE IN ITS HUSTORY'. Isn't it amazing that virtually nobody in the Lamestream Media is reporting this rather major feat!"

AP Analysis: Tulsa Rally Highlighted Weaknesses In Trump Campaign. The AP (6/22, Peoples, Lemire) reports President Trump's Tulsa rally "highlighted growing vulnerabilities and crystallized a divisive reelection message that largely ignores broad swaths of voters" including "independents, suburban women and people of color." The AP adds that "there are signs that independents and educated voters – particularly suburban women – have turned against him," and party "strategists increasingly believe that only a dramatic turnaround in the economy can revive his reelection aspirations." The AP also reports that people in the White House and the campaign were upset about the turnout at the rally being less than they expected.

WPost Accuses Trump Of Choosing "Bigotry" And "Division" Over "Conciliation And Healing." The Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M) in an editorial says that Trump "faced a moment of truth" at his Tulsa rally, in which he might have focused on "the politics of division, hoping to energize the minority of Americans who reliably support him and prevent or discourage as many others as possible from voting," or he might offer "conciliation and healing," and so "expand the pool of voters willing to vote for him." Trump, the Post says, chose the former and "opted for bigotry, division and mean-spiritedness." The Post also says that it may have been "naive to think he could change his tune...even to save himself as he plummets in the polls."

WPost Analysis: Trump Obsessed With Defending His Mental And Physical Fitness.

The Washington Post (6/22, Parker, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports on an "early June meeting in the Cabinet Room" to provide an "update on President Trump's reelection campaign," at which President Trump focused on "a cognitive screening test" he had taken during his 2018 physical, and "waxed on about how he'd dazzled the proctors with his stellar performance." Trump also said that Joe Biden would not do well "and suggested challenging him to take the test." The Post says that this is "part of Trump's growing preoccupation in recent weeks over perceptions of his mental and physical health," and also says that "the attacks Trump has previously levied against Biden...have boomeranged back on him."

LGBTQ Advocates Sue Administration In Wake Of Supreme Court Ruling.

Politico (6/22, Luthi, 4.29M) reports that on Monday, "a coalition of advocacy groups sued the Trump administration...over its rollback of LGBTQ patient protections, arguing that last week's Supreme Court decision extending workplace legal protections to gay and transgender employees invalidates the new rules." According to Politico, "The suit marks the first challenge stemming from the 6-3 high court decision that anti-discrimination protections based on sex also apply to a person's gender identity and sexual orientation." Politico says "advocates including the Los Angeles LGBT Center, the Association of LGBTQ Psychiatrists as well as doctors and clinics, contend that the ruling nullifies the Trump administration's final rules exempting transgender patients from Obamacare's civil rights protections in health care."

WPost Slams HHS' "Cruel" Transgender Rights Rule. The Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M) editorializes that when HHS "proposed a rule last summer seeking to roll back non-discrimination protections for transgender people in health care, 155,966 public comments came through in response. Yet the final product released this month is nearly identical to the original – just as insidious and now, according to the precedent set by the Supreme Court last week, just as likely illegal." To the Post, "Yanking away access to health care for a vulnerable population would be cruel at any moment. Doing it amid a pandemic is especially dangerous."

House Infrastructure Bill Includes Wind, Solar Tax Credit Extensions.

The Washington Examiner (6/22, Smith, 448K) reports, "House Democrats are proposing to extend wind and solar tax credits by at least five years as part of their $1.5 trillion infrastructure package, teeing up a fight with Senate Republicans." The Moving Forward Act "incorporates a discussion draft released late last year by Democrats on the House Ways and Means Committee that would extend a variety of clean energy tax credits. ... In addition to the wind and solar tax credits...the legislation would extend incentives for carbon capture technology and offshore wind."

Major Cable Systems Do Not Carry OAN.

Bloomberg (6/22, Smith, 4.73M) reports that One America News Network, "the conservative TV station that's been criticized for sharing conspiracy theories, has found a loyal fan in Donald Trump." but "the hard part will be parlaying that exposure into a larger audience." Bloomberg says that "unlike the networks it wants to compete with – Fox News, MSNBC and CNN – OAN has never been carried by big pay-TV providers like Comcast Corp., Charter Communications Inc. and Dish Network Corp." Bloomberg adds that "to reach its audience, the network depends heavily on its largest distributor, AT&T Inc.'s DirecTV, which has been losing subscribers at a rapid clip." OAN "says it's available in about 35 million U.S. TV homes.," and "finding a spot on systems owned by Comcast, Charter and Dish would more than double that number. ... For comparison, as of last June, Fox News had about 84 million subscribers."

Trump Tweets Against Voting By Mail.

USA Today (6/22, Garrison, 10.31M) reports that President Trump has added "a new line of attack" to his opposition to mail-in ballots, "warning without evidence that it could lead to 'foreign countries' printing ballots to undermine results." While USA Today says, "voting experts and election officials swiftly disputed the claim," Trump tweeted, "RIGGED 2020 ELECTION: MILLIONS OF MAIL-IN BALLOTS WILL BE PRINTED BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES, AND OTHERS. IT WILL BE THE SCANDAL OF OUR TIMES!" On Sunday Attorney General Bill Barr told Fox News, adds USA Today, that voting by mail "absolutely opens the floodgates to fraud." USA Today cited experts describing security measures to make that unlikely.

Trump also tweeted, "Because of MAIL-IN BALLOTS, 2020 will be the most RIGGED Election in our nations history – unless this stupidity is ended. We voted during World War One & World War Two with no problem, but now they are using Covid in order to cheat by using Mail-Ins!"

Trump further tweeted, "If people can go out and protest, riot, break into stores, and create all sorts of havoc, they can also go out and VOTE – and keep our Election Honest. With millions of mail-in ballots being sent out, who knows where they are going, and to whom?"

Pence Continues To List Indiana Governor's Mansion As Primary Address To Vote. The AP (6/22) reports Vice President Pence continues to use the Indiana governor's mansion as his primary address for the purposes of absentee voting in Indiana, despite the fact that he has not lived in Indiana since 2017. The Hill (6/22, Pitofsky, 2.98M) reports Pence and Second Lady Karen Pence "mailed in their ballots for the June GOP primary in their home state of Indiana on April 13," and he "voted absentee by mail for the...general election in 2018." The article says that it "is not illegal for the couple to use their previous address to vote by mail."

WPost Analysis: Election Results Could Take Weeks Due To Number Of Mail-In Ballots. The Washington Post (6/22, Gardner, 14.2M) reports that just as after recent elections in Pennsylvania, Georgia, and Nevada "some races hung in the balance for days" while officials counted absentee ballots, so in Kentucky and New York on Tuesday, "officials have already announced that some results will not be available for as long as a week." That is due to "an avalanche of mail ballots." The Post adds that indicates that this fall, "an election night result in the race for the White House" may not happen. The Post says, "a close race" may "take days, even weeks, to resolve." The Post also reports Trump's tweets against mail-in ballots, and adds as USA Today did, "There is no evidence that such wide-scale fraud is possible, and election officials across the country have disputed both Trump's and Barr's claims."

Democratic Secretaries Of State: GOP Voting Rights Efforts "Rooted In White Supremacy."

The Washington Post (6/22, Williams, 14.2M) reports, "As President Trump continues to rail about a 'rigged 2020 election' on Twitter, the group representing Democratic secretaries of state released its own social media campaign, accusing Trump and the Republican Party of engaging in voter suppression that is 'rooted in white supremacy.'" The Post adds "the video ad by the Democratic Association of Secretaries of State makes the issue of voting rights a part of the current conversation about addressing systemic racism," and "uses images of black protesters from the 1950s and '60s demanding voting rights, alongside those of current protests over police violence, sparked by the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody."

WTimes Analysis: Arguments About Voter Suppression Will Play Important Role In 2020. The Washington Times (6/22, Mordock, Lovelace, 492K) reports that the "ghostly presence" of "voter suppression" may "haunt the 2020 elections." The left, says the Times, "says voter suppression is real, happening all around you and will get worse – and Republicans are behind it," while "conservatives say voter suppression is a myth and propaganda."

WPost Analysis: Trump Campaign Targets Women.

The Washington Post (6/22, Scherer, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports, "The college-educated female rebellion against the president in 2018...has begun to register more deeply in recent months among non-college educated and older women," and the Tulsa rally, says the Post,

"reinforced the sentiments that political strategists say have driven women to desert him." Meanwhile, the Post adds that Trump's campaign believes "that growing his support among women is critical" to victory. Trump campaign spokesman Ken Farnaso said, "What women want is a safe and strong America, opportunity for a better tomorrow, more money in their pockets, and lower taxes." The campaign, says the Post, has targeted women with ads attacking Joe Biden on measures he polls well with women on, while the Biden campaign has tried "to avoid easy characterization that could decrease women's support."

Trump And His Campaign Portray Biden As Diminished By Age.

Politico (6/22, Siders, 4.29M) reports that President Trump "and his allies" have "signaled the beginning of a scorched earth campaign," and on Friday, the Trump campaign "released an ad...depicting [Joe] Biden as aged and confused, calling him 'clearly diminished' and lacking 'mental fortitude.'" Politico says that during his rally in Tulsa on Tuesday, Trump "continued to suggest without evidence that Biden has health issues, saying, 'There's something wrong with Biden.'"

The Washington Examiner (6/22, Lim, 448K) reports that some "Democratic figures and strategists...have been arguing Biden is 'fine in his basement.'" But "Trump staffers are trying to neutralize the tactic by urging cable news outlets to broadcast gaffe-prone Biden's town halls, listening sessions, and addresses in full. They're also highlighting how it's been more than 80 days since his last press conference."

Biden Campaign Agrees To Three Debates.

The Washington Post (6/22, Viser, 14.2M) reports that on Monday, Joe Biden's campaign "committed to three scheduled debates with President Trump in September and October and criticized the president for taking varied positions on whether he would participate in debates and how many." According to the Post, the Biden campaign's letter to the Commission on Presidential Debates, which was written by Biden campaign manager Jen O'Malley Dillon, "stated that Biden will participate in the debates already planned by the commission, which would be on Sept. 29, Oct. 15, and Oct. 22." The Post notes that "the letter came several days after top Trump aides...began pushing for four debates and called for them to be held earlier than usual so Americans voting early can make their decisions."

The Washington Examiner (6/22, Larsen, 448K) reports that the Trump campaign has also "complain[ed] that two of the debates are scheduled for Thursday evenings, conflicting with NFL games." According to the Examiner, "The thinking is that Biden will perform poorly in debates and that Trump can better define him and his record in voters' minds." The Examiner says "one of the debate commission chairmen said last week if the two candidates agree on participating in a fourth debate, they will work to make it a reality."

University Of Michigan To Withdraw From Hosting Presidential Debate. The Detroit Free Press (6/22, Jesse, 1.52M) reports that according to unnamed sources, the University of Michigan will not host a presidential debate this fall. The university is reportedly concerned about risks from the COVID-19 pandemic.

Progressives Seeking Gains In New York Democratic Congressional Primaries.

Politico (6/22, Montellaro, Ferris, Mutnick, 4.29M) reports that "progressives are plotting to shake up New York's congressional delegation" in New York's Democratic primaries on Tuesday. Rep. Eliot Engel (D-NY) is "their best shot to oust," but "nearly every sitting House Democrat in New York City and its suburbs faces some level of threat from the left." Rep. Yvette Clarke (D-NY) "is perhaps the most endangered incumbent after Engel." Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "has a well-funded primary challenger – as does moderate Democratic Rep. Tom Suozzi on Long Island." In NY15, progressives are concerned that City Council Member Rubén Díaz Sr. (D) "could slip through and win the nomination." Díaz, says Politico, has "publicly voiced his support for" President Trump. In NY17, Rep. Nita Lowey (D-NY) is retiring and there is no "clear frontrunner."

US Soldier Charged With Plotting Terror Attack With "Occult-Based Neo-Nazi" Group.

The Army Times (6/22, Rempfer, 346K) reports "a US soldier assigned to an installation in Europe has been charged with trying to plan a deadly ambush on members of his own unit during an upcoming deployment with the help of an 'occult-based neo-Nazi' group known as the 'Order of the Nine Angles,' according to an indictment unsealed Monday." Pvt. Ethan P. Melzer "confessed to plotting what he intended to be a mass casualty attack during an interview with US agents on May 30, according to the US Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York." The Order of the Nine Angles "is described by the Justice Department as a racially motivated violent extremist group." Members have "espoused violent, neo-Nazi, anti-Semitic, and Satanic beliefs, and have expressed admiration for both Nazis, such as Adolf Hitler, and Islamic jihadists, such as Usama Bin Laden."

On ABC World News Tonight (6/22, story 4, 1:00, Muir, 7.74M), Pierre Thomas said, "The plan [was] allegedly diabolical. The London-based neo-Nazi group was to pass the information to jihadist terrorists so they could attack the soldiers."

The CBS Evening News (6/22, story 3, 1:10, O'Donnell, 4.78M) reported "the indictment does not make clear how it was supposed to be carried out or where, although the Order of Nine Angels is reportedly based in England," and Stars And Stripes (6/22, Olson, 30K) that Audrey Strauss, acting US attorney for the Southern District of New York, said "Melzer was 'motivated by racism and hatred as he attempted to carry out this ultimate act of betrayal.'" Axios (6/22, Perano, 521K), USA Today (6/22, Phillips, 10.31M), the New York Times (6/22, Feuer, 18.61M), and the AP (6/22, Neumeister), among other news outlets, also cover the indictment.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 42.9%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 42.9%, and his disapproval at 55.3%. Trump's approval is down 0.1 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.2.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (6/17-6/21) finds Trump's approval at 46%, and his disapproval at 52%.

World Bank Head Bullish On Debt Relief, Wants Greater Private Sector Participation.

Reuters (6/22, Shalal) reports World Bank President David Malpass said Monday that the G20 countries had made good progress toward providing debt relief to the world's poorest countries, though he said the effort needed additional relief and more participation from private sector creditors. Malpass "told Reuters in an interview that 35 of 73 eligible countries were participating in the G20 debt relief initiative, and more had expressed interest." Bloomberg (6/22, Martin, 4.73M) also reports.

BOE's Bailey Signals Shift In Strategy For Removing Emergency Stimulus.

Reuters (6/22, Milliken) reports Bank of England Governor Andrew Bailey on Monday "said...that the central bank should start to sell government bonds back to the market before it raises interest rates significantly, which would represent a reversal of long-standing BoE policy." Although bond sales "are some way off," as the BoE last week "increased its bond purchase target by 100 billion pounds to 745 billion pounds ($922 billion)," Bailey said this level of quantitative easing "shouldn't always be taken for granted." In an op-ed for Bloomberg, Bailey wrote, "When the time comes to withdraw monetary stimulus, in my opinion it may be better to consider adjusting the level of reserves first without waiting to raise interest rates on a sustained basis."

German Deputy Finance Minister Says Banks Should Prepare For Hard Brexit.

Reuters (6/22, Martin) reports Germany's Deputy Finance Minister Joerg Kukies said Monday at the Frankfurt Finance Summit that banks should be prepared for a hard Brexit, "adding there is a very strong risk of a tough situation ahead." He said, "Every financial institution has to make sure that they are prepared for a hard Brexit, if and when it happens. We don't want that and we hope that it can be avoided. But anyone who listens to the progress updates of the negotiating teams has to take into account that there is a very significant risk that we will go into a difficult situation."

American Among Dead In Britain's Latest Terrorist Attack.

Reuters (6/22, Nicholls) reports that the English town of Reading "held a minute's silence on Monday for the victims of a stabbing that killed three people including an American in the latest terrorism-linked attack." The Philadelphia Inquirer reported one of the dead was US citizen Joe Ritchie-Bennett, 39, "who had lived in Britain for 15 years." US Ambassador Woody Johnson "sent condolences to families of victims."

Trump Says He Will Only Meet With Maduro To Discuss His "Peaceful Exit."

Reuters (6/22, Heavey, Holland) reports that on Monday, President Trump "walked back comments that he would consider meeting Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro, saying he would only do so to discuss Maduro's departure from office." In an interview with Axios published on Sunday, "Trump said he would consider meeting Maduro and played down his earlier decision to recognize opposition leader Juan Guaidó as Venezuela's legitimate leader." However, on Monday, Trump tweeted, "My Admin has always stood on the side of FREEDOM and LIBERTY and against the oppressive Maduro regime! I would only meet with Maduro to discuss one thing: a peaceful exit from power!" Trump told Axios on Friday, "I would maybe think about [meeting with Maduro]. ... Maduro would like to meet. And I'm never opposed to meetings, but at this moment, I've turned them down."

The Washington Post (6/22, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that in his interview with Axios, Trump "suggested he has had second thoughts about his decision to recognize [Guaidó] as the legitimate leader of Venezuela after the country's disputed election and said he is open to honoring a request from Maduro to meet. 'Trump talks tough on Venezuela, but admires thugs and dictators like Nicolas Maduro,' Joe Biden said on Twitter "in response to Trump's comments in the interview." Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) "took a gentler tone but also made clear in a tweet that he thought granting Maduro a meeting he has sought would be a mistake."

To Politico (6/22, Dixon, Fineout, 4.29M), "Trump on Monday distanced himself from his own comments that signaled an openness to talks" with Maduro, but says "the reversal is unlikely to prevent a political mess in Florida and still complicates the GOP's 2020 attempt to brand Democrats as socialists." McClatchy (6/22, Smiley, Torres, Wilner, Chambers, 19K) similarly says his willingness to meet with Maduro could "complicate Trump's reelection campaign, which has aggressively courted Hispanic voters in Florida, home to narrowly decided presidential elections and the largest community of Venezuelan exiles in the country."

Reuters (6/22) reports that on Monday, White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said, "Nothing has changed. He continues to recognize Juan Guaidó as the leader of Venezuela. ... He has not lost confidence at all." The Washington Times (6/22, Sherfinski, 492K) also reports McEnany's comments.

Reuters (6/22, Jones), meanwhile, reports Maduro and Guaidó's "legal tug-of-war...over $1 billion of the country's gold stashed deep under the Bank of England in London." According to Reuters, "In a High Court hearing due to last four days, the Venezuelan central bank (BCV), controlled by Maduro's government, is seeking an order to force the Bank of England to release the bullion that, like many countries, it stores there for safe keeping."

US Envoy Mocks China For Not Attending Nuclear Weapons Talks.

Reuters (6/22) reports that on Monday, US special envoy Marshall Billingslea, who is meeting with his Russian counterparts in Vienna to discuss the New START nuclear weapons treaty, "taunted China for refusing to attend, posting a picture of Chinese flags placed at empty seats around the table, which Beijing mocked as an act of 'performance art.'" Politico (6/22, Herszenhorn, 4.29M) reports that Billingslea tweeted, "Beijing still hiding behind #GreatWallOfSecrecy on its crash nuclear build-up, and so many other things."

US Designates Four Chinese Media Outlets As Foreign Missions. Reuters (6/22, Brunnstrom, Pamuk) reports the US "will start treating four major Chinese media outlets as foreign embassies, it said on Monday, a move that will restrict their operations on American soil." Assistant Secretary of State for East Asia David Stilwell told reporters the designation would affect China Central Television, the China News Service, the People's Daily and the Global Times, and "reflected their real status as 'propaganda outlets' under the control of the Chinese Communist Party."

The AP (6/22, Fox) reports that as a result of the move, the four media outlets "will be required to submit a list of everyone who works for them in the U.S. and any real estate holdings. None are being ordered to leave at this time, but a similar action in February against five other outlets preceded a cap on the number of people who could work for those organizations in the U.S." The New York Times (6/22, Wong, 18.61M) says the move is "likely to lead to some form of retaliation from China." The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Mauldin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also reports the move.

FCC Shuts Down Chinese-Run Radio Station In Phoenix. The Washington Free Beacon (6/22, Kreda, 78K) reports that a "radio station controlled by the Chinese Communist Party propaganda outlet Phoenix TV has been ordered by the Trump administration to cease its broadcasts within 48 hours." The Federal Communications Commission ruled Monday that "a Mexico-based radio station owned in part by Phoenix TV – one of the Communist regime's leading propaganda organs – must end its broadcasts due to its failure to disclose its ties to China." The Washington Times (6/22, Gertz, 492K), among other news outlets, also reports the move by the FCC.

US Officials To Meet This Week On Israeli Annexation Plans.

Reuters (6/22, Holland, Spetalnick) reports that "US officials will gather this week to discuss whether to give Israel a green light for its plan to annex Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank, as Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's target date of July 1 approaches." A "senior administration official" said Monday that US Ambassador to Israel David Friedman will be in Washington to meet officials including Secretary of State Pompeo, Jared Kushner, and Middle East envoy Avi Berkowitz. The official said President Trump could also join in the talks.

The New York Times (6/22, Halbfinger, Crowley, 18.61M) reports that during the talks, "a fundamental question will hover overhead: Is the prospect of annexation a pressure tactic to get the Palestinians to engage with the administration's peace plan, or is the peace plan just a smokescreen for annexation?" US and Israeli officials, however, are said to be "deeply divided on the question, an issue that could determine how and when any annexation proceeds."

Belarus President Accuses Russia Of Meddling In Upcoming Election.

The New York Times (6/22, Higgins, 18.61M) that Aleksandr Lukashenko, "the longtime authoritarian leader of Belarus," is "under threat like never before ahead of what was supposed to be just another rigged election," and is "taking a surprising new tack that he hopes will win him sympathy in the West: blaming Russian election meddling." The Times says Lukashenko "has become so unsettled by a surge of discontent and support for prospective rivals in the August 9 election that he has turned his propaganda machine on Moscow, long his closest ally and principal benefactor."

CFPB Proposes Eliminating QM Rule's DTI Cap, Replacing "GSE Patch."

American Banker (6/22, Berry, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the CFPB on Monday "proposed two rulemakings concerning competitive advantages that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac enjoy in connection with underwriting requirements," saying that it would revise the definition of "qualified mortgage" and extend the "GSE patch." American Banker says the CFPB's proposal would replace the current 43% DTI limit with a "price-based threshold measured by comparing a loan's annual percentage rate against the average prime offer rate for a comparable transaction." A loan would meet the QM definition "only if the APR exceeds average prime offer rate by less than two percentage points for as of the date the interest rate is set. The proposal would provide higher price thresholds for smaller loans." M Report (6/22, Welborn) says CoreLogic reports that the second NPRM proposes an extension of the Patch until the first amendment takes effect.

National Mortgage Professional (6/22) reports CFPB Director Kathy Kraninger said, "The GSE Patch's expiration will facilitate a more transparent, level playing field that ultimately benefits consumers through promoting more vigorous competition in mortgage markets. The Bureau is proposing to replace the Patch with a price-based approach to QM loans to preserve consumer access to mortgage loans while also making sure consumers have the ability to repay them. The Bureau is committed to ensuring a smooth and orderly mortgage market throughout its consideration of these issues and any resulting transition away from the GSE Patch." According to the Credit Union National Association (6/22), "Absent regulatory action the CFPB estimates that approximately 957,000 mortgage loans would be affected by the expiration of the GSE Patch."

NAR, ABA Welcome CFPB's Proposals; NCLC Critical. HousingWire (6/22, Ramirez, 23K) reports NAR President Vince Malta said, "America's Realtors applaud the CFPB's action to provide a temporary QM patch extension, and commend the bureau and Director Kraninger for acting on behalf of our nation's consumers and homebuyers at a time when market stability is so critical. Perhaps most importantly, we appreciate the Bureau's decision to eliminate a hard DTI standard, and we look forward to more closely examining the proposed replacements and their impact on homebuyers over the coming months."

The ABA Banking Journal (6/22) reports, "The American Bankers Association is currently in the process of reviewing both proposals and will submit comments. The association welcomed this long-awaited action by the CFPB to ensure market viability, provide greater clarity and reach a permanent solution with respect to the GSE patch."

However, in a press release, National Consumer Law Center (6/22) criticized the CFPB's proposed rules, saying that they would "encourage unaffordable mortgage lending and threaten access to credit."

MBA: Fewer Americans Are Skipping Mortgage Payments.

MarketWatch (6/22, Passy, 1.67M) says fewer homeowners are in forbearance plans, according to data released on Monday by the Mortgage Bankers Association. As of June 14, "only 4.2 million homeowners were in forbearance plans, down from 4.3 million the week prior," MarketWatch reports. This was the first time the MBA's data has shown a dip in forbearances since the emergence of the pandemic. The share of loans backed by Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae that were in forbearance "fell for the second consecutive week" from 6.38% to 6.31%. The forbearance share of loans in private-label securities also fell, but the forbearance share of loans guaranteed by Ginnie Mae held flat at 11.83%. National Mortgage News (6/22, Centopani) reports, "Forbearance requests as a percentage of servicing portfolio volume decreased to 0.15% on June 14 from 0.19% on June 7. Call center volume as a percentage of portfolio volume also decreased, going to 7.7% from 8%."

National Mortgage Professional (6/22) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "The lower share of loans in forbearance was led by declines in GSE and portfolio and PLS loans, as more of those borrowers exited than entered a new forbearance plan. Fewer homeowners in forbearance underscores the continued improvements in the job market, and provides another sign of the fundamental health of the housing market, which has rebounded considerably over the past several weeks."

HousingWire (6/22, Roha, 23K) reports Fratantoni added, "The big unknown with respect to this positive development is the extent to which it relies upon policy measures put in place to help families through this crisis. Particularly the stimulus payments and enhanced unemployment insurance benefits that were key parts of the CARES Act."

Seiberg: CFPB's Constitutionality Case Could Complicate GSEs' Release From Conservatorship.

HousingWire (6/22, Howley, 23K) reports that the Supreme Court is expected to "issue a major ruling" on whether or not the single-director structure of the CFPB is constitutional. According to HousingWire, "The decision is seen as also impacting the Federal Housing Finance Agency, which is set up in a similar way and has a challenge pending in court related to its structure." The high court's ruling will "influence whether Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are able to exit conservatorship," Cowen analyst Jaret Seiberg said in a note to clients. According to Seiberg, "If the single-director structure is constitutional, the path out of conservatorship is simpler."

New York State's Eviction Moratorium Expires, NYC's Housing Courts Reopen, And #CancelRent Trends.

The New York Times (6/22, Haag, 18.61M) reports, "Eviction cases are expected to soar in New York City as housing courts reopen and landlords seek to recoup income lost during the pandemic." Over the weekend, New York State's moratorium on evictions expired, "raising fears that tens of thousands of residents" may be "called into housing courts, which reopened on Monday." According to the Times, housing rights groups warn that 50,000 to 60,000 cases may be filed in New York City's housing courts in coming days. Meanwhile, "thousands of cases that were already in progress but were paused in March can now resume."

HousingWire (6/22, Falcon, 23K) reports that protestors "rallied outside housing courts" on Monday, "protesting their reopening and demanding an extension or permanent ban on evictions." According to HousingWire, "the hashtag #cancelrent was trending on Twitter

Monday morning” as the protestors demanded extensions or permanent bans on evictions, and “more than 50 New York legislators and organizations have called on Gov. Cuomo to extend the eviction moratorium, urging Cuomo to issue a new order.”

Priority Financial Sues New Rez, AO Over Aborted Non-QM Purchases.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (6/22, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports that Priority Financial, which was once an “active originator” of non-QM loans, has “filed two lawsuits against top-shelf secondary market players, saying they reneged on their commitments to buy loans from the company this spring during the height of the COVID-19 crisis.” According to IMF, the nonbank “has sued New Residential Investment Corp. and Angel Oak Mortgage Solutions, alleging breach of contract, among other things.” CEO Mark Shenkman “said he’s considering filing claims against at least one other former business partner of Priority,” as well.

NAR Joins Chamber Of Commerce’s Equality Of Opportunity Initiative.

Mortgage Professional America (6/22, Smith) reports that the National Association of Realtors has “joined the U.S. Chamber of Commerce’s Equality of Opportunity initiative,” which MPA says is “part of a national effort to examine economic inequality.” The program is “supported by more than 400 organizations across the country,” assembling “business and policy leaders to advance economic inclusion and examine potential solutions to inequality of opportunity.” NAR CEO Bob Goldberg said, “NAR has spent recent years examining how our 1.4 million members can best lead the fight against discrimination, bigotry and injustice. We believe that building a better future in America begins with equal access to housing opportunity.”

MBA: Mortgage Lending Poised To Hit A 14-Year High In 2020.

HousingWire (6/22, 23K) reports that the MBA forecasts that originations will likely total $2.65 trillion in 2020, a 14-year high, thanks to rock-bottom mortgage rates. MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni predicts that home-financing volume will be nearly evenly split between refis and purchases. In a video conference on Monday, Fratantoni predicted that purchases will total $1.3 trillion, and refis will total $1.35 trillion. However, he cautioned that purchase is “a trickier forecasting exercise because many more variables come into play.”

Depositories’ Q1 Mortgage Banking Income Among Worst Quarters Ever.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (6/22, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports that commercial banks and savings institutions had “one of their worst quarters ever for mortgage banking income” in Q1, reporting aggregate mortgage banking income (including originations, secondary marketing, and servicing) of “just $2.61 billion.” This represented a sequential decline of 32.3%. According to IMF, “Thanks to the coronavirus, it was the worst earnings for mortgage banking since the fourth quarter of 2008, the midst of the financial meltdown, when banks managed to earn just $289.2 million and thrifts weren’t yet reporting the results of their mortgage banking income. Arguably, the worst quarter ever was the second quarter of 2011, when Bank of America reported a staggering $13.2 billion loss on mortgage banking in its earnings report, stemming from a $14.0 billion provision for anticipated representations and warranty expenses.”

UWM’s Ishbia Sees Strength In Broker Channel And His Own Firm’s Use Of Technology.

Mortgage Professional America (6/22, Smith) interviewed United Wholesale Mortgage CEO Mat Ishbia, who believes that the mortgage sector, and particularly the broker channel, are thriving amid the pandemic. Ishbia credits the mortgage industry for “holding up and helping the economy come out of this tough time faster.” He believes that UWM has benefited from its “900 technology team members,” explaining, “Letting our team members work from home, letting our clients do everything virtually – that’s kind of always how we’ve done business. Getting all of our team members to work from home is a transition that took about a day.” Ishbia believes that the broker channel is having a resurgence because brokers “have access to multiple lenders with multiple products” and price points. Ishbia quips, “A broker has access to multiple lenders. If my pricing is not good, you send it to Caliber Home Loans. If Caliber’s technology sucks, you don’t use them.”

Vista Point Set To Issue Its First Non-QM MBS.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (6/22, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports that Vista Point Mortgage is “set to issue its first non-QM mortgage-backed security, a $439.2 million deal that was in the works before volatility from the coronavirus hammered the non-agency market.” The firm’s founder and CEO, William Ashmore, was a co-founder of Impac Mortgage Holdings back in 1995. In late 2017, Ashmore left Impac to start Vista around one year later. According to IMF, “Vista Point aggregates non-qualified mortgages from various originators. The top contributors to the deal are theLender with a 39.8% share and Oaktree Funding Corp. at 20.3%. In general, the collateral has seasoned for an average of eight months. Roughly 2.1% are in forbearance. (All were current on their payments as of June 1).”

NAR: In May, Existing Home Sales Fell To Lowest Level Since 2010.

MarketWatch (6/22, Passy, 1.67M) reports, “Sales of previously-owned homes slid 9.7% in May as the coronavirus pandemic continued to weigh on the U.S. real estate market.” Existing-home sales ran at a seasonally-adjusted annual pace of 3.91 million, the National Association of Realtors reported Monday. This was the “lowest level for existing-home sales since July 2010.” According to a potentially paywalled piece from Bloomberg (6/22, Golle, Pickert, 4.73M), economists had predicted a rate of 4.09 million. Compared with a year ago, “purchases were down 26.6%, the biggest annual slide since February 2008."

Mortgage News Daily (6/22, Swanson) reports that the "median existing-home price for all housing types in May was $284,600, a 2.3 percent gain from May 2019 ($278,200), as prices increased in every region." May was "the 99th straight month of year-over-year gains," with the median existing single-family home price rising an annual 2.4% to reach $287,700, 2.4 percent annual growth. However, "condo prices declined 1.6 percent $252,300" over the same period. Providing similar coverage are pieces from HousingWire (6/22, 23K), M Report (6/22, Albanese), International Business Times (6/22, 265K), Yahoo! Finance (6/22, Mattspeakman), World Property Journal (6/22), Advisor Perspectives (6/22), and Seeking Alpha (6/22, Kiesche, 512K).

Economists React To Consensus Miss. Behind a payroll, Inside Mortgage Finance (6/22, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports NAR Chief Economist Lawrence Yun said, "Sales completed in May reflect contract signings in March and April – during the strictest times of the pandemic lockdown and hence the cyclical low point. Home sales will surely rise in the upcoming months with the economy reopening, and could even surpass one-year-ago figures in the second half of the year."

Reuters (6/22, Mutikani) reports MUFJ Chief Economist Chris Rupkey commented, "Home sales may bounce with pent-up demand following the shutdown of the economy starting in March, but the massive scale of job losses and cautious consumers rebuilding their savings may limit the sales turnover of the housing stock."

Business Insider (6/22, Winck, 3.67M) reports Pantheon Chief Economist Ian Shepherdson said, "We aren't worried about the undershoot to consensus, which was signaled by the weakness of the April pending sales index."

Fed Report: US Households Generally Reported Feeling Financially Comfortable In 4Q19.

DS News (6/22, Welborn) reports that the Fed's latest Report on the Economic Well-Being of U.S. Households provided "results from the responses to the 2019 Survey of Household Economics and Decision making (SHED), as well as from responses to a follow-up survey conducted in April 2020." At the end of 2019, 76% of adults said they were "doing ok" or "living comfortably financially," unchanged from 2018. Almost two-thirds of adults owned homes, including 85% of respondents 60 years of age and older and 26% of respondents aged 18 to 29 years old.

Sprout Mortgage Announces Three Modifications To Non-QM Program.

HousingWire (6/22, 23K) reports Sprout Mortgage last week "announced the release of three modifications to complement its May 27 non-QM program release after a short freeze on non-QM lending." Now, Sprout is "offering up to 85% LTV, according to the release. Sprout also stated it has reduced rates across the entire program offering, and increased maximum loan amounts at lower LTV levels on the Select program series."

Perspective: Pandemic Is Giving RONs More Attention.

In a Perspective piece for the Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M), real estate attorney Harvey Jacobs says that "many real estate transactions are still being conducted the old-fashioned, high-contact way," but the pandemic has "forced county recording clerks, mortgage lenders and the title insurance industry to expedite rules to permit remote online notarization (RON) closings under strict guidelines." Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, which together "buy more than 40 percent of residential mortgage loans, have modified their single-family seller guidelines to permit RON closings in 43 states. Freddie Mac has specific temporary regulations regarding RON for closing documents, powers of attorney and electronic promissory notes."

Analysis: These Eight Mortgage Lenders Are The Best For First-Time Buyers.

The Mortgage Reports (6/22, 26K) released its list of the "8 best mortgage lenders for first time home buyers." Topping the list was Guaranteed Rate, followed by PrimeLending, Better Mortgage, Flagstar Bank, New American Funding, CitiMortgage, Caliber, and Veterans United. The "standout feature" of both Guaranteed Rate and Flagstar was down payment grants. PrimeLending stood out for its "closing cost assistance," and Caliber was notable for its "jumbo loans with 5% down." CitiMortgage's "low rates" were highlighted, as were Better Mortgage's "$0 fees and transparent pricing." New American Funding was best for borrowers with lower credit scores, while Veterans United stood out for helping veterans build credit.

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (6/23, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.714 percent.

Dollar Stays Flat.

Reuters (6/23, Sano) reports, "The U.S. dollar was on the backfoot on Tuesday, while its Australian counterpart and other risk-sensitive currencies stood firm as markets clung on to hopes of an economic recovery from the pandemic despite rising infections in some parts of the world." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar "was little changed at 97.021 after a fall of 0.68% on Monday." Meanwhile, the euro "jumped back to $1.12705, about a cent above Monday's low," and the yen "was little moved, stuck at 106.90 yen per dollar."

Gold Eases.

Reuters (UK) (6/23, Patel) reports, "Gold eased on Tuesday on expectations of positive manufacturing data from the euro zone, but concerns over a second coronavirus wave kept the safe-haven metal near its highest level in more than a month." Spot gold "was down 0.3% at $1,749.80 per ounce by 0701 GMT," while US gold futures "eased 0.2% to $1,762.30."

Oil Holds Steady.

Reuters (6/23, Jaganathan, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil prices steadied on Tuesday after a volatile session sparked by confusion over the status of the U.S.-China trade deal." Brent crude "fell 10 cents, or 0.2%, to $42.98 a barrel by 0649 GMT," while West Texas Intermediate oil "was down 16 cents, or 0.4%, at $40.57 a barrel, having dropped to a low of $39.76."

New Zealand Authorities Seize $90 Million From Russian Digital Currency Laundering Suspect.

Reuters (6/22) reports police in New Zealand have "seized assets worth NZ$140 million ($90.68 million) linked to" Alexander Vinnik, "a Russian man suspected of laundering billions of dollars in digital currency." The assets "were being held in a New Zealand company owned by...Vinnik, who is accused of masterminding a bitcoin laundering ring and is wanted by both France and the United States."

WPost: US Sanctions Warnings Failing To Dissuade Chinese Action In Hong Kong.

The Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M) editorializes that the "worst fears about China's ambitions to dominate Hong Kong and destroy its democratic ways are materializing" as Beijing moves "to impose a security law that will create a powerful new secret police." The Post argues that "President Trump's recent warning of sanctions appears to have done absolutely nothing to stop Beijing from steamrolling Hong Kong." It calls on the President to act, saying his "indifference" is "dangerous."

Federal Reserve

Main Street Lending Program Confronts Leery Banks, Lack Of Enthusiasm From Borrowers.

Bloomberg (6/22, Saraiva, Levitt, 4.73M) reports that the Federal Reserve's Main Street Lending Program, which is "still not fully up and running three months into the coronavirus crisis, faces other obstacles: a dearth of borrowers and reluctant banks." So far approximately 200 financial institutions have begun the registration process with the Fed, a pittance compared to the "nearly 5,000 banks that took part in the first round of the Paycheck Protection Program, the Small Business Administration-operated effort for the smallest U.S. companies." While the PPP proved so popular since "loans turned into grants if 75% of funds were spent on payroll," Main Street loans "will have to be paid back in full and come with a complex set of rules," meaning borrowers may seek out alternative sources of funding.

Fed Bond Buying Raises Bubble Fears.

CNBC (6/22, Cox, 3.62M) reports the Fed's latest move to purchase individual corporate bonds is stoking concerns over potential asset bubbles. CNBC says, "The worries are that the market has now gone too far as interest rates linger around record lows and issuers count on perpetual Fed support should buyer appetite wane." Yardeni Research founder Ed Yardeni said, "The goal was to restore liquidity to the credit markets," adding, "They are clearly functioning well again. If the Fed persists in flooding the markets with liquidity, the risk is that the Fed will create the greatest financial bubble of all times."

Rosengren: Second Half Of 2020 Will Be "Difficult."

Reuters (6/22, Saphir) reports Boston Fed President Eric Rosengren on Monday said the Main Street Lending Facility will offer "insurance" against what he forecast will be a tough second half of 2020. Rosengren said, "If I'm right and the second half of the year is more difficult than many people are anticipating, I think having this facility up and running will be an important insurance policy for the economy. ... I view every loan that we are going to be making as actually helping those businesses avoid very significant layoffs that they would get if they couldn't get the financing that the Federal Reserve's providing."

Internal Revenue Service

Supreme Court Rejects Appeal Of Ruling On IRS Rules.

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Rubin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the Supreme Court on Monday declined to consider an appeal of a ruling on corporate tax regulations. The Journal says the decision will billions in higher costs for tech companies. Law360 (6/22, Subscription Publication, 8K) also reports.

Commentary: The IRS Should Start Fixing The "Tax Gap."

In an op-ed for The Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M), Lawrence H. Summers and Natasha Sarin write that every year the IRS "leaves billions of dollars in tax revenue on the table by failing to pursue high-income individuals who don't bother to file tax returns. A report released last month by the Treasury Department's inspector general estimated that the amount of lost revenue was nearly $50 billion between 2014 and 2016 alone – an outrage at a time of soaring deficits and growing needs." The report "exposes one piece of the larger 'tax gap,' the difference between what the government is owed and what it manages to collect," but Summers and Saris say the situation "can be fixed" because the "gap is a consequence of failing to adequately fund the IRS and the agency's failure, even with limited resources, to focus on collecting taxes from high-income filers."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC, FDIC Lower Assessment Fees.

The ABA Banking Journal (6/22) reports, "Noting that many banks grew loans substantially in response to credit needs during the coronavirus pandemic," the OCC and FDIC on Monday "issued rules to ensure that banks do not pay increased assessments as a result of their increased lending amid the pandemic." Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks said that in responding to the pandemic, "many banks took on significant volumes of additional assets while providing relief to their customers as part of these federal programs. Banks should not be penalized by these efforts to support our national recovery."

American Banker (6/22, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that per the OCC's interim final rule, banks can use "pre-pandemic asset levels to calculate assessment fees this upcoming September." The "one-time change" will remain in effect until October – or for one assessment. Using call report data from December 31, 2019, rather than June 30, 2020, will "result in lower assessments for most banks under the jurisdiction of the OCC," according to the text of the interim rule.

Bloomberg Law (6/22, Subscription Publication, 4K) reports that in a similar move, the FDIC "announced that banks that participated in the PPP and other emergency programs would also get a break on their deposit insurance assessments." The FDIC "said in a final rule retroactively effective April 1 that it would not take any assets accumulated under the PPP and other programs into account when assessing deposit insurance fees."

Brown, Warren Urge Bank Regulators To Reverse Capital Change.

American Banker (6/22, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Two Democratic senators are calling on regulators to reverse their recent decision to ease a key capital requirement for banks." Sens. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) and Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "said in a letter Friday that a change to the supplementary leverage ratio that was announced in May 'is dangerous and puts the economy and hardworking families at risk.'" In a letter to Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks, Federal Reserve Vice Chair of Supervision Randal Quarles, and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chair Jelena McWilliams, the senators wrote, "There is no justifiable reason to relax a key safety and soundness restraint by arguing that it is necessary for banks to support lending while simultaneously allowing banks to distribute capital to enrich their shareholders."

OCC's Brooks Among Top Speakers At Online Conference Unitize.

The CoinTelegraph (6/22, 14K) reports Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks "will be among those offering their insights" at online conference Unitize. Organized by BlockShow and San Francisco Blockchain Week, the conference will take place from July 6 through July 10. The goal of Unitize "is to celebrate the industry's progress so far in 2020 and to foster further collaboration and engagement."

Former Comptroller Ludwig Calls For Expansion Of CRA To Include Nonbanks.

American Banker (6/22, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Just two years after finalizing the first significant regulatory overhaul of the Community Reinvestment Act in the 1990s, then-Comptroller of the Currency Eugene Ludwig" pitched the expansion of the law beyond banks. In a recent interview, Ludwig said now is the time for Congress to expand CRA to included nonbanks including credit unions, online lenders, student loan servicers, hedge funds, and more. Doing so "could make a big difference in this tumultuous period of widespread protests against racial inequality amid the coronavirus pandemic and a recession, he says."

House To Debate Resolution Challenging OCC's CRA Rewrite Starting Friday.

CQ Roll Call (6/22, McPherson, 154K) reports the House on Friday is set to begin debating "a joint resolution providing congressional disapproval for Community Reinvestment Act regulations issued by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency."

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"China's Hong Kong Policy: One Country, One Brutal System." The Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M) editorializes that the "worst fears about China's ambitions to dominate Hong Kong and destroy its democratic ways are materializing" as Beijing moves "to impose a security law that will create a powerful new secret police." The Post argues that "President Trump's recent warning of sanctions appears to have done absolutely nothing to stop Beijing from steamrolling Hong Kong." It calls on the President to act, saying his "indifference" is "dangerous."

"Trump Faced A Moment Of Truth In Tulsa. He Chose The Low Road." The Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M) in an editorial says that President Trump “faced a moment of truth” at his Tulsa rally, in which he might have focused on “the politics of division, hoping to energize the minority of Americans who reliably support him and prevent or discourage as many others as possible from voting,” or he might offer “conciliation and healing,” and so “expand the pool of voters willing to vote for him.” Trump, the Post says, chose the former and “opted for bigotry, division and mean-spiritedness.” The Post also says that it may have been “naive to think he could change his tune...even to save himself as he plummets in the polls.”

“A Cruel HHS Regulation Shows The Battle For Transgender Rights Isn’t Over.” The Washington Post (6/22, 14.2M) editorializes that when HHS “proposed a rule last summer seeking to roll back non-discrimination protections for transgender people in health care, 155,966 public comments came through in response. Yet the final product released this month is nearly identical to the original – just as insidious and now, according to the precedent set by the Supreme Court last week, just as likely illegal.” To the Post, “Yanking away access to health care for a vulnerable population would be cruel at any moment. Doing it amid a pandemic is especially dangerous.”

Wall Street Journal.

“America’s Jacobin Moment.” The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that George Floyd’s killing has caused some useful reflection about race.

“When Cops Aren’t On The Beat.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) welcomes news that in Chicago last weekend, only 14 people were killed in shootings, compared to the 24 over the last weekend in May. On the other hand, shootings are soaring in New York City after police disbanded the plainclothes anti-crime units.

“Teddy Roosevelt Gets Canceled.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) bemoans the move to remove Teddy Roosevelt’s statue from New York City’s American Museum of Natural History, casting it as part of a campaign to erase American history.

“Iran’s Other Nuclear Violations.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/22, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) welcomes a call last week by the IAEA to Iran for greater access to the country’s nuclear sites.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Bubba Wallace spoke out against racism, and clearly someone wanted to send a reminder of what can happen to black people who don't know their place. And, you know, because NASCAR has so many Confederate flag fans, this is something that might not stop for Bubba. ... I wouldn't be shocked if Bubba starts getting pulled over during the race. (As Officer) 'Sir, we have been getting calls you have been circling the neighborhood for a couple of hours. License and registration.'"

Trevor Noah: "I will say this, though, as much as this story is infuriating, it also is wonderful how these racists expose themselves, because all these Confederate-flag-loving people always say the same thing: 'This has nothing to do with race! The flag is about heritage; it has nothing to do with racism!' But as soon as a black man stands up against the Confederate flag, the first thing they do is respond with racism. Like they say, the flag is just about Southern heritage, but nobody showed up to [Bubba Wallace's] garage with a Georgia peach cobbler."

Trevor Noah: "[On former National Security Adviser John Bolton saying he will write in a conservative Republican's name on his ballot come November as opposed to voting for Trump or Biden] "Donald Trump is a danger to the survival of the country, but you're going to vote third party? ... Get...out of here, man. Sometimes in life, you only have two choices, okay. Pepsi or Coke. Boxes or briefs. Mario or Luigi."

Trevor Noah: "Bolton spent the entire interview talking about how unprepared, incompetent, and corrupt the President is, but the weird thing is Bolton joined the Trump Administration over a year into Trump's term. So, I mean, he probably should have already known all of this, right? Why does it feel like everyone goes confidently into the Trump White House, like, 'I'll be the one to tame Donald Trump,' and they walk out six months later, like, 'He made fun of me and said all my ideas were dumb, and you can read all about it in my book coming out next week!'"

Stephen Colbert: "It was a bit of a tough [weekend] for President Trump. His rally was a bust, Bolton's book got the go-ahead, and to top it off, he got a card yesterday reminding him he's Eric's father."

Stephen Colbert: "Saturday night's rally was supposed to be Trump's big moment. He's been jonesing for the frothed-up crowd for three months. His campaign was advertising it as 'The Great American Comeback Festival.' That's right. This indoor rally of thousands of screaming fans was a chance for a comeback for Trump and COVID-19. One of them's gonna have a really good fall."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump's team was so overconfident about attendance, they built an 'overflow' stage outside for a pre-rally speech by Trump and Pence, for their estimated crowd of 40,000. Instead, the crowd was 25 people. That's not a presidential rally; that's the private party room at the Olive Garden."

Stephen Colbert: "According to those in the know, before the rally started, Trump and several staff members stood backstage and gazed at the empty Bank of Oklahoma center in horror. So the campaign sent out a last-ditch-effort text reading, 'Doors are open at the BOK center. President Trump can't wait. There's still space!' Come on, guys. Have a little chill. That's like group-texting your co-workers: 'Doors are open at my birthday party in my back yard! Bowl of baby carrots can't wait! There's still ranch!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, guys, if you thought watching a talk show with no crowd was weird, wait until you see what President Trump did with his rally. ... 6,200 people. Trump's had more former staffers write books about him than that. Six thousand two hundred people isn't a rally; it's a graduation at a small liberal arts college."

Jimmy Fallon: "You can tell the Trump campaign may be lowering expectations because the next rally is being held inside the birthday room at Dave & Buster's."

Jimmy Fallon: "Hey, if Trump wants fewer people showing up for tests, he should just hold his next rally at a testing site."

Jimmy Fallon: [On Trump calling the virus 'Kung flu'] "Maybe the lowest point of the evening came when Trump introduced his new nickname for the coronavirus. ... Trump is just making sure that there aren't any minorities he forgets to offend before the election."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump held a campaign rally over the weekend in Tulsa, Oklahoma, and drew a smaller than expected crowd. Yeah, I'll say this doesn't even look like a rally. This looks like the meeting to plan the rally."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump's campaign manager Brad Parscale yesterday denied reports that anti-Trump people on social media were responsible for the lower than expected turnout for last weekend's Tulsa rally. So you're saying the truth is, Trump just isn't as popular as you thought? Good save, Brad."

Seth Meyers: "In his new book, former National Security Adviser John Bolton reportedly said President Trump is, quote, 'stunningly uninformed.' Said Trump, 'John Bolton? Never heard of him, so now who's stunningly uninformed?'"

Seth Meyers: "Peter Navarro said that the Trump Administration is preparing for a potential second wave of coronavirus in the fall. They say that with good planning and a little luck, they're pretty sure they can cause one."

James Corden: "On Saturday, President Trump held a campaign rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma, which he claimed earlier in the week had had almost one million ticket requests. ... Only 6,200 people showed up. And I will say, I never thought I would say this, I think more people than that watched the 'Late, Late Show.' And I have never been able to say that before."

James Corden: "The most interesting part of the story is that Trump's poor rally attendance may have been the result of the most powerful political forces in the world banding together. I am, of course, talking about K-Pop Stans with TikTok accounts. ... This is great, Trump was taken down by a group of teens like the '80s movie villain he is. And he would've gotten away with it, too, if it weren't for those meddling kids!"

James Corden: "Then the President moved on to more pressing topics of national interest, like why he recently had trouble walking down a ramp. ... What about the poor general, a man who has commanded troops in ferocious battle, listening to someone whine about his expensive shoes? You know, Trump dodged military service in Vietnam, and I'm starting to think that that was for the best."

James Corden: "All in all, he spoke for over 13 minutes about the ramp before moving on to a display of physical prowess, showing that contrary to popular belief, he actually can take a drink of water with one hand, and the crowd went wild. ... Wow. He showed us. He can drink water. There goes Biden's entire campaign strategy."

CARES Act Oversight Panel Finds Small Business Relief Effort Primarily Benefits Large Companies.

CQ Roll Call (6/18, Saksa, 154K) reports the Congressional Oversight Commission (COC) "questioned whether the Federal Reserve's emergency lending facilities have done enough to help smaller companies and workers during the coronavirus crisis, in a report released Thursday." The COC's "second report on the Fed and Treasury Department's handling of the $500 billion Congress provided in March to inject liquidity into the economy applauded the help for large corporations but worried that others were being left behind." The report said, "In some areas of the economy, such as the ability of larger companies to issue debt to continue operations, the agencies' actions have had a clear and powerful impact." However, the report added, "there is less evidence that the actions of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve have been as beneficial for small and mid-sized businesses and state and local governments." Roll Call says the report "criticized Treasury and the Fed's plans" to enforce the requirement that borrowers make "commercially reasonable efforts" to keep workers, saying the plans enforced that requirement "broadly, rather than monitoring individual businesses." Though the CARES Act "included a provision for a Fed lending facility aimed at mid-sized companies with even stricter job retention and capital distribution requirements, it only said that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin 'shall endeavor' to create such a program, rather than require it."

Politico (6/18, Guida, 4.29M) reports the commission "overseeing $500 billion in coronavirus relief funds said Thursday that the Federal Reserve and the Treasury Department have done more to aid large corporations than smaller businesses or state and local governments." The commission, "which has four members but no appointed chair yet, was set up to monitor the Fed's emergency programs, which are backed by funds given to Treasury under the CARES Act relief package." The report "includes the most complete explanation so far from Fed Chair Jerome Powell and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin of their decisions in designing these programs." Mnuchin and Powell "said they will monitor the program's contributions to the economic recovery and employment 'rather than on a borrower-by-borrower basis,' explaining that the goal for each company is to 'contribute to the health of the business and its ability to support employment over the longer term.'"

The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Timiraos, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and American Banker (6/18, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K), among other outlets, also report.

Commentary: CARES Act Stimulus Falling "Woefully Short" Of Initial Goals. In a piece for TIME (6/18, 18.47M), Alana Abramson analyzes the CARES Act, arguing the "disbursement of the money so far has been riddled with complaints and analyses showing it has disproportionately gone to the wealthiest corporations and individuals." Abramson writes the PPP loan program "has become one of the most heavily scrutinized components of the CARES Act. It was the first program to launch and has spent the most money. It has also become a case study in the ways in which the law has fallen woefully short in distributing relief equitably." While the concept of the PPP "earned broad praise," it was "structurally flawed." Abramson adds, "Because PPP required banks to act as intermediaries, it created a dynamic wherein larger, more established companies – often with existing relationships and lines of credit with banks – received funds before smaller operations, who feared their collapse was imminent." In addition, its definitions were "problematic," which allowed "large, multi-million dollar chains" to receive PPP loans. Abramson adds, "Finally, lawmakers failed to allocate even close to enough money to meet small businesses' needs. When PPP first launched on April 3, the $350 billion fund was depleted within two weeks."

White House Advised Agencies To Ignore Oversight Reporting Requirements.

Reuters (6/18, Prentice) reports, "When Congress approved $2 trillion pandemic aid in March, many Democratic and Republican lawmakers agreed on safeguards against fraud and abuse to ensure that companies receiving the money use it to save American jobs." However, the Administration has "advised agencies that they can largely ignore reporting requirements in the legislation designed to help a newly created watchdog group track how the money is spent, according to public documents and four people with knowledge of the matter." The dispute between the Pandemic Recovery Accountability Committee and the Office of Management and Budget is "the latest sign of tensions between independent investigators tasked with overseeing taxpayer money and Trump administration officials who have resisted calls for greater transparency in several key relief programs." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "has resisted naming businesses that got money from a $660 billion small business rescue fund, calling their names and amounts received 'confidential' and 'proprietary' business information." However, Mnuchin on Monday "softened his stance, tweeting that he would discuss potential disclosures with Congress."

House Democrats Accuse SBA Of Stonewalling GAO. Fox Business (6/18, Henney, 1.73M) reports House Democrats "accused the Small Business Administration of illegally stonewalling efforts by a congressional watchdog to oversee the distribution of coronavirus aid money." The lawmakers, in a Wednesday letter to SBA Administrator Jovita Carranza, said the SBA has refused to provide the GAO with interviews, documents, and data needed to fulfill its oversight responsibilities of the $2.2 trillion CARES Act. The letter stated, "We are deeply troubled by SBA's failure to comply with GAO's independent and nonpartisan oversight of the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security (CARES) Act, the largest emergency appropriations package in United States history. SBA's withholding of information is in violation of the law." Secretary Mnuchin "said last week while testifying before the Senate Small Business Committee that the agency would not disclose the names of loan recipients; however, on Monday, Mnuchin said he plans to talk with lawmakers about program oversight."

White House Divisions Send Mixed Messages On Additional Stimulus Spending.

The Washington Post (6/18, Stein, 14.2M) reports that on June 12, White House trade adviser Peter Navarro "said in a mostly-overlooked television interview that President Trump wanted the next congressional stimulus package to cost more than $2 trillion and include big measures designed to boost domestic manufacturing." However, that position "appeared to be a sharp departure from what other White House officials were considering, and...other Trump administration officials" dismissed Navarro. The Post says Navarro's "push comes at a time when Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who has led the administration's negotiations with Congress, faces challenges from Republicans on Capitol Hill and inside the administration." A "number of GOP lawmakers...have complained that the spending bills Mnuchin has brokered with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) have been too generous to Democrats and allowed spending and other policy changes that run counter to GOP priorities."

Politico (6/18, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports there is "emerging bipartisan support for new government-backed lending that would last much longer than lawmakers first envisioned with the Paycheck Protection Program, which was designed to delay mass layoffs in the early days of the pandemic." Politico says Mnuchin last week "left open the door to supporting a continuation of the" PPP. Mnuchin "said restaurants and hotels are among those that do need more help and that 'we're very seriously going to look at' allowing businesses to apply for second loans if there is bipartisan support." The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Hughes, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a bipartisan group of congressional lawmakers is calling for $120 billion in COVID-19 assistance for restaurants.

Bloomberg (6/18, Niquette, 4.73M) reports that on Thursday, lawmakers put forward "new proposals...to help restaurants and other small businesses still dealing with fallout from the coronavirus outbreak, as a federal relief program is set to end on June 30 with leftover funds and Congress weighs another round of stimulus." The article says, "Bipartisan and bicameral legislation was introduced to create a $120 billion bailout fund for small food and beverage establishments, as well as a separate proposal to allow any remaining funds from the Paycheck Protection Program to be used for small firms that need the most help." These measures "come as Congress and the White House are expected to negotiate a potential fourth round of stimulus next month," which "would include additional aid for small businesses that were left out of earlier rounds or are still trying to re-open and recover." Mnuchin "said last week the U.S. needs additional fiscal stimulus even as the economy starts to rebound, and that a fourth round of fiscal stimulus should include help for restaurants and travel, retail and leisure businesses, as well as possibly more cash for American families."

The Hill (6/18, Gangitano, 2.98M) and CNBC (6/18, Stankiewicz, 3.62M) also report.

European Officials Slam US Withdrawal From Digital Taxation Talks As "Provocation."

The AP (6/18, Adamson) reports European countries "are slamming the Trump administration's withdrawal from negotiations over a major tax on big tech companies." French Finance Minister Bruno Le Maire, "speaking on France Inter," responded to "a letter in which U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin told the finance ministers of France, Spain, Italy and the United Kingdom that he was suspending talks on the tax" and "said France will still implement the tax regardless of the U.S. change of heart." Le Maire said, "This letter is a provocation. It is a provocation against all the partners at the OECD (the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development) when we were centimeters away from a deal on the taxation of digital giants." Assistant Treasury Secretary Monica Crowley "said the U.S. 'has suggested a pause' in the talks as countries focus on fighting COVID-19 and reopening their economies."

Politico (6/18, Scott, Palmer, Braun, 4.29M) reports that "after Washington confirmed Wednesday that it had pulled out of talks on global rules for taxing the digital economy, officials including Bruno Le Maire, the French finance minister, and Paolo Gentiloni, the European economy commissioner, threw their weight behind national or EU-wide digital levies – plans that would likely bring retaliation from the US.” Politico says Mnuchin's "decision to walk away puts the OECD talks in serious jeopardy" and "is expected to reignite a transatlantic trade dispute that has been simmering for more than a year." Politico adds that "the looming spat also may sour an already tense relationship between the U.S. and EU at a time of deepening wariness, while also potentially exposing divisions within Europe as countries remain split over how to force companies like Google and Amazon to pay more into national coffers."

The Financial Times (6/18, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) editorial board writes on how to save global cooperation on taxation from collapsing. Financial Times (6/18, Fleming, Brunsden, Giles, Mallet, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), Reuters (6/18, Nienaber), The Wall Street Journal (6/18, Toplensky, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), and The Guardian (UK) (6/18, Sweney, 4.19M) also report.

EU Vows To Press On With Digital Tax Plans, Pushes Washington To Help Find Solution. The Washington Post (6/18, 14.2M) reports the EU on Thursday "said it could impose taxes on digital giants such as Google, Amazon and Facebook even without a global agreement by year's end, after Washington quit talks and stoked fears of a new trade war." The latest transatlantic row "was ignited when the US on Wednesday said it was withdrawing from negotiations with European countries over new international tax rules on digital firms, saying talks had made no progress." OECD Secretary General Ángel Gurría said, "A trade war, especially at this point in time, where the world economy is going through a historical downturn, would hurt the economy, jobs and confidence even further." The talks "aim to reach agreement by the end of 2020, but that deadline is now slipping out of reach with Washington's latest move and the US presidential election in November."

BBC News Online (UK) (6/18, Islam, 1.02M) reports UK Chancellor of the Exchequer Rishi Sunak and the finance ministers from France, Italy, and Spain, in a letter obtained by the BBC, "told the US Treasury Secretary, Steven Mnuchin, that the pandemic had increased the need for such levies." The officials wrote, "The current Covid-19 crisis has confirmed the need to deliver a fair and consistent allocation of profit made by multinationals operating without – or with little – physical taxable presence." The letter continues: "The pandemic has accelerated a fundamental transformation in consumption habits and increased the use of digital services, consequently reinforcing digital business models' dominant position and increasing their revenue at the expense of more traditional businesses. ... Digital giants, no matter where they are headquartered, will emerge from the current crisis more powerful and more profitable. ... These companies benefit from free access to the European market. It is fair and legitimate to expect that they pay their fair share of tax within countries where they create value and profit." The letter "says a solution is still possible this year."

Bolton Memoir Hits Mnuchin Over Sanctions Opposition, "Panda Hugger" China Views.

Bloomberg (6/18, Mohsin, Wadhams, Jacobs, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "emerges as the chief opponent of the Trump administration's increased reliance on economic sanctions in John Bolton's new book, worried that an over-reliance on such measures will weaken the global primacy of the dollar." In "encounter after encounter," Bolton "describes Mnuchin standing in the way of tough economic punishment – against Venezuela, Russia, China and others. He feared other nations would stop using dollars and that the stress on the global financial system would be too great, Bolton writes." Bolton also writes that Mnuchin "argued that blocking others' access to the U.S. financial system 'would undermine the status of the dollar as the world's reserve currency and encourage others like Russia and China to conduct transactions in euros or through counter trade and other techniques.'" The book's "claims about Mnuchin highlight one of the biggest divides between Bolton's hawkish foreign policy approach and that of many Democrats and some Republicans." Mnuchin "said in a statement Thursday that the excerpts of the book he reviewed 'are full of lies and factual inaccuracies' and that 'the Treasury Department has deployed our sanctions authorities with unprecedented effectiveness to address a broad range of threats.'"

The Hill (6/18, Samuels, 2.98M) reports Bolton "mocked Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin for his belief that 'a deal was always in sight' no matter who the other party was." The book "is stocked with recurring criticisms from the author of...Mnuchin in particular." Bolton "bemoans that Mnuchin 'seemed as concerned with mitigating the impact of sanctions as with imposing them to begin with.'" The New York Times (6/18, Wong, Crowley, 18.61M) reports Bolton called Mnuchin a "panda hugger" due to his perspective on China as a business opportunity. Real Clear Politics (6/18, Wegmann, 825K) reports Bolton "mocks Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin as a political opportunist."

Newsweek (6/18, Murdock, 1.53M) reports Bolton wrote that President Trump in May 2018 urged Mnuchin to "'go after bitcoin' in May 2018, reportedly referencing the crypto during a conversation about trade sanctions and tariffs on China." Mnuchin "then reinforced the stance in press briefings and media appearances, repeatedly criticizing cryptocurrencies." Mnuchin "called on crypto firms to comply with the Bank Secrecy Act and said they have to register with FinCEN, the Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network."

The Daily Beast (6/18, Mercer, Montgomery, 1.39M) reports Secretary of State Mike Pompeo "on Thursday evening hit back at former National Security Adviser John Bolton's depictions of the Trump administration's inner workings in his new memoir with a scathing statement." Pompeo said, "I've not read the book, but from the excerpts I've seen published, John Bolton is spreading a number of lies, fully-spun half-truths, and outright falsehoods." Secretary Mnuchin "echoed Pompeo in a statement released Thursday: 'John Bolton has put self-promotion ahead of the truth and of the interests of his country.'"

The Guardian (UK) (6/18, McKernan, 4.19M) also reports.

Conservative Groups Push Mnuchin To Delay Tax Payment Deadlines Until 2021.

The Hill (6/18, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports a "group of conservative organizations is urging Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to extend the July 15 tax deadlines into next year, arguing that this should be an 'immediate priority.'" The groups, in a Thursday letter to Mnuchin, said, "We ask that you use your authority under the law to defer these tax payment deadlines into 2021. Doing so would not reduce a penny of tax owed, but would give the economy some much-needed breathing room to recover cash flow, transition to hiring unemployed workers, and rebuild shattered small businesses." Over 20 groups "signed the letter, including the National Taxpayers Union Foundation, Americans for Tax Reform and FreedomWorks."

Trump Decries "Highly Political" SCOTUS Ruling On DACA, Calls For "New Justices."

In a 5-4 decision Thursday, the Supreme Court rejected the Trump Administration's move to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals Program. ABC World News Tonight (6/18, lead story, 3:50, Muir, 7.39M) reported in its lead story that "within hours of the ruling, President Trump fired off a few furious tweets." On Twitter, the President wrote, "These horrible & politically charged decisions coming out of the Supreme Court are shotgun blasts into the face of people that are proud to call themselves Republicans or Conservatives. We need more Justices or we will lose our 2nd. Amendment & everything else. Vote Trump 2020!" He added minutes later, "Do you get the impression that the Supreme Court doesn't like me?"

Later in the day, the President took to Twitter again to write, "The recent Supreme Court decisions, not only on DACA, Sanctuary Cities, Census, and others, tell you only one thing, we need NEW JUSTICES of the Supreme Court. If the Radical Left Democrats assume power, your Second Amendment, Right to Life, Secure Borders, and Religious Liberty, among many other things, are OVER and GONE!" He added, "As President of the United States, I am asking for a legal solution on DACA, not a political one, consistent with the rule of law. The Supreme Court is not willing to give us one, so now we have to start this process all over again."

Trump also announced, "I will be releasing a new list of Conservative Supreme Court Justice nominees, which may include some, or many of those already on the list, by September 1, 2020. If given the opportunity, I will only choose from this list, as in the past, a Conservative Supreme Court Justice... Based on decisions being rendered now, this list is more important than ever before (Second Amendment, Right to Life, Religious Liberty, etc.) – VOTE 2020!"

Reuters (6/18, Chiacu) reports that being "hit by a second US Supreme Court loss in four days," the President "said he would update his current list for the high court, compiled by conservative legal activists, by Sept. 1" as he seeks reelection. The Washington Times (6/18, Boyer, 492K) notes that during his 2016 campaign, Trump "released a list of conservative jurists that he promised to use for his high court nominees if elected." The "unusual move was credited with winning over many conservatives."

To CNBC (6/18, Mangan, 3.62M) in an online report, "Trump's ire possibly was enhanced by the fact that Republican-appointed Supreme Court justices... outnumber Democrat-appointed justices, but that 5-4 margin has not guaranteed Republicans and conservatives a number of victories in the court that they might have expected." The AP (6/18, Sherman) says Thursday's 5-4 loss "seems certain to elevate the issue in Trump's campaign, given the anti-immigrant rhetoric of his first presidential run in 2016 and immigration restrictions his administration has imposed since then." CQ Roll Call (6/18, Ruger, 154K) likewise says the ruling "inserts the huge immigration issue... back into presidential politics just months ahead of the November elections."

The Washington Post (6/18, Wagner, 14.2M) says the President "lashed out" at the court "after being dealt a second major defeat this week," calling its decisions "shotgun blasts into the face" of conservatives and questioned whether the court "doesn't like me." To USA Today (6/18, Jackson, 10.31M), "Trump also turned his tweets into an election pitch," saying "we need more Justices or we will lose our 2nd. Amendment & everything else. Vote Trump 2020!" The tweets, says The Hill (6/18, Samuels, 2.98M), "escalated his criticism of the Supreme Court."

Under the headline "Trump Rallies Base Reeling From Court Losses On Gay Rights, DACA," Bloomberg (6/18, Fabian, 4.73M) reports Trump "seized on Supreme Court defeats on gay rights and immigration this week to rally his conservative base, pledging to redouble his efforts to transform federal courts."

An AP (6/18, Gresko, Sherman) analysis, however, says that "if the president is steaming at the court's decisions this week, however, he may still in short order be singing the justices' praises. The court has a series of high-profile decisions important to the president left to release before the justices go on their summer break," including "the president's tax returns, abortion, the president's power to fire the head of an independent agency and Trump administration changes to the Affordable Care Act. Some or all of them could still be big wins."

An analysis by the Washington Post (6/18, Scherer, 14.2M) says that while both the President and Joe Biden have "made shaping the Supreme Court's agenda central to their campaign pitches, with Biden promising to appoint the first black woman and someone who embraces abortion rights to the bench, while Trump has warned of an end to conservative governance if Biden has his way," this week's rulings are "showcasing the shakiness of such promises."

The AP (6/18, Sherman) calls Thursday's ruling "the second stunning election-season rebuke from the court in a week," Reuters (6/18, Hurley) refers to a "major setback" for Trump's "hardline immigration policies," the Los Angeles Times (6/18, Savage, 4.64M) to a "striking rebuke." According to the Times, "Trump had been confident that the high court, with its majority of Republican appointees, would rule in his favor." The New York Times (6/18, A1, Liptak, Shear, 18.61M) reports the decision "was the second this week in which the court reached a result in a major case that elated liberals."

NBC Nightly News (6/18, lead story, 2:15, Holt, 6.63M) opened its broadcast Thursday night, "A stunning blow to President Trump today and a victory for undocumented immigrants known as Dreamers." NBC's Pete Williams reported, "President Obama launched DACA...in 2012 with the stroke of a pen by executive order. ... President Trump could have shut it down the same way, by executive order. Instead, his Justice Department declared it illegal, and the Department of Homeland Security ordered it ended." The high court, however, "said that was too much of a shortcut."

The Washington Post (6/18, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the court "rejected the Trump administration's attempt to dismantle the program protecting undocumented immigrants brought to the country as children," granting "a reprieve for nearly 650,000" Dreamers. The 5-4 decision was written by Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. and joined by the court's four liberals. Roberts wrote, "We do not decide whether DACA or its rescission are sound policies. We address only whether the [Department of Homeland Security] complied with the procedural requirement that it provide a reasoned explanation for its action."

The Washington Times (6/18, Dinan, 492K) reports the high court ruled "that the Trump administration cut too many corners when it moved to revoke the Obama-era DACA program." In what it calls "a severe blow to President Trump and his team," the court "said the administration does have the power to revoke DACA. But a majority of justices said Mr. Trump's team didn't establish a sufficient legal and procedural basis for doing so, and that violated the Administrative Procedure Act."

The CBS Evening News (6/18, lead story, 3:25, O'Donnell, 4.56M) showed the President saying, "These aren't people. These are animals." CBS' Jan Crawford reported that "in a separate opinion, Justice Sonia Sotomayor, the court's first Hispanic justice, says remarks like those create the strong perception President Trump's decision was 'contaminated by impermissible discriminator animus.'"

The Washington Examiner (6/18, Giaritelli, 448K) reports Justice Clarence Thomas, backed by Justices Samuel Alito and Neil Gorsuch, wrote in his dissent to the majority ruling that it was "incorrect" and "would hamstring all future agency attempts to undo actions that exceed statutory authority." Thomas added, "Today's decision must be recognized for what it is: an effort to avoid a politically controversial but legally correct decision."

USA Today (6/18, Gomez, 10.31M) says the court's ruling "means that the Deferred Action for Childhood Protection (DACA) program created by President Barack Obama in 2012 will endure, allowing more than 650,000 DACA recipients to continue legally living and working" in the US. Politico (6/18, Gerstein, Rainey, 4.29M) says "it seems unlikely the administration will be able to put in place a new framework to end DACA before November's presidential election," but to CQ Roll Call (6/18, Dechalus, Misra, 154K), the ruling "leaves the door open for the Trump administration to make another attempt at ending" DACA.

Appearing on Fox News Hannity (6/18, 535K), Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said, "We have been begging Congress to address the DACA recipients. They have decided not to do this time and time again. The President has been a clear on this. He wants a legal solution and not a political solution to this issue."

Similarly, Acting DHS Deputy Secretary Ken Cuccinelli said on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (6/18, 1.25M), "The President was negotiating with Nancy Pelosi and Chuck Schumer to address this problem and they pulled out of that discussion when a district court froze the case in place at the time and they thought they'd bought time. So they let the 640,000 folks just kind of stew in their political juices and the President wanted to finish that discussion and that opportunity was gone when those two leaders from Congress walked away. So this has been attempted once. The President was committed to that discussion."

The Washington Post (6/18, 14.2M) editorializes that Dreamers "are safe from immediate deportation. This is good news for them, and good news for the country. But they are still not safe from President Trump's arbitrary whims and the malice of the anti-immigration fanatics he has brought into government."
