help treat this region's surging cases." Joel Hendryx, University Medical Center of El Paso Chief Medical Officer, said, "Over the last 10 days, we've seen this 300% increase. It's unprecedented. We did not expect this."

The AP (10/28, Jordans) reports that a "long-feared" resurgence of the coronavirus in the US and Europe "is blamed in part on growing disregard for social distancing and mask-wearing, as well as the onset of cold weather, which is forcing people indoors, where the virus can spread more easily." In the US, "where practically every state is seeing a rise in cases," Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker (D) "banned indoor dining and drinking in Chicago and limited the number of people gathering in one place." Over 71,000 people per day in the US are testing positive on average, "up from 51,000 two weeks ago." Cases "are on the rise in all but two states, Hawaii and Delaware, and deaths are climbing in 39 states, with an average of 805 people dying in the US per day, up from 714 two weeks ago."

Newark Issues First Lockdown Order Since March. The New York Times (10/28, Tully, Armstrong, 18.61M) reports that on Tuesday at 8:00 p.m., Newark, New Jersey's "first new shutdown order since March" took hold "by order of the mayor, Ras Baraka, a Democrat." Gov. Phil Murphy (D) "has so far avoided the targeted shutdowns that states like New York and Connecticut have begun enforcing to address virus hot spots, but he said he supported the steps Mr. Baraka was taking to tame the outbreak." Murphy and New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "have consulted on the surge in Newark."

Rollins: Lockdowns Have Been "Destructive." On Just The News (10/28), White House Domestic Policy Council Acting Director Brooke Rollins said of the possibility of additional coronavirus lockdowns that the President "has been absolutely resolute in his approach to making sure that we protect our most vulnerable population" by "getting the country back to work, getting our kids back in school, and doing it in a safe way." Rollins added, "Ultimately, these lockdowns have been so destructive to America."

Administration Proposes Rule That Would Make COVID Vaccine Free.

The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Armour, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on Wednesday, the Trump Administration unveiled a rule which aims to encourage Americans to get a COVID-19 vaccine once it is available. Under the rule, the vaccine would be free for seniors and those with private health insurance. The AP (10/28, Alonso-Zaldivar) reports that the new rules are "designed to deliver on the promise that every American will have access to free COVID-19 vaccines when they are approved." The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS), which issued the rules, says it will "increase what Medicare pays hospitals for COVID-19 treatments." CMS Administrator Verma is quoted as saying, "CMS is acting now to remove bureaucratic barriers while ensuring that states, providers and health plans have the information and direction they need to ensure broad vaccine access and coverage for all Americans."

The Hill (10/28, Weixel, 2.98M) reports that CMS' rule "means any vaccine that receives Food and Drug Administration (FDA) authorization will be covered under Medicare as a preventive vaccine at no cost to beneficiaries, which is a change from current policy."

On WGHP-TV Greensboro, NC (10/28, 5:11 p.m. EDT, 37K), Verma said that more than 60 million Americans on Medicare will have access to the COVID-19 vaccine for free "as soon as that vaccine is ready." Verma said, "Our seniors have paid into the Medicare program their entire lives, and they deserve access to this vaccine."

On NPR's All Things Considered (10/28, 7:07 p.m. EDT), Verma said, "The action today will also make sure that the vaccine is available to every American at no charge. So even those that are covered by private insurance companies, the regulations that we're putting out today make it very clear that private insurance companies have to cover the cost of the administering the vaccine. We are going to be paying for the actual vaccine, but they have to cover the administration costs both in network and out of network. There can't be any surprise billing or any balance billing, and has to be free to that covered individual." On Just The News (10/28), Verma made similar points.

Fauci: COVID Vaccine Will Not Be Available Until January.

Bloomberg (10/28, Cortez, 4.73M) reports, "A vaccine to help control the coronavirus outbreak isn't likely to be available in the US until January, if then, according to" NIAID Director Fauci. The trials "are designed to run until a predetermined number of people who are enrolled get sick." The studies currently underway "are unlikely to hit those benchmarks until sometime in December, Fauci said in an online interview with Howard Bauchner, the editor-in-chief of the Journal of the American Medical Association."

US Agrees To Spend $375M On Lilly Antibody Drug.

The AP (10/28) reports that the US government "has agreed to buy initial doses of an experimental COVID-19 antibody drug from Eli Lilly that patients could receive if federal regulators allow it on an emergency basis." According to the AP, Eli Lilly has asked the FDA "to allow use of the drug in mild to moderately ill patients, based on partial results from a mid-stage study suggesting it may help them clear the virus sooner." The AP says that "under the agreement, the government will spend $375 million to buy 300,000 vials of the drug."

WPost Report: White House Failed To Follow Contact Tracing Rules After Rose Garden Event.

The Washington Post (10/28, Butler, Hamburger, Sun, Kaplan, 14.2M) reports, "It was Oct. 1, and Mark Fox, a county public health officer in South Bend, had just learned" that University of Notre Dame President John I. Jenkins "had tested positive for the novel coronavirus after attending a Rose Garden ceremony days earlier in honor of Supreme Court nominee Amy Coney Barrett." According to the Post, "There are long-standing protocols for investigating the spread of a virus: contact tracing, or interviewing infected people about their recent interactions and advising those exposed that they should get tested." The Post says the Administration "did not effectively deploy either technique in response" to what NIAID Director Fauci "has called a 'superspreader event' at the White House, leaving not just the president and his staff at risk, but also the hundreds of people who were potentially exposed."

White House Report Says Administration "Ended COVID" Despite Virus Resurgence.

The Daily Beast (10/28, 1.39M) reports that, "in a statement released Tuesday afternoon, the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy said that it considered 'ending the COVID-19 pandemic' to be one of President Donald Trump's major first term accomplishments." The office "released a corresponding report that listed achievements of the Trump administration in the area of science and innovation." Four White House coronavirus task force officials "told The Daily Beast that they viewed the White House's statement as a personal slight and a public rebuke of their efforts to try and get control of the virus." They also "described the report as the latest example of the president and his team of advisers refusing to acknowledge that the US is experiencing a worrying resurgence of the virus."

When asked on Fox News' America's Newsroom (10/28, 896K) about the statement, White House Strategic Communications Director Alyssa Farah said, "No, absolutely not. I think it was poorly worded. The intent was to say that it is our goal to end the virus. What I would say is this: Because of the President's leadership, we're rounding the corner on the virus. We're rushing therapeutics; we've now got positive announcements coming soon." Farah made a similar statement on WMBF-TV . Myrtle Beach, SC (10/28, 4:08 p.m. EDT, 6K).

In April, Kushner Said Trump Was Taking US "Back From The Doctors."

CNN (10/28, Gangel, Stuart, 83.16M) reports on its website White House Senior Adviser Jared Kushner "boasted in mid-April about how the President had cut out the doctors and scientists advising him on the unfolding coronavirus pandemic, comments that came as more than 40,000 Americans already had died from the virus, which was ravaging New York City." In a "taped interview on April 18, Kushner told legendary journalist Bob Woodward that Trump was 'getting the country back from the doctors' in what he called a 'negotiated settlement.'" Kushner "also proclaimed that the US was moving swiftly through the 'panic phase' and 'pain phase' of the pandemic and that the country was at the 'beginning of the comeback phase.'" Kushner added, "Trump's now back in charge. It's not the doctors." According to CNN, the statement "reflected a political strategy" – "instead of following the health experts' advice, Trump and Kushner were focused on what would help the President on Election Day."

Biden Again Denounces Trump's Handling Of Pandemic.

The AP (10/28, Weissert, Madhani) reports that on Wednesday, Joe Biden "vowed...not to campaign 'on the false promises of being able to end this pandemic by flipping a switch,' pledging instead to prioritize science, while President Donald Trump used the race's final days keeping a whirlwind schedule aimed at focusing on anything but the coronavirus." According to the AP, Biden "called Trump's handling of coronavirus an 'insult' to its victims, especially as cases rise dramatically around the country – an increase large enough to cause financial markets to sag." Biden is quoted as saying, "Even if I win, it's going to take a lot of hard work to end this pandemic. I do promise this: We will start on day one doing the right things."

DOJ Expands Inquiry Into New York Nursing Home Deaths.

The AP (10/28, Condon, Sedensky) reports that the Justice Department "vastly expanded an inquiry Wednesday that could determine whether New York is undercounting coronavirus deaths among nursing home residents, demanding detailed data from hundreds of private facilities." The "demand ratchets up pressure" on Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "after months of bipartisan criticism that the state's official tally of 6,722 dead at long-term care facilities is probably off by thousands." This is "because New York, unlike nearly every other state, counts only residents who died on a nursing home's property and not those who died after being taken to a hospital."

DOJ Investigating New Jersey Veterans Homes Over COVID Deaths.

The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Weaver, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the Justice Department has opened an investigation into the handling by New Jersey veterans homes of fatal coronavirus outbreaks earlier this year.

COVID Resulting In Disproportionate Burden On Working Mothers.

NBC Nightly News (10/28, story 10, 1:40, Holt, 5.63M) reported on the "disproportionate toll" the coronavirus pandemic has "taken on working moms." NBC's Vicki Nguyen asked, "How many had the leave or cut back on the work hours because of concerns related to your children? Ask any working woman with children in this pandemic, and her story is supported by the data. ... Of the 1.1 million workers over age 20 who left the work force in September, 80% were women." She added, "Some companies are trying to retain women by offering more paid time off, caregiver leave, and free child care, but only 32% of organizations returning to work have a child care plan mapped out."

WPost Profiles Maryland Family "Devastated" By Coronavirus.

The Washington Post (10/28, A1, Miller, 14.2M) profiles a Maryland family that was "devastated" by COVID-19 at the same time that President Trump was battling the illness.

WSJournal: Catholic Schools Show How To Reopen Safely.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Massachusetts Catholic schools' safe reopening confirms the process can be done safely and demonstrates how unions have been wrong to fight against in-person teaching.

Philadelphia Officials Impose Curfew, Call In State National Guard.

The CBS Evening News (10/28, story 6, 0:25, O'Donnell, 3.95M) reported that in Philadelphia, protesters continued to clash with police Tuesday night as "stores in some areas were looted. Fifty-three officers have been injured." The protests "come after police shot and killed Walter Wallace on Monday. The officers say he approached them with a knife," though "Wallace's family says he was going through a mental health crisis. His father has made a public plea for an end to the violence." NBC Nightly News (10/28, story 6, 1:20, Holt, 5.63M) reported, "More than 170 arrests, at least 50 officers injured." In the "neighborhood where Walter Wallace, armed with a knife, was shot and killed by police, hundreds of protesters in a standoff with police. ... Across the city, businesses boarded up as if bracing for a storm." Officials ordered a 9:00 pm curfew on Wednesday night, "hoping to stop another night of violence."

The Philadelphia Inquirer (10/28, Newall, Palmer) reports, "Four people were shot in Port Richmond Tuesday night amid looting that erupted across the city during a second day of unrest." The looting "wasn't directly connected to protests over Wallace's killing, which swept through West Philadelphia on Monday and Tuesday nights and ended with demonstrators clashing with police," and "none of the four people shot in Port Richmond" were "from that neighborhood, according to police documents describing the incidents." The shootings "came on a chaotic and violent night in the city, with police reporting at least five homicides, 13 shootings, and seven ATM explosions after 5 pm. Many of those incidents occurred outside of areas in which people gathered by the hundreds to decry the actions of the officers who shot Wallace." At a news conference on Wednesday, Mayor Jim Kenney and Police Commissioner Danielle Outlaw "condemned actions such as robbing stores or throwing bricks – or even what police believe was blood – at officers, behavior that Outlaw said 'had absolutely nothing to do with protest.'" The Washington Post (10/28, Klemko, Shepherd, Ewing, Berman, Witte, 14.2M) reports Kenney said, "The looting that has taken place...is distressing to say the least, and it is unacceptable," and those who are doing so are "doing a great disservice to the many others who want to exercise their First Amendment rights by protesting."

The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Calvert, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the first of several hundred soldiers from the Pennsylvania National Guard are expected to be in Philadelphia on Friday. Kenney said this, as well as the curfew, "are necessary in order to prevent the despicable activities we've seen. ... We will do everything we can to ensure the right to assemble and exercise free speech is protected. But we will not, repeat not, allow others to destroy property and further harm our communities."

Police Commissioner Says Body Cam, 911 Tapes In Wallace Killing Will Be Released. The AP (10/28, Lauer) reports Outlaw "said Wednesday that her department will release 911 tapes and footage from police body cameras 'in the near future' in the shooting death" of Walter Wallace. She "said officials would release the body cam footage and 911 tapes after talking with Wallace's family members," and she "also said the police department should move 'as soon as possible' to integrate with mental health services."

Biden On Unrest In Philadelphia: "There Is No Excuse Whatsoever For The Looting And The Violence." The AP (10/28) reports that President Trump "weigh[ed] in on two nights of clashes with Philadelphia police and store break-ins following the fatal shooting by police of Walter Wallace Jr." Trump is quoted as saying, "You can't let that go on. Again, a Democrat-run state, a Democrat-run city, Philadelphia."

The Washington Post (10/28, Wagner, Sonmez, Reinhard, 14.2M) reports that on Wednesday in Delaware, Joe Biden "condemned the rioting and looting that has taken place in Philadelphia in response to a deadly police-involved shooting. 'There is no excuse whatsoever for the looting and the violence,' Biden said. While protesting is legitimate, he said, 'there's no excuse for looting.'" Reuters (10/28) says Biden "urged calm amid ongoing unrest after a Black man was shot dead this week by police in Philadelphia, saying protesters had a right to peaceful demonstrations but not destruction. ... Protesting Monday's deadly police shooting... 'was totally legitimate, totally reasonable,' Biden said, but cited Wallace's father's plea to end the violence."

The New York Times (10/28, Hurdle, 18.61M) reports that in a joint statement on Tuesday, Biden and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "sought to validate protesters' anger over the death of Mr. Wallace while discouraging violence and attacks on the police." The statement reads: "We cannot accept that in this country a mental health crisis ends in death. ... Looting is not a protest, it is a crime. It draws attention away from the real tragedy of a life cut short." The AP says "local television and news websites showed looters entering stores in the Port Richmond neighborhood, northeast of the city center, while officers struggled with protesters in the heart of West Philadelphia, where Mr. Wallace was killed on Monday afternoon after approaching police officers with a knife." The AP also reports that "thirty officers were injured on Monday as protesters threw bricks and rocks at them, a police spokesman said, adding that one officer had a broken leg after being struck by a pickup truck."

On Fox News' America's Newsroom (10/28, 896K), White House Strategic Communications Director Alyssa Farah said, "I would say any time there is a loss of life, it's a tragedy. But what we can't see is lawlessness in our streets, and now 30 police officers injured in the aftermath of this. It is very concerning. We want to see our cities safe. If necessary, we're prepared to deploy federal assets."

NYTimes Analysis: Philadelphia Left To Consider What Can Be Done About Police Shootings, Looting. In an analysis, the New York Times (10/28, 18.61M) says the "shooting and its aftermath were guaranteed to ratchet up tensions in a country already on edge," and "the two presidential campaigns weighed in quickly, as expected given the outsize electoral importance of Pennsylvania." According to the Times, "Once again, the people in the neighborhood where it all took place were left to consider what had happened and what, if anything, could be done about it."

USA Today Analysis: Wallace Only Most Recent Police Shooting Of Person With Mental Illness. In an analysis, USA Today (10/28, Hauck, 10.31M) says Wallace's death "is only the most recent incident of police fatally shooting someone with a mental illness." Police "have fatally shot more than 1,300 people with mental illnesses since 2015, according to" a "Washington Post database of fatal shootings by on-duty police officers." Of the "more than 800 people shot and killed by police so far this year, 155 had a mental illness, and, of those, 17% were Black."

WPost: Police Should Be Trained On Better Deescalation Tactics. In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/28, 14.2M) asks, "Why was a 911 call for a mental health crisis answered with officers and drawn guns? Shouldn't there have been attempts to de-escalate the situation? Couldn't the officers have backed away rather than opening fire on a person in such obvious mental distress? The questions go to the heart of the debate over police use of lethal force." The Post says it is "important that officials take steps to improve how people in need of help get it" and recommends "the de-escalation training developed by the Police Executive Research Forum" as "a good place to start."

Taylor's Mother Calling For New Grand Jury In Daughter's Case.

The CBS Evening News (10/28, story 10, 0:25, O'Donnell, 3.95M) reported, "The mother of Breonna Taylor is calling for an independent prosecutor and new grand jury to investigate the fatal shooting of her daughter. Tamika Palmer is speaking out after two grand jurors in the case told CBS This Morning co-host Gayle King they believe police actions in the botched raid were 'criminal' and that prosecutors never gave them the option to consider murder charges. None of the officers involved were directly charged in Taylor's death."

Former Waukegan Officer Activated Body Camera Only After Fatal Shooting Of Black Teen.

USA Today (10/28, Hauck, 10.31M) reports, "The former Waukegan police officer who fatally shot" 19-year-old Marcellis Stinnette and injured 20-year-old Tafara Williams, both Black, "last week turned on his body camera after the shooting, according to videos released by the northern Illinois city Wednesday afternoon." The two were shot "when the car they were in allegedly reversed toward an officer, who fired into the car, according to police." The officer, "who was identified only as a Hispanic five-year member of the department, was terminated Friday night 'for multiple policy and procedure violations,' Department Commander Edgar Navarro said." Once the officer's body camera was turned on, "he appears to be standing several yards away from the crashed car," and "about 30 seconds in, he says 'I was right behind you, and you almost tried to run me over.'"

NYPD Officer Who Pressed Knee Into Neck Of Arrest Bystander Retires.

The New York Times (10/28, Southall, 18.61M) reports New York City police officer Francisco X. Garcia, "facing misconduct charges for kneeling on a bystander's neck during a social-distancing arrest has retired, according to the victim's lawyer and the officer's labor union." Garcia "was scheduled to appear at a departmental hearing this week on misconduct charges stemming from the May 2 incident, which fueled an uproar over racial disparities in how the police enforced social-distancing measures." Instead, Garcia "retired on Tuesday, avoiding proceedings that could be used against him in a criminal investigation of the incident underway in the Manhattan district attorney's office."

WPost Examines Floyd's Interactions With Police.

The Washington Post (10/28, A1, Hernandez, 14.2M) continues its series on the life of George Floyd with a detailed look at Floyd's encounters with police.

Senators Grill Social Media CEOs Over Handling Of Hunter Biden Report.

The CEOs of Alphabet, Facebook, and Twitter testified before the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee on Wednesday in a hearing largely sparked by the decision of Twitter to block access to a New York Post report on Hunter Biden. The AP (10/28, Gordon) reports that "lawmakers of both parties, citing the companies' tremendous power to disseminate speech and ideas, are looking to challenge their long-enjoyed bedrock legal protections for online speech," and Bloomberg (10/28, Frier, Wagner, Brody, 4.73M) reports that the CEOs were "accused by senators of abusing their power over political speech six days before the election."

Much of the coverage focuses on an exchange between Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) and Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey. The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Tracy, McKinnon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Cruz accused Twitter of acting on behalf of the Democrats in blocking tweets that linked to the Post story, and asked, "Who the hell elected you and put you in charge of what the media are allowed to report?" Dorsey replied, "I hear the concerns and acknowledge them." The Dallas Morning News (10/28, 946K) says "there was little doubt that the showdown between Cruz and Dorsey would produce fireworks, given that the Texan has long railed against Twitter and that his staff produced a poster for the clash that was made to look a promotion for a boxing match." The Daily Caller (10/28, 716K) says Cruz criticized Dorsey "for censoring stories." Townhall (10/28, Pavlich, 177K) reports, "As of today, the New York Post is still locked out of their Twitter account."

Reuters (10/28) reports that Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg "said...that a warning from the FBI on hack-and-leak operations before the Nov. 3 presidential election played a role in its decision to limit the reach" of the Post report. Zuckerberg said, "One of the threats that the FBI has alerted our companies...to was the possibility of a hack and leak operation in the days or weeks leading up to this election." USA Today

(10/28, Guynn, 10.31M) reports Zuckerberg said Facebook “throttled the story while it was being fact-checked” after the warnings. Twitter “initially blocked links to the article, then reversed itself.”

The New York Times (10/28, McCabe, 18.61M) reports that Republicans “expressed concerns that Facebook, Google and Twitter made decisions about how to moderate content in ways that were slanted against conservatives, pointing to the increasing attention the issue has attracted from the party’s base.” According to the Washington Post (10/28, Romm, Lerman, Zakrzewski, Kelly, Dwoskin, 14.2M), “The nearly four-hour session was rife with hyperbole and misstatement sometimes on the part of lawmakers themselves, in a reflection of the country’s many schisms – and the stakes for Silicon Valley.” The Post says “all three tech giants denied they harbor any political biases, and GOP lawmakers provided scant evidence for their claims.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Dorsey did not give the impression that he was concerned by Twitter’s abuse of its power, and argues that the service has sided with Democrats in the past. The Washington Times (10/28, Lovelace, 492K) and Roll Call (10/28, DeChiaro, 154K) are among the other outlets covering the hearing.

Politico: WSJournal, Fox News Have Found “No Evidence That Joe Biden Benefited” From Son’s Business Dealings.
Politico (10/28, Nguyen, 4.29M) reports that both the Wall Street Journal and Fox News have found “no evidence that Joe Biden benefited from the Hunter Biden business dealings that have drawn scrutiny. More explicitly pro-Trump media outlets – OAN, Breitbart, Newsmax – have mostly shied away from publishing fresher, more salacious allegations. And conservative talking heads – pundits, politicians and loud MAGA Twitter personalities alike – have been more focused on the meta narrative around the laptop, arguing that mainstream media, social media companies and the deep state are conspiring to prevent President Trump’s reelection by suppressing the story.” Still, the Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Hunter Biden’s former business partner Tony Bobulinski has provided evidence of misdoings that should not be ignored.

Senate Democrats Press Trump Organization On Chinese Bank Account.

Bloomberg (10/28, Davison, Litvan, 4.73M) reports that Senate Democrats are “asking the Trump Organization to explain the company’s ties to China after reports from the New York Times that the president’s company has a bank account there.” Bloomberg says that in a letter to Trump Organization lawyer Alan Garten, the senators “asked for the name of the financial institution and for a detailed accounting of all the transactions between President Donald Trump’s bank account and China since 2013.”

Giuliani Associate To Plead Guilty To Fraud Charges.

The AP (10/28, Neumeister) reports that “a change-of-plea hearing is set for Thursday for a man charged with conspiring with associates of Rudy Giuliani...to make illegal campaign contributions.” The hearing for David Correia “was announced in a filing Wednesday in Manhattan federal court. If it occurs as planned, Correia would become the first conviction among four men charged last year with using straw donors to make illegal contributions to politicians they thought could aid their political and business interests.”

Reuters (10/28) reports that Correia is “a business partner of Lev Parnas, the former associate of” Giuliani, and “is expected to enter a guilty plea on Thursday after being charged with defrauding investors in an insurance startup they founded.” Reuters says Correia was “among four defendants, including Ukraine-born Parnas and Belarus-born Igor Fruman, another former Giuliani associate, charged last October with campaign finance violations to further their political or business interests.” CNBC (10/28, Mangan, 3.62M) reports on its website that Correia and Parnas are “charged with defrauding investors in a would-be company named ‘Fraud Guarantee,’ a court filing revealed.”

Russian PR Executive Played Role In Creation Of Dossier.

The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on how Russian public relations executive named Olga Galkina got information to ex-British spy Christopher Steele for his since-discredited dossier on President Trump.

Administration Considering Biometric Database For Visa Applicants.

According to draft plans viewed by the Wall Street Journal (10/28, Hackman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the Trump Administration is planning to create a biometric database into which visitors or prospective immigrants would have to enter before applying for US visas. Administration officials have argued that doing so will permit more time for the government to conduct background checks.

Administration Proposes Change To H-1B Visa Prioritizing High-Earning Applicants.

On its website, Fox News (10/28, Shaw, 27.59M) reports that DHS “moved to make a significant change” to the H-1B visa, a “controversial guest worker program,” which “would prioritize higher-paid applicants.” The proposed rule change “is one that will help American workers, Trump administration officials said.” The visa program “has been criticized for being marred by abuse and that it is used by tech companies to bring in cheaper labor to replace American workers and to keep wages low,” while “those in favor of the program say it is used to attract talent to fill gaps that the domestic labor market cannot meet.”

Immigrants Facing “Express Deportations” Repeatedly Reattempt Border Crossing.

The AP (10/28, Spagat) reports that “after a slew of profound changes by the Trump administration to limit” asylum claims in the United States, "the coronavirus brought it to a halt." Now, "with immigration laws largely suspended at the border since March, Mexicans and people from Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador who enter the US illegally are immediately expelled without even a piece of paper, generally within two hours and with no chance to plead for asylum – the post-Holocaust system to protect people around the world from torture and persecution at home." With no consequences, "migrants are more determined to keep trying until they succeed." The "suspension of asylum combined with the introduction of 'express deportations,' as migrants call them, accelerated a shift" in who is crossing the border.

ICE Accused Of Circumventing Cuban Asylum Rules By Not Releasing Immigrants.

The Miami Herald (10/28, 1.09M) reports, "Under the longtime policy 'wet foot, dry foot,' a Cuban asylum seeker who made it to US soil would be released into the community right after being processed." This policy "was phased out under the administration of President Barack Obama," but "other policies favoring Cubans" remain – "they are just not being applied uniformly" under the Trump Administration. According to the Herald, "Successfully applying for release may hinge on having access to a lawyer," and "Cuban detainees who do manage to parole out have an advantage that other nationalities do not: After one year and a day on parole status, they are able to become legal residents." Under President Trump, ICE "appears to be thwarting the intent of that provision by simply not releasing Cuban asylum seekers, thus never starting the clock on the one-year-and-a-day timetable, immigration advocates say."

Rollins: People With Pre-Existing Conditions Will Have "Better Option" If ACA Is Overturned.

On Washington Post Live (10/28), White House Domestic Policy Council Acting Director Brooke Rollins discussed what would happen to Americans with pre-existing conditions if the Supreme Court overturns the Affordable Care Act. Rollins said there are "130 million Americans with a pre-existing conditions," but "only three million of those 130 million are actually in the Affordable Care Act exchanges. So, we're really talking about three million Americans that are currently in the system. So, what the plan is, you take the more than $1 trillion...that is currently set aside over the next 10 years to cover the Affordable Care Act. You divide $1 trillion by three million people with pre-existing conditions – understanding there are more people actually in the system through subsidies, etc. – but when we're speaking specifically about those with pre-existing conditions, they will have such a better option, such better plans."

Eight Charged With Pursuing Chinese Nationals In US.

The New York Times (10/28, Schmidt, 18.61M) reports on Wednesday, the Justice Department "announced charges...against eight people accused of conspiring to conduct an aggressive harassment campaign on behalf of China to pressure political dissidents and fugitives in the United States to return home to face trial." The Times says the suspects are "accused of hiring American private investigators to locate the expatriates who had taken refuge in the United States and then stalking, surveilling and threatening them." While China says the effort, which it calls Operation Fox Hunt "is aimed at rooting out corrupt officials who have fled the country," US officials "said that was dubious because the Chinese refused to work through legal channels to resolve the cases."

The Washington Post (10/28, Barrett, 14.2M) quotes FBI Director Wray as saying, "China is violating norms and laws left and right. ... Surveilling, stalking, harassing and blackmailing our citizens and lawful permanent residents carry serious risks." Assistant Attorney General John Demers "said Fox Hunt sometimes targeted individuals who might have violated financial laws and were legitimate targets of law enforcement investigations. But many other targets, he said, were political rivals, dissidents or critics of the Chinese government." The Post says "arrests were made in New York, New Jersey and California." A "fifth person in custody is Michael McMahon, a New Jersey private investigator who assisted in the surveillance and pressure tactics, according to U.S. officials." Reuters (10/28, Hosenball) reports "the rest are believed to be in China." Reuters says "all eight defendants in the case are charged with conspiring to act as illegal agents for a foreign government."

Sixty Arrested In Alleged Telemarketing Scheme.

The New York Times (10/28, León, 18.61M) reports, "Sixty people have been indicted in a nationwide telemarketing scheme in which federal prosecutors say people were tricked into signing up for expensive magazine subscriptions they could not afford, did not want and often did not receive, and in which over 150,000 people were defrauded of more than $300 million." According to "three separate indictments handed up last week, prosecutors alleged that for 20 years, dozens of fraudulent telemarketing companies operating across 14 states and two Canadian provinces used deceptive sales tactics in the scheme." US Attorney Erica McDonald "said at a news conference on Wednesday that the scheme was part of a growing trend in crimes against older people in recent years." She called the operation "the largest elder fraud scheme in the nation."

Bay Area Police Investigating Spray-Painted Swastika, "Trump" On Garage Door As Hate Crime.

The Los Angeles Times (10/28, 4.64M) reports, "Investigators are trying to determine who spray-painted a swastika and the word 'Trump' on a Bay Area garage door" as a possible hate crime. In a written statement, Lafayette Mayor Mike Anderson said, "There is no place for hate in Lafayette. ... This is an inclusive and diverse city where everyone is welcome," and "the spray-painting of a swastika, a symbol of oppression, genocide and xenophobia, on an individual's home will not be tolerated."

President's Attacks On Adversaries Followed Often By Online Threats.

The Washington Post (10/28, Miller, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports, "The CIA's most endangered employee for much of the past year was not an operative on a mission abroad, but an analyst who faced a torrent of threats after filing a whistleblower report that led to the impeachment of President Trump." The analyst "spent months living in no-frills hotels under surveillance by CIA security, current and former US officials said." The measures "were imposed by the CIA's Security Protective Service, which monitored thousands of threats across social media and Internet chat rooms." The agency found that "violent messages surged each time the analyst was targeted in tweets or public remarks by the president." According to the Post, "Over the past year, public servants across the country have faced similar ordeals." Targets "encompass nearly every category of government service: mayors, governors and members of Congress, as well as officials Trump has turned against within his own administration."

Hurricane Zeta Makes Landfall In Louisiana.

Lester Holt reported on NBC Nightly News (10/28, lead story, 1:45, 5.63M) that Hurricane Zeta has "made landfall in Louisiana. New Orleans [is] in the hurricane warning zone after Zeta rapidly intensified into a Category 2 storm." David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (10/28, lead story, 2:50, 6.59M) that Zeta is "the fifth hurricane to hit Louisiana" this year. Danya Bacchus reported on the CBS Evening News (10/28, lead story, 2:50, O'Donnell, 3.95M), "Hurricane Zeta slammed into the Louisiana coast as a strong Category 2 tonight and is now barreling through the state. Fierce winds [are] already wreaking havoc in Grand Isle, where residents are under mandatory evacuation orders. Officials are warning of deadly storm surge as heavy rainfall floods streets."

The AP (10/28, McGill, Plaisance, Santana) reports Zeta "threatened to push up to 9 feet of sea water inland. ... The storm killed at least one person, a 55-year-old man who a Louisiana coroner said was electrocuted by a downed power line in New Orleans, and officials said life-threatening conditions would last into Thursday." The New Orleans Times-Picayune (10/28, Hasselle, 480K) reports more than 475,000 residents lost power. The Washington Post (10/28, Cusick, 14.2M) and the CNN (10/28, Holcombe, Walker, Levenson, 83.16M) and Fox News (10/28, Ruiz, 27.59M) websites are among the other sources covering the progress of the storm.

Ex-DHS Official Reveals Himself As "Anonymous" Trump Critic.

The AP (10/28, Freking, Miller) reports that Miles Taylor, who worked at DHS from 2017 through 2019, spending the last nine months of his tenure as chief of staff, revealed Wednesday that he was the Administration official "who penned a scathing anti-Trump op-ed and book under the pen name 'Anonymous.'" Taylor "has been an outspoken critic of Trump's in recent months and had repeatedly denied he was the author of the column – even to colleagues at CNN, where he has a contributor contract." Chief of Staff Meadows "called Taylor's revelation 'a monumental embarrassment,' tweeting, 'I've seen more exciting reveals in Scooby-Doo episodes.'" USA Today (10/28, 10.31M) reports President Trump said in a tweet that "he didn't know Taylor and 'never even heard of him. Just another @nytimes SCAM – he worked in conjunction with them.' Noting that Taylor sometimes appears on CNN, Trump said, 'they should fire, shame, and punish everybody.'"

Hallie Jackson said on NBC Nightly News (10/28, story 4, 0:15, Holt, 5.63M) that "a yearlong Washington guessing game came to a close" with Taylor's announcement. Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (10/28, story 3, 0:55, Muir, 6.59M) that Taylor is "hardly a household name. ... I think many people were under the impression – I know I was – that the article was written by somebody with a much more senior role." Breitbart (10/28, 673K) says Taylor "had very little access to the president, but the Times described him as a 'senior' official at the time of the op-ed's publishing."

The New York Times (10/28, Shear, 18.61M) reports Taylor "acknowledged that he was the author of both the book and the opinion article in an interview and in a three-page statement he posted online." According to the New York Daily News (10/28, Sommerfeldt, 2.52M), he wrote in part, "I am a Republican, and I wanted this President to succeed. That's why I came into the Administration, But too often in times of crisis, I saw Donald Trump prove he is a man without character, and his personal defects have resulted in leadership failures so significant that they can be measured in lost American lives."

Reuters (10/28), the Washington Post (10/28, Itkowitz, Dawsey, 14.2M), the Wall Street Journal (10/28, Ballhaus, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the New York Post (10/28, Nelson, 4.57M), the Washington Times (10/28, Dinan, Boyer, 492K), the Daily Caller (10/28, 716K), Townhall (10/28, Stocking, 177K), and The Federalist (10/28, 126K) also cover the revelation.

FBI Agents Association Warns Against Removal Of Wray.

USA Today (10/28, Johnson, 10.31M) reports FBI agents on Wednesday "voiced their support" for FBI Director Wray, warning both President Trump and Joe Biden "that his untimely removal could 'undermine stability' within the federal government's premier law enforcement agency. The action by the FBI Agents Association, representing 14,000 active and retired agents, comes as Trump is weighing a number of key staff changes after the election, including the dismissal of Wray, who has served just more than three years of 10-year term following the abrupt removal of James Comey in 2017."

The Washington Post (10/28, Zapotosky, 14.2M) reports, "In letters to the two 2020 presidential candidates FBI Agents Association President Brian O'Hare noted that since 1976, FBI directors have been appointed for 10-year terms – which is supposed to insulate their law enforcement mission from politics. While presidents can remove their directors, O'Hare wrote that 'doing so could lead to instability and damage to the Bureau's operations.'" O'Hare wrote, "No matter the outcome of next week's election, the men and women of the FBI are urging both Presidential candidates to allow Director Wray to lead the Bureau and serve our country." Bloomberg (10/28, Strohm, 4.73M) also has a report.

Lenders Forgave $287M In Trump Organization Debt Since 2010.

The New York Times (10/28, Enrich, Buettner, McIntire, Craig, 18.61M) reports that President Trump's federal income tax records "show for the first time that, since 2010, his lenders have forgiven about $287 million in debt that he failed to repay." According to the Times, "the vast majority was related to [a] Chicago project." The Times says Trump "and his family hoped the Trump International Hotel & Tower would cement their company's reputation as one of the world's marquee developers of luxury real estate. Instead, the skyscraper became another disappointment in a portfolio filled with them."

National Polls Range From Narrow Trump Lead To Double-Digit Biden Leads.

A CNN/SSRS poll of 886 likely voters nationwide (10/23-10/26) has Joe Biden at 54% and President Trump at 42%. An Economist/YouGov poll of 1,365 registered voters nationwide (10/25-10/27) has Biden at 54% and Trump at 43%. An IBD/TIPP poll of 991 likely voters nationwide (10/23-10/27) has Biden at 50.0%, Trump 45.4%, Libertarian Jo Jorgensen 1.6%, and Green Howie Hawkins 0.6%. A Qriously poll of 2,234 likely voters nationwide (10/22-10/26) has Biden at 49% and Trump at 39%. A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 likely voters nationwide (10/25-10/27) has Trump at 48% and Biden at 47%. A Redfield & Wilton poll of 5,745 registered voters nationwide (10/25-10/26) has Biden at 51%, Trump 41%, Hawkins 1%, and Jorgensen 1%. A USC Dornsife poll of 5,293 likely voters nationwide (10/14-10/27) has Biden at 53.7% and Trump at 42.3%. Biden has a 7.5-point lead in the RCP average and a 9.0-point lead in the FiveThirtyEight average.

Philip Bump of the Washington Post (10/28, 14.2M) writes that Trump "faces a significant hurdle: He needs to win multiple states where, over the past 100 days, he has never led. It's not just that Trump hasn't led. It's that there are a number of states in which Trump's support has never topped about 45 percent in FiveThirtyEight's polling averages."

Nate Silver writes at FiveThirtyEight (10/28, 356K), "After a surprisingly sluggish weekend for polling, the floodgates have opened. ... And although there are some outliers in both directions," new polls "tell a fairly consistent story, overall: A steady race nationally, perhaps with some gains for Joe Biden in the Midwest."

More Than 75M Have Voted, More Than 42M Requested Mail Ballots Still Unreturned.

On ABC World News Tonight (10/28, story 4, 2:25, 6.59M), David Muir reported, "More than 75 million Americans have voted already. That's more than half of the entire vote four years ago." ABC's Marcus Moore added, "Texas leads the nation with more than eight million already voting. That is 90% of the [state's] entire vote from 2016." However, the AP (10/28, Cassidy) reports that "millions of mail ballots have yet to be returned in key battleground states, and election officials warn that time is running out for voters who want to avoid a polling place on Election Day." Janet Shamlian reported on the CBS Evening News (10/28, story 8, 2:10, O'Donnell, 3.95M), "Florida has more than 1.9 million unreturned; more than 1.5 million in Arizona. Georgia has more than 700,000 outstanding, Michigan more than 800,000."

The Washington Post (10/28, Hawkins, Bogage, 14.2M) reports, "More than 42 million out of the 92 million mail ballots requested by voters nationally had not yet been returned as of Wednesday afternoon, according to data from the U.S. Elections Project. ... In the 20 states where party affiliation data was available, more than 11 million of the outstanding ballots had been requested by Democrats, nearly 8 million by Republicans and about 10 million by unaffiliated voters."

CNBC (10/28, Breuninger, 3.62M) says on its website that in Texas, "early voting numbers in the state should encourage Democrats." Reuters (10/28, Ax, Brooks) reports polls show Joe Biden and President Trump "effectively tied" in Texas, and also suggest Biden "is leading among those helping to set its staggering early vote totals." The Washington Post (10/28, Johnson, Hernandez, 14.2M) reports, "Many Texas Democrats had eyed 2024 as the year when what has been elusive for so long might just happen: their state's growing, diversifying electorate would make them truly competitive statewide. But that timeline seems to have sped up."

In an editorial, USA Today (10/28, 10.31M) praises early voters for turning out "amid a terrifying pandemic, in the face of blatant voter suppression attempts. ... Many voters are expressing their concerns about the direction of the country and the government's failure to deal effectively with the pandemic. They are responding in the best way possible, with the most important tool at their disposal." NBC Nightly News (10/28, story 11, 1:10, Holt, 5.63M) spoke with some voters waiting in line to vote early.

SCOTUS Allows Extended Mail-In Ballot Deadlines In North Carolina And Pennsylvania. Reuters (10/28) reports the Supreme Court on Wednesday "dealt setbacks to Republicans by allowing extended deadlines for receiving mail-in ballots in next Tuesday's election in Pennsylvania and North Carolina." The action "means a Sept. 17 ruling by Pennsylvania's top court allowing mail-in ballots that are postmarked by Election Day and received up to three days later to be counted will remain in place for now." The AP (10/28, Sherman, Drew) reports the Court "will allow absentee ballots in North Carolina to be received and counted up to nine days after Election Day, in a win for Democrats."

The New York Times (10/28, Liptak, 18.61M) reports, "The court's brief orders in the two cases were unsigned. The Pennsylvania order appeared to be unanimous, while the North Carolina one was issued over three noted dissents" from Justices Samuel Alito, Neil Gorsuch, and Clarence Thomas. USA Today (10/28, Wolf, 10.31M) calls the Pennsylvania decision "a defeat" for Republicans. But ballots "received after polls close on Tuesday will be segregated from those received earlier, and if the state turns out to be pivotal, the high court could consider the state GOP's challenge after the election."

The Washington Post (10/28, Barnes, 14.2M) reports Justice Amy Coney Barrett "did not to participate in either case. Her decision did not signal a blanket recusal in election cases involving Trump, who nominated her. ... Instead, Barrett indicated through a court spokeswoman that the cases needed prompt decisions and that, having started work Tuesday, she did not have time to fully review the legal arguments."

The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Bravin, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the Philadelphia Inquirer (10/28), the Charlotte Observer (10/28, 470K), Politico (10/28, Montellaro, Gerstein, 4.29M), and The Hill (10/28, Kruzell, 2.98M) also have reports. The CBS Evening News (10/28, story 3, 0:35, O'Donnell, 3.95M) had a brief item, while NBC Nightly News (10/28, story 7, 4:20, Holt, 5.63M) and the New York Times (10/28, Medina, 18.61M) profiled voters in Pennsylvania.

Democrats Concerned By Mail Delivery Delays In Some Cities. Reuters (10/28, Shepardson) reports congressional Democrats said Wednesday that "reported delays in mail deliveries in some U.S. cites could jeopardize delivery of ballots ahead of next week's presidential election." On Tuesday, US District Judge Emmet Sullivan ordered the US Postal Service "to release daily reports on mail deliveries, participate in daily court conferences and take other steps to ensure timely delivery of ballots." Bloomberg (10/28, Shields, 4.73M) reports the USPS on Wednesday "reported a slide in on-time service including a steep drop in the Democratic stronghold of Philadelphia, with the election and its deadlines for mailed ballots less than a week away."

The Washington Post (10/28, 14.2M) editorializes, "Election Day this year is going to feel different. Many Americans will have to weigh whether voting is worth risking" COVID infection, "perhaps because their absentee ballot did not arrive fast enough, or they worry it would not get back in time to count, or they were denied the option of voting by mail in the first place. For this, they can thank Republicans in states such as Texas and Wisconsin who maintained arbitrary limits on absentee ballots." The Post says the result of so many by-mail votes "will be an Election Day that may not end with the declaration of a clear winner." President Trump "may claim fraud or declare victory before all the votes are counted. If Americans go into Election Day with the right expectations, they will ignore his self-serving lies."

National Forest In Alaska Opened To Logging.

Reuters (10/28) reports on Wednesday, the Trump Administration "finalized a plan to open vast portions of the nation's largest national forest, the Tongass in Alaska, to logging." The plan "lifts longstanding restrictions on tree harvests in the southeastern Alaska forest and is in line with President Donald Trump's agenda to roll back environmental regulations that he says are roadblocks to industry." Reuters also says the move "marked a victory for Alaska state officials who petitioned for the change because they said a Clinton-era rule that banned logging, roads and mining in undeveloped forests has cost Alaskans jobs."

The Washington Post (10/28, Eilperin, 14.2M) reports that, "as of Thursday, more than 9.3 million acres of forest – featuring old-growth stands of red and yellow cedar, Sitka spruce and Western hemlock, as well as plentiful salmon runs and imposing fjords – will now be open for road building." The decision, "which will be published in the Federal Register and reverses protections President Bill Clinton put in place in 2001, is one of the most sweeping public lands rollbacks Trump has enacted."

The AP (10/28, Bohrer) reports, "About 9.4 million of Tongass' 16.7 million acres are considered roadless areas, according to the Forest Service, which falls under the USDA." This number "differs slightly from the 9.2 million acres the agency cited in its draft environmental review last fall." The "majority of Tongass is in a natural condition, and the forest is one of the largest, relatively intact temperate rainforests in the world, the agency said."

Lawsuit Accuses Census Bureau Of Pressuring Households To Falsify Data.

The AP (10/28) reports the US Census Bureau "was able to claim it had reached 99.9% of households when the 2020 census ended two weeks ago because census takers were pressured to falsify data as the statistical agency cut corners and slashed standards, according to an amended lawsuit from advocacy groups and local governments." The lawsuit "argues the disregard for accuracy was done to end the count early so that census numbers could be processed" while President Trump "was still in the White House, regardless of who wins the presidential race."

Bernhardt Signs Order To Make National Parks Free To Veterans, Gold Star Families.

On KCCI-TV Des Moines, IA (10/28, 6:45 p.m. CDT, 44K), Interior Secretary Bernhardt said he signed an order on Wednesday permitting veterans and Gold Star families free admission to national parks. Bernhardt said, "Waiving this fee is a meaningful way, that is consistent with the President's commitment to veterans and to Gold Star families. And so I think it would be great for anyone who can to get out on Veterans Day."

Bernhardt Draws Criticism For Retweeting Video Praising Trump. The Washington Post (10/28, Bella, 14.2M) reports, "Over a bouncy tune, the video flashes stunning images of birds, mountains and plains over text hailing President Trump for 'preserving the awesome majesty of God's great creation.'" The Post says the video was shared Tuesday evening on Bernhardt's official Twitter account. Critics accused Bernhardt and the Interior Department "of using agency resources to promote a video supporting Trump's reelection in violation of the Hatch Act."

Chao Discusses DOT Grants.

Transportation Secretary Chao said on WFXT-TV Boston (10/28, 5:15 p.m. EDT, 14K) that the $29 million the DOT awarded to a Boston-area train station will go to building a high-level platform commuters. Chao said, "These improvements are going to expand the station's capacity improve reliability and of course reduce delays."

On WLUC-TV Marquette, MI (10/28, 5:03 p.m. EDT, 12K), Chao said that a record $6.6 billion has been granted toward Michigan transportation infrastructure. Chao said, "When employers think about what area they're going to enter, what kind of plants they are going to set up, they look at the transportation infrastructure first and foremost. So we want to make sure that the rail infrastructure is modernized, paid attention to, and repaired and maintained, as well." Chao linked the need for infrastructure spending with a story on WJBK-TV Detroit (10/28, 6:30 p.m. EDT, 43K) about a train derailment in Detroit. Chao said, "Today's accident, and all the inconveniences that it has caused for commuters and for the communities, underscores the tremendous need to maintain and keep infrastructure at the best state that it can possibly be so that we can prevent accidents like this."

On WDIO-TV Duluth, MN (10/28, 8K), Chao said the Department of Transportation's "Applicant Tool Kit" can help officials apply for infrastructure funding. Chao said, "This will allow communities who can't afford the army of consultants like urban areas," such as rural Americans, an "online, user-friendly resource to enable them to find out what discretionary grant programs are available in Department and how to apply."

Relationship Between McConnell, Schumer At New Low After Barrett Confirmation.

The Hill (10/28, Bolton, 2.98M) reports that the relationship between Senate Majority Leader McConnell and Senate Minority Leader Schumer "has hit a new low after the bitter fight over newly sworn in Justice Amy Coney Barrett." The "rancorous nature of their relationship was on full display Monday evening, moments before the Senate voted to confirm Barrett along party lines, when Schumer declared it would 'go down as one of the darkest days in the 231-year history of the Senate.'" According to The Hill, "The deterioration of their relationship in recent months, a tense election year when control of the Senate in 2021 is at stake, raises questions about their ability to work together in the future and whether Democrats will change the chamber's rules once in power to circumvent McConnell entirely."

Ocasio-Cortez Profiled In Vanity Fair Cover Story.

In its magazine's December 2020 cover story, Vanity Fair (10/28, Ruiz, 9.08M) profiles Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY). The 5,700-word piece describes Ocasio-Cortez's background and childhood, as well as the threats she's faced while in office, the way she's had to adapt to being a public figure, and legislation like the Green New Deal about which she feels passionately. Of the presidential election, Ocasio-Cortez said, "This is not about a decision between two candidates. ... It's about a decision between two countries." Vanity Fair says a Joe Biden win "gives her district, which is dominantly made up of Latinx, Asian, and Black people and had been the epicenter of the epicenter of the pandemic, a fighting chance. If it's Trump, I cannot honestly look them in the eye and tell them that they will be safe."

QAnon Surviving Despite Crackdown By Tech Companies.

The Washington Post (10/28, Timberg, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports, "Months into Silicon Valley's crackdown on the far-right QAnon conspiracy theory, dozens of websites, social media apps and e-commerce platforms remain flooded with its debunked claims, showing a durability likely to outlast next week's presidential election – no matter the outcome." QAnon accounts "have grown steeply on social media apps, such as Parler and Telegram, that have little content moderation." Merchants selling "QAnon-themed books and T-shirts appear to be thriving, including on such major online retailers as Amazon." On Twitter, "one of the tech companies seeking to curb the content, accounts openly touting QAnon remain active in online political debate, especially in key states such as Florida and Texas, according to new research."

Pence Campaigns In Wisconsin And Michigan.

The Wausau \(WI\) Daily Herald (10/28, 53K) reports, "With COVID-19 infection numbers breaking records across the state, a vice president who would be in quarantine under the nation's disease-control guidelines traveled to central Wisconsin" to campaign on Wednesday. Vice President Pence, speaking at Central Wisconsin Airport in Mosinee, "focused heavily on themes of agriculture, trade and manufacturing, telling audience members that [President] Trump fought for Wisconsin dairy and he won for Wisconsin Dairy with the USMCA (United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement)' and touting aid the administration has provided to farmers."

MLive (MI) (10/28, Barrett, 925K) reports Pence also "held a campaign rally at Bishop International Airport in Flint Wednesday, his sixth visit to Michigan in 2020 and third campaign stop in October. The vice president outlined his case for a second term to more than 200 supporters, touting Trump's record of appointing conservative judges, rewriting trade deals and building a strong economy before the coronavirus struck."

Scott Launches Pro-Trump Ad In Florida.

Politico (10/28, Caputo, 4.29M) reports Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) has launched "a big TV ad buy" to promote President Trump in Florida. Politico says Scott's "direct-to-camera ad isn't only about advancing the president's interests. It also raises the first-term senator's profile as he seeks to become the head of the National Republican Senatorial Committee. Scott – who has an eye on a potential presidential bid in 2024 and his own reelection that year – has run two other ads during this presidential cycle, one attacking Joe Biden that aired in Iowa and another attacking" Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT).

Biden Vows To Pass Equality Act In First 100 Days.

Reuters (10/28, Trotta) reports Joe Biden "has promised to make passing the LGBTQ rights legislation known as the Equality Act a top priority, hoping to sign what would be a landmark civil rights law within 100 days should he win Tuesday's election." Reuters says Biden "also pledged in an interview with the Philadelphia Gay News to expand queer rights internationally by making equality a centerpiece of U.S. diplomacy should he win the election and assume office in January." Biden told the Philadelphia Gay News (10/28), "I will make enactment of the Equality Act a top legislative priority during my first 100 days, a priority that Donald Trump opposes."

Harris Campaigns In Arizona.

The Arizona Republic (10/28, 869K) reports Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) on Wednesday "made a final appeal to Arizona voters who have yet to cast their ballots, emphasizing the 'clear contrast' between this year's Republican and Democratic tickets during back-to-back events in Phoenix and Tucson. The trip marked Harris' second visit to the crucial battleground state this month." The Arizona Daily Star (10/28, 243K) reports Harris met with local small-business owners and spoke at a drive-in event at Tucson's Pima Community College.

The Washington Post (10/28, Roig-Franzia, 14.2M) has a 2,700-word feature on Harris' husband Doug Emhoff, saying he "paused his career" for her aspirations "and became the campaign's 'secret weapon.'"

Biden And Obama To Appear Together In Michigan On Saturday.

The AP (10/28) reports that Joe Biden and former President Barack Obama will both be at a rally in Michigan on Saturday, although the Biden campaign "hasn't said where it will be held."

Biden Faults Trump After Rally Attendees Were Stuck In Freezing Weather.

The Washington Post (10/28, Elfrink, 14.2M) reports that "by the time President Trump finished speaking to thousands of supporters at Omaha's Eppley Airfield on Tuesday night and jetted away on Air Force One, the temperature had plunged to nearly freezing. But as long lines of MAGA-clad attendees queued up for buses to take them to distant parking lots, it quickly became clear something was wrong." According to the Post, "The buses, the huge crowd soon learned, couldn't navigate the jammed airport roads. For hours, attendees – including many elderly Trump supporters – stood in the cold as police scrambled to help those most at risk get to warmth." The Post says "thirty people needed medical attention over the course of the rally."

The New York Times (10/28, Searcey, Stevens, Victor, Kaplan, 18.61M) reports Joe Biden "seized on the mishap Wednesday as he gave a speech in Wilmington, Del., criticizing the president's handling of the coronavirus." Biden said, "Just look at what happened last night in Omaha after Trump – after the Trump rally ended. Hundreds of people, including older Americans and children, were stranded in subzero freezing temperatures for hours. Several folks ended up in the hospital. It's an image that captures President Trump's whole approach to this crisis."

NYTimes Considers Biden's Strategy Of Following Light Travel Schedule.

The New York Times (10/28, Glueck, 18.61M) looks at whether the light travel and public event schedule Joe Biden has followed in his campaign due to the coronavirus is a "wise tactic" or a "misguided gamble." If he wins, the Times says, "the measured pace he maintained at the end of the race may be remembered as evidence that he wisely tuned out conventional wisdom in an extraordinary year." But if Biden loses, "his schedule in recent weeks – and all of the days he spent in Delaware this month – is almost certain to be the source of overwhelming Democratic second-guessing."

Flake Films Ad For Biden.

The Hill (10/28, Castronuovo, 2.98M) reports ex-Sen. Jeff Flake (R-AZ) has filmed an ad for Joe Biden, "using the spot to urge Republicans to put 'country over party.'" Flake says in the ad, "I've been a conservative Republican my entire life. I've never before voted for a Democrat for president. But this year, principle and conscience require me to do just that. I'm voting for Joe Biden."

Democratic Senate Candidates Outspending GOP In 14 Competitive Senate Races.

NBC News (10/28, 6.14M) reports on its website that Democratic Senate candidates "have outspent Republicans in TV and radio ad spending in nearly every competitive Senate race, according to data from Advertising Analytics. In Alaska, Alabama, Arizona, Colorado, one Georgia seat, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Michigan, Montana, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas the Democratic challenger or incumbent has outspent the Republican on TV and radio ads." Overall, "Democrats are outspending Republicans by nearly 2-to-1."

Kelly Leads In Two Arizona Senate Polls.

An OH Predictive Insights poll of 716 likely Arizona voters (10/22-10/25) has Mark Kelly (D) at 50% and Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) at 45% in the state's Senate race. A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 714 likely Arizona voters (10/21-10/27) has Kelly at 51% and McSally at 44%.

Ossoff, Warnock Lead Georgia Senate Poll.

A Monmouth University poll of 504 likely Georgia voters (10/23-10/27) has Jon Ossoff (D) at 46%, Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) 46%, and Libertarian Shane Hazel 2% in the state's Senate race. In the special Senate election, Raphael Warnock (D) is at 41%, Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) 21%, Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) 18%, Matt Lieberman (D) 4%, Ed Tarver (D) 3%, and Libertarian Brian Slowinski 2%.

Gideon Leads Maine Senate Poll By Just Over Three Points.

A Colby College poll of 879 likely Maine voters (10/21-10/25) has Sara Gideon (D) at 46.6%, Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) 43.4%, independent Lisa Savage 4.7%, and independent Max Linn 1.7% in the state's Senate race.

The Boston Globe (10/28, 972K) says that while "beginning in mid-September, Democrats started to see renewed energy going their way" across the nation, with Senate candidates gaining momentum, the Maine race "has been stuck since February." Gideon "has led every poll, but except for an outlier here and there, has only led within the margin of error or by a few points."

Peters Leads In Three Michigan Senate Polls.

A Detroit News/WDIV-TV poll of 600 likely Michigan voters has Sen. Gary Peters (D-MI) at 48.4% and John James (R) at 38.8% in the state's Senate race. A Mitchell Research poll of 759 likely Michigan voters (10/25-10/27) has Peters at 52% and James at 43%. A Washington Post/ABC News poll of 798 likely Michigan voters (10/20-10/25) has Peters at 52% and James at 46%.

Smith Has Three-Point Lead In Minnesota Senate Poll.

A SurveyUSA poll of 649 likely Minnesota voters (10/23-10/27) has Sen. Tina Smith (D-MN) at 45% and ex-Rep. Jason Lewis (R-MN) at 42% in the state's Senate race.

Bullock Has One-Point Lead In Montana Senate Poll.

A Public Policy Polling poll of 886 registered Montana voters (10/26-10/27) has Gov. Steve Bullock (D) at 48% and Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT) at 47% in the state's Senate race.

Cunningham Leads By Three Points In Two North Carolina Senate Polls.

A Civitas poll of 504 likely North Carolina voters (10/22-10/25) has Cal Cunningham (D) at 46%, Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) 43%, Libertarian Shannon Bray 2%, and Constitution Party candidate Kevin Hayes 1% in the state's Senate race. A Public Policy Polling poll of 937 registered North Carolina voters (10/26-10/27) has Cunningham at 47% and Tillis at 44%.

The Charlotte Observer (10/28, 470K) reports that the presence of a Constitution Party candidate on the state's ballot "for the first time in a major election," and the absence of a Green Party candidate, could hurt Tillis "if the final vote tally is close."

Graham And Harrison Tied In South Carolina Senate Poll.

A Data For Progress poll of 1,196 likely South Carolina voters (10/22-10/27) has Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) and Jaime Harrison (D) tied at 46% each in the state's Senate race, with Constitution Party candidate Bill Bledsoe at 3%.

NYTimes: Three States Should Vote In Favor Of Progressive Taxation.

In an editorial, the New York Times (10/28, 18.61M) says, "Voters in Illinois and Arizona, two of the states where taxation is most regressive, now have the chance to make the tax system a little more fair." Ballot measures in both states "would shift more of the burden of taxation onto wealthier residents," while "in California, where the overall distribution of taxation is already progressive, voters can make a change for the better." According to the Times, "A more progressive approach to taxation is necessary to counterbalance the rise of economic inequality, which has reached the highest levels since the 1920s." The Times concludes by saying, "A new generation of politicians is now stepping forward to make the case for progressive taxation, promising to use the money to invest in services like high-quality education. It is up to the voters to give that effort their support."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.3%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.3%, and his disapproval at 53.3%. The President's approval is unchanged since yesterday; his disapproval is up 0.4.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 likely voters (10/26-10/28) finds Trump's approval at 52%, and his disapproval at 47%.

World Bank Official To G20: "Be Bold" On Debt Relief For World's Poorest Nations To Prevent "Lost Decade."

Reuters (10/28, Shalal) reports World Bank Chief Economist Carmen Reinhart said Wednesday that the G20 economies should act decisively and quickly to ease the debt burdens of the world's poorest countries to prevent an impending "lost decade" of global development. Reinhart "told an event hosted by the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development...G20 finance ministers are set to finalize work on a common framework for dealing with debt issues when they meet in early November." Reinhart, "when asked about her advice to G20 leaders during the EBRD event," said, "Be bold. This is not the moment of being timid on debt crisis resolution. Proposals need to be bold in terms of delivering debt reduction for the debtors, because if not ... the risks of a lost decade are very big."

G20 Finance Ministers To Hold "Extraordinary" Nov. 13 Meeting On Debt Relief. Bloomberg (10/28, Soto, Khrennikov, 4.73M) reports the G20 finance ministers "plan to hold an extraordinary meeting on Nov. 13 to discuss bolder action to help poor nations struggling to repay their debts." The ministers "plan to meet a week prior to the annual gathering of heads of government on Nov. 21-22, according to a copy of the meeting's agenda seen by Bloomberg." That meeting "could mark the next phase in the global debt-relief drive by bolstering coordination between government creditors over how to restructure the debts of poor economies hit hard by the coronavirus pandemic."

ECB Expected To Hold Policy Steady After Meeting, Signal Action In December.

CNBC (10/28, Weisbach, 3.62M) reports the ECB's Governing Council "will meet this Thursday for a scheduled monetary policy meeting, and the backdrop couldn't be bleaker." Lockdowns are "being re-imposed across Europe as Covid-19 cases are surging and the economic outlook is deteriorating by the day, which will continue to weigh on inflation." However, the ECB "is not yet expected to add to its stimulus, but rather to signal action for December." The "somewhat optimistic economic picture that ECB President Christine Lagarde previously painted at the last ECB policy meeting in September has darkened considerably." Thus, "most economists do expect action in December."

Ukraine PM Says Progress Made On Obligations In IMF Agreement.

Reuters (10/28, Polityuk) reports Ukrainian Prime Minister Denys Shmygal said Wednesday that Ukraine had made significant progress to fulfill the obligations of its agreement with the IMF. Shmygal said on Telegram, "We are quickly moving our positions closer to the IMF. We just had a productive meeting with our international partners from the Fund." Shmygal "gave no more details but said that 'strong partnership' with the IMF is the key to Ukraine's long-term stability."

Protests Break Out Across Europe Over Reimposed Lockdowns.

According to the Washington Post (10/28, Booth, Harlan, Morris, Birnbaum, 14.2M), "As new coronavirus infections surge again in Europe, breaking daily records, the mood is growing dark on the continent." On Wednesday, Germany and France "joined those announcing lockdowns to try to get the virus under control." The "new measures are, so far, less restrictive than in the spring, and yet they face more push back." The Post reports that "police in Italy this week fired tear gas to disperse rioting crowds in Turin and Milan, after protests against the latest round of anti-coronavirus orders flared into violence."

The New York Times (10/28, Breeden, Eddy, Zraick, Pronczuk, Schuetze, Minder, 18.61M) reports that "in a televised address on Wednesday evening, President Emmanuel Macron argued that officials had no choice but to impose another lockdown in the face of limited hospital capacity and rising cases across the country." The Times says Macron "stressed that much of Europe was facing a similar situation, 'overwhelmed by a second wave that we now know will probably be harder and more deadly than the first.'"

The CBS Evening News (10/28, story 5, 1:05, O'Donnell, 3.95M) reported, "Starting Friday until December, no one in France can leave home without a good reason, though schools and factories will stay open, but nonessential businesses will have to close. France's hospitals are feeling the strain with more than half of all intensive care beds already full. In Germany, Chancellor Angela Merkel announced what she called 'burdensome measures,' too. Restaurants will have to close. So will bars and movie theaters. These are radical moves in a country where masks and widespread testing had, until now, kept the infection rates low."

The AP (10/28, Jordans, O'Connor) reports that "countries such as Switzerland, Italy, Bulgaria and Greece have closed or otherwise clamped down again on bars and restaurants and imposed other restrictions such as curfews and mandatory mask-wearing." The AP adds that "both Italy and Germany set records for new infections Wednesday, with Italy reporting nearly 25,000 in a single day and Germany logging almost 15,000."

USA Today (10/28, Shesgreen, Hjelmgard, 10.31M) reports that over the weekend, "Italy ordered bars and restaurants to close by 6 p.m. and shuttered gyms, movie theaters and pools entirely." The Spanish Prime Ministers "imposed a night-time curfew on Sunday, and the government said local authorities could ban travel between regions, among other restrictions."

Bloomberg (10/28, 4.73M) reports that "moves from stocks to the euro and Italian bonds show investors are grappling with the economic fallout from lockdown restrictions that are now some of the toughest in the world. While markets globally have taken a dip this week, the hit was most severe in Europe." Bloomberg says the Stoxx Europe 600 Index "sank as much as 2.7% on Wednesday, reaching the lowest level since May." Bloomberg adds, "In contrast, U.S. equities are only at a three-week low and Asian markets have barely budged."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the lockdowns will not eliminate the coronavirus but will certainly do damage to the economy and to public health. The Journal instead advocates for targeted closures until a vaccine arrives or broader immunity is achieved.

Among the outlets also reporting on the lockdowns are Reuters (10/28, Rinke, Kar-Gupta), Bloomberg (10/28, Rutenberg, Delfs, Nussbaum, 4.73M), and the Wall Street Journal (10/28, A1, Bisserbe, Subscription Publication, 7.57M).

Over Half Of French Hospital ICUs Occupied By COVID Patients. The AP (10/28, Jordans) reports, "In France, more than half of the country's intensive care units are already occupied by COVID-19 patients." To address the spike and strain on local resources, "French military and commercial planes are ferrying critically ill virus patients to other regions as hospitals fill up and French doctors have called on the government to impose a new nationwide lockdown."

Court Refuses To Review Conviction Of Former Detainee Who Rejoined Al Qaeda.

The New York Times (10/28, Rosenberg, 18.61M) reports a three-judge panel of the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has refused to review the 2010 war crimes conviction of former Guantanamo Bay prisoner Ibrahim Ahmed Mahmoud al-Qosi, "who after his return to his native Sudan ran away and rejoined Al Qaeda." Qosi "pleaded guilty to providing support for terrorism and Al Qaeda in exchange for his repatriation in 2012." Although he "appeared in videos produced by the Yemen-based Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula" three years later, "an appeals process went forward in his case." Pentagon-funded lawyers "filed an appeal after a federal court found that the charge on which he had been convicted, providing material support for terrorism, did not qualify as a war crime that could be tried by a military commission." The appeals court "declined to hear the case in an order issued Tuesday night."

Construction At Iran Nuclear Site Shown In Satellite Photos.

The AP (10/28, Gambrell) reports, "Iran has begun construction at its Natanz nuclear facility, satellite images released Wednesday show, just as the UN nuclear agency acknowledged Tehran is building an underground advanced centrifuge assembly plant after its last one exploded in a reported sabotage attack last summer." The construction "comes as the US nears Election Day in a campaign pitting President Donald Trump, whose maximum pressure campaign against Iran has led Tehran to abandon all limits on its atomic program, and Joe Biden, who has expressed a willingness to return to the accord." The outcome of the vote "likely will decide which approach America takes. Heightened tensions between Iran and the US nearly ignited a war at the start of the year."

Ratcliffe Said To Have Gone "Off Script" With Remarks On Iranian Election Interference.

Politico (10/28, Bertrand, Lippman, 4.29M) reports DNI Ratcliffe "went off script when he alleged during a press conference last week that Iran was sending intimidating emails to Americans in order to 'damage President Trump,' according to two senior administration officials with knowledge of the episode." The reference to Trump "was not in Ratcliffe's prepared remarks about the foreign election interference, as shown to and signed off by FBI Director Chris Wray and senior DHS official Chris Krebs, the director of the department's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Agency." Ratcliffe "attributed the emails to Iran but said they were 'designed to intimidate voters, incite social unrest, and damage President Trump,' raising immediate questions about how threatening Democrats to vote for Trump could be aimed at damaging the president's re-election bid – and how the intelligence community had made that determination within 24 hours of the messages."

Afghan Man Indicted For Kidnapping Journalist, Brought To New York.

USA Today (10/28, Johnson, 10.31M) reports, "Federal charges were unsealed Wednesday against an Afghan man accused in the 2008 kidnapping of former New York Times journalist David Rohde and two others who were held by armed captors for more than seven months." Haji Najibullah "was brought to New York from Ukraine and faces a six-count indictment in connection with the abduction." He "later wrote about his ordeal and escape with Afghan journalist Tahir Ludin." Rohde and Ludin "were not named in the federal court documents outlining the charges against Najibullah, but the timing of the events described matched the case involving the American journalist."

The Washington Post (10/28, Jacobs, 14.2M) reports Najibullah "appeared virtually for his first court appearance Wednesday, and US Magistrate Judge Ona T. Wang granted the government's request to detain him without bail." An alleged co-conspirator, Akhund Zada, who remains at large, is accused of taking Rohde at gunpoint while the journalist, then with the New York Times, was reporting in war-torn Afghanistan for a book about the conflict. He and Timor Shah "are named in the indictment, but the US attorney's office in Manhattan did not say whether their whereabouts are known."

The New York Times (10/28, Weiser, 18.61M) says Rohde, "as well as an Afghan journalist, Tahir Ludin, eventually made a desperate nighttime escape in June 2009 from the second floor of a Taliban compound in North Waziristan, in Pakistan's tribal areas, that included dropping down a high wall with a rope and making their way to a Pakistani militia post." A third hostage, "Asadullah Mangal, their driver, did not escape with them but managed to flee five weeks later."

WPost Report: "Handful Of Foreign Leaders" Express Support For Trump.

The Washington Post (10/28, Berger, 14.2M) reports "most world leaders do not weigh in on U.S. presidential elections, wary of alienating one side or damaging strategic interests by appearing to interfere." But President Trump "has received the vocal support of a handful of foreign leaders, mostly right-wing populists known for clear parallels to Trump in policy and rhetoric." The Post lists "some countries with leaders that have bucked the norm and expressed outspoken support for Trump." They include: Hungary, Brazil, Philippines, Serbia, and Slovenia.

Pompeo To Make Unscheduled Visit To Hanoi As Part Of Asia Trip.

The Washington Times (10/28, Gertz, 492K) reports the State Department announced Wednesday that Secretary of State Pompeo will visit Hanoi as part of his Asia tour this week to "reaffirm the strength of the U.S.-Vietnam comprehensive partnership and promote our shared commitment to a peaceful and prosperous region." The Times cites "a senior Trump administration official" who "said the visit is expected to include an important announcement about U.S.-Vietnam relations in the face of growing regional threats posed by China, which has been increasingly assertive in dealings with Hanoi and other countries in the region." The Vietnam stop had not been scheduled as part of Pompeo's Asia trip "but was added on during discussions over the past few days."

Pompeo Announces US Will Establish An Embassy In Maldives.

In what the New York Times (10/28, Verma, 18.61M) says is an indication of the Maldives' "growing role in the U.S. strategy to increase America's presence in the region," reports Secretary of State Pompeo said Wednesday the US will establish an embassy in the country. Pompeo, who made the announcement during a five-day trip through Asia, "said the United States would also appoint a resident ambassador for the country. Currently, Washington maintains diplomatic relations through its ambassador to Sri Lanka."

US Consulate In Hong Kong Reportedly Turned Away US Citizen Seeking Refuge.

The Washington Post (10/28, Mahtani, 14.2M) reports Tony Chung, "a founder of a pro-independence student group in Hong Kong who was among the first to be arrested under Beijing's new national security law imposed in late June," had "sent documents to Washington earlier this month...and he hoped he could soon resettle in the United States." On Tuesday, "Chung and four other Hong Kong activists sought to reach the U.S. Consulate in hopes of speeding up the process," but Chung was "apprehended by several men and taken away before he could reach the consulate gates. ... The other four – a U.S. citizen among them, according to Friends of Hong Kong – briefly entered the consulate later that afternoon, but they had their requests for refuge inside the compound rebuffed and were turned away." The Post says there are now "questions about why the U.S. Consulate...would have turned away an American citizen appealing for help."

Azerbaijan, Armenia Accuse Each Other Of Targeting Civilians.

Reuters (10/28, Bagirova, Hovhannisyann) reports on Wednesday, Azerbaijan and Armenia "accused each other of killing civilians by shelling cities in and around Nagorno-Karabakh...in an escalation of a month-long conflict over the mountain enclave that has defied three ceasefires." Azerbaijan "said 21 people were killed when Armenian shells hit the town of Barda, northeast of Nagorno-Karabakh." Reuters adds that "Armenian-backed officials in Nagorno-Karabakh said Azeri shells had fallen on the enclave's two largest cities, killing one person." Writing from Azerbaijan in the New York Times (10/28, 18.61M), Carlotta Gall describes the rocket attack on Barda. Gall writes while "a string of settlements close to the frontline have suffered almost daily rockets strikes," the "attack on Barda, which lies slightly further from the frontline, appeared to be an escalation."

The AP (10/28, Demourian) reports in Nagorno-Karabakh, "an Azerbaijani rocket hit a maternity hospital but inflicted no casualties." The AP also reports officials in Nagorno-Karabakh "said Azerbaijani forces hit Stepanakert, the region's capital, and the nearby town of Shushi with Smerch long-range multiple rocket systems, a devastating Soviet-designed weapon intended to ravage wide areas with explosives and cluster munitions."

Poles Continue Protests, Strike Against Abortion Ruling.

The AP (10/28, Gera) reports for a seventh straight day Wednesday, Poles "stayed off their jobs and huge crowds poured onto the streets" to protest "a top court ruling that bans abortions in cases of fetal abnormalities." The strike and protests "come amid a deepening standoff between angry demonstrators and Poland's deeply conservative government, which pushed for last Thursday's court ruling and has vowed not to back down."

The New York Times (10/28, Santora, Pronczuk, 18.61M) reports Deputy Prime Minister Jaroslaw Kaczynski, leader of the ruling Law and Justice party, said in an address to Parliament Wednesday, "You are smashing Poland to pieces, you're endangering lots of people, you are criminals." In a video posted to Facebook Tuesday that was "widely viewed by critics as a call to arms," Kaczynski said it was time to "defend Poland, defend patriotism. ... This is the only way we can win this war."

Barcelona Judge Probing Catalan Separatist Ties To Russia.

The AP (10/28) reports Judge Joaquín Aguirre in Barcelona "is probing possible links between some of the promoters of Catalonia's 2017 attempt to declare independence from the rest of Spain with an alleged misinformation campaign and overall effort to destabilize Europe that Spanish investigators link to Russia." Aguirre's probe "led on Wednesday to the arrest of 21 suspects on suspicions of corruption and promoting public disorder." His investigation is based, in part, "on police evidence that purported Russian agents allegedly offered to provide military aid to Catalan separatists at the height of their failed secession bid in 2017."

Opposition Candidate Alleges "Widespread Irregularities" In Tanzania's Presidential Election.

The AP (10/28) reports Tanzania's leading opposition candidate Tundu Lissu alleged Wednesday that there were "widespread irregularities" in the country's presidential election. Results declared by the electoral commission are not open to court challenges, "bringing urgency to vote-monitoring efforts, but the opposition said observers were turned away from scores of polling stations." Lissu, who is with the CHADEMA party, said, "Mass democratic action will be the only option to protect the integrity of the election." The other major opposition party, ACT Wazalendo, "said its polling agents witnessed ballot box-snatching by security agents, ballot box-stuffing and voters turned away by authorities who said ballots had run out."

The New York Times (10/28, Dahir, 18.61M) says the election "is widely seen as a referendum" on President John Magufuli, "who is seeking a second five-year term, and on the governing Party of the Revolution, which has dominated Tanzanian politics under one name or another since independence in 1961." Magufuli "has been lauded for his efforts to strengthen the economy, cut wasteful public spending and revive infrastructure projects. But his administration has also been accused of stepping up repression. The government has cracked down on political dissent, muzzled media and right groups and passed legislation reinforcing the party's hold on power."

WPost: US, EU Should Investigate Reports Of Russian Labs Developing Chemical Weapons.

A Washington Post (10/28, 14.2M) editorial says "a group of news outlets has exposed what they describe as clandestine Russian organizations carrying out illegal chemical weapons development concealed as civilian research." The Post says the reports, if true, "add a major dimension of concern to the attempted killings" of Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny and former military intelligence officer Sergei Skripal and his daughter in March 2018. The Post says the Administration has been "strangely silent about sanctions in response to the Navalny attack," and calls on the US and EU to "investigate the newly identified research organizations." In addition, the Post says when states that are parties to the Chemical Weapons Convention "meet Nov. 30 to Dec. 4, they should consider a strong response."

Housing

Bove's Commentary Bodes Well For GSE Common Shares.

Value Walk (10/28, Jones, 1K) reports Odeon Capital analyst Dick Bove "has long been arguing against buying the common shares of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, but his latest argument in favor of housing reform could offer reasons to buy those common shares. He believes Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will be strengthened next year because of the need to provide a boost to housing, and he suggests that history may repeat itself to make that happen." Bove said, "The need for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac is growing as the need for a housing revival grows to support economic growth. This suggests that these companies will return to the private sector with some type of government guarantee. This is likely whether the Republicans or Democrats are in power." Bove also "says it makes sense to own the junior preferred shares" in the GSEs, but "would argue that he has also made a case for owning their common shares as well without actually meaning to."

Freddie Mac Single-Family Webinar To Explore "New Now" In Housing Affordability.

According to National Mortgage News (10/28), "housing research and economic experts from Freddie Mac" will host a "Freddie Mac Single-Family All For HomeInsight" webinar delivering insights about "today's evolving economic, social and demographic shifts that are impacting homebuyer affordability," as well as how Freddie Mac's First-Time Homebuyer Affordability Index "can provide opportunities to understand, and engage, population segments that are prime candidates to become future homebuyers.”

NC Governor Extends Eviction Moratorium Until December 31.

The Winston-Salem \(NC\) Journal (10/28, Craver, 168K) reports that North Carolina’s halt on evictions has been extended until December 31. North Carolina Governor Roy Cooper issued an executive order on Wednesday that granted the two-month extension. According to the Journal, Cooper’s order also clarifies the CDC moratorium “so that it clearly applies to all North Carolinians who meet the CDC’s eligibility criteria, regardless of whether they live in federally subsidized properties.”

CFPB Fines Washington Federal Bank $200K For HMDA Reporting Errors.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/28, Yang, Subscription Publication) reports the CFPB “fined Washington Federal Bank $200,000 for reporting inaccurate Home Mortgage Disclosure Act data for 2016 and 2017.” A “Tuesday afternoon announcement from the CFPB [suggests] the Seattle-based bank filed HMDA data for roughly 7,000 mortgage applications in each year, but the data contained significant errors. Some samples reviewed by the bureau had error rates as high as 40%.” IMF says, “The CFPB determined the 2016 HMDA data errors were caused by a lack of appropriate staff, insufficient training and ineffective quality control. The agency said the 2017 errors were caused by weaknesses in Washington Fed’s compliance management system. As a result, the agency directed the lender to develop and implement fixes to prevent future violations.”

MBA: Mortgage Applications Up 1.7% W/W, Up 24% From Year-Ago Level.

HousingWire (10/28, Roha, 23K) reports mortgage applications “regained their footing last week, rising 1.7% from the week prior,” according to the MBA. The refinance index gained 3% from the prior week, and was 80% higher than a year ago. The seasonally adjusted purchase index rose 0.2% week-to-week, up 24% from its year-ago level. Average purchase loan size “reached another record high at $372,600, the report said.” National Mortgage News (10/28, McCullom) reports the ARM share “increased to 2.1% from 1.9% of total applications, while the share of Federal Housing Administration-insured loan applications decreased to 11.7% from 11.8% the week prior.” The VA share fell “to 11.4% from 12.6%.”

Mortgage News Daily (10/28, Swanson) reports, “The Refinance Index gained 3 percent from the previous week’s level and was 80 percent higher than the same week one year ago. The refinance share of mortgage activity increased to 66.7 percent of total applications from 66.1 percent the previous week. The Purchase Index was up 0.2 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis. Even if fractional, it was the first uptick in that index since the week ended September 18. The Index dipped 0.3 percent unadjusted but was 24 percent higher than the same week in 2019.” The average rate for 30-year FRMs with conforming balances fell from 3.02% to 3.00%. The rate for 30-year jumbos fell from 3.33% to 3.28%. However, the 5/1 ARM average rate rose from 2.86% to 3.05%.

National Mortgage Professional (10/28, Persaud) reports MBA AVP Joel Kan said, “Mortgage applications to buy a home were flat compared to the prior week, but overall activity remains strong this fall. Applications jumped 24% compared to last year, and the average loan size reached another record high at $372,600. These results highlight just how strong the upper end of the market is right now, with outsized growth rates in the higher loan size categories. Furthermore, housing inventory shortages have pushed national home prices considerably higher on an annual basis.” Kan added, “Refinance activity has been somewhat volatile over the past few months but did increase almost 3% last week. With the 30-year fixed rate at MBA’s all-time survey low of 3.00%, conventional refinances rose 5%. However, the government refinance index decreased for the first time in a month, driven by a slowdown in VA refinance activity.” Mortgage Orb (10/28, Bates) provides additional coverage.

CoreLogic: Mortgage Fraud Risk Fell 26% YoY In Q2.

Mortgage Orb (10/28, Bates) reports CoreLogic’s latest Mortgage Fraud Report “shows a 26.3% year-over-year decrease in fraud risk” in 2Q20, marking the “second year of substantial decreases in risk.” According to Mortgage Orb, throughout Q2, “an estimated one in 164 mortgage applications, or 0.6% of all applications, contained indications of fraud, compared with the reported one in 123 mortgages, or 0.8% in the second quarter of 2019.” Bridget Berg, CoreLogic’s principal of fraud solutions strategy, explained that the “large drop in fraud risk in the past year was primarily driven by record-high refinancing, which is traditionally lower risk transactions.” However, Berg added, “we still see elevated levels of risk in purchase transactions, and we have not yet seen the long-term impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. So it’s imperative risk managers remain vigilant in searching out potential fraud.”

Wall Street Analysts Say Mortgage Prepayments Likely To Remain Fast In October.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/28, Maloney, 4.73M) reports that the “wave of homeowner refinancings sparked by record low rates isn’t likely to slow down anytime soon, according to Wall Street forecasts.” Wells Fargo mortgage analysts “said that Fannie Mae 30-year aggregate speeds could rise 1% with the so-called daycount unchanged at 21 days and the lending rate down a further six basis points.” Meanwhile, Citigroup analysts “project conventional speeds to increase by 2%, though they forecast government-backed Ginnie Mae II MBS speeds will drop by 7% as buyouts of loans in forbearance slow.” According to Bloomberg, “In September, aggregate Fannie Mae 30-year prepayment speeds increased to 35 CPR, their fastest since April 2004. This means that should the current level hold, about 35% of the principal balance within those mortgage-backed securities will be prepaid annually.”

Banks See Surge In Mortgage Income In Q3.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/28, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports that a group of “19 publicly traded commercial banks and thrifts reported a whopping $4.88 billion in mortgage banking income” for Q3, representing “a 39.4% increase” from Q2, when the same group “raked in a hefty $3.50 billion from their mortgage banking operations.” According to IMF, “Through the first nine months of 2020, the 19 lender/servicers generated $10.63 billion in mortgage banking profits, a 79.9% increase from the same period last year.”

Fannie Mae Long-Term Debt Issuance Surges Through August 2020.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/28, Hollier, Subscription Publication) reports Fannie Mae issued “more long-term debt through the first eight months of 2020 than it did in the previous three years combined.” According to IMF, “As of Aug. 31, the total long-term debt issued by the GSE this year totaled $165.72 billion. In 2017, the mortgage giant issued $30.75 billion, a figure that fell to $21.55 billion by 2019.” The YTD issuance of benchmark notes and bonds “reached $31.50 billion by the end of August. The total for 2019 was just $12.50 billion. Issuance of callable fixed-rate medium-term notes rose from $2.55 billion to $33.76 billion and non-callable floating-rate MTNs ballooned from $6.50 billion to $98.11 billion.” Meanwhile, Fannie’s issuance of short-term debt “nosedived, as the government-controlled firm took advantage of low interest rates to ditch most of its callable notes.”

NAREB: Black Homeowners Lose Average $14K Over Life Of Mortgage.

National Mortgage News (10/28, Centopani) says Black homeowners “lose an average of about $14,000 over the life of a mortgage and about $67,000 in retirement savings due to higher interest rates, according to the National Association of Real Estate Brokers eighth annual State of Housing in Black America report.” The analysis of HMDA data from 2019 revealed Black borrowers “locked in an average mortgage rate of 4.44% for conventional loans – 15 basis points higher than white borrowers. Though not as stark, Black consumers paid higher average interest rates across all loan types compared to their white counterparts.” National Housing Conference CEO David Dworkin said, “The reality is white homeowners have gotten very specific benefits over time that accumulate.”

WalletHub Analysis Breaks Down Average Credit Score By State.

M Report (10/28, Espinosa) reports that WalletHub conducted an analysis of average credit scores by state, finding “Minnesota leads the nation with an average credit score of 720. This is a handsome distance from TransUnion’s national credit score average of 680 and was the closest among the states to the 750 level that is considered to be the beginning of the excellent credit score range.” Meanwhile, “At the other end of the spectrum, Mississippi had the lowest national credit score average at 657. Southern states were among those with the lowest scores: Alabama (662), Louisiana (664), Texas (669) and Georgia (670).”

Incenter Offering $564M Bulk Package Of Agency MSR's.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/28, Muolo, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports, “We haven’t been seeing many auction notices on mortgage servicing rights of late, but one hit our desk Wednesday morning. Incenter Mortgage Advisors, Denver, is offering a $564 million bulk package of Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae MSR’s. The portfolio has an average FICO score of 750. Bids are due Nov. 5.”

MFA Financial Preps $570M Non-QM MBS.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/28, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports MFA Financial is “preparing to issue a $570.2 million MBS backed by non-QMs originated by Citadel Servicing Corp.” According to IMF, the REIT was “set to issue its first non-QM MBS in March,” but “the transaction was cancelled due to market volatility. MFA ended up issuing its first deal in August. All of the loans in that offering ($393.1 million) also were originated by Citadel.” IMF says, “Loans in the new security have seasoned for an average of 20 months. As of Sept. 30, 29.3% of the collateral was in forbearance. Citadel, which is handling the servicing chores, said it won’t advance principal and interest payments on any delinquent mortgages in the deal.” DBRS and S&P Global Ratings “placed preliminary AAA ratings on the MBS, aided by credit enhancement of 28.9% on the senior tranche.” IMF says, “The two firms rated the previous MBS from MFA where credit enhancement totaled 29.3%.”

Housing Market Still Hot In Late October In Many Metros.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/28, Buhayar, 4.73M) reports that even at the end of October, the housing market is “acting like it’s June,” with “historically low mortgage rates” prompting buyers to race to “snap up homes” and defy seasonal norms. This comes even as Covid-19 infections “surge in some states.” According to Bloomberg, “The typical U.S. home went under contract in 16 days in September, according to research from Zillow. That’s faster than the pace in June 2018 and 2019, the month when listings moved quickest in those years. In some affordable Midwestern markets, such as Kansas City and Cincinnati, houses sold in five days or fewer on average last month.” Meanwhile, “prices soared more than 20% in the Kansas City, Philadelphia and Memphis, Tennessee, metro areas last month, according to data from Redfin Corp.”

Zillow: Pandemic Prompts Many Potential Sellers To Hold Off.

HousingWire (10/28, Falcon, 23K) says a “report from Zillow” indicates 34% of “would-be home sellers said they are staying out of the market due to the uncertainty caused by COVID-19.” 31% of homeowners cite financial anxiety as keeping them from selling in the next three years. According to HousingWire, “A recent change in employment was a barrier to finding a new home for 27% of those who responded, while 17% said another reason was that their spouse or partner was laid off or involuntarily unemployed. On the other hand, one out of 10 homeowners said they weren’t selling because an adult child or other family member had moved in with them during the pandemic.”

Survey: Pandemic Had Differing Impact On Segments Of NextGen Homebuyers.

Writing for HousingWire (10/28, 23K), Kristin Messerli says that her team at Cultural Outreach worked with National MI to survey “1,450 NextGen homebuyers (ages 22-37) in April and September to learn more about today’s homebuying millennials and their mindset in the midst of a pandemic,” studying “how this generation is approaching the home buying process, their fears, challenges and how COVID-19 has impacted their plans for homeownership.” They found that the “ability to work from home was by far the biggest indicator of financial stability and optimism.” On the other hand, “approximately one in three respondents said the pandemic had a negative impact on their homebuying plans.”

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (10/27, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.782 percent.

Dollar Holds Steady.

Reuters (10/29, Yamamitsu) reports, “The dollar held gains against a basket of major currencies on Thursday as escalating coronavirus cases in Europe stoked investor fears that fresh lockdowns would further hit the already fragile economic recovery.” The dollar “steadied against a basket of six currencies at 93.39, taking a pause after its 0.3% gains in early trade.” The euro “changed hands at $1.1753 after sliding to a one-week low of $1.1718 overnight. It moderately rose against the Japanese yen, last fetching 122.79 yen after hitting its weakest levels since July overnight.” The dollar “firmed against the Japanese yen at 104.45 yen, having dropped to a more than one-month low on Wednesday.”

Gold Edges Up.

Reuters (10/29, Soreng) reports, “Gold edged up on Thursday after a plunge in the previous session as surging global coronavirus cases and fears of a contested U.S. presidential election spurred demand, although a strong dollar capped gains.” Spot gold “rose 0.2% to $1,881.16 per ounce by 0413 GMT, after falling as much as 2% on Wednesday to a one-month low. U.S. gold futures were up 0.2% at $1,882.”

Oil Rises.

Reuters (10/29, Zhang, Paul) reports, “Oil prices on Thursday recovered slightly from a 5% slump in the previous session, gaining support from the prospect of tighter short-term supply with two-thirds of U.S. output shut in the Gulf of Mexico as Hurricane Zeta slammed Louisiana.” US West Texas Intermediate crude futures “edged up 7 cents, or 0.19%, to $37.46 a barrel by 0517 GMT, while Brent crude futures were up 4 cents, or 0.10%, at $39.16 a barrel.”

Cybersecurity

Russian-Speaking Cyber Criminals Launch Ransomware Attack On US Hospitals.

The Washington Post (10/28, Nakashima, Greene, 14.2M) reports “Russian-speaking cyber criminals in recent days have launched a coordinated attack targeting U.S. hospitals already stressed by the pandemic with ransomware that analysts worry could lead to fatalities.” Over a 24-hour period “beginning Monday, six hospitals from California to New York have been hit by the Ryuk ransomware, which encrypts data on computer systems, forcing the hospitals in some cases to disrupt patient care and cancel non-critical surgeries, analysts said.” The cyber “criminals have demanded a ransom ranging upwards of $1 million to unlock the system, and some hospitals have paid, they said.” On Tuesday, DHS, FBI, and HHS “issued a joint advisory alerting health care providers to the threat.”

USA Today (10/28, James, 10.31M) reports the advisory said, “CISA, FBI, and HHS have credible information of an increased and imminent cybercrime threat to U.S. hospitals and healthcare providers. ... CISA, FBI, and HHS are sharing this information to provide warning to healthcare providers to ensure that they take timely and reasonable precautions to protect their networks from these threats.”

The New York Times (10/28, Perloth, 18.61M) reports “hundreds of American hospitals are being targeted in cyberattacks by the same Russian hackers who American officials and researchers fear could sow mayhem around next week’s election.” The attacks on US “hospitals, clinics and medical complexes are intended to take those facilities offline and hold their data hostage in exchange for multimillion-dollar ransom payments, just as coronavirus cases spike across the United States.”

Reuters (10/28) reports, "The FBI is investigating the recent targeting with ransomware of more than two dozen hospitals across the United States by a sophisticated eastern European group, with a new wave of attacks in Oregon, California and New York just this week, according to three cybersecurity consultants familiar with the matter. The heavy targeting of hospitals by this hacking group, known within the security industry as UNC-1878, has drawn the attention of federal law enforcement agencies and private sector cybersecurity investigators who say these types of attacks, which disrupt normal hospital operations, can lead to loss of life."

Bloomberg (10/28, Mehrotra, Turton, Tozzi, 4.73M) reports "cybersecurity company FireEye Inc. said multiple U.S hospitals had been hit by a 'coordinated' ransomware attack, with at least three publicly confirming being struck this week." The ransomware "attack was carried out by a financially motivated cybercrime group dubbed UNC1878 by computer security researchers, according to Charles Carmakal, FireEye's strategic services chief technology officer." The group "intends to target and deploy ransomware to hundreds of other hospitals, Carmakal said."

The AP (10/28, Bajak) reports "Alex Holden, CEO of Hold Security, which has been closely tracking the ransomware in question for more than a year, agreed that the unfolding offensive is unprecedented in magnitude for the U.S. given its timing in the heat of a [contentious] presidential election and the worst global pandemic in a century."

NBC News (10/28, Dilanian, Blankstein, Hesel, 6.14M) reports US "agencies say they have assessed that people are targeting the health sector with Trickbot malware, which in addition to data theft can result in ransomware attacks. Trickbot, among other illegal actions, can be used to deploy ransomware like Ryuk, a derivative of another type of ransomware."

Healthcare IT News (10/28, Miliard, 2K) reports "three hospitals at New York's St. Lawrence Health System were victimized by a ransomware attack, it was reported Tuesday. Meanwhile, Oregon-based Sky Lakes Medical Center also says its systems were compromised this week, as opportunistic pandemic-era ransomware incursions continue nationwide."

Also reporting on the story are CNN (10/28, Salama, Marquardt, Mascarenhas, Cohen, 83.16M) and The Hill (10/28, Miller, 2.98M).

Russian Hackers Relentlessly Targeting American Elections, Other Targets.

Fox News (10/28, Crothers, 27.59M) writes that "Russia is a relentless, increasingly malicious hacker of everything American." For instance, last week, the Treasury Department "sanctioned a Russian government research institution linked to the Triton malware." Before that incident, the FBI and CISA "issued an advisory on a Russian state-sponsored threat, saying that the entity 'has conducted a campaign against a wide variety of U.S. targets.'" Those agencies "said they observed the Russian state-sponsored actor targeting U.S. state, local, territorial and tribal (SLTT) government networks, as well as aviation networks." According to CISA, the "'threat actor' successfully compromised network infrastructure and 'exfiltrated,' aka stole, data from at least two victim servers." DNI Ratcliffe "issued a statement last week that Russia – along with Iran – had obtained voter registration information."

Microsoft: Iranian Hackers Spoofed Invitations To Conference Attendees.

The AP (10/28) reports, "Microsoft says Iranian hackers have posed as conference organizers in Germany and Saudi Arabia" using "spoofed invitations." Microsoft "detected attempts by the hacking group it calls Phosphorus to trick former government officials, policy experts and academics." The hackers targeted "more than 100 prominent people invited by the hackers to the Munich Security Conference, which is attended by world leaders each February, and the upcoming Think 20 Summit, which begins later this week in Saudi Arabia but is online-only this year." According to cybersecurity researchers, the "group typically tries to infiltrate a target's personal online accounts and computer networks by luring them into clicking on a link to a compromised website or opening a malicious attachment."

Robert Koch Institute Targeted Again By Hackers.

Reuters (10/28) reports that Germany's Robert Koch Institute "was targeted again by hackers on Wednesday, days after its headquarters was damaged in an arson attack, the Interior Ministry said." The European country's cybersecurity watchdog "detected a distributed denial of service attack on the health agency's website," after a "similar cyber strike on Oct. 22." Chancellor Angela Merkel and other officials "are due on Wednesday to decide whether to reimpose a national lockdown in response to a steep acceleration in infections." The country's health infrastructure "is facing a rising cyber threat, the Interior Ministry said, with hospital workers targeted by deceptive phishing mails that seek to trick them into giving away system passwords."

UK's GCHQ Chief Says Cap On China-Made 5G Parts May Be Needed.

The Telegraph (UK) (10/28, 956K) reports that Technical Director of the National Cyber Security Centre Dr Ian Levy "says 'market cap' on kit from 'high-risk vendors' could be required if trusted suppliers can't fill void left by Huawei ban." The MP "said risk was far reduced if the components were designed and manufactured in the West and only assembled or partly manufactured in high-risk countries." Levy said a market cap "may be a useful thing to do for certain high-value, high-impact components. It is a question about whether that is useful for, for example, just sticking components on boards." He added a "cap was 'not yet' needed and the agency wanted to see how the market reacted in the wake of the ban."

Congressman Advocates Speedier Attribution Of Malicious Cyber Activity.

C4ISR & Networks (10/28, Pomerleau) reports, "The international community needs to quicken its attribution of malicious cyber activity to enforce norms in cyberspace," according to Rep. Jim Langevin (D-RI). The Congressman said at CyberCon, "If you wait two or three years before you can take action, it loses its effectiveness. ... The message needs to move quickly if you want it to be heard." Langevin "serves as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Intelligence and Emerging Threats and Capabilities, and he is a commissioner on the Cyberspace Solarium Commission." The commission "adopted the approach of 'layered deterrence,'" the first of which "seeks to shape behavior, calling for America to work with other nations to promote responsible behavior in cyberspace." The Congressman "said nations have resources at their disposal beyond cyber forensics, such as signals and human intelligence, to aid in attributing a particular cyber incident."

Canadian Border Patrol Officer Says Examination Of Huawei CFO Was Normal.

Bloomberg (10/28, Pearson, 4.73M) reports, "The Canadian border agent who questioned" Huawei CFO Meng Wanzhou "described the examination's tactics – including asking for and recording passwords to her devices – as normal." In 2018, Meng was "questioned her for three hours," and border officials "seized her electronic devices, took down her passwords and searched her luggage before handing her over to police to be charged." The agent "was asked during a hearing at the Supreme Court of British Columbia on Wednesday how common it was to obtain passwords during so-called secondary questioning, when travelers are taken aside for further inspection." He said "he asks for passwords 'sometimes daily' and, in cases where there are potential national security or espionage concerns about the traveler, 'pretty much every time.'"

The AP (10/28) reports that Meng's lawyer "on Wednesday accused a Canadian police officer of lying about why he didn't arrest her immediately at Vancouver's airport two years ago." The attorney argued "he did not believe Yep was honest when he told the British Columbia Supreme Court this week why the arrest happened only after Canada Border Services Agency officers questioned Meng for three hours." The police officer "testified that border officials told him they had their own concerns about Meng's immigration status and he didn't want to infringe on their jurisdiction, so agreed that they should screen Meng first then he would make the arrest."

Federal Reserve

Fed Seen To Be Running Out Of Policy Tools To Support US Economy.

CNBC (10/28, Cox, 3.62M) reports Fed officials "have been pressing Congress to provide more fiscal help to the U.S. economy, and with good reason: The central bank is running out of ways it can help." The Fed "has kept policy extraordinarily loose, continuing to offer its lending and market-boosting programs, and now resolving that it likely won't raise short-term interest rates for years." Although "no Fed official ever would acknowledge that monetary policy ammunition is running low, and in fact would insist to the contrary, there appear to be few weapons left in the Fed arsenal." Moody's Analytics Chief Economist Mark Zandi said, "What they have left is really on the margin. ... They just don't have much room to maneuver with regard to monetary policy. I don't really see what more they can do. That's why they've been so explicit in telling fiscal policymakers to do more, because they know they can't help."

In an op-ed for Bloomberg Opinion (10/28), Bill Dudley says that because the Fed is "very near" the point where it is "out of firepower," the economy "depends more than ever on the government's spending plans – something the president and Congress must recognize."

Internal Revenue Service

IRS, Federal Agencies Explore, Potentially Deploy Hacking Tools.

Vice (10/28, Cox, 2.11M) reports federal agencies including the IRS "are at least exploring the use of, if not actively deploying, hacking tools in criminal investigations, according to a newly released cache of documents" shared with Vice. The documents, obtained through a FOIA lawsuit, "are heavily redacted, but draw the contours of how other federal law enforcement agencies beyond the FBI and DEA are interested in hacking criminal suspects." Among the documents "from the IRS is a contract for two products from software manufacturer Adobe: Adobe Experience Manager Forms and Adobe Experience Manager Document Security." It is "unclear why an IRS purchase of Adobe software is connected to the use of network investigative techniques."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Grants SoFi Preliminary Approval For Bank Charter.

Reuters (10/28, Irrera) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency has granted fintech SoFi preliminary, conditional approval for a national bank charter, the company said Wednesday. The application for "SoFi Bank, National Association" must still be approved by the Federal Reserve and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. A banking license would allow SoFi to hold deposits and make loans without partnering with a chartered bank as it currently does.

Law360 (10/28, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the OCC "said it made its decision to tentatively sign off on the California-based fintech's application with the understanding that SoFi Bank will seek membership in the Federal Reserve System and become insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp." SoFi Bank, which would be based in Utah, "must also complete other organizational steps and get final approval from the OCC."

The New York Times (10/28, Cowley, 18.61M) reports, "Those next steps will take several months, at the least; the earliest SoFi could actually start running a bank would be some time next year." SoFi "pursued a national banking charter once before, in 2017, but withdrew its application after a scandal over an office culture that employees described as toxic and sexually charged led to the ouster of the company's chief executive at the time."

Analysis: How Presidential Election Could Impact CRA Reform.

Forbes (10/28, 9.71M) Advisors Emily Guy Birken and Daphne Foreman say that should Trump win reelection, there would be continued banking deregulation. While the President "has not made his proposed banking policies a significant part of his reelection platform," his Administration has proposed major changes to the Community Reinvestment Act. The OCC's proposals "broaden the definition of what constitutes a bank and expand what types of loans offered to low-income borrowers qualify for improved CRA ratings." Birken and Foreman add, "The average bank customer may not notice the changes to the CRA on a day-to-day basis. However, lower-income borrowers may find it more difficult to qualify for a mortgage once these rules take effect." Meanwhile, under Biden, "consumers may pay less for their personal loans, credit cards and mortgages if Biden is successful in ending predatory lending practices and if he is able to expand the CRA" to include mortgage and insurance companies, "thereby improving access to credit for under-represented communities."

NCUA Joins Other Regulators In Approving Interagency Guidance Proposal.

American Banker (10/28, Passman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the National Credit Union Administration's board "on Wednesday approved the agency's part in an interagency role on supervisory guidance, codifying measures the regulator took on its own years ago and another interagency statement from 2018." During the virtual meeting, NCUA Chair Rodney Hood "noted that the rule reiterates distinctions between regulation and guidance, while making clear that citations will only be issued for violations of law and regulation or noncompliance with other enforceable measures." The OCC, the Fed, and the FDIC "have already voted to adopt the rule."

Superregionals Face Challenges In Fast-Changing Industry.

The Financial Brand (10/28, Streeter) reports, "When the term 'superregionals' was first coined, it struck fear into the hearts of community financial institutions and even among some larger banks that had to go up against these aggressive multi-regional players. Now even the Comptroller of the Currency is among those worried about them." The concern is "about their competitive position in a fast-changing banking world where even the largest superregional is dwarfed by Chase, Bank of America, Citibank and Wells Fargo while also facing a raft of fintech competitors." The Financial Brand says "perhaps Brian Brooks, Acting Comptroller of the Currency, was on the money when he [said]...banks between roughly $150 billion and $600 billion worry him because they're neither large enough to have scale nor small enough to have the local loyalty of community institutions."

Analysis: Regulatory Clarity Expected To Improve As More Firms Invest In Crypto.

Forbes (10/28, 9.71M) contributor Sean Stein Smith writes about the effect of PayPal supporting crypto transactions on the longer term development of the industry. Smith says that "digital transactions are the future of money," and "regulation is catching up." He continues, "Even with all of the disruption and negative news that has occurred during 2020, the pace of regulatory clarity and updates related to blockchain and cryptoassets continues virtually unabated. Punctuated with the recent clarification from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which basically opened up the commercial banking system to stablecoin issuers, the trend is unmistakable." As major firms such as PayPal "continue to invest significantly into the blockchain and crypto sector, it would be reasonable to conclude that regulatory clarity will continue to improve."

Avanti To Launch Crypto-Friendly Bank In Wyoming.

The CoinTelegraph (10/28, Wright, 14K) reports Avanti has won approval from the Wyoming State Banking Board for a bank charter. The approval "will allow Avanti to operate the new crypto-friendly bank under the name Avanti Bank & Trust as well as its 'tokenized U.S. dollar' Avit, designed to modernize USD payments." Founder and CEO Caitlin Long said in an interview, "Avanti's process from company formation to application to charter is lightning fast. Typically bank charters take 1-2 years from start to finish, but ours took 10 months." Long added, "Wyoming's regulators are the only bank regulators that have a supervisory and regulatory oversight program nearly in place. All other states, and the OCC [Office of the Comptroller of the Currency], are not yet ready to supervise banks engaging in digital asset activities."

Commentary: Fed Should Adopt OCC CRA Plan's 5% Deposit Requirement.

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (10/28, Subscription Publication, 31K), Community Development Fund Advisors President Kenneth H. Thomas writes, "The Federal Reserve's proposed Community Reinvestment Act reform is a disappointment for not doing what it was supposed to do, and for doing something that it was never asked to." Instead of modernizing the 1977 law "to account for digital and branchless banking," the Fed's proposal "would allow its regulated giant branchless banks like Ally Financial and Goldman Sachs to place their CRA benefits anywhere with the (misguided) concept of a 'national' assessment area." The Fed "should have merely adopted the 5% deposit reinvestment provision as the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency did in its final CRA rule released in May." Thomas adds, "An even more bizarre Fed modernization idea is their suggestion of a loan-based assessment area for such banks. This is backwards" and "could reinforce bad banking habits like redlining."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Say Yes To Progressive Taxation." The New York Times (10/28, 18.61M) says, "Voters in Illinois and Arizona, two of the states where taxation is most regressive, now have the chance to make the tax system a little more fair." Ballot measures in both states "would shift more of the burden of taxation onto wealthier residents," while "in California, where the overall distribution of taxation is already progressive, voters can make a change for the better." According to the Times, "A more progressive approach to taxation is necessary to counterbalance the rise of economic inequality, which has reached the highest levels since the 1920s." The Times concludes by saying, "A new generation of politicians is now stepping forward to make the case for progressive taxation, promising to use the money to invest in services like high-quality education. It is up to the voters to give that effort their support."

Washington Post.

"Another Disturbing Shooting Of A Black Man Shows How Desperately Police Need Reform." The Washington Post (10/28, 14.2M) asks, "Why was a 911 call for a mental health crisis answered with officers and drawn guns? Shouldn't there have been attempts to de-escalate the situation? Couldn't the officers have backed away rather than opening fire on a person in such obvious mental distress? The questions go to the heart of the debate over police use of lethal force." The Post says it is "important that officials take steps to improve how people in need of help get it" and recommends "the de-escalation training developed by the Police Executive Research Forum" as "a good place to start."

"Russian Labs Are Caught Making Illegal Chemical Weapons. Will Trump Finally Respond?" The Washington Post (10/28, 14.2M) says "a group of news outlets has exposed what they describe as clandestine Russian organizations carrying out illegal chemical weapons development concealed as civilian research." The Post says the reports, if true, "add a major dimension of concern to the attempted killings" of Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny and former military intelligence officer Sergei Skripal and his daughter in March 2018. The Post says the Administration has been "strangely silent about sanctions in response to the Navalny attack," and calls on the US and EU to "investigate the newly identified research organizations." In addition, the Post says when states that are parties to the Chemical Weapons Convention "meet Nov. 30 to Dec. 4, they should consider a strong response."

"Election Day Will Feel Different This Year. Having The Right Expectations Means Rejecting Trump's Lies." The Washington Post (10/28, 14.2M) editorializes, "Election Day this year is going to feel different. Many Americans will have to weigh whether voting is worth risking" COVID infection, "perhaps because their absentee ballot did not arrive fast enough, or they worry it would not get back in time to count, or they were denied the option of voting by mail in the first place. For this, they can thank Republicans in states such as Texas and Wisconsin who maintained arbitrary limits on absentee ballots." The Post says the result of so many by-mail votes "will be an Election Day that may not end with the declaration of a clear winner." President Trump "may claim fraud or declare victory before all the votes are counted. If Americans go into Election Day with the right expectations, they will ignore his self-serving lies."

Wall Street Journal.

"Twitter's Censorship Method." The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey did not give the impression during a Senate hearing Wednesday that he was concerned by Twitter's abuse of its power, and argues that the service has sided with Democrats in the past.

"Europe's Covid Lockdowns Return." The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Europe's lockdowns will not eliminate the coronavirus but will certainly do damage to the economy and to public health. The Journal instead advocates for targeted closures until a vaccine arrives or broader immunity is achieved.

"The Bidens And Tony Bobulinski." The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Hunter Biden's former business partner Tony Bobulinski has provided evidence of misdoings that should not be ignored.

"Covid And The Catholic Schools." The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Massachusetts Catholic schools' safe reopening confirms the process can be done safely and demonstrates how unions have been wrong to fight against in-person teaching.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Samantha Bee: "If Trump wins, this could be our last free election. I know you are thinking, democracy has been around forever. It won't disappear because we take it for granted. But that's what we said about tab cola, and look where we are now."

Samantha Bee: [On AG Barr saying he will not open an investigation into Biden] "Trump is mad that Barr isn't abusing his power enough. ... Turns out, Barr will do anything for Trump, but won't do that, which is fitting for a guy who looks like a cross between meat loaf and Meat Loaf."

Samantha Bee: "Of all the authoritarian attempts AG Loaf has made to service Trump, perhaps the most disturbing is the use of the DOJ to crush political dissent. ... Man, it's amazing how much evil a man wearing a 12-year-old's glasses can spew."

Samantha Bee: "There's nothing more American than complaining about America, but Trump has always favored persecuting his opponents, from demanding that Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton be jailed, to declaring war on improperly fitted suits."

Trevor Noah: [On a federal judge ruling that the DOJ cannot defend Trump] "[Trump]...had a bad day in court yesterday that ended not nice. ... Just because you're President, it doesn't mean that everything you do is officially part of the presidency. I mean, if that were true, I would run for President just so I could get into bar fights."

Trevor Noah: "The election is only a week away. And so [Trump] is spending every day on the campaign trail trying to convince voters to replace whoever is destroying this country with him."

Trevor Noah: [On attendees of the Trump rally in Omaha, Nebraska getting stranded in the cold] "And by the way, if you are planning to attend one of those big Trump campaign rallies, well, maybe bring an extra coat. ... I swear, guys, every day, there is another way that you can die from going to a Trump rally. First you could get corona. Now you can get hypothermia? By the end of the weekend, Trump is just going to be tossing snakes out into the crowd."

Trevor Noah: "Now while Trump has chosen coronavirus as his wingman, Joe Biden is going with his former boss Barack Obama. The two of them have been going around the country holding separate rallies. ... Watching Obama in that speech also reminds us of how much delivery of a speech actually affects the message. Because when Obama says, 'I want to kiss that baby,' we're like, 'Yeah, kiss that baby, Barry!' But if Trump was like, 'I want to kiss that little baby,' you would be like, 'Yo, we need to get this baby out of here, man, I don't trust this guy.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "Last night, Trump was in Nebraska. He had a big rally there. After the rally, hundreds of his supporters were stranded for hours in the freezing cold, waiting for a bus to take them back to their cars. ... It was a real mess. But that's the genius of Donald Trump. He's able to assemble a large, maskless crowd during a pandemic, and while everybody's focused on whether or not they'll get the virus, somehow he finds a way to send them to the hospital for a completely different reason."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We got to hear some rare audio of Trump's number one talking boy, adviser-in-law Jared Kushner, who was recorded by Bob Woodward...and Jared was boasting about how Trump took control of the country back from the doctors. That's right. He said, 'Trump's now back in charge. It's not the doctors.' Which sounds like what your kidnapper tells you when you wake up in a bathtub full of ice and your liver is missing."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Jared also told Bob Woodward there would be a panic phase and a pain phase, which is exactly what he said to Ivanka when he proposed to her."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Does talking to Bob Woodward work out well for anybody? Maybe it's time to rethink Take Your Son-In-Law To Work Day."

Stephen Colbert: "It is October 28, the final Wednesday before the presidential election, or, depending on who wins, the final Wednesday."

Stephen Colbert: "With six days still to go, thanks to early voting, more than half the total 2016 vote is already in. That's pretty impressive. But if 2016 taught us anything, it's that 'more than half' sometimes isn't enough."

Stephen Colbert: "This campaign has gone on for an eternity. And 2020 is projected to be most expensive US election ever, with spending as high as $14 billion. And that's before you count money for booze and Zoom sessions with my psychic."

Stephen Colbert: "Most of the campaign cash has gone to TV ads, and thanks to a new report, we're learning some more about what TV shows the candidates are advertising on. ... Both campaigns are running a lot of ads on reruns of 'The Big Bang Theory.' That's a little surprising. Trump's no fan of science, but so far no one's made 'The Big Bang Is A Chinese Hoax.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump saying he's getting husbands back to work for suburban wives] "That's great news, ladies. Donald Trump is going to get your husbands back to work, so you can get all your lady-chores done, like voting for Joe Biden."

Stephen Colbert: "If you look at the recent COVID news, you might want to Purell your eyeballs, because it's clear that this virus is going everywhere fast. ... The US is now reporting 500,000 new cases just in the past week. Clearly, we're a long way from ending the COVID-19 pandemic. On the other hand, yesterday, a new White House press release announced that one of Trump's biggest accomplishments is ending the COVID-19 pandemic. Now, while that is clearly insane, declaring victory prematurely is a proud Republican tradition."

Stephen Colbert: "At this point, Trump's not just Nero fiddling while Rome burns – he's Nero sending out a press release that says, 'You're not on fire.'"

Stephen Colbert: "This press release from the mouth of madness was created by the White House's 'Office of Science and Technology Policy.' ... But there are some quotes from leading academic minds in this document. One says, 'President Trump's policies and investments in science and technology ensure America stands ready to solve today's most pressing challenges.' An endorsement that comes from world-renowned scientist Ivanka Trump."

Jimmy Fallon: [On the Trump Administration releasing a press release listing ending the COVID-19 pandemic as one of his achievements] "Well, guys, with election day less than a week away, the White House office put out a list of President Trump's achievements. ... Keep in mind, though, the White House science office is just Eric and Don Jr. wearing a Bill Nye Halloween costumes."

Jimmy Fallon: "To be fair, lying on his resume is one of the most relatable things Trump's ever done."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump ended the pandemic. Now everyone's just living in their parents' basement for fun."

Jimmy Fallon: "Last night, Trump held a rally in Omaha, Nebraska, where it was a little chilly outside. ... I don't think Trump was prepared for the weather. When he stepped outside, he was like, 'Why was I told this was a hot spot?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "After his speech, Trump quickly left Nebraska on Air Force One, but hundreds of his supporters were left stranded for hours in the frigid cold because their buses didn't show up. Some people were actually treated for hypothermia. Even his supporters are turning blue."

Jimmy Fallon: [On Trump saying he's getting husbands back to work for suburban wives] "Trump held a rally in Michigan. At one point, he addressed the women in the crowd, and his comments are getting a lot of attention. ... It's pretty shocking, because before this, Trump's been such a feminist. Next, Trump tried winning the female vote by claiming he'd make ironing boards great again. I guess that comment explains why his campaign handed out pins that said 'Trump-Pence 1952.'"

Seth Meyers: "According to the latest numbers, over 70 million people across the country have already voted. Or, as the postal service is reporting, none."

Seth Meyers: "During a campaign rally in Florida, yesterday former President Obama criticized President Trump for treating the presidency as, quote, 'a reality show that can give him the attention he craves.' And by the number of tiki torches, I'm guessing it's 'Survivor'."

Treasury in the News

Mnuchin, Indonesia Finance Minister Sign Agreement On Infrastructure Finance.

Reuters (9/19, Diela, Widiyanto) reported Indonesia "has signed an agreement with the United States to strengthen infrastructure financing through private sector investment, Indonesia's Finance Ministry and the U.S. Treasury Department said on Friday." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "signed the agreement with Indonesia's Finance Minister Sri Mulyani Indrawati remotely on Friday, according to a statement posted on the U.S. Treasury Department's website." Treasury said in the statement, "The engagement supports the broader U.S. Government Indo-Pacific Strategy by complementing ongoing efforts under the Enhancing Development and Growth through Energy (Asia EDGE) and the Infrastructure Transaction and Assistance Network (ITAN)." Indonesia Finance Ministry spokeswoman Rahayu Puspasari "said in a separate statement that the agreement would bolster the development of capital markets and financial instruments to facilitate and reduce the barriers to private sector investment in infrastructure."

Stopgap Bill Hits Obstacles As Negotiations Continue.

The AP (9/19, Taylor) reported, "Efforts to fashion a temporary spending bill needed to avert a government shutdown at the end of the month ran aground Friday amid a fight over farm bailout funding that's a key priority of President Donald Trump and Capitol Hill Republicans." However, the bill "is likely to be the only measure of note that passes before the election...with COVID-19 rescue negotiations dead in the water." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi "negotiated the measure, which would keep the government open through Dec. 11. Democrats had proposed next February, apparently to avert any need to reconvene Congress after the election to deal with Trump, who they predict will lose his bid for a second term in November." Mnuchin and Pelosi, in talks Friday, "abandoned efforts to iron out wrinkles involving the census and election administration grants to states, though a heavily lobbied package to extend a number of health programs was likely to be included."

Documents Detail North Korean Money Laundering Using US Banks.

NBC News (9/20, Luce, 6.14M) reports North Korea has carried out an "elaborate money laundering scheme for years using a string of shell companies and help from Chinese firms, moving money through prominent banks in New York, according to confidential bank documents reviewed by NBC News." Wire transfers from North Korean-linked companies "with opaque ownership sometimes came in bursts, only days or hours apart, and the amounts transferred were in round figures with no clear commercial reasons for the transactions, according to the documents." Documents obtained by NBC News show that North Korean moved "illicit cash across borders despite international sanctions designed to block Pyongyang's access to the global financial system." The suspected laundering by "amounted to more than $174.8 million over a period of several years, with transactions cleared through U.S. banks, including JP Morgan and the Bank of New York Mellon, according to the documents." The leaked documents are "part of the FinCEN Files, a collaborative project with the International Consortium of Investigative Journalists, BuzzFeed News, NBC News and more than 400 journalists around the world, examining a cache of secret suspicious activity reports filed by banks with the Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network, known as FinCEN, as well as other investigative documents."

Reuters (9/20, Davies, Bansal), The New York (NY) Times (9/20, Scheiber, Flitter, 18.61M), Bloomberg (9/20, Yang, Surane, Onaran, 4.73M), Mother Jones (9/20, 881K), Axios (9/20, 521K), The Hill (9/20, Bowden, 2.98M), and BBC News Online (UK) (9/20, 1.02M) also report.

Treasury Grant News

NC Taking Applications For Treasury-Funded Extra Credit Grants.

The Winston-Salem (NC) Journal (9/20, Craver, 168K) reports the North Carolina Revenue Department "is accepting applications for the special $335 extra credit grant initiative that is part of the state's COVID-19 relief package." The extra credit funding "represents about 12.5% of the $3.5 billion in federal CARES Act funds received by North Carolina from the U.S. Treasury Department." The $335 checks are "scheduled to be issued Dec. 15 to parents and guardians who file a 2019 state tax return by Oct. 15."

Leading National News

Pelosi Doesn't Rule Out Impeaching Trump To Stop Ginsburg Replacement.

News accounts are casting House Speaker Pelosi's response to a reporter's question Sunday as an indication that she has not ruled out impeaching the President again to stop him for pushing through a Supreme Court nominee to replace the late Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg. On ABC's This Week (9/20, 2.46M), George Stephanopoulos said "some have mentioned the possibility" of impeaching Trump or Attorney General Barr "as a way of stalling and preventing the Senate from acting on this nomination." Pelosi replied, "We have our options. We have arrows in our quiver that I'm not about to discuss right now, but the fact is we have a big challenge in our country. This President has threatened to not even accept the results of the election with statements that he and his henchmen have made. ... The lives, the livelihood and the life of our democracy are threatened by this Administration. So again, when people say, what can I do? You can vote."

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, lead story, 3.45, Scott, 5.41M) reported Sunday night that Pelosi is "signaling Democrats will do whatever it takes to stop Republicans from jamming this nominee through, not ruling out using impeachment to try to keep the Senate from acting." Politico (9/20, Weaver, 4.29M) says Pelosi said "the House has plenty of options available to delay the Senate from acting," while to USA Today (9/20, Cummings, 10.31M) "Pelosi did not rule out the possibility of impeaching... Trump if he tries to push through a Supreme Court nominee," to Fox News (9/20, Singman, 27.59M) she "would not rule out impeachment as an option to stop... Trump's US Supreme Court pick from being confirmed to the bench," and to the New York Post (9/20, Moore, 4.57M) she "refused to rule out using impeachment to block Senate Republicans from voting on... Trump's nominee." The AP (9/20, Kellman, Mascaró) recounts, meanwhile, that Pelosi "refused in a television interview to detail the 'arrows in our quiver,' even when asked about trying to impeach Trump for a second time."

Newsweek (9/20, Fearnow, 1.53M) reports "Congressional legal experts say the drafting of new articles of impeachment against Trump is within the law," but her "refusal to rule out the possibility of using a second impeachment against Trump or initiating impeachment against Barr drew criticism from congressional Republicans." The Washington Examiner (9/20, Leonardi, 448K) indicates that House Judiciary Committee Republicans reacted to Pelosi's comments on Twitter, writing, "This is one of the most ridiculous ideas ever presented by @SpeakerPelosi. And that's saying something." The Examiner also reports "Trump said he expects to announce his nominee for the Supreme Court 'next week' and will be picking a woman."

At any rate, Townhall (9/20, Baumann, 177K) ventures that "Pelosi knows this is bad politics. She likely won't run with it but, if she does, she would basically solidify a Trump victory in November," as "the American people didn't like it with the Russia hoax and they sure as hell aren't going to like it when it's something as simple as a SCOTUS nomination." The Daily Caller (9/20, Kruta, 716K) and Breitbart (9/20, Key, 673K), among other news outlets, also cover Pelosi's comments.

CNN (9/19, Raju, 83.16M) reports on its website, meanwhile, that Democrats "are considering taking unusual steps to bottle up all business in the Senate to drag out the proceedings as long as possible, senators said," and that "under the rules, which require the chamber to operate by unanimous consent, Democrats can object to routine business of the day and essentially ground the chamber to a halt." McConnell "could eventually get around such stall tactics if he has the support of 51 senators, but they could drag out the proceedings."

Hugh Hewitt writes in the Washington Post (9/20, 14.2M) that "if Democrats deploy outrageous delaying tactics such as conducting a sham impeachment... the Republican Senate majority should simply dispense with hearings and hold a vote." To Hewitt, "History favors presidents filling such slots when their party controls the Senate. That Democrats are upset Trump gets to make another appointment to the court doesn't change history or amend the Constitution." Republicans "also knows that its candidates are toast, and the party blown apart, if they allow themselves to be intimidated by Manhattan-Beltway media elites into failing to meet this challenge. The good news is that McConnell and Graham know perfectly well that Twitter isn't the country."

Democratic Leaders Not Ruling Out Bid To Pack Court If Trump Nominee Is Confirmed. CNN (9/19, Raju, 83.16M) reports that "if the Democrats ultimately fail to stop the nominee, they are indicating that they may push legislation to expand the Supreme Court by adding additional seats to retaliate against what they view as Republicans' heavy-handed tactics." It is "an option that has picked up increased interest in the wake of Ginsburg's death – and one that Democratic leaders are not ruling out." Doing so would require eliminating the filibuster, and "several Democratic senators have already voiced strong opposition over killing" it "based on fears that would have long-standing ramifications for the institution and the country."

Fox News (9/20, Shaw, 27.59M) reports that "the idea of 'packing' the court with extra justices – attempted unsuccessfully by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1937 to force through parts of his New Deal that were ruled unconstitutional by the high court – has bubbled away on the fringes of the party for years," but "it began to seep into the mainstream after Republicans refused to hold hearings for Merrick Garland."

Axios (9/20, 521K) says "furious Democrats are considering total war – profound changes to two branches of government, and even adding stars to the flag – if Republicans jam through a Supreme Court nominee, then lose control of the Senate." The Washington Examiner (9/20, 448K) points out that "while the court's headcount has stood at nine since 1868, there is no constitutional requirement that it stays that way." The Daily Caller (9/20, Hasson, 716K), among other news outlets, also reports on the possibility Democrats will move to pack the court.

The Washington Times (9/20, Richardson, 492K) reports "the fight over the 2017 Kavanaugh nomination already looked tame by comparison Sunday as Democrats geared up to block whomever... Trump picks," as "calls of 'burn it down' and 'this is war' raged on social media."

The Hill (9/20, Rahman, 2.98M) reports that "when Stephanopoulos asked Pelosi if Democrats, should they win the majority in November, would expand the court in retaliation, Pelosi referred to a court battle over the Affordable Care Act." Said Pelosi, "Let's just win the election. Let's hope the president will see the light. ... This is about the people. It's about their health, their economic well being, the health of our democracy. We have a great deal at stake here."

Schumer: "Nothing Is Off The Table." The AP (9/19) recounts Senate Minority Leader Schumer "convened a conference call with Democratic senators at midday Saturday, according to a person on the private call who was not authorized to discuss it publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity," and "told senators the 'number one goal' must be to communicate the stakes of the confirmation vote." Schumer also "warned that if Republicans push through the nominee, 'nothing is off the table' for Senate rules changes to come, the person said."

Protesters Converge Outside McConnell's Home. The New York Post (9/20, Moore, 4.57M) reports "a crowd of protesters swarmed outside Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell's Kentucky home after the Republican leader said he would move to fill the Supreme Court vacancy. ... The demonstrators called out 'Hey, hey, ho, ho, Mitch McConnell has got to go,' 'vote him out' and 'ditch Mitch.'"

The Post adds "one arrest was reported during the protests that ended after about three hours." Breitbart (9/20, Furr, 673K) points out "it was unclear whether McConnell was at home or in Washington when the event took place."

Michael Moore: Shut Down Government. The Washington Examiner (9/20, Soellner, 448K) reports, "Filmmaker and liberal activist Michael Moore said Democrats should pursue a government shutdown to deter GOP lawmakers from trying to vote on a Supreme Court nominee following Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg's death." Moore said Sunday on MSNBC's Weekends With Alex Witt, "This is the one time I think we're going to shut it down. ... The Democrats must hold up the continuing resolution and shut down that government that is going to give us a Supreme Court justice that the majority of Americans are clearly going to say on Nov. 3, that they don't want." The Examiner adds "a government shutdown could happen on Oct. 1 if Congress and the White House cannot come to an agreement on a stopgap spending bill."

Inquirer's Bunch Calls For "General Strike" If McConnell "Sets A Date For A Confirmation Vote." In his column for the Inquirer \(PA\) (9/20, 347K), Will Bunch writes that "if McConnell sets a date for a confirmation vote, the American people need to respond with a general strike – to shut down the entire country, maybe for a day or two, maybe a week, maybe longer." A general strike would work "as a galvanizing tool – both to drag too often cowardly Democratic leaders toward facing the realities of the Trump/McConnell threat, but also to rally strike participants behind longer-term protest measures. These could and should include massive economic boycotts of the companies that are funding GOP authoritarianism, as well as future acts of civil disobedience." Adds Brunch, "We must demand that the November election winner pick Ginsburg's replacement. And if we don't get it? Shut it down."

Companies Make Strategic Bets As Pandemic Drags On.

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Francis, Maloney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports companies are turning their focus from surviving the pandemic to navigating their way through it. Businesses slashed costs, hoarded cash, and pulled earnings projections amid the uncertainty earlier in the year. Now, with the realization that the pandemic might last for a while, they are looking for opportunities for growth and reinstating earnings forecasts.

Pandemic Strains Debt-Laden Middle-Class Families.

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, A1, Andriotis, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports lower-wage workers bore much of the brunt when the pandemic first hit, but the outlook for the professional workforce is growing dimmer as the slowdown ripples throughout the economy. Debt-laden households are now confronting lenders who are demanding repayment of missed bills, while government assistance dries up.

Meat Prices Decline As Supplies Rebound.

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Bunge, Kang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that meat prices, which soared amid shortages in the spring, are now declining as supplies rebound and exports fall. Consumers are benefiting from the lower prices, but they pose a challenge for meatpackers and farmers.

Tens Of Thousands Of Workers In Airline Industry Face Furloughs And Layoffs.

The CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 7, 2:10, Garrett, 875K) reported that airlines are warning that "unless billions more in federal aid materializes soon, thousands of workers face furloughs and layoffs." CBS' Kris Van Cleave reported, "The aviation industry is reeling from plummeting demand and staggering financial losses due to the coronavirus. As many as 76,000 airline employees face potential furlough or layoff next month. And airlines could slash service to smaller communities."

Gyms Struggling Amid Pandemic.

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 8, 1:30, Llamas, 5.41M) reported the pandemic is "hitting the gym industry" as many cancel memberships and work out from home. ABC's Deirdre Bolton reported social distancing measures are costing "businesses $10 billion in lost revenue" and staff layoffs are nearing 90%. In the past ten days, two additional national chains have joined others in filing for bankruptcy. However, some businesses are benefiting, such as those that provide online classes and fitness equipment for the home market.

Electric Cars On Verge Of Becoming Mainstream As Technology Improves, Prices Fall.

The New York Times (9/20, Ewing, 18.61M) reports, "As electric cars become more mainstream, the automobile industry is rapidly approaching the tipping point when, even without subsidies, it will be as cheap, and maybe cheaper, to own a plug-in vehicle than one that burns fossil fuels." The Times says that "a few years ago, industry experts expected 2025 would be the turning point." However, "technology is advancing faster than expected, and could be poised for a quantum leap."

Media Analyses: TikTok Deal Falls Short Of Trump's Key Demands.

Bloomberg (9/20, Wadhams, Banjo, 4.73M) reports that in July, President Trump threatened to ban TikTok "unless China handed over control of the company, its algorithms and data to the US." Hours before a Sept. 20 deadline, the President signed off on Saturday on a deal that "does almost none of that." Trump "said he wanted the US part of the business owned by an American company," but China's ByteDance Ltd.

"remains the majority shareholder in a new US company" with Oracle Corp. and Walmart Inc. also holding stakes. Furthermore, Trump "said he wanted the data to stay in American hands, for national security reasons. But the algorithm itself...will still belong to ByteDance, so national security concerns remain, experts said." To Bloomberg, Trump "did get a partial victory" with the new company headquartered in Texas and promised to hire 25,000 Americans.

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, A1, McKinnon, Leary, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) likewise reports the deal announced Saturday does not satisfy national security concerns. A New York Times (9/20, Sanger, 18.61M) analysis too says that while the President "has declared victory in his latest confrontation with China, saying that he headed off a looming national security threat," it is "far from clear from the details released so far that Mr. Trump's deal resolves the deeper TikTok security problem."

Secretary of State Pompeo, on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/20, 1.66M), discussed the deal saying, "The single rule is this: We don't want American data in the hands of the Chinese Communist Party. It will end up in the hands of their MSS, their security apparatus, their military, their civil-military-fusion program so that's the rule President Trump laid down. As for the transaction around TikTok, I've seen the outlines of it. The President now has said he's conditionally okay with what they're doing. This deal, if approved, in the end will ensure that no Americans' data can be accessed by anyone in China. We will ensure that the firewall is real, that the protection is serious. ... There will be an American headquarters and it'll be controlled by Americans."

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL), on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/20, 1.67M), said, "I think Oracle worked really hard to put together the best deal possible. My concern remains this: If that code, you know the code that gives the instructions to the system on what to do. If China continues to control the code, as I understand they would in this deal, they could put in that code an instruction to secretly send data back to China, to the mainland no matter where the actual data is housed there can be something in that code that sends it the other way."

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that the winner in the deal, Oracle, its co-founder Larry Ellison is a prominent Republican donor and CEO Safra Catz worked on the Trump transition team in 2016. The Journal argues that it would have been better to ban TikTok.

WPost Analysis: US, Chinese Economies Moving Apart. A Washington Post (9/20, A1, Lynch, 14.2M) analysis says "eight months after Trump and Chinese Vice Premier Liu He signed a partial trade agreement that the president promised would be 'transformative,' the U.S.-China relationship instead is mired in an escalating number of bitter disputes." As a result, the Post says, the two economies "are moving apart, headed toward a world divided into separate Internets, technology regimes, industrial networks – perhaps even financial systems."

Federal Court Halts Administration's WeChat Ban.

The Washington Post (9/20, Whalen, 14.2M) reports a federal court has granted a "preliminary injunction halting the Trump administration's planned ban of Chinese app WeChat, in response to a plaintiff lawsuit saying the ban would harm their First Amendment rights." In an order issued late Saturday, the US District Court in San Francisco said the plaintiffs, a group of WeChat users, had shown there are "serious questions" related to their First Amendment claim. The New York Times (9/20, Swanson, McCabe, 18.61M) saying the ruling presents "at least a temporary setback in the president's efforts to block an app that he has labeled a national security threat."

Global Trade Rebounding Faster Than Expected Amid Pandemic.

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Jeong, Fairless, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that global trade is rebounding faster amid the pandemic than it did after the 2008 financial crisis. While trade still remains below pre-pandemic levels, it recovered about half of this year's historic loss by June.

Reports: Barrett, Lagoa Top Trump's List As He Weighs Ginsburg Replacement.

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, lead story, 3:45, Scott, 5.41M) showed President Trump saying of his upcoming Supreme Court nominee, "It will be a woman. A very talented, very brilliant woman, who I haven't chosen yet, but we have numerous women on the list. I built this incredible list of brilliant people." ABC added "sources tell us...Amy Coney Barrett" is "an early favorite." NBC Nightly News (9/20, story 3, 1:40, Williams, 5.27M) reported that "Administration officials say the President is considering two women as possible nominees. Said to be the front-runner at this point" is Barrett, who "Trump put...on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals based in Chicago three years ago. A native of Indiana, she's 48, a former Notre Dame law professor, and devout Catholic." NBC added that "in 2003, she questioned the reluctance of federal courts to overturn precedents."

The CBS Weekend News (9/20, lead story, 2:50, Reid, 875K) showed Trump saying of Barrett, "She is very highly respected, I can say that." CBS added that "Judge Barbara Lagoa on the 11th Circuit is also a top contender." Trump said of her, "An extraordinary person, I have heard incredible things about her. I don't know her. She is Hispanic and highly respected." CBS News "has learned that over the next few days, the President will continue to confer with his top advisors, his Vice President, Chief of Staff, White House counsel, even his son in law, Jared Kushner, about this nomination. The President is expected to announce his pick sometime this week."

USA Today (9/19, Wolf, Groppe, 10.31M) reports "Barrett rocketed to the top of Trump's list of potential nominees after her 2017 confirmation hearing for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit, when Democrats cited her deep Catholic faith not as an advantage but an obstacle. She was confirmed, 55-43." Said Barrett at the time, "If you're asking whether I take my faith seriously and I'm a faithful Catholic, I am. ... Although I would stress that my personal church affiliation or my religious belief would not bear in the discharge of my duties as a judge." The Wall Street Journal (9/20, A1, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) runs a similar analysis under the front-page headline "Amy Coney Barrett Is Again a Top Contender for Supreme Court Nomination."

In her Washington Post (9/20, 14.2M) column, meanwhile, Ruth Marcus writes that "there is much more to plumb in Barrett's writings, as Trump weighs his selection. But a quick review suggests that conservatives should be assuaged, and liberals alarmed, by the Barrett record in her first years as a judge."

McClatchy (9/20, 19K) quotes Trump as saying of Lagoa, "She's an extraordinary person. ... I've heard incredible things about her. I don't know her. She's Hispanic and highly respected." The Hill (9/20, 2.98M) reports "Lagoa, 52, is a Cuban American judge and native of Florida" who "was nominated by Trump to serve on the US Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit at the end of 2019." She "was confirmed by the Senate in a rare bipartisan vote of 80-15, winning support from 26 Democrats, including Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), the top Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee."

The New York Times (9/20, Dias, Liptak, 18.61M) reports "some White House officials worry that Judge Barrett's positions might galvanize not just Democrats but also suburban women and independent voters who would favor a more mainstream pick, and her nomination is hardly certain." The Times adds that "in the world of conservative judges, she has particularly strong credentials."

The Washington Post (9/20, Rucker, Dawsey, Kim, 14.2M) reports "the president spent the weekend quizzing advisers and allies about the backgrounds of both women and gaming out the political fallout of either nomination." The Post adds "White House Counsel Pat Cipollone and White House chief of staff Mark Meadows are leading the search process, with Cipollone overseeing the legal review and vetting of candidates and Meadows focusing on the political calculations and the state of play in the Senate." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, "who has spoken with Trump twice about the opening, has told others that he would support Barrett and that Republican senators know the most about her and would be comfortable with her." Lagoa "has a lower profile, but her stock has been rising rapidly. ... The daughter of Cuban exiles, she would become the second Latina on the Supreme Court, and has the enthusiastic backing of a number of Trump allies in Florida." To the New York Times (9/20, Baker, Haberman, 18.61M), "Lagoa is seen as the second choice, appealing to the president in particular because of her Cuban-American heritage and ties to Florida, a must-win state for Mr. Trump this fall."

Another Washington Post (9/20, Stanley-Becker, Davis, 14.2M) piece reports "a broad cross-section of Florida Republicans, from acolytes of...Trump to former top aides to Jeb Bush, lined up over the weekend behind...Lagoa, propelling the federal judge and Miami-born daughter of Cuban exiles to the top of the shortlist of potential replacements for...Ginsburg." The Post adds that "while the judge has not expounded at length on abortion and its legal limits – saying in written answers submitted to the Senate last year that she would 'faithfully apply...precedents' when it came to Roe v. Wade – one of her main advocates, Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.), said she is 'very pro-life, reliably pro-life.'" Added Gaetz, "The hardcore Catholics usually stick with us. ... Her faith guides her perspective on life."

USA Today (9/19, Wolf, 10.31M) recounts "Lagoa was among 20 people on a list that Trump unveiled earlier this month as possible Supreme Court nominees. She is considered a protégé of Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis, a close Trump ally," and "in 2019, DeSantis appointed her to the state's highest court, making her the first Cuban American woman to serve there." Lagoa, "a registered Republican when selected by DeSantis, is a member of the conservative Federalist Society."

The Hill (9/20, 2.98M) reports Allison Jones Rushing's "name is also in the mix." She is 38, and "would be an extremely young nominee to serve on the high court." Rushing "was nominated by Trump to serve on the US Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit in 2018 and confirmed by the Senate the following year in a vote of 53-44 that fell along party lines."

Bloomberg (9/20, Wingrove, 4.73M) also lists Barrett and Lagoa as the two top candidates, while the New York Post (9/20, Moore, 4.57M) adds Britt Grant, Joan Larsen, Amul Thapar and Allison Eid to the list of possible nominees.

Short: Vote On New Justice Could Come Before Election Day.

The Washington Times (9/20, Sherfinski, 492K) reports, "Marc Short, chief of staff to Vice President Mike Pence, said Sunday that the Senate could vote on President Trump's Supreme Court pick before the Nov. 3 election but that he would defer to Senate leaders on specific timing for a vote." Short "said Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who died Friday of pancreatic cancer at the age of 87, was confirmed within 43 days of her nomination in 1993." Asked about the possibility of a vote before the election, Short said, "Today, we sit here 44 days out from election, so it's certainly possible." Short also told CNN's State Of The Union , said, "I think that the President is prepared to make a nomination very soon. We've had a couple nominations that provide the President a chance to interview a lot of candidates. He's narrowed his list and he looks forward to fulfilling his obligation as President to make a nomination. As some of your guests have commented already this morning, the reality in history is that there's been 29 vacancies during a presidential election year. Twenty-nine times presidents have put forward a nominee."

Trump Campaign Selling "Fill That Seat" Shirts.

Newsweek (9/20, Czachor, 1.53M) reports, "President Donald Trump's re-election campaign is already selling merchandise that references the newly vacant US Supreme Court seat, which Republicans are eager to fill with Ruth Bader Ginsburg's replacement." Newsweek adds that "echoing chants heard during a Trump campaign rally in North Carolina on Saturday, the president's re-election campaign released a T-shirt with the phrase 'FILL THAT SEAT' printed across the chest to its online store. The phrase sits between a graphic depiction of the White House and Trump's 'Make America Great Again' campaign slogan in smaller lettering."

In 2016, Ginsburg Urged Senate To Fill High Court Vacancy During Election Year.

Fox News (9/20, Creitz, 27.59M) reports on its website that "in 2016, when a lame-duck President Obama tabbed Merrick Garland to replace the late conservative Justice Antonin Scalia, Democratic leaders had no problem with" filling the vacancy during an election year, "and neither did [Justice Ruth Bader] Ginsburg." Ginsburg told the New York Times, "There's nothing in the Constitution that says the president stops being the president in his last year." Asked "whether the Senate should take up a vote on" Obama's nominee, "Ginsburg said at the time, 'That's their job.'"

Murkowski Joins Collins In Opposing Filling Seat Before Election.

The AP (9/20, Kellman, Mascaro) reports, "A second Republican senator came out in opposition to filling a vacant Supreme Court seat before the Nov. 3 election." Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) "said in a statement that 'for weeks, I have stated that I would not support taking up' a potential nomination as the presidential election neared," adding, "Sadly, what was then a hypothetical is now our reality, but my position has not changed." Murkowski "joins Maine. Sen. Susan Collins, who said replacing Ginsburg should be the decision of the election winner." The AP adds "focus is growing on Sen. Mitt Romney, R-Utah, who has broken with Trump before." NBC Nightly News (9/20, lead story, 2:40, Haake, 5.27M) indicated "Republicans have very little wiggle room here. They can lose one more vote and still have Vice President Mike Pence break a 50/50 tie. But four defections effectively blocks whomever the President might choose to nominate."

Politico (9/20, McCaskill, Desiderio, 4.29M) points out that "Murkowski, who has frequently bucked her party's leadership, noted that she did not support President Barack Obama's effort to fill Justice Antonin Scalia's seat in 2016, and that 'the same standard must apply' this election year." Bloomberg (9/20, Krasny, Litvan, 4.73M) recounts that "Collins, who faces a tough re-election fight in November, was the first Republican to break ranks with the party's leadership and Trump to say Ginsburg's replacement should be selected by whoever is elected president." Said Collins, "In fairness to the American people, who will either be re-electing the president or selecting a new one, the decision on a lifetime appointment to the Supreme Court should be made by the president who is elected on November 3rd." The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Collins' statement under the headline "Another Supreme Court Vacancy Puts Re-Election Squeeze On Sen. Susan Collins."

USA Today (9/20, Cummings, 10.31M) reports that "hours before Ginsburg's death was announced, Murkowski told Alaska Public Media on Friday she would not vote on a nominee so close to an election." The Chicago Tribune (9/20, Kellman, Mascaro, 2.65M), the Washington Times (9/20, Sherfinski, 492K), Reuters (9/20, Staff), the Washington Examiner (9/20, Soellner, 448K), Fox News (9/20, Singman, 27.59M), CNBC (9/20, Higgins, 3.62M), New York Post (9/20, Moore, 4.57M), Axios (9/20, 521K), The Hill (9/20, Carney, 2.98M) and Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also cover Murkowski's statement.

The Washington Times (9/20, Swoyer, Sherfinski, 492K) reports "Sens. Joni Ernst of Iowa, Thom Tillis of North Carolina and Martha McSally of Arizona, all facing tricky reelection bids, all announced they support Mr. Trump's push to move quickly." However, "one wrinkle is that Ms. McSally was appointed to the seat of the late Sen. John McCain and isn't entitled to the full Constitutional term through January. The Arizona Republic reported Friday that should she lose in November, her Democratic successor could be sworn in as soon as the results are certified, perhaps by Nov. 30," and "that could constrain Republicans' ability to operate in a lame-duck session."

Trump Takes Swipe At Murkowski. Politico (9/20, Cohen, 4.29M) reports that the President "took a swipe Sunday morning at...Murkowski, who subsequently announced she doesn't support moving forward immediately with his Supreme Court pick." Trump "picked up a tweet from the Alaska Chamber promoting an upcoming event with Murkowski and retweeted it with an emphatic 'No thanks!'"

Alexander Supports Filling Vacancy Now. Townhall (9/20, Stocking, 177K) reports that "it was a relief...to hear Sen. Alexander [R-TN], who is retiring this year, say on Sunday that he believes the Senate should move forward with...Trump's nominee to fill the Supreme Court vacancy." Alexander said in a statement, "No one should be surprised that a Republican Senate majority would vote on a Republican President's Supreme Court nomination, even during a presidential election year. The Constitution gives senators the power to do it."

Biden Urges GOP To Not Vote On Any Trump Supreme Court Candidate.

Reuters (9/20, Hunnicutt, Heavey) reports "Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden urged Senate Republicans not to vote on any candidate nominated to the Supreme Court as the November election approaches, calling his rival Donald Trump's plan an 'exercise in raw political power.'" The CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 2, 2:30, Cordes, 875K) showed Biden saying, "I'm speaking to those Republicans out there, Senate Republicans, who know deep down what is right for the country and consistent with the Constitution." CBS added that "Biden used to chair the Senate Judiciary Committee, so he knows exactly how this works, and he knows that the chance to confirm a Supreme Court nominee who shares your views is something senators live for. And thus, Republicans are unlikely to back down."

The Washington Times (9/20, Sherfinski, 492K) quotes Biden as saying, "Don't vote to confirm anyone nominated under the circumstances President Trump and Senator McConnell have created. ... Don't go there." The Washington Post (9/20, Sullivan, Viser, Linskey, 14.2M), USA Today (9/20, Cummings, 10.31M), the AP (9/20), the New York Times (9/20, Glueck, Kaplan, 18.61M) and Politico (9/20, Cadelago, 4.29M), among other news outlets, also cover Biden's comments.

The Washington Examiner (9/20, Larsen, 448K) reports, meanwhile, that "Biden said that he would not release a list of potential Supreme Court nominees like...Trump has, arguing the rejection of nomination norms could politicize the court and subject those on the list to unnecessary attacks.”

On Sunday Shows, Lawmakers Split Along Partisan Lines On Ginsburg Replacement.

Lawmakers interviewed on the Sunday morning political shows broke into sharp partisan lines on their views on the Supreme Court opening.

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX), on ABC's This Week (9/20, 2.46M), discussed his comments from 2016 in support of waiting until after the election to vote on a nominee. Cruz said, “I believe the right thing to do is for this Senate to take up the nomination and confirm the nominee before Election Day. Now on the question of precedent, we had this fight at the end of the Barack Obama term, and at the time all the Democrats were saying, confirm the nominee, and all the Republicans were saying, we're not going to confirm the nominee. You played a situation, and a quote from me in 2016. We can play that game all day long.”

Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR), on Fox News Sunday (9/20, 1.19M), said, “There will be a vote,” and “in some cases, like Justice Ginsburg herself,” the “nomination and confirmation process took less than 44 days. There have been other cases which it took longer, so it's too soon to say right now, but we will move forward without delay. ... In 2014, the American people elected a Republican majority to the Senate to put the brakes on President Obama's traditional nominations.”

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), on CNN's State Of The Union (9/20, 868K), said, “Healthcare is on the line. ... Environmental rules as people can't even breathe some of the air out on the West Coast. Those are on the line. The right to organize, that is on the line. So, it is coinciding with an election. So that's why whatever Mitch McConnell does right now, my Republican colleagues understand that the voters are voting. And a number of them have already said that the next President, whoever wins, should be able to pick the justice.” On NBC's Meet the Press (9/20, 2.72M), Klobuchar said, “For me, that's what this is about. It's about justice. It's about moving forward as a Senate and democracy.”

During an appearance on MSNBC AM Joy (9/19, 988K), Klobuchar said “Republicans are going to have to make their own decisions and that is going to be their reckoning and they have to think about the future of this country.”

On MSNBC AM Joy (9/19, 1.03M), Sen. Mazie Hirono (D-HI) said of Trump, “Here's a person who doesn't believe that the rule of law applies to him, so it's par for the course for him. We start with the proposition that Republicans can't be trusted.”

Also on MSNBC AM Joy (9/20, 765K), Sen. Debbie Stabenow (D-MI) was asked whether Democrats will stand firm in their threats if the Supreme Court nomination process moves forward. Stabenow said, “Of course we're looking at all the options. The practical reality, though, for all of us who are concerned, is to understand, we don't have the votes. They only need 51.”

Sen. Chris Coons (D-DE), on Fox News Sunday (9/20, 1.19M), said, “For the Republican majority just 44 days before the next presidential election to rush through a new justice in a partisan confirmation process will further divide our country, further challenge the legitimacy of the court and I think would dishonor Justice Ginsburg's legacy. ... I frankly think the Republican majority should live with the precedent they set in 2016.”

Sen. Roy Blunt (R-MO), on CBS' Face The Nation (9/20, 2.56M), said, “In this case, both the White House and the Senate have some obligation to do what they think in the majority in the Senate is the right thing to do, and there is a Senate majority put there by voters for reasons like this.”

Sen. John Barasso (R-WY), on NBC's Meet the Press (9/20, 2.72M), said, “Let's be clear. If the shoe were on the other foot, and the Democrats had the White House and Senate they would right now be trying to confirm another member of the Supreme Court. What we are proposing is completely consistent with the precedent. Let's go back. We were following the 'Joe Biden Rule.' Joe Biden was clear when he was chairman of the judiciary committee. He said when there is a Senate of one party and a White House of the others, he said this to George Herbert Walker Bush, he said if there is a vacancy in the final year, we'll not confirm.”

Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ), on CBS' Face The Nation (9/20, 2.06M), said, “For Republicans to move forward like this, I think, really undermines that. It will have a tremendous amount of control now, so I'm not sure exactly how this will play out. Again, we've seen moments like this before, where healthcare was in the ballots. And the American public, speaking out, got people like John McCain and a couple colleagues to do the right thing.”

Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH), on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/20, 1.66M), said, “The President's job is to nominate someone for the Supreme Court and it's the Senate's job to advise and go through the process and now what's happened historically. He's not only following the law but the historic norm.”

On Fox News' The Next Revolution (9/20, 1.99M), Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) was asked if she supported moving forward with the nomination. Blackburn said, “Yes, I do support that. This is the President's constitutional duty and 29 times presidents and the Senate of the same party have moved forward and have done the nomination in an election year. You would have to go back to 1882 find a time when they decided to leave a seat vacant.”

Clintons Come Out Against Trump Nominating New Justice.

Former President Bill Clinton, on CNN's State Of The Union (9/20, 868K), said, “It's superficially hypocritical, isn't it? Mitch McConnell wouldn't give President Obama's nominee a hearing ten months before the President's election. That meant that we went a long time with eight judges on the court. This is what they do. They vote for Senator McConnell and President Trump. Their first value is power and they're trying to fill the court with as many ideological judges as they can.”

On ABC's This Week (9/20, 2.46M), Clinton said, "Today it seems that Senator McConnell has lost his faith in the judgment of the American people and wants to hurry up and put somebody else on the court, and the President does too. Their position is, do whatever maximizes your power, and if it's totally inconsistent with what you said before, don't worry about it."

Hillary Clinton, on NBC's Meet the Press (9/20, 2.72M), said, "The system has been broken for quite a while, but clearly the decision that Mitch McConnell made in 2016 in the midst of that presidential election, when Justice Scalia unexpectedly passed away should be the standard now. They talk about we had other standards before, well, they made a new precedent and the new precedent, which they defended incredibly passionately, was to wait for the next president, whoever that is, to make the nomination, but as you clearly heard, that is not what they are intending and it's another blow to our institutions. What's happening in our country is incredibly dangerous. Our institutions are being undermined by the lust for power, power for personal gain in the case of the President or power for institutional gain in the case of Mitch McConnell at the cost of ensuring that our institutions withstand whatever the political winds might be, but they made this decision in 2016 and they should be held account for it."

Trump Boasted To Woodward About Judicial Appointments.

The Washington Post (9/20, Parker, 14.2M) reports, "When President Trump sat down in the Oval Office with author Bob Woodward for the first of 18 eventual interviews, the president brought up judicial appointments four times and even had a list of judicial appointment orders displayed, prop-like, on the Resolute Desk – 'kind of like he was cherishing it,' Woodward recounted." In a December interview with Woodward, "Trump boasted that he" and Senate Majority Leader McConnell "have broken every record' on judges, saying the issue is the majority leader's top priority." In January, Trump "bragged that he had installed 187 judges to the federal bench – making one in every four circuit court judges a Trump appointee – and two to the Supreme Court." According to the Post, "judicial appointments have engaged Trump more than many other policymaking topics, in part because he appears to understand the political ramifications for himself."

Graham Looks To Fill Supreme Court Seat While Fending Off Challenger.

The AP (9/20, Kinnard) reports Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) might be facing "his toughest test yet as he seeks reelection and explains to voters how, as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, he will push for Trump's Supreme Court nominee on the president's aggressive timetable, when the senator was so clearly – even defiantly – opposed to that approach as recently as two years ago, even demanding that he be called out for hypocrisy if he switched." Democratic Senate candidate Jaime Harrison is "running close to Graham, according to one recent poll, despite the conservative tilt of South Carolina, and is matching the three-term incumbent in fundraising that has yielded a total of more than $30 million apiece."

The Washington Post (9/19, Sullivan, Kim, 14.2M) reports that four-and-a-half years ago, Graham vowed that he wouldn't support filling a vacant seat on the Supreme Court in the last year of a Republican president's first term. But on Saturday, Graham was "singing a different tune, pledging support for President Trump in 'any effort to move forward regarding the recent vacancy created by the passing of Justice Ginsburg.'" Graham will be "at the center of what will likely be one of the most contentious confirmation battles in history, affording him an opportunity to demonstrate his loyalty to Trump." However, "some Democrats say his position could help amplify the arguments against his reelection."

Shorthanded Supreme Court Could Play Key Role In Election Fights.

USA Today (9/20, Wolf, 10.31M) reports, "A presidential election riddled with rampant court challenges and ripe for more faces a Supreme Court with an empty chair." The death of Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg "adds a layer of intrigue to a pandemic-infused campaign that's been challenged from Alabama to Wisconsin, prompting the justices to resolve political disputes they would rather sidestep." According to USA Today, "the nation's ever-rising political polarization and reckless claims on social media make it even more likely that local, state and federal elections will wind up in court, not only in the weeks leading up to Election Day but in the days and weeks thereafter."

Politico (9/20, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports, "Until Friday, Chief Justice John Roberts or other justices had the power to issue or deny emergency relief by joining with the court's four liberals. It didn't happen often, but it did sometimes happen." But "with the court shorthanded for the time being, the court's three remaining Democratic appointees would now need two Republican-appointed colleagues to take emergency action." President Trump "signaled Saturday night that he expects federal judges to play a key role in achieving a definitive result within hours of the polls closing on Election Day."

CNBC (9/20, Higgins, 3.62M) reports that "if an emergency case between Trump and Biden splits the court along partisan lines this fall, Trump is almost certain to emerge the victor". Even if Chief Justice John Roberts, "an occasional swing justice, joins the liberals, that would mean a 4-4 tie, leaving in place whatever ruling was issued by the lower court."

Reuters Poll: 62% Want Ginsburg Replacement To Be Named After Election.

Reuters (9/20, Kahn) reports, "A majority of Americans, including many Republicans, want the winner of the November presidential election to name a successor to Ruth Bader Ginsburg on the U.S. Supreme Court, according to a Reuters/Ipsos poll released on Sunday." The poll "suggests that many Americans object to President Donald Trump's plan, backed by many Senate Republicans, to push through another lifetime appointee and cement a 6-3 conservative majority on the court."

Bloomberg (9/20, Javier, 4.73M) reports, "A survey conducted Sept. 19-20 after Ginsburg's death found that 62% of American adults said the vacancy should be filled by the winner of the Nov. 3 matchup between President Donald Trump and former Vice President Joe Biden, while 23% disagreed and the rest said they were unsure, Reuters reported." The poll found that "eight out of 10 Democrats – and five in 10 Republicans – agreed that the appointment should be made after the election."

Poll: Democrats Want Hearings On Ginsburg Vacancy. Townhall (9/20, Vespa, 177K), citing the Washington Examiner, reports, "A new poll conducted shortly before the death of Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg revealed that an overwhelming majority of U.S. adults of all political stripes supported holding hearings for a nominee if a vacancy opened on the nation's highest bench." The poll "showed 67% of adults believed the Senate should hold a hearing if a vacancy occurred during 2020's race, with only 32% opposition — and similar strong numbers across Republicans, Democrats, and independents, who supported holding confirmation hearings at 68-31%, 63-37%, and 71-28% respectively."

Rivkin, Grossman: Voters Have Already Shown Their Views On Trump's Judicial Nominees. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/19, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), David B. Rivkin Jr., who served at the Justice Department and the White House Counsel's Office, and Andrew M. Grossman, an adjunct scholar at the Cato Institute, write that history shows that filling a vacancy on the Supreme Court does not hinge on the electoral calendar. Moreover, in their view, voters in 2016 and 2018 made clear that they back President Trump's court nominees and their judicial philosophies, which means that the party in power has the mandate to exercise their constitutional power to fill the seat.

Democrats See Record-Breaking Fundraising Following Ginsburg's Death.

The Hill (9/20, Wilson, 2.98M) reports, "The most prolific online fundraising platform for Democratic candidates and causes said Sunday morning that donors had contributed more than $91 million in the 28 hours after the Supreme Court announced that Associate Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg had died." ActBlue said the passing of Ginsburg's had "led to an unprecedented surge of donations to progressive groups." Donors contributed "$6.3 million in just one hour late Friday and $70.6 million on Saturday, the platform said, both records for their respective time periods."

Ocasio-Cortez To Democrats: "There's No Going Back To Brunch" After Election.

The New York Post (9/20, Sheehy, 4.57M) reports Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) is warning Democrats "not to get complacent over any potential White House win." In an online post marking the death of Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg on Friday, Ocasio-Cortez said, "After we work to command victory in November, I need folks to realize that there's no going back to brunch." She said, "We have a whole new world to build. We cannot accept going back to the way things were, and that includes the Dem Party."

Fox News (9/19, Stimson, 27.59M) reports Ocasio-Cortez "feverishly took to her social media accounts following Ginsburg's death from cancer Friday to implore progressives that this election is 'about survival.'" She said, "Voting for Joe Biden is not about whether you agree with him. It's a vote to let our democracy live another day."

Thousands Gather Outside Supreme Court To Honor Ginsburg.

NBC Nightly News (9/20, story 2, 0:55, Snow, 5.27M) Pete Williams reported, "Thousands of people gathered Saturday night outside the Supreme Court, spilling into the street to honor and remember Justice [Ruth Bader] Ginsburg, with similar scenes around the country all weekend long." House Speaker Pelosi "brought flowers to the court steps today, among hundreds to say good-bye." Williams added, "Nothing official has been announced yet, but Justice Ginsburg will most likely lay in repose at the court later this week, as happened four years ago after Justice Scalia died, with a chance for the public to pay tribute."

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 2, 2:40, Llamas, 5.41M) reported Ginsburg is being "remembered as a fierce advocate, and an inspiration to generations of women." ABC's Stephanie Ramos added, "But it was her friendships with conservatives like late Justice Antonin Scalia that made her a shining model of civility and decency." Ramos continued, "Though they rarely agreed on the issues, Scalia's son recalling his father's words. 'Some things in life are more important than votes.'"

On the CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 13, 2:45, Garrett, 875K), Rita Braver remembered Ginsburg. Braver said, "She had heart and determination. She cared about what happened to people. And the world began to notice. So we cheered her workouts. We were awed at how she would go get cancer treatments and return to the office. But most of all, we were moved by the power of her convictions and her words."

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 11, 1:45, Llamas, 5.41M) remembered Ginsburg in her own words. Ginsburg is shown saying, "Because I'm a public figure, I could help make things a little better for people who were in my situation. Fight for the things you care about. But do it in a way that will lead others to join you." Ginsburg is also shown saying, "If you want to be a true professional, you will do something outside yourself, something to make life a little better for people less fortunate than you. A meaningful life is, one lives not just for oneself, but for one's community."

Douthat: Fight Over Replacing Ginsburg Threatens To Derail US Democracy.

In his column for the New York Times (9/20, 18.61M), Ross Douthat warns that "in a country that's already polarized, maddened, suffused with hysteria," if "someone – which means some Republicans, at the moment, because the power is in their hands – doesn't find a way to de-escalate, to concede some ground, then the court and even the Constitution could be in the gravest sort of peril." Without naming him, Douthat suggests that Sen. Mitt Romney (R-UT) should push for "a better system, a decisive change in judicial appointments and a step back from juristocracy." Possible reforms for the Supreme Court could include "shorter terms, rotating appointments, a larger bench appointed by bipartisan committee." But in the end, Douthat concludes that "if the person nominated seems like a better choice to be entrusted with that power, then despite all the atmospherics, there's a clear case for voting yes."

WSJournal: Democrats Have History Of Repeatedly Breaking Judicial Norms.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) traces how Democrats have broken judicial norms in recent history, from the fight over Bork's nomination to the filibuster rule. The Journal argues that Republicans should not cower from Democrats' threats to pack the court, but should put the issue front and center this campaign season.

Trump: Democrats, Media Denigrating Vaccine To Hurt Reelection Chances.

President Trump, in an interview with Fox News Life, Liberty & Levin (9/18), was asked why Democrats and the media seem hostile to efforts to develop a vaccine. Trump said, "They want to denigrate it. This started about three weeks ago because they started having, hearing rumors that we would have this vaccine in super record time. ... The reason they're doing that is because they think I will get credit if we have a vaccine anywhere near the election but certainly before the election. ... They're trying to make it not a big deal when actually it's one of the greatest things that anyone has done. ... They have done in record time. If this were a typical administration, this vaccine wouldn't be ready for two or three years because of the FDA process. I have totally changed the FDA process. Same safety, but the speed is from a different world and we should have the vaccine approved very soon."

HHS Officials Offer More Conservative Vaccine Timeline. The New York Times (9/20, Gorman, 18.61M) reports that "top administration health officials on Sunday delicately sidestepped President Trump's ambitious declaration last week that a coronavirus vaccine would be available for every American by April." Instead, Adm. Brett P. Giroir, "who heads up national testing efforts," and HHS Secretary Azar "offered a slightly more conservative timetable for vaccine availability." On CNN's "State of the Union," Giroir said, "In front of the Senate, Dr. Redfield and I both said that a vaccine that would be widely available in hundreds of millions of doses would not likely happen until mid-2021. That is a fact." However, he also said the President was correct in saying that "we could have as many as a hundred million doses by the end of this year. That is correct. I think everybody is right."

Former FDA Chiefs: Vaccine Approval Process Can Be Trusted. Former FDA commissioners Scott Gottlieb and Mark McClellan write in the Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) that the health agency's thorough and transparent approval process for a potential coronavirus vaccine won't be compromised and the public should be reassured.

HHS Officials Tout Decline In Cases, Deaths.

HHS Secretary Azar said on NBC's Meet the Press (9/20, 1.58M), "We've seen an almost 50 percent decline in cases and 50 percent declines in hospitalizations and an even greater decline in fatalities since the high point. So the American people have stepped up to the plate and responded to President Trump's and my call to action to individual responsibility."

Politico (9/20, Weaver, 4.29M) reports HHS "testing czar" Brett Giroir said Sunday that progress is being made on many fronts against the virus. On CNN's State Of The Union, Giroir said, "From the peaks in early July and late July, the number of cases are down by 41 percent. The number of people in an ICU are down 62 percent. The number of deaths are down almost 30 percent. But we have to stay strong and do the things that could decrease the spread."

US Death Toll Hits 200,000. All three networks Sunday night reported on the US reaching the 200,000 death milestone and profiled some victims of the virus. The CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 3, 1:40, Garrett, 875K) reported, "As a nation, we are confronting a new milestone in the COVID-19 pandemic. There have been 6.8 million cases here, and by some counts, we have reached 200,000 deaths."

Calling it "a heartbreaking milestone," ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 3, 2:50, Llamas, 5.41M) reported, "The death toll nearly doubling in just 116 days. And almost seven months into the pandemic, the infection rate remains at nearly five percent, with hospitalizations rising in 16 states, Washington, DC, and Puerto Rico. Health experts very concerned heading into the fall." NBC Nightly News (9/20, story 4, 2:55, Snow, 5.27M) reported, "This weekend we surpassed 200,000 Americans who lost their lives to coronavirus, and each person was so much more than a number."

US Sets Record With More Than 1M Tests Conducted In One Day.

Reuters (9/20, Shumaker) reports the US "set a one-day record with over 1 million coronavirus diagnostic tests being performed, but the country needs 6 million to 10 million a day to bring outbreaks under control." The US "performed 1,061,411 tests on Saturday, according to data from The COVID Tracking Project, a volunteer-run effort to track the outbreak."

Scientists: 60%-70% Infection Rate Needed To Reach Herd Immunity.

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Abbott, Douglas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports public-health authorities estimate that around 60% to 70% of a given population would need to develop an immune response to the virus in order reach herd immunity for Covid-19. Infectious-disease experts strongly warn against trying to reach herd immunity without a vaccine because it would lead to a staggering death toll.

Whitmer: Barr Comments Comparing Lockdowns To Slavery An “Unhinged Distraction.”

The Detroit News (9/20, 825K) reports Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D) on Sunday called comments last week from Attorney General Barr comparing lockdowns to slavery “unhinged” and accused the Administration of stoking “dangerous instincts” during an interview with Showtime’s “The Circus.” Said Whitmer, “This is another unhinged distraction, and it’s deeply disturbing that our chief law enforcement officer is propagating it.” She added, “I guess that they’re not above using any tactic to try to either scare people, suppress the vote or inspire maybe some dangerous instincts that they’ve been stoking.”

College Professor Suspended After Wishing Coronavirus Death For Trump Supporters.

Fox News (9/20, Stimson, 27.59M) reports on its website that a professor at Marshall University in West Virginia was suspended last week “after allegedly saying she hoped President Trump’s supporters would all die from the coronavirus, according to reports.” Professor Jennifer Mosher reportedly said while talking to students, “I’ve become the type of person where I hope they all get it and die.” A student reportedly recorded what Mosher and posted it on social media, prompting her suspension.

Trump: Democrats To Blame For Unrest In Cities.

Offering his thoughts on law and order during an interview on Life Liberty & Levin on Fox News (9/20), Trump said, “All of this crime, whether it’s Chicago or Portland, Portland’s different, that’s kind of an anarchy state. We could put that down so quickly. Minutes, literally minutes like we did in Minneapolis. What we did in Minneapolis was incredible with the national guard. We sent them in. They had that thing put out in the half hour. It was the end of it. It was over in a half hour. Portland would be easier. We could do that so fast. We did it in Seattle by saying were going in the next morning and everyone cleared out and essentially they cleared out because they knew we were going in the next morning. I said were going in, I don’t care. Everyone of those cities is run by Democrats.”

New York AG Moves To Expedite Release Of Police Body Cam Footage.

The AP (9/20) reports New York Attorney General Letitia James “promised Sunday to expedite the release of body camera footage in cases of alleged police misconduct that her office investigates.” Speaking in Rochester, “which has been in turmoil since the footage of Daniel Prude’s fatal encounter with police was released more than five months after his death,” James said her office “will be proactively releasing footage to the public on our own.” According to the AP, it was “unclear how many cases would be affected by the policy, since the attorney general’s office does not review all footage of police interactions with the public.”

Former Officers, Residents Say Longstanding Tensions Fueled Protests In Kenosha.

The Washington Post (9/20, Klemko, 14.2M) reports that “as in other cities rocked by police shootings this summer, simmering tensions between local residents and law enforcement” in Kenosha, Wisconsin, “fueled the explosion of violence that followed the Aug. 23” police shooting of Jacob Blake. In dozens of interviews, “Kenosha residents, community activists, former officials and six current and former Kenosha police officers described a police culture bereft of diversity, tolerant of excessive force and determined to cover up for its own.” The Post notes that “of more than 200 officers on the force, only eight are Black.” While most said the department “is populated with mostly good cops...police officials tolerate a subset of officers who lack the racial sensitivity and cultural knowledge to effectively police minority communities and allow their biases to play out in the street.”

Rubio: FBI Was Warned By Intelligence Community Not To Rely On Steele Dossier.

The Washington Examiner (9/20, Dunleavy, 448K) reports Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) “said every intelligence agency warned the FBI not to rely on the ‘ridiculous things’ in British ex-spy Christopher Steele’s discredited dossier.” Rubio “criticized the bureau during an appearance on Sunday Morning Futures on Fox News, noting that the intelligence community warned the FBI the dossier might contain Russian disinformation.” Rubio “told the show’s host, Fox Business anchor Maria Bartiromo, that he believes the actions taken by some in the FBI were criminal, and that there was likely more wrongdoing that has not yet been made public.”

Rubio, on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/20, 1.67M), said, “Our Russia report makes it very clear that the FBI behaved very poorly with the things they did in the 2016 and the aftermath of that election. We pointed out those things. For example, the reliance on the dossier that the intelligence community, including the CIA, told the FBI not to use those documents because they weren’t reliable. Every single one of the intelligence agencies separate from the FBI said that the dossier was not the kind of document they should be relying on, we shouldn’t even be talking about it, because it could very well be something the Russians completely made up and put out there and so the information in order to create all sorts of havoc. The implications here are frightening and that is you could go and hire some former spy, make up stories, put it in this document, and get someone in the US government to put the official seal of approval on it.”

Jordan: Comey Testimony “Key” To Answering Questions About Russia Probe.

The Washington Examiner (9/20, Soellner, 448K) reports, "Former FBI Director Jim Comey is 'at the center' of the so-called Russiagate controversy," according to Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH). During an interview on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures, Jordan "talked about his expectations for Comey's appearance before the Senate Judiciary Committee scheduled for Sept. 30." He said, "I think Jim Comey's been at the center of all this. He's in every important meeting. He was the guy who went from one administration to the other. He's the one who designed the cover-up. He's the one who pushed when leaked his memos to get Bob Mueller, the special counsel appointed, which, in fact, happened. The very people on that team wiped their phones, as you just indicated. So, Comey is the key to all this. I'm glad he's coming in. I'm sure he's going to get some tough questions."

At Least 30 People Shot Over Weekend In Chicago.

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 10, 0:20, Llamas, 5.41M) reported that "at least 30 people have been shot, and at least three people killed" over the weekend in Chicago, according to police. Shootings and homicides are "up more than 50 percent there compared to this time last year."

Tropical Storm Beta Headed Toward Texas And Louisiana.

The CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 6, 0:10, Garrett, 875K) reported, "Tropical Storm Beta is slowly making its way towards Texas and Louisiana." ABC World News Tonight's (9/20, story 6, 0:40, Llamas, 5.41M) Rob Marciano reported that it "should make landfall tomorrow afternoon somewhere around Victoria." ABC World News Tonight's (9/20, story 5, 1:20, Llamas, 5.41M) Elwyn Lopez reported "the slow-moving storm" is "set to hit parts of Texas and Louisiana with 60-mile-per-hour winds and up to 15 inches of rain." Lopez added, "The main concern is flash flooding inland."

The AP (9/20, Lozano) reports Beta was "no longer expected to reach hurricane intensity, the National Weather Service said Sunday." Forecasters said the storm was "not expected to bring the same amount of rainfall that Texas experienced during either Hurricane Harvey in 2017 or Tropical Storm Imelda last year."

USA Today (9/20, Bacon, Falcon, 10.31M) reports that Beta would be "the ninth system to make landfall in the United States this season, tying a record set more than 100 years ago." The storm's "slow advancement – it was moving at just 5 mph Sunday afternoon – follows a recurring theme in storms this season: slow movers that can stall over an area and dump a foot or more of rain."

WPost Feature Compares Reopening Strategies At Two US Colleges.

The Washington Post (9/20, Anderson, Svrluga, Lumpkin, Douglas-Gabriel, Heim, 14.2M) compares the reopening plans this fall at Gettysburg College, a private liberal arts college of 2,200 students, and Arizona State University, a public university of 74,000 students. While Gettysburg "sent more than half its students home this month after infections were found to be spreading at an alarming rate," ASU "kept its teaching and housing plans intact while it conducted tens of thousands of viral tests of students and employees."

Trump: Mail-in Ballots A Recipe For Chaos, Fraud.

When asked about mail-in ballots during an interview with Fox News Life, Liberty & Levin (9/21), President Trump said, "Look, they know it doesn't work because there's been many races using this over the last 14 or 15 months. I heard there was one yesterday or the day before yesterday that the ballots are so mixed up they have millions of ballots going out on little races like in New York or Paterson, NJ or Virginia or many other locations and were now finding out about the one from over the past couple days. Were talking about numbers like 30 percent and 40 percent off. Were not talking one percent which is two months because you can lose by one percent. One percent is a lot, but they're off by 30, 40 percent sometimes. Ballots are missing, there's fraud, now there's a new thing where they don't want to verify signatures because that makes it easy so you don't have to verify measures."

Some Voter Rolls Haven't Been Updated To Remove Non-Citizens. The Washington Times (9/20, Dinan, 492K) reports that "some local rolls haven't been cleansed of illegitimate voters, creating opportunities for fraudulent ballots to be cast." Federal prosecutors in North Carolina "last week announced charges against 19 more people they said weren't citizens yet cast votes in the 2016 election. Of those, 12 have been removed from voter rolls, according to state records." Meanwhile, "liberal activists have said prosecutors are turning honest mistakes into federal crimes."

Trump Decries Unfair Treatment By Media.

When asked about the media's treatment of him during an interview with Mark Levin on Fox News (9/21), President Trump said, "I've done things possibly much more significant and they don't give credit. The Washington Post is a disaster, you can't get a good story, it's disgusting, and then you go to ABC, NBC probably is the worst of all, Comcast, they call it Comcast. It's not Comcast, it's a con job. They tried to protect their name. CBS is a disaster, then they go to the real beauties at MSNBC as we call it and CNN and at least at CNN you know where there coming from, you know they are stone cold dishonest, at least you know that. It's a sad thing. It's a very sad thing." Trump continued, "Fortunately local press is extremely good." Trump added, "Fox is good, but Fox is not what it is, I'll be very honest with you. They've become politically correct."

Trump: “Sad” Biden Can’t Answer Questions Without Teleprompters.

On Life Liberty & Levin on Fox News (9/20), President Trump was asked why Joe Biden hasn’t criticized the policies that have led to so many people dying in nursing homes. Trump said, “You know it and I know it, Joe doesn’t know if he’s alive. If you asked him that question without teleprompters, I don’t think he could answer the question. It’s a sad thing that’s going on. The whole thing is a sad thing. You said it before, the Harris Biden administration. Who would ever say such a thing. I’ve been here for quite a while now, almost four years if you can believe it. I never said the Mike Pence Trump administration. Who would say that. You would think it’s impossible unless there’s something wrong. It was compounded when she goes out and she’s always putting her name first. She is the most liberal person in the Senate. We have the most liberal person in the Senate so it’s a sad thing that’s going on, and hopefully we will have a big victory and I think when we have the victory it will calm down because they’re getting tired of losing.”

Trump: Biden “Went Left” With Economic Policies.

On Life Liberty & Levin on Fox News (9/20), President Trump was asked about Joe Biden’s economic policies, Trump said, “That’s the agreement that Bernie Sanders and the AOC and all these people made with Sleepy Joe Biden. Now I thought it would be their view and then you’re going to go right or toward the center, at least that’s the way it would normally work but it didn’t. It’s their view and it went left. Bernie never said half the things, that’s far left, I’ve heard Bernie for a long time, Crazy Bernie and I heard what he said, but that manifesto that Biden agreed to is a disaster what they have.”

Trump: “I Love The Military And I Respect The Military.”

On Life Liberty & Levin on Fox News (9/20), President Trump was asked about his alleged comments about the military. Trump said, “It’s full of lies. The worst lie of all is that I’m feeling over the grave of soldiers from many years ago, warriors of many years ago, who I cherish, I’m very strong on the military. I love the military and I respect the military, and they made up ally that I called them suckers and losers. It was made up by this stupid magazine the Atlantic, which I don’t read and most other people don’t read it either, and they picked that up and we disputed it. We have so far 27 people who said it never happened. Twenty-seven. They have no people. They haven’t one source. They end up taking that and making a television commercial out of it. It was very sad to see that we can take something like that which is a total lie, which was very successfully disputed and they make a television commercial out of it and I can’t do anything from the standpoint of liable because our liable laws are so pathetic.”

Trump: Forest Mismanagement To Blame For Wildfires.

President Trump offered his thoughts on wildfires during an interview on Life Liberty & Levin on Fox News (9/20). He said, “I just left California and met with the governor and he, and honestly he’s been very nice and that’s good, but I said you’ve got to manage this. It’s a management thing. He said no it’s global warming. I said when the leaves build up and you have a floor of leaves and the trees fall down and you don’t remove them because the environmental group doesn’t want you to touch the tree, within 18 months that tree becomes like him matchstick and is unbelievably flammable. I meet with foreign leaders and they say we are if forest nation but we have trees that are far more explosive than the trees in California. We don’t understand how a thing like that can happen. You have to manage your forest. They have to do cuts. They have to do cuts in between sections so if there’s a forest over – a fire over here it doesn’t burn down 5000 acres because you have a cut and they water that cut very strongly and the fire can’t go, it’s the width of a football field or less because you have cuts but they don’t do that because the environmentalists don’t want them to do it.”

Six Accused Of Setting Blazes In Oregon Amid Wildfire Season. The New York Post (9/20, Salo, 4.57M) reports, “At least six men in Oregon have been accused of intentionally setting blazes during the state’s devastating wildfire season, according to a report.” There is no evidence that the accused were “motivated by politics, despite conspiracies that such an animus has fueled the fires that have burned more than a million acres.” Instead, officials said, “some of the blazes were attributed to petty beef, relationship troubles and enjoying the ‘smell of smoke.’”

On the CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 5, 1:20, Garrett, 875K), Lilia Luciano reported that in Oregon, “where the death toll is now nine with five people still missing, firefighters are getting a handle on the historic fires, that scorched more than a million acres and destroyed more than 3,000 structures.”

California’s Bobcat Wildfire Burns Nearly 100,000 Acres. ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 7, 1:30, Llamas, 5.41M) reported that with “California’s Bobcat Fire exploding in size,” fire officials “say it could be more than a month before the fire is completely contained.” ABC’s Zohreen Shah added, “Multiple aircraft called in to drop retardant, but that fire growing overnight to nearly 100,000 acres.” Shah continued, “But rain later this week could bring more landslides to the burnt-out terrain.... Fire officials say the earliest they expect full containment is by the end of next month.”

Trump Tells CNBC Host Cramer To “Stay With The Truth” After “Crazy Nancy” Apology.

The New York Post (9/20, Moore, 4.57M) reports, “President Trump on Sunday renewed his attacks on Jim Cramer after the CNBC host apologized for referring to House Speaker Nancy Pelosi as ‘Crazy Nancy’ during an interview last week.” Trump said on Twitter (9/20, 16.75M), “Jim, to late to take it back. Stay with the truth, no pandering!”

Woodward: 20% Of New Book Consists Of Quotes From Trump.

Bob Woodward, on CNN's Fareed Zakaria GPS (9/20, 915K), discussed his book on President Trump. Woodward said, "He knew I wasn't going to put words in his mouth. I would let him have his say. I think almost 20 percent of the book is quoting him. Trump said just a couple of days ago, he said some great things in this book. That's because I let him put his case forward on all of these issues. I promised to do that. I went into the Oval Office...plunked down my tape recorder and said, this is all on the record for a book that will come out in September/October. That was my demarcation line."

Trump Campaign Increases Focus On Pennsylvania.

Axios (9/20, Treene, 521K) reports President Trump's campaign is "placing more importance on Pennsylvania amid growing concern that his chances of clinching Wisconsin are slipping. Trump campaign sources tell Axios." Pennsylvania "actually has been trending higher in recent public and internal polling, a welcome development for the campaign." A Trump campaign adviser said, "We used to think Pennsylvania would be harder to secure and Wisconsin was in the bag. Now it's vice versa."

Republicans Outnumber Democrats At Biden Event In Minnesota.

The Washington Examiner (9/20, Lim, 448K) reports, "Democrats are concerned that a groundswell of support for President Trump outside of Minnesota's Twin Cities may be enough to win him the state over 2020 Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden." Biden "visited carpenter apprentices and other union workers near Duluth on Friday, his first trip to Minnesota in more than 1,000 days, according to the Trump campaign." However, "Republicans outnumbered Democrats at Hermantown's Jerry Alander Carpenter Training Center, worrying those who are opposed to Trump clinching a second term on Nov. 3."

Poll: Biden Leads Trump By Eight Points Nationally.

The Hill (9/20, Balluck, 2.98M) reports, "Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden holds an 8-point lead over President Trump among registered voters, according to a new national poll." The NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll "released early Sunday showed Biden leading Trump, 51 to 43 percent." Biden is currently leading with "Black voters, voters ages 18-34, women, white voters, independents and seniors, pollsters noted, while Trump has advantages among white voters, men, and white voters without college degrees."

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Leary, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Biden outperforms Trump on voters' perceptions, with negative views of Biden outweighing positive ones by 2 percentage points, while negative views of Trump outweigh positive ones by 11 points. While 47% of voters say there is no chance they will support Trump, 38% say that of Biden.

Poll: Biden Leads Trump By Two Points In Florida.

The Hill (9/20, Klar, 2.98M) reports Democratic nominee Joe Biden leads President Trump 48% to 46% among likely voters in Florida, according to a CBS News poll released Sunday. Biden's lead is within the poll's 3.7-percentage-point margin of error. The poll also "found that an additional 5 percent of likely voters said they are 'not sure' who they would vote for and 1 percent said they would vote for someone else."

Sen. Rubio Expects Close Race In Florida. Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL), on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/20, 1.67M), discussed his expectations for the election in Florida. Rubio said, "I could save people a lot of money on polling. Florida is a one-point state, half a point state, in one direction or another it's close, that's where it's going to wind up. I actually feel pretty good for the President's chances here. He's over-performing in areas like southern Florida where traditionally he's going to lose like Miami-Dade county. It's a big Democratic county where down where my home is, but he's going to lose by less than he did in 2016 and narrow margins and just be as strong if not stronger in other parts of the state so I feel pretty good about the trend lines for the President and you know, in Florida, but it'll be a close race."

Poll: Trump Up By Two Points In Texas.

The Hill (9/20, Klar, 2.98M) reports President Trump leads Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden 48% to 46%, according to a CBS News poll released Sunday. Trump's lead is within the poll's 3.5 percentage point margin of error. Trump "built on his slim lead over Biden, adding to his 1-point lead over the former vice president in a similar poll from July, according to CBS."

Catholic Vote Split, But More Devoted Favor Trump.

The Washington Times (9/20, Richardson, 492K) reports Catholic voters are "split on the 2020 candidates, even though" Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden is "a lifelong Mass-attending Catholic," and President Trump is a Presbyterian. While Biden is "known for his regular church attendance – he and his wife Jill Biden worship at St. Joseph on the Brandywine in Greenville, Delaware – polls show his supporters within the church tend to be less fastidious in their Sunday habits." EWTN executive editor Matthew Bunson said, "The more you go to Mass and the more you self-describe as following the church's teachings, the more likely you are to be voting for Trump. If you go to Mass less often and disagree with key teachings, you're more likely to support Biden."

Biden Holds Fundraising Advantage Of About $141M Over Trump.

The New York Times (9/20, Goldmacher, 18.61M) reports, "Joseph R. Biden Jr.'s campaign said on Sunday that it entered September with $466 million in the bank together with the Democratic Party, providing Mr. Biden a vast financial advantage of about $141 million over President Trump heading into the intense final stretch of the campaign." The fundraising "edge is a complete reversal from this spring, when Mr. Biden emerged as the Democratic nominee and was $187 million behind Mr. Trump, who began raising money for his re-election shortly after he was inaugurated in 2017." However, "the combination of slower spending by Mr. Biden's campaign in the spring, his record-setting fund-raising over the summer – especially after he named Senator Kamala Harris of California as his running mate – and heavy early spending by Mr. Trump has erased the president's once-formidable financial lead."

Woodward Discusses Upcoming Book On President Trump.

Bob Woodward, on CNN's Fareed Zakaria GPS (9/20, 915K), discussed his book on President Trump. Woodward said, "He knew I wasn't going to put words in his mouth. I would let him have his say. I think almost 20 percent of the book is quoting him. Trump said just a couple of days ago, he said some great things in this book. That's because I let him put his case forward on all of these issues. I promised to do that. I went into the oval office...plunked down my tape recorder and said, this is all on the record for a book that will come out in September/October. That was my demarcation line. ... An extraordinary opportunity for a reporter book author because I could prepare questions, I could think about what was going on. In May when George Floyd was killed and there erupted a very significant movement for racial justice, black lives matter, I was able to talk to Trump directly about that."

NYTimes' Smith: Trump A "Creation" Of Cable News.

In his column for the New York Times (9/20, 18.61M), Ben Smith writes that the "story" of President Trump and CNN President Jeff Zucker is "a kind of Frankenstein tale for the late television age, about a brilliant TV executive who lost control of his creation." Smith says there are "two distinct theories of what is going on now: One is the current version of CNN – amped up outrage and righteousness – is just Mr. Zucker's latest reflexive adaptation in search of ratings." The other theory is "that Mr. Zucker, TV's Dr. Frankenstein, has been willing to dent his network's nonpartisan brand in order to kill his runaway monster, Mr. Trump." Smith concludes that if Trump "loses in November, that may also mark the end of this era of cable television, which he had fed and fed off, and which has left its audience divided and exhausted."

Woman Suspected Of Sending Ricin Letter To Trump Arrested.

The CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 8, 0:15, Garrett, 875K) reported, "An envelope containing the lethal poison Ricin has been intercepted in the White House mail at a government facility away from the executive mansion." The letter was "addressed to President Trump and appeared to come from Canada."

NBC News (9/20, 6.14M) reports, "A suspect who allegedly sent a letter containing the deadly poison ricin to the White House was detained trying to enter the United States from Canada, a federal law enforcement official said Sunday." CNN (9/20, Perez, Correspondent, 83.16M) reports, "The woman was carrying a gun and arrested by US authorities, according to the law enforcement official."

The New York Times (9/20, Benner, 18.61M) reports, "No links to any international terrorist groups have been found, according to two law enforcement officials."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.8%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.8%, and his disapproval at 53.7%. The President's approval is unchanged since yesterday; his disapproval is down by 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (9/15-9/17) finds Trump's approval at 53%, and his disapproval at 46%.

ECB May Lift Bank Dividend Ban Early Next Year.

Bloomberg (9/18, Comfort, 4.73M) reported European bank regulators "are moving closer to lifting a de-facto ban" on dividend payments at the beginning of 2021, according to people familiar with the matter. Several members of the European Central Bank's supervisory board "see further extensions of the ban doing more harm than good, the people said." The ECB earlier this year asked banks not to pay dividends to conserve capital and continue lending amid the pandemic.

ECB's Liquidity Injections To Raise Excess Cash To Record Level.

Bloomberg (9/19, Hirai, 4.73M) reports the European Central Bank's planned ultra-cheap liquidity injections this week "may raise the amount of excess cash sloshing around the euro area above 3 trillion euros ($3.6 trillion) for the first time." The ECB on Thursday "will disburse its latest round of loans with interest rates as low as minus 1%." In anticipation of the extra liquidity, funding costs have fallen, with the three-month Euribor dropping "to a record low of minus 0.504% Friday."

Bank Of England Upends Market Expectations With Comments On Negative Rates.

Many Nations Seeing Rise In Cases As Global Death Toll Nears 1M.

The New York Times (9/20, A1, Romero, Fernandez, Santora, 18.61M) reports in what it calls "a staggering toll, almost 200,000 people dead from the coronavirus in the United States, and nearly five times that many — close to one million people — around the world. And the pandemic, which sent cases spiking skyward in many countries and then trending downward after lockdowns, has reached a precarious point." In the US, "fewer new coronavirus cases have been detected week by week since late July," but "in recent days, the nation's daily count of new cases is climbing again, fueling worries of a resurgence." Around the world, "at least 73 countries are seeing surges in newly detected cases, and worries are fast mounting."

Sweden Spared Surge Of Cases As Europe Sees Second Wave.

The AP (9/20, Keyton) reports that "when most of Europe locked down their populations early in the pandemic ..Swedes kept enjoying many freedoms. The relatively low-key strategy captured the world's attention, but at the same time it coincided with a per capita death rate that was much higher than in other Nordic countries." Now, "as infection numbers surge again in much of Europe, the country of 10 million people has some of the lowest numbers of new coronavirus cases." The AP says "whether Sweden's strategy is succeeding, however, is still very uncertain."

Health Minister Warns Britain At Tipping Point.

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 4, 0:30, Llamas, 5.41M) reported that amid "a possible second wave hitting Europe...the UK may be on the brink of another strict lockdown." ABC (Trevor Ault) added, "Prime Minister Boris Johnson says he doesn't want another lockdown, but British officials will meet to discuss potentially major restrictions."

Reuters (9/20, James) reports, "Britain is at a tipping point on COVID-19, health minister Matt Hancock said on Sunday, warning that a second national lockdown could be imposed if people don't follow government rules designed to stop the spread of the virus." COVID-19 cases have "risen sharply in recent weeks to more than 4,000 per day, with Prime Minister Boris Johnson calling it a second wave and stricter lockdown measures being introduced in areas across the country." Hancock told Sky News, "The nation faces a tipping point and we have a choice. The choice is either that everybody follows the rules...or we will have to take more measures."

On the CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 4, 1:35, Garrett, 875K), Elizabeth Palmer reported, "Europe is bracing for its second wave," but nations "want to avoid going back to a full lockdown so they're experimenting with a whole series of half measures."

Amid Pandemic, Cuba Struggling With Food Crisis.

The New York Times (9/20, Augustin, Robles, 18.61M) reports Cuba "was able to quickly control the coronavirus, even as the pandemic threw wealthier nations into crisis. But its economy, already hurting from crippling US sanctions and mismanagement, was particularly vulnerable" and the nation plunged "into one the worst food shortages in nearly 25 years." According to the Times, "what food is available is often found only in government-run stores that are stocked with imports and charge in dollars."

Bill Gates: Vaccine Must Be Available To Everyone, "Not Just For The Rich Countries."

In a prerecorded interview on Fox News Sunday (9/20, 1.19M), Bill Gates discussed his foundation's efforts to combat the coronavirus. Gates said, "We're helping seed some R&D money very quickly for the best vaccine approaches, and then making sure that, when we get a vaccine, it's not just for the rich countries." He added that eradicating the pandemic worldwide will help ensure "that the pandemic isn't just constantly coming back to the United States. So vaccine has been the biggest part and of course we are going to give more. By the time we get this all organized I'm sure we will be well over a billion dollars."

Chinese TV Drama On Virus Draws Ire Over Its Depiction Of Women During Pandemic.

The New York Times (9/20, Wang, 18.61M) reports, "The scene came seven minutes into a new Chinese-government-sponsored television drama, so short that it would have been easy to miss: The head of a bus company in Wuhan...asks his drivers if they are willing to make emergency runs during the city's lockdown. A line of volunteers forms," but "none are women." The Times says "that roughly minute-long clip has set off a furor on Chinese social media," where "users have called the scene — in which the official then asks why no women have stepped up — a flagrant example of sexism in Chinese society and an attempt to erase female contributions to the fight against the virus."

Trump: Iran Deal Was A Disaster.

During an interview on Fox News' Life, Liberty & Levin (9/20), President Trump said, "The Iran deal was a disaster. With the Iran deal you could have never done these deals because the deal gave $150 billion plus in cash. People can't even imagine. They did such a bad deal. They were so bad. John Kerry was so inapt, so incompetent. He negotiated a deal, they won every point. He would never get up and leave. Sometimes you have to get up and leave. You know that better than anybody. Sometimes you have to say I'm sorry, we can't make a deal, goodbye and they will call you back because we have all the cards."

Rouhani Dismisses US Efforts To Reimpose UN Sanctions.

The AP (9/20, Vahdat) reports Iranian President Hassan Rouhani "dismissed US efforts to restore all UN sanctions on the country as mounting economic pressure from Washington pushed the local currency down to its lowest level ever on Sunday." Iran's currency "has lost more than 30% of its value to the dollar since June." Still, Rouhani "slammed the Trump Administration's declaration Saturday that all UN sanctions against Iran have been reimposed because Tehran is not complying with the nuclear deal." Said Rouhani, "If America uses its bullying...and does something in practice, it will have to face our decisive response."

UN Chief: No UN Support For Reimposing Sanctions Now. The AP (9/20, Lederer) reports Secretary-General Antonio Guterres "says the United Nations will not support reimposing sanctions on Iran as the United States is demanding until he gets a green light from the Security Council." In a letter to the council president obtained Sunday, Guterres wrote that "there would appear to be uncertainty" on whether or not Secretary of State Pompeo triggered the "snapback" mechanism in the 2015 nuclear deal. The AP says the Administration "declared Saturday that all UN sanctions against Iran have been restored, a move most of the rest of the world rejects as illegal and is likely to ignore."

The Washington Post (9/20, Morello, 14.2M) similarly says that "most of the world brushed off the US move and acted as if nothing had changed." To the Post, the US declaration Saturday "ushers in a new period of uncertainty and tension."

Secretary of State Pompeo, on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/20, 1.66M), said, "There would have been a whole lot more things that would have taken place, absent the UN Security Council resolutions coming back into effect last night. Air defense system, arms sales, all of those in a couple weeks would have been permitted to have been sold and the Europeans have not joined us in this. They know we're right. They tell us privately we don't want the arm sales to come back and they put it in the letter they are very concerned about these sales, but they haven't lifted a finger and done the work that needs to be done. ... I hope they will get to the right place. They are still wedded to this silly nuclear deal that was signed now five years ago."

The New York Times (9/20, 18.61M) editorializes that "in a stunning display of chutzpah, the Trump administration is now arguing that the United States is still part of the Iran deal" that it withdrew from two years ago. That, it argues, is "because it wants to use a provision in the deal to snap back global sanctions on Iran," and "only a party to the agreement can trigger a resumption of global sanctions."

Airstrike In Kills At Least 10 Afghan Civilians, 30 Taliban Amid Peace Talks.

The Washington Post (9/20, George, Hassan, 14.2M) reports that "while representatives of the Afghan government and the Taliban talk peace in Doha, the sides continue to launch deadly attacks in Afghanistan, leaving dozens dead." On Saturday, "at least 10 civilians and more than 30 Taliban fighters were killed in two airstrikes by Afghan government planes in the northern province of Kunduz, according to local officials." Elsewhere on Saturday, "two local officials, including a deputy police chief, were assassinated" in Paktika province. No one claimed responsibility, "but Afghan officials believe armed groups linked to the Taliban are behind a string of similar attacks."

US, UAE Officials To Hold Talks To Normalize Israeli-Sudanese Ties.

Barak Ravid reports for Axios (9/20, 521K) that US, Emirati and Sudanese officials will hold "a decisive meeting in Abu Dhabi on Monday on a possible normalization agreement between Sudan and Israel, Sudanese sources told me." According to the sources, "if the US and the United Arab Emirates accommodate Sudan's requests for economic aid, an announcement on a normalization agreement with Israel similar to the ones struck with the UAE and Bahrain could be made within days."

Secretary of State Pompeo said on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/20, 1.66M) of the recently signed Abraham Accords. "For three years, President Trump has taken a fundamentally different approach. The establishment Middle East policy was that you had to resolve the conflict between Israel and the Palestinians first. The President came to understand quickly that the real threat to these countries was the Islamic Republic of Iran, so we flipped the narrative. We worked to deliver a coalition to get the Gulf states to work together, to convince them that they could in fact work alongside and partner with and do commerce with the state of Israel and recognize them and that they'll be safer, their people will be more prosperous. Those are the central underpinnings and it then took action. It took principled action on behalf of President Trump and our administration to convince them that the Americans will be there."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Hopes Accords Will Boost Support Among Jews, Evangelicals. The New York Times (9/20, 18.61M) reports that the Trump campaign has "wasted little time cashing in" on last week's White House signing ceremony for new accords between Israel and two Arab states. Two days after the event, his campaign released "a slick, 30-second ad featuring footage from the ceremony and depicting Mr. Trump as a heroic peacemaker for bringing Israel into normalized relations with the United Arab Emirates and Bahrain." Trump allies say the deal "resonates particularly with Jewish Americans, who are a key voting bloc in the critical swing state of Florida, and evangelical Christians, who are fervent supporters of Israel and its broadest territorial claims."

O'Brien: Trump Takes Election Interference Seriously.

National Security Adviser O'Brien, writing in the Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), notes a recent report by Microsoft documenting efforts by China, Russia and Iran to undermine US election security and vows the Administration is working diligently to deter these threats.

Mass Protests Calling For Lukashenko's Resignation Continue.

Reuters (9/20) reports, "More than 100,000 people marched through Minsk on Sunday on the sixth straight weekend of protests against President Alexander Lukashenko, keeping up the pressure on the veteran Belarusian leader to quit." Also on Sunday, "anonymous hackers leaked the personal data of 1,000 police officers in retaliation for a crackdown in which thousands of people have been detained, many complaining of beatings and torture in jail." The AP (9/20, Karmanau) reports Ales Bialiatski, head of the Viasna human rights organization, "said dozens of demonstrators were arrested in Minsk and Grodno" on Sunday. The CBS Weekend News (9/20, story 9, 0:20, Garrett, 875K) also reported briefly on the protests.

The New York Times (9/20, Nechepurenko, 18.61M), meanwhile, reports that "members of the Wagner Group, a shadowy Russian mercenary force linked to an associate of President Vladimir V. Putin," showed in Belarus at the end of July. Not long after their arrival, "a heavily armed special unit of Belarus's top security agency, still called the K.G.B., stormed the resort late at night, dragging the Russians away in handcuffs." Belarusian state television "shared video footage of the raid," and Lukashenko, "who was facing a presidential election in less than two weeks, convened an emergency meeting of his top security officials, saying that the Russians were mercenaries with 'dirty aims.'" Days before the Aug. 9 vote, "Belarusian investigators accused the Russians of plotting to disrupt the election."

Former World Leaders Urge Ratification Of Nuclear Arms Ban Treaty.

The New York Times (9/20, Gladstone, 18.61M) reports, "Fifty-six former prime ministers, presidents, foreign ministers and defense ministers from 20 NATO countries, plus Japan and South Korea, released an open letter Sunday imploring their current leaders to join the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, the pact negotiated in 2017 that is now just six ratifications shy of the 50 needed to take effect." The letter asserted that the risks of nuclear-weapons use have escalated in recent years "whether by accident, miscalculation or design." To the Times, the letter "amounts to one of the highest-profile endorsements of the treaty since it was completed more than three years ago."

Fannie Mae's Radke Feels Digital Appraisals Aren't "A Blanket Solution For Everything."

National Mortgage News (9/18) reports the coronavirus made appraisers depend upon "technology more than ever before to get their work done safely, and its successful application demonstrated that more can be accomplished with appraisal automation than previously thought." However, National Mortgage News paraphrases Fannie Mae Director Of Collateral Policy Lyle Radke as having said during a conference panel on Thursday that "remote, homeowner-assisted appraisals may not be the best choice in all circumstances." Said Radke, "I don't think it's a blanket solution for everything."

Fannie Mae's Vergara A Finalist For Laurie A. Maggiano Legacy Award.

M Report (9/18, Williams) presents the finalists for its Laurie A. Maggiano Legacy Award, which "recognizes those women who through their tireless efforts, collaboration, and ingenuity have powerfully influenced the industry and homeownership nationwide." Among the finalists is Fannie Mae Director of Strategic Business Relationships Team Maria Vergara, whose "career has created a skillset that enables her to understand and respond to the financial and housing considerations of the multicultural consumer." M Report adds that Vergara "has helped numerous minority households achieve homeownership, enabling them to build a future of prosperity and economic stability." Vergara said, "September is Hispanic heritage month, where we celebrate the contributions of Hispanic Americans. I am privileged to work in this space and to continue to strive for racial equality for all Americans."

Government Mortgage Forbearance Totals Fall, Though Numbers For Private-Label Bailouts Increasing.

CNBC (9/18, Olick, 3.62M) reports that while the amount of individuals "in government Covid-19-related mortgage bailout programs is" falling, the number of individuals "in private-label or bank bailouts is rising." According to CNBC, "This suggests that there is still pain ahead in the mortgage market, as some borrowers are simply not recovering enough financially to afford their home loans." The amount "of mortgages in active forbearance programs, where borrowers delay their monthly payments for at least three months, declined by 26,000 last week or 0.7%, according to Black Knight." CNBC adds, "The government plan under the CARES Act, which includes borrowers with loans backed by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, FHA and VA (the vast majority of all loans), is designed as an initial three-month plan with potential three-month extensions up to a year."

HUD, GSEs Authorize Assistance For Homeowners Affected By Wildfires.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (9/18, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports the Department of Housing & Urban Development and the GSEs authorized assistance for areas affected by wildfires. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac indicated that borrowers are able to qualify for a decrease or deferral of mortgage payments for as long as 12 months.

Wall Street Residential Mortgages Not Looking So Good Amid Pandemic.

MarketWatch (9/18, Wiltermuth, 1.67M) reports Wall Street's foray into lending to homeowners whose credit is patchy isn't looking so good amid the coronavirus outbreak. Goldman Sachs indicates that delinquencies of residential mortgages packaged into non-public bond deals, or lacking government support, have, between January and July, increased from 4% to 18%. MarketWatch also says a number of real-estate investment trusts that began producing prime "jumbo" mortgages to package into mortgage bond deals faced less expensive competition from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

New Mortgages Pouring Into Bond Market.

Bankrate (9/18, Royal, 311K) reports that plummeting mortgage rates have resulted in "an explosion of home sales in 2020, and lenders have been absolutely inundated with applications as would-be homeowners try to take advantage of the record low rates." Bankrate adds that "those new mortgages" are "flooding into the bond market and investors are scooping them up." This might generate "an opportunity for investors looking for higher-than-Treasury yields." Bankrate also says that Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and Ginnie Mae "notched record monthly volume in August, creating nearly $322 billion in new bonds based on single-family mortgages, according to Inside Mortgage Finance."

HousingWire 2019 Tech Trendsetter Discusses How Pandemic Is Transforming Lenders.

HousingWire (9/18, 23K) features the edited transcript of an interview it conducted with FormFree Founder and CEO and HousingWire 2019 Tech Trendsetter Brent Chandler, who talked about how lenders are being changed by the pandemic. During the interview, Chandler said, "Coming from the frontlines of automated borrower verification, I can tell you that demand for our service has skyrocketed since the start of the pandemic. Lenders who had not previously taken advantage of programs that streamline borrower data verification acceptance, like Fannie Mae's Day 1 Certainty, Freddie Mac's asset and income modeler (AIM), the VA's Loan Guaranty Service and HUD's FHA and USDA's loan products, are now flocking to these programs."

Inquirer Analysis: Forthcoming Foreclosure Crisis Won't Be As Severe As "Financial Carnage Of 2008 To 2010."

An Inquirer (PA) (9/19, 347K) analysis says "the coronavirus recession is" almost sure to result in a sharp increase in foreclosures. A well known housing analyst anticipates that there will be "hundreds of thousands of defaults next year," while "the federal government predicts several billion dollars in loan losses at Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." Nonetheless, though, "this round of foreclosures should be mild in comparison to the financial carnage of 2008 to 2010." Ralph McLaughlin, chief economist at financial technology firm Haus, said, "We aren't thinking the housing market today is going to suffer anywhere near the catastrophe that it suffered during the Great Recession." The Inquirer adds that while the Federal Housing Finance Agency "says the coronavirus recession will cause loan losses at" Fannie and Freddie to increase by in excess of $4 billion, Fannie and Freddie "hold a combined $6 trillion in loans."

Mortgage Holders Losing Houses Could Mean Windfall For Investors In Rental Homes.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a decade of increasing home prices has resulted in the amassing by Americans mortgage holders of about $10 trillion in home equity. However, millions of those individuals are now late on mortgage payments and stand a chance of losing their homes. According to the Journal, this is a possible windfall for investors in rental homes.

Pandemic's Impact On New York City Small Businesses Has Resulted In Crisis For Landlords.

The New York Times (9/19, Zaveri, 18.61M) says that because of the pandemic, thousands of New York City "small businesses that are a staple of city life" can't "pay basics like rent." The result has been "an extraordinary crisis for landlords, who have lost tens of millions of dollars in income since the city's lockdown began in March, analysts said." The landlords are now faced with choosing between whether to "forgive or lower rent payments even as their own bills pile up, or hold firm and risk the prospect of losing a tenant who may not be replaced for months or even years."

Damos: New Stress Tests Shouldn't Heavily Worry Investors.

In a Wall Street Journal (9/18, Damos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) column, Telis Damos says that investors shouldn't feel heavy anxiety over the Federal Reserve's new stress tests for banks.

10-Year Yield Ticks Down.

MarketWatch (9/21, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.668 percent.

Dollar Slips.

Reuters (9/21) reports, "The dollar slipped and yen and yuan led Asia's currencies a little higher on Monday, as investors looked ahead to a slew of U.S. Federal Reserve speakers this week and to a decision on the inclusion of Chinese government bonds in a global index." The dollar index against a basket of six major currencies "dipped 0.2% to 92.779." The yen "rose about 0.3%...touching a seven-week peak of 104.27 per dollar." The euro "crept toward the top of ranges" it has "occupied for a couple of weeks," last trading "at $1.1867."

Gold Edges Higher.

Reuters (9/21, Anupa Soreng) reports, "Gold prices edged higher on Monday, helped by a weaker dollar while investors looked forward to speeches by Federal Reserve policymakers due this week for further clues on the U.S. central bank's approach to inflation." Spot gold "rose 0.2% to $1,952.59 per ounce by 0530 GMT," while US gold futures "inched 0.1% lower to $1,959.40."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (9/21, Jaganathan) reports, "Oil prices fell on Monday on the potential return of output from Libya as rising coronavirus cases also added to worries about global demand, although a tropical storm heading for the U.S. Gulf of Mexico limited losses." Brent crude "was down 33 cents, or 0.8%, at $42.82 a barrel by 0645 GMT, while U.S. crude was down 38 cents, or 0.9%, to $40.73 a barrel."

TFI/Sanctions

Rouhani Dismisses US Efforts To Reimpose UN Sanctions.

The AP (9/20, Vahdat) reports Iranian President Hassan Rouhani "dismissed US efforts to restore all UN sanctions on the country as mounting economic pressure from Washington pushed the local currency down to its lowest level ever on Sunday." Iran's currency "has lost more than 30% of its value to the dollar since June." Still, Rouhani "slammed the Trump Administration's declaration Saturday that all UN sanctions against Iran have been reimposed because Tehran is not complying with the nuclear deal." Said Rouhani, "If America uses its bullying...and does something in practice, it will have to face our decisive response."

UN Chief: No UN Support For Reimposing Sanctions Now. The AP (9/20, Lederer) reports Secretary-General Antonio Guterres "says the United Nations will not support reimposing sanctions on Iran as the United States is demanding until he gets a green light from the Security Council." In a letter to the council president obtained Sunday, Guterres wrote that "there would appear to be uncertainty" on whether or not Secretary of State Pompeo triggered the "snapback" mechanism in the 2015 nuclear deal. The AP says the Administration "declared Saturday that all UN sanctions against Iran have been restored, a move most of the rest of the world rejects as illegal and is likely to ignore."

The Washington Post (9/20, Morello, 14.2M) similarly says that "most of the world brushed off the US move and acted as if nothing had changed." To the Post, the US declaration Saturday "ushers in a new period of uncertainty and tension."

The New York Times (9/20, 18.61M) editorializes that "in a stunning display of chutzpah, the Trump administration is now arguing that the United States is still part of the Iran deal" that it withdrew from two years ago. That, it argues, is "because it wants to use a provision in the deal to snap back' global sanctions on Iran," and "only a party to the agreement can trigger a resumption of global sanctions."

Federal Reserve

Fed, Regulators Issue Guidance To Boost Main Street Lending.

The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reported the Federal Reserve on Friday put out fresh guidance to banks in a bid to make loans from its Main Street Lending Program more accessible to small and mid-sized companies.

Reuters (9/18, Burns) reported the new guidance "appears to be an attempt to address crossed signals from bank regulators that have been contributing to a limited uptake of the program, which is designed to offer credit to small and mid-sized businesses that need capital to survive the downturn caused by the coronavirus pandemic." The Fed said the new guidance was developed with two primary bank regulators, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

American Banker (9/18, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reported that according to the guidance, "lenders should not make Main Street loans based on a borrower's current financial state, which may have been damaged by the coronavirus, and should instead evaluate potential Main Street borrowers' pre-pandemic financial condition and post-pandemic prospects. Lenders should also factor in the payment deferral features available to Main Street loans, the Fed said." Regulators "will not rebuke banks for Main Street loans that were made in compliance with the program's requirements, the Fed said."

Law360 (9/18, Subscription Publication, 8K) reported similarly.

Fed Presidents Comment On Inflation, Fiscal Stimulus.

Reuters (9/18) reported Minneapolis Fed President Neel Kashkari said the CARES Act's stimulus measures for American citizens was "also a banking bailout," calling for more fiscal stimulus by Congress.

Reuters (9/18) reported Atlanta Fed President Raphael Bostic said Friday that if inflation rose to 2.3% but stabilized, "that would be fine," adding that "by contrast if we were at 2.2% and the next quarter at 2.4% and then at 2.6%, that trajectory would give me concern."

Reuters (9/18) reported St. Louis Fed President James Bullard said loose monetary policy, government deficits, and supply bottlenecks could push inflation beyond expectations.

Plaid CEO Says “A Lot” Of Fintechs Are Applying For OCC Charters.

On CNBC's Closing Bell (9/18, 211K), Plaid co-founder and CEO Zach Perret discussed the regulatory landscape for fintechs. Perret said, “We've seen a lot of movement out of the OCC recently.” The regulator “might grant more fintech charters to financial institutions and digital banks. There are a lot of fintechs that are actually applying for these charters. I suspect that we'll see many more move towards having their own charters over time.” He continued that while many fintechs currently partner with large sponsor banks, “going forward from a clearer regulatory standpoint, I suspect we'll see a continued evolution.”

Analysis: OCC Case Shows Widespread Liability When BSA Program Fails.

Compliance Week (9/20, Brasseur, 75K) reports the OCC on Thursday “announced seven civil money penalty orders issued to individuals from City National Bank of New Jersey,” which was effectively closed by the regulator in November 2019 after the OCC found the bank “had experienced substantial dissipation of assets and earnings due to unsafe or unsound practices.” The OCC said City National's BSA program was “critically deficient” and “failed to appropriately monitor for and report suspicious activity.” According to Compliance Week, “The cases of individual liability are not only notable for how they spread between the board and executive level but for how they speak to each person's role in ensuring BSA compliance is met.”

Kraken CEO Discusses Becoming First Crypto Bank.

Cryptonews (9/18) reported that in a recent episode of the Unchained podcast, David Kinitzky, CEO of Kraken Financial discussed the firm's recent news that it plans to launch a bank after being granted approval from Wyoming's regulator. Kinitzky explained what Kraken will be able to accomplish with crypto bank status and how that overlaps with other crypto-related regulations, including the OCC allowing banks to custody crypto assets.

Meanwhile, in an article about fintech Apifiny partnering with ECS Fin to pilot blockchain payments for banks, Finextra (9/18) also mentioned the OCC's “recent decision to allow banks to offer crypto custody services.”

Ex-Goldman Employee Says Bitcoin ETF Is Imminent.

CryptoNewsFlash (9/20) reports Raoul Pal, hedge fund manager and former Goldman Sachs employee, in an interview for “1-on-1” with Jerry Hall “predicted that a Bitcoin ETF is imminent.” Pal believes that the banking industry is in a phase of understanding Bitcoin. For this reason, the OCC “has approved the custody of Bitcoin and cryptocurrencies for banks as a way to further explore the sector.” Pal said, “Just understand: the pension plan, the endowment, the family office, the [registered investment advisors], they're so far trying to get their heads around Bitcoin, and they don't have a product to trade yet. So they passed the custody regulations in the US, so now banks can custody. That means prime broking is coming for hedge funds. Hedge funds will be first into the space, that's clear...”

Yahoo News Spotlights Conservative Activist Behind White House Campaign Against “Critical Race Theory.”

Yahoo! News (9/18, Dickson, 12.82M) reported White House OMB Director Russell Vought on September 4 “issued a memo ordering all federal agencies ‘to cease and desist from using taxpayer dollars to fund’ diversity and inclusion programs for employees.” According to Yahoo! News, “the vague yet alarmist language in the memo” is connected to “recent reports on Fox News and other conservative outlets warning of the dangers of such trainings, all of which appeared to be based on the claims of a conservative activist named Christopher Rufo.” Three days before Vought issued the memo, Rufo “appeared on Tucker Carlson's Fox News show” calling for the President “to immediately issue an executive order abolishing critical race theory trainings from the federal government.” Rufo previously alleged that such trainings are based on the premise that “virtually all white people contribute to racism” and “called on white employees at the Treasury Department...and the Office of the Comptroller” to pledge “allyship amid the George Floyd Tragedy.”

Bankers Urge Congress, Regulators To Extend Reg Relief.

American Banker (9/18, Haggerty, Subscription Publication, 31K) reported that the regulatory relief Congress gave banks at the start of the coronavirus pandemic is set to expire December 31, “but with the virus still raging and many households and businesses still struggling, financial institutions are urging Congress and regulators to extend them into next year.” Among other things, the CARES Act “relieved financial institutions from having to categorize loan modifications related to the pandemic as troubled debt restructurings until the end of 2020,” allowed them to delay compliance with the FASB's CECL standard until the end of the year, and eased community banks' capital requirements. It's “unclear if regulators will act on their own to extend the relief,” but “lawmakers from both parties have expressed support for continued pandemic relief.”

BoFA's Moynihan Calls For More Stimulus. Bloomberg (9/18, 4.73M) reported Bank of America CEO Brian Moynihan “called for another round of federal stimulus to help the U.S. reach a full economic recovery from the coronavirus pandemic.” In an interview Friday, Moynihan said, "You're back up to where 95% of the economy is back," but state and local governments, restaurants, airlines, and performing-arts venues need more help. A "second bite at the apple" for the Paycheck Protection Program "would help the economy come back fully," Moynihan said."

US Banks Trim Expectations In Era Of Low Interest Rates.

The Financial Times (9/20, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports, "US banks are preparing investors for a prolonged period in which low interest rates are a drag on their profits."

Wall Street Push Back To Office Threatened By New Infections.

Bloomberg (9/18, Natarajan, 4.73M) reported that as Wall Street leaders pushed to bring more employees back to offices last week, "a rash of Covid-19 infections on trading floors showed how quickly they could be sent back home." JPMorgan Chase, Goldman Sachs, and Barclays "all had to quarantine groups of traders after employees tested positive for the coronavirus." According to Bloomberg, "The setbacks threaten a ramp-up of return-to-office efforts that executives have said are necessary to preserve productivity and firm cultures," though "so far, the cases haven't derailed plans to return more staff to offices."

Study Finds Half Of US Branches Lack Covid Safety Measures For ATMs.

Forbes (9/18, 9.71M) reports secret shoppers sent to 500 bank branches in the US and Canada "saw just 7% of ATMs being cleaned," greeters at branch doors wearing masks only 44% of the time, and "only 19% of teller areas" cleaned between customers. Dalbar's nationwide study of 14 major bank brands found that ATMs were the most significant weak point in the US, with half of US branches having no Covid safety measures for ATMs. Chase, Bank of America, and Citibank "had the only branches where tellers wore masks 100% of the time." Bank of America ranked highest for teller anti-Covid measures, followed by Citibank, Capital One, and Wells Fargo. Dalbar "noted roughly the same level of post-visit cleaning at Wells Fargo branches" as a previous Ipsos study.

New York Times.

"Trump Needs A Tutorial On How International Agreements Work." The New York Times (9/20, 18.61M) editorializes that "in a stunning display of chutzpah, the Trump administration is now arguing that the United States is still part of the Iran deal" that it withdrew from two years ago. That, it argues, is "because it wants to use a provision in the deal to snap back' global sanctions on Iran," and "only a party to the agreement can trigger a resumption of global sanctions."

Wall Street Journal.

"Breaking Judicial Norms: A History." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) traces how Democrats have broken judicial norms in recent history, from the fight over Robert Bork's nomination to the filibuster rule. The Journal argues that Republicans should not cower from Democrats' threats to pack the court, but should put the issue front and center this campaign season.

"Trump, TikTok And Crony Capitalism." The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that the winner in the TikTok deal, Oracle Corp., its co-founder Larry Ellison is a prominent Republican donor and CEO Safra Catz worked on the Trump transition team in 2016. The Journal argues that it would have been better to ban TikTok.

Axios AM

By Mike Allen · Oct 27, 2020

◆ Happy Tuesday — one week out! Today's Smart Brevity™ count: 1,141 words ... 4½ minutes.

* Situational awareness: Mike Bloomberg is plowing an additional $20 million into this election, flooding airwaves in North Carolina, Texas and Arizona to promote down-ballot candidates who share his climate views, Axios' Hans Nichols reports. Go deeper.

1 big thing: Virus crushes hospitals

Some states are seeing dangerous levels of coronavirus hospitalizations, with hospitals warning that they could soon become overwhelmed if more action isn't taken to slow the spread, Axios' Caitlin Owens reports.

- Why it matters: Patients can only receive good care if there's enough to go around.

The big picture: The problem is particularly acute in rural parts of the Mountain West and the Midwest, where health care workers are scarce.

- The Utah Hospital Association has warned that the state's situation is becoming so dire that hospitals are expecting to begin rationing care within a week or two, per The Salt Lake Tribune.
- El Paso has issued a new stay-at-home order in response to overwhelmed hospitals, and additional beds are being set up in the city's convention center.

Several Republican governors continue to resist statewide mask mandates.

- When cases surged earlier on, "our governments reacted," Megan Ranney, an emergency medicine professor at Brown University, told the Washington Post. "We closed bars. We closed restaurants. We enforced mask mandates. And I'm not seeing a lot of that nationally right now."

The bottom line: Pandemic fatigue, politicization of the virus and the upcoming holiday season all make it almost certain that the situation will get worse before it gets better.

2. Justice Amy Coney Barrett

Just over an hour after the 52-48 Senate vote to confirm her, Justice Clarence Thomas swore in his new Supreme Court colleague, Amy Coney Barrett, at 9:17 p.m. during a ceremony on the South Lawn of the White House.

- Her husband, Jesse Barrett, held the Bible.
- The vote stuck to party lines with the exception of Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine), who's in a tough re-election fight and voted against Barrett.

Why it matters: Barrett's choice of Thomas, the court's most conservative justice, symbolized the conservative majority — perhaps for years to come — that was cemented by her confirmation.

Barrett said in brief remarks after President Trump spoke:

A judge declares independence not only from Congress and the president, but also from the private beliefs that might otherwise move her. ... My fellow Americans, even though we judges don't face elections, we still work for you. ...

The oath that I have solemnly taken tonight means, at its core, that I will do my job without any fear or favor, and that I will do so independently of both the political branches and of my own preferences. I love the Constitution and the democratic republic that it establishes, and I will devote myself to preserving it.

3. Biden's future foretold

In a sign of the squeeze Joe Biden will face if elected, Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.) told Alexi McCammond on "Axios on HBO" that she and other members of "The Squad" would expect him to make a liberal turn.

- Also, progressive donors, activists and leaders are pushing hard for Sen. Elizabeth Warren to head the Treasury Department, NBC's Alex Seitz-Wald reports.

Why it matters: Progressives have largely refrained from publicly criticizing Biden in the lead-up to the election, even though he hasn't signed on to their most far-reaching policies. Instead, they're focusing solely on beating Trump.

- But the comments by Omar and others reflect the pressure campaign they'll launch if he's elected to ensure that their liberal policies become law.

4. Axios-Ipsos poll: Americans pan feds on pandemic

Americans think every big institution has improved in handling the pandemic except the federal government, which they feel has gotten much worse, Axios' Margaret Talev writes from the new Axios/Ipsos Coronavirus Index.

- Why it matters: The findings suggest people see President Trump and his political team as one of the biggest impediments to turning things around.
- Four in five of the 1,079 U.S. adults polled (margin of error: ±3.3 points) say they're worried about COVID-19 outbreaks.

Barely half of Republicans said the federal government's handling has improved while one in five said it has gotten worse.

- One in four independents, and one in 10 Democrats, said it improved.

What they're saying: The coronavirus "is the issue of this election," said Cliff Young, president of Ipsos U.S. Public Affairs. "People are just looking around at the facts on the ground. ... [T]here's been no coordinated response to the coronavirus at the national level."

- At the local level, by contrast, people see "specific, concrete things" like stickers on the ground for social distancing at stores where they shop, or modifications to schooling.
- "When they think of the federal government, they're just thinking of the overall mess. There's no end in sight."

5. Cruz: Trump's Hunter Biden attacks aren't working

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) told "Axios on HBO" he doesn't think the Trump campaign's focus on the Biden family's business dealings has any sway with voters.

- After watching last week's Trump-Biden debate with Jonathan Swan, Cruz was not a fan of President Trump's strategy to attack Hunter Biden: "I don't think it moves a single voter."

"I think we should be unifying, we should be explaining, we should be lifting people up. I think it's a turnout election. But my assessment of turnout is the left is showing up no matter what," Cruz added.

6. Scoop: Lincoln Project will live on

The Lincoln Project — the former GOP consultants who have trolled President Trump all year with clever, ruthless ads — plans to continue as a media business after the election, sources tell Axios' Sara Fischer:

- The group, formed in 2019, recently signed with the United Talent Agency to help build out Lincoln Media, and is weighing offers from TV studios, podcast networks and book publishers.
- It has attracted interest from TV studios looking for help to develop a "House of Cards"-like fiction series.

Why it matters: Lincoln is part of a new trend of activists developing massive audiences for political influence, then spinning them into commercial media.

Catch up quick: The Lincoln Project — founded by prominent "Never Trump" Republicans including George Conway, Reed Galen, Jennifer Horn, Steve Schmidt, John Weaver and Rick Wilson — has transformed from an election-focused advertising PAC into a powerhouse with millions of followers.

- Its Twitter account boasts a slightly bigger following (2.6 million) than the RNC's.

7. Space under Biden

Joe Biden hasn't gone out of his way to talk about space during his campaign, but the final frontier might have to compete with other scientific priorities if he's elected president, Axios' Miriam Kramer and Hans Nichols report.

- While he has spoken broadly of the need to invest trillions of dollars in research and science, Biden's top scientific priority will be fighting climate change on Earth, not planning new missions to the Moon and Mars.

8. Nobel winner: "Science is on the ballot"

Jennifer Doudna, who shared the Nobel Prize in chemistry earlier this month for her work on the gene-editing tool CRISPR, told Ina Fried for "Axios on HBO" that the science itself has been under assault from the Trump administration.

- "I think now we're seeing kind of an extreme case where we have a president who is telling his followers that ... if they vote for his opponent, that ... his opponent will ... listen to scientists, as though that is a terrible thing."

More from the interview.

9. Colleges' coronavirus cuts "hit bone"

"[T]he persistence of the economic downturn is taking a devastating financial toll [on universities large and small], pushing many to lay off or furlough employees, delay graduate admissions and even cut or consolidate core programs like liberal arts departments," the N.Y. Times' Shawn Hubler reports (subscription).

- Even Harvard, with its $41.9 billion endowment, reports "a $10 million deficit that has prompted belt tightening."

10. Shutdown startups: Puppy delivery

"Need a Pandemic Puppy ASAP? ... [S]pecialists crisscross the country by air and ground to bring dogs to their new homes," writes The Wall Street Journal's Michael M. Phillips in an A-hed.

- By air and ground, there's increased demand for the pet-delivery industry during this time of decreased travel when a family's perfect pup might be found online thousands of miles away.

Treasury in the News

Mnuchin, Pelosi Fail To Reach Deal On Coronavirus Relief During Monday Phone Call.

Reuters (10/26, Chiacu) reports House Speaker Nancy Pelosi “is hopeful that congressional Democrats and the Trump administration can reach agreement on a coronavirus relief bill before the Nov. 3 elections, her spokesman said on Monday, adding that major issues still must be ironed out.” Pelosi’s Deputy Chief of Staff Drew Hammill tweeted Monday, “The speaker remains optimistic that an agreement can be reached before the election.” Hammill’s tweet came after “a 52-minute conversation” Pelosi had with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin.

Bloomberg (10/26, Wasson, House, Litvan, 4.73M) reports Mnuchin and Pelosi “failed again to close major differences on a fresh stimulus for a U.S. economy facing a renewed surge in Covid-19 cases.” Following their call, the first since last Wednesday, Mnuchin and Pelosi “still had not resolved language for a national testing and tracing program for the coronavirus, according to” Hammill. Bloomberg says Pelosi, in a Monday letter to House Democrats, said, “Today, we are waiting for an important response on several concerns, including on action to crush the virus. ... Ten days after Secretary Mnuchin went on CNBC to declare that he was accepting our testing plan, the Administration still refuses to do so.”

CNBC (10/26, Calia, 3.62M) reports Pelosi’s “biting letter to House Democrats” came “minutes before” the conversation with Mnuchin “that appeared to yield little progress toward a stimulus agreement.” Pelosi “eviscerated” the Administration in the letter and “targeted White House chief of staff Mark Meadows for saying Sunday that ‘we’re not going to control the pandemic.’” Pelosi “also said the Trump administration has not accepted House Democrats’ proposal for a national testing strategy even though Mnuchin said he would during a CNBC interview earlier this month.” She wrote, “The Republicans’ continued surrender to the virus – particularly amid the recent wave of cases – is official malfeasance. ... We must come to agreement as soon as possible.”

In a column for Bloomberg Opinion (10/26), Timothy L. O’Brien and Nir Kaissar assess the impact of the possible outcomes of the election on the prospects for new stimulus legislation.

CQ Roll Call (10/26, Lerman, 154K) and MarketWatch (10/26, Nicholson, 1.67M) also report.

US Imposes More Sanctions On Iran’s Oil Sector.

Reuters (10/26, Psaledakis) reports the US on Monday “imposed fresh Iran-related sanctions targeting the Islamic Republic’s oil sector, including the Iranian Ministry of Petroleum, in Washington’s latest move to increase pressure on Tehran.” The Treasury Department released a statement indicating that it is “slapping sanctions on key actors in Iran’s oil sector for supporting the Quds Force, the elite foreign paramilitary and espionage arm of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps.” The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said, “The regime in Iran uses the petroleum sector to fund the destabilizing activities of the IRGC-QF.”

According to the New York Times (10/26, Verma, Fassihi, 18.61M), “The sanctions are expected to create a new obstacle should any future president seek to open negotiations with Iran.” The Treasury Department “also penalized multiple front companies, subsidiaries and executives affiliated with those organizations, including Iran’s petroleum minister, Bijan N. Zanganeh. Four people involved in selling Iranian gasoline to the Maduro government in Venezuela were also named.” The Times says Mnuchin added that Iranian leadership continues “to prioritize its support for terrorist entities and its nuclear program over the needs of the Iranian people.”

Bloomberg (10/26, Motevalli, Mohsin, 4.73M) and CNBC (10/26, Macias, 3.62M) also report.

Meadows Doubles Down On Remarks That US “Will Not Control Coronavirus.”

The Washington Post (10/26, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports that with President Trump trailing Joe Biden “and the coronavirus pandemic surging again," White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows' "uneven handling of the pandemic response and other West Wing crises has dismayed many staffers and campaign officials, who say he has largely proved to be an ineffective chief of staff, instead serving more as a political adviser and confidant." Meadows again "provoked controversy...on Sunday when he broadly declared defeat in the fight against the coronavirus: 'We're not going to control the pandemic,' he said on CNN's 'State of the Union.'" The Post says Meadows, according to aides, "has forged a bond with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, despite their dramatically different political backgrounds and different views on a stimulus package."

The Hill (10/26, Lillis, 2.98M) says Meadows, "a former congressman and chairman of the conservative House Freedom Caucus, has also been seen as a major obstacle to a bipartisan deal on another round of coronavirus relief." House Speaker Nancy Pelosi "refuses to deal with him, preferring Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin instead."

IG: Employee Error At Treasury Department, Bureau Of Indian Affairs Responsible For Tribal Data Leak.

The Hill (10/26, Beitsch, 2.98M) reports, "Employees at the Treasury Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs were responsible for leaking a spreadsheet of proprietary data from the nation's tribes, according to a new report" by "the Department of the Interior's Office of Inspector General (OIG)." The report "found employees 'did not look at the entire spreadsheet before forwarding [an] email and did not realize the spreadsheet contained potentially confidential information.'" The Hill adds, "Employees told the OIG the emails containing the spreadsheet were sent as a way to remind tribes to apply for $8 billion in CARES Act funding set aside for tribal governments, not realizing the sensitive data was attached."

Treasury Grant News

AK Borough Canceling Individual Grant Plans Following New Treasury Guidance.

KTNA-FM Talkeetna (AK) Talkeetna, AK (10/26) reports the Mat-Su Borough in Alaska "is canceling plans for an individual grant program after receiving new federal guidance." The borough had planned "to pay its residents $100 to help offset additional costs incurred during the COVID-19 pandemic," applications for which were "supposed to start Monday, but the borough's CARES Act website now reads that the program will not be going forward after new guidance issued by the U.S. Department of Treasury last week." Absent an extension from Congress, the borough "has to decide how to spend its remaining CARES Act funds on approved expenses before the end of the year or else give back the remaining money."

Barrett Sworn In As Supreme Court Justice After 52-48 Confirmation Vote.

Amy Coney Barrett was sworn in as the 115th justice of the Supreme Court on Monday evening after being confirmed on a near-party line Senate vote of 52-48, with only Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) breaking ranks. Coverage focuses on the speed of the confirmation, just one month after Barrett's nomination, and on the closeness of the confirmation vote to a presidential election that has already resulted in cases before the court Barrett now joins.

The AP (10/26, Mascaro) reports Barrett was confirmed "late Monday by a deeply divided Senate, with Republicans overpowering Democrats" to place her on the Court "days before the election and secure a likely conservative court majority for years to come." President Trump's "choice to fill the vacancy of the late liberal icon Ruth Bader Ginsburg potentially opens a new era of rulings on abortion, the Affordable Care Act and even his own election." The Washington Post (10/26, A1, Kim, 14.2M) says Barrett "will solidify a 6-3 conservative majority on the court and will be in position to immediately hear contentious cases on elections and health care."

Reuters (10/26, Hurley) reports Trump, "who has been touting the appointment at campaign rallies to the cheers" of his supporters, "reveled in one of his signature achievements" as his third choice for the Court was confirmed. Barrett was sworn in by Justice Clarence Thomas at a White House event, at which Trump said, "The Barrett family has captured America's heart. It is highly fitting that Justice Barrett fills the seat of a true pioneer for women, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg." USA Today (10/26, Wu, Hayes, 10.31M) reports, "After she was sworn in, Barrett thanked the president and Senate Republicans for helping her through a quick confirmation process. She highlighted, as she did to senators in public hearings, that her personal beliefs would hold no weight on her decisions on the high court and her commitment to preserving the Constitution." She said, "It is the job of a judge to resist her policy preferences."

The Los Angeles Times (10/26, 4.64M) says Republicans "pushed the nomination through at a pace unmatched in 45 years." The New York Times (10/26, Davenport, 18.61M) says "it was the first time in 151 years that a justice was confirmed without a single vote from the minority party, a sign of how bitter Washington's decades-old war over judicial nominations has become." Democrats "called it a hypocritical power grab by Republicans, who they said should have waited for voters to have their say on Election Day – the stance Republicans had taken four years ago when they declined even to hold hearings" for Merrick Garland, nominated by then-President Barack Obama nine months before a presidential election.

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, A1, Wise, Bravin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer offered a late effort to adjourn before the vote, but the effort failed 53-46. The New York Daily News (10/26, Goldiner, Sommerfeldt, 2.52M) reports Schumer "told his Republican colleagues in a blistering floor speech that they will 'regret this' – an apparent threat that Democrats will attempt to add more seats to the Supreme Court if they win control of the chamber." Schumer said, "Let the record show that tonight the Republican majority will make a mockery of its own stated principle that the American people deserve a voice in the selection of Supreme Court justices. Let the record show that the American people, their lives and rights and freedoms, will suffer the consequences of this nomination for a generation."

Politico (10/26, Everett, Levine, 4.29M) says the confirmation "marks a sea change in how Republicans handle judicial nominees amid the decades-long war over abortion rights. Just two years ago, Barrett was seen as possibly too conservative to be confirmed by a narrow Republican Senate majority, and too hostile to Roe v. Wade. This time around, [Senate Majority Leader] McConnell argued to the White House not to meet with anyone other than Barrett, according to the aides."

The Daily Beast (10/26, 1.39M) writes, "Fittingly, given her shotgun-wedding of a confirmation, [Barrett] may begin deciding cases tomorrow, including two high-profile challenges to election rules." Axios (10/26, 521K) reports Barrett "could weigh in immediately on election-related cases piling up, including emergency petitions on extending deadlines for counting absentee ballots." The Washington Times (10/26, Swayer, 492K) the justices are also "slated to hear a challenge to the Affordable Care Act on Nov. 10, are certain to face more questions surrounding the presidential election and have a major case involving Mr. Trump's plans for the 2020 census at the end of November. Further cases on the president's border wall construction and his crackdown on bogus asylum claims are also on the docket this term."

Despite the controversy over the nomination, Breitbart (10/26, 673K) says the process was "relatively undramatic" given the near-certainty of the result long in advance. The Washington Free Beacon (10/26, 78K) says Democrats "spent weeks trying to thwart the will of the people by painting Barrett as a religious fanatic," and Townhall (10/26, McCarthy, 177K) says Democrats called Barrett's "confirmation process 'illegitimate' throughout her ascension to the bench, but Senate Republicans carried out their elected duty by filling the seat." The Federalist (10/26, 126K) says Barrett's "ascension to the high court replaces a leftist justice with an originalist."

FiveThirtyEight (10/26, Thomson-DeVeaux, 356K) examines Barrett's judicial record and concludes that she could bring the Court's "third-biggest shift" in ideology ever, with only Chief Justice Warren Burger's succeeding Chief Justice Earl Warren in 1969 and Justice Clarence Thomas succeeding Justice Thurgood Marshall in 1991 more radically shifting the balance of the Court. Seung Min Kim of the Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) says "the judicial legacy set by Trump but engineered primarily" by McConnell includes "several significant milestones, including the trio on the Supreme Court and the fact that for the first time in 40 years, there are no openings on the circuit courts. That has been a monumental achievement for a majority leader whose mantra has been 'leave no vacancy behind' and a president who simply just likes to win."

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/26, 895K) reports Vice President Pence "was not present during Monday's vote after an aide tested positive for the coronavirus over the weekend. Democratic leaders had asked Pence to stay away from presiding over Monday's session due to potential health risks." As for the White House event, the AP (10/26, Madhani, Jalonick) writes, "This time they mostly wore masks." Following the nomination announcement that "turned into a coronavirus superspreader event," Monday's ceremony "was moved to the broader South Lawn, chairs for more than 200 guests were spread about 6 feet apart, and the mask-wearers greatly outnumbered those who declined to cover their faces. Some participants – including Trump and Barrett – were unmasked. But the event had a markedly different feel" than the September 26 event.

But the New York Times (10/26, Baker, 18.61M) calls the Monday event "a virtual do-over of the superspreader event blamed for infecting multiple people with the coronavirus a month ago to the day, including the president himself. ... To Mr. Trump, the first history-maker outweighed the second, a chance to celebrate a landmark political victory regardless of the risk. It was, in effect, the triumph of defiance over experience, a stubborn gesture by a president who refuses to acknowledge the continuing threat of a pandemic that has killed more than 225,000 people" in the US "even after it has swept through his own circle of aides, advisers and allies."

Bloomberg (10/26, Dennis, 4.73M), the New York Post (10/26, Feuerherd, 4.57M), the Miami Herald (10/26, 1.09M), the Arizona Republic (10/26, 869K), the Charlotte Observer (10/26, 470K), The Hill (10/26, Carney, 2.98M), Roll Call (10/26, Ruger, 154K), the Daily Caller (10/26, Rodgers, 716K), The Intelligencer (10/26, Jones, 1.1M), and the CNN (10/26, Foran, Barrett, 83.16M) and Fox News (10/26, Dorman, 27.59M) websites are among the other outlets covering the vote and White House ceremony. All three broadcast networks covered the debate over Barrett on their evening newscasts, with Terry Moran saying on ABC World News Tonight (10/26, story 6, 1:05, Muir, 5.85M), "This is a record that the Senate will be setting tonight, because Amy Coney Barrett is certain to become Justice Barrett tonight and she will be confirmed closer to election day than any Supreme Court justice in American history." On the CBS Evening News (10/26, story 6, 1:50, O'Donnell, 4.26M), Nancy Cordes said, "Democrats call it a rush job, but Republicans call it victory." Kasie Hunt said on NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 3, 0:50, Holt, 2.16M) shortly before the vote that it was set to be "the most partisan confirmation in Supreme Court history."

The New York Times (10/26, 18.61M) editorializes, "What happened in the Senate chamber on Monday evening was, on its face, the playing out of a normal, well-established process of the American constitutional order: the confirmation of a president's nominee to the Supreme Court. But Senate Republicans, who represent a minority of the American people, are straining the legitimacy of the court by installing a deeply conservative jurist...to a lifetime seat just days before an election that polls suggest could deal their party a major defeat." But the Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), in an editorial, says the attacks on Barrett were demagoguery and that Republicans did their duty in confirming a qualified nominee.

Ruth Marcus writes in the Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) that Barrett "joins a court dangerously out of sync with the country. The nation is roughly evenly divided politically and has been for decades. Yet the court – now even more so with Barrett's arrival – is dominated not only by Republican-appointed justices but also by muscularly conservative ones." Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) column, "Whether the court regains its independence or cements itself as a third partisan branch of government is now largely up to Chief Justice John Roberts. If he does not act, and fast, to mitigate the court's politicization, Democrats will be fully justified in expanding the court's membership to restore balance – and indeed will face a public outcry if they don't."

Biden Says He Opposes Limiting SCOTUS Tenures. USA Today (10/26, Rossman, 10.31M) reports that on Monday, Joe Biden "said...he wouldn't try to limit the terms of Supreme Court justices, who serve lifetime appointments." USA Today adds Biden "has said if elected, he would appoint a bipartisan commission to study the federal courts for six months and make recommendations about possible changes in filling vacancies." However, at a campaign stop in Pennsylvania, Biden "told reporters he wouldn't change the length of terms." Biden said, "It's a lifetime appointment. I'm not going to attempt to change that at all."

Harris Says Biden "Would Respect Precedent" With Court Picks. The CBS Evening News (10/26, story 7, 1:10, O'Donnell, 4.26M) showed a clip of Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) from a weekend interview for CBS' 60 Minutes, in which she said, "The future of the Court is always going to be a function of who is in office in the White House. And I believe that the American people can trust that if Joe Biden had the requirement to fill a seat on the court, he would do it in a way that would respect precedent like Roe v. Wade. And that's what is at stake in this election, as much as everything else."

Kudlow: Economy Is In "A Strong V-Shaped Recovery."

NEC Director Kudlow said on Fox News' America's Newsroom (10/26, 896K), "We are in a strong V-shaped recovery from the pandemic contraction. That's a very important point. We are going to get a big GDP number. I believe it will be out Thursday. We have a lot of momentum, not only from the third quarter but spilling into the fourth quarter, and if we stick with pro-growth, incentive-oriented policies we will have a bang-up 2021."

Kudlow Lays Out Trump's Second-Term Economic Plan.

NEC Director Kudlow was asked on Fox News' America's Newsroom (10/26, 896K) about an Axios report which said the President does not have a second-term economic plan. Kudlow said, "Of course he has a second term plan. ... The President himself has been out there talking about a middle-class tax cut, a new middle class tax cut. He has also talked about retaining business tax cuts and making them permanent. He has also talked about investment tax credits so that we can onshore companies that moved away or those that would come to the US because of our low taxes. ... He has also talked about an infrastructure package, which is something he has long wanted but could not get bipartisan assistance from the House."

US Has Fewer Factory Workers Than When Trump Was Inaugurated.

The Washington Post (10/26, Lynch, 14.2M) reports soon after the 2016 election, then President-elect Trump convinced Carrier to keep most of the 1,100 jobs it planned to send to Mexico in the US "in return for $7 million in Indiana state incentives and some presidential goodwill." Trump cast Carrier's announcement that 800 jobs would remain in Indianapolis "as a decisive break from decades of American executives capitalizing on lower labor costs overseas at the expense of blue-collar workers at home." But, just this year, "Indiana employers have sent more jobs to Mexico, China, India and other foreign countries than were saved at Carrier." The Post adds Trump "has had little success with his highly-personalized attempts to bend corporate decision making to his will and reverse a generation-long decline in American factory jobs. ... Indeed, the domestic manufacturing renaissance that the president promised has withered." The US now has "fewer factory workers than when Trump was inaugurated and about as many as in 1941."

The New York Times (10/26, Rappeport, 18.61M) says while the President "has threatened companies like General Motors, Harley-Davidson and Carrier with backbreaking taxes and boycotts if they moved manufacturing abroad, often cajoling job promises out of those firms," in "many cases, those pledges went unfulfilled once Mr. Trump's attention shifted elsewhere and market realities could not be ignored." However, the Times adds, the "unfulfilled promises may matter little to Mr. Trump's supporters, who see the president's corporate jawboning and manufacturing rhetoric as evidence that he is fighting hard for American workers." Most polls show the President leading Joe Biden "when it comes to managing the economy."

Administration Accused Of Denying Pandemic Food Aid To Low-Income Americans.

Politico (10/26, Bottemiller Evich, 4.29M) reports the Administration "is fighting in federal court to block states from giving billions of dollars in emergency food stamps to the lowest-income Americans during the coronavirus crisis." Residents of California and Pennsylvania have sued the Agriculture Department "over a policy that has kept roughly 40 percent of households who rely on the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program from receiving any emergency benefits during the pandemic." Last week, a federal judge ordered the department "to proceed with the payments in the Pennsylvania case," but "the department is continuing to appeal." Politico says critics accuse the Administration of "trying to return to its pre-Covid mission of shrinking safety net programs, even as economists warn more help is needed for businesses and millions of households that are newly unemployed, behind on rent and struggling to buy food." The Agriculture Department "says that it's simply following the law."

Economists Say NYC Recovery Will Be Slower Than Other Major Cities.

The New York Times (10/26, McGeehan, 18.61M) reports New York City is "facing a bigger challenge in recovering from the pandemic than almost any other major city in the country." As "the virus surges again in the region, tourists are still staying away and any hope that workers would refill the city's office towers and support its businesses before the end of the year is fading. As a result, New York's recovery is very likely to be slow and protracted, economists said." The Times says the city "has been regaining jobs slower than other big cities. As of September, employment in the city was still down more than 600,000 jobs from a year before, according to the state Labor Department."

Companies Gave Executives Millions In Bonuses Before Filing For Chapter 11.

The Washington Post (10/26, Bhattarai, Santamariña, 14.2M) reports while the "coronavirus recession" drove dozens of companies into bankruptcy, "setting off a rush of store closures, furloughs and layoffs," several "major brands, including Hertz Global, J.C. Penney and Neiman Marcus, doled out millions in executive bonuses just before filing for Chapter 11 protection, according to a Washington Post analysis of regulatory filings and court documents." According to the Post, since March, "at least 18 large companies have rewarded executives with six- and seven-figure payouts before asking bankruptcy courts to shield them from landlords, suppliers and other creditors while they restructured." Together, they distributed "more than $135 million, documents show, while listing $79 billion in debts."

Lawsuit Says Goldman Sachs Tried To Cover Up Workplace Sexual Misconduct.

Reuters (10/26) reports a lawsuit filed in New York State Supreme Court Monday accuses Goldman Sachs Group of attempting "to cover up allegations of workplace sexual misconduct by the bank's global head of litigation." Marla Crawford, a former associate general counsel at the bank, filed the suit "against Goldman Sachs, the bank's General Counsel Karen Seymour and its Global Head of Litigation, Darrell Cafasso." The suit claims Cafasso used his position to "romantically prey upon a much younger and vulnerable female colleague." Bloomberg (10/26, Dolmetsch, Abelson, 4.73M) says Crawford "alleg[es] that she faced retaliation after raising concerns" about Cafasso.

Ant Group To Raise More Than $34B In World's Largest-Ever IPO.

The Washington Post (10/26, Shaban, 14.2M) reports the "financial arm of the e-commerce giant Alibaba," Ant Group, plans "to raise more than $34 billion in a joint listing across Shanghai and Hong Kong in the next few weeks, making it the world's largest initial public offering." The New York Times (10/26, Zhong, 18.61M) reports the company "priced its shares around $10.30 apiece, according to documents released on Monday by stock exchanges in the two cities. At that price, the company would be worth around $310 billion, a market value comparable to that of JPMorgan Chase and more than that of many other global banks." A separate New York Times (10/26, Zhong, 18.61M) story says while Ant Group "could be worth more than many global banks after its share sale...its business is highly concentrated in just one country: China. Instead of listing in New York, as many other Chinese internet companies have done, Ant is going public in Hong Kong and Shanghai." The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Xie, Yang, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage.

A Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says China's government has aided Alibaba co-founder Jack Ma by keeping away foreign competitors and investors in Ant are betting China will continue its protectionism. The Journal adds that investors will also be betting on the Chinese government, which will also be a shareholder through a state pension fund and state-owned enterprises.

AIG Names New CEO, Announces Plans To Split Off Life And Retirement Unit.

Reuters (10/26, Barlyn, Scott) reports insurer AIG said Monday its board has "approved a plan to separate the life and retirement business from the rest of the company, and named President Peter Zaffino as chief executive officer, effective next year." AIG "said it has yet to make a decision on how to carry out the separation, beyond the board voting to establish two independent, market-leading companies." According to "two people familiar with the matter," the separation "could take 'a couple of years' and may be done in phases through sales of minority stakes."

Bloomberg (10/26, Chiglinsky, 4.73M) reports Zaffino "will take over the top job on March 1, when current CEO Brian Duperreault becomes executive chairman, the company said in a statement Monday." The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Scism, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage.

Intermountain Healthcare To Merge With Sanford Health.

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Evans, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Utah's largest hospital system, Intermountain Healthcare will merge with the Sioux Falls, South Dakota-based nonprofit Sanford Health. The merger will combine 69 hospitals in Idaho, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Utah.

J.M. Smucker Selling Crisco Brand For $550M.

USA Today (10/26, Mackinnon, 10.31M) reports J.M. Smucker Co. will sell its Crisco brand to the "New Jersey-based B&G Foods Inc., which owns more than 50 brands including Ortega, SnackWells, Weber, B&M, Emeril's, Polaner and Cream of Wheat," for "$550 million in a cash deal, it announced Monday."

Las Vegas Sands Considering Selling Its Vegas Strip Hotel-Casinos.

USA Today (10/26, Komenda, 10.31M) reports Las Vegas Sands Corp., the "$37.5 billion company owned by casino magnate Sheldon Adelson," is "considering selling its two hotel-casinos on The Strip, the company confirmed to the Reno Gazette Journal Monday." The company "is working with an adviser to solicit interest from potential buyers, according to Bloomberg. The deal could be worth $6 billion for the Venetian and Palazzo resorts."

Pandemic Has Disrupted Wind Energy Business.

The New York Times (10/26, Penn, Pickering, 18.61M) reports the coronavirus pandemic "has walloped even thriving industries like renewable energy." According estimates by the American Wind Energy Association, "the pandemic could threaten a total of $35 billion in investment and about 35,000 jobs this year. The losses could grow if the coronavirus continues to disrupt the economy well into next year." While "the wind energy business was growing about 10 percent a year before the pandemic," industry officials "now fear that projects under construction might be postponed or canceled because of the pandemic. The industry had hoped Congress might provide aid to renewable energy, but it got little from the stimulus bills passed in the spring."

Brouillette: Biden Ban On Fracking Would Cost An "Enormous" Amount Of Jobs.

Energy Secretary Brouillette said on the Brian Kilmeade Show (10/26) that during the Trump Administration, the US has "moved from becoming an [energy] importing nation to an exporting nation. In 2020, we became a net energy exporter." Asked what role fracking played in that success, Brouillette said, "An enormous role. This is the technology that allowed us to become the number one producer of oil and gas in the world. ... I would dare say that it is the technology that has produced the economic boom over the last three years." Asked what it would mean if Joe Biden were to ban fracking, Brouillette said, "It is an enormous deal. What it would do is move us back to dependence on foreign nations. ... The amount of jobs lost would be enormous."

Rollins: Democrats "Are For Raising Taxes, Destroying Jobs."

Brooke Rollins, Acting Director of the Domestic Policy Council, said on WLW-AM Cincinnati (10/26, 19K), "I'm not sure there has never been an alternative that is more stark with more of a contrast than what Americans are facing today. ... [Democrats] are for raising taxes, destroying jobs, a Green New Deal that would basically...end our fossil fuel oil and gas industry. ... Their idea of education where kids are trapped in a school that don't serve them so that they can lift up the teachers' unions. A country that just is not American exceptionalism, that's an apologist to the rest of the world. It really is such a stark contrast."

WSJournal: Rapper Retracted Trump Endorsement Due To Outrage From Left. A Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says rapper 50 Cent endorsed President Trump last week because he opposes Joe Biden's plan to raise taxes on individuals making more than $400,000 and apply the 12.4% Social Security payroll tax on earnings above that amount only to retract on Sunday. The Journal suggests he did so because he was concerned the loss of revenue due to outrage from the left would cost him more than Biden's tax plan.

China Behind On Purchases Of US Goods Under Trade Deal.

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Zumbun, Hayashi, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports while China increased purchases of US farm products last month, it is behind on its commitment under a trade deal signed in January to buy $140 billion in US agricultural, energy and manufactured goods. Calculations made by Chad Bown of the Peterson Institute for International Economics based on Commerce Department data released Monday show that China had purchased $58.8 billion in goods as of Sept. 30, which is below the $108 billion it should have purchased by that date to be on pace for the full-year target.

Trump Calls Administration's Handling Of Pandemic "Incredible."

Politico (10/26, Forgey, 4.29M) reports President Trump on Monday "insisted that his administration was still working to curb the spread of the coronavirus," even as Chief of Staff Meadows "doubled down on his acknowledgment that the United States would not 'control' the pandemic." While speaking to reporters in Allentown, Pennsylvania, Trump "addressed the controversial remarks from his most senior aide," and said his Administration is doing "absolutely the opposite." Trump added, "We've done an incredible job." Meanwhile, Politico reports Meadows on Monday also "rejected [Joe] Biden's suggestion that the administration was waving a white flag in its fight against the coronavirus." Politico adds that "a maskless Meadows" told reporters, "The only person waving a white flag, along with his white mask, is Joe Biden."

Giroir Says Pandemic Can Be Controlled Through Basic Safeguards. The AP (10/26, Alonso-Zaldivar) reports that a day after Meadows "said 'we're not going to control the pandemic,'" HHS Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir "said Monday that Americans have already proven they can do that through basic safeguards shown to work." Giroir said, "I think we can control the pandemic." Giroir added, "I want to be clear that what we have done – what the American people have done – has been able to put out very significant outbreaks...all across the Deep South." Giroir also "underscored what he calls the '3 W's,'" and he "said the data are pretty clear that while such simple measures cannot completely defeat the virus, they can control it."

Pelosi Says “Continued Surrender” Of Republicans To Pandemic Is “Official Malfeasance.” The Washington Times (10/26, Muñoz, 492K) reports House Speaker Pelosi “blamed the Trump administration’s ‘arrogance’ on Monday, saying they’re not adequately trying to combat the coronavirus pandemic.” In a letter to Democrats, Pelosi said, “The Republicans’ continued surrender to the virus – particularly amid the recent wave of cases – is official malfeasance.” She added, “We must come to agreement as soon as possible. But we cannot accept the Administration’s refusal to crush the virus, honor our heroes or put money in the pockets of the American people.”

WPost: To Overcome Pandemic, US “Will Require A Different President.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) says the White House last week responded to the coronavirus “as it has from the start, in pathetic surrender,” but “it does not have to be this way.” The Post asserts President Trump’s leadership has shown “what the American people don’t know can hurt them,” and concludes that until an effective vaccine or therapy has been developed, “virus hot spots need a rapid response, including temporary shutdowns where necessary to slow transmission. A nationwide mask mandate would help immensely. Shortages in personal protective equipment must be alleviated. Once the raging community spread is reduced, a massive drive to test, trace and isolate the sick could begin to keep infections at a low level. All of this will require leadership – which is another way of saying it will require a different president.”

Administration Officials Discuss Vaccine Progress.

Assistant to the President for Planning and Implementation John Fleming said on WBT-AM (Charlotte, NC (10/26, 4K), “It appears we have three candidates, three vaccines – AstraZeneca just announced, Pfizer, and Moderna – all three expect that they will request an authorization as early as some time in November and we will begin distributing their vaccine in December. ... The supply chains, the logistics, all of that has already been set up. It is a combination of the private sector as well as the military.”

White House Deputy Communications Director Brian Morgenstern said on Fox News’ Outnumbered Overtime (10/26), “What we are looking at, really within the next couple weeks, potentially, would be safety data showing that one or more of these vaccines that are in Phase Three trials could be safe. ... We are mass-producing these vaccines currently, so that, by the end of the year, we’ll be able to distribute tens of millions of doses. Those probably will go to the high risk populations, the senior citizens, the elderly, those who are in a more vulnerable health state as well as healthcare workers. Those more likely to be exposed to the virus. Then, over the coming months, on a rolling basis, we expect to increase the capacity to hundreds of millions of doses so that, really, anybody who wants a vaccine will be able to have one. It will just be a rolling process as we go through it.”

AstraZeneca Says University Of Oxford Vaccine Produces Immune Response In Young And Old Adults. Reuters (10/26, Faulconbridge, Kelland, Holton) reports AstraZeneca Plc on Monday announced the experimental coronavirus vaccine it is developing with the University of Oxford “produces a immune response in both old and young adults, raising hopes of a path out of the gloom and economic destruction wrought by the novel coronavirus.” An company spokesman said, “It is encouraging to see immunogenicity responses were similar between older and younger adults and that reactogenicity was lower in older adults, where the COVID-19 disease severity is higher.”

CNBC (10/26, Meredith, 3.62M) reports on its website that AstraZeneca CEO Pascal Soiro “has previously said the drugmaker’s vaccine would likely provide protection against contracting the coronavirus for about a year.” The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Strasburg, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage.

NIAID Ends Lilly Antibody Drug Trial Early Over Lack Of Effectiveness.

The AP (10/26, Marchione) reports the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases is “putting an early end to a study testing an Eli Lilly antibody drug for people hospitalized with COVID-19 because it doesn’t seem to be helping them.” The AP adds that while independent monitors “paused enrollment in the study two weeks ago because of a possible safety issue,” the NIAID on Monday “said a closer look did not verify a safety problem but found a low chance that the drug would prove helpful for hospitalized patients.” According to the AP, “It is a setback for one of the most promising treatment approaches for COVID-19.” However, the AP says a separate US study of Lilly’s antibody drug is continuing “in mild to moderately ill patients, to try to prevent hospitalization and severe illness,” and it “also is continuing its own studies testing the drug, which is being developed with the Canadian company AbCellera.”

Coronavirus Cases, Deaths On Rise Across US.

On ABC World News Tonight (10/26, story 4, 3:00, Muir, 7.31M), Marcus Moore reported the US has “mark[ed] the highest number of new cases in a 48-hour period since the pandemic began.” Moore added, “Hospitals in El Paso, Texas, are at capacity. Medical teams scrambling to airlift critically ill patients to nearby cities. And these surge tents put up to house the staggering influx of COVID patients.” Moore also reported hospitals in Utah are “warning they could soon be forced to ration ICU beds and prioritize younger patients.” On NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 4, 2:05, Holt, 2.16M), Gabe Gutierrez reported, “The Dakotas lead the US in cases per capita. Cases in at least 42 states up 10% or more in the last two weeks.” Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Idaho Gov. Brad Little (R) on Monday announced the state will institute new restrictions in the face of increased cases and hospitalizations.

On the CBS Evening News (10/26, story 4, 2:30, O’Donnell, 4.26M), Mireya Villarreal reported coronavirus cases “are on the rise in 44 states,” and “no states are seeing declines.” According to the CNBC (10/26, Feuer, 3.62M) website, “The average number of new daily cases of coronavirus in the United States is at a record – stressing local hospital systems and forcing new curfews and other restrictions in some parts of the country.” CNBC says the US “has now established its third peak of daily new cases with no signs of letting up. Over the past seven days, the country reported an average of about 68,767 new cases every day, the highest seven-day average recorded yet, according to a CNBC analysis of Johns Hopkins University data. The seven-day average is up more than 22% compared with a week ago, according to CNBC's analysis." USA Today (10/26, Flores, 10.31M) reports that the US "had more than 481,372 new cases of COVID-19 last week, setting a record for the most new infections reported in a week since the pandemic began."

The AP (10/26, Pane, Stobbe) reports that average number of deaths in the US per day "are up 10% over the past two weeks, from 721 to nearly 794 as of Sunday, according to data from Johns Hopkins University." Meanwhile, "Confirmed infections per day are rising in 47 states, and deaths are up in 34." According to the AP, "Health experts had warned that it was only a matter of time before deaths turned upward, given the record-breaking surge in cases engulfing the country."

The New York Times (10/26, Robles, 18.61M) reports that the US has seen a 40% increase in the past month in the number of hospitalized COVID patients. According to the Times, "The number of people hospitalized with coronavirus in this region along the Mexico border is soaring, and officials are scrambling to make space for them by setting up overflow beds in a convention center and under tents in parking lots and by flying patients out to medical centers outside the area."

Reuters (10/26, Mackenzie, Shumaker) reports that as "the number of hospitalized COVID-19 patients is at a two-month high, straining health care systems in some states," President Trump "lashed out again at reports that the coronavirus is surging," and "repeated his unfounded claim that COVID-19 cases are rising because there is more testing." He tweeted, "Cases up because we TEST, TEST, TEST. A Fake News Media Conspiracy. Many young people who heal very fast. 99.9%. Corrupt Media conspiracy at all time high. On November 4th., topic will totally change. VOTE!" The President added, "The Fake News Media is riding COVID, COVID, COVID, all the way to the Election. Losers!"

However, Axios (10/26, Owens, 521K) reports, "Several states that are likely to decide which party controls Washington next year have exceptionally large coronavirus outbreaks or are seeing cases spike." Axios says that while "most voters have already made up their minds," the pandemic "could ultimately help" undecided voters "make a decision as they head to the polls – and that's not likely to help...Trump."

Fauci: "No Matter How You Look At" Increased Cases, "It's Not Good News." The New York Daily News (10/26, Goldiner, 2.52M) reports NIAID Director Fauci "doesn't want to talk about whether what wave of the coronavirus pandemic we're in," and he "said Monday that worrying about how to classify the new surge in COVID-19 cases is mostly a waste of time." Speaking to a Yahoo! financial forum, Fauci asserted, "It's kind of semantics. You want to call the third wave or an extended first wave." Fauci continued, "No matter how you look at it, it's not good news." However, the Daily News adds that Fauci "said most public health experts would say the U.S. is still enduring an 'elongated' first wave of coronavirus."

Meanwhile, the Boston Globe (10/26, Arnett, Andersen, 972K) reports Fauci is among "a growing chorus of medical experts" advocating for a national mask mandate, "calling it a necessary step to mitigate the spread of COVID-19 as new cases continue to spike from coast to coast." The Globe says Fauci "told CNN's Erin Burnett that if 'people are not wearing masks, well then maybe we should be mandating it.'"

AAP: Nearly 800K US Children Have Contracted COVID. The Hill (10/26, Polus, 2.98M) reports the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) on Monday said almost 800,000 children in the US "have been infected by COVID-19 this year," and it "shared statistics that demonstrate a growing prevalence of coronavirus among youth." According to The Hill, children currently account for 11% of total US coronavirus cases, amounting to "about 1,053 cases per 100,000 kids," while "during the period from Oct. 8 to Oct. 22, there were 4,555 new youth cases reported," a 14% increase.

CDC Says Nurses At High Risk For Coronavirus.

The New York Times (10/26, Abelson, 18.61M) reports a new Centers for Disease Control and Prevention analysis of hospitalized patients released Monday found that "among health care workers, nurses in particular have been at significant risk" of contracting COVID. The Times adds about 6% of adults "hospitalized from March through May were health care workers, according to the researchers, with more than a third either nurses or nursing assistants. Roughly a quarter, or 27 percent, of those hospitalized workers were admitted to the intensive care unit, and 4 percent died during their hospital stay."

Hospitals Continue Elective Procedures Despite Increase In COVID Patients.

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Evans, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that even as they confront an increase in COVID patients, hospitals are seeking to continued lucrative elective procedures as long as possible. While the Journal adds hospitals postponed such operations when the coronavirus first started to spread, the Washington Post (10/26, A1, Achenbach, Brulliard, Shammas, Dupree, 14.2M) says hospitals "in almost every region of the country – the Upper Midwest, the Mountain West, the Southwest and the heart of Appalachia – are seeing record levels of patients suffering from covid-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus."

Researchers Investigating Whether Heart Damage In Coronavirus Survivors Is Permanent.

On NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 10, 1:25, Holt, 4.6M), Anne Thompson reported some coronavirus survivors suffered heart damage during their illness, and researchers are looking into whether it "is permanent."

Several Fox News Anchors To Quarantine After COVID Exposure.

The Washington Post (10/26, Ellison, 14.2M) reports that with eight days until the presidential election, Fox News President Jay Wallace "and key members of the network's election team have been told to quarantine after they were exposed to someone who tested positive for the novel coronavirus." Sources told the Post that until they test negative "three times in a row, the anchors will be broadcasting their shows from home." The Post adds the infected individual "was on a flight chartered to transport Fox News employees returning to New York from the Thursday night presidential debate in Nashville." The AP (10/26, Bauder) reports that while Fox "cited privacy concerns in not identifying who had tested positive or was exposed," Bret Baier and Martha MacCallum "anchored Fox's debate coverage from Nashville on Thursday, and commentators Dana Perino and Juan Williams were also on site."

Clinton Says Pompeo "Pathetic" For Promising To Release More Of Her Emails.

Politico (10/26, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton in an interview with Kara Swisher of the New York Times "dismissed her successor Mike Pompeo's pledge to release more of her emails ahead of the election as 'pathetic,' insisting that there is nothing of importance in her unreleased communications." Politico adds Clinton "contended to Swisher that there would be 'nothing' incriminating in any newly released emails, which would be in addition to thousands from her time as secretary that are already online. But 'that's the point,' she claimed." Clinton asserted, "What they do is they take these emails that were, frankly, pretty boring if you want to really know the truth about them, and they begin to try to manipulate them, or they pull them out of context, or they make up whole cloth crazy stories about them. And people, unfortunately, believe they're getting kind of a behind the scenes look."

Vindman Writing Memoir About Impeachment Testimony.

The AP (10/26, Italie) reports Harper on Monday announced that Lt. Col. Alexander S. Vindman, "the national security aide who offered key testimony during the impeachment hearings of President Donald Trump and later accused the president of running a 'campaign of bullying, intimidation, and retaliation,' has a book deal." Vindman next spring will release "Here, Right Matters: An American Story," which the publisher "is calling it a 'powerful and dramatic memoir' that spans from his family's emigration from the Soviet Union to the United States to his 'moment of truth' in taking on a sitting president." According to the AP, "Another prominent impeachment witness, Marie Yovanovitch, has a book expected in May."

US No Longer World Leader In Refugee Protections.

The AP (10/26, Snow, Watson) reports that America's reputation for being the leader in humanitarian policies by "admitting more refugees annually than all other countries combined" has been "eroded during Donald Trump's presidency as he cut the number of refugees allowed in by more than 80%." Canada "replaced the US as No. 1 for resettling people fleeing war and persecution." The Administration has lowered the number of refugees that may be admitted each year of his presidency; White House senior adviser Steven Miller "said the administration has sought to have refugees settle closer to their home countries and work on solving the crises that caused them to flee." Miller told the AP, "The solution has to be one of foreign policy." The AP says the Administration "also has rolled back other humanitarian protections, like Temporary Protected Status for 400,000 immigrants fleeing natural disasters or violence."

Federal Prosecutors Say Bomb Materials Connected To Whitmer Kidnapping Plot Discovered.

The Detroit Free Press (10/26, Egan, 1.52M) reports that in a court filing on Monday, federal prosecutors asked the court for a 40-day extension of their time limit to "hand down grand jury indictments in their kidnapping conspiracy case" involving Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D), saying the "recent discovery of bomb components could lead to new charges, including terror-related charges." Assistant US Attorney Nils Kessler said, "Firearms and explosive device components were recently recovered, and must be analyzed to determine whether charges under the National Firearms Act, explosives or anti-terrorism statutes are warranted." He added, "The FBI has collected hundreds of hours of audio recordings from confidential human sources and undercover agents, and is still in the process of collating that material."

Plot To Arrest DeWine For "Tyranny" Being Investigated By Police.

Fox News (10/26, Barrabi, 27.59M) reports on its website, "A man in Miami County, Ohio, informed local police that he had been approached to participate in a plot to 'arrest' Gov. Mike DeWine (R) and put him 'on trial for 'tyranny,' according to multiple reports." The man "told authorities last Friday that he was contacted by Renea Turner, who staged a write-in campaign for governor in 2018. ... Turner is alleged to have described a plan to arrest DeWine [and] put him on trial and sentence him for purported crimes."

Hurricane Zeta Named 27th Storm Of Atlantic Season.

The CBS Evening News (10/26, story 9, 0:10, O'Donnell, 4.26M) reported Hurricane Zeta is now "the 27th named storm of the Atlantic season." It is "on track to strike the Gulf Coast" as soon as Wednesday; on Monday night, it was "lashing Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula...with 80 mile-an-hour winds." ABC World News Tonight (10/26, story 8, 0:35, Muir, 5.85M) meteorologist Ginger Zee said Zeta "could end up being Louisiana's fifth named landfalling storm, the 11th in the United States." Zeta is currently "in the western Caribbean," and later "will die a little bit before it goes back to probably a Category 1 through the Gulf." On NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 6, 0:45, Holt, 2.16M), Al Roker said that once Zeta is in the Gulf, it will bring "heavy rain making landfall sometime late Wednesday night with flooding rain, storm surge, and then races up into the Northeast with heavy rain and winds, as well. Storm surge two to six feet all the way from Louisiana to the panhandle of Florida. Rainfall amounts, locally up to six inches through the Mississippi River Valley but all the way up into the northeast. Heavy rain, as well."

The AP (10/26, Alcocer) reports that a "hurricane watch was posted from Morgan City, Louisiana, to the Mississippi-Alabama state line." Trees "felled by Hurricane Delta barely three weeks earlier still litter parts of Cancun, stacked along roadsides and in parks," and "there is concern they could become projectiles when Zeta scrapes across the peninsula." Local authorities "are taking the storm seriously, but with a distinctly less alarmed tone than when Delta strengthened to a Category 4 storm off the coast."

USA Today (10/26, Yancey-Bragg, Rice, 10.31M) reports forecasters "urged residents from Louisiana to the Florida Panhandle to monitor the storm's progress as Zeta is expected to be at or near hurricane strength when it approaches the northern Gulf Coast. 'There is an increasing risk of dangerous storm surge, wind and rainfall impacts from Louisiana to the Florida Panhandle,' the Hurricane Center said."

The Washington Post (10/26, Cappucci, 14.2M) reports, "With another one to three storms possible before the season's conclusion at the end of November, it's conceivable, if not likely, that this year will break 2005's record for the most storms in an Atlantic hurricane season."

Focusing on how hurricanes are increasingly shaped by climate change, the New York Times (10/26, Fountain, 18.61M) says global warming "has raised average air temperatures, and warmer air holds more moisture," which raises the risk of storm surges. Global warming "also appears to be causing some storms to slow down and stall so that over a given time they drop more rain over a smaller area."

Pandemic Is Forcing Colleges To Make Deep Budget Cuts.

The New York Times (10/26, Hubler, 18.61M) reports the coronavirus "is forcing universities large and small to make deep and possibly lasting cuts to close widening budget shortfalls. By one estimate, the pandemic has cost colleges at least $120 billion, with even Harvard University, despite its $41.9 billion endowment, reporting a $10 million deficit that has prompted belt tightening." Many colleges "imposed stopgap measures such as hiring freezes and early retirements to save money in the spring," but "the persistence of the economic downturn is taking a devastating financial toll, pushing many to lay off or furlough employees, delay graduate admissions and even cut or consolidate core programs like liberal arts departments."

VMI Superintendent Resigns After Northam Orders Investigation Into Racism Allegations.

The New York Times (10/26, Philipps, 18.61M) reports Virginia Military Institute superintendent Gen. J.H. Binford Peay III resigned Monday, a week after Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam (D) "ordered an independent investigation into allegations of systemic racism at the state-supported military college." The Washington Post (10/26, Shapira, 14.2M) reports Peay said in his resignation letter that Northam's chief of staff had told him Northam and state legislators had "lost confidence in my leadership" and "desired my resignation." The Times adds, "During Peay's tenure, multiple accounts of racist incidents have surfaced at VMI."

Office Of Special Counsel Probing Pompeo's RNC Speech.

Reuters (10/26, Zengerle) reports House Foreign Affairs Chairman Eliot Engel and House Appropriations Chair Nita Lowey said in a joint statement on Monday that the Office of Special Counsel has "launched an investigation of Secretary of State Mike Pompeo's speech to the Republican National Convention in August." Reuters says Pompeo praised President Trump's foreign policy record "in a speech recorded in Jerusalem in August during a trip to Israel." Critics "say the speech violated the Hatch Act, which limits political activities of federal employees."

CNN (10/26, Gaouette, Atwood, 83.16M) reports on its website that the lawmakers said in their statement, "As we get closer to both this year's election and his own inevitable return to electoral politics, Mike Pompeo has grown even more brazen in misusing the State Department and the taxpayer dollars that fund it as vehicles for the Administration's, and his own, political ambitions."

The New York Times (10/26, Jakes, 18.61M) reports that, in addition to the lawmakers' request, the independent group American Oversight last week "cited a special counsel investigator who confirmed a separate inquiry into Mr. Pompeo's pledge to release any additional Hillary Clinton emails that might remain at the State Department, as" President Trump "has demanded."

Salary Council Chair Resigns After Administration Weakens Civil Servant Employee Protections.

The New York Times (10/26, Lipton, 18.61M) reports Federal Salary Council Chairman Ronald Sanders, who heads the panel "that advises the White House on compensation issues, resigned on Monday to protest President Trump's new executive order that could wipe out employment protections for tens of thousands of federal workers." According to the Times, the order, "signed last week, gives Mr. Trump and his political appointees the power to hire and fire certain federal civil servants who now hold jobs that are supposed to be exempt from political influence."

The Washington Post (10/26, Yoder, 14.2M) reports Sanders wrote in his resignation letter, "I simply cannot be part of an Administration that seeks...to replace apolitical expertise with political obeisance. Career Federal employees are legally and duty-bound to be nonpartisan; they take an oath to preserve and protect our Constitution and the rule of law...not to be loyal to a particular President or Administration."

Politico (10/26, Mueller, 4.29M) says Sanders also wrote, "It is clear that its stated purpose notwithstanding, the Executive Order is nothing more than a smokescreen for what is clearly an attempt to require the political loyalty of those who advise the President, or failing that, to enable their removal with little if any due process.”

HHS Staffers Leaving Roles Amid Fears Of Swift Departures After Election.

Politico (10/26, Diamond, 4.29M) reports, “At least 27 political appointees have exited the embattled Health and Human Services department since the start of the Covid-19 crisis in February, according to a Politico review, and senior leaders are bracing for dozens more officials to depart swiftly” if President Trump loses the election. A “wave of departures would leave only a shell staff shepherding the department through a uniquely challenging winter of coronavirus outbreaks and drug and vaccine authorizations.” In addition, officials such as FDA Commissioner Hahn and CDC Director Redfield “have been, at turns, isolated and berated for their perceived failings in the coronavirus response,” and HHS Secretary Azar “has openly mused about replacing the FDA commissioner after a series of battles over coronavirus-related policies.” According to Politico, this has “led some officials to anticipate that Hahn and Redfield may voluntarily walk away rather than take the risk of being abruptly fired in a tweet by Trump after the election.”

First Lady To Return To Campaign Tuesday.

The New York Times (10/26, Karni, 18.61M) reports the First Lady will return to the campaign trail on Tuesday, “headlining an event in Pennsylvania where she will be interviewed by Kellyanne Conway.” The Times says the First Lady “is viewed as a compelling surrogate for her husband, but she has always been loath to give over too much of her schedule to the campaign. She has taken an even more cautious approach since the pandemic hit in March, refusing to attend fund-raising luncheons.”

Kushner Says Black Americans Must “Want To Be Successful.”

The AP (10/26) reports that White House Senior Adviser Jared Kushner said Monday that President Trump “wants to help Black people in America, but they have to ‘want to be successful’ for his policies to work.” ABC World News Tonight (10/26, story 2, 1:05, Muir, 7.31M) aired a clip of Kushner saying on Fox News’ Fox & Friends, “One thing we’ve seen in a lot of the Black community, which is mostly Democrat, is that President Trump’s policies are the policies that can help people break out of the problems that they’re complaining about, but he can’t want them to be successful more than they want to be successful.” NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 2, 0:50, Holt, 2.16M) reported, “Top civil rights lawyer Ben Crump slamm[ed] what he called Jared Kushner’s ‘blatant disrespect and lack of understanding,’” but “the White House says critics are taking Kushner out of context.”

The New York Daily News (10/26, Matthews, 2.52M) reports the statement “was quickly picked up and spread on social media by an official Democratic Party accounts, which focused on Kushner apparently implying that some Black Americans do not want to be successful.” Others “focused on how Kushner’s comments were laughable given his inherited wealth and other advantages most humans, let alone Black Americans, do not enjoy.”

The Daily Beast (10/26, 1.39M) reports Kushner “made the remark after he was asked to comment on rapper Ice Cube’s recent announcement he is an adviser for the Trump campaign’s ‘Platinum Plan’ for Black America.” Kushner “used the opportunity to critique celebrities and advocates over the movement that spurred over the summer following the police killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis.” Reuters (10/26) said Kushner “criticized athletes and others who have protested against US racism on social media and basketball courts.” Kushner said, “You saw a lot of people who were just virtue signaling. They’d go on Instagram and cry or they would put a slogan on their jersey or write something on a basketball court. And quite frankly, that was doing more to polarize the country than it was to bring people forward.”

The New York Times (10/26, Karni, 18.61M) says Kushner’s remarks “prompted a scathing response” from Rep. Gwen Moore (D-WI), and “the Democratic National Committee was equally harsh.” Both accused Kushner of making comments that reflected privilege and dismissing Black Americans. USA Today (10/26, Cummings, 10.31M) says Kushner’s “implication that Black Americans lack a drive to succeed and to address the problems facing their community drew criticism that he is blind to his own privilege and that his own success is attributable more to his family’s wealth than his own efforts.” White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany “responded to the criticism, saying in a statement that it was ‘disgusting to see internet trolls taking Senior Advisor Jared Kushner out of context as they try to distract from President Trump’s undeniable record of accomplishment for the Black community.’”

The Washington Times (10/26, McLaughlin, 492K) reports Kushner, in his remarks, said Black voters understand that “unlike most politicians who have been in Washington for decades who talk and say all the right things, President Trump may not always say the right things, but he does the right things.” Kushner added, “People want results, they are tired of politicians who are promising things and not delivering.”

Kushner: First Step Act Has Been A “Tremendous Success.” Kushner said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (10/26) that the First Step Act has been “a tremendous, tremendous success. I mean, the First Step Act was the prison and criminal justice reform that basically did, you know, two things. It, one, made the prisons more purposeful, right? ... The recidivism rate is too high, so it takes people in prison and it gets them job training or mental health treatment or alcoholism addiction. It helps them with reconnecting with their families and their communities. ... The second thing it did was it rolled back some of the laws from the ‘94 Crime Bill that obviously was passed by President Clinton and obviously, you know, Joe Biden was bragging about having written that bill.”

“Patriot Churches” That Support Trump Appearing Across Country.

The Washington Post (10/26, Bailey, 14.2M) reports on the rise of Patriot Churches, “part of an evolving network of nondenominational start-up congregations that say they want to take the country back for God.” Though “most White conservative Christian churches might only touch on politics around election time and otherwise choose to keep the focus during worship on God, politics and religion are inseparable here.” These churches – currently in Washington State, Virginia, and Tennessee – “belong to what religion experts describe as a loosely organized Christian nationalist movement that has flourished under President Trump.” During his term, Trump “has helped reshape the landscape of American Christianity by elevating Christians once considered fringe, including Messianic Jews, preachers of the prosperity gospel and self-styled prophets.” The “common thread among them is a sense of being under siege and a belief that America has been and should remain a Christian nation.”

National Polls Range From One-Point Trump Lead To Double-Digit Biden Lead.

An IBD/TIPP poll of 982 likely voters nationwide (10/21-10/25) has Joe Biden at 51.7%, President Trump 44.7%, Libertarian Jo Jorgensen 1.4%, and Green Howie Hawkins 0.8%. A Public Opinion Strategies poll of 1,000 likely voters nationwide (10/5-10/8) has Biden at 55% and Trump at 41%. A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 likely voters nationwide (10/21-10/25) has Trump at 48% and Biden at 47%. A USC Dornsife poll of 5,355 likely voters nationwide (10/12-10/25) has Biden at 53.6% and Trump at 42.3%. A Yahoo News/YouGov poll of 1,500 registered voters nationwide (10/23-10/25) has Biden at 51% and Trump at 39%. Biden has a 7.8-point lead in the RCP average and a 9.4-point lead in the FiveThirtyEight average.

Texas. A New York Times/Siena College poll of 802 likely Texas voters (10/20-10/25) has Trump at 47%, Biden 43%, and Jorgensen 3%. A Data For Progress poll of 1,015 likely Texas voters (10/22-10/25) has Biden at 49%, Trump 48%, and Jorgensen 1%.

Florida. A PoliticalIQ poll of 800 likely Florida voters (10/20-10/22) has Biden at 50% and Trump at 48%.

Pennsylvania. A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 653 likely Pennsylvania voters (10/20-10/26) has Biden at 50% and Trump at 45%. An Elections Research Center poll of 800 registered Pennsylvania voters (10/13-10/21) has Biden at 51% and Trump at 44%. An InsiderAdvantage poll of 400 likely Pennsylvania voters (10/25) has Trump at 48.4%, Biden 45.5%, and Jorgensen 3.0%.

Georgia. An Atlanta Journal-Constitution poll of 1,145 likely Georgia voters (10/14-10/23) has Biden at 47%, Trump 46%, and Jorgensen 3%.

Michigan. An Elections Research Center poll of 800 registered Michigan voters (10/13-10/21) has Biden at 51% and Trump at 42%.

Wisconsin. A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 664 likely Wisconsin voters (10/20-10/26) has Biden at 53% and Trump at 44%. An Elections Research Center poll of 800 registered Wisconsin voters (10/13-10/21) has Biden at 51% and Trump at 43%.

More Votes Have Been Cast Than Were Cast Early Or Absentee In 2016 Election.

The AP (10/26, Riccardi, Kastanis) reports, “With eight days before Election Day, more people already have cast ballots in this year’s presidential election than voted early or absentee in the 2016 race as the start of in-person early voting in big states led to a surge in turnout in recent days. The opening of early voting locations in Florida, Texas and elsewhere has piled millions of new votes on top of the mail ballots arriving at election offices as voters try to avoid crowded places on Nov. 3 during the coronavirus pandemic.”

On ABC World News Tonight (10/26, story 3, 3:25, 7.31M), David Muir said “more than 62 million ballots [have been] cast so far...breaking records in battleground states including Florida. And early ballots in Texas now adding up to 82% of the entire vote in Texas just four years ago.” Norah O’Donnell reported on the CBS Evening News (10/26, story 2, 1:30, 4.26M), “Turnout is already smashing records...and today we saw long lines greeting voters in Maryland as it became the 41st state now open for in-person voting.” The Baltimore Sun (10/26, Opilo, 1.33M) reports, “Maryland’s voting centers opened to lines of hundreds of people at locations across the state Monday, the first of eight days of early voting. ... About 80 centers are being offered across the state from Monday through Nov. 2, more than in a typical year, in hopes of spacing out voters and avoiding the spread of the virus.” The Charlotte Observer (10/26, 470K) reports, “North Carolina is among the key states leading the country in voter turnout among young people. Across the state, 204,986 people ages 18-29 cast their early ballots as of Oct. 21.” The Oregonian (10/26, 1M) reports, “As of Friday, 1.17 million Oregonians had their ballots logged at their county elections office. In 2016, it took another full week – until the Friday immediately before Election Day – for turnout to reach that mark.”

CNN (10/26, Cohen, 83.16M) reports on its website that Democrats “have amassed significant leads over Republicans in pre-Election Day voting in key states...yet as early voting enters its last week across the country, the lopsided Democratic advantage is already starting to narrow. ... It appears that massive leads for Democrats from mail-in voting have been tempered by more balanced turnout at in-person early voting sites in battlegrounds like Florida, Nevada and North Carolina.” The Orlando Sentinel (10/26, Man, 536K) reports, “After a full week of in-person early voting in all of Florida’s major counties, Democrats remain significantly ahead – but Republicans are closing the gap in ballots cast in the presidential election. As of Monday morning, 2.6 million Democrats had voted by mail or at early voting centers, about 354,654 more than the Republican total of 2.2 million.”

Supreme Court Requires Wisconsin Absentee Ballots To Be In By Election Day. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (10/26, 632K) reports the Supreme Court “upheld Wisconsin’s voting laws Monday, rejecting an effort to require the counting of absentee ballots that are sent back to election officials on or just before Election Day. The court’s 5-3 ruling means that absentee ballots will be counted only if they are in the hands of municipal clerks by the time polls close Nov. 3.” The New York Times (10/26, Liptak, 18.61M) and the Washington Post

(10/26, Barnes, 14.2M) cover the ruling.

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Qian, Barry, Blostein, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the US Postal Service is urging voters to put their ballots in the mail at least a week before their state's deadline, with average delivery times in some states exceeding six days in recent months. NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 8, 3:10, Holt, 2.16M) looked at potential issues with mail-in ballots, with Cynthia McFadden reporting on the "conservative estimate" that 1% of "mail-in ballots will be rejected in the swing states like North Carolina where polls point to a neck-and-neck battle."

The Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) says in an editorial that in order to avoid confusion on Election Night and possible "disaster" in the aftermath, Pennsylvania should lift rules "barring election officials from even starting to process, let alone count, mail-in ballots before Election Day. County election officials have begged the legislature to allow them before Nov. 3 to begin sorting and verifying mail-in ballots."

Police Weigh Show Of Force At Polls Amid Concerns About Voter Intimidation. The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Elinson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports police across the US are trying to find a balance between preparation for possible violence at the polls without deploying a show of force that could intimidate voters. Plans vary; New York City plans to boost police presence at polling places, while Michigan is attempting to ban any firearms at the polls. The Washington Post (10/26, Berman, 14.2M) reports Michigan officials have "announced a ban on openly carried weapons at polling sites, saying guns could intimidate voters or election workers." But "gun rights groups challenged the move in court and have argued it forces Michigan residents to choose between their right to vote and their right to bear arms."

Boston Man Accused Of Burning Ballot Box Said To Be "Emotionally Disturbed." The Boston Globe (10/26, 972K) reports that the Boston man "charged with setting a ballot box in Copley Square on fire early Sunday is emotionally disturbed and does not appear to be 'plotting against our democracy,' Suffolk County's top prosecutor said." Worldy Armand was slated "to appear in Boston Municipal Court on Monday on a charge of willful and malicious burning."

Florida Man Accused Of Stealing Bulldozer To Knock Down Biden Signs. The AP (10/26, 10.31M) reports a Florida man has been accused of stealing a bulldozer from a construction site, "driving it into a neighborhood and knocking down campaign signs for Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden, according to authorities and homeowners." The man, who "took the bulldozer in Haines City, Fla. on Saturday and repeatedly destroyed Biden signs in full view of people who live in the neighborhood," has been charged with grand theft auto and trespassing.

Twitter To "Pre-Bunk" False Information About Election. NBC News (10/26, 6.14M) reports on its website that Twitter "said Monday it would begin placing messages at the top of users' feeds to pre-emptively debunk false information about voting by mail and election results, an escalation of the tech company's battle against misinformation. Twitter is calling the messages a 'pre-bunk,' something it says it has never done, because the debunking is not a reaction to an existing tweet with misinformation."

Trump Holds Three Events In Pennsylvania.

The Philadelphia Inquirer (10/26, Walsh, 347K) reports President Trump "barnstormed across Pennsylvania" on Monday, "holding three separate rallies where he touted his accomplishments [and] attacked Joe Biden's energy plans." In Allentown, Trump said, "Biden's plan is an economic death sentence for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. He will eradicate your energy and send Pennsylvania into a crippling depression." The Inquirer says Trump "has repeatedly and falsely accused Biden of promising to ban natural gas drilling. Biden has said he will halt new leases for fracking on publicly owned lands, but will allow existing drilling operations to continue." Trump later held "rallies near Lancaster and Altoona."

Paula Reid said on the CBS Evening News (10/26, lead story, 3:50, O'Donnell, 4.26M) that Trump, "down by seven points" in Pennsylvania in the latest CBS poll, "blanketed the Keystone State with three separate stops. His goal: Turn out longtime Republicans and overcome Joe Biden's gains in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh." Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (10/26, lead story, 3:55, Muir, 7.31M) that "a surprise victory" in Pennsylvania in 2016 "helped put Trump in the White House. ... At three packed rallies, the President spoke for some four hours. But he barely mentioned the COVID-19 pandemic, and made no mention whatsoever of the new outbreak at the White House." Hallie Jackson said on NBC Nightly News (10/26, lead story, 1:55, Holt, 2.16M) that there were "few masks and no social distancing" at the three events.

KYW-TV Philadelphia (10/26, 48K) reported Trump was "barnstorming Pennsylvania trying to make up some ground with voters." WTAE-TV Pittsburgh (10/26, 83K) reported Trump "attacked Joe Biden for his stance on fracking. The President said that fracking cannot be eliminated because it is saving Pennsylvanians a lot of money." Trump: "Fracking is saving Pennsylvania families $2,500 a year, at least, and it's saving families all over the country. We are energy independent, and you are a big part of it, and they want to end that." WHTM-TV Harrisburg, PA (10/26, 2.08M) reported Trump "said there would be a coronavirus vaccine 'momentarily,' but then said by the end of the year and he said he wants to get back to a normal life again."

The Allentown Morning Call (10/26, Sheehan, Wagaman, Turner, 555K) reports, "To wild cheers from thousands of supporters who lined up in a cold rain hours before his speech, [Trump] took the stage at a Northampton County rally Monday morning, launching into a familiar litany of campaign claims and warning of 'massive fraud' as the only way he will lose reelection." Later at Lancaster County Airport, Lancaster Online (10/26, 81K) reports, Trump "spoke for 90 minutes to a crowd of several thousand gathered...delivering a speech that leaned heavily on his greatest hits – calling his opponent 'Sleepy Joe,' blasting President Obama for surveilling his campaign four years ago, blaming the 'fake news' media for bad press about him, celebrating the border wall and boasting of the big tax cuts his administration delivered."

The Washington Times (10/26, Boyer, 492K) reports Trump accused Gov. Tom Wolf (D) "of trying to block his three rallies in the state on Monday due to coronavirus concerns. He said the governor 'made it almost impossible to find any site' for the rallies." The Daily Beast (10/26, 1.39M) reports Trump "escalated his attacks" on Wolf, "threatening to not come to the state's aid as the deadly COVID-19 pandemic continues to plague it." The Washington Post (10/26, Scherer, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports Trump "declared Monday that the pandemic was 'ending anyway,' further tying his reelection bid to his ability to convince voters...that the viral danger is fading. Financial markets fell as he spoke, with investors reacting to the growing infection rates and dwindling hope of a pre-election stimulus package."

The AP (10/26, Miller, Jaffe) says Trump's campaign schedule "suggested he's on the defensive in Pennsylvania, viewed by his aides as critical to his path to 270 electoral votes." The Harrisburg Patriot-News (10/26, 427K) says Trump's "blitz on Pennsylvania came as polls show Biden leading Trump both nationally and in Pennsylvania. As of the weekend, Biden led Trump 50.3% to 44.8% in Pennsylvania, based on the average of recent polls compiled by FiveThirtyEight – nearly the same as the beginning of the month. The average of national polls showed Biden leading 52% to 42.9%."

Several reports look at Trump's comments about women. Bloomberg (10/26, Sink, Fabian, 4.73M) reports Trump "made fun of" the way Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) laughs, called House Speaker Pelosi "crazy" and said one of his female interviewers was 'crazed,' yet insisted at a Pennsylvania rally on Monday that suburban women will support his re-election. ... Women voters have become a vulnerability for Trump in his bid for a second term." The Los Angeles Times (10/26, 4.64M) similarly says "polls show Trump is trailing Democrat Joe Biden by double digits with women voters. But it hasn't stopped the president from attacking, insulting and patronizing women he considers political enemies, or even just not supportive enough." Ed O'Keefe said on the CBS Evening News (10/26, story 3, 0:55, O'Donnell, 4.26M) that Trump's "numbers continue to slip with suburban women and older voters."

Reuters (10/26, Scheyder), USA Today (10/26, Rossman, 10.31M), the Wall Street Journal (10/26, Ballhaus, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Politico (10/26, McGraw, 4.29M), The Hill (10/26, Chalfant, 2.98M), Breitbart (10/26, 673K), and the Fox News (10/26, Henney, 27.59M) website are among the other outlets covering the events, while Townhall (10/26, Pavlich, 177K) previews Trump's upcoming rally schedule and the New York Times (10/26, Qiu, Shear, 18.61M) examines recent rallies, calling them "the core of Trump's Campaign, and a font of lies and misinformation."

Trump-Biden Episode Of "60 Minutes" Get Show's Top Ratings Since 2018.

Variety (10/26, Thorne, 898K) reports, "Donald Trump's contentious interview with veteran '60 Minutes' host Lesley Stahl, as well as Joe Biden's less eventful sit-down, scored the show its largest audience since 2018. The dual Biden and Trump interviews, the latter of which the President cut short, drew a total of 16.8 million total viewers on CBS and scored a 2.4 rating among adults 18-49, per Nielsen time adjusted fast national numbers. That represents the most viewers to tune in since the infamous Stormy Daniels interview from March two years ago."

Fundraising Emails Suggest Trump Will Host Election Night Event At His DC Hotel.

The AP (10/26, Madhani) reports President Trump "has his eye on hosting an election night party at his own hotel in the nation's capital. Over the weekend, the campaign pushed out fundraising emails in the president's name offering donors the chance to enter a drawing 'to join Team Trump at the Election Night Party in my favorite hotel,' in Washington, suggesting he will use" the Trump International Hotel "as the backdrop for reacting to election results."

Pence Campaigns In Northern Minnesota.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (10/26, 1.04M) reports Vice President Pence "returned to northern Minnesota on Monday," addressing a crowd of about 650 in the Iron Range town of Hibbing. The visit "comes as five of his aides, including his chief of staff and his senior political adviser, tested positive for COVID-19 over the weekend," and "the crowd far exceeded state rules limiting events to no more than 250 people." The Duluth News Tribune (10/26, 151K) reports Pence has been "in a campaign sprint with events around the country as Election Day looms." Minnesota's Mesabi Daily Tribune (10/26) reports Pence's campaign stop came "despite Democratic calls for him to cancel his travel schedule" due to the COVID diagnoses close to him.

Politico (10/26, Orr, 4.29M) says Pence is "convinced the come-from-behind dream, which is animating the Trump campaign's truest believers in the last eight days of the 2020 race, remains feasible – even as a growing cluster of Covid-19 infections among the vice president's staff draws renewed attention to his administration's inability to control the pandemic."

Biden Pays "Surprise Visit" To Chester, Pennsylvania.

The Delaware County (PA) Daily Times (10/26, Bannan, 92K) reports Joe Biden "made a surprise visit to volunteers preparing Democratic 'Get Out The Vote' packages at campaign headquarters" in Chester, Pennsylvania, on Monday. Biden "spoke to the about two dozen volunteers for about 15 minutes, thanking them for their efforts and encouraging them to stay safe." The Washington Post (10/26, Wagner, Firozi, 14.2M) reports Biden "continued to knock [President] Trump's handling of the coronavirus pandemic" during the stop. Jonathan Karl reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/26, lead story, 3:55, Muir, 7.31M) that Biden said, "I promise you this: I'm never going to give up. I don't know what we'll inherit on January 21, but at the rate [Trump is] going, it's not going to be good. But we're going to be able to make it."

The Philadelphia Inquirer (10/26, Tornoe, Brennan, Tamari, Seidman, McCrystal, Walsh) reports Biden "said Trump should have 'a little bit of shame, because people are dying' of the coronavirus, and struck back against Trump's claims that he would kill Pennsylvania's oil industry." Biden said, "I'm not shutting down oil fields, I'm not eliminating fracking." KYW-TV Philadelphia (10/26) reports on its website that Biden "criticized the president's pandemic response, accusing him of giving up trying to control the virus. Biden also said he won't end fracking, as the president has alleged." WHTM-TV Harrisburg, PA (10/26, 35K) reports on its website that Biden also "answered questions about the Supreme Court."

Bloomberg (10/26, Pager, 4.73M) says that while Trump "blitzes the battleground states with as many as three rallies a day, Biden has only visited one state, Pennsylvania, in the last week." Biden's campaign says the scheduling "bolsters Biden's argument that he is taking the pandemic seriously." Politico (10/26, Korecki, Caputo, 4.29M) similarly says that Biden's "low-key approach is highly unusual this close to an election, but it's a testament to the extraordinary dynamics of the 2020 race, with a deadly pandemic reaching crisis levels in dozens of states. Democrats point to fresh polling that shows Trump's rallies are a net negative for him in the nation's core swing states, where concerns about the spread of coronavirus are strong." But Breitbart (10/26, 673K) says Trump "appeared to have [Biden] out of his basement after he mocked his opponent for having 'waved a white flag' while speaking with reporters in Pennsylvania on Monday."

Biden To Visit Iowa Friday. The Des Moines Register (10/26, 404K) reports Biden "will travel to Iowa Friday, marking his first in-person visit of the general election cycle. ... The last-minute visit underscores how competitive the race for president has become in Iowa. Although Trump carried the state by 9 percentage points in 2016, a September Des Moines Register/Mediacom Iowa Poll showed him tied with Biden at 47% to 47%." The New York Times (10/26, Ember, Thrush, 18.61M) runs a report under the headline "Biden, In Sign Of Confidence, Will Visit Iowa In Race's Final Days."

Harris Calls Trump's "Name-Calling" Predictable And "Childish."

Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA), appearing on ABC's The View (10/26, 2.04M), was asked about President Trump's attacks on her. She said, "It's so predictable coming from him. I mean, it's childish, it's name-calling on behalf of the President of the United States, and, again, the American people deserve so much more from their President. Look, the name-calling is not new to me – it's not new to anybody who played on the playground as a child. But this is not the playground."

McEnany Called Biden "A Man Of The People," Trump A "Tycoon," In 2015 Interview.

CNN (10/26, Kaczynski, 83.16M) reports on its website that during a 2015 interview previewing the 2016 presidential race, Kayleigh McEnany, now White House Press Secretary, said, "I think the Republicans run into a problem if it is Joe Biden and if it is maybe a Trump on the other side. Because Joe Biden, one of the things he is remarkable at, is really kind of being a man of the people and resonating with middle class voters. Feeling like – coming off as human. ... I think at the end of the day, probably Joe, although if Trump is against Joe, I think the juxtaposition of kind of the man of the people and kind of this tycoon, is a problem."

Biden Outpacing Trump Fundraising In "Wealthiest And Most Educated" Areas.

The New York Times (10/26, Goldmacher, Koeze, Shorey, Gamio, 18.61M) looks at fundraising in the presidential race, reporting that Joe Biden "has outraised President Trump on the strength of some of the wealthiest and most educated ZIP codes in the United States, running up the fund-raising score in cities and suburbs so resoundingly that he collected more money than Mr. Trump on all but two days in the last two months."

Media Analyses: Georgia Has Shifted Away From GOP.

Several outlets look at the unexpectedly tight presidential state in what Norah O'Donnell on the CBS Evening News (10/26, story 8, 2:05, 4.26M) called "the reliably red state of Georgia. Joe Biden is tied with President Trump, but a Democrat hasn't won the Peach State since Bill Clinton all the way back in 1992." The Washington Post (10/26, Sullivan, Olorunnipa, 14.2M) reports Biden will visit the state on Tuesday, "a gamble for a nominee who has limited his appearances in the final days of the race. ... But the Biden camp is pinning its hopes on demographic shifts and rising anger" with Trump in the state. The New York Times (10/26, Fausset, 18.61M) says Georgia Democrats, "stung in the past by premature talk" of a realignment, "are careful to temper their optimism. The Republican Party remains well-organized, popular and powerful here. ... Yet there is a bipartisan consensus that the state is not exactly what it was, even just a few years ago."

Clinton Says She Does Not Want Job In A Biden Administration.

In an interview with Kara Swisher of the New York Times (10/26, 18.61M), Hillary Clinton said she does not want a formal position in a possible Biden Administration, with Swisher saying Clinton seemed more interested in acting as an outside "counselor." Clinton said, "[I will] provide any information that they need...[but] no, I don't want a job. I just want to be able to exhale."

Democrats Urging Michael Bloomberg To Invest In Senate Races.

CNBC (10/26, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports on its website, "Democratic fundraisers are privately urging billionaire...Mike Bloomberg and his team to invest in hotly contested Senate races with just over a week until Election Day, according to people familiar with the matter. The pleas come as" the Senate Leadership Fund super PAC, aligned with Senate Majority Leader McConnell, "floods these races with cash on behalf of the GOP candidates."

WSJournal Profiles Alabama Senate Race.

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Ngo, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) profiles the Alabama Senate race, where Sen. Doug Jones (D-AL), who is running behind Tommy Tuberville (R), has tried to stake out centrist positions in order to please constituents in the conservative state.

Ossoff, Warnock Lead Georgia Senate Polls.

An Atlanta Journal-Constitution poll of 1,145 likely Georgia voters (10/14-10/23) has Jon Ossoff (D) at 46%, Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) 45%, and Libertarian Shane Hazel 4% in the state's Senate race. In the Senate special election race, Raphael Warnock (D) is at 34%, Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) 21%, Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) 20%, Matt Lieberman (D) 4%, Libertarian Brian Slowinski 3%, and Ed Tarver (D) 1%.

NYTimes Analysis: Iowa's Greenfield Among Democratic "Moderates" Being Cast As "Radicals."

The New York Times (10/26, Herndon, 18.61M) looks at the Senate race in Iowa as an example of how Republicans are casting "moderate" Democratic candidates like Theresa Greenfield "as radicals," linking them with Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) and other high-profile figures on the Democratic left. Greenfield, the Times writes, has been talking "about expanding job training programs and health care coverage through a public insurance option" and criticizing her own party "for not prioritizing an infrastructure bill and vocational education" as she campaigns against Sen. Joni Ernst (R-IA).

McConnell Opponents Boosting Libertarian Senate Candidate In Kentucky.

The Daily Beast (10/26, 1.39M) reports, "In a last-ditch effort to unseat" Senate Majority Leader McConnell, a "deep-pocketed" new super PAC called True Kentucky Patriots has started buying ads on behalf of Kentucky Libertarian Senate nominee Brad Barron, "calling him 'Kentucky's true conservative for U.S. Senate.' ... The group is clearly designed to peel off conservative votes from McConnell." FEC records show the group "is affiliated with one of the Senate race's largest independent spenders," the Ditch Fund, which is affiliated with Amy McGrath (D).

Minnesota Senate Candidate Lewis Undergoes Emergency Hernia Surgery.

The AP (10/26, Karnowski) reports ex-Rep. Jason Lewis (R-MN), who is running for Senate in Minnesota, "underwent successful emergency surgery for a severe internal hernia on Monday." His campaign "said the condition could have been life-threatening if not treated quickly." The Minneapolis Star Tribune (10/26, 1.04M) reports Sen. Tina Smith (D-MN) "tweeted that she and her husband wish Lewis 'a successful surgery and a speedy recovery.'" Politico (10/26, Arkin, 4.29M), The Hill (10/26, Greenwood, 2.98M), Breitbart (10/26, 673K), and Townhall (10/26, O'Brien, 177K) also report.

WPost Analysis: Harrison Wagers That South Carolina Is Changing.

The Washington Post (10/26, Samuels, 14.2M) reports that "with much of the country grappling with the role of race in society," Jaime Harrison (D) "is placing a political bet that once seemed unthinkable but now feels plausible: that South Carolina, where the Confederate flag flew on the State House grounds until 2015, could become the first in the country to send two African Americans to the U.S. Senate. ... Central to Harrison's wager is that the same state that elected vocal segregationists to hold the very seat he is seeking, the seat now held by" Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC), "one of President Trump's most prominent defenders, is prepared to take its place as a trendsetter in a changing South."

Cornyn Leads In Two Texas Senate Polls.

A New York Times/Siena College poll of 802 likely Texas voters (10/20-10/25) has Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX) at 48%, MJ Hegar (D) 38%, and Libertarian Kerry McKennon 4% in the state's Senate race. A Data For Progress poll of 1,015 likely Texas voters (10/22-10/25) has Cornyn at 48%, Hegar 46%, and McKennon 1%. The Dallas Morning News (10/26, 946K) reports Hegar has in recent days been fundraising off Cornyn's support for the nomination of Amy Coney Barrett to the Supreme Court.

First Democrat Announces 2022 Challenge To Johnson In Wisconsin.

The New York Times (10/26, Thrush, 18.61M) reports Outagamie County Executive Tom Nelson on Monday announced that he will challenge Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) in 2022. Johnson "has not yet said if he will seek re-election to a third term." Politico (10/26, Korecki, 4.29M) says the move "gives Nelson a head start on other Democrats expected to flock to challenge Johnson in the weeks after the presidential election," including possible Lt. Gov. Mandela Barnes (D) and state Attorney General Josh Kaul (D). The Hill (10/26, 2.98M) also reports on Nelson's early entry.

Pelosi Says She Is Already Focusing On 2022 Midterms.

The AP (10/26, Mascaro) reports that in an interview, House Speaker Pelosi "said she feels so confident Democrats will keep the House this election, she's already preparing to win the next one in 2022." Pelosi said, "This year, I'm trying to win it two years in advance – by being so substantial in this election that as soon as we start into the next year, people will see our strength." Politico (10/26, Caygle, Bresnahan, Ferris, 4.29M) says Pelosi "will no longer be the party's leader if [Joe] Biden wins the White House on Nov. 3, but her influence may only grow. If Democrats also win the Senate, the incoming president is expected to rely heavily on the Democratic agenda passed by the House that's been blocked...during the last two years."

Politico (10/26, Mutnick, 4.29M) reports that "in the most competitive 94 districts, Democrats have booked over $177 million in ads since Sept. 1, while their GOP opponents have booked $93 million." The Washington Post (10/26, Firozi, Bade, 14.2M) reports Democrats "are increasingly bullish that they will flip multiples seats in districts where President Trump will win on election night, outrunning the top of the Democratic ticket and giving [Pelosi] a chance to expand her majority." The New York Times (10/26, Broadwater, 18.61M) reports that across the country, moderate Democrats "are playing a pivotal role that has positioned Democrats to maintain control of the House and build their majority."

Cox, Valadao Facing Off In CA21 Rematch.

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/26, 2.67M) looks at the CA21 race, where freshman Rep. TJ Cox (D-CA) is facing ex-Rep. David Valadao (R-CA), who he defeated in 2018 "by 862 votes in a contest that wasn't decided until nearly a month after election day." This year, Cox is trying to "tie Valadao to President Trump, especially on health care, which is a major issue in one of the poorest congressional districts in California." In a debate last week, Valadao "focused on the financial and ethical problems that have plagued Cox during his two years in office, saying that 'pretty much anyone who has been paying attention' would agree that the former engineer is the most corrupt member of Congress."

Van Drew Fights To Hold NJ2 Seat After Party Switch.

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Avila, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) has a feature on Rep. Jeff Van Drew (R-NJ) who is trying to win reelection in NJ2 after switching parties last year. Van Drew, who had been a conservative Democrat, had banked on continued support, but his switch led former teacher Amy Kennedy (D), who is married to ex-Rep. Patrick Kennedy (D-RI), to enter the race.

Democrats See Trump Weighing Down GOP Candidates In NY1 And NY2.

The New York Times (10/26, Nir, 18.61M) reports under the headline "Trump's Weakened Hold On Long Island Puts 2 G.O.P. House Seats At Risk" that both NY1 Rep. Lee Zeldin (R-NY), "an ardent supporter" of the President, and Andrew Garbarino (R), running in open-seat NY2, are facing headwinds. Democrats point "to three factors that could lead to possible victory: President Trump's deepening unpopularity; the growing number of Democrats in the area; and the fact that" Rep. Peter King (R-NY) is not seeking reelection in NY2.

Congressional Leadership Fund Injecting $2.05M Into NC8 Race.

The Charlotte Observer (10/26, 470K) reports that the Congressional Leadership Fund will spend $2.05 million to aid Rep. Richard Hudson (R-NC) in NC8. The Observer says "the late-stage move...is a sign that Concord's Hudson, whose district backed" President Trump by nine points in 2016, "could be in trouble."

Drug Legalization Ballot Measures Indicate Shifting Perspectives Amid Pandemic.

The New York Times (10/26, Johnson, 18.61M) reports that Oregon is proposing a solution to its residents' addiction problems with Measure 110, a proposal that "would be one of the most radical drug-law overhauls in the nation's history, eliminating criminal penalties entirely for personal use amounts of drugs such as heroin, methamphetamine and cocaine." Tax revenues from drug sales "would be channeled toward drug treatment." Supporters of the proposal "say the swirling, transformational forces of 2020 – the coronavirus pandemic, as well as the wave of social unrest over race, policing and incarceration – have highlighted a need for top-to-bottom change." However, "opponents say decriminalization courts disaster by normalizing drugs that carry the risk of deadly addiction." Elsewhere, marijuana legalization is being considered by states that previously resisted it.

Silverado Fire Forces Thousands From Their Homes In California.

ABC World News Tonight (10/26, story 5, 1:45, Muir, 7.31M) reported that there is an "emergency unfolding in California...fueled by the most severe Santa Ana winds this year." The Silverado Fire erupted early Monday morning "with wind gusts up to 70 miles an hour. Tens of thousands have already been forced from their homes" on Monday alone. Later that day, there was "word of a second fire breaking out in that same area." The CBS Evening News (10/26, story 5, 1:25, O'Donnell, 4.26M) reported that "hurricane force winds have prompted urgent red flag fire warnings tonight in Southern California, where a new wildfire has forced tens of thousands from their homes." CBS' Jonathan Vigliotti said, "The flames being pushed by powerful Santa Ana winds, the strongest all year, gusts topping 70 miles per hour. The fire that start up in the hills will be pushed into neighborhoods like this. Because the wind is so strong, there are no air drops so fire crews are on foot, trying to stop these flames from spreading. It already jumped two major highways, erratic winds already taking a toll, tonight at least two first responders injured fighting this blaze.”

NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 5, 1:15, Holt, 2.16M) said, “Racing for an unprecedented wind event across the state, more than a million have had their power cut to prevent the very kind of disaster that could unfold. ... On the heels of what’s been a historic and deadly wildfire season, the winds spanning these flames are expected to last another 24 hours.”

The AP (10/26, Weber, Rodriguez) reports, “The smoky fire exploded in size to over 6 square miles (16 square kilometers) within a few hours of breaking out around dawn in Orange County, south of Los Angeles.” Strong gusts “pushed flames along brushy ridges in Silverado Canyon and near houses in the sprawling city of Irvine, home to about 280,000 residents. There was no containment.” The Los Angeles Times (10/26, Vives, 4.64M) reports the area “is dotted with two-story stucco homes, and some are still in the middle of construction. Almost everyone had evacuated by late morning, with the exception of one or two families who were still gathering their belongings before fleeing.”

The New York Times (10/26, Facio-Krajcer, Wright, Diaz, 18.61M) reports the state’s largest utility, Pacific Gas and Electric, “began shutting off electricity to 361,000 customers in 36 counties, including Alameda and Contra Costa Counties, the company said in a statement.” PG&E “said the shut-offs were in response to a ‘significant, offshore wind event starting Sunday that is forecast to have the driest humidity levels and the strongest winds of the wildfire season thus far.’” The company expects to begin restoring residents’ power on Tuesday.

Among the outlets also reporting on the fire are USA Today (10/26, Woodyard, Culver, 10.31M), the Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M), and the San Francisco Chronicle (10/26, King, Mishanec, 2.67M).

WSJournal: Nevada Energy Bill Would Raise Costs, Not Be Effective.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Nevadans are facing a vote on requiring that state utilities generate half their electricity from renewable resources by 2030, however, this measure would result in higher energy costs as well as shortages.

FBI Has Not Provided Required Report On White Supremacist Terror Threat.

The Daily Beast (10/26, 1.39M) reports the FBI “has failed to produce a legally required report detailing the scope of white supremacist and other domestic terrorism, despite mounting concerns that the upcoming election could spark far-right violence.” House Homeland Security Chairman Bennie Thompson believes this leaves US citizens without information about what the agency believes is America’s biggest domestic terrorist threat. Thompson said the public “needs to know who the real, documented terrorists in this country, based on the FBI’s intelligence, really are.” He added, “I would hate to think that they are reacting to President Trump’s machinations about his dislike for senior leadership in the FBI.” He said he thinks FBI Director Wray “understands that if he wades too far in the water around this subject, he might drown, or get fired, to be honest.”

RCP Average Has Trump’s Job Approval At 44.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump’s job approval stands at 44.6%, and his disapproval at 53.3%. The President’s approval is up 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is down 0.3.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 “likely voters” (10/22-10/24) finds Trump’s approval at 52%, and his disapproval at 46%.

Vietnam Signs Onto Controversial World Bank Forest Loss Prevention Program.

The Nikkei Asian Review (JPN) (10/27, Hoang) reports Vietnam “is set to receive tens of millions of dollars to help it keep a promise not to cut down trees, part of a controversial World Bank program that critics say does not produce its intended effect – carbon emission reductions.” Vietnam “has signed a contract that calls on the World Bank to pay out $51.5 million if Vietnam makes good on multiple pledges to protect its forests. It is the first Asian country to make such a deal.” World Bank Vietnam Director Carolyn Turk, announcing the deal last week, said, “It opens the door for similar forms of international carbon finance in the future.”

Commentary: The ECB Needs To Do More To “Green” Its Monetary Policy.

In an op-ed for the Financial Times (10/26, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), Jens van’t Klooster writes, “Ursula von der Leyen’s European Commission is thundering forward with its efforts to ‘green’ the continent’s economy. The plan is to cut...”

Top Doctor Warns France Has “Lost Control” Of Virus.

The AP (10/26, Corder) reports Jean-François Delfraissy, the president of the scientific council that advises the French government on the coronavirus, “warned Monday that his country has ‘lost control of the epidemic,’ a day after health authorities reported more than 52,000 new coronavirus cases as nations across Europe enact more sweeping restrictions to try to slow surging infection rates.” Delfraissy said France is in a “very difficult, even critical situation.” Delfraissy added, “There probably are more than 50,000 new cases every day. Our estimate at the Scientific Council is closer to 100,000 – twice as many.” He continued, “Between those who aren’t tested and asymptomatic patients, we’re close to that number of cases. This means the virus is spreading extremely fast.”

Russian Airstrike In Syria Targets Fighters Backed By Turkey.

The AP (10/26, Deeb) reports that “an airstrike on a rebel training camp in northwestern Syria on Monday killed more than 50 Turkish-backed fighters and wounded nearly as many, in one of the heaviest blows to the opposition’s strongest groups.” According to the AP, “The opposition blamed Russia for the daytime strike and vowed to retaliate for the attack on Faylaq al-Sham.” The AP says Russia and Turkey, “although they support opposite sides in Syria’s conflict, have worked together to maintain a cease-fire in the last enclave of Syria’s rebels, centered on the province of Idlib. But the attack comes as relations between the two countries have shown signs of strain over Turkey’s increased military involvement in a region stretching from Syria to the Caucasus and the Mediterranean.”

According to the Washington Post (10/26, Dadouch, Fahim, 14.2M), “The strikes killed at least dozens of soldiers from the Sham Legion, a rebel group that falls under the Turkish-backed National Front for Liberation, an umbrella rebel group in northwestern Syria.” The Post says Russia “accuses the Sham Legion of sending some of its troops to Libya and Azerbaijan to fight as mercenaries on behalf of Turkey against forces aligned with Russia.”

The New York Times (10/26, Saad, Gall, 18.61M) reports that it was “Russian war planes” that “struck [the] camp of Turkish-backed rebel fighters.” The Times says the strike “kill[ed] dozens of Syrian fighters as well as civilians harvesting olives nearby.” The Times cites “a rebel spokesman,” and says that “early reports put the toll at 34 dead and 70 wounded, but the death toll quickly rose to 60 with news of civilians killed outside the camp.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Osseiran, Coles, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage.

Tice’s Mother Says Pompeo “Undermining” Efforts To Secure Release From Syria.

The Washington Post (10/26, Morello, 14.2M) reports Debra Tice, the mother of Austin Tice, a freelance journalist who was taken captive in Syria in 2012, on Monday “called President Trump ‘an advocate and an ally’ to families with loved ones in captivity overseas, but she had scathing words” for Secretary of State Pompeo, “whom she characterized as standing in the way of freedom for her son.” She said, “Unfortunately for Austin, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo is undermining the President’s crucial outreach, refusing any form of direct diplomatic engagement with the Syrian government.” According to the Post, “Tice and her husband, Marc, have worked tirelessly to draw attention to their son’s case.”

Kushner Says There Will Be More Middle East Peace Deals.

White House Senior Adviser Jared Kushner said on the Hugh Hewitt Show (10/26), “The notion with peace is that it can become as big as you allow it to be. So, what happened here was really barriers were broken in the Arab-Israeli conflict that had been up for a very long time.” Kushner added, “I believe that we’ve planted some seeds now, and I think that the short-term returns have been great. But I do believe that the long-term returns are going to be extraordinary if we keep leaning into this. And I do think there’ll be more peace deals.”

Esper And Pompeo In India For Meetings With Their Counterparts.

Reuters (10/26) reports that the Indian Defense Ministry announced on Monday that the US and India “will sign a military agreement on sharing of satellite data during the current visit” by Defense Secretary Esper. According to Reuters, the Basic Exchange and Cooperation Agreement on Geospatial Cooperation “will allow India access to topographical, nautical and aeronautical data for better accuracy of weapons like missiles and drones. ... ‘The two ministers expressed satisfaction that agreement of BECA will be signed during the visit,’ the Indian defence ministry said following Esper’s talks with Defence Minister Rajnath Singh.”

Reuters (10/26, Miglani, Prusty) also reports that Esper and Secretary of State Pompeo “flew into New Delhi for talks with Indian leaders at a time when India is locked in its most serious military standoff with China at the disputed Himalayan border in decades.” Reuters says Pompeo “separately met Indian Foreign Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar.” Reuters adds that “after India, Pompeo will travel to Sri Lanka and the Maldives, two Indian Ocean countries where China has financed and built various infrastructure, to the alarm of India and the United States.”

China Says It Will Sanction US Companies Over Arms Sales To Taiwan.

Reuters (10/26, Lun Tian, Crossley, Qiu) reports that on Monday, the Chinese Foreign Ministry announced that China will impose sanctions on Lockheed Martin, Boeing and Raytheon, as well as “other US companies it says are involved in Washington’s arms sales to Taiwan,” but “did not spell out what form the sanctions would take.” According to Reuters, the State Department “has approved the potential sale of three weapons systems to Taiwan, including sensors, missiles and artillery that could have a total value of $1.8 billion.” Reuters reports that China has “imposed sanctions on Lockheed Martin and other US companies in the past for selling weapons to Taiwan, though it is unclear what form the penalties have taken.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Wong, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Zhao Lijian said during a Monday briefing that China “firmly opposes” and condemns the sale of arms by the US to Taiwan, which “severely damage Chinese sovereignty and security interests.”

NYTimes Analysis: Coronavirus Exposes Gaps In China's Goal To End Extreme Poverty. In an analysis, the New York Times (10/26, Hernández, 18.61M) says that despite Chinese President Xi Jinping's vow to "leave no one behind," the coronavirus pandemic has exposed the shortcomings of the Chinese Communist Party "in providing its most vulnerable citizens with more than the barest of social safeguards, especially in rural areas." Moreover, "some experts warn that the government's response to the crisis – favoring infrastructure spending and tax breaks for companies instead of direct aid for families – may widen China's gap between rich and poor, which is already among the highest in the world." Millions of individuals with low incomes "are working fewer hours at lower pay, depleting savings and taking out loans to survive."

Lukashenko Targeted By General Strike In Belarus.

The AP (10/26) reports that on Monday, "factory workers, students and business owners in Belarus...began a strike to demand that authoritarian President Alexander Lukashenko resign after more than two months of continuing mass protests following a disputed election." According to the AP, "Most state-run enterprises continued to operate despite the strike, which was called by opposition leader Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya. But analysts said it helped mobilize opposition supporters for a new round of confrontation with authorities, which poses a significant challenge for Lukashenko, who has run the country for 26 years and until recently has been able to successfully stifle dissent." The New York Times (10/26, Troianovski, 18.61M) reports Carnegie Moscow Center nonresident scholar Artyom Shraibman said, "In such a tense situation, absolutely anything could turn out to be the trigger that topples the system. ... It could end in the course of a week, or it might not die for a year. No revolution has ever gone according to plan."

"Heavy Battles" Between Azeri And Armenian Forces Reported Despite US-Backed Ceasefire.

Under the headline "U.S.-Backed Truce Crumbles As Nagorno-Karabakh Fighting Resumes," Reuters (10/26, Bagirova, Hovhannisyan) reports that a ceasefire in Nagorno-Karabakh "was in jeopardy on Monday as Azerbaijan and ethnic Armenian forces renewed fighting in the mountain enclave, defying international efforts to end a conflict that has killed hundreds in the last month." According to Reuters, Azeri President Ilham Aliyev "said in a televised address that he wanted to resolve the conflict 'by political and military means' after both sides accused each other of breaking a truce agreed hours earlier in Washington." Reuters adds that also on Monday, Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan "said he did not believe Azerbaijan was interested in a peaceful resolution to the conflict. 'The Armenian people are ready for mutual concessions, even painful ones, but not for the capitulation of Karabakh,' he said."

The AP (10/26, Demourian) reports that the Azerbaijani Defense Ministry "alleged that Armenian forces fired at Azerbaijani settlements and the positions of the Azerbaijani army 'along the entire front, as well as on the Armenia-Azerbaijan state border.'" The AP adds, "Armenian military officials in turn accused Azerbaijani forces of shelling the northeastern area of Nagorno-Karabakh and other areas. By Monday afternoon, 'heavy battles' were taking place in the southeast of the region, Armenian Defense Ministry spokesman Artsrun Ovannisian said."

Women's Rights Activists Protest, Block Traffic In Poland To Oppose Abortion Ban.

The AP (10/26, Scislowska) reports that women's rights activists and several thousands of their supporters "held a fifth day of protests across Poland on Monday, defying pandemic restrictions to express their fury at a top court decision that tightens the predominantly Catholic nation's already strict abortion law." The demonstrators – mostly young women and men – "with drums, horns and firecrackers blocked rush-hour traffic for hours at a number of major roundabouts." Some of the protestors "took off their shirts and stood topless on top of cars," and "many held banners with an obscenity calling on the right-wing government to step down."

Gaza Military Court Convicts Activists For Hosting Video Call With Israelis.

The New York Times (10/26, Rasgon, 18.61M) reports that a "military court in the Gaza Strip convicted three Palestinian peace activists of 'weakening revolutionary spirit' on Monday for their role in holding a video call with Israelis in April, but it ordered the authorities to release the two who remained in jail." The activists "belong to the Gaza Youth Committee, which organized the virtual discussion as part of a bridge-building initiative." The military court "sentenced Rami Aman, the head of the committee, to a year in prison, but decided to 'halt' the implementation of his sentencing, according to the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, the organization representing the activists." The court "released the second activist, whose name has not been made public, on the basis of time served, the group said."

Muslim Nations Denounce France Over Depictions Of Muhammad.

The AP (10/26, Batrawy) reports that "Muslims in the Middle East and beyond" have "broadened their calls for boycotts of French products and protests, as a clash over depictions of the Prophet Muhammad and the limits of free speech intensified." The AP says "the beheading earlier this month of a French teacher who had shown caricatures of the prophet in class has once again ignited a debate over such depictions," and "the teacher...has been heralded at home as a national symbol of France's dearly held secular ideals and its rejection of any whiff of religious intrusion in public spheres." Last week, French President Emmanuel Macron said: "We won't renounce the caricatures."

Reuters (10/26, Gumrukcu) reports that Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan "asked his compatriots to stop buying French goods on Monday in the latest expression of anger in the Muslim world over images being displayed in France of the Prophet Mohammad." Reuters adds, "In Bangladesh on Monday, protesters held placards with a caricature of French President Emmanuel Macron and the words: 'Macron is the enemy of peace,' while Pakistan's parliament passed a resolution urging the government to recall its envoy from Paris."

WPost: Trump Adding Fuel To Fire Rather Than Mediating Nile Dam Conflict.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) says the dispute between Egypt, Ethiopia, and Sudan over "an enormous dam Ethiopia is building on the Blue Nile river" is one that the US "ought to be helping to solve." The US "initially tried to mediate" among the three countries "earlier this year," and "most experts believe a solution is possible: The countries must agree on how quickly the reservoir behind the dam is filled and how water supplies will be managed during future droughts." However, "rather than play honest broker, Mr. Trump sided with [Abdel Fattah] Sissi, a brutal but inept dictator whose regime blames Ethiopia for water shortages that are largely of Egypt's own making." Fortunately, the Post says, "other mediators are available. ... But its job will have been made more difficult by Mr. Trump, who has added fuel to nationalist passions in the three countries."

USA Today: Trump's Foreign Policy Shows "Self-Aggrandizing Showmanship."

In an editorial, USA Today (10/26, 10.31M) says that, "with a few exceptions," President Trump's foreign policy – "from China to Iran to North Korea and beyond – has been littered with the same one-dimensional thinking and self-aggrandizing showmanship fundamental to his style of leadership." USA Today cites America leaving the Paris climate accord, dissolving the Iran nuclear deal, and leaving the Trans-Pacific Partnership – as well as its withdrawal from the WHO at the height of a pandemic – as examples of this, adding that he has also "bruised US relationships with traditional allies, while currying favor with autocrats in China, Russia and Turkey." Even his successes, the board says, are fictional or come with asterisks. Former Vice President Joe Biden, meanwhile, "brings some of the most extensive foreign policy experience of any presidential candidate, including as a lead operative for the Obama administration on areas of conflict...where Trump has struggled to succeed."

Retired US Generals: Trump's Isolationism Weakens America, Strengthens Enemies. In an accompanying op-ed for USA Today (10/26, 10.31M), National Security Leaders for Biden members retired Maj. Gen Michael Lehnert and retired Lt. Gen. Richard Kelly say Trump's "America First" policies have created a "backward march of diplomacy" and are "progressively weakening America." Such moves, they say, "will only embolden rogue nations, global terrorists and nonstate actors who threaten to dismantle our democracy and way of life and the world order." They conclude by saying, "We have a moral obligation to return America to a leadership position in partnership with other nations to get us through the crisis at hand, restore international cooperation and respect, and above all to maintain peace and prosperity."

GSEs' Q3 Earnings Expected To Be Strong.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/26, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "With mortgage originations and securitization rates breaking into record territory in the third quarter – and with the yield on the 10-year Treasury staying in a tight range – it stands to reason that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac should post stellar results for the period ending Sept. 30." According to IMF, "In the July-September cycle, Fannie pumped out a stunning $383.8 billion in agency MBS, almost double what it produced in the first quarter. Freddie was no slouch either, guaranteeing $321.9 billion, up an astounding 146.9%." Sequentially, "the MBS gains totaled 45.5% for Freddie and a modest 11.9% for Fannie."

MBA: Forbearance Share Declined 2bps In Week Ending October 18, Led By Improvement At GSEs.

HousingWire (10/26, Roha, 23K) reports the nation's mortgage forbearance rate "fell slightly" from 5.92% to 5.9% last week, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association. The GSEs' forbearance rate. Dipping from 3.77% to 2.72%, led the decline. This was the 20th consecutive week in which the GSEs' forbearance rate has fallen. However, HousingWire reports, "the GSEs' drop was offset by the rate for Ginnie Mae loans, which include loans backed by the Federal Housing Administration, rising 3 basis points to 8.17%, and the forbearance share for portfolio loans and private-label securities (PLS) increasing by 4 basis points to 8.90%." The MBA estimated that around 3 million homeowners are in forbearance plans, with a quarter of the loans in the initial stage and 73% in a forbearance extension.

National Mortgage News (10/26, Centopani) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "There continues to be a steady improvement for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac loans, but the forbearance share for Ginnie Mae, portfolio, and PLS loans all increased. This is further evidence of the unevenness in the current economic recovery. The housing market is booming, as shown by the extremely strong pace of home sales last week. However, many homeowners continue to struggle, as the pace of the job market's improvement has waned." Also reporting are Mortgage News Daily (10/26, Swanson), and Calculated Risk (10/26, McBride).

Supreme Court Receives Last Major Brief In Collins v. Mnuchin.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/26, Hollier, Subscription Publication) reports that the Supreme Court "has received one of the last major filings in Collins v. Mnuchin, the case that could determine the future of the government's net worth sweep of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac profits and whether the structure of the Federal Housing Finance Agency is constitutional." According to IMF, "The brief, filed mid-month, is the work of Aaron Nielson, the former law clerk for Associate Justice Samuel Alito picked by the court to argue in support of the position that the single-director structure of the FHFA does not violate the separation of powers principle. That was the original position of the FHFA, no longer defended by the agency." IMF says that although Nielson's amicus curiae filing is "tightly reasoned and well organized," it is "widely viewed as futile," in part "because of the court's recent decision in Seila Law v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau."

SCOTUS Told FHFA's Structure Does Not Delegitimize GSE Net Worth Sweep. Mostly behind a paywall, Law360 (10/26, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Administration "told the U.S. Supreme Court on Friday that while the Federal Housing Finance Agency's single-director independent leadership structure is unconstitutional, that's no reason to strike down the government's so-called net worth sweep of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as investors in the two mortgage giants are insisting." According to Law360, in a brief to the Supreme Court, the DOJ "said the for-cause removal protection given to the FHFA's sole director does violate the separation of powers, agreeing with a group of Fannie and Freddie investors that have attacked the agency's structure as nearly identical to [that of the CFPB]."

Freddie Mac's Mortgage Portfolio Grew An Annualized 17.5% In September.

Seeking Alpha (10/26, Dalal, 512K) reports that for September, Freddie Mac reported its total mortgage portfolio grew at an annualized rate of 17.5%. In its mortgage portfolio, Freddie's single-family refi-loan purchase and guarantee volume stood at $70.9 billion in September, making up "69% of total single-family mortgage portfolio purchases and issuances." According to Seeking Alpha, Freddie Mac's mortgage-related securities and other mortgage-related guarantees "increased at an annualized rate of 18.6% in September." Its single-family delinquency rate "decreased from 3.17% in August to 3.04% in September," while its multifamily delinquency rate "remained flat at 0.13%."

Freddie Mac's Palmer: Servicers Should Focus On "Three Cs Of Post-Forbearance."

In a sponsored piece for HousingWire (10/26, 23K), Freddie Mac Single-Family SVP Kevin Palmer advises servicers to focus on the "three Cs" when helping struggling borrowers following the end of their forbearance period: "communicate, consider, and confirm." Palmer says that "clear, concise communication with the homeowner is key." Servicers should consider when the forbearance plan will end, as well as whether or not the homeowner's hardship is resolved. Servicers should also confirm that homeowners "understand the long-term impacts of the post-forbearance option," as well as "ensure they are clear on what's expected from them." Palmer says Freddie Mac "developed a detailed call script, as well as a servicer eBook to help have clear and concise communication with homeowners." Freddie also "partnered with HousingWire to educate the industry about forbearance and post-forbearance options," providing a web page with more information.

JLL Secures Freddie Mac Loan For Portland LIHTC Community.

According to Multifamily Biz (10/26), JLL Capital Markets secured a "17-year, 35-year amortization loan through Freddie Mac" for Innovative Housing, Inc. to purchase Center Village Apartments, a "60-unit affordable Low-Income Housing Tax Credit community in Northeast Portland, Oregon."

Federal Court Stops Launch Of HUD Implementing New Antidiscrimination Rule.

Politico (10/26, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reports Judge Mark Mastroianni of the US District Court for the District of Massachusetts "has issued a preliminary injunction to stop the Department of Housing and Urban Development from implementing a rule that would have made it harder to bring discrimination claims under the Fair Housing Act." The rule, "set to take effect Monday, would have required plaintiffs to meet a higher threshold to prove unintentional discrimination, known as disparate impact." The new rule – "an update to the agency's 2013 disparate impact rule – would also have given defendants more leeway to rebut the claims." Mastroianni wrote, "These significant alterations, which run the risk of effectively neutering disparate impact liability under the Fair Housing Act, appear inadequately justified."

Sen. Sherrod Brown Urges CFPB's Kraninger To Prevent Wrongful Foreclosures.

Mortgage Professional America (10/26, Smith) reports Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH), ranking member of the Senate Banking Committee, is "calling on [CFPB Director Kathleen Kraninger] to make sure the CFPB does more to prevent wrongful foreclosures in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic." In a letter to Kraninger, Brown wrote, "Some borrowers will be able to resume their regular payments by using the deferral or partial claim processes set up by Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, FHA, or their private lender, in part because the [CFPB's] June 2020 Interim Final Rule made changes in the servicing process to facilitate deferral. But other borrowers will be unable to resume their prior payments and will need more time to enter a modification with their servicer to make their payments more affordable." Brown warned that the number of borrowers servicers will need to contact could make it "difficult to ensure that outreach is timely, successful, and meets program requirements."

Moody's: Bid-Ask Spread Widens In CRE.

Multi-Housing News (10/26, Baltic) reports that a "rise in cap rates will cause commercial real estate values to drop from 7 to 9 percent in the multifamily and industrial sectors and by 20 percent or more for office, retail and hospitality asset types, a new white paper from Moody's Analytics REIS predicts." Moody's reported transaction volume fell around 40% YoY in Q2, and the MBA expects commercial mortgage originations to dip even more. Moody's said it believes "the ongoing uncertainty fuels a bid-ask spread that remains wide." According to

Moody's, potential CRE buyers and sellers have "significant differences of opinion on future rents, occupancies, business prospects, and, ultimately, expectations of net cash flow going forward. Owners prefer to value properties on pre-COVID-19 performance with little consideration of current capital market conditions, while opportunistic buyers tend to take the opposite view."

Servicing Transfers Bog Down In Q3, With GSE Flow Transactions Driving Activity.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/26, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports that the "secondary market for mortgage servicing rights came to a near standstill" in Q3, "kept alive largely by flow transactions involving Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac product." Just "$70.81 billion of MSR changed hands in the third quarter," the "lowest total" since IMF "began tracking the market in 2015." IMF says most of Q3's servicing sales "came through coissuance arrangements associated with new mortgage-backed securities issuance by the two government-sponsored enterprises." According to IMF, "GSE sellers sold $51.58 billion of servicing in such transactions, which accounted for 72.8% of total MSR transfers during the period."

MISMO Upgrades Logical Data Model.

Mortgage Professional America (10/26, Mendoza) reports MISMI, the Mortgage Industry Standards Maintenance Organization, has "expanded the capabilities of its logical data model (LDM) to make it easier for organizations to communicate with their business partners." According to MPA, "The data model was built using Unified Model Language, a common standard that helps users specify, visualize, construct, and document software or business systems. The upgraded LDM can now support any technology a mortgage company may choose to use. MISMO has also created a set of user guidelines to help industry participants adopt and implement the LDM in their business processes." In addition, MISMO "said it is in the process of developing an LDM-specific logical data dictionary to accompany the LDM, which is expected to be available soon." National Mortgage Professional (10/26, Persaud) also reports.

Commerce Department: US New Home Sales Up 32% YoY, Down 3.5% MoM In September.

Reuters (10/26, Mutikani) reports sales of new US single-family homes "unexpectedly fell in September after four straight monthly increases, but the housing market remains supported by record low mortgage rates and demand for more space as the COVID-19 pandemic drags on." On Monday, the Commerce Department reported new home sales fell 3.5% to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 959,000 units in September. According to Reuters, "August's sales pace was revised down to 994,000 units from the previously reported 1.011 million units. Economists polled by Reuters had forecast new home sales, which account for about 12.8% of housing market sales, rising 2.8% to a rate of 1.025 million units." Despite the decline, HousingWire (10/26, 23K) reports, this remained "32.1% above the September 2019 estimate of 726,000." According to Reuters, low rates are fueling demand and bolstering home prices. The median new house price rose 3.5% to $326,800 in September from a year prior, and Freddie Mac reported the 30-year FRM's average stands at just 2.80%.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/26, Rockeman, 4.73M) reports, "The number of properties sold for which construction hadn't yet started increased to 319,000 in September, the highest in 14 years and a sign construction will remain robust in coming months." However, "The supply of new homes ticked up slightly while remaining extremely tight. At the current sales pace, it would take 3.6 months to exhaust the supply, compared with August's 3.4 months that was the lowest in data back to 1963." Mortgage Orb (10/26, Bates) provides additional coverage.

Realtor.com Digs Into Red State/Blue State Differences In Housing Data.

DS News (10/26, Babb) reports that researchers at Realtor.com are trying to "help anticipate results" of the presidential election, analyzing internal data via "metrics for home and rental price, price appreciation, home size, and inventory." Realtor.com Chief Economist Danielle Hale said, "Life can be really different, depending on where you live." Realtor.com's economists found blue-state residents pay more in rent, red-state residents have larger homes, and differences in housing can contribute to political stances. In addition, according to Hale, "owning a home literally gives people a stake in the ground, and that seems to translate into [more of] an incentive to vote."

Michel: Biden Presidency Could Shift GSE Reform.

Writing for Forbes (10/26, 9.71M), Norbert Michel of the Heritage Foundation considers what impact a Biden presidency could have on GSE reform. According to Michel, under Director Mark Calabria, "the FHFA has proposed a new capital framework for Fannie and Freddie, one that helps prepare them to go back into the 'private' market," and it "seems like a safe bet that a second Trump administration would continue on this path." However, reporting from the Wall Street Journal suggests that Democrats are in no rush to return the GSEs to private ownership, and Biden's housing-policy blueprint calls for a $20 billion boost to the Housing Trust Fund. Michel claims that Biden "plans to charge single-family borrowers thousands of dollars to support public housing," and that a "Biden administration will most likely try to weaken many of the reforms undertaken by Calabria's team at the FHFA. But that process will take time. It will be difficult to completely undo, for example, new GSE capital requirements."

Bradley Attorneys Share Tips For Navigating Mortgage Servicing In Post-Forbearance Period.

Writing for the ABA Banking Journal (10/26), Bradley partner Jason Bushby and associate Greg Pipes share tips for "servicing in the age of COVID-19," with a focus on the "post-forbearance" period. The duo identify four "common" post-forbearance scenarios: reinstatement, repayment, payment deferral/partial claim, and loan modification. They cover "compliance considerations" and "investor/insurer requirements" that "play a critical role in servicers' post-forbearance approach," stating that "Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the Federal Housing Administration were the first major industry players to step in and attempt to fill the post-forbearance void left by the CARES Act." Finally, the duo cover federal law and the CFPB's interim final rule on pandemic-related loss mitigation options, and state law applicable in the "post-forbearance landscape."

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (10/27, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.802 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (10/27) reports, "The dollar handed back some recent gains against most of its major rivals on Tuesday, as strong regional economic data helped to offset worries about a second wave of COVID-19 cases in Europe and the United States." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar fell 0.1%. The dollar "was lower by about the same margin on the euro, yen and pound and it slipped a little bit further against the Aussie and kiwi."

Gold Gains.

Reuters \(UK\) (10/27, Anupa Soreng) reports, "Gold prices rose on Tuesday as a weaker dollar and a fresh wave of coronavirus infections threatened to further slow down a global economic recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic, bolstering bullion's safe-haven appeal." Spot gold "rose 0.2% to $1,906.83 per ounce by 0705 GMT. U.S. gold futures were up 0.2% at $1,909.50."

Oil Steadies.

Reuters (10/27) reports, "Oil prices eked out small gains on Tuesday after recent sharp losses, but sentiment remained subdued as a surge in global coronavirus cases hit prospects for crude demand while supply is rising." Brent crude "was up 19 cents, or 0.5%, at $40.65 a barrel by 0324 GMT," while US oil "gained 15 cents, or 0.4%, at $38.71 a barrel."

Huawei CFO To Question Police Searches In Upcoming Court Hearing.

Bloomberg (10/26, Pearson, 4.73M) reports that Winston Yep, the "Canadian police officer who arrested" Huawei CFO Meng Wanzhou "at the behest of the U.S. provided a glimpse Monday into a 36-hour sequence of events that set off an unprecedented diplomatic crisis with China." The RCMP constable "told a British Columbia judge Monday that border agents had wanted to question her, and since they had jurisdiction at the airport, police held back." Meng is accusing "Canadian border agents, police" and the FBI "of unlawfully using the pretext of an immigration check to get her to disclose evidence that may be used against her."

AFP/Courthouse News (10/26, 2K) reports that Meng "returns to a Canadian court Monday as part of her two-year fight against extradition to the United States, with her lawyers expected to renew objections to the way in which she was detained." She was "arrested on a U.S. warrant in December 2018 during a stopover in Vancouver" and is "charged with bank fraud related to violations of U.S. sanctions against Iran, and has been fighting extradition ever since." Meng's lawyers are arguing Canadian law enforcement "violated her rights in questioning her and searching her devices in the three hours after she disembarked from the Hong Kong flight but before her arrest."

Healthcare Institutions, Hospitals Brace For Cyberattacks During Fall Wave Of Coronavirus Cases.

The Hill (10/26, 2.98M) reports, "Hospitals and health care institutions preparing for a fall wave of coronavirus cases are bracing for more cyberattacks after hackers seeking to take advantage of the pandemic launched several successful attacks this year that severely disrupted patient services." Such "attacks have been widespread around the world, hitting health care groups during the worst public health crisis in a century." Greg Singleton, the director of HHS's Health Sector Cybersecurity Coordination Center, said during a virtual appearance at CyberScoop's CyberTalks conference on Friday, "Ransomware will continue to be a sectoral nuisance." Agencies including CISA, the FBI, and others "have mobilized to defend the health care sector, helping prevent potentially much graver attacks."

Western Powers Intensifying "Gray War" With Countries Behind Cyber Attacks.

Voice of America (10/26, 48K) reports that Mark Sedwill, former national security adviser UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson, "has revealed that Britain has launched recently a series of covert cyber-based attacks on Russian leaders and their interests to 'impose a price greater than one they might have expected' for their cyber-offensive against the West." The US is among other countries also "doing so...say Western intelligence officials." In a recent interview, "Sedwill underscored that Britain is using its cyber-offense capabilities to retaliate for Russian cyberattacks, information warfare and disruption campaigns." The UK, US and allied countries "are increasingly taking the gloves off in an intensifying 'gray war' with Russia, as well as with Iran, China, and North Korea." The indictments by the US last week of "six Russian military intelligence operatives for a series of cyber-attacks" were "the result of prolonged investigations by FBI analysts in cooperation with Google, Cisco, Facebook and Twitter as well with allied Western intelligence agencies, including Britain's."

Norwegian Security Agencies Coordinating After Cyber Attack On Parliament.

Computer Weekly (10/26) reports that Norway will "implement a more robust plan to scale up its IT security infrastructure against the backdrop of increasingly malicious attacks from cyber space." Recently, a "high-profile cyber attack...targeted the email system at the Norwegian parliament." The Scandinavian country "accused Russia of launching the attack, but Moscow has denied any involvement." The investigation was "handed to the Joint Cyber Coordination Center (Felles Cyber Koordinerings Senter), which can draw on security experts from the National Security Authority, the Police Security Service, the Intelligence Service and Kripos, the national criminal investigation service." An annual threat assessment from the Police Security Service this year "warned government organisations and private companies about the potential for a higher rate of so-called advanced persistent cyber threats from 'foreign state-controlled bad actors.'"

White House Exploration Of Government-Run 5G Network Gets Pushback.

The Hill (10/26, Gangitano, 2.98M) reports, "The Trump administration is getting pushback from industry groups, both sides of the aisle and even internally about the Pentagon's moves toward" a government-run 5G network. Trump's Chief of Staff, Mark Meadows, "is reportedly leading a pressure campaign for the White House's favored candidate, wireless company Rivada Networks, in its efforts to construct a 5G network, though Rivada says such a network should not be government-owned." Administration officials "are reportedly alarmed at Meadow's efforts to get" DOD "to fast-track the process toward a request for proposal (RFP) on nationalized 5G." However, Meadows said, "DOD is exploring the idea of owning and operating a 5G network on military bases."

Former CFPB Director Cordray Believed To Be On Biden's Short List To Head The Watchdog.

CNBC (10/26, Iacurci, 3.62M) reports, "The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau has languished during the Trump administration, making it likely that Biden, if elected, would make leadership changes, according to consumer advocates." CNBC says among the possible directors on Biden's short list, "according to CFPB experts and insiders, some of whom are privy to deliberations among the transition team," is Richard Cordray, former Obama-appointed director of the bureau. FTC Commissioner Rohit Chopra, Rep. Katie Porter (D-CA), and Georgetown University law professor Adam Levitin are also believed to be on the short list to helm the agency.

IRS Pushing To Finalize Stimulus Payment Distribution As Negotiations For Second Round Stall.

The Washington Post (10/26, Singletary, 14.2M) reports, "As negotiations for a second stimulus payment falter, the IRS is pushing to finish distributing payments to people who have yet to receive relief funds authorized earlier this year." Nearly "9 million people have yet to collect a stimulus payment, because they don't typically file a tax return, according to the agency." The Post adds that in order "to have enough time to issue stimulus payments before the end of the year, the IRS set Nov. 21 by 3 p.m. Eastern time as the deadline for people to use" its non-filers tool, created for "Americans who earn too little to file a tax return but are eligible for a stimulus payment."

OCC Will Soon Propose New CRA Scoring Benchmarks, Brooks Says.

American Banker (10/26, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks on Monday said his agency will soon propose a scoring framework that would determine the minimum standards banks must meet under the Community Reinvestment Act. During a virtual event hosted by the Women in Housing and Finance, Brooks said, "In terms of starting our work, we now have a more or less completed draft of this document that is going through final internal review. ... I would expect that's going to be released in the next week or 10 days, so that'll be up very soon." The new scoring benchmarks "are the final major piece of the OCC's effort to modernize the law, which the agency has undertaken without the backing of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and Federal Reserve."

Wall Street Hopes Trump-Appointed Regulators Will Provide Insulation From Potential "Blue Wave."

Bloomberg (10/26, Light, Bain, 4.73M) reports, "Wall Street executives fretting that Democrats will sweep the White House and Congress can take comfort – some of the Trump era's most bank-friendly regulators might stick around no matter how the election goes." Because these possible holdovers "work at independent watchdogs that are supposed to be insulated from politics, they can resist pressure to step down, and a President Joe Biden would have almost no legal recourse to remove them." These officials "could at least temporarily block their fellow regulators from pursuing policy goals" of progressives "whose wish lists include re-instituting tough financial rules that have been eased during Donald Trump's presidency." Bloomberg adds, "Trump's presidency showed how effective squatters can be in slowing down regulatory agendas." In the first 17 months of the Trump Administration, the FDIC was led by Obama appointee Martin Gruenberg. During that period, "efforts to ease constraints on banks were often stymied because significant changes are traditionally approved jointly by the Fed, FDIC and Office of the Comptroller of the Currency."

Analysis: Election's Impact On Crypto Industry Will Come Through Regulators.

CoinDesk (10/26, 41K) reports that the 2020 US presidential election "will shape crypto policy for the next four years," although none of the candidates are "pitching crypto-specific positions." President Donald Trump "has publicly bashed bitcoin, tweeting that he is 'not a fan' of the cryptocurrency," while former Vice President Joe Biden "hasn't made any public statements on it." As such, CoinDesk says, "The election's most direct impact on crypto policy will likely come through the federal regulators the President will appoint and the Senate will confirm." The heads of the OCC, SEC, and CFTC, as well as the secretaries of Treasury and State "are just a few individuals who shape the U.S. government's approach to crypto." The direction of the OCC – which CoinDesk says "has made a number of waves since current Acting Comptroller Brian Brooks has taken office" – is unclear, according to industry lobbyist Ron Hammond. "I haven't heard any names, Republican or Democrat," he said.

OCC Allows Banks To Provide Crypto Services. Forbes (10/26, 9.71M) reports in continuing coverage that the OCC in July "released a notice letting banks provide a variety of services for assets issued on a blockchain, especially stablecoins that are faster and cheaper to transact than traditional currency, but backed by real-world assets like the U.S. dollar, making them more stable than bitcoin and most other cryptocurrencies."

Interview: Wyoming's Governor Discussing Crypto Banking Law. CoinDesk (10/26, 41K) reports that the "biggest challenge going forward" for Wisconsin's "lead in the blockchain space will be seeing how the federal government responds to the regulatory scheme the state is creating, [Gov. Mark] Gordon told CoinDesk" in an interview. The Wyoming Division of Banking issued its first-ever special purpose depository institution (SPDI) charter to Kraken Financial last month. But Wyoming's SPDI charter "could still be affected by the U.S. Office of the Comptroller of the Currency's (OCC) future decisions on national banks safeguarding crypto, and by other decisions Congress makes in response to large projects like Facebook's Libra." Wyoming Banking Commissioner Albert Forkner "said the Wyoming Division of Banking will work to ensure state law is not too dissimilar from what the federal government does in the future so that Wyoming doesn't cause confusion for banks."

Freeman: Biden Would Make It Harder For Energy Projects To Secure Financing.

In his column for the Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), James Freeman says that Joe Biden's energy policies would likely make it more challenging for US energy projects to secure financing from large banks. Freeman notes that Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks is seeking information from banks that have halted financing of new Arctic oil projects.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Republican Party's Supreme Court." The New York Times (10/26, 18.61M) editorializes, "What happened in the Senate chamber on Monday evening was, on its face, the playing out of a normal, well-established process of the American constitutional order: the confirmation of a president's nominee to the Supreme Court. But Senate Republicans, who represent a minority of the American people, are straining the legitimacy of the court by installing a deeply conservative jurist...to a lifetime seat just days before an election that polls suggest could deal their party a major defeat.”

Washington Post.

“If Pennsylvania Republicans Do The Right Thing, They Might Avert An Election Day Disaster.” The Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) says that in order to avoid confusion on Election Night and possible “disaster” in the aftermath, Pennsylvania should lift rules “barring election officials from even starting to process, let alone count, mail-in ballots before Election Day. County election officials have begged the legislature to allow them before Nov. 3 to begin sorting and verifying mail-in ballots.”

“Trump Should Be Mediating The Dispute Over The Nile Dam. Instead He Is Inciting War.” The Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) says the dispute between Egypt, Ethiopia, and Sudan over “an enormous dam Ethiopia is building on the Blue Nile river” is one that the US “ought to be helping to solve.” The US “initially tried to mediate” among the three countries “earlier this year,” and “most experts believe a solution is possible: The countries must agree on how quickly the reservoir behind the dam is filled and how water supplies will be managed during future droughts.” However, “rather than play honest broker, Mr. Trump sided with [Abdel Fattah] Sissi, a brutal but inept dictator whose regime blames Ethiopia for water shortages that are largely of Egypt’s own making.” Fortunately, the Post says, “other mediators are available. ... But its job will have been made more difficult by Mr. Trump, who has added fuel to nationalist passions in the three countries.”

“Trump Is Right: He Can’t Contain The Virus. But A Better President Could.” The Washington Post (10/26, 14.2M) says the White House last week responded to the coronavirus “as it has from the start, in pathetic surrender,” but “it does not have to be this way.” The Post asserts President Trump’s leadership has shown “what the American people don’t know can hurt them,” and concludes that until an effective vaccine or therapy has been developed, “virus hot spots need a rapid response, including temporary shutdowns where necessary to slow transmission. A nationwide mask mandate would help immensely. Shortages in personal protective equipment must be alleviated. Once the raging community spread is reduced, a massive drive to test, trace and isolate the sick could begin to keep infections at a low level. All of this will require leadership – which is another way of saying it will require a different president.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Justice Barrett Joins The Court.” The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Democrats’ attacks on Amy Coney Barrett were demagoguery and that Republicans did their duty in confirming a qualified nominee.

“How 50 Cent Becomes 20 Cent.” The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says rapper 50 Cent endorsed President Trump last week because he opposes Joe Biden’s plan to raise taxes on individuals making more than $400,000 and apply the 12.4% Social Security payroll tax on earnings above that amount only to retract on Sunday. The Journal suggests he did so because he was concerned the loss of revenue due to outrage from the left would cost him more than Biden’s tax plan.

“Nevada Does A California.” The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Nevadans are facing a vote on requiring that state utilities generate half their electricity from renewable resources by 2030; however, this measure would result in higher energy costs as well as shortages.

“Behold The Mighty Ant.” The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says China’s government has aided Alibaba co-founder Jack Ma by keeping away foreign competitors and investors in Ant are betting China will continue its protectionism. The Journal adds that investors will also be betting on the Chinese government, which will also be a shareholder through a state pension fund and state-owned enterprises.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: [On NASA astronaut Kate Rubins voting from the International Space Station] "This year, voters are not waiting till the first Tuesday in November to cast their ballots. ... That's super cool. An astronaut voted in space? Wow. Still weird that she had to wait in line for 10 hours, but that's cool. "

Trevor Noah: "I don't know if this was the kind of story that would inspire people to vote just because an astronaut did. It's easy to vote in space. What do you have? Nothing, no responsibilities. Down here, we have to work, we have to check Instagram every 20 minutes. In space, you float around, talk to some guy in Houston. You're living the dream."

Trevor Noah: "Even with the long lines, even with the suppression, America is still hitting record levels of early votes. There are so many early votes that the President could already have been decided and we just don't know it. It's like the week before Christmas when your parents have already bought your gift and you weren't allowed to find out what it is. So it could be a brand-new President – or it's the same one as last time!”

Trevor Noah: “With election day so close, the big issue on everyone’s mind is still the coronavirus pandemic, which is funny, because when you think about it, this whole year everybody has been ‘wait for an October surprise,’ and turns out the October surprise is we’re still talking about the same [stuff] we were talking about in March. Surprise!”

Trevor Noah: “Last week, Democratic candidate Joe Biden announced that he will push a nationwide mask mandate, deploy the Defense Production Act to drive the manufacture of PPE, and begin testing seven million people each day. And then President Trump revealed his take on the pandemic: Boring!”

Trevor Noah: “It’s weird Donald Trump is saying this when he’s still the one talking [about things] from 2015. ‘COVID, COVID, COVID – I’m so bored! Why isn’t anyone talking about Hillary’s e-mails? Keep up with the times, people!’”

Trevor Noah: “How does the President not get it? People are still talking about COVID because people are still dying from COVID. Imagine if the captain of the Titanic had this attitude. ‘All anyone is talking about is drowning, drowning, drowning, as if tonight’s not all-you-can-eat shrimp night at the dining hall!’”

Trevor Noah: “I know what you’re thinking. If Trump is tired of hearing about COVID on the TV news, there’s actually something that he could do about it: Just turn off the TV. But even that might not work because these days, the news is coming from inside the house. ... The Vice President, head of the coronavirus task force, has COVID all over his office. It’s like finding out the Flash came in second in a marathon. I don’t care where he’s from; you’re supposed to be the Flash.”

Trevor Noah: “Honestly though, people, I’m not mad at Pence. I’m just disappointed in him. Because I get Trump not following the rules. We know he can’t read. But don’t tell me Mike Pence can’t follow strict protocols. That dude’s rules about being around women are more complicated than rules for meeting the Queen.”

Trevor Noah: “Even after he’s been exposed to the virus, Mike Pence is still going to campaign. ... Who the hell is going to a rally with Mike Pence if that might give you coronavirus? I know people go to Trump rallies after he got COVID, but that’s Trump. His rallies are fun. That’s worth getting corona for. No one wants corona from Mike Pence, especially because he already makes you feel like you have corona. After he talks, you’re exhausted, it’s hard to breathe, and you just want to lie down.”

Trevor Noah: “But turns out there’s actually a very good reason that the White House isn’t following guidelines for preventing the spread of the virus. They just don’t want to.”

Trevor Noah: “So the plan is to just let coronavirus spread freely throughout America? It’s interesting how Trump’s people are about this, you know, because with an immigrant child who came over the border, they are like, ‘Zero tolerance! One is too many! We have to deport!’ But with a virus killing hundreds of thousands of Americans, they’re like, ‘Look, man, the virus is just trying to make a better life in our lungs. Who are we to stop it?’”

Jimmy Kimmel: “Election day is a week from tomorrow. And we don’t even know if we’ll know who won. According to the polls, Joe Biden has a big lead. You know, it’s interesting, the Republicans are saying, ‘Don’t pay attention to the polls, we are going to win!’ And Democrats are saying, ‘Don’t pay attention to the polls, there’s a good chance we’ll lose!’ So, finally, something we agree on.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “The Republican re-election strategy seems to be centered around making it as difficult as possible for us to vote. In Texas, the governor...banned additional mail-in drop-off boxes. There is only one ballot drop box per county in Texas. The biggest county in Texas has almost five million people! One box. The governor, Greg Abbott, is apparently worried that if each county has more than one ballot box, people might put their ballots in them and have those ballots counted, which could lead to democracy."

Jimmy Kimmel: "And, of course, Trump, because he needs an excuse if he loses, keeps screaming that the early-voting effort is fixed by the government, that he runs."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Meanwhile, guess who voted early? Ivanka Trump today tweeted, 'I'll give you one guess who we're voting for.' Okay, could it be the man bankrolling your life?"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President himself decided to vote in person this time around for a change. The President cast a vote of confidence for himself on Saturday at a library in West Palm Beach. I'm guessing it was his first visit to the library."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President and first lady were trick-or-treatin' it up last night for the annual South Lawn Halloween bash. ... Trump did a fun thing – he had them turn off all the lights at the White House, then he put Eric and Don Jr. in a bucket on the porch with a sign saying, 'Please take both.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "It was a family event. Guests older than two were required to wear a face covering, which explains why the President did not."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The coronavirus task force has tested positive for the coronavirus. Fortunately, the Vice President himself tested negative again. As far as we know, the virus cannot be transmitted between humans and poodles."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The White House's new plan to stop the virus is to stop trying to stop it. Yesterday, Trump's chief of staff, Mark Meadows, went on CNN, where he admitted to Jake Tapper, 'We're not going to control the pandemic.' ... This is like if you were drowning and refused to meet with the lifeguard."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Cases are surging like they haven't before, but Donald Trump is sick and tired of hearing about it. ... You know what, I think I figured it out: He's jealous of the virus. He's upset that COVID is getting more attention than he is."

Stephen Colbert: "We are eight days from the election, and excitement is spreading across the country, if by excitement you mean coronavirus. 'Cause, uh, yeah. They said the fall would get bad, and they was right. We are eight months into the pandemic, and we're all tired of it. I've already watched everything on Netflix, everything on Hulu, and, if anyone asks, everything on CBS All Access."

Stephen Colbert: "With these record numbers, we've officially entered the third wave of COVID-19 in the US. Okay, but that's a little misleading, because if you look at the chart of COVID waves, the bottom before the third wave is as high as the crest of the first wave. It's not really a third wave if the first wave never ended. It's like how every 'Rocky' movie starts with the end of the last movie. So there's technically only one, very long 'Rocky' movie. And just like Rocky, the main character talks like he's spent a lifetime getting punched in the head."

Stephen Colbert: "Hospitalizations have jumped in at least 38 states in the past week. In response this weekend, the White House dispatched Chief of Staff...Mark Meadows. Yesterday, Meadows went on CNN to reassure a worried nation that you're on your own."

Stephen Colbert: "So after eight months of not really trying, now they're just giving up. That's not good. It's like if 'Mothers Against Drunk Driving' changed its name to 'Mothers Who Realize, Hey, You Gotta Get Home From The Bar Somehow!'"

Stephen Colbert: "Of course, the most infectious part of the country is the Trump Administration. At least 30 people associated with Trump caught the virus, including the President and first lady themselves, and now at least five of Vice President Pence's aides have tested positive for the virus. ... So far, Pence has not tested positive, but the CDC recommends people stay home for 14 days following possible exposure. But Pence is going to keep campaigning anyway. The White House justifies it by claiming Pence is an essential worker. What are you talking about? He's Vice President. At best, he is vice essential. He's America's spare tire. You want him in your trunk, but you hope you never have to use him."

Stephen Colbert: "FDR's Vice President, John Nance Garner, who you never heard of because he was Vice President, once said, 'The vice presidency is not worth a bucket of warm spit.' A bucket of warm spit is, I'm guessing, what Pence gets when he orders soup in a restaurant."

Stephen Colbert: "Between Friday and today, he held 11 campaign events-- including nine rallies-- in seven states: Florida, North Carolina, Wisconsin, Ohio New Hampshire, Maine, and Pennsylvania, or as historians will call them, 'The Corona Belt.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump saying that if Biden wins, there will be no more air conditioning in the summer, no heat in winter, and no electricity during peak hours] "Trump also talked about the election and tried to appeal to an important voting bloc: seniors. ... Okay, if you're just going to make stuff up to scare the oldsters, why stop there? No heat, no AC, Biden's going to pierce your granddaughter's nose, he's gonna cancel 'Wheel of Fortune,' he's going to outlaw the crocheted things you put over the toilet paper. The toilet paper is going to be naked and catch a cold!"

Jimmy Fallon: [On the White House claiming Pence is an essential worker] "Well, guys, the election is just a week away, but the White House is making news for all the wrong reasons. ... Even Joe Biden is like, 'Trust me. Being Vice President is not essential work.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "That's right, the coronavirus is spreading through the coronavirus task force. But don't worry, the White House is now forming a task force to figure out what went wrong with the task force."

Jimmy Fallon: " Seriously, it doesn't instill a lot of confidence that the head of the coronavirus task force's office got the coronavirus. It's like if the Avengers got mugged."

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, when Pence saw he was trending online, he was like, 'Oh no, do I have another fly on my head?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Yesterday, White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows got a lot of attention for what he said about controlling the virus. ... The White House has said, 'It is what it is, and we are not going to control it.' They talk about COVID like it's a wild teen on 'Dr. Phil.' 'We're out of ideas. Hopefully this thing calms down with age.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, the White House isn't alone. Fox News is also dealing with their own outbreak. ... Dang, first Pence's inner circle gets COVID, and now Trump's. I hope none of the anchors on Fox News have the virus, 'cause if you think Sean Hannity's intense now, imagine him on steroids."

Jimmy Fallon: "Halloween is almost here, and last night, the Trumps hosted trick-or-treaters at the White House where they were greeted by two kids who dressed up like them. ... Well, at least one Trump is wearing a mask."

Jimmy Fallon: "At one point, Trump fled to his bunker when he saw a little girl dressed as Lesley Stahl."

Jimmy Fallon: "This Halloween party was a little different. Instead of candy, Trump was handing out unapproved vaccines."

James Corden: "Of course the election is just a week away, so President Trump spent the weekend on the campaign trail where he visited an apple orchard, and as most presidents do, signed a pumpkin. Who signs a pumpkin?"

James Corden: "Then last night, the President and the first lady hosted young children at the White House for trick-or-treating. And a couple of kids really caught their attention because they were dressed as Donald and Melania. ... Melania was like, 'Oh, they're pretending to be a real husband and wife, just like us.'"

James Corden: "You have to admit the little Donald is very accurate: the hair, the red tie, the fact that neither of them have ever paid taxes."

James Corden: "Five members of Vice President Mike Pence's team, including his chief of staff, have now tested positive for coronavirus. ... Despite all of this, Pence himself still has not tested positive because even the virus isn't interested in Mike Pence."

James Corden: "This morning, [Trump] went to Twitter, and he wrote, 'The fake news media is riding COVID, COVID, COVID all the way to the election. Losers.' Yeah, how dare the news media cover the biggest story of this century. It is weird when you think about it, that we are all preoccupied with this super contagious deadly virus spreading rapidly across the country. Like, come on, get a life, guys."

Seth Meyers: "Election day is eight days away, which means we're just a few short weeks away from the Supreme Court telling us who we elected."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump tweeted today, quote, 'The fake news media is riding COVID, COVID, COVID all the way to the election. Losers.' Yeah, you're right, even after the election, they'll probably run a headline like this: 'Scientists in Germany have announced that they've measured the shortest interval of time ever recorded, and no surprise here, it was how long Trump lasted on '60 Minutes.'"

Seth Meyers: "In an interview that aired last night on '60 Minutes,' President Trump criticized correspondent Lesley Stahl for giving him tougher questions than former Vice President Joe Biden. Said Trump, 'Why didn't you ever ask Biden about his past four years as President?'"

Seth Meyers: "At the end of his rally in Ohio this weekend, President Trump danced to The Village People song 'YMCA' ... because nothing ticks all of Trump's boxes like a song about gay men partying together in low-income housing."

Seth Meyers: "At a campaign event in Maine yesterday, President Trump signed a pumpkin, so if someone could write a stimulus bill right above it, that'd be great."

Mnuchin Says Agreement On Coronavirus Bill Unlikely Before Election.

Reuters (10/14, Cornwell) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said Wednesday that he and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi are "far apart" on a coronavirus relief package and although it would be difficult to reach an agreement before the election, he would keep trying. Mnuchin, who spoke by phone with Pelosi Wednesday morning, said, "I'd say at this point, getting something done before the election and executing on that would be difficult just given where we are and the level of detail, but we're going to try to continue to work through these issues."

The Washington Post (10/14, Werner, Stein, 14.2M) reports Mnuchin, speaking at the Milken Institute Global Conference, was asked if Democrats do not want to make a deal because they do not want to give the President win ahead of the election. Mnuchin said, "I think that definitely is part of the reality. That's definitely an issue. But the President is very focused on when he wins we will need to do more. So that's part of the reason to continue to work on this. ... The clock will not stop."

The New York Times (10/14, Cochrane, Rappeport, 18.61M) says negotiators resumes talks Wednesday, "even though Democrats and Republicans remain wildly divided over the scope and size of another stimulus bill." Mnuchin said his conversation with Pelosi was "comprehensive," but he "indicated that important differences remained." The Times says Mnuchin and Pelosi spoke "for about an hour, discussing the language of the administration's latest $1.8 trillion framework as compared to House Democrats' $2.2 trillion stimulus plan, which Ms. Pelosi pushed through the House earlier this month. They agreed to speak again on Thursday."

CNBC (10/14, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports on its website that Mnuchin said the "all or nothing approach" on legislation "doesn't make sense" and "called for immediate, 'targeted' aid." USA Today (10/14, Wu, 10.31M) reports Mnuchin said, "There are money issues, but there's also policy issues" and added that the Administration supports "immediate help" for small businesses and airlines while negotiations continue. The Hill (10/14, Lillis, 2.98M) reports Democrats "had proposed $436 billion in aid for" state and local governments, "while the White House countered with $300 billion." Mnuchin "said that number marked 'an extraordinary compromise' on the part of the administration, suggesting the White House is not ready to raise its offer." Roll Call (10/14, Lerman, 154K) says Mnuchin "again stressed the need for liability protection from pandemic-related lawsuits for small businesses and schools that reopen."

In a Wednesday interview on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (10/14, 49K), Mnuchin said "there's a lot of areas in here that we would have enormous bipartisan support if they could be passed on a standalone basis. The Speaker and [Senate Minority Leader] Schumer have insisted on an all-or-nothing approach. So we've been trying to negotiate in good faith a comprehensive package that would include a lot of things, would include money for testing, vaccines, kids, jobs, healthcare, certain areas we've made a lot of progress on, certain areas we still have more work to do." Asked about the reason for the delay, he said, "I suspect that they don't want to give the President a win three weeks before the election, but they are holding up relief to hardworking Americans."

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Peterson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), New York Magazine (10/14, Kilgore, 3.69M), MarketWatch (10/14, Nicholson, 1.67M), Newsweek (10/14, Lemon, 1.53M), Politico (10/14, Ferris, 4.29M), and Bloomberg (10/14, Dennis, Fabian, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also report.

Stock Declines Tied To Mnuchin's Pessimism Regarding Spending Deal. CNBC (10/14, Stevens, 3.62M) reports on its website, "Stocks fell for a second day on Wednesday after comments from...Mnuchin dampened expectations of a coronavirus stimulus deal being reached before the Nov. 3 presidential election." The AP (10/14) says the declines came "as talks between Democrats and Republicans in Washington over another economic stimulus package continued to drag on, dimming investors' hopes for a deal that can deliver more aid for the U.S. economy in the near term." Bloomberg (10/14, Nazareth, Hajric, 4.73M), Reuters (10/14, Singh, Kumaresan), the New York Times (10/14, Cochrane, Rappeport, 18.61M), the Financial Times (10/14, Henderson, Rovnick, Szalay, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Ostroff, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also tie Wednesday's selloff to Mnuchin's comments.

TikTok Lawyers Say Competitors Are Seeking To Exploit US Ban.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Ferek, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports lawyers for TikTok argued in a filing to US District Judge Carl Nichols Wednesday that the Trump Administration's push to ban the app could undermine its user base and competitive position. According to the filing, TikTok competitors have sought to exploit the situation to lure its creators and users to change platforms.

Asked about the status of TikTok Wednesday on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (10/14, 49K), Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said, "The President's determined there's a national security issue. We want to make sure that Americans' information that are on their phones is safe, their personal information. So, we negotiated what we think is a very good deal to turn this into an American company. They need to comply with that, under the CFIUS order, they also need to comply with the shutdown order, which is being fought in court at the moment. The President's determined, we're going to have one of two outcomes. This'll either be a safe American company, or it'll be shut down."

Mnuchin Calls For "Fair, Reciprocal Trading Relationship" With China.

MarketWatch (10/14, Nicholson, 1.67M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, speaking at the Milken Institute Global Conference, "said...the Trump Administration will continue to work on making U.S. trade with China fairer in a second term." Mnuchin "said that while President Donald Trump has made some progress in rebalancing the trade relationship, more needs to be done." Mnuchin said, "China has a large, growing middle class, over 300 million people. If U.S. companies and U.S. workers can compete for that business, it's one of the largest opportunities. ... If we can't compete for that business fairly, then they should not have free access to the U.S. system. This needs to be a fair, reciprocal trading relationship."

Mnuchin Urges Judicious, Transparent Financial Aid During Pandemic.

Reuters (10/14, Shalal, Lawder) reports that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "on Wednesday urged the International Monetary Fund and World Bank to work judiciously within their existing resources to fight the coronavirus pandemic and urged G20 countries to endorse a proposed debt restructuring framework" while planning "for transitions to normal financing arrangements." Mnuchin said, "It is critical that the World Bank manage financial resources judiciously and transparently, with clear justifications for allocations to countries with robust access to other financing sources, so as not to burden shareholders with premature calls for new financing."

France's Finance Minister Calls For EU To Push Ahead On Global Digital Taxation.

Reuters (10/14, Thomas) reports French Finance Minister Bruno Le Maire "said on Wednesday" that the EU "should press ahead with plans for a bloc-wide digital tax in case global talks at the OECD to rewrite international tax rules fail." Finance Ministers from the G20 "gave their support on Wednesday to extending until mid-2021 negotiations to update cross-border tax rules for the digital age after talks ground to a halt following the COVID-19 pandemic outbreak, and in the face of reticence from Washington as the U.S. presidential election neared." Le Maire "said his U.S. counterpart Steven Mnuchin was opposed to OECD proposals on digital taxation, which aim to discourage U.S.-based tech giants like Google, Facebook and Amazon from legally shifting profits to low-tax countries like Ireland." Le Maire "added that a change of administration in Washington after the Nov. 3 U.S. election would not necessarily lead to a change in the U.S. position, although the new government might be less aggressive with trade retaliation."

Federal Prosecutors Investigated Egyptian Bank Account Link To Trump's 2016 Campaign Money.

CNN (10/14, Polantz, Perez, Herb, 83.16M) reports "multiple sources familiar with the investigation" say for more than three years, federal prosecutors "investigated whether money flowing through an Egyptian state-owned bank could have backed millions of dollars Donald Trump donated to his own campaign days before he won the 2016 election." The probe interviewed Steve Bannon "about Trump's $10 million contribution to his campaign, according to another recent release of Mueller's interview memos." Bannon "said...Trump was talked into providing the last-minute money by future Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and [Jared] Kushner." Mnuchin "described the money as a 'cash advance,' Bannon said, and Trump eventually agreed to wire the money." A Treasury Department spokesperson "confirmed Bannon's description of convincing Trump to make the loan, and said that Mnuchin had no knowledge of how Trump had $10 million available to him."

Reuters Report: Trump Administration To Place China's Ant Group On Trade Blacklist.

In an exclusive, Reuters (10/14, Pamuk, Alper, Freifeld, Shepardson) reports the State Department "has submitted a proposal for the Trump administration to add China's Ant Group to a trade blacklist, according to two people familiar with the matter, before the financial technology firm is slated to go public." Trump officials "fear Ant could potentially give the Chinese government access to sensitive banking data belonging to U.S. users." The Administration "has been largely loathe to use tougher tools against China, such as freezing assets in the United States, which many attribute to Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin's dovish stance on Beijing."

Mnuchin Says He Would Stay On In 2nd Trump Administration Term.

Fox Business (10/14, O'Halloran, 1.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "signaled on Wednesday he is happy in his job and with his boss President Trump." Mnuchin said, "Well, if he wins, I plan to stay on. And let me be clear if he loses, I definitely don't plan on staying on."

Treasury Grant News

VA Town Disbursing $1.75M In Grants Funded Partly By CARES Act.

The Northern Virginia Daily (10/14, Keelor, 45K) reports, "Grant funding is available for area small business owners in Strasburg who are struggling during the COVID-19 pandemic." Due to funding from the CARES Act, "along with funding from other organizations, Community Development Director Michelle Bixler said Shenandoah County has acquired $1.75 million in grant funding available to small businesses."

MT Tribal Development Office Accepting Applications For Treasury-Funded Business Relief Grants.

The Ronan Valley (MT) Journal (10/14, 22K) reports, "The Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes Economic Development Office is now accepting applications for coronavirus business relief funds." The CSKT Small Business Relief Grants program "offers over $1 million in federally allocated financial assistance to qualified CSKT-member-owned small businesses and active CSKT-member livestock producers in the recovery, stabilization and adaptation of business operations." Funding for the grants "is allocated by the U.S. Department of Treasury as designated by the CARES Act to aid in the recovery and revitalization of Tribal-member businesses impacted by the global health pandemic."

DE Bank Receives $657K CDFI Grant For Increased Lending To Minorities, Low-Income Communities.

Delaware Business Now (10/14) reports, "True Access Capital, Wilmington (formerly First State Community Loan Fund) will expand its lending to minority-owned businesses, with an emphasis on Hispanic-owned businesses, with the help of a $657,000 award from the Community Development Financial Institution (CDFI) Fund." The Fund "is a program of the U.S. Department of the Treasury intended to increase lending in low-income and economically distressed communities." The CDFI grant "will expand True Access Capital's reach to minority-owned businesses, for whom credit access is a significant hurdle."

Leading National News

At Iowa Rally, Trump Says He Is "A Little Bit Concerned" About Polling In State.

The AP (10/14, Miller, Pitt) reports, "Donning a red hat and tossing away his tie to fight off the stiff breeze on the airport tarmac," President Trump addressed supporters in Des Moines, Iowa, on Wednesday evening. The Des Moines Register (10/14, 404K) reports that "as he began speaking, Trump turned almost immediately to his place in the polls. He cited a poll released Wednesday by Focus on Rural America that showed him leading [Joe] Biden by 6 percentage points, 50% to 44%." Trump said, "For me to only be up six, I'm a little bit concerned, I'll tell you that. Because nobody's going to do for Iowa what I did for Iowa." The latest RCP average has Biden leading Trump by 1.2 points in the state, which Trump won by nearly 10 points in 2016. USA Today (10/14, Fritze, Subramanian, 10.31M) reports Trump "disputed polls showing him tied or behind Biden, insisting that his campaign has 'more enthusiasm now than we ever did four years ago.'"

Radio Iowa (10/14) reports on its website that Trump "touted federal disaster aid for farmers hit by 2019 flooding as well as the $28 billion in trade disruption payments his administration has sent to farmers over the past two years." He said, "There has never been a president that has done more for farmers and ranchers, for the Farm Belt, for Iowa. There's never been a president that's even come close to what I have done and I will say that and I'll say it loud and clear."

KCCI-TV Des Moines, IA (10/14, 53K) reports Trump "greeted a raucous crowd of thousands of supporters" and "proceeded to launch into a series of attacks" against Biden. The Daily Caller (10/14, 716K) reports Trump "cited a series of stories published by the New York Post alleging that Biden 'has been blatantly lying about his involvement in his son's corrupt business dealings.'" Trump said, "This is a big smoking gun. The newly uncovered emails reveal that a top executive from the highly questionable Ukrainian oil company – it's an energy company – paid Hunter at least $50,000 a month, but it's now looking like it could be $183,000 a month."

The Cedar Rapids Gazette (10/14, Murphy, 157K) reports the rally "was the first campaign event featuring either party's presidential candidate in Iowa during the 2020 general election cycle." Biden "was in Iowa regularly during the run-up to the caucuses, but has not returned since earning his party's nomination." The President tweeted after the event, "I was thrilled to be back in the American Heartland with thousands of loyal, hardworking IOWA Patriots! 20 days from now, we are going to win IOWA, and we are going to win 4 more years in the White House!" ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 5, 0:25, Muir, 6.83M) and the CBS Evening News (10/14, story 2, 0:45, O'Donnell, 4.09M) both briefly previewed the rally on their evening newscasts.

Rally Took Place Amid Rise In Iowa COVID Cases. WHO-TV Des Moines, IA (10/14, 104K) reports on its website that the rally took place "as the state of Iowa is in the midst of a coronavirus outbreak. The state currently has the highest number of COVID-19 patients hospitalized since the pandemic began." WQAD-TV . Davenport, IA (10/14, 10K) reported that an advocacy group called the rally a "super-spreader event," but Trump supporters "say coming here was worth the risk." Reuters (10/14, Oliphant) reports Trump "cited what he said was his son's mild bout of the virus as a reason why American schools should reopen as soon as possible." KWWL-TV . Cedar Rapids, IA (10/14, 22K) reported Trump attacked "the handling of the pandemic in states led by Democratic governors."

The Washington Post (10/14, Dawsey, Abutaleb, 14.2M) says the President "is using his recovery from the coronavirus to reinforce the message that the pandemic is receding and Americans should return to work – resisting entreaties to change his tone and behavior three weeks ahead of the presidential election." But despite a White House outbreak "that also infected the first lady, their son and nearly a dozen top aides, Trump and his allies continue to downplay the virus, arguing that the country is 'turning the corner' and holding campaign events with thousands of supporters even as cases are increasing rapidly, especially in the Midwest." The New York Times (10/14, Mandavilli, 18.61M) reports that Trump "has exulted in his supposed imperviousness to the coronavirus," but even if he "were now immune to the coronavirus, he may not remain so, scientists warn. The president's unique treatment may have prevented his body from making the antibodies necessary for long-term protection."

Asked on the CBS Evening News . (10/14, 4.09M) whether events like Trump campaign rallies of over 10,000 people are considered dangerous, NIAID Director Fauci said, "When people are close to each other and you don't have virtually everyone wearing a mask, that is a risky situation that could very well lead to the kind of spreader events that we have seen in similar settings."

Media Analyses: Lack Of Consistent Message Could Be Hurting Trump. The Washington Post (10/14, Olorunnipa, Dawsey, 14.2M) writes that with the election less than three weeks away and millions of Americans having already voted, Trump's "lack of a consistent and coherent closing argument is alarming some Republicans, raising fears among his allies that his undisciplined approach to campaigning could render him a one-term president." Trump "is attempting to stage a historic comeback. But his actions and rhetoric in recent days have stumped even some of his allies who are trying to decipher his broader strategy – and, increasingly, questioning whether there is one."

The New York Times (10/14, Tankersley, 18.61M) reports Trump has been telling voters that Biden is "a pawn of socialists" and that Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "is 'a communist.' ... A wide range of polls, including some conducted for nonpartisan media outlets and for conservative and liberal interest groups, shows that Mr. Trump has so far been unsuccessful in lashing Mr. Biden to policy proposals like Medicare for All, the Green New Deal and a federal tax on the net worth of high-wealth Americans, all of which Democratic voters and leaders have increasingly embraced in recent years, but which Mr. Biden has stopped short of adopting in his platform."

Big Banks On The Rebound Despite Lingering Pandemic.

The AP (10/14, Sweet) reports that "Wall Street banks are on the rebound after slumping the first six months of the year." JPMorgan Chase, Citigroup, Bank of America, and Wells Fargo "saw their profits partly recover in the third quarter from the depths of the coronavirus-caused recession earlier this year." The turnaround "stems mostly from improvements in the U.S. economy that allowed these big banks to set aside less money to cover potentially bad loans – $5 billion in the third quarter versus $33 billion in the second quarter." Kyle Sanders, an analyst for Edward Jones, said, "It's the same story at every bank in the industry right now: lower credit costs are helping restore profitability."

But NBC News (10/14, 6.14M) reports "this week's bank earnings say more than just how the giants of the financial services industry are faring seven months into the coronavirus pandemic. The presentations and comments made in response to investor questions provide a glimpse into what banking executives expect a 'new normal' to look like and how the American economy will reshape itself around Covid-19 in the future."

Big bank CEOs and finance chiefs, however, "gave a muddled picture of what to expect." Reuters (10/14, Moise, Henry) reports. Executives at JPMorgan, BofA, and Wells "warned that losses on various types of loans might not really take shape until next year." Citigroup CFO Mark Mason said, "We're still in the midst of a crisis." Meanwhile, Wells CEO Charles Scharf said, "The economy has materially improved," adding that "there's still a long way to go, and there remains significant risk to the recovery."

BofA Profit Falls 16% In Q3.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Eisen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Bank of America saw its profit decline 16% in the third quarter. The bank reported Wednesday that it earned $4.88 billion in the third quarter, compared to $5.78 billion the year before. Overall revenue fell 11% year-over-year to $20.34 billion.

Bloomberg (10/14, Nguyen, 4.73M) reports BofA's traders "didn't seize on the markets boon that lifted rival banks in the third quarter," with revenue from trading rising just 3.6% to $3.34 billion and falling short of analysts' expectations. Investment banking, meanwhile, "was a bright spot, delivering the second-best quarter in the company's history, with a 15% jump in fees to $1.8 billion." Net interest income "fell to $10.2 billion on a fully taxable-equivalent basis, compared with analysts' $10.3 billion median forecast."

Reuters (10/14, Moise, Nishant) reports BofA executives "joined the chorus of U.S. bank officials predicting an economic recovery would improve business in the quarters ahead, after lower interest rates fueled a miss on third-quarter revenue." The bank "set aside lower provisions for potential loan losses, mirroring other Main Street peers." BofA set aside an additional $1.4 billion for soured loans in the quarter, "far less than the $5.1 billion it provided for during the June quarter." Revenue in its consumer bank "fell 17% to $8 billion in the third quarter, mainly due to lower interest income and reduced credit card activity.”

Yet, American Banker (10/14, Dobbs, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports CEO Brian Moynihan said consumer banking is on the rebound. According to American Banker, “Only 100,000 of the 1.8 million deferral requests BofA processed for credit cards, auto loans, mortgages, home equity lines and small business loans remain in place. The amount of deferred consumer loans outstanding has fallen by 77% since peaking in May, to $9 billion on Sept. 30, or 2.8% of that portfolio.”

Wells Fargo Returns To Profit, But Misses Estimates As Costs Mount.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Eisen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Wells Fargo on Wednesday said its third quarter profit declined 56% from a year ago. Wells Fargo's profit was $2.04 billion in the third quarter, down from $4.61 billion the year before. The Journal adds the bank's third quarter number was an improvement over the second quarter, when the bank lost $2.38 billion.

Reuters (10/14, Moise, Hussain) reports the results missed analysts' expectations “as persistent costs tied to its years-old sales practices scandal continued to haunt the bank.” CEO Charlie Scharf, now one year into the job, “has made cost cuts a cornerstone of his turnaround plan,” but “firm-wide expenses inched up slightly due to scandal-related operating losses and a $718 million restructuring charges tied to severance.” Total revenue fell 14%, while net-interest income was down $512 million from the second quarter to $9.4 billion.

American Banker (10/14, Wack, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports Scharf on Wednesday “provided...a promise to give an update in three months about shorter-term spending cuts, but no commitment about when the company will release a long-term plan for slashing its expenses.” The company “identified a few areas where executives see the potential to cut costs,” including “making further reductions to its branch network” and “simplifying products and services,” but it “provided scant details.”

The Financial Times (10/14, Armstrong, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) and CNBC (10/14, Imbert, 3.62M) provide similar coverage. Bloomberg (10/14, 4.73M) also reports in video.

US Bank Sees Q3 Profit Fall.

MarketWatch (10/14, Grossman, 1.67M) reports US Bancorp “posted a slimmer profit year over year in the latest quarter as lower net interest income and higher expenses during the coronavirus pandemic offset strength in fee-based businesses.” Profit in the third quarter totaled $1.58 billion, equivalent to 99 cents/share, down from $1.82 billion, or $1.15/share, in the same period last year. Net interest income totaled $3.23 billion, while non-interest income was $2.71 billion, up from $2.61 billion in 2019. Credit loss provisions fell by more than $1 billion from the second quarter, while “average total deposits grew 15.9% year over year and average total loans grew 6.4% year over year.”

American Banker (10/14, Alix, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the bank “will close another 15%, or roughly 400, of its branches by early 2021 and could consolidate some of its corporate real estate in an expense-reduction effort, executives said Wednesday.” The closures are estimated to bring “roughly $150 million in cost savings,” which executives “said that some of it would be reinvested into digital capabilities.”

The Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (10/12, 1.04M) provides similar coverage.

PNC Posts Earnings Beat.

TheStreet (10/14, Owusu, 362K) reports PNC Financial Services beat estimates with third-quarter earnings per share of $3.39, an increase of 15% from a year earlier. Net-interest income fell 1% year-over-year “due to lower yields on earning assets partially offset by lower rates on deposits and borrowings and higher average earning assets,” the bank said.

American Banker (10/14, Prior, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the bank “set aside $52 million to cover potential loan issues, a large drop from the $2.4 billion loan-loss provision in the second quarter.” Loan losses could begin to pile up “if Congress does not approve a new round of stimulus and the virus is not brought under control, [CEO William] Demchak said.” On Wednesday's earnings call, Demchak was asked about how the bank might use the $4.3 billion proceeds from its sale of BlackRock shares. He said PNC is unlikely to acquire a digital bank with the funds, explaining, “I don't think long-term that model works. ... It's kind of cool and they're growing a lot of customers, but...they're not making money at it. And banking is a business that you ultimately need to make money at.”

Goldman's Quarterly Profit Nearly Doubles On Trading Boom.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Hoffman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Goldman Sachs beat analysts' forecasts announcing a third-quarter profit of $3.62 billion on $10.87 billion in revenue. The bank's quarterly profit nearly doubled from one year ago. Bloomberg (10/14, Natarajan, 4.73M) reports the bank joined its rivals “in cashing in on continuing pandemic-induced volatility, as the firm's bond traders posted the biggest jump on Wall Street so far.” Revenue “from buying and selling stocks and bonds increased 29%, driven by a 49% surge in fixed-income trading.” Revenue at each of Goldman's four divisions “rose from a year earlier, pushing earnings per share to a record that was almost twice as high as analysts predicted.”

Reuters (10/14, Scuffham) says this was Goldman's “best quarterly performance in a decade by some measures, as trading moved back into the limelight and its lack of a big consumer business switched from a curse to a blessing.” The bank “set aside $278 million to cover loans that go bad, bringing its year-to-date total credit provisions to $2.8 billion."

The AP (10/14, Sweet) and Business Insider (10/14, Winck, 3.67M) provide similar coverage.

In Speech To Economic Clubs, Trump Touts His Record, Warns Of "Steep Depression" If He Loses.

Bloomberg (10/14, Coy, 4.73M) reports President Trump on Wednesday addressed "well-to-do members of economic clubs" in an online speech from the White House during which he "criticized the 'internationalists,' lobbyists, drug industry executives, and Democrats." Trump "expressed confidence about winning reelection and addressing the groups again next year," but, he said, "If I don't win the election, you probably won't want me." Bloomberg adds "the tone of Trump's remarks conveyed that he didn't think he had their unanimous support." Speaking to supporters of Joe Biden, Trump said, "You will see some things that will not make you happy. I don't understand your thinking... I assume it's habit. ... Keep backing them, but you know it's wrong."

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Ballhaus, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Trump stressed the strength of the pre-coronavirus economy and warned of the consequences if Biden is elected. The New York Post (10/14, Bowden, 4.57M) reports Trump "promised to cut taxes for middle-class Americans and deliver 10 million new jobs" if he is reelected. Trump said, "We are going to be cutting taxes further and that includes business taxes, but it includes especially middle income taxes." He added, "The choice facing America is simple: it's the choice between historic prosperity under my pro-American policies, or crippling poverty and a steep depression under the radical left."

The Washington Times (10/14, 492K) says although Trump's speech "was billed as an address on the economy...with Election Day less than three weeks away, resembled one of Mr. Trump's combative stump speeches."

WSJournal Analysis: Trump Has Presided Over Two Economies Since Taking Office. A Wall Street Journal (10/14, Hilsenrath, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) analysis says the President has directed two economies since taking office. The first, which ended in March, saw historic job growth and stock market gains was good. The second, which began with the arrival of the coronavirus pandemic, was bad, with unemployment rising to post-Depression record levels. The Journal says voters will weigh both economies and many of the gains Trump achieved in that first economy have been by the second.

Wells Fargo Fires More Than 100 For Improperly Getting Coronavirus Relief Funds.

Bloomberg (10/14, Levitt, 4.73M) reports "a person with knowledge of the situation" says Wells Fargo & Co. has "fired more than 100 employees for improperly getting coronavirus relief funds." The company "found staffers who it believes defrauded the U.S. Small Business Administration 'by making false representations in applying for coronavirus relief funds for themselves,' according to an internal memo reviewed by Bloomberg." Wells Fargo's head of human resources, David Galloreese, said in the memo, "We have terminated the employment of those individuals and will cooperate fully with law enforcement." The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Eisen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the New York Times (10/14, Flitter, 18.61M), and Reuters (10/14) provide similar coverage.

Earnings Reports Show Big Banks Faring Better Than Small Businesses.

The New York Times (10/14, Flitter, Kelly, 18.61M) reports while "hundreds of thousands of small businesses are closing for good" and "temporary layoffs at larger companies are becoming permanent," the nation's largest banks, "which together serve a majority of Americans through loans, credit cards or deposit services, are not raising an alarm." As big banks reported third quarter earnings this week, they "said they are generally prepared for a wave of loan defaults they expect in the second half of next year. And their own fortunes are just fine: A trading and investment banking bonanza on Wall Street is helping them stay profitable."

JBS Owner Pleads Guilty To Violating Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Magalhaes, Pearson, Bunge, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Brazilian company J&F Investimentos, which controls meatpacker JBS, agreed Wednesday to pay $128 million to settle a legal dispute in the US over bribes paid in Brazil. In 2017, J&F admitted it paid about $150 million in bribes to Brazilian politicians. On Wednesday, the company pleaded guilty in federal court in New York to violating the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. The AP (10/14, Biller, Goodman) reports JBS said in a related agreement "it would pay the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission $26.8 million for accounting irregularities at its U.S. subsidiary Pilgrim's Pride."

Pilgrim's Pride Agrees To Plea Deal To Settle Price Fixing Charges.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Bunge, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Pilgrim's Pride will pay a $110.5 million fine as part of a plea deal with the Justice Department related to resolve price-fixing charges. The deal makes the chicken processor the first company to admit to what prosecutors say was an effort involving much of the industry to inflate prices.

The New York Times (10/14, Tejada, 18.61M) reports the company "said the agreement included a provision that the Justice Department would not bring any more charges against the company on this matter. The company also noted that it would not have to pay any restitution or be subject to monitoring under the agreement."

Berkshire Hathaway Suit Accuses Law Firm Of Aiding Fraud.

The New York Times (10/14, Ewing, 18.61M) reports Berkshire Hathaway, in a bid to "get back some of the hundreds of millions of dollars it lost after buying a seemingly solid German pipe maker that turned out to be on the verge of going bust," is suing Jones Day, "the law firm that represented the owners of the pipe maker when it was sold to a Berkshire Hathaway subsidiary in 2017." The suit accuses the law firm "of helping to trick Berkshire Hathaway into paying five times what the German company was worth." The Times says there is little chance Berkshire Hathaway "will recover any money from the sellers of the pipe maker, Wilhelm Schulz," whose "shareholders have declared bankruptcy and are facing a criminal investigation in Germany," but "Jones Day is a prominent international law firm with deeper pockets."

Vista Equity Chief Executive Reaches Settlement With DOJ In Tax Inquiry.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Gottfried, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Vista Equity Partners chief executive Robert Smith has reached a $140 million settlement with the Justice Department to settle a criminal tax investigation. People familiar with the matter said Smith will enter into a nonprosecution agreement under which he will admit liability for taxes owed and not filing foreign bank account reports. As part of the settlement, Smith will pay an $85 million penalty, $30 million of back taxes, and $25 million in interest.

United Airlines Reports $1.8B Q3 Loss.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Sider, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports United Airlines on Wednesday reported a third quarter loss of $1.8 billion. The company, which reported $1 billion profit during the same period a year ago, said it is bracing for a long decline in air travel due to the coronavirus pandemic.

Reuters (10/14, Rucinski, Ajmera) reports the airline "said on Wednesday it cut operating costs by 59% in the third quarter and had nearly $20 billion of liquidity to position it for an eventual recovery from the COVID-19 crisis that has hammered the travel industry." The AP (10/14) reports CEO Scott Kirby said in a statement, "Even though the negative impact of COVID-19 will persist in the near term, we are now focused on positioning the airline for a strong recovery that will allow United to bring our furloughed employees back to work and emerge as the global leader in aviation."

Starbucks Links Executive Pay To Meeting Workforce Diversity Goals.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Haddon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Starbucks Corp. announced Wednesday that it is requiring anti-bias training for its executives and will link their compensation to meeting diversity targets for its workforce. USA Today (10/14, Tyko, 10.31M) reports Starbucks' "goal is by 2025 to have 30% of corporate employees and 40% of retail and manufacturing workers who identify as Black, indigenous or people of color." The company "also shared its diversity numbers Wednesday that show in the U.S. its workforce is 8% Black, 27% Hispanic, 6% Asian, 5% multiracial and 54% white. However, a look at the corporate demographics show 65% of workers were white, 19% Asian, 7% Hispanic and nearly 4% Black."

Companies Cut Ties With Ad Agency After Founder's Reported Racist Comment.

The New York Times (10/14, Hsu, 18.61M) reports Motel 6, Home Depot and Keurig Dr Pepper have dropped the Dallas advertising agency the Richards Group "after a report that its founder had made racist remarks in a meeting last week." According to a person involved in a Zoom meeting with more than three dozen Richards Group employees last Thursday, "a creative team working on the Motel 6 account presented an idea for an ad to Stan Richards, who founded the Richards Group in 1976. Mr. Richards responded to the idea" by saying, "It's too Black," might offend or alienate Motel 6's "white supremacist constituents."

Retailers Preparing For More Online Holiday Shopping Amid Pandemic.

NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 10, 1:50, Nguyen, 5.56M) reported the coronavirus pandemic is "poised to change one of the biggest shopping days of the year, Black Friday. With COVID surging and social distancing in stores, retailers are bracing for more online shopping, shipping, and earlier sales." Walmart is "holding three Black Friday sales starting in early November," while Target and Best Buy are "also promising multiple Black Friday deals throughout the month." NBC added, "Thirty-nine percent of Americans say they plan to cut back on gift spending," and 59% "of consumers say they'll do more of their holiday shopping online this year compared to last."

AEI Analysis: Biden Tax Plan Would Have Modest Impact On Growth.

The Washington Post (10/14, Newmyer, 14.2M) reports an analysis from "the right-leaning American Enterprise Institute" concludes Joe Biden's tax plan "would raise $2.8 trillion over the next decade from higher taxes on businesses, corporations and the wealthiest households. Over that time, AEI projects the higher taxes would reduce economic growth by a relatively modest 0.16 percent." AEI's Kyle Pomerleau and Grant Seiter write Biden's plan would "make the tax code more progressive," and would "reduce debt-to-GDP in the second decade, leading to slightly higher GDP. However, in the long term, his plan would not raise enough to stabilize debt-to-GDP and would lead to a 0.18 percent smaller economy." The finding "roughly aligns with other analyses from the Tax Foundation and the Penn Wharton Budget Model, Pomerleau notes. In other words, rolling back most of the Trump tax cuts wouldn't bring about the economic Armageddon the Trump campaign has depicted."

WSJournal Compares Trump, Biden Solutions For Aiding Small Businesses. The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Omeokwe, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) compares the solutions offered by President Trump and Joe Biden for helping small businesses during the coronavirus pandemic. The Journal says while Trump is likely to focus on policies that have proven effective so far, such as the Paycheck Protection Program, tax breaks, and the Platinum Plan for Black America, Biden has called for reforming the PPP, including greater oversight.

Media Analyses: Barrett Poised For Confirmation As Testimony Concludes.

Supreme Court nominee Amy Coney Barrett concluded nearly 20 hours of testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday. The AP (10/15, Sherman, Mascaró, Jalonick) says she "was careful not to take on the president who nominated her and sought to separate herself from writings on controversial subjects when she was an academic. She skipped past Democrats' pressing questions about ensuring the date of next month's election or preventing voter intimidation, both set in federal law, and the peaceful transfer of presidential power." A committee vote could come Thursday, with a vote on confirmation next week. The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Bravin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that her confirmation appears assured, and Politico (10/14, Everett, Bresnahan, 4.29M) says Barrett "has done absolutely nothing to endanger her support among the 51 Republicans needed to confirm her."

Terry Moran reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 6, 4:00, Muir, 6.83M), "It was a day Republicans sensed victory, a triumph decades in the making." Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham: "This is the first time in American history that we've nominated a woman who is unashamedly pro-life and embraces her faith without apology, and she's going to the court, a seat at the table is waiting on you." Moran: "But before that happens, Republicans surprisingly were playing defense on the Affordable Care Act, after Democrats hammered home on Tuesday that the law will come before the Supreme Court just one week after the election."

Nancy Cordes said on the CBS Evening News (10/14, story 8, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.09M), "With her confirmation in site, [Barrett] was even more cautious today, declining to weigh in on everything from the constitutionality of Medicare..." Barrett: "It's not a question that I've ever considered before." Cordes: "...to the validity of mail-in voting." Barrett: "That's a matter of policy on which I can't express a view." Cordes: "Democrats tried, unsuccessfully, to divine her views on voter discrimination. ... The 48-year-old appeals court judge did try to reassure her opponents on one front: Obamacare." Barrett: "I think you're suggesting I have some on hostility to the ACA, which I assure you I won't."

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/14, 2.67M) reports Barrett said the Affordable Care Act case to come before the court next month "is different from the 2012 case," the ruling in which she has criticized, "and it turns mainly on whether the court can strike a piece of the law without invalidating the whole law as unconstitutional." Adam Liptak writes in the New York Times (10/14, 18.61M), "Just minutes after the start of the second and final day of questions" for Barrett, Graham "invited her to describe the severability doctrine. She knew why he was asking, and she was ready to play ball." Barrett replied, "What it means is if you have a statute – and the Affordable Care Act is obviously a very long statute – if there is one provision within the statute that is unconstitutional, the question is whether that one section can simply be rendered null and excised from the statute."

Peter Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 7, 1:50, Holt, 5.56M) that Barrett said "she could not weigh in when Democrats asked whether a President could pardon himself, as President Trump has insisted." Barrett: "As far as I know, that question has never been litigated. It is not one on which I can offer a view." Reuters (10/14, Hurley, Zengerle) reports Barrett "said it is an 'open question' as to whether Trump could pardon himself while adding that the top U.S. judicial body 'can't control' whether a president obeys its decisions." The New York Times (10/14, Hulse, 18.61M) reports that as Barrett "has strained to present herself this week as someone who would join the Supreme Court without having made up her mind on pivotal cases, she was haunted by the long and exceedingly public record" of the President. She "has struggled over two days to separate herself from the trove of tweets and other pronouncements by Mr. Trump on his legal views and demands, many of which call into question the very notion of an independent judiciary."

The Washington Post (10/14, A1, Barnes, Kim, Marimow, 14.2M) reports, "Senate Republicans predicted clear sailing" for Barrett "as she concluded her confirmation testimony Wednesday, and said she will forge a new and prominent path as a conservative, religious woman who opposes abortion." Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) said, "There is nothing wrong with confirming to the Supreme Court of the United States a devout Catholic, pro-life Christian." USA Today (10/14, Hayes, Wu, Wolf, 10.31M) reports Graham "praised [Barrett] as having 'met every test' as senators finished their last round of questions."

The Chicago Tribune (10/14, Donovan, 2.65M) reports Senate Minority Whip Durbin told Barrett "that an 'orange cloud' hangs over her nomination," and the New York Daily News (10/14, Sommerfeldt, 2.52M) reports Durbin asked, "Why couldn't we wait till the end of November or December, or even January, after leaving a vacancy on the court for 10 months after Antonin Scalia's passing?" Roll Call (10/14, Ruger, 154K) reports Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) "even broke the fourth wall of the televised hearings several times, asking the American people to vote if they didn't like what they were hearing."

Ed Kilgore writes at The Intelligencer (10/14, 1.1M), "Given the massive initial blowback to the Republicans' decision to violate their own precedent by rushing through an election-year Supreme Court appointment, and conservative activists' excitement" about Barrett, "so far her Senate confirmation hearings are surprisingly ho-hum. Perhaps someday we will look back on this week as a momentous turning point, as the substantive constitutional questions Barrett is largely refusing to answer are weighty and consequential and her expected confirmation will shift the Supreme Court sharply to the right. But at the moment, the temperature is far lower than it was two years ago during Brett Kavanaugh's confirmation hearings."

The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) says in an editorial that Barrett "has attracted outrage for some of her answers – or non-answers – in her Senate confirmation questioning." But "the whole confirmation process is not really about Judge Barrett. We pass no judgment on her qualifications or suitability; we would urge senators to oppose any nomination at this moment. What is at trial here is the poisonous, dishonorable hypocrisy Republicans have shown in blocking the nomination of Judge Merrick Garland eight months before an election and then rushing this one to tilt the court to their advantage.” The Hill (10/14, Bolton, 2.98M), Breitbart (10/14, 673K), Townhall (10/14, Pavlich, 177K), and the CNN (10/14, Rogers, 83.16M) and Fox News (10/14, Schultz, 27.59M) websites are among the other outlets covering the hearing.

NYTimes Examines Motherhood As “Powerful But Tricky” Political Credential. The New York Times (10/14, Haridasani Gupta, 18.61M) writes, “During [Barrett’s] Supreme Court confirmation hearings this week, Republican senators, one after another, marveled at a role that doesn’t appear on her résumé: mother of seven. They described her mothering as ‘tireless’ and ‘remarkable,’ clear evidence that she was a ‘superstar.’” Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA), who sits on the Judiciary Committee, “has, in other settings, repeatedly emphasized her role as stepmother. ... For American women in public office, being a mother has become a powerful but tricky credential. A woman who is professionally successful and ambitious is often seen as threatening or off-putting, researchers have found in multiple surveys of voters, but being a mother tempers that. It makes women seem warm and relatable – and suggests they can relate to voters’ lives, too.”

Vanessa Friedman writes in the New York Times (10/14, 18.61M), “As the Senate confirmation hearings have made clear, the image Judge Barrett is trying to project is pretty much the opposite of ‘notorious.’ Indeed, she even said, during her first day of questioning, that justices cannot ‘walk in like a royal queen and impose their will on the world.’ Better they walk in like the supermom next door.”

NYTimes Analysis: Harris Less Confrontational With Barrett Than She Was With Kavanaugh.

The New York Times (10/14, Ember, Lerer, 18.61M) writes under the headline “Harris’s New Strategy: A Hearing Appearance That Doesn’t Make Waves” that Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) “came ready to press her case against Judge Amy Coney Barrett on the second day of this week’s Supreme Court confirmation hearings,” but let a “tentative answer slide, hinting at what could become her new professional reality as a No. 2 to the most powerful man in politics.” Unlike her prosecutorial approach against then-Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh two years ago, the Times says, Harris was more cautious, “trying to balance her penchant for forceful exchanges with her duties as the vice-presidential nominee.”

State AGs, Prosecutors Vow Not To Enforce Anti-Abortion Laws If Roe Is Repealed.

The Washington Post (10/14, Jackman, 14.2M) reports a group “of more than 60 state prosecutors and attorneys general from across the country declared Wednesday that they would not enforce laws that criminalize abortion, even if the Supreme Court overturned” Roe v. Wade. The Post says the declaration, invoking “the power of prosecutorial discretion,” came as Amy Coney Barrett appeared poised for confirmation to the Supreme Court.

Trump Says “We Are Rounding The Turn” With Coronavirus.

President Trump said in an interview with Newsmax TV (10/14), “We’ve come up with great therapeutics and cures and all sorts of things, 85% mortality rate, you know when you think of that 90%. But we’ve come up with things that are amazing. The job we’ve done has been incredible. And now the vaccines are coming out. We are rounding the turn.”

Fauci Says Trump Is No Longer A Coronavirus Transmission Threat.

The New York Times (10/14, Zraick, Montague, Landler, Santora, Breeden, 18.61M) reports that NIAID Director Fauci indicated Wednesday that President Trump is “past the point of infectiousness and does not pose a safety risk to others.” The Times says Fauci “reviewed data from Mr. Trump’s coronavirus tests.” The Times adds, “Combined with the fact that Mr. Trump is more than 10 days out from the onset of symptoms, Dr. Fauci said in an interview Wednesday, ‘we feel confident that we can say with a high degree of confidence that he is not transmissible.’”

Hahn: Trial Stoppages Are Key To Ensuring Vaccine Safety.

Bloomberg (10/14, Armstrong, 4.73M) reports that on Wednesday, FDA Commissioner Hahn made the case that “a series of trial stops are part of the system to make sure any Covid-19 vaccine or therapy will be safe.” Hahn is quoted as saying, “Probably the most important part of clinical trials is to ensure safety as much as possible, certainly for the participants in the trial, but also to look at safety issues should an application come before FDA. ... The system was designed to identify safety issues. These safeguards are really important and built in to protect subjects of trials, but also ultimately to get to the right answer regarding the safety and efficacy of a therapeutic or vaccine.”

Fauci, Atlas Offer Differing Vaccine Timelines.

Asked on CBS Evening News (10/14, 4.09M) about the accuracy of claims about the availability of vaccines this year, NIAID Director Fauci said, “Available to use in a person would mean that that vaccine would have to have been proven to be safe and effective, and right now, there are a couple of candidates that are probably in a position that we will know by November or December whether or not they have a safe and effective candidate. If they do, there are only a few million doses of those vaccines that would be available, but when you say, ‘Is it available?’ of a vaccine that is proven to be safe and effective, it’s not going to be 100 million doses.”

White House Coronavirus Task Force member Scott Atlas said on America This Week (10/14, 11K), "Everything is proceeding, as far as I know, without a hitch. ... In the meantime, Operation Warp Speed is set up so that manufacturing is concurrent, regardless of the work of getting the data done, getting the clinical trial done." Atlas said, "The plan is, and there will be, as far as everyone is understanding, 100 million doses by the end of the year. There will be enough vaccines generated to have available a vaccine for every priority high-risk person, every first responder, all of the typical, sort of, high-priority people, no later than January."

WPost: Trump's "Unrealistic Promises" Spurring Vaccine Uncertainty. The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorializes that while vaccine hesitancy "was a public health difficulty before the pandemic," it has now "grown more serious just when everyone is looking to vaccines to save the day. Doubts and suspicions, once stirred by a small phalanx of activists, have become more widespread, in part in response to President Trump's unrealistic promises to rush a vaccine out before Election Day." The Post argues, "A credible, concerted effort must be made to boost confidence in vaccines that are proven safe and efficacious against the coronavirus. Such a campaign must be based on science and medicine, leaving political shenanigans behind."

Poll: Only 22% Of Black Americans Plan To Get COVID Vaccine.

The AP (10/14, Neergaard) reports, "Facing public skepticism about rushed COVID-19 vaccines, U.S. health officials are planning extra scrutiny of the first people vaccinated when shots become available – an added safety layer experts call vital." The AP adds, "With this week's pause of a second major vaccine study because of an unexplained illness – and repeated tweets from President Donald Trump that raise the specter of politics overriding science – a quarter of Americans say they won't get vaccinated." According to the AP, "while Black Americans have been especially hard-hit by COVID-19, just 22% say they plan to get vaccinated compared with 48% of white Americans," according to an AP-NORC poll.

CDC: Children Not Recommended To Get Vaccine Initially.

Reuters (10/14, Mishra) reports that on Wednesday, the CDC "said... that COVID-19 vaccines may not be initially recommended for children, when they become available." According to Reuters, "children, who rarely have severe COVID-19 symptoms, have not yet been tested for any experimental coronavirus vaccine." However, Pfizer "has said it will enroll children, who are capable of passing on the virus to high-risk groups, as young as 12 in its large, late-stage COVID-19 vaccine trial, while AstraZeneca has said a sub-group of patients in a large trial will test children between five to 12." CNBC (10/14, Lovelace Jr., 3.62M) reports on its website that "pregnant women and children are often the last to get tested in clinical trials as researchers assess safety risks."

Atlas: Regeneron, Lilly Treatments "Very Promising."

White House coronavirus task force member Scott Atlas said on America This Week (10/14, 11K), "There are two emergency use authorizations that have been submitted by the Regeneron drug and the Lilly drug, and they are being evaluated, I don't know any update on their evaluation, but that's very good news, because these are drugs that prevent people who are, early on, from being, from needing hospitalization. I don't know if you've heard the preliminary data, but it's very promising." Atlas said, "They will be available, you know, as soon as absolutely possible, pending their approval for emergency use authorization, so we're optimistic about that."

Daily Beast Analysis: Tensions Between Trump, COVID Task Force Officials Rising.

The Daily Beast (10/14, 1.39M) reports that "after months of trying to avoid direct run-ins with the President, task force officials are no longer tiptoeing around his demands," citing, among other things, NIAID Director Fauci and CDC Director Redfield's criticism of White House coronavirus task force member Scott Atlas. White House Deputy Press Secretary Brian Morgenstern said Trump's top priority "is the health and safety of the American people." While "the relationship between Trump and his COVID advisers has always been fraught," the "frictions have become particularly pronounced in recent weeks, after the White House hosted what Fauci called a superspreader event and as the election has neared." Despite being increasingly "sidelined," however, White House Coronavirus Task Force Coordinator Deborah Birx, Fauci, Redfield, "and others have been more adamant in holding their ground on policy disputes."

Despite Positive Statements From Trump, Administration Officials Were Less Confident About Virus.

The New York Times (10/14, Kelly, Mazzetti, 18.61M) reports, "On the afternoon of Feb. 24, President Trump declared on Twitter that the coronavirus was 'very much under control' in the United States, one of numerous rosy statements that he and his advisers made at the time about the worsening epidemic. He even added an observation for investors: 'Stock market starting to look very good to me!'" However, "hours earlier, senior members of the president's economic team, privately addressing board members of the conservative Hoover Institution, were less confident." A document "written by a hedge fund consultant who attended the three-day gathering of Hoover's board, was stark. 'What struck me,' the consultant wrote, was that nearly every official he heard from raised the virus 'as a point of concern, totally unprovoked.'"

Scientists Criticize White House-Endorsed Herd Immunity Memorandum.

On NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 6, 0:40, Holt, 5.56M), John Torres reported, "There are two ways of achieving herd immunity. You either vaccinate people, or you let people get sick, and if they recover, they develop immunity on their own. Some within the medical community are now suggesting it's time to let the virus spread freely and for the disease to run its course, but history has shown us that this approach could be devastating and deadly. And many health organizations are strongly opposed, with the World Health Organization even calling it unethical."

USA Today (10/14, Weise, 10.31M) reports that, in a letter published in the Lancet on Wednesday, 80 researchers called a herd immunity strategy of fighting the coronavirus "a dangerous fallacy unsupported by the scientific evidence" after "a memorandum published Oct. 4, called the Great Barrington Declaration, called for the world to embrace herd immunity for COVID-19 as a way to protect the vulnerable while still allowing economies to thrive." On Monday, "a senior Administration official said the President has long supported the same idea," which "leaves most epidemiologists both appalled and incredulous." The letter, called the John Snow Memorandum, argues the Trump Administration "should be promoting public health measures known to be both safe and effective: wearing masks, washing hands, avoiding large groups, maintaining social distancing, and providing easily accessible testing and contact tracing."

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/14, 2.67M) reports that "herd immunity...is a dangerous gamble, many experts opposed to the idea said Wednesday, after news of the White House support was widely reported. Attempting to achieve population-level immunity without a vaccine could result in many tens of thousands of preventable deaths, opponents say." Stanford professor of medicine Jay Bhattacharya "said the proposal isn't as outrageous as some of its detractors suggest" and "described it as a reasonable alternative to universal shelter-in-place restrictions that have had dire economic and social consequences. But in this hyper-politicized environment, a plan supported by the Trump administration is automatically dismissed, he said."

Cornyn Questions Lack Of Masks In 2018 Photo Of Democratic Senators.

The Hill (10/14, Gstalter, 2.98M) reports Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX) on Wednesday retweeted a picture of several Democratic senators, commenting that they were not wearing masks. Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-VT) and some social media users "quickly pointed out the photograph was taken before the coronavirus pandemic, with some accusing Cornyn of spreading disinformation." Leahy "wrote that he was looking forward to his colleague 'calling out President Trump for not wearing a mask next time.'"

Coronavirus Cases On Rise In 37 States.

ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 2, 2:40, Muir, 6.83M) reported, "We see the virus spiking across the country, amid those fears of a second wave," with "hospitalizations increasing in 36 states across the country. Wisconsin, as we've been reporting, hit especially hard. A field hospital now set up to take in COVID patients." ABC's Stephanie Ramos said Wisconsin is "now facing a record number of deaths and hospitalizations, 3,000 new cases since just yesterday" and "as colder weather sends more people indoors, cases of the virus surging in 35 states."

The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 5, 2:10, O'Donnell, 4.09M) reported, "There is a dire prediction tonight that 135,000 more Americans could die from COVID in the next three months. That's because new cases are on the rise in at least 37 states. And only three are seeing decreases." CBS' Adriana Diaz added, "Wisconsin just set two records no one wants: the most daily COVID cases and deaths the state's ever seen," while "Midwest hot spots raged" in Minnesota, South Dakota, and Michigan and "the wider view isn't much better" as "at least 13 states broke records for hospitalizations in the last week." The CDC "says small gatherings are fanning the spread, along with larger events" like birthday parties.

On NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 4, 2:40, Holt, 5.56M), Miguel Almaguer reported, "Tonight as the troubling number of infections soars across the nation, one third of our country is now reporting the highest case counts since the start of the pandemic. In Oklahoma City, there are no open ICU beds. States like Utah, with a dangerously high positivity rate, on the brink of crisis." With "numbers of Americans hospitalized in Midwest states like Iowa hitting new records, the nation is set to break eight million confirmed infections." According to a new national survey, 52% of Americans "already have or plan to stockpile food and other essentials this fall."

Asked on CBS Evening News (10/14, 4.09M) about the recent spike in nationwide COVID cases, NIAID Director Fauci said, "We were in a difficult place to begin with. ... As you know, what we're seeing, unfortunately, is upticks in case positivities, test positivities. That's going to translate, as it already is, into additional hospitalizations, which ultimately going to translate into additional deaths, and now we're starting to see...an uptick in cases in 37 states. I mean, that is a substantial proportion of the United States of America."

Wisconsin Sets State Record For Cases. On NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 5, 1:35, Holt, 5.56M), Stephanie Gosk reported, "On May 27, reported COVID deaths in Wisconsin peaked at 22. After that, the number dropped. Maybe the worst is over, some thought. Then the fall hit." Bellin Health Emergency Services Medical Director Paul Casey said, "We thought we dodged a bullet. But lo and behold, here we are on the first of October, and this virus has come back with a vengeance, and we're in deep trouble." Gosk said, "On Tuesday, a new state record, 34 reported deaths" as healthcare workers repeat "the same advice" of wearing masks and socially distancing and "hope it may finally sink in." The state on Wednesday opened a 500-bed field hospital "to take the strain off the system. It's the same one Wisconsin decided it did not need to open back in May."

Studies Suggest Blood Type O Is "Less Vulnerable" To Coronavirus.

CNN (10/14, Howard, 83.16M) reports on its website that according to two new studies published on Wednesday, "people with blood type O may be less vulnerable to Covid-19 and have a reduced likelihood of getting severely ill." While "experts say more research is needed," a study in Denmark "found that among 473,654 people who were tested for Covid-19, only 38.4% with blood type O tested positive" and "researchers in Canada found that among 95 patients critically ill with Covid-19, a higher proportion with blood type A or AB – 84% – required mechanical ventilation compared with patients with blood group O or B, which was 61%."

Study Finds Daycare Centers At Low Risk For Transmitting Coronavirus.

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Whelan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that a new Yale University study of over 57,000 US childcare centers concluded that children in daycare carry close to zero risk of spreading COVID-19 to adults as long as standard safety guidelines, including mask wearing and handwashing, are observed.

NFL Cancels 2021 Pro Bowl Due To Pandemic.

USA Today (10/14, Reyes, 10.31M) reports that "the COVID-19 pandemic, which has already altered the NFL season by forcing rescheduled games and shuffled bye weeks, has now claimed the Pro Bowl." NFL "announced that the annual all-star game that is held each year before the Super Bowl has been canceled and will be replaced with virtual activities, in consultation with the NFL Players Association." The cancellation "marks the fourth major element in the league calendar to be significantly altered by the pandemic" after the 2020 NFL draft "was held virtually, the league canceled all preseason games and the regular season has already seen several postponements and schedule changes."

NYTimes Analysis: Biden's COVID Plan Carries "Echoes" Of FDR's New Deal.

The New York Times (10/14, Goodnough, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports that Joe Biden "is preparing for the biggest challenge he would face if elected president – ending the coronavirus pandemic – by reaching back nearly a century to draw on the ideas of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose big-government policies lifted the country out of the Great Depression and changed the shape of America." Biden "has staked his campaign on promising a more muscular federal role than Mr. Trump's leave-it-to-the-states approach," though "the country Mr. Biden would lead is very different from Roosevelt's America, and his coronavirus response proposals may not be all that easy to put into place," with the pandemic "caught up in partisan politics" that "might leave him vulnerable to the charge that Mr. Trump has leveled against all Democrats: that they are practitioners of 'socialism' who would use the federal government to supersede individual and state rights."

NYTimes Analysis: "All Politics Is Virus Politics In 2020."

The New York Times (10/14, Mervosh, Fernandez, 18.61M) reports, "Across the nation, there are local and state races in which the pandemic has also taken an outside role. In some cases, the virus has been the reason for running; in others, handling of the pandemic has become the defining issue, eclipsing ordinary matters of taxes and services." The virus and government responses have "inspired parents, hair salon owners and others to run for the first time, turned sleepy races into competitive matches and injected a level of unpredictability and rancor into normally tranquil down-ballot contests." Conservatives "have made their opposition to mandates on masks and business closings the center of blossoming campaigns," while "restrictions to control the spread of the virus – or the lack of such restrictions – have become motivating factors in races of all sizes."

Taylor's Boyfriend Describes March 13 Events.

The CBS Evening News (10/14, story 9, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.09M) reported, "Tonight we are getting new insight into what happened the night Louisville police shot and killed Breonna Taylor in her home during a botched drug raid" as "Taylor's boyfriend, Kenneth Walker, tells Gayle King what they heard that night and why he fired his gun, which is licensed, at officers." Walker said, "It was a loud bang at the door, and nobody was responding. We were saying, 'who is it?' ... If they knocked on the door and said who it was, we could hear them. It was dead silent." He said, "I let out one shot, and, you know, I'm figuring somebody is trying to break or something, they're not going to do want to do anything after that." When police responded with gunfire, he said, "You know, I don't think I ever heard so many gunshots, like, all at the same time. ... Breonna Taylor should be next to me. That's the only justice for me."

Floyd's Sister Endorses Biden In New Campaign Ad.

The New York Times (10/14, Corasaniti, 18.61M) reports that the Joe Biden campaign "on Wednesday introduced a new ad featuring Bridgett Floyd, one of George Floyd's sisters, who in an emotional testimonial calls the former vice president 'the change we need.'" The new ad "comes as the Biden campaign is ramping up its effort to energize Black voters as early voting gets underway" and "is being accompanied by a day of action to honor Mr. Floyd on his birthday, organized by the George Floyd Memorial Foundation, which was founded by members of his family. The social media campaign asks people to ensure that they 'make a voting plan now' and to call their senators to pass a criminal justice overhaul bill."

WSJournal: Amazon Invites Criticism In Rejecting Brown Documentary.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Amazon's decision to reject a documentary about the 2014 police killing of Michael Brown invites political repercussions from both left and right, arguing that the company is silencing both diverse and dissenting voices.

Biden Campaign Denies Meeting Alleged In New York Post Report.

The New York Post (10/14, Morris, Fonrouge, 4.57M) reports Hunter Biden "introduced his father, then-Vice President Joe Biden, to a top executive at a Ukrainian energy firm less than a year before the elder Biden pressured government officials in Ukraine into firing a prosecutor who was investigating the company, according to emails obtained by The Post." The Post says the "blockbuster correspondence...is contained in a massive trove of data recovered from a laptop computer." Bloomberg (10/14, Ali, 4.73M) reports that the Biden campaign denied the report. Campaign spokesman Andrew Bates said in a statement, "We have reviewed Joe Biden's official schedules from the time and no meeting, as alleged by the New York Post, ever took place." Bloomberg says the Post "offered no proof the meeting took place, but cited unverified emails it said it was given by surrogates of President Donald Trump."

Glenn Kessler of the Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) writes that the Post "posted PDF print-outs of several emails allegedly from the laptop, but for the 'smoking gun' email, it shows only a photo made the day before the story was posted, according to Thomas Rid, author of Active Measures, a book on disinformation. 'There is no header information, no metadata.' The Washington Post has been unable to independently verify or authenticate these emails, as requests to make the laptop hard drive available for inspection have not been granted. ... There also is no indication that Hunter Biden replied to the email," and "another alleged email published by the New York Post contradicts the notion that Hunter Biden could influence his father."

President Trump said in an interview with Newsmax TV (10/14) that the Bidens "are crooks. They have always been crooks. They are grifters and crooks, and this is what we are running against and it's a disgrace." Trump added, "I give credit to the New York Post. The mainstream media will try not to pick it up even though it's a major scandal. But it is a very sad thing when you look at that. Everywhere he goes, his son goes right behind him grabs money." White House Director of Strategic Communications Alyssa Farah said on America This Week (10/14, 11K), "This was very concerning, and the Biden campaign's got some real questions to answer, and I hope that the mainstream media will actually pose those questions."

Facebook And Twitter Face Criticism For Decision To Limit Access To Story. Much of the coverage deals not with the allegations themselves but with the decisions by Facebook and Twitter to limit access to the story. The New York Times (10/14, Glueck, Isaac, 18.61M) reports the companies found the claims "so dubious that they limited access to the article on their platforms. ... Facebook said on Wednesday that it had decided to limit the distribution of the story on its platform so it could fact-check the claims. Twitter said it was blocking the article because it included people's personal phone numbers and email addresses, which violated their privacy rules, and because the article violated their policy on hacked materials."

The Los Angeles Times (10/14, 4.64M) reports, "Following heavy criticism over the way they let misinformation run wild on their platforms in the run-up to the 2016 presidential election, social media companies gradually have been adopting stronger policies to stem the spread of misinformation. For the first time, Facebook and Twitter deployed those policies Wednesday against a major news outlet to prevent a sensational political story from going viral." CNBC (10/14, Rodriguez, 3.62M) says on its website, "The editorial decision to reduce the spread of the story is a significant one for Facebook," which "has long professed to stand for freedom of speech and rejected the idea that it be an arbiter of truth."

Breitbart (10/14, 673K) reports Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey "finally issued a public comment on his platform's decision" at 7:55 p.m., tweeting, "Our communication around our actions on the @nypost article was not great. And blocking URL sharing via tweet or DM with zero context as to why we're blocking: unacceptable."

President Trump tweeted, "So terrible that Facebook and Twitter took down the story of 'Smoking Gun' emails related to Sleepy Joe Biden and his son, Hunter, in the @NYPost. It is only the beginning for them. There is nothing worse than a corrupt politician. REPEAL SECTION 230!!!" Trump later tweeted, "Congratulations to the @nypost for having exposed the massive corruption surrounding Sleepy Joe Biden and our Country. He's always been a corrupt politician. Disgraceful!"

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg had in the past committed to keep Facebook free of political censorship, but he appears to have since changed his views. The Washington Times (10/14, Morton, Boyer, 492K), the Washington Free Beacon (10/14, 78K), and Townhall (10/14, Rosas, 177K) are among the other sources covering the Post story and the social media firms' response.

DOJ "Unmasking" Probe Reportedly Found No Wrongdoing.

Citing "two congressional sources," Reuters (10/14, Hosenball) reports that the Justice Department "has ended its probe into whether Obama administration officials improperly 'unmasked' associates of President Donald Trump mentioned in intelligence reports." According to one of the sources, the investigation "found no wrongdoing." Reuters says in May, DOJ "appointed John Bash, a federal prosecutor from Texas, to lead the inquiry after Republican senators unveiled a declassified list of U.S. officials who made requests that ultimately disclosed intercepted conversations between Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn and Russia's ambassador." The New York Times (10/14, Benner, Barnes, 18.61M) says DOJ "has portrayed Mr. Bash's work as a review, not a criminal investigation. His findings were given to John H. Durham, the U.S. attorney in Connecticut, who is conducting a criminal investigation into the roots of the Russia inquiry," according to two officials briefed on the matter.

CNN (10/14, Darcy, 83.16M) reports on its website that while Fox News portrayed the matter "as one of the greatest – if not the greatest – political scandals in American history," the "conspiracy theory collapsed" when the "investigation into the supposed scandal quietly ended with no charges."

Trump was asked in an interview with Newsmax TV (10/14) about the fact that there will be no indictments in the probe. Trump said, "Personally, I think it is ridiculous. It is a disgrace. ... Personally I think it's too bad. They are guilty as hell."

Pompeo: State Department Doing "Everything We Can" To Release Clinton Emails.

Bloomberg (10/14, Wadhams, 4.73M) reports Secretary of State Pompeo said Wednesday his department is doing "everything we can" to release emails from Hillary Clinton's time as secretary. Pompeo told reporters, "We'll continue to do the right thing, we'll make sure that all these emails get to the right place. ... We will do everything we can to make sure that the American people get a chance to see as much as we can equitably produce."

Ohr Retires From DOJ.

USA Today (10/14, 10.31M) reports former deputy attorney general Bruce Ohr, "whose associations with a British informant in the government's Russia investigation drew rebukes from Justice's watchdog, has retired as a decision loomed in an internal disciplinary review." Ohr left the Justice Department Sept. 30, Justice spokeswoman Kerri Kupec said Wednesday. Kupec said, "Mr. Ohr retired after his counsel was informed that a final decision on a disciplinary review being conducted by ... senior career officials was imminent." The Washington Times (10/14, Mordock, 492K) provides similar coverage.

Cohen Writing Second Book About Trump, DOJ.

Politico (10/14, Lippman, 4.29M) reports President Trump's former lawyer Michael Cohen "is writing a second book, about the politicization of the Justice Department and his time in Trump world." Cohen told Politico, "There's so much more to the story that hasn't been told, tangentially related to Donald Trump. ... It is fair and accurate to state that President Trump has weaponized the Department of Justice against those he deems to be a threat thus making it into the Department of Injustice."

Morgan: "People Are Safer" Because Of Administration's Border Policies.

Acting CBP Commissioner Morgan said on KNST-AM Tucson, AZ (10/14, 4K), "What this Administration, what this President, has done the last four years, is absolutely give CBP, the men and women of CBP, who risk their lives every day, a network of tools and policies and support to get the job done to protect American people. ... That's a fact, and people are safer because of it." Asked about the US-Mexico border wall and its effectiveness, Morgan said, "Anywhere where we have this multi-layer strategy of infrastructure, technology, and personnel...you see drugs go down, you see illegal migration go down, you see assaults on agents go down, across the board. It's successful everywhere it's built."

KOLD-TV . Tucson, AZ (10/14, 27K) reported that Morgan visited Tucson, Arizona, on Wednesday, "talking about the increased activity the agency is seeing at the border" and progress on the border wall. Morgan said, "We're building more miles per day, more miles per week than we ever have before."

Migrant Arrests At Border Hit 13-Month High In September.

The Washington Post (10/14, Miroff, 14.2M) reports, "The number of migrants that U.S. border agents took into custody rose to a 13-month high in September," according to CBP figures published Wednesday "that belie President Trump's attempts to tout his enforcement record on the campaign trail. ... After an initial drop in border crossings this past spring, arrests have been steadily rising, driven mostly by Mexican adults who are trying to enter the United States again and again until they succeed." The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Hackman, Caldwell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports there were 54,771 arrests along the border in September, the highest total for that month in more than a decade. The Washington Times (10/14, Dinan, 492K) also reports.

District Court Judge Strikes Down Tennessee Abortion Law.

The New York Times (10/14, Levenson, Tavernise, 18.61M) reports US District Court Judge Bernard Friedman on Wednesday "struck down a Tennessee law that required women to wait 48 hours after visiting a clinic to have an abortion, finding that it placed an undue burden on women, particularly low-income women, by requiring them to travel to a health center twice for the procedure." Friedman "also said the waiting period was 'gratuitously demeaning to women who have decided to have an abortion.'"

Federal Employee Healthcare Premiums To Rise 4.9% On Average In 2021.

The Washington Post (10/14, Yoder, 14.2M) reports that federal employees will pay 4.9% more on average for healthcare premiums in 2021, "an increase driven by long-running upward pressures on premiums that, perhaps surprisingly, were eased by the novel coronavirus pandemic, the government said Wednesday." The "average premium rise in the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program will be slightly below the increase for 2020."

In New Mexico, Barr Touts Joint Effort To Reduce Crime.

Bloomberg (10/14, Strohm, 4.73M) reports Attorney General Barr took President Trump's "law-and-order agenda on the road Wednesday, meeting with officials in Albuquerque, New Mexico, to discuss Operation Legend, a targeted joint effort of federal, state and local law enforcement officials to combat violent crime in select cities." According to Bloomberg, Barr "made clear that politics was also on his agenda." Barr is quoted as saying, "If you want to be safe, if you are tired of the blood and mayhem on the streets, then you have to start paying attention to who you vote for."

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Gurman, Viswanatha, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in addition to New Mexico, Barr will discuss the program in St. Louis this week and he will address police chiefs in New Orleans. The Journal says the appearances show how Barr's priorities have aligned with Trump's law-and-order campaign message. Critics say this demonstrates a pattern of adjusting DOJ priorities to help Trump's reelection chances.

Human Rights Campaign: Record Number Of Transgender People Have Died Violently This Year.

USA Today (10/14, Aspegren, 10.31M) reports the Human Rights Campaign says "a record number of transgender and gender nonconforming people – 32 – have been killed by violence this year," including "five deaths in the past three weeks." Sarah Kate Ellis, president of LGBTQ media advocacy group GLAAD said the number is likely higher "since many trans people killed by violence are misgendered by police and can be misreported in the media. ... Violence facing transgender Americans, especially Black trans women, requires urgent resources and attention from federal state, and local government agencies and elected officials."

WPost Calls On Commonwealth's Attorney To Make Decision On Ghaisar Case.

A Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorial criticizes Fairfax County, Virginia, Commonwealth's Attorney Steve T. Descano for failing to make decision on "the unwarranted fatal shooting of Bijan Ghaisar" after nine months in office. Ghaisar "was the unarmed young accountant with no criminal record" who was shot by US Park Police in November 2017. The Post says his killing "and the subsequent glacial response by law enforcement, has become a shameful mystery."

Trump Declines To Commit To Retaining Barr In Second Term.

Bloomberg (10/14, Strohm, Fabian, Wadhams, 4.73M) reports President Trump "is ramping up pressure on two of his most loyal Cabinet members to produce information that could damage Joe Biden's prospects as polls show the former vice president leading ahead of the Nov. 3 election." Trump told Newsmax TV (10/14) he is "not happy" with the evidence he's seen coming out of Attorney General William Barr's Justice Department and wouldn't say whether he'd keep him on in a second term." Also Wednesday, Secretary of State Pompeo "vowed that his team is doing 'everything we can' to release additional emails from Hillary Clinton's tenure at the department, something the president demanded last week in a rare rebuke of his top diplomat." Bloomberg says both men "are under pressure to deliver for a president known for quickly turning on aides who don't do his bidding, or can't deliver."

The Daily Caller (10/14, 716K) says Trump "didn't rule out replacing Barr" if he gets reelected. Trump said, "I have no comment. Can't comment on that. It's too early. ... I'm not happy with all of the evidence I have, I can tell you that. I'm not happy."

First Lady Says Barron Trump Tested Positive For COVID, With No Symptoms.

In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (10/14, lead story, 4:05, Muir, 6.83M) reported, "We learned today that the President's son, Barron, tested positive for COVID, too, some time after the President and First Lady." ABC's Jonathan Karl added that the First Lady "shared the news" late Wednesday "in an article on the White House website," and "minutes after the article was posted, President Trump was asked about his son. As he answered, he quickly changed the subject." President Trump said, "Barron's fine, and Amy is doing a fantastic job, we're heading out to Iowa, and we have a big rally, a lot of people, as always." Karl said that while the President has made his recovery "part of his stump speech," the First Lady "strikes a different tone" in describing her symptoms and "wants people to know that she is keenly aware that she received the kind of care that most people simply cannot get."

The CBS Evening News (10/14, lead story, 1:55, O'Donnell, 4.09M) reported in its lead story, "Tonight, the first lady says her son, Barron, did have the virus at the same time that she and the President were infected, but that the 14-year-old has now tested negative. And she's opening up about what she calls a roller coaster of symptoms, even as her husband has declared himself cured and immune from the virus." CBS' Weijia Jiang added, "The First Lady says she is glad that she, Barron Trump, and President Trump all got the coronavirus at the same time, so they could take care of each other" and "revealed she had body aches, a cough, and felt extremely tired, choosing a more natural route in terms of medicine, opting more for vitamins and healthy food to help her recover." Jiang said when "asked about his son, President Trump did not give any further details."

On NBC Nightly News (10/14, lead story, 1:40, Holt, 5.56M), Geoff Bennett reported, "Unlike her husband whose symptoms were more severe, Melanie Trump did not go to the hospital and did not receive the same course of treatment. Choosing instead what she calls a more natural route, relying on vitamins and healthy food."

Supreme Court Ruling Adds To Census "Whiplash."

The AP (10/14) reports that Tuesday's Supreme Court ruling that the Trump Administration can end the census count "was just the latest case of whiplash for the census, which has faced starts and stops from the pandemic, natural disasters and court rulings, as well as confusion over when it was going to end and questions over whether minorities, immigrants, poor people and others would be counted accurately." The New York Times (10/14, Bogel-Burroughs, Liptak, Wines, 18.61M) writes, "Counting all of the people in the United States is always a giant task for the Census Bureau. But if ever there was a more difficult year than most to conduct the tally, it would seem to be 2020." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Court ruled correctly, permitting an enumeration as required by the Constitution and ending the meddling of the courts in a process delegated to Congress.

Bernhardt: Trump Will Go Down As "Greatest Conservation President In Our Lifetime."

Asked about the Great American Outdoors Act on the Steve Gruber Show (10/14), Interior Secretary Bernhardt said, "In my opinion, President Trump will go down, ultimately, as the greatest conservation President in our lifetime, and his track record, for anyone who believes in hunting, in angling, or actually just simply recreating outdoors, is absolutely incredible." Bernhardt said, "The enactment of the Great American Outdoors Act took everything to an incredibly new level. First off, there's $900 million a year, guaranteed, from now through perpetuity...that's directed to enhancing outdoor recreation activities. ... This is a funding commitment like no other."

Army Plans New Policy On Searching For Missing Soldiers.

The Washington Post (10/14, Horton, 14.2M) reports the Army plans to introduce a policy "calling for more urgency in finding missing soldiers, top leaders said, after a handful of high-profile disappearances at Fort Hood that left families frustrated over the depth and speed of search efforts." Officials have previously said that commanders "have not prioritized searching for soldiers missing from the ranks...and they currently do not proactively search for deserters."

NBC Sources Say Trump Expected Candidacy To Fail, Allowing Continuation Of "The Apprentice."

The Hollywood Reporter (10/14, 1.89M) looks at President Trump's business relationship with NBC over the course of the run of "The Apprentice," with "a former network insider" saying Trump did not expect his presidential campaign to hinder the show. The source said, "He said he was announcing a bid in June [2015] and [he'd] be out of the race by September and start shooting [Celebrity Apprentice] in January. He never expected to get any traction. He was doing it to boost his own brand." Sources also said Trump "didn't see why his candidacy or even presidency should make a difference. 'He didn't see why he couldn't do the show from the Oval Office,' says one."

Biden Has Eight-Point National Lead In IBD/TIPP Tracking Poll.

An IBD/TIPP poll of 866 likely voters nationwide (10/9-10/13) has Joe Biden at 50.7%, President Trump 42.7%, Libertarian Jo Jorgensen 2.1%, and Green Howie Hawkins 1.0%. Weijia Jiang said on the CBS Evening News (10/14, story 3, 0:35, O'Donnell, 4.09M) that Biden is "leading nationwide and in most swing states."

Marc Thiessen of the Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) interviews Trump for his column, writing that Trump "is trailing in the polls, but he remains confident of victory." Trump cited "a Fox News poll showing that 49 percent of Americans think their neighbors are supporting him ('These people know their neighbors,' he says) and a Hill-HarrisX poll that many Americans think others lie to pollsters when asked about their voting preferences, as evidence that the polls are wrong."

Florida. A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 653 likely Florida voters (10/7-10/14) has Biden at 49% and Trump at 47%. A St. Pete Polls poll of 2,215 likely Florida voters (10/11-10/12) has Biden at 49.2% and Trump at 47.2%.

Pennsylvania. A Politico/IQ poll of 800 likely Pennsylvania voters (10/7-10/12) has Biden at 49% and Trump at 43%.

Ohio. A Quinnipiac University poll of 1,160 likely Ohio voters (10/8-10/12) has Biden at 48% and Trump at 47%.

Georgia. A SurveyUSA poll of 677 likely Georgia voters (10/8-10/12) has Biden at 48% and Trump at 46%. A Quinnipiac University poll of 1,040 likely Georgia voters (10/8-10/12) has Biden at 51% and Trump at 44%. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/14, 895K) headlines its report on the Quinnipiac survey "Poll: Biden Takes Significant Lead In Georgia For First Time." Politico (10/14, Carrasco, 4.29M) also covers the poll.

Michigan. An EPIC/MRA poll of 600 likely Michigan voters (10/8-10/12) has Biden at 48% and Trump at 39%

North Carolina. A New York Times/Siena College poll of 627 likely North Carolina voters (10/9-10/13) has Biden at 46% and Trump at 42%. A Susquehanna Polling and Research poll of 500 likely North Carolina voters (10/7-10/11) has Biden at 48% and Trump at 46%. The Charlotte Observer (10/14, 470K) writes that "after weeks of polls showing them in a virtual tie, [Biden] appears to be edging ahead" of Trump in the state.

Arizona. A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 667 likely Arizona voters (10/7-10/14) has Biden at 50% and Trump at 46%.

New Hampshire. A Suffolk University poll of 500 likely New Hampshire voters (10/8-10/12) has Biden at 51% and Trump at 41%.

Montana. A Montana State University mail-in poll of 1,787 registered Montana voters (9/14-10/2) has Trump at 51% and Biden at 44%.

YouGov Poll Finds Biden Ahead 72% To 22% Among Indian-Americans. The New York Times (10/14, Schmall, 18.61M) reports that "a large majority of Indian-Americans plan to cast ballots" for Biden, according to a "survey released Wednesday, despite elaborate overtures by the Trump White House to win their support." The Times says the YouGov poll "found that 72 percent of Indian-American voters planned to vote for Mr. Biden, with just 22 percent planning to go for President Trump."

Early Voting Now Underway In Most Of US.

David Muir reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 3, 1:45, 6.83M) that early voting is "now underway in 48 states, including Tennessee just today, and we noted long lines there after record-breaking turnout in Georgia and Texas already." ABC's Mary Bruce: "In Tennessee on the first day of early voting, the line stretch[ed] across this parking lot. Forty-eight states [are] now voting in person, smashing records across the country." Ed O'Keefe said on the CBS Evening News (10/14, story 7, 2:00, O'Donnell, 4.09M), "Nationwide, there are long lines and hours-long waits, as more than 14.9 million early votes are in, shattering records from 2016. Nearly two million in Florida, about 1.2 million in Michigan, at least another million each in California and Texas, nearly 743,000 over the first two days in Georgia." Reuters (10/14, Oliphant) reports that "more than 13 million Americans have cast ballots, setting a record early pace, according to the U.S. Elections Project at the University of Florida." According to Reuters, "In the last presidential election, some 1.4 million Americans had cast early votes as of Oct. 16, 2016."

The Washington Post (10/14, Gardner, Viebeck, 14.2M) reports, "So far, much of the early voting appears to be driven by heightened enthusiasm among Democrats. Of the roughly 3.5 million voters who have cast ballots in six states that provide partisan breakdowns, registered Democrats outnumber Republicans by roughly 2 to 1, according to a Washington Post analysis of data in Florida, Iowa, Maine, Kentucky, North Carolina and Pennsylvania." The Houston Chronicle (10/14, 730K) reports, "More than a million Texans have already cast ballots after just the first day of early voting, and the state isn't even finished counting the first day's numbers." The Los Angeles Times (10/14, 4.64M) reports that "more than 1 million Californians have returned their mail-in ballots, according to the state, an amount that dwarfs the number submitted at this point four years ago. This marks the most ballots collected by mail at this point in any California election."

USA Today (10/14, Hughes, 10.31M) reports that the President's "growing call for an 'army' of supporters to 'monitor' voting has raised concerns during an already vitriolic presidential election campaign about voter intimidation and suppression of minority groups." The Washington Post (10/14, Ryan, 14.2M) reports military leaders are also facing "renewed challenges in their attempt to steer clear of divisive election politics. ... Trump has declined to commit to conceding power if he loses, fueling speculation about a disputed outcome and the potential for him to reach for the military as part of an attempt to clinch another term."

Judge Extends Virginia Voter Registration Deadline After System Outage. The New York Times (10/14, Thrush, 18.61M) reports a federal judge "has extended the voter registration deadline in Virginia until 11:59 p.m. on Thursday, after a cut cable on Tuesday brought down the online system hours before the original deadline." The Washington Post (10/14, Olivo, 14.2M) reports the ruling came "in response to a lawsuit filed by voter advocacy groups, which argued that Tuesday's disruption affected thousands, with a disproportionate impact on racial and ethnic minorities and younger voters."

Amazon Event, Holiday Shopping Add To Strain On USPS As It Handles Ballots. The Washington Post (10/14, Bogage, Bhattarai, 14.2M) reports, "With millions of mailed ballots already pouring in, early holiday shopping and mega retail events like Amazon's Prime Days threaten to expose vulnerabilities inside the nation's mail service, which already is dragging from skyrocketing package volumes." The "resulting spike in packages" from the Amazon event "runs up against the Nov. 3 election, adding a new stressor on the U.S. Postal Service as it struggles to reverse service slowdowns that experts and postal workers say could ensnare ballots." The AP (10/14, Samuels) reports the US Postal Service "agreed Wednesday to reverse changes that slowed mail service nationwide, settling a lawsuit filed by Montana Gov. Steve Bullock during a pandemic that is expected to force many more people to vote by mail."

In an interview with Newsmax TV (10/14), President Trump criticized by-mail voting, saying, "It's a crooked deal. It's a rigged deal. You see it every day. New ballots are coming out that are thrown in garbage cans with the name 'Trump' on it." White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said on WRVA-AM Richmond, VA (10/14), "Just in the past week, we learned that 100,000 ballots went out in New York, 100,000 that were faulty, and so what their solution was, was to put 100,000 more into the mix. So you have at least 100,000 ballots in excess floating around in New York. ... There are real problems here, and the President is right to put a lens on this."

NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 12, 2:55, Holt, 5.56M) ran a report on the process for verifying authenticity of by-mail ballots.

Members Of Conservative Group Lauded Lower Turnout, Called Mail-In Voting "Left-Wing." The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) reports on an August event organized by the Council for National Policy, "a little-known group that has served for decades as a hub for a nationwide network of conservative activists and the donors who support them," at which Turning Point USA's Charlie Kirk said pandemic-related closings of college campuses meant "that up to a half-million left-leaning students probably would not vote." Kirk said, "So, please keep the campuses closed. Like, it's a great thing." At another meeting of the group, Public Interest Legal Foundation President J. Christian Adams "described mail-in voting as 'the number one left-wing agenda.'"

Trump And Biden To Appear In "Dueling Town Halls" On Different Networks Thursday Night.

The AP (10/14, Bauder) reports that NBC has agreed to put President Trump "before voters in a town hall event on Thursday." The AP says that "sets up dueling town halls...on a night the two candidates were supposed to meet for their second debate." Joe Biden is "appearing on a similar town hall event in Philadelphia, televised by ABC." Weijia Jiang said on the CBS Evening News (10/14, story 4, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.09M), "Tomorrow night, the presidential candidates will hold dueling town halls after their second debate was scrapped over concerns about President Trump's COVID-19 diagnosis." ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 4, 0:20, Muir, 6.83M) and NBC Nightly News (10/14, story 3, 0:35, Holt, 5.56M) also briefly reported on the town halls.

According to the New York Times (10/14, Grynbaum, 18.61M), "Journalists inside NBC and MSNBC were taken aback at the network's decision to air the event opposite an already scheduled ABC forum...meaning Americans can't watch both candidates live." The Times says it is "unclear if the Trump campaign would have accommodated a request by NBC to move the event to a different day." The Times adds that Trump is "trailing in many national polls and is eager for opportunities to make his case to a sizable audience." The Daily Caller (10/14, 716K) similarly reports that "multiple people at NBC News, MSNBC and CNBC are reportedly angry over NBC's decision to host a town hall" for Trump.

NYTimes Examines Trump's Latino Support.

The New York Times (10/14, Medina, 18.61M) reports that "one of the most enduring questions" of President Trump's appeal is, "Who are the nearly 30 percent of Hispanic voters who say they support him, despite his anti-immigration rhetoric and policies?" According to the Times, "There is no one simple answer. Mr. Trump has strong backing from Cuban and Venezuelan exiles in South Florida, who like his stance against communism. And his campaign has heavily courted evangelical Latinos throughout the country. But no other group worries Democrats more than American-born Hispanic men, particularly those under the age 45, who polls show are highly skeptical of" Joe Biden.

Pence Campaigns In Michigan.

MLive \(MI\) (10/14, 925K) reports Vice President Pence "urged Michigan voters to cast a ballot before Election Day during a campaign visit to Kent County." Pence spoke to "several hundred supporters packed into a parking lot at Lacks Enterprises, a West Michigan auto parts manufacturer, on a chilly Wednesday afternoon." He said, "In the next 20 days, or on Election Day, I need you to vote, Michigan."

Biden, DNC Raised $383M In September.

Politico (10/14, Schneider, 4.29M) reports, "Joe Biden announced Wednesday evening that his campaign and affiliated committees raised $383 million in September, breaking a record he had just set the prior month as his campaign continues to ride a surge of online donations." Biden, the Democratic National Committee, and their joint fundraising committees "started the final 34 days of the campaign with $432 million in the bank." The New York Times (10/14, Goldmacher, Shorey, 18.61M) reports that last summer, Biden's "online fund-raising had slowed to such a trickle that his team basically had to shut down its digital advertising program. ... The campaign bottomed out in early September 2019 when Mr. Biden raised just $24,124.17 online in a day." By contrast, "on one recent day, Mr. Biden was raising more than that every two minutes."

Biden Highlights Catholic Faith In Campaign's Final Stretch.

The Washington Post (10/14, Viser, 14.2M) looks at how Joe Biden is highlighting his Roman Catholic faith in the final stretch of the presidential campaign, reporting that "several recent TV ads from Biden's campaign show him standing with Pope Francis or huddled with a Jesuit priest. He's reading from a pulpit, bowing his head in prayer, or standing solemnly in front of a church's stained-glass window." The strategy "comes as President Trump and his allies have sought to portray Democrats as anti-Catholic, seizing on past criticism from some Democratic senators of the conservative Catholic teachings embraced by Supreme Court nominee Amy Coney Barrett."

Kelly Has 11-Point Lead In Arizona Senate Poll.

A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 667 likely Arizona voters (10/7-10/14) has Mark Kelly (D) at 52% and Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) at 41% in the state's Senate race.

Polls Show Tight Races For Both Georgia Senate Seats.

A Quinnipiac University poll of 1,040 likely Georgia voters (10/8-10/12) has Jon Ossoff (D) at 51% and Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) at 45% in the state's Senate race. In the special Senate election, Raphael Warnock (D) is at 41%, Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) 22%, Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) 20%, Matt Lieberman (D) 5%, and Ed Tarver (D) 2%. A SurveyUSA poll of 677 likely Georgia voters (10/8-10/12) has Perdue at 46% and Ossoff at 43%; in the special election, Warnock is at 30%, Loeffler 26%, Collins 20%, Lieberman 8%, and Tarver 3%.

Collins Hits Loeffler On Stock Transactions In New Ad. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/14, 895K) reports Collins "unleashed one of his most scathing TV attacks yet" on Loeffler with an ad that portrays her "as a greedy insider who used her public office to boost her financial bottom line. The ad released Wednesday targets stock transactions that came under intense scrutiny after a large number of stocks that Loeffler or her husband owned were sold off shortly after she attended a senators-only coronavirus briefing" in January.

Loeffler To Campaign With GA14's Greene. The AP (10/14) reports Loeffler will campaign Thursday with GA14 GOP nominee Marjorie Taylor Greene, "who has peddled in racist tropes and baseless QAnon conspiracy theories. The two are scheduled to appear together in Dallas, Georgia, in the northwest suburbs of Atlanta."

AP Profile: McGrath Faces "Strong Headwinds" In Kentucky Senate Run.

The AP (10/14, Schreiner) runs a feature on Amy McGrath (D) in her bid for Senate in Kentucky, writing that "the retired Marine combat pilot will have to overcome strong headwinds to deny" Senate Majority Leader McConnell "a seventh term. While many Republican Senate candidates are scrambling to distance themselves" from the President, McConnell "appears to be benefiting from his key role in executing the president's agenda. McGrath, meanwhile, has labored to distance herself from the liberal wing of her party, a formidable challenge in a state where the Republican brand remains strong – especially with frequent reminders from McConnell."

Espy Says Hyde-Smith "Disrespecting" Mississippi Voters By Refusing To Debate.

The AP (10/14) reports Mississippi Senate candidate Mike Espy (D) criticized Sen. Cindy Hyde-Smith (R-MS) on Wednesday for refusing to debate. Espy "said the incumbent senator is depriving Mississippi voters of a chance to make a direct comparison between them on issues." Espy said, "The people of Mississippi – she's disrespecting them. ... She's taking this for granted."

Bullock Has Two-Point Lead In Montana Senate Poll.

A Montana State University mail-in poll of 1,787 registered Montana voters (9/14-10/2) has Gov. Steve Bullock (D) at 49% and Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT) at 47% in the state's Senate race. The AP (10/14, Hanson) reports, "Political groups fighting for control of the U.S. Senate have poured more than $118 million" into the race, "a record shattering figure for the sparsely-populated state that dwarfs spending on a per-voter basis in all other Senate battleground states."

Shaheen Leads By 15 Points In New Hampshire Senate Poll.

A Suffolk University poll of 500 likely New Hampshire voters (10/8-10/12) has Sen. Jeanne Shaheen (D-NH) at 51%, Corky Messner (R) 36%, and Libertarian Justin O'Donnell 2% in the state's Senate race.

Cunningham Leads In Two North Carolina Senate Polls.

A New York Times/Siena College poll of 627 likely North Carolina voters (10/9-10/13) has Cal Cunningham (D) at 41% and Sen. Thom Tillis (R-GA) at 37% in the state's Senate race. A Susquehanna Polling and Research poll of 500 likely North Carolina voters (10/7-10/11) has Cunningham at 46% and Tillis at 44%. The Washington Post (10/14, Wagner, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports the polls were conducted after Cunningham "apologized for romantic texts sent in the summer to a woman who is not his wife."

Graham Raised $28M In Q3, A Record For A GOP Senate Candidate.

The AP (10/14, Kinnard) reports Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) "has set a fundraising record for Republican Senate candidates, bringing in $28 million in the third quarter of a reelection battle that is swiftly becoming among the more expensive in the country – and his toughest to date. ... The haul comes as Graham takes a turn in the national spotlight where, as Senate Judiciary Committee chairman, he presides over the confirmation hearings" of Supreme Court nominee Amy Coney Barrett. It also comes "on the heels of Graham's opponent, Democrat Jaime Harrison, raising $57 million in the third quarter, the most ever raised in such a time period by any U.S. Senate candidate, at any time." The Daily Caller (10/14, 716K) reports, "Graham has repeatedly asked Fox News viewers for contributions while appearing on the network. 'Help me,' Graham said in September, according to The Hill. 'They're killing me, moneywise. Help me. You helped me last week. Help me again.'"

Frank Bruni writes in his New York Times (10/14, 18.61M) column, "No victory would rebut Trump's vision of America as emphatically and powerfully as Harrison's would." Graham "once railed that the way to make America great again was to 'tell Donald Trump to go to hell.' Now he's Trump's adoring golf buddy. Does that mean Graham is a fairway-weather friend? It certainly means that his convictions have all the weight of whipped cream."

DCCC Launches "Seven-Figure Ad Campaign" Targeting Latinos In Battlegrounds.

The Hill (10/14, Bernal, 2.98M) reports the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee has announced "a seven-figure ad campaign targeting Hispanic voters in battleground districts throughout the country. The digital, print and radio ads seek to promote mail voting and to support candidates in tough races" in California, Florida, New Mexico, and Texas.

Gianforte Has Five-Point Lead In Montana Gubernatorial Poll.

A Montana State University mail-in poll of 1,787 registered Montana voters (9/14-10/2) has Rep. Greg Gianforte (R-MT) at 47% and Lt. Gov. Mike Cooney (D) at 42% in the state's gubernatorial race.

Sununu Up By 24 Points In New Hampshire Gubernatorial Poll.

A Suffolk University poll of 500 likely New Hampshire voters (10/8-10/12) has Gov. Chris Sununu (R) at 55%, Dan Feltes (D) 31%, and Libertarian Darryl Perry 4% in the state's gubernatorial race.

Cooper Leads By 14 Points In North Carolina Gubernatorial Poll.

A New York Times/Siena College poll of 627 likely North Carolina voters (10/9-10/13) has Gov. Roy Cooper (D) at 51% and Lt. Gov. Dan Forest (R) at 37% in the state's gubernatorial race.

WSJournal Urges Californians To Reject Proposition 15.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) urges Californians to reject Proposition 15, which it says would enact the state's largest-ever tax increase by abolishing protections on property taxes enacted in 1978.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.4%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.4%, and his disapproval at 54.2%. The President's approval is down 0.2 since yesterday; his disapproval is unchanged.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (10/12-10/14) finds Trump's approval at 47%, and his disapproval at 51%.

World Bank To Commit Billions For Covid-19 Vaccines, Stimulus Relief For Developing Nations.

The Hill (10/14, Bowden, 2.98M) reports the World Bank on Tuesday "announced that it would provide $12 billion for efforts to deliver a distributable COVID-19 vaccine to developing countries, a move the organization said was aimed at vaccinating 1 billion people against the virus." In a statement, World Bank Group President David Malpass said, "We are extending and expanding our fast-track approach to address the COVID emergency so that developing countries have fair and equal access to vaccines." Malpass added, "Access to safe and effective vaccines and strengthened delivery systems is key to alter the course of the pandemic and help countries experiencing catastrophic economic and fiscal impacts move toward a resilient recovery."

Reuters (10/14, Staff) reports the Bank is also "calling for $25 billion in further COVID-19 emergency financing to help the world's poorest countries grapple with the massive challenges of the global pandemic, [Malpass] said on Wednesday." Malpass "told finance ministers and central bank governors of the G20 major economies that he would propose the supplemental financing package later this month to deputies of the International Development Association, the World Bank arm that helps the world's poorest countries." Malpass also "underscored concerns about the rising risk of 'disorderly defaults' among low-income countries, and said the World Bank and International Monetary Fund had proposed a joint action plan to help those for the most heavily-indebted IDA countries."

IMF Head Urges Nations To Invest In Green Projects, Digital Infrastructure To Mitigate Covid-19 Impact.

Reuters (10/14, Staff) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva "warned on Wednesday that halting spending aimed at containing the coronavirus pandemic and mitigating its economic consequences could have serious consequences for the global economy." Georgieva, speaking at a news conference, "urged countries to invest in green projects and digital infrastructure to boost productivity and incomes, and said it was imperative to help low-income countries deal with heavy debt burdens so they could maintain support for their citizens." Georgieva said, "The picture over the last few months has become less dire, yet we continue to project the worst global recession since the Great Depression. ... Nine months into the pandemic, we are still struggling with the darkness of a crisis that has taken more than a million lives, and driven the economy into reverse, causing sharply higher unemployment, rising poverty, and the risk of 'a lost generation' in low-income countries."

The Financial Times (10/14, Smith, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), The Guardian \(UK\) (10/14, 4.19M), and the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Hayashi, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also report.

G20 Extends Debt Payment Suspensions For Additional Six Months.

The AP (10/14, Crutsinger, Batrawy) reports that "the Group of 20 nations, representing the world's biggest economies, agreed Wednesday to extend the suspension of debt payments by an additional six months to support the most vulnerable countries in their fight against the coronavirus pandemic." The suspension of over $14 billion in debt "had been due to expire at the end of the year," with the extension giving "developing nations until the end of June 2021 to focus spending on health care and emergency stimulus programs rather than debt repayments." Saudi Arabia's finance minister and G20 chair Mohammed al-Jadaan acknowledged the "need to do more" and "said there will be further discussions at April's spring meetings."

Reuters (10/14, Barbuscia), Bloomberg (10/14, Nereim, 4.73M), and the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Zumbun, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also report.

Global Regulators To Consider Easing Capital Burden On Banks.

Reuters (10/14, Jones) reports, "Regulators will discuss next month how to ease pressure on global banks to hold unnecessarily large levels of capital in every country they operate, the Financial Stability Board said on Wednesday." According to Reuters, "Banks complain of having to 'ring fence' large amounts of capital and liquidity at every foreign branch because local regulators don't trust the lender's home authority in a crisis to free up capital being held at group level." That distrust "fragments capital markets and bumps up costs for banks and users." The FSB said it will discuss "actions" that could be taken to "prevent detrimental ring-fencing and fragmentation" of capital and liquidity when it meets on November 30.

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Exaggerated WHO Lockdown Stance.

The New York Times (10/14, Wu, 18.61M) reports that "this week, President Trump exaggerated a position taken by the World Health Organization, saying that the agency had vindicated his derision of lockdowns during the coronavirus pandemic." The President's tweet – "The World Health Organization just admitted that I was right. Lockdowns are killing countries all over the world" – was "rapidly shared by thousands online." However, WHO officials have "advocated for a multifaceted approach to curbing the spread." WHO spokesperson Hedinn Halldorsson said, "WHO has never advocated for national lockdowns as a primary means for controlling the virus."

House Democrats Criticize Trump's Failure To Cooperate With China To Fight Pandemic.

The Washington Post (10/14, Hudson, 14.2M) reports that on Wednesday, "a group of 100 House Democrats criticized the Trump administration's unilateral approach to the coronavirus pandemic...and offered a plan for working with other countries to control the crisis and ensure that vaccines can be shared widely and quickly." According to the Post, the letter from Reps. Judy Chu (D-CA), Jim McGovern (D-MA), and Brad Sherman (D-CA) "says the Trump administration's antipathy toward China and multilateral organizations hindered coordination with the World Health Organization and the European Union. It also says restrictions on scientific exchanges with Beijing resulted in fewer Americans on the ground in China as the virus began to spread."

Europe Outpaces US In New Coronavirus Cases.

On ABC World News Tonight (10/14, story 7, 1:35, Muir, 6.83M), Ian Pannell reported, "Amid growing concern in the US of a second wave, tonight...the virus is surging once again and quickly" in Liverpool, England. The region is "in semi-lockdown. Restaurants, gyms, and pubs closed again. The city's ICUs at over 90% capacity." Pannell said, "The second wave filling hospitals across Britain. Patients weak from their battle, now more than 4,500 hospitalized" and "across Europe, nearly 100,000 cases a day for the last week – a 34% increase. So, now we're seeing a new wave of restrictions. In France, nighttime curfews are going to be introduced in Paris and other cities. In Italy, a mask mandate, and in Madrid, Spain, a state of emergency. But also, growing anger."

The New York Times (10/14, A1, Landler, 18.61M) reports, "From France to Russia, from Britain to the Czech Republic, European leaders are confronting a surge in cases of the coronavirus, which is rapidly filling hospital beds, driving up death tolls and raising the grim prospect of further lockdowns in countries already traumatized by the pandemic." Europe, "which once compared favorably to the United States in its handling of the coronavirus, is being engulfed by a second wave of infection. Averaging more than 100,000 new infections per day over the past week, Europe now accounts for about one-third of new cases reported worldwide."

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Douglas, Barnett, Meichtry, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Europe overtook the US this week for the first time since the spring as the European Union and the UK reported 152 cases per million residents for the week of October 12, over the US' 150 per million in the same period.

NYTimes Analysis: Central Europe Faces Particular Danger. The New York Times (10/14, Santora, Goeij, 18.61M) reports, "Much of Central Europe locked down quickly in the spring, before the coronavirus took root, and largely avoided widespread infection during the first wave of the pandemic. But now – from the Polish port city of Gdansk on the Baltic to the ancient fortress town of Kotor on the Adriatic in Montenegro – the virus is sweeping across the region." Coronavirus "could sow" particular damage "in the former Communist countries of Central Europe, some of which have weak health care systems, critical shortages of doctors and nurses, and inadequate testing programs," as well as "a deep distrust of government among their citizens stemming from years of systemic corruption" and "a large older population at high risk of suffering serious illness," who "tend to live within large family groups, according to a survey by the Pew Research Center."

UK Regions Split From National COVID Strategy. The AP (10/14) reports, "British Prime Minister Boris Johnson's new strategy for combating COVID-19 seemed to unravel Wednesday as regional leaders chose their own paths and the mayors of the cities facing the toughest restrictions accused Johnson of using the crisis to divide them for political advantage." Northern Ireland "said it would close schools, pubs and restaurants to slow the spread of the virus, while Wales announced it would not allow in people from hot spots in other parts of the U.K." Metro Mayor of the Liverpool City Region Steve Rotherham, meanwhile, "criticized Johnson's handling of the crisis," while "Greater Manchester's regional government on Wednesday rejected efforts to move it into the highest tier."

Macron Imposes Curfew Amid Coronavirus Spike. The Washington Post (10/14, McAuley, 14.2M) reports that "French President Emmanuel Macron on Wednesday announced a curfew to be imposed on the Paris region and other major urban centers, to curb a rapid resurgence of the coronavirus," requiring "people to stay home between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m." beginning October 17. The curfew will "last for at least four weeks" and includes "Paris, Lyon, Grenoble, Aix-en-Provence, Montpellier, Lille, Rouen and Saint-Etienne." Macron said, "Our goal must be to reduce private contacts, which are the most dangerous contacts, which is to say the moments when there's a little slackening."

Milan Sees Resurgence In Coronavirus Infections. The AP (10/14, Barry) reports, "Coronavirus infections are surging anew in the northern Italian region where the pandemic first took hold in Europe, putting pressure again on hospitals and health care workers." Italy "on Wednesday posted its highest ever daily total of new infections at 7,332 – surpassing the previous high of 6,557, recorded during the virus's most deadly phase in March," though "increased testing is partially responsible for the high numbers, and many of the new cases are asymptomatic. So far, Italy's death toll remains significantly below the spring heights, hovering around 40 in recent days. That compares with the high of 969 dead nationwide one day in late March." Premier Giuseppe Conte's government has "twice tightened nationwide restrictions inside a week" to combat the spike.

Houthis Release Two Americans In Return For 250 Detained Rebels.

The AP (10/14, Riechmann) reports, "Two Americans and the remains of a third held captive by Iranian-backed militants in Yemen were released on Wednesday in exchange for the return of about 250 of the Houthi rebels from Oman." Oman's state news said the Americans "were flown out of Yemen on an Omani plane," and "250 'Yemeni brothers' who received treatment in Oman have been returned to Yemen's capital, Sanaa, on two flights as part of the exchange." National Security Adviser O'Brien said, "The United States welcomes the release today of US citizens Sandra Loli and Mikael Gidada from Houthi custody in Yemen. We send our condolences to the family of Bilal Fateen, whose remains will be repatriated as well."

The New York Times (10/14, Crowley, Goldman, 18.61M) says "freeing Americans held abroad has been a top priority for President Trump and...O'Brien, who previously served as Mr. Trump's chief hostage negotiator." The Washington Post (10/14, Mujahed, Raghavan, 14.2M) and the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Nissenbaum, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provide similar coverage.

Taliban Assault On Provincial Capital Undermines Peace Talks.

The Washington Post (10/14, Constable, Hassan, 14.2M) reports "a Taliban offensive in southern Helmand province has raised concerns...that a growing wave of insurgent violence could undercut fledgling intra-Afghan peace talks in Qatar and sabotage a U.S.-Taliban pact reached in February." The assault "was partly quelled by Afghan forces Tuesday with support from U.S. airstrikes, but thousands of families were forced to flee the surrounding areas...and some Taliban fighters were reported Wednesday to still be advancing into the city." The Post says "the complex attack appeared to have been planned before President Trump tweeted last Wednesday that he wanted to bring all U.S. troops home by Christmas," which the Post says was a "significant shift in policy that immediately put the Taliban in a stronger bargaining position at the peace talks."

Russia Denies Administration's Announcement Of "Agreement In Principle" To Extend New START.

The New York Times (10/14, Sanger, Kramer, 18.61M) reports, "President Trump had a pre-election plan to show he had gotten something out of his mysteriously friendly relationship with President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia." Ahead of the election, Trump and Putin "would announce that they had reached an agreement in principle to extend New START." On Tuesday, Marshall Billingslea, Trump's lead negotiator, "announced that the two leaders had an 'agreement in principle, at the highest levels of our two governments, to extend the treaty.'" But, "the Russian deputy foreign minister, Sergei A. Ryabkov, shot back that this was a figment of someone's election-season imagination." Secretary of State Pompeo "tried to put the best face on the Russian rejection," but Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov "joined the Kremlin's dismissal of prospects for an agreement before the election."

EU To Sanction Six Russian Officials Over Navalny Poisoning. The New York Times (10/14, Schwirtz, Bennhold, 18.61M) reports that the European Union is "preparing to impose financial sanctions on six high-ranking Russian officials...who are believed to have been involved in the poisoning of Aleksei A. Navalny, the prominent Russian opposition leader." According to the Times, "The individuals...are believed to have had direct knowledge of the poisoning or were involved in the planning." The Times adds that "several of those facing penalties are members of the tight circle of elites who for years have surrounded" President Vladimir Putin, including "Aleksandr Bortnikov, the head of Russia's domestic spy agency, the Federal Security Service; Sergei Kiriyenko, first deputy chief of staff in the presidential administration; and Andrei Yarin, the head of the presidential administration's domestic policy directorate."

Esper Says North Korean Missiles "Remain A Serious Threat."

Reuters (10/14) reports that on Wednesday, Defense Secretary Esper "said North Korea's nuclear and missile programs pose a global threat, after Pyongyang's unveiling of previously unseen intercontinental ballistic missiles at a predawn military parade." Reuters adds that "speaking before the start of a meeting with his South Korean counterpart at the Pentagon," Esper said, "We agree that North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missile programs remain a serious threat to the security and stability of the region and the world. ... The United States remains committed to the security of the Republic of Korea." However, Reuters says Esper added that the US and South Korea "must find a more equitable way of sharing defense costs so it 'doesn't fall unequally on the American taxpayers.'"

Xi Says China Must Prepare For A Less Welcoming World.

The New York Times (10/14, Buckley, 18.61M) reports with China facing "rising global barriers, its leader, Xi Jinping, is urging greater domestic innovation." In a speech Wednesday in Shenzhen, "Xi said China still welcomed foreign investors, but he also said it must prepare for a less welcoming world." He said, "The world economy is at low ebb and international trade and investment have drastically shrunk." Xi "did not refer directly to the Trump administration's efforts to restrict Chinese companies' access to American technology amid escalating tensions between the two countries" and instead "broadly warned" that "the world has entered a period of turbulence and transformation." The Washington Post (10/13, Dou, 14.2M) says Xi "announced plans to build Shenzhen into a 'model city' of innovative industries and rule of law, while touting closer integration of Hong Kong into the mainland economy."

Mexican Farmers Take Over Dam, Refuse To Allow Water To Go To US.

The New York Times (10/14, Kitroeff, 18.61M) reports farmers in Mexico "armed themselves with sticks, rocks and homemade shields, ambushed hundreds of soldiers guarding a dam and seized control of one of the border region's most important bodies of water." Mexico's government was sending water to Texas, "leaving them next to nothing for their thirsty crops, the farmers said. So they took over the dam and have refused to allow any of the water to flow to the United States for more than a month." The Times says, "The standoff is the culmination of longstanding tensions over water between the United States and Mexico that have recently exploded into violence, pitting Mexican farmers against their own president and the global superpower next door."

Israel And Lebanon Meet To Discuss Disputed Maritime Border.

The New York Times (10/14, Hubbard, 18.61M) reports that on Wednesday, Israel and Lebanon "kicked off their first negotiations in 30 years on nonsecurity issues, aiming to end a long-running dispute over their maritime border in the gas-rich Mediterranean Sea." The Times says "the brief first session...was hosted by the United Nations and mediated by the United States, whose diplomats worked for years to get the negotiations going before the two sides announced on Oct. 1 that they had agreed on a framework for talks." According to the Times, "At issue is more than 330 square miles in the Mediterranean that Israel and Lebanon both claim is in their exclusive economic zone."

The Washington Post (10/14, Dadouch, Eglash, 14.2M) reports that "currently, a string of buoys extends into the water, placed there by Israel as a de facto border that is not recognized by Lebanon or the United Nations." The Post says Lebanon "considers the boundary an extension of the land border," and "the result is a disputed 860-square-kilometer triangle in the sea."

Erdoğan And Putin Discuss Continuing Fighting Between Armenia And Azerbaijan.

Reuters (10/14) reports that on Wednesday, Turkish President Tayyip Erdoğan indicated to Russian President Vladimir Putin on a phone call that Turkey would like "a permanent solution to the Nagorno-Karabakh issue." Reuters says Turkey "has accused Armenia of occupying Azeri territory and vowed full support for Azerbaijan, "which "accused Armenia on Wednesday of trying to attack its gas and oil pipelines."

The AP (10/14, Isachenkov) reports that "a Russian attempt to broker a cease-fire to end the worst outbreak of hostilities over the disputed region of Nagorno-Karabakh in more than a quarter-century has failed to get any traction, with rivals Azerbaijan and Armenia trading blame for new attacks." The AP goes on to report that "while separatist forces in the Nagorno-Karabakh and the Armenian military continue to rely mostly on aging Soviet-built weapons, Azerbaijan has completely revamped its arsenal with state-of-the-art attack drones and powerful long-range multiple rocket systems supplied by its neighbor and ally, Turkey." The AP adds that "more than two weeks of fighting has shown that Azerbaijan has clearly outgunned the Nagorno-Karabakh forces and put them on the defensive." According to Reuters (10/14, Toksabai), "Turkey's military exports to its ally Azerbaijan have risen six-fold this year, with sales of drones and other military equipment rising to $77 million last month alone before fighting broke out over the Nagorno-Karabakh region."

Kyrgyzstan's President Rejects Calls To Step Down.

The AP (10/14, Litvinova) reports "Kyrgyzstan's embattled president," Sooronbai Jeenbekov, "on Wednesday dismissed a call to step down, saying he would stay on the job until the political situation in the Central Asian country stabilizes after a disputed parliamentary election." Jeenbekov "held talks with Prime Minister Sadyr Zhaparov hours after he endorsed his appointment by parliament." Jeenbekov "insisted that stepping down now could" set off "unpredictable developments to the detriment of the state," his office said. The office "emphasized that he will only agree to resign" after "he takes the country back into the legal field, after holding parliamentary and calling presidential elections."

Leaders Of Greece's Golden Dawn Sentenced To Prison.

The New York Times (10/14, Kitsantonis, 18.61M) reports the leaders of Greece's Golden Dawn party were sentenced "to 13 years in prison on Wednesday." An Athens court "convicted the party leaders of crimes related to a campaign of attacks against migrants and leftist critics in 2012 and 2013. At the end of a trial that lasted more than five years, the party was tied to a string of attacks, including the fatal stabbing in 2013 of a left-wing rapper, Pavlos Fyssas." The Times says the convictions were seen in Greece "as a final blow to Golden Dawn – which lost all of its seats in Parliament in general elections last year, as the trial gradually eroded its popularity – though the sentences fell short of what some observers and opponents had been expecting."

Indonesian Minister Formerly Barred From US Set To Meet With Officials.

The New York Times (10/14, Paddock, 18.61M) reports that "for two decades, Prabowo Subianto, a former Indonesian general, was a pariah in international affairs." According to the Times, Prabowo, "once a son-in-law of the dictator Suharto, who died in 1998, and a past commander of Indonesia's feared special forces, was blamed for atrocities committed by troops he had led," and was "prohibited from visiting the United States." However, the Times says Prabowo is now Indonesia's minister of defense, "the ban has been lifted," and "at the invitation of" Defense Secretary Esper, Prabowo "arrived in Washington this week."

Thai People Defiant As Royal Family's Limousine Passes.

The New York Times (10/14, Beech, Suhartono, 18.61M) reports as Thailand's Queen Suthida Vajiralongkorn Na Ayudhya's limousine traveled a "a road in Bangkok that has been used for royal processions," antigovernment protesters yelled "my taxes!," referring to their personal contributions to royal coffers. The police held them back but could not hide the demonstrators' defiant salutes." While "pro-democracy protesters have gathered by the thousands to call for reforms to the monarchy and military," the limousine's "route on Wednesday was the first time that members of the nuclear royal family had gotten such a close look at the faces of Thais who are openly questioning the monarchy's exalted position in the country."

Study: Great Barrier Reef Lost Half Its Coral Populations In Last 25 Years.

The New York Times (10/14, Cramer, 18.61M) reports the Great Barrier Reef "lost half of its coral populations in the last quarter-century, a decline that researchers in Australia said would continue unless drastic action is taken to mitigate the effects of climate change." According to researchers who "studied coral colonies along the length of the reef between 1995 and 2017...almost every coral species had declined. Colony sizes were smaller; there were fewer 'big mamas,' or older large corals that produce baby corals; and there were fewer of those babies, which are vital to the reef's future ability to breed. ... The study was published on Wednesday in the journal Proceedings of the Royal Society."

Housing

Freddie Mac Hikes 2020 Origination Forecast By $700B.

National Mortgage News (10/14, Finkelstein) reports, "With mortgage rates expected to remain flat at 3% through the end of 2021, Freddie Mac has raised its mortgage origination forecast for this year to nearly $3.6 trillion." In its June quarterly forecast, Freddie Mac had "predicted $2.9 trillion in volume for this year. Its rate forecast in the June release was higher, at 3.3% for the rest of this year and 3.2% for all of next." NMN says, "even with next year's rates projected to be 20 basis points lower than expected from the prior forecast, Freddie Mac's 2021 outlook was only increased marginally, to $2.7 trillion from June's $2.5 trillion." Mortgage Orb (10/14, Bates) reports that Freddie's Forecast indicates "total mortgage originations will reach $1.1 trillion in Q3 2020 and $3.6 trillion for full-year 2020." For 2021, Freddie Mac "forecasts purchase originations to remain at $1.4 trillion, while refinance originations are expected to be lower, at $1.2 trillion. Overall, total originations will decline to $2.7 trillion in 2021."

Bankrate (10/14, Ostrowski, 311K) reports Freddie Mac "said it expects home prices to grow 5.5 percent for 2020 and 2.6 percent for 2021." Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "Even as the economy faces challenges from the coronavirus pandemic, the housing market has been showing strength." Scotsman Guide (10/14, Aurellano) reports, "With total sales on the uptick in both the new and existing-home segments, Freddie expects total annual sales to reach 6.2 million in 2020. While construction has bounced back, however, Freddie anticipates that the COVID-induced slowdown in building that occurred in the spring and early summer of 2020 will mean fewer new homes available to buy next year," leading to a "slight home sales retreat in 2021, backtracking to 6.1 million homes sold for the year."

Seeking Alpha (10/14, 512K) also covers Freddie's forecast.

Freddie Mac Issues Three-Year Reference Notes Security.

Seeking Alpha (10/14, 512K) reports Freddie Mac "seeks to issue new three-year USD Reference Notes due on October 16, 2023; issue will settle on Oct. 16, 2020, at benchmark size." According to Seeking Alpha, "The new Reference Notes security will be offered via a syndicate of dealers headed by J.P. Morgan Securities, TD Securities, and Wells Fargo Securities."

Freddie Mac's Waldron To Speak About Racial Homeownership Gap In Upcoming Panel.

HousingWire (10/15, 23K) reports, "The gap between Black and White homeownership continues to grow." A panel with "speakers from Freddie Mac, the Urban Institute, and the National Association of Real Estate Brokers" will "discuss what is being done to turn the tide for individuals and communities that are underrepresented in the current slate of homeowners." Freddie Mac VP of Research and Analytics Cindy Waldron, NAREB President Donnell Williams, and Urban Institute VP Laurie Goodman are listed as speakers.

Freddie Mac's ACE Highlighted.

For its annual Virtual Demo Day, HousingWire (10/14, 23K) features Freddie Mac's Automated Collateral Evaluation (ACE), which "leverages proprietary models along with historical data and public records to allow lenders to originate certain loans without an appraisal."

MBA, California MBA Concerned Over Two CA Ballot Measures.

National Mortgage News (10/14) reports that the Mortgage Bankers Association and California MBA worry that two California Ballot initiatives could "complicate property ownership in ways that could have a negative impact on loan performance and access to credit." The two ballot measures include one that could "change how commercial property is taxed," and another that would "change rent control policies." MBA SVP Mike Flood said, "Think of a major lender in this country, and I imagine nearly every single one of them has a presence in California. Also, what happens in California can happen in other states."

MBA: Mortgage Application Volume Dipped 7% In Week Ending October 9.

Mortgage News Daily (10/14) reports, "The volume of mortgage applications dipped slightly last week. The Mortgage Bankers Association (MBA) said its Market Composite Index, a measure of that volume, was down 0.7 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis during the week ended October 9 and was 1 percent lower on an unadjusted basis." The Refinance Index fell 0.3% from the prior week. The seasonally-adjusted Purchase Index fell 2% from the prior week, while the unadjusted Purchase Index fell 1%. The ARM share fell from 2.2% to 2%. The FHA share fell from 11% to 10.7, while the VA share rose from 12.2% to 13.4%. The average rate for 30-year FRMs with conforming balances fell from 3.01% to 3.00%, while jumbos' average fell from 3.31% to 3.30%. The average rate for 15-year FRMs held flat at 2.59%. The average rate for 5/1 ARMs fell from 2.80% to 2.63%.

Bankrate: Mortgage Rates Dip To Record Lows This Week.

Bankrate (10/14, Ostrowski, 311K) reports that mortgage rates "fell this week, returning to record lows, according to a Bankrate survey released Wednesday." Bankrate found from its national survey of lenders that the average rate for 30-year FRMs was 3.05%, down from 3.08% last week. The 15-year FRM's average rate fell to 2.47%, a "new record low."

Ginnie Mae MBS Issuance Soars To New Record In FY2020.

National Mortgage News (10/14, Centopani) reports, "The white-hot originations market of 2020 drove Ginnie Mae's securitized mortgage volume to an all-time high, sailing well past its old record." According to NMN, Ginnie Mae "closed its 2020 fiscal year by issuing $748 billion in MBS, eclipsing the $451.6 of FY 2019 and its previous record of $504 billion in FY 2017." Ginnie's annual record issuance "helped over 2.8 million households secure affordable homes and rental housing – both single and multifamily – compared to 1.8 million the year prior." A Ginnie Mae spokesperson told NMN, "Our business is elastic and our mission is based on meeting the needs of our insuring partners: The FHA, VA and USDA. Record-low mortgage rates encouraged borrowers to refinance and for first-time homebuyers to enter the market."

DS News (10/14, Babb) reports Ginnie Mae Principal EVP Seth Appleton said, "2020 is a year that will stand out in the record books for Ginnie Mae. We attracted record capital to support affordable homeownership and rental housing opportunities for millions of American households, advanced key modernization initiatives, and responded swiftly to the COVID-19 National Emergency, all while operating in a remote environment. I am proud of and grateful for the tremendous contributions of the Ginnie Mae team who made these accomplishments possible."

Ginnie MBS Buyouts Slow In August.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/14, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports the "sudden increase in servicer withdrawals of loans" from Ginnie Mae MBS early this summer "appears to be waning." An IMF analysis "shows servicers pulled $66.81 billion" of loans from Ginnie MBS pools in August, down "7.6% from July." This represented "the second monthly decline since loan removals peaked in June." IMF says, "Most loans are removed from Ginnie pools because the borrower paid off the loan, and payoffs accounted for 85.3% of loan withdrawals for the first eight months of [2020]. Payoff removals fell 0.4% from July to August, and by 2.8% for FHA loans. The VA program, which sees much heavier refinance activity, recorded a 1.9% increase in payoff removals, [hitting] its highest level of the year." Quicken Loans and PennyMac recorded 4% gains in payoffs, while fellow Ginnie servicers New Residential (10.8%) Home Point Financial (8.6%) and United Shore Financial Services (46.1%) saw larger gains.

MSR Sales Market Remains Bugged Down.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/14, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports that MSR sales are currently sluggish, as "interest rates remain at rock-bottom levels and gain-on-sale margins are through the roof." IMF says that "ever since the pandemic reared its ugly head in March and markets tanked (right along with interest rates), servicing sales have been weak, with very few public auctions being announced." MorVest Capital servicing advisor David Fleig said, "It's hard to recommend to a client to sell bulk right now because most of them are so flush. The typical move, to raise cash, doesn't exist."

Goldman Sachs Preps $413.5M Prime Non-Agency MBS.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/14, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports that Goldman Sachs this week announced it plans "to issue a $413.5 million prime non-agency mortgage-backed security." According to IMF, "United Wholesale Mortgage originated 43.8% of the loans collateralizing the deal. The product has seasoned for an average of six months and none are in forbearance."

Markets

10-Year Yield Falls.

MarketWatch (10/15, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.699 percent.

Dollar Inches Higher.

Reuters (10/15, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar inched higher on Thursday as rising coronavirus cases and scant progress towards a U.S. stimulus deal unsettled investors, while the Aussie dropped to a one-week low after the central bank chief hinted of a possible rate cut or bond buying." The safe-haven yen "stayed just shy of a two-week peak on the dollar." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar "was steady at 93.428."

Gold Eases.

Reuters (10/15) reports, "Gold prices fell on Thursday, weighed by a steady dollar and fading chances of a new U.S. fiscal stimulus package being finalised before the November elections." Spot gold "fell 0.4% to $1,893.17 per ounce by 0108 GMT," while US gold futures "were steady at $1,896.60."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (10/15, Paul, Samanta) reports, "Oil prices fell on Thursday, paring gains from earlier in the session, as a resurgence in COVID-19 infections across the globe underpinned concerns over economic growth and a recovery in fuel demand." Brent crude futures "dropped 28 cents, or 0.7% to $43.04 a barrel at 0724 GMT," while US West Texas Intermediate crude futures "were down 24 cents, or 0.6%, to $40.80."

Cybersecurity

New York Regulators Fault Twitter's Security Before Celebrity Hack.

Reuters (10/14, Stempel) reports, "Twitter Inc suffered from cybersecurity shortfalls that enabled a 'simple' hack attributed to a Florida teenager to take over the accounts of several of the world's most famous people in July, according to a report released on Wednesday." The report "by New York's Department of Financial Services also recommended that the largest social media companies be deemed systemically important, like some banks following the 2008 financial crisis, with a dedicated regulator monitoring their ability to combat cyberattacks and election interference. 'That Twitter was vulnerable to an unsophisticated attack shows that self-regulation is not the answer,' said Linda Lacewell, the financial services superintendent." Twitter "has acknowledged that some employees were duped into sharing account credentials prior to the hack."

CNN (10/14, Fung, 83.16M) reports, "At the time of the July 15 attack, Twitter had no chief information security officer and suffered from poor internal security controls, the report concluded. Officials behind the report called for additional cybersecurity regulation of major tech platforms. 'In other industries that are deemed critical infrastructure, such as telecommunications, utilities, and finance, we have established regulators and regulations to ensure that the public interest is protected,' said the report from New York's Department of Financial Services. 'With respect to cybersecurity, that is what is needed for large, systemically important social media companies.'" CNN adds, "In a statement, Twitter said it has taken steps to enhance the security of its platform, cooperated with the Department's investigation, and that multiple arrests have been carried out in the wake of the attack."

The Hill (10/14, Klar, 2.98M) reports, "The report underscores the push for further protection by highlighting concerns that the cybersecurity vulnerabilities could lead to an election-related hacking attempt. 'The Hackers focused on classic fraud. But such a hack, when perpetrated by well-resourced adversaries, could wreak far greater damage by manipulating public perception about markets, elections, and more,' the report states." The report "describes the hijack of high-profile accounts, including former President Obama, reality star Kim Kardashian West and Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos, as 'jarringly easy for a teenager and his young associates' to execute. DFS said the hackers accessed Twitter's systems by calling company employees and claiming to be from Twitter's IT department. After duping four employees to give them their log-in credentials, the hackers hijacked the accounts of various politicians, celebrities and companies."

The New York Post (10/14, Manskar, 4.57M) reports, "The agency found no evidence that Twitter's employees knowingly helped the hackers, and some of them reported the suspicious calls to the company's fraud monitoring team, according to the report," but "regulators faulted Twitter for lacking basic cybersecurity protections at the time of the attack, such as a chief information security officer and 'adequate access controls and identity management' – measures that are required under New York's cybersecurity regulation."

The New York Daily News (10/14, Slattery, 2.52M) reports, "The report recommends an oversight council be established to 'designate systemically important social media companies' and says a regulator should be appointed to 'monitor and supervise' the security practices of mainstream social media platforms." The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Rundle, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Clarida Says Economy Will Need Additional Support.

Reuters (10/14, Schneider) reports Fed Reserve Vice Chair Richard Clarida said data has been “surprisingly strong” since May, but will likely take another year to reach its pre-pandemic levels. He said, “In the spring, many voices questioned what good rate cuts, forward guidance, asset purchases, and lending programs could do in an economy in which people do not venture out to buy cars or build houses and in which companies do not invest.” He added that “additional support from monetary – and likely fiscal – policy will be needed. ... Speaking for the Fed, I can assure you that we are committed to using our full range of tools to support the economy.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Bloomberg (10/14, Condon, 4.73M), CNBC (10/14, Cox, 3.62M), and MarketWatch (10/14, Robb, 1.67M) also report.

Kaplan: Women, Minorities Most In Need Of Job Help In This Economy.

Reuters (10/14, Marte) reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan said minorities and women affected by pandemic-related job losses will need assistance finding new work as the economy moves toward sectors less dependent on physical interactions. Kaplan said, “Many of the folks who have lost their jobs may not have a business to go back to,” in contrast people with college educations who will more likely have jobs offering remote work. The economy is likely to contract 2.5% in 2020.

Barkin: Rising Virus Cases Builds Uncertainty, Hinders Recovery.

Bloomberg (10/14, 4.73M) reports Richmond Fed President Thomas Barkin “said a rebound in U.S. coronavirus cases to about 50,000 a day has added uncertainty to the outlook and may discourage businesses from hiring or investing.” Barkin, speaking at a virtual West Virginia University conference Wednesday, said, “An elevated case rate raises economic uncertainty and that affects businesses’ willingness to hire or spend or invest. ... The persistence of elevated infections and the risk of a second wave have both psychological and practical implications” for businesses and consumers.

Quarles Says Permanent Capital Relief For Big Banks Seems ‘Premature.’

American Banker (10/14, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that while sitting on a panel for a virtual event sponsored by CFA Institute, Fed Vice Chairman of Supervision Randal Quarles appeared to shoot down the idea of implementing permanent relief sought by banks in the calculation of the supplementary leverage ratio. In May, regulators implemented an interim rule change “to allow systemically important banks to exclude Treasury securities and deposits at Federal regional banks from the supplementary leverage ratio.” Some have suggested that the interim rule should become permanent. Quarles said, “I understand the desire to give thought to it but I would think it’d be premature to say that we ought to make that permanent currently.”

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC’s Brooks: Banks Need To Focus On Services Aimed At Minority Communities.

From the annual Milken Institute Global Conference, Politico (10/14, Heath, 4.29M) reports, “After a decade of decline among banks specifically focused on minority communities, banks more broadly need to focus on the opportunity to generate profitable business via smartphones and fintech services aimed at minority communities, said Brian Brooks,” Acting Comptroller of the Currency. The “message to the wider banking community” from the conference was that “banks need to partner with Community Development Financial Institutions,” said Bank of America community banking chief Daniel Letendre. Big banks looking specifically “to gain a foothold in Black communities would be ‘well-advised to partner with minority depository institutions (MDIs),’ which have trust in Black communities, said...Brooks.”

OCC Fines USAA Bank $85M For Risk Management Failures.

American Banker (10/14, Adler, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency has fined USAA Federal Savings Bank $85 million “for shortcomings in its risk management and compliance with laws protecting service members.” The penalty “is another troubling sign for the San Antonio bank after a 2019 consent order by the OCC identified information technology and internal control failures related to alleged violations of the Military Lending Act and Servicemembers Civil Relief Act.” The OCC said USAA Bank engaged “in unsafe or unsound practices” related to its compliance risk management and IT risk governance programs “that resulted in numerous violations of law.”

The San Antonio Express-News (10/14, Mendoza-Moyers, 762K) reports USAA CEO Wayne Peacock said in a statement, “Simply put, we have fallen short of our high standards and those of our members and our regulators. ... As we grew quickly over the last decade, we never wavered from our commitment to serve members. However, we did not sufficiently invest in the capabilities and expertise necessary to meet regulatory requirements and evolving business needs.”

Law360 (10/14, Subscription Publication, 8K) provides similar coverage. KSAT-TV (10/14, 37K) also broadcast a report.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

“These Confirmation Hearings Are Not Really About Amy Coney Barrett.” The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) says in an editorial that Amy Coney Barrett “has attracted outrage for some of her answers – or non-answers – in her Senate confirmation questioning.” But “the whole confirmation process is not really about Judge Barrett. We pass no judgment on her qualifications or suitability; we would urge senators to oppose any nomination at this moment. What is at trial here is the poisonous, dishonorable hypocrisy Republicans have shown in blocking the nomination of Judge Merrick Garland eight months before an election and then rushing this one to tilt the court to their advantage.”

“The Danger Is Growing That A Coronavirus Vaccine Will Be Rejected By The Public – Thanks To Trump.” The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) editorializes that while vaccine hesitancy “was a public health difficulty before the pandemic,” it has now “grown more serious just when everyone is looking to vaccines to save the day. Doubts and suspicions, once stirred by a small phalanx of activists, have become more widespread, in part in response to President Trump’s unrealistic promises to rush a vaccine out before Election Day.” The Board argues, “A credible, concerted effort must be made to boost confidence in vaccines that are proven safe and efficacious against the coronavirus. Such a campaign must be based on science and medicine, leaving political shenanigans behind.”

“Justice Is Delayed For Bijan Ghaisar – Again.” The Washington Post (10/14, 14.2M) criticizes Fairfax County, Virginia, Commonwealth’s Attorney Steve T. Descano for failing to make decision on “the unwarranted fatal shooting of Bijan Ghaisar” after nine months in office. Ghaisar “was the unarmed young accountant with no criminal record” who was shot by US Park Police in November 2017. The Post says his killing “and the subsequent glacial response by law enforcement, has become a shameful mystery.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Facebook’s Conservative Emergency.” The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg had in the past committed to keep Facebook free of political censorship, but he appears to have since changed his views.

“Amazon Cancels Shelby Steele.” The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Amazon’s decision to reject a documentary about the 2014 police killing of Michael Brown invites political repercussions from both left and right, arguing that the company is silencing both diverse and dissenting voices.

“California’s Next Big Tax Gulp.” The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that Amazon’s decision to reject a documentary about the 2014 police killing of Michael Brown invites political repercussions from both left and right, arguing that the company is silencing both diverse and dissenting voices.

“The Supreme Court’s Census Reprieve.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the Supreme Court ruled correctly in determining that the Administration can halt the census count, permitting an enumeration as required by the Constitution and ending the meddling of the courts in a process delegated to Congress.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "The election is fewer than three weeks away. Have you noticed that when they give you advice for election day, all of a sudden it sounds like an emergency preparedness pamphlet? It's like, 'Locate your polling place in advance. Bring bottled water. Contact your neighbors. Don't touch the doorknob if it's too hot.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President is on the road this month. He is burning massive amounts of jet fuel to spread his message and germs all over big crowds of supporters in swing states, even as we learned today that his son, Barron, tested positive for the virus earlier this month. ... The second wave is clearly under way. And while you'd expect that something like this might make the President think twice about these unmasked egomania [gatherings] he's involved with, Donald Trump doesn't think twice about anything. Most of the time, he doesn't even think once."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President was in Iowa tonight where cases are surging. ... Ten thousand strong were expected tonight. Sadly, 2,200 infected people. Even though his own White House put out guidelines saying there should be no gatherings in central Iowa with more than 25 people, they're doing this. That applies only if it's not a tribute to him."

Jimmy Kimmel: "There was a lot of Biden-bashing at the rally last night. His new line of attack is to claim that Joe Biden isn't nice. ... [As Trump, after showing a clip of Trump calling Biden not nice and a dumb guy] 'Take it from me, I looked right into an eclipse, I know a dumb guy.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "You know, there's supposed to be a debate tomorrow night, but since Trump wouldn't agree to the virtual format...he backed out altogether. So because there was no debate, Biden agreed to do a town hall on ABC that night. So Trump today announced he will also be doing a town hall. But on NBC. And at the same time as Biden. ... Thanks, NBC. First 'The Apprentice,' now this. Why not a new Bill Cosby special while we're at it?"

Treasury in the News

Mnuchin, Pelosi Continue Talks As White House Sends Mixed Signals On Coronavirus Relief Package.

The Washington Post (10/8, Werner, Stein, 14.2M) reports the White House "sent mixed signals Thursday about the direction of renewed stimulus talks, resulting in House Speaker Nancy Pelosi confronting Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin over who speaks for the president." The developments "occurred two days after President Trump ordered Mnuchin to stop negotiating with Pelosi, only to announce Thursday that talks were back on." According to Pelosi's spokesman, Mnuchin and Pelosi "spoke by phone Thursday afternoon to discuss prospects for a comprehensive economic relief bill when White House communications director Alyssa Farah told reporters at the White House that the administration does not support legislation of that kind."

The New York Times (10/8, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports President Trump's "decision to abruptly halt negotiations with a series of Twitter posts did little to bolster Mr. Mnuchin's credibility, though Ms. Pelosi said the Treasury secretary claimed he had known in advance what the president was going to do." Pelosi said during a Capitol Hill news conference Thursday, "I said, you knew he was going to tweet? You knew he was going to tweet that after you had engaged in months of negotiations with the speaker of the House?" Pelosi added, "We're happy to review what that stand-alone bill would look like, as part of a bigger bill, if there's a bigger bill. ... We're at the table; we want to continue the conversation."

Bloomberg (10/8, Wasson, 4.73M) reports Pelosi told Bloomberg TV "that she drew the 'inference' that Mnuchin was interested in broader stimulus talks and that she had confidence in the Treasury secretary." However, Pelosi also "said the White House hasn't provided a full counteroffer to the $2.2 trillion plan that the House passed last week as the Democrats' negotiating position."

In an editorial, the San Francisco (CA) Chronicle (10/8, 2.67M) says Mnuchin is "[a]mong those who have called for another round of stimulus in short order."

Other news outlets reporting include the Wall Street Journal (10/8, A1, Peterson, Sider, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), CNN (10/8, Mattingly, 83.16M), Newsweek (10/8, Touchberry, 1.53M), Politico (10/8, Caygle, Ferris, Mintz, 4.29M), Reuters (10/8, Zengerle), NBC News (10/8, Popken, 6.14M), CNBC (10/8, Josephs, 3.62M), New York Magazine (10/8, Kilgore, 1.1M), Axios (10/8, Treene, Swan, 521K), and the Financial Times (10/8, Politi, Subscription Publication, 1.34M).

Administration Sanctions 18 Additional Iranian Banks.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Talley, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that on Thursday, the Trump Administration moved to blacklist 18 Iranian banks, an action aimed at cutting off the few financial connections the regime still has, spawning a liquidity crisis by impeding foreign exchange access. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said in a statement, "Our sanctions programs will continue until Iran stops its support of terrorist activities and ends its nuclear program."

The Washington Post (10/8, Hudson, 14.2M) reports Mnuchin made that case that designating the 18 Iranian banks "reflects our commitment to stop illicit access to U.S. dollars," adding that "today's actions will continue to allow for humanitarian transactions to support the Iranian people." The Post says the sanctions announcement "represents a major pre-election push on a signature Trump administration policy that has succeeded in devastating the Iranian economy, while failing to moderate Tehran's behavior or limit its nuclear program."

Reuters (10/8, Psaledakis, Mohammed) reports that the Treasury Department "said in a statement that the prohibitions did not apply to transactions for the provision of agricultural commodities, food, medicine or medical devices to Iran." Reuters adds, "While experts have said such a U.S. step could erode Iran's ability to secure humanitarian goods by making foreign banks even more reluctant to facilitate such transactions, the Treasury stressed that the action under Executive Order 13902 does not affect existing authorizations for humanitarian trade, which remain in force."

The New York Times (10/8, Verma, 18.61M) reports critics, however, "said the new sanctions were unlikely to achieve the Trump administration's goal of forcing Iran back into negotiations – both to limit its nuclear program and to end its hostilities across the Middle East – and would further distance the United States from key European allies."

The AP (10/8, Lee), USA Today (10/8, Hjelmgard, Shesgreen, 10.31M), CNN (10/8, Hansler, 83.16M), The Hill (10/8, Kelly, 2.98M), Axios (10/8, Allassan, 521K), Daily Caller (10/8, Hagstrom, 716K), NBC News (10/8, Talmazan, Williams, 6.14M), Bloomberg (10/8, Wadhams, Mohsin, 4.73M), and the Financial Times (10/8, Manson, Bozorgmehr, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

Schumer, Wyden Call For TIGTA Investigation Into IRS Audit Of Trump.

The Hill (10/8, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-NY) and Senate Finance ranking member Ron Wyden (D-OR) "are calling for Treasury Department inspectors general to investigate whether there has been any inappropriate interference into IRS audits of President Trump," coming "after The New York Times reported last week that Trump has been subject to a years-long audit over a $72.9 million refund he claimed in 2010." The senators wrote, "Due to significant concerns of potential efforts to undermine the integrity of the mandatory audit process and other audits within the IRS, it is essential that the Office of the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA) and Office of the Inspector General (OIG) ensure the appropriate safeguards remain in place to prevent such interference at the agency."

Bloomberg (10/8, Davison, 4.73M) also reports.

Treasury Finalizes Foreign Partnership Withholding Regulations.

Behind a paywall, Law360 (10/8, Olivo, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Department "has finalized regulations for the withholding tax regime on transfers of foreign partnership interests, including guidance that lets buyers off the hook if they can show that..."

Treasury Grant News

DE Community Developer Receives Award From Treasury's Community Development Fund.

Delaware Business Now (10/8) reports the Treasury Department's "Community Development Financial Institutions Fund awarded Cinnaire $825,750 in grants through the 2020 round of the federal program." The grant "will advance Cinnaire's work bringing capital, development capacity and expertise to communities and people in need, especially those often left out of the economic mainstream." The CDFI Fund "recently awarded more than $204 million to support economic growth in low-income and economically distressed communities across the nation."

Leading National News

Trump Says He Thinks He Is "Better," Hopes To Hold Rally This Weekend.

On ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 5, 3:40, Muir, 6.7M), Jonathan Karl reported, "Exactly one week after he said he tested positive for COVID-19, the President [on Thursday] declared himself cured." President Trump: "I think I'm better. When to a point where I'd love to do a rally tonight. I wanted to do one last night. But I think I am better. I feel perfect. There's nothing wrong." Karl: "In reality, we still know very little about the President's true medical condition. He says he is still on the powerful steroid dexamethasone." On the CBS Evening News (10/8, story 3, 1:20, O'Donnell, 4.22M), Ben Tracy also said Trump "admits to still being on the powerful steroid dexamethasone" and "is now suggesting that he may have contracted the virus from someone at a White House event honoring Gold Star military families last month." Trump: "They come within an inch of my face sometimes. They want to hug me and they want to kiss me. And they do. And, frankly, I'm not telling them to back up." Hallie Jackson said on NBC Nightly News (10/8, story 3, 1:20, Holt, 5.56M) that the White House "still refuses to say when the President last tested negative for the virus, a key data point for determining who else could be at risk. ... We learned tonight that several of the President's top aides, including son-in-law Jared Kushner, joined him in the Oval Office today, according to a senior White House official. All they say wearing full PPE."

The AP (10/8, Madhani, Colvin, Perrone) reports the President "insisted Thursday that he is ready to resume campaign rallies and feels 'perfect,' but the White House has offered little information about his condition one week after his diagnosis with the coronavirus that has killed more than 210,000 Americans." The AP says Trump "is trying to shift his focus to the election that's less than four weeks away." But he "has not been seen in public – other than in White House-produced videos – since Monday and his doctors have provided few medical details since before his release from a military hospital."

Reuters (10/8, Mason, Holland) reports the President said "he may return to the campaign trail with a rally on Saturday after the White House physician said he had completed his course of therapy for the novel coronavirus and could resume public events." Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (10/8, 535K), "I think I'm going to try doing a rally on Saturday night if we have enough time to put it together. But we want to do a rally probably in Florida on Saturday night. I might come back and do one in Pennsylvania the following night. It's incredible what's going on. I feel so good." Earlier, Trump said on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/8), "I am back because I am a perfect physical specimen and I am extremely young."

USA Today (10/8, Rossman, Aretakis, 10.31M) reports White House physician Sean Conley "cleared Trump to return to public life on Saturday" in a memo released by the White House on Thursday evening. Conley wrote, "Saturday will be day 10 since Thursday's diagnosis, and based on the trajectory of advanced diagnostics the team has been conducting, I fully anticipate the President's safe return to public engagements at that time." Politico (10/8, Goldberg, Ollstein, Roubein, 4.29M) reports that Trump campaign surrogates have been "fanning out to battlegrounds like Arizona, Florida, Nevada and North Carolina" in Trump's absence, "and while many events are outdoors, some have not followed state and city limits on large crowds, the campaign isn't requiring face coverings and social distancing doesn't appear to be enforced."

The New York Times (10/8, Grynbaum, Vigdor, 18.61M) reports Conley said Trump "has remained 'stable' and 'devoid' of symptoms that would suggest the illness was progressing." The Washington Times (10/8, 492K) reports Conley said Trump's heart rate "is 69 beats per minute and his blood pressure, heart rate and oxygen rate remain normal." Townhall (10/8, Stocking, 177K) reports Conley said Trump had "blood pressure of 127/81 mmHg, a respiratory rate of 15-17 breaths per minute, and a pulse oximetry of 96-98 percent room air."

Politico (10/8, Choi, 4.29M) says the President's diagnosis "threw a wrench into the campaign's plans, notably with the transition of the second presidential debate into a virtual affair. ... Still, the president has had time to get his voice heard from his White House confinement. In the days following his hospital stay, he has been particularly active on Twitter and engaged in a lively Thursday interview" with Fox Business' Maria Bartiromo.

The Washington Post (10/8, Olorunnipa, Parker, Dawsey, 14.2M) writes that Trump – "trailing in the polls, stricken with the novel coronavirus and stuck in isolation at the White House" – has "tried to project an image of strength and normalcy that belies his troubled circumstances. On Thursday, he spent an hour phoning into a television interview, released two video messages aimed at key voting groups, began planning rallies for next week and promised senior citizens free access to the experimental drug he falsely claimed was 'a cure' for covid-19."

White House Deputy Press Secretary Brian Morgenstern said on KTRH-AM Houston (10/8, 16K), "The President himself received Regeneron, which he has said was a terrific help that gives you antibodies to fight the virus. ... He's recovered really quickly. He's had no symptoms." Morgenstern said on Fox News @ Night that "he's doing great. He's feeling great. It's really a testament to Operation Warp Speed and the President's own leadership in getting a vaccine and, in the meantime, treatments to market faster than ever before."

Peter Nicholas of The Atlantic (10/8, 3.47M) writes, "Inside the White House, aides created a kind of alternative reality in which the threat is always receding, the boss always prevailing. In meetings with the president, 'no one likes to tell him that some areas are catching fire' because of the virus, [a] senior administration official told me." The official continued, "They only say, 'Oh, we're turning the corner.' That goes on there all the time. There's always a reluctance to talk about bad news. That permeates all the discussions." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Bender, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the New York Post (10/8, Nelson, 4.57M), the Fox News (10/8, 27.59M) website, and The Hill (10/8, Chalfant, 2.98M) are among the other sources covering the President's condition.

Trump Suggests He Has Not Been Tested Recently. Asked on Fox News' Hannity (10/8, 535K) if he has been tested since his diagnosis, Trump said, "What we're doing is probably the test will be tomorrow, the actual test, because there's no reason to test all the time, but they found very little infection or virus, if any. I don't know if they found any, I didn't go into it greatly with the doctors."

Treatment Trump Touts As "Cure" Was Developed Using Cells From Fetal Tissue. The New York Times (10/8, A1, Mandavilli, Holt, 18.61M) reports that when the Administration "suspended federal funding in 2019 for most new scientific research projects involving fetal tissue derived from abortions, officials argued that whatever the scientific benefits, there was a pressing moral imperative to find alternative research methods." But the "cocktail of monoclonal antibodies [Trump] described as a 'cure' in a celebratory video posted on Twitter was developed using human cells derived from a fetus aborted decades ago." The Washington Post (10/8, Goldstein, 14.2M) reports that "a White House official, speaking on the condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak on the matter, said that under NIH guidelines, 'a product made using extant cells lines that existed before June 5, 2019 would not implicate the administration's policy on the use of human fetal tissue from elective abortions.'"

Trump Suggests Gold Star Family Event May Have Led To His Infection. The New York Times (10/8, Steinhauer, 18.61M) reports the President on Thursday "suggested that veterans and their families had spread the coronavirus at the White House, floating the idea that a meeting with the loved ones of fallen military members might have been the source of his own infection." Trump told Bartiromo,

"They want to hug me and they want to kiss me. And they do. And frankly, I'm not telling them to back up. I'm not doing it. But I did say it's obviously dangerous."

The Washington Post (10/8, Sonne, 14.2M) says Trump's "singling out of the Gold Star family event as the source of his illness – even though far more people who attended" the event announcing Amy Coney Barrett's Supreme Court nomination one day earlier "have publicly said they tested positive for the coronavirus – marked an effort to cast his coronavirus infection as the result of selfless presidential service to grieving military families rather than his own disregard for health precautions." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Lubold, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and Politico (10/8, Forgey, O'Brien, 4.29M) also report, while the Washington Post (10/8, A1, Stanley-Becker, Helderman, Dawsey, Gardner, 14.2M) looks at the spread of COVID from the Barrett event.

The Washington Post (10/8, Fadulu, Cox, Schneider, Chason, 14.2M) reports that "the average number of new daily coronavirus infections across the greater Washington region reached a 19-day high Thursday as local health officials sent an open letter urging people connected to a White House outbreak to get tested." The Washington Post (10/8, Sun, Abutaleb, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports the White House "is now working on a limited basis" with the CDC "to control further spread."

McConnell Says He Has Not Been To White House Since Early August. Reuters (10/8) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell says he has "avoided visiting the White House for more than two months because of its handling of the coronavirus." McConnell, who is 78, told reporters in Kentucky, "I actually haven't been to the White House since August 6, because my impression was their approach to how to handle this was different from mine and what I insisted that we do in the Senate, which is to wear a mask and practice social distancing." The Washington Post (10/8, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports McConnell "has frequently urged lawmakers and others to wear face masks, although he has stopped short of implementing a mask mandate on the Senate side of the Capitol. The Senate also instituted other changes beginning in May, including meeting in larger rooms."

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro was asked on Fox News' The Story (10/8) to respond to McConnell's comments. Navarro said, "The protocols in place here have been stringent. We had, for a long time, tents outside where you regularly got your temperature tested. Anybody who's close to the President or likely to come in contact gets tested every day as I do. ... I'm very comfortable walking around this White House and feel very safe here." USA Today (10/8, Tucker, 10.31M), Politico (10/8, LeVine, 4.29M), The Hill (10/8, Carney, 2.98M), and Roll Call (10/8, Tully-McManus, 154K) also cover McConnell's comments.

Pelosi Proposes Commission Focused On 25th Amendment. The AP (10/8, Mascaro) reports House Speaker Pelosi announced legislation Thursday "that would create a commission to allow Congress to intervene under the 25th Amendment to the Constitution and remove the president from executive duties." Pelosi said Trump "needs to disclose more about his health after his COVID-19 diagnosis. She noted Trump's 'strange tweet' halting talks on a new coronavirus aid package – he subsequently tried to reverse course – and said Americans need to know when, exactly, he first contracted COVID as others in the White House became infected." The President responded on Twitter, "Crazy Nancy is the one who should be under observation. They don't call her Crazy for nothing!"

USA Today (10/8, Behrmann, Wu, 10.31M) reports Pelosi said Trump "is 'in an altered state' and that action regarding the 25th Amendment and outlining a presidential line of succession will be discussed." The Washington Post (10/8, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports Pelosi told reporters "that she would discuss the 25th Amendment to the Constitution on Friday. She did not elaborate." The New York Post (10/8, Nelson, 4.57M) says the legislation "is almost certain to die in the Republican-held Senate."

White House Director of Strategic Communications Alyssa Farah said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (10/8, 49K), "It's an act of sheer desperation. First they tried Mueller, then they tried impeachment, now they're going to try the 25th Amendment? Four years in, they still refuse to accept this is the elected President of the United States, who's working hard for the American people." Bloomberg (10/8, Wasson, Westin, 4.73M), The Hill (10/8, Axelrod, 2.98M), and Breitbart (10/8, 673K) also report.

Walter Reed Staff Were Required To Sign NDAs During Trump's 2019 Visit. The Washington Post (10/8, Leonnig, Harris, Parker, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports, "Doctors and medical staff working at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center when President Trump made a medical visit there last November were required to sign nondisclosure agreements, an unusual request that rankled some personnel." Although the White House "has described Trump's stop at the hospital as part of a 'routine' checkup, there were multiple signs that the visit was hastily arranged and did not follow the typical protocol for a planned presidential stop."

Media Analyses Cast Jobless Numbers As Evidence Recovery Is Slowing.

The CBS Evening News (10/8, story 6, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.22M) reported there is "new evidence tonight that the economic recovery has stalled. 840,000 Americans filed for unemployment benefits last week, down from the week before, but not by much."

The Washington Post (10/8, Rosenberg, 14.2M) says, "The number of jobless claims have fallen from their peak in the spring, but the rate has slowed in recent months."

Bloomberg (10/8, Rockeman, 4.73M) reports the labor market has made "scant progress amid risks of further weakness without additional federal stimulus." To the New York Times (10/8, Casselman, 18.61M), a "larger trend is clear: After falling swiftly from a peak of more than 6 million last spring, weekly jobless claims have stalled at a level far higher than the worst weeks of past recessions."

On its website, CNBC (10/8, Cox, 3.62M) casts the number as "another sign that the spike in job growth over the summer has cooled heading into the final part of the year," while Reuters (10/8, Burns) says it indicates "the U.S. labor market is making little fresh headway in getting millions of people back on the job after being out of work due to COVID-19 disruptions," and the Wall Street Journal (10/8, Chaney, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says it appears the labor market and the economy are slowing.

The AP (10/8, Rugaber) reports that economists "say they are increasingly dubious about the unemployment claims figures, even though there is little doubt that hiring has slowed and employers have continued to lay off workers."

NEC Chief Economist Joe LaVorgna said on WVLK-AM Lexington, KY (10/8), "Unfortunately, some of the financial press highlighted the fact that the headline number was a little bit lower than expected, but what was missed in that headline was the fact there were 140,000 in upward revisions and then the private sector number was actually better at 877. I mean, that is a massive gain. ... You throw in a half a point drop in the unemployment rate, I mean, this is really, really good stuff. Obviously, there's more work to do, but the economy is moving faster than many thought." LaVorgna was also interviewed on KELO-AM Sioux Falls, SD (10/8), Newsmax TV (10/8), and CNBC's Squawk On The Street (10/8, 256K).

WSJournal Survey: 42.9% Of Economists Say Labor Market Will Not Recover Until 2023. The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Torry, DeBarros, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in its new survey of economists its new survey of economists found that 42.9% do not expect the labor market to recover all of the jobs lost due to coronavirus shutdowns until 2023. The Journal adds that 12.2% expect it will take longer and 2% said it will take until 2030.

Administration Officials Tout Economy's Strength.

Assistant Treasury Secretary for Public Affairs Monica Crowley said on WHKT-AM Norfolk, VA (10/8), "It has been a pretty remarkable story over the last five months. Since April, this economy has added over 11.4 million jobs back. ... All of the so-called experts expected that we would not fall below 8% unemployment until the end of next year...and here we are five months in, and we're at 7.9%. Now that being said, that number is still too high. The President is singularly focused on getting every American back to work." Crowley said, "I can tell you that if he is reelected, you're going to see the same boom times that you saw pre-COVID, because all of those pro-growth policies are still in place and he intends to build upon them."

NEC Chief Economist Joe LaVorgna said on KELO-AM Sioux Falls, SD (10/8), "One thing we need to remember is that the President's economy was extraordinarily healthy in February. Unemployment was 3.5%, was record low across every ethnic group, race group. ... So the economy's fundamentally strong, so once it was allowed to reopen, the President's pro-growth policies and the natural recuperative powers of a dynamic economy are going to let things come back much faster than the consensus thought, and that's exactly what's happened."

LaVorgna was also interviewed on CNBC's Squawk On The Street (10/8, 256K) and Newsmax TV (10/8).

Carranza Visits Pennsylvania PPP Recipients.

WBRE-TV Wilkes-Barre, PA (10/8, 19K) reported that SBA Administrator Carranza began a two-day tour in Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, on Thursday "to see how the Paycheck Protection Program is helping small business owners and what more the US Small Business Administration can do for them as we continue to battle COVID-19." Carranza said, "I wanted to learn how they applied the Paycheck Protection Program funds and were they able to retain all of their employees and sustain their business. ... There were several small businesses that were recipients of the PPP funds and their businesses were sustained, they considered it a lifeline."

Amtrak Warns Lawmakers Of 2,400 Job Cuts Without Additional Aid.

The Washington Post (10/8, Lazo, 14.2M) reports Amtrak wrote to congressional leaders Thursday to urge "swift passage of legislation that would extend government support for the passenger railroad, warning that without additional funding by the end of the year it would need to cut more than 2,000 jobs, further reduce service, and defer major capital projects." Amtrak CEO William J. Flynn wrote, "We will be unable to avoid more drastic impacts that could have long lasting effects on our Northeast Corridor infrastructure and the national rail system. ... Insufficient funding levels could force Amtrak to reduce its workforce by an additional 2,400 jobs."

Perdue: HBIIP Could Increase Ethanol Consumption By 50%.

Asked about the newly announced HBIIP investments on WHO-AM Des Moines, IA (10/8), Agriculture Secretary Perdue said, "Many people have forgotten how dependent we were upon foreign energy and now, based on the great productivity of our corn farmers and biodiesel producers, as well as ethanol producers, we've got a great industry here. The one limiting factor has been...access for consumers." Perdue said, "We're cooperating with stations across the country and...dedicated $100 million in order to allow these stations to put in blender pumps and pumps where consumers can easily choose through one hose whether it's E15, E30, or even E85 there." Perdue said the program could potentially increase "our ethanol consumption by 50% domestically, which would be a huge boon."

NLRB Issues Complaint Against Google Contractor.

The New York Times (10/8, Scheiber, 18.61M) reports the NLRB issued a complaint this week against HCL America, "a contractor hired by Google and accused it of violating its employees' labor rights, marking the latest flash point in a long-running struggle between workers and technology companies." In the complaint, the agency says HCL "illegally discouraged workers from belonging to a union, and of failing to bargain with the union in good faith." Last fall, "a group of about 90 HCL employees in Pittsburgh who do work such as data analysis under a contract the company has with Google voted to unionize." The complaint says "managers at the company interrogated workers about the organizing activities of their colleagues, told them that promotions and wages were being delayed because of the union campaign and threatened to enforce work rules more strictly if the union was created, in violation of federal labor law."

US Appeals Injunction Preventing TikTok Ban.

The New York Times (10/8, Isaac, 18.61M) reports the federal government has appealed a judge's ruling blocking the Trump Administration's ban on the video app TikTok. The Justice Department argued in a filing with the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals "that a preliminary injunction issued last month" in US District Court should be lifted. The Times says the appeal "further escalates the battle between the White House and ByteDance," the Chinese company that owns TikTok. The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Ferek, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage.

Reuters (10/8, Staff) reports DOJ "said in a court filing on Thursday it was appealing a judge's ruling that prevented it from prohibiting new" TikTok downloads. Reuters notes that a federal judge in September "temporarily blocked a Trump administration order that was set to bar Apple Inc and Alphabet Inc's Google from offering new TikTok downloads."

AMD In Talks To Buy Xilinx.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Lombardo, Cimilluca, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Advanced Micro Devices Inc. is in talks to buy chip maker Xilinx Inc. The deal, which could be valued at $30 billion, would be the latest merger in the consolidating semiconductor industry.

JPMorgan Pledges $30B To Address Racial Wealth Gap.

The AP (10/8, Sweet, Olson) reports JPMorgan Chase announced Thursday "it is committing $30 billion over the next five years toward programs that include earmarking more money for getting Black and Latino families into homeownership and providing additional financing to build affordable rental housing units." CEO Jamie Dimon said in a statement, "Systemic racism is a tragic part of America's history. ... We can do more and do better to break down systems that have propagated racism and widespread economic inequality." Reuters (10/8, Moise) reports the initiative "seeks to provide $8 billion in new mortgages for Black and Latino borrowers, $14 billion in loans for affording housing projects, $2 billion in small business loans, and $2 billion in philanthropy."

Morgan Stanley To Buy Eaton Vance For $7B.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Hoffman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Morgan Stanley announced it will acquire fund manager Eaton Vance Corp. for $7 billion. The New York Times (10/8, Hirsch, 18.61M) reports a statement from Morgan Stanley said the "combined group would oversee roughly $1.2 trillion assets and generate more than $5 billion in sales. ... Morgan Stanley said it expected to extract $150 million in cost savings out of the deal."

Collapse In Energy Prices Hurt Wisconsin Though It Produces No Oil Or Gas.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Osipovich, Dezember, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports while Wisconsin does not produce any oil or gas, this year's collapse in energy prices has had an impact on the state.

WarnerMedia Restructuring Will Result In Thousands Of Layoffs.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, FitzGerald, Flint, Mullin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a restructuring being planned by WarnerMedia aimed at reducing costs by up to 20% will mean thousands of layoffs from Warner Bros. studios and TV channels including HBO, TBS and TNT. The company cut 500 jobs at Warner Bros. in August.

IBM Spinning Off Tech Services Business To Focus On Cloud Computing, AI.

The New York Times (10/8, Lohr, 18.61M) reports IBM is "spinning off its legacy technology services business to focus on cloud computing and artificial intelligence, a move that reflects how decisively computing has shifted to the cloud." The Times adds, "The business retaining the IBM name will include its cloud operations, along with its hardware, software and consulting services units. They represent about three quarters of the current company's revenue." The spin off business, which "has not yet named, is IBM's basic technology services business, which maintains, supports and upgrades the computing operations of thousands of corporate customers." That business has "sales of about $19 billion a year, but it's not where the growth opportunities lie in the technology business."

Trump Says He Will Impose More Tariffs On China In Second Term.

The New York Times (10/8, Swanson, 18.61M) reports in an interview on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria Thursday, President Trump "vowed to once again punish China with tariffs if he won re-election, claiming his strategy of heavily taxing Chinese products had forced Beijing to make trade concessions and helped American farmers." Trump said, "I'm going to use tariffs on China." He said the strategy brought "billions of dollars" in to the US, and added, "I gave all of the money to the farmers and we had tens of billions leftover which goes into the Treasury." Trump "pointed to record purchases of corn and soybeans that he said had been made 'two weeks ago' as evidence that his aggressive approach toward China was working." He said, "They want to keep me happy because they know that I'm a hair trigger when it comes to them. And I'm sick of them."

Navarro: Biden And Harris “Totally Unprepared To Deal With China.”

Asked to respond to comments at the vice-presidential debate by Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) on Fox News' The Story (10/8), Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said, “When Harris says that the President’s tariffs had cost 300,000 manufacturing jobs, I mean, there’s no scenario where that’s possible. What is true...is that when Joe Biden voted for China into the World Trade Organization, what happened subsequently was 70,000 factories gone to Shanghai, Beijing, and Hangzhou, and over five million manufacturing jobs lost.” Navarro said, “These folks seem totally unprepared to deal with China, either economically or diplomatically, and seem to have no inclination to do so.”

WPost Analysis: Both Parties Appear To Believe Barrett Would Restrict Or Overturn Roe.

The Washington Post (10/8, Kim, 14.2M) reports Supreme Court nominee Amy Coney Barrett “heads into her confirmation hearings next week with a detailed record that has led many liberals and conservatives to believe she would support restricting, if not outright overturning, the landmark decision that guarantees a woman’s right to an abortion.” As her nomination fight begins “in an increasingly heated election season, top Republicans – from President Trump to individual senators – appear to be playing down the impact Barrett’s confirmation would have on the fate of abortion rights in the United States.”

Barrett’s Religious Community Said To Be “Deeply Embedded” In Each Other’s Lives.

In a feature describing the People of Praise, a religious community of which Judge Amy Coney Barrett has been part nearly all her life, the New York Times (10/8, Graham, LaFraniere, 18.61M) says Barrett “spent formative years of her childhood embedded in that intense faith community in Louisiana” and “married a man named Jesse Barrett who had himself been raised in South Bend’s People of Praise community.” According to the Times, “The group’s beliefs – including a strict view of human sexuality that embraces traditional gender norms and rejects openly gay men and women – are in line with other conservative faith traditions. What is notable about the group, according to documents and interviews with former members, is that even in the context of devout faith communities, members of the People of Praise are deeply embedded in one another’s lives.”

Reuters/Ipsos Poll Shows Trump’s Coronavirus Approval Rating At “Record Low.”

Reuters (10/8, Whitesides) reports that, according to a new Reuters/Ipsos poll, “Americans are steadily losing confidence in President Donald Trump’s handling of the coronavirus pandemic, with his net approval on the issue that has dominated the U.S. election hitting a record low.” The October 6-8 poll, taken “after Trump’s COVID-19 infection and weekend hospitalization, found 37% of American adults approved of the president’s handling of the pandemic and 59% disapproved,” with a “net approval rating of negative 22 percentage points,” the lowest since March 2. Reuters says “the plummeting approval rating is an ominous sign for Trump, who trails Biden in opinion polls ahead of the Nov. 3 election.”

Report: Meadows Hosted “Lavish” Atlanta Wedding Despite Coronavirus Restrictions.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/8, 895K) reports Chief of Staff Meadows “hosted a lavish wedding for his daughter in Atlanta this May, despite a statewide order and city of Atlanta guidelines that banned gatherings of more than 10 people to prevent the spread of the deadly coronavirus.” The May 31 wedding at Biltmore Ballrooms hosted “70 or so guests,” including Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH), and “pictures of the wedding reviewed by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution show groups of people clustered closely together in the same room throughout the evening” without masks. Biltmore special events manager Novare Events President Myrna Antar said, “While we do not comment on client’s events, we can confirm that the entire 16,000 square feet of the space was reserved for this small wedding – greatly exceeding the per person square footage allowed by the order.”

The New York Times (10/8, Epstein, 18.61M) reports that the wedding took “place early in the coronavirus pandemic, as Americans were canceling or postponing their own weddings and other long-planned gatherings to comply with public health restrictions aimed at slowing the spread of the virus.” Photographs posted online show Meadows “delivering a father-of-the-bride speech before a band with at least eight members,” while “other photographs show Mr. Meadows dancing with his daughter, Haley, various groomsmen shaking hands and much dancing and mingling. ... None of the photographs posted in the online wedding album show any guests wearing masks.”

NYTimes Report: Political Considerations Influenced Pence’s Handling Of Task Force.

In an article titled “Under Pence, Politics Regularly Seeped Into The Coronavirus Task Force,” the New York Times (10/8, Mazzetti, Weiland, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports that Vice President Pence’s “decision to walk the halls of the Mayo Clinic without a mask” on April 28 is “only one example of how, over nearly eight months since the vice president was given a leading role in managing the nation’s pandemic response, political considerations seeped into decisions by Mr. Pence and his staff.” According to the Times, Pence Chief of Staff Marc Short directed CDC Director Redfield “to soften the agency’s recommendations to a meat processing company about safety steps, in part to placate the embattled industry.”

Fauci: Volume Of New Cases Needs To Come “Way, Way Down.”

CNBC (10/8, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Thursday, NIAID Director Fauci "said...he's 'not comfortable' with the level of Covid-19 cases in the United States as the nation enters its fall and winter seasons. The U.S. is reporting roughly 40,000 new coronavirus cases a day, which may get even worse as temperatures get cooler and people head indoors, Fauci said during an interview with MSNBC's Andrea Mitchell." Fauci is quoted as saying, "I'm not comfortable with that. I would like to see that level, way, way down, well below 10,000."

Wisconsin, Midwest Sees Surges in COVID Cases. On the CBS Evening News (10/8, story 7, 2:00, O'Donnell, 4.22M), Mola Lenghi reported that "tonight, Wisconsin is one of the nation's largest coronavirus hot spots. Long lines to get tested, and doctors scrambling just to find enough hospital beds. The Thedacare Healthcare System in northeast Wisconsin says it's seen about a 500% increase in hospitalizations, more than 200 of its staffers are out sick or in quarantine due to the virus." Thedacare President and CEO Imran Andrabi said, "I only have about five ICU beds left and about 10 medical surgical beds left in my entire health system."

On ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 8, 1:35, Muir, 6.7M), Stephanie Ramos reported that "tonight, hospitalizations on the rise in 35 states. In Wisconsin, the state set to open this 530-bed field hospital next week." Wisconsin Department of Health Services Secretary-Designee Andrea Palm said, "Every region in Wisconsin has hospitals reporting current and imminent staffing shortages."

The AP (10/8, Geller, Groves) reports that "a surge of coronavirus cases in Wisconsin and the Dakotas is forcing a scramble for hospital beds and raising political tensions, as the Upper Midwest and Plains emerge as one of the nation's most troubling hotspots. The three states now lead all others in new cases per capita, after months in which many residents and politicians shunned mask requirements while downplaying the risks of the disease." North Dakota "tripled" its "previous single-day record" of deaths on Wednesday, while "in Wisconsin, health officials plan to open a field hospital next week at the state fairgrounds to prevent health care centers from being overwhelmed by virus cases, even as state Republicans challenge Democratic Gov. Tony Evers' mask mandate in court." South Dakota is meanwhile increasingly transferring patients out of state, contradicting assurances by Gov. Kristi Noem (R), "whose plan for combating the virus has focused on increasing treatment capacity."

New Jersey Officials "Prepare For Second Wave" As Cases Rise. Politico (10/8, Landergan, 4.29M) reports that "New Jersey officials say they are bracing for a second wave of the coronavirus, with the state recording 1,301 new Covid-19 cases, the highest amount in a single day since May." Gov. Phil Murphy (D) on Thursday "described the number as 'sobering' and pleaded with residents to practice social distancing and wear masks." Health Commissioner Judith Persichilli said, "We are anticipating a second wave. If individuals do not adhere to social distancing, masking guidelines, washing your hands, or staying home if you're sick, this wave has the potential to become a surge." Murphy has "indicated he wants to pursue a 'scalpel' approach as opposed to statewide restrictions, and says he wants to work collaboratively with community leaders."

Birx Praises UConn Coronavirus Response, Urges Continued Caution.

WTNH-TV Hartford, CT (10/8, 81K) reported that White House Coronavirus Task Force Coordinator Deborah Birx gave "high marks to the University of Connecticut for its handling of a coronavirus outbreak" in a visit to the state. Birx said, "The kind of spread that we're seeing now is very different from the spread we experienced in March and April."

WFSB-TV New Haven, CT (10/8, 72K) reported that Birx visited "with a warning for Connecticut" and "said people should follow CDC guidelines whenever they're out and about and they're around people they don't live with. ... That's because many people spreading the disease are asymptomatic." Birx said, "This is the moment to really increase asymptomatic testing, increase outreach to the communities."

Birx said on 12-TV New Haven, CT (10/8), "All the people of Connecticut out there, really, if you're gathering together indoors, assume someone in that group that's outside of your family household that could be positive and wear your mask and continue to physically distance." The station reported Birx "did have encouraging words for the University of Connecticut, saying that the school is a model for the country in stemming the widescale outbreak of the virus on campus."

Birx said on WPRI-TV Providence, RI (10/8, 2.22M), "What we wanted to carry for a message across the Northeast, that what you're doing in public is great, but we have to figure out how to bring that safety into the household and into any groups we bring into the household."

Azar: Supplies Will Be Sufficient To Vaccinate All Americans By April.

CNBC (10/8, Lovelace, Jr., 3.62M) reports on its website that on Thursday, HHS Secretary Azar "said...the U.S. could have enough Covid-19 vaccine doses for every American as early as March," which CNBC says is "a more optimistic estimate" than President Trump has publicly said. CNBC adds, "The Trump administration's coronavirus vaccine program Operation Warp Speed expects to have up to 100 million doses by the end of the year, Azar said during a keynote speech at the Goldman Sachs Healthcare virtual event on the coronavirus." Azar is quoted as saying that will be "enough to cover especially vulnerable populations. ... We project having enough for every American who wants a vaccine by March to April 2021."

White House Deputy Press Secretary Brian Morgenstern said on KTRH-AM Houston (10/8, 16K), "Operation Warp Speed is unbelievable. ... We have a number of treatments that are already being used either through compassionate use or emergency use authorizations. We are seeing more and more treatments come to market all the time." He said, "We think there'll be a vaccine, we may see data at some point this month indicating that a vaccine could be safe and effective. ... We're confident that we can have up to 100 million doses by the end of the year, and then perhaps enough doses available for every American really in the early part of next year. So, none of this would have been possible without Warp Speed."

Former CDC Director Urges Redfield To Stand Up To Trump.

The New York Times (10/8, Mandavilli, Holt, 18.61M) reports former CDC director William Foege "said Thursday that President Trump and Vice President Mike Pence have 'their knees on the neck of the public health community,' and called on" current CDC Director Redfield, "to stand up to them – even at the risk of getting fired." Foege said, "Silence becomes complicity and I think the one person that might have turned this around would be the director of the C.D.C. ... I think [Redfield] would level with C.D.C. employees and let them know what the White House has actually done – some of it is public – the fact that they were willing to put things on the C.D.C. website, that they would overrule the recommendation of C.D.C. If he said, 'I will stand behind you for as long as I'm here,' and then if he gets fired he gets fired with his head held high."

AP Analysis: Healthcare Professionals "Battle Virus Skeptics."

The AP (10/8, Hollingsworth) reports that "treating the sick and dying isn't even the toughest part" for doctors and nurses during the coronavirus, but rather "dealing with patients and relatives who don't believe the virus is real, refuse to wear masks, and demand treatments like hydroxychloroquine, which President Donald Trump has championed even though experts say it is not effective against the scourge that has killed over 210,000 in the US." While "it's unclear how Trump's bout with the virus will affect the situation...some doctors aren't optimistic." Beth Oller, a physician in Kansas, said, "None of the things he did since he had it have helped us a bit, and, if anything, would fly in the face of it. All he did was continue to show people that the things we are saying to do are overblown and an overreaction. As a physician, it is so damn frustrating."

Moderna To Forgo Patents Related To COVID Vaccine.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Loftus, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Moderna President Stephen Hoge said in an exclusive interview that the pharmaceutical company will not enforce any of its seven patents associated with its coronavirus vaccine and signaled willingness to license the patents after the pandemic.

Regeneron, Eli Lilly Ask For FDA EUAs.

On NBC Nightly News (10/8, story 7, 2:15, Holt, 5.56M), Kristen Dahlgren reported that "on the same day the President touted an experimental antibody treatment as a cure for COVID...two companies who make the treatments applied for emergency authority from the FDA. Eli Lilly and Regeneron say their antibodies made in the lab mimic the way the immune system fights infection." Dahlgren said Regeneron's early trials data "found patients given the antibody cocktail cleared the virus faster with reduced symptoms. But critics like Dr. Rick Bright fear the emergency approval process is being politicized." Former Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Authority Director Rick Bright said, "I would urge caution. You're getting a false message from the President right now. Let the scientists do their job." Dahlgren said that doctors also "point out the President took several different medications, so it's impossible to know what impact the antibody treatment may have had."

The Washington Post (10/8, Johnson, McGinley, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports that "after months of touting coronavirus vaccines that would land before Election Day, President Trump made an abrupt pivot this week to a promising but unproven therapy that he received as part of his treatment for covid-19" in a five-minute Twitter video. Trump "also claimed in the video he had granted the drugs" from Regeneron and Eli Lilly EUAs, "a designation that would make the medicines more broadly available. But the companies said they have submitted the requests to the Food and Drug Administration – a process that the agency has repeatedly tried to assure the public is based on science and free of political interference." Experts "said that by inserting himself and his own recovery story into an area of ongoing medical research, Trump risks disappointing and confusing the American public with a hopeful anecdote that may not reflect how the drug works for others or how broadly it will become available when it is approved."

NIAID Marks Start Of Convalescent Plasma Study.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Walker, Hopkins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases announced a study testing the use of convalescent plasma in comparison to remdesivir for the treatment of coronavirus. The NIAID-funded study, led by a group of companies including Japan's Takeda Pharmaceutical, will include 500 patients across six continents.

WSJournal Analysis: Vaccine Trial Participants Focus On Ending Pandemic.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Winkler, Hopkins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) analyzes the ongoing clinical trials for a coronavirus vaccine, including the over 10,000 US volunteers who say they are excited to help usher a return to normalcy and debunk vaccine skeptic theories.

New York Coronavirus Restrictions Met With Protests, Lawsuits.

On ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 8, 1:35, Muir, 6.7M), Stephanie Remos reported, "Tonight, strict new coronavirus lockdowns taking effect in hard-hit neighborhoods in New York City, sparking outrage. Hundreds of protesters demonstrating in Brooklyn, starting fires, even assaulting a journalist. City and state officials taking urgent action to crush flareups in so-called red zones. Shutting down nonessential businesses, limiting capacity at houses of worship to a maximum of ten people, and closing more than 300 schools.”

Mola Lenghi said on the CBS Evening News (10/8, story 7, 2:00, O'Donnell, 4.22M), “New cases are now rising in 31 states. New York and New Jersey reporting the most new cases since May” and “a lockdown went into effect in several New York City neighborhoods today, sparking another night of protests in orthodox Jewish communities.”

The AP (10/8, Mustian) reports that “hundreds of businesses and schools in New York City neighborhoods where coronavirus cases have spiked were closed Thursday by order of the governor, but questions swirled about how effectively officials could enforce the shutdown in areas where it has been met with resentment,” protests, and “legal resistance” from religious organizations “over a provision limiting attendance at indoor religious services to no more than 10 people.” Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) “said 1,200 city workers would be out on the streets doing enforcement, though some of those efforts involved trying to educate businesses about rules imposed with little warning in hastily drawn zones with confusing borders.”

The New York Times (10/8, Rubinstein, Kim, 18.61M) reports “as New York officials on Thursday hurriedly launched a targeted lockdown to stamp out a surge in coronavirus cases, chaos, confusion and tension erupted over restrictions that will close schools and businesses and greatly limit attendance at places of worship.” Between “competing hot-spot maps,” issued by de Blasio and then by Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D), “which overlapped and contradicted each other,” schools and businesses saw mismatched instruction while religious organizations filed suits against “the governor’s restrictions on houses of worship” and “parents rallied against the sudden closure of schools.” Partnership for New York City President Kathryn Wylde said, “Now that we have protocols in place you would hope that the response would be more nuanced and targeted.”

The Washington Post (10/8, Bailey, 14.2M) reports that “several synagogues and rabbis have filed a lawsuit asking for a temporary restraining order to bar the state of New York from enforcing its restrictions, saying the limits disrupt the religious observance of tens of thousands of Orthodox Jews, ‘depriving them of their religious worship and holiday observance,’” alongside a separate suit from the Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn. Agudath Israel of America called Cuomo’s “unanticipated and draconian limitations” concerning, and contradicted his description a meeting with Orthodox Jewish leaders as “largely a one-way monologue.” Protests have since “broken out in every evening in this community. Earlier this week, a crowd of Hasidic Jewish protesters set fire to masks and attacked a photojournalist in Borough Park.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Berger, Honan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that two lawsuits against the restrictions were filed in Brooklyn federal court by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn and the Orthodox Jewish umbrella organization Agudath Israel of America, which have argued that the lockdown unfairly targets religious organizations.

The New York Daily News (10/8, Slattery, 2.52M) reports that Cuomo “knocked NYPD cops Thursday for not wearing masks and blamed unrest in Brooklyn’s Orthodox Jewish community over restrictions meant to curb coronavirus cases on Mayor de Blasio’s failure to enforce past measures,” calling “on the city to do a better job – and set a better example.” He said, “It would have been better if we’d enforced the law all along and the NYPD has to enforce the law now. And the NYPD has to follow the law, by the way. Wear a mask, that’s the law. And when you don’t follow the law don’t expect people to follow when you say ‘I’m here to enforce the law.’ It’s an act of hypocrisy.”

The New York Post (10/8, Marsh, Musumeci, 4.57M) reports that “fueled by coronavirus hot spot zones in Brooklyn and Queens, the daily number of new COVID-19 cases in the Big Apple is steadily rising and inching closer to the city’s threshold.” City Health Commissioner David Chokshi said, “There is no herd immunity in any of the neighborhoods where we are most concerned or any other neighborhood in New York City. This is so important to ensure that people understand that unfortunately the coronavirus continues to be very infectious, continues to spread and so we have to take the precautions that we are embarking upon.” De Blasio said, “Overall, I think we’re very clear about our direction, our ability to keep things in check, but what we do know is certain areas of the city need deep restrictions to ensure we don’t have a bigger problem.”

NYTimes Analysis: Viral Spread Among Jewish Community “A Crisis For New York.” The New York Times (10/8, Stack, Goldstein, 18.61M) reports that weeks after Chokshi “held an urgent conference call with Orthodox Jewish news outlets to warn of rising transmission” of COVID-19, “tensions between the authorities and Orthodox Jewish communities would worsen, escalating into the biggest health challenge for the city since the spring.” Orthodox Jewish sects “have thrived” in NYC “while warding off many aspects of the modern world,” but now face “unwelcome scrutiny over whether the virus is spreading because some people in these insular communities are reluctant to embrace public health practices and have become susceptible to misinformation, including from President Trump.”

WSJournal: Cuomo, De Blasio Exhibit Double Standard With Jewish Community. The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that Cuomo and de Blasio have displayed a double standard in singling out religious organizations, specifically the Orthodox Jewish community, in new coronavirus lockdown restrictions after dismissing the safety threat posed by Black Lives Matter protests.

Tribal Nations Among Hardest Hit By Coronavirus.

The New York Times (10/8, 18.61M) reports that “the coronavirus has torn through the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians unabated, sickening more than 10 percent of the tribe’s 10,000 residents and killing at least 81 people. Now the tribe is bracing for a second wave and more devastation.” Mississippi’s Neshoba County, “where most of the tribe’s residents live, had the highest death rate per capita in Mississippi from the coronavirus, according to data tracked by The New York Times,” with tribal members accounting “for more than half of the county’s virus cases and about 64% of the deaths” despite making up only 18% of its residents. The Times says “while communities of color have been disproportionately affected by the virus, it appears to be especially deadly in some tribal nations, where poverty, multigenerational housing and underlying health conditions such as diabetes and heart disease have been contributing factors."

NFL Announces More Postponements Due To Positive Tests.

The New York Times (10/8, Belson, 18.61M) reports that "for the second consecutive week, the N.F.L. has shuffled its schedule to accommodate teams that have had players and staff members who have tested positive for the coronavirus." The Tennessee Titans, "who have had the league's worst outbreak, with nearly two dozen players, coaches and staff members testing positive," reported two additional cases on Thursday, while the New England Patriots said cornerback Stefon Gilmore has now tested positive. The league this week "said it would use video surveillance to ensure that players and coaches were wearing proper protective equipment at team facilities" and "is also investigating whether the Titans have violated league rules by working out after the club's facility was shuttered because of the outbreak in the locker room."

Airbnb To Require Enhanced Cleaning By Hosts.

The AP (10/8, Durbin) reports that "Airbnb said Thursday it will require hosts to comply with enhanced cleaning procedures as part of its effort to reassure guests and local officials during the coronavirus pandemic." Hosts outside China, which has its own local cleaning program, will have through November 20 "to commit to the cleaning protocols, which include scrubbing floors and other surfaces with soap and water; washing linens on high heat; disinfecting high-touch items like door knobs; and ventilating rooms. Hosts who don't comply may be suspended or removed from Airbnb." Airbnb "also said Thursday that guests and hosts must wear masks and social distance when interacting with each other."

Body Camera Videos Of Taylor Shooting Released.

ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 9, 0:20, Muir, 6.7M) reported that on Thursday "more than 50 body camera videos" involved in the Breonna Taylor case were "made public, including a SWAT team moving through Taylor's apartment after she was shot and motionless on the floor. Four minutes in, someone checks her pulse. A judge says she will soon decide whether to allow a grand juror to speak publicly. The state AG now arguing against that."

Texas Police Officer Charged With Price Murder Fired.

CNN (10/8, Razek, Chavez, 83.16M) reports on its website that Wolfe City, Texas, officials on Thursday said police officer Shaun Lucas was terminated from his position "for his egregious violation of the City's and police department's policies" in the fatal shooting of 31-year-old Black man Jonathan Price. CNN says Lucas was charged with murder earlier this week. He "was responding to a report of a disturbance and a possible fight in progress Saturday at a convenience store in Wolfe City when he shot Price four times in the torso, the probable cause affidavit released by the Hunt County District Clerk said."

The Washington Post (10/8, Berman, 14.2M) calls Lucas "one of the rare law enforcement officers to face criminal prosecution for shooting and killing someone while on duty."

Cole's Family Vows To Continue Fight Against Officer Who Killed Him.

The AP (10/8, Richmond) reports Kimberley Motley, an attorney for the family of Black teen Alvin Cole, who was killed by Wauwatosa Police Officer Joseph Mensah, "vowed Thursday to keep fighting and working to prove racism pervades the officer's department, after a prosecutor declined to file charges in the case." Motley said she intends to file a federal lawsuit against Mensah, and "sued in state court on Tuesday seeking department documents that she believes will show Mensah's supervisors are racist and that officers have racially profiled Black drivers for years." She also seeks to have both Mensah and Police Chief Barry Weber fired. In addition, Cole's sister Taleavia said to protesters Wednesday that Milwaukee County District Attorney John Chisholm, who is white, must step down; she "said he has shown bias against Black families in his more than 20 years as a prosecutor," though "she didn't cite examples."

Protests Continue After Security Footage Released Of Kansas City Arrest Of Pregnant Woman.

The Kansas City Star (10/8, Rice, Kite, 549K) reports the office of Jackson County Prosecutor Jean Peters Baker is reviewing the arrest of Deja Stallings, a pregnant Black woman, and is asking the Kansas City Police Department to conduct its own investigation. According to the Star, the arrest – during which a police officer put his knee on Stallings' back "with her belly on the ground" – has "led to protesters occupying the lawn in front of City Hall in Kansas City for the past week." On Thursday, the KCPD "said they have been in touch with the prosecutor's office regarding the incident," though "the officers involved in the arrest remain on duty."

CNN (10/8, Toropin, Lee-Johnson, 83.16M) reports on its website that security camera video released by the KCPD of the arrest "shows as many as a dozen people gathered" around a gas station and convenience store, "some pushing each other." Police attest Stallings "and man tried to pull [a] suspect away" from officers, but Stacy Shaw, Stallings' attorney, "disputes the police's assertion." According to CNN, "The security video shows Stallings briefly step between an officer and the man he was moving to arrest, but the officer quickly pushes past her to chase after the suspect, catching up with him just a few feet later."

Analysis: Release Of Chauvin Illustrates Complicated Minnesota Bail Reform Debate.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (10/8, Mannix, 1.04M) reports, "For the second time since the death of George Floyd, Minnesota is reckoning with questions over the transparency of its bail system." The release of former Minneapolis Police Officer Derek Chauvin this week on $1 million bond "was so contentious it prompted the governor to activate 100 National Guard members in anticipation of violent protests." Hundreds "marched down south Minneapolis streets Wednesday evening, many calling Chauvin's release pending trial another example of inequality in the justice system." The protests "come a few months after" President Trump's reelection campaign "leveled attacks against the Minnesota Freedom Fund, a charitable organization that posts bail for people who cannot afford it." According to the Star Tribune, the "two cases illustrate the complicated politics of a bail reform debate that other states have wrestled with for years, but Minnesota has mostly avoided up until now."

NYTimes Reviews Facts Known About Prude Case.

In a piece headlined "What We Know About Daniel Prude's Case And Death," the New York Times (10/8, Gold, 18.61M) reports, "Against the background of a national discussion over police brutality and racism, the family of Daniel Prude held a news conference in September to highlight disturbing video footage of the police encounter that preceded his death in Rochester, NY." The video, in addition to police reports released by local activists, "brought renewed attention to the case of Mr. Prude, a 41-year-old Black man who died in March after a confrontation in which officers put a mesh hood over his face and pressed his head into the pavement." Since the release of the footage, "Prude's family has accused officials of covering up his death to protect the police officers involved."

Washington Supreme Court Dismisses Effort To Recall Seattle Mayor.

The Seattle Times (10/8, Gutman, 935K) reports, "A unanimous Washington State Supreme Court tossed out the effort to recall Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan," ruling that accusations Durkan allowed the Seattle Police Department to use tear gas in June "did not rise to the level that would allow a citizen initiative to remove her from office." The decision "kills the push to recall the mayor and means that, barring unforeseen circumstances, voters in 2021 will have the final say on Durkan's job performance, should she choose to run for a second term." In a brief order, Chief Justice Debra Stephens said, "The allegations in this case are deeply troubling and our review requires that we treat the factual allegations as true. ... Nevertheless, after carefully considering the issues presented, the court concludes that the recall charges presented in this case are factually and legally insufficient."

Trump Expresses Frustration With Administration For Not Prosecuting Democrats.

Bloomberg (10/8, Wingrove, Kinery, 4.73M) reports that in a call to Fox Business Thursday morning, President Trump "lashed out at two of his most loyal Cabinet members – Attorney General Bill Barr and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo – and threatened to personally intervene in federal investigations into Democrats over controversies stemming from the 2016 election." President Trump said on Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/8) that unless Barr "indicts these people for crimes – the greatest political crime in history – then we are going to get little satisfaction unless I win...because I won't forget it. But, there people should be indicted. This was the greatest political crime in the history of our country and that includes Obama and it includes Biden." Trump later said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (10/8, 535K), "We caught them spying on our campaign. This is treason. We caught them trying to take down a duly elected Administration/President and we have all the evidence now. We have to see what the law enforcement is going to do with it, but we caught them spying – as sure as you are sitting there."

The New York Times (10/8, Baker, Haberman, 18.61M) reports Trump "berated his own cabinet officers on Thursday for not prosecuting or implicating his political enemies, lashing out even as he announced that he planned to return to the campaign trail on Saturday just nine days after he tested positive for the coronavirus." The President "has not been seen in person since returning from the hospital on Monday, but he sought to reassert himself on the public stage with a pair of telephone interviews with Fox News and Fox Business, a video and a series of Twitter messages." The President "castigated his own team, declaring that [Barr] would go down in history 'as a very sad, sad situation' if he did not indict Democrats" like former Vice President Biden and former President Obama. Trump "complained that [Pompeo] had not released Hillary Clinton's emails, saying, 'I'm not happy about him for that reason.'" He also targeted FBI Director Wray, saying, "He's been disappointing."

The AP (10/8, Balsamo, Miller, Tucker) reports President Trump "is increasingly at odds" with Barr "over the status of the Justice Department's investigation into the origin of the Russia probe, with the president increasingly critical about a lack of arrests and Barr frustrated by Trump's public pronouncements about the case, according to people familiar with the matter." The President "and his allies had high hopes for the investigation led by Connecticut US Attorney John Durham, betting it would expose what they see as wrongdoing when the FBI opened a case into whether the Trump campaign was coordinating with Russia to sway the 2016 election." However, "a year and a half into the investigation, and with less than one month until Election Day, there has been only one criminal case." Barr "has privately expressed frustration over the public comments, according to a person familiar with his thinking."

Durham Reportedly Seeking Grand Jury Testimony To Investigate New Front In Russian Probe. The Daily Caller (10/8, 716K) reports, "US Attorney John Durham has reportedly opened a new front in his investigation into the origins of the Trump-Russia probe." According to a report by The New Yorker, the Caller says, "Durham is seeking grand jury testimony from computer scientists behind an allegation that Donald Trump's real estate company had a secret communications channel with Alfa Bank." The theory "was first floated in October 2016, but was debunked in the Justice Department inspector general's report on the FBI's investigation of the Trump campaign." Durham "is also reportedly seeking the testimony of Daniel Jones, a former Senate Intelligence Committee investigator who partnered with Fusion GPS and Christopher Steele in 2017."

Ratcliffe Said By Intelligence Veterans To Have Brought Politics Into Intelligence.

The Washington Post (10/8, Harris, 14.2M) reports DNI Ratcliffe "failed to meet his commitments when he recently declassified documents that included sensitive intelligence about Russians discussing Hillary Clinton and her 2016 presidential campaign, current and former officials said." The disclosures, "which he told lawmakers came 'at the direction of the president of the United States,' amount to a disinformation operation run by the nation's top intelligence official, in service of a president who has long accused the intelligence agencies of conspiring against him, the current and former intelligence officials said." Former CIA Officer Marc Polymeropoulos said, "[Ratcliffe] is cherry-picking intelligence, and seriously risks exposing sources and methods for absolutely no reason other than to promote and protect the President before the election."

Johnson: Intelligence Committee Covering Up Coup Attempt. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) says actions against President Trump by unelected bureaucrats and members of the intelligence community amount to a constitutional crisis. Johnson says not complying with Trump's directive to declassify information relevant to the Senate Select Subcommittee on Intelligence's investigations will continue the coverup.

Former Trump Fundraiser Charged With Illegally Lobbying For Malaysian Fugitive.

The AP (10/8) reports that Elliott Broidy, "a prominent fundraiser for President Donald Trump and the Republican Party, has been charged in an illicit lobbying campaign aimed at getting the Trump administration to drop an investigation into the multibillion-dollar looting of a Malaysian state investment fund." According to the AP, Broidy is "the latest person accused by the Justice Department of participating in the covert lobbying effort."

The New York Times (10/8, Vogel, 18.61M) reports Broidy "was charged with a single count of conspiring to violate the Foreign Agents Registration Act as part of an influence operation that prosecutors say sought to use his political ties to help Malaysian and Chinese interests, according to federal court filings that became public on Thursday." The Washington Post (10/8, Zaptosky, 14.2M) reports prosecutors "believe he took millions in undisclosed money to end a US investigation into a billion-dollar embezzlement of a Malaysian state investment fund and, separately, to return outspoken Chinese exile Guo Wengui to his home country." According to the Post, the charges "are the latest blow to the RNC's fundraising leadership under Trump."

Bloomberg (10/8, Melby, Voreacos, 4.73M) describes Broidy as "a former top political fundraiser" for President Trump, and says he is accused of having "participated in a scheme to illegally lobby the Trump administration to stop investigating the embezzlement scandal at the 1MDB Malaysian state investment fund." Bloomberg reports that Jho Low, "a Malaysian fugitive and the accused mastermind of the 1MDB fraud, initially paid Broidy $6 million to lobby the Justice Department to stop its investigation and promised an additional $75 million if the lobbying succeeded." Broidy has been "charged with conspiring to lobby for a foreign national without registering." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Viswanatha, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says cases emerging from the investigation into the 1MDB fraud exposed an extensive effort by Low to attempt scaling back the US investigation by hiring top GOP consultants and lawyers with ties to the President.

The Daily Beast (10/8, 1.39M) reports prosecutors "say Broidy conspired in the scheme with a Hawaii businesswoman named Nickie Lum Davis, who pleaded guilty in August to one count of conspiracy to violate FARA, and an unnamed co-conspirator who, based on previous reporting, is believed to be Pras Michel, best known as a founding member of the Fugees." The government "is also seeking to seize any assets derived from the lobbying campaign."

Friends Say They Recall Dorris' Accusations Against Trump In 1997.

The New York Times (10/8, Kantor, 18.61M) reports friends of Amy Dorris, who accused President Trump of forcibly kissing and groping her at the US Open in 1997, recall hearing the accuser's claims the year that she says they happened. Math teacher Dawn Capp "said that soon afterward, her friend had told her the same story about Mr. Trump that she later told publicly." Kerri Whitfield, "another friend, echoed those recollections, saying that Ms. Dorris had shared the story privately in the autumn of 1997. Neither friend has previously spoken publicly; both say they are confident of Ms. Dorris's truthfulness."

Cuccinelli Announces Regulations Aimed At Cutting H-1B Abuse.

Acting Deputy DHS Secretary Ken Cuccinelli said on WPHT-AM Philadelphia (10/8, 11K), "This week, two more of the President's promises were kept with, we did a joint rollout with the Department of Labor on regulations that will cut off the abuse of H-1B visas which go to high tech workers that are foreign nationals that a lot of companies use to undercut American workers or replace them, and this President committed to putting American workers first, and that's exactly what he has done again this week."

Massachusetts Lawmakers Ask ICE For Details Of Stopping Black Man.

The Boston Globe (10/8, 972K) reports, "Members of the Massachusetts congressional delegation pressed the Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency on Thursday to explain why agents stopped a Black jogger in West Roxbury earlier this week, and questioned whether the encounter violated the man's rights." In a letter, Sens. Edward Markey (D-MA) and Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), and Reps. Stephen Lynch (D-MA) and Ayanna Pressley (D-MA), "requested more details about the stop of Bena Apreala, 29, a lifelong Massachusetts resident who recorded a portion of the encounter, which spread quickly across the Internet and sparked claims of racial profiling." The lawmakers "also asked whether immigration agents in the Boston area have approached other individuals in a similar manner since April."

Supreme Court Temporarily Permits Women To Obtain Abortion Medication Without Doctor Visit.

USA Today (10/8, Wolf, 10.31M) reports the Supreme Court "ruled on a temporary basis Thursday night that women seeking to end their pregnancies with medication do not need to visit a health care provider, given the COVID-19 pandemic." The action "was a setback for the Trump administration, which had sought to reinstate a 20-year-old policy following lower court rejections." The Court "ordered the government to make its case in more detail before a federal trial court, a process that could take six weeks and extend beyond Election Day." According to Politico (10/8, Ollstein, 4.29M), "Both sides of the abortion debate had been closely watching the case for signals of how the Supreme Court would approach the issue" after the death of Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg gave President Trump "the opportunity to shift the court further right."

The Washington Post (10/8, Barnes, 14.2M) says the Court's "unusual and unsigned disposition of the petition came after six weeks of consideration, and brought a rebuke from two of the court's conservatives for their colleagues, and for US District Judge Theodore D. Chuang," who at the request of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists had imposed a nationwide injunction against the FDA's requirement that women must have an in-person doctor's visit to obtain the pills. The New York Times (10/8, Liptak, 18.61M) reports Justice Samuel Alito, joined by Justice Clarence Thomas, "issued a dissent accusing the majority of inconsistency in its rulings on cases arising from the pandemic and of effectively deciding the case by failing to act."

CMS Rushing To Send Letters To Medicare Recipients About Drug Assistance.

Politico (10/8, Diamond, 4.29M) reports that Administration officials "caught by surprise by President Donald Trump's promise to deliver drug-discount cards to seniors...are scrambling to get the nearly $8 billion plan done by Election Day." According to Politico, "The taxpayer-funded plan, which was only announced two weeks ago and is being justified inside the White House and the health department as a test of the Medicare program, is being driven by" Chief of Staff Meadows and CMS Administrator Verma. Politico says the Administration is "seeking to finalize the plan as soon as Friday and send letters to 39 million Medicare beneficiaries next week, informing seniors of Trump's new effort to lower their drug costs, although many seniors would not receive the actual cards until after the election." Bloomberg (10/8, Wayne, 4.73M) reports that the President "posted a video on Twitter appealing to senior voters, noting he's a senior himself, as polls show the demographic tide turning against him."

Morgenstern Touts Administration's Healthcare Record.

White House Deputy Press Secretary Brian Morgenstern said on KTRH-AM . Houston (10/8, 16K), "The President has dramatically improved healthcare for American patients and consumers. Now they have more access to different types of affordable plans like association health plans, short term, short duration plans. ... Premiums have actually come down and that is in stark contrast to Obamacare." He said, "There are millions of Americans who ended up losers on that deal. Well, the President has completely changed that and he's really made healthcare affordable again."

Survey Analysis Finds Insured Workers Facing Higher Out-Of-Pocket Healthcare Costs.

The New York Times (10/8, Abelson, 18.61M) reports, "The high cost of health care is persisting during the pandemic, even for people lucky enough to still have job-based insurance." The "average annual cost of a health plan covering a family rose to $21,342 in 2020, according to the latest survey by the Kaiser Family Foundation." Workers "paid about a quarter of the total premiums, or $5,588, on average, with their employers picking up the rest of the cost." An analysis of the survey results published Thursday in the academic journal Health Affairs found that "while premiums rose only slightly from the 2019 survey, the increase in premiums and deductibles together over the last decade has far outpaced both inflation and the growth in workers' earnings." Since 2010, "premiums have climbed 55 percent, more than double the rise in wages or inflation, according to the foundation's analysis."

HCA Healthcare To Return $6B In Federal Pandemic Relief.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Evans, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports HCA Healthcare, one of the largest hospital chains in the US, said it will pay back $1.6 billion in pandemic relief and $4.4 billion in federal loans ahead of schedule, the latest signal that the hospital sector is rebounding from the coronavirus pandemic disruption.

Louisiana Residents Bracing For Delta, Now Category 3 Hurricane.

The CBS Evening News (10/8, story 8, 1:40, O'Donnell, 4.22M) reported, "Millions along the Gulf Coast are bracing for Hurricane Delta, now a major Category 3 hurricane. It is expected to make landfall in Louisiana tomorrow afternoon, the record fourth named storm to hit the area this season. ... There's fear that Delta could destroy the few remaining homes those other storms didn't."

The Orlando Sentinel (10/8, Pedersen, Harris, 536K) reports the National Hurricane Center said Thursday, "Heavy rainfall will lead to significant flash flooding and minor to major river flooding in parts of Louisiana Friday and Saturday. ... Additional flooding is expected across portions of the central Gulf Coast into the Lower Mississippi Valley."

ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 6, 1:00, Muir, 6.7M) meteorologist Ginger Zee said "storm surge is going to be a big problem" with Delta. The storm is expected to make landfall on Friday night, which is "when the winds will be at their heftiest. Gusts near Lake Charles up to 80." Al Roker said on NBC Nightly News (10/8, story 6, 0:40, Holt, 5.56M), "The big problem: Delta's growing larger, so the tropical force winds extends from Galveston to New Orleans. Storm surges up to 11 feet and rainfall that could top 15 inches in some local spots."

Lonnie Quinn of the CBS Evening News (10/8, story 9, 1:10, O'Donnell, 4.22M) said, "This storm is a record-breaker, from going from a tropical depression to a Category 4, the fastest in history. Now we're back to a major hurricane, a Category 3. Winds are blowing at 135 miles per hour." As it "pushes towards the Louisiana coastline, we think it's going to get a little stronger, maybe 125-mile-per-hour wind but losing some strength as it comes onshore. It will come onshore about 24 hours from now as a Cat 2, maybe a Cat 3." On NBC Nightly News (10/8, story 5, 1:25, Holt, 5.56M), Morgan Chesky said Delta "could be making a direct hit" on Lake Arthur, Louisiana.

The Washington Post (10/8, Lamothe, Cusick, Cappucci, 14.2M) reports the storm, "like so many before it, was drawing from warm waters and strengthening as it spun toward the Louisiana coastline." This hurricane season "has brought repeated attacks on coastal communities from Texas to Florida, an unrelenting barrage of rising water, heavy rain and killer winds that have uprooted trees and sent them crashing down on occupied homes." On ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 7, 0:45, Muir, 6.7M), Rob Marciano said the "the last thing" Lake Charles, Louisiana "needs is another major storm," since "the recovery since Hurricane Laura has been painful." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, McWhirter, Ailworth, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports local officials called on residents of Calcasieu Parish to evacuate ahead of the storm.

The AP (10/8, Borenstein) reports Delta is "gaining strength as it bears down on the US Gulf Coast" and "is the latest and nastiest in a recent flurry of rapidly intensifying Atlantic hurricanes that scientists largely blame on global warming." National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Climate and Hurricane Scientist Jim Kossin said, "We've certainly been seeing a lot of that in the last few years. ... It's more likely that a storm will rapidly intensify now than it did in the 1980s," and "a lot of that has to do with human-caused climate change." In the last few decades, "meteorologists have been increasingly worried about storms that just blow up from nothing to a whopper, just like Delta. They created an official threshold for this dangerous rapid intensification – a storm gaining 35 mph (56 kph) in wind speed in just 24 hours." Delta is the sixth such storm to meet that threshold.

The New York Times (10/8, Brasted, Fausset, Schwartz, 18.61M) reports that on Thursday, "weary residents" of Lake Charles "prepared, along with the rest of southwest Louisiana, for yet another round of serious trouble spinning up from the Gulf of Mexico." As of Thursday evening, Delta "was about 300 miles from the Louisiana coast, churning slowly northwestward at 12 miles per hour on a path that could end up strafing Lake Charles again." The Times quotes NOAA's Kossin, who said, "There's any of a number of behaviors that these storms are seeing changes in, and none of them are good."

Gaynor Says FEMA Has Employees In Gulf Ahead Of Delta. FEMA Administrator Gaynor said on the Weather Channel (10/8, 173K), "FEMA has been on the Gulf coast for a while, at least six weeks in strength. So, we've been down there for Laura six weeks ago, and then three weeks ago for Sally. So, FEMA has about 1,500...employees plus our partners that have been down there, and of course, for Delta, we really ramped it up this time to make sure that we're ready for anything. So, from the Corps of Engineers, National Guard, our friends at DoD, Coast Guard, all around with all their assets ready to go."

Gaynor said on Fox News' Your World (10/8, 1.04M), "Do not be complacent. Take this storm seriously. Take the time that you have left today to make those preparations. We all know it's been a long, hard hurricane season, especially if you live in Louisiana. We know that, we feel it for you, but don't waste time. Take it seriously. Don't put yourself in danger or your family in danger. ... Heed the advice of your local authorities."

Year Could Break Record For Most "Billion-Dollar" Weather Disasters. USA Today (10/8, Rice, 10.31M) says, "With a nonstop onslaught of severe storms, wildfires and hurricanes, 2020 has been a calamitous year for weather in the USA." In 2020, "there have been 16 separate weather disasters across the nation that each caused at least $1 billion in damage, according to a report released this week from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA). That ties a record set in 2011 and 2017." It is also "a record sixth consecutive year with at least 10 separate billion-dollar disasters," and "if Hurricane Delta causes $1 billion or more in damage as it smashes into the Gulf Coast this weekend, 2020 will break the record for most 'billion-dollar' weather disasters in a single year."

DeVos Urges Schools To Resume In-Person Learning.

Education Secretary DeVos said on the Dan O'Donnell Show (10/8) that "I've visited a number of states and a number of schools and school districts in recent weeks where they have been very careful, they have been very thorough, and they have kids back in school in-person, and it can be done, and it should be done with plans for if there is an outbreak, what to do, and how to accomplish the isolation necessary. ... The paralysis about 'nobody can be back in school in person' is doing such a tremendous disservice to kids all across the country. ... This all points to the fact that parents need to have more choices."

DeVos On 1776 Project: Students Have To “Learn An Accurate History.”

Asked on the Dan O’Donnell Show (10/8) about the President’s 1776 project, Education Secretary DeVos said, “We are working with the White House right now on actually standing up the commission that the President has, through his executive order, advocated, and he is so right to be focused on the fact that young people today have got to learn our nation’s history and have got to learn an accurate history of our country, and one that is going to ultimately prepare them, along with civics, for being responsible and informed adults. Ones that can debate ideas and discuss ideas and not feel threatened by ideas.”

DOJ Suit Alleges Discrimination In Yale’s Admissions Process.

The AP (10/8, Balsamo) reports the Justice Department sued Yale University in federal court in Connecticut Thursday, alleging that the university “discriminates based on race and national origin in its undergraduate admissions process, and that race is the determinative factor in hundreds of admissions decisions each year.” The suit comes “about two months after the Justice Department publicly accused Yale of discrimination, saying its investigation found that Asian American and white students have ‘only one-tenth to one-fourth of the likelihood of admission as African American applicants with comparable academic credentials.’” Reuters (10/8) says the suit “followed a two-year investigation that followed a complaint by Asian-American groups about the New Haven, Connecticut-based university’s practices.” The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Korn, Gurman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) calls the suit an escalation of the Administration’s examination of the race and admissions policies of elite colleges.

USA Today (10/8, Aspegren, 10.31M) reports Yale president Peter Salovey denied the lawsuit’s allegations. In a statement, calling the suit “baseless,” Salovey said Yale’s admissions policies will not change because. The New York Times (10/8, Hartocollis, 18.61M) reports Salovey’s statement said the allegation was based on “inaccurate statistics and unfounded conclusions.”

Perdue Reprimanded For Politicizing USDA Event.

Politico (10/8, McCrimmon, 4.29M) reports that on Thursday, the Office of Special Counsel ordered Agriculture Secretary Perdue “to reimburse taxpayers for using an official event to promote President Donald Trump’s reelection, a violation of ethics laws that prohibit certain political activity by executive branch employees.” According to Politico, “Perdue’s reprimand comes after the USDA chief has increasingly blurred the lines between his public duties and his political support for Trump.”

Trump To Host “Virtual Rally” On Limbaugh’s Show Friday.

The Washington Times (10/8, Chasmar, 492K) reports Rush Limbaugh announced Thursday that President Trump will hold a “virtual rally” on his show Friday. Limbaugh said, “I’m thrilled to announce that our commander in chief, President Donald Trump, will be right here tomorrow hosting the largest virtual rally in radio history.” The Daily Caller (10/8, 716K) says Trump “confirmed the news later in the day on Twitter,” tweeting, “Looking forward to speaking with the Great Rush and guests!”

Trump: “Absentee Ballots Are Fine,” But “Unsolicited” Ballots Will “Be A Disaster.”

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News’ Hannity (10/8, 535K), “Absentee ballots are fine, because absentee ballots you request, you ask for a ballot and you request, and that’s it. ... But these unsolicited ballots, universal unsolicited ballots, it’s going to be a disaster the likes of which we’ve never seen. We will never have seen an election like what’s going to take place. ... We have US attorneys watching. We have sheriffs watching. We have US marshals watching. You’re talking about millions of ballots are being sent out. It’s going to be a big tremendous fraud.”

On NBC Nightly News (10/8, story 8, 3:45, Holt, 5.56M), Cynthia McFadden reported, “We are 26 days away from an unprecedented election where nearly 70 million Americans are expected to cast mail-in ballots. That’s more than twice the number four years ago.” Reuters (10/8, Whitesides) reports “more than 6.6 million Americans already have voted, more than ten times the number who had at this time in 2016, according to the United States Elections Project, which compiles early voting data.” The AP (10/8, Riccardi) reports, “Many voters who decided early in the coronavirus pandemic to cast their votes by mail have been rethinking their options as Election Day approaches. Nervousness about whether and when their ballots will be counted is leading some voters to increasingly strategize and analyze a decision that was once a no-brainer. ... Some Democratic groups trying to turn out voters have shifted their messaging from voting by mail to voting in person.”

Federal, State Law Enforcement Preparing For “Possibility Of Widespread Unrest At The Polls.” The AP (10/8, Balsamo, Kunzelman, Long) reports, “Federal and state law enforcement officials have begun expanded preparations for the possibility of widespread unrest at the polls on Election Day, a response to extraordinarily high tensions among voters and anxieties about safety stoked in part” by the President. FBI and local officials “have been conducting drills, running through worse-case scenarios, setting up command centers to improve coordination on reports of violence and voter intimidation, and issuing public warnings that any crime that threatens the sanctity” of the election “will not be tolerated.” The Washington Post (10/8, Gardner, Bade, Viebeck, 14.2M) reports House Speaker Pelosi “has recently spoken in multiple meetings about preparing for a situation in which neither candidate attains the 270 electoral votes needed to win the presidency, according to multiple Democrats familiar with her remarks,” and “has also directed some of her members to be ready if GOP legislatures in states with narrow margins or unfinished counts seek to appoint their own electors.”

Appeals Court Blocks Extension On Counting Absentee Ballots In Wisconsin. The AP (10/8, Richmond) reports a federal appeals court has "blocked a decision to extend the deadline for counting absentee ballots by six days in battleground Wisconsin, in a win for Republicans who have fought attempts to expand voting across the country." According to the AP, "if the ruling stands, absentee ballots will have to be delivered to Wisconsin election clerks by 8 p.m. on Election Day if they are to be counted." Reuters (10/8, Ax) reports, "The Democratic National Committee, which had sought the accommodations, could appeal the decision, either to the full 7th Circuit or to the U.S. Supreme Court. A spokeswoman did not immediately respond to a request for comment."

Kagan Refuses To Block Montana Ballot-Mailing. The AP (10/8) reports, "A final effort to block most Montana counties from mailing general election ballots to active voters was denied Thursday, a day before the ballots are to be mailed." Supreme Court Justice Elena Kagan "rejected a request for an emergency injunction" filed by state and county Republicans who wanted to block a ruling upholding a decision by Gov. Steve Bullock (D) "to give counties the option to hold the Nov. 3 election mostly by mail due to the pandemic. Forty-five of Montana's 56 counties decided to do so." CNN (10/8, Vogue, Kelly, 83.16M) reports on its website that Kagan, "who has jurisdiction over the lower court involved in the case, turned down the request without referring the petition to her colleagues or asking the other side for its views."

Federal Judge Strikes Down Limit On Ohio Ballot Drop Box Sites. The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/8, 895K) reports US District Judge Dan Polster on Thursday struck down an order by Ohio Secretary of State Frank LaRose (R) "barring county boards of election from setting up multiple ballot drop box sites, saying the order unfairly burdens large counties." Polster "also cited the coronavirus pandemic, which he said creates a greater strain on the mail system and increases demand for remote voting options."

Thirteen Arrested In Alleged Plot To Kidnap Michigan Governor.

All three broadcast networks opened their evening newscasts with what Lester Holt of NBC Nightly News (10/8, lead story, 2:35, 5.56M) called "a stunning domestic terror plot to storm the Michigan statehouse and kidnap" Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D). Federal and state prosecutors announced the arrests "of more than a dozen men who they say targeted the governor over what they saw as her uncontrolled power. The men, according to authorities, are linked to militia groups and are ready to instigate civil war." NBC's Pete Williams said Whitmer said "President Trump's refusals to criticize white supremacist groups have been heard by them as a rallying cry." Whitmer: "When our leaders meet with, encourage, or fraternize with domestic terrorists, they legitimize their actions, and they are complicit."

On ABC World News Tonight (10/8, lead story, 4:05, 6.7M), David Muir said Whitmer, who "has been the target of protests since last spring over restrictions aimed to stop the spread of COVID amid one of the early outbreaks...thank[ed] authorities for protecting her and her family, but went on to talk about white supremacists in this country and the President." ABC's Pierre Thomas: "The FBI and state police...took action after the men met this week to exchange tactical gear and to pool their money to allegedly buy explosives. The mission: Attack the governor before Election Day. Authorities claim the planning was months in the making, with the men even going to the governor's vacation home twice to conduct surveillance."

Jeff Pegues reported on the CBS Evening News (10/8, lead story, 3:35, O'Donnell, 4.22M), "The militia members spent the summer trying to recruit like-minded members and preparing for that attack. ... According to court papers, the militia members discussed the need for 200 men to storm the Michigan Capitol building [and] take hostages, including the governor, who they would try for treason in a kangaroo court." The AP (10/8) reports six men "were charged in federal court with conspiring to kidnap the governor in reaction to what they viewed as her 'uncontrolled power,' according to a federal complaint. Separately, seven others were charged under the state's anti-terrorism laws for allegedly targeting police and the state Capitol."

The Detroit News (10/8, Snell, 825K) reports, "The federal court filing alleges the conspirators twice conducted surveillance at Whitmer's personal vacation home in northern Michigan and discussed kidnapping her to a 'secure location' in Wisconsin to stand 'trial' for treason prior to the Nov. 3 election." USA Today (10/8, Egan, Baldas, 1.52M) reports, "Members of the group, who were in the Kent County, Michigan, area, talked about 'murdering...tyrants' or 'taking' a sitting governor." The New York Times (10/8, Bogel-Burroughs, Dewan, Gray, 18.61M) reports the group "met repeatedly over the summer for firearms training and combat drills and attempted to build explosives; they also gathered several times to discuss the mission, including in the basement of a shop in Michigan that was accessible only through a 'trap door' under a rug, the F.B.I. said."

The Detroit Free Press (10/8, Egan, 1.52M) reports Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel (D) "referred to the accused as 'extremists' who are hoping to recruit new members 'by seizing on a moment of civil unrest' to wreak havoc on the country. She identified the militia group as the Wolverine Watchmen, whose members are accused of, among other things, conducting surveillance outside Whitmer's vacation residence, using code language and encrypted messages to throw off police and planting a bomb under a bridge to divert law enforcement."

The Washington Post (10/8, Timberg, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) says one of the suspects "took to the relative privacy of a Facebook group" in June "to make clear his brewing hatred. ... Such online declarations, brimming with anger and potentially violent intent, have become staples of extremism-fueled crime news in recent years, from police killings to synagogue massacres to bombing plots. Before they become real, they percolate online, courtesy of a social media ecosystem that's ubiquitous, barely moderated and well suited to helping aggrieved people find each other." Reuters (10/8, Layne, Bortor), Bloomberg (10/8, Welch, Naughton, 4.73M), the Wall Street Journal (10/8, Ailworth, Levy, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the Washington Times (10/8, Mordock, 492K), and the CNN (10/8, Carrega, 83.16M) and Fox News (10/8, Barrabi, 27.59M) websites are among the other outlets covering the story.

Trump: Whitmer "Complaining," Doing "Her Political Act." Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (10/8, 535K), "I see Whitmer today, she's complaining, but it was our Justice Department that arrested the people that she was complaining about. It was my Justice Department that arrested them. But instead she goes and does her political act."

Trump also tweeted, "Governor Whitmer of Michigan has done a terrible job. She locked down her state for everyone, except her husband's boating activities. The Federal Government provided tremendous help to the Great People of Michigan. My Justice Department and Federal Law Enforcement announced today that they foiled a dangerous plot against the Governor of Michigan. Rather than say thank you, she calls me a White Supremacist – while Biden and Democrats refuse to condemn Antifa, Anarchists, Looters and Mobs that burn down Democrat run cities I do not tolerate ANY extreme violence. Defending ALL Americans, even those who oppose and attack me, is what I will always do as your President! Governor Whitmer – open up your state, open up your schools, and open up your churches!"

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that federal agencies quickly moved against the plotters, and that Whitmer owes a debt of gratitude to the Justice Department and the FBI.

Facebook Bans Accounts Linked To Pro-Trump "Troll Farm."

The Washington Post (10/8, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) reports that Facebook said Thursday "that it will permanently ban from its platform an Arizona-based marketing firm running what experts described as a domestic 'troll farm' following an investigation of the deceptive behavior prompted by a Washington Post article last month." According to the Post, "The firm, Rally Forge, was 'working on behalf' of Turning Point Action, an affiliate of Turning Point USA, the prominent conservative youth organization based in Phoenix, Facebook concluded." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Volz, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Facebook said it has removed 200 Facebook accounts, 55 Facebook pages and 76 Instagram accounts for posing as fake users to praise President Trump and criticize Joe Biden.

Politico (10/8, Overly, 4.29M) reports that Rally Forge "employed people who used use fake names and profile pictures while commenting on content posted by other users or mainstream media outlets, Facebook's head of security policy, Nathaniel Gleicher, said Thursday." Gleicher "said Facebook is not penalizing Turning Point or Inclusive Conservation Group, though it's still investigating whether other deceptive tactics were deployed." Axios (10/8, Fischer, 521K) says this is "the most recent example of Facebook taking action on a group linked to fringe conservatives or conservative ideology for spreading misinformation or attempting to persuade public debate with fake accounts."

Bloomberg (10/8, Frier, 4.73M) reports Twitter "also disclosed a group of information operations on Thursday, and said it removed 1,594 accounts from the service for 'various violations of our platform manipulation policies.'" However, "none of the five networks pulled by Twitter originated in the U.S." The AP (10/8, Klepper) provides similar coverage.

Court Strikes Down Obama-Era Methane Rule.

The Hill (10/8, Frazin, 2.98M) reports a federal court "struck down an Obama-era regulation targeting methane leaks from drilling on public lands, arguing that it went beyond the scope of the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), which promulgated the rule." The rule "required oil and gas companies to cut a practice called flaring, in which natural gas is burned, by half, inspect their sites for leaks and replace old equipment that released too much methane." Judge Stephen Skavdahl, an Obama appointee, wrote, "Although the stated purpose of the Rule is waste prevention, significant aspects of the Rule evidence its primary purpose being driven by an effort to regulate air emissions, particularly greenhouse gases."

Trump Says He Will Not Participate In Virtual Presidential Debate With Biden.

NBC Nightly News (10/8, story 2, 1:30, Holt, 5.56M) reported on the "heated debate...over the next two presidential debates themselves after President Trump, still recovering from COVID-19, refused to take part in a virtual debate with Joe Biden next week." NBC's Hallie Jackson reported the Commission on Presidential Debates announced on Thursday that "next week's Miami town hall would go virtual." Trump: "I won't waste my time on a virtual debate. You sit behind a computer and do a debate. It is ridiculous." Jackson: "The President dropping out days after announcing his COVID diagnosis, and suggesting the debate, initially set for Thursday, should move to the following week, with another added October 29. Joe Biden's campaign is rejecting that, instead calling for the town hall to move to the 22nd, saying, 'The President's erratic behavior does not allow him to rewrite the calendar.'"

Mary Bruce reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 2, 0:55, Muir, 6.7M) that "the Biden campaign was open to" a virtual debate, "but Trump almost immediately shot it down. Trump, still battling the virus, says a virtual forum is unnecessary." Trump: "A virtual debate is a – is a joke. There is no reason. I am in great shape." Ben Tracy reported on the CBS Evening News (10/8, story 2, 1:25, O'Donnell, 4.22M) that Biden will instead "participate in a televised town hall on his own. Both campaigns say they will meet in person on October 22, the night scheduled for the third and final debate."

Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (10/8, 535K), "I'm not Joe Biden. I'm not going to do a virtual debate, sit behind a computer screen. That gives him the answers, because they will be handing him the answers. ... He does news conferences, he does them and they give him the answer and they give him the question. ... What kind of a news conference? He does them all the time."

USA Today (10/8, Wu, Garrison, 10.31M) reports the Commission said on Thursday morning that "the next debate would be remote to 'protect the health and safety of all involved' after Trump's positive COVID-19 diagnosis and the subsequent White House outbreak." The New York Times (10/8, Grynbaum, Haberman, Sullivan, 18.61M) reports Trump "said he only learned of the debate commission's decision on Thursday morning, minutes before he got on the phone for an interview. He accused the commission of 'trying to protect Biden.'"

The Los Angeles Times (10/8, 4.64M) reports that it is unclear whether Trump was tested for COVID before the first presidential debate last week. The Washington Post (10/8, Janes, 14.2M) reports both Biden and moderator Chris Wallace "have since undergone testing for the coronavirus, out of concern that the president might have been contagious during the event. Biden's campaign said he remained negative in tests for the virus, most recently Thursday morning. Earlier, Wallace also said he had tested negative."

Breitbart (10/8, 673K) says Wallace "appeared to favor" the virtual debate proposal, "calling it a 'perfectly reasonable idea.'" Wallace said on the Brian Kilmeade Show, "I know [the President] says that he's cured. I know he says that he doesn't have COVID anymore, but, the White House has not told us that he is negative. All the scientists say that it is 14 days, which would be within the window of next Thursday's debate."

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that future debates should eliminate moderators entirely, and let the candidates speak for two minutes at a time in any way they see fit. The AP (10/8, Miller, Weissert), Reuters (10/8), Bloomberg (10/8, Kinery, Wingrove, 4.73M), Politico (10/8, Siders, 4.29M), The Hill (10/8, 2.98M), and Axios (10/8, Nocera, 521K) also have reports.

Trump Says Pence Was "Great" In Debate With "Monster" Harris.

In two interviews on Thursday, President Trump commented on Wednesday evening's vice-presidential debate. On Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (10/8), Trump said of Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA), "I don't think you could get worse and totally unlikable. She is a Communist." Trump also referred to Harris as "this monster that was on stage with Mike Pence." On Fox News' Hannity (10/8, 535K), Trump said, "I thought Mike was great, legitimately. I don't mean because he is with me and he is my friend and he has done a great job as Vice President. I thought it was great."

Ed O'Keefe said on the CBS Evening News (10/8, story 5, 1:00, O'Donnell, 4.22M) that the debate "gave Pence and Harris a chance to answer questions about taxes, climate change, and race. Instead, they spent most of their time attacking the other." ABC World News Tonight (10/8, story 3, 2:20, Muir, 6.7M) and NBC Nightly News (10/8, story 4, 1:55, Holt, 5.56M) also recapped the debate.

Majority Call Harris Winner In Politico/Morning Consult Flash Poll. Politico (10/8, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports a Politico/Morning Consult flash poll conducted Thursday night found that 51% of viewers thought Harris won the debate, while 40% called Pence the winner. FiveThirtyEight (10/8, Bycoffe, Bronnner, Mejia, Wolfe, 356K) says polling by Ipsos indicates that Harris "made a more positive impression. Pence ended up at the same -14 net favorability rating he started with, while Harris's net favorability rating increased to +10 – which is even better than where Biden ended up after the presidential debate."

About 57.9M Watched Debate On Television. The New York Times (10/8, Koblin, 18.61M) reports "an estimated 57.9 million viewers watched" the debate on television, "the second biggest total ever for a vice-presidential debate, according to Nielsen." The audience "was much larger" than the 37 million who tuned in to see Pence debate Sen. Tim Kaine (D-VA) in 2016, but smaller than the nearly 70 million who watched then-Sen. Joe Biden (D-DE) debate then-Gov. Sarah Palin (R-AK) in 2008. The New York Post (10/8, Lapin, 4.57M) and Axios (10/8, Fischer, 521K) also cover the Nielsen numbers.

Trump Campaign Adviser Barred From Fox Over Tweet About Harris. Mediaite (10/8, 327K) reports, "Trump campaign adviser Harlan Hill will no longer be allowed on Fox News" after tweeting during the debate that Harris "is an 'insufferable lying [b----].'" Hill is "an Advisory Board Member on the Trump campaign." Fox News "told Mediaite on Thursday afternoon that they will no longer be booking Hill on the network."

Murphy Deletes Tweet Saying Harris Was Selected "For Her Color And Her Race." ProPublica (10/8, Willis, 60K) notes that Rep. Greg Murphy (R-NC) tweeted during the debate that Harris "was only picked for her color and her race," then deleted the tweet.

WPost: Pence Dodged Question About Peaceful Transfer Of Power. The Washington Post (10/8, 14.2M) says in an editorial that a question "Pence dodged at the end of the debate goes beyond consequential." Asked what he would do if Trump "refused to accept a peaceful transfer of power" should the GOP ticket lose, Pence "responded by attacking Democrats. ... Rather than assure Americans that their vice president's first loyalty is to the republic, Mr. Pence inflamed fears that he and Mr. Trump would conjure outlandish excuses for a loss...and encourage their supporters to deny the election's legitimacy."

Pence Cancels Friday Trip To Indiana Without Explanation.

The Indianapolis Star (10/8, 633K) reports Vice President Pence "has canceled his Friday appearance in Indianapolis, where he planned to vote at the Indianapolis City-County Building. His office did not provide an explanation when asked why. His office said the trip would be rescheduled soon." Pence spokesman Devin O'Malley said, "Nobody's sick. There's no positive tests. The VP is planning on travelling on Saturday and Monday. We'll have more information on the vice president's schedule next week soon."

Biden And Harris Campaign Together In Arizona.

Ed O'Keefe reported on the CBS Evening News (10/8, story 4, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.22M), "With President Trump stuck at the White House, the Democratic ticket isn't slowing down, campaigning today for the first time together in Arizona, and appearing with Cindy McCain, the wife of the former Republican party nominee." The AP (10/8, Jaffe, Barrow) reports Joe Biden and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "pitched an economic message Thursday during their first joint appearance on the campaign trail, hammering" President Trump for his "handling of the coronavirus pandemic and a failure to address the needs of working Americans." Biden said at a union event in Phoenix, "You're facing real challenges right now, and the last thing you need is a President who exacerbates them, who ignores you."

The Arizona Republic (10/8, 869K) reports, "Sounding themes familiar from his convention speech and last week's debate, [Biden] said Thursday that Americans have suffered from a detached president and he vowed to do better." Biden and Harris "both thanked Cindy McCain for her support and doing what they said she and the late Sen. John McCain always did: support what's best for the nation."

Biden Again Declines To Comment On "Packing" Supreme Court. The Washington Post (10/8, Wang, 14.2M) reports the Democrats are "facing growing pressure to say whether they would 'pack' the Supreme Court if the Republican-led Senate names Amy Coney Barrett to the bench." The question "came up again Thursday, when Biden was asked at a campaign stop in Phoenix if he would support expanding the Supreme Court beyond nine justices. Once again, Biden declined to answer." Biden told reporters, "You will know my opinion on court-packing when the election is over. The moment I answer that question, the headline in every one of your papers will be about that rather than focusing on what's happening now. This election has begun. There's never been a court appointment once the election has begun."

The Los Angeles Times (10/8, 4.64M) reports Biden "told reporters he would not comment on the controversial court-expansion idea," and the Washington Times (10/8, McLaughlin, 492K) reports Biden "said he will be happy to come clean about whether he supports packing the Supreme Court – that is, after the election."

Trump was asked in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (10/8, 535K) about Joe Biden's statement that he will reveal his position on court packing after the election. Trump said, "I think it was a terrible thing to say. I think it's so disrespectful to the people. He should have said something and, you know, say, 'Look to the best of my knowledge, this is probably what I would do.' I think what he said was so disrespectful to the process and to the people."

Jill Biden Campaigns In Philadelphia Suburbs. The Philadelphia Inquirer (10/8, Terruso) reports Jill Biden "thanked volunteers and told a group of elected female leaders at a small backyard rally that the 2020 election could be in the hands of Pennsylvania women, during a campaign swing Thursday in the Philadelphia suburbs."

Biden Campaign Raised More Than $12M On Wednesday. Politico (10/8, Schneider, 4.29M) reports the Biden campaign "hailed in more than $12 million on Wednesday...marking another watershed cash day for the already flush Democratic presidential ticket."

Super PAC Injecting $4M Into Gross Senate Campaign In Alaska.

Politico (10/8, Arkin, 4.29M) reports, "New money from outside groups and small dollar donors are flooding into Alaska, where independent Al Gross, who is backed by state and national Democrats," is challenging Sen. Dan Sullivan (R-AK). The race "has been on the edges of the Senate map for months, potentially competitive but receiving far less attention than some more expensive and geographically closer contests." A super PAC formed this week "is dropping $4 million into the race, the largest outside investment so far and a signal of optimism among party leaders. And Gross announced that his campaign raised $9 million over the past three months."

Bottoms Endorses Warnock In Georgia Senate Race.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/8, 895K) reports Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms (D) has endorsed Raphael Warnock (D) in the Georgia Senate special election, "becoming the latest major state Democratic figure to back Warnock in his crowded race," which features several Democrats. The endorsement comes "in advance of early in-person voting, which begins Monday."

Greenfield Raised $28.7 In Q3 For Iowa Senate Bid.

The Hill (10/8, Axelrod, 2.98M) reports, "Iowa Democrat Theresa Greenfield raked in a record $28.7 million for her Senate bid in the third quarter of 2020. The haul, the highest amount in any quarter for an Iowa Senate candidate, helped send her into October with more than $9 million cash on hand" in her challenge to Sen. Joni Ernst (R-IA).

New Hampshire Senate Candidates Debate.

The AP (10/8) reports Sen. Jeanne Shaheen (D-NH) and Corky Messner (R) debated on Thursday. Messner accused Shaheen "of exaggerating how many New Hampshire residents have preexisting health conditions that would make it difficult for them to obtain insurance without the Affordable Care Act. Shaheen, meanwhile, suggested her challenger lacks an important preexisting condition – longtime residency in the state."

DSCC Invests Another $3M In North Carolina Senate Race.

The Daily Caller (10/8, 716K) reports, "The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee will stand by North Carolina Senate candidate Cal Cunningham despite a sexting scandal which caused him to apologize for an extramarital affair with a combat veteran's wife." The DSCC "spent another $3 million dollars Wednesday on ad-buys for Cunningham's race" against Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC), Harrison Wants Graham To Be Tested For COVID Before Friday Debate.

The Hill (10/8, Coleman, 2.98M) reports Jaime Harrison (D) is calling on Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) to be tested before their Friday debate, tweeting "that he and the debate moderators committed to taking a coronavirus test before the debate, adding that his test is scheduled. ... A spokesperson for Graham did not immediately return a request for comment."

Texas Senate Candidate Hegar Backs Term Limits.

The Dallas Morning News (10/8, 946K) reports MJ Hegar (D) on Thursday "underscored her support for term limits in Congress, saying that no one 'should serve more than two terms as senator.'" However, Hegar, who is challenging Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX), "declined to commit to serving only two terms if elected, if she ends up being unable to pass legislation that requires such a limit for her and other senators."

WPost Endorses Warner For Reelection In Virginia.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/8, 14.2M) backs Sen. Mark Warner (D-VA) for a third term, writing that he "has staked a legitimate claim as one of the more effective, constructive and genuinely bipartisan lawmakers in Congress." GOP rival Daniel Gade "is a decent man who has run a civil campaign. That's to his credit, but it is no reason to unseat Mr. Warner, who is a credit to Virginia."

Brindisi Has Nine-Point Lead In NY22 Poll.

The Syracuse Post-Standard (10/8, 531K) reports a Siena College. Syracuse.com poll of 383 likely NY22 voters (9/27-10/4) shows Rep. Anthony Brindisi (D-NY) at 48%, ex-Rep. Claudia Tenney (R-NY) 39%, and Libertarian Keith Price 4%.

WSJournal: Roberts Should Rein In Effects Of Census Ruling.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says progressives are trying to take control of congressional reapportionment by using a ruling by Chief Justice Roberts that blocked a question on citizenship on the Census to upend administrative law. The Journal advises Roberts to rein in the ramifications of his decision.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.4%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.4%, and his disapproval at 53.5%. The President's approval is up 0.1 since yesterday, and his disapproval is down 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (10/6-10/8) finds Trump's approval at 45%, and his disapproval at 53%.

IMF Says Lockdowns Substantially Lowered Infections, Cautions Against Lifting Them Early.

Reuters (10/8, Shalal) reports the IMF "said on Thursday" that early lockdowns "in an epidemic can substantially reduce infections, and policymakers should be wary of lifting them to jumpstart their economies when infections remain high." The IMF "wrote in a chapter of its forthcoming World Economic Outlook" that the pandemic "showed that government lockdowns succeeded in lowering infections," but they "also contributed to the recession and hit vulnerable groups such as women and young people particularly hard." IMF economists Francesco Grigoli and Damiano Sandri, in an IMF blog post, said, "Addressing the health risks appears to be a pre-condition to allow for a strong and sustained economic recovery."

CNBC (10/8, Amaro, 3.62M), Bloomberg (10/8, 4.73M), and MarketWatch (10/8, 1.67M) also report.

Central Banks Chart Digital Currency Course As China Charges Ahead.

Reuters (10/9, Jones) reports seven major central banks, including the Fed and the Bank of England, "set out on Friday how a digital currency could look like to help catch up with China's 'trail blazing' and leapfrog private projects like Facebook Inc's Libra stablecoin." The central banks, plus the Bank for International Settlements (BIS), "said core features should include resilience, availability at low or no cost, appropriate standards and clear legal framework, and an appropriate role for the private sector." Besides the Fed and BOE, "the seven central banks that have teamed up with the BIS include the European Central Bank, the Swiss National Bank and Bank of Japan, but not the People's Bank of China."

Pandemic-Era Distressed Loans Threaten Already Fragile European Banks.

Bloomberg (10/8, Halftermeyer, Weber, 4.73M) reports that at the beginning of the year, European banks "were still digging out of the last crisis, with weak lenders in Greece and Italy peddling soured loans and policy makers channeling public funds to frail institutions." Now, as the coronavirus pandemic "wreaks havoc, a gathering tsunami of distressed credit risks wrecking a decade of efforts aimed at bolstering the fragile financial industry. The fallout could also undermine the extraordinary efforts by governments and central banks to prevent an economic meltdown."

India Sees "Rural Surge" Toward Highest Infection Rate Globally.

The New York Times (10/8, Singh, Gettleman, 18.61M) reports that "the defiance of the coronavirus rules is being reflected across rural India, and it is propelling this nation's virus caseload toward the No. 1 spot globally. Infections are rippling into every corner of this country of 1.3 billion people," with "Indian news media...calling it 'The Rural Surge.'" The refusal to adhere to guidelines "has helped India catch up with the United States in terms of total infections. U.S. cases are near 7.6 million, compared with India's 6.8 million, according to a New York Times database. But India outpaces new American cases by 30,000 or so each day, putting it on a path to potentially surpass the United States in the coming weeks."

Hong Kong Considering Mandatory COVID Testing.

The New York Times (10/8, Ramzy, 18.61M) reports that Hong Kong Health Secretary Sophia Chan "said Thursday that the city was considering options for mandatory testing as it prepared for a new wave of coronavirus infections." Chan said, "From a public health perspective, if we think that if testing is needed and people are not willing to take a test, that hinders our work." She "said the authorities were considering legal options for mandating testing if necessary," though they acknowledge "that members of the public might have concerns about any such arrangement." However, "health authorities say they are preparing for another possible spike in infections." Chan said, "We don't think the situation is looking good because of the increased number of confirmed cases."

Israel Extends Emergency Lockdown Provisions On Public Gatherings.

The AP (10/8, Zion) reports that "the Israeli government has extended an emergency provision that bars public gatherings, including widespread protests against Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, for an additional week." Netanyahu "has said the restrictions are driven by safety concerns as the country battles a runaway pandemic, but critics and protesters accuse him of tightening the lockdown to muzzle dissent" as "thousands of Israelis have participated in weekly demonstrations outside Netanyahu's official residence in Jerusalem for months this summer, calling on the longtime prime minister to resign while on trial for corruption."

Spanish Government Tells Madrid To Enforce Restrictions.

Reuters (10/8) reports that the Spanish government "said it would hold an extraordinary cabinet meeting on Friday morning to decree [a] state of emergency if Madrid does not impose the restrictions" ordered by the Health Ministry "or request intervention" after "a Madrid regional court on Thursday annulled the measures, ruling the government had overstepped its mandate and the restrictions interfered with fundamental human rights." Madrid's regional leader Isabel Diaz Ayuso said, "We hope to agree on a solution that benefits citizens and provides clarity."

The New York Times (10/8, Minder, 18.61M) reports the Madrid court's "ruling is a major setback for the central government, and underlines both the political tensions and legal uncertainty in Spain over how to respond to the latest wave of virus cases." Spain's health minister Salvador Illa has "called on Madrid's regional government to hold emergency talks over how to resolve the standoff, which comes ahead of a long holiday weekend in Spain. Mr. Illa said it was essential to have judicial decisions that 'best protect health.'"

German Expert Warns Of "Uncontrolled" COVID Spread.

The New York Times (10/8, Schuetze, 18.61M) reports that Lothar Wieler of the Robert Koch Institute, a German public health institute, "warned on Thursday that the country could soon see an 'uncontrolled' spread of the virus." Wieler said, "It is possible that we see more than 10,000 new cases per day. It is possible that the virus spreads uncontrolled." German Health Minister Jens Spahn "said the authorities were still in control of the virus and called on Germans to be more vigilant in following restrictions." Spahn said, "It's up to all of us whether we make it," he said, comparing the challenge of beating back the virus to a "test of character for society."

Iranian Human Rights Advocate Freed Amid Health Concerns.

The Washington Post (10/8, Berger, 14.2M) reports, "Prominent Iranian human rights advocate Narges Mohammadi was released from prison late Wednesday after authorities commuted her 10-year sentence amid ongoing concerns about her health." The Post says "semiofficial Iranian news agencies reported her release after 8½ years behind bars," though "officials cited by Iranian media did not elaborate on why her sentence was shortened." Mohammadi "suffers from neurological and lung diseases, which put her at high risk of complications if infected with the novel coronavirus."

Trump's Troop Withdrawal Pledge Contradicts O'Brien, Alarms Military Officials.

The AP (10/8, Baldor, Gannon) reports the US military "was blindsided Thursday" by President Trump's "assertion that all US troops will be out of Afghanistan by the end of the year, with US officials saying they are not aware of such a plan and have gotten no actual order to accelerate the more gradual pullout they've been executing." Trump "started with a tweet Wednesday saying 'we should have the small remaining number of our BRAVE Men and Women serving in Afghanistan home by Christmas,'" and "he reinforced early withdrawal plans Thursday morning, in a Fox Business Channel interview that understated the number of troops currently in Afghanistan." His announcements, which the AP says were "welcomed" by the Taliban, "alarmed Pentagon and State officials who fear that putting a definitive date on troop withdrawal could undercut negotiations to finalize a peace deal between the Taliban and the Afghan government."

According to Reuters (10/8, Ali), President Trump's "abrupt vow to bring home troops from Afghanistan by year-end is a sign of how he may feel increasingly unchained to push through a foreign policy 'wish list' he hopes could appeal to voters, current and former officials say."

The President's announcement "caught the National Security Council, State Department and Pentagon by surprise, according to three US officials, and they fear that it could reduce the limited leverage the Afghan government has in talks with the Taliban." The Washington Post (10/8, Ryan, DeYoung, 14.2M) similarly says "the Pentagon indicated it had received no orders to alter plans for a conditions-based withdrawal and Afghan negotiators voiced concern that a hasty exit would intensify challenges to peace talks."

Politico (10/8, Seligman, 4.29M) says that with his comments, Trump "managed to undercut his own national security adviser," Robert O'Brien, "who just hours earlier said the US planned to draw down to 2,500 troops by early next year." Politico adds that "a senior administration official, asked about the conflicting timelines, noted on Thursday that 'POTUS really laid down a marker yesterday.'" Also on Thursday, White House Deputy Press Secretary Brian Morgenstern said on KTRH-AM Houston (10/8, 16K), "The President has been actively working and his negotiators, of course, of the Department of Defense and the National Security Advisor Robert O'Brien have been working very hard to make sure that the conditions on the ground, especially in Afghanistan, are such that we can bring troops home safely, we can reduce our footprint there. ... That's just one step that he is taking to take care of our veterans and our troops."

Military Parade Could Include Showcase Of New North Korean Weapons.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Martin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a North Korean parade scheduled for Saturday to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the founding of the Worker's Party is the first military parade in two years and is expected to be closely watched to see which, if any, new weapons Kim Jong-un will display.

Ortagus Says Chinese Communist Party Breaks Commitments.

State Department spokesperson Morgan Ortagus said on Philadelphia's Morning Answer (10/8), "It's really not US versus China. What it's really about is democracy versus authoritarianism. ... What we have seen under Chairman Xi...is we have seen them just break all of their promises, break all of their commitments. They've broken their promises to Hong Kong, to the people there where they're supposed to have autonomy. They've broken their commitments in the South China Sea." Asked about the State Department's position on the coronavirus and its origins in China, Ortagus said, "The Chinese Communist Party has still not allowed in the independent investigators and scientists, doctors, that would need to go in to actually validate. ... These things matter. Not knowing precisely how this began, where it began, how it was unleashed on the world."

Ortagus Touts Abraham Accords.

State Department spokesperson Morgan Ortagus said on Philadelphia's Morning Answer (10/8), "Under the leadership of President Trump and Mike Pompeo, we've had a lot of successes, especially this year, in foreign policy. ... Remember, it was just less than a month ago...that we had the signing of the Abraham Accords at the White House. This is the first Arab-Israeli peace deal, peace agreement in 26 years." She said, "Within the span of 29 days, President Trump successfully negotiated two peace agreements, and so we're really seeing a...change in the Middle East because of four years of policies that we put in place in the region to embolden our allies and friends, to embolden Israel, and not to capitulate to our enemy."

Trudeau Says Canada Paying Close Attention To US Election.

Politico (10/8, 4.29M) reports Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "says Canada is paying close attention to the US campaign and is prepared for the potential outcomes of the Nov. 3 vote." During a media briefing on Thursday, Trudeau said, "As we watch the American election unfold, we are of course going to be prepared for various eventualities. ... We are certainly hopeful that all will proceed smoothly." He "noted the polarization of US politics then shifted to emphasize the way federal and provincial leaders in Canada have collaborated during the pandemic, working to 'not bring overly political elements into our response.'"

Kyrgyzstan President Says He's Prepared To Resign After New Cabinet Approved.

Reuters (10/8) reports Kyrgyzstan President Sooronbai Jeenbekov "said on Friday he was ready to resign once a new cabinet was appointed to end the power vacuum in the Central Asian nation gripped by unrest since opposition supporters seized government buildings on Tuesday." According to Reuters, while "his offer, made in a statement, could facilitate the transfer of power later, it may do little to resolve the political impasse, which prompted regional power Russia to describe Kyrgyzstan's situation as chaos."

Islamic Extremists Free Malian Politician, Three European Hostages.

The AP (10/8) reports Soumaila Cisse, "a prominent Malian politician," and "three European hostages freed by Al Qaida-linked Islamic extremists arrived in Mali's capital late Thursday where they were greeted by family members and supporters." French humanitarian Sophie Petronin, "who had been abducted four years ago while helping orphans in northern Mali, arrived in a flowing white traditional dress." In addition, "while their relatives had been notified of their release on Tuesday, news that two Italian hostages also had been freed came only late Thursday in a government statement once the flight had left northern Mali."

Protests Against Indonesia Jobs Law Continue.

The New York Times (10/8, Sijabat, Paddock, 18.61M) reports that on Thursday, riot police "fired tear gas and water cannons" in Jakarta as "they tried to disperse large crowds of people protesting a sweeping new law that slashes protections for workers and the environment." Tens of thousands of workers "took part in the third day of a national strike against the deregulation law," marching on foot and riding "in motorbike parades as sound trucks blared protest messages." Union leaders "denounced Parliament and President Joko Widodo for pushing the measure through."

Nobel Peace Prize Goes To UN's World Food Program.

Reuters (10/9) reports that the World Food Program, the United Nations' food agency, won the Nobel Peace Prize on Friday "for its efforts to combat hunger."

NYTimes: Russia Must Step In To Freeze Conflict In South Caucasus.

In an editorial, the New York Times (10/8, 18.61M) says that, "once again, the bitterly contested claims to the mountainous region of Nagorno-Karabakh in the South Caucasus have erupted into violence" between Azerbaijan and Armenia. In the past, the US, Russia, and France "have managed to restore calm, though never establish a permanent peace," but this time "a dangerous new element has to be confronted. That is Turkey." The Times says that the Trump Administration "is not one likely to care about the fighting, even if it were not deeply embroiled in the pandemic and the election campaign," and "France alone can do little." However, "doing nothing is not an option for dealing with a wildfire that, left unchecked, can rapidly spread," so whether Russia President Vladimir Putin "likes it or not, he has the greatest responsibility and the most effective levers to restrain his former empire-mates and dissuade" President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan "from a dangerous adventure."

WPost: Jailed Vietnamese Dissident A "Champion Of Democracy."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/8, 14.2M) says the arrest of Vietnamese democracy activist Pham Doan Trang "is the latest and one of the most flagrant in Vietnam's long practice of squelching freedom of expression and political dissent, including arrests of bloggers and independent journalists." The "repression appears to be intensifying ahead of a Congress of the Communist Party of Vietnam, held every five years, expected in January." Her arrest "came just hours after the United States and Vietnam had finished the 24th Annual US-Vietnam Human Rights Dialogue." The Post says, "That Vietnam would seize its best-known democracy activist on the heels of the meeting says much about the diminished standing of the United States in the world under President Trump, who has repeatedly ignored human rights abuses while cozying up to the world's despots." The Post concludes by calling Trang "a selfless and courageous champion of democracy."

Housing

Freddie Mac: Average Rate For 30-Year FRM Ticks Down From 2.88% To 2.87%.

The Washington Post (10/8, Lerner, 14.2M) reports the average rate for a 30-year FRM fell from 2.88% to 2.87%, according to Freddie Mac's latest Primary Mortgage Market Survey. The 15-year FRM average rose from 2.36% to 2.37%, while the 5/1 ARM average fell from 2.90% to 2.89%. Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater said, "The year-long slide in mortgage rates seems to be ending as rates have flattened over the last month and the economic rebound has slowed. But with near record low rates, buyer demand remains robust with strong first-time buyers coming into the market. The demand is particularly strong in more affordable regions of the country such as the Midwest, where home prices are accelerating at the highest rates over the last two decades."

According to MarketWatch (10/8, Passy, 1.67M), "That mortgage rates remained roughly flat despite a week in which investors fled to the safety of bonds amid President Trump's COVID-19 diagnosis and concerns about the state of the economic recovery from the pandemic suggests that even lower rates may not come to fruition." Bankrate (10/8, Wichter, 311K) reports, "Mortgage rates are low partly because of Federal Reserve policy. The Fed said it plans to hold interest rates steady at near zero and for several more years. More than half of the mortgage experts polled by Bankrate this week expect rates to rise next week."

Also covering Freddie's rates and Khater's analysis are HousingWire (10/8, Howley, 23K), National Mortgage News (10/8, McCullom), Mortgage Orb (10/8, Bates), an RTT News piece carried by Business Insider (10/8, 3.67M), and National Mortgage Professional (10/8, Persaud).

LoanBeam And Freddie Mac Partner To Streamline Lending To Self-Employed Borrowers.

Mortgage Professional America (10/8, Mendoza) reports LoanBeam and Freddie Mac are "expanding their partnership to streamline the lending process for self-employed borrowers." The firms "recently announced that Freddie will integrate its IRS and tax transcript data with LoanBeam's Loan Product Advisor (LPA) for self-employed offering to their mutual clients." Freddie Mac Vice President of Business Partner Integration Kevin Kauffman said, "The ability to gain access to tax data directly from the IRS means this already successful and efficient solution gets even better. LoanBeam's continued growth and innovation further strengthen Freddie Mac's and our shared clients' risk mitigation efforts."

Experts Debate Whether CFPB's QM Proposal Could Fuel New Housing Bubble, Violate Fair-

Lending Laws.

American Banker (10/9, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that the CFPB's proposed overhaul of the QM rule "is alarming critics who say it will lead to another housing bubble. One commentator even claims the plan will violate fair-lending laws." According to Ed Pinto of the American Enterprise Institute's Housing Center, "Once you take away the DTI requirement even more minorities will end up with even higher delinquencies compared to non-minorities and therefore, the proposed rule has a discriminatory effect." However, former Dave Stevens replied, "I don't think [Pinto's] view holds water. Ed is on a mission to knee-cap [Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac] and he's been using this distorted view that government programs harm minorities."

New York State Legislature Stalls On Adopting Libor Replacement Regulations.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (10/8, Clukey, 4.73M) reports on the status of New York-state statute to help replace the Libor interest rate, which has stalled out in the statehouse. Properly implementing a replacement is "crucial to ensuring that a huge swathe of the global financial system, involving deals worth potentially trillions of dollars, doesn't turn into a chaotic, lawsuit-riddled mess when the London interbank offered rate is officially discontinued at the end of next year." Bloomberg notes that its "rare for a decision like this – with such massive repercussions for the world of finance – to be made in upstate New York," though the state legislature has jurisdiction due to "the outsize role state law plays in governing the roughly $200 trillion in securities and commercial transactions tied to U.S. dollar Libor." The draft bill "would guarantee financial products that lack viable language to deal with the benchmark's end are shifted" to SOFR.

Washington's Eviction Moratorium Extended Through Rest Of 2020.

The AP (10/8) reports that on Thursday, Washington Governor Jay Inslee "extended the state's eviction moratorium through the end of the year, expressing concerns about housing insecurity during the ongoing coronavirus pandemic." According to the AP, the moratorium "was scheduled to expire next week." Washington's unemployment rate fell from a "record 16.3% in April" to 8.5% in August. Thus far, "there have been nearly 92,000 confirmed cases in Washington since the pandemic began, and 2,183 people have died."

Federal Charges Against Robert Morgan Are Dismissed.

WROC-TV Rochester, NY (10/8, Gregory) reports from Rochester, New York, "The federal charges against a prominent Rochester-based real estate developer were dismissed Thursday, but the judge's ruling leaves the possibility open for a future indictment." US District Judge Elizabeth Wolford "dismissed the charges against Bob Morgan, who was accused of operating a significant mortgage fraud conspiracy, along with others. Co-defendants include Todd Morgan, Bob's son, and Frank Giacobbe. Kevin Morgan, Bob's nephew, and Patrick Ogiony have since pleaded guilty in this case. The charges were dismissed because of the prosecution's failure to meet court-imposed deadlines, according to the federal court."

MBA: Mortgage Credit Availability Dips Nearly 2% In September.

HousingWire (10/8, Howley, 23K) reports mortgage credit was "the tightest since February 2014" in September, as a "weak economy prompted lenders to raise standards, the Mortgage Bankers Association said in a report on Thursday." The MBA's Mortgage Credit Availability Index (MCAI) "fell 1.9% to 118.6 last month, indicating stricter requirements to get loans. The index plunged from record highs seen in late 2019 after the COVID-19 pandemic caused the sharpest economic contraction since the Great Depression." According to MBA AVP Joel Kan, "The housing market overall is on strong footing, but the data show that lenders are being cautious, given the spike in mortgage delinquency rates in the second quarter, as well as the ongoing economic uncertainty." National Mortgage News (10/8, Finkelstein) reports, "The conventional MCAI, for which the conforming segment is one of two components, decreased 6.1% from August. The jumbo component was down 2.1% from the previous month." However, the government MCAI "was higher for the second time in the past three months, rising 1.4%."

Agency MBS Passes $914B In Q3.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/8, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) says lenders "delivered a whopping $914.39 billion of single-family home loans into agency mortgage-backed securities during the third quarter of 2020." In the July-September cycle, MBS production from Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and Ginnie Mae "easily surpassed the previous record set in the second quarter of this year." According to IMF, "As of the end of September, the three agencies had issued $2.130 trillion of single-family MBS in 2020, a little more than double their combined volume for the same period last year. Total issuance was slightly higher because the data used in this analysis do not include Ginnie securities backed by FHA reverse mortgages, and loan amounts are rounded." IMF adds that "heavy demand" for refis "remained the biggest driver" in Q3's surge.

Fannie Mae Chief Economist Predicts Unemployment And Home Sales Will Remain Elevated For 2021.

HousingWire (10/8, Falcon, 23K) reports Fannie Mae Chief Economist Doug Duncan on Thursday "offered some forecasts for 2021." At HousingWire Annual, Duncan said, "At the end of 2019, we were at 3.5% unemployment. We think at the end of 2021, it will be roughly double that, around 6%." HousingWire reports, "During the second quarter of 2020, approximately $1.7 trillion in national income was lost. By the time the full data is made available for the third quarter, Duncan estimates that about $1.2 trillion will have been recaptured." Looking ahead, Duncan predicts existing-home sales will "be up a percent or more in 2021." He added, "The new home sales numbers had a big jump in 2020, and [there will be] more growth in 2021, but they're going to have to rebuild that inventory, because anything that the builders are building today gets sold."

CoreLogic: Pandemic Bringing Unique Challenges To Mortgage Industry.

Mortgage Professional America (10/8, Smith) reports that the pandemic will "bring its own set of challenges" to the mortgage industry, according to CoreLogic expert Sapan Bafna. Bafna told MPA, "2008 had its own set of challenges. Different reasons caused the mortgage meltdown back then. We knew back then that data was a big issue, standardization was a big issue, and technology was a big issue. The industry was doing a lot of things manually. We've come a long way since then, but technology needs to be used more proactively and more holistically." According to MPA, "while the industry has rushed to adopt new tech as the COVID-19 pandemic changed the way business was done, Bafna said that an emergency wasn't the ideal time to do so." Bafna said, "When the times are good, those are the best times to change technology and processes because the impact is light. But we always know there will be a cycle every 10 or 12 years."

CoreLogic: Nearly 300K Homes Threatened By Hurricane Delta Storm Surge.

DS News (10/8, Babb) reports that the storm surge of Hurricane Delta threatens "hundreds of thousands of homes." based on "information coming in Wednesday evening from the National Hurricane Center, which projected Category 2 status at landfall, and data from CoreLogic, a property data and analysis firm." According to CoreLogic, approximately 293,685 homes across Louisiana and the Gulf Coast are at risk, with a "reconstruction cost value (RCV) of approximately $62.85 billion are at potential risk from this hurricane. For many, the damage could compound storm-related devastation that not long ago struck the same region." CoreLogic meteorologist Curtis McDonald said, "Residents in these coastal areas are already trying to recover from their losses and are now faced with a second substantial storm. This season has been relentless, and Louisianans should be prepared for the long recovery road ahead."

NMHC: Rent Payments Hit 79% As Of October 6.

Multi-Housing News (10/8, Dutton) reports that as of October 6, more than 79% of the country's renter households made rent payments, according to a "just-released report on rent collections from the National Multifamily Housing Council." The NMHC's report comes "more than a month after the Trump administration announced a nationwide eviction moratorium through the end of the year and just a few days after stimulus relief talks between party leaders in Congress were called off by President Trump, alarming industry groups." The NMHC found "79.4 percent of rental households made full or partial rent payments by Oct. 6, a figure unchanged from the same time period last year and a 3 percent increase from the same time period last month, when 76.4 percent of renters had made payments by Sept. 6."

Natural Disasters Threaten Nearly 1M Miami-Dade Residents With Homelessness.

The Miami Herald (10/8, Rodriguez, Lopez, 1.09M) reports that Miami-Dade is "one storm away from a housing catastrophe." Census Bureau data indicates that "nearly one million people" could become homeless due to natural disasters, and many of those most at risk are "among the poorest of the county's residents." According to the Herald, much of the county's housing stock is not sturdy enough to withstand natural disasters. Around "70.2% of the county's total 1,016,653 single-family homes, condos and townhouses were built prior to 1990, two years before Miami-Dade and Broward adopted a stricter 'High Velocity Hurricane Zone' building code standard after Hurricane Andrew. Bringing all that housing stock up to code would cost billions of dollars."

Opinion: Sustainable Development Necessary To Protect Affordable Housing Along The Coasts.

Writing for The Hill (10/8, 2.98M), MS in Sustainable Business Director David Kelly and University of Miami Assistant Professor Renato Molina argue that coastal communities are "facing an unprecedented challenge" from climate change, and that policymakers "need to acknowledge both the different sources of climate risk, as well as the incentives that different policies create in a market setting." According to the duo, "The bottom line is that a more sustainable path of coastal urban development tackles the key sources behind vulnerability and access to affordable housing."

Markets

10-Year Yield Ticks Down.

MarketWatch (10/9, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.765 percent.

Dollar Slips.

Reuters (10/9, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar drifted toward a small weekly loss on Friday, while the Chinese yuan soared to a 17-month high, as investors wagered on a Joe Biden presidency and on more U.S. stimulus spending." The dollar "eased 0.1% against a basket of currencies and it is down 0.4% for the week." The yen "was a tiny bit higher at 105.87 per dollar on Friday." The euro "was up 0.1% to $1.1773 and sterling crept higher to $1.2951 and has held firm this week as prospects for a Brexit deal have appeared to improve."

Gold Rises 1%.

Reuters (10/9, Soreng) reports, "Gold prices rose 1% on Friday due to a weaker dollar and was headed for a second straight weekly gain, with the metal's appeal as an inflation hedge bolstered by renewed optimism over a new U.S. coronavirus relief package." Spot gold "rose 0.7% to $1,907.16 per ounce by 0631 GMT. It was up 0.4% for the week." Meanwhile, US gold futures "were up 1% at $1,912.40."

Oil Eases.

Reuters (10/9, Sheldrick) reports, "Oil prices eased on Friday, slipping at the end of a week of big gains made on the risk that supplies from Norway could be slashed by up to 25% due to a strike by oilworkers." Brent "was down by 14 cents at $43.20 a barrel by 0740 GMT, having gained more than 3% on Thursday." US West Texas Intermediate crude "dropped 13 cents to $41.06 after also gaining more than 3% on Thursday."

DOJ Announces New Cryptocurrency Enforcement Framework.

The Hill (10/8, 2.98M) reports the Justice Department unveiled its new Cryptocurrency Enforcement Framework on Thursday, "detailing increasing security concerns around the use of virtual currency." The framework, "developed by the attorney general's Cyber Digital Task Force, lays out the threats and enforcement challenges involved with the use of cryptocurrency, along with strategies used by the Justice Department in response."

Bloomberg (10/8, Chen, 4.73M) reports DOJ issued a report Thursday stressing that the "emergence of cryptocurrencies presents opportunities for terrorists, rogue nations and other criminals who present a threat to U.S. national security. ... Law enforcement is hampered by the worldwide reach of digital coins and the lack of consistent regulation across regions, which is 'detrimental to the safety and stability of the international financial system,' the report found."

Law360 (10/8, Subscription Publication, 8K) calls the document "an overview of" DOJ's "cryptocurrency-related enforcement work to date, adding to the growing body of federal guidance on digital currency days after federal money laundering allegations caused a leadership shakeup at the cryptocurrency exchange BitMEX." The report "outlines the threats, tools and challenges involved in cryptocurrency enforcement in order to provide guidance to other federal prosecutors and regulators."

Cybersecurity Experts Warn Of Online Disinformation Attacks On Companies.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports cybersecurity experts are warning of an emerging online threats in which companies may spread false rumors to harm the brands of competitors or negatively impact their stock prices.

GAO Report Faults Administration's 5G Security Efforts.

Law360 (10/8, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports in a report to Congress on Wednesday, the Government Accountability Office said "the Trump administration's strategy for making sure next-generation wireless technology is deployed securely falls short in several critical areas and is therefore likely to be of limited use to federal agency officials and other policymakers as they allocate resources to address 5G risks." The report said "the strategy, which the White House issued this spring, lacks critical details needed to help government decisionmakers assess and address security risks associated with 5G deployment."

Senate Republicans Take Aim At Foreigners Working To Hack US COVID-19 Data.

Law360 (10/8, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) and Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) have introduced legislation "that would let the president sanction and revoke the visas of foreigners aiming to steal American research on vaccines and treatments for COVID-19, as cybersecurity threats during the pandemic have continued to increase." The Senators "said Tuesday that the Defend COVID Research from Hackers Act would give the president more authority to take swift action against those attempting to cause a cyberattack related to virus research."

Putin: US Has Not Responded To Offer To Cooperate On Cybersecurity.

Newsweek (10/8, 1.53M) reports, "Russian president Vladimir Putin has said that his offer to the U.S. to co-operate on cybersecurity remains unanswered and rejected claims of interference in the U.S. election." Speaking on state-backed TV, Putin "also gave an assessment of the U.S. presidential campaign and offered warm words for Joe Biden, although he criticized the tone the Democratic contender took during the first presidential debate with President Donald Trump."

TFI/Sanctions

AP Report: Venezuela's PDVSA Dodging Sanctions Through Asian Asphalt Giant.

The AP (10/8, Goodman) reports, "Back in January, a yearlong campaign of U.S. sanctions was taking its toll at Venezuela's state-run oil company...PDVSA," whose "overseas bank accounts had been frozen or closed, hampering its ability to pay vendors on whom it relies to keep the nation's crude flowing." So PDVSA "leaned on a longtime client from Thailand, Tipco Asphalt, to blunt the impact of the sanctions: in exchange for deep discounts on oil, Tipco would pay PDVSA's obligations and deduct the amounts from what it owed the Venezuelan oil giant, according to records obtained by The Associated Press." There are "dozens of documents obtained by the AP as part of a months-long investigation into how Venezuela is trying to skirt harsh U.S. sanctions that have exacerbated an economic collapse rarely seen outside war zones."

Federal Reserve

Fed Officials Maintain Pressure On Congress For Additional COVID-19 Fiscal Relief.

Bloomberg (10/8, Condon, Saraiva, 4.73M) reports Fed officials "kept up pressure for Washington to renew fiscal support for the virus-ravaged economy even as hopes of a deal between Democrats and Republicans continued to look dim." Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan "said in a Bloomberg Television interview" Thursday that without "additional fiscal relief, the recovery will likely be a lot weaker." Kaplan also "said the Fed likely won't increase large-scale asset purchases right now as it wouldn't do much to help the real economy," adding: "I think the Fed can do more, and I'm sure we'll look at all our options, but those aren't substitutes for fiscal policy." Boston Fed President Eric Rosengren "emphasized in an interview Thursday with Bloomberg News that he would probably favor increasing the Fed's asset purchases, but that the impact of such a move would pale compared to fiscal action." Rosengren said, "There's a limit to how far we can push the 10-year Treasury rate or the mortgage-backed rate down. That's not to say we shouldn't do it. It just says the magnitude of the impact, when rates are already so low, is probably much less than what we want, which is why I think you're hearing Federal Reserve speakers call out for more fiscal policy."

Reuters (10/8, Saphir), CNBC (10/8, Cox, 3.62M), and The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also report.

George: New Inflation Framework Is "Message Of Patience," Rather Than Promise To Engineer Inflation.

Reuters (10/8, Schneider) reports Kansas City Federal Reserve president Esther George "said Thursday" that the Fed's "new framework for managing monetary policy shows a 'tolerance' for higher inflation, but not necessarily a full-blown promise to engineer it." George said, "I interpret the revised consensus statement as a tolerance – and less as a promise to engineer" – higher inflation. George called the Fed's new language "a message of patience" that the Fed won't react too quickly as inflation develops. However, George added, "it is not yet clear how much patience will be required." George said, "It will be difficult to assess the underlying pace of inflation until the dust settles."

Sternberg: Powell Shirking Fed Responsibility As Safeguard Of Fiscal Discipline.

In a column for The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Joseph C. Sternberg says Fed Chair Jerome Powell is straying from the Fed's responsibility to ensure fiscal discipline by advocating for more spending from Congress to support the economy during the pandemic.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC Fines Morgan Stanley $60M For Failed Data-Center Oversight.

Reuters (10/8, Schroeder) reports the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency has fined Morgan Stanley $60 million for failures related to the decommissioning of two of the bank's wealth-management data centers. The OCC "said on Thursday the bank failed to properly monitor an outside vendor as it wound down the centers in 2016, and failed to maintain inventory of customer data." The regulator "said the bank had similar vendor management issues in 2019 when decommissioning other network devices."

American Banker (10/8, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that in July, Morgan Stanley began notifying some customers that their personal data may have been compromised, and shortly thereafter, the bank was hit with a pair of class action lawsuits over the potential data breach. In a statement, a Morgan Stanley spokesperson said the bank has "continuously monitored the situation and we do not believe that any of our clients' information has been accessed or misused. Moreover, we have instituted enhanced security procedures, including continuous fraud monitoring, and will continue to strengthen the controls that we have in place to protect our clients' information."

Regulators Finalize Changes To Community Bank Leverage Ratio.

The ABA Banking Journal (10/8) reports the OCC, the Fed, and the FDIC "have adopted a final rule that codifies temporary changes to changes to the community bank leverage ratio and addresses the transition process for banks using the CBLR framework." The changes were previously introduced in two interim final rules in April. Under the final rule, the CBLR "will remain at 8% through the end of 2020" and increase to 8.5% in 2021. Community banks with "a leverage ratio of 8% or greater and meet certain other criteria may elect to use the CBLR framework," but have until January 1, 2022 "before the leverage ratio requirement to use the CBLR framework will return to 9%."

Second Trump Term Would Give OCC More Leeway With Fintech, Payments Charters.

Reuters (10/8, Schroeder) reports that if President Trump is reelected in November, his Administration's "four-year deregulatory streak" that "has delivered at least $40 billion in gains to banks and other financial firms" would continue. A second term "would give Trump officials more leeway" to further explore innovation in financial services. Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks "has strongly advocated that fintech firms should be allowed to apply for federal banking charters that would give them more freedom to expand across the country." Reuters says, "While that idea has been legally challenged by state regulators, a second Trump term would give the OCC more runway to get its idea off the ground." In addition, lobbyists "expect Wall Street banks to win more capital relief if Trump is reelected, particularly with respect to the 'G-SIB surcharge,' an extra capital buffer required of big globally systemically important banks which have been fighting the measure."

OCC Looks To Streamline Banking With Payments Charter. Bank Innovation (10/8, Morgan) reports behind a paywall that the OCC is pushing ahead with its plan to issue federal banking charters to fintechs. The House Financial Committee's Fintech Task Force "met last week to discuss the OCC's proposed payments charter, a pared-down version of the OCC's fintech charter blocked by the Southern District of New York..."

Critics Say OCC Needs To Clarify "True Lender" Proposal.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/8, Berard, 895K) reports "concerns are being raised" that the OCC's "true lender" proposal "could make high-cost lending legal everywhere." The rule, the OCC "says, will clear up uncertainty that can discourage banks from entering partnerships and chill innovation." According to the article, "One consensus is that the OCC has not provided enough guidance on plans to introduce the regulation. The Georgia Bankers Association also believes the regulator hasn't done enough to explain to lenders that its proposal isn't an opportunity to try to circumvent consumer protections that have been in place for years."

BofA Enters Small-Dollar Lending Business.

Reuters (10/8, Moise) reports Bank of America on Thursday "said...it was launching a new low-cost loan product for checking customers who may be pressed for cash." The Balance Assist program, which debuts in January 2021, "allows clients to borrow up to $500 for a flat $5 fee, and repay the amount over a three-month period." To qualify, customers must have had a checking account with the bank for at least a year leading up to the application. The debut comes following a push by US regulators earlier this year urging bank to consider offering short-term, small loans to struggling businesses and individuals during the pandemic.

Bloomberg (10/8, Surane, 4.73M) reports the OCC, the Fed, and the FDIC in May "released guidance to further encourage lenders to engage in small-dollar lending." In the notice, the regulators "said the structure of the loans should make it so a borrower is able to successfully repay the loan in a 'reasonable time frame rather than reborrowing, rollovers, or immediate collectability in the event of default.'"

Big Banks' Vows To Stop Arctic Oil Financing Draw Criticism.

The Wall Street Journal (10/8, McCaffrey, Matthews, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports big banks' efforts to halt financing Arctic oil drilling projects are encountering resistance from Washington, DC lobbyists. Sen. Dan Sullivan (D-AK) and other Republican lawmakers from energy-producing states have lobbied the Trump Administration to investigate whether the federal government can stop banks from withholding loans for oil drilling projects, or penalize them for doing so. In July, Acting Comptroller of the Currency Brian Brooks said the agency would examine whether the curtailing of Arctic oil lending violates a federal law that requires fair access to financial services. OCC spokesperson Bryan Hubbard told the Journal the agency is still gathering information from banks.

Crypto Firms Hire Big Bank Pros For Top Legal Posts.

Law360 (10/8, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall, "A trio of cryptocurrency companies have added top legal and compliance professionals with big bank and BigLaw experience to their rosters, including one addition announced Thursday," amid ongoing efforts from the OCC "to bring the asset class further into the mainstream."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Trouble In The South Caucasus Extends Far Beyond One Small Enclave." The New York Times (10/8, 18.61M) says that, "once again, the bitterly contested claims to the mountainous region of Nagorno-Karabakh in the South Caucasus have erupted into violence" between Azerbaijan and Armenia. In the past, the US, Russia, and France "have managed to restore calm, though never establish a permanent peace," but this time "a dangerous new element has to be confronted. That is Turkey." The Times says that the Trump Administration "is not one likely to care about the fighting, even if it were not deeply embroiled in the pandemic and the election campaign," and "France alone can do little." However, "doing nothing is not an option for dealing with a wildfire that, left unchecked, can rapidly spread," so whether Russia President Vladimir Putin "likes it or not, he has the greatest responsibility and the most effective levers to restrain his former empire-mates and dissuade" President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan "from a dangerous adventure."

Washington Post.

"A Dissident Jailed in Vietnam Shares Her Message: Don't Fee Me, Free My Country." The Washington Post (10/8, 14.2M) says the arrest of Vietnamese democracy activist Pham Doan Trang "is the latest and one of the most flagrant in Vietnam's long practice of squelching freedom of expression and political dissent, including arrests of bloggers and independent journalists." The "repression appears to be intensifying ahead of a Congress of the Communist Party of Vietnam, held every five years, expected in January." Her arrest "came just hours after the United States and Vietnam had finished the 24th Annual US-Vietnam Human Rights Dialogue." The Post says, "That Vietnam would seize its best-known democracy activist on the heels of the meeting says much about the diminished standing of the United States in the world under President Trump, who has repeatedly ignored human rights abuses while cozying up to the world's despots." The Post concludes by calling Trang "a selfless and courageous champion of democracy."

"Reelect Sen. Mark Warner." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/8, 14.2M) backs Sen. Mark Warner (D-VA) for a third term, writing that he "has staked a legitimate claim as one of the more effective, constructive and genuinely bipartisan lawmakers in Congress." GOP rival Daniel Gade "is a decent man who has run a civil campaign. That's to his credit, but it is no reason to unseat Mr. Warner, who is a credit to Virginia."

"Every Republican Running For Office Should Be Asked About The Question Pence Dodged." The Washington Post (10/8, 14.2M) says that a question Vice President Pence "dodged at the end of the [vice-presidential] debate goes beyond consequential." Asked what he would do if President Trump "refused to accept a peaceful transfer of power" should the GOP ticket lose, Pence "responded by attacking Democrats. ... Rather than assure Americans that their vice president's first loyalty is to the republic, Mr. Pence inflamed fears that he and Mr. Trump would conjure outlandish excuses for a loss...and encourage their supporters to deny the election's legitimacy."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Judiciary Grabs The Census." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says progressives are trying to take control of congressional reapportionment by using a ruling by Chief Justice Roberts that blocked a question on citizenship on the Census to upend administrative law. The Journal advises Roberts to rein in the ramifications of his decision.

"The Plot Against Gretchen Whitmer." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that federal agencies quickly moved against the plotters against Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer (D), and that Whitmer owes a debt of gratitude to the Justice Department and the FBI.

"A Jewish Revolt Against Lockdowns." The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) and Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) have displayed a double standard in singling out religious organizations, specifically the Orthodox Jewish community, in new coronavirus lockdown restrictions after dismissing the safety threat posed by Black Lives Matter protests.

"Who Needs Debate Moderators?" The Wall Street Journal (10/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that future debates should eliminate moderators entirely, and let the candidates speak for two minutes at a time in any way they see fit.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Let's kick things off with last night's vice-presidential debate. The first and only debate between the two people who will take over if the President falls in the shower."

Trevor Noah: "It was a weird situation from the start, because there is a real chance that Pence could have COVID 19, even though he's tested negative, and that fear wasn't helped when Pence's eye threw a gender reveal party."

Trevor Noah: "But once you got past the plague thing, the debate was normal. Two calm, poised candidates exchanging lines they have been practicing for weeks over the course of a largely uneventful 90 minutes. It felt like a throwback to what campaigns used to be like before Donald Trump arrived on the scene and turned every political event into a monster truck rally on cocaine."

Trevor Noah: "Remember, in the last debate, Trump would not shut up for a second, and Pence doesn't have it in him to be that obnoxiously rude, but he did take one important lesson from Trump's performance. ... Honestly, this shows you that Trump is a bad influence on innocent little Mike Pence. Four years ago, Pence would never have dreamed of being a rule breaker, but look at him now! Pence spends four more years with Trump, by the next term, he will be polyamorous with Mother and some dude he met in a biker gang."

Trevor Noah: "At some points, I'm not sure why debates have moderators. What is their job? It's not cutting off the candidates or holding them accountable for what they say. Anybody can say anything they want in these debates, and nobody is calling them out for it. I really don't get why you can't fact-check the candidates when they lie. In fact, most of the lies you can pre-fact-check because these people use the same lies over and over again. You don't even have to wait for them to say it."

Trevor Noah: "Last night, it seemed both candidates made the choice to dodge any questions that they didn't feel like answering. ... It's wild you can just refuse to answer a question while you're applying for the second-most important job in the country. There's not a single other job that would let you do that."

Trevor Noah: "Now, it could be unfair to say that no part of last night was worth watching because for a couple of minutes, specifically two minutes and nine seconds, the debate got amazing. ... I was not surprised to see a fly on Mike Pence's hair. The fly probably thought he was a dead body."

Trevor Noah: "And look, flies land on people all the time, nothing crazy about that. What was crazy is how long it sat there for. Even Trump was watching at home like, 'Wow, two minutes with Mike Pence. I could never do that.'"

Trevor Noah: "But if you think you found it frustrating as a viewer, that's nothing compared to how frustrated Kamala Harris was, and you could tell because, from the minute the evening started, Kamala was throwing out 'are you kidding me' facial expressions faster than the internet could meme them."

Trevor Noah: [On Fox News anchors criticizing Kamala Harris for her expressions during the debate] "I hate to admit it, but these guys on Fox News are right. Kamala Harris shouldn't be making expressions with her face during a debate. She should be more like Mike Pence, keep a stone-cold serial killer stare and express all your emotion through your one bloody eye."

Trevor Noah: "Because, to me, these criticisms always reveal so much about men who are uncomfortable with a woman in power, you know. They're like, 'Her demeanor was so unlikable. What is she going to do next, tell me I'm a disappointment to her and my stepfather for coming home from the sleepover early because I wet the bed?'"

Stephen Colbert: "The coronavirus pandemic continues to rage in America's hot zone: 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. And reports say the West Wing has turned into a ghost town. Previously, the only ghost haunting the mansion was Mike Pence. He's at least a zombie. Why else is he attracting all those flies?"

Stephen Colbert: "With COVID running rampant throughout the executive branch, this morning the Commission on Presidential Debates announced that the second presidential debate will be virtual. Virtual? How's that gonna work? Hopefully it will be like 'Tron.' So instead of discussing the economy, they'll race around on recumbent light-cycles."

Stephen Colbert: "The decision didn't sit well with Trump's campaign manager, Bill Stepien – who, by the way, also has COVID. He claimed the new format is unnecessary because Trump 'will have posted multiple negative tests prior to the debate.' That's not how that works. You can't put all your faith in something that could happen down the line when the potential consequence is death. That's like saying, 'Look, I know your parachute isn't working now, but I have confidence that we'll get it up and running before we reach terminal velocity. Now hand me that Scotch tape.'"

Stephen Colbert: [On Trump's phone call into Fox News] "So, these drugs are great, but he doesn't need them, but they cured him right away, but he's going to fast-track them, but he would have been fine without them, but he's not taking them. Why is it that he took the experimental drug, and we're the ones experiencing dizziness, confusion, and nausea?"

Stephen Colbert: "You know how the world is insane right now, and every day, you think, 'That's got to be it. Things can't possibly get more insane'? Well, today, get ready for more. Because the FBI says it thwarted a plot to violently overthrow the government and kidnap Michigan governor Gretchen Whitmer. What? Also, whaaa?! Is this real life, or are we trapped in a new season of '24'? I was just getting used to being trapped in a crossover episode of 'The West Wing' and 'The Walking Dead'!"

Stephen Colbert: "So, who were these numbskulls? Well, the Michigan attorney general identified the group as the 'Wolverine Watchmen.' So, to clarify, this anti-COVID-rules militia named themselves after a guy who famously can't get sick and people who famously wear masks."

Stephen Colbert: "Apparently, these guys were angry about Governor Whitmer's state-wide coronavirus lockdown. And the FBI were tipped off to their plans when one of the dummies posted a Facebook video in which he complained about COVID-19 restrictions on gyms operating in Michigan. So, the whole revolution could've been avoided if he had just sprung for a Peloton? That is the lamest reason to overthrow the government. ... Well, at least now they can all concentrate on getting ripped in jail. Between the daily hour in the yard and a steady diet of potatoes and expired taco meat, they'll get jacked. "

Stephen Colbert: "The group met numerous times to make their plans, including in the basement of a shop in Michigan that was accessible only through a trapdoor under a rug. Ooh, a trapdoor hideaway? What's the matter, did the rope ladder break to Timmy's tree house?"

Stephen Colbert: "I just want to remind everybody in a militia: You're not in a militia. You're a bunch of buddies getting together with guns. If I play a game of catch in the front yard, I haven't been signed by the Yankees."

Stephen Colbert: "But hey, just because they're violent domestic terrorists doesn't mean they don't know how to have a good time. According to the undercover agent, at one point one of the militia said, 'Oh, no, we're not kidnapping, that's not what we're doing,' which sparked general laughter. Amidst the laughter, another voice said, 'We're adult-napping.' Oh, I love a good homegrown terrorist joke. My favorite is, 'Knock, knock. Who's there? It's the FBI – you're all going to jail.'"

Jimmy Fallon: [On the next presidential debate possibly being virtual] "A virtual debate with two guys in their seventies and a moderator in his sixties? I'm sure that'll run real smooth. And to make it even more annoying, they're going to have Trump and Biden chomp on baby carrots while they talk."

Jimmy Fallon: "A virtual debate with Trump? Come on. How great would that be? It's like, 'Melania, what's the WiFi password?' '1,2,3,4. Same as nuke codes.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump says he won't waste time [on the virtual debate], and then he went back to chatting on Fox Business for 55 minutes."

Jimmy Fallon: [On Trump saying he's now immune to COVID] "Minor detail, there's no such thing as being immune to COVID. After he said that, Dr. Fauci poured himself a big antibody cocktail, minus the antibody."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, guys, last night was of course the big vice-presidential debate between Mike Pence and Kamala Harris, and everyone's still talking about it because a fly actually landed on Pence's head. ... At that point, every American was like, 'Is that on him or on my TV?"

Jimmy Fallon: "Pence had a rough night. As if the fly wasn't bad enough, people also noticed there was something going on with his eyeball. ... He's the head of the coronavirus task force. Not really a great look when you're covered in bugs and bleeding out of your eye."

Jimmy Fallon: "Last night's debate was an epic battle between side eye and red eye."

Jimmy Fallon: "It's a tough break for Pence. It's hard to shake the reputation of being robotic when you show up looking like the Terminator."

Jimmy Fallon: "Also, can you believe Kamala Harris had to stare at that for 90 minutes? As if she wasn't under enough pressure, she had to debate the Bond villain with the leaky eye."

Seth Meyers: "During last night's debate, Vice President Mike Pence frequently tried to interrupt Senator Kamala Harris. Said the moderator, 'Mr. Vice President, if it helps, just think of it as carrying her sentence to full term.'"

Seth Meyers: "After last night's debate, second lady Karen Pence did not wear a mask on stage when she greeted Vice President Mike Pence. Huh, usually when a Karen refuses to wear a mask, it's at Trader Joe's."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump released a video yesterday from outside the White House and started out saying, quote, 'Hi, perhaps you recognize me, it's your favorite President.' Said viewers, 'Oh my God, Barack, what happened?'"

James Corden: "If you didn't watch the debate last night, there was a breakthrough viral moment that everybody was talking about. At one point, a fly landed on Mike Pence's head and stayed there for two whole minutes. ... That fly was on Pence's head for longer than Trump was in the hospital."

James Corden: "Also during the debate last night, a lot of people noticed that there was something going on with Mike Pence's eye. This is what happens when you go 18 years without blinking."

James Corden: "Some people have speculated that this was a symptom of COVID, but I don't know. I'm not sure at all. Maybe there is a sty in the eye of the guy with the fly."

James Corden: "In other debate news, it was announced today that for safety reasons, next week's scheduled presidential debate would be virtual. But President Trump didn't like that idea, so he is skipping the debate altogether, and says he is holding a rally instead. Yeah, a rally. That would be a good idea. It's Trump's fault we all have to do 15 Zoom meetings a day. He should be forced to go to at least one, shouldn't he?"

James Corden: "This afternoon, the President tweeted out yet another video, and this time it was addressed to 'my favorite people in the world,' so this video is either for white supremacists or hostesses at the Cheesecake Factory."

Treasury in the News

Senate GOP Unveils New Narrower Virus Relief Bill.

Politico (9/8, Levine, Bresnahan, 4.29M) reports Senate Republicans "introduced their new coronavirus relief bill Tuesday and are eyeing a vote later this week, after weeks of stalled negotiations between the White House and Democratic leaders over an aid package." Politico says "the new, more narrow GOP proposal will provide $300 in increased weekly federal unemployment benefits through Dec. 27, additional money for the Paycheck Protection Program and liability protections for schools and businesses as they try to reopen, a top priority" for Senate Majority Leader McConnell. Politico notes the Senate "also needs to fund the government past September 30" following the "tentative agreement" struck last week by Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi "to use a short-term spending bill to avoid a government shutdown." Senate Appropriations Chair Richard Shelby "said Tuesday he also spoke to Mnuchin for 30 minutes about a 'clean' short-term funding bill which could fund the government until December."

Regarding the relief bill, The New York (NY) Times (9/8, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports, "While House Democrats approved a $3.4 trillion measure in May, Ms. Pelosi in recent days has told Steven Mnuchin, the Treasury secretary, that Democrats would be willing to accept a package of $2.2 trillion." The Times says Mnuchin, "for his part, has signaled that the administration may be willing to accept up to a $1.5 trillion package."

The Hill (9/8, Carney, 2.98M) reports Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) said he hopes the GOP bill is something "53 Republican senators vote yes on," and added that Mnuchin had "accommodated" a number of his concerns on the initial bill.

Commentary: Mnuchin Unfamiliar With Crucial Family Nutrition Program. In an op-ed for The Hill (9/8, 2.98M), Public Health Solutions President Lisa David writes, "Free and reduced-priced school meals are critical for students' health, especially low-income students, and that consideration has influenced the debate over reopening schools during the pandemic." David argues, "Investing in food access through the WIC (Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women Infant and Children) program for expecting mothers and young children will pay dividends in American health for a long time." David says Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "is reportedly completely unfamiliar with WIC, which speaks volumes to how much the Trump administration cares about low-income women." David concludes that Congress "must move quickly to pass the new relief package. The healthy development of our youngest generation depends on it."

WPost Opposes GOP Plan, Urges Democrats To Drop $600 Weekly Jobless Supplement. The Washington Post (9/8, 14.2M) editorializes that "last Friday's unexpectedly strong [jobs] report from the Labor Department...was no cause for complacency, of the kind implied by" NEC Director Kudlow's "breezy remark that the economy could 'live with' a failure by Congress to strike a deal, because it is 'on a self-sustaining recovery path.'" The Post says Mnuchin and Pelosi "have let it be known they favor rapid passage of a temporary bill that would keep federal workers paid and operations going at least through the election," but "an impasse continues" in negotiations on a new virus relief bill. Given the country's "actual needs, though, the right thing to do – a sizeable package including aid to small businesses, unemployment insurance, nutrition assistance and election funding – is also the expedient thing to do for both Democrats and Republicans. That is what has apparently happened between Ms. Pelosi and Mr. Mnuchin on the need to keep the government funded."

Treasury Imposes Sanctions On Lebanese Politicians Linked To Hezbollah.

The AP (9/8, Mroue, Fox) reports on Tuesday, the Treasury Department "sanctioned two former Lebanese Cabinet ministers who are allied with militant Hezbollah in a rare move against politicians close to the Iran-backed group." The sanctioned officials are former finance minister Ali Hassan Khalil and former public works and transportation minister Youssef Fenianos, who the US alleges "provided material support to Hezbollah and engaged in corruption." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said in a statement, "Corruption has run rampant in Lebanon, and Hezbollah has exploited the political system to spread its malign influence. The United States stands with the people of Lebanon in their calls for reform and will continue to use its authorities to target those who oppress and exploit them."

Reuters (9/8, Pamuk, Psaledakis), The Hill (9/8, Kelly, 2.98M), and the Financial Times (9/8, Cornish, Manson, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), among other outlets, also report.

Legislators Urge That Federal Workers Not Be Forced To Participate In Payroll Tax Deferral.

The Washington Post (9/8, Romm, 14.2M) reports that in a "bipartisan rebuke" to President Trump, "roughly two dozen lawmakers" sent "a sharply critical letter" to the Treasury Department and the Office of Management and Budget on Tuesday urging the Administration not to implement a mandatory payroll tax deferral for millions of federal employees. The lawmakers argued that individuals should instead be allowed to choose whether to participate.

The Hill (9/8, Jagoda, 2.98M) reports that, "in a letter sent Tuesday to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Director Russell Vought," the group of over 20 senators wrote, "Federal workers and service members should not be used as pawns for a payroll tax scheme that many private sector employers are unlikely to join and where key questions remain unanswered."

Singletary: Trump's Payroll Tax Deferral Is Really A Loan. In a column for The Washington \(DC\) Post (9/8, Singletary, 14.2M), Michelle Singletary says President Trump "brags about his payroll tax cut. But money-smart employees see it for what it is: a loan." Singletary says Trump, amid the partisan gridlock in Congress over a new virus relief bill, "decided that what workers need most is a break from paying the payroll tax that funds Social Security" and thus on Aug. 8 "issued a memo directing Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to allow employers to temporarily suspend the collection of payroll taxes for any employee whose pretax wages or compensation during a biweekly pay period is less than $4,000." Singletary argues the deferral "is all about the optics of appearing to provide meaningful pandemic-related financial assistance."

Democrats Skeptical Of Trump Allies Sitting On Postal Service Board.

The New York Times (9/8, Broadwater, Fuchs, Vogel, 18.61M) reports, "A powerful but little-known group of Republican donors installed by President Trump to oversee the United States Postal Service has helped raise more than $3 million to support him and hundreds of millions more for his party over the past decade, prompting concerns about partisan bias at the agency before the November election." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "helped vet prospective nominees to the board for Mr. Trump, recommending candidates who would carry out changes that the administration sought" at the USPS. The Times says Mnuchin's "recommendation" of Republican governor John M. Barger "was seen as helpful, because while he had donated more than $90,000 to Republicans since 2010, he had never given to Mr. Trump."

Trump Touts Environmental Record In Florida, Extends Offshore Drilling Ban.

The President's trip to Jupiter, Florida generated extensive, and largely favorable media coverage. WINK-TV Fort Myers, FL (9/8, 28K) reported that Trump "signed an executive order extending the moratorium on banning offshore drilling on Florida's coastlines for another 10 years," a move he "believes... will help create jobs while protecting the environment and keeping oil prices low." The President also "praised his Administration's efforts surrounding Everglades restoration, such as giving money to repair the Herbert Hoover Dike and funding for the EAA Reservoir to help out with discharges with from Lake Okeechobee." Trump was shown saying, "Environmental protection is a sacred obligation and so it is our duty to fight for the dreams and livelihoods of the citizens we serve. We'll always defend the Everglades and we will always safeguard the magnificent Florida coastline." WCTV-TV Tallahassee, FL (9/8, 19K) showed the President saying, "I want to thank you all for being here. My Administration is proving every day that we can improve our environment while creating millions of high paying jobs."

WOFL-TV Orlando, FL (9/8, 26K) called the visit "an important campaign stop for... Trump, who's trying to convince voters that he not only cares about the environment, but has signed legislation to prove it. The focus of his visit was discussing the Great American Outdoors Act, which provides be funding to national parks, forests, wildlife refuges and recreation areas. In Florida, that would include a boost for the everglades. ... The Act, which he signed into law August 4, will protect America's natural environments and funding of countless environmental restoration projects."

The South Florida Sun Sentinel (9/8, Man, 545K) quotes Trump as saying, "My administration is proving every day that we can improve our environment while creating millions of high paying jobs." The President also "claimed Democrats would use the environment as an excuse to pursue a socialist agenda." WSVN-TV Miami-Dade, FL (9/8, 48K) reported, "You have to look at this appearance in the context of the ongoing election, and, of course, we know that Florida, based on several polls, is certainly up for grabs. But now, the President said that he is signing the executive order that would expand the moratorium on offshore drilling, not only to the Gulf of Mexico on the west side Florida but also on the Atlantic side – Florida, Georgia and South Carolina." Trump was shown saying, "I will sign a presidential order extending the moratorium on offshore drilling on Florida's Gulf Coast and expanding it to Florida's Atlantic coast as well as the coasts of Georgia and South Carolina. The approach of Joe Biden and the radical left is exactly the opposite. Their policies will destroy jobs, cause energy prices to double and triple and quadruple, to skyrocket beyond belief and the environment will be badly hurt, if you go by that, badly, badly hurt. It will be injured and permanently injured."

The Palm Beach Post (9/8, Rhodes, 223K) reports "the [drilling moratorium] announcement followed Trump's touting of other achievements, including $500 million in funding for improvements to the Herbert Hoover Dike ringing Lake Okeechobee." Trump also "said his administration had procured $100 million to fight red tide and toxic algae," and "what he said was a 55% increase in funding for Everglades restoration efforts." Said Trump, "It's been a really amazing thing for Florida from an environmental standpoint. ... As president I will defend our environment, I'll defend our workers and our cherished way of life."

Florida Politics (9/8, Downey) recounts, meanwhile, that Trump "called himself the top President on the environment since Teddy Roosevelt, who established the United States Forest Service in 1905." Referring to himself "in the third person," Trump declared, "Trump is the great environmentalist," while Democrats "talk a big game, and they do nothing." Added Trump, "To our political opponents, environmental policy is just an excuse to impose a socialist platform that will impose trillions and trillions of dollars in taxes and send our jobs overseas, making it impossible to open up new companies and to live less expensively."

The Charleston (SC) Post and Courier (9/8, Johnson, 290K) reports that "in South Carolina, 56 percent of the state opposes offshore drilling, according to a 2019 Winthrop University poll. Much of that opposition is focused at the coast, where businesses depend on natural beauty to bring tourists, and the memory of the 2010 Deepwater Horizon oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico looms large."

In a Florida Politics (9/8) op-ed titled "Donald Trump Is A Champion For Florida's Environment," state Rep. Toby Overdorf (R) declares that "Trump is dedicated to protecting America's pristine natural environments, and has funded countless restoration projects." The President "is an advocate for America's unique and pristine ecosystems," and "has delivered infrastructure upgrades and investments for numerous environmental restoration projects throughout the country, and his 2021 budget proposes $250 million in annual funding to construct new Everglades infrastructure as part of the South Florida Ecosystem Restoration. Let me repeat, $250 million in annual Everglades restoration funding."

Politico (9/8, Lefebvre, 4.29M) calls the offshore drilling ban "an election-year victory for drilling opponents in the crucial presidential swing state, where fear of oil slicks fouling the beaches has run high for decades among people in both political parties." Politico goes on to report that "half a dozen industry officials and lobbyists who had been working on the offshore exploration issue with the Interior Department...told Politico the administration never mentioned extending the moratorium. 'It's a complete ambush,' said one industry official who had been abreast of Interior's plans. 'Nobody knows where this came from. It totally seems like a campaign sort of thing.'" In fact, says The Hill (9/8, Frazin, 2.98M), "the announcement...received some pushback from the offshore energy industry." National Ocean Industries Association President Erik Milito, "Our preference should always be to produce homegrown American energy, instead of deferring future production to countries like Russia and Iran, which do not share American values."

Bloomberg (9/8, Dlouhy, Jacobs, 4.73M) reports "Trump's offshore drilling move drew an immediate condemnation from conservationists as well as Biden," who said on Twitter, "Just months ago, Donald Trump was planning to allow oil and gas drilling off the coast of Florida. Now, with 56 days until the election, he conveniently says that he changed his mind. Unbelievable. You don't have to guess where I stand: I oppose new offshore drilling." USA Today (9/8, Jackson, Subramanian, 10.31M) recounts that "in a statement on Trump's visit to Florida," Biden also "assailed Trump's over environmental record by noting that he has opened up thousands of acres of lands to new oil and gas drilling." Said Biden, "Trump has called the climate crisis a 'hoax' ... He has eliminated rules designed to keep our air and water clean."

Newsweek (9/8, Crisp, 1.53M) reports "Trump said he initially wasn't interested in extending the moratorium, but was heavily lobbied by the states' governors and Congressional delegations, who told him it would bolster his environmental record." Said the President, "We can create jobs, safeguard the environment and keep energy prices low."

Other national news outlets cast Trump's announcement as a reversal. Reuters (9/8, Mason) reports "the Trump administration has spent much of its first term working to expand US oil and gas drilling and roll back Obama-era rules on pollution from fossil fuels," and the AP (9/8) that the move "could open the president up to charges of an election-year flip-flop given that he acted in January 2018 to vastly expand offshore drilling from the Atlantic to the Arctic oceans."

CNN (9/8, Klein, 83.16M) similarly reports on its website that "the Trump administration has also taken detailed steps to slash environmental regulations over the last three and a half years. Those changes include pulling out of the landmark Paris climate accords, rolling back regulations on carbon emission standards for coal-fired power plants, the largest reduction in the boundaries of protected land in US history, and changes to Clean Water Act and Endangered Species Act protections."

To the New York Times (9/8, Karni, Friedman, 18.61M), meanwhile, "there are few other policy arenas where a rewrite of the past three and a half years could be so jarring. Mr. Trump's portrayal of his administration's response to the coronavirus pandemic has often strained credulity. His claims of a legislative record second to no other president have raised eyebrows. He has repeatedly made the unbelievable assertion that he has done more for Black Americans than any president, except perhaps Abraham Lincoln." However, "the environment is in a category of its own, because in claiming the mantle of environmentalism, Mr. Trump is in fact repudiating one of his administration's undeniable policy accomplishments: the stunning rollback in less than four years of environmental regulations that go back decades."

NBC News/Marist Poll: Florida Race Tied At 48%; Trump Leading Among Latinos. The Sarasota Herald-Tribune (9/8, Anderson, 182K) reports "a NBC News/Marist survey released Tuesday has the race tied in Florida, with...Trump and...Biden each attracting support from 48% of likely voters." The Herald-Tribune adds that "after trailing Biden in every publicly released Florida poll since March, Trump has been either tied or leading Biden in the last two surveys.” And “in addition to showing a trend in the president’s direction, the latest poll had Trump winning the Hispanic vote in Florida after losing it by a 27-point margin in 2016.” The Washington Post (9/8, Sonmez, Itkowitz, Wagner, 14.2M) also points out “the poll finds Trump with a narrow lead among Latino voters, 50 percent to 46 percent. In 2016, Clinton outpaced Trump among Latinos, 62 percent to 35 percent.”

The CBS Evening News (9/8, story 6, 1:40, Weijia Jiang, 3.99M) mentioned “a new [Florida] poll [that] shows he and Biden are deadlocked in the crucial state.” Politico (9/8, Choi, 4.29M) reports that “responses on Trump’s performance as president were also tightly split in the NBC News/Marist poll, with 47 percent of likely voters approving of his presidency and 48 percent disapproving.” Politico also points out that the poll “found that voters were likely to stick with their choices, with 82 percent of likely voters saying they’d strongly support whoever their current candidate is now. Only 2 percent said they might vote differently come Election Day.” The New York Post (9/8, Nelson, 4.57M), among other news outlets, also covers the poll.

Poll Shows Tighter Race In Miami-Dade, With Trump Slightly Up Among Latinos. Under the headline “Biden Is Struggling To Win Miami Latinos, New Poll Finds. Will It Cost Him Florida?” the Miami Herald (9/8, Smiley, 1.09M) reports, “Four years after getting trounced in Miami-Dade County by Hillary Clinton,” Trump “has increased his odds of victory in his must-win home state on Nov. 3 by improving his standing in Florida’s most populous county, according to a poll by Bendixen & Amandi International and the Miami Herald.” The poll “found Trump far behind...38% to 55% in Miami-Dade,” but “Trump doesn’t need to win Miami-Dade. He just needs to do better in the Democratic-leaning county to offset possible losses in other parts of Florida. ... In 2016, he lost Miami-Dade to Hillary Clinton by 30 points...but won the state by 1.2% of the total vote.” The poll “found the former vice president splitting Hispanic voters with Trump, with Trump at 47% and Biden at 46%.”

The Hill (9/8, Greenwood, 2.98M) also reports “there’s little doubt that Biden will win Miami-Dade in the November election,” but “Trump doesn’t need to win Miami-Dade in November to capture Florida’s 29 electoral votes, and if he’s successful at narrowing Biden’s margin of victory there, it could help him make up for possible deficits in other parts of the state, such as in the swing counties along the I-4 corridor in Central Florida.”

Politico (9/8, Caputo, 4.29M) reports “Trump’s campaign and Republicans are making inroads in Miami-Dade County, the state’s most populous, forcing the Biden campaign to scramble in response to the threat to the wellspring of Democratic votes.” Politico adds that Miami state Sen. Annette Taddeo (D) “said the raft of polling and the late-breaking response to Trump’s threat in Florida has the party taking the matter seriously after months of discarding warnings.” Said Taddeo, “Some of us have been warning about this, but it was kill the messenger. ... And now they’re like ‘ahhhhh! What do we do?’”

Townhall (9/8, O’Brien, 177K) quotes Fernand Amandi, “the Miami-based pollster and Democratic strategist behind the poll,” as saying, “If you’re the Biden campaign, looking at these numbers, I think there’s reason for pause. ... If Biden under-performs in what should be one of his strongest counties – and is certainly the largest county for Democratic votes in the state of Florida – it might imperil his chances of winning Florida unless there is a massive white voter exodus from Trump in other parts of the state.”

Noting Polls Had Him Down In 2016, Trump Says He Is Not Concerned About Florida. Trump was asked in an interview with WPEC-TV West Palm Beach, FL (9/8, 31K) about an NBC News poll showing him and Joe Biden running “neck and neck” in Florida and whether he is concerned about losing the state. Trump said, “No. As a Republican, to be tied is good. I won it last time when Hillary...was a much more capable candidate than Biden. This year, I think we are going to do very well. I think I was seven points down to Hillary last time in Florida, right at the beginning and right at the end, towards the end, and ended up winning it fairly easily.”

“Trumpzilla II” Reaches Jupiter. The Palm Beach Post (9/8, Keller, 223K) reports, “The circus arrived in Jupiter on Monday. Not under the Big Top, but on water and in the air, as supporters of...Trump’s reelection bid held a boisterous procession in watercraft that ranged from a jet ski to yachts and party boats rented for the event.” The Post adds that “first, four parachutists dropped from the sky, unfurling ‘Trump 2020’ and American flags. Choppers flew noisily overhead, with one toting a US flag. Two drones hovered above the scene.” The Post continues, “The boating extravaganza was similar to the first ‘Trumpzilla’ that came together May 3 at the same location.”

Trump Slams Biden-Harris Ticket, Calls On North Carolina To Fully Reopen Economy.

The President’s campaign stop in Winston-Salem, North Carolina received largely positive local news coverage, with reports highlighting the crowd’s fervor and its favorable response to his calls for the state’s economy to reopen fully. The Winston-Salem Journal (9/8, Young, 168K) reports, for example, that “Trump garnered a big cheer from the crowd at Z. Smith Reynolds Airport when he said the state should fully reopen its economy, and said states that are keeping in place economic restrictions are ‘doing it for political reasons.’” The Charlotte Observer (9/8, Morrill, 470K) recounts the President also said, “I’m running for reelection to keep jobs at home, to put violent criminals behind bars and to ensure the future belongs...to America and not to China or other countries. ... If Biden wins, China wins,” because “Joe Biden’s agenda is made in China. My agenda is made in the USA.” Added Trump, “Biden’s plan is to appease the domestic terrorists, my plan is to arrest them. ... These are Biden supporters, and if he wins they’ll be in charge of your government.”

On its website, WXII-TV Winston-Salem, NC (9/8, 109K) points out it was Trump’s “third visit to North Carolina in just as many weeks – just as the absentee voting by mail started.” While “the GOP has historically done well in North Carolina mail voting...this year the people asking for the ballots are not generally Republicans.” Democrats “requested more than 358,000 ballots, and independents more than 215,000, while only about 112,200 were sought by Republicans.”

WRAX-TV Raleigh, NC (9/8, 47K) reports Trump “spoke for nearly an hour...revving up a crowd that came from all across the state and the country." Trump "spent much of the hour touting the economy, saying it will be the best ever next year and criticizing Joe Biden's record." Trump was shown saying "Biden is a globalist sellout who has spent career laying waste to American communities." WGHP-TV Greensboro, NC (9/8, 39K) said Trump addressed "a sea of people in the thousands," and showed him saying, "They are coming after me because I'm fighting for you. There is a lot of truth to that one." WGHP added, "Before the President headed back out on Air Force One, he left this message with the crowd." Said Trump, "So get your friends and get your family. Get your neighbors and your coworkers and vote."

WCTI-TV Greenville, NC (9/8, 4K) reported Trump told "thousands of supporters," quote, "Your state should be open." Trump "also encouraged voters to show up at the polls after voting absentee." Trump: "It's ok. You have to go through a process. You have a to sign a form, you get it. They are sending out millions of unsolicited ballots. Make sure you send the ballot in and then go to your polling place and make sure it counts."

Moreover, says The Hill (9/8, Samuels, 2.98M), "Trump on Tuesday derided Democratic vice presidential nominee Kamala Harris, saying it would be 'an insult to our country' if the California senator became the nation's first female president." Said Trump, "People don't like her. Nobody likes her. She could never be the first woman president. She could never be. That would be an insult to our country." The Hill adds that "the president's commentary drew applause from his backers in Winston-Salem. The remarks came as part of a broader attack on the Democratic ticket, which Trump argued would 'cripple' the country's economy." Fox News (9/8, Phillips, 27.59M) recounts on its website that the President "argued to supporters in North Carolina...that...Harris is 'further left' than Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT). Fox adds that "ripping into the 2020 Democratic ticket, Trump said that his opponent Joe Biden had formed an 'unholy alliance with the most extreme and dangerous elements of the radical left.'"

USA Today (9/8, Fritze, Subramanian, Jackson, 10.31M) says that the President, "still stung from the loss of the GOP convention that was due to take place in Charlotte last month but was moved to a nearly all-virtual event over COVID-19, said North Carolina and other key battleground states such as Michigan were keeping their states shut for 'political reasons.'" The President said, "On November 4, every one of those states will be open." Trump also "urged North Carolinians to vote against Gov. Roy Cooper and to instead vote for Republican Dan Forest because of the COVID restrictions."

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (9/8, 535K), "The President just capped off a very busy day on the campaign trail, a huge massive rally and crowd in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Look at this crowd. Look at Winston-Salem tonight. Take a long look. Ask yourself... how many people feel this way...about the weak and the frail Joe Biden? Earlier, the President also delivered a speech in Jupiter, Florida, where he was also met by massive crowds. Meanwhile, Joe Biden spent today in his basement bunker doing nothing as per usual." Hannity added, "Look at North Carolina tonight. That's not the mob, that's not the swamp, that's not Hollywood elites. That is you, week, the people. You will decide. You get to be the ultimate jury in just 56 short days. You, the American people, 56 days, will decide on the future of this great country. The stakes, they have never been higher."

The New York Post (9/8, Nelson, 4.57M) reports "it was one of Trump's largest re-election rallies since the coronavirus pandemic struck in March." Trump "estimated turnout at 15,000." Politico (9/8, Choi, 4.29M) says, meanwhile, that "speaking to a crowd of hundreds of cheering supporters," Trump "touched on a number of his achievements that used to make regular appearances in his rallies and relaunched old insults of his Democratic challengers. It was among the first in a return of his signature events since taking a hiatus because of the coronavirus." Politico adds "the setting also evoked his earlier rally venues: He spoke to a large crowd sporting Trump apparel with little room for social distancing, and was framed by a chorus of supporters cheering behind him."

The Washington Post (9/8, Dawsey, Scherer, Linskey, 14.2M) criticizes the lax measures taken at Trump rallies to prevent COVID infections, and adds that "Biden, meanwhile, has barely left his home without a mask for months, and he makes a point of keeping voters – when he encounters any – at a distance from himself and one another. Events at drive-in theaters have been kept under 50 – people, not cars – to respect state guidelines." The Post adds "this contrast continued Tuesday, when Trump flew to Florida and North Carolina, addressing crowds in both places, while Biden's camp announced by 9:30 a.m. he would make no public appearances all day."

In Winston-Salem, the CNN (9/8, Liptak, 83.16M) website reports, "many supporters visible in stands directly behind Trump were wearing masks," but "most individuals higher up on the stands away from Trump and most supporters on the ground in front of Trump's podium were not sporting masks." WCCB-TV Charlotte, NC (9/8, 23K) also reported "many in the crowd were not wearing masks despite the Governor's mask mandate or physically distancing."

Campaign Distributes Rally Signs Calling Event "Peaceful Protest." The New York Post (9/8, Nelson, 4.57M) that the Trump campaign "distributed rally signs claiming the event was a peaceful protest." Said Trump, "Joe Biden and his party spent the entire summer cheering on the rioters rampaging through Democrat-run cities, falsely labeling them as peaceful protesters. ... You can't go to church, you can't do anything, you have to stay in your house. But if you're willing to riot running down Main Street, if you're willing to riot, stand on top of each other's face and do whatever the hell you want to do, you're allowed to do that because you're considered a peaceful protester – so we decided to call our rallies peaceful protests."

To the Daily Beast (9/8, Montgomery, 1.39M), meanwhile, Trump "boasted to supporters on Tuesday about his campaign intentionally misrepresenting itself in order to skirt coronavirus restrictions." Said Trump, "Joe Biden and his party spent the entire summer cheering on the riots, rampaging for Democrat-run cities, labeling them as peaceful protesters. We call you peaceful protesters, you know why? Because they have rules in these Democrat-run states that if you're campaigning, you cannot have more than five people. They did that for me." The Daily Caller (9/8, Talcott, 716K), among other news outlets, also covers this facet of the story.

Administration, Campaign Officials Tout Economic Recovery.

NEC Director Kudlow said on Fox News' America's Newsroom (9/8, 896K) that "the pandemic contraction was brutal. It's not completed yet, I understand there's still a lot of hardship, but because of the rescue mission that the President has led...we've had a terrific recovery." Asked about the President's jobs prediction for 2021, Kudlow said, "The idea of a million jobs a month for the next 10 months is very plausible. It's very reasonable. We've actually exceeded that for the last four months." Kudlow said, "We are in a self-sustaining recovery. Besides the jobs, we're in a housing boom, we're in autos boom, we're in a consumer spending boom. Inventories are at rock bottom, they're going to be rebuilt. Small businesses have greater confidence. No, the economy is rebounding, it's V-shaped, it's going to be at least 20% in Q3 and probably Q4."

NEC Chief Economist Joe LaVorgna said on the Chris Stigall Show (9/8) that "the economy has come back thanks to the President's policies, his optimistic spirit," leading "about 80%" of local businesses to reopen, "home sales now the highest since December of '06," retail sales "at the highest they've ever been," and autos "up about 75%." He said, "These are extraordinary numbers, and these are, by the way, numbers that tend to tell you where you're going.... There are many, now, private forecasters who have taken their estimates of current quarter GDP...up to 30% and above," which would "put us on track...to recoup all of this pandemic-related contraction by early next year."

Acting CEA Chairman Goodspeed said on CNBC's Squawk Box (9/8, 167K) that "just two months ago, the Congressional Budget Office, nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office, was projecting an average unemployment rate during the third quarter of 14.1%, so this was definitely an outperformance of expectation." He said, "When the unemployment rate peaked at 10% back in October 2009, it was 27 months before we saw 8.4% unemployment again. We achieved that decline in just one month, from 10.2% down to 8.4%.... So this was definitely, I think, a testament, not only to the strength of the US economy heading into this crisis, but also to the speed and scale of the response."

Trump campaign senior adviser Steve Cortes said on Fox News' Bill Hemmer Reports (9/8) that "the momentum is clearly going our way right now, public and private polling shows us that, and I think the reason the momentum's going our way is because of the economic momentum in this country right now. There is a burgeoning economic renaissance afoot in this country right now, and that's not just my opinion, that's what the economic data tell us, especially that blockbuster jobs report that we just got on Friday to kick off Labor Day weekend."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump's Economic Narrative Omits Role Of Fed Policies.

In an analysis, the New York Times (9/8, Smialek, Tankersley, 18.61M) reports that while President Trump "is using the prepandemic economy to make a case for his re-election," and "seeking to convince voters that he is rapidly returning America to that prosperous place following waves of pandemic-wrought job loss," his "story line about his economic track record, particularly what he showcased during his Republican National Convention speech last month, leaves out a crucial detail. Lucky timing and a patient Federal Reserve was pivotal in driving the strong labor market of the late 2010s, economists said." Although the Administration's "tax cuts and higher government spending temporarily nudged the economy," the "trade wars cooled it off, so the administration's track record was mixed." The Times adds, however, that this "complicated reality is unlikely to stop Mr. Trump from laying claim to the successes of the 2018 and 2019 job market."

Small Business Optimism Is Back Above Historical Average.

The Washington Examiner (9/8, Krishan, 448K) reports small-business optimism has once again climbed "above the historical average following the end of the coronavirus surge over the summer, which has led to increased earnings and job openings." The NFIB Optimism Index "increased 1.4 points from July to 100.2 in August, slightly above the historical 46-year average." The survey "also showed more firms looking to hire and more reporting higher earnings."

Boeing Identifies Another 787 Production Problem.

The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Cameron, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Boeing Co. said it has found another manufacturing problem that is delaying deliveries of the 787 Dreamliner. The company, which grounded eight 787s last month due to production issues, said the current problem involved construction of the horizontal stabilizer. Boeing said it has notified the FAA and that the problem is not an immediate safety-of-flight issue.

Apple Countersues Epic Games.

The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Higgins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Apple Inc. has countersued Epic Games Inc., the maker of "Fortnite," alleging that the company breached a contract by including an in-app payment system within the game.

GM To Help Nikola Engineer And Build Electric Pickup Truck.

The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Dabaie, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that General Motors has agreed to help Nikola Corp. engineer and build its electric pickup truck. GM will engineer, validate and manufacture the electric battery and fuel cells for the truck in exchange for $2 billion in new stock and the right to nominate one director.

McDonald's CEO Says Company Must Do More To Increase Minority Representation.

The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Haddon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that while McDonald's once had an exemplary record in terms of Black restaurant ownership and African Americans in top management positions, the number of Black officers in the highest ranks of its US business and Black ownership of restaurants have both declined. Chief Executive Chris Kempczinski says McDonald's must increase minority representation.

Disney's Acknowledgment Of Chinese Police Sanctioned For Repressing Uighurs Sparks Outrage.

The New York Times (9/8, Qin, Wong, 18.61M) reports, "Disney's live-action remake of 'Mulan' has drawn a fresh wave of criticism for being filmed partly in Xinjiang, the region in China where Uighur Muslims have been detained in mass internment camps." The Times says "several social media users noticed that in the film's credits, Disney thanked eight government entities in Xinjiang, a region in China's Far West that is home to the Uighurs." According to the Times, "The entities mentioned in the movie's credits included the police bureau in Turpan," which the Trump Administration "placed," along with "other police organizations in Xinjiang, on a blacklist that forbids U.S. companies from selling or supplying products to them."

The Washington Post (9/8, Dou, 14.2M) says the "end credits...include the Turpan Municipal Bureau of Public Security, which was sanctioned by the U.S. Commerce Department last year for its role in operating what China describes as 'reeducation' camps in the northwestern Xinjiang region." The Post adds, "Several Xinjiang propaganda departments that have worked to deny the detention program's existence are also credited." According to the Post, "Shawn Zhang, a Canada-based researcher, noted Monday that the timeline of the 'Mulan' production coincided with the peak of the Xinjiang 'reeducation' campaign," and "calculated that the crew would have passed seven of the detention centers while driving from the Turpan airport to the filming site in the desert."

Calls For Consumer Boycott Of Hobby Lobby Over Pro-Trump Display Trending On Twitter.

USA Today (9/8, Tyko, 10.31M) reports that "calls for a consumer boycott are over a pro-Trump display at arts and crafts store Hobby Lobby" have been trending on Twitter since a user shared a photo "of a display of decorative letters arranged to read 'USA Vote Trump' and the caption 'In a Hobby Lobby.'" USA Today says it is "unclear whether the display was designed by a Hobby Lobby employee or a shopper."

Krach Touts Clean Network Initiative.

Under Secretary of State for Economic Growth Keith Krach said on Fox Business' Varney & Co. (9/8, 64K) that the new Clean Network Initiative "is rooted in internationally accepted digital trust standards, which include things like transparency, reciprocity, rule of law, and protection of intellectual property.... It's an enduring strategy that addresses data privacy, security, trust and collaboration, and human rights, and what it's done is it's set off a chain reaction where 30 countries have joined the Clean Network. Over 40 telcos have joined it, and it's really about, you know, America's free market system versus the Chinese Communist Party's authoritarian model." Krach said, "The world is waking up to the CCP's three-pronged strategy of concealment, co-option, and coercion...and it's really given the political will to government leaders and CEOs around the world to stand up to China's maligned practices."

WSJournal Opposes Bailouts For State, Local Governments In Coronavirus Relief Bill.

A Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial argues that while Democrats are demanding a bailout for states based on their claim that government layoffs are impeding the recovery, the August jobs report shows that government workers felt the least pain during the pandemic. Arguing that the skinny relief bill offered by Senate Republicans, which excludes money for states, is the right policy and questions why taxpayers in other parts of the country should pay for public worker pensions in Illinois or New Jersey.

Reuters Analysis: Biden May Keep Trump's China Tariffs In Place If Elected.

Reuters (9/8, Lawder, Hunnicutt) reports Joe Biden has called President Trump's tariffs "damaging," "reckless" and "disastrous," but he "may keep some in place anyway if he is elected." Reuters says that while "Republicans largely abandoned traditional party goals such as unfettered trade and balanced budgets to embrace Trump's 'America First' agenda," for Biden "the task is not so simple." Biden, it notes, is "backed by labor unions who want job protections and infrastructure spending, and progressives who want action on climate change, lower drug prices and human rights, while facing demands from farmers and US corporations eager for tariff cuts and a less disruptive China trade relationship." The result will likely add up "to a wait-and-see approach that could keep many of the tariffs Biden would inherit from Trump in place for years."

Trump: "Ridiculous" Shutdowns "Being Done To Hurt The Economy" Before Election.

President Trump tweeted Tuesday, "The Democrats will open up their states on November 4th, the day after the Election. These shutdowns are ridiculous, and only being done to hurt the economy prior to the most important election, perhaps, in our history! #MAGA"

Azar, Hahn: Administration Will Not Compromise Vaccine Safety.

Asked to respond to concerns over vaccine development on Fox News' Daily Briefing (9/8), HHS Secretary Azar said, "The President, I as Secretary, and the officials at the FDA, including the career officials, will require that any vaccine meet the very high safety and efficacy standards that the FDA has set. ... We will not compromise on the safety and efficacy of a vaccine even as we move under President Trump's leadership to get one as quickly as possible." Azar said, "We feel that it is extremely credible that we will have in the high tens of millions of doses of FDA gold standard vaccine by the end of the year thanks to this Operation Warp Speed that President Trump has commissioned and led."

FDA Commissioner Hahn similarly said on KTVT-TV (9/8, 126K), "Everybody in America wants a vaccine that's safe and effective and as quickly as possible. So we have urgency about that, but we're not going to cut any corners with respect to our review of it." Asked about pressure from the Administration, Hahn said, "We all, I think, feel the pressure of the moment with respect to COVID-19."

Pharmaceutical CEOs Issue Safety Pledge.

The Washington Post (9/8, Rowland, 14.2M) reports the CEOs of nine drug companies – including Pfizer, Moderna, BioNTech, and AstraZeneca – "pledged Tuesday not to seek regulatory approval before the safety and efficacy of their experimental coronavirus vaccines has been established in Phase 3 clinical trials, an extraordinary effort to bolster public faith in a vaccine amid President Trump's public rush to introduce a vaccine before Election Day." They wrote in the joint statement, "We believe this pledge will help ensure public confidence in the rigorous scientific and regulatory process by which covid-19 vaccines are evaluated and may ultimately be approved." The Post, however, says the statement "left open the door for partial data from the massive Phase 3 vaccine trials – which require the participation of at least 30,000 test subjects – being used to seek emergency-use authorization."

On NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 3, 2:35, Holt, 5.56M), Tom Costello called it "an unprecedented joint statement," while on the CBS Evening News (9/8, story 3, 2:35, O'Donnell, 3.99M), Adriana Diaz reported, "Nine of the leading vaccine makers stated what should be obvious: that they'll adhere to high scientific and ethical standards. But in an unusual show of scientific solidarity, they also promised to pursue Phase 3 clinical trials before the approval of any vaccine, a step Russia and China skipped, adding, 'We believe this pledge will help ensure public confidence.' Here's why: A recent CBS News poll found that just 21% of voters say they would get a vaccine as soon as it's available, down from 32% in July."

ABC World News Tonight (9/8, story 3, 2:40, Muir, 6.54M) also briefly reported the announcement, while among those also reporting the story are the Wall Street Journal (9/8, Loftus, Hopkins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Bloomberg (9/8, Langreth, 4.73M), Reuters (9/8, Maddipati), Politico (9/8, Owerhohle, 4.29M), and The Hill (9/8, Axelrod, 2.98M).

AstraZeneca Vaccine Trial Put On Hold Due To Reported Adverse Reaction.

NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 3, 2:35, Holt, 5.56M) reported, "AstraZeneca putting its vaccine trial on hold because of a suspected adverse reaction in a participant." NBC's Tom Costello added, "AstraZeneca said it is pausing its Phase 3 trial to investigate an unexplained illness" in a trial participant.

On the CBS Evening News (9/8, story 3, 2:35, O'Donnell, 3.99M), Adriana Diaz reported the drug company "said a participant in the Phase 3 trial in the UK had an adverse effect to the vaccine. They're putting that trial, which is also taking place here in the US, on hold. This just underscores the importance of widespread human testing and Phase 3 trials before any vaccine goes to market." ABC World News Tonight (9/8, story 3, 2:40, Muir, 6.54M) called the hold "a major setback...in what had been one of the most promising studies from the University of Oxford." ABC's Steve Osunsami added the trial is "being put on hold because one of their volunteers reportedly suffered a suspected serious adverse reaction."

USA Today (9/8, Weintraub, Weise, 10.31M) reports that it is "not clear how long the stoppage will last." In a statement, AstraZeneca said, "We are working to expedite the review of the single event to minimize any potential impact on the trial timeline."

Number Of COVID Cases And Deaths Continue To Fall In US.

Reuters (9/8, Shumaker) reports that "several states in the U.S. Midwest and Northeast have seen new COVID-19 cases increase for two weeks in a row, though nationally both new infections and deaths last week remained on a downward trend." The US reported "more than 287,000 new cases in the week ended Sept. 6, down 1.4% from the previous week and marking the seventh straight week of declines." Reuters adds, "More than 5,800 people died from COVID-19 last week, the third week in a row that the death rate has fallen." The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Prang, Hall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that despite the improvement nationally, 22 states had higher seven-day averages of new cases.

The Washington Post (9/8, Gearan, Weiner, 14.2M) reports the pandemic "appears to be leveling off in most of the United States, with new cases, deaths and hospitalizations all down over the past week, but the plateau leaves the country with high and persistent infection numbers and worries of a post-Labor Day surge in some areas."

ABC World News Tonight (9/8, story 4, 2:15, Muir, 6.54M) reported, "The toll in this country: more than 189,000 American lives lost. Authorities are urging young people to take this seriously, as authorities say we now enter the fall in a more difficult place than we entered the summer in." ABC's Stephanie Ramos added, "Labor Day weekend [is] sparking fresh fears of COVID outbreaks."

Academy Of Pediatrics Reports More Than 500K US Children Have Tested Positive.

On NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 3, 2:35, Holt, 5.56M), Tom Costello reported the American Academy of Pediatrics said Tuesday that "more than 500,000 children have contracted COVID" and "103 have died. The rate of new cases increasing as kids return to school."

The CBS Evening News (9/8, story 4, 2:15, O'Donnell, 3.99M) reported on what it called "disturbing news...about the number of children testing positive. More than 70,000 kids were diagnosed in the last two weeks, just as school is starting." CBS' Omar Villafranca added, "As schools move towards in-person learning, new numbers show more than half a million US children have tested positive for the virus since the spring."

Cuomo Accuses Trump Of Causing COVID Outbreak In New York.

CNBC (9/8, Feuer, Breuninger, 3.62M) reports on its website that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "blasted President Donald Trump on Tuesday for 'actively trying to kill New York City' while airing a long list of other grievances about how the Empire State has been treated by the federal government." Cuomo "accuse[d] the president of causing 'the Covid outbreak in New York,' adding that the federal ban on travel from Europe was 'too little, too late.'"

The Fox News (9/8, Phillips, 27.59M) website quotes Cuomo as saying, "Donald Trump caused the COVID outbreak in New York. ... That is a fact. It's a fact that he admitted, and the CDC admitted, and [NIAID Director] Fauci admitted."

Biden Walks Back Call For National Mask Mandate.

The New York Post (9/8, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports Joe Biden "walked back his own call for a national mask mandate" on Sunday, "saying he wouldn't issue any binding orders because he believes it would be unconstitutional." In an interview with AZFamily's Politics Unplugged, Biden said, "Here's the deal, the federal government – there's a constitutional issue whether federal government could issue such a mandate. I don't think constitutionally they could, so I wouldn't issue a mandate." Given the legal challenges, Biden said he would "plead with" people to wear a mask, adding, "I'd set an example."

Trump Calls BLM Protesters "Thugs," "Biden Voters."

The Washington Times (9/8, Chasmar, 492K) reports that in a tweet Tuesday morning, President Trump "slammed a group of Black Lives Matter protesters as 'thugs'" after "a now-viral video showed them harassing elderly White diners in Pittsburgh." Trump wrote, "BLM Protesters horribly harass elderly Pittsburgh diners, scaring them with loud taunts while taking their food right off their plate. These Anarchists, not protesters, are Biden voters, but he has no control and nothing to say. Disgraceful. Never seen anything like it. Thugs! And because of weak and pathetic Democrat leadership, this thuggery is happening in other Democrat run cities and states. Must shut them down fast. Biden and his most Liberal in Senate running mate, Kamala, won't even talk about it. They won't utter the words, LAW & ORDER!" Trump also retweeted the video, which "showed protesters accosting White diners at a Pittsburgh restaurant during a Black Lives Matter march Sunday."

In another tweet Tuesday, Trump wrote, "They are not 'peaceful protesters', as Sleepy Joe and the Democrats call them, they are THUGS – And it is all taking place in Democrat run cities. Call me and request Federal HELP. We will solve your problems in a matter of minutes – And thanks to the U.S. Marshalls [sic] in Portland!" Later Tuesday, Trump retweeted a video of protesters in a Pittsburgh McDonald's. He wrote, "Democrats and Sleepy Joe's Peaceful Protestors!"

WPost, NYTimes Analyses: Trump Increasingly Focused On Tying Democrats To Urban Unrest. The Washington Post (9/8, Scherer, 14.2M) reports in an analysis that President Trump has "reverted to using graphic depictions of violence as a centerpiece of his reelection campaign strategy, using his Twitter account, his stump speech and even the White House podium as platforms for amplifying domestic conflict." Trump's "2016 focus on radical Islamist terrorism and undocumented-immigrant crime, which he credited with helping him win the Republican nomination, has been replaced by warnings of new threats as he elevates gruesome images of Black-on-White crime, street fights involving his supporters and police-misconduct unrest nationwide." The Post says Trump is "using the specter of violence amid Black Lives Matter protests to claim superior toughness and promising forceful resolution if given the chance."

A New York Times (9/8, Peters, 18.61M) analysis says the President is "using a fear-based playbook that is as familiar to him as it is questionable in actually helping Republicans get elected in recent years." While "some of the players have changed – instead of MS-13 gang members and migrant caravans, now there are rioters and looters," the "target audience and themes are the same: Suburban communities that he claims Democrats won't keep safe." According to the Times, "Democrats can point to the 41 House seats they picked up in 2018 to show that the Republican strategy did not work then, and that voters were more concerned about health care than havoc." However, Democrats "acknowledge a real risk that Mr. Trump and Republicans could benefit by" portraying Biden and Democrats "as indifferent to the violence and unrest that has shaken cities across the country, especially in the Midwestern suburbs in Wisconsin and Minnesota where it is not so distant and abstract."

That theme was evident in a pair of tweets from the President on Tuesday. Tuesday morning, he tweeted, "Suburban voters are pouring into the Republican Party because of the violence in Democrat run cities and states. If Biden gets in, this violence is 'coming to the Suburbs', and FAST. You could say goodbye to your American Dream!"

Later in the day, he tweeted, "Democrats admit that President Trump's message is 'working' on violence coming to the Suburbs in a Looney Biden Administration. Plus, Biden just doubled down on forcing Federal control of local zoning. This means low income housing and projects. So much for the American Dream!"

Former Prosecutor: BLM Protests Could Backfire By Leading To Trump's Reelection. Former federal prosecutor Michael J. Stern writes in USA Today (9/8, 10.31M), "Black Lives Matter protesters need to pack up and go home. Yes, protesting against racially motivated police brutality is a righteous cause. But at this fragile moment in time," President Trump "has made restoring order to riot-torn streets across the country a cornerstone of his campaign." Trump's "attempt to foist responsibility onto [Joe] Biden is cause for concern," Stern argues. He calls on Black Lives Matters organizers "to tell legitimate protesters to go home. Let the streets of Portland and Kenosha be awash in a sea of MAGA hats, not BLM T-shirts."

After Criticism Of Kavanaugh, Harris Supports Blake Despite Sexual Assault Charge.

The Washington Times (9/8, Richardson, 492K) reports that Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "offered her support Monday" for Jacob Blake, "speaking with him by phone and visiting with several of his relatives and attorneys at Mitchell International Airport in Milwaukee." The Times points out that Harris' "well-wishes came even though Mr. Blake has been charged with sexually assaulting his ex-girlfriend, while Ms. Harris is known as a champion of the #MeToo movement, gaining national fame for her 2017 grilling of then-Judge Brett Kavanaugh." During Kavanaugh's confirmation hearings, Harris said he believed Christine Blasey Ford, "who accused Mr. Kavanaugh of pinning her to a bed, groping her, and trying to remove her clothes while they were in high school." the Times adds that while Harris and Joe Biden have met with Blake, neither has "met with the woman who says Blake abused her for years and raped her. They haven't even acknowledged her existence."

The Daily Caller (9/8, Kruta, 716K) reports that Megyn Kelly criticized Harris Tuesday for saying she was "proud" of Blake. "Kelly wondered in a tweet why Harris did not appear to be showing any concern for the woman Blake had allegedly sexually assaulted prior to his confrontation with police." She tweeted, "PROUD of him? He's accused of breaking into a sleeping woman's house, sexually assaulting her, humiliating her & later returning to harass her. Then the cops she called for help say he resisted arrest, assaulted them & went for his knife. How about a word for his victim, Senator?"

Rochester Police Chief Resigns Amid Probe Of Prude's Death.

USA Today (9/8, Cleveland, 10.31M) reports Rochester Police Chief La'Ron Singletary announced his retirement from the police department Tuesday amid an investigation into the death of Daniel Prude, a Black man who died of asphyxiation in police custody in March. Singletary's "performance has come under heavy scrutiny in the past week" as news of Prude's death became public. Community activists have called for his resignation.

On NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 2, 1:00, Holt, 5.56M), Kathy Park reported, "After days of backlash from the community...Singletary and the deputy police chief abruptly announced their retirements today." The New York Post (9/8, Lapin, 4.57M) reports Deputy Chief Joseph Morabito also announced his retirement on Tuesday.

On the CBS Evening News (9/8, story 2, 2:00, O'Donnell, 3.99M), Rochester Mayor Lovely Warren (D) was shown saying "Chief Singletary will remain in charge of the department through the end of the month, and I know that he and the officers will fulfill their duties." CBS' Jericka Duncan added, "Even the deputy chief announced his plans to retire, and the mayor says she expects more officers will follow suit."

ABC World News Tonight (9/8, story 7, 1:40, Muir, 6.54M) reported, "Last week, Mayor Lovely Warren said Chief Singletary told her Prude died of an overdose, but later defended his actions, saying the chief was not asked to resign." The New York Times (9/8, Wilson, 18.61M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Trump Blasts Cuomo, Rochester Mayor After Resignations. The New York Post (9/8, Bowden, 4.57M) reports President Trump "blasted" New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) and Warren on Tuesday after the resignations were announced. Trump tweeted, "Police Chief, and most of the police in Rochester, N.Y., have resigned. The Democrat Mayor and, of courses [sic], Governor Cuomo, have no idea what to do. New York State is a mess – No Money, High Taxes & Crime, Everyone Fleeing, November 3rd. We can fix it!"

Amid Calls To Defund Police, Portland Increases Spending By 200% As Protests Continue.

The Washington Free Beacon (9/8, Nester, 78K) reports that as protesters in Portland "continue to call for defunding the police, the Portland Police Bureau spent nearly $7 million on overtime pay in June and July – 200 percent more than the same time frame last year – as officers were dispatched to quell violent anti-police protests." The increase in overtime pay "coincides with a summer of unrest in the city."

Several Portland Rioters Released Without Bail. Breitbart (9/8, Bleau, 673K) reports Portland police "arrested dozens of rioters in the city over last weekend's protests," but "many...were quickly released without bail."

Police Departments Reject Activists' Demands For Changes.

The Washington Times (9/8, Mordock, 492K) reports, "Police departments say they won't bow to demands by social justice warriors for sweeping changes to policing protocols." A Washington Times survey of police departments "across the country and national law enforcement organizations found most opted for slight adjustments to standard operating procedures rather than major overhauls."

Police Organizations, Faith Groups Partner To Host “National Faith & Blue” Weekend.

The Washington Times (9/8, Mordock, 492K) reports, “Hailing it as the ‘largest police-community engagement in history,’ a coalition of law enforcement groups on Tuesday announced the creation of a National Faith & Blue weekend, to connect police with members of the faith-based community.” The event, which will take place nationwide Oct. 9-12, “will aim to repair the damaged relationships between police officers and communities, especially those with large minority populations.”

Sharpton Rejects Defunding Police Movement As “Something A Latte Liberal May Go For.”

The Washington Times (9/8, Chasmar, 492K) reports MSNBC host Al Sharpton said Tuesday that defunding the police “is an idea only a ‘latte liberal’ could support.” During an appearance on MSNBC’s Morning Joe, Sharpton “said New York City’s poorer communities are in need of more policing, not less.”

De Blasio Touts “Peaceful” Weekend As NYPD Hits 25-Year High In Gun Arrests.

Fox News (9/8, Casiano, 27.59M) reports on its website that the NYPD “marked a 25-year high in gun busts last week as violent crime continues to plague the city, officials said Tuesday.” Police Commissioner Dermot Shea “said 160 gun arrests were made between Aug. 31 and Sunday.” The news came after 23 shootings occurred over the holiday weekend. Still, Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) touted the “peaceful weekend” during his Monday briefing.

Study Shows Hundreds Of BLM Protests Turned Violent.

Townhall (9/8, Pavlich, 177K) reports a new study from Princeton University found that “over the past four months hundreds of ‘protests’ have turned into violent, destructive riots” around the country.

American Airlines Allows Flight Attendants Allowed To Wear BLM Pins. The Washington Times (9/8, Ernst, 492K) reports American Airlines has announced that flight attendants are now allowed to don “Black Lives Matter” pins. In a statement, the airline said, “American is truly committed to having an inclusive culture that is welcoming to all and a reflection of our country and world.”

Sociologist Suggest Ways To “Meaningfully” Reform Policing.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (9/8, 18.61M), sociologist Neil Gross writes that “a substantial body of social science research...provides answers” to how police can be “meaningfully reformed.” Gross recommends banning “pretextual” traffic stops, in which “a police officer harbors some vague suspicion that a driver may be involved in criminal activity.” Gross also calls for requiring “written consent when an officer asks permission to search a driver’s car.” While this “won’t eliminate racial disparities in traffic stops,” by “reducing the frequency of vehicle searches, consent forms make the experience of being stopped less onerous.” In addition, Gross recommends that police departments “generate statistics showing how officers on particular patrol shifts or in specific precincts are doing at stopping drivers proportional to their demographic representation in the community.” Those reforms, he writes, “could bring greater justice to our roads.”

DOJ Seeks To Defend Trump In Rape Accuser’s Defamation Suit.

The AP (9/8, Peltz) reports that the Justice Department filed papers Tuesday “seeking to take over President Donald Trump’s defense in a defamation lawsuit from a writer who accused him of rape, and federal lawyers asked a court Tuesday to allow a move that could put the American people on the hook for any money she might be awarded.” Following New York state courts’ refusal of “Trump’s request to delay E. Jean Carroll’s suit, Justice Department lawyers filed court papers Tuesday aiming to shift the case into federal court and to substitute the U.S. for Trump as the defendant. That means the federal government, rather than Trump himself, might have to pay damages if any are awarded.”

The Washington Post (9/8, Zapotosky, 14.2M) reports that in filings in federal court in Manhattan, DOJ argued that Trump was “acting within the scope of his office as President of the United States” when he denied during interviews in 2019 that he had raped Carroll. Carroll “had sued Trump over that denial in November.” DOJ lawyers “said that because Trump was acting as president when he denied the allegations,” a judge should “substitute the United States for President Trump as defendant.”

The New York Times (9/8, Feuer, 18.61M) reports that Carroll’s lawyer “said in a statement issued Tuesday evening that the Justice Department’s move to intervene in the case was a ‘shocking’ attempt to bring the resources of the United States government to bear on a private legal matter.” The attorney, Roberta A. Kaplan, said in the statement, “Trump’s effort to wield the power of the U.S. government to evade responsibility for his private misconduct is without precedent...and shows even more starkly how far he is willing to go to prevent the truth from coming out.”

Meadows: “Additional Documents” Show Former Officials Could Be In “Real Trouble” From Durham Probe.

The Washington Examiner (9/8, Chaitin, 448K) reports that in an appearance on Fox Business’ Mornings With Maria Tuesday, Chief of Staff Meadows “said he has seen ‘additional’ documents that are pertinent to U.S. Attorney John Durham’s criminal inquiry into the Russia investigation.” Meadows “noted that these records he has viewed reflect poorly on top FBI officials who were involved in the origins of the operation looking into ties between President Trump’s 2016 campaign and Russia.” Meadows said, “Additional documents that I’ve been able to review say that a number of the players, the Peter Strzoks, the Andy McCabes, the James Comeys, and even others in the Administration previously are in real trouble because of their willingness to participate in an unlawful act, and I use the word 'unlawful' at best, it broke all kinds of protocols, and at worst people should go to jail as I mentioned previously."

House Petitions DC Circuit Court To Rehear McGahn Subpoena Case.

The Hill (9/8, Neidig, 2.98M) reports the House Judiciary Committee has petitioned the full District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals "to rehear the case over its subpoena to former White House counsel Don McGahn after a panel of judges dismissed the lawsuit in a ruling that would essentially render the House's subpoenas legally unenforceable." The committee argued that the three-judge panel's decision "hamstrung the House's constitutional right to obtain information." The full circuit "has already taken the case up once, ruling in August that the House has standing to bring such a lawsuit, overturning an earlier decision from the three-judge panel. But the panel dealt another blow to the House when the case was sent back, ruling just three weeks later that the lower chamber has no legal grounds to seek enforcement of their subpoenas by the courts."

Graham Praises Wray's Help With Crossfire Hurricane Probe.

The Washington Examiner (9/8, Dunleavy, 448K) reports Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham praised FBI Director Wray "for the bureau's cooperation with the Republican's investigation into the Trump-Russia investigators as the 2020 election looms." Following a meeting with Graham in late August, "Wray sent the senator a letter last week that was made public Tuesday." In it, the bureau highlighted "the many meaningful steps taken under Director Wray's leadership to ensure the failures of Crossfire Hurricane are not repeated" and vowed that "the FBI continues to cooperate fully with this Committee's investigation." Graham said Tuesday, "I very much appreciate this update from the FBI. ... FBI Director Wray and his team are helping the committee perform vital oversight. I know Director Wray wants to repair the damage done by Crossfire Hurricane. He is working to rebuild the credibility of the FBI."

Delays In Naturalization Interviews, Ceremonies May Keep Some Immigrants From Registering To Vote.

CQ Roll Call (9/8, Dechalus, 154K) reports that when the coronavirus pandemic hit, USCIS "postponed naturalization interviews and ceremonies, adding to a backlog worsened by budget woes and threatening to prevent hundreds of thousands of would-be citizens from registering in time to vote this November." USCIS "has not disclosed how far behind it is in naturalizations." Spokesman Dan Hetlage "said the agency is on pace to naturalize approximately 600,000 new citizens by the end of the current fiscal year, which runs through September. But that's nearly 30% lower than the previous year when 834,000 new citizens were sworn in."

Kudlow Criticizes Biden Plans To Raise Taxes.

NEC Director Kudlow said on Fox News' America's Newsroom (9/8, 896K) that "it is inconceivable to me, putting partisan politics aside, honestly, whether you're a Keynesian or a Democratic Keynesian or demand-sider, or a Republican, Reagan supply-sider, or Trump supply-sider like me, who would raise taxes coming out of a deep pandemic contraction?" Kudlow said, "You should be cutting taxes to put more money in people's pockets and more money in businesses. Why in the world would people want to raise taxes now and pick the pocket of taxpayers who are returning to work in droves?"

JPMorgan Investigating Employee, Customer Wrongdoing Involving Coronavirus Stimulus Programs.

The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Benoit, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports JPMorgan Chase & Co. told employees Tuesday that it has uncovered evidence of wrongdoing by employees and customers involving the Paycheck Protection Program, unemployment benefits and other coronavirus stimulus programs and it is cooperating with authorities.

Cuomo Under Pressure From Fellow Democrats To Back Tax Increases On Richest.

The New York Times (9/8, Ferré-Sadurní, McKinley, 18.61M) reports that New York state Democratic lawmakers are pressuring Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) "to approve a tax on the wealthy, fearing that budget cuts will hurt those most in need." According to the Times, "As the coronavirus pandemic has transformed New York's financial problems from merely troubling to catastrophic, a growing contingent of Democrats in the all-blue Legislature is pushing the governor to reconsider his stance." However, the Times says Cuomo argues that "the potential benefit of new revenue from taxing the rich would be far outstripped by the negative impact on the state's highest earners, who already shoulder the bulk of the state's taxes."

Climate Scientist Says Leaders Must Listen To Scientists About Hurricane Preparation.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (9/8, 18.61M), Jill C. Trepanier, a climate scientist at Louisiana State University, writes that despite "impressive advancements" in climate and weather science since Hurricane Katrina 15 years ago, the US "is still woefully unprepared." Trepanier argues that can be changed if politicians "turn to the scientists who study these storms and how to protect against the catastrophic damage they can inflict." Scientists "know a lot," but "this expertise does not always find its way to the elected officials and other policymakers responsible for planning and responding to these storms." Trepanier adds, "We can see, and scientists confirm, that the effects of climate change are severe and happening. ... Scientists and communities have solutions. They must be empowered by our leaders to help them make the changes we so desperately need."

Atlas: Schools Should Work To Offer As Much In-Person Learning As Possible.

White House coronavirus task force member Scott Atlas said on WMAL-AM Washington (9/8), "We support what they're doing to do everything they can to open in person. We support any kind of hybrid options they have. We support parents being able to make a choice to send their kids elsewhere if their school isn't open." Asked about exclusive virtual learning, he said, "The harms are extreme to children, the schooling from pure long distance is a failure, basically. Some of the data shows 30% reduction in reading, 50% reduction in math skills, just from the couple months of lots of online education in the spring." Atlas said, "Schools should do everything they can to have as much as possible in person learning, with doing everything they can, of course, to protect those teachers who are high risk, to protect the students who are at high risk, to protect the staff that are at high risk."

First Day Of School For Many Marred By Tech Problems.

NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 4, 0:20, Holt, 5.56M) reported, "This first day of school got off to a rocky start for many kids across the country. Computer glitches making learning at home even more difficult, if not impossible. In Hartford, Connecticut, the first day was postponed because of a ransomware attack, and in other districts where there were major problems with an online learning platform used by several large school systems."

WPost: Appeals Court Ruling An Important Victory For Transgender Students.

The Washington Post (9/8, 14.2M) editorializes the US Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit last month ruled in favor of Gavin Grimm, a transgender student, in his five-year-long battle with the Gloucester County School Board over his ability to use the boys bathroom. The Post says it hopes the school board, "which could still seek further appeal, finally gets the message."

House Oversight Committee Will Investigate DeJoy Over Campaign Donations.

ABC World News Tonight (9/8, story 6, 0:30, Muir, 6.54M) reported the House Oversight and Reform Committee will investigate Postmaster General Louis DeJoy, "a Trump donor, over alleged campaign finance violations." ABC's Jonathan Karl: "The Washington Post reported that DeJoy pressured employees at the company that he owned until four years ago to make donations to Republican candidates and then reimbursed those donations through bonuses. DeJoy's spokesperson is denying that he broke any campaign finance laws. The President was asked about this [Monday] and said if the allegations are true, then DeJoy should lose his job." On NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 7, 0:30, Holt, 5.56M), Geoff Bennett reported, "A spokesman for DeJoy tells me he regrets if any employee felt uncomfortable for any reason about the campaign donations."

The Washington Post (9/8, Gardner, 14.2M) reports House Oversight Chairwoman Carolyn Maloney said in a statement late Monday that the committee "would begin an inquiry, saying that DeJoy may have lied to the panel under oath." Reuters (9/8) quotes Maloney as saying, "We will be investigating this issue, but I believe the Board of Governors must take emergency action to immediately suspend Mr. DeJoy, who they never should have selected in the first place."

USA Today (9/8, Wu, 10.31M) reports, "Based on interviews with employees of DeJoy's former company New Breed Logistics, the Washington Post reported Saturday DeJoy or his aides had urged employees to donate to Republicans and attend political fundraisers at his home." The AP (9/8, Daly) and the Washington Times (9/8, Muñoz, 492K) also have reports.

Claver-Carone Almost Certain To Be First US Candidate To Head Inter-American Development Bank.

The Washington Post (9/8, DeYoung, 14.2M) reports the governors of the Inter-American Development Bank are set this week to confirm Mauricio Claver-Carone, "the current head of Western Hemisphere affairs at the National Security Council," to lead "the hemisphere's premier international lending institution" for a five-year term. The Post says his candidacy "marks the first time the United States – by far the bank's biggest donor – has even put forward a nominee for the 61-year-old institution, which by tradition and political agreement has always been headed by a Latin American."

Overdose Deaths Trending Up In 21 Large Counties.

The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Kamp, Campo-Flores, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports it has collected data showing that overdose deaths are trending up this year in 21 large US counties. The article highlights that drug traffickers have been facing coronavirus pandemic restrictions, according to the DEA.

Trump's List Of SCOTUS Candidates Could Serve As An Overture To Thomas, Social Conservatives.

The Washington Times (9/8, Lovelace, 492K) reports that the "short list" of potential Supreme Court nominees from President Trump "is expected to include additions with connections to Justice Clarence Thomas and may serve as an overture to social conservatives who feel jilted by recent Supreme Court decisions." Trump's use of such a list "helped seal the deal with skeptical voters in 2016 who wanted a judicial conservative to replace the late Justice Antonin Scalia," and this year, he "is refreshing his list without an existing vacancy but with an eye toward his base if another prominent justice soon exits." The Times adds, "Efforts to clear a path for Justice Thomas to leave on his own terms and be replaced with a similar judge are already underway."

The AP (9/8, Gresko) reports Chief of Staff Meadows "told reporters at the White House on Tuesday that Trump's list will be released soon." Meadows said, "I'm optimistic that you'll see those SCOTUS picks in coming days." The AP adds that Biden has said he is also working on a list, "but the campaign has given no indication that it would release any names before the November election and doing so would risk giving Trump and Republicans a target to put Biden on defense."

Bolton: Report That Trump Disparaged US War Dead Is "Simply False."

The Federalist (9/8, Justice, 126K) reports that in an appearance on Fox News' The Story Monday, former National Security Adviser John Bolton, "who was fired in 2019 and remains no friend of the president's, denied The Atlantic's bombshell report last week supposedly 'confirmed' by Fox News' Jennifer Griffin that alleges Trump disparaged American war heroes buried in France on a 2018 trip." Bolton "further refuted the anonymous claims that the president made disparaging remarks to avoid participating in a ceremony at the Aisne-Marne cemetery." He said, "That was simply false. ... I don't know who told the author that but that was false." Asked about Griffin's assertion that she stands by her reporting, Bolton said, "She's just flatly wrong. ... I don't think the affair lasted more than 10 or 15 minutes, and the main issue was whether or not weather conditions permitted the President to go out to the Aisne-Marne cemetery."

The Atlantic Editor Says Anonymous Sourcing Is "Not Good Enough." The Daily Caller (9/8, Talcott, 716K) reports that in the wake of the "backlash" over the story, The Atlantic's editor-in-chief Jeffrey Goldberg "conceded on MSNBC's All In Monday that anonymous sourcing is 'not good enough.'" Goldberg, who had previously said the sources were allowed to stay anonymous because they feared "angry tweets and all the rest," said, "These are people just like other people, and they have this anxiety. ... It is a reasonable question to ask why people who have had direct exposure to Donald Trump, who know what Donald Trump has said, who know what Donald Trump has done, won't simply come out and say it. ... And I share that view that it's not good enough. ... But, you know, like other reporters, I'm always balancing out the moral ambiguities and complications of anonymous sourcing with a public's right to know."

Heritage Foundation Dismisses Trump's Alleged Comments. The Washington Examiner (9/8, Mahshie, 448K) reports that the Heritage Foundation "has dismissed allegations that President Trump made disparaging remarks about military veterans, as well as others that claimed top generals prioritize the military-industrial complex over the lives of soldiers." Retired Lt. Col. Jim Carafano, Vice President of the Heritage Foundation's Institute for National Security and Foreign Policy, said, "You have a quote which doesn't sound like the President. ... It's completely inconsistent with everything the President has ever said about veterans and military service. ... I think it's much ado about nothing. ... Nothing leads me to believe that it's an accurate statement of the President's views. ... You have to look at the President's actions."

Wounded Iraq Veteran Calls Out Anti-Trump Meme Using His Image. Breitbart (9/8, Starr, 673K) reports retired Army Staff Sgt. Bobby Henline, "who was severely burned and lost part of an arm while serving in Iraq, has called out a meme that used his image" to push "an anti-Trump narrative" in the wake of The Atlantic's report. In a video that has gone viral, Henline says, "That's my face. ... I'm here to tell you, it's not true. ... People, stop using me for your propaganda, for your agenda." Henline, "who is a Trump supporter according to his Facebook posts, said he does not believe the president would say those things about him."

Top Army General: Military Leaders Would Only Advocate War As "Last Resort."

Politico (9/8, Seligman, 4.29M) reports that on Tuesday, Army Chief of Staff Gen. James McConville "defended military leaders on Tuesday after President Donald Trump accused them of going to war to keep defense contractors 'happy,' saying he and others take the decision to send troops into combat 'very, very seriously.'" According to Politico, McConville "declined to comment specifically on Trump's remarks to reporters on Monday, but defended the Pentagon brass against the accusation that they are beholden to arms manufacturers. 'I've talked with generals, I've talked with admirals, I've talked with [sergeants major] ... many of these leaders have sons and daughters who have gone to combat or may be in combat right now. So I can assure the American people that senior leaders would only recommend sending troops to combat when it's required in national security, or as a last resort,' McConville said during an event held Tuesday by Defense One."

Under the headline "After Trump Comments, Top Army General Defends Military's Leaders," Reuters (9/8, Ali, Stewart) reports that on Monday, Trump "criticized [Joe] Biden, describing him as a proponent of 'endless wars,' before turning his criticism toward military leaders who he himself appointed, saying they are interested in conflict to satisfy military contractors. 'I'm not saying the military is in love with me. The soldiers are. The top people in the Pentagon probably aren't because they want to do nothing but fight wars so that all of those wonderful companies that make the bombs, make the planes, make everything else stay happy,' Trump said." According to Reuters, "Such criticism of military leaders by a sitting president is highly unusual." On Tuesday, Chief of Staff Meadows said, "That comment was more directed about the military industrial complex."

Cohen Book Says Trump Is “A Cheat,” “A Liar,” “A Con Man.”

USA Today (9/8, Jackson, Subramanian, 10.31M) reports that in his book “Disloyal,” which was released Tuesday, President Trump’s former attorney Michael Cohen writes that Trump wanted to appoint a new US Attorney in the Southern District of New York because he feared he would be indicted and he wanted to be in a position to pardon himself. Cohen wrote, “The reason behind that unprecedented and serpentine thinking was that Trump knows perfectly well that he is guilty of the same crimes that resulted in my conviction and incarceration.” In the book, Cohen claims he knew Trump “better than even his family did,” and that he witnessed “the real man, in strip clubs, shady business meetings, and in the unguarded moments when he revealed who he really was: a cheat, a liar, a fraud, a bully, a racist, a predator, a con man.”

Cohen Ties Falwell’s Trump Endorsement To Suppressed Photos. Reuters (9/8, Roston) reports that Cohen’s book “ties for the first time the 2016 presidential endorsement of Trump by American evangelical leader Jerry Falwell Jr to Cohen’s own role in helping to keep racy ‘personal’ photographs of the Falwells from becoming public.” Cohen “describes thinking that his involvement in the Falwell photo matter would be a ‘catch and kill’ – the practice of American tabloids to obtain and then suppress unfavorable stories about celebrities – ‘but in this case it was just going to be kill.’” Cohen adds, “In good time, I would call in this favor, not for me, but for the Boss, at a crucial moment on his journey to the presidency.”

Cohen Says He Would Tell Trump To Resign. NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 8, 4:30, Holt, 5.56M) asked Cohen what he would say to Trump now. Cohen said, “I would tell him, he should resign now. Let Mike Pence pardon you from any and all potential crimes that will come out against you, and that would be my recommendation to you. Step aside.”

Cohen: “Virtually Everything” Trump Asked Him To Do Brought Him Shame. NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 8, 4:30, Holt, 5.56M) asked Cohen to describe some of the things he did for Trump that “brought you shame.” Cohen said, “Virtually everything that I was tasked to do. The more that I wrote about it, the more that I realized that I had lost my moral compass and, you know, in the book, obviously, I describe Mr. Trump as a cult leader.” Asked about the White House questioning his credibility, Cohen said, “Yes, I have made my mistakes, and I have owned them publicly. I cannot make anybody believe me. All I can do is to make amends with my family and with the country and to tell the truth.” NBC added, “New York federal prosecutors acknowledge Cohen did provide information to law enforcement, including the special counsel’s office, but also noted that Cohen’s description of those efforts is overstated in some respects and incomplete in others.”

Cohen: Trump’s Hatred For Obama Starts With Him Being Black. NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 8, 4:30, Holt, 5.56M) that in his book, “Cohen says there were really no words to describe Trump’s hatred and contempt for Barack Hussein Obama.” Cohen: “I believe that his hatred for Barack Obama just basically starts with the fact he was Black and that he was the first Black president in this country.” NBC added that after Obama “mocked Donald Trump at the 2011 White House Correspondents Dinner, Cohen says his boss wanted him to publicly deny that he was upset.” Cohen: “Not only did it bother him, it really irritated him.”

Trump Says There Is More Audio Of Cohen With Cuomo And “Other Media Scum.” In a tweet Tuesday morning, Trump took a shot at Cohen and CNN anchor Chris Cuomo, he refers to as “Fredo.” Trump wrote, “Fredo’s got a convicted liar [sic] for a lawyer, who may be going back to jail for an even longer time – additional lies to Congress. Many more tapes of him with Fredo and other media scum reporters. Reveals how deranged & sick they all are!” Trump’s post included a link to a tweet from Breaking911 about leaked audio of Cuomo confiding in Cohen about sexual assault allegations.

Sasse Proposes Reforms Including End To Direct Election Of Senators.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Sen. Ben Sasse (R-NE) calls for reforms to the US Senate. Sasse’s recommendations include removing cameras from the chamber, abolishing standing committees, allowing committees to command times for debates on the Senate floor, requiring senators to live with each other in dormitories when the chamber is in session, limiting senators to one term that is doubled from six to twelve years, repealing the 17th Amendment, which replaced the appointment of senators by state legislatures with direct election, creating a “super committee” to review the ceding of congressional authority to the Executive Branch over the past 80 years and proposing legislation to sunset bureaucracies’ authority, changing to two-year federal budgeting that covers all federal spending, including entitlements, and requiring that legislation authorizing federal action provide money to pay for it.

Conditions Expected To Worsen As California Battles Dozens Of Wildfires.

NBC Nightly News (9/8, lead story, 2:40, Holt, 5.56M) reported in its lead story that “after days of extreme temperatures, worse conditions are expected” in California, which is combating “dozens of brush fires.” NBC (Almaguer) added that “the Creek Fire has become a blow torch, incinerating everything in its path.” The fire is now “moving in multiple directions.” Firefighters “are already facing triple-digit heat, drought conditions, and are now bracing for powerful winds. The perfect recipe for disaster.” Matt Gutman reported in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (9/8, lead story, 3:35, Muir, 6.54M) that with “more than two dozen major fires...burning through the state,” nearly “14,000 firefighters [are] battling impossible conditions. California passing the grim milestone of two million acres burned – a record.” In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (9/8, lead story, 4:15, O’Donnell, 3.99M) reported that “much of the West Coast is now in the danger zone as powerful gusts of hot, dry air are fueling blazes all the way from the Canadian border down to San Diego.”

Gore California Wildfires Are What “Unabated Climate Crisis Looks Like.” The Washington Times (9/8, Richardson, 492K) reports says the “wild September weather brought a ‘climate crisis’ warning Tuesday from Al Gore, as Californians struggled with heat and wildfires, Atlantic storm-trackers raced through the alphabet and Coloradans traded their flip-flops for snow boots." Gore tweeted, "It reached a record high of 121 degrees F in LA county over the weekend. Extreme heat is fueling a longer, more intense, and more destructive wildfire season in CA. This is what an unabated climate crisis looks like."

Facebook Software Engineer Quits, Saying Company "Is Profiting Off Hate."

The Washington Post (9/8, Timberg, Dwoskin, 14.2M) reports Facebook software engineer Ashok Chandwaney quit Tuesday morning via a lengthy statement posted on the company's internal employee network. Chandwaney wrote, "I'm quitting because I can no longer stomach contributing to an organization that is profiting off hate in the US and globally." The post "was detailed, bristling with links to bolster its claims and scathing in its conclusions." Facebook spokeswoman Liz Bourgeois said in response, "We don't benefit from hate. We invest billions of dollars each year to keep our community safe and are in deep partnership with outside experts to review and update our policies."

Biden Leads In Several Swing States In New Round Of Polls.

Redfield & Wilton Strategies polling of registered voters in several presidential swing states (8/30-9/3) shows Joe Biden leading President Trump in Florida 47%-44%. In Pennsylvania, Biden leads 48%-43%. In Michigan, Biden leads 51%-40%. In North Carolina, Trump leads 44%-43%. In Arizona, Biden leads 48%-43%. In Wisconsin, Biden leads 50%-41%. The Hill (9/8, Wilson, 2.98M) reports that despite Biden's lead nationally and in swing states, "all Democratic Party activists and operatives can think of is the looming sense of déjà vu hanging over their heads. In interviews, those who work on Democratic campaigns voice suspicion over Biden's lead, confident that something else will go wrong just as it did four years ago."

NBC News (9/8, Murray, 6.14M) reports on its website that an NBC News/Marist poll of 766 likely Florida voters (8/31-9/6) shows Biden and Trump tied at 48% each, with Trump "ahead among Latinos in the state, and Biden doing better with seniors than Hillary Clinton did four years ago."

A Susquehanna Polling & Research poll of 498 likely Pennsylvania voters (8/26-9/4) shows Biden at 44% and Trump at 42%.

The Detroit News (9/8, Mauger, 825K) reports a Detroit News/WDIV-TV poll of 600 likely Michigan voters (9/1-9/3) shows Biden at 47% and Trump at 42%.

A We Ask America poll of 500 likely Missouri voters (9/1-9/3) shows Trump at 49% and Biden at 44%.

Trump Campaign Lays Out Victory Scenarios As Broad As 356 Electoral Votes.

The Washington Times (9/8, Boyer, 492K) reports, "Trump campaign advisers laid out seven pathways Tuesday for the president to win reelection, from a 37-state landslide of 356 electoral votes to a razor-thin margin of two electoral votes" over Joe Biden. The possibilities "range from the landslide projection, in which the president would carry 12 battleground states, to the 'Southwest strength' scenario, in which Mr. Trump wins Arizona and Nevada but loses the 'Rust Belt' states of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota."

Trump Campaign Planning To Spend More In Minnesota Than In Michigan Or Wisconsin. McClatchy (9/8, Catanese, 19K) reports Trump's campaign "is currently planning to spend more money on advertising in Minnesota than in either Wisconsin or Michigan during the final stretch of the 2020 race, a significant shift in strategy." Trump's campaign "is slated to pour more than $14 million into Minnesota between the beginning of September through Election Day, compared to $12.6 million in Michigan and $8.3 million in Wisconsin," according to media tracking firm Advertising Analytics.

WSJournal: Trump Must Change Subject To Biden Or Lose. The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that Trump is clearly trailing as the campaign enters its final two months, and if Democrats can keep the focus on Trump himself, Biden will win. The Journal says the GOP must turn the focus to Biden's agenda, which the Journal calls the most left-wing of any major-party candidate in generations.

Reuters Analysis: Biden Likely To Get Boost From Late-Counted Mail-In Ballots.

Reuters (9/8, Sullivan, Martina) reports that "nearly half of Democrats say they plan to vote by mail, while only one quarter of Republicans plan to do so," and "counting mail ballots is often slower because officials must open thick envelopes, verify the ballots and validate voters' identities, compared with the simpler, speedier process at a polling center where voters cast ballots in person." According to Reuters, Joe Biden's campaign is "bracing for" President Trump to "complain the contest is being stolen as the lead shifts." The Washington Times (9/8, Harper, 492K) says the Daily Beast wrote this week that "the Left" is preparing "for MAGA violence after Election Day."

Official Says Michigan Lacking Federal Funds Needed For Election.

NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 9, 2:55, Holt, 5.56M) reported Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson (D) is warning that the state is not ready for the November election. NBC's Cynthia McFadden: "The woman in charge of voting in the swing state of Michigan says she is losing hope that Congress will help states prepare for what is shaping up to be the most complicated election in the nation's history." Benson: "With every day that's passed with no action, my optimism decreases significantly. And now we're at the point where, you know, we just have to go. We just have to execute." McFadden: "And that, says [Benson], means election officials across the country are going to have to make do, despite repeated expert warnings that states need $3 billion to $4 billion more federal dollars to pull off the November elections safely and securely during COVID-19."

About 1,000 Georgians Under Investigation For Voting Absentee And Again In Person.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/8, Niesse, 895K) reports that "about 1,000 Georgians...returned absentee ballots and then also showed up at polling places" for the June 9 primary, Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger (R) said Tuesday. Voters "are allowed to cancel their absentee ballots and then vote at polling places as long as their ballots haven't yet been received by election officials. It's unclear whether the voters under investigation attempted to do so." The New York Times (9/8, Saul, 18.61M) reports the investigation comes "a week after President Trump suggested that voters in North Carolina should cast two ballots – one by mail and another at the polls." The Washington Examiner (9/8, Dibble, 448K), Politico (9/8, Oprysko, 4.29M), and the Fox News (9/8, 27.59M) website also have reports.

Trump Reportedly Mulling Giving His Campaign Up To $100M.

Citing "people familiar with the matter," Bloomberg (9/8, Jacobs, Parker, Allison, 4.73M) reports that President Trump has "discussed spending as much as $100 million of his own money on his re-election campaign, if necessary," but "hasn't yet committed to any self-funding." On Tuesday, Trump told reporters, "If I have to, I would...but we don't have to." According to Bloomberg, Trump "has sought advice about whether he should self-fund as he scrutinizes heavy spending by his team earlier this year that failed to push him ahead of the former vice president in the polls." Bloomberg adds that "earlier Tuesday, Trump said on Twitter that his campaign had to spend 'a lot of money' to combat what he called 'false reporting' on his handling of the coronavirus outbreak."

The President tweeted, "Because of the China Virus, my Campaign, which has raised a lot of money, was forced to spend in order to counter the Fake News reporting about the way we handled it (China Ban, etc.). We did, and are doing, a GREAT job, and have a lot of money left over, much more than 2016. ... Like I did in the 2016 Primaries, if more money is needed, which I doubt it will be, I will put it up!"

The CBS Evening News (9/8, story 6, 1:40, Weijia Jiang, 3.99M) briefly reported "the Trump campaign and Republican National Committee are burning through cash, having already spent more than $830 million," and "the President said he's ready to dip into his own pockets." NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 5, 1:05, Geoff Bennett, 5.56M) showed Trump saying, "Yeah, if I have to, I would. But we don't have to because we have double and maybe even triple what we had...four years ago."

The AP (9/8, Madhani, Lemire, Miller) reports that Dan Eberhart, described as "a prominent Republican donor, said that two senior campaign officials told him in recent days that Trump was considering a personal investment in the campaign of as much as $100 million." Eberhart "said the campaign is trying to create 'a little excitement' among top donors and prominent supporters as polls have shown Trump consistently trailing...Joe Biden nationally and in some battleground states." However, Eberhart "said he was skeptical that Trump will spend $100 million of his own money and questioned whether money was significantly hampering the president's campaign." Eberhart is quoted as saying, "This is about telling supporters: Don't pay attention to the polls. Don't pay attention to the media. We're going to win this thing."

The New York Times (9/8, Goldmacher, Haberman, 18.61M) reports that "of the $1.1 billion his campaign and the party raised from the beginning of 2019 through July, more than $800 million has already been spent," and "now some people inside the campaign are forecasting what was once unthinkable: a cash crunch with less than 60 days until the election." According to the Times, "Interviews with more than a dozen current and former campaign aides and Trump allies, and a review of thousands of items in federal campaign filings, show that the president's campaign and the RNC developed some profligate habits as they burned through hundreds of millions of dollars." Since Bill Stepien replaced Brad Parscale as campaign manager in July, "the campaign has imposed a series of belt-tightening measures that have reshaped initiatives, including hiring practices, travel and the advertising budget."

Axios (9/8, Perano, 521K) says "some of the notable expenses for the Trump campaign include $11 million on Super Bowl advertising, roughly $4 million to Trump businesses since 2019 and approximately $156,000 on planes for aerial banners." Reuters (9/8, Mason) reports that Stepien "told reporters on a campaign press call on Tuesday that 'we are now carefully monitoring the budget.'"

Politico (9/8, Forgey, 4.29M) indicates that Trump "has yet to report his August fundraising numbers," and Chief of Staff Meadows "told reporters on Tuesday that he did not know when that campaign announcement would come." Fox News (9/8, Henney, 27.59M) recalls on its website that "during the 2016 presidential campaign, Trump contributed $66 million to his campaign," and "he and his allies raised about $400 million less than Hillary Clinton did four years ago." The Washington Times (9/8, Boyer, 492K), Washington Examiner (9/8, Crilly, 448K), The Hill (9/8, Chalfant, 2.98M) and Daily Caller (9/8, Hagstrom, 716K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Cortes: Trump 2020 Has "Enough Firepower" For Election. Trump campaign senior adviser Steve Cortes was asked on Fox News' Bill Hemmer Reports (9/8) about reports that Trump is considering spending $100 million of his own money on his presidential campaign. Cortes said, "It's an amazing testimony to his commitment to this country and to winning this race, if necessary," though "we didn't have a lot of cash in 2016 and we still won, even though we were massively outspent. We have enough firepower now to easily get us through Election Day."

Trump Says Biden Has Pledged To Abolish Suburbs.

President Trump tweeted Tuesday afternoon, "Sleepy Joe Biden has pledged to ABOLISH Suburban Communities [sic] as they currently exist by reinstating Obama's radical AFFH Regulation. There goes Suburbia!"

Politico (9/8, Nguyen, 4.29M) says Trump "has claimed, at various points, that Biden's ascension to the White House would ruin everything from 'jobs' to 'the Second Amendment' to 'God' to the 'middle class,' offering scant evidence. More recently, he vowed Biden would 'ABOLISH Suburban Communities.'"

Trump Campaign Launches Radio Ad Targeting Black Men.

The Washington Post (9/8, Sonmez, Itkowitz, Wagner, 14.2M) reports that on Tuesday, President Trump's reelection campaign "launched a radio ad in which two of the president's most prominent Black supporters" – former NFL star Herschel Walker and Georgia state Rep. Vernon Jones (D) – "praise him as a leader who 'keeps right on fighting to improve the lives of Black Americans.' ... The minute-long spot, which comes amid a push by the Trump campaign to woo Black and Latino men, will run in 11 urban radio markets." The Washington Examiner (9/8, Bedard, 448K) reports polls are "showing consistent black voter support for President Trump at levels higher than those of previous Republican candidates."

Trump Campaign Paying To Replace White House Sod Following Convention Event.

The Washington Post (9/8, Parker, Rucker, 14.2M) reports President Trump's reelection campaign "is paying to replace sod on the White House South Lawn and in the Rose Garden after damage to the greenery late last month from large crowds and heavy equipment used for Republican National Convention festivities." The Post says the President's "unprecedented decision to stage overtly political events on public property – which drew complaints that the Trumps were using 'the people's house' for personal gain – continues to reverberate nearly two weeks later, as work crews re-sod the lawn and make other repairs."

Biden To Focus On Offshoring During Michigan Trip.

Bloomberg (9/8, Epstein, 4.73M) reports Joe Biden will "unveil a new policy aimed at tackling offshoring – the practice of U.S. companies basing some operations in lower-tax countries" – during a Wednesday campaign trip to Michigan. Bloomberg says Biden's "new push on economic issues" comes "as polls show voters beginning to trust his approach to reversing the job losses and manufacturing contraction brought on" by the COVID-19 pandemic.

Reuters Analysis: Energy Sector "Would Struggle To Meet" Biden Carbon Mandate.

Reuters (9/8, Groom, Volcovici) reports the US power industry "would struggle to meet" Joe Biden's "proposed mandate that it become carbon neutral by 2035 without some big breakthroughs in clean energy technology, according to a Reuters analysis of planning documents and a survey of top utilities." The country's "top power producers said rapid advances in nascent technologies...will be critical to reaching net-zero carbon dioxide emissions." But these technologies "are currently either too costly for mass deployment or not yet commercially viable, the companies said."

In A Surprise Move, Biden Takes Tuesday Off.

Townhall (9/8, Bufkin, 177K) reports that the Biden campaign said "early Tuesday morning" that there would be no news from the former vice president for the remainder of the day. The move, which "came from the Biden camp first thing in the morning, came as a surprise to members of the press as the president continues his active schedule." Townhall adds, "Biden's day off came as a surprise to many who thought the former vice president may be more eager to get back to the campaign trail after what was generally considered to be a lackluster outing on Labor Day." The Democrat's day off came as polls in battleground states "still show Biden with a narrow lead over Trump, but new data shows the scale sliding in the president's favor."

Former Aide Says Biden's "Mental Acuity" Has Diminished.

The New York Post (9/8, Moore, 4.57M) reports Joe Biden's former stenographer, Mike McCormick, "said the Democratic presidential nominee has 'lost a step' and isn't as mentally sharp as he was four years ago." McCormick, who worked for Biden from 2011 to 2017, told (9/8, Goodman, 78K) the Washington Free Beacon, "It is a complete difference from what he was in 2017. ... He's lost a step and he doesn't seem to have the same mental acuity as he did four years ago. ... He doesn't have the energy, he doesn't have the pace of his speaking. He's a different guy."

President Trump appeared to allude to Biden's mental acuity in a tweet Tuesday morning. Trump wrote, "Great! Biden is finally being forced out of his basement. Now you'll be able to see what is going on 'up there'. He may do some 'limited' campaigning. Basement Biden is no longer playing well in the Polls!"

Harris' Husband's Legal Work For "Drug Makers And Arms Dealers" Draws Scrutiny.

In an article titled "Will Doug Emhoff's Legal Career Be An Issue For The Biden-Harris Ticket?" the New York Times (9/8, Saul, Vogel, Hakim, 18.61M) reports that Emhoff, the husband of Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA), has represented "a slew of clients that run afoul of liberal sensibilities – from drug makers and arms dealers to Walmart." The Times says that in August, Emhoff "announced that he was taking a leave of absence from DLA Piper, one of the world's largest law firms, where he is a partner." It remains unclear if Emhoff "will continue to practice law in any capacity."

Biden Campaign Releases Harris-Obama Video Conversation.

Geoff Bennett reported on NBC Nightly News (9/8, story 6, 0:55, Holt, 5.56M) that on Tuesday, the Joe Biden campaign released a five-minute video conversation between former President Barack Obama and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA). Harris: "So tell me about Joe and your relationship with Joe, and what do I need to know?" Obama: "The main thing to know about Joe is that Joe has never lost his sense of why we do this."

Harris' Chuck Taylor All-Stars Go Viral.

The Washington Post (9/8, Janes, 14.2M) has a feature on how the Chuck Taylor All-Stars worn by Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) have gone viral. The Post says the shoe "has long been associated more closely with cultural cool than carefully managed high-profile candidacies." Harris' sister "tweeted Monday that Chuck Taylors are, indeed, her sister's 'go-to.'" Harris "has white Chucks, off-white Chucks, black Chucks, and even hinted at a sequined pair she has yet to break out on the trail."

Kelly Denounces Supporter's Threat Against Gosar.

The Arizona Republic (9/8, Sanchez, 869K) reports Arizona Senate candidate Mark Kelly (D) denounced a threat made against Rep. Paul Gosar (R-AZ) "by an apparent Kelly supporter, writing on Twitter that he understands how seriously acts of violence can upend the lives of lawmakers and their families." Kelly tweeted, "I know what it means to have an act of violence committed against a Member of Congress and family member. I strongly condemn this threat against Rep. Gosar. Threats of violence like this are wrong. I'm glad Capitol Police is investigating."

Rep. Collins Endorsed By 45 Georgia Legislators In Senate Bid.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/8, 895K) reports Georgia House Speaker David Ralston's endorsement of Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) for Senate "cleared the way for a group of other state legislators to back his campaign – including a few who initially supported his rival. The four-term congressman on Tuesday rolled out a slate of 45 supporters from the General Assembly in a bid to undercut" the claim by Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) that she is "the favorite of Georgia conservatives. ... The slate includes at least two [state] House lawmakers who earlier endorsed Loeffler."

McGrath Charges McConnell With "Dereliction Of Duty" In Fight Against COVID.

The AP (9/8, Schreiner) reports Kentucky Senate candidate Amy McGrath (D) "laid the mounting toll of coronavirus cases in the U.S. at the feet of" Senate Majority Leader McConnell on Tuesday "while declaring that the country needs people in power who 'take responsibility again.'" At a campaign event, McGrath "zeroed in on the senator's response to the ongoing health crisis, calling it a 'dereliction of duty.'" McGrath said an improved federal response is needed in testing and contact tracing to combat the virus."

Messner Leads In New Hampshire GOP Senate Primary.

The New Hampshire Union Leader (9/8, Landrigan, 109K) reports attorney Bryant "Corky" Messner led retired Brig. Gen. Don Bolduc in the New Hampshire GOP Senate primary on Tuesday, leading 50% to 43% with two-thirds of votes counted. Messner "only moved to New Hampshire full-time a year ago, though he had purchased a vacation home on Lake Wentworth in 2007." WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (9/8, Cherry, 239K) reports on its website that the AP declared Messner the winner, but Bolduc has refused to concede. The New York Times (9/8, Gabriel, 18.61M) reports Sen. Jeanne Shaheen (D-NH) easily won the Democratic primary. Shaheen led both possible GOP candidates by more than 15 points in a recent poll.

Reed, Waters To Face Off In Rhode Island Senate Race.

The AP (9/8) reports Sen. Jack Reed (D-RI) and investment consultant Allen Waters (R) both won unopposed Rhode Island Senate primaries on Tuesday. Waters has also "mounted unsuccessful campaigns for the state Senate and U.S. Senate in Massachusetts." Reed is heavily favored for reelection.

Poll Shows Issa With One-Point Lead In CA50.

The San Diego Union-Tribune (9/8, Schroeder, 755K) reports a SurveyUSA poll of 500 likely CA50 voters (9/4-9/7) shows ex-Rep. Darrell Issa (R-CA) at 46% and Ammar Campa-Najjar (D) at 45%.

"Lifelong Republican" Ex-Mayor Backs Schupp In MO2.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (9/8, Benchaabane, 685K) reports former Creve Coeur, Missouri mayor Harold Dielmann, "a self-described 'lifelong Republican,'" has endorsed state Sen. Jill Schupp (D) over Rep. Ann Wagner (R-MO) in MO2. Dielmann said, "I'm a lifelong Republican and I'm going to support Jill. She's not a party candidate, she's a people candidate."

Mowers, Negron Win New Hampshire GOP Congressional Primaries

The AP (9/8, Casey) reports, "A former official in the State Department who received an endorsement" from President Trump won the NH1 Republican primary on Tuesday. Matt Mowers, who took about 60% of the vote in the three-way primary, "was the favorite in the race after he won a coveted endorsement from the president in June." He will face freshman Rep. Chris Pappas (D-NH) in November. WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (9/8, Leclerc, 239K) reports on its website that in the NH2 GOP primary, businessman Steve Negron defeated Naval Reserve Capt. Lynne Blankenbeker. Negron will take on Rep. Annie Kuster (D-NH).

Two GOP Mayors Endorse Fletcher In TX7.

The Houston Chronicle (9/8, Scherer, 730K) reports Rep. Lizzie Fletcher (D-TX) on Tuesday "announced endorsements from two Republican mayors in her district, a week after the Houston Democrat secured support from the GOP-leaning U.S. Chamber of Commerce." Both Hillshire Village Mayor Russell Herron and West University Place Mayor Bob Higley "are backing Fletcher over their party's nominee, Army veteran Wesley Hunt."

Davis Poll Gives Her One-Point Lead Over Roy In TX21.

Feltes Leads New Hampshire Democratic Gubernatorial Primary.

The New Hampshire Union Leader (9/8, Landrigan, 109K) reports New Hampshire Senate Majority Leader Dan Feltes led Executive Councilor Andru Volinsky in the state's Democratic gubernatorial primary Tuesday by a margin of about three points in early returns. The AP (9/8) reports Feltes has claimed victory, but Volinsky has refused to concede. Gov. Chris Sununu (R) easily won the GOP primary.

NYTimes Praises Murphy's "Baby Bonds" Program Proposal.

The New York Times (9/8, 18.61M) editorial says the proposal by New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) for a "baby bonds" program that "would create a $1,000 savings account for each child born into a New Jersey household with an annual income below about $131,000" has "the potential to change the trajectory of individual lives, giving New Jersey kids a better chance to thrive and prosper." The Times says, "Black people are particularly disadvantaged by inequalities of wealth and opportunity in the United States" and Murphy's proposal "is an elegant approach to reducing those racial gaps." However, the Times adds that it is "much easier for a federal program to provide the big bucks. The real value of the New Jersey program may be in the work of hammering out the details, and the trial-and-error of implementation, which can provide lessons for creating a larger initiative."

WSJournal Blames Murphy For New Jersey Gas Tax Increase.

A Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial faults the Administration of New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) for a 22% increase in the state's gasoline tax that was announced at the end of August. New Jersey calculates its gas tax with an automatic formula that raises the rate when revenue falls. While Republicans say Murphy can stop the increase, as his Administration did last year, Murphy claims he has no control over the gas-tax rate.

Teen Accused Of Making Bomb Threat During College Zoom Lecture.

The AP (9/8) reports a student at the University of Houston in Texas has been arrested after being accused of making a bomb threat against the school during a Zoom lecture. Ibraheem Ahmed Al Bayati, 19, was accused by federal authorities of joining a university lecture on Zoom on Sept. 2 and interrupting it by saying "what does any of this have to do with the fact that UH is about to get bombed in a few days?" Al Bayati was also accused of "uttering an Arabic phrase that means the 'Islamic State will remain,' according to a criminal complaint."

The New York Post (9/8, Sheehy, 4.57M) reports Al Bayati was arrested Friday and "later told the feds that his comments were all part of a joke between him and a pal – but officials said the teen is a recruiter for the terror organization."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 44.3%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 44.3%, and his disapproval at 53%. Both the President's approval and disapproval are up by 0.1 since yesterday.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (9/3-9/7) finds Trump's approval at 50%, and his disapproval at 50%.

A The Hill/HarrisX survey of 2,853 "registered voters" (9/5-9/8), meanwhile, has the President's job approval at 47%, with 53% disapproving.

Financial International News

China's Economy Continues To Show Signs Of Recovery.

Reuters (9/9, Qiu, Woo) reports, "China's factory gate prices fell at their slowest annual pace in five months in August as the world's second-largest economy and its industries continued to recover from a slump caused by the coronavirus pandemic earlier this year." Annual producer prices "fell for a seventh straight month but at a slower pace, while consumer prices saw more moderate growth due to falling pork price inflation." However, core consumer prices "rose month-on-month for the first time since the coronavirus pandemic worsened in China in January." China's economy "returned to growth in the second quarter of this year, underpinned by government stimulus and as the country managed to get the virus broadly under control. Recent indicators have pointed to a sustained recovery."

Global Trade Rebound Fuels Rise In German And French Exports.

The Financial Times (9/8, Arnold, Romei, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports, "German and French exports rose in July as global trade rebounded from pandemic-hit lows this spring, in the latest sign that the..."

Sweden's Positivity Test Rate Hits Lowest Since Start Of Pandemic.

Reuters (9/8, Ahlander) reports "Sweden carried out a record number of new coronavirus tests last week with only 1.2% coming back positive, the health agency said on Tuesday, the lowest rate since the pandemic began at a time when countries across Europe are seeing surges in infections."

Amid Political Pressure, Israel Backs Off Plans For Tougher Restrictions.

The New York Times (9/8, Halbfinger, Kershner, 18.61M) reports Israel appears to have backed off plans to reimpose tough coronavirus restrictions in hard hit areas after pushback from ultra-Orthodox leaders and pressure on Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. On the one hand, "secular Israeli Jews accuse the ultra-Orthodox and Arab citizens of spreading the virus in their overcrowded areas." On the other hand, the "ultra-Orthodox point to the relative normalcy of life in Tel Aviv and complain that they are being singled out." Moreover, being "joined by their right-wing allies, they ask why, if crowds are so dangerous, liberal-leaning protesters are allowed to gather by the thousands to demand Mr. Netanyahu's ouster."

WTimes Analysis: US Exit Plan In Somalia Appears "Stalled."

The Washington Times (9/8, Wolfgang, 492K) reports the Pentagon's "war against terror in Somalia was supposed to begin winding down next year, but the number of American airstrikes against al-Shabab targets keeps increasing and the Trump administration's exit plan seems to have stalled." The conflict is "a major outlier in President Trump's quest to stop 'endless wars,'" but it "also has caught Pentagon leaders between two increasingly unpalatable options and has created a potential quagmire."

Iran Building New Production Hall For Centrifuges In Mountains Near Natanz.

Reuters (9/8, Hafezi) reports Iran has "begun to build a hall in 'the heart of the mountains' near its Natanz nuclear site for making advanced centrifuges, Iran's nuclear chief said on Tuesday, aiming to replace a production hall at the facility hit by fire in July." Atomic Energy Organization of Iran head Ali Akbar Salehi is quoted by state TV as saying, "Due to the sabotage, it was decided to build a more modern, larger and more comprehensive hall in all dimensions in the heart of the mountain near Natanz. Of course, the work has begun."

Trump To Announce Drawdown Of US Troops From Iraq, Afghanistan.

The Washington Times (9/8, Boyer, 492K) reports briefly that President Trump will announce "a further drawdown of US troops from Iraq on Wednesday, and a withdrawal of more troops from Afghanistan in the coming days, a senior administration official said Tuesday night."

Israel And UAE To Sign Historic Deal At White House Next Week.

The AP (9/8, Lee) reports US officials indicated on Tuesday that Israel and the United Arab Emirates "will sign their historic deal normalizing relations at a White House ceremony on Sept. 15." The officials "said senior delegations from both countries will likely be led by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Emirati Foreign Minister Sheikh Abdullah bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the brother of the UAE crown prince."

Reuters (9/8, Holland) reports a "senior White House official" confirmed that Netanyahu and Sheikh Abdullah bin Zayed al-Nahyan would lead the two delegations. On Twitter, Netanyahu wrote, "I am proud to embark next week to Washington, at the invitation of President Trump, to take part in this historic ceremony at the White House for the foundation of the peace treaty between Israel and the United (Arab) Emirates.”

Palestinians Expected To Soften Stance On UAE-Israel Pact. Reuters (9/8, Sawafta, Almughrabi) reports Palestinian leadership has “watered down its criticism” of the deal between Israel and the UAE before an Arab League meeting in Cairo on Wednesday at which the accord will be debated. A draft resolution, “a copy of which was seen by Reuters, does not include a call to condemn, or act against, the Emirates over the US-brokered deal.”

The Washington Free Beacon (9/8, Kredo, 78K) likewise reports the Palestinian government has “reportedly softened its stance” toward the deal, “signaling that Palestinian leaders have become even more isolated regionally.”

US Sells Ambassador’s Residence In Israel. The Washington Post (9/8, Eglash, 14.2M) reports the “luxury residence used to house American ambassadors to Israel since the 1960s has been sold, the US Embassy announced Tuesday.” The Embassy “did not divulge how much the property was sold for” or to whom it was sold, but the announcement “follows recent reports by Israeli media outlet Globes that Las Vegas casino magnate and GOP superdonor Sheldon Adelson was behind the sale.”

Shots Fired Along India-China Border For First Time In 45 Years.

The AP (9/8) reports India and China on Tuesday “accused each other...of making provocative military moves and firing warning shots along their disputed border despite talks on ending the escalating tensions.” China alleged that Indian forces on Monday “crossed into territory it holds and fired warning shots at a Chinese patrol in what it called a violation of their agreements.” India, however, “denied that and said Chinese soldiers tried to surround one of its forward posts in a ‘grave provocation’ and also fired warning shots.” China described it “as the first exchange of fire between the countries in 45 years.”

The New York Times (9/8, Gettleman, 18.61M) says, “One thing is clear: The dispute that has been building on the Himalayan border that separates the two nuclear-armed powers is only sharpening as their broader relationship steadily deteriorates.”

Palau Invites Pentagon To Build New Bases In Pacific. The Washington Free Beacon (9/8, Beyrer, 78K) reports Palau is “moving against China by inviting the United States to build new military bases in the Pacific island country, the Wall Street Journal first reported Tuesday.” US Ambassador to Palau John Hennessey-Niland told the Journal, “Palau is a very important place in the Pacific. Palau has suffered from predatory economic behavior and malign influence from the PRC. ... Palau is a good friend of the United States and a great partner in the Pacific.”

Burmese Soldiers Recount Slaughter Of Rohingya.

The New York Times (9/8, Beech, Nang, Simons, 18.61M) reports that new video testimony from two Burmese soldiers, “which was shared with international prosecutors,” marks “the first time that members of the Tatmadaw, as Myanmar’s military is known, have openly confessed to taking part in what United Nations officials say was a genocidal campaign against the country’s Rohingya Muslim minority.” On Monday, the two men, who fled Burma last month, “were transported to The Hague, where the International Criminal Court has opened a case examining whether Tatmadaw leaders committed large-scale crimes against the Rohingya.” To the Times, the “atrocities described by the two men echo evidence of serious human rights abuses gathered from among the more than one million Rohingya refugees now sheltering in neighboring Bangladesh.”

US Denounces Abuses In Belarus As Opposition Leader Resists Deportation.

Reuters (9/8) reports that on Tuesday, a “senior Administration official” said the US is “extremely concerned” by the situation in Belarus. The senior Administration official is quoted as saying, “The United States is extremely concerned by continued human rights violations in the wake of Belarus’ election. Reports of opposition figures being kidnapped, forcibly expelled, or otherwise threatened are just a few of the many methods the Belarusian government is using in its attempts to deny freedom of speech.”

The AP (9/8, Karmanau), meanwhile, reports Maria Kolesnikova, “a leading opposition activist in Belarus, was held on the border with Ukraine...after she resisted an attempt by authorities to deport her as part of government efforts to end a month of protests” against President Alexander Lukashenko. Kolesnikova, whom the AP says is “a member of the Coordination Council created by the opposition to facilitate talks with the longtime leader on a transition of power,” was arrested on Monday in Minsk “along with two other council members,” and then “they were driven early Tuesday to the border, where authorities told them to cross into Ukraine.” However, when “they arrived in a no-man’s land between the countries, Kolesnikova ripped her passport into small pieces to make it impossible for the authorities to expel her.”

The Washington Post (9/8, Dixon, 14.2M) reports Lukashenko has “ruled out meeting with the Coordination Council, which was set up by the opposition in the hopes of negotiating a power transition.” The Post goes on to report that Kolesnikova is “one of three women who became the faces of the Belarusian opposition campaign after their husbands or associates were jailed or barred from running in the presidential election.” The Post adds, “She is the last of the three to remain in Belarus,” and has “emerged as an important rallying figure for the opposition.” The New York Times (9/8, Higgins, 18.61M) and Politico Europe (9/8, 8K), among other news outlets, have more on recent developments in Belarus.

House Panel Wants Administration To Probe Navalny Poisoning.

The AP (9/8, Jalonick) reports that “the top Democrat and the top Republican on the House Foreign Affairs Committee are together calling on President Donald Trump to investigate whether chemical weapons were used by Russia in the poisoning of Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny.” Chairman Eliot Engel and Rep. Michael McCaul (R-TX) “told Trump in a letter Monday that they are ‘deeply concerned’ by reports that Navalny was poisoned in August with a chemical nerve agent.” Engel and McCaul “are pushing for a formal U.S. investigation into whether Russia violated international law or used a lethal weapon against one of its own nationals – a request they say triggers a required 60-day evaluation period under U.S. chemical weapons law.”

Reuters (9/8), meanwhile, reports that France “has postponed a visit to Moscow next week by its foreign and armed forces ministers as European powers seek answers from Russia to Germany’s findings that...Navalny was poisoned.” Foreign Minister Jean-Yves Le Drian and Armed Forces Minister Florence Parly “had been due to go to Moscow as President Emmanuel Macron tries to reduce distrust between Russia and the West, hoping to enlist Russian help in solving the world’s most intractable crises.”

WSJournal Urges Trump To Back Merkel’s Threat To Cancel Pipeline. The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that in response to Russia’s failure so far to cooperate with the investigation into Navalny’s suspected poisoning, German Chancellor Angela Merkel has threatened to cancel her country’s participation in the Nord Stream 2 gas pipeline from Russia. The Journal calls on President Trump to back Merkel.

Radio Free Europe Returns To Hungary After Nearly 30-Year Absence.

The Washington Times (9/8, Taylor, 492K) reports the Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty network is “reopening broadcasting operations in Hungary for the first time in nearly 30 years – a move officials say is necessary to counter ‘disinformation’ sullyng the Eastern European nation’s media landscape.” Hungarians woke Tuesday to “Szabad Európa,” a “21st-century update of the network’s Cold War-era ‘Hungarian Service,’ with new digital platforms aiming to provide ‘objective, fact-based reporting in a country that has witnessed a decline in diverse media voices,’ the network...said in a press release.”

UK Says It May Break International Law In “Limited Way.”

Reuters (9/8, Holden, Bruce) reports Britain “headed into a new round of Brexit trade talks on Tuesday acknowledging it could break international law but only in a ‘limited way’ after reports it may undercut” its Brexit treaty with the EU. As the pound “fell sharply on fears of a no-deal exit, the government’s legal department head quit in disagreement with a plan to overwrite parts” of the treaty signed in January. Asked Tuesday “if anything in the proposed legislation potentially breached” international law, Northern Ireland Minister Brandon Lewis said, “Yes, this does break international law in a very specific and limited way.”

The New York Times (9/8, Landler, 18.61M) reports Prime Minister Boris Johnson’s “Brexit negotiations fell into disarray on Tuesday.” To the Times, Johnson’s “aggressive move to pull back from the agreement about Northern Ireland underscored his determination for Britain to control its own economic destiny – even at the cost of triggering another confrontation” with the EU, “shredding his own diplomacy and raising questions about his government’s commitment to the rule of law.”

Missing American Couple Found Dead In Mexico.

ABC World News Tonight (9/8, story 9, 0:15, Muir, 6.54M) reported briefly that a “chilling investigation [is] under way in Mexico” where authorities discovered the bodies of Ian Hirschsohn and Kathy Harvey, “an American couple on vacation from southern California,” at the bottom of a well in western Mexico. The couple was reported missing last week.

WPost: Nations Should Reject Saudi Verdict In Khashoggi Trial.

The Washington Post (9/8, 14.2M) editorializes that Monday’s sentencing of eight people in Saudi Arabia for the murder and dismemberment of journalist Jamal Khashoggi “was utterly lacking in transparency.” The “supposed punishments,” it argues, “were not meant to satisfy” UN rapporteur Agnes Callamard, but are instead “intended to provide a fig leaf for democratic leaders such as Germany’s Angela Merkel, France’s Emmanuel Macron and Britain’s Boris Johnson,” allowing them to attend a G-20 meeting in November in Riyadh “without appearing to condone the cold-blooded butchering of a renowned journalist.” President Trump, it says, “requires no such excuse,” but the “absence of justice in the Khashoggi case...ought to give pause to those G-20 leaders who still seek to uphold human rights as a pillar of international affairs.”

GSEs, Industry Groups Voice Concerns Over Banklike Proposed Capital Requirements.

American Banker (9/8, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, “A proposal for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac’s capital levels to grow by more than five times once the companies return to the private sector has drawn the ire of both the mortgage industry and consumer groups over concerns the plan could drive up housing costs.” The FHFA’s capital proposal “would align capital requirements” for the GSEs “with those of the large banks and incorporate the spirit of several post-2008 crisis regulations” once the GSEs exit conservatorship. However, “many industry groups and even the two companies themselves pushed back on the idea that the GSEs should be treated like banks.” Freddie Mac EVP and General Counsel Ricardo Anzaldúa said, “While the U.S. bank capital framework may provide a useful precedent, the Enterprises' business models and risk profiles are substantially different from those of banks." Anzaldúa said the GSEs "are pass-through, monoline businesses focused on a traditional, well understood and secured asset class."

Value Walk (9/8, 1K) reports CapWealth Advisors' Tim Pagliara "told ValueWalk in an interview that while many have expressed concern about the proposed numbers for Fannie Mae's and Freddie Mac's capital rule, he doesn't expect it to be finalized at the proposed percentage."

Freddie Mac Announces $534M NPL Auction.

Mortgage Orb (9/8, Bates) reports, "Freddie Mac will be conducting an auction of approximately $534 million of seasoned non-performing residential first lien loans held in its mortgage-related investments portfolio." The NPLs "are being marketed via five pools: four Standard Pool Offerings (SPO) and one Extended Timeline Pool Offering (EXPO), which targets participation by smaller investors, including non-profits and minority, women, disabled, LGBT, veteran or service-disabled veteran-owned businesses (MWDOBs)." Bids are due by October 1 for the SPO pools, and October 15 for the EXPO pool. According to Mortgage Orb, "The SPO and EXPO pools are expected to settle in December 2020."

Seeking Alpha (9/8, Mamtara, CFA, 512K) reports, "Advisors to Freddie Mac on the transaction are Wells Fargo Securities, and First Financial Network. To date, Freddie Mac has sold $8.4B of NPLs and securitized ~$64.8B of RPLs consisting of $28.7B via fully guaranteed PCs, $28.3B via Seasoned Credit Risk Transfer senior/sub securitizations, and $7.8B via Seasoned Loans Structured Transaction offerings."

MBA: Mortgage Forbearance Rate Falls Near A Five-Month Low.

HousingWire (9/8, 23K) reports the nation's forbearance rate dipped in the last week of August, hitting the "lowest level since mid-April, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association." On Tuesday, the MBA reported the national forbearance rate fell from 7.2% to 7.16%. The GSEs' forbearance rate fell from 4.88% to 4.8%, while Ginnie Mae's forbearance rate rose from 9.58% to 9.62%. According to MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni, "High unemployment, and jobless claims consistently around 1 million a week, continue to cause financial strain for some borrowers – and especially for those who work in industries hardest hit by the pandemic."

National Mortgage News (9/8) reports Fratantoni said, "The share of Ginnie Mae loans in forbearance increased again this week, as the current economic crisis continues to disproportionately impact borrowers with FHA and VA loans. As a result, IMB servicers, which have roughly one-third of their portfolio with Ginnie Mae, had a forbearance share that was unchanged, while depositories, which have a larger share of GSE and portfolio loans, saw a decrease."

CoreLogic: Serious Delinquencies Surged In June.

National Mortgage News (9/8) reports serious delinquencies "doubled in June," although late mortgages "leveled out," according to the latest data from CoreLogic. In June, the nation's total delinquency rate "was 7.1%, down marginally from May's 7.3%, but up from 4% for June 2019." The early-stage delinquency rate "declined in June from the same month in 2019 to 1.8% from 2.1%. It now is similar to the rate for 60 to 89 day delinquencies (1.8%, up from 0.6%) and lower than that of seriously delinquent loans." However, "Serious delinquencies are now at 3.4%, which is their highest point since February 2015, CoreLogic said. This is compared with May's 1.5% and June 2019's 1.3%." NMN says recently, "both the Federal Housing Finance Agency and the Federal Housing Administration extended their respective moratoria on foreclosures and evictions through the end of 2020." DS News (9/8, Babb) provides additional coverage.

CoreLogic: Serious Delinquencies May Almost Double By Early 2022. Mortgage Orb (9/8) reports CoreLogic "predicts that, barring additional government programs and support, serious delinquency rates could nearly double from the June 2020 level by early 2022. Not only could millions of families potentially lose their home, through a short sale or foreclosure, but this also could create downward pressure on home prices – and consequently home equity – as distressed sales are pushed back into the for-sale market."

Fannie Mae HPSI Rises 3.3 Points In August.

HousingWire (9/8, 23K) reports, "After a slight falter in July, Fannie Mae's Home Purchase Sentiment Index, a composite index designed to track consumers' housing-related attitudes, intentions and perceptions is back up 3.3 points in August to 77.5. Compared to this time last year, the HPSI is down 16.3 points, but has continued its upward recovery for year-over-year gains past April's eight-and-half-year low." Fannie Mae Chief Economist Doug Duncan credited exceptionally low mortgage rates with the uptick in homebuying sentiment. According to HousingWire, "Last week, Freddie Mac reported the average rate for a 30-year fixed mortgage was 2.93%, 5 basis points higher than the same time a month ago when rates fell to an all-time low. However, respondents who said mortgage rates will make their way back down in the next 12 months increased in August from 16% to 17%."

National Mortgage News (9/8) reports Duncan said, "The HPSI's recovery was driven by near-record low mortgage rates that helped restore much of consumers' positivity on whether it is a good time to buy a home, while also improving the good-time-to-sell sentiment." DS News (9/8, Babb) reports Duncan said Fannie's August survey "was conducted as consumers continue to face uncertainty regarding schools' and businesses' reopening plans and as the CARES Act $600-per-week income supplement expired." Mortgage Orb (9/8, Bates) also covers Fannie's HPSI.

Bankrate Research Suggests Mortgage Rates Could Fall To New Lows In Coming Weeks.

M Report (9/8, Babb) says, "According to a recent post published by the experts at Bankrate, mortgage rates are set to decline even further as fall approaches." The GSEs' 50-bp refi fee is currently "on hold," many mortgage borrowers with forbearance plans are still continuing to make payments, interest rates are low around the world, and the federal deficit is rapidly growing. According to M Report, even with rates near historic lows, borrowers "may have even more cause to celebrate within the coming months."

Zillow: Rise Of Remote Work Could Fuel A Surge In Homeownership.

M Report (9/8, Babb) says the "new era of working from home brought by the coronavirus pandemic could also spark a massive new wave of homeownership, according to a data analysis conducted by Zillow." Zillow estimated that "nearly 2 million renter households who cannot afford the buy a home in their areas would be now be able to move elsewhere in the country and purchase an affordable starter home," thanks to the increased flexibility that remote work provides. Zillow also found that pricey markets like San Francisco "could see a dramatic exodus of renters."

BSI Financial SVP: Servicers' C-Suite Positions Still Lacking In Diversity.

Writing for DS News (9/8, Babb), BSI Financial SVP Allen Price says that the mortgage industry must "build organizations that reflect [its] customers, from the very bottom to the very top levels." According to him, "While diversity has always been important, there is a particular need for servicers to ramp up their diversity and inclusion efforts now." Price concludes, "While there are variances between different segments of the housing economy, overall, most mortgage servicers are still falling short of their goals when it comes to diversity in the C-suite, particularly when it comes to African American representation. Thankfully, there are more strategies and resources available to change this picture. All we need to do is use them."

Opinion: Pandemic Highlights Flaws In Housing Policy That Go Back Decades.

In a Perspective piece for the Washington Post (9/8, 14.2M), historian Gillet Rosenblith argues that the pandemic has "exposed the consequences of decades of bad public housing policy." According to her, even before the pandemic struck, the placement of public housing "often worsened racial and economic segregation, separating low-income, disproportionately African American tenant families from centers of economic and political activity, public transportation, jobs and more." She argues, "Before the CDC order, landlords were heading to courts to try to evict non- and underpaying tenants. Should landlords pursue these claims in 2021, the economic repercussions of covid-19 will probably exacerbate inequality, demonstrating the real impact of empowerment politics that didn't actually empower anyone."

Analysis: Three Factors Primed To Sway Mortgage Rates In September.

In a NerdWallet piece carried by TheStreet (9/8, 362K), Holden Lewis says that three factors are "likely" to affect mortgage rates: the Fed's "friendly wave to higher inflation"; risks lenders face that are tied to the recession; and a "sizzling pace of home sales." In addition, according to Lewis, the coming GSE refi fee "could push rates higher: Instead of expecting borrowers to pay the fee upfront as a closing cost, some lenders will raise rates on refinance mortgages instead, by 0.125% or less."

Markets

10-Year Yield Ticks Down.

MarketWatch (9/9, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.682 percent.

Dollar Firms.

Reuters (9/9, Westbrook) reports, "The dollar found support on Wednesday as a stock market slide spooked investors into selling riskier currencies, while worries about Brexit pushed the pound down to a new six-week low." Against a basket of currencies, the dollar jumped nearly 2%. The yen "also climbed to a one-week high of 105.83 per dollar." The euro, meanwhile, held steady, last trading at $1.1772.

Gold Falls.

Reuters (9/9, Patel) reports, "Gold prices slipped on Wednesday as the U.S. dollar rose to multi-week highs ahead of monetary policy strategies from major central banks in North America and Europe." Spot gold "was down 0.3% to $1,925.20 per ounce by 0239 GMT," while US gold futures "fell 0.4% to $1,935.20."

Oil Bounces Back.

Reuters (9/9, Ghaddar) reports, "Oil futures clawed back some of the losses they sustained in the previous session, but a rebound in COVID-19 cases in some countries undermined hopes for a steady recovery in global demand." Brent crude "was up 44 cents, or 1.1%, at $40.22 a barrel by 0752 GMT after dropping more than 5% on Tuesday to fall below $40 a barrel for the first time since June." US crude "was up 50 cents, or 1.4%, at $37.26 a barrel, having fallen nearly 8% in the previous session."

Cybersecurity

Hartford, Connecticut Schools Delay Reopening Amid Ransomware Attack.

CyberScoop (9/8, Lyngaas) reports, "U.S. school administrators have spent months mapping out how the coronavirus would disrupt the start of the school year. But officials in Hartford, Conn., are dealing with another, unexpected challenge now that a ransomware attack has forced the city's public schools to postpone classes." According to CyberScoop, "The file-locking malware 'caused an outage of critical systems and the restoration of those systems [is] not complete,' Hartford Public School officials said in a statement. 'This includes the system that communicates our transportation routes to our bus company and it is preventing our ability to operate schools on Tuesday.'" Schools and universities "were already facing a barrage of ransomware threats before the COVID-19 pandemic forced administrators to shift classes online, potentially opening up new avenues for attack." Hartford Mayor Luke Bronin said "city officials have contacted the FBI."

Lawmakers Discuss Creation Of National Cyber Director.

Federal News Network (9/8, Maucione, 220) reports top members of the House Armed Services Committee "and on a congressionally-mandated cyber panel say they are cautiously optimistic that legislators and the White House can come to an agreement to form a national cyber director position this year." The position, which has "support from both Democrats and Republicans and is the brainchild of the Cyberspace Solarium Commission – would serve as the principal advisor to the president on cybersecurity strategy and policy." The role would also "consult with federal departments to develop the U.S. national cyber strategy and supervise its implementation." During the Billington Cybersecurity Summit on Tuesday, Rep. Mike Gallagher (R-WI) said, "The bottom line is that there's no single person that's waking up every single day giving this issue the high level priority that it needs." House Armed Services Emerging Threats Subcommittee Chairman Jim Langevin (D-RI) said, "Having an international focus and having someone at the State Department is going to help coordinate those cyber strategies and responses." Langevin "said he has had productive conversations on the issue with Trump's Chief of Staff Mark Meadows."

Vice Adm. Ross Myers To Lead US Navy's Fleet Cyber.

ExecutiveGov (9/8, Martin) reports former US Cyber Command deputy commander Vice Adm. Ross Myers has been "assigned to lead Fleet Cyber, a command tasked to administer the U.S. Navy's information and cyber activities." Myers leaves his USCYBERCOM post "to Maj. Gen. Charles Moore who also received a promotion to lieutenant general, USCYBERCOM said Thursday." According to Cyber Command Commander Gen. Paul Nakasone, "As the J5, chief of staff and then the deputy commander, Ross has demonstrated his appreciation for partnership as a foundational leadership principle."

COVID-19 Research Institutions Strengthening Cyber Defenses.

Politico (9/8, Starks, 4.29M) reports public and private US organizations conducting COVID-19 research "say they've mounted additional digital defenses to address new threats posed to Covid-19 research specifically, and they've made some progress – although everyone agrees there's still a lot to fix." CISA Assistant Director for Cybersecurity Bryan Ware said, "The health care sector, broadly, has really been an underperformer from a cybersecurity perspective."

CyberScoop (9/8, Vavra) reports the pandemic has been "a clarion call to supply chain security efforts for the entire federal government, according to Bill Evanina, the Director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center at the Office of the Director of National Intelligence."

Security Experts Warn Schools "Unprepared For Likely Rash Of Cyberattacks."

CQ Roll Call (9/8, DeChiaro, 154K) reports school districts reliant on "online learning because of COVID-19 may soon find students and teachers locked out of computer networks for days or weeks because of cyberattacks that could set kids further back and endanger their privacy." Districts around the country "are woefully unprepared to manage the heightened risks of online learning, say cybersecurity and education experts who predict a rise in ransomware attacks as millions of children begin a new school year in a pandemic." Because of online learning, school districts "experience a proliferation of devices interacting on their networks, stretching existing security measures thin" and exposing them to less secure home networks. It's a "near certainty that hackers are aware of the vulnerabilities, said Chris Hinkley, who heads the threat resistance unit at Armor Defense Inc., a Texas-based cybersecurity firm, and has been tracking ransomware attacks against schools throughout the year."

Hartford Delays School Reopening A Day Due Ransomware Attack. The Hartford \(CT\) Courant (9/8, Lurye, 698K) reports a computer ransomware attack leveled at Hartford, Connecticut "caused an outage of critical city systems over the weekend, forcing the city to postpone Tuesday's school reopening by one day, according to officials." A software system that "delivers real-time information on bus routes was among those impacted by the attack on Hartford's servers, crippling the district's ability to serve the roughly 4,000 students who take the bus, Superintendent of Schools Leslie Torres-Rodriguez said Tuesday." Hartford Mayor Luke Bronin "said Tuesday that an investment in new cybersecurity software last year 'significantly limited' the damage of the virus, which identified itself as a ransomware attack but did not include a specific demand. Instead, it directed its target to use an email address to get more information on the ransom." Quinnipiac University Cybersecurity Program Director Fred Scholl "said that instruction was likely the attackers' attempt at negotiating with the city for as much digital currency as it could get."

Researchers Say Domain Registrars Doing Little To Stop Coronavirus Scams.

The Washington Post (9/8, Riley, 14.2M) reports Domain registrars have "done little to prevent the sale of dozens of Internet domains with the potential to spread hoaxes related to covid-19, a three-month investigation by the consumer watchdog group Digital Citizens Alliance found." Scammers can use these websites to "disseminate false information about the pandemic that could result in things like identity theft and the distribution of fake or unauthorized medications, consumer advocates say." Researchers at the nonprofit "say that between May and July, they were easily able to purchase coronavirus-related domains such as Getcoronavaccines.com, freecoronavaccine.net and Bleachcoronaviruscure.com from registrars including GoDaddy, Domain.com and Google Domains."

Federal Reserve

Vast Majority Of Main Street Lending Program Loans Exceed $1M.

Bloomberg (9/8, Saraiva, 4.73M) reports the Fed's Main Street Lending Program, "aimed at supporting small to midsize businesses through the coronavirus pandemic, has mostly made loans in the millions of dollars, according to data disclosed by the central bank Tuesday." Out of 118 loans bought through August by the program, "only 11 were under $1 million. Only one, at $265,000 was close to the $250,000 minimum loan size." The Fed "initially announced the program with a minimum loan size of $1 million in April. It reduced it twice, bringing it to the existing minimum after it received comments from businesses and industry groups calling for more aid to smaller entities."

Fed Examining Banks' Efforts To Improve Race, Gender Diversity.

American Banker (9/8, Passman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the Fed is exploring ways to understand banks' efforts to promote racial and gender diversity. Program Director of the Fed's Office of Diversity and Inclusion Sheila Clark said, "In the last two years, regulated entities slightly increased their submissions of assessments of their diversity policies and practices." The most significant accomplishments according to Clark were an increase in race and gender diversity among the Fed's board and senior leadership.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

OCC's Brooks Calls State Regulation Of Payments Giants "A Vestige Of History."

American Banker (9/8, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that in what "appeared to be a sharp escalation in the ongoing battle" between the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and state regulators, Acting Comptroller Brian Brooks "suggested that states should defer to the authority of the federal regulator in supervising large global payments companies." During a Q&A hosted by American Banker, Brooks said, "It's important we have a dual banking system. But there are also gigantic global enterprises that are only regulated by the states as a vestige of history. ... There's no reason that they should be regulated by the states at all, and the law, we don't believe, requires that." The OCC and states "have long been at odds over federal preemption policies," with tensions rising "lately as state regulators have mounted a legal challenge to the OCC's special-purpose fintech charter" and "have spoken out against an OCC plan to tailor a charter specifically for payments companies."

Vartanian: Congress Must End "Regulatory Tug-Of-War" Between OCC And States. In an opinion piece for The Hill (9/8, 2.98M), Thomas P. Vartanian, a former bank regulator and the Executive Director of The Antonin Scalia Law School's Program on Financial Regulation & Technology, writes that in the "regulatory tug-of-war" over the preemption of state usury laws and the financial oversight of fintechs, there is a "much more fundamental issue at stake that is being exacerbated by new products and services driven by technology. When the parties to a transaction can be anywhere and have access to financial services offerings around the world from wherever they are seated, location-based regulation" loses its effectiveness and adds "unnecessary costs and credit restrictions which are not offset by the consumer protections that it can provide." Congress "must agree on who takes the lead and when," as the ongoing battle between the OCC and states "provides little benefit to the public, and the specter of 50 different state standards facilitating fintech innovation seems contradictory."

Jiko Acquisition Shows Willingness Of OCC's Brooks To Welcome Fintechs Into Regulation.

American Banker (9/8, Crosman, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports on the backstory of how fintech Jiko bought community bank Mid-Central and "what the head of Jiko says he plans to do with the bank." The Jiko acquisition "occurred shortly after the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency granted Varo Money a national bank charter," and in part, reflects the willingness of Acting Comptroller Brian Brooks "to welcome payments companies, challenger banks and other fintechs into the regulated banking environment."

FinCEN Report: Fewer Banks Servicing Marijuana Industry.

Banking Dive (9/8, Hrushka) reports that according to FinCEN, fewer financial institutions serviced the marijuana industry in June compared with the same month last year. The agency "attributed the decline to several factors, including new guidance for hemp-related businesses, as well as the impact of the coronavirus pandemic." The initial decline "coincided with the release of interagency guidance for hemp-related businesses in early December." The OCC, the Fed, the FDIC, and FinCEN "issued long-awaited guidance clarifying that banks no longer need to file suspicious activity reports (SARs) for hemp-related businesses." The decline in banks filing SARs, however, "has continued into 2020."

Pandemic Speeds Up Push To Digital As Bank Branches Close (OCC Mention).

The Financial Times (9/8, Walker, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports, "Swiss lender Credit Suisse is set to launch an overhaul of its digital banking offering, as it uses the coronavirus crisis as a springboard..."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Give Money To Babies." The New York Times (9/8, 18.61M) says the proposal by New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) for a "baby bonds" program that "would create a $1,000 savings account for each child born into a New Jersey household with an annual income below about $131,000" has "the potential to change the trajectory of individual lives, giving New Jersey kids a better chance to thrive and prosper." The Times says, "Black people are particularly disadvantaged by inequalities of wealth and opportunity in the United States" and Murphy's proposal "is an elegant approach to reducing those racial gaps." However, the Times adds that it is "much easier for a federal program to provide the big bucks. The real value of the New Jersey program may be in the work of hammering out the details, and the trial-and-error of implementation, which can provide lessons for creating a larger initiative."

Washington Post.

"The Economy Needs Another Round Of Fiscal Support. Congress's Impasse Has To End." The Washington Post (9/8, 14.2M) argues that "last Friday's unexpectedly strong [jobs] report from the Labor Department...was no cause for complacency, of the kind implied by" NEC Director Kudlow's "breezy remark that the economy could 'live with' a failure by Congress to strike a deal, because it is 'on a self-sustaining recovery path.'" The Post adds, "Nor is there a case for going small on a next round of fiscal support, as in the 'skinny' deal, reportedly worth about $500 billion." Yet "at the same time, Democratic leaders must take changing realities into account as they shape their negotiating position. In particular, their insistence on renewing a $600 weekly supplement to unemployment insurance benefits no longer seems justifiable."

"The Khashoggi Verdict Is Meant To Provide A Fig Leaf. Democratic Leaders Shouldn't Take It." The Washington Post (9/8, 14.2M) editorializes that Monday's sentencing of eight people in Saudi Arabia for the murder and dismemberment of journalist Jamal Khashoggi "was utterly lacking in transparency." The "supposed punishments," it argues, "were not meant to satisfy" UN rapporteur Agnes Callamard, but are instead "intended to provide a fig leaf for democratic leaders such as Germany's Angela Merkel, France's Emmanuel Macron and Britain's Boris Johnson," allowing them to attend a G-20 meeting in November in Riyadh "without appearing to condone the cold-blooded butchering of a renowned journalist." President Trump, it says, "requires no such excuse," but the "absence of justice in the Khashoggi case...ought to give pause to those G-20 leaders who still seek to uphold human rights as a pillar of international affairs."

"An Appeals Court Ruling Is An Important Victory For Gavin Grimm And Other Transgender Students." The Washington Post (9/8, 14.2M) editorializes the US Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit last month ruled in favor of Gavin Grimm, a transgender student, in his five-year-long battle with the Gloucester County School Board over his ability to use the boys bathroom. The Post says it hopes the school board, "which could still seek further appeal, finally gets the message."

Wall Street Journal.

"A Trump Comeback?" The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says that President Trump is clearly trailing as the campaign enters its final two months, and if Democrats can keep the focus on Trump himself, Joe Biden will win. The Journal says the GOP must turn the focus to Biden's agenda, which the Journal calls the most left-wing of any major-party candidate in generations.

"Navalny And Nord Stream 2." The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes that in response to Russia's failure so far to cooperate with the investigation into Alexei Navalny's suspected poisoning, German Chancellor Angela Merkel has threatened to cancel her country's participation in the Nord Stream 2 gas pipeline from Russia. The Journal calls on President Trump to back Merkel.

"Government Vs. Private Covid Layoffs." The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) argues that while Democrats are demanding a bailout for states based on their claim that government layoffs are impeding the recovery, the August jobs report shows that government workers felt the least pain during the pandemic. Arguing that the skinny relief bill offered by Senate Republicans, which excludes money for states, is the right policy and questions why taxpayers in other parts of the country should pay for public worker pensions in Illinois or New Jersey.

"The Middle-Class Tax Ratchet." The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial faults the Administration of New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) for a 22% increase in the state's gasoline tax that was announced at the end of August. New Jersey calculates its gas tax with an automatic formula that raises the rate when revenue falls. While Republicans say Murphy can stop the increase, as his Administration did last year, Murphy claims he has no control over the gas-tax rate.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, everyone is still talking about The Atlantic's report that Trump called fallen service members 'losers' and 'suckers.' And yesterday, when Trump was asked about it, he once again denied ever saying it. ... Other than the 245 times Trump has actually called someone a loser and a sucker on Twitter, he'd never say anything like that."

Jimmy Fallon: "That's right, Trump allegedly made outrageously offensive remarks, so you know what that means: Nothing happens to Trump, and Billy Bush gets fired."

Jimmy Fallon: "I'm not sure what's more upsetting, the comments Trump reportedly made or what he's going to do to change the subject. And that's why we're nuking the moon."

Jimmy Fallon: "That was a pretty crazy press conference. At one point, Trump went off on a rant attacking military leaders, because when you're in a scandal about calling soldiers names, the best offense is to antagonize their bosses."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump's campaign has already spent $800 million, and he's still losing by almost 10 points. So far, it's the worst money spent since you bought Sketchers Shape-Ups."

Jimmy Fallon: "Seriously, they blew through $800 million in a few months. Who's running his campaign, Trump in the '80s?"

Jimmy Fallon: "Now Trump is claiming he's going to spend up to $100 million of his own money. It's a great idea. Mike Bloomberg heard and was like, 'Yeah, good luck with that.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "The campaign also just spent $156,000 on planes that pull banners. So their advertising strategy is basically the same as The Clam Shack down at Jersey Shore."

Jimmy Fallon: "You can tell Trump's campaign is running out of money because this weekend, they sunk a bunch of boats for the insurance money."

Jimmy Fallon: "But this morning, Trump denied the report and sent a tweet saying that they have lots of money. It would have been more convincing if Trump's next tweet wasn't his Venmo handle and the prayer hands emoji."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump's tweets look like a spam email you shouldn't open."

Jimmy Fallon: [On the Trump boat parade in Texas where boats sunk] "Just when it seemed like things couldn't sink any lower for Trump and his supporters, it appears that they literally can. ... You know if Trump were on board, he would have been like, 'Out of the way, women and children. Presidents first.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Ironically, while the boats were sinking, Republicans in Congress spent two months debating whether or not to send them a life raft."

Seth Meyers: "According to a new report, President Trump canceled the 2018 visit to an American veterans cemetery in France because he was afraid his hair would get disheveled in the rain. What? When has it ever been sheveled? ... He always looks like Wile E. Coyote right after the plan backfired."

Seth Meyers: "Today was Senator Bernie Sanders' 79th birthday. But unfortunately when he blew out his candles, all his party guests were still there. It's 7:30 in the PM! Don't you people have homes?"

James Corden: "Twitter blew up today because Donald Trump's former lawyer, Michael Cohen, released an explosive tell-all book with some pretty damning allegations against the President. ... There's been like 10 of these. ... But this is the one. This is it. This is the one that will turn the tide on Trump. All these people were all there while the things were happening. I'm starting to think they only wrote the books for money."

James Corden: "The book is called 'Disloyal: A Memoir: The True Story Of The Former Personal Attorney To President Donald J. Trump.' That's too long of a title. Isn't it? It's too long and I think he's made a mistake. If you think about it, the best books in the world are short titles – 'The Bible,' 'War And Peace,' 'Paddington.'"

James Corden: "'Disloyal: A Memoir: The True Story Of The Former Personal Attorney To President Donald J. Trump.' You can tell Cohen was a lawyer. That title was definitely written by someone who got paid by the hour."

James Corden: "According to Cohen, Trump wasn't too fond of beloved South African President and Nobel Peace Prize winner Nelson Mandela. Trump didn't like Mandela, he didn't like Obama. There's a pattern here, and I can't put my finger on it."

President Trump, who still has Covid-19, takes off his face mask yesterday as he arrives at the White House from Walter Reed Medical Center.

President Trump

President Trump returned to the White House yesterday after being treated for Covid-19 at Walter Reed Medical Center, but his homecoming has created more confusion and concern. Doctors warned that the President isn't out of the woods yet, but upon arriving at the White House, Trump almost immediately removed his mask and conducted business bare-faced, even with numerous staff members standing by. He also tweeted that people shouldn't be afraid of the coronavirus, even though it's killed more than 210,000 people on American soil, few if any of whom had access to the advanced medical care the President received. As of yesterday, Trump was still on dexamethasone, a steroid, and will receive another round of remdesivir today. Meanwhile, more people in his inner circle have tested positive for Covid-19, including White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany.

Coronavirus

The coronavirus has infected about 10% of the world's population, the World Health Organization estimates. The official count stands at about 35.3 million, but health experts agree that's probably a massive undercount. The CDC says cases in the US alone could be underestimated by at least 90%. The virus is also sweeping through major institutions. At least 2,000 TSA members have tested positive, as have at least 159 staff in the EU's executive branch. Meanwhile, the Trump administration is still angling for a pre-Election Day vaccine by reportedly blocking new FDA vaccine guidelines that would make that tight time line all but impossible. Oh, and the CDC has updated its guidance yet again to clarify that Covid-19 can spread by airborne transmission as well as close contact.

Supreme Court

On the first day of the new Supreme Court term, Justices Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito delivered a scathing criticism of Obergefell v. Hodges, the decision that cleared the way for the nationwide legalization of same-sex marriage. Thomas raised the religious liberty implications of the decision and wrote that the precedent allows courts and governments to treat religious opponents of same-sex marriage as "bigots." The swift attack has raised anxiety among progressives and LGBTQ rights activists that the court -- now without the late Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg -- will try to chip away at the precedent and continue its trend of ruling in favor of religious conservatives.

Police violence

A police officer in Texas has been arrested and charged with murder after fatally shooting a 31-year-old Black man who was intervening in a domestic dispute. Wolfe City Police Officer Shaun Lucas shot Jonathan Price while responding to a call over the weekend, and an investigation is ongoing. Meanwhile, Northern California prosecutors are reopening the investigation into the 2009 death of Oscar Grant at the hands of Bay Area Rapid Transit officers following renewed calls from Grant's family. Grant, a Black man, was fatally shot while lying facedown on a platform in Oakland. And in Louisville, Kentucky, a second grand juror involved in the Breonna Taylor case has reportedly come forward to an area activist and wants to speak freely about the deliberations.

Kyrgyzstan

A parliamentary election in Kyrgyzstan has dragged the Central Asian country to the brink of revolt. Protests erupted after two establishment parties, one of which is close to President Sooronbai Jeenbekov, swept Sunday's vote, according to a Reuters report. Protesters broke into government and security headquarters and freed former President Almazbek Atambayev, who was sentenced to a lengthy prison term on corruption charges after falling out with Jeenbekov. Demonstrators also demanded that the recent vote results be canceled. According to local reports, the Central Election Commission may consider the request. Kyrgyzstan, which is closely allied with Russia, has a history of political volatility. In the past 15 years, two presidents have been toppled by revolts.

Treasury in the News

Aide Says Pelosi, Mnuchin Continued COVID Relief Talks Monday, But No Deal Imminent.

Bloomberg (10/5, Wasson, Dorning, 4.73M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi "engaged in another round of talks Monday on a pandemic relief package with no sign they are close to deal, despite the urging of President Donald Trump to get it done." Mnuchin and Pelosi "have maintained talks by telephone since last week, when they met in person for the first time since early August. They're attempting to bridge a still-yawning gap between the Democratic $2.2 trillion proposal and a $1.6 trillion White House offer." The two of them "spoke by phone for one hour on Monday and plan to speak again on Tuesday, according to Drew Hammill, a Pelosi spokesman. They discussed spending amounts and will exchange written proposals, Hammill said."

Reuters (10/5, Lambert, Heavey) reports White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows on Monday "told Fox News he has been in constant contact with" Mnuchin "regarding negotiations with...Pelosi, 'to try to make sure that we can try to find a way to move forward.'" Meadows is quoted as saying, "I do think that there is the potential for a deal as long as politics do not get in the way again."

Assistant Treasury Secretary for Public Affairs Monica Crowley said on Bloomberg Radio (10/5, 4.73M), "The conversations are continuing. They began in August when Secretary Mnuchin and Chief of Staff Mark Meadows went to Capitol Hill to speak to Leader Schumer and Speaker Pelosi and, frankly, Republicans, as well, to see if we get all sides on board because there is a consensus view that there is needed economic stimulus, economic relief particularly to certain sectors of the economy that were hit hard and remain hit hard by a pandemic. ... The problem is getting agreement to a topline number. ... I can tell you that the conversations are ongoing and that the administration is completely committed to getting the American people the relief that they need, as we have done throughout this crisis."

The Hill (10/5, Lillis, 2.98M), CNBC (10/5, Calia, 3.62M), CBS News (10/5, Picchi, 3.68M), and Fox Business (10/5, De Lea, 1.73M) also report.

Kilgore: Trump Wants Mnuchin To Close The Deal, But Needs McConnell's Buy-In. In a column for New York Magazine (10/5, Kilgore, 1.1M), Ed Kilgore writes that President Trump's COVID-19 diagnosis "happened to break just as Nancy Pelosi and Steven Mnuchin had reportedly reached the endgame of their on-again, off-again talks." Kilgore says Trump "seemed most determined to keep the stimulus story in the news," tweeting to "get it done" in what Kilgore calls "a very public set of instructions to Mnuchin to keep on talking." However, "if there's a deal, McConnell would not only have to get his troops to return to Washington but would presumably be expected by the White House to crush or ignore any conservative backlash against the concessions Mnuchin has made."

WPost Analysis: Much Of COVID Spending "Missed The Mark."

The Washington Post (10/5, A1, Whoriskey, MacMillan, O'Connell, 14.2M) says on its front page that "the four spending bills that Congress passed earlier this year to address the coronavirus crisis amounted to one of the costliest relief efforts in U.S. history," with "the $4 trillion total of government grants and loans exceed[ing] the cost of 18 years of war in Afghanistan." But "six months later...the nation's coronavirus battle is far from won, and if the prodigious relief spending was supposed to target the neediest and move the country beyond the pandemic, much of the money missed the mark." The Post says Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "one of the key negotiators, said it is clear that more relief is necessary," quoting his Sept. 22 testimony to Congress: "I believe a targeted package is still needed, and the administration is ready to reach a bipartisan agreement."

Lighthizer Joined Mnuchin In Opposing Import Ban On China Due To Trade Deal Negotiations.

In a profile on USTR Robert Lighthizer, the New York Times (10/6, Swanson, 18.61M) reports Lighthizer "has recently intervened to shoot down several policy measures that could have threatened China economically, including efforts by U.S. Customs and Border Protection to impose a sweeping ban on cotton and tomatoes from Xinjiang." The Times says the measure, "which was scheduled to be announced the morning of Sept. 8, would have barred many products from Xinjiang over concerns that they were made with forced labor by Uighurs and other Muslim minorities that China has detained in camps in the region.” But Lighthizer “joined Steven Mnuchin, the Treasury Secretary, Sonny Perdue, the Secretary of Agriculture, and Mark Meadows, the White House chief of staff, in objecting to the measure on the grounds that it could provoke China, threatening American cotton exports and the trade deal, people familiar with the matter said.”

Treasury Grant News

Billings, MT To Receive $13.7M In First-Responder Wage Offset Grants.

KTVQ-TV Billings (MT) Billings, MT (10/6, 3K) reports Billings’ government “is on track to receive $13.7 million in federal COVID-19 relief money to offset first responder wage and benefits costs incurred since March 12, and city officials are starting to talk about how to spend it.” Billings Finance Director Andy Zoeller “brought an update to the Billings City Council Monday on the grant-eligible expenses the city has incurred since the start of the pandemic. The grant money has stipulations decided by the U.S. Department of the Treasury, Zoeller said.” Billings “benefited from five different allocations from the CARES Act, including the first-responder money, Zoeller said. The other four allocations went to specific departments.”

WA City Receives $651K In Treasury Grants For Small Business Relief.

The Lynden (WA) Tribune (10/5) reports the Treasury Department disbursed to “the City of Lynden...$651,150 in the form of grants to be awarded to businesses in need due to losses suffered from coronavirus impacts.” The money “was administered through the Washington State Department of Commerce. The city created a Coronavirus Relief Fund.”

FL County Reopens Applications For Small Business CARES Act Grants.

The Palm Coast (FL) Observer (10/6, 71K) reports Flagler County, FL “is reopening new applications from small businesses for the CARES (Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security) Act federal stimulus monies beginning Monday afternoon, Oct. 5.” The funds “may be used for a variety of COVID-19 related government expenses, as well as assistance programs for residents and business negatively fiscally impacted by COVID-19.” Flagler County “will distribute the funds as outlined in guidance provided the U.S. Department of Treasury and the state of Florida.”

Leading National News

Trump Returns To White House, Telling Nation, “Don’t Be Afraid Of COVID.”

Coverage of President Trump’s return to the White House from Walter Reed Medical Center focuses on continuing unanswered questions about the President’s health, and on the message he delivered Monday evening telling Americans not to “be afraid of COVID.”

The President’s move back to the White House coincided with the East Coast broadcast time of the network newscasts, which covered the President’s movements extensively. David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (10/5, lead story, 5:10, 6.69M), “President Trump is leaving Walter Reed Medical Center and heading back to the White House, after being taken to Walter Reed Friday night. His medical team treat[ed] the President aggressively with a variety of medications, along with a powerful steroid.” The President’s doctor Sean Conley said “late [Monday] he may not be entirely out of the woods yet for something this early in his course of treatment. In fact, the doctors said, we won’t know until next weekend, several days from now, truly how the President will fare from this, given the normal course from the virus.” ABC’s Jonathan Karl: “How is the President really doing? It’s been nearly possible to discern, amidst a series of false or conflicting statements from the White House and [Conley] over the past four days.”

Norah O’Donnell said on the CBS Evening News (10/5, lead story, 3:45, 4.18M), “President Trump’s decision to return to the White House comes after his doctors said this afternoon in a press conference that he continues to improve. They said he has not had a fever in three days and he is up and walking around. But they also said he ‘may not be entirely out of the woods.’ Take a look at this tweet this afternoon. The President told Americans, ‘Don’t be afraid of COVID, don’t let it dominate your life.’ This comes as more than seven million people in the US have contracted the virus and more than 210,000 have died from it nationwide. ... There are still very many unanswered questions as we come on the air about the President’s symptoms and about how sick he actually is.” Dr. Jon Lapook said on the CBS Evening News (10/5, story 2, 1:45, O’Donnell, 4.18M), “In the first week you can have mild symptoms, a so-called viral replication phase. And in the second week, suddenly people can take a turn for the worse, and that is so-called inflammatory phase. So that is one of the reasons why they’re saying we are not out of the woods yet. Because even though we are just day four or five at this point, his symptoms may be getting better right now, but they are not going to take anything for granted.”

Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (10/5, story 2, 2:45, 5.69M) that Trump’s release from Walter Reed came “after days of conflicting messages from his doctors and the White House staff, and there are still a lot of unanswered questions about his condition.” NBC’s Hallie Jackson: “No more fever, no more cough, the President’s doctors say. No fogginess from the coronavirus treatments he’s getting, but also no answer on what his lung scans show with concerns the President might have pneumonia, and no response on when his last negative test was, a critical point for determining who may have been exposed and at risk.”

The President posted 18 brief political tweets between 6:19 a.m. and 7:14 a.m., and tweeted several other times during the day before tweeting at 2:26 p.m., “It is reported that the Media is upset because I got into a secure vehicle to say thank you to the many fans and supporters who were standing outside of the hospital for many hours, and even days, to pay their respect to their President. If I didn’t do it, Media would say RUDE!!!” At 2:37 p.m., Trump tweeted, “I will be leaving the great Walter Reed Medical Center today at 6:30 P.M. Feeling really good! Don’t be afraid of Covid. Don’t let it dominate your life. We have developed, under the Trump Administration, some really great drugs & knowledge. I feel better than I did 20 years ago!” Later, the President tweeted an 86-second video in which he said in part, “I went, I didn’t feel so good, and two days ago, I could have left two days ago, two days ago I felt great, like better than I have in a long time. I said just recently, better than 20 years ago. Don’t let it dominate. Don’t let it take over your lives. ... And now I’m better. And maybe I’m immune, I don’t know. But don’t let it dominate your lives.”

The AP (10/5, Colvin, Miller, Madhani) reports Trump “staged a dramatic return to the White House Monday night after leaving the military hospital where he was receiving an unprecedented level of care for COVID-19. He immediately ignited a new controversy by declaring that despite his illness the nation should not fear the virus that has killed more than 210,000 Americans – and then he entered the White House without a protective mask.” The AP says the President’s message “alarmed infectious disease experts and suggested the president’s own illness had not caused him to rethink his often-cavalier attitude toward the disease.” The Washington Post (10/5, Rucker, Parker, Dawsey, 14.2M) says Trump’s “quest to come across as commanding even while suffering from a deadly illness that is especially dangerous for men of his age and with his comorbidities is in keeping with one of his great phobias in life: appearing weak.”

The New York Times (10/5, Kolata, Rabin, 18.61M) reports, “Experts were outraged by the president’s comments about a disease that has killed nearly 210,000 people in the United States. Public health experts had hoped” that Trump, “chastened by his own infection with the coronavirus and the cases that have erupted among his staff, would act decisively to persuade his supporters that wearing masks and social distancing were essential to protecting themselves and their loved ones.” The Wall Street Journal (10/5, A1, Restuccia, Leary, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that in a video message, Trump said in part, “Now I’m better. And maybe I’m immune, I don’t know.”

The Washington Post (10/5, Olorunnipa, Dawsey, 14.2M) says Trump’s “statement – seeming to again minimize the pandemic, something he has done consistently since it emerged as a threat earlier this year – immediately drew rebukes. ... But Trump has given little indication that he plans to change his behavior if or when he is told by doctors that he can resume normal activities.” The Los Angeles Times (10/5, Bierman, Stokols, 4.64M) says Trump’s “advice to not be afraid of COVID rang alarms among health professionals, who pointed out that the disease remains deadly and is spiking in numerous states. For now, they said, Trump remains contagious and should isolate himself at the White House for 10 days to avoid infecting others.”

The New York Times (10/5, Haberman, Karni, 18.61M) writes, “Itching to get out of the hospital,” the President “got his wish on Monday evening.” The New York Times (10/5, Thomas, Grady, 18.61M) says in another report, “After landing on the South Lawn, Mr. Trump ascended a flight of stairs and then turned to face his helicopter – and the live television cameras – and removed his mask before giving the departing Marine One a long salute.” Breitbart (10/5, 673K) reports, “One reporter shouted a question at the president, asking if he was a ‘super-spreader’ of the coronavirus. Trump, wearing a mask, did not respond, but said, ‘Thank you,’ to the press and flashed a thumbs-up sign.” CNN (10/5, Reston, Liptak, 83.16M) reports on its website, “Peeling off his mask, Trump posed in salute as his helicopter departed before walking inside. The building he’s returning to has become a center for viral contagion – in part because of disregard for mitigation measures.”

USA Today (10/5, Fritze, Subramanian, Jackson, Collins, 10.31M) reports, “White House aides were eager for the images of a president triumphantly returning home after fighting the virus – a scene that could have implications for his reelection bid. But Trump’s medical team has provided scattered and inconsistent details about the president’s condition and it was unclear when he would resume his campaign.” Major Garrett said on the CBS Evening News (10/5, story 3, 2:30, O’Donnell, 4.2M), “Already, politically there is this aura around the President – ‘he has beaten COVID-19.’ There is almost this heroic meme that’s being developed by Republicans and Trump supporters, so what the White House advisors I talked with said there was a lively conversation earlier today about the President leaving Walter Reed and coming back to the White House. And the conversation was as follows: The President, if he comes back to the White House, has to stay there. If he goes back to Walter Reed for any medical reason, it will break this narrative of his heroic triumph over COVID-19.”

The New York Times (10/5, Jakes, 18.61M) reports that the Trump campaign is “hoping the nation will rally around the ailing president as he battles the coronavirus. But the first polls conducted since the president’s announcement of his diagnosis early Friday did not seem to show a sympathy bounce.” CNN (10/5, Agiesta, 83.16M) reports on its website that “two-thirds of Americans” in a CNN poll say Trump “handled the risk of coronavirus infection to others around him irresponsibly,” and “69% of Americans said they trusted little of what they heard from the White House about the President’s health.” Politico (10/5, Lizza, Lippman, 4.29M) says Republicans “are trying to game out the politics of the president’s illness. ... The thinking among Republicans about the potential scenarios they may face over the next few weeks range from this could actually help Trump to we are on the cusp of party-wide catastrophe.”

During a town hall hosted by NBC (10/5, 3.08M) on Monday, Joe Biden said, “I would hope that the President having gone through what he went through – I’m glad he’s coming along pretty well – would communicate the right lesson to the American people. Masks matter. ... It saves lives. It prevents the spread of the disease. Social distancing. Instead of talking about – the only thing I heard was one of the tweets saying don’t be so concerned about all this, essentially. There’s a lot to be concerned about. 210,000 people have died.”

The Houston Chronicle (10/5, 730K) reports Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX) said in a Monday interview, “I think he let his guard down, and I think in his desire to try to demonstrate that we are somehow coming out of this and that the danger is not still with us – I think he got out over his skis and frankly, I think it’s a lesson to all of us that we need to exercise self discipline.”

The Washington Post (10/5, 14.2M) says in an editorial, “Trump has regarded face masks with foolhardy contempt, displaying the same bravado with which he summoned states to reopen, held mass rallies without social distancing or masks, and tamped down warnings of danger from government experts. In the past few days, this casual disregard for others has been on display again, including an inexplicable joyride outside of Walter Reed National Military Medical Center that put at risk those in the vehicle with him. There has been no sign of contact tracing at the White House as the contagion has spread down the corridors. This is a most callous hubris."

Dana Milbank writes in the Washington Post (10/5, 14.2M), "A more selfish man has never occupied his high office. He received a cutting-edge treatment, monoclonal antibodies, unavailable to virtually all other Americans. He received an antiviral, remdesivir, that is rationed for ordinary Americans. He required oxygen and steroids. Yet Trump has the audacity to tell Americans the virus is no biggie. No doubt the families of the 209,000 dead are greatly reassured."

Frank Bruni writes in his New York Times (10/5, 18.61M) column, "I've heard nothing yet from Trump or senior White House officials that suggests that necessary lessons have been learned – that a commitment to a new conscientiousness has been made. As of early Sunday evening, they'd offered absolutely no public information or assurances about contact tracing for all the people who'd attended Trump events recently or crossed paths with him."

Philip Bump of the Washington Post (10/5, Bump, 14.2M) writes, "If Trump were the median patient hospitalized to be treated" for COVID-19, "we wouldn't expect him to be released until the end of the week, or longer. Guidance from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention indicates that hospital stays generally last 10 to 13 days – for survivors." In leaving the hospital on Monday, Trump "wav[ed] away the risks posed by covid-19 in general...extrapolating outward from his five days of coronavirus symptoms to make a sweeping assertion about the low risk from the virus."

The Washington Times (10/5, 492K) headlines its report "Trump Makes Triumphant Return To White House," while a Boston Globe (10/5, 972K) report is headlined "While Receiving The Best Health Care, Trump Downplays The Risk Of The Virus." The Daily Beast (10/5, 1.39M) headlines a brief report "First Thing Trump Does At White House Is Take Off His Mask." Reuters (10/5, Holland, Alper), Bloomberg (10/5, Wingrove, Jacobs, Sink, 4.73M), the Fox News (10/5, Singman, 27.59M) website, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/5, 895K), the New York Daily News (10/5, Goldiner, Sommerfeldt, 2.52M), the New York Post (10/5, Moore, Bowden, Nelson, 4.57M), Politico (10/5, Forgey, Oprysko, 4.29M), The Hill (10/5, Chalfant, 2.98M), Axios (10/5, 521K), and Townhall (10/5, Baumann, 177K) are among the other outlets covering the President's return.

Media Analyses: Conley "Ducked" Questions By Citing HIPAA. The AP (10/5, Alonso-Zaldivar) reports Conley "leaned on" the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act on Monday "to duck certain questions about the president's treatment for COVID-19, while readily sharing other details of his patient's condition." The Washington Post (10/5, Olorunnipa, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports Conley "declined to describe what specific steps would be made to ensure a safe environment at a building that doubles as a personal residence and a government office while the president remains contagious, which could be for several more days at least."

Reuters (10/5) reports Conley told reporters, "Over the past 24 hours...he's met or exceeded all standard hospital discharge criteria. Though he may not entirely be out of the woods yet, the team and I agree that all our evaluations, and most importantly, his clinical status, support the president's safe return home, where he will be surrounded by world-class medical care 24/7." The New York Times (10/5, Steinhauer, 18.61M) writes, "Even though it is common for those who serve in the military to be treated by a medical professional of lower rank, only the president holds the title of top boss and, in the case of Walter Reed, technically has command over the entire medical center." Trump "appeared to pick a doctor who would maintain the narrative of his health status."

The Hill (10/5, Samuels, 2.98M) says Conley "ducked repeated questions from reporters" about the President's health "and the timeline of his COVID-19 infection, even as he insisted the president is well enough to leave the hospital and return to the White House. ... Conley noticeably refused to answer multiple questions about when Trump last tested negative for the virus, something White House officials have similarly declined to share in recent days." Axios (10/5, 521K) says Conley "refused to answer questions at a press briefing Monday about when President Trump last tested negative for COVID-19 or what his lung scans have shown, citing the medical privacy law HIPAA." The Daily Caller (10/5, 716K) headlines its brief report "White House Physician Sean Conley Repeatedly Dodges Questions About When Trump Last Tested Negative For Coronavirus."

White House Deputy Press Secretary Brian Morgenstern said on Fox News' The Daily Briefing (10/5), "I think there were comments that were really misconstrued quite a bit and I think there was sort of a panic on the part of the media that maybe wasn't justified. The doctor gave several on-camera briefings himself and several memos he released to the extent there were points that needed to be clarified, I think we clarified them promptly. There is no easy way to communicate in the middle of a pandemic and an the election when the President is in the hospital."

Ashish Jha of the Brown University School of Public Health said on ABC World News Tonight (10/5, story 5, 4:15, Muir, 7.03M), "What we've seen in this disease is that it often people do well early on, look good, and then Day Five, Day Seven, even out to Day 10, take a sudden and dramatic turn for the worse. So, depending on the timeline of the President, we're really going to have to pay close attention all week into the weekend." Dr. John Torres said on NBC Nightly News (10/5, story 9, 1:05, Holt, 1.03M), "The CDC says once you start symptoms, 10 days later, they don't consider you contagious if your symptoms have improved and you're fever-free for 24 hours, but only if the symptoms improved."

McEnany Tests Positive As Concern Inside White House Continues To Spread. White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany is the latest high-profile figure close to the Administration to test positive for COVID-19. McEnany said on Fox News' Hannity (10/5, 535K), "I'm feeling great. I'm having no symptoms. I am really blessed to have a mild case, an asymptomatic case. My heart goes to all those who been affected by those and all those who've lost their lives." The Washington Post (10/5, Farhi, 14.2M) says her "sidelining...will eliminate one of President Trump's most potent allies in the final weeks of his uphill re-election battle." Hallie Jackson reported on NBC Nightly News (10/5, story 5, 1:25, Holt, 5.69M) that in addition to McEnany, "two of her deputies tested positive. The White House so far has not said how many West Wing staffers have actually tested positive so far."

Norah O'Donnell said on the CBS Evening News (10/5, story 9, 1:40, 4.18M) that McEnany "was briefing reporters without a mask over the weekend. Does that mean that has led to a number of staff and other reporters to now have to quarantine?" CBS' Ben Tracy: "Certainly, reporters are doing that, even people on our own team are having to quarantine because of their proximity to Kayleigh McEnany over the last couple of days." The New York Times (10/5, Grynbaum, 18.61M) reports, "Throughout a pandemic that has now landed squarely in the West Wing, Trump officials – who routinely shunned masks – declined to institute thorough safety protocols to protect the White House press corps, according to interviews with reporters who now face the prospect of a rapidly escalating outbreak in their daily work space."

Major Garrett said on the CBS Evening News (10/5, story 10, 1:20, O'Donnell, 4.18M), "As Kayleigh McEnany learned today, you can test negative for several days in a row and then test positive because of the transmissibility and how long it takes for the virus to become detectable within your body. So there is a concern this week that even as the President returns – and there is a dimension of triumphalism about that – other parts of the story could become problematic as this week continues, if Mark Meadows the Chief of Staff, Jared Kushner, Ivanka Trump, test positive as well."

USA Today (10/5, Phillips, 10.31M) reports "nearly 20 people – including White House officials and reporters – have tested positive" since the President announced his positive test result early Friday. Many had "attended Judge Amy Coney Barrett's nomination ceremony a little over a week ago at the White House Rose Garden, where few people wore masks." The Atlantic (10/5, Godfrey, Harris, 3.47M) reports, "Asked to describe the mood inside the White House, one staffer, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because he fears for his job, called the fallout from the Trumps' diagnosis 'a huge mess.'"

The Washington Post (10/5, Yuan, 14.2M) reports on concerns among the White House residence staff members, who "are largely Black and Latino, and often elderly." Bloomberg (10/5, Yang, 4.73M) and Politico (10/5, Niedzwiedek, 4.29M) list those in and close to the Administration who have recently tested positive.

Concerns Rise About Safety Of Secret Service Agents. The New York Times (10/5, Kanno-Youngs, 18.61M) reports Secret Service agents have "been tested in recent days by President Trump's desire to get back to work, play or campaigning, despite an active coronavirus infection that could pose a serious threat to those around him. ... Medical experts said" Trump's Sunday excursion in "a hermetically sealed, armored Chevy Suburban with at least two Secret Service agents...recklessly put agents at risk. Secret Service personnel have privately questioned whether additional precautions will be put in place to protect the detail from the man they have pledged to protect."

CNN (10/5, Liptak, 83.16M) reports on its website, "The contained space inside the presidential limousine hardly allowed for social distancing from the driver and agent. While Trump wore a mask, his status as a Covid-positive hospital patient precluded him from falling within anyone's recommendations for a public appearance. ... Afterward, members of the Secret Service voiced escalating concern at what many of the agency's personnel have determined is total disregard for their well-being amid a deadly and highly contagious pandemic." One "current Secret Service agent who works on the presidential and first family detail" said, "That should never have happened."

White House Rejects Offer For Contact Tracing Aid. USA Today (10/5, Murphy, Stein, 10.31M) reports the White House "rejected on Monday an offer from the nation's public health experts to lead the effort to track down and notify Americans who were exposed to a growing coronavirus outbreak" linked to the Administration. In "interviews and internal CDC communications...current and former agency officials accused the White House of seeking to avoid learning the scope of the outbreaks. Without an independent investigation, they said, countless others may be exposed and never know it."

The New York Times (10/5, A1, Mandavilli, Tully, 18.61M) reports the White House "has decided not to trace the contacts of guests and staff members" at the Barrett event, and has instead "limited its efforts to notifying people who came in close contact with Mr. Trump in the two days before his Covid diagnosis." The AP (10/5, Khalil) reports officials with the District of Columbia Department of Health say they have "been unsuccessful in trying to connect with the White House to assist with contact tracing and other protocols." Lapook said on the CBS Evening News (10/5, story 6, 3:10, O'Donnell, 4.2M), "What you want to do in a situation like this is get your arms around it, and the typical thing would be to do extensive contact tracing. ... The CDC has not been asked to come in."

The AP (10/5, Catalini) reports New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy (D) said Monday that the President's "fundraiser at his Bedminster golf club hours before he announced he had contracted the coronavirus was wrong and 'put lives at risk.' ... Murphy called the trip the 'wrong decision at every level' and said it should have been canceled." On ABC World News Tonight (10/5, story 6, 1:05, Muir, 6.69M), Karl reported "officials in the New Jersey government" are performing contact tracing related to the event. Karl said "the contact tracing at the White House seems to be much spottier."

The San Diego Union-Tribune (10/5, 755K) reports Riverside, California, pastor Greg Laurie, who attended the Rose Garden event, said Monday that he has tested positive. Meanwhile, the Dallas Morning News (10/5, 946K) reports that "Dallas-area megachurch Pastor Jack Graham," who also attended the event, "has declined to follow medical guidelines...telling his congregation, 'I am ridiculously healthy.'" Spokeswoman Says Barr Expects To Get Tested On Tuesday. The New York Times (10/5, Benner, 18.61M) reports Attorney General Barr "did not plan to get a coronavirus test on Monday after receiving negative results from four tests and was likely to return to work at the Justice Department this week, his spokeswoman said," after getting tested on Tuesday.

Trump Jr. Reportedly Thinks President Is "Acting Crazy." Gabriel Sherman of Vanity Fair (10/5, 9.08M) reports that the President's "erratic and reckless behavior in the last 24 hours has opened a rift in the Trump family. ... Sources said Donald Trump Jr. is deeply upset by his father's decision to drive around Walter Reed National Military Medical Center" on Sunday. Sources say "Don Jr. has told friends that he tried lobbying Ivanka Trump, Eric Trump, and Jared Kushner to convince the president that he needs to stop acting unstable." A source told Sherman, "Don Jr. has said he wants to stage an intervention, but Jared and Ivanka keep telling Trump how great he's doing. Don said, 'I'm not going to be the only one to tell him he's acting crazy.'"

Despite Job Gains, Twice As Many People Are Unemployed Now Than Before Pandemic.

The New York Times (10/5, Koeze, 18.61M) reports "unemployment data is painting a picture of how quickly – or not – the economy is recovering from pandemic job losses." Before the pandemic, "about six million people were unemployed in the United States." But, "after the pandemic hit, that number swelled rapidly. The unemployment rate in April was the highest it had been since the Great Depression." Although "September's jobs report showed continued gains, there are still about twice as many people out of work now than before the pandemic." The Times adds that while economists "sometimes discuss recoveries in terms of line graphs that look like letters – V or W or K – depending on how quick and sustained they are," recoveries "are often more multifaceted than a single form can fully depict."

States That Overpaid Pandemic Unemployment Claims Are Asking Workers To Pay It Back.

The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Weber, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports thousands of workers were overpaid in the spring and summer as states moved quickly to provide relief or unemployed and furloughed Americans. Now, multiple states are asking people to repay those funds or have their current benefits reduced to cover the difference.

US Service Business Activity Increased In September.

The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Guilford, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports US service businesses saw increased activity in September. The Institute for Supply Management's nonmanufacturing index increased to 57.8 last month from 56.9 in August.

Food Companies Adapt To Pandemic-Driven Changes.

The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Haddon, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports food companies have bolstered supplies of their most popular products to meet unprecedented demand amid the coronavirus pandemic. Along with increasing production, companies have also increased their workforces and confronted how to protect workers while meeting demand. The pandemic has also presented opportunities for food companies to reach new consumers.

JBS Chief Executives Says More Meatpacking Plant Closures Unlikely. The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Bunge, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Andre Nogueira, chief executive of beef and pork processor JBS USA Holdings, said Monday he does not expect another round of meatpacking plant closures due to the coronavirus because worker testing and safety practices have improved since his company and others. The Journal says after JBS, Tyson Foods Inc., Cargill Inc. and other meat companies were forced to temporarily close plants due to employee infections in March and April, the companies implemented additional safety procedures and distributed safety gear to workers.

Southwest Asks Unions To Accept Pay Cuts To Avoid Layoffs.

Reuters (10/5, Rucinski) reports on Monday, Southwest Airlines "said...it is asking unions to agree to pay cuts in order to prevent furloughs and layoffs through 2021 as the industry struggles to stem losses from the coronavirus pandemic in the absence of more federal aid." The AP (10/5) reports Southwest CEO Gary Kelly "said Monday that unless the federal government gives airlines more money, Southwest will have to sharply cut spending to avoid losing billions of dollars every quarter until a coronavirus vaccine is widely available." In a video to employees, Kelly said, "We would have to wipe out a large swath of salaries, wages and benefits to match the low traffic levels to have any hope of just breaking even." He "said he won't get a base salary through 2021 and non-union employees will see a 10% pay cut Jan. 1 to avoid layoffs through 2021. Southwest will negotiate similar cuts from union workers, who represent about 85% of the workforce." The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Sider, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Kelly said he believes a deal will be reached on relief legislation that would cover airline salaries until the end of March.

USA Today (10/5, Woodyard, 10.31M) says that in saying the airline can get through the crisis without layoffs, Kelly sought "to stand apart from rivals. American and United Airlines, for instance, have warned that 32,000 employees would collectively face layoffs after Congress was unable to come to agreement on a new relief package." The Dallas Morning News (10/5, 946K) provides similar coverage.

CFTC Official Credits Data Analytics Program With Making Case Against JPMorgan Chase.

The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) the CFTC's decision to levy a $920 million fine against JPMorgan Chase & Co. after it walked away from an investigation of price manipulation by the bank is an example of the progress the government has made in using data to reveal market manipulation, CFTC Director of Enforcement James McDonald said. In comments to the Journal, McDonald credits the agency's data analytics program with enabling it bring the case.

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Has Failed To Arrest Coal Industry's Decline.

The New York Times (10/5, Lipton, 18.61M) says that "despite [President] Trump stocking his administration with coal-industry executives and lobbyists, taking big donations from the industry, rolling back environmental regulations and intervening directly...coal's decline has only accelerated in recent years." The Times adds, "And with the president now in the closing stages of his struggling re-election campaign, his failure to live up to his pledge challenges his claim to be a champion of working people and to restore what he portrayed four years ago as the United States' lost industrial might."

Leaked Documents Show ExxonMobil Plans To Increase Emissions.

Bloomberg (10/5, Crowley, Rathi, 4.73M) reports ExxonMobil plans to increase its annual carbon-dioxide emissions, according to an analysis of internal documents obtained by Bloomberg. The drive to expand fossil-fuel production and emissions "comes at a time when some of Exxon's rivals, such as BP and Royal Dutch Shell, are moving to curb oil and zero-out emissions." ExxonMobil's "assessment of its $210 billion investment strategy shows yearly emissions rising 17% by 2025, according to the internal documents." These internal estimates show "only a small portion of Exxon's total contribution to climate change." Most emissions come from end uses, "which the Exxon documents don't account for." Bloomberg says this "means the full climate impact of Exxon's growth strategy would likely be five times the company's estimate...had the company accounted for so-called Scope 3 emissions." If its plans are realized, ExxonMobil "would add to the atmosphere the annual emissions of a small, developed nation, or 26 coal-fired power plants."

Google, Facebook, Twitter CEOs To Testify Before Senate Panel.

The AP (10/5, Gordon) reports that the CEOs of Facebook, Google and Twitter are "expected to testify for an Oct. 28 Senate hearing on tech companies' control over hate speech and misinformation on their platforms." The AP notes that last week, the Senate Commerce Committee "voted...to authorize subpoenas for Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg, Sundar Pichai of Google and Twitter's Jack Dorsey to force them to testify if they didn't agree to do so voluntarily." According to the AP, the hearing "marks a new bipartisan initiative against Big Tech companies, which have been under increasing scrutiny in Washington and from state attorneys general over issues of competition, consumer privacy and hate speech."

GOP Lawmaker Says House Subcommittee Will Recommend Breaking Up Tech Firms. Bloomberg (10/5, Brody, 4.73M) reports a House antitrust panel "led by Democrats investigating competition in the technology sector is poised to propose sweeping reforms to block giants such as Amazon.com Inc. and Apple Inc. from both owning marketplaces and selling their own products on them, according to a critique of the recommendations" by Rep. Ken Buck (R-CO), a member of the subcommittee.

McAfee Charged With Evading Taxes.

The AP (10/5, Sainz) reports Internet security software developer John McAfee "has been charged with evading taxes after failing to report income made from promoting cryptocurrencies while he did consulting work, made speaking engagements and sold the rights to his life story for a documentary, prosecutors in Tennessee said Monday." A June indictment "was unsealed in federal court in Memphis on Monday after McAfee's arrest in Spain, where extradition to the U.S. is pending, the U.S. attorney's office said in a news release." If convicted, McAfee "could face up to 30 years in prison." Reuters (10/5, Johnson) reports that Justice Department says McAfee failed to file tax returns from 2014 to 2018.

"Calamities" Forcing California To Rethink Its Economic Growth.

The New York Times (10/5, Dougherty, 18.61M) reports that amid the pandemic and wildfires, California "and its $3 trillion economy are confronting a profound question: How much will go back to normal, and how much has been permanently changed?" The Times says "the message from the recent calamities is clear. If the state is to continue leading the nation's economy deep into the future, its leaders and residents will have to rethink where and how they grow." The state has long "operated under a trade-off: In exchange for high taxes and a high cost of living, companies that locate there reap the rewards of an educated populace, an inviting lifestyle and a culture of innovation." This year's events "have forced a closer look at the calculus."

Pearlstine Stepping Down As LATimes Executive Editor.

The New York Times (10/5, Robertson, 18.61M) reports Los Angeles Times Executive Editor Normal Pearlstine announced Monday that he is stepping down. The announcement comes "less than two weeks after the paper published an article headlined 'L.A. Times shaken by a summer of turmoil and scandals.'" The Times adds that while "the paper has grown more robust" during Pearlstine's time in charge, it "has faced a number of new challenges, including a sluggish digital subscription business, pay cuts and furloughs related to the coronavirus pandemic, and turmoil among the staff over what an article in the paper described as a 'painful reckoning over race.'"

US Seeks To Break China's Dominance Over Supply Of Key Minerals.

The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the US is moving to break China's dominance over the supply of minerals that are essential to modern technology. An executive order signed by President Trump declared a national emergency and authorized the use of the Defense Production Act to accelerate the development of mines.

China Contends US App Bans Violate WTO Rules.

Reuters (10/5) reports that at a World Trade Organization meeting on Friday, Chinese officials made the case that "restrictions by the United States on Chinese mobile applications TikTok and WeChat are in violation of the body's rules." According to Reuters, "A representative for China said at the closed-door meeting on Friday that the measures 'are clearly inconsistent with WTO rules, restrict cross-border trading services and violate the basic principles and objectives of the multilateral trading system.'" However, a US official maintained that the restrictions are "intended to mitigate national security risks."

Senate Judiciary Committee To Hold Barrett Hearing On October 12.

Reuters (10/5, Zengerle) reports the Senate Judiciary Committee "announced on Monday that it would open a confirmation hearing for President Donald Trump's Supreme Court nominee, Amy Coney Barrett, on Oct. 12, making clear that an outbreak of COVID-19 will not interfere with the schedule." Chairman Lindsey Graham announced that the hearing would start at 9 a.m. on October 12. Breitbart (10/5, Moran, 673K) reports Graham "also said on Monday that Trump continues to recover from the coronavirus and that he is 'excited' about the prospect of confirming Judge Barrett to the Supreme Court."

Axios (10/5, Rummel, 521K) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell "said Monday that the Senate is moving 'full steam ahead' on the process to confirm Barrett before the election, despite three Republican senators testing positive for the coronavirus last week." Roll Call (10/5, Lesniewski, Cioffi, 154K) reports that while he has tested positive for coronavirus, Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI) in a KHOW-AM Denver (10/5, 5K) interview on Monday "said...he was prepared to return to the Capitol to vote to confirm Barrett even if he tests positive shortly before the vote" even though doing so "would violate Centers for Disease Control and Prevention isolation guidelines, as well as the District of Columbia's virus protocols, although there is little to no enforcement of such." The AP (10/5, Mascaro) reports Johnson "said...he'll go to the Capitol 'in a moon suit' to vote if he's still testing positive for the coronavirus, which has killed more than 209,000 Americans and infected millions."

Morgenstern Sees No Reason To Delay Barrett's Nomination. White House Deputy Press Secretary Brian Morgenstern said on Fox News' The Daily Briefing (10/5), "There doesn't seem to be any reason to hold back" on Barrett's nomination. The Senate Judiciary Committee "has had over 20 hearings, numerous types of hearings. They've had oversight. They've had nomination hearings and they have proceeded with them on a hybrid basis where senators can participate virtually. There doesn't seem to be any reason to slow that down at this time."

Schumer Calls For Daily Testing During Barrett Hearings. The Washington Times (10/5, Muñoz, 492K) reports that although he is seeking to delay Barrett's confirmation hearings, Senate Minority Leader Schumer is also "calling for Republicans to implement a rigorous COVID-19 testing policy if they move ahead." In a statement, Schumer called on Graham to "put into place a thorough testing procedure that is in accordance with CDC best practices before hearings can take place." The Times says that Schumer wants Graham to "require that every senator and their staffers joining them at the hearing need to test negative for COVID-19 for at least two consecutive days, undergo quarantine and test every day during the hearings."

WPost Analysis: GOP Has Yet To See Polling Bump From Supreme Court Nomination.

In an analysis, the Washington Post (10/5, Bade, Kane, 14.2M) says Republicans "are facing major head winds in their bid to maintain control of the Senate, a troubling outlook for the party roiled by news of President Trump and three GOP senators contracting the coronavirus four weeks before the election," but their "predicted Supreme Court bump has yet to materialize." The Post adds that instead of "serving as a major boost to their campaigns, Trump's Supreme Court announcement at the White House on Sept. 26 appears to have served as a superspreader event, with a couple dozen infections connected to that day. That is certain to bring Trump's response to the pandemic to the forefront of voter's minds in the lead-up to Nov. 3 – the last thing Republicans wanted."

Cruz Touts Significance Of Trump's Nomination Of Barrett.

In an interview with The Federalist (10/5, 126K), Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) "discuss[ed] his new book 'One Vote Away: How a Single Supreme Court Seat Can Change History' and the significance of President Donald Trump's nomination of Amy Coney Barrett to the Supreme Court."

Thomas, Alito Criticize Supreme Court's Ruling In 2015 Same-Sex Marriage Case.

The AP (10/5, Sherman, Gresko) reports Supreme Court Justices Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito on Monday delivered a "jolt" to the court's new term when they "raised new criticism of the court's embrace of same-sex marriage." The AP says that their statement "underscored conservatives' excitement and liberals' fears about the direction the court could take if the Senate confirms President Donald Trump's nominee for Ginsburg's seat, Amy Coney Barrett." The Washington Free Beacon (10/5, Daley, 78K) similarly states that their opinion "immediately fed leftwing anxieties about the direction of the judiciary, already aggravated by the late Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg's death." According to the Free Beacon, "It will likely get play in the upcoming confirmation hearings for Judge Amy Coney Barrett, who is widely perceived to be a social conservative."

CNN (10/5, Vogue, Duster, 83.16M) reports on its website that Thomas wrote that Obergefell v. Hodges “enables courts and governments to brand religious adherents who believe that marriage is between one man and one woman as bigots, making their religious liberty concerns that much easier to dismiss.” Thomas also “warned that the court had chosen to ‘privilege’ a ‘novel constitutional right over the religious liberty interests explicitly protected in the First Amendment, any by doing so undemocratically, the Court has created a problem that only it can fix.”

Fox News (10/5, Olson, 27.59M) says on its website that Thomas and Alito “dissented from the original Obergefell decision and their statement Monday could indicate that they would vote to overturn it if presented the chance.” The New York Times (10/5, Liptak, 18.61M) reports the other dissenters in the Obergefell case were Chief Justice John Roberts, “who did not join Justice Thomas’s opinion on Monday, and Justice Antonin Scalia, who died in 2016.”

However, Reuters (10/5) reports that even as Thomas and Alito “mounted a fresh attack on Monday on the landmark 2015 ruling that legalized gay marriage nationwide,” the Supreme Court “rebuffed a bid by a former Kentucky official to avoid lawsuits over her refusal to grant marriage licenses to two same-sex couples.” Reuters says the justices “turned away an appeal by Kim Davis, who had served as Rowan County clerk, of a lower court ruling that let the lawsuits accusing her of violating the constitutional rights of the couples proceed.”

The Washington Post (10/5, Barnes, 14.2M) reports Davis “was sued after she said her religious convictions kept her from recognizing same-sex marriages, even after the Supreme Court found a constitutional right to those unions in Obergefell v. Hodges. She was briefly jailed over the matter, and her case had attracted national attention.” According to the Post, her claim of qualified immunity was rejected by a panel of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, and Thomas and Alito “said they agreed with the court’s decision not to accept Davis’s appeal.”

Supreme Court Rejects Challenge To Nebraska Second Amendment Law.

The Washington Times (10/5, Swoyer, 492K) reports the Supreme Court on Monday “rejected a Second Amendment case...as it kicked off its 2020 term.” According to the Times, Nebraska lawmakers had “amended criminal law to deny juveniles who are adjudicated of certain crimes the right to possess a firearm until the age of 25,” and the Supreme Court of Nebraska “sided with the state, upholding the law despite critics arguing a juvenile should have the right to a jury trial before a judge denies Second Amendment rights.”

Townhall (10/5, Vespa, 177K) says gun rights cases “for years...have fallen short regarding oral arguments before the Supreme Court,” but “soon-to-be-Justice Amy Coney Barrett could be the vote that breaks the gridlock.” Townhall adds, “Barrett’s application of the ‘text, history, and tradition’ doctrine, as well as her public comments noting the lack of recent Supreme Court gun cases—which four of the five Republican-appointed members of the Court have complained about publicly – indicate that the Court may finally begin settling open questions about gun rights, according to Cato Institute legal scholar Walter Olson.” The Washington Free Beacon (10/5, Gutowski, 78K) also reports legal scholars “say Amy Coney Barrett’s judicial philosophy could settle legal stalemates and disagreements that have seen lower federal courts deliver a variety of rulings on gun rights.”

Supreme Court Hears Delaware Judicial Affiliation Case.

The Washington Post (10/5, Barnes, 14.2M) reports the state of Delaware “for more than a century...has required its major courts be roughly balanced, so that no more than a bare majority of a court is made up of members of one political party. And then it required the minority be made up of the other political party.” Stanford law professor Michael W. McConnell told the Supreme Court Monday “that ‘Delaware’s courts are widely regarded as the least partisan and most professional in the nation,’” but Wilmington lawyer David L. Finger countered the policy is unconstitutional, as it “denies the chance for his client, lawyer James Adams, to serve on the courts because he is neither a Democrat nor Republican but a political independent, Finger said, and that violates his First Amendment rights of political association.” The New York Times (10/5, Liptak, 18.61M) describes Delaware’s court system as “both widely admired and idiosyncratic.”

Election-Related Cases Loom Over Supreme Court.

Politico (10/5, Gerstein, 4.29M) reports President Trump’s Supreme Court nominee Judge Amy Coney Barrett “hasn’t even arrived yet, but the Supreme Court might be days or even hours away from delivering its first big signal on how aggressive a role the court plans to play in setting the rules for next month’s election.” According to Politico, “Election-related cases from Pennsylvania and South Carolina are now teed up for imminent emergency action by the justices. And another simmering fight over voting rules in Wisconsin could be headed to the high court soon.” Politico describes the cases as posing “an exquisite dilemma for Chief Justice John Roberts, who is famously leery of politics and widely seen as the key swing vote on a court now down one liberal member after Ruth Bader Ginsburg’s death,” as well as a test for the Purcell principle, “a legal premise the court has increasingly cited in recent years as a justification for wading into some pre-election showdowns while standing aside in others.”

The Intelligencer (10/5, Hasen, 1.1M) reports that during Barrett’s confirmation hearings, “no doubt Democrats will pepper her with questions about whether she would recuse herself in any Trump v. Biden election lawsuit to come before the Supreme Court.” The Intelligencer adds that while that is “an important question to ask, perhaps the bigger question is what it would mean in the long run for voting and election cases to have a sixth conservative justice on the Supreme Court.” The Intelligencer predicts a Barrett confirmation “would make it more likely we will see a significant undermining of the already weakened Voting Rights Act.”

More Americans Blame US Government Than Foreign Nations For COVID Crisis, Poll Suggests.

The AP (10/5, Lee) reports a new AP-NORC poll of 1,053 adults (9/11-9/14) finds more Americans “blame the U.S. government instead of foreign nations for the coronavirus crisis in the United States, a rebuke to the Trump administration’s contention that China or other countries are most at fault.” The AP adds 56% of Americans “say the U.S. government has substantial responsibility for the situation” in comparison to 47% “who place that much blame on the governments of other countries and only 39% who say the same about the World Health Organization.”

The Hill (10/5, Bowden, 2.98M) reports, “Blame for foreign countries and the WHO is much more popular among GOP voters, 60 percent of whom said that substantial blame is due for leaders of foreign countries including China, while 55 percent said the same about the WHO.” Meanwhile, just 37% of Democrats “blamed foreign countries” for US struggles against the virus, “and even less – 27 percent – blamed the WHO.”

CDC Updates Guidance To Say COVID Can Be Spread Through Airborne Transmission.

The Washington Post (10/5, Sun, Guarino, 14.2M) reports the CDC on Monday “acknowledged...that people can sometimes become infected with the novel coronavirus through airborne transmission, especially in enclosed spaces with inadequate ventilation.” The “update to the agency Web page explaining how the virus spreads represents an official acknowledgment of growing evidence that under certain conditions, people farther than six feet apart can become infected by tiny droplets and particles that float in the air for minutes and hours, and that they play a role in the pandemic.” The update comes after the agency “removed a draft that had not gone through proper review and was posted in error,” which “included a reference to aerosols – tiny droplets that can stay in the air, potentially traveling a significant distance.”

USA Today (10/5, Rodriguez, 10.31M) reports the agency “says people can be exposed to the virus in small droplets and particles that can linger in the air for minutes to hours, potentially infecting people who are farther than 6 feet away and even people who come into the area after an infected person has left.” The “previous guidance said the virus spreads primarily among people who are in close contact with one another – within about 6 feet – through respiratory droplets produced when an infected person coughs, sneezes or talks,” yet “the current guidance says that’s still the greatest risk.”

The New York Times (10/5, Mandavilli, 18.61M) reports the new guidance said, “These transmissions occurred within enclosed spaces that had inadequate ventilation. ... Sometimes the infected person was breathing heavily, for example while singing or exercising.” Furthermore, the new guidance “softens a previous statement referring to the coronavirus as ‘an airborne virus,’” and instead “says the virus can ‘sometimes be spread by airborne transmission.’”

Bloomberg (10/5, Tozzi, 4.73M) reports that last month during a Senate hearing, CDC Director Redfield “acknowledged there was evidence of airborne spread, but said the CDC document that was removed hadn’t been cleared for publication by agency staff.” Redfield said, “I just want to stress for the American public and for everyone here that that document that went up was a draft, had not been technically reviewed by CDC.”

The AP (10/5, Stobbe) reports several experts have “faulted” the CDC’s updated guidance, and “said the virus can spread more easily than the CDC seems to be indicating, and suggested that the public should wear masks even in prolonged outdoor gatherings when they are more than 6 feet apart.” The New York Daily News (10/5, Dillon, 2.52M) reports the update follows “an embarrassing incident last month” when the CDC “posted similar wording on its website before quickly retracting the statement, saying the update was posted by mistake,” and Politico (10/5, Ehley, 4.29M) reports the new statement “is more cautious” than the update that was retracted.

CNBC (10/5, Feuer, 3.62M) reports on its website that the CDC said its recommendations “remain the same based on existing science and after a thorough technical review of the guidance.” Fox News (10/5, Rivas, 27.59M) also reports on its website that the CDC “said recommendations to help prevent infection remain the same: ‘staying at least 6 feet away from others, wearing a mask that covers their nose and mouth, washing their hands frequently, cleaning touched surfaces often and staying home when sick,’ per a media statement.”

However, Reuters (10/5, Chander) reports that while the agency “stresses close-contact transmission is more common than through air, a group of U.S. scientists warned in an unrelated open letter published in medical journal Science on Monday that aerosols lingering in the air could be a major source of COVID-19 transmission.” The Hill (10/5, Sullivan, 2.98M) reports Virginia Tech professor Linsey Marr, “who has long warned of airborne transmission of coronavirus, wrote on Twitter that the [new CDC] document is ‘an accurate, sorely-needed update acknowledging airborne spread and importance of masks at all times around others and of ventilation. Hooray!’”

Meanwhile, Politico (10/5, Ehley, 4.29M) reports the new guidance could “have a significant impact on the pandemic response going forward,” as “many states and cities have modeled their social-distancing recommendations on the CDC’s long-standing advice that the virus spreads within 6 feet or less.”

Axios (10/5, Fernandez, 521K) and the Wall Street Journal (10/5, McCabe, McKay, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provide similar coverage.

White House Blocking New Coronavirus Vaccine Guidelines, Sources Say.

The New York Times (10/5, LaFraniere, Weiland, 18.61M) reports the White House is “blocking strict new federal guidelines for the emergency release of a coronavirus vaccine, objecting to a provision that would almost certainly guarantee that no vaccine could be authorized before the election on Nov. 3, according to people familiar with the approval process.” The Times adds that in the face of the "White House blockade, the Food and Drug Administration is seeking other avenues to ensure that vaccines meet the guidelines," which "includes sharing the standards with an outside advisory committee of experts – perhaps as soon as this week – that is supposed to meet publicly before any vaccine is authorized for emergency use. The hope is that the committee will enforce the guidelines, regardless of the White House's reaction."

Politico (10/5, Cancryn, 4.29M) reports the White House action "to halt release of new standards for emergency authorization of a Covid-19 vaccine came after officials close to President Donald Trump told the FDA that the pharmaceutical industry had objected to the tougher requirements, according to three people with knowledge of the situation." Politico adds the White House "cited the private-sector opposition as a chief reason for blocking the guidelines, which aim to hold companies' vaccines to a higher bar for safety and effectiveness and would likely push any authorization beyond Election Day, they said." Politico describes the President's decision as adding "a new dimension to concerns about White House interference in the FDA, which has continued to insist that any decision on whether to approve a coronavirus vaccine will be based on scientific benchmarks alone."

Azar, Atlas Meet With Doctors Advocating For Herd Immunity.

The Hill (10/5, Hellmann, 2.98M) reports HHS Secretary Azar and White House Coronavirus Task Force member Scott Atlas "met Monday with a group of doctors who are proponents of the controversial 'herd immunity' approach to COVID-19, even as other experts warn of its deadly and dangerous consequences." The Hill says epidemiologists Martin Kulldorff, a professor at Harvard; Sunetra Gupta, a professor at Oxford; and Jay Bhattacharya, a professor at Stanford, "told...Azar that allowing the virus to spread uncontrolled among young, healthy people while protecting older adults and those at higher risk for serious illness would build up enough population-immunity to stop it from spreading widely while avoiding lockdowns and other mitigation measures that have had a damaging impact on the economy." Atlas "told The Hill in an email he attended the meeting and supports the declaration the group put out endorsing herd immunity."

House Panel Probes Appointees' Roles In FDA And CDC Decisionmaking.

Bloomberg (10/5, Tozzi, 4.73M) reports that a House Oversight subcommittee "wants two federal health agencies at the fore of the U.S. coronavirus response to disclose information about the White House's involvement in scientific decisions." According to Bloomberg, "Letters addressed to the leaders of the Food and Drug Administration and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention seek documents about agency actions submitted to the White House for review, including communications, comments, first drafts and documents that show changes made during the review process." The letters are signed by Rep. Raja Krishnamoorthi (D-IL), "who is the chairman of the Subcommittee on Economic and Consumer Policy of the House Committee on Oversight and Reform."

Politico (10/5, Diamond, 4.29M) reports that "Trump appointees' interference has rippled across" HHS and the CDC, and "even when career experts can find common ground with political officials, they have been tainted by the unprecedented efforts to shape their findings."

WPost Analysis: Republicans Still Resist Federal COVID Guidelines.

According to the Washington Post (10/5, Costa, 14.2M), "Widespread Republican recalcitrance about federal health guidelines showed few signs of waning on Monday, even as the party faces growing turmoil following President Trump's hospitalization and as more White House aides test positive for the coronavirus." The Post reports that while White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "and at least two of her deputies have now contracted the virus, further derailing the functioning of a West Wing plunged into crisis and adding to a long list of top Republicans who have been infected," many Republicans "continue to dismiss calls for alarm – and for changes to the party's message on the virus and its operations." The Post adds Trump "played down the threat of the disease on Monday, tweeting: 'Feeling really good! Don't be afraid of Covid. Don't let it dominate your life.'"

Delta Flight Attendant Twice Told Wicker To Wear His Mask. The Washington Post (10/5, Laris, Aratani, 14.2M) reports Sen. Roger Wicker (R-MS) "had his mask off repeatedly on a flight to Mississippi on Thursday night and had to be reminded twice by a Delta flight attendant to follow the airline's mask requirement, according to another passenger and the airline." The Post adds that although Delta "said that it takes its mask mandate very seriously," the company "offered no criticism of the senator Monday."

US Northeast, Midwest See Surge In COVID Cases.

Bloomberg (10/5, Levin, Brown, 4.73M) reports that in 34 states, "the seven-day average of new cases is higher now than it was a month ago." Bloomberg says that while the coronavirus "has waned in populous states including California and Florida, it is wreaking unprecedented havoc in the Midwest and making an incipient return in parts of the Northeast."

Reuters (10/5) reports, "After crushing their COVID-19 outbreaks in the spring and keeping them in check all summer, states in the U.S. Northeast are now seeing infections accelerate, with New York reporting nearly 10,000 new cases last week." In comparison to "the previous seven days, new cases in New York rose 102% in the week ended Oct. 4, while new cases in Connecticut rose 61% to 1,710 and new cases in New Jersey rose 23% to 4,650, according to a Reuters analysis of state and county reports." In addition, the Midwest "continues to deal with the highest number of new cases per capita, with North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin reporting the largest number of new cases per 100,000 residents in the past two weeks."

Researchers Examine Neurological Symptoms In Patients Hospitalized With COVID.

The New York Times (10/5, Belluck, 18.61M) reports that in a study published in Annals of Clinical and Translational Neurology, researchers at Northwestern Medicine found that almost a third of patients hospitalized with COVID-19 "experienced some type of altered mental function – ranging from confusion to delirium to unresponsiveness – in the largest study to date of neurological symptoms among coronavirus patients in an American hospital system." In addition, the researchers found patients "with altered mental function had significantly worse medical outcomes."

Cuomo Orders Closure Of Some NYC Schools Over Resurgent Coronavirus Cases.

The AP (10/5) reports New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) on Monday "ordered schools in certain New York City neighborhoods closed within a day in an attempt to halt flare-ups of the coronavirus." The AP says the closures come a day after New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) "asked the state for permission to reinstate restrictions schools and businesses in nine ZIP codes in Brooklyn and Queens where the virus was spreading more quickly than in other parts of the city." Reuters (10/5, Allen, Caspani) reports the neighborhoods "have all seen coronavirus test positivity above 3% for seven days in a row."

However, the New York Times (10/5, A1, McKinley, Ferré-Sadurní, 18.61M) reports Cuomo "said he would not yet allow the city to close the nonessential businesses, suggesting that the ZIP codes that were being used to identify hot spots were too imprecise to guide shutdowns." The Times adds Cuomo attributed the spike to "schools and houses of worship, including many that cater to Orthodox Jews, rather than businesses that 'are not large spreaders.'" The New York Daily News (10/5, Gartland, Sommerfeldt, 2.52M) reports that rather than shut the businesses, Cuomo instead announced "state police would help step up issuing tickets for failing to wear masks in those areas and that a closure plan for businesses had to be refined."

Top Michigan Health Official Says Face Masks, Social Distancing Still Mandatory.

The Detroit Free Press (10/5, 1.52M) reports Robert Gordon, Director of the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services, on Monday announced the state will "continue to require masks and limit gatherings to stop the spread of COVID-19," after the Michigan Supreme Court "undercut Gov. Gretchen Whitmer's authority to issue emergency orders to control the spread of the novel coronavirus." According to the Free Press, "The orders are effective immediately and mirror those Whitmer previously put into place."

Student Dies At Appalachian State University From Coronavirus.

The New York Times (10/5, Bolling, Hubler, 18.61M) reports coronavirus cases at Appalachian State University in North Carolina "spiked sharply last week" and a sophomore at the school died, which "has shaken the rural Appalachian State campus in the Blue Ridge Mountains, sparking questions about whether the college is doing enough to keep its students and faculty safe."

WSJournal: Health Experts Should Learn From Imperfect Response To Pandemic.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says President Trump's coronavirus infection and spikes in cases nationwide show testing is insufficient and that health experts should learn from the inadequate response to federal guidelines when drafting plans for future pandemics.

WPost Profiles Militia Group That Defends Businesses From Rioters.

The Washington Post (10/5, Klemko, 14.2M) reports on the Oath Keepers, "a heavily armed civilian group that has guarded private businesses during racial justice demonstrations this year," and "one of numerous vigilante groups that have flocked to cities where police killings and protests have sometimes been followed by property damage and violence." According to the Post, "Its members travel from across the country equipped with long guns and protective gear to stand in plain view of demonstrators or loom over them from the edges of rooftops, unauthorized – and frequently unquestioned – by law enforcement."

Virginia Trooper Will Not Face Charges For Violent Traffic Stop Of Black Driver.

The Washington Post (10/5, Jouvenal, 14.2M) reports Charles Hewitt, "a White trooper with the Virginia State Police has been cleared of criminal wrongdoing in a controversial traffic stop during which he can be heard on video telling a Black driver 'you are going to get your a-- whooped,' before forcefully removing the man from his car." Fairfax County Commonwealth's Attorney Steve T. Descano "said...Hewitt's conduct was reprehensible but that the stop of Derrick Thompson, Hewitt's request for Thompson to leave his vehicle and the amount of force used on Thompson were legal."

Eric Trump Deposed By New York AG's Office.

Bloomberg (10/5, 4.73M) reports on Monday Eric Trump "was questioned under oath by the New York attorney general's office, which is probing whether the family's real-estate company falsely reported property values to get loans or tax benefits, according to a person familiar with the matter." Trump "was deposed by state investigators on Monday via video-conference, said the person, who declined to be identified discussing the matter." The New York Times (10/5, Shanahan, Rashbaum, 18.61M) says although "the interview was not made public, the mere fact that it happened before Election Day was a victory for the attorney general, Letitia James, whose inquiry is one of several legal actions the president and his company, the Trump Organization, are facing."

State Department Revokes Visa Of "Ukrainian Political Fixer" Who Aided Giuliani.

The Washington Post (10/5, Nakashima, Stern, Gryvnyak, Sonne, 14.2M) reports the State Department revoked the visa of Andrii Telizhenko, "a Ukrainian political fixer who aided President Trump's personal attorney, Rudolph W. Giuliani, in his gambit last year to dig up information from Ukraine that would damage former vice president Joe Biden in the 2020 election, according to U.S. officials." The revocation "came shortly before the Treasury Department sanctioned a different Ukrainian who was cooperating with Giuliani – lawmaker Andriy Derkach – and dubbed Derkach an 'active Russian agent for over a decade' and said he was trying to interfere in the election, the U.S. officials said."

Carroll's Lawyers Seek To Block DOJ Involvement In Her Suit Against Trump.

The New York Times (10/5, Feuer, Weiser, 18.61M) reports as President Trump "has long made a habit of altering his legal persona to suit his needs. Sometimes, when sued as the president, he fought the complaints in his capacity as an ordinary citizen; at other times, sued as an individual, he tried to fight in his professional capacity as president." On Monday, lawyers for E. Jean Carroll, who has accused Trump of raping her "and then falsely denying it in public statements," argued he used the tactic "when he had the Department of Justice abruptly step in and replace his private lawyers in her defamation lawsuit against him." Carroll's lawyers "asked a judge to block the move, arguing" that the Federal Tort Claims Act "did not apply to Mr. Trump – or to any other president." They also argued Trump "was not acting in his official role when he denied Ms. Carroll's claims."

Energy Companies Evacuate Offshore Platforms Ahead Of Tropical Storm Delta.

Reuters (10/5, Seba) reports with Tropical Storm Delta expected "to become a major hurricane" before it enters the Gulf of Mexico and poses a threat to the US mainland, "energy companies on Monday began evacuating offshore oil platforms." The storm "was expected to rapidly strengthen and become a Category 3 hurricane with up to 120 mile per hour (194 kilometers per hour) winds." Reuters adds, "BP and BHP began evacuating non-essential personnel from their offshore platforms, the companies said." Occidental Petroleum "said it was taking steps to protect its people and facilities," and "Royal Dutch Shell and Murphy Oil Corp said they were monitoring the storm."

DeVos Touts School Choice In North Carolina.

The Raleigh \(NC\) News & Observer (10/5, 425K) reports during a visit to Raleigh on Monday, Education Secretary DeVos "promote[d] the merits of school choice during the pandemic, as President Donald Trump and other members of his administration deal with a COVID-19 outbreak at the White House." During "a roundtable discussion sponsored by Parents for Educational Freedom in North Carolina," DeVos "praised state efforts to allow more families to use taxpayer funds to attend private schools." DeVos said, "This last 6 to 8 months has brought into very clear focus the imperative that parents must ultimately be empowered to make the decision for their children's educational futures."

NYTimes Report: Administration Defiant As Judges Rule Officials Are Serving Illegally.

The New York Times (10/5, Friedman, 18.61M) reports a Montana judge ruled last month that Acting BLM Director William Perry Pendley "should be removed from his position because he was performing his duties illegally." Pendley "is the third high-ranking administration official that the courts have found likely to be working in violation of the Federal Vacancies Reform Act, a 1998 law governing how a president may appoint temporary officials. Such findings have been bolstered by the Government Accountability Office and other agencies. In each case the administration has responded with defiance." Government watchdogs say "if the trend continues into a second term for President Trump...it could entangle policies, on everything from immigration to land management, in lengthy legal tussles."

Perdue Accused Of Politicizing USDA Event.

Politico (10/5, McCrimmon, 4.29M) reports that in August, Agriculture Secretary Perdue "offered a spirited pitch for voters to reelect President Donald Trump at an official USDA event with North Carolina food producers...sending the audience into a chant of 'Four more years!'" According to Politico, "the pep talk landed Perdue in the crosshairs of ethics watchdogs, who filed a formal complaint alleging that the USDA chief was improperly using his appearance on the taxpayer's dime to boost Trump's prospects in November." Politico adds, "On top of his overt appeal to reelect the president, Perdue has kept many farmers in Trump's corner by doling out unprecedented sums of taxpayer aid to offset the industry's losses after years of trade turmoil and painful biofuel policies."

Trump Reportedly Wants To Oust Wray If He Wins A Second Term.

The Daily Beast (10/5, 1.39M) reports if President Trump wins a second term, he wants to "ditch his FBI director Christopher Wray, whom he privately trashes as a tool of a supposed 'deep state.'" Trump "has indicated to several officials and close associates that he intends to replace Wray near the start of a second term in office, routinely expressing dissatisfaction with the director's performance and apparent unwillingness to swiftly root out Trump's perceived enemies in the bureau, two people familiar with the president's private remarks said." The Daily Beast adds that over the summer, Trump "solicited recommendations from close advisers on who they think he should choose as a replacement, the knowledgeable sources said."

Administration Argues Census Count Should Not Be Subject To “Judicial Second Guessing.”

The AP (10/5) reports the Administration “on Monday asked appellate judges to immediately suspend a lower court’s order requiring the 2020 census to continue through October.” The Administration argued “decisions by the U.S. Census Bureau over how to conduct the nation’s head count shouldn’t be subject to ‘judicial second-guessing.’” Attorney Sopan Joshi, an assistant to the US solicitor general, “urged the panel of three Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals judges in San Francisco to suspend U.S. District Judge Lucy Koh’s injunction from last month.” Joshi “said the head count needed to end Monday in order for the bureau to meet a year-end deadline for turning in numbers used for deciding how many congressional seats each state gets in a process known as apportionment.” Joshi asked the court to issue its decision “as promptly as possible,” so the Trump administration can have time to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, if need be.”

Suit Suggests Administration Wants To Exclude Migrants From Census Count. The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Overberg, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports a series of pending court decisions will determine if state population totals are delivered during the President’s first term, or if they will go into the spring, when there may be a new administration. The Journal says documents in one of the suits indicates the Administration’s desire to keep migrants out of the totals is one reason its wants the count to conclude this year.

FCC Not Addressing Court’s Net-Neutrality Concerns.

Reuters (10/5, Shepardson) reports that on Monday, FCC Chairman Pai “said...he stands by the agency’s repeal of landmark net neutrality rules and circulated a proposal to address three issues raised by a U.S. appeals court.” According to Reuters, “A federal appeals court in October 2019 largely upheld the FCC’s December 2017 net neutrality repeal, but directed the agency to reconsider the order’s impact on public safety, regulations on attachments to utility poles and the agency’s ability to provide subsidies for broadband service.” Reuters says an FCC spokesman “confirmed that Pai’s order is not proposing any policy changes to address the issues raised by the appeals court.”

Jewish Leaders Alarmed By Trump’s Apparent Endorsement Of “Racehorse Theory.”

The Los Angeles Times (10/5, 4.64M) reports remarks by President Trump “that appeared to endorse ‘racehorse theory’ – the idea that selective breeding can improve a country’s performance, which American eugenicists and German Nazis used in the last century to buttress their goals of racial purity,” have “alarmed Jewish leaders and others.” On Sept. 18, Trump told a “mostly white” group of supporters in Bemidji, Minnesota, “You have good genes, you know that, right? .. You have good genes. A lot of it is about the genes, isn’t it? Don’t you believe? The racehorse theory. You think we’re so different? You have good genes in Minnesota.” Rabbi Mark Diamond, a senior lecturer on Jewish studies at Loyola Marymount University, said, “To hear these remarks said at a rally in an election campaign for the presidency is beyond reprehensible. ... This is at the heart of Nazi ideology. ... It’s actually hard to believe in 2020 we have to revisit these very dangerous theories.”

Lincoln Project’s War Room Aims To Defeat Trump.

The New Yorker (10/5, Williams, 5.82M) reports on the war room created by founders of the Lincoln Project, “a super PAC of Republican operatives who have disavowed their own party in order to defeat President Donald Trump.” The Times says the founders “try to predict the President’s missteps, stockpiling material that can be deployed at the ideal moment.”

Judicial Watch Sues To Block California’s Boardroom Diversity Law.

The AP (10/5, Melley) reports Judicial Watch “announced Monday that it sued to block California’s first-in-the-nation law that requires hundreds of corporations based in the state to have directors from racial or sexual minorities on their boards.” In the suit filed Wednesday in Los Angeles Superior Court, the conservative group argued the law is unconstitutional. Judicial Watch said, “The legislation’s requirement that certain corporations appoint a specific number of directors based upon race, ethnicity, sexual preference, and transgender status is immediately suspect and presumptively invalid and triggers strict scrutiny review by the court.”

SCOTUS Reinstates South Carolina’s Mail-In Ballot Witness Requirement.

The AP (10/5, Gresko) reports the Supreme Court has reinstated “a requirement that South Carolina residents voting by mail in November’s election get a witness to sign their ballots.” The Court “reinstated the requirement as a lawsuit over it proceeds,” but “voters have already started returning ballots.” The court said any ballots cast before its action Monday evening “and received within two days of this order may not be rejected for failing to comply with the witness requirement.”

Reuters (10/5, Hurley) says the Court “ensured that a restrictive Republican-backed law...will be in place for the Nov. 3 election.” The New York Times (10/5, Liptak, 18.61M) says the ruling “continued what has been a string of Supreme Court rulings largely siding with arguments pressed by Republicans to restrict voting rights.” USA Today (10/5, Wolf, 10.31M) and the Washington Post (10/5, Barnes, 14.2M) provide similar coverage.

Ohio Secretary Of State Says Counties Can Offer Ballot Options, But They Must Be At One Site.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/5, 895K) reports Ohio Secretary of State Frank LaRose (R) said Monday that counties in the state will be able to offer extra options to collect absentee ballots, but they must be at a single site per country. In a directive to local elections officials, LaRose "said counties can set up additional drop boxes for completed ballots, as well as drive-through drop-off stations staffed by bipartisan teams of elections workers," but they "must be at or outside the county board of elections office." The Plain Dealer adds the directive may not be "the final word on the issue, since lawsuits over drop boxes are ongoing."

Polls Show Biden Leading Several Swing States, Trump Ahead In Missouri.

A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 605 likely Pennsylvania voters (9/29-10/5) has Joe Biden at 50% and President Trump at 45%.

A Public Policy Polling poll of 911 North Carolina voters (10/4-10/5) has Biden at 50% and Trump at 46%.

The New York Times (10/5, 18.61M) reports a New York Times-Siena College poll of 655 likely Arizona voters (10/1-10/3) has Biden at 49% and Trump at 41%.

A Reuters/Ipsos poll of 605 likely Wisconsin voters (9/29-10/5) has Biden at 50% and Trump at 44%.

The Kansas City Star (10/5, 549K) reports Trump "may not have the same support in Missouri that he did four years ago, based on the results in a poll from last week." The Remington Research Group poll of 980 likely Missouri voters (9/30-10/1) has Trump at 51% and Biden at 46%.

With Trump Trailing In Pennsylvania, Supporters Hope A "Huge Silent Majority" Will Turn Out. The Washington Times (10/5, Boyer, 492K) reports despite "unwavering support" from Republican voters like retired teacher Meg Schlauch, President Trump is trailing Joe Biden in Pennsylvania "by an average of 6.5 percentage points in the Real Clear Politics average of polls." Schlauch said, "I am praying that there is a huge silent majority, not minority, out there that is going to come and rise to the call."

NYTimes Analysis: Voters Feel "Dread" As Election Approaches. The New York Times (10/5, Robertson, 18.61M) says the country "is separated into two mutually distrustful political camps," but as election day nears, "there is a remarkably bipartisan sentiment: dread." Americans are "looking with grim foreboding at the months ahead. The outcome of the vote itself, the claims of rampant voter fraud that Mr. Trump leveled during last week's debate, the specter of a stolen election, the fear of violent clashes should the vote counting drag out – there is no limit to the bleak imagination."

"Plexiglass Shield" Will Separate Pence And Harris At Debate.

The AP (10/5, Ronayne) reports Vice President Pence and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) "will be separated by a see-through barrier to reduce the risk of coronavirus transmission at Wednesday's vice presidential debate. The Democratic campaign requested the plexiglass shield between the candidates, according to a campaign aide." USA Today (10/5, Morin, Garrison, 10.31M) reports Pence and Harris "will be seated and will be 12 feet and 3 inches apart." Reuters (10/5, Mason, Ax) reports, "In a statement, Pence's spokeswoman, Katie Miller, said: 'If Senator Harris wants to use a fortress around herself, have at it.'"

The Washington Post (10/5, Janes, Dawsey, Viser, 14.2M) reports, "As the dangers of large indoor gatherings have become increasingly apparent, a growing number of public health experts and some political operatives are asking why the debates must be held in-person. ... Pence should be in a 14-day quarantine, some experts said." The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Parti, Restuccia, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and Politico (10/5, Isenstadt, Cadelago, 4.29M) also report on the precautions.

NYTimes Analysis: Harris Faces Opportunities And Challenges. The New York Times (10/5, Ember, Lerer, 18.61M) writes that "as she prepares to face off against [Pence] on Wednesday and to play a starring role in the upcoming Supreme Court confirmation hearings," Harris "will be tested as a national leader and a voice of the party unlike ever before. It is a singular challenge for Ms. Harris, who arrived in Washington as a senator in 2017: Can she best her opponents and make the case for Democrats while walking the tightrope of unique expectations that American voters still have for women in power?"

Trump Campaign Cancels Upcoming Iowa And Ohio Ad Buys.

CNN (10/5, Bradner, Wright, Judd, 83.16M) reports on its website that President Trump's reelection campaign "canceled its planned television advertising in Iowa and Ohio this week" – $820,000 and $2.5 million, respectively – "focusing its spending on states where Trump is behind even as polls show he is neck-and-neck" with Joe Biden in the two states. This will be Trump's "third consecutive week without television ads in Iowa and Ohio."

Trump Campaign Says Biden "Still Running Negative Ads." Bloomberg (10/5, Beckwith, 4.73M) reports that the Biden campaign "dramatically cut back on negative ads after the president was diagnosed with coronavirus, but the Trump campaign isn't happy with the ads that are still running," and "complained Monday morning that the Democratic challenger was 'still running negative ads.'" According to data from Advertising Analytics, the Biden campaign "ran ads drawing contrasts between him and the president 7,125 times while negative ads ran 324 times on Thursday, before the president tweeted that he had the coronavirus. By Sunday, those numbers had fallen to 908 and 17, respectively, while positive ads touting Biden climbed from 2,106 spots on Thursday to 5,053 Sunday."

Biden Campaigns In Miami.

The AP (10/5, Weissert, Barrow) reports Joe Biden is this week "capitalizing on having the campaign trail largely to himself by hitting critical swing states and investing in longtime Republican bastions." Biden "made his second trip to Florida in a little over two weeks on Monday. His visit to Miami was designed to encroach on some of Trump's turf, even swinging through Little Havana, a typically conservative area known for its staunch opposition to the communist government that Fidel Castro installed in Cuba." Biden will campaign in Florida later this week.

The New York Times (10/5, Glueck, 18.61M) reports, "Speaking in Miami to Haitian-Americans, Cuban-Americans and others from immigrant backgrounds, Joe Biden wished the president well but urged him to listen to experts on the pandemic." The Miami Herald (10/5, 1.09M) reports Biden also said that President Trump's "tough talk and steep sanctions have only entrenched Cuba's Communist government." Biden said, "The Administration's approach is not working. Cuba is no closer to democracy than it was four years ago." Biden "also criticized Trump for failing to topple Venezuelan strongman Nicolás Maduro and for refusing to grant undocumented exiles" from deportation back to Venezuela. The Miami Herald (10/5, 1.09M) additionally reports that though Miami-Dade County Cuban-American voters continue to favor Trump over Biden, "more are moving toward the Democratic nominee, boosting Biden's chances of winning battleground Florida," according to a Miami Herald/Bendixen & Amadi International poll. Reuters (10/5, Mason) and Politico (10/5, Rodríguez, Caputo, 4.29M) also cover the stop.

The New York Times (10/5, 18.61M) reports a New York Times-Siena College poll of 655 likely Arizona voters (10/1-10/3) has Mark Kelly (D) at 50% and Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) at 39% in the state's Senate race. The Hill (10/5, Budryk, 2.98M) also covers the poll.

Georgia Senate Races See Big Spending.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/5, 895K) reports that the Senate race between Sen. David Perdue (R-GA) and Jon Ossoff (D) "has already triggered about $111 million in spending on ads from candidates and outside groups," and the "wild special election" for the seat held by Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) "has cost $40 million and counting, mostly from Republicans backing the incumbent's campaign." In terms of advertising spending, Loeffler has spent about $17 million so far, Raphael Warnock (D) about $9 million, Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) $1.3 million, and Matt Liebman (D) about $140,000.

Democratic PAC Plans $7.5M Ad Buy On Behalf Of Bollier In Kansas.

The Kansas City Star (10/5, 549K) reports "a barrage of Senate political ads" is set for Kansas. Duty and Country, a PAC affiliated with the Democrats' Senate Majority PAC, is planning $7.5 million in advertising in support of state Sen. Barbara Bollier (D), which "appears to be a direct response to last week's news" that the GOP's Senate Leadership Fund "was spending an additional $7.2 million" in support of Rep. Roger Marshall (R-KS).

Cunningham Leads By Six Points In North Carolina Senate Poll.

A Public Policy Polling poll of 911 North Carolina voters (10/4-10/5) has Cal Cunningham (D) at 48% and Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) at 42% in the state's Senate race.

Kennedy Has Five-Point Lead In NJ2 Poll.

A Monmouth University poll of 588 voters in NJ2 (9/26-10/1) shows Amy Kennedy (D) at 49% and Rep. Jeff Van Drew (R-NJ) at 44%. The Philadelphia Inquirer (10/5, Steele) reports Kennedy is "a former teacher who lives in Brigantine" and is who married to ex-Rep. Patrick Kennedy (D-RI). Van Drew, "a longtime conservative Democrat who was elected to Congress in 2018, became a Republican late last year." Politico (10/5, Friedman, 4.29M) and The Hill (10/5, Manchester, 2.98M) also cover the poll.

Parson Has Seven-Point Lead In Missouri Gubernatorial Poll.

The Kansas City Star (10/5, 549K) reports a Remington Research Group poll of 980 likely Missouri voters (9/30-10/1) has Gov. Mike Parson (R) at 51% and state Auditor Nicole Galloway at 44% in the state's gubernatorial race.

Cooper Leads By 12 Points In North Carolina Gubernatorial Poll.

A Public Policy Polling poll of 911 North Carolina voters (10/4-10/5) has Gov. Roy Cooper (D) at 52% and Lt. Gov. Dan Forest (R) at 40% in the state's gubernatorial race.

Roy Calls For Paxton's Resignation.

The AP (10/5) reports Rep. Chip Roy (R-TX) on Monday "became the most prominent member of his party to call for the resignation of the state's Republican attorney general, Ken Paxton, following revelations that Paxton's top deputies reported him to law enforcement for alleged crimes including bribery and abuse of office." The AP says Roy "was previously Paxton's top deputy in the attorney general's office." According to the AP, "Roy's call for Paxton's resignation comes days after seven senior lawyers in Paxton's office sent a letter to the office's head of human resources saying that they reported their boss to 'the appropriate law enforcement authority' for potentially breaking the law 'in his official capacity as the current Attorney General of Texas.'"

However, the Dallas Morning News (10/5, 946K) reports Paxton "said Monday he would not be resigning over allegations of bribery, abuse of office and other potential criminal offenses against him made by his top staffer." The Morning News adds Texas Gov. Greg Abbott (R) "said in a statement that the allegations 'raise serious concerns,' but 'I will withhold further comment until the results of any investigation are complete.'"

The Houston Chronicle (10/5, 730K) editorializes that Paxton should resign over the allegations "that appear deeper and uglier than what partisan foes had alleged previously."

WPost: Officials Must Guard Against Trump's Attempts To Intimidate Voters.

A Washington Post (10/5, 14.2M) editorial calls on state and local officials to "ensure that safeguards are in place to protect the rights of Americans to cast their ballots" from President Trump's "attempts to undermine the election and scare off voters."

WSJournal Laments That Toomey Will Not Seek Reelection.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the decision by Sen. Pat Toomey (R-PA) not to run for reelection in 2022 sets back efforts to advance pro-growth policies in Congress.

IMF: Brazil's Economy Faces "Unusually High" Uncertainty Due To COVID-19.

Bloomberg (10/5, Rosati, 4.73M) reports the IMF "said the Brazilian economy faces 'exceptionally high and multifaceted' risks as it continues to grapple with the coronavirus pandemic and its impact on the country's debt dynamics." IMF staff, in a statement released following an official visit to Brazil, said, "There is an unusually high degree of uncertainty over how the pandemic will evolve and the expiry of fiscal support at the end of the year will add pressure on the already-wide output gap." Brazil's economy "remains fragile amid rising levels of public debt used to finance the stimulus and a growing fiscal deficit, currently forecast at 12% of gross domestic product." The IMF "said a second wave of cases, long-term economic damage from the recession and confidence shocks all posed significant risks to its recovery, and additional fiscal response could be needed.”

WHO Official: Approximately 10% Of World’s Population May Have Been Infected With COVID.

The AP (10/5, Keaten) reports Michael Ryan, head of emergencies at the World Health Organization, “said Monday the agency’s ‘best estimates’ indicate roughly 1 in 10 people worldwide may have been infected by the coronavirus – more than 20 times the number of confirmed cases – and warned of a difficult period ahead.” Ryan said this “means ‘the vast majority of the world remains at risk.’” HHS Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir, “told the meeting by videoconference that the United States ‘looks forward to working together to defeat this pandemic and move our people and economics back to normalcy.’” Reuters (10/5, Nebehay, Farge) reports Giroir “said that it was critical that WHO’s 194 member states receive ‘regular and timely updates, including the terms of reference for this panel or for any field missions, so that we can all engage with the process and be confident in the outcomes.’”

O’Brien: China Cannot Continue Unleashing “Plagues On The World.”

National Security Adviser O’Brien was asked on the Hugh Hewitt Show (10/5) if “the world recognize[s] that China lied” about the coronavirus. O’Brien said, “There’s no question about it. I can’t tell you how many world leaders we’ve spoken to, including world leaders, that China thinks are their best friends who told us they don’t want to have anything to do with them. ... World leaders understand where this came from. They understand that the Chinese were at best reckless, and at worst witting in how this thing spread. So I think the whole world has gotten a taste of China. And look, this isn’t the first plague that’s come from China since the, you know, the last 20 years. We’ve had SARS, we’ve had H1N1, avian flu, swine flu. So, China has a very serious public health problem, and they need to get it fixed immediately. They can’t keep unleashing these plagues on the world.”

Gottlieb Says He Trusts China’s Pandemic Data. CNBC (10/5, Stankiewicz, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Monday, former FDA commissioner Scott Gottlieb “lamented the persistent spread of the coronavirus in the U.S., suggesting the nation’s response pales in comparison to other places around the world.” Gottlieb is quoted as saying, “The entire Pacific Rim has less than 1,000 infections a day. Having a raging epidemic is not inevitable. ... People want to say China is lying about the two dozen cases that they’re reporting a day, which I don’t believe they are [lying]. Certainly, the entire Pacific Rim isn’t in on the conspiracy. It isn’t inevitable that we have a raging epidemic.”

Russian Agency Says COVID Deaths Are More Than Twice What Was Previously Reported.

Bloomberg (10/5, Meyer, 4.73M) reports that Russia’s Federal Statistics Service now says “45,663 people have died with Covid-19 in April through August, more than double the death toll released by the government’s virus-response staff.” According to Bloomberg, “The latest figures from the statistics agency, known as Rosstat, include deaths both directly attributed to the novel coronavirus and cases where it was listed as an ‘important condition’ leading to the lethal outcome.” Bloomberg says the Russian government’s “virus-response staff puts the total deaths at 21,475 from the start of the epidemic through Oct. 4.” Bloomberg adds that “according to those figures, the accuracy of which has been questioned by the World Health Organization and outside experts, Russia has one of the lowest death rates in the world.”

UK’s Coronavirus Test-And-Trace System Failed To Capture Over 15,000 Positive Tests.

Bloomberg (10/5, 4.73M) reports the UK’s coronavirus test-and-trace system “failed to capture more than 15,000 positive tests, piling pressure on Boris Johnson’s government to fix a program seen as essential to control the epidemic.” Public Health England attributed the omission to a “technical issue,” raising “the prospect that thousands of people who had close contact with COVID-19 cases weren’t advised to self-isolate.” The Washington Post (10/5, Booth, Armus, 14.2M) reports that after the error “was spotted and the lost cases accounted for, the government’s report of new daily infections nearly doubled – from 12,872 on Saturday to 22,961 on Sunday – sparking renewed angst among officials in London and England’s north, where most of the new cases were centered.”

The AP (10/5, Pylas) reports the British government is now investigating “how nearly 16,000 new coronavirus infections went unreported as a result of a technical glitch, a failing that could have given fresh impetus to an outbreak that critics say is already out of control.” The New York Times (10/5, Landler, Mueller, 18.61M) also reports the disclosure “brought a storm of criticism on the Johnson government, which has been on the defensive for its haphazard handling of the pandemic since March, when” UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson “hesitated for days before imposing a nationwide lockdown.” According to the Times, “More than 57,000 people have died from the virus in Britain, the highest number in Europe, and the country is now facing a second wave of infections.”

Protests, Turmoil Continues In Opposition To Israel’s Second Coronavirus Lockdown.

The New York Times (10/5, Kershner, 18.61M) reports that amid “internal political conflicts, confusing instructions and a lack of public trust in the government, Israel seems to be fraying further under a second national lockdown as the country struggles to cope with a surge in coronavirus cases and deaths that, relative to the size of the population, are among the worst in the world."

Kurds Plan To Release ISIS Families From Detention Camp.

The Washington Post (10/5, Loveluck, 14.2M) reports that on Monday, "authorities in northeastern Syria said...that they were preparing to release thousands of Syrian families from a detention camp holding civilians displaced during the final battle to defeat the Islamic State's self-proclaimed caliphate." According to the Post, "Conditions inside al-Hol displacement camp, a sprawl of tents perched in the desert...have alarmed humanitarian groups and in some cases aided the radicalization of women and children who spent years under Islamic State rule." Ilham Ahmed, president of the Kurdish-dominated Syrian Democratic Council's Executive Committee, "which is responsible for governing the area," said, "A decision will be issued to empty the Syrians from the camp completely."

Chinese Propaganda Blitz Warns Against Closer US-Taiwan Ties.

The New York Times (10/5, Myers, 18.61M) says, "Chinese propaganda is rarely subtle or particularly persuasive, but the torrent of bombast online and in state media in recent weeks is striking and potentially ominous." According to the Times, "The targets are China's main adversaries: the United States and Taiwan, which are moving closer and closer together." The Times adds, "The propaganda has accompanied a series of military drills in recent weeks, including the test-firing of ballistic missiles and the buzzing of Taiwan's airspace. Together, they are intended to draw stark red lines for the United States, signaling that China would not shrink from a military clash."

Kim Calls For 80-Day Campaign To Attain North Korea's Goals.

Reuters (10/5, Cha) reports North Korea's state news agency KCNA said Tuesday that during a politburo meeting of the ruling Workers' Party on Monday, North Korean leader Kim Jong-un called on the country "to embark on an 80-day campaign to attain its goals in every sector before a congress in January to decide a new five-year plan."

Protesters, Police Clash In Kyrgyzstan Following Parliamentary Election.

The AP (10/5) reports protesters and police clashed "in Kyrgyzstan's capital Monday during a demonstration against the results of a parliamentary election, and dozens of people were reported injured." According to local media estimates, "about 4,000 people took part in the rally in Bishkek, the country's capital," after early results "gave the majority of votes to two parties with ties to the ruling elites amid allegations of vote buying." The AP adds, "Smaller protests also took place in two other Kyrgyz cities."

US, Iran Offer To Lead Peace Talks Between Armenia And Azerbaijan.

Reuters (10/5, Hovhannisyan, Bagirova) reports on Monday, the governments of Azerbaijan and Armenia "accused each other...of attacking civilian areas and said the death toll was rising from the deadliest fighting in the South Caucasus for more than 25 years." Chances for a ceasefire "appeared remote after fighting intensified at the weekend, with hundreds killed in clashes involving artillery, tanks and fighter planes since Sept. 27." Reuters reports that "in an interview shown on Monday by Turkey's state broadcaster, Azeri President Ilham Aliyev said Armenia must withdraw its troops from Nagorno-Karabakh and surrounding Azeri territories for military action to stop." Reuters says Aliyev "has ignored a ceasefire appeal by the United States, Russia and France, who have led mediation efforts in the intermittent conflict since the 1990s, and said in Monday's interview that any peacemaking must involve Turkey."

Reuters (10/5) reports that also on Monday, Deputy Secretary of State Stephen Biegun "spoke separately to the foreign ministers of Azerbaijan and Armenia...and urged an immediate ceasefire in the Nagorno-Karabakh region." Reuters adds, "Earlier, NATO chief Jens Stoltenberg added his voice to calls for an immediate end to the clashes over Nagorno-Karabakh, a mountain enclave that belongs to Azerbaijan under international law but is populated and governed by ethnic Armenians."

The AP (10/5, Demourian) reports that Iran, "which borders both countries, said it was working on a peace plan." Iranian Foreign Ministry spokesman Saeed Khatibzadeh is quoted as saying, "Iran has prepared a plan with a specific framework containing details after consultations with both sides of the dispute, Azerbaijan and Armenia, as well as regional states and neighbors, and will pursue this plan."

The New York Times (10/5, Kramer, 18.61M) reports while "skirmishes have been common for years along the front lines of the Nagorno-Karabakh region," analysts and former diplomats say this conflict "is distinct...for the more direct support that Turkey has offered to Azerbaijan and for the scale of the fighting."

Agency MBS Issuance Sets New Record In Q3.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/5, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports, "Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae issued a combined $918 billion of single-family MBS during the third quarter, setting yet another new record for mortgage securitizations." According to IMF, "the July-September cycle smashed the previous record, set in 2Q20 by a comfortable margin of $173 billion." Q3's market was fueled by "historic levels of refinance demand." IMF says, "After setting new monthly records in July and August, the agency MBS market cooled slightly in September."

CUNA Supports The Goals Of FHFA's Strategic Plan For Fiscal Years 2021-2024.

In a press release, the Credit Union National Association (10/5) announced that it "strongly supports the three goals included in the Federal Housing Finance Agency's (FHFA) strategic plan and noted that credit unions have a 'substantial interest' in effective-functioning FHFA-regulated entities, including Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the Federal Home Loan Bank (FHLB) system." On Monday, CUNA filed comments in response to the FHFA's request for feedback on its strategic plan for FY2021-2024. The three goals CUNA supports are ensuring "safe and sound regulated entities through world-class supervision," fostering "competitive, liquid, efficient, and resilient (CLEAR) national housing finance markets," and positioning the FHFA "as a model of operational excellence by strengthening the workforce and infrastructure."

MBA: Nation's Mortgage Forbearance Rate Fell From 6.87% To 6.81% In Last Week Of September.

HousingWire (10/5, Howley, 23K) reports the US forbearance rate "dropped from 6.87%" to 6.81% in the final week of September, reaching its "lowest since mid-April." The GSE forbearance rate "dropped seven basis points to 4.39%, while the rate for Ginnie Mae loans that include loans backed by the Federal Housing Administration increased one basis points to 9.16%." According to HousingWire, "About 29% of total loans in forbearance are in the initial plan stage, while 70% are in a forbearance extension, MBA said. The remaining 1.4% are forbearance re-entries, the report said."

National Mortgage News (10/5, Centopani) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "There continues to be a slow and steady decrease in the share of loans in forbearance – driven by consistent declines in the GSE loan share – and a persistently high amount in the Ginnie Mae portfolio. The significant churn in the labor market now, more than six months into the pandemic, is still causing financial distress for millions of homeowners." National Mortgage Professional (10/5, Persaud) and the Urban Institute (10/5, 1K) provide additional coverage.

Black Knight Warns Mortgage Delinquencies Likely To Exceed Pre-Pandemic Levels Until 2022.

HousingWire (10/5, Roha, 23K) reports, "Following previous natural disaster recovery patterns, mortgage delinquencies are not expected to return to pre-pandemic levels until March 2022, according to a report from Black Knight. If trends persist, the data service provider estimates once the first wave of forbearances hit their 12-month expiration in March 2021, there may be more than 1 million excess delinquencies." Black Knight found that early stage delinquencies fell 9% in August, while serious delinquencies rose 5%. August's "upward tick marked the mildest increase in five months," suggesting "90-day mortgage delinquencies could be nearing their peak." HousingWire says, "looking ahead at September's projected numbers, payment activity improved, with 88.9% of first-lien mortgage holders making their monthly payment compared to August's 88.6% and June's 87.5%. Black Knight estimates the overall national delinquency rate may fall in September if increased payment activity persists during the last week of the month."

Mortgage News Daily (10/5, Swanson) reports Black Knight Data & Analytics President Ben Graboske said, "August's increase in serious delinquencies was the mildest of any of those five months, which – combined with the shrinking inflow of new delinquencies – suggests we could be nearing the peak. But as with so much these days – it still remains to be seen. While this may seem to paint a bleak picture for the future, multiple mitigating factors could help to reduce any resulting foreclosure wave. First and foremost, while recovery has been slow and incremental, the bulk of homeowners who have come out of forbearance are currently performing on their mortgages."

MBA: Commercial, Multifamily Mortgage Performance Stabilizes In September.

Mortgage Professional America (10/5, Mendoza) reports, "Commercial and multifamily mortgage performance has started to slowly recover from the strain caused by the coronavirus pandemic, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association." CRE and multifamily delinquencies were "down slightly in September," MBA's CREF Loan Performance Survey revealed. According to MPA, "the share of commercial and multifamily loan balances that were current rose from 93.6% in August to 94.3% in September. The share of loans less than 30 days delinquent declined from 1.6% to 0.9% month over month. However, those that are 90+ days delinquent ticked up from 2.9% to 3%." 1.3% of GES loan balances were delinquent in September, unchanged from August.

Fitch: Commercial Mortgage Delinquency Rate Fell In September.

National Mortgage News (10/5, Finkelstein) reports, "The commercial mortgage delinquency rate fell in September, according to Fitch Ratings. But if the agency had included in their analysis loans that are current on their payments but also in forbearance or other forms of relief, the rate would be higher, just shy of 8%, Fitch Ratings reported." In September, 3% of loans in CMBS rated by Fitch were delinquent. According to NMN, "with more loans granted some form of payment relief, Fitch said, September's delinquency rate fell 12 basis points from August, to 4.64%." Fitch Senior Director Melissa Che said relief has "helped to mitigate a sharp rise in delinquencies to date."

Trepp: CMBS Delinquencies Declined In September.

Multi-Housing News (10/5, Baltic) reports, "The Trepp CMBS delinquency rate declined to 8.92 percent in September, marking the third month in a row that the rate fell." The rate fell 10 basis points from August. According to MHN, "delinquency rates and other indicators varied hugely by property type. In all, 26.0 percent of hospitality loans were with a special servicer, up from 25.0 percent in August. Retail, too, was hit hard, with 18.3 percent of loans in special servicing, for an increase of 1.0 percentage point from August. When we include the loans that are on the servicers' watchlist, those numbers grow to a stunning 69.8 percent for hotel loans and 40.1 percent for retail loans."

Some Experts Fear Lenders May Relax Underwriting Standards Once Market Slows Down.

American Banker (10/5, Dobbs, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that while "lenders are optimistic about the rest of this year," with mortgage rates exceptionally low and homebuying demand solid, "the mortgage market is expected to grow at a slower pace in 2021." Industry observers "want mortgage-dependent lenders to start planning for that deceleration, while avoiding an urge to relax underwriting standards." American Banker reports, "As volume slows, bankers must become more vigilant about vetting borrowers and setting underwriting standards, industry observers said." Piper Sandler analyst Stephen Scouten said, "I think a lot of management teams are relatively optimistic and upbeat right now, but this is such a highly uncertain credit environment. I don't think anyone really knows what's going to happen next. So I think we'll see banks stay conservative – we should."

Prime Non-Agency MBS Issuance Bounces Back In Q3.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/5, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports prime non-agency MBS issuance "more than doubled" from Q2 to Q3. According to IMF, "Overall, some $4.90 billion of prime non-agency MBS was issued in the third quarter, with $1.24 billion of it eligible for sale to the government-sponsored enterprises. Issuance in both categories was subdued during the second quarter as lenders and issuers dealt with volatility caused by the coronavirus." IMF says the Q3 comeback was "led by JPMorgan Chase, which brought $2.12 billion of prime non-agency MBS to the market spread across four deals, along with a $341.9 million MBS backed by loans for investment properties." IMF adds that the expanded-credit sector "remained the top source of non-agency MBS backed by newly-originated loans. Some $7.42 billion of EC MBS was issued in the third quarter, up 11.9% from the previous period."

Fannie Mae Predicts Housing Market Will Stay Strong In Coming Months.

DS News (10/5, Babb) reports that Fannie Mae's latest Economic & Housing Weekly Note suggests the housing market should remain strong, benefiting from a boost in residential construction spending. Fannie Mae's Ricky Goyette wrote, "Data in September showed that the economic recovery is still ongoing, though there were more signs that the pace of recovery is slowing. Job growth continued in September, though once again the pace slowed from the prior month. Total nonfarm payroll employment remains 7.0% below the level seen in February." Regarding housing, Goyette said, "data released this week continued to show strength in the housing market, with an increase in pending sales to record levels. The increase in September private residential construction spending supports our outlook for a strong rebound in residential fixed investment in the third quarter."

Ginnie Mae MBS Buyouts Slow In August.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/5, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports that the "sudden increase in servicer withdrawals of loans from Ginnie Mae mortgage-backed securities early this summer appears to be waning." According to IMF, servicers "pulled $66.81 billion of government-insured loans from Ginnie MBS pools in August. That was down 7.6% from July and represented the second monthly decline since loan removals peaked in June." IMF says most loans are "removed from Ginnie pools because the borrower paid off the loan, and payoffs accounted for 85.3% of loan withdrawals for the first eight months of the year." Payoff removals declined 0.4% from July to August. IMF adds, "Several top Ginnie servicers recorded larger gains in payoffs, including PennyMac and Quicken Loans – both up 4.0% – New Residential (10.8%), Home Point Financial (8.6%) and United Shore Financial Services (46.1%)."

Non-QM Activity Is On The Rise, Bankrate Suggests.

National Mortgage Professional (10/5, Persaud) reports that "self-employed borrowers who don't qualify for a mainstream mortgage" are turning to the non-QM space, according to Bankrate. Some non-QM lenders like GreenBox Loans and Angel Oak Home Loans are reporting that business has bounced back since it ground to a halt amid the pandemic. Angel Oak regional manager Mac Cregger said, "It's not back to full volume, but it's close."

Phoenix Capital Offering $643M Bulk MSR Package.

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/5, Muolo, Subscription Publication) says, "Signs of life continue in the Ginnie Mae servicing sales arena but we've yet to catch wind of any deals north of $5 billion." According to IMF, "In an auction slated for Tuesday, Phoenix Capital is offering a bulk MSR package sized at $643 million. The receivables have a delinquency rate of 5.3% and a forbearance reading of 11.0%. A flow component that could provide $25 million to $40 million per month is also available."

AmeriHome And Guild Announce Intentions To Go Public.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/5, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports AmeriHome Mortgage and Guild Mortgage each "announced their intentions to become public companies." According to IMF, "The two join recent announcers United Wholesale Mortgage (via a special purpose acquisition company) and Caliber Home Loans. In early August, origination market leader Rocket Companies (Quicken Loans) went public." IMF says, "AmeriHome, according to its S-1, earned $275.0 million during the first six months of 2020, slightly less than its combined profit for 2018 and 2019 ($279.5 million.)" Guild "said it took in $604.3 million of revenue during 1H20 and posted a net profit of $110.8 million."

Behind a paywall in its Short Takes, Inside Mortgage Finance (10/5, Muolo, Subscription Publication) says, "The AmeriHome Mortgage IPO could turn out to be one of the more noteworthy deals out there. How so? Well for starters, 97% of AmeriHome's originations come through the correspondent channel. Second, the nonbank has only been in business since 2013." IMF says Guild Mortgage "has been around since 1960." Guild said in its S-1 that it is "among the longest-operating seller-servicers" in the country.

Analysis: Racial Wealth Gap Cost $2.7T In Black Income Over Two Decades.

Seattle Medium (10/5) says a report from Citi Global Perspective Solutions, "Closing the Racial Equality Gaps: the Economic Costs of Black Inequality in the U.S.," indicates "centuries of bias and institutionalized segregation have generated grave societal and economic losses that reverberate throughout America." Had these gaps been "addressed 20 years ago," the researchers say the nation could have "generated an additional $13 trillion in business revenue," created "6.1 million jobs each year if Black entrepreneurs had access to fair and equitable lending," enabled "Black America to earn $2.7 trillion more in income," fostered "770,000 more Black homeowners," and "boosted the economy by $218 billion." Seattle Medium says to close the gaps, banks "must invest in Black entrepreneurs, and do more to equitably bring more mortgage-ready Black homebuyers already identified by Freddie Mac into the marketplace. Increased mortgage lending would include 1.7 million millennials now left out, according to the Urban Institute."

Markets

10-Year Yield Rises.

MarketWatch (10/5, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield rose to 0.760 percent.

Dollar Weakens.

Reuters \(UK\) (10/6, Cotaga) reports, "The dollar was on the defensive against most currencies on Tuesday as rising optimism that U.S. lawmakers could agree on new stimulus to blunt the economic impact of the coronavirus dampened demand for safer assets." The dollar index "was down slightly at 93.39. It has fallen 1.2% from a two-month high reached at the end of September, in contrast with U.S. equity markets, which rose." The euro "was trading up 0.1% at 1.1792." The dollar "was 0.1% weaker versus the Japanese yen at 105.65."

Gold Holds Steady.

Reuters (10/5) reports, "Gold prices were steady on Tuesday, having hit a near-two week high in the previous session, as a softer dollar countered pressure from an upbeat risk sentiment." Spot gold "traded at $1,912.49 per ounce by 0108 GMT. Prices hit $1,918.36 on Monday, a peak since Sept. 22," while US gold futures "were little changed at $1,919.30."

Oil Gains.

Reuters (10/6, Paul, Peng) reports, "Oil prices gained on Tuesday due to fears that refineries could be hit by a storm brewing in the Gulf of Mexico, while buyers also drew relief from U.S. President Donald Trump's return to the White House after being treated for COVID-19 in hospital." US West Texas Intermediate crude futures "were trading 36 cents, or nearly 0.9% higher at $39.58 a barrel at 0710 GMT." Brent crude futures "rose 25 cents, or 0.6%, to $41.54 a barrel."

Cybersecurity

CISA Reveals Timeline For Cyber Threat Sharing Plan.

NextGov (10/5, Baksh) reports CISA plans to "have a national strategy in place to increase the quality of cyber threat information shared by all parties within the year." An agency response to a recent DHS IG report on the matter said, "CISA will build its national cyber threat information sharing strategy in collaboration and coordination with its partners and stakeholders," adding, "This national strategy is projected to be completed during the fourth quarter of FY 2021. The estimated completion date is September 30, 2021." The IG found "that while CISA had implemented the basic requirements of a 2015 information sharing law...it made 'limited progress' on that front during 2017 and 2018." NextGov says while there "were a lot of participants willing to take relevant information, there were very few willing to give it, the report said, leading to poor overall quality of the data in CISA's Automated Indicator Sharing system."

CISA "Covers The Waterfront" With "Flurry" Of Announcements.

Politico (10/5, Matishak, 4.29M) reports CISA "has issued a flurry of announcements on a host of digital threats" ranging from "warning that tensions with China could encourage Beijing to hack more and an election security PSA with the FBI to malware analysis with U.S. Cyber Command and a toolkit on election disinformation." Politico writes observers "say the output is due to the increased attention on cybersecurity during a presidential election year (especially after 2016) and the months of telework caused by the Covid-19 pandemic." Venable Cybersecurity Services Senior Director Ross Nodurft says the frequency of the alerts is "probably commensurate with the threats that we are seeing right now." Nodurft adds, "Hospitals and health care systems are being targeted by criminals with ransomware as they respond to the influx of Covid-19 patients; state and local government are dealing with increased threats on our election systems; and critical vulnerabilities continue to be exploited in the wild."

Hackers Attempting To Impersonate Companies, Government Contractors.

CyberScoop (10/5, Stone) reports professional hackers who "already try to hide their activity through an array of technical means now seem to be trying on more corporate disguises, by creating front companies or working as government contractors to boost their legitimacy." US law enforcement in September "accused hackers based in Iran and China of conducting global espionage operations while appearing to exist as otherwise innocuous technology firms." While the public nature "of the charges are proof the efforts weren't entirely successful, the tactic marks an evolution of the use of dummy corporations since a group of financial scammers stole a reported $1 billion by posing as a cybersecurity testing firm." US Assistant Attorney General for National Security John Demers said in a recent interview, "It just makes it harder to figure out who's doing what, and what are their motivations."

FBI Investigating Cyberattack On Mississippi School District.

WDAM-TV Hattiesburg, MS (10/5, Robertson, 13K) reports from Waynesboro, Mississippi that a "cyberattack against Wayne County School District's 16th Section Principal Fund Account has resulted in an investigation by the FBI after they were contacted by school officials shortly after the breach was discovered on July 2." Money in that account "is made up of royalty revenue from oil produced on property owned by the school district." The impact of the "attack hasn't been fully determined yet, but Superintendent Tommy Branch said it will not affect day-to-day operations within the school district."

FireEye Mandiant Executive: Ransomware Attack Tempo "Unbearable."

The New York Times (10/5, Ovide, 18.61M) interviews FireEye Mandiant executive Charles Carmakal "about the root causes and fixes for ransomware attacks." Carmakal "said his company was aware of more than 100 organizations that were dealing with ransomware attacks in September." He said, "We're at a point that I feel is really unbearable." Some US officials "worry that ransomware groups will try to freeze voter registration data or otherwise disrupt US elections or sow uncertainty among voters." US law enforcement agencies "have stepped up efforts to identify, arrest and try the perpetrators of ransomware attacks," but it is "not always easy, Carmakal said, because a good number of them operate in countries that don't extradite people to the United States."

Europol Warns Of Increase In Cybercrime During Pandemic.

The Hill (10/5, 2.98M) reports, "Europol, the European Union's law enforcement agency, warns that cybercrime has spiked over the past year in large part due to the COVID-19 pandemic." The Hill adds, "Europol's findings were detailed in its annual Internet Organised Crime Threat Assessment, released Monday. The assessment highlighted ransomware attacks, such as those targeting health care organizations, as one of the most persistent cyber threats during the pandemic, including attacks involving hackers threatening to auction off data if a ransom is not paid." According to The Hill, "The distribution of child abuse material online has also increased during the COVID-19 pandemic, including livestreaming of sexual abuse. Other concerns have involved SIM swapping, in which the hacker takes over a SIM card on the individual's phone to intercept a two-factor authentication code, and the increased use of the dark web for criminal activities."

Federal Reserve

Banks Warn Against New Liquidity Rule After Pandemic Selloff.

American Banker (10/6, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports regulators for months "have relaxed regulatory standards in order to help banks weather the COVID-19 crisis," but "an impending liquidity benchmark will test the largest institutions' ability to support the fragile economy while complying with new rules." The Fed, OCC, and FDIC "are poised soon to finalize the Net Stable Funding Ratio, a measure of long-term liquidity strength developed after the financial crisis by the international Basel Committee." But some analysts and industry observers "say finalizing the rule, not long after the coronavirus outbreak triggered volatility in the liquidity markets, is playing with fire." The new liquidity ratio, they say, could make it difficult for banks to respond if the market suffers a shock similar to this spring's selloff in Treasuries. BPI Chief Economist Bill Nelson said, "It does make it ironic that [regulators] are adopting this in the wake of events for which it was demonstrably not needed, and it would have made it worse."

Evans: Fed Must Be "In It To Win It" For New Inflation Framework To Achieve Its Goal.

Reuters (10/5, Staff) reports Chicago Fed President Charles Evans on Monday "said he expects U.S. inflation to reach 2% by 2023 and signaled his support for allowing it to rise to 2.5%, a level seen by others at the Fed as excessive." Evans, in remarks prepared for the National Association for Business Economics, said the Fed "needs to have an 'in it to win it' attitude toward our inflation objective. ... This will require actual overshooting, and we can't be timid about doing so." Evans also "said his forecast of inflation reaching 2% and unemployment falling to 4% in 2023 depended on more federal fiscal aid, without which jobs would take longer to return and recessionary dynamics could gain traction."

Bloomberg (10/5, 4.73M), the Wall Street Journal (10/5, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), and The Hill (10/5, Lane, 2.98M) also report.

Internal Revenue Service

IRS Extends Deadline To Register For Stimulus Check.

USA Today (10/5, Tyko, 10.31M) reports the IRS has extended by five weeks the deadline to register for a stimulus check. The agency announced Monday "the new deadline to register for an Economic Impact Payment is Nov. 21, a move from Oct. 15." The extension "is for those who don't typically file a tax return, which includes millions of people, many living on limited incomes, who have yet to get their hands on money that could help pay the rent, cover grocery bills, handle car repairs and pay for other essentials."

IRS Investigating LaPierre For Criminal Tax Fraud.

The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Maremont, Viswanatha, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports people familiar with the matter say the IRS is investigating NRA CEO Wayne LaPierre for criminal tax fraud.

Final Rules For Endowment Tax For Private Colleges Issued.

Education Dive (10/5, Busta) reports that the IRS and the U.S. Department of the Treasury "issued final rules for how they will implement the so-called endowment tax on private universities that the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act established." The tax "applies a 1.4% levy to the net investment income of private colleges and universities that enroll at least 500 tuition-paying students and whose endowments are valued at $500,000 or more per student." The final rules "include changes from interim rules posted last year that at least two higher education groups say could benefit colleges."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Gardineer: OCC Must Be Diversity Role Model For Banks.

In a BankThink piece for American Banker (10/5, Subscription Publication, 31K), Grovetta Gardineer, Senior Deputy Comptroller for Bank Supervision Policy at the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, writes about the personal and professional obstacles she has overcome as a woman of color. During her 33-year career, Gardineer says, "I have seen progress in our country, in banking and in federal service. Yet I still see too few people who look like me in board rooms, in senior leadership positions among federal agencies and among international bank supervision leaders." She adds, "We have a purpose and responsibility to model the kind of people we hope others become, through our work and behavior."

Despite OCC's Green Light, Banks Are Not Holding Crypto Assets.

American Banker (10/5, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports on why OCC-regulated banks have not yet started to hold customers' digital assets, despite being given approval to do so. One factor "seems to be lack of clarity around exactly what banks are allowed to do and the risks therein." Another consideration is that banks "would need sufficient demand from customers to justify the time, resources and technology needed to safely hold these assets." Many "are also wary of the risks of cryptocurrency in general, according to recent research."

OCC Gives USAA Bank Failing CRA Grade.

The Houston Chronicle (10/5, 730K) reports the OCC has given San Antonio-based USAA Federal Savings Bank a failing grade over evidence of "discriminatory or other illegal credit practices." The OCC lowered the bank's Community Reinvestment Act performance evaluation rating from "satisfactory" to "needs to improve" after it found evidence of 600 violations involving customers.

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

"Covid-19 Is A Fearsome Killer. Trump's Magical Thinking Will Not Change That." The Washington Post (10/5, 14.2M) says in an editorial that President Trump "has regarded face masks with foolhardy contempt, displaying the same bravado with which he summoned states to reopen, held mass rallies without social distancing or masks, and tamped down warnings of danger from government experts. In the past few days, this casual disregard for others has been on display again, including an inexplicable joyride outside of Walter Reed National Military Medical Center that put at risk those in the vehicle with him. There has been no sign of contact tracing at the White House as the contagion has spread down the corridors. This is a most callous hubris."

"Local Officials Should Prepare Against Trump-Inspired Voter Intimidation." The Washington Post (10/5, 14.2M) calls on state and local officials to "ensure that safeguards are in place to protect the rights of Americans to cast their ballots" from President Trump's "attempts to undermine the election and scare off voters."

Wall Street Journal.

“An Illinois Tax Crossroads.” The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) advises Illinois voters against voting to replace the state’s flat tax with a progressive tax on income.

“Pat Toomey’s Market Niche.” The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Sen. Pat Toomey’s (R-PA) decision not to run for reelection in 2022 sets back efforts to advance pro-growth policies in Congress.

“The Covid Testing Bait-And-Switch.” The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says President Trump’s coronavirus infection and spikes in cases nationwide show testing is insufficient and that health experts should learn from the inadequate response to federal guidelines when drafting plans for future pandemics.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "That's right, people. Donald J. Trump, President of the United States, is battling COVID-19. And before I say anything else, can I just say on the record, I don't want Donald Trump to die from this. ... I don't want him to lose his life, you want him to lose his election. Also, I don't want him to die because Mike Pence would be President, and then we might be dead because Pence is the most boring person on the planet."

Trevor Noah: "The whole reason people chose Joe Biden is because he has the best chance to beat Donald Trump. If Trump wasn't in the race, people could have taken a chance with someone else. Like personally, I would have voted for Marianne Williamson because, boy, do I think America needs to realize its chakras."

Trevor Noah: "The way Trump has handled the country's coronavirus response is unfortunately also how he has handled this pandemic in his personal life. Starting with his brazen disregard for all the safety precautions that keep the virus from spreading. ... Trump and his friends are having no-mask cocktail receptions indoors where the guest of honor is COVID-19."

Trevor Noah: "Some people are saying this was karma catching up with Trump, but guys, the massive outbreak at the White House is not karma. It is consequences. It is not karma to get hit by lightning when are you standing on the roof of a skyscraper holding a metal rod when it is lightning. The universe didn't do that...to you. You did it to yourself."

Trevor Noah: "It is bad enough that Trump put the entire White House in danger, but what is even more disturbing is that after Trump found out that he could have been exposed to the virus, he didn't quarantine. He didn't social-distance, he carried on with his life with complete disregard for other people's lives. ... Trump knew that he could be infected, and he put his own supporters at risk anyway? And I feel so bad for anyone who paid money to attend that fundraiser because those people didn't want COVID. They just wanted to give Trump enough money so that he would let them dump chemicals in a river. Why should something bad happen to them?"

Trevor Noah: [On Trump's physician, Dr. Sean Conley, giving misleading information to the American public] "On one side, [Dr. Conley] has the public asking for information on the President's health. And on the other side, you have your patient, the President himself, who wants you to go out and tell everyone that he karate-chopped the virus."

Trevor Noah: "Once again, we are reminded it doesn't matter who you are – if you come into contact with Donald Trump, at some point, you are going to have to lie."

Trevor Noah: "Unlike most Americans, Trump has access to the best treatments possible, and a world-class medical team looking after him. ... That's right, America. 'Don't be afraid of COVID, and don't let it dominate your life.' Because as long as you can take your private helicopter from your home hospital to an even better hospital, you will be great."

Stephen Colbert: "Big news: After being choppered to Walter Reed Hospital on Friday, Donald Trump has been released back into the wild. There he is, immediately taking off his mask and saluting the Marines and the camera crew filming this campaign ad. Who has two thumbs that doesn't care if you live or die? This guy! My thoughts and prayers go out to everyone he's about to infect."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump made the announcement himself, tweeting, 'I will be leaving the great Walter Reed Medical Center today at 6:30 p.m. feeling really good! Don't be afraid of COVID. Don't let it dominate your life. We have developed, under the Trump Administration, some really great drugs and knowledge. I feel better than I did 20 years ago!' Well, I'm glad that the President is feeling better, of course. I wish him continued good health. And it goes without saying: What a tool."

Stephen Colbert: "'Don't let it dominate your life.' So, the people who lost their lives, they either didn't have enough moxie, or they didn't live in a big White House that has 20 full-time medical staff and get choppered to a suite at Walter Reed where they received a combination of cutting-edge treatments that literally no one else on the planet has received. Okay, then just make the Surgeon General's warning: 'Don't let cancer dominate your lungs! Smoking is cool, because my lung transplant was successful!'"

Stephen Colbert: "Since Friday, we've been getting irregular updates from the President's personal physician...Dr. Sean Conley. ... You can't steer the course of a disease by lying about it. That's why it's called 'Make-a-Wish' and not 'Everything's Fine, Mark Ruffalo just wants to meet you!'"

Stephen Colbert: "While the doctors were presenting a rosy picture, they also revealed that Trump has been put on two drugs: remdesivir and dexamethasone. I'm not a doctor, but I'm pretty sure it's not a good sign when you get prescribed the high score in a Scrabble game."

Stephen Colbert: [On Dr. Conley saying that he can't give specifics on Trump's condition] "For the safety of our nation, the public needs to know how Trump's doing. Which is why it's so infuriating that Dr. Conley had this to say yesterday. ... Then why are you there?! I don't get to go on TV and say, 'I'm not going to get into the specifics of my joke tonight.' Plus, I don't endanger the nation by doing my job poorly. At most, I endanger the sales of Charmin. Charmin. Enjoy the go. Especially if you've been on the dexamethasone, if you know what I mean."

Stephen Colbert: "The President tried to prove how healthy he was this weekend by releasing this photo of him 'at work.' Some pointed out that that piece of paper seems to be blank. But to defend the President, that doesn't mean he's not working. Because a blank piece of paper is his COVID response plan."

Stephen Colbert: "The latest Trump official to fall ill is White House press secretary...Kayleigh McEnany. ... Here's the thing: Kayleigh knew she had been in close contact with Hope Hicks, and had a high likelihood of being infected. But after knowing that, Kayleigh McEnany repeatedly spoke to reporters without a mask on. She was just trying to give journalists a scoop! (As McEnany) 'Come here – I've got an exclusive: You're going to get sick very soon!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Good news. It's safe for the President to return home. Mostly because everyone at the White House already has the virus."

Jimmy Fallon: "Once she heard he was coming home, Melania immediately checked herself into Walter Reed."

Jimmy Fallon: "Yep, Trump left the hospital for two reasons. One, he was feeling better. Two, he didn't want to get billed for another night."

Jimmy Fallon: "This afternoon, Trump broke the news on Twitter, saying, 'I'll be leaving the great Walter Reed Medical Center today at 6:30, feeling really good. Don't be afraid of COVID, don't let it dominate your life. I feel better than I did 20 years ago!' I'm not surprised Trump feels better than he did 20 years ago. Back then, he was $800 million in debt."

Jimmy Fallon: [On Trump leaving the hospital to wave to supporters out of an SUV] "Yeah, according to the New York Times, Trump wanted to leave the hospital and doctors wanted him to stay inside, so they compromised, and Trump left the hospital."

Jimmy Fallon: "What is happening? Trump even turned the hospital stay into chaos. The Joker caused less trouble when he visited Gotham General."

Jimmy Fallon: "You could tell the Secret Service thought the joyride was a bad idea. Right after, they went on eBay looking for a used Popemobile."

Jimmy Fallon: "Turns out Trump's joyride may have even his own family thinking he is acting irrationally. According to sources, Don Jr. is deeply upset by his father's decision to drive around and thinks Trump is acting crazy. You know things have gone off the rails when Don Jr. becomes the voice of reason. In response, President Trump was like, 'I'm not acting crazy, and here's 15 all-caps tweets to prove it.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, on Saturday night, the White House released some photos to show that Trump was busy working while he was at Walter Reed. Here is one of Trump signing a document People are saying that he's just writing his name on a blank piece of paper, but that's not true. That's not true. That's not a blank piece of paper. That's just his entire plan to stop COVID."

James Corden: "Over the weekend, the White House tried to keep everybody calm by releasing photos of the President in the hospital as proof that he was healthy and hard at work. But here's the thing: A lot of people on Twitter noticed that the piece of paper that he is signing actually appears to be blank. Now people were mocking this online, which made Trump furious at his staff. He was like, 'You guys told me these were military contracts written in invisible ink.'"

James Corden: "Yesterday afternoon, Trump did something odd. I know, surprise. He decided to go for a drive around the hospital so that he could wave at his supporters. . . . Secret Service agents aimlessly drove Trump around the block, and I get it, I do. I thought about this. And I understand what is going on here. Because when my son was a baby, sometimes when he couldn't sleep, we would put him in the car, and I would drive around the block to make him go off to sleep. And I think that's what is going on here."

James Corden: "But Trump is not the only one dealing with the virus. All told, more than a dozen Administration officials and Republican leaders were diagnosed with the virus over the past few days. . . . This list reads like a who's who of people you desperately want to avoid at a cocktail party."

James Corden: "This morning it was also announced that Trump's press secretary, Kayleigh McEnany, also tested positive for COVID-19, or as she reported to the press, tested negative. . . . Even after Trump had been diagnosed, McEnany continued to speak to reporters without wearing a mask, which makes sense, since going viral while attacking the press is kind of her thing."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump then announced that he would be leaving the hospital. The only way that Trump announces anything is on Twitter. He wrote, 'I will be leaving the great Walter Reed Medical Center today at 6:30 pm. Feeling really good. Don't be afraid of COVID. Don't let it dominate your life. We have developed under the Trump Administration some really great drugs and knowledge. I feel better than I did 20 years ago!' To be fair, only someone on really great drugs would think that leaving the hospital."

Seth Meyers: "How's everybody doing? If you were at the Rose Garden last week, I'm guessing slight fever, maybe a little fatigued."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump tested positive for coronavirus. And so did Melania Trump, Chris Christie, Sen. Mike Lee, Sen. Ron Johnson, Kellyanne Conway, Sen. Thom Tillis, and Trump's campaign manager, Bill Stepien. Oh, and Kayleigh McEnany. But remember, we tape this show early, so just pretend I said, like, I don't know, four more names? I mean, can we just assume everyone in the White House has coronavirus at this point? It's like 'Game of Thrones,' except we'd be happy if it ended with Bran in charge."

Seth Meyers: "White House aides reportedly believe that a Rose Garden event last month to announce President Trump's Supreme Court nominee was the super-spreader incident responsible for a number of coronavirus cases. Incidentally, super-spreader is also Trump's favorite sitting position."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump is facing criticism after leaving Walter Reed Medical Center yesterday in a motorcade to wave to supporters, which potentially put two Secret Service agents in his SUV at risk of infection. Why would they get in a car with someone they know has coronavirus? That sounds like a trend the local news warns you: 'Your teen might be doing it. They're calling it the rona challenge, and it's really catching on.'"

Seth Meyers: "During the South Carolina Senate debate over the weekend, Democratic candidate Jaime Harrison brought his own Plexiglas divider to separate him from Sen. Lindsey Graham. Wow, I wouldn't have thought that something transparent could throw that much shade."

Ex-USPS Official: Mnuchin "Lead Figure" In White House Effort To Politicize Post Office.

CBS News (8/20, Watson, 3.68M) reports former USPS Board of Governors Vice Chairman David C. Williams "testified Thursday that the Trump administration has been 'politicizing' the Postal Service and using Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to inappropriately influence the organization for political ends that will eventually harm the customers and businesses the Postal Service is supposed to serve." Williams "testified before the Congressional Progressive Caucus on Thursday that he resigned 'when it became clear to me that the administration was politicizing the Postal Service with the treasury secretary as the lead figure for the White House in that effort.'" CBS says Williams testified that the Treasury Secretary is responsible for giving the USPS a line of credit. However, Williams said Mnuchin "was using that responsibility to make demands that I believed would turn the Postal Service into a political tool, ending its long history as an apolitical public infrastructure."

Bloomberg (8/20, Shields, Woodhouse, 4.73M) reports Williams said in his testimony that Mnuchin "insisted that all Republican appointees for the Board of Governors and Postal Regulatory Commission come to his office to kiss the ring and receive his blessing before confirmation." According to Williams, Mnuchin "was keenly interested in labor agreements, postage pricing generally and especially the volume discounts being given to the Postal Services largest customers – Amazon, UPS and FedEx." Williams added the USPS "replied to early demands from the secretary explaining that his demands were illegal, but the concerns were ignored." Bloomberg says Assistant Treasury Secretary for Public Affairs Monica Crowley "released a letter on Twitter from Mnuchin to Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, in which the Treasury chief said that he wants the Postal Service to have a 'strong and sustainable future.'" According to Bloomberg, "The letter didn't specifically address Williams' accusations."

CNN (8/20, Herb, Cohen, 83.16M) reports on its website that Mnuchin, in the letter, wrote he did not have "any role in recruiting or suggesting Mr. DeJoy for the position of Postmaster General. In fact, I was surprised to learn that Mr. DeJoy was a candidate for the position when the governors updated me on the status of the selection process and informed me of their finalists." CNN says Mnuchin "did acknowledge, however, that he requested the Board of Governors, which selects the postmaster general, keep him apprised of the search process 'as appropriate, because strong management is essential to the financial health of USPS.'" CNN adds that documents "obtained by a government watchdog group this week...confirmed CNN's reporting from earlier this month that Mnuchin received briefings from the USPS Board of Governors to discuss DeJoy's eventual appointment," which was an "irregular arrangement between the Treasury Secretary and USPS, which hasn't happened with past appointments, though the two government entities often work together."

The New York Times (8/20, Fandos, Rappeport, Vogel, Edmondson, 18.61M) reports Mnuchin "rebutted suggestions that he had done anything but play a proper role as the federal government's lender to the Postal Service and in fulfilling his duty to try to help fix its financial woes." In his letter to Schumer, Mnuchin "explained his role as the chairman of the Federal Financing Bank, the Postal Service's sole lender, and said he did not intervene to pave the way for Mr. DeJoy to be the postmaster general." Mnuchin wrote, "Neither I nor any other Treasury official played any role in recruiting or suggesting Mr. DeJoy for the position of postmaster general." However, The Times says Williams "offered a starkly different picture of Mr. Mnuchin's actions." Williams "said the board balked at Mr. Mnuchin's demands, and he argued at the time that 'a department cannot impose its will on another department.'" Williams testified, "The postal general counsel sent a letter saying that the transfer of our duties and decision-making authority to him was illegal. The Treasury went forward notwithstanding that." The Times notes Williams "did not directly tie Mr. Mnuchin to the search for a new postmaster general, but he described a process that left him so uneasy he felt he had no choice but to quit."

Reuters (8/20, Shephardson), USA Today (8/20, Wu, 10.31M), Politico (8/20, Cheney, 4.29M), NBC News (8/20, Caldwell, 6.14M), and The Hill (8/20, Marcos, 2.98M) also report.

Trump In Pennsylvania: Biden "A Puppet Of The Radical Left."

President Trump traveled to Scranton, Pennsylvania on Thursday, where he slammed Joe Biden's record as a long-time Washington insider and cast him as a "puppet of the radical left." Local and national media coverage portrayed the event as highlighting the importance of the Keystone State's electoral votes in the November contest, and the Trump camp's aggressive effort to keep them in their column. The AP (8/20, Lemire) reports, for example, that Trump "rally just outside the former vice president's birthplace in Scranton" was "a particularly in-your-face bit of campaign trolling." The New York Times (8/20, Gabriel, 18.61M) indicates, meanwhile, that "to many strategists, Pennsylvania is the most crucial battleground of 2020, and Northeast Pennsylvania, with its density of white working-class voters, is especially pivotal." The Times casts the race as "a turf war between the native son who calls himself 'middle-class Joe' and the incumbent president who appeals to the grievances of white voters over immigration, protests against the police and other culture-war issues."

WGAL-TV Lancaster, PA (8/20, 54K) reported that Trump "hammered...Biden on what he called '50 years of failed leadership in Washington,'" saying that "he has failed the people of Scranton and Pennsylvania." Trump spoke about "the manufacturing jobs were taken away from the state, while the President created jobs and also a roaring economy before COVID-19." Trump was shown saying, "He spent the last half century in Washington selling out our country." WTAE-TV Pittsburgh (8/20, 96K) showed Trump saying, "He has been there for 47 years, and now he is going to come in and make a change? I don't think so." WTAE added that Trump "call[ed] Biden a quote 'puppet of the radical left who will raise taxes to support the Green New Deal.'"

The Scranton Times Tribune (8/20, Krawczeniuk, 174K) reports "the president's seventh trip to Northeast Pennsylvania aimed to boost his vote in Lackawanna County, which he narrowly lost in 2016, and Luzerne County, where he won by a large margin." The News Tribune adds "doing that in places like Lackawanna and Luzerne counties is considered crucial to his chances because of Republican decline in vote-rich Philadelphia and its suburbs." Trump "told the crowd his administration 'secured our borders, brought back our manufacturing jobs, rebuilt our military, wiped out the ISIS caliphate 100%, killed our terrorist enemies, achieved American energy independence. ... And guess what? We're just getting started."

The York Daily Record (8/20, Woodall, 120K) notes the President also stated, "Joe Biden has spent five decades in Washington betraying the people of Scranton. ... Biden supported every single globalist attack on Pennsylvania workers." Trump "listed several pieces of legislation Biden supported or helped introduce, including the North American Free Trade Agreement, Trans-Pacific Partnership and the Paris Climate Accord." Said Trump, "Pennsylvania lost 1 in 3 manufacturing jobs after NAFTA and China's entry into the (World Trade Organization)."

WTXF-TV Philadelphia (8/20, 34K) also reported that Trump "told a group of voters that...Biden is no friend of Pennsylvania." Trump said, "That's why I figured I'd come here and explain to you one thing, but I think you people know it better than I do. He left. He abandoned Pennsylvania. He abandoned Scranton." Fox News (8/20, O'Reilly, 27.59M) recounts on its website that Trump also said, "Joe Biden is a puppet of the radical left movement that seeks to destroy the American way of life. They don't want energy, they don't want guns, they don't want religion. ... The only thing they're not abolishing is taxes."

The Philadelphia Inquirer (8/20, Seidman, 347K) says Trump accused Biden of "betraying the people of Scranton" and charged that Biden "has spent the last half century in Washington selling you out and ripping you off." The Inquirer adds Trump "shocked Democrats with his strong performance in northeast Pennsylvania in 2016, and Republicans have gained in voter registrations in the region since then." However, Democrats "hope Biden's childhood roots in Scranton and moderate profile will appeal to white, working-class voters who helped deliver Trump the White House."

In an interview after his rally, Trump told WBRE-TV Wilkes-Barre, PA (8/20), "Nobody has done more for than I have for Pennsylvania because you had the best year you've ever had last year. Now you are going back to doing record numbers again. ... Pennsylvania had the best year it has ever had in its history last year before the plague came in from China and now we building it up and we are doing record numbers. ... Biden is going to raise your taxes. He is going to put regulations all over the place – if he even knows what he is doing." Along those lines, the New York Post (8/20, Bowden, 4.57M) points out, Trump referred to Biden as "slow Joe" in his remarks.

The Washington Times (8/20, Howell, 492K) reports "Trump's stop at the home-supplier near Mr. Biden's birthplace of Scranton was his fifth visit to a swing state this week," and the New York Times (8/20, Gabriel, 18.61M) that the President "has spent the week of the Democratic National Convention on a don't-forget-about-me tour, visiting battleground states while delivering derogatory and often misleading commentary on the Democrats and their nominee." The Times adds "Trump's attempt at political taunting was a reminder that his surprise victory in Pennsylvania in 2016 was made possible by the utter collapse of the Democratic ticket in the region where Mr. Biden was born and had spent his childhood, once a party stronghold."

The Bucks County Courier Times (8/20, Harrington, 69K) reports "the former vice president often cites his birthplace on the campaign stump, but the president made a point in his remarks, coming hours before Biden formally accepts the Democratic nomination, to mention that Biden moved away '70 years ago.'" Biden "was born on Nov. 20, 1942. His father, Joseph Biden Sr., was a car dealership manager, but after a financial downturn in Scranton, struggled to find work." The Bidens "left Pennsylvania when 'Joey' was in the fourth grade, and moved to Claymont, Delaware when he was 10 years old."

USA Today (8/20, Jackson, Collins, 10.31M) reports that "seeking to link Biden to 'socialist Bernie Sanders,' Trump said the former vice president will erase economic gains of recent years and 'impose a permanent lockdown combined with a socialist takeover of the US economy.'" Trump's "remarks amounted to a pre-buttal of Biden's acceptance speech Thursday night at the Democratic National Convention."

WGAL-TV Lancaster, PA (8/20, 54K) reported that Trump "took aim" at Gov. Tom Wolf (D) as well, "saying that he should end the shutdown and open up the economy more, saying he actually expects him to do it the day after Election Day, but it was Joe Biden particularly in his crosshairs, saying that he and Democrats would be bad for the economy, painting him as a left-wing liberal influenced by the progressive of the Democratic Party."

Politico (8/20, Cook, 4.29M) reports, "He bashed...Biden. He promised to protect the suburbs, charter schools, the Second Amendment and more. And he dismissed concerns about a pandemic that's overwhelming America." The trip was "the latest step in his effort to yank a piece of the news cycle in his direction after searing attacks night after night during the Democratic National Convention."

Trump Ties Biden To Violent Anti-Police Protests. The Washington Times (8/20, Howell, 492K) reports that the President "drew a straight line between Mr. Biden's bid and violent protests in cities such as Minneapolis and Portland, reviving his mantra of 'law and order,'" and said, "At stake in this election is the survival of our nation, it's true. ... Because we're dealing with crazy people on the other side." The Washington Post (8/20, Kim, Sonmez, 14.2M) quotes Trump as saying, "If you want a vision of your life under [a] Biden presidency, think of the smoldering ruins in Minneapolis, the violent anarchy of Portland, the bloodstained sidewalks of Chicago, and imagine the mayhem coming to your town and every single town in America." Trump further cast "Democrats as the party of 'mobs and criminals.'"

Trump Stops For Pizza On Way Back To Air Force One. The Bucks County Courier Times (8/20, 69K) reports "Trump came to northeastern Pennsylvania on Thursday to deliver some blistering remarks about...Biden," and "he also decided he had time to try some famous Old Forge pizza – known for its square doughiness – on his way back to Air Force One." The President "greeted employees at the counter of Arcaro & Genell Takeaway Kitchen," and "was met by applause from the awaiting crowd." Trump told reporters, "They supposedly have the best pizza. ... We'll let you know about it in a half hour."

ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 3, 0:30, Bruce, 6.79M), the only major network newscast to mention what it called Trump's "counter-programming" trip to Pennsylvania, focused on Trump "stopping for pizza," and added "he didn't wear a mask, though Pennsylvania health authorities say they should be worn in restaurants."

Pennsylvania Poll: Biden Ahead 49%-45%; Trump Ahead 61%-28% In State's Northeastern Region. The Allentown Morning Call (8/20, Olson, 555K) reports that a new Morning Call/Muhlenberg College poll shows Biden "with a narrow lead over...Trump in the key battleground state of Pennsylvania." Biden "drew support from 49% of likely state voters and 45% backed Trump, when those leaning toward a particular candidate were included. That four-point gap is within the poll's margin of error." The Morning Call adds "a geographic breakdown of Trump's support across the state illustrates another reason why the president is heading to Scranton. Northeastern Pennsylvania is his strongest region, where he tops Biden, 61% to 28%." The Poll also found "Pennsylvania voters also largely are feeling comfortable heading to an in-person polling location in November," with "nearly two-thirds, or 64%," saying "they intend to cast their ballot in person, compared with 26% who plan to vote by mail."

Trump Says Economy Will Continue Rebounding For An "Incredible Next Year."

President Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K), "I think we are going to have a great third quarter, a great fourth quarter, but we are going to have an incredible next year."

Trump: Biden's Energy Policies Would Cause A "Massive Depression."

President Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K) that the US is "energy independent." Joe Biden "is – it's not Biden, I don't think he knows what it even represents – but Bernie and everybody else – and Biden has totally accepted it – they are anti-fracking. They are anti-everything. They are anti-fossil fuel. Our nation would go into a massive depression if that ever happened."

Bernhardt: ANWR Program Is "The Gold Standard."

Interior Secretary Bernhardt was asked on WIND-AM Chicago (8/20, 8K) about the Administration's decision on ANWR and said it has been "a political football for over 30 years," but "Congress made the decision, in bipartisan legislation, in a tax bill. ... We want to use this area to explore for oil and gas development and use that as a revenue raiser." Bernhardt added that the resulting leasing program with ANWR is "the gold standard of the world" and is expected to generate "over $22 billion of revenue over the life of the program."

Media Analyses: Increase In Jobless Claims Suggests Recovery Is Slowing.

CNBC (8/20, Imbert, 3.62M) reports on its website that the Labor Department announced on Thursday that "the number of people filing for unemployment benefits last week was greater than expected, raising concern about the state of the economy as lawmakers struggle to move forward on a new pandemic stimulus package." DOL "said...that initial jobless claims for the week ended Aug. 15 came in at 1.106 million," whereas "economists polled by Dow Jones expected a total of 923,000." On the other hand, "continuing claims, which refer to those receiving unemployment benefits for at least two straight weeks, declined by 636,000 to 14.844 million in the week ending Aug. 8."

Under the headline "Rise In Jobless Claims Reflects Still-Struggling US Economy," the AP (8/20, Rugaber) reports that the jobs numbers "suggest that employers are still slashing jobs even as some businesses reopen and some sectors like housing and manufacturing have rebounded." The AP adds, "Many businesses and consumers remain paralyzed by uncertainty and restricted by lockdowns, and job gains appear to be slowing from the rapid bounce-backs of May and June, when millions of restaurant and store employees were rehired. The number of job openings posted on Indeed fell last week for the first time since April."

According to Bloomberg (8/20, Pickert, 4.73M), "The pickup in initial jobless claims reinforces forecasts that improvement in the labor market will occur in fits and starts, with the latest uptick likely representing a pause in that recovery – rather than a substantial change in direction." Bloomberg says "it would take sustained weekly increases in claims to raise concern that the job market is in danger of unraveling."

The New York Times (8/20, Chokshi, 18.61M) says, "The crosscurrents in the economy are striking, but economists warn that conditions could easily deteriorate if Washington doesn't offer more support. ... 'Federal support is crucial to underpinning the virtuous cycle we've had,' said Michael Gapen, chief US economist at Barclays."

The Washington Post (8/20, Rosenberg, 14.2M) reports that "more than 28 million people were receiving some form of unemployment benefits as of Aug. 1, the most recent week for that statistic, about equal to the previous week." Reuters (8/20, Burns) reports that "only 9.3 million of the 22 million jobs lost between February and April have been regained so far." USA Today (8/20, Davidson, 10.31M) and the Wall Street Journal (8/20, A1, Morath, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also cover the news.

Reuters Analysis: "Recovery Grinds Along" As COVID Infections Ease.

Under the headline "US Recovery Grinds Along As Coronavirus Case Growth Eases," Reuters (8/20, Schneider) reports "Americans made tentative moves back to restaurants and gyms over the past week, hiring advanced across a sample of industries and a rise in job postings suggested it may continue, signs the US recovery grinds along, albeit not without some setbacks." Reuters adds "high-frequency data estimating retail stores visits and employment across industries as well as broader indexes of the recovery, after largely plateauing during a summertime surge in coronavirus cases, mostly moved higher through early and mid-August."

Carranza: Utah Is Number One In Job Growth.

KSL-AM Salt Lake City (8/20) reported that "Utah is getting a visit from a top federal official," Small Business Administrator Carranza, after the state "received $5.25 billion from the Payroll Protection Program." Carranza said, "Salt Lake is ranked number one in total job growth and it's also ranked number two in total support of the unemployment rate and private businesses." KSL-AM reported "Carranza says there's still $130 billion available from the PPP to help keep small businesses afloat."

WSJournal Analysis: Navarro Was Driving Force Behind Kodak's Deal.

The Wall Street Journal (8/20, A1, Levy, Rogow, Leary, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro was the driving force behind the decision to award Eastman Kodak a contract to manufacture pharmaceuticals. Navarro is now distancing himself from the deal, but the Journal says Navarro first championed the proposal, and then used his clout within the Administration to guide Kodak through the bureaucratic process to land the deal.

Warren Demands Probe Of Federal Loan To Kodak. CNBC (8/20, Franck, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Thursday, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) "blasted the Trump administration's decision to offer, and then back away from, a loan made to Eastman Kodak as a 'fiasco,'" and "urged the federal oversight board tasked with monitoring how Covid-19 relief funding is spent to investigate the decision-making behind the planned loan. ... 'The fiasco...raises larger questions about corruption, nepotism, and mismanagement in the Trump Administration's response to COVID-19,' Warren wrote to Michael Horowitz, acting chair of the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee."

American Airlines Announces Plans To Suspend Flights To 15 Cities.

The Washington Post (8/20, Duncan, 14.2M) reports, "American Airlines plans to suspend flights to 15 cities in October, when a federal ban against service cuts carriers agreed to as part of a multibillion-dollar coronavirus aid package expires." Announced Thursday, "the change...means nine airports will lose their only airline service."

CNN (8/20, Wattles, 83.16M) provides additional coverage.

Uber, Lyft Win Legal Victory In Battle Over Reclassification Of Drivers In California.

The AP (8/20, Bussewitz, Liedtke) reports, "An appeals court has allowed ride-hailing giants Uber and Lyft to continue treating their drivers as independent contractors in California while an appeal works its way through the court." Both firms had "threatened to shut down if a ruling went into effect Friday morning that would have forced them to treat all their drivers as employees, a change they said would be impossible to accomplish overnight." Both Uber and Lyft "had sought the stay of an August 10 court decision that ruled they must start treating their drivers as employees, not independent contractors, by Friday morning."

The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Rana, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the appeals court's decision means the two companies can continue operating while they contest the order to reclassify drivers. The court also ordered the CEOs of Uber and Lyft to submit sworn testimony by September 4 detailing the steps they are taking to comply with the order to reclassify.

USA Today Analysis: Black Executives Underrepresented At Top Levels In Corporate America.

An analysis by USA Today (8/20, Guynn, Schrottenboer, 10.31M) "shows that while corporations and boardrooms have added African Americans over the decades, the executive suite has not, even at companies that have diverse boards." A review of "the most recent proxy statements for the 50 largest companies in the Standard & Poor's 100 as of July 15" found that "nearly all – 48 – issued statements in support of the Black community following" George Floyd's death May 25, "an unprecedented outpouring after decades of corporate silence on anti-Black racism and police killings in the United States." However, "of the 279 top executives listed in the proxy statements, only five, or 1.8%, were Black, including two who recently retired."

China Says Trade Talks With US Are Set To Resume.

Reuters (8/20) reports that the Chinese Commerce Ministry said on Thursday that China and the US "have agreed to hold trade talks in the coming days' to evaluate the progress of their Phase 1 trade deal six months after it took effect in February." According to Reuters, on Tuesday, Chief of Staff Meadows indicated that "no new high-level trade talks were scheduled, though both sides were in touch about implementing the Phase 1 deal." Reuters adds that also on Tuesday, President Trump "told reporters he had postponed an Aug. 15 review of the trade pact, in frustration over Beijing's handling of the virus pandemic."

Administration Officials: US Focused On Limiting Threats Posed By Chinese Companies. Vice President Pence's Chief of Staff Marc Short was asked on CNBC's Closing Bell (8/20, 289K) about the role of TikTok and WeChat in upcoming talks about the phase one trade deal with China. Short said, "Our concern has always been that this President's going to make sure the American consumer is protected, and the Communist Party of China has a policy that with its companies, they share data. And so with any information that TikTok has would be shared, data collection with the Communist Party of China, and that's obviously a great security concern for this Administration." He said that China's recent corn and soybean purchases are "an encouraging sign," but "the whole trade situation with China is one of the biggest challenges confronting our nation."

Under Secretary of State for Economic Growth Keith Krach said on Fox Business' Claman On Call (8/20) that the "final decision" on approval of Microsoft's rumored purchase of TikTok "is up to the President," adding "it's about more than just two companies, TikTok and WeChat." He said, "What it's really about is three things. It's about the Communist Party's surveillance state, and 5G is the backbone, these apps are appendages as well as clouds, and it's also about that great China firewall where all data can go in but none can come out, and then all the propaganda can come out, but the truth cannot come back in. And it's also about reciprocity, because our apps aren't allowed in China." Asked whether the issue would be expanded beyond TikTok and WeChat, Krach said it would "absolutely be more widely addressed, and that's why we announced the expansion of the Clean Network."

On Bloomberg TV (8/20, 4.73M), Krach discussed the move to make Chinese companies "as transparent as all the other companies on these exchanges," saying it is "really key, because right now, the risk is huge for, you know, the average American investor, and it also creates an unlevel playing field for the companies." He said, "I think not only has the President done a great job of waking up the world on this, but also Congress. You can see this is one of the most unifying, passionate bipartisan issues is this threat from China, whether it's in the universities, the pension funds, wherever it may be."

Lighthizer: WTO Must Return To Most-Favored-Nation Principles.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), USTR Lighthizer argues that bilateral free-trade agreements, which promote protectionism, have been on the rise, which underscores the need for a reset of the World Trade Organization. To foster multilateral trade negotiations, Lighthizer calls on member nations to a recommit to the principles of most-favored-nation treatment.

WSJournal: Trump's Comments About Oracle Colors Sale Of TikTok.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) calls President Trump's apparent support on Tuesday of the possibility of Oracle purchasing TikTok impolitic, given that Oracle chairman Larry Ellison has hosted a fundraiser for Trump in the past. Politics should have no role in the sale of TikTok, the Journal asserts.

Trump Says Administration's Coronavirus Response Has Been "Phenomenal."

Asked about his Administration's handling of the coronavirus during his visit to Pennsylvania on Thursday, President Trump told WBRE-TV Wilkes-Barre, PA (8/20), "We have had a great record. We started with empty cupboards with very little left by the last Administration. And we have done a great job with ventilators. We are now making ventilators for countries all over the world. What we have done, if you look at our rates and our mortalities and fatalities and all sorts of different indicators, we have done a phenomenal job."

Assistant HHS Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir said on Newsmax TV (8/20) that coronavirus "cases since mid-July are down well over 22-23%, our hospitalizations are down by over 24%, our ICU admissions are down by about 15%, and very soon we will see mortality start going down as well." Giroir said the figures are "clearly indicating that the President's plan, which is to work with the states to get them to wear masks, avoid crowded indoor places, do hygiene, combined with smart testing – not crazy, all over the place testing, but smart testing – that plan is working and it will continue to work." Giroir added that "we need to...keep our economy going, because a strong economy means strong public health," pointing to the low death rate "during the first three years of the Trump Administration."

Redfield Expects Coronavirus Deaths To Start To Decline Next Week.

CNBC (8/20, Feuer, 3.62M) reports on its website, "Deaths attributed to the coronavirus will likely begin to drop over the next week," CDC Director Redfield said Thursday. Daily new infections have been "on a sustained decline since the end of July, according to data compiled by Johns Hopkins University," but "deaths, which lag behind new cases as people fall ill, become hospitalized and die, have remained stubbornly high, at roughly 1,000 new Covid-19 deaths per day, on average, according to a CNBC analysis of Hopkins data." Redfield said, "You and I are going to see the cases continue to drop. And then hopefully this week and next week, you're going to start seeing the death rate really start to drop again. I think we're going to start to see a decline in mortality across the country now next week as we continue to get control of these cases."

Administration Officials Offer Assurances That Vaccine Testing Process Is Rigorous.

Assistant HHS Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir was asked about concerns regarding vaccine development on Newsmax TV (8/20). Giroir said that "the vaccines are really being driven by the NIH, by Operation Warp Speed, they're at the highest level of integrity in those programs, unlike the Russian vaccine, quote 'vaccine.' Our vaccines are undergoing clinical trials for safety and effectiveness, and the President will not allow any vaccine to be on the market to Americans that isn't proven safe and effective, and you have all of our guarantees about that." Giroir said, "The American people can be assured that this Administration loves America, loves the American people, and we're going to be absolutely certain that the vaccine we offer to Americans, that we offer to Americans is going to be the highest quality, is going to be safe and effective."

HHS Secretary Azar said on WSB-TV Atlanta (8/20, 170K) that "we believe that by the end of this year, we will have in the high tens of millions of doses of a FDA gold standard, authorized, or licensed vaccine," though "that's not 330 million doses for all Americans, and so we're working through a very transparent, public process now to determine how that vaccine should most effectively be distributed for maximum impact." Asked about the safety of a vaccine developed at warp speed, Azar said, "By Warp Speed means we're reducing inefficiency in the system, so it doesn't mean we're compromising standards."

Azar said on KVVU-TV Las Vegas (8/20, 35K) that "at this point, having invested in six different vaccines and supporting advanced manufacturing at the same time, which is what's really historic about what President Trump is doing here, we believe that it is credible that we could have in the high tens of millions of doses of FDA gold standard vaccine by the end of this year and many hundreds of millions of doses of vaccine as we go into next year."

Azar: Administration Is Not Seeking Mandates For Masks.

HHS Secretary Azar responded to anti-mask rallies on KVVU-TV Las Vegas (8/20, 35K), saying that "masks are effective in controlling the spread of disease from individuals to others. Think of wearing a mask as I protect you, you protect me." Azar added, "Over 40% of us may have the virus and not know it. You could be spreading it to somebody who is vulnerable standing next to you at the grocery store." Azar said, "We're not asking for mandates on masks, but rather, we ask people as a matter of individual responsibility, individual behavior, just please, when you cannot socially distance, wear face coverings."

Delta Bans Former Navy SEAL Who Killed Bin Laden After Tweet Mocking Masks. The New York Post (8/20, Meyer, 4.57M) reports, "The ex-Navy SEAL who killed Osama bin Laden and bragged on Twitter about not wearing a 'dumb-a--' mask on a Delta flight has now been banned from the airline, he said Thursday." Robert O'Neill tweeted, "I just got banned from @Delta for posting a picture." The ban "comes a day after he tweeted a smiling, mask-less selfie from his seat with the caption 'I'm not a p--y.'"

HHS Reverses Course, Will Return Coronavirus Data Collection To CDC.

The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Whelan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports HHS is retreating from its decision to change the way hospitals report information on the novel coronavirus to the federal government, handing the responsibility for collecting the data back to the CDC. The decision comes after criticism that the new system resulted in delays and inconsistencies.

Administration Bars FDA From Regulating Some Coronavirus Lab Tests.

The Washington Post (8/20, A1, McGinley, Abutaleb, 14.2M) reports the Administration "this week blocked the Food and Drug Administration from regulating a broad swath of laboratory tests, including for the coronavirus, in a move strongly opposed by the agency." The move "stunned" many health experts, and some "warned the shift could result in unreliable coronavirus tests on the market, potentially worsening the testing crisis that has dogged the United States if more people get erroneous results." However, "supporters cheered the change as long overdue, saying it could help get new and more innovative tests to market more quickly."

Large Clinical Trial Tests Experimental Drug In Nursing Home Residents.

The New York Times (8/20, Kolata, 18.61M) reports that one nursing home in Illinois is the "first facility to participate in a large clinical trial of drug that might protect residents from the [coronavirus] infection in nursing homes and assisted living facilities." According to experts, "the new research, sponsored by Eli Lilly and the National Institutes of Health, is among the first large clinical trials to involve nursing home residents." The research involves "a monoclonal antibody, an artificially synthesized version of coronavirus antibodies produced by the body."

Evidence Mounts That Children Have Been "Silent Spreaders" Of The Virus.

The Washington Post (8/20, Cha, 14.2M) reports a study published in the Journal of Pediatrics "found that some children have significantly higher levels of virus in their airways than the most severely ill adults – suggesting their role in community spread may be larger than previously believed." The study's findings suggest that children "may have been acting as silent spreaders" throughout the pandemic. Alessio Fasano, one of the new study's authors, said, "Some people thought that children might be protected. This is incorrect. They may be as susceptible as adults – but just not visible."

Judge Rejects Los Angeles County's Effort To Sanction Church For Violating Restrictions.

The Washington Times (8/20, Richardson, 492K) reports, "A judge rebuffed Thursday efforts to Los Angeles County to hold in contempt and sanction Grace Community Church over its defiance of novel coronavirus restrictions." Superior Court Judge Mitchell L. Beckloff ruled in favor of the church "after Los Angeles County sought more than $20,000 in penalties over Pastor John MacArthur's decision to hold in-person services Sunday at its 3,500-seat sanctuary in defiance of county COVID-19 restrictions." The county is expected "to seek again a temporary restraining order against the non-denominational megachurch."

Cassidy Tests Positive For Coronavirus.

Reuters (8/20, Morgan) reports Sen. Bill Cassidy (R-LA) "tested positive for coronavirus on Thursday, has decided to self-quarantine for 14 days and is contacting those with whom he may have had contact, according to a statement released by his office." Cassidy, a physician, said in a statement, "I am strictly following the direction of our medical experts and strongly encourage others to do the same." Axios (8/20, Fernandez, 521K) recounts "Cassidy is the second senator to test positive," following Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) in March.

CQ Roll Call (8/20, Tully-Mcmanus, 154K) reports "the Louisiana Republican said he was notified Wednesday evening that he'd been exposed to someone with the disease," and the AP (8/20) that the "announcement came a day after he was in north Louisiana, visiting a veterans hospital in Shreveport, where he posted a photo with an official from the facility." The Washington Examiner (8/20, Hogberg, 448K), The Hill (8/20, Carney, 2.98M), and Politico (8/20, Desiderio, 4.29M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Goodyear Backtracks, Will Allow Employees To Support "Blue Lives Matter."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (8/20, Goist, 895K) reports, "Faced with backlash regarding the company's policy against employees wearing political attire, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. CEO Rich Kramer announced Thursday that employees are now allowed to wear apparel that shows support for law enforcement." Kramer said in a statement, "Goodyear strongly supports our law enforcement partners and deeply appreciates all they do to put their lives on the line each and every day for our communities. ... We have clarified our policy to make it clear associates can express support for law enforcement through apparel at Goodyear facilities."

WYTV-TV, Youngstown, OH (8/20, 6K) reported "Goodyear is on the offense following President Trump's call for a company boycott," and that the company said "employees are allowed to wear clothing supporting law enforcement." WSYX-TV, Columbus, OH (8/20, 57K) noted Kramer also said in his statement, "To be clear, Goodyear does not endorse any political organization, party or candidate. We have a longstanding corporate policy that asks associations to refrain from workplace expressions in support of any candidate or political party."

Reuters (8/20, Shephardson, Shalal) recalls the President had called for a boycott of the company, and even "told reporters on Wednesday he would swap out the Goodyear tires on his presidential limousine if there were an alternative." Fox Business (8/20, Barrabi, 1.73M) reports on its website that Trump's move came "after a local news station in Kansas shared a slide of a presentation captured by an employee," which "showed a list of acceptable and unacceptable phrases under Goodyear's 'zero-tolerance policy.'" The slide "listed 'Black Lives Matter' and 'LGBT' under acceptable phrases, while the Trump slogan 'Make America Great Again' and the pro-police slogan 'Blue Lives Matter' were listed under unacceptable phrases." The President retweeted a picture of the slide.

The Federalist (8/20, Justice, 126K) reports, at any rate, that "leaked audio from a Goodyear diversity training in Kansas released Thursday shows the company lied this week when it denied reports of discriminatory programming held for employees." The company said Wednesday, "The visual in question was not created or distributed by Goodyear corporate, nor was it part of a diversity training class." However, "leaked audio that emerged from the training, released by a Topeka NBC affiliate...contradicts the company's statement." An "instructor" is heard saying, "Some people may wish to express their views on social justice or inequity or equity issues such as Black Lives Matter or LGBTQ pride on their face coverings, shirts, or wristbands. That will be deemed approved because it applies with a zero-tolerance stance. ... However if any associate wears all, blue, white lives matter shirts or face coverings, that will not be appropriate." Breitbart (8/20, Morris, 673K) also reports on the leaked audio under the headline "'Zero-Tolerance' Audio From Goodyear Training Session Revealed."

Ahead of the company's reversal, the Akron \(OH\) Beacon Journal (8/20, Ashworth, 198K) reports, "a rally for 'Good Jobs at Goodyear' started at 11 a.m. Thursday at United Steelworkers Local 2 at 501 Kelly Avenue," organized "in response to...Trump's tweet urging a boycott." Akron Mayor Daniel Horrigan (D) "called the president's remarks an "attack" on the city of Akron," and "called on voters to vote Trump out of office." Said Horrigan, "He will soon be just a smudge stain on that great office."

Miller: Time For Americans To "Stand Up" And "Not Be Bullied" By "Radical Left." In an interview with Maria Bartiromo for Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (8/20), White House adviser Stephen Miller said, "It's time for traditional Americans stand up for values stand up for beliefs, not be bullied anymore by the radical left. I mean do you really want to live in a country where, if you speak your mind, you get kicked out of college, you kicked out of job, you get exiled from your career – just because you expressed a traditional thought, a conservative thought, a thought that used to be considered perfectly acceptable even a few years ago? This notion you can go to workplace in America and express support for a radical Marxist movements, support for an anti-police movement, but you can't express support for Donald Trump? Or the police or law enforcement? The left is trying to create a two-tiered system of free speech in this country."

Vice President Pence's Chief of Staff Marc Short, meanwhile, said on CNBC's Closing Bell (8/20, 289K) that Trump "expressed concerns" over Goodyear Tires "that are First Amendment concerns, that when a company has policies that say you're allowed to wear one kind of attire, but if you're expressing your First Amendment rights, you can't have a Blue Lives Matter T-shirt. I think that's concerning to a lot of people and I think you've seen Goodyear's expressed a change in policy this afternoon, so I think that that's a step forward." Short added that the President "continued to advocate for American-made products" and "there's plenty of options for tire manufacturers, but we hope that Goodyear continues to alter its policy in a way that includes protections of the First Amendment."

Trump: Biden-Harris Want To Abolish Police.

President Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K) that Joe Biden and Kamala Harris are "not talking about law enforcement and our great police. ... They don't want to talk about police because it's a losing subject for them. They want to defund the police. They want to abolish the police. ... The Democrat run cities, they are a disaster."

Trump Says Suburban Women Like His Law And Order Stance.

President Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K) that suburban women "really want to support me because we are for law and order. We are for safety and security and Biden is not."

Bernhardt Touts Effort To Protect Monuments, Tell "America's Story."

Interior Secretary Bernhardt said on WIND-AM Chicago (8/20, 8K), "We have a very exciting experience today designating the 1908 Springfield race riot archaeological site as part of the African American Civil Rights Network," adding "at this time, almost more than any other time, educating people on facts and telling factual stories and showing how far we've come is incredibly important in the context of all the craziness." Asked about destruction of public monuments during national protests, Bernhardt said the President has "set up a task force that I'm in charge of that did several things. It said, number one, let's protect the monuments; number two, let's work to tell America's story."

Rioters Assault Officers During Attack On Federal Building in Portland.

The Washington Post (8/20, Shepherd, 14.2M) reports that "several hundred protesters rallied around a federal building" that houses ICE offices in Portland on Wednesday night "and were met by local and federal police." The Post adds, "After some demonstrators broke windows at the facility, police eventually deployed tear gas to end the 84th consecutive night of protests in the city." According to the Post, "Early in the night on Wednesday, federal officers used pepper balls to push the crowd away from the federal building and moved the group down the street before retreating. Protesters then returned to the ICE building."

The AP (8/20) reports that rioters "spray painted windows on the building, broke several windows and shined laser lights at agents inside." The AP adds, "Clashes ensued, with protesters hurling rocks and bottles at agents who came out of the building and at police. ... Police arrested two people and several officers suffered minor injuries after they were hit with rocks, the Portland police statement said."

Chicago Mayor Defends Increased Police Presence Near Home.

The Chicago Sun-Times (8/20, Spielman, 875K) reports Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot (D) on Thursday "defended the heavy police presence outside her Logan Square home, at a time when police officers are stretched to the limit, citing 'specific threats' made 'every single day' to 'my person, my wife and my home.'" Images "circulating online show dozens of officers guarding her home and her block with barricades in fortress-like fashion." Chicago Police Superintendent David Brown supported the mayor, saying, "These people embedded in these protests have shown us they're violent. They're violent in our downtown. They're violent in our neighborhoods. And they're violent at the mayor's house. We're sworn to protect people from violence and we're gonna do our job."

Security Footage Captures Retired NYPD Sergeant Being Beaten On The Ground.

The New York Post (8/20, Moore, Barone, 4.57M) reports, "A retired NYPD sergeant was punched and kicked as he lay helplessly on the ground in a brutal Manhattan beatdown caught on security footage, police sources told The Post." The former sergeant "can be seen speaking with his assailant for at least a minute last Tuesday morning as they stand outside a Garment District deli," after which "the suspect, whom police sources have identified as Masterjadin Roman, 20, then allegedly throws a bottle at the retired officer." The man rushes at Roman, "who manages to wrestle the NYPD veteran to the ground and land more than a dozen punches to his head."

The Daily Caller (8/20, Dima, 716K) reports, "Roman and another man appear to swipe the retiree's phone and earpieces after the attack, according to the video." Roman "kicked the NYPD veteran in the head one last time while he lay on the ground before departing the scene, the video shows." He was "reportedly charged with aggressive panhandling and given a notice to appear instead of facing physical arrest, according to the Post."

Over 323K Accusations Of NYPD Misconduct Published Online. The New York Times (8/20, Southall, 18.61M) reports, "Over 323,000 accusations of misconduct against current and former New York City police officers were published online on Thursday, a major milestone in a long and contentious political battle to open records of police discipline to public scrutiny." The records were "published in an online database by the New York Civil Liberties Union, which obtained the records from the review board after state lawmakers repealed a law that had kept them secret." The organization "noted that less than three percent of the 323,911 complaints resulted in a penalty for officers, 12 of whom had been terminated," and "in a statement, Christopher Dunn, the organization's legal director, said the records showed that the Police Department, whose commissioner makes the final decision on disciplinary matters, 'is unwilling to police itself.'"

Police, Protesters Clash Outside Pittsburgh Mayor's Home.

The Washington Post (8/20, Wolfrom, Berman, 14.2M) reports, "Protesters clashed with police for the second consecutive night outside the Pittsburgh mayor's home on Wednesday, resulting in one arrest and escalating tensions." The protests began "over the weekend when several plainclothes officers arrested 25-year-old protester Matthew Cartier and drove away in an unmarked van during Saturday's demonstration downtown." Mayor Bill Peduto (D) has "since denounced the police tactics deployed in Cartier's arrest," but a tweet "about the limitations of protesters' constitutional rights" has "sparked outrage and galvanized protesters to swarm his Point Breeze home for the past two nights, making Peduto the latest in a growing list of mayors and other public figures to see demonstrators gather at their residences during this summer of unrest – bringing the movement essentially to their front doors."

Johnson Subpoenas Former State Department Official Linked To Steele Dossier.

The Hill (8/20, Carney, 2.98M) cites "a source" who confirmed that Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Chairman Ron Johnson has subpoenaed former State Department official Jonathan Winer, who is "linked to the controversial research dossier about then-presidential candidate Donald Trump." Winer "is the first person to be subpoenaed by Johnson as part of a broad investigation spanning the transition between the Obama and Trump administrations including digging into the so-called Steele dossier."

WTimes Provides Examples Of Obama Administration Spying Before And After 2016 Election.

Citing "government documents," the Washington Times (8/20, Scarborough, 492K) lists "six instances of Obama administration spying during and after the Nov. 8 election."

Trump To Appeal After Judge Dismisses His Challenge To Manhattan DA's Subpoena.

ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 8, 0:20, Muir, 6.79M) reported last night that "a federal judge has rejected President Trump's latest attempt to keep his financial records private." ABC added that "Manhattan prosecutors have subpoenaed the President's tax records as part of its investigation into hush money payments to Stormy Daniels." The CBS Evening News (8/20, story 2, 0:15, Tracy, 4.17M) said it was "another legal setback for... Trump."

The AP (8/20, Sisak) reports that "Trump's lawyers moved swiftly Thursday to appeal" the ruling by US District Judge Victor Marrero, whose ruling "echoed his prior decision in the case, upheld last month by the US Supreme Court." The High Court "had returned the case to Marrero's courtroom to give Trump's lawyers a chance to raise other concerns about the subpoena issued by Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr." Trump's lawyers "immediately appealed Marrero's Thursday ruling to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals." The Washington Times (8/20, Swoyer, 492K) points out Marrero is "a Clinton appointee," and adds that his ruling "takes Mr. Vance another step closer to obtaining the records, but it is unlikely that would happen before the November election."

The New York Times (8/20, Weiser, Rashbaum, 18.61M) reports that Marrero "roundly dismiss[ed] Mr. Trump's arguments that the prosecutor's grand jury subpoena was 'wildly overbroad' and issued in bad faith." USA Today (8/20, Phillips, 10.31M) indicates Marrero wrote of Trump's legal arguments, "At its core, it amounts to absolute immunity through a back door, an entry point through which not only a President but also potentially other persons and entities, public and private, could effectively gain cover from judicial process."

The Washington Post (8/20, Jacobs, Fahrenthold, 14.2M) recounts that Vance "has been investigating hush-money payments made ahead of the 2016 election to two women who alleged having affairs with Trump years ago, claims the president has denied." Vance's office "recently suggested it is also looking at potential bank and insurance fraud related to the Trump Organization." The Hill (8/20, Kruzell, 2.98M), Politico (8/20, Cheney, 4.29M), Bloomberg (8/20, Van Voris, Dolmetsch, 4.73M), the CNBC (8/20, Higgins, 3.62M) website, and Reuters (8/20, Freifeld, Stempel) have more on the ruling and the appeal.

Trump: Vance's Probe "Most Hideous Witch Hunt" In US History. The New York Post (8/20, Bowden, 4.57M) reports the President "called an investigation into his financial records led by New York prosecutors 'the most hideous witch hunt in the history of our country.'" Trump told reporters, "This is a continuation of the witch hunt, the greatest witch hunt in history. There's never been anything like it, where people want to examine every deal you've ever done to see if they can find that there's a comma out of place. ... No president has ever had to go through this, the Supreme Court shouldn't have allowed this to happen."

Cohen To Appear On "Late Night With Seth Meyers."

The New York Post (8/20, Barone, 4.57M) reports President Trump's former lawyer Michael Cohen "said he's agreed to appear for an interview on NBC's 'Late Night With Seth Meyers' as he promotes his forthcoming tell-all on Trump, 'Disloyal.'"

DACA Recipients Sue Over Alleged Job Discrimination.

The New York Times (8/20, Jordan, 18.61M) reports that David Rodriguez, who "was a beneficiary of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program," is "now a plaintiff in a lawsuit that seeks to use civil rights law to prevent employers from turning away immigrants like himself, a legal fight that is underway even as President Trump is threatening to end the program." The Times adds, "While the courts have accepted DACA's legality and have blocked the recent attempts to abruptly cancel it, some of the country's biggest companies are unilaterally refusing to hire Dreamers." Employers are "wary of investing time and money to train workers whose long-term employment eligibility is not secure."

DOJ Defends Trump's Suspension Of H-1B Visas.

Bloomberg (8/20, Rosenblatt, 4.73M) reports that the Trump Administration maintains that "a lawsuit seeking to throw out immigration restrictions, including those on H-1B visas used by technology workers, would 'cut at the heart' of the president's legal authority over border control when it is needed most." Bloomberg adds groups including the US Chamber of Commerce "seek a court order blocking implementation of President Donald Trump's June 22 proclamation, which they say repeals entire visa categories for temporary workers." Bloomberg also reports that "ahead of a Sept. 11 hearing in San Francisco federal court to weigh the request, the Justice Department cited the coronavirus pandemic to argue that Trump properly relied on his 'broad authority to suspend the entry of certain aliens.'"

Trump: Democrats Don't Want To Approve Stimulus For People.

President Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K), "The Democrats don't want to approve stimulus for people. All they want to do is get bailout money for their governors who have done so badly."

Moderate House Democrats Urge Pelosi To Restart Talks. Bloomberg (8/20, Wasson, 4.73M) reports that "moderate swing-state" House Democrats are "increasing their pressure on Speaker Nancy Pelosi to restart stalled stimulus talks with Republicans." Bloomberg says the Blue Dog coalition, "a group of 26 fiscally conservative Democrats," is asking Pelosi, Senate Majority Leader McConnell, Senate Minority Leader Schumer, and House Minority Leader McCarthy "to use a Saturday House vote on a U.S. Postal Service bill as an opportunity to restart negotiations." Bloomberg reports that the Blue Dog group "says the next stimulus deal should extend expired supplemental unemployment benefits, include a direct stimulus payment, increase oversight over spending, extend the expanded employee retention tax credit and include aid to state and local governments."

Politico (8/20, Rainey, 4.29M) also reports that "Democratic leaders have been facing pressure within the party to also vote on aid programs like beefed-up unemployment insurance." According to Politico, "Democrats are considering a proposal that would automatically extend jobless benefits to millions of Americans if the economic and health crises continue." Politico adds that Republicans are "planning to introduce a 'skinny' coronavirus relief bill that is expected to include $300 in boosted weekly federal unemployment benefits until Dec. 27." CQ Roll Call (8/20, McPherson, 154K) provides similar coverage.

Labor Secretary Scalia said on WPXI-TV Pittsburgh (8/20, 92K) that he "would certainly like to see" Democratic leaders "come back and be prepared to negotiate" on a new deal for additional unemployment benefits.

Vice President Pence's Chief of Staff Marc Short was asked on CNBC's Closing Bell (8/20, 289K) about priorities in a potential new stimulus deal between the White House and Congress and said that "the liability protection that Leader McConnell has advocated for, I think it's a priority. We hear from business owners that they think it's essential to make sure they're able to bring back their workers back to the workplace." Short added that the Administration has advocated for "additional funding for schools, to make sure that schools have the resources they need to make any sort of adjustments in light of the virus and make sure that we're able to reopen schools for children." Asked about the chances of striking a deal, Short said he is "confident" that Chief of Staff Meadows will "find a pathway forward."

Kudlow, Miller: Biden Will Raise Taxes By $4T, Undermine Economic Recovery.

In an appearance on Fox News' Fox & Friends (8/20, 831K), NEC Director Kudlow said, "Biden and Harris want to raise your taxes, okay – $3.5 to $4 trillion tax hike. Now you tell me, just common sense, not ideology or philosophy – we're climbing out rapidly, fortunately, of this pandemic contraction, okay? Why would anybody in their right mind want to raise taxes, take money out of people's pockets as we're trying to get through back to a good normal recovery? It just doesn't make any sense at all."

In an interview with Maria Bartiromo for Fox Business' Mornings With Maria (8/20), White House adviser Stephen Miller said of the Democrats' convention, "It was pretty much unwatchable. The thing that really struck me, of course, that is they have absolutely no agenda, no plan, no message, no nothing. Except for the fact apparently just want to have a country that is completely, totally economically destroyed. They plan to raise taxes by $4 trillion? What would that do to the economy? What would it do to working people?"

Trump Says Biden-Harris Support Socialized Medicine.

President Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K) that Joe Biden and Kamala Harris support "socialized medicine. ... They are talking about something that is so expensive the country can't afford it. Even if it could, it's no good. It is socialized medicine. You not going to have your doctor. You are not going to have your plan, which you didn't have when Obama promised you – 28 different times he said that. They are talking about exactly that. It's a ridiculous situation."

Trump Says Operation Legend Shows He Stands For "Safety And Security."

On Twitter, President Trump on Thursday declared, "I STAND FOR LAW AND ORDER AND I TOOK ACTION! Operation LeGenD has led to the arrest of over 1,000 criminals, including 90 killers, all while Sleepy Joe Biden and the Radical Left excuses violence and crime in their Democrat-run cities. I want safety & security, Joe allows CRIME!"

WTimes Analysis: Soros-Funded Progressive DAs In Place In Cities Where Crime Is Soaring.

The Washington Times (8/20, A1, Varney, 492K) reports, "Billionaire Democratic donor George Soros bankrolled the successful campaigns of a new crop of district attorneys who now preside over big cities with skyrocketing crime and frayed relationships with police departments." Soros-supported DA's in "Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco and other cities have fired scores of experienced prosecutors and, as promised, stopped prosecuting low-level quality-of-life crimes such as disorderly conduct, vagrancy and loitering." Their campaigns "often portrayed police as agents of a racist system that disproportionately imprisoned Blacks and other minorities."

Two Tropical Depressions Could Move Into Gulf Of Mexico.

The Washington Post (8/20, Cappucci, 14.2M) reports the National Hurricane Center says "two tropical depressions are marching across the Atlantic and are forecast to become tropical storms Laura and Marco soon." According to recent data, "at least one of them, Tropical Depression 13, is in a position to potentially affect Florida on Sunday or Monday near hurricane strength before entering the Gulf of Mexico." Meanwhile, "Tropical Depression 14 is gathering strength in the Caribbean and may potentially drift into the gulf on Sunday or Monday."

Trump Administration Declares Teachers Essential Workers.

NBC Nightly News (8/20, story 6, 2:00, Holt, 5.6M) reported that the Trump Administration "has formally declared teachers essential workers. But as the President continues to push to reopen in person schools, teachers from several cities are threatening to strike." NBC (Thompson) added that in Detroit, teachers "overwhelmingly approve[d] a potential safety strike. In New York City where public schools are set to open their doors in three weeks, teachers are threatening to strike as well." White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said on Fox News (8/20, 896K), "We believe teachers are essential workers. The media never stopped working during this pandemic, our meat packers didn't stop working during this pandemic, our law enforcement didn't stop working during this pandemic – nor should our teachers, because America's children must come first."

HHS Secretary Azar was asked on KVVU-TV Las Vegas (8/20, 35K) about the safety of reopening schools and said that "we believe schools can reopen safely and sensibly to protect kids and protect faculty members. It's the basic tools that I say to everybody, the three W's: wash your hands, wear your face coverings, watch your distance. If we do those things and we build protocols in our schools, we can get back to school safely."

The CBS Evening News (8/20, story 5, 1:55, Lenghi, 4.17M) reported that "an alarming study published today in the Journal Of Pediatrics [found that] children up to age 22 are much more likely to be silent spreaders than previously believed." Joseph Allen from Harvard's Chan School of Public Health told the CBS Evening News (8/20, story 6, 2:30, O'Donnell, 4.17M), "It can't be schools as usual this fall. We can only go back when community spread is under control, and when aggressive risk-reduction strategies are in place within the four walls of the school." Asked if mask wearing should be mandatory, Chan said, "Without a question."

WSJournal Lists Equipment Needed For Children To Successfully Learn At Home. The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Vaglica, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides a list of things a home classroom will need for children to succeed at virtual learning.

COVID Cases Reported On College Campuses In 17 States.

The CBS Evening News (8/20, story 5, 1:55, Lenghi, 4.17M) reported that COVID cases "are now on college campuses in at least 17 states." ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 6, 2:55, Osunsami, 6.79M) reported, "At Notre Dame in Indiana, where the football team means everything to this school, today they announced that five of their players tested positive for COVID-19, along with 75 other students. They now have more than 300 confirmed cases, and students are now having to live with new restrictions." At Purdue "school administrators...suspended 36 students who were partying just [Wednesday] night. At the University of Kansas, they've just connected 89 new cases to Greek houses on campus."

Bannon Pleads Not Guilty To Charges Stemming From Fundraising For Private Border Wall.

Axios (8/20, Savitsky, 521K) reports "former Trump administration chief strategist Steve Bannon pleaded not guilty on Thursday after being indicted and taken into custody in New York on federal fraud charges." A federal judge "agreed to release Bannon on a $5 million bond" after the former Trump aide, "along with three others, allegedly defrauded donors out of hundreds of thousands of dollars for their own profit with a crowdfunding campaign called 'We Build the Wall' that raked in over $25 million."

All three major network newscasts led with the story last night. NBC Nightly News (8/20, lead story, 3:05, Holt, 5.6M) reported, "Add another big name to the string of former Trump insiders who have run afoul of the law." NBC went on to show its reporter Geoff Bennett telling President Trump, "Respectfully, sir, it's not just Steve Bannon. It's Roger Stone, it's Michael Flynn, it's Rick Gates, Paul Manafort, Michael Cohen. What's it say about your judgment that these are the kind of people that you have?" Trump was shown replying, "Well, I have no idea." On ABC World News Tonight (8/20, lead story, 3:55, Muir, 6.79M), Jonathan Karl also said "this is just the latest in a long list of close Trump associates who have faced criminal charges, including his former personal lawyer, his campaign chairman, his first political adviser, his national security adviser. Many people very close to the President at top echelons facing criminal charges." The CBS Evening News (8/20, lead story, 4:00, O'Donnell, 4.17M) indicated Bannon "was once described as the President's ideological soulmate," and that "he's now the sixth close associate of Mr. Trump to be criminally charged by the President's over Department of Justice."

Along similar lines, the AP (8/20, Neumeister, Long, Colvin) recounts Bannon, who was "pulled from a luxury yacht and arrested," is "the latest in a long list of Trump allies to be charged with a crime." USA Today (8/20, Johnson, 10.31M) reports that since Trump "took office in 2017, seven former advisers who served at the White House or worked in the campaign have been swept up in criminal prosecutions.” Likewise, the Los Angeles Times (8/20, Stokols, 4.64M) says “Bannon becomes the seventh prominent Trump associate to be charged with a federal crime.”

The Washington Times (8/20, Muñoz, Mordock, 492K) reports “Bannon is a former investment banker who rose to prominence as executive chairman of Breitbart News” and “was appointed chief executive of the Trump campaign in late 2016 before serving as chief White House strategist during the early months of the administration.” Bannon “left in August 2017 and fell out with Mr. Trump months later, after a tell-all book by Michael Wolff quoted Mr. Bannon as saying unflattering things about the administration and Mr. Trump’s family.” The Times adds, “Dubbed ‘Sloppy Steve’ by the president, Mr. Bannon went on to support conservative populist movements across the globe, notably in Italy.”

Politico (8/20, Gerstein, Schreckinger, Cheney, 4.29M) reports “the stunning indictment was returned Monday and unsealed Thursday – four days before the opening of the Republican National Convention – a move likely to provoke the president, who has accused opponents of trying to create distractions around the quadrennial nominating event.”

The New York Times (8/20, 18.61M) reports that the indictment charges that “with a wounded Air Force veteran and a Florida venture capitalist, Mr. Bannon conspired to cheat hundreds of thousands of donors by falsely promising that their money had been set aside exclusively toward building a new section of border wall.” The Times adds that prosecutors “said that after siphoning money from the project, Mr. Bannon plowed nearly $1 million into paying off his personal expenses.”

The Washington Post (8/20, Zapotosky, Dawsey, Helderman, 14.2M) reports that “in a news release, prosecutors said Bannon and another organizer, Air Force veteran Brian Kolfage, lied when they claimed they would not take any compensation as part of the campaign, called ‘We Build the Wall.’” According to the Post, Bannon, “a law enforcement official said, was taken into custody off the coast of Westbrook, Conn., while aboard a 150-foot yacht called the Lady May owned by a friend and business associate, Chinese billionaire Guo Wengui – a vocal, online critic of the Chinese government who was once close with that country’s intelligence service but is now wanted by authorities in Beijing on charges of fraud, blackmail and bribery.”

Fox News (8/20, Phillips, 27.59M) recounts on its website, “Bannon and the other defendants were each charged with conspiracy to commit wire fraud and conspiracy to commit money laundering,” with each count carrying “a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison.” Bloomberg (8/20, Davis, Yaffe-Bellany, 4.73M), the New York Post (8/20, Feuerherd, Lapin, 4.57M), The Hill (8/20, Neidig, 2.98M), McClatchy (8/20, Vockrodt, Shorman, Lowry, 19K), the Daily Caller (8/20, Ross, 716K), the Wall Street Journal (8/20, A1, Ramey, Ballhaus, Findell, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the CNBC (8/20, Schwartz, 3.62M) website, and Reuters (8/20, Lynch, Sullivan), among other news outlets, have more on Bannon’s arrest and the charges against him.

Trump “Feels Badly,” Points Out He Had Previously Spoken Out Against Private Wall. Reuters (8/20) reports that the President told reporters that “he felt ‘very badly’ about the arrest of...Bannon but said he was not in touch with the former campaign aide and knew nothing about the organization involved in the case. ... ‘I feel very badly. I haven’t been dealing with him for a long period of time,’ Trump said when asked about the case.” Trump is quoted as saying, “I haven’t dealt with him at all now for years, literally years.”

During Trump’s visit to Pennsylvania Thursday, WBRE-TV Wilkes-Barre, PA (8/20, 14K) also asked him about Bannon’s indictment. Trump said, “We have nothing to do with that. That was a project that was started with a group of people, but I know nothing about it other than I was against it. And as you know, I’ve spoken out against it previously and I didn’t like the idea that they were building and I think that’s a government project. We built almost 300 miles of wall.” To Politico (8/20, Choi, 4.29M), “Trump distanced himself Thursday from...Bannon’s efforts to crowdsource private funds for a border wall,” and to The Hill (8/20, Chalfant, 2.98M) he “sought to distance himself from” his disgraced former aide.

Trump Organization Seeks To Distance Trump Jr. From Bannon Project. The Washington Post (8/20, Sonmez, 14.2M) reports the Trump Organization “sought to distance Donald Trump Jr. from Bannon, after reports resurfaced about a speech the president’s son gave in New Mexico last year supporting the online crowdfunding campaign We Build the Wall.” The Post adds that Trump Jr. “gave a 15-minute speech in support of the project last year.” The Post adds that “reporters also pointed out Thursday that We Build the Wall’s website featured a testimonial from the president’s son praising the group as ‘doing some wonderful things for an important issue.’” Trump Organization spokeswoman Amanda Miller said in a statement, “Don gave one speech at a single We Build the Wall event over a year ago with a group of angel moms and besides that, has no involvement with their organization. ... He never gave them permission to use him as a testimonial on their website and was unaware they included him as one until today’s media reports about it.”

WPost: Actual Government-Built Wall A “Much Bigger Scam.” The Washington Post (8/20, 14.2M) editorializes that “the grift alleged is disgusting, if not surprising,” and “Bannon’s alleged masterminding of the plot, to the extent there was any mastery involved, is particularly repugnant.” The Post adds that “if the indictment is correct, this is a scam within a much, much bigger scam,” as “we already know that a candidate for president of the United States orchestrated the same fraud, and continues to orchestrate it, to elevate himself to a high office – from which he can engage in plenty of self-dealing of his own. The only folks who walk away empty-handed? Those donors, and voters, gullible enough to believe that a wall is the answer to anything at all.”

NYTimes Says Bannon’s “Scheme” Was “Quintessentially Trumpian.” In an editorial, the New York Times (8/20, 18.61M) finds “a measure of poetic justice in Thursday’s news that...Bannon...arrested on a yacht on Long Island Sound and charged with defrauding hundreds of thousands of Mr. Trump’s supporters.” To the Times, “the scheme” behind the charges against Bannon “is also quintessentially Trumpian – a faithful copy of the president’s knack for trading on the hopes of disaffected Americans. We Build the Wall, in other words, was basically a Trump tribute band," and "the plan itself was cribbed directly from Mr. Trump."

Fauci Undergoes Outpatient Surgery To Remove Vocal Chord Polyp.

ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 9, 0:15, Muir, 6.79M) reported last night that NIAID Director Fauci is "recovering from outpatient surgery to remove a polyp from his vocal chord," and the CBS Evening News (8/20, story 9, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.17M) that the "the nation's top infectious disease expert, now 79 years old," has been "advised by his doctors to limit his speaking while his vocal chords recover." The AP (8/20) recounts Fauci is "home and resting."

USA Today (8/20, Cummings, 10.31M) recalls "Fauci was asked about his voice during an April 28 interview with Economic Club of Washington President David Rubenstein," who said, "People keep commenting it's a little raspy. ... Are you talking too much, or what?" Fauci "said the problem began after he got the H1N1 flu in December. He was beginning to recover when the pandemic began, which forced him to conduct almost constant briefings." Fauci added, "I probably have a polyp there."

In its story about Fauci's surgery, Politico (8/20, Choi, Owerhohle, 4.29M) reports the President "has insisted that he and Fauci maintain a good relationship, brushing aside rumors of internal disputes and a president feeling upstaged by the popular director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases." However, "tension has been apparent at times between" the two. Along similar lines, the Washington Post (8/20, Bernstein, 14.2M) recounts that "when actor Brad Pitt portrayed Fauci on 'Saturday Night Live' in a late-April appearance, The Washington Post noted that Pitt adopted Fauci's 'distinctive raspy voice.'"

Trump Blasts Universal Mail-In Voting, Says "They Are Trying To Steal This Election."

During his visit to Pennsylvania Thursday, President Trump told WBRE-TV Wilkes-Barre, PA (8/20), "The big problem isn't the post office it is what is going to happen when they are giving out millions and millions of ballots and dumping them all over the place. And again, absentee ballots are good. ... But these universal mail-in ballots are horrible. It is going to be a scandal like you have never seen before." Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K), "They are sending out 51 million ballots to people that didn't ask for them. Absentee ballots are great. I used one for Florida. ... That's when you go through a process. You ask for it. They send it to you and it's very secure. There is nothing like going to the voter's booth and we should have voter ID which the Democrats don't want for obvious reasons. ... Fifty-one million ballots sent to who knows who. Where are they going? This is going to be the greatest scam in history. This will be the most fraudulent election in history."

Trump tweeted Thursday night, "They are sending out 51,000,000 Ballots to people who haven't even requested a Ballot. Many of those people don't even exist. They are trying to STEAL this election. This should not be allowed!"

Trump Campaign Sues To Prevent Use Of Drop Boxes In Pennsylvania. Reuters (8/20, Sullivan, Renshaw) reports that as election officials "gird for a dramatic expansion of mail voting in the Nov. 3 election, Democrats across the country are promoting drop boxes as a convenient and reliable option for voters who don't want to entrust their ballots to the U.S. Postal Service." Reuters adds that Trump's reelection campaign "has sued to prevent their use in Pennsylvania, a key battleground state, alleging that the receptacles could enable voting fraud." Reuters says the Trump campaign "argues that people could drop off multiple ballots in boxes that are unstaffed, which is an illegal practice in Pennsylvania." According to Reuters, "Republican officials in other states have prevented their use."

Trump: Concerns Over Cutbacks To USPS Were "A Fake By Pelosi And Schumer."

During his visit to Pennsylvania Thursday, WBRE-TV Wilkes-Barre, PA (8/20) asked President Trump about concerns over "cutbacks at the US Postal Service." Trump said, "It was all a fake by [House Speaker] Pelosi and [Senate Minority Leader] Schumer. They were trying to make a big deal out of it. The post office is losing a fortune and we have a good businessman running it and he wants to do things where it can lose less and maybe ultimately make some money because I think it can if they charge the right price per package." Trump added that "they are not going to do anything until after the election and even then I said we don't want to lose any jobs. We could make the post office really special but we have to do something on packages without charging people. Whether it is Amazon or a competing business, they have to start paying up."

DeJoy Set For Grillings Over USPS Reforms. The New York Times (8/20, Cochrane, Fuchs, Vogel, Silver-Greenberg, 18.61M) reports that Postmaster General Louis DeJoy's "move to halt changes that were viewed as a threat to mail-in voting did little to quell the outcry over his leadership...with lawmakers calling on Wednesday for his removal and one top Democrat demanding more answers about the secretive process that led to a major Trump donor running the Postal Service." Schumer "called on the Postal Service board of governors to release information about the selection process that resulted in Mr. DeJoy's appointment, saying that the changes made under his watch underscored the need for more details." The Times also reports that "lawmakers plan to question Mr. DeJoy at a Senate committee hearing on Friday and at a House oversight hearing on Monday."

The AP (8/20, Izaguirre, Slodysko) says DeJoy is a "wealthy Republican donor," who "owned a logistics business that was a longtime Postal Service contractor, and he has significant financial stakes in companies that do business or compete with the agency. That has led critics to question whether he has conflicts of interest, something DeJoy is almost certain to be asked about during" his testimony. The AP adds that DeJoy and his wife "have a history of donating to conservative causes and Republican candidates, including $1.2 million to President Donald Trump's election efforts."

Similarly, Bloomberg (8/20, Shields, Flatley, Allison, 4.73M) describes DeJoy as a "wealthy transportation executive and Republican megadonor," and says Republicans "might seek to blame the Obama administration for decisions to trim costs that were put in play since DeJoy arrived in June while also arguing that they are necessary." Bloomberg also reports that Republicans "are likely to use the hearings to counter calls for more funding for the beleaguered agency, which members of both parties say is overdue for profound reform."

The Washington Post (8/20, Bogage, Ingraham, 14.2M) reports that "according to a grievance filed by the American Postal Workers Union...the Postal Service was poised to decommission 671 of the massive [sorting] machines, about 10 percent of its inventory, and capable of sorting 21.4 million pieces of paper mail per hour." The Post says the Postal Service "processes as much as 500 million items each day." According to the Post, "But Postal Service officials and industry insiders say the removals were part of a long-range plan, one that reflects Americans' diminishing use for letters and growing reliance on package delivery."

Democrats Say Administration Is Weakening Postal Service To Undermine Mail-In, Absentee Voting. USA Today (8/20, Shannon, Slack, McCoy, 10.31M) reports, "Accounts of mail delays have been documented across the country in recent weeks by the USA Today Network. One of the most common complaints: Mail is simply not delivered for days on end." While it is "unclear how widespread these delivery problems are," USPS data "show deliveries are taking longer than last year. On-time first-class deliveries dropped from 93.4% in the second quarter of 2019 to 90.8% for the same period this year. The goal was 96%." USA Today adds that "top Democrats" say the Administration "is kneecapping the Postal Service to hamper mail-in and absentee voting, which surged this spring amid the coronavirus pandemic."

Trump Says He Will Use Law Enforcement Agencies To Prevent Voter Fraud.

The Washington Examiner (8/20, Leonardi, 448K) reports that in an interview with Fox News' Hannity (8/20, 535K) Thursday, "President Trump said he would employ various law enforcement agencies during election voting to prevent fraud." Asked, "Are you going to have an ability to monitor, to avoid fraud, and cross-check whether or not these are registered voters," Trump said, "We're going to have everything. We're going to have sheriffs, and we're going to have law enforcement, and we're going to have, hopefully, US attorneys. And we're going to have everybody and attorney generals [sic]. But it's very hard. I mean, you have some of these states sending them out, like Nevada, where they don't even have to check the signatures, so anybody can sign it. New Jersey just sent it out, where the governor, as I understand it, just signed an executive order, didn't even go through the legislature to get it done. And nobody has ever heard of anything like this."

Trump tweeted Thursday night, "To get into the Democrat National Convention, you must have an ID card with a picture...Yet the Democrats refuse to do this when it come to your very important VOTE! Gee, I wonder WHY???"

Board Of Canvassers Investigating After 72% Of Detroit Absentee Ballot Counts Were Off. The Detroit News (8/20, Mauber, 825K) reports the board responsible for certifying election results in Wayne County, Michigan's largest county, "is asking Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson's office to investigate after problems with tracking ballots in Detroit's primary, which one official described as a 'perfect storm.'" According to information presented to the Wayne County Board of Canvassers, "counts for ballots in about 72% of Detroit's absentee voting precincts for the Aug. 4 primary election were out of balance without an explanation. ... The number of ballots tracked in precinct poll books did not match the number of ballots counted." Jonathan Kinloch, "a Democrat and one of the canvassing board's four members" said the results weren't incorrect, but something went wrong in the process of tracking ballots precinct by precinct.

Study: Up To 12% Of Virginia Voters Could Be Registered Illegally. The Washington Free Beacon (8/20, Goodman, 78K) reports that a study by the National Election Integrity Task Force that is "circulating among officials at the Department of Justice's front office and members of Congress," found that "up to 12 percent of registered voters in Virginia could be on the rolls illegally."

Trump Asks Supreme Court To Rule On Whether He Can Block People On Twitter.

The AP (8/20, Sherman) reports that President Trump is asking the Supreme Court "to allow him to block critics from his personal Twitter account." The Administration "said in a high-court filing Thursday that Trump's @realDonaldTrump account with more than 85 million followers is his personal property and blocking people from it is akin to elected officials who refuse to allow their opponents' yard signs on their front lawns. 'President Trump's ability to use the features of his personal Twitter account, including the blocking function, are independent of his presidential office,' acting Solicitor General Jeffrey Wall wrote in urging the justices to review the case."

CNBC (8/20, Higgins, 3.62M) reports on its website that a federal appeals court ruled last year that the President "used his account as 'an official channel of communication,'" and "on that basis, the unanimous three-judge panel" of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals said Trump "has effectively created a public forum, and was forbidden from blocking users based on their political views." Politico (8/20, Nysten, 4.29M) says Knight First Amendment Institute at Columbia University "filed...suit on behalf of seven people whom Trump had blocked after they posted comments criticizing the president." Reuters (8/20, Shepardson), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Bernhardt Touts Great American Outdoors Act.

Interior Secretary Bernhardt spoke about the new Great American Outdoors Act on WIND-AM Chicago (8/20, 8K), saying "the really creative thing that that legislation does is establish two incredible funds. One fund to pay for fixing deferred maintenance challenges on public lands, particularly our national parks and Indian schools and wildlife refuges and forest service lands – it's an incredible investment in recreation and conservation." Bernhardt said a separate fund "of $900 million a year forever" is "devoted to enhancing recreation opportunities and preserving land and habitat, and all of those things together, in one form or another, are funded out of revenues from energy and resource development." Bernhardt said it is "probably the largest funding and conservation initiative certainly in my lifetime."

McEnany Says Trump Has Not “Looked Into” QAnon Conspiracy.

Politico (8/20, Cohen, 4.29M) reports that on Thursday, White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany "said she has never heard President Donald Trump mention QAnon, as a growing number of Republicans sharply criticized Trump's appreciative stance on the conspiracy theory." McEnany told Fox News, "The media talks a lot about this so-called QAnon. I've never heard the President mention it. ... I talk to him oftentimes 10 times a day. Not once have I heard him mention this group. The media can focus on QAnon." According to Politico, on Wednesday, the President "said...he appreciated support from QAnon followers, adding he did not know much about the group." On Thursday, McEnany "repeated Trump's message that he knows little about QAnon, claiming the president 'has not at all looked into who QAnon is.'"

The New York Times (8/20, Rosenberg, Haberman, 18.61M) says a "small but growing number of Republicans...are donning the QAnon mantle." The Times says Trump is "chief among the party's QAnon promoters." Trump "has employed a wink-and-nod approach to the conspiracy theory, retweeting its followers but conspicuously ignoring questions about it. Yet with the election drawing ever closer and Mr. Trump's failure to manage the Covid-19 pandemic harming his re-election prospects, the White House and some Trump allies appear to have taken to openly courting believers." The Washington Post (8/20, Olorunnipa, Stanley-Becker, 14.2M) says Trump "has given a nod to fringe groups and welcomed them into the mainstream of his party. Beyond being unfounded, many of the ideas Trump is bolstering are dangerous, according to intelligence officials, political scientists and, increasingly, members of the president's own party."

Sasse, Jeb Bush Criticize Trump's Comments About QAnon. The Washington Examiner (8/20, Drucker, 448K) says Sen. Ben Sasse (R-NE) "snapped at" Trump "for expressing support for voters who believe in the QAnon conspiracy theory, warning that if Democrats win the White House and take the Senate, it will be partly because of 'garbage like this.'" In a statement Thursday morning, Sasse said, "QAnon is nuts, and real leaders call conspiracy theories conspiracy theories. ... If Democrats take the Senate, blow up the filibuster, and pack the Supreme Court, garbage like this will be a big part of why they won." The Examiner adds that while Sasse "did not mention Trump by name, it is clear from the timing of his statement that he was referring to the president's comments from a Wednesday evening news conference at the White House" in which Trump "praised QAnon followers, explaining that they support him, love the country, and are disturbed by the ongoing civil unrest in some cities."

The Washington Times (8/20, Muñoz, 492K) reports that former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush (R) "also criticized the president's comments." Bush tweeted, "Why in the world would the President not kick Q'anon supporters' butts? Nut jobs, racists, haters have no place in either Party."

Cheney Condemns QAnon Movement. The Hill (8/20, Brufke, 2.98M) reports that Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) "denounced" QAnon Thursday "as a 'dangerous lunacy,' becoming the highest-ranking GOP lawmaker to condemn it." Cheney said in a statement, "QAnon is a dangerous lunacy that should have no place in American politics."

Franklin Graham Plans Prayer March In Washington.

The Washington Times (8/20, Harper, 492K) reports that "evangelist Franklin Graham is planning a prayer march through the nation's capital to provide spiritual relief to political leaders and citizens alike in uncertain times." Graham says in a public invitation, "Will you join us for this march as we call out to God to heal our land? On September 26 beginning at noon at the Lincoln Memorial, we will make our way across the National Mall before ending in front of the U.S. Capitol. Along the 1.8 mile route, we will stop for focused prayer for America, our communities and families, and our leaders. ... America is in trouble. Our communities are hurting, our people are divided, and there's fear and uncertainty all around us. Let's join together and do the most important thing: pray!"

White House Reassessing Permit For AK Mine After Appeals From “Influential Republicans.”

The Washington Post (8/20, Eilperin, Parker, Mufson, 14.2M) reports that federal approval of the Pebble Mine, "a controversial gold and copper mine in Alaska...may be put on hold after a small group of influential Republicans...launched a full-court press to block the project." The mine "was on the verge of winning a key permit from the Trump administration despite concerns from environmentalists that it could significantly damage Alaska's world-renowned sockeye salmon fishery in nearby Bristol Bay," which "also happens to be a fishing spot of Donald Trump Jr., who made an impassioned case against the mine to his father during an early August." Trump donor Andrew Sabin "also told the president that the mine was a bad idea. And last week, [Fox News' Tucker] Carlson argued against the proposed mine on his television show." Those appeals have "prompted the White House to reassess the mine, according to two individuals familiar with the matter."

Biden Vows To Be “Ally Of The Light” In Speech Accepting Democratic Nomination.

The AP (8/21, Peoples, Jaffe) reports Joe Biden "accepted the Democratic presidential nomination Thursday night with a vow to be a unifying 'ally of the light' who would move an America in crisis past the chaos" of President Trump's tenure. In his "strongest remarks of the campaign, Biden spoke both of returning the United States to its traditional leadership role in the world and of the deeply personal challenges that shaped his life." The AP says "virtually every sentence" of the speech was "designed to present a sharp, yet hopeful, contrast" with Trump. Biden said, "Here and now I give you my word: If you entrust me with the presidency, I will draw on the best of us, not the worst. I'll be an ally of the light, not the darkness. Make no mistake, united we can and will overcome this season of darkness in America."

Reuters (8/20, Hunnicutt, Ax) reports that in the speech, "the capstone of nearly five decades in politics," Biden described "the current moment as one of the most difficult times the country has ever faced," and "offered himself as a uniter who would work 'just as hard' for those who do not support him – drawing a stark contrast with the Republican Trump, who has kept the focus on his base of voters." Biden said, "While I'll be a Democratic candidate, I'll be an American president. That's the job of a president. To represent all of us, not just our base or our party. This is not a partisan moment. This must be an American moment. It's a moment that calls for hope, and light, and love."

USA Today (8/20, Hayes, Lalljee, Bohan, 10.31M) says Biden used the speech "to highlight his vision for dealing with the multiple challenges facing the country, including the pandemic, a recession and a national reckoning over racism." Biden said, "Character is on the ballot, compassion is on the ballot, decency, science, democracy. They're all on the ballot. Who we are as a nation, what we stand for, and, most importantly – who we want to be. That's all on the ballot. The choice could not be more clear." The New York Times (8/20, Burns, Glueck, 18.61M) says Biden's appearance "was an emphatic closing argument in a four-day virtual convention in which Democrats presented a broad coalition of women, young people and racial minorities while going to unusual lengths to welcome Republicans and independent voters seeking relief from the tumult of the Trump era."

The Washington Post (8/21, Balz, 14.2M) reports Biden "framed the election as a stark choice, describing a country under Trump as one with 'too much anger, too much fear, too much division.' ... He described his policy aspirations, ticking through a list of issues he has spoken about through the campaign, from climate to education to jobs and the economy. But the strength of the speech was to draw a contrast with the president and to make clear that his principal focus if he becomes president in January will be on the pandemic and the economic recession that has accompanied it."

The Los Angeles Times (8/20, Barabak, 4.64M) writes, "Shifting between the conversational style of a friendly neighbor and the thunder of righteous anger, Biden issued a dire warning of what the nation could become under four more years of President Trump." Biden said, "Our current president has failed in his most basic duty to the nation. He's failed to protect us." While he "never mentioned Trump by name, he hammered away at the president's performance and the chaos of his administration as it struggles with a deadly pandemic and an economic calamity."

The Delaware News Journal (8/20, Newman, 360K) reports, "In a commanding speech," Biden "painted his candidacy as one that can unite the Democratic Party and a country in the midst of a once-in-a-lifetime pandemic, an economic downturn, a dooming threat of climate change and a national reckoning on racial injustice." Fox News (8/20, Schultz, 27.59M) reports on its website that Biden, "the three-time presidential candidate who was written off in early 2020 after losing both Iowa and New Hampshire, said he's the candidate who can lead the nation through the dark times."

The New York Post (8/20, Bowden, 4.57M) calls it "a 24-minute gaffe-free address designed to rise above the partisan divide." The Detroit Free Press (8/21, Spangler, 1.52M) says Biden "made a quiet but impassioned plea for Americans to turn away from hate and division and invoked lessons learned from his parents and his family before loudly denouncing Trump for 'cozying up to dictators,' threatening voting rights and not taking firm enough action against Russian interference." Politico (8/20, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that in "a moment he has worked toward for decades, Joe Biden on Thursday condemned what he called the divisive path that President Donald Trump had set the country on, and pledged to be the leader for all Americans rather than a partisan player."

Immediately following the speech, the Democratic ticket and their spouses ventured into the parking lot of Wilmington's Chase Center, where a drive-in viewing was held. USA Today (8/20, Hughes, Parra, 10.31M) reports, "Because of the coronavirus pandemic, Delawareans couldn't gather inside the Chase Center to watch Biden speak in person. So the state Democratic Party adapted, hosting the drive-in in its place." The Scranton (PA) Times Tribune (8/20, Wilkes, 174K) reports a watch party also took place in Scranton, Pennsylvania, where Biden spent his early years.

The speech received strong reviews from commentators across the spectrum. CNN (8/21, Stelter, 83.16M) reports on its website that Fox's Bret Baier called the speech "the best he's been, as far as his delivery." Fox's Chris Wallace said, "It was an enormously effective speech. Remember, Donald Trump has been talking for months about Joe Biden as mentally shot, a captive of the left, and yes Biden was reading from a teleprompter and a prepared speech, but I thought he blew a hole – a big hole – in that characterization." On MSNBC, Joy Reid said, "I think we found out tonight why Donald Trump feared him so much." The Hill (8/20, Coleman, 2.98M) reports CNN's Jake Tapper said Biden's acceptance speech "was 'one of the best, if not the best' that he's seen him give in his career."

The Week (8/20, Weber, 1.94M) reports Fox's Brit Hume "also praised Biden's speech, calling it 'very good' and 'delivered with force and clarity.' His colleague, Dana Perino shared the view, saying Biden 'just hit a home run in the bottom of the ninth. ... He had pace, rhythm, energy, emotion, and delivery. I think if he looks back, he's got to say that was probably the best speech of his life.'" Karl Rove said the speech "was an 'excellent end' to the convention, calling the former VP's remarks 'very good.'" The Week (8/20, 1.94M) also reports conservative commentators lauded the speech on Twitter, with Townhall's Guy Benson writing, "Biden crushed expectations," and Rich Lowry of the National Review tweeting, "Forceful, energetic delivery, strongest when portraying his program as all about jobs, speech lost focus in the second half – but overall, probably helped himself." Erick Erickson tweeted, "Biden exceeded expectations. That was a fine speech." Chris Cillizza writes on the CNN (8/20, 83.16M) website, "While the start of the speech was somewhat rocky, Biden not only settled into the speech but did something I did not think he could do: He was charismatic, forceful, emotional and powerful. Anyone who watched that speech would have no doubt as to whether Biden is ready, willing and able to do the job for which he is running."

The Washington Post (8/20, Board, 14.2M) says in an editorial that while the nomination of "longtime former senator from Delaware and two-term vice president...may hardly seem like a radical choice...given the ethos of our times, his nomination is a bold one. Mr. Biden represents a cooperative, optimistic style of politics that the country has been losing, gradually over the past decades of accelerating polarization – and drastically during the past four years of insults, lies and conspiracy-mongering. ... Coalition-building wins few adherents on Twitter and rarely makes for exciting television. But it gets things done.”

The Los Angeles Times (8/20, 4.64M) editorializes, “Biden convincingly portrayed himself as both a progressive innovator and an advocate of civility and compromise. In the coming campaign Trump can be counted on to twist Biden’s words and actions in a desperate attempt to cling to an office he has disgraced. Biden and his fellow Democrats effectively used their convention to tell voters who their nominee actually is, but as the campaign moves forward, he will need a united party to keep reminding them.” However, the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that it is unclear what kind of president Biden would be, asserting that despite his long career, he has had no defining message. The Journal says Biden was the safest choice for a party eager to defeat President Trump, and is running more as a figurehead than a standardbearer.

The New York Times (8/20, Martin, Goldmacher, 18.61M) says in a front-page analysis that the candidate “rides out of the D.N.C. with a general election message centered on compassion, linking his biography of setback and recovery to the lives of Americans experiencing hardships.” Biden “used his acceptance speech on Thursday night to lay out an unusually personal message for the fall campaign, linking his heart-rending biography of setback and recovery to the lives of Americans hoping for their own rebound in a season of hardships.”

Julie Pace of the AP (8/21) writes, “Nearly everything in American life has changed in the 16 months between the launch of Joe Biden’s White House campaign and his address Thursday night...yet Biden’s bet on the 2020 race has remained unchanged – a belief that the nation is less partisan and more open to compromise than it often appears,” that voters “are seeking decency over ideology, a reset over a revolution.” The New York Times (8/20, Flegenheimer, 18.61M) says Biden won “the chance to face President Trump because he is, admirers say, all the things that the incumbent is not: empathetic, dependable, decent.”

All three broadcast networks previewed the speech on their evening newscasts, with Mary Bruce saying on ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 2, 1:50, Muir, 6.79M) that it would be “the most important political speech of [Biden’s] life,” Ed O’Keefe of the CBS Evening News (8/20, story 3, 2:15, O’Donnell, 4.17M) saying Biden intended to “look ahead, rather than back, at President Trump’s tenure, outlining what he would do as president to beat back the pandemic and rebuild the economy,” and Peter Alexander of NBC Nightly News (8/20, story 2, 3:30, Holt, 5.6M) saying Biden was set to “frame the election as a battle for the soul of the nation.” Bloomberg (8/21, Sink, 4.73M), the Atlanta Journal-Constitution (8/21, Darnell, 895K), the New York Daily News (8/20, Goldiner, Greene, 2.52M), the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Siddiqui, Thomas, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the CNN (8/20, Reston, Collinson, 83.16M) website, and The Hill (8/20, Easley, Parnes, 2.98M) are among the other sources covering the speech.

Michael Bloomberg Hits Trump On Business Record. The New York Post (8/21, Bowden, 4.57M) reports former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg (D) “accused President Trump of cozying up to white supremacists in a speech at the 2020 Democratic National Convention on Thursday night where he asked voters to fire the commander in chief.” Bloomberg “took Trump to the mat on his own history as a property developer and accused him of running America into the ground.” Bloomberg said, “Trump said we should vote for him because he’s a great businessman. Really? He drove his companies into bankruptcy six times, always leaving behind customers and contractors who were cheated and swindled and stopped doing business with him. Well, this time all of us are paying the price, and we can’t let him get away with it again.”

The President responded on Twitter, writing, “After the worst debate performance in the history of politics, Michael Bloomberg, commonly known as Mini Mike, is trying to make a comeback by begging the Democrats for relevance. They treated him like a dog – and always will. Before politics, he said GREAT things about me!”

Booker Focuses On Economy In Convention Speech. The Newark (NJ) Star-Ledger (8/20, Salant, 2.15M) reports Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) said in brief remarks at the Democratic National Convention Thursday that “the economy was not working for millions of Americans. ... He told the story of his grandfather leaving the South for a good-paying union job in Michigan, earning enough money to raise a family and send his mother to college.” Booker said, “That’s the American dream. Together we work; together we rise. Joe Biden and Kamala Harris know the dignity of all working Americans; they know the urgency and the demand of our dream.”

Buttigieg Says His Marriage Shows “How This Country Can Change.” The South Bend (IN) Tribune (8/21, Parrott, 182K) reports Pete Buttigieg, “pointing to his own experience as an openly gay Afghanistan war veteran and presidential candidate, touted Democratic nominee Joe Biden Thursday night as someone who would help more Americans feel like they ‘belong.’” Buttigieg said in his remarks to the Democratic convention, “Just over 10 years ago, I joined a military where firing me because of who I am wasn’t just possible – it was policy. The very ring on my finger – a wedding we celebrated here where I’m standing – reflects how this country can change.”

Baldwin Says US Will Be “Nation That Builds Back” Under Biden. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (8/20, Spicuzza, 632K) reports Sen. Tammy Baldwin (D-WI) “vowed that the United States would be ‘a nation that builds back’ with Joe Biden and Kamala Harris in the White House.” In her speech to the Democratic National Convention, Baldwin, “recounted being diagnosed with a serious illness as a child. She added that since her grandparents were the ones raising her, they were forced to pay out of pocket for her three-month hospital stay.” She “portrayed Biden and Harris as the leaders needed to help the country recover from the COVID-19 pandemic.”

Bottoms Links Democratic Ticket To Lewis’ Legacy. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (8/21, Mitchell, 895K) reports Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms (D), speaking to the Democratic National Convention from the National Center for Civil and Human Rights in Atlanta, recounted the legacy of late Rep. John Lewis (D-GA), saying Joe Biden and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) “would follow in Lewis’ tradition as leaders ‘who hold justice close to their hearts and believe that the lives of my four Black children matter.’”

Duckworth Calls Trump “Coward-In-Chief.” The Chicago Tribune (8/21, Ruthhart, Pearson, 2.65M) reports Sen. Tammy

Duckworth (D-IL) “seized her high-profile moment at the Democratic National Convention on Thursday night by launching an offensive” against President Trump for “politicizing the military and displaying failed leadership abroad. The double amputee and Purple Heart recipient labeled Trump as America’s ‘coward-in-chief,’ painting him as selfish and weak while portraying Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden as a man of decency and integrity.”

Newsom Slams Trump For Threatening To Cut Wildfire Protection Funding. The Los Angeles Times (8/20, 4.64M) reports California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D), in remarks delivered to the Democratic National Convention, “tore into President Trump for threatening to strip federal funding for wildfire prevention in California after nearly 500,000 acres burned in storm-related lightning strikes, criticizing him further for trying to dismantle the state’s landmark vehicle emission standards.” Newsom said, “Just today, the President of the United States threatened the state of California, 40 million Americans who happen to live here in the state of California, to defund our efforts on wildfire suppression because he said we hadn’t raked enough leaves. I can’t make that up.”

New Hampshire Boy Describes How Biden Helped Him With His Stutter. The AP (8/21, Weissert) reports 13-year-old Brayden Harrington addressed the Democratic convention from his home in New Hampshire, talking about how Joe Biden helped him gain confidence in dealing with his stutter. Biden “has spoken frequently about how overcoming a stutter was one of the hardest things he’s done in life.” Harrington met Biden during the New Hampshire primary campaign, at an event “where Biden spoke about overcoming a severe childhood stutter. He’s talked frequently publicly through the years about the anger and frustration of being mocked by classmates and a nun in Catholic school – and how that motivated him to work to overcome it.” Biden invited him backstage after the event. Harrington said Thursday, “I’m just trying to be a kid. And in a short amount of time, Joe Biden made me feel more confident about something that’s bothered me my whole life. Joe Biden cared. Imagine what he could do for all of us.”

Politico (8/21, Forgey, 4.29M) reports, “In his conversation with Biden, Harrington said, the former vice president offered tips to help overcome his stutter – including showing him ‘how he marks his addresses to make them easier to say out loud.’ Holding up a copy of his own annotated speech, Harrington said: ‘I did the same thing today, and now I’m here talking to you today about the future. About our future.’” CNN (8/20, Sullivan, 83.16M) reports on its website, “His father, Owen Harrington, told CNN at the time that Biden ‘put his focus on Brayden and made time for him, talked to him, explained that it doesn’t define him, he’s stronger, that he’s a good person. It was really overwhelming for Brayden. He started breaking down a little bit.’”

Aaron Blake of the Washington Post (8/20, 14.2M) writes, “One of the most popular lines of attack on Biden among some on Fox News and the in the conservative community is that his frequent verbal stumbles reflect some kind of mental decline. The Democratic convention went after that head-on” with Harrington’s speech, which “invited Biden’s conservative opponents to confront an uneasy choice: Continue going after his verbal slip-ups and perhaps go too far – which some including Sarah Sanders and Lara Trump clearly have – or scale back one of their chief lines of attack.”

Louis-Dreyfus Gets Mixed Reviews For Comedic Hosting Performance. Reuters (8/21, Whitesides) reports, “After three nights of solemn political rhetoric” at the Democratic National Convention, actor/comedian Julia Louis-Dreyfus “injected a heavy dose of humor and mockery” in hosting the Thursday proceedings. USA Today (8/20, Fritze, Groppe, 10.31M) says her performance is getting mixed reviews and “at times seemed inconsistent with the emotion party organizers were hoping to convey.” Politico (8/20, Forgey, 4.29M) says “prominent Democrats praised” her performance, but the Daily Beast (8/20, 1.39M) calls her conversation with Andrew Yang an “awkward comedy routine.”

Convention Ratings Were Up Wednesday. Deadline Hollywood (8/20, Johnson, 1.05M) reports, “Speeches from Barack Obama and Kamala Harris likely helped boost TV viewership for the third night of the Democratic National Convention. According to early numbers from Nielsen, 21.4 million watched during the 10 PM ET hour across six networks, ABC, CBS, NBC, Fox News, MSNBC and CNN,” up from 18.6 million on Tuesday and 18.7 million on Monday.

Clinton: GOP Senators Have “Seem to Have Had Like A Lobotomy.”

Axios (8/20, Knutson, 521K) reports that on MSNBC Thursday night, “Hillary Clinton criticized her former Republican colleagues for their responses to the explosive findings in the Senate Intelligence Committee’s report on 2016 Russian interference.” Clinton accused them of giving up “their principles, their values, their backbone” to follow President Trump. Clinton said, “I don’t understand what has happened to the people that I served with, I worked with, I traveled with, who literally seem to have had like a lobotomy or something. ... You have the intelligence officials of even the Trump administration sounding the warnings, and you have a lot of good legislation that’s come out of the House under Nancy Pelosi that goes to the Senate and is basically buried by Mitch McConnell. ... They have just given up their principles, their values, their backbone to following Trump, regardless of where he leads.”

Biden Accuser Reade Says DNC Is “Gaslighting” Sexual Assault Survivors.

Fox News (8/20, Wulfsohn, 27.59M) reports on its website that Tara Reade, who leveled “sexual assault allegations against Joe Biden” earlier this year, “voiced disappointment in the Democratic Party’s handling of claims from her and other survivors as its convention draws to a close.” In an interview with Fox News, Reade “said witnessing figures celebrate the man she claims sexually assaulted her has been ‘traumatizing,’ and she “said the party has been ‘complicit’ in what she described as ‘gaslighting’ survivors.” Reade said, “I’ve communicated with other people who are watching this who had very visceral reactions to what’s happening and how sexual assault survivors. ... We’re being gaslighted, right, collectively. ... And frankly, I think the Democratic National Committee is complicit because they’re not just ignoring it.

They're participating in it...and enabling those perpetrators."

Website Highlights Sexual Harassment Claims Against Biden. The Washington Examiner (8/20, Bedard, 448K) says Biden "is getting slammed anew with allegations of sexual harassment from a new website highlighting the claims against the longtime senator and two-term vice president." The site, WomenforBiden.com, "appears to be pro-Biden, but it is the brainchild of David Blair, "a conservative activist and former Trump aide who said he believes the media and Democrats should look into the claims against the Democrat as hard as they did those against President Trump and Supreme Court Associate Justice Brett Kavanaugh."

Photos Show Bill Clinton Getting Neck Massage From Epstein Accuser.

Osburn: As California AG, Harris Targeted Anti-Abortion Activist At Donors' Behest.

In a piece for The Federalist (8/20, 126K), Madeline Osburn writes that three weeks ago, anti-abortion activist David Daleiden "appeared in a San Francisco Superior Court, once again fighting the criminal charges" Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) brought against him "at the behest of her political donors." When she was California Attorney General in March 2016, Harris "met with six Planned Parenthood officials in her Los Angeles office. Email records between Harris's office and Planned Parenthood officials show the two were corresponding on orchestrating public responses, filing police reports, and even drafting legislation targeting Daleiden for his undercover videos exposing the abortion giant." Two weeks later, "Harris ordered state law enforcement agents to raid Daleiden's home, tasking them with seizing his camera equipment, documents, and unreleased video footage. Daleiden's attorneys argued Harris's search warrant should have never been issued according to California's shield law, which explicitly protects citizen journalists' unpublished materials."

O'Neal: Harris Cast Catholic Beliefs As Incompatible With Public Service. In the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Adam O'Neal, a London-based editorial page writer for the Journal, writes that in 2018, as the Senate was considering Brian Buescher's nomination to the US District Court in Nebraska, Harris essentially portrayed adherence to Catholic tenants as being incompatible with public service. O'Neal points out that Joe Biden is Catholic, but he and Harris share the same views on abortion.

Dhume: Harris Downplays Her Mother's Tamil Brahmin Ancestry.

In the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), South Asia columnist Sadanand Dhume writes that Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) has downplayed her mother's Tamil Brahmin ancestry. Dhume posits that this is because the fact that many Tamil Brahmin immigrants have found opportunity in the US belies many left's claim that the US oppresses immigrants.

McAuliffe Files Paperwork To Form Virginia Gubernatorial Campaign Committee.

The Washington Post (8/20, Schneider, 14.2M) reports that former Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe (D) "has filed paperwork with the Virginia elections office to create a campaign committee to run for governor in 2021," but a spokesman "said that it's a technicality and that there's no candidacy. Yet." Spokesman Brennan Bilberry said in a text message, "Governor McAuliffe is making no decisions on 2021 until after we defeat Donald Trump and his hateful ideology. This represents a paperwork change suggested by our accountant and lawyer." The paperwork "converts McAuliffe's existing political action committee, Common Good Virginia, into a candidate committee called Virginians for Common Good."

California Fires Force Tens Of Thousands To Evacuate.

The Los Angeles Times (8/20, Serna, 4.64M) reports, "Evacuations widened in the San Francisco Bay Area overnight as wildfires ringing the region scorched hundreds of square miles, edged toward San Jose and produced perhaps the world's worst air quality." So far, "more than 349,000 acres have burned in Northern and Central California – the equivalent of 546 square miles, more than the land area of the city of Los Angeles." Additionally, "at least 134 structures have been destroyed, and the fire-fanning weather conditions that have brought record temperatures and thousands of lightning strikes in the past few days are not expected to abate soon."

ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 5, 1:55, Muir, 6.79M) reported that PG&E said Thursday "that one of their workers helping fire crews fight the blazes was found unconscious in his vehicle and later died. The death comes after chopper pilot Michael Fournier died fighting a different fire, crashing his chopper in Fresno County Wednesday."

The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Carlton, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports cooler temperatures on Thursday allowed firefighters to make progress in gaining control over the wildfires. Still, many of the major fires in the San Francisco region are no more than 7% contained, according to the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection.

The Washington Post (8/20, Freedman, Samenow, 14.2M) reports, "This is just the beginning of the state's wildfire season, something that has been a constant threat during the past four years of record-setting blazes, both for their breadth and their lethality." According to the Post, "the current fires and their speed and thick smoke have presented a new terror amid a global pandemic – poor air quality, concerns about evacuating masses of people to crowded shelters, and concerns that some might not heed the warnings."

On NBC Nightly News (8/20, story 4, 2:05, Holt, 5.6M), Miguel Almaguer reported, "For now there remains no official number on the true scope of the damage, only estimates. While there is no question home after home was lost, entire communities were also wiped off the map." On the CBS Evening News (8/20, story 4, 1:45, O'Donnell, 4.17M), Carter Evans reported, "There is some good news, though. Those record-breaking temperatures are beginning to come down a bit. It's 15 degrees cooler today than yesterday."

Michigan Agrees To Pay $600M To Flint Water Crisis Victims.

The CBS Evening News (8/20, story 7, 0:25, O'Donnell, 4.17M) reported that there is "a possible settlement in the long-running legal fight over contaminated water in Flint, Michigan. This began when the state switched Flint's water supply to the Flint River but did not treat it adequately, allowing lead to leak into the drinking water." NBC Nightly News (8/20, story 8, 0:20, Holt, 5.6M) reported that Michigan "and other defendants agreeing to pay $600 million in a settlement with residents whose health was harmed by lead-tainted drinking water. Under the deal, 80% of the money will go to victims who were younger than 18 during the crisis."

Barr Says He Will Go To Supreme Court To Reinstate Death Penalty For Tsarnaev.

The Washington Examiner (8/20, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that in an interview with the AP Thursday, Attorney General Barr "said he will go to the Supreme Court to reinstate the death penalty against convicted Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev after an appeals court vacated the death sentence in the case." Barr said, "We will do whatever's necessary. ... We will take it up to the Supreme Court, and we will continue to pursue the death penalty."

National Security Advisor O'Brien said on Fox News' The Story (8/20), "We have to take a hard line on these types of terrorist activities. I applaud Attorney General Barr for the position he's taken, that the Department of Justice is taking. That was such a horrific attack in Boston and there are people that'll never recover their legs, their arms, and of course, they were mutilated by those horrific bombings and of course, we lost Americans we'll never, their families will never have them back for another Thanksgiving or Christmas or birthday, and so it's right that justice is, is pursued."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 43.7%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 43.7, and his disapproval at 54.2%. The President's approval is up 0.4 since yesterday; his disapproval is down by 0.4.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (8/17-8/19) finds Trump's approval at 51%, and his disapproval at 47%. The President noted the Rasmussen numbers of Twitter, and wrote, "THANK YOU! #MAGA." Trump later tweeted, "96% Approval Rating in the Republican Party. 51% Approval Rating overall in the Rasmussen Poll. Thank you!"

ECB Fears Recovery Is At Risk From A Delayed Surge In Unemployment.

The Financial Times (8/20, Arnold, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports, "The eurozone is likely to suffer a sharp increase in unemployment this autumn even as the economic recovery from the coronavirus pandemic..."

PMI Shows Euro Zone Recovery Stuttering In August As UK Recovery Continues.

Reuters (8/21, Cable) reports the euro zone's economic recovery "has stuttered this month, particularly in services, as the pent-up demand unleashed last month by the easing of coronavirus lockdowns dwindled, a survey showed on Friday." IHS Markit's flash Composite Purchasing Managers' Index, "seen as a good gauge of economic health, sank to 51.6 from July's final reading of 54.9." That reading was "below all forecasts in a Reuters poll which had predicted no change from July." The Financial Times (8/21, Arnold, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also reports.

Bloomberg (8/21, Goodman, 4.73M) reports the UK economy "continued its recovery from a record slump, though the good news was clouded by mounting job losses and a growing government debt burden." IHS Markit "said Friday that its composite Purchasing Managers Index jumped to 60.3 from 57, well above what economists had forecast."

Coronavirus Cases Surge Again In Europe.

The Washington Post (8/20, Hassan, Bellware, Partlow, 14.2M) reports, "After months of decline, the coronavirus is now 'steadily increasing' each week in Europe, a worrisome resurgence believed to be driven by infections among younger people, the World Health Organization said Thursday." WHO Regional Director for Europe Hans Kluge "urged people in their 20s, 30s and 40s to remain vigilant and take necessary precautions to slow the spread of the coronavirus." He "said there were 40,000 more cases in Europe in the first week of August compared with the first week of June."

Outbreak At South Korean Church Sets Up Clash Between Religion And Politics.

The New York Times (8/20, Sang-Hun, 18.61M) reports that many members of a South Korean church have contracted the coronavirus, and as the "large outbreak centered on the church spreads fast through Seoul and beyond," it threatens "the country's success in fighting the pandemic." The church in Seoul, known as the Sarang Jeil Church, "has attracted thousands of politically active conservative Christians, all united in the belief that their country is falling into a godless communist hell under the leadership of its liberal president, Moon Jae-in." According to the Times, "a deep antigovernment sentiment among church members could impede the health authorities' efforts."

South Africa's Coronavirus Response Tainted By Allegations Of Corruption.

The New York Times (8/20, Chutel, 18.61M) reports South Africa's response to the coronavirus pandemic and its delivery of aid have been tainted by allegations of corruption by public officials, "undermining confidence in a government that had initially received international acclaim for its assertive response to the pandemic." President Cyril Ramaphosa has "called those accused of corruption 'a pack of hyenas circling wounded prey,' and announced a new law enforcement unit to investigate the allegations." The scandal "includes allegations that government leaders and politically-connected cronies siphoned off money meant for the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and that relatives of public officials were handed inflated contracts to supply personal protective equipment."

Manchester Concert Bomber's Brother Sentenced To 55 Years In Prison.

The AP (8/20, Hui) reports Hashem Abedi, the brother of Salman Abedi, "the suicide bomber who set off an explosion at a 2017 Ariana Grande concert in Manchester, England, killing 22 people and injuring hundreds, was sentenced Thursday to a minimum of 55 years in prison." Abedi "had denied helping plan the attack at Manchester Arena but was found guilty of murder, attempted murder, and conspiring to cause explosions. His sentencing had been postponed due to travel restrictions during the coronavirus pandemic."

Iran Unveils New Ballistic, Cruise Missiles.

CNBC (8/20, Macias, 3.62M) reports on its website, "Iran unveiled a new surface-to-surface ballistic missile on Thursday, a move likely to peeve Washington as the Trump administration attempts to rein in the regime's missile and nuclear weapon ambitions." Iranian Defense Minister Amir Hatami "said in a televised address that the missile has a range of approximately 870 miles and is named after Iranian Gen. Qasem Soleimani, who was killed in an U.S. strike in Iraq in January." Hatami added that "the regime had a new cruise missile boasting a range more than 620 miles and was named after Iraqi militia commander Abu Mahdi al-Muhandis, who also was killed in the strike."

Colombian President Claims Maduro Is Trying To Obtain Iranian Missiles.

Reuters (8/20, Acosta) reports that on Thursday, Colombian President Iván Duque "said...Maduro's administration is looking to buy Iranian missiles and is handing over weapons made in Russia and Belarus to Colombian armed groups. ... 'There is information from international intelligence organisms that work with us which shows there is interest from the dictatorship of Nicolas Maduro in acquiring some medium and long-range missiles through Iran,' Duque said during a virtual event." According to Reuters, Duque "reiterated his frequent accusation that Maduro protects and supports former members of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia rebel group who reject a 2016 peace deal and the still-active National Liberation Army guerrillas."

Trump Reiterates That "We're Getting Out" Of Iraq.

The AP (8/20, Riechmann) reports that on Thursday, President Trump "reaffirmed his plan to withdraw all U.S. troops from Iraq as quickly as possible as he met with the prime minister of Iraq to discuss ways to rein in pro-Iran militias in the country and counter residual threats from Islamic State sleeper cells. 'We look forward to the day when we don't have to be there,' Trump said during an Oval Office meeting with Iraqi Prime Minister Mustafa al-Kadhimi." Trump is quoted as saying, "We were there and now we're getting out. We'll be leaving shortly and the relationship is very good. We're making very big oil deals. Our oil companies are making massive deals. ... We're going to be leaving and hopefully we're going to be leaving a country that can defend itself." USA Today (8/20, Jackson, 10.31M) says Trump "did not provide a timetable." He said, "At some point, we obviously will be gone. ... We look forward to the day when we don't have to be there."

Reuters (8/20, Mason, Shalal) reports that Trump "said Washington would remain ready to help if neighboring Iran took any hostile action." Trump said, "If Iran should do anything, we will be there to help the Iraqi people." The Washington Times (8/20, Meier, 492K) provides similar coverage.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) expresses optimism about the partnership between the US and Iraq. The Journal says US support can help Iraq can subdue Sunni terrorism and militias supported by Iran, which will help maintain a regional balance of power that will prevent future American involvement.

More Than Six Years Later, ISIS Members Have Not Faced Charges For Crimes Against Yazidis.

The New York Post (8/20, McKay, 4.57M) reports that in August 2014, ISIS operatives "swarmed Yazidi-majority villages in and around Sinjar Mountain," slaughtered "thousands of men" and took "thousands of girls and women...into sexual slavery." More than six years later, and "in spite of a U.S. formal designation of Yazidi genocide" no one in ISIS has been "prosecuted or tried for a crime." Anne Speckhard, director of the International Center for the Study of Violent Extremism (ICSVE), told Fox News, "The Iraqi justice system is overwhelmed with these cases and does not see a need to also prosecute for rape, which would require investigative work, calling witnesses and showing evidence when they have a good terrorism conviction easily obtained. The Yazidi have suffered unspeakable horrors at the hands of ISIS but there has been no specific justice meted out to them in response to the mass genocide and mass rapes."

Trump Says If Reports Of Bounties On US Troops Are Proved True, US Will Retaliate.

Reuters (8/20, Mason) reports that the President on Thursday "vowed to retaliate if other countries were found to have offered bounties for attacks on U.S. troops in Afghanistan, but he gave no indication whether his stance toward U.S. intelligence reports outlining the bounties had changed." Speaking at a White House event with the Iraqi Prime Minister, Trump "told reporters that if the reports were determined to be a fact," the US "would hit them so hard, your head would spin."

In Wake Of Israel Deal, UAE Expects US To Sell F-35s.

Reuters (8/20) reports that the United Arab Emirates' Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Anwar Gargash indicated that the UAE's "accord to normalise ties with Israel should remove 'any hurdle' for the United States to sell the F-35 stealth fighter jet to the Gulf Arab state." According to Reuters, "The United States has sold the F-35 to allies, including Turkey, South Korea, Japan and Israel, but sales to the Gulf require a deeper review due to U.S. policy for Israel to maintain a military advantage in the Middle East." Gargash is quoted as saying, "We have legitimate requests that are there. We ought to get them ... the whole idea of a state of belligerency or war with Israel no longer exists."

The Washington Examiner (8/20, Gehrke, 448K) reports, "Gargash advanced that argument in the wake of reports that last week's UAE-Israel deal included a secret agreement that Israel would acquiesce to such a sale." Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "reiterated his opposition to the UAE's purchase of the cutting-edge stealth fighter jet, but President Trump acknowledged this week that the arms deal is 'under review,' even as Gargash maintained that it was 'not connected' to their decision to establish ties with Israel."

Israel And Germany Hold First Joint Military Exercise On German Soil.

The Washington Post (8/20, Berger, 14.2M) reports, "Israeli and German fighter jets roared together over the site of the Dachau concentration camp this week as part of the first joint exercise the nations' militaries have held on German soil." The two-week training which kicked off Tuesday "come as Germany grapples with a resurgence of anti-Semitic crimes, along with cases of far-right extremism among members of its armed forces and police." Israel, for its part, "appears eager to tighten strategic ties with Berlin and other NATO members as it pursues an assertive foreign policy."

WPost Analysis: Trump Has Benefited Xi By Taking Focus Away From Domestic Concerns.

According to the Washington Post (8/20, Dou, Shih, 14.2M), "the Trump presidency, despite bringing economic turmoil and technological setbacks to China, has provided useful opportunities for China's top leader Xi Jinping and the country's security establishment." The Post continues, "Despite pressuring Beijing with a steady drumbeat of punishing policies that have not been seen in 40 years of formal relations under either Republican or Democratic administrations, Trump in some ways has offered Xi a window of opportunity on the world stage and in domestic politics. Previously under pressure at home from the slowing economy and popular disillusionment with the Chinese Communist Party, Xi has been able to blame Washington's 'suppression' for all of China's travails while casting himself as a defender against foreign bullying."

Xi Enlists Law Enforcement In Anti-Corruption Campaign. The New York Times (8/20, Buckley, 18.61M) reports that the Chinese Communist Party, "citing Mao...has started a campaign to ensure that police officers, judges and state security agents remain loyal and disciplined in challenging times." According to the Times, "Across China, police officers, judges, prosecutors and feared state security agents have been studying Mao's methods for political purges, absorbing them as guidance for a new Communist Party drive against graft, abuses and disloyalty in their ranks." The Times says "the campaign is shaping up as a sharp tool for the Communist Party leader, Xi Jinping, to bolster domestic discipline as he prepares for a leadership shake-up in two years."

Kim Admits North Korea's Economy Is Struggling.

The Washington Free Beacon (8/20, Beyrer, 78K) reports North Korean leader Kim Jong-un "told fellow Workers' Party members that his country's economy is experiencing 'shortcomings' due to the coronavirus pandemic and U.S. sanctions, the Associated Press reported Thursday." Kim said the economy has "not improved in the face of...severe internal and external situations." He added that development plans have "seriously delayed and the people's living standard [has] not been improved remarkably."

US Using Frozen Funds To Pay Venezuelan Health Workers.

The Washington Post (8/20, Deyoung, Faiola, 14.2M) reports that the Trump Administration is "tapping into more than $300 million in frozen Venezuelan government funds in an effort to give new momentum to its elusive goal of ousting President Nicolás Maduro." According to the Post, "About $20 million will be used to send pandemic relief supplies to Venezuela via international health organizations. ... Within the next several weeks, 65,000 front-line health workers will begin receiving electronic payments of $100 a month – a sum many times their average pay.” The Post says the Administration “has refused to freely open the coffers to opposition leader Juan Guaidó, whom it recognizes as Venezuela’s legitimate president. But it has set the wheels in motion to provide two years of back pay to federal lawmakers whose salaries Maduro suspended in 2016.”

US Ramps Up Push For Nuclear Arms Agreement With Russia.

Axios (8/20, Lawler, 521K) reports, “Negotiations resumed in Vienna this week on a top Trump priority and potential election year twist: a U.S.-Russia nuclear agreement.” US arms control envoy Marshall Billingslea “presented Russia with America’s conditions for a deal, based on a ‘clear mandate’ from Trump.” The Administration is ‘ambivalent’ the looming expiration of the 2011 New START treaty, “Billingslea says, but will agree to an extension if Russia signs onto its ambitious framework for a future nuclear treaty.”

France, Germany Offer Treatment For Russian Opposition Leader After Suspected Poisoning.

The AP (8/20, Litvinova) reports Russian “opposition leader” Alexei Navalny, “one of Vladimir Putin’s fiercest critics, lay in a coma at a Siberian hospital Thursday, the victim of what his allies said appeared to be a poisoning engineered by the Kremlin.” According to the AP, “The 44-year-old Navalny fell ill on a flight back to Moscow from the Siberian city of Tomsk and was taken to a hospital after the plane made an emergency landing in Omsk.” Navalny’s spokeswoman, Kira Yarmysh, “told the Echo Moskvy radio station that he must have consumed poison in tea he drank at an airport cafe before boarding the plane early Thursday.”

According to Reuters (8/20, Osborn, Zverev), “Doctors gave contradictory information about Navalny’s condition, saying it had stabilised and that he was in a coma, but also that there was still a threat to his life and they were working to save him.” The New York Times (8/20, Higgins, 18.61M) reports that “doctors at the No. 1 Clinical Hospital in Omsk...initially said that Mr. Navalny...was on a ventilator in ‘serious condition but later reported that his condition, though still grave, had stabilized.” According to the Times, Putin’s spokesman “told journalists that the Kremlin wished Mr. Navalny a swift recovery, ‘as we would for any citizen of Russia,’ and would, if asked, provide help to get the opposition leader transferred to a hospital abroad.” Yaroslav Ashikhmin, “a cardiologist who has served as Mr. Navalny’s personal doctor, told Meduza, a Russian news outlet, that he was trying to get the opposition leader flown from Omsk to a hospital in either Hanover, Germany, or Strasbourg, France, with more experienced toxicology specialists.”

The Washington Post (8/20, Khurshudyan, 14.2M) reports that Germany and France “offered medical treatment for Navalny, whose apparent poisoning brought parallels with other such incidents suspected of having links to the Russian state.” On ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 7, 1:30, Muir, 6.79M), Ian Pannell reported, “Navalny’s people desperately want to get him to Europe for medical treatment, and a German nonprofit is even offering to fly him out tonight, but so far, Russian hospital authorities are refusing to let him go.”

On the CBS Evening News (8/20, story 8, 1:20, O’Donnell, 4.17M), Chris Livesay reported, “Navalny has gained widespread support as an anti-corruption activist with powerful enemies, none more so than Vladimir Putin, notorious for allegedly using radioactive nerve agents to target double agents, defectors, and others who fall afoul of the Kremlin.” Livesay added, “But the plot thickens. Here in neighboring Belarus, where President Alexander Lukashenko recently accused Navalny of stirring up these protests against him.” On NBC Nightly News (8/20, story 7, 1:55, Holt, 5.6M), Richard Engel reported Navalny has “expressed support” for protesters in Belarus, “who say their Russian-backed President stole the election.”

National Security Advisor O’Brien was asked about the Administration’s response to Navalny’s poisoning on Fox News’ The Story (8/20). O’Brien said, “It’s very concerning. I want to first of all wish Navalny a very speedy recovery,” adding “he’s a very courageous man, politician, to have stood up to Putin inside Russia.” O’Brien said, “We’ll have to wait and see how this develops and we’ll have to get evidence as to what happened, but it’s extraordinarily concerning, and if the Russians were behind this as they were with Skripal or other incidence of the like, and there have been more than that in continental Europe, it’s something that we’re going to factor into how we deal with the Russians going forward.”

McFaul: Trump Enabling “Evil” Around The World. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (8/20, 14.2M), former US Ambassador to Russia Michael McFaul calls Vladimir Putin “evil” and asserts that “in an earlier period in American history, our government and people would have stood united on the side of good in this fight against evil.” But McFaul says President Trump has “enthusiastically embraced Putin and excused his villainous ways.” In his view, it is clear that “Trump is on the wrong side,” and he concludes that “in a world divided by good and evil, it’s time for America to get back on the right side.”

WSJournal, WPost: Putin Has Cultivated System Of Repression. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says Navalny fits the pattern of Russian opposition leaders being poisoned. The Journal urges the US and Europe to demand an independent investigation into the suspected poisoning and that Navalny be allowed to be seek treatment abroad.

Likewise, an editorial by the Washington Post (8/20, 14.2M) says that news of Navalny’s hospitalization was “shocking – but not a surprise.” It observes that “poisoning has become a common fate of Putin enemies,” and “despite the brazenness of these attacks, Mr. Putin has suffered little blowback, other than the expulsion of a few diplomats from Western capitals.” The Post argues that “one reason for the impunity is the indifference of President Trump.” The editorial urges European governments to “offer assistance – and they should let the Kremlin know that if Mr. Putin’s leading opponent was indeed poisoned, there will be, for once, consequences.”

GSE CEOs: Industry Criticism Of Refi Fee Is Overwrought.

HousingWire (8/20, 23K) reports Freddie Mac CEO David Brickman and Fannie Mae CEO Hugh Frater "addressed industry criticisms" regarding the new fee on refis in a joint letter, writing, "Contrary to much of the criticism we have received since making this announcement, this will generally not cause mortgage payments to 'go up.' The fee applies only to refinancing borrowers, who almost always use a refinancing to lower their monthly rate." HousingWire reports that "Brickman and Frater made references to the policies and programs they have put in place to provide critical support to homeowners and renters during the COVID-19 period, including forbearance programs, loan modification options, moratoriums and single-family foreclosure and eviction prevention actions," explaining, "This is just a fraction of the actions we have taken in coordination with FHFA to support homeowners and renters. ... This modest fee will help us continue helping those who are really hurting during the pandemic."

Adverse Market Conditions Fee Reportedly Set To Cost Lenders Millions In Profits. American Banker (8/20, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the new 0.5% fee on GSE refis will "wipe out millions in mortgage profits," as "the fee will be collected on loans in which interest rates already have been locked in and cannot be adjusted." The fee, "approved without prior notice by the Federal Housing Finance Agency that oversees Fannie and Freddie, is set to be collected starting Sept. 1," costing originators "an additional $1,400 or so for a $280,000 loan. The fee is likely to reduce profits for mortgage lenders given that the net profit per loan in the first quarter was $1,600, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association." According to a Forbes (8/20, Conerly, 9.71M) piece, the recent "decline in rates" has been slowed by the new fee.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (8/20, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports that seven US senators, including six from the Senate Banking Committee, "shot off a letter to Federal Housing Finance Agency Director Mark Calabria Wednesday night asking the regulator to immediately halt a 50 basis point adverse market fee the GSEs are imposing on their seller-servicers." The industry "has been in an uproar since the LLPA was introduced" a week and a half ago, "saying it's ill-timed given the pandemic and will hurt both consumers and lenders."

Freddie Mac: 30-Year FRM Average Rises From 2.96% To 2.99%.

The Washington Post (8/20, Orton, 14.2M) reports mortgage rates moved higher this week, according to "the latest data released Thursday by Freddie Mac." The 30-year FRM average rose from 2.96% to 2.99%. The 15-year FRM average rose from 2.46% to 2.54%. The 5/1 ARM average rose from 2.90% to 2.91%. Bankrate.com "found the experts it surveyed nearly evenly divided on where rates are headed in the coming week. Forty percent expect rates to go up, 40 percent expect them to remain about the same and the other 20 percent expect them to go down."

The AP (8/20) reports that even with the increase, rates "remain at historically low levels." HousingWire (8/20, 23K), National Mortgage News (8/20), and M Report (8/20, Babb) say Freddie Mac Chief Economist Sam Khater explained, "Purchase housing demand continues to accelerate, ultimately providing support to an economy that otherwise has stagnated. The surge in sales led to a rapid increase in the demand for remodeling and home furnishings as consumers look to renovate while adjusting to home life during COVID."

The Washington Post and MarketWatch (8/20, Passy, 1.67M) report one factor contributing to the uptick in rates was last week's announcement that the GSEs would charge an "adverse market" fee of 50 basis points on refinances. MarketWatch says according to Zillow economist Matthew Speakman, "The announcement by the [Federal Housing Finance Agency] to apply a 0.5% fee to all mortgage refinance loans was one that caught lenders off guard, placing many in a difficult financial spot and forcing them to raise rates across the board – even for purchase loans, which aren't directly affected by the new policy – in order to cover their losses."

Also covering Freddie's rates are Bankrate (8/20, Wichter, 311K), Fox Business (8/9, Bieber, 1.73M), Mortgage Orb (8/20, Bates), National Mortgage Professional (8/20), and Seeking Alpha (8/20, Kiesche, 512K).

Freddie Mac Multifamily Closes $2.6B MCIP Deal.

Seeking Alpha (8/20, Agarwal, 512K) reports Freddie Mac has closed a "$2.6B MCIP reinsurance transaction for a reference pool of 136 multifamily conventional and affordable loans." Through the transaction, Freddie Mac "transfers credit risk for the 5.5% of losses beyond the first 1%, which it continues to retain."

FHFA: Forbearance Plans Made Up Overwhelming Majority Of GSEs' May Foreclosure-Prevention Actions.

DS News (8/20, Babb) reports the GSEs "completed 83,756 foreclosure prevention actions during May, according to new data released by the Federal Housing Finance Agency." 77,218 of the GSEs' actions in May were forbearance plans, up from just 9,749 in April. Another 4,577 "were loan modifications, 1,598 were repayment plans and 77 were charge-offs-in-lieu." The GSEs "also completed 286 home forfeiture actions in May, which consisted of 218 short sales and 68 deeds-in-lieu." According to the FHFA's data, initiated forbearance plans fell from 989,594 in April to 392,338 in May. The "total number of loans in forbearance plans at the end of May was 1,450,557, which represented slightly more than 5% of the total loans serviced by the GSEs." The GSEs' 30-59 days delinquency rate "fell to 2.53% in May," and the GSEs' total refi volume "rose to their highest levels in seven years."

HUD Holds Roundtable Discussion On Preserving Community And Neighborhood Choice Rule.

M Report (8/20, Babb) reports that HUD this week “held a roundtable with local and federal officials in Pennsylvania to discuss the importance of local zoning decisions being made by local communities as opposed to ‘unelected bureaucrats in Washington.’” Secretary Carson said, “We have already seen jurisdictions make strong progress promoting fair housing at the local level, and they will continue to do so without complicated certification processes from Washington that would inevitably lead to blanket national policies on intimate local issues.”

Banks Could See A Windfall From Buying Ginnie Mae Securities At Below-Par Prices.

According to a potentially paywalled Bloomberg (8/20, Light, 4.73M) piece carried by American Banker (8/20, Subscription Publication, 31K), Ginnie Mae rules “allow banks and other lenders to buy loans out of mortgage securities at their par value when a borrower hasn’t made payments for 90 days.” As a result, given the government’s forbearance programs, banks and lenders could “potentially make billions of dollars.” Two banks, Wells Fargo and U.S. Bancorp, are “already buying, frustrating bond holders who say the purchases are leading to losses.” Meanwhile, “there are signs that nonbanks are at least exploring buying loans.” PennyMac “said on its earnings call earlier this month the firm might tap some of its liquidity sources to buy more Ginnie loans out of pools, describing the purchases as an ‘opportunity.’”

Attom: Refi Volume Hit 17-Year High In Q2.

National Mortgage Professional (8/20) reports that in Q2, refinancing volume “hit a 17-year high, according to the ATTOM Data Solutions 2020 U.S. Residential Property Mortgage Origination Report.” Attom found “1.69 million refinance mortgages secured by residential properties (1 to 4 units) were originated” in Q2, up “almost 50% from the prior quarter and over 100% from the same period in 2019.” Attom Chief Product Officer Todd Teta said Q2 “really was a tale of two markets for lenders. One saw a continued flood of homeowners refinancing their loans at lower interest rates while the other saw a drop in home-purchase and home-equity borrowing as the economy sagged under virus-related lockdowns.” NMP also reports that the FHA share and HECM volume both declined in Q2.

National Mortgage News (8/20, Centopani) reports, “About 1.69 million residential refinances originated in the second quarter compared to about 1.15 million refis in the first and 745,264 in the second quarter of 2019.” Meanwhile, “Purchases accounted for 782,829 loans – a 28.8% share – its lowest share since the second quarter of 2013. The total rose quarter-over-quarter from 684,493 but edged down from 800,415 the year prior.”

WalletHub Research Shows How Americans Are Using Home Equity And Loans To Weather Pandemic.

M Report (8/20, Babb) says “due to the inability of Congress to greenlight an additional stimulus package prior to the lapse in benefits stemming from the initial one, the economy is expected to be mired in the damage done by COVID-19 for some time.” Many Americans “have had no recourse other than to borrow money. Meantime, they’re seeking salvation through means such as home equity and payday loans. But those options aren’t for everyone, with interest in them varying from state to state.” WalletHub “compared the 50 states and District of Columbia across four key metrics combining internal credit report data with data on Google search increases for three loan-related terms,” finding that “people required loans, such as mortgage/home loans, the most in New York, followed by Oklahoma, Tennessee, Missouri and Maryland.”

“Suburban Land Rush” Emerges As Americans Flock Out Of Cities.

Potentially behind a paywall, Bloomberg (8/20, Gopal, Gittelsohn, 4.73M) reports that a “suburban land rush” is unfolding as Americans pour out of cities and head for the suburbs. According to Bloomberg, “The exodus to sparser landscapes is happening across the U.S., but it’s most dramatic outside pricey, crowded New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.” In Manhattan, for example, “signed sales contracts for condos and co-ops fell 60% in July, from a year earlier.” Meanwhile, in Westchester County and Fairfield County, CT, “deals for single-family homes doubled, according to appraiser Miller Samuel Inc. and brokerage Douglas Elliman Real Estate.” While price growth has slowed in urban areas of Boston, Detroit, and Washington, DC, price growth has accelerated in their suburbs.

ICBA SVP: GSE Refi Fee Will “Hurt Borrowers Most.”

In an opinion piece for American Banker (8/20, Subscription Publication, 31K), Independent Community Bankers of America (ICBA) SVP Ron Haynie argues that the fee will “hurt borrowers most,” coming at “precisely the wrong time.” According to Haynie, “Because Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac buy most conventional U.S. mortgage loans – and because 2020 will likely be a $3 trillion mortgage-origination year – the new fee will affect many homeowners now and for years to come.” Haynie adds, “Further, housing is one of the U.S. economy’s few bright spots, raising questions over whether it is an ‘adverse market.’ The number of loans in forbearance is declining. And unlike with the housing crisis of 2008, these loans were properly underwritten and should perform better through the current recession.”

Mortgage broker Jeff Lazerson makes a similar case in a piece for the Orange County (CA) Register (8/20, 546K), stating, “The fee is aimed at lenders but will be passed down to borrowers. For example, on a $500,000 loan, the fee adds $2,500. Or, converting this fee into the mortgage rate instead of the one-half point cost would raise your rate by roughly 0.125%."

The Wisconsin Bankers Association (8/17) also said the new fee "passes losses from GSEs to lenders [and] consumers."

Analysis: "Green Lending Is Back," With GSEs Keeping Multifamily Market Hot.

In a GlobeSt (8/20) piece that is accessible to subscribers, Engineering & Science, Inc. Renewable Energy Project Manager Michael Gross says green lending "is back." The "early response to COVID-19 interrupted the flow of commercial loans, leaving Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac behind on their respective $100 billion lending caps for 2020." Going forward, "The combination of ample funds available at low rates has created a hot multifamily market, particularly for affordable housing projects, which often have a green component. Together, these factors create the perfect environment for borrowers to take advantage of the benefits of green lending programs."

10-Year Yield Ticks Down.

MarketWatch (8/21, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.647 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (8/21, White) reports, "The dollar was on the defensive against most currencies on Friday after a rise in U.S. jobless claims and a dip in Treasury yields dampened the appeal of holding the greenback." The dollar "stood at $1.1867 per euro on Friday in Asia following a 0.2% decline in the previous session." The greenback "was quoted at 105.72 yen after a 0.3% decline on Thursday." Meanwhile, the dollar index against a basket of currencies "was on course for its ninth consecutive weekly decline."

Gold Rises.

Reuters (IND) (8/21, Patel) reports, "Gold prices rose on Friday after bleak U.S. jobless claims data reinforced fears of a slower recovery from the coronavirus-induced economic crisis, denting the dollar and U.S. Treasury yields." Spot gold "was up 0.2% at $1,947.04 per ounce by 0655 GMT," while US gold futures "rose 0.4% to $1,954.40."

Oil Holds Steady.

Reuters (8/21, Paul) reports, "Oil prices held steady on Friday and were on track for a third consecutive weekly gain, pulled higher by major oil producers' efforts to hold back output amid concerns about the pace of economic recovery from the coronavirus pandemic." Brent crude futures "were up 5 cents, or 0.1%, at $44.95 per barrel by 0633 GMT, heading for a 0.4% rise for the week." US West Texas Intermediate crude futures "were unchanged at $42.82 per barrel, but on track for about a 2% rise for the week."

Cybersecurity

CISA Infrastructure Head Announces Resignation.

Federal Computer Week (8/20, Johnson, 263K) reports Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency Assistant Director for Infrastructure Protection Brian Harrell "is resigning from his post, the agency confirmed to FCW." Harrell announced his departure "to agency employees today, saying he was returning to the private sector." Deputy Assistant Director Steve Harris will "replace Harrell on an acting basis, the agency said."

Biden Staffers "Quietly Draft" US Cyberdefense Policy.

Politico (8/20, Geller, 4.29M) reports Joe Biden's team is "quietly drafting plans to bolster U.S. defenses against the hacker armies of Russia, China and other adversaries – and drawing support from former cyber officials of both parties." Some "veteran policy hands" who have spoken with Biden's "dozens of cybersecurity advisers say their big hope for a Biden administration is a better organized, more sustained focus on threats like election interference and cybercrime." However, they don't expect a "total uprooting of President Donald Trump's policies, which in the cyber arena have been mostly nonpartisan." Dozens of corporate cyber executives "also took part in a previously unreported Biden campaign fundraiser last month. That's a sign, cybersecurity veterans said, that leading industry figures see Biden as the best choice to confront Russia's election interference, China's 5G ambitions and the inevitable next global malware outbreak."

China Calls Taiwanese Hacking Allegations "Malicious Slander."

Reuters (8/20, Crossley) reports China on Thursday called Taipei's accusations that it has hacked Taiwanese government systems "malicious slander," which Reuters says is "further adding to tensions between Beijing and Taipei." Taiwan has been "urging its people to be alert for what officials call 'omnipresent infiltration' from China, ranging from Beijing-backed media campaigns to cyberattacks, against the island that China considers its territory." Speaking in Beijing, "Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Zhao Lijian poured scorn on the allegation." Zhao told reporters, "The criticisms from the Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) authorities are malicious slander, pure and simple," adding, "China is a staunch defender of cybersecurity, and is one of the victims of hacking attacks."

US Industry Survey Finds Cybersecurity Programs Maturing.

Reuters (8/20, Wallace) reports investment advisers are enhancing “their cybersecurity programs by implementing formal protection plans, taking out insurance and stepping up security assessments, an influential industry survey has found.” The results show that a “multi-year trend toward more broadly implemented and robust cybersecurity programs is continuing, the sponsors said.” For the first time “in six years, business continuity planning related to COVID-19 surpassed cybersecurity as the hottest compliance topic for 2020, as the pandemic forced investment advisers to follow stay-at-home mandates, which have also created cybersecurity challenges.” The 2020 survey was “cosponsored by the trade group Investment Adviser Association, ACA Compliance Group and Brightsphere Investment Group.”

TFI/Sanctions

US Demands Reimposition Of Iran Sanctions.

The AP (8/20, Lee, Riechmann, Lederer) reports, “The Trump administration on Thursday formally notified the United Nations of its demand for all U.N. sanctions on Iran to be restored, setting off an immediate confrontation with Russia and other Security Council members, including America’s European allies, who called the U.S. move illegal.” Secretary of State Pompeo “delivered the notification to the president of the U.N. Security Council, citing significant Iranian violations of the 2015 nuclear deal, a requirement to ‘snap back’ U.N. sanctions.” The Hill (8/20, Kelly, 2.98M) reports Pompeo said, “The United States will never allow the world’s largest state sponsor of terrorism to freely buy and sell planes, tanks, missiles and other kinds of conventional weapons.”

National Security Advisor O’Brien was asked on Fox News’ The Story (8/20) about next steps in the Administration’s request for snapback sanctions on Iran after comments from China calling it “a political show” with “no legal ground.” O’Brien said, “What’s going to happen is the UN sanctions will go back in place. ... There may be party UN member states that don’t like what the resolution says, but the resolution gives the US the right to snapback the sanctions and the countries that violate those sanctions will have a price to pay.” O’Brien added, “We’re taking this very seriously. No one wants to see Iran with advanced fighter jets, with main battle tanks, or with more missiles, that would be a disaster for the region.”

Politico (8/20, Karnitschnig, 4.29M) reports, “The American push for sanctions has left Europe, which is intent on keeping the Iran nuclear deal alive and opposes the U.S. move, in an awkward position.” According to Politico, “not only does it put the European powers on the Security Council (France, the U.K. and Germany, which currently holds a non-permanent seat) in the same camp as Russia and China, both of which oppose the U.S. position, it also creates the appearance the trio is backing Iran over Washington, Europe’s most important ally.”

Axios (8/20, Ravid, Lawler, 521K) reports, “France, Germany and the U.K., swiftly issued a statement opposing the U.S. move and questioning its legitimacy. They also restated their commitment to preserving the deal.” Pompeo “claimed the Europeans ‘sided with the Ayatollahs even though they told the U.S. privately they want to see the arms embargo extended.” The Wall Street Journal (8/20, McBride, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Pompeo said, “No country but the United States has had the courage and conviction to put forward a resolution.”

Reuters (8/20) reports that Russia has “rejected U.S. plans to restore U.N. sanctions on Iran as ‘nonexistent,’ saying only a country that remains in the 2015 Iran nuclear deal can trigger the return of the sanctions in a process known informally as ‘snapback.’” The Washington Times (8/20, Meier, 492K) reports Russian UN Ambassador Vassily Nebenzia, referring to Pompeo, said, “He’s not triggering a snapback. Snapback can be triggered by a country that is a participant of the JCPOA, which the US is not.”

Reuters (8/20, Nichols, Hafezi) reports, “Iran itself rejected the U.S. move, taken in part because of the impending October expiration of a U.N. arms embargo on Tehran, arguing Washington had no right trigger the re-imposition and asking Security Council members to reject the U.S. action.” In a letter to the Security Council, Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif said, “The US push to reimpose U.N. sanctions on Iran will have dangerous consequences. Now it is the international community’s turn to counter the unlawful push by the United States.”

Politico (8/20, Choi, 4.29M) reports, “Israel, however, has been wholly supportive of Pompeo’s move.” Israeli Ambassador to the UN Gilad Erdan said in a video statement, “Not honoring the bidding snapback mechanism ... threatens to undermine the Security Council’s effectiveness and its ability to uphold international peace and security. Reimposing the U.N. sanctions on Iran is a critical step to curbing Iranian aggression, which threatens the entire world.”

NYTimes Analysis: US, Not Iran, Finding Itself Isolated. In an article titled “Instead Of Isolating Iran, U.S. Finds Itself On The Outside Over Nuclear Deal,” the New York Times (8/20, Jakes, Sanger, 18.61M) reports, “A diplomatic standoff over restoring international sanctions against Iran may be the most vivid example yet of how the United States has largely isolated itself from the world order – instead of isolating Tehran, as the Trump administration intended.” According to the Times, “the bigger issue is that even if Mr. Pompeo succeeds, he may be reimposing sanctions that no U.S. allies are willing to enforce. And that could not only weaken American authority worldwide, it may also show adversaries how to sidestep the United Nations in future global disputes.”

Administration Sanctions Six Syrian Military, Government, Financial Officials.

The AP (8/20) reports that the Administration has “announced new sanctions against six Syrian military, government and financial officials as part of ongoing efforts to prevent money from going to President Bashar Assad’s government.” The State Department “sanctioned Yasser Ibrahim, who is suspected of obstructing a political solution to the Syrian conflict and using his networks across the Middle East and beyond to cut deals to enrich Assad. The Treasury Department took action against the Syrian presidential office and Syrian Ba'ath Party by targeting Luna al-Shibl, Assad's presidential media adviser, and Mohamad Amar Saati, a senior Ba'ath party official." Military officials Fadi Saqr, Ghaith Dalah and Samer Ismail were also sanctioned. Secretary of State Pompeo said, "We will continue pressure against the Assad regime to compel it to end its attacks against the Syrian people."

Former Fed Staffers Push Senators To Reject Shelton Nomination.

Reuters (8/20, Marte) reports a group of former Fed staffers, "including economists, lawyers and bank presidents, sent a letter to U.S. senators Thursday asking them to reject the nomination of Judy Shelton, one of President Donald Trump's picks for the Federal Reserve Board." The group "said Shelton, who has advocated for a return to the gold standard and questioned the need for the central bank, has 'a decades-long record of writings and statements that call into question her fitness for a spot on the Fed's Board of Governors.'" The letter "was signed by 38 former Fed staffers, including two former Fed bank presidents."

The Hill (8/20, Lane, 2.98M) and Bloomberg (8/20, Condon, 4.73M) also report.

Bullard: Lockdowns No Longer Necessary As Economy Is Bouncing Back.

Newsweek (8/20, Fung, 1.53M) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard "said there's no need for lockdowns because the U.S. economy is bouncing back." Bullard "said while lockdowns were 'appropriate at the initial phase' of the coronavirus pandemic, governments now know more, 'about which situations are dangerous and which are not so dangerous, so you can have more granular policy that mitigates risk.'" Bullard said in an interview Thursday, "You don't need to shut down businesses that you don't need to shut down."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

States Sue FDIC Over "Madden" Fix.

American Banker (8/20, Pedersen, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that seven states and the District of Columbia filed suit against the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. for finalizing a rule in June that is "designed to address legal ambiguity in the secondary loan market, arguing the regulation would allow predatory lenders to skirt state interest rate caps." The FDIC is the "second federal bank regulator to be sued by states" over its response to the Madden v. Midland Funding decision. The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency "was sued over its own 'Madden' fix by a smaller group of states in July." Both the FDIC and OCC "have argued they are well within their statutory authority to issue a rule that affirms valid-when-made for nonbank partnerships."

Law360 (8/20, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports similarly behind a payroll.

Opinion: OCC Letter Moves Crypto Away From The "Wild West."

Writing for the ABA Banking Journal (8/20), Thomas Trepanier, Director of Business Development for Roxe at Apify, outlines a roadmap for banks to follow after the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency's decision on crypto. Trepanier says, "The OCC's clarification that U.S. banks can hold a cryptocurrency's unique cryptographic keys clears the way for them to custody their customers' digital assets. In fact, this may turn the tables in banks' favor, as they already have an established presence and loyal customer base, easing their onramp into cryptocurrency." He adds, "The OCC's opinion provides legitimacy and moves crypto further away from the 'Wild West.'"

Meanwhile, the Financial Brand (8/20, Streeter) reports that for most banks, "the world of blockchain and cryptocurrencies likely remains an abstraction." But "that may be changing." Eleven years after Bitcoin launched, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency "has confirmed that national banks can provide custodial services for crypto assets."

Banks Prevail In First Court Decision Over PPP Fees For Agents.

American Banker (8/20, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Four Southeast banks have prevailed in the first major court decision following a wave of lawsuits filed by accountants, lawyers and consultants who helped small-business owners apply for Paycheck Protection Program loans." The plaintiffs argued they were "entitled to fees from the banks that processed PPP loans. Banks argue that they are not obligated to make those payments unless they reached upfront agreements with people who were acting as the agents of small-business applicants." The article adds, "In an opinion issued Monday, U.S. District Judge T. Kent Wetherell II sided with the lenders. He wrote that banks were not required to make the payments under either the March 2020 law that established the Paycheck Protection Program or a subsequent regulation from the Small Business Administration. Instead, the regulation explains that if the borrower's agent is to be paid a fee, that money must come from the fee that the SBA pays to the bank, the judge found."

Law (8/20, 30K) also reports.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Steve Bannon’s Art Of The Grift.” The New York Times (8/20, 18.61M) finds “a measure of poetic justice in Thursday’s news” that former Trump Administration strategist Steve Bannon “was arrested on a yacht on Long Island Sound and charged with defrauding hundreds of thousands of Mr. Trump’s supporters.” To the Times, “the scheme” behind the charges against Bannon “is also quintessentially Trumpian – a faithful copy of the president’s knack for trading on the hopes of disaffected Americans. We Build the Wall, in other words, was basically a Trump tribute band,” and “the plan itself was cribbed directly from Mr. Trump.”

Washington Post.

“In Today’s America, Biden Is A Change Candidate – In The Best Possible Way.” The Washington Post (8/20, Board, 14.2M) says in an editorial that while the nomination of “longtime former senator from Delaware and two-term vice president” Joe Biden for president “may hardly seem like a radical choice...given the ethos of our times, his nomination is a bold one. Mr. Biden represents a cooperative, optimistic style of politics that the country has been losing, gradually over the past decades of accelerating polarization – and drastically during the past four years of insults, lies and conspiracy-mongering. ... Coalition-building wins few adherents on Twitter and rarely makes for exciting television. But it gets things done.”

“The Scheme Bannon Is Indicted For Boggles The Mind In Its Brazen Cynicism.” The Washington Post (8/20, 14.2M) writes that “the grift alleged” against former Trump Administration strategist Steve Bannon “is disgusting, if not surprising,” and Bannon’s “alleged masterminding of the plot, to the extent there was any mastery involved, is particularly repugnant.” The Post adds that “if the indictment is correct, this is a scam within a much, much bigger scam,” as “we already know that a candidate for president of the United States orchestrated the same fraud, and continues to orchestrate it, to elevate himself to a high office – from which he can engage in plenty of self-dealing of his own. The only folks who walk away empty-handed? Those donors, and voters, gullible enough to believe that a wall is the answer to anything at all.”

“Another Putin Foe Is Felled. The West Must Respond.” The Washington Post (8/20, 14.2M) says that news of Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny’s hospitalization was “shocking – but not a surprise.” It observes that “poisoning has become a common fate” of enemies of President Vladimir Putin, and “despite the brazenness of these attacks, Mr. Putin has suffered little blowback, other than the expulsion of a few diplomats from Western capitals.” The Post argues that “one reason for the impunity is the indifference of President Trump.” The editorial urges European governments to “offer assistance – and they should let the Kremlin know that if Mr. Putin’s leading opponent was indeed poisoned, there will be, for once, consequences.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Joe Biden We Know.” The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that it is unclear what kind of president Joe Biden would be, asserting that despite his long career, he has had no defining message. The Journal says Biden was the safest choice for a party eager to defeat President Trump, and is running more as a figurehead than a standardbearer.

“The Oracle Of Trump.” The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) calls President Trump’s apparent support on Tuesday of the possibility of Oracle purchasing TikTok impolitic, given that Oracle chairman Larry Ellison has hosted a fundraiser for Trump in the past. Politics should have no role in the sale of TikTok, the Journal asserts.

“Another Putin Critic Falls Ill.” The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says the fate of Alexei Navalny fits the pattern of Russian opposition leaders being poisoned. The Journal urges the US and Europe to demand an independent investigation into the suspected poisoning and that Navalny be allowed to seek treatment abroad.

“Iraq’s Kadhimi Opportunity.” The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) expresses optimism about the partnership between the US and Iraq. The Journal says US support can help Iraq subdue Sunni terrorism and militias supported by Iran, which will help maintain a regional balance of power that will prevent future American involvement.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Night three of the Democratic National Convention was focused on women. Women fighting for their rights, women pushing for change, and women who don't want to say they told you so, but they told you so."

Trevor Noah: [On Obama saying that Trump never grew into the job as President] "Wow, President Obama! I think you're being a little harsh here! The man's only been in office for three years and seven months; give the dude some time to warm up!"

Trevor Noah: "So from Obama to Trump's former cabinet members to Trump's own niece, everyone except Trump's tailor says this guy hasn't grown at all."

Trevor Noah: "There were moments of hopefulness, but the overall feeling was America was on the brink of death, and this was the last chance to save it. It didn't feel like the usual 'things will get better' speech; it felt more like a funeral for democracy. Basically, four years of Trump took Obama from 'yes, we can' to 'let us pray.'"

Trevor Noah: "The first black woman to be the vice-presidential nominee. I thought she gave a good speech. My favorite line was when she said, 'I know a predator when I see one.' ... What I love about that line is it shows you how bad Trump is. She didn't even need to say his name, and we were sitting at home going, 'Mmm-hmm, I know what predator she's talking about.'"

Stephen Colbert: "The Democrats gave it their all this week, and even though COVID forced the convention to be socially distant, I think I might have contracted a case of the hopes. No dry cough, but my face did leak several times."

Stephen Colbert: "We heard from one of the younger Democrats in the party, Andrew Yang. ... [Yang]'s right, America is in a deep dark hole, and Trump's message is 'it puts the lotion on its skin!'"

Stephen Colbert: "The great Julia Louis-Dreyfus officially made the Biden campaign the New Adventures of Old Joe."

Stephen Colbert: "Biden spoke for over ten minutes and addressed all the pain Trump has inflicted upon our country, all the possibilities for healing our nation, but most importantly, not once did he whine about shower pressure."

Stephen Colbert: "Donald Trump couldn't overcome any of the challenges of his presidency because he's never had to overcome anything at all. This is a grown-up version of the college essay that asks you to write about a challenge you faced, and instead of scrambling to put together a story about bouncing back from getting second chair in your high school's a capella group, Joe Biden has a real answer."

Stephen Colbert: "There was a reason the convention hammered this point home, to cast Joe Biden in stark contrast with Donald Trump. This evening, Joe Biden showed himself to be a man who is decent, compassionate, flawed but honest, and that is water in the desert. He cares, and he tries his hardest. He's like a lot of people I know and you do, too, which doesn't seem remarkable, but right now it is. And when Trump tweets his all-caps rebuke tomorrow morning, it's just going to show how our President is not presidential, but Joe Biden is."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, guys, the Democratic Convention is over. After four nights, a message finally popped up that said, 'Your Zoom session has expired.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "But everyone is still talking about President Obama's big speech. He did not hold back. ... Obama might have quit cigarettes, but he's still smoking."

Jimmy Fallon: "It's like Michelle hit Trump with the...clothesline, and then Barack finished him off with an elbow from the top rope."

Jimmy Fallon: "Obama broke an unwritten rule about former US presidents not attacking a current US President. Obama was like, 'Oh, come on, I didn't say anything about Vladimir Putin.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "That's right, Obama went all out and said, 'Trump hasn't grown because he can't.' Meanwhile, Trump heard that and was like, 'Wrong, I took a pill that makes me grow just fine.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Obama also accused Trump of not taking the job seriously. At that point, Trump was so mad, he could barely sink his putt into an empty Pringles can."

Jimmy Fallon: "Then Obama accused Trump of turning his presidency into a reality show. Trump was like, 'Wrong again. Now send five people into my office so I can decide who to fire.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, during Obama's speech, Trump started live tweeting in all caps. By the end of the night, the imprint of Trump's phone was burned into his hand like the bad guy from 'Raiders of the Lost Ark.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "After four days, the Democratic Convention wrapped up tonight. They knew it was time to end the convention when the calamari finally went bad."

Jimmy Fallon: "The theme of the night was 'America's promise,' which I'm pretty sure was taken from the supermarket brand of butter and cheese. ... Also, somehow 'America's promise' sounds like an adult diaper brand started by Mike Pence."

Jimmy Fallon: "Steve Bannon was arrested and placed in the Trump's well wishes section of the prison."

Jimmy Fallon: "That's right, another Trump associate is going to prison. At this point, the White House softball team and the prison softball team have the exact same line-up."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump's former adviser, Steve Bannon, was indicted by federal prosecutors today for allegedly defrauding donors to an online fundraising campaign called 'We Build The Wall.' ... Okay, so now that's Steve Bannon, Paul Manafort, Roger Stone, Rick Gates, George Papadopoulos, Lev Parnas, Igor Fruman. Am I forgetting anyone? It's like every Trump interview ends with, 'Where do I see myself in five years? I guess, you know, prison.'"

Seth Meyers: "White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany yesterday declined to say whether or not President Trump would accept the results of the November election and added, 'The President has always said he'll see what happens and make a determination in the aftermath.' And personally, I cannot wait to someday have a President whose every decision doesn't have an aftermath."

Seth Meyers: "During her speech at the Democratic National Convention yesterday, Senator Kamala Harris discussed her work as a lawyer and said, quote, 'I know a predator when I see one.' Said Trump, 'Oh, me, too! Cat! Africa, cat, lion! I get four more years!'"

James Corden: "Does everyone remember Steve Bannon? Do you remember him? He was early in the Trump campaign. He looked like the kind of guy who found a scab and would save it for later. Do you know what I mean?"

James Corden: "Steve Bannon is facing charges of defrauding donors in a fundraising scheme, and this morning he got arrested. ... Apparently what it was, he pocketed money from an organization that he started to privately fund the building of the border wall. And it was called 'We Build The Wall.' That was the short name; the full name was 'We Build The Wall, I Build A Swimming Pool In My Backyard.'"

James Corden: "He has tricked a load of people into thinking he was going to build a wall. There is only two ways that ends. You either go to prison, or you become the President of the United States."

James Corden: "I don't know where I stand on this story. I don't. On the one hand, I'm angry that he defrauded these people. On the other hand, he defrauded people who were donating to build Trump's border wall and therefore depriving immigrants of just seeking out a better life. I don't know what to think. It's a weird sensation; I'm happy about both."

James Corden: "President Barack Obama gave one of his trademark speeches at the convention last night. It felt so strange to listen to a President who doesn't mispronounce every other word. It was a new feeling."

James Corden: "Watching Obama speak in 2020 is like running into your ex and seeing that they are doing so much better without you. They're better-looking. They're more successful. You're like, 'Yep, it's over, I'm going to die alone.'"

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

- President Trump — Delivers remarks at the 2020 Council for National Policy Meeting
- Vice President Pence — Delivers remarks on 'the Trump Administration's rejection of the failed ideologies advanced by the dangerous dictatorships in Venezuela and Cuba', in Miami

US Senate:

- U.S. Postmaster General DeJoy testifies to Senate Governmental Affairs Committee – Hearing on 'Examining the Finances and Operations of the United States Postal Service During COVID-19 and Upcoming Elections', held via videoconference, with testimony from U.S. Postmaster General Louis DeJoy * DeJoy, who is known to have donated $360,000 to President Donald Trump's reelection campaign this year, has been accused of helping 'the president's campaign to sabotage the election by manipulating the USPS to disenfranchise voters', including by reducing overtime, restricting deliveries, and providing conflicting information on the timeline for mail-in ballots. Last week, he announced a suspension of 'longstanding operational initiatives' until after the election, 'to avoid even the appearance of any impact on election mail', although has still faced criticism for not reversing the actions he has already taken, with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi saying that DeJoy had 'frankly admitted' to her that he had 'no intention of replacing the ... key mail infrastructure that has been removed'; 9:00 AM
- Senate convenes for pro forma session – Senate convenes for pro forma session * Chamber on recess from 7 Aug – 8 Sep

Treasury in the News

Mnuchin Says "Little Bit Of Progress" Made On New COVID-19 Relief Bill.

The AP (8/3, Taylor) reports, "Negotiators on a huge coronavirus relief bill reported slight progress after talks resumed Monday afternoon in the Capitol, with issues like food for the poor and aid to schools struggling to reopen safely assuming a higher profile in the talks." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "a lead negotiator for President Donald Trump, said afterward that 'we continue to make a little bit of progress' and that the administration is not insistent on a small-bore approach centered on extending the supplemental unemployment benefit and leaving other items for later." Mnuchin said, "We're open to a bigger package if we can reach an agreement."

Reuters (8/3, Lawder) reports House Speaker Nancy Pelosi "will meet again with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows on Tuesday, she said after talks on Monday for another round of coronavirus economic aid concluded." Mnuchin "met with Democratic lawmakers, who hold the keys to passing any economic stimulus in the House of Representatives, for most of Monday."

CNBC (8/3, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports on its website that Mnuchin and Meadows met with Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer "for more than two hours at the Capitol," and "following the meeting, Pelosi told reporters the discussions were 'productive,'" although she added, "we...still have our differences." Mnuchin and Meadows "went to brief Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., about the talks after the meeting concluded." Mnuchin "told reporters that discussions with Democrats were done for the day."

The Hill (8/3, Bolton, 2.98M) reports that in addition to the expiring enhanced unemployment benefits, Congress "is also brushing up against a looming deadline for small businesses to apply for emergency help under the Paycheck Protection Program," a deadline coming Saturday that "some observers had hoped...would serve to expedite a deal ahead of the weekend." However, Mnuchin "said that deadline is not playing much of a factor in the timing of the talks." Mnuchin is quoted: "That money we want to repurpose for other issues. ... I think most people who have been able to get a loan have already done so. ... We're less focused on that at the moment."

The Washington Post (8/3, A1, Werner, Stein, 14.2M) reports Mnuchin "told reporters that the White House was open to a bigger package than recently envisioned," but Meadows "said both sides were very far apart." Mnuchin "said the administration was open to a comprehensive bill if a deal could be reached," saying President Trump "wants us to get a deal so we can resolve these issues that are very important to the American public."

The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Hughes, Restuccia, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), The New York Times (8/3, A1, Haberman, Cochrane, Tankersley, 18.61M), Politico (8/3, Bresnahan, Levine, 4.29M), USA Today (8/3, Hayes, 10.31M), and Bloomberg (8/3, Mohsin, Jacobs, Wasson, 4.73M), among other outlets, also report.

Over 100 CEOs Urge Mnuchin To Provide More Small Business Aid To Avoid "Catastrophic" Year-End.

The New York Times (8/3, Karaian, 18.61M) reports, "More than 100 current and former chief executives called for more aid to small businesses in the United States in a letter sent to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin on Monday." The letter "was organized by the former Starbucks chief Howard Schultz with the support of Senator Michael Bennet, Democrat of Colorado, and Senator Todd Young, Republican of Indiana. It is signed by the likes of Walmart's Doug McMillon, Alphabet's Sundar Pichai and Disney's Bob Chapek." The letter states, "We cannot stress enough the urgent need to act. Every day that passes without a comprehensive recovery program makes recovery more difficult. By Labor Day, we foresee a wave of permanent closures if the right steps are not taken soon. Tens of millions of Americans have already lost their jobs in this pandemic. Allowing small businesses to fail will turn temporary job losses into permanent ones. By year end, the domino effect of lost jobs – as well as the lost services and lost products that small businesses provide – could be catastrophic." The CEOs call for "federally guaranteed loans, at favorable terms, that will enable small businesses to transform and sustain themselves through 2020 and well into 2021."

The Washington Post (8/3, Shaban, 14.2M), Axios (8/3, Rabouin, 521K), and the Financial Times (8/3, Fedor, Sevastopulo, Edgecliffe-Johnson, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) also report.

Mnuchin Backs TikTok Sale To Microsoft.

Politico (8/3, Oprysko, Nylen, 4.29M) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "wants a TikTok sale to Microsoft. But on Monday, Trump's trade adviser Peter Navarro took to CNN to say the potential deal makes him uncomfortable, while President Donald Trump said a portion of any TikTok sale should go to the U.S. Treasury – a move critics likened to a 'public shakedown.'" Mnuchin "is in favor of the deal, according to a person familiar with the acquisition talks who spoke on condition of anonymity because negotiations are ongoing." Trump "said Monday he would force TikTok to close up shop in the United States if the Chinese-owned platform is not sold to U.S. buyers by the middle of next month."

Treasury Aided Kansas Trucking Firm After Senator's Request.

The New York Times (8/3, A1, Rappeport, 18.61M) looks at the federal "rescue" of Kansas trucking company YRC Worldwide after Sen. Jerry Moran (R-KS) asked Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin for assistance. YRC "received a bailout from the Treasury Department – a $700 million loan in exchange for a 30 percent stake in the business." The Times says the bailout "raised questions about whether YRC benefited from a web of connections between the company and the White House that allowed it to bypass the Trump administration's own rules for which companies should be eligible for federal help."

Pandemic Relief IG Calls On Treasury To Disclose Trucking Company Loan Documents. Bloomberg (8/4, Mohsin, 4.73M) reports, "The special inspector general for pandemic recovery urged the U.S. Treasury Department to provide more transparency and quick access to documents regarding a loan to a shipping company that has already drawn scrutiny from another watchdog group." IG Brian Miller, in his first report, "said his office had yet to receive documents related to the $700 million loan to YRC Worldwide Inc., the first business to receive funding from $17 billion in coronavirus relief set aside for national security companies." Miller's panel "called on Treasury to provide 'timely and unrestricted access' to the loan documents, calling it 'critical to effective oversight.'"

Rampell: Supplemental Unemployment Assistance Is Not Suppressing Job Growth.

In a column for The Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M), Catherine Rampell writes that Republican officials "have essentially accused...desperate families" suffering financially due to the pandemic "of being lazy welfare queens, choosing to remain on cushy government benefits rather than savor the dignity of work." However, Rampell says "five recent economic studies find no such thing is happening." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "in an interview Sunday, cited as evidence a study from University of Chicago researchers that, in Mnuchin's characterization, 'goes through all the people that are overpaid.'" However, Rampell says, "Almost immediately, one of the study's co-authors, Peter Ganong, said no, that is not in fact what their analysis found." Rampell concludes, "Yes, at some point, Mnuchin's fears about work disincentives may materialize, as the economy recovers and job opportunities become more plentiful. We're nowhere near that point now."

Commentary: Mnuchin Narrows Definition Of Public Good By Decrying Enhanced Unemployment Benefits. In an op-ed for The Washington Post (8/3, Glickman, 14.2M), Cornell University American Studies professor Lawrence B. Glickman says Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "doesn't want to extend the $600-a-week extra federal unemployment benefits that the government set up in response to the coronavirus pandemic. 'We are not going to use taxpayer money to pay people more to stay home,' he said earlier this week, as negotiations over the next wave of federal support for the economy continue." Glickman says Mnuchin "framed his position as respectful of taxpayers, critical of 'the idle poor,' and an embrace of frugality. In doing so, he was reverting to an old idea of the besieged taxpayer as funding extravagant and immoral people and projects – a notion that has, since the New Deal, justified redistributing wealth upward and against opposed expanding the American welfare state." Mnuchin's comment "provides evidence that Republicans, after agreeing to two major spending bills at the onset of the pandemic, are returning to their old script as our public health and economic woes are worsening."

Rubin: Media Still Can't Effectively Question Administration Officials.

In a column for The Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M), Jennifer Rubin writes, "As we draw to a close of President Trump's first (and last, we hope) term, the mainstream media's performance in TV interviews has been largely disappointing." Rubin says Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "insisted on Sunday that the $600 per week in supplemental unemployment insurance disincentivized people to look for work. ABC

News's Martha Raddatz came prepared, but ultimately Mnuchin skated by." Rubin argues Mnuchin's response to Raddatz's questions on the enhanced unemployment benefits "cried out for more pointed questions: Did the Chicago study show an actual disincentive to work? (Hint: No.) Here is a multimillionaire telling us that the head of a family scraping by on, say, $900 a week in state and federal benefits is overpaid. Is someone collecting that amount really making too much money?"

Waldman: Administration Having Trouble Maintaining Consistent Messaging.

In a column for The Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M), Paul Waldman writes that "watching the Trump spin machine whining, clunking and throwing off sparks isn't a bad way to ascertain just how deeply this president is failing, in both practical and political terms." Among his criticism of other Administration officials, Waldman says that in his interview on ABC's "This Week," Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "was more firmly planted in the president's fantasy world, repeating three times that we have to get kids back into school and proclaiming that everything is going to be fine." Mnuchin said, "We couldn't be more pleased with the scientific improvements that we're making on testing, that we're making on the vaccine. And I think when we have a vaccine and life gets back to normal, you're going to see a great economy again next year."

Treasury Expects To Borrow $947B In Q3.

The AP (8/3, Crutsinger) reports the Treasury Department "is projecting government borrowing of $947 billion in the current July-September period, which would be a record for the quarter but down from the all-time high of $2.75 trillion in this year's second quarter." Treasury officials "also announced Monday that the government plans to borrow $1.22 trillion in the October-December period." Those amounts "include $1 trillion in expected borrowing to finance another economic stimulus package, which is tied up in negotiations between Democrats and Republicans." Treasury officials "said the $1 trillion amount, spread over this quarter and the October-December period is essentially a place holder since both sides remain far apart on the issue of how much support is needed for the economy, on top of the more than $3 trillion Congress has already provided."

Bloomberg (8/3, Barrett, 4.73M), Reuters (4/30), and The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Davidson, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also report.

Leading National News

US Manufacturing Activity At 18-Month High.

Reuters (8/3, Mutikani) reports, "US manufacturing activity accelerated to its highest level in nearly 1-1/2 years in July as orders increased despite a resurgence in new COVID-19 infections, which is raising fears about the sustainability of a budding economic recovery." While "the road to recovery for manufacturing likely remains long and bumpy, with the survey from the Institute for Supply Management (ISM) on Monday also showing hiring at factories remaining subdued for a year now...about 72% of industries reported growth last month." The ISM also "said 'sentiment was generally optimistic' among manufacturers...despite skyrocketing coronavirus cases." The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Fairless, Jeong, Omeokwe, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in the increased manufacturing activity, but cautions that overseas demand remains weak.

Trump Says He Does Not Oppose Microsoft Buying TikTok.

The CBS Evening News (8/3, story 6, 0:20, O'Donnell, 4.37M) reported that on Monday, President Trump "appeared to back off his threat to ban the popular Chinese-owned video app TikTok, as long as an American company were to purchase it by the middle of next month." Trump: "So it will close down on September 15 unless Microsoft or somebody else is able to buy it and work out a deal." Reuters (8/3) reports that Trump "said...he does not mind if Microsoft Corp buys the Chinese-owned short-video app TikTok." But, the Washington Times (8/3, Boyer, 492K) reports that Trump said "he would shut down the popular Chinese-owned video app by Sept. 15 if a sale isn't completed by then."

Politico (8/3, Oprysko, Nylan, 4.29M) says Trump "noted that he believes Microsoft should try to purchase the entire app rather than just its U.S. operations." Trump said, "Who's going to get the name? ... The name is hot, the brand is hot. Who's going to get the name? How do you do that if it's owned by two different companies? My personal opinion was you're probably better off buying the whole thing rather than buying 30% of it."

In a separate story, Reuters (8/3, Shepardson, Mason) reports that Trump "said...the U.S. government should get a 'substantial portion' of the sales price of the U.S. operations of TikTok." Trump said, "I did say that if you buy it, whatever the price is that goes to whoever owns it, because I guess it's China essentially ... I said a very substantial portion of that price is going to have to come into the Treasury of the United States because we're making it possible for this deal to happen." The Washington Post (8/3, Stein, Lerman, 14.2M) says it is "unclear how the president would require TikTok to pay a portion of its sale into the U.S. Treasury, beyond the normal collection of tax revenue by the Internal Revenue Service." The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Leary, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) provides similar coverage of Trump's comments.

The New York Times (8/3, Swanson, Isaac, 18.61M) reports that "several China hawks in the Trump administration, including the White House trade adviser Peter Navarro, argued against the sale, seeing the moment as an opportunity to take more sweeping action to ban TikTok and other Chinese-run internet services like Tencent's WeChat." Navarro on Monday "doubled down on that approach, suggesting that Microsoft should be required to divest any business it had in China if it were to buy TikTok." Navarro said on CNN (8/3, 881K), "The issue with Microsoft is this. Microsoft is one of four or five American technology companies...who helped China originally build their great firewall of China which is used to surveil, track, monitor, sensor and imprison the Chinese people. One of the few surviving search engines in China is Bing, and Microsoft owns that. So you know there's some fishy stuff going on there. Plus, if you're in China doing a Skype call, which is another Microsoft product, the CCP is listening in. ... Maybe Microsoft could divest its Chinese holdings?" Navarro also appeared on Fox News (8/3, 27.59M) and the Axios (8/3, Axios, 521K) RE: CAP podcast Monday.

A Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M) editorial says that while "having an experienced U.S. firm control" TikTok "is preferable to shutting it down or accepting the current security risks," Trump "has in essence conducted a shakedown, threatening a shutdown and then providing his blessing to a private business deal once it pleased him." The Post calls this "an affront to free enterprise generally," and "an affront to the American enterprise of preserving an open outlook toward the world – and encouraging other nations to welcome U.S. investors."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Has Intervened In Companies' Affairs More Than His Predecessors. A New York Times (8/3, Swanson, Shear, 18.61M) analysis says Trump "had the right to sign off on a plan to mitigate any risks TikTok posed. But the events followed a pattern that Mr. Trump set early on in his presidency, in which some of the world's most powerful companies have found themselves at his whims." The Times adds, "Unlike his predecessors, Mr. Trump has frequently waded in to berate or praise executives and try to influence their operations." Previous GOP administrations "disapproved of government intervention in the market," but Trump "has had no qualms about taking a heavier hand, favoring industrial policy and a more managed approach to trade."

US Demand For Chinese Firm To Sell TikTok's US Operations Sparks Concern In China. The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Lin, Yang, Xiao, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports in a separate story that the US demand that Bytedance, the Chinese owner of TikTok, sell the app's US operations or be banned is crystallizing concerns in China that the US is seeking to disrupt its technology and raising concerns about what such a sale could mean for other Chinese companies looking to sell around the world amid souring US-China relations.

Federal Judge Blocks DOL Rule Restricting Paid Sick Leave.

Reuters (8/3, Stempel) reports that on Monday, US District Judge Paul Oetken in Manhattan "voided parts of a Trump administration rule that restricted paid sick leave and emergency family leave for potentially millions of workers affected by the coronavirus." Oetken, "ruling in a case brought by New York Attorney General Letitia James...said the Department of Labor overstepped its authority in denying eligibility for benefits to several groups of workers." Oetken "struck down a provision in the rule letting some employers deny paid sick leave if the economic downturn resulted in their having no work available for affected employees."

Kapadia Has Raised More Than $1B In Committed Capital For New Firm.

The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Chung, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that despite the coronavirus pandemic, fund managers are launching large startup funds. Fund manager Gaurav Kapadia has raised more than $1 billion in committed capital for his new firm, XN LP.

Trump Objects To Birx's "Pathetic" Comments After Pelosi Criticized Her.

President Trump took to Twitter on Monday to write, "So Crazy Nancy Pelosi said horrible things about Dr. Deborah Birx, going after her because she was too positive on the very good job we are doing on combatting the China Virus, including Vaccines & Therapeutics. In order to counter Nancy, Deborah took the bait & hit us. Pathetic!"

ABC World News Tonight (8/3, story 4, 2:10, Scott, 7.2M) reported on "Trump blasting Dr. Deborah Birx, calling her 'pathetic' after she warned the pandemic has entered a new phase and the virus is extraordinarily widespread." The CBS Evening News (8/3, story 5, 1:25, Reid, 4.37M) said the President "lashed out for the first time at his COVID task force coordinator...calling her dire warning about the spread of the virus 'pathetic.'"

NBC Nightly News (8/3, story 4, 1:30, Bennett, 6.23M), meanwhile, cast Trump as "taking a swipe at...Birx." The President, added NBC, was "apparently targeting Birx in a tweet for her response to criticism from [Pelosi], who questioned her credibility." Pelosi was shown saying, "I think the President is spreading disinformation about the virus, and she is his – she is his appointee, so I don't have confidence there, no." In response, Birx said, "I have never been called Pollyannish, or nonscientific, or nondata-driven, and I will stake my 40-year career on those fundamental principals of utilizing data to really implement better programs to save more lives." NBC added that "in that same interview, Birx warned the coronavirus pandemic is 'extraordinary widespread' in the US." CNBC (8/3, Breuninger, 3.62M) also reports on its website that Birx "warned...that the US had entered a 'new phase' in its battle against the virus." CNBC reports that Trump's tweet "marks a shift in tone toward Birx...who had reportedly stayed in good standing with the president throughout much of the pandemic."

The Washington Post (8/3, A1, Parker, Dawsey, Abutaleb, 14.2M) reports, "Trump's criticism of Birx was another reminder that, while he demands absolute loyalty, he rarely repays it in kind," as "Birx finds herself isolated with increasingly few allies even as she remains responsible for overseeing the nation's response to a cataclysmic crisis."

Politico (8/3, Cohen, 4.29M) reports that "Trump's public attack on Birx was at odds with recent messaging from his top spokespeople, who fiercely defended Birx days ago following Pelosi's criticism." On Sunday, White House Director of Strategic Communications Alyssa Farah tweeted, "It is deeply irresponsible of Speaker Pelosi to repeatedly try to undermine & create public distrust in Dr Birx, the top public health professional on the coronavirus task force." The Hill (8/3, Samuels, Chalfant, 2.98M) also reports Trump's "tweet was even more jarring given White House officials had just spent the weekend praising Birx and defending her in the wake of Pelosi's sniping." The Fox News (8/3, Blitzer, 27.59M) website and USA Today (8/3, King, Wu, 10.31M), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Trump: US Has Tested More People Than Any Other Country.

President Trump said in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3), "We have tested more people than any other country, than all of Europe put together times two. We have tested more people than anybody ever thought of. India has 1.4 billion people. They've done 11 million tests. We've done 55, it'll be close to 60 million tests. And, you know, there are those that say, you can test too much." Asked who says that, Trump said, "Just read the manuals. Read the books. ... What testing does it shows cases. It shows where there may be cases. Other countries test – you know when they test? They test when somebody's sick. I'm not saying they're right or wrong. Nobody's done it like we've done it. We've gotten absolutely no credit for it."

Trump, Pence Tout Administration's Coronavirus Response.

President Trump said in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3), "I think we've done an incredible job, between the ventilators and stopping very infected people from China coming in, meaning putting the ban on China, which frankly nobody wanted me to do, practically nobody, because it was very early in January. Then putting the ban on Europe, not an easy thing to do. When you put a ban on Europe, that's a big thing. We would've probably lost hundreds of thousands of lives more had I not done that. And all of the experts, every one of them, not one of them wanted to do it. They thought it was too severe. Three months later, they were all saying, 'I'm glad you did it.'"

The President took to Twitter Monday to write, "With the exception of New York & a few other locations, we've done MUCH better than most other Countries in dealing with the China Virus. Many of these countries are now having a major second wave. The Fake News is working overtime to make the USA (& me) look as bad as possible!"

Vice President Pence said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (8/3), "I think the American people have seen this President take decisive action from very early in the coronavirus pandemic. Before there was a single case of community transmission, before the end of January, President Trump suspended all travel from China, stood up the White House coronavirus task force and in the first few weeks of February, we actually began the process of developing a vaccine and you just heard a week ago that we are already at a historic pace in phase three clinical trials of the first coronavirus vaccine for this country, could well be available for this fall. In the midst of all of that, we've taken testing from a standing start to nearly 60 million coronavirus tests performed. PPE is in great abundance even across the areas of the country where we've seen rising cases."

Pence: Lives Were Lost In New York Due To "Poor Decisions" By Cuomo. Pence was asked on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (8/3) about criticism by New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) of the Administration's handling of the pandemic. Pence said, "Our hearts grieve for the fact that one in five of all the American lives that have been lost in the coronavirus pandemic were lost in the state of New York and some of that was because of poor decisions by the state and by Gov. Cuomo. But look, I liked it better when he said that President Trump's leadership in the pandemic was, in his words, 'phenomenal.' He said that repeatedly. ... I couldn't be more proud of the support that we rendered to the people of New York and I think the people of New York know that."

White House Implements Random Coronavirus Testing.

Chip Reid reported on the CBS Evening News (8/3, story 7, 0:15, O'Donnell, 4.37M), "Even though the President has downplayed the need for COVID testing nationwide, today the White House announced mandatory random COVID testing for all West Wing staffers. This comes after several White House aides and reporters here have tested positive." The AP (8/3) reports the White House "said the measure was 'part of our ongoing efforts to protect the health and safety' of the White House Complex."

Politico (8/3, Orr, 4.29M) says "it was not immediately clear whether there would be consequences for aides who decline to be tested for the virus or fail to show up when summoned to the White House Medical Unit." According to Politico, "inside the White House, testing has become increasingly widespread amid continued outbreaks in states that began reopening earlier this summer." Politico adds that the White House "currently relies on a portable coronavirus test made by Abbott Laboratories, which produces results in five minutes and can be conducted in-house by medical unit employees." The Hill (8/3, Chalfant, 2.98M) also reports.

WPost Report: State Officials Say Administration Unprepared To Distribute COVID Vaccine.

The Washington Post (8/3, Sun, 14.2M) reports that "with the Trump administration aiming to deliver 300 million doses of vaccine against the coronavirus as early as January, state officials and health experts say they remain in the dark about key details and, therefore, are inadequately prepared for what is expected to be the largest single vaccination campaign ever undertaken." The Post adds, "Getting shots into the arms of millions of Americans is a massive undertaking, they say, requiring extraordinary coordination, planning and communication. But with only six months to the government's target date for approving a vaccine, the administration has shared limited and often confusing information about its plans for distribution." Politico (8/3, Roubain, Owerhohle, 4.29M) says the Administration does not have "a plan on how to reach racial and ethnic groups that have not only been devastated by the virus but are often skeptical about government outreach in their communities."

Fauci Says "Rush" On Vaccine "Does Not Compromise Safety At All." NIAID Director Fauci said on KDFW-TV Dallas (8/3, 95K), "This is a rush that does not compromise safety at all, nor scientific integrity. This is a vaccine, and the reason we have done it so quickly is because of the technical and scientific advances that have allowed us to go from the point of identifying this new virus to being able to put it quickly into Phase 1 trials, which is this first thing that you do for safety. Then you go to the next phase, which is Phase 2, and what started last week on July 27 was what we call a Phase 3 trial, which will involve 30,000 individuals, to determine, in fact, if it works as well as to do additional observation of safety." Fauci was also interviewed on KABC-TV Los Angeles (8/3, 51K), KSNV-TV Las Vegas (8/3, 10K), KTLA-TV Los Angeles (8/3, 57K), and WGN-TV Chicago (8/3, 147K).

NIH's Collins Urges Adherence To Public-Health Recommendations During Vaccine Wait. NIH Director Collins said on KOCO-TV Oklahoma City (8/3, 36K), "The Phase 3 trials are geared to accept about 30,000 volunteers for each of the six or seven vaccines that are going to be tested, starting right now, and you want to have that number of people so that you will be able to say for sure whether it worked and whether it was safe. During this time though, and that is going to spread over the next five or six months, probably until the end of 2020, people should continue to practice all of those public-health measures that we have been hearing about but unfortunately are not all sticking to." Collins was also interviewed on KRIV-TV Houston (8/3, 829K), KSAZ-TV Phoenix (8/3, 50K), WFAA-TV Dallas (8/3, 46K), WKRN-TV Nashville, TN (8/3, 24K), and WXIA-TV Atlanta (8/3, 100K).

Monoclonal Antibodies Could Be "Next Big Advance" In Treatment. Reuters (8/3, Beasley) reports, "As the world awaits a COVID-19 vaccine, the next big advance in battling the pandemic could come from...antibodies designed specifically to attack this new virus." Development of monoclonal antibodies "has been endorsed by leading scientists," with Fauci having "called them 'almost a sure bet' against COVID-19."

Navarro Rejects Giroir And Others On Hydroxychloroquine.

USA Today (8/3, Cummings, 10.31M) reports that on Monday, Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro "brushed aside the opinion of the administration's top public health officials as he defended a drug touted as a potential coronavirus cure by President Donald Trump despite a lack of evidence that it is effective." On Sunday, Assistant HHS Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir "told NBC News that it was time to 'move on' from the debate over hydroxychloroquine because controlled studies had not shown it to be effective in treating or preventing COVID-19." Navarro said Monday, "I take exception with Giroir's analysis. He hasn't looked at the data." Navarro added, "My view of this now is that doctors' opinions are a dime a dozen."

Washington Examiner Sees "Disconnect" Between FDA And Some Doctors On Hydroxychloroquine. The Washington Examiner (8/3, Hogberg, 448K) reports that a "disconnect appears to have arisen" between the FDA and some physicians "when it comes to prescribing hydroxychloroquine for COVID-19 patients. The situation garnered extra attention last week when a group of physicians billing themselves as America's Frontline Doctors insisted that the drug could treat COVID-19 in a high-profile press conference in Washington."

In Campaign Email, Trump Urges Supporters To Wear Face Masks.

The Washington Times (8/3, Boyer, 492K) reports President Trump, "who has resisted wearing a face mask in almost all situations, asked supporters in a campaign email Monday to wear them, saying it might help the country 'get back to our American way of life.'" The President wrote, "We are all in this together. And while I know there has been some confusion surrounding the usage of face masks, I think it's something we should all try to do when we are not able to be socially distanced from others."

US COVID Case Count Nears 4.9M, Deaths Near 159K.

All three broadcast networks covered the continued rise in US coronavirus cases, as the case count neared 4.9 million and deaths neared 159,000. Norah O'Donnell said on the CBS Evening News (8/3, story 4, 2:50, 4.37M) that "cases or deaths are rising in at least 28 states," and NIAID Director Fauci "warned [Monday] that the virus may be starting to surge in Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Indiana." Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (8/3, story 3, 2:10, 5.97M), "There is growing concern this evening that the coronavirus will soon sweep across parts of the country not yet hit hard by the disease."

The Washington Post (8/3, Gearan, Wagner, Dupree, 14.2M) reports, "Missouri, Montana and Oklahoma are among those witnessing the largest percentage surge of infections over the past week, while, adjusted for population, the number of new cases in Florida, Mississippi and Alabama still outpaced all other states." The Washington Times (8/3, Howell, 492K) also covers the rise in cases under the headline "Sun Belt Gains Offset By Increase In Coronavirus Cases In Midwest."

The Los Angeles Times (8/3, Nelson, Miller, 4.64M) reports California "hit a grim milestone over the weekend: 500,000 confirmed cases of COVID-19, the most of any state." ABC World News Tonight (8/3, story 3, 3:15, Muir, 7.2M) looked at the situation in Georgia, where "in one school district alone, nearly 300 teachers and staff are out sick, either infected by the virus or exposed to it."

Some People Recovered From COVID Feel More Confident About Resuming Activities.

The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Dizik, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that some people who have recovered from being infected with COVID-19 may reenter the world with greater confidence to resume activities than those who have not had the illness. The Journal attributes this to the belief that they have some immunity, and may not be as likely to get the disease again, or spread it.

Thirteen St. Louis Cardinals Players And Staff Test Positive.

ABC World News Tonight (8/3, story 10, 0:15, Muir, 7.08M) briefly reported seven players on the St. Louis Cardinals and six team staff members have tested positive, leading to the postponement of a four-game series.

Trump: Protesters Would Have Burned Down Courthouse Without Federal Intervention.

Asked in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) about the federal response to protesters in Portland, President Trump said, "For 59 days, these people were anarchists and agitators and some protesters. But these were anarchists. These people were beating the hell out of the city. They were beating up our federal buildings and federal courthouse. We told the police to stop it. And the police wouldn't do it. ... If we didn't have people at our courthouse – and they're strong, tough people and they don't want – they try and be very good. believe me. But if we didn't have people there, you would have your federal courthouse, $600 million building, you would have that thing burned to the ground right now."

Portland Police Chief: Officers Committed To Protecting City. Portland Police Chief Chuck Lovell writes in the New York Times (8/3, 18.61M) that "Portland is a beautiful and vibrant city with smart, progressive people, and I am hopeful we can come together to move beyond the unrest and refocus on critical issues." The Portland Police, he adds, "remains committed to protecting life and responding to events as appropriate. I am proud of our efforts in extreme circumstances few in the country have faced." Lovell adds, "I have confidence in our community and the people who have dedicated their lives to building relationships with police. They have stood up and said no more violence. I stand with them with a servant's heart, committed to being leaders in police reform."

McGurn Credits Trump With Reduction In Violence. Wall Street Journal (8/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) columnist William McGurn writes in a piece titled "Trump Wins In Portland" that the reduction in violence in Portland over the weekend is not because – as some have claimed – federal agents left the city. McGurn argues the violence has reduced because state and local police have stepped up under a deal reached with federal officials last week.

House Panel Launches Investigation Into DHS Intel Office.

Reuters (8/3, Chiacu, Hosenball) reports the House Intelligence Committee launched an investigation on Monday into "the Department of Homeland Security's intelligence office, including its actions in Portland, Oregon, and its involvement in other anti-racism protests across the country." In a letter to top DHS officials, Chairman Adam Schiff wrote, "The reporting regarding the monitoring of peaceful protesters, creating and disseminating intelligence reports about journalists and protesters, and potential exploitation of electronic devices is deeply troubling." In his letter, Schiff "requested detailed intelligence reporting documents that informed a recommendation by the then-chief of the DHS intelligence operation on July 25 requesting that DHS reports on anarchist-related Portland protesters refer to them as 'Violent Antifa Anarchists Inspired.'"

Morgenstern: Democrats' Push To Defund Police Will Make Nation Less Safe.

Deputy White House Communications Director Brian Morgenstern said on the John Fredericks Show (8/3), "People want their communities to be peaceful and we're seeing around the country that is not the case and how does Joe Biden and his party respond? It is defund the police. It is take away the force that is going to help people to feel safe and be safe? ... This whole debate over whether redirecting money from the police is the same thing as defunding the police, it sort of makes your brain hurt doesn't it? If you are redirecting your salary out of your pocket, I think you would call that defunding wouldn't you?"

Conway: Cities Seeing Protests Have "Strictest Gun Control Laws In The Country."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway was asked on Fox News' Outnumbered Overtime (8/3) about the call by Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) for President Trump to push for gun control legislation. Conway said, "Some of these cities have the strictest gun control laws in the country, and this is what is happening. ... So, the President has said that he would be happy to send in the feds. The feds have been in some of these cities, and what has happened? Some of these mayors get in a petty, peevish Twitter spat with the President about it. Others just refuse to allow them. What do we have in Portland? We are in the third month of nightly violence. These are peaceful protesters. I think peaceful protesters have every right under the First Amendment. But we, long ago, left that pretense. You can't help but see what all these cities have in common, which is strict gun control laws and Democratic mayors."

NYTimes Analysis: Anti-Gun Youth Absent From Protests. The New York Times (8/3, Russonello, 18.61M) reports that after the mass shooting in 2018 at Marjorie Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, "the massacre's young survivors converted their outrage into political organizing." However, since then "Congress passed no gun legislation," and "now, with the country swept up in a reckoning over racial justice driven largely by young protesters, the youthful voices that propelled a movement just two years ago find themselves less squarely focused on issues around gun violence." Polls, the Times notes, show that racial justice, the coronavirus pandemic and the economic downturn "far outpace guns as top issues of concern for young people."

Gun Background Checks Rose 79% In July.

The Washington Times (8/3, Sherfinski, 492K) reports gun background checks "surged 79% in July compared to last year amid national unrest, protests and rioting, according to data released Monday by the FBI." The Bureau "ran more than 3.6 million checks through the National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS) last month – a 79% increase compared to July 2019." According to the Times, the 3.6 million figure is also "the third-highest monthly total ever recorded, behind the 3.9 million checks in June and the 3.7 million checks in March."

New York City Shootings Surpass 2019 Total.

The Washington Free Beacon (8/3, Nester, 78K) reports New York City "has already had more shootings this year than in all of 2019, with the city's 777th shooting this weekend." Last year's total of 776 shootings "was eclipsed Saturday night as a wave of gun violence continues to hit New York City. By Sunday night, the city's total shooting incidents for the year rose to 784."

NYPD Commissioner Blasts De Blasio's Law Enforcement Policies. The New York Times (8/3, A1, Fitzsimmons, 18.61M) reports the "criticism of Mayor Bill de Blasio's law enforcement policies was stinging. A law banning the use of chokeholds and similar types of restraints by police officers was 'insane.' Agreeing to cut the Police Department budget was a 'bow to mob rule.' Those who failed to 'stand up for what's right' were 'cowards.'" The "outspoken critic," however, was de Blasio's own police commissioner, Dermot F. Shea, "a trusted ally who went rogue in media interviews and in a private address to police brass." To the Times, "the commissioner's comments – and the fact that he still has his job – speak to the fraught relationship that Mr. de Blasio has maintained with the Police Department throughout his tenure."

Minneapolis Mayor: Governor Was Slow To Deploy National Guard During Riots.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/3, Bjorhus, Navratil, 1.04M) reports that "Jacob Frey has been cast as the mayor who lost control of his city, enduring criticism from the state's governor that the Minneapolis response to rioting in May over the police killing of George Floyd was an 'abject failure.' Now Frey is speaking out," saying Gov. Tim Walz (D) "failed to take his requests for help seriously until it was too late." In an interview Monday, Frey "said that Walz hesitated to send in the National Guard to quell the growing violence, and then blamed him for allowing the city to burn." Said Frey, "Through an extremely difficult situation, I told the truth. I relayed information as best I could to state partners. And we did what was demanded for the sake of our city."

Leaked Body Camera Video Shows Floyd Arrest.

NBC Nightly News (8/3, story 7, 2:05, Holt, 6.23M) reported, "More than two months after the death of George Floyd, tonight the clearest picture yet of what led up to the deadly confrontation from police body cam videos that have been leaked." NBC's Gabe Gutierrez added, "Seconds after rookie Minneapolis police officer Thomas Lane approaches George Floyd's vehicle, he's already drawn his gun. These body camera videos were viewed in person by NBC News last month, but had not been distributed publicly. DailyMail.com says it obtained a leaked copy, apparently recorded off of a computer screen." For the first time, the videos "show how a call about an alleged fake $20 bill on Memorial Day escalated into a deadly encounter that would ignite global outrage."

On the CBS Evening News (8/3, story 8, 2:05, O'Donnell, 4.37M), Jeff Pegues reported, "For the first time, two leaked body camera videos show the encounter with George Floyd from the officer's perspective. In one, officer Thomas Lane confronts Floyd, trying to get him out of an SUV, a gun aimed in his direction. Later in the footage, Floyd drops to the ground as officers lead him toward a squad car." George Floyd: "I'm claustrophobic, man. Please, man." Pegues: "The other video...appears to come from body cam worn by rookie officer Alexander Keung. It shows Floyd resisting officers trying to place him in the squad car. You hear him pleading." Floyd: "God, I'm claustrophobic, man. Can I get in the front?" Pegues: "There is now an investigation into the leak of that body camera video."

Armed Secret Service Confronts Two Black Mothers, Children On National Mall.

The Washington Post (8/3, Mettler, 14.2M) reports that during a visit to the National Mall with "their babies," India Johnson, 26, and Yasmeen Winston, 25, parked on Constitution Avenue near the White House. After returning to their car, a "Secret Service cruiser had driven into their front left bumper, Winston told The Washington Post. Within seconds, Winston recalled, a uniformed Secret Service officer was pointing a rifle at them, yelling 'Get out!' and 'Put your hands in the air!' More officers surrounded them with guns pulled, the women said." Over the next hour, "Winston and Johnson said, they were handcuffed without reason, separated from their crying babies, and handled by police who, at first, did not wear masks to protect against" the coronavirus. In a statement to The Post, the Secret Service said it is "looking into the matter" and "has no further comment at this time."

Police Officers In Colorado Mistakenly Detain Black Family.

ABC World News Tonight (8/3, story 8, 1:30, Muir, 7.08M) reported on "new allegations against the Aurora, Colorado Police Department. Officers now accused of confronting a Black family, mistakenly believing they were in a stolen vehicle. Children forced to the ground." ABC's Clayton Sandell added, "Tonight, confusion and questions about why police in Aurora, Colorado, responding to reports of a stolen vehicle, approached a Black family in their car, handcuffing several children on the pavement. Police say a license plate scanner alerted them that Brittany Gilliam's car was stolen. ... But the department now says Gilliam's license plate had the same number as the real stolen vehicle, but that was a motorcycle from another state." The department is "already under fire for several high profile cases."

“Back The Blue” Mural Painted Outside Tampa Police Headquarters.

WTVT-TV Tampa, FL (8/3, Holton, 51K) reports that a “Back the Blue” street mural painted over the weekend outside the Tampa Police Department’s headquarters “is drawing praise and criticism.” Organizers say they “want to show their support for law enforcement,” but “critics say the mural flies in the face of the Black Lives Matter movement.”

WPost Calls For Congress To Mandate US Park Police Wear Body Cameras.

The Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M) editorializes that “given its execrable recent record, you’d think the Park Police would be doing everything in its power to regain the public’s trust and confidence.” The Post argues that “body-worn cameras, standard equipment at many major police departments across the country, would be a useful first step to signal that the Park Police is determined to make itself accountable for its actions. A bill to mandate their use for all federal police officers is included in a legislative police package introduced in the House of Representatives. Its passage would be a tonic – whether or not the Park Police thinks it is ‘in a position’ to comply.”

Manhattan DA May Be Probing Trump Actions Apart From Alleged “Hush Money” Payments.

The AP (8/3, Neumeister) reports that Manhattan District Attorney District Attorney Cyrus Vance, who is “trying to get President Donald Trump’s tax returns, told a judge Monday that he was justified in demanding them, citing public reports of ‘extensive and protracted criminal conduct at the Trump Organization.’” Trump’s lawyers have “said the grand jury subpoena for the tax returns was issued in bad faith and amounted to harassment of the president.” Vance “has disclosed little about what prompted him to request the records, other than part of the investigation relates to payoffs to women to keep them quiet about alleged affairs with Trump.”

CNBC (8/3, Mangan, 3.62M) reports on its website that Monday’s arguments suggest that Vance “could be investigating” the President and the Trump Organization “for possible insurance and bank fraud.” However, CNBC adds, “the filing Monday by Vance’s office in U.S. District Court in Manhattan did not explicitly say what it is probing beyond the hush money payment.” CNBC reports that the President’s former attorney, Michael Cohen, “testified to Congress last year that Trump had both inflated and deflated the value of real estate assets for tax and insurance purposes.”

The Washington Post (8/3, Jacobs, 14.2M) says, “Monday’s filing suggests the district attorney...may be looking at ‘alleged insurance and bank fraud,’ as cited in past reports by The Washington Post and other news organizations. Such ‘publicly available information itself establishes a satisfactory predicate for the subpoena,’ it says.” Carey Dunne, general counsel in Vance’s office, is quoted as arguing, “Every day that goes by is another day [Trump] effectively achieves the ‘temporary absolute immunity’ that was rejected by this Court, the Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court.”

The New York Times (8/3, Rashbaum, Weiser, 18.61M) says, “The suggestion that the investigation, which has gone on for nearly two years, was broader than Mr. Vance’s office had previously acknowledged could raise the stakes for Mr. Trump, his company and its executives, if the inquiry were ever to lead to charges of bank or insurance fraud, which are felonies.” The Times adds “the inquiry into the hush-money payments seemed to center on a less serious crime, the filing of false business records.”

Axios (8/3, Allasan, 521K) points out “the revelation comes less than a month after the Supreme Court paved the way for District Attorney Cy Vance’s subpoena, ruling that presidents cannot be immune from investigation.” The New York Post (8/3, Rosenberg, 4.57M) reports that “Trump had initially argued that a president can’t be subjected to state criminal probes while in the White House,” and that “the Supreme Court rejected that argument but ruled that Trump could challenge the subpoena on separate grounds, which his lawyers did last month.” USA Today (8/3, Johnson, 10.31M) indicates that Jay Sekulow, Trump’s attorney, “argued that allowing the Manhattan prosecutor to obtain the president’s financial records would empower some 2,300 local district attorneys in the country, most of whom were elected, to target sitting presidents for political purposes.” The Washington Examiner (8/3, Leonardi, 448K), the Washington Times (8/3, Mordock, 492K), The Hill (8/3, Neidig, 2.98M), Politico (8/3, Gerstein, 4.29M), Reuters (8/3, Freifeld), and Bloomberg (8/3, Van Voris, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover Monday’s court filings.

Trump: Effort “Just The Continuation Of The Witch Hunt.” The Washington Examiner (8/3, Leonardi, 448K) reports that addressing reporters Monday, Trump said, “This is just a continuation of the witch hunt. It’s Democrat stuff. They failed with Mueller. They failed with everything. They failed with Congress. They failed at every stage of the game. This has been going on for three-and-a-half, four years, even before I got in, this was starting with the Mueller deal.”

Judge Rules Schiff’s Impeachment Subpoenas Can Remain Concealed.

The Washington Examiner (8/3, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that Chief Judge Beryl Howell of US District Court of the District of Columbia has “ruled the still-secret subpoenas issued for a host of call records” made public by House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff during last year’s impeachment investigation of President Trump “can remain concealed from the public.” Judicial Watch sued Schiff and his committee in December “seeking access to ‘the controversial subpoenas issued for phone records,’ including those of Trump lawyer Rudy Giuliani.” However, Howell ruled the watchdog group “has no right to demand disclosure of the requested subpoenas and responses thereto issued by HPSIC in connection with the impeachment inquiry of the President, and the Speech or Debate Clause of the Constitution provides immunity from suit to defendants.” Judicial Watch “is considering an appeal.”

DOJ Defends Its Use Of FISA.

The Washington Examiner (8/3, Dunleavy, 448K) reports that the Justice Department “defended” its use of FISA, “arguing its deep-dive review of 29 FISA applications should increase trust in the process while suggesting the surveillance of Carter Page was uniquely problematic.” Assistant Attorney General for National Security John Demers said Monday, “We are pleased that our review of these applications concluded that all contained sufficient basis for probable cause and uncovered only two material errors, neither of which invalidated the authorizations granted by the FISA Court. ... These findings, together with the more than 40 corrective actions undertaken by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the National Security Division, should instill confidence in the FBI’s use of FISA authorities.”

Hemingway: Media Is Silent As Steele Shown Not To Be Master Spy.

Mollie Hemingway writes for The Federalist (8/3, 126K) that the media repeatedly “assured Americans that the dossier alleging treasonous collusion between Donald Trump and Russia was based on the scrupulous work of a mastermind British ex-spy,” Christopher Steele, “and his vast network of credible and well-connected sources spread throughout Europe. It wasn’t true.” Hemingway argues that the media “have a problem, then, given that they repeatedly led viewers and readers to believe Steele was a master spy. ... As the sophisticated fabrication continues to unravel, the media that won Pulitzers and acclaim for hyping it are strikingly silent.”

White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said on Fox News’ Hannity (8/3, 535K), “Instead of retracting those stories, they won Pulitzers of those stories of the Washington Post and the New York Times for lying about the witch hunt against the President of the United States. They were dead wrong but they don’t apologize. They don’t give back the Pulitzers as they should.”

Trump Signs Another Executive Order Restricting H1B Visas.

The Daily Caller (8/3, Datoc, 716K) reports President Trump signed an executive order Monday that “seeks to prioritize federal agencies hiring US citizens and green card holders over foreign workers for high-skilled contract work.” The Hiring American order “limits federal agencies’ abilities to hire temporary foreign workers for high-skilled contract work and specifically prevents agencies from firing and replacing citizens and permanent residents with temporary workers in IT contract positions.”

Breitbart (8/3, Munro, 673K) quotes Trump as saying at the White House signing event, “We believe jobs must be offered to American workers first.” Reagan McCarthy writes for Townhall (8/3, 177K) that the order “mirrors President Trump’s commitment to putting American workers first, especially given the economic downturn caused by COVID-19 that is felt by Americans in all job sectors.”

Trump Signs Executive Order Aimed At Boosting Rural Healthcare.

Politico (8/3, Diamond, Cancryn, Roubein, 4.29M) reports President Trump signed an executive order Monday “aimed at boosting struggling health care providers in rural areas.” Under the executive order, Medicare “will leverage its authority to test new pilot projects that offer financial incentives for rural providers who deliver higher-quality care to patients. Administration officials believe its new financial model will help keep rural hospitals open, after about 130 have closed in the past decade.” The program, however, “will be optional, according to three sources, who said the new Medicare payment model would be released as soon as this week.” According to the executive order, the project will be announced “within 30 days.”

Trump Again Says He Wishes Ghislaine Maxwell Well.

President Trump was asked in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) why he said he wishes Ghislaine Maxwell – who faces charges of enticement of minors and sex trafficking of children – well. Trump said, “Her friend or boyfriend was either killed or committed suicide in jail. She’s now in jail. Yeah, I wish her well. I’d wish you well. I’d wish a lot of people well. Good luck. Let them prove somebody was guilty.... And I do wish her well. I’m not looking for anything bad for her. I’m not looking bad for anybody.”

Isaias Regains Hurricane Strength As It Makes Landfall In North Carolina.

All three network news broadcasts Monday evening led with Isaias, which made landfall around 11:10 p.m. Eastern time near Ocean Isle Beach, North Carolina, according to the National Hurricane Center. NBC Nightly News (8/3, lead story, 2:05, Holt, 6.23M) opened its broadcast, “As we come on the air, more than 100 million Americans are staring down a fast moving tropical storm. Isaias on the verge of becoming a hurricane as it tracks toward the Carolinas. But the entire East Coast northward is at risk from flooding and power outages from 70 miles per hour winds.”

The CBS Evening News (8/3, lead story, 3:20, O’Donnell, 4.24M) reported, “The storm is expected to make landfall around Myrtle Beach in a few hours as a Category 1 hurricane before ripping up the East Coast [Tuesday], bringing with it as much as six inches of rain, flooding, power outages, and damaging winds. ... If that isn’t enough, the storm is slamming into some of the areas in the south that are hardest hit by coronavirus. North Carolina has already shut down some testing centers, and the governor is warning those who need to leave the coast to avoid staying in shelters to prevent the spread of the virus.”

ABC World News Tonight (8/3, lead story, 2:35, Muir, 7.08M) reported Isaias “could stay at or near tropical storm strength all the way to New England. ... The storm surge is expected to be three to five feet and this storm will hit at just about the same time as high tide. It is also a full moon tonight, so, that means a higher than normal tide and the potential for significant flash flooding.”

Fauci Says Most Schools Should Reopen, But Not In Some Hot Spots.

The AP (8/3) reports that on Monday, NIAID Director Fauci "warned against reopening schools in coronavirus hot spots," and "said while the nation's 'default principle' should be that children return to school, 'to say that every child has to go back to school is not really realizing the fact that we have such a diversity of viral activity.'" Fauci "said there may be some areas where the level of virus is so high that it would not be prudent to bring children back to school."

Fauci said on KDFW-TV Dallas (8/3, 95K), "What we need to do is to be careful, cautious, depending upon what the level of infection is in your community. I think the default position is that we should try as best as possible to get the schools open because we know that it has deleterious effects on the children when you don't have them in school and the secondary downstream unintended ripple effects on families. But having said that, there is a big however there: however, primary among everything, is the safety and the health and welfare of the children as well as of the teachers." Fauci was also interviewed on KTLA-TV Los Angeles (8/3, 57K), KABC-TV Los Angeles (8/3, 51K), KSNV-TV Las Vegas (8/3, 10K) and WGN-TV Chicago (8/3, 147K).

NIH Director Collins said on KOCO-TV Oklahoma City (8/3, 36K), "I recognize, and we all do, that school is really important for kids, both the educational opportunities, the opportunities to socialize with your peers. ... At the same time, you don't want to do that in a fashion that is putting people at undue risk. I think the answer really has to be a local one. If you are in a part of the country where there is very little virus spreading, it might make sense to open up carefully of course, and keep a close track on what is happening. But if you are in the middle of a place where the virus is spreading actively, and you have all kinds of ways of showing that is the case, to open schools without considering the risk does not seem like a smart thing to do, especially when you consider with the risks are to teachers." Collins was also interviewed on KRIV-TV Houston (8/3, 829K), KSAZ-TV Phoenix (8/3, 50K), WFAA-TV Dallas (8/3, 46K), WXIA-TV Atlanta (8/3, 100K), and WKRN-TV Nashville, TN (8/3, 24K).

HUD Secretary Carson said on Fox News' Bill Hemmer Reports (8/3), "We have learned a lot about this virus, obviously. We need to use real science, not science fiction. That means those people who are vulnerable, who are elderly or who have comorbidities, obviously we can use them in a remote setting. But the vast majority of schoolteachers are young and vigorous people and should be able to handle this quite well. You have to realize the data shows us 99+% of the people who die from coronavirus are those who are elderly and have comorbidities. So, why should we allow that to rule us when we know that it's detrimental to keep kids out of school? The socialization process is a very important part of education and that a good education is the most important tool when it comes to being a self-sufficient adult."

Hogan Blocks Local Officials From Ordering Private Schools To Close. The Washington Post (8/3, Cox, 14.2M) reports that on Monday, Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) "curtailed the authority of local health officials to issue a blanket order to keep schools closed, undoing Montgomery County's decision to require all private schools to teach students online-only as they reopen this fall." Hogan "sharply rebuked Maryland's most populous jurisdiction for barring in-person instruction at parochial and private schools, saying local officials overstepped his interest in giving leeway to local leaders." Hogan's executive order "makes clear school systems and private schools have sole authority to determine when and how to safely reopen; local health officials may shut down schools only on a case-by-case basis for health reasons."

USA Today (8/3, Santucci, 10.31M) notes that Barron Trump's private school "is located in the Maryland county where nonpublic schools were mandated to remain closed to in-person instruction."

Teachers In Dozens Of Districts Protest Reopening Schools. The Washington Times (8/3, Richardson, 492K) reports that with the start of the school year "just a few weeks away, teachers' unions in many communities are setting up a major test for President Trump as he pushes for schools to reopen, holding anti-reopening rallies and warning that school districts that opt for in-person learning could be hit by 'safety strikes.'" Demand Safe Schools, "a coalition of a dozen urban teachers' unions and the Democratic Socialists of America, offered Monday a taste of things to come by holding multiple events across the nation in opposition to local reopening plans as part of a National Day of Resistance."

Reuters (8/3, O'Brien) reports teachers and staff at "more than 35 school districts across the United States on Monday staged protests over plans to resume in-class instruction." The protesters are demanding schools delay reopening "until scientific data supports such a move." They are also calling for districts "to wait until safety protocols such as lower class sizes and virus testing are established, and schools are staffed with an adequate number of counselors and nurses, according to a website set up for the demonstrations."

A Wall Street Journal (8/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes the American Federation of Teachers for supporting the strikes. The Journal also argues that teachers unions should not call for the closure of private schools in districts that are remote-only. Instead, the Journal says parents should be given their taxpayer dollars to decide where and how to educate their children.

NYTimes Analysis: Guidelines On School Closures Due To Coronavirus Vague. The New York Times (8/3, Mervosh, Hubler, 18.61M) reports that "with the first schools open barely a week, one question is quickly arising: How many positive cases should it take to close down again?" According to the Times, it is a question "to which education leaders have received vague, sometimes conflicting answers from state and local officials, with widely varying standards in different parts of the country." Federal recommendations "leave the decisions largely up to schools," but "the uncertainty means that superintendents and other administrators are being asked to make decisions for which they are often ill-equipped, said Noelle Ellerson Ng, an associate executive director at AASA, the School Superintendents Association."

Congress Demands Universities Provide Records Of Foreign Donations.

The New York Post (8/3, Bowden, 4.57M) reports Congress wrote to “the nation's top universities on Monday demanding they hand over all records of donations they have accepted from foreign governments and rogue regimes, citing concerns that the multimillion-dollar gifts are a growing national security threat.” The letters “obtained by The Post were sent to the presidents of six of the country’s leading colleges – including Harvard, NYU and Yale – after a Department of Education investigation this year found American universities had accepted $6.4 billion of hidden foreign donations.” The schools – which also include the University of Chicago, the University of Delaware, and the University of Pennsylvania – “now have one week to produce all unredacted records of gifts, contracts and agreements with foreign governments since January 2015.”

Trump Replaces TVA Chair Over Hiring Of Foreign Workers.

The AP (8/3, Miller) reports that on Monday, President Trump “said...that he had fired the chair of the Tennessee Valley Authority, criticizing the federal-owned corporation for hiring foreign workers.” Trump “told reporters at the White House that he was formally removing chair Skip Thompson and another member of the board, and he threatened to remove other board members if they continued to hire foreign labor.” The AP adds that Trump “also said the TVA board must immediately hire a new chief executive officer who ‘puts the interests of Americans first.’ According to Trump, the CEO, Jeff Lyash, earns $8 million a year.” Trump is quoted as saying, “The new CEO must be paid no more than $500,000 a year. ... Let this serve as a warning to any federally appointed board: If you betray American workers, you will hear two words: ‘You’re fired.’”

The New York Times (8/3, Shear, 18.61M) recounts that “after reading from a note handed to him by an aide, the president said that Mr. Lyash had called the White House and had ‘indicated a very strong willingness to reverse course.’” The Times adds that “attendees at the meeting, including about a dozen employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority, clapped enthusiastically as Mr. Trump added, ‘Now maybe he’ll take a major cut in salary.’”

The Washington Examiner (8/3, Smith, 448K) quotes Trump as also saying, “If the TVA does not move swiftly to reverse their decision to rehire their workers, then more board members will be removed. ... We have the absolute right to remove board members.” The Examiner adds that “in response to Trump’s remarks, TVA said it supported an executive order Trump signed on Monday requiring federal agencies to prioritize US workers in federal contracts.” The order “specifically criticized TVA for saying it would outsource 20% of its technology jobs, which the order said could cause more than 200 U.S. workers to lose their jobs and cost the local economy tens of millions of dollars.”

The New York Post (8/3, Nelson, 4.57M) recounts Trump “made his first public remarks about the TVA in April at a White House press conference, responding to The Post’s reporting that some members of his administration wanted to slash Lyash’s pay in potential infrastructure legislation during the economic recovery from the coronavirus pandemic.” Trump “told The Post at the news conference that he would support ‘reducing it by a lot.’ Reining in executive pay is also supported by some Democrats.”

Reuters (8/3, Mason, Schroeder, Shalal) reports “Trump has sparred with the TVA in the past over its efforts to close coal-fired power plants and previously proposed selling parts of the government-owned entity to the private sector.”

Aides Say Trump Is Pleased With Wolf’s Performance At DHS.

The Washington Post (8/3, Miroff, Dawsey, 14.2M) reports that President Trump “is happy with a DHS chief, according to White House aides.” While Acting Secretary Wolf’s “predecessors sometimes pushed back at his attempts to break rules and bend norms to fit his desired policies, Trump now has a DHS chief giving him the answers he wants.” The Post says Wolf “wasn’t Trump’s first choice for the job, and he was viewed at the time as an option of last resort – more of caretaker than a Cabinet secretary.” However, “during the past several weeks, amid his standoff with protesters in Portland,” Wolf has won “the president’s favor, wielding the considerable might of DHS and sending its most highly trained agents to face off against demonstrators targeting a federal courthouse downtown.”

Departing USAID Official Slams “Rampant Anti-Christian Sentiment” At Agency.

The Washington Examiner (8/3, Rowan, 448K) reports, “A Trump administration appointee on Monday alleged that there is ‘rampant anti-Christian sentiment’ at the United States Agency for International Development.” Merritt Corrigan, “who serves as the deputy White House liaison to the agency, which is responsible for federal foreign aid, wrote on Twitter that she plans to ‘expose’ the bias in a Thursday press conference.” Corrigan also “accused New Jersey Sen. Bob Menendez and New York Rep. Eliot Engel of engaging in a ‘corrupt campaign’ to remove her from USAID,” and criticized Sens. Cory Booker (D-NJ) and Tim Kaine (D-VA) “for calling for her ouster.”

The New York Times (8/3, Verma, 18.61M) also recounts “Corrigan said on Twitter on Monday that she had been targeted by Democrats on Capitol Hill and the news media because of her Christian faith.” Corrigan also tweeted, “For too long, I’ve remained silent as the media has attacked me for my Christian beliefs, which are shared by the majority of Americans Let me clear: Gay marriage isn’t marriage Men aren’t women US-funded Tunisian LGBT soap operas aren’t America First. ... @RepEliotEngel can hide behind his mask as he attacks me for my Christian beliefs, but he can’t hide from his own well-documented tragic use of prostitutes. ... It is shameful that @HouseForeign spends taxpayer dollars viciously attacking me for expressing mainstream conservative opinions. I will never apologize for being Christian and demand a chance to respond.”

The Washington Post (8/3, Morello, 14.2M) quotes USAID acting spokesperson Pooja Jhunjhunwala as saying, “USAID takes any claim of discrimination seriously, and we will investigate any complaints of anti-Christian bias Ms. Corrigan has raised during her tenure at the Agency.”

To Politico (8/3, Lippman, 4.29M), Corrigan "is leaving the agency after a short and tumultuous tenure marred by calls for her removal over controversial comments she had made on LGBT rights, according to two USAID officials and another person familiar with the matter." Her tweets Monday were "unusual even for an administration that has been marked by constant personnel shakeups and palace intrigue." Politico adds "a Trump administration official said USAID's acting administrator, John Barsa, fired Corrigan on Monday after she began posting her tweets."

The New York Post (8/3, Nelson, 4.57M) reports the President "rarely mentions gay rights, but posed with a rainbow flag as a candidate in 2016 and nominated gay judges as president. This year, Trump hailed [Richard] Grenell, then acting intelligence chief, as the 'first openly gay cabinet secretary' and told fellow officials at a meeting 'it's a big deal.'" Moreover, "White House adviser Kellyanne Conway said last year that Trump was 'the first president to start as president approving of gay marriage' and last year Trump celebrated LGBT pride month with a tweet that condemned "dozens of countries worldwide that punish, imprison, or even execute individuals on the basis of their sexual orientation."

House Panel Subpoenas Pompeo Aides Over IG's Firing.

The AP (8/3, Jalonick) reports that on Monday, House Democrats "subpoenaed four top aides to Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, saying that the Trump administration is stonewalling their investigation into the firing of the State Department's top independent watchdog earlier this year." Former State Department Inspector General Steve Linick "appeared for a closed-door interview in the probe in June and told investigators that top department officials tried to bully him and dissuade his office from conducting a review of a multibillion-dollar arms sale to Saudi Arabia before he was fired." According to the AP, Linick "also said he was looking into previously reported allegations that...Pompeo and his wife may have misused government staff to run personal errands and several other matters."

Politico (8/3, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that House Foreign Affairs Chairman Eliot Engel "issued the subpoenas Monday to Brian Bulatao, the undersecretary of State for management and a longtime Pompeo associate, as well as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Mike Miller, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Marik String and senior adviser Toni Porter. 'The Administration continues to cover up the real reasons for Mr. Linick's firing by stonewalling the Committees' investigation and refusing to engage in good faith,'" Engel, House Oversight Chairwoman Carolyn Maloney, and Senate Foreign Affairs Committee ranking member Sen. Bob Menendez (D-NJ) "said in a joint statement. 'That stonewalling has made today's subpoenas necessary.'" Reuters (8/3, Zengerle) reports that "the three panels are looking into the May 15 firing of Linick, one of a series of federal government watchdogs fired by Trump." Reuters (8/3, Zengerle) and the Washington Free Beacon (8/3, Beyrer, 78K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Democrats Object To Tata's Pentagon Appointment.

The AP (8/3, Baldor) reports Democrats are "condemning" President Trump's appointment of retired Brig. Gen. Anthony Tata "to a senior Pentagon job after it became clear that getting the retired general confirmed to a higher post would be difficult if not impossible." Trump appointed Tata "to a job performing the duties of the deputy undersecretary for defense policy" after a Senate panel "canceled a hearing on Tata's nomination to become defense undersecretary for policy, the third-highest civilian post at the Pentagon." Sen. Jack Reed (D-RI), the ranking member on the Senate Armed Services Committee, "said Tata was on the verge of being rejected by the panel, and 'until the issues raised by senators of both parties can be resolved, Gen. Tata should not be serving in a position in the Defense Department.'"

The New York Times (8/3, Cooper, 18.61M) reports, "On Monday at the Pentagon, where military officials have already been engaged in a tug of war with Mr. Trump over the president's insistence that the military continue to honor former Confederate leaders, the Tata maneuver was greeted with both resignation and consternation."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M) writes that "it was clear that enough members of the committee – Republican and Democratic – knew enough about Mr. Tata and his bigoted views to realize he was completely unsuitable for this critical job." President Trump responded by "doubling down on bigotry while showing total contempt for the US Senate." To the Post, "Tata's warped worldview and deranged conspiracy theories disqualify him from any position of federal responsibility, as senators understood. Will those senators now allow Mr. Trump to run them over and make a mockery of the Senate's constitutional role?"

Hokason Becomes Member Of Joint Chiefs Of Staff.

The Washington Times (8/3, Glenn, 492K) reports "Army general Daniel Hokanson became the newest member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on Monday when he assumed the top spot at the National Guard Bureau in a ceremony at Fort Meyer in Washington." Hokason's "predecessor, retiring Air Force Gen. Joseph Lengyel, was the last member of the Joint Chiefs to be nominated during the Obama Administration. Now, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs and the top officers at each military service were chosen by President Donald Trump."

Trump Says Lewis Should Have Come To His Inauguration.

President Trump was asked in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) how he believes history will remember the late Rep. John Lewis (D-GA). Trump said, "I don't know. I really don't know. I don't know. I don't know John Lewis. He chose not to come to my inauguration." Asked if he finds Lewis impressive, Trump said, "I can't say one way or the other. I find a lot of people impressive. I find many people not impressive. ... He didn't come to my inauguration. He didn't come to my State of the Union speeches, and that's okay. That's his right. Again, nobody has done more for Black Americans than I have. He should've come. I think he made a big mistake."

Trump Touts "Massive Numbers Of Cheering People" Who Greeted Him During Florida, Texas Visits.

In a Monday tweet, President Trump wrote, "My visits last week to Texas and Florida had massive numbers of cheering people gathered along the roads and highways, thousands and thousands, even bigger (by far) than the crowds of 2016. Saw no Biden supporters, and yet some in the Fake News said it was an equal number. Sad!"

Trump Says He Reads A Lot.

President Trump was asked in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) if he reads his daily intelligence brief. Trump said, "I do. I read a lot. I read a lot. They like to say I don't read. I read a lot. I comprehend extraordinarily well. Probably better than anybody that you've interviewed in a long time."

Trump Mocks "Morning Joe," CNN Morning Ratings.

President Trump took to Twitter Monday to write, "Wow! Really bad TV Ratings for Morning Joe (@JoeNBC). @foxandfriends doing great, leading all others by far. @CNN not a factor!!!"

Facebook Labels Manipulated Video Of Pelosi "Partly False."

The Washington Post (8/3, Denham, 14.2M) reports that Facebook has labeled "a manipulated and widely shared video" that depicts House Speaker Pelosi "slurring her speech and appearing intoxicated" as "partly false." The Post adds that the video was removed from TikTok, Twitter and YouTube "after CNN inquired about it on Sunday, but it remains on Facebook." The video, which according to CNN, "has been viewed more than 2 million times," comes "from a May 20 news conference in which Pelosi addressed President Trump's tweets about MSNBC host Joe Scarborough. A user posted it on Facebook on Thursday evening with the caption, 'This is unbelievable, she is blown out of her mind, I bet this gets taken down!'"

NYTimes Analysis: Group Of Conservative Pundits Focused On Attacking Trump's Critics.

The New York Times (8/3, Peters, 18.61M) reports in an analysis that the conservative writer Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist, who was highly critical of President Trump when he ran four years ago, but is now "one of Mr. Trump's favorites," is "part of a group of conservative commentators...that has helped insulate the president and preserve his popularity with his base, even as many Americans say they are likely to vote against him in November." The Times says these "writers and pundits don't tend to...make the doggedly pro-Trump defenses that appear on Breitbart and erupt from the mouth of Sean Hannity. ... Instead, they offer an outlet for outrage against those the president has declared his enemies, often by reducing them to a culture war caricature of liberalism."

Ohio Poll: Biden Leads Trump 46%-42%.

The Toledo Blade (8/3, Skalka, 88K) reports that a Center for Marketing and Opinion Research/University of Akron poll of 1,037 Ohio voters, taken June 24-July 15, shows Joe Biden leading President Trump 46%-42%. The survey "was commissioned for Your Voice Ohio's Election 2020 project, which explores the complexity of the state's nearly 12 million residents through community engagement, data analysis, and collaborative reporting." The Washington Examiner (8/3, Lim, 448K) reports that the poll "also revealed Biden is experiencing a groundswell of enthusiasm. Almost 31% of respondents said they strongly supported" him, while "only 26% said they felt the same way about Trump. Biden's fans were following the campaign closer than their Trump counterparts, too."

Trump Blasts Nevada's Move To Universal Mail-In Voting, Threatens Court Battle.

President Trump took to Twitter Monday to write, "In an illegal late night coup, Nevada's clubhouse Governor made it impossible for Republicans to win the state. Post Office could never handle the Traffic of Mail-In Votes without preparation. Using Covid to steal the state. See you in Court!" The AP (8/3) reports that in a news conference later on Monday, Trump also "claimed Monday that he has the authority to issue an executive order on mail-in ballots, whose increasing use, he argues, could increase election fraud and uncertainty, though it is unclear what he could do to curtail the practice." Said Trump, "I have the right to do it. ... We haven't gotten there yet, we'll see what happens." USA Today (8/3, Subramanian, 10.31M) quotes Trump as also saying, "We will be suing in Nevada, and that's already been taken care of. ... We'll probably file something tomorrow."

The AP (8/3, Metz) reports that the Nevada legislature has "passed a bill that would add the state to a growing list of US states mailing active voters ballots ahead of the November election amid the coronavirus pandemic." The bill now heads to Gov. Steve Sisolak (D), and "if he signs it as expected, Nevada will join seven states that plan on automatically sending voters mail ballots, including California and Vermont, which moved earlier this summer to adopt automatic mail ballot policies." The Las Vegas Sun (8/3, Brewer, 170K) recounts that "the bill, which was passed on party lines in the Democrat-controlled state Senate and Assembly, sends $3 million to the Secretary of State's Office for the rollout of mail-in ballots. No Republicans in either chamber voted for the bill." Republican lawmakers also "criticized a provision to allow the delivery of mail ballots by non-family members. Many Republican lawmakers raised concerns this would allow potential ballot harvesting."

Politico (8/3, Forgey, 4.29M) says Trump "has aggressively advocated for in-person voting in recent months even as state-level election officials move to expand mail-in voting," and "argued in April that mail-in voting 'doesn't work out well for Republicans.'" The President "has repeatedly claimed the ballot-casting practice results in widespread incidents of voter fraud."

ABC World News Tonight (8/3, story 5, 0:35, Scott, 7.08M) recounted that the President "was asked...if he would issue an executive order to stop mail-in ballots, which he claims are subject to fraud, saying he has the right to do it, but that he's not there yet." ABC added that "experts say voter fraud is extremely rare with mail-in ballots."

Trump was asked in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) about his comment to Fox News that he could not say whether he would accept the 2020 election results. Trump said, "Hillary Clinton never accepted them. She still doesn't accept them, and she got beaten very easily." Trump added, "So we have a new phenomenon. It's called mail-in voting. ... You look at some of the corruption having to do with universal mail-in voting. Absentee voting is okay. You have to apply. You have to go through a process. Absentee voting is good. ... There is no way you can go through a mail-in vote without massive cheating."

Vice President Pence said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (8/3), "The President made it very clear, whether it's the power grab in Nevada, that the governor of Nevada was signing that allowed not only for universal mail-in ballots but also vote harvesting, as it's called, we are headed to the courts. The right to vote, the one person, one vote right is at the very center of our democracy and the President has made it very clear that we are not going to stand idly by while you see Democrat states and Democrat governors use the backdrop of the coronavirus to send millions of ballots all across their states and all across this country. Let's be clear though. Absentee balloting is perfectly acceptable. ... But this universal mail-in loaded voting where you're going to see literally ballots showered all across the state is ripe for fraud and we are headed straight to the courts to put a stop to it."

The Washington Post (8/3, Gardner, Dawsey, 14.2M) says the President's "unfounded attacks on mail balloting are discouraging his own supporters from embracing the practice, according to polls and Republican leaders across the country, prompting growing alarm that one of the central strategies of his campaign is threatening GOP prospects in November." The Post adds, "As a result, state and local Republicans across the country fear they are falling dramatically behind in a practice that is expected to be key to voter turnout this year. Through mailers and Facebook ads, they are racing to promote absentee balloting among their own." According to Reuters (8/3, Ax), "Election experts say voter fraud of any kind, including incidents related to mail-in ballots, is vanishingly rare." The Hill (8/3, Chalfant, 2.98M), the Fox News (8/3, Olson, 27.59M) website, and the New York Post (8/3, Nelson, 4.57M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Deputy White House Communications Director Brian Morgenstern said on the John Fredericks Show (8/3), "What you're seeing in the media and from many on the left are trying to conflate mail-in balloting and absentee balloting and saying they are the same thing. They are not. Absentee ballot is where somebody proactively contacts the board of elections, they certify that they actually where they say they live, that they will receive it and they will return it. Universal mail-in balloting is they just spray ballots to anybody who might be on the voter rolls. We know that voter rolls can be outdated. People move around. People unfortunately pass away. ... There is a tremendous opportunity for mistakes or fraud with a universal mail-in balloting program as opposed to an absentee program."

Trump Campaign Releases New Ads Targeting Biden After Temporary Blackout.

Politico (8/3, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's campaign on Monday "released two new advertisements...casting" Joe Biden "as beholden to the left wing. ... The media offensive comes after the president's campaign went dark on television airwaves last week amid a reevaluation of its advertising strategy by Bill Stepien, Trump's newly installed campaign manager." Politico says that "in one ad, titled 'Takeover,' Biden is depicted alongside outspoken progressives Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, New York Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez and Minnesota Rep. Ilhan Omar. 'Joe Biden has embraced the policies of the radical left,' an ominous voiceover states, going on to criticize Biden's positions on taxes, immigration and police funding." Politico says that the Trump campaign on Monday "acknowledged...that it had 'paused advertising for several days last week while undertaking a review of advertising tactics and has resumed with a smarter, more strategic approach.'"

In an online article, CNN (8/3, Judd, Nobles, Klein, 83.16M) reports, "The new ad blitz comes after...Stepien canceled all of the campaign's ad buys last week to assess where the campaign was spending money and which voters in particular were receiving their message. Stepien's review concluded that they need to put a specific emphasis on early voting states where Trump runs the risk of falling behind. The ads are expected to run on local broadcast and cable outlets in the early voting states of North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Arizona. The ads will also run on Spanish language channels." CNN says the new ads "portray Biden as 'a tool of the radical left' and directly appeal...to voters they say constitute the 'Silent Majority' that delivered the win for Trump in 2016."

Writer Criticizes Trump Ad About 911 Calls As Stereotyping "Older Americans." In a USA Today (8/3, 10.31M) op-ed, Flipside co-founder Vaughan Emsley, "a generational marketing expert," says, "Facing defections from older white voters, a crucial voting bloc that he needs in order to win a second term" this fall, Trump "has unleashed a series of fear-mongering ads" aimed at scaring "seniors with apocalyptic visions of what the nation could look like under a...Biden presidency. One of the latest features an older woman alone at home when an attacker breaks in. She's unable to reach anyone at 911 in 'Joe Biden's America.' Fact checkers have rightfully" called the spot "nonsense" since Biden is not proposing or supporting anything that would lead to 911 calls not being answered." Emsley says the ad "furthers stereotypes about older Americans – stereotypes that cause real harm."

Politico Analysis: Time Growing Short For Trump To Turn Around Campaign. In a separate analysis piece, Politico (8/3, Siders, 4.29M) says, "While there are still 92 days until Election Day," Trump "has as little as half as much time to begin closing the gap with" Biden "because of an expected surge in mail voting due to the coronavirus and because the electorate this year appears more hardened than in 2016, with fewer undecided voters to peel off in the closing days of the contest." Politico says "voters will begin receiving ballots in key swing states as early as next month," which is "before the first presidential debate, on Sept. 29." In addition, "Arizona, Ohio and Iowa will start early voting right after, in the first seven days of October."

Trump Reportedly Eyeing High-Profile Venues For Nomination Acceptance Speech.

The New York Times (8/3, Karni, 18.61M) reports, "A presidential address in front of the Gettysburg battlefield, or at the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia. A speech from the first lady, Melania Trump, at Seneca Falls, NY, the cradle of the national movement for women's rights. Perhaps a stage for the warm-up acts built at the Trump International Hotel in Washington, DC. These are some of the scenarios that have been under discussion among President Trump and his top aides as they hold out hope for an ambitious, Trumpian display over four nights of Republican National Convention programming. Despite the surging coronavirus pandemic," Trump "and his advisers are counting on some form of the spectacle to serve as a boost to the flagging incumbent as he heads into the final stretch of the campaign."

Trump Set To Appear At Hamptons Fundraisers.

CNBC (8/3, Schwartz, 3.62M) reports on its website that President Trump is traveling to the Hamptons "for a fundraising blitz as...Joe Biden creates his own formidable campaign war chest." CNBC says, "The Trump events begin Thursday, when the president's eldest son, Donald Trump Jr., and his girlfriend, leading campaign and Republican National Committee fundraiser Kimberly Guilfoyle will be featured guests at a dinner. Tickets for this event start at $2,800 per person for the reception and go up to $50,000 per couple to attend the corresponding dinner." CNBC adds, "More expensive fundraisers that will feature the president himself are set to take place on Saturday," one "with tickets starting at $50,000," and another that "will cost up to $500,000 per couple to gain entrance."

Trump Jr. Blasts NYTimes Op-Ed Calling For Debates To Be Scrapped.

The Washington Times (8/3, Ernst, 492K) reports that Donald Trump Jr. "says a new op-ed by The New York Times is proof that 'there's absolutely nothing the left will not do' to shield [Joe Biden] from himself. 'OMG they're really going for it,' President Trump's eldest son tweeted Monday in response to the" op-ed "titled, 'Let's Scrap the Presidential Debates.' The commentary by writer Elizabeth Drew's comes in the wake of a similar piece by former Clinton White House press secretary Joe Lockhart," who wrote in a July 28 post on the website of CNN, "Whatever you do, don't debate Trump. ... Biden will undoubtedly take heat from Republicans and the media for skipping the debates. But it's worth the risk as trying to debate someone incapable of telling the truth is an impossible contest to win." Trump Jr. tweeted, "There's absolutely nothing the left will not do to protect Joe Biden and cover-up for all of his obvious flaws."

The Hill Report: Democratic Senators Want Biden To Debate Trump. Meanwhile, The Hill (8/3, Bolton, Chalfant, 2.98M) reports, "Democratic senators say...Biden shouldn't be afraid to debate...Trump in the fall, countering other party figures floating the idea that he should skip the debates given his polling advantage and not risk giving Trump a lifeline." Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), a potential Biden VP pick, told The Hill, "We've had presidential debates for a long time now, and it's been a way for a lot of people around the nation to be able to see the candidates in action. I know that Joe Biden will show who he is, a man of both empathy and competence, and I'd like the American people to have a chance to see that." The Hill quotes Sens. Richard Blumenthal (D-CT), Dianne Feinstein (D-CA), and Chris Murphy (D-CT) as making similar remarks.

WSJournal: Biden Should Not Skip Debates. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) takes issue with suggestions from some that Biden should skip the three scheduled presidential debates. The Journal argues that voters should see how Biden handles himself under the pressure of a debate, and says that if he skips them, voters can conclude that his aides are seeking to protect him amid doubts about his cognitive skills.

Ex-NYTimes Writer Weiss: Newspaper "Living In Fear Of An Online Mob." The Washington Times (8/3, Chasmar, 492K) reports that ex-New York Times opinion editor Bari Weiss on Friday "told Bill Maher that the paper of record is making illiberal editorial decisions that alienate 'half of the country' because it is living in constant fear of being the next target in today's cancel culture." Weiss quit the Times "last month after she published her resignation letter online, alleging that she had been constantly bullied at the publication for her 'centrist' political beliefs and that Twitter had become the paper's 'ultimate editor.'" Appearing on HBO's "Real Time," Weiss said that "when you are living in fear of an online mob, you know, all it takes is a dozen people to repeat a lie about you – that you're a racist, that you're a transphobe, that you're a bigot – for that lie to become true and that's extremely dangerous."

Democratic PACs' Ads Wooing Black Voters Hit Trump On Police Clashes With Protesters, Pandemic.

Politico (8/3, Barrón-López, 4.29M) reports, "Two Democratic PACS are using footage of recent police violence against protesters, President Donald Trump's past comments about Black voters, and images of mass coronavirus graves in new ads aimed at persuading Black voters. Priorities USA and Color of Change PAC [were] set to launch five new digital ads – three of them on Monday – in a roughly half-million-dollar buy.” Politico says, “One of the ads, titled ‘Police State,’ was rejected by Google last week for its use of videos of police beating, tear gassing and running over demonstrators at protests.” The spot “flashes video of police harming protesters as phrases such as ‘brute force’ and ‘silencing dissent’ are displayed on the screen. Trump’s June 1 speech declaring himself the ‘president of law and order’ and his 2017 appeal to police to ‘please don’t be too nice’ plays in the background.”

WPost Analysis: Democrats In Battleground States Want Biden Camp To Step Up Its Visibility.

The Washington Post (8/3, Johnson, Bailey, 14.2M) reports, “In the states that will likely decide the presidential election, President Trump is everywhere. Discussion of” Trump “and the actions of his administration – often critical – fill social media feeds, newscasts, letters-to-the-editor pages and” neighborhood “conversations. For months, his campaign ads dominated the airwaves.” But while Trump lags behind Joe Biden “in almost all key states,” polls show, “to some of Biden’s supporters, Trump’s continuing dominance is a warning sign. They are lobbying for Biden to take a more aggressive stance” and raise his visibility in key states, “worried that despite his seeming advantage he has failed so far to persuade people to vote for him – not simply against Trump.” Such concerns “echo those preceding Hillary Clinton’s surprise losses in states that formerly had been reliably Democratic, such as Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Michigan.”

USA Today: Democrats Should Welcome Kasich, Other Anti-Trump Republicans To National Convention.

In an editorial, USA Today (8/3, 10.31M) says, “These days, there’s no shortage of conservative thought leaders who’ve had it with President Donald Trump. ... Now comes word that” ex-Gov. John Kasich (R-OH) “is going to speak at this month’s Democratic National Convention in favor of...Joe Biden.” USA Today says that the conservatives who oppose Trump represent “an impressive array of firepower for the benefit of” Biden, but “some Democrats, generally from the liberal wing of the party, don’t want this help,” arguing “that Republicans like Kasich will help steer Biden and the Democratic Party in a more centrist direction when they should be making a hard left turn.” USA Today calls that stance “extremely misguided. Democrats should welcome all the help they can get, especially from Kasich, a respected elder statesman from a battleground state in a battleground region of the country.”

In a responding USA Today (8/3, 10.31M) op-ed, freelance reporter Brianna Provenzano says that “Kasich, along with groups like The Lincoln Project and Republican Voters Against Trump, have emerged as the de facto avatars for the ‘Never Trump’ movement. ... Some will argue that it makes sense to welcome voices from across the ideological divide into their ‘big tent’ if it means” defeating Trump. However, Provenzano writes that “Kasich and the others are political losers who have proved time and again that they aren’t saying what national Republican voters want to hear. By welcoming their endorsements, Biden cements his position as someone with nothing to offer aside from an alternative to Trump.”

Potential Biden VP Pick Bass: “I’m Not A Communist.”

On its website, NBC News (8/3, Gamboa, 6.14M) reports that Rep. Karen Bass (D-CA), a vice-presidential prospect, “urged Cuban American voters Monday to ‘not believe the lies’ of Republicans. ‘I’m not a socialist. I’m not a communist. I’ve belonged to one party my entire life and that’s the Democratic Party and I’m a Christian,’ Bass told NBC News. As Bass has emerged as a potential vice presidential pick, Republicans have seized on Bass’ history of visits to Cuba. It’s an overture to the significant segment of Cuban American and other Latino voters in the swing state of Florida who have backed Republican candidates over their hardline stances against the communist country.” NBC’s report doesn’t mention the controversy over Bass’ praising of Fidel Castro upon his death.

Stepien: Biden “An Empty Vessel Of The Radical Left.” Appearing Monday on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (8/3, 831K), Trump Campaign Manager Bill Stepien said, “I think you need to judge Joe Biden by the people he is surrounding himself with. At every step of this campaign, at every mile marker of this campaign, he has kowtowed to the radical left of his party. I think we are about to see the same when he chooses his vice presidential nominee. He is an empty vessel of the radical left. It’s how he won the nomination in the first place. And it’s extremely concerning that he is a pawn of the radical fringe of this party, of the AOC wing of the party.”

Deputy White House Communications Director Brian Morgenstern said Monday on the John Fredericks Show (8/3) that there “couldn’t be a starker contrast” in the 2020 election. Morgenstern added, “We have the Trump and Republicans standing for work safety of the American people, standing for prosperity and the ability to thrive, grow your business hire people. We are talking about freedom. It is freedom of thought. It is freedom to live your life the way you want to live.”

Democrats Have Spent More $5M Trying To Boost Kobach In Kansas GOP Senate Primary.

GOP voters in Kansas head to the polls Tuesday to choose a nominee in the race to succeed retiring Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS). In an online article, ABC News (8/3, Cunningham, 2.97M) reports, “The final weeks of the” contest “have devolved into millions of dollars in spending from outside groups, negative mailers and both frontrunners,” GOP ex-Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach and Rep. Roger Marshall (R-KS), “awaiting a possible endorsement from President Donald Trump.” Kobach, who lost to Democratic now-Gov. Laura Kelly in 2018 – “is the nominee of choice for Democrats, who widely see their path to flipping the seat blue as a much easier one should Kobach win on Tuesday.”

Bloomberg Government (8/3, Giroux) reports, “Outside spending in the” GOP contest “has topped $14 million, most of it attacking Marshall or Kobach and outpacing spending by the candidates. The biggest spender, at more than $5 million, is not a Republican group but a Democratic super PAC that has blasted Marshall in ads while describing Kobach as 'the pro-Trump conservative leader' who supports the president's border wall – messages designed to buttress Kobach's image among Republican primary voters. It's a sign Democrats see Kobach, who lost the 2018 Kansas governor's election, as a weaker general election candidate than Marshall against their likely nominee, state Sen. Barbara Bollier."

The New York Times (8/3, Glueck, 18.61M) reports, "Republican anxieties about control of the Senate are reaching new heights this week as the Kansas Senate primary hurdles to a close, amid fears in Washington that the firebrand candidate and staunch Trump supporter...Kobach could win the nomination but lose a longtime red seat in November. As the national political environment has worsened for the GOP, putting a number of traditionally safe conservative seats into play, many Republicans have grown especially focused on Kansas – and concerned that if Mr. Kobach, a polarizing figure in the state, wins on Tuesday, Democrats could take the seat and perhaps gain control of the Senate."

The Atlantic (8/3, Berman, 3.47M) reports that "for the past few weeks, Democrats have come to Kobach's rescue, spending at least $4 million to help the unapologetic Trump ally win the" GOP primary. The Atlantic says "a Democratic-aligned super PAC formed in recent weeks has poured millions into TV ads" attacking Marshall, who is backed by Senate Majority Leader McConnell "and other state and national GOP power brokers. The ads attack Marshall from the right, lumping him in with 'Mitt Romney Republicans and Never Trumpers' who think Kobach is 'too conservative.'" Democrats views "Kobach as the weaker, more polarizing GOP candidate and are trying to boost him now so they can pummel him in the fall. But the strategy is unnerving the party's staunchest immigrant advocates, who see Kobach as a uniquely dangerous figure and who worry the move could backfire and end up giving him a national platform in the Senate and a potential launching pad to the presidency."

Newsweek (8/3, Hutzler, 1.53M) reports, "Kansas Republicans have held the state's Senate seat for the better part of a century, but many are concerned that Tuesday's primary could give Democrats the upper hand this" fall. Kobach "was the only Republican to lose a statewide election in 2018 when he ran for governor – a scenario operatives are worried will be repeated if he's the nominee. That fear has caused establishment Republicans, including...Roberts whose seat Kobach is hoping to replace, to" back Marshall. Newsweek adds, "Election forecasters such as Cook Political Report and Sabato's Crystal Ball currently rate the race as 'leaning Republican.' But the Cook Political Report warned that if Kobach became the nominee, the contest could move into 'toss-up' territory." The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Wise, Day, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that internal Republican polls show Kobach and Marshall in a dead heat.

Poll Shows Daines Leading Bullock 50%-44% In Montana Senate Race.

The Washington Times (8/3, Richardson, 492K) reports that an Emerson College poll of 584 Montana voters, taken July 31-Aug. 2, shows Sen. Steve Daines (R-MT) leading term-limited Gov. Steve Bullock (D-MT) 50%-44% in this fall's US Senate race. The poll also shows President Trump leading Joe Biden 53%-42%. In addition, the poll shows Rep. Greg Gianforte (R-MT) leading Democratic Lt. Gov. Mike Cooney 50%-41% in the race to succeed Bullock. Poll director Spencer Kimball is quoted as saying of the results, "Montana could be a bellwether of sorts to see if Gov. Bullock can buck the trend of 2016 when Trump states went Republican in Senate races while [Hillary] Clinton states went Democratic." The Times says Trump "won Montana in 2016 by" 22 points.

Under the headline "Poll Gives Democrats Bad News In Key Senate Race," Yahoo! News (8/3, Knowles, 12.82M) reports, "Like other traditionally Republican strongholds, Montana is being looked at to see whether support for...Trump has softened, giving Democrats a better chance of retaking control of the Senate. To do that, they need to flip three seats in November and win the White House (or four if Trump is reelected), and Bullock, who mounted an unsuccessful campaign for president this year, is seen as strong contender. Two weeks ago, a Public Policy Polling survey of the race found Bullock leading Daines by 2 points." The Great Falls Tribune (8/3, Drake, 114K) reports on the survey's results under the headline "Poll Gives GOP Lead In Montana's High Ticket Nov. 3 Election Races."

Trump-Backed Hagerty Hoping To Extend President's Record In 2020 Senate Primaries.

Breitbart (8/3, Boyle, 673K) reports that ex-US Ambassador to Japan Bill Hagerty, "the man President Donald Trump wants" to succeed retiring Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-TN), "is seeking to finish off his once-surging opponent in Thursday's primary. More than a year ago, Trump endorsed Hagerty – one of his closest allies who would be the first US Senator who actually served in his administration and on his campaign and in his transition team – for the job. If Hagerty" defeats trauma surgeon Manny Sethi in Thursday's GOP "primary, it would not only give the president a key win in a deep red state. ... It would also deliver...Trump a perfect record in US Senate primaries nationwide this cycle, even after a handful of House primary losses despite a mostly-perfect record."

Sethi, A Surgeon, Says Trump Should Fire Fauci. The AP (8/3, Kruesi) reports that Sethi "is calling for...Trump to fire the nation's leading infectious diseases expert amid a pandemic." Sethi blasted NIAID Director Anthony Fauci "over the weekend in Knoxville," saying at a rally, "This guy Fauci, I've had about enough of this guy. I think maybe it's time for the President to bring him into the board room and say, 'You're fired.'" The AP adds, "In a statement, Sethi criticized Fauci's promotion of shutting down bars and restaurants to help curb the virus. 'His plan did incredible damage to our economy. Fauci failed, and now he wants us to double down on failure again by completely destroying what's left of our economy,' Sethi argued."

GOP Poll: Hart, Miller-Meeks Tied At 41% In Race To Succeed Loeb sack In IA2.

The Quad-City (IA) Times (8/3, Lynch, 213K) reports that a Harper Polling (R) survey of 406 likely IA2 voters, taken "the last week of July," shows Democratic ex-state Sen. Rita Hart and GOP state Sen. Mariannette Miller-Meeks (R) tied at 41% each in the race to succeed retiring Rep. Bruce Loebsack (D-IA) in the IA2; 16% were undecided. The poll was "commissioned by the Congressional Leadership Fund, which supports Republican candidates."

Tlaib Facing Tough MI13 Primary Challenge Tuesday.

Freshman Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-MI) is facing a tough challenge from Detroit City Council President Brenda Jones in Tuesday's MI13 Democratic primary. The New York Times (8/3, Gray, 18.61M) reports that Tlaib, "who rocketed to national attention as a vocal critic of President Trump, is fighting for her political life, locked in a close primary race that could be decided by a few hundred mail-in ballots." Jones in 2018 won the special election to succeed ex-Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), but was "narrowly defeated" by Tlaib in a crowded Democratic primary that took place the same day. The Times says that "the contest, taking place amid national protests against racial injustice, finds people in this majority-Black district asking themselves whether Black voters must be represented by Black politicians to really be heard." Jones is an African American.

The Hill (8/3, Manchester, 2.98M) reports that Tlaib "gained national name recognition in 2019 when she became a member of the 'squad,' four progressive congresswomen...who were elected in 2018." The Hill quotes Adrian Hemond, "a Michigan-based Democratic strategist," as saying, "It's the Conyers district. Notwithstanding how his career ended, the man's a civil rights hero. That's certainly an advantage for Brenda Jones in this race. It's a majority African American city. It's a majority African American congressional district, and to the extent that those voters are interested in symbolic representation, that's not Rep. Tlaib." The Hill adds, however, "Recent polling shows Tlaib with a significant edge over Jones."

The Washington Times (8/3, Muñoz, McLaughlin, 492K) reports that Jones has argued "that Ms. Tlaib is more interested in chasing political stardom than standing up for her constituents. 'As Michigan's 13th Congressional District Representative, Tlaib has worked hard to become an international rock star,' Ms. Jones said in a recent Twitter post. 'Representative Tlaib has a huge war chest of nearly $2 million. The money in Rashida Tlaib's war chest is mostly from people around the world. This means Tlaib is beholden to her money people, & not focused on the citizens of the 13th Congressional District,' she said." The Times says Tlaib has "raised over $3 million, compared with $165,000 for Ms. Jones."

Trump Calls For Revote In NY12 Democratic Primary.

Townhall (8/3, Baumann, 177K) reports President Trump suggested Monday that the Democratic primary in NY12 should undergo a "revote." Six weeks after the election, "there are still no declared winners" in the district. Trump said, "I think you probably have to take the Carolyn Maloney race and run it over again. ... How can you do this? And this is a small race with literally thousands of people. Small thousands. And it's all messed up. They're six weeks into it now they have no clue what's going on."

The New York Times (8/3, Shear, 18.61M) quotes Trump as saying, "Nobody knows what's happening with the ballots and the lost ballots and the fraudulent ballots, I guess." The Times adds, "There is no evidence that the New York primary results were tainted by criminal malfeasance, according to a wide array of election officials and campaign representatives."

WTimes Analysis: Trump Identified Serious Problem With Mail-In Voting. The Washington Times (8/3, Swoyer, 492K) reports in an analysis that while President Trump suggestion that "the election be postponed drew little support from either Republicans or Democrats," he "did identify a serious problem when he pointed out that New York is still counting votes from its botched June primaries." New York "has invalidated tens of thousands of ballots and has yet to declare winners in some of the June 23 contests, which were seen as an early test of the push to expand mail-in balloting."

Politico Analysis: Trump's Attacks On Mail-In Voting Could Hurt Him In November. In an analysis, Politico (8/3, Cadelago, Montellaro, 4.29M) reports that "Trump's all-out war on mail voting is backfiring in battleground states." Politico adds that "private polling shared first with Politico showed that Republicans have become overwhelmingly concerned about mail balloting, which Trump has claimed, without evidence, will lead to widespread voter fraud. A potentially decisive slice of Trump's battleground-state base...said that getting a ballot in the mail would make them less likely to vote in November." According to Politico, "some Republicans fear that Trump's regular fulminations against mail voting will depress GOP turnout in the fall."

Ocasio-Cortez Not On List Of Candidate Endorsements Released By Obama.

Fox News (8/3, Singman, 27.59M) reports on its website that former President Barack Obama released a statement Monday in which he "endorsed more than 100 Democratic candidates running for office this November," but Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) was not among them. The statement included a list of "118 Democrats running for federal, statewide and state legislative offices from 17 states, including New York, New Jersey, California, Texas, Illinois, Arkansas, Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Nebraska and Nevada."

UT4 Poll: McAdams, GOP Challenger Owens Tied At 35%; 24% Undecided.

The Deseret News (8/3, Roche, 308K) reports that a Deseret News/Hinckley Institute of Politics poll of 800 UT4 voters, taken July 27-Aug. 1, shows freshman Rep. Ben McAdams (D-UT) and GOP ex-NFL player Burgess Owens tied at 35% each in the UT4; 24% were undecided, while 6% supported a different candidate. The survey "was conducted by independent pollster Scott Rasmussen," who "said the numbers signal that Utah's 4th District is 'one of the bellwether races of this election season.' The pollster said that a McAdams victory wouldn't be a surprise since he's the incumbent, but a close race suggests Republicans across the country may fare better than expected in an election year when GOP President Donald Trump is at the top of the ticket but trailing nationally in the polls."

Politico Analysis: Trump Loss Could Presage House GOP Leadership Challenges.

Politico (8/3, Zanona, 4.29M) says that "according to interviews with over a dozen Republican lawmakers and aides, there's a growing sense that if [President] Trump loses the White House – and the GOP fails to make meaningful gains in the House – the fight for the future of the party will play out in challenges across leadership." Politico says "the early feuding that has already erupted inside the House GOP is being fueled by Trump's dismal poll numbers and growing fears that Republicans could sink even further into the House minority, underscoring the anxiety in the GOP conference just three months before the election." However, Politico adds that "several sources familiar with the party's internal dynamics cautioned that any potential effort to push out the top Republican leaders might be difficult," because "only a simple majority is needed to secure a leadership post in the House minority, and the caucus does not contain a deep bench of potential challengers."

NYTimes Marvels At "What Human Genius Can Do."

The New York Times (8/3, 18.61M) says in an editorial that over the past week, we have seen examples that, despite the pandemic, "humankind persists in devoting extraordinary talent, science and treasure to decoding the mysteries of our universe." The Times cites NASA's launch of a Mars rover, Elon Musk's SpaceX mission, and archaeologists' recent discovery at Stonehenge as "some good news on what human genius can do [that] provided a welcome diversion from all the harrowing news about the pandemic and toxic politics." To The Times, "there's something uniquely compelling about our need to learn what we can about the universe, and to do that not for some practical or commercial reason, but simply out of curiosity, out of wonder."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 43.7%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 43.7%, and his disapproval at 54.0%. The President's approval is up 0.1 since yesterday and disapproval is down 0.1.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (7/29-8/2) finds Trump's approval at 51%, and his disapproval at 47%.

Financial International News

Sources: Argentina Nearing Breakthrough Restructuring Deal With Creditors.

Reuters (8/3, Raszewski, Campos, Jourdan) reports Argentina and its creditors "are nearing a breakthrough $65 billion debt restructuring deal, a lawmaker and two sources told Reuters on Monday, the eve of a deadline for a deal that would help avert a damaging legal standoff." Ruling party official Fernanda Vallejos "told Reuters in a message that a deal was 'near to closing' after Economy Minister Martin Guzman met with lawmakers." Vallejos added that Guzman "gave us reason to feel optimistic that there are significant chances of success in closing the negotiation." One source "close to the negotiation said a deal has been 'struck' between creditors and the government." A second source "close to the talks said Argentina and creditors were holding discussions 'as we speak' toward an agreement to bridge the gap of around 3 cents on the dollar between the latest rival proposals."

Trump: We Will "Never Forget" Coronavirus "Was Sent To Us By China."

President Trump said in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) that the coronavirus "was sent to us by China, one way or the other, and we're never going to forget it. Believe me, we're never going to forget it. And we were beating China at every single point. We were beating them on trade. we were making progress like nobody's ever made progress. before the pandemic, they had the worst year that they've had in 67 years. ... We were taking in billions of dollars. I was giving some of it to the farmers. The farmers were doing well because they were targeting the farmers. I was targeting china. We were doing good. Then all of a sudden, the game changed, and I had to close it down. I closed down the greatest economy ever in history. ... By the way, by closing it down, we saved millions of lives."

WSJournal A1: FDA's Changing Standards Led To Importing Of Poor-Quality Masks From China. In a front-page story, the Wall Street Journal (8/3, A1, Hufford, Lin, Maremont, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says an analysis found that an emergency decision by the FDA early in the coronavirus pandemic to allow importation of millions of KN95 masks made in China led to large quantities of products of varying quality being imported by the US. This has resulted in some states accumulating stockpiles of masks they don't trust to serve as protective gear.

Latin America Tops 5M Confirmed COVID Cases.

Reuters (8/3) reports Latin America "broke through 5 million confirmed cases of COVID-19 on Monday, a Reuters tally showed, underscoring the region's position as the area of the world hardest hit by the novel coronavirus pandemic." The "more than 10,000 new cases Colombia's health ministry reported on Monday pushed the region past the 5 million mark." Mexico has "also racked up record numbers of new confirmed infections in recent days, registering more than 9,000 daily cases for the first time on Saturday."

Trump Says He "Took Out" ISIS.

President Trump said in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3), "In Syria, we took out ISIS, 100% of the caliphate. When I took over, Obama, it was totally rampant. ISIS was all over the place. We took them out. We captured them. We killed them. ... We took out Soleimani. We took out al-Baghdadi. We took out people that nobody thought possible."

Iran Sanctions Former Bolton Aide.

The Washington Free Beacon (8/3, Kredo, 78K) reports that over the weekend, Iran sanctioned "a former top White House National Security Council member who helped drive President Donald Trump's maximum pressure campaign against Tehran." Richard Goldberg, an aide to former national security adviser John Bolton "who spearheaded the administration's economic sanctions on Iran, was sanctioned by Tehran for what Iranian leaders called 'economic terrorism' against the country."

WSJournal: Administration's Iran Policy Aiding Peace Progress In Yemen.

A Wall Street Journal (8/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial welcomes progress towards peace in Yemen, which it argues would not have been possible without the Trump Administration's maximum-pressure campaign against Iran.

US Firm Secures Deal With Kurds For Syrian Oil.

Politico (8/3, Seligman, Lefebvre, 4.29M) reports that an American company has signed a contract with Kurdish authorities in northeastern Syria "to develop and export the region's crude oil under a secretive deal approved by the U.S. government months after President Donald Trump announced he was leaving U.S. troops to 'secure the oil,' multiple people familiar with the project told Politico." The agreement reached by "a little-known firm helmed by politically connected former military and diplomatic officials has already angered the government of Syrian President Bashar Assad, which does not recognize the Kurdish authorities as autonomous." Partners at the company, Delta Crescent Energy LLC, include "former U.S. ambassador to Denmark James Cain; James Reese, a former officer in the Army's elite Delta Force; and John P. Dorrier Jr., a former executive at GulfSands Petroleum, a U.K.-based oil company with offices and drilling experience in Syria."

Israel Says It Killed Militants Planting Bombs Inside Its Border With Syria.

The New York Times (8/3, Kershner, 18.61M) reports that Israeli soldiers "ambushed four militants as they planted bombs along Israel's boundary with Syria around midnight. ... The militants, whose identity or affiliation were not immediately known, were assumed to have been killed on the spot by a combination of ground and air fire, said Lt. Col. Jonathan Conricus, an army spokesman." The Times adds "Israeli forces have been on elevated alert in the north in recent weeks, and particularly over the past week, after Israel said it had thwarted a raid by a Hezbollah 'terrorist squad' armed with assault rifles in a disputed area along its northern border with Lebanon."

The Washington Post (8/3, Eglash, Dadouch, 14.2M) reports that "also overnight Sunday, Israel said it struck targets in the Hamas-run Gaza Strip to the south, following rocket fire into its territory that caused damage in the Israeli town of Sderot."

Trump Says He Did Not Discuss Russian Bounties On US Troops With Putin.

President Trump was asked in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) if he brought up intelligence reports that Russia paid bounties to Taliban fighters to kill American soldiers in his July 23 call with Russian President Vladimir Putin. Trump said, "No, that was a phone call to discuss other things. and frankly, that's an issue that many people said was fake news." Asked who said it was fake news, Trump said, "I think a lot of people. If you look at some of the wonderful folks from the Bush Administration – some of them not any friends of mine – were saying that it's a fake issue." Trump added, "It never reached my desk. You know why? Because they didn't think it – intelligence, they didn't think it was real."

Trump Says 4,000-5,000 US Troops Will Be In Afghanistan By Election Day.

Asked in an interview with Axios on HBO (8/3) how many US troops will be in Afghanistan by election day, President Trump said, "Probably anywhere from 4,000 to 5,000." When told that is "almost as many as when you came into office," Trump said, "No, it's not. We had much more. We had a lot of people over there, too."

ISIS Attacks Eastern Afghan Prison, Frees Nearly 400 Prisoners.

The AP (8/3, Gul, Faiez) reports that "militants affiliated with the Islamic State group stormed a prison in eastern Afghanistan in a daylong siege that left at least 39 people dead, including the assailants, and freed nearly 400 of their fighters before security forces restored order." The AP adds "the attack underscored that the Islamic State affiliate in Afghanistan is still a formidable presence, and it highlighted the challenges ahead as U.S. and NATO forces begin to withdraw following Washington's peace deal with the Taliban." The AP also reports "the peace accord aims to recruit the Taliban to battle the militants from IS, which US officials have told The Associated Press is the Americans' biggest foe in Afghanistan." The AP describes the Taliban and ISIS as "staunch rivals."

Reuters (8/3, Sultan, Sediqi) reports Afghan security forces "killed at least 10 Islamic State fighters who had taken control of [the] prison in the eastern city of Jalalabad, ending a siege in which hundreds of prisoners escaped." Reuters adds, "More than 300 prisoners were still at large. Attaullah Khugyani, spokesman for the governor of Nangarhar province, said. Of the 1,793 prisoners, more than 1,025 had tried to escape and been recaptured and 430 had remained inside. 'The rest are missing,' he said."

The New York Times (8/3, Ghazi, Mashal, 18.61M) reports that Gen. Yasin Zia, "the chief of the Afghan army who arrived in the city to lead the last stretch of the operations, said ten assailants were involved in the attack and all were killed." The assault, "which left much of the prison's security barriers destroyed and brought the city to a standstill, was one of the most complicated operations claimed by the Islamic State's chapter in Afghanistan." The Times reports that "as its territory has been constricted significantly by a campaign of military operations over the past couple of years, the group has largely turned to gruesome attacks on soft-targets, such as civilians with little protection."

The Washington Post (8/3, George, Hassan, 14.2M) reports that "the attack began just hours before a three-day cease-fire between the Taliban and Afghan government forces was set to expire," and "a Taliban spokesman quickly tweeted a brief statement denying responsibility," although "the target choice and complexity of the attack mirrored past Taliban assaults."

Brownback: NBA "Coming Around" To Oppose Chinese Rights Abuses.

The Washington Examiner (8/3, Gehrke, 448K) reports NBA officials and teams are "coming around" to recognizing the human rights abuses committed by China, according to "the State Department's lead official for religious liberty." Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom Sam Brownback told the Examiner, "The NBA is making some proper steps. I didn't like some of their early steps, but these things take time in a democratic country." Brownback added, "They're coming around. This isn't unusual in a democratic system, where you have lots of independent actors, for it to take a little time for people to kinda convince themselves of what the right course of action is."

Switzerland Predicts China's Aggression Will Backfire. The Washington Examiner (8/3, Gehrke, 448K) reports China's "abuse of human rights and intensifying crackdown on Hong Kong will provoke a major international backlash, according to one of Beijing's closest partners in Europe." Swiss Foreign Minister Ignazio Cassis told local media, "If China sticks to its new course, the Western world will react more decisively." To the Examiner, "That rebuke may carry outsized symbolic significance given that Switzerland was the first European country to establish diplomatic ties with the Chinese Communist Party after the regime came to power in 1949."

Politico Analysis: Trump Has Allowed Rubio To Shape His Latin America Policies.

In a piece titled "Why Trump Is Focused On Making Marco Rubio Happy," Politico (8/3, Rodriguez, 4.29M) says, "When President Donald Trump took office, he passed down one key instruction on how to handle Latin America: Make Marco Rubio happy." According to Politico, Rubio, "a Florida Republican and son of Cuban immigrants, had already built his political brand around vocal criticism of the regimes in Cuba and Venezuela, and to what he viewed as the Democrats' policy of appeasement in the region." Politico adds that Trump "knew...he had to win Florida in 2020. And he viewed staying in the good graces of Rubio, whose hard-line stances have made him popular among Cuban and Venezuelan exiles and their descendants in and around Miami, as key to the latter."

European Diplomats: Turkish Aggression Is NATO's "Elephant In The Room."

The New York Times (8/3, Erlanger, 18.61M) reports that in mid-June, Turkish warships escorted "a vessel suspected of smuggling weapons into Libya, violating a United Nations arms embargo," and were challenged "by a French naval frigate." A "similarly hostile encounter between Turkey and a fellow NATO member happened just two weeks ago, when Turkish warplanes buzzed an area near the Greek island of Rhodes after Greek warships went on alert over Turkey's intent to drill for undersea natural gas there." Turkey has become "the elephant in the room" for NATO, "European diplomats say," but it is "a matter, they say, that few want to discuss." Turkey has "dismissed any criticism of its behavior as unjustified," but "some NATO ambassadors believe that Turkey now represents an open challenge to the group's democratic values and its collective defense."

Former Spanish King Flees Country Amid Financial Scandal.

The New York Post (8/3, Lapin, 4.57M) reports former Spanish King Juan Carlos I has "skipped town amid a financial scandal – and his whereabouts are currently unknown." The former king wrote in a letter to his son, King Felipe VI, that he decided to leave for another country "in the face of the public repercussions of certain episodes of my past private life." The Post notes Spain's Supreme Court "opened a probe into the ex-king's financial dealings earlier this year" amid allegations he "received millions of dollars in kickbacks from Saudi Arabia during the construction of a high-speed railway there by a Spanish consortium."

Housing

Freddie Mac SVP Charlotte Catalfo Profiled.

HousingWire (8/3, 23K) reports that as the holidays "ramped up in early December 2019," Freddie Mac SVP Charlotte Catalfo had been watching a "small but worrisome health crisis escalating halfway across the globe." Once SARS-CoV-2 "hopscoched to Italy, she knew that it was time to put Freddie Mac's emergency continuity plan into gear." It was Catalfo's responsibility to "figure out how to ensure uninterrupted work with investors, lenders, multifamily property owners and homeowners if business as usual was thrown off track."

FHFA Extends Timeline For Purchase Of Qualified GSE Loans In Forbearance.

DS News (8/3, Wharton) reports the FHFA "approved an extension of its temporary policy allowing the acquisition of certain single-family mortgages in forbearance that satisfy Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac-established eligibility requirements." The policy extension "applies to loans originated through August 31." The Borrower Protection Program, a joint effort of the FHFA and CFPB, was "instituted earlier in the year in order to ensure 'borrowers are protected during the coronavirus national emergency and facilitate related information sharing.'" Thanks to the data sharing, DS News says, the FHFA "will be positioned to meet its obligations under the so-called 'QM Patch.'"

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (8/3, Hollier, Subscription Publication) says the policy, which was "initially announced" on April 22, has been "the source of controversy." While the policy was "intended to deal with the conundrum of loans that were properly underwritten but then went into COVID-19-related forbearance before they could be sold to Fannie or Freddie," the FHFA "also required that the enterprises impose steep loan level price adjustments on these mortgages 'to limit the risk of losses to the two companies.'" According to IMF, "Those fees – 5% for first-time buyers and 7% for everyone else – have been widely criticized in the industry. Last month, economists at the Urban Institute estimated that the high LLPAs would translate into roughly 255,000 borrowers, mostly people of color, being deprived of access to a mortgage." Providing additional coverage of the policy extension are National Mortgage Professional (8/3) and RISMedia (8/3, 2K).

Housing Action Illinois Announces Partnership With Freddie Mac For Uniform Counseling Data.

HousingWire (8/3, Roha, 23K) reports Housing Action Illinois on Monday announced that it is collaborating with Freddie Mac to create a uniform data standard for housing counselors. According to HousingWire, "The new uniform data set will affect more than 1,600 HUD-approved housing counseling agencies and will help the industry better quantify and qualify its work, according to David Young, director of capacity building at Housing Action Illinois." Freddie Mac VP of Housing Insights and Solutions Cindy Waldron said, "We look forward to the launch of a new, more comprehensive data set that more accurately captures the work being done by housing counseling agencies across the country. By taking on this ambitious project, Housing Action Illinois is helping us better understand what housing counseling agencies are accomplishing and what they need to accomplish."

Freddie Mac: Multifamily Lending Likely To Fall 20% To 40% This Year.

National Mortgage News (8/3) reports, "Multifamily mortgage originations could be down between 20% and 40% this year, according to Freddie Mac. Where originations ultimately fall in that broad range will depend on the economic recovery and how well the coronavirus is contained." Freddie Mac Multifamily VP Steve Guggenmos explained, "The economic challenges brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic will have a meaningful impact on the multifamily market in 2020. The industry entered the current recession on solid footing and is well-positioned to absorb the impacts of the recession due to substantial growth over the past several years." Although Freddie's volume rebounded and rose above normal levels in June, NMN says that the "late second quarter increase should not be read as a sign of optimism for the multifamily lending market as a whole." Freddie said its own volume trends are "not reflective of the overall market trends" due to its unique role as a GSE.

GSEs' Portfolios Grow By Double-Digit Percentages in June, As Delinquencies Keep Rising.

DS News (8/3, Wharton), Freddie Mac reported its total mortgage portfolio grew at a compound rate of 14.2% annually in June 2020, while Fannie Mae reported its portfolio grew 13.4%. Both GSEs' delinquency rates rose. Freddie's single-family delinquency rate rose from 0.81% in May to 2.48% in June, while its multifamily delinquency rate rose from 0.09% in May to 0.10% in June. Fannie Mae's multifamily delinquency rate surged 53 basis points over the same period, and Fannie "reported its conventional single-family serious delinquency rate increased 176 basis points to 2.65% in June."

MBA: Mortgage Loans In Forbearance Fall For The Seventh Consecutive Week.

National Mortgage Professional (8/3) reports the number of mortgages in forbearance has fallen for a seventh consecutive week, according to the MBA's latest Forbearance and Call Volume Survey. The number of loans in forbearance fell from 7.74% to 7.67% in the latest week. MBA estimates 3.8 million American homeowners are in forbearance plans. The share of GSE loans in forbearance fell for an eighth consecutive week, dipping from 5.49% to 5.41%. Meanwhile, "Ginnie Mae loans in forbearance increased by 1 basis point to 10.28%, and the forbearance share for portfolio loans and private-label securities (PLS) decreased by 16 basis points to 10.37%."

National Mortgage News (8/3) reports MBA Chief Economist Mike Fratantoni said, "We are now seeing a notable pattern developing over the past two weeks. The forbearance share is decreasing for GSE loans but has slightly increased for Ginnie Mae loans. ... The job market has cooled somewhat over the past few weeks, with layoffs increasing and other indications that the economic rebound may be losing some steam because of the rising COVID-19 cases throughout the country." According to Fratantoni, "It is therefore not surprising to see this situation first impact the Ginnie Mae segment of the market. The higher level of Ginnie Mae loans in forbearance will increase the amount of payments that servicers must advance. We continue to monitor servicer liquidity during these challenging times."

FHFA Using RiskSpan's Edge Cloud Platform To Analyze GSEs' MBS.

Mortgage Professional America (8/3, Mendoza) reports the FHFA "is now using RiskSpan's cloud platform to analyze agency mortgage-backed securities issued by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." According to MPA, the Edge cloud platform gives the FHFA "instant access to agency MBS pool- and loan-level data through the cloud – enabling advanced prepayment analytics across the mortgage securities space." It also allows the FHFA to "query loan-level data via RiskSpan's API."

Incenter Taking Bids On $6B MSR Package.

National Mortgage News (8/3) reports Incenter Mortgage Advisor is "accepting bids on a nearly $6.3 billion offering on behalf of an unnamed seller," as the MSR market is "seeing an increase in activity." According to NMN, "The transaction is at least the second large, seasoned MSR deal seen since the government-sponsored enterprises suspended bulk purchases of loans more than six months old in early May." The seller "would prefer to have the MSRs trade no later than Aug. 31. That date is the current deadline for some of the GSEs' temporary coronavirus-related relief measures, including a moratorium on foreclosures." NMN says, "The measure that allows the GSEs to purchase these loans previously was scheduled to expire July 31, but the GSEs' regulator and conservator, the Federal Housing Finance Agency, extended it at the last minute on Friday."

GSEs Update FAQs On Temporary Appraisal Policies.

Valuation Review (8/3) reports, "In response to COVID-19, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have provided temporary guidance to appraisers on several policy areas, as well as new FAQs providing additional information on the temporary policies, according to a recent release from Fannie." Fannie said that an appraiser "must provide an original photograph of the front of the subject property," but for all other photos, "the appraiser may provide photographs from credible secondary data source(s). Although not required, the presence of a comparable photos page, with images, may be necessary to allow the appraisal report to pass automated system requirements."

Appraisal Webinar Featuring Scott Reuter Scheduled For August 18.

According to Appraisal Buzz (7/30), in a webinar on August 18 at 2 pm ET, Freddie Mac Director of Valuation Scott Reuter will join Fannie Mae Director of Collateral Policy Lyle Radke, NAHB VP Jessica Lynch, National Association of Appraisers President Craig Morley, and Metro-West Appraisal Company LLC Chief Appraiser Greg Stephens to discuss "The State of the Industry."

NAFCU Adds Calabria, Hood To 2020 Virtual Congressional Caucus Lineup.

According to Credit Union Insight (8/4), the National Association of Federally-Insured Credit Unions has added FHFA Director Mark Calabria and NCUA Chairman Rodney Hood to the lineup of speakers at its next Virtual Congressional Caucus, which "kicks off in a little over a month." Calabria "plays a critical role in housing finance reform initiatives." At last year's caucus, "Calabria discussed the GSEs' conservatorship and capital reserves in a conversation with NAFCU President and CEO Dan Berger."

CLPHA Voices Opposition To Elimination Of AFFH Rule In Letter To HUD Secretary.

HousingWire (8/3, 23K) reports that in a joint letter to HUD Secretary Carson on Monday, "the Council of Large Public Housing Authorities and its counsel Reno and Cavanaugh expressed opposition to the actions of the Trump administration regarding the Affirmatively Furthering Fair Housing rule, asking the organization to 'withdraw its racist and illegal attempt to eliminate the rule.'" The CLPHA "said it was the responsibility of HUD to administer the Fair Housing Act and further fair housing – stating the obligation to do so is an 'integral tool to address historic discrimination' in the industry."

Agency Servicing Transfers Sluggish In Q2.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (8/3, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) reports agency MSR transfers "slowed dramatically" in Q2 amid a "historic flood of refinance activity and economic uncertainty" that "sent buyers to the sidelines." According to IMF, "Some buyers may have been constrained by reduced funding for acquisitions as well as uncertainty about how to price MSRs in a tumultuous market. A significant number of mid-sized and smaller lenders that typically sell servicing separately when they deliver loans to agency mortgage-backed securities ended up retaining the processing rights." Around $57.57 billion of bulk servicing transfers settled in Q2, a decrease of 46.6% from Q1. The Ginnie Mae market "was hit particularly hard, with bulk transfers crashing 81.0% to just $11.63 billion. According to the agency's disclosures, there were no bulk transfers in June."

Black Knight: Low Rates Give Homebuying Power A Boost.

DS News (8/3, Wharton) reports, "An estimated 4.1 million homeowners were in active COVID-19 forbearance plans as of July 21, according to new data from Black Knight Inc. This represents 7.8% of all active mortgages." Black Knight also "reported that last month's record-breaking low mortgage rates contributed to creating the most affordable average-priced homes since 2016," with homebuying power up 10% from last year. According to Black Knight, this means the average homebuyer can afford $32,000 more house than a year earlier for the same mortgage payment. National Mortgage News (8/3, Centopani) reports Black Knight's Ben Graboske said, "Falling rates and improved affordability have helped to spur home-buying demand, and therefore purchase origination volume, which has provided a much-needed backstop for home prices in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic."

Mortgage News Daily (8/3, Swanson) says, "The last report from Freddie Mac put its 30-year fixed rate mortgage (FRM) at 2.99 percent, up 1 basis point from the all-time low." Black Knight "says that has made home affordability the best in four years. As of mid-July, it required only 19.8 percent of the nation's median monthly income to make the mortgage payment on an average priced home using that 30-year FRM and a 20 percent down payment."

J.D. Power Releases 2020 Mortgage Servicer Satisfaction Study.

Mortgage Professional America (8/3, Jarvis) reports that J.D. Power's 2020 U.S. Primary Mortgage Servicer Satisfaction Study was "conducted in March and April, when homeowners' anxiety around COVID-19 was putting unprecedented pressure on servicers." Quicken Loans was the highest-ranking mortgage servicer for the seventh year in a row, with a score of 854. Just behind Quicken were Regions Mortgage (846) and Huntington National Bank (827). According to MPA, "J.D. Power found that most customers feel they receive either too little or too much communication from their lender. Those that provide no communication received an overall average client satisfaction score of 767; those that provided what is considered to be too much communication, defined in the study as 11 or more touchpoints in the previous 12 months, fared only slightly better, scoring 785. The sweet spot appears to be three to four communications per year."

MBA: Multifamily Originations Exceeded $364B In 2019.

Mortgage Professional America (8/3, Mendoza) reports that the MBA found approximately 2,589 multifamily lenders originated $364.4 billion in new mortgages last year for apartment buildings. Before the pandemic struck, "MBA forecasted multifamily originations would jump 9% to $395 billion in 2020, beating 2019's record. The pandemic, however, may change that." According to MBA VP Jamie Woodwell, "Interest rates are now lower than they were a year ago, and data has yet to show any marked changes in property incomes or values. Demand for refinancing because of low rates, particularly for government-backed loans, is unlikely to overcome a drop in sales transactions, which means multifamily borrowing and lending is likely to drop this year." MPA says, "By dollar volume, 38% of the total multifamily mortgages originated in 2019 went to Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. The top five multifamily lenders by dollar volume were JP Morgan Chase & Company, Wells Fargo, CBRE, Berkadia, and Walker & Dunlop."

Ginnie Mae Approvals At Low Levels This Fiscal Year.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (8/3, Muolo, Subscription Publication) reports, "There was a time when nonbanks and depositories were lining up to get their Ginnie Mae approvals so they could issue and service MBS on government-backed product. Not so much of late, especially in the era of COVID-19." IMF says that with two months remaining in the fiscal year, Ginnie has approved just six issuers, and "seven shops are waiting for a greenlight." By contrast, "back in 2013, 71 lenders received approval to issue securities, followed by 2014 when the tally fell to 53. In 2015, 41 shops were approved." According to IMF, "The lower readings might suggest a lack of interest in FHA/VA lending but that's hardly the case given the continued strong production numbers."

Best Western CEO Says That The Industry's Viability Is Dependent On Congress Passing New Coronavirus Relief Legislation.

Skift (8/4, Sperance, 5K) reports that the hotel industry in the US is "at a recovery impasse with rising coronavirus case counts across much of the country." According to Best Western CEO David Kong, the survival of the industry is dependent on the next coronavirus relief package from Congress. "What I'm afraid of is there could be massive defaults on not just [commercial mortgage-backed securities] but on all loans," Kong said during an interview on Monday. "You'd have the 2008 and 2009 financial crisis all over again. I think the problem is going to get easier as we go. We just need to buy ourselves time."

Census Bureau Data Shows Construction Spending Largely Flat In June.

Mortgage News Daily (8/3, Swanson) reports construction spending "held firm in June, inching down fractionally from the May level and increasing a bit compared to June 2019." The Census Bureau "said total spending during the month was at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $1.355 trillion, down 0.7 percent from the $1.365 trillion spending rate in May. On an annual basis the rate was up 0.1 percent." Unadjusted, there was "$123.377 billion spent compared to $117.226 billion the prior month. Spending for the first six months of the year was up 5.0 percent from the same period in 2019 at $667.920 billion." Private residential spending fell 1.5% to $553.17 billion, 0.8% below June 2019's rate. Single-family construction fell 3.6%. Multifamily construction "picked up some of the slack, rising 3.0 percent from May to $80.022 billion, but it was 2.1 percent lower than a year earlier."

Analysis: Closing Costs For Refis Average $5K, But Could Vary, According To Freddie Mac Data.

Bankrate (8/3, Lee, 311K) released a piece advising readers on how much it costs to refinance, saying that "average closing costs for a mortgage refinance are about $5,000, though costs vary according to the size of your loan and the state and county where you live, according to data from Freddie Mac."

Analysis: Borrowers Often Waste Money By Not Rate-Shopping.

Writing for Fintech Zoom (UK) (8/3), SuperMoney.com CEO Judie Simms says that although people "spend many hours poring over the specs and comps of a brand new residence, almost eight out of 10 debtors apply to just one mortgage lender, in line with a examine by the Shopper Monetary Safety Bureau." This could cost them, as a "2018 report by Freddie Mac revealed that debtors might decrease their rate of interest by 0.22% and save a median of $3,000 by evaluating 5 quotes from competing mortgage lenders."

Markets

10-Year Yield Ticks Down.

MarketWatch (8/4, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.536 percent.

Dollar Falters.

Reuters (8/4, Westbrook) reports, "A nascent rebound in the dollar paused on Tuesday, as investors weighed mixed but encouraging economic data against slow progress toward a U.S. government spending package and another week of rising coronavirus deaths." The dollar "had its worst month in a decade in July but began August with a bounce, pushing as high as $1.1695 per euro on Monday, 1.8% above last week's two-year low." That "had retraced a little by morning trade in Asia, leaving the dollar at $1.1755 on the euro and 93.574 against a basket of currencies – below a one-week top of 93.997 hit on Monday." The yen "also recovered some overnight losses to sit at 106.08 per dollar."

Gold Edges Lower.

Reuters (8/3) reports, "Gold prices edged lower on Tuesday as the dollar strengthened and risk appetite improved after positive U.S. economic data, while fears over surging coronavirus cases limited losses for the safe-haven metal." Spot gold "was down 0.2% at $1,973.54 per ounce by 0026 GMT," while US gold futures "rose 0.2% to $1,989.20."

Oil Falls.

Reuters (IND) (8/4, Paul) reports, "Oil prices eased on Tuesday amid concerns that a fresh wave of COVID-19 infections around the world will see a pickup in fuel demand stalling amid tighter lockdowns – just as major producers ramp up output." US West Texas Intermediate crude futures "eased 4 cents, or 0.1% to $40.97 a barrel at 0655 GMT, while Brent crude futures fell 11 cents, or 0.3% to $44.04 a barrel."

Cybersecurity

DHS, Commerce Department Collaborate To Combat Botnets.

MeriTalk (8/3, Weingarten) reports DHS and Commerce Department "released an update to their ongoing work to address botnets, automated and distributed attacks on the internet, which threaten the nation's internet infrastructure." The president "issued Executive Order (EO) 13800, 'Strengthening the Cybersecurity of Federal Networks and Critical Infrastructure,' in May of 2017." The EO "called for 'resilience against botnets and other automated, distributed threats' and directed the Secretaries of Commerce and Homeland Security to lead a process in line with this effort." According to the update, the National Institute of Standards and Technology issued "guidance for Internet of Things (IoT) device manufacturers...which define baseline cybersecurity capabilities that manufacturers can voluntarily adopt for IoT devices." The status update said, "Botnets remain a significant threat. Current malicious applications of botnets remain relevant, and attackers continue to devise novel nefarious applications."

US Issues Alert About Malware Used By Chinese Government.

Bloomberg (8/3, Sebenius, 4.73M) reports the US government "issued an alert Monday that a type of malware seen frequently by security researchers in the last decade is tied to the Chinese government, the latest in a series of American warnings about China's cyber capabilities this summer." According to the alert, DHS' Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), the FBI, and DOD "identified a malware variant used by Chinese government cyber-actors, which is known as Taidoor." The purpose of the alert, "which contained no information about the prevalence of the malware or who has been targeted, is to 'enable network defense and reduce exposure to Chinese government malicious cyber-activity.'" According to a US Cyber Command official, who requested anonymity as is the agency's policy, "the Chinese government continues to leverage it in ongoing espionage to gain intelligence."

CyberScoop (8/3, Vavra) reports it wasn't "immediately clear if Taidoor was being used in any recent or ongoing espionage campaigns from China." But of the four malware samples Cyber Command "shared on VirusTotal, only two are detected by any engines." Even in the cases "where the private sector does have protections related to Taidoor campaigns, the protections aren't widespread – only FireEye and BitDefender protect against some parts of the Taidoor upload." A CISA official "told CyberScoop the announcement was made to enhance defenses against Chinese hacking." The CISA official told CyberScoop, "CISA, FBI, and DOD are publishing this malware analysis report about the Taidoor variant to enable network defense and reduce exposure to Chinese government malicious cyber activity." ZDNet (8/3, Cimpanu, 299K) reports US Cyber Command "said the malware has been around and silently deployed on victim networks for at least 12 years, since 2008." Also providing similar reporting on the story is Fortune (8/3, 3.91M).

University of Texas Warns Donors, Contacts Possibly Affected By Ransomware Attack.

The Austin (TX) American Statesman (8/3, Choi, Subscription Publication, 343K) reports University of Texas officials "said Monday that the university recently learned of a security breach that affected some of the school's donors and fundraising contacts." According to a post on the university's website, Blackbaud, a company that "provides fundraising software to nonprofits, universities and other organizations, was the target of a ransomware attack in May." University of Texas officials "said some of its donors and contacts were told about the breach on Monday, and informed them that their information could have been accessed because of the cyberattack." University officials said in the memo, "Publicly available information such as names, addresses, phone numbers, emails and birthdays may have been accessed. No credit card information, bank information, or social security numbers were accessed by the cybercriminal or compromised."

CISA Chief Wants Younger, More Experienced Hackers In Federal Government.

Federal Computer Week (8/3, Johnson, 263K) reports Chris Krebs, Director of the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency "said federal agencies could do much to improve their cybersecurity talent pool if they moved away from restrictive General Schedule hiring practices and were more open to bringing on younger candidates." During an August 3 online discussion, former Rep. Jane Harmon (D-CA) "asked Krebs...if CISA had the staffing it needed to 'stay ahead of the 17-year-olds.'" Krebs "argued that in the digital domain, practical experience quickly outstrips age and even credentials in importance." He said, "You know at this point, particularly in cyber, I'm not sure it matters if you're 45 or 17, which speaks to the ways that we need to evolve our hiring practices."

Pentagon Considers Adopting Zero-trust Security Approach.

C4ISR & Networks (8/3, Eversden) reports the telework environment "caused by the coronavirus pandemic has accelerated conversations about implementing zero-trust network architectures at the Department of Defense." In recent weeks, several top IT officials "have said on virtual events that their departments are discussing concrete steps to move toward zero-trust architectures and away from using the phrase as just buzzword for cybersecurity." Zero-trust is a "network architecture that inherently distrusts the user and continuously verifies the identity of the user accessing data." Vice Adm. Nancy Norton, director of the Defense Information Systems Agency, which manages and secures DOD networks across the globe, said, "The need for zero-trust has been highlighted by the COVID-19 pandemic." She announced July 15 a "plan to release a zero-trust framework by the end of the year." Conversations about "implementing zero-trust network architectures have been facilitated in part by the hundreds of thousands of DOD employees using the department's remote collaboration platform, known as the Commercial Virtual Remote Environment."

CISA Releases Updated TIC 3.0 Network Security Guidance.

ExecutiveGov (8/3, Rivers) reports the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) has "issued an update to its Trusted Internet Connections (TIC) guidance along with documents containing a security capabilities catalog, a program guidebook and reference architecture." CISA "said Friday the TIC 3.0 core guidance incorporates public input on the draft documents released in December." According to CISA, TIC 3.0 includes "use cases as well as recommendations on pilot program execution, implementation approaches and other strategies for remote work settings." CISA plans to issue "final versions of documents such as the Use Case Handbook, Overlay Handbook, Branch Office Use Case and Traditional TIC Use Case later this summer."

Op-Ed: Congress Has A Shot At Correcting Trump's Central Mistake On Cybersecurity.

In an op-ed in The Hill (8/3, 2.98M), Charlie Mitchell, co-founder and editor of InsideCybersecurity.com, writes, "Coordination is king in cyber, and yet that's what the Trump White House decided to do without in 2018, when then-National Security Advisor John Bolton abolished a White House cybersecurity coordinator position as a bureaucratic redundancy...it was Bolton's call to eliminate the cyber post after former coordinator Rob Joyce decided he wanted to leave the Trump White House." He notes, "The National Cyber Director provision is in the House version but didn't make the cut in the Senate." He concludes, "With negotiations underway on the final version of the must-pass national defense bill, lawmakers have one more chance this year to position the US for confronting a cybersecurity challenge that grows more dangerous at every turn...Creating a national cyber director is about as close to a consensus recommendation among cyber experts as we're likely to see."

NSA Reports On New Cyber Vulnerability In Computers.

ExecutiveGov (8/3, Martin) reports NSA has "issued a report on a new cyber vulnerability that threatens certain systems present within DOD and other organizations." NSA "said Thursday the BootHole vulnerability allows cyber actors to get through the Secure Boot security standard that makes devices boot only with software trusted by original manufacturers." Cyber terrorists may use "this vulnerability to tamper with a device's boot process." Devices running "on Linux or Windows 8 and above may be affected by this vulnerability." NSA provided "two mitigation options in the 'Mitigate the GRUB2 BootHole Vulnerability' report for users of Linux, an operating system that uses the Grand Unified Bootloader 2 or GRUB2 affected by BootHole." The report "advises Linux users to update the boot components of endpoints."

Financial Reform

Congress More Likely To Address Bank Capital Requirements In Future Pandemic Relief.

American Banker (8/4, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "It may be getting too late in the current stimulus talks for Congress to ease a Dodd-Frank Act capital requirement, but the measure sought by large institutions and the Federal Reserve could make a comeback in future pandemic relief, observers said." Congress is unlikely to address the "idea of weakening the minimum capital benchmark known as the Collins amendment" in the Phase 4 stimulus bill, "with Democrats opposed to changes and lawmakers focused on more immediate economic effects from the pandemic. But with deposits expected to keep growing, and Congress shifting from economic rescue to recovery, easing the capital rule could come back into play."

Federal Reserve

Fed's Role As World's Backup Lender Has Increased During Pandemic.

The Wall Street Journal (8/3, Ng, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that while the Federal Reserve has sought to avoid being the world's backup lender, amid the coronavirus pandemic, the central bank's global power and influence have increased.

Evans Says Unemployment High, Outlook Difficult.

Reuters (8/3, Saphir) reports Chicago Fed President Charles Evans on Monday called for more stimulus spending, saying aggregate demand could fall as unemployment benefits expire and an eviction moratorium ends. Evans said, "If we go very long without somehow addressing the reduction and evaporation of that support, I think it's going to show up in lower aggregate demand, and that would be very costly for the economy, individuals, households, people." Evans' baseline forecast shows the US unemployment rate at 9.5% by the end of 2020 and 6.5% by the end of 2021, "well above where it ought to be in a healthy economy." He added the worse scenarios are "equally" likely. While he felt monetary policy "is about where it can be," he stressed that "it's really fiscal policy that needs to be addressing this."

Bullard: Recovery Likely Slowed In July, Will Remain Bumpy Going Forward.

Reuters (8/3, Marte) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard said Monday that the US economic recovery following the COVID-19-induced recession probably slowed in July and is unlikely to be steady going forward. Bullard said, "I think the slowdown in July would be consistent with the idea that we shouldn't expect a completely smooth transition as you go forward because this is a crisis and there's going to be ups and downs." Bullard "said putting too much emphasis on the need for a vaccine could lead more consumers to stay home, prompt an increase in business failures and cause severe damage to the economy." He added, "You don't want to cause a depression while you're causing people to expect a vaccine to suddenly come on the scene and save the day."

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Crapo Urges Regulators To Extend Relief For Banks, Renters.

Politico (8/3, Warmbrodt, 4.29M) reports Senate Banking Committee Chair Mike Crapo (R-ID) "is calling on federal agencies to extend economic relief measures that Congress established in March, as lawmakers and the Trump administration struggle to reach a deal on the next round of aid." In a letter to bank and housing regulators, Crapo "urged the officials to use their existing authority to continue eviction protections and looser lending rules – in effect doing an end run around Congress." Crapo wrote to the heads of the Federal Reserve, Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., National Credit Union Administration, Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the Federal Housing Finance Agency.

Crypto Industry Asks OCC For More Fintech-Bank Guidance.

Law360 (8/3, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports, "The Digital Asset Regulatory and Legal Alliance, a group which includes founders and senior legal counsel in the fintech space, has told the U.S. Office of the Comptroller of the Currency that more concrete guidance is needed on fintech partnerships with national banks, as the agency solicits comments from the industry on existing regulations governing technology in banking.”

Meanwhile, the CoinTelegraph (8/3, 14K) reports many “major players” in the crypto industry have written in response to the OCC’s request for feedback on potential rules, “asking the regulator to expand the authorizations it gives banks to handle cryptocurrencies and use blockchain technology.” Silvergate Bank asked the OCC to allow banks to use blockchain “to send money to each other and between client accounts,” while crypto lobbying group the Blockchain Association said the OCC should “allow banks to settle payments and accept deposits in dollar stablecoins that meet criteria defined by the OCC.”

BofA Sued Over Alleged Unauthorized Escrow Account Creation.

Law360 (8/3, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall that Bank of America “was hit Monday with a proposed class action from a North Carolina resident who alleges the bank has engaged in systematic mistreatment of home loan borrowers, enrolling her and others in mortgage escrow accounts without proper authorization.” The plaintiff “accused Bank of America of improperly opening an unwanted escrow account for her and then resisting her attempts to close it, an experience she alleged reflected a broader set of malignant bank practices affecting potentially thousands of other customers.”

Citi Accused Of Discrimination, Retaliation By Former Employee.

Bloomberg (8/3, Karsh, 4.73M) reports Citigroup “is being sued by an employee in a unit that serves hedge funds who says he was demoted for reporting harassment complaints about a new hire and discriminated against based on his sexual orientation.” Thomas Krauss, who led the capital introduction group for the Americas, “accuses Citigroup of retaliating against him after he raised questions about the past behavior of the hire in its prime-brokerage unit.” Krauss “also alleges that he was denied a promotion to managing director because of his sexual orientation and for extra work he did on behalf of the company’s LGBTQ initiatives.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Good News About What Human Genius Can Still Do.” The New York Times (8/3, 18.61M) says in an editorial that over the past week, we have seen examples that, despite the pandemic, “humankind persists in devoting extraordinary talent, science and treasure to decoding the mysteries of our universe.” The Times cites NASA’s launch of a Mars rover, Elon Musk’s SpaceX mission, and archaeologists’ recent discovery at Stonehenge as “some good news on what human genius can do [that] provided a welcome diversion from all the harrowing news about the pandemic and toxic politics.” To the Times, “there’s something uniquely compelling about our need to learn what we can about the universe, and to do that not for some practical or commercial reason, but simply out of curiosity, out of wonder.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Anti-China Strategy At Home Will Hurt U.S. Companies Around The World.” A Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M) editorial says that while “having an experienced U.S. firm control” TikTok “is preferable to shutting it down or accepting the current security risks,” President Trump “has in essence conducted a shakedown, threatening a shutdown and then providing his blessing to a private business deal once it pleased him.” The Post calls this “an affront to free enterprise generally,” and “an affront to the American enterprise of preserving an open outlook toward the world – and encouraging other nations to welcome U.S. investors.”

“Even Republicans Found A Trump Nominee Too Bigoted. Trump Appointed Him Anyway.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M) writes that “it was clear that enough members of the committee – Republican and Democratic – knew enough about [withdrawn Pentagon nominee Anthony] Tata and his bigoted views to realize he was completely unsuitable for this critical job.” President Trump responded by “doubling down on bigotry while showing total contempt for the US Senate.” To the Post, “Tata’s warped worldview and deranged conspiracy theories disqualify him from any position of federal responsibility, as senators understood. Will those senators now allow Mr. Trump to run them over and make a mockery of the Senate’s constitutional role?”

“U.S. Park Police At Work: Shooting An Unarmed Man. Clubbing Protesters. Resisting Body Cameras.” The Washington Post (8/3, 14.2M) editorializes that “given its execrable recent record, you’d think the Park Police would be doing everything in its power to regain the public’s trust and confidence.” The Post argues that “body-worn cameras, standard equipment at many major police departments across the country, would be a useful first step to signal that the Park Police is determined to make itself accountable for its actions. A bill to mandate their use for all federal police officers is included in a legislative police package introduced in the House of Representatives. Its passage would be a tonic – whether or not the Park Police thinks it is ‘in a position’ to comply.”

Wall Street Journal.

“School-Opening Extortion.” A Wall Street Journal (8/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes the American Federation of Teachers for supporting strikes over school reopenings. The Journal also argues that teachers unions should not call for the closure of private schools in districts that are remote-only. Instead, the Journal says parents should be given their taxpayer dollars to decide where and how to educate their children.

“Will Joe Biden Duck The Debates?” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) takes issue with suggestions from some that Joe Biden should skip the three scheduled presidential debates. The Journal argues that voters should see how Biden handles himself under the pressure of a debate, and says that if he skips them, voters can conclude that his aides are seeking to protect him amid doubts about his cognitive skills.

“Peace Progress In Yemen.” A Wall Street Journal (8/3, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial welcomes progress towards peace in Yemen, which it argues would not have been possible without the Trump Administration’s maximum-pressure campaign against Iran.

Last LaughsLate Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Fallon: [On Trump announcing he might ban the app TikTok] "Well, guys, with the coronavirus surging and the economy cratering, President Trump is turning his attention to what is really important. ... What is he doing? Is he the President of the United States, or the preacher from 'Footloose'?"

Jimmy Fallon: "Apparently, this is a very real national security threat: the Chinese government knowing which Americans can and cannot dance."

Jimmy Fallon: "I am sure it has everything to do with national security and nothing to do with the TikTok teens who sabotaged his Tulsa rally."

Jimmy Fallon: "At first, Trump was confused because he thought TikTok was the name of '60 Minutes.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump is playing hardball with China. If he bans TikTok, China will only be able to spy on our phones, TVs, cars, and refrigerators. So, that's where he draws the line."

Jimmy Fallon: "After months of Trump using Dr. Fauci as a human pinata, Trump is now going after his other top medical expert, Dr. Deborah Birx. ... Dr. Birx has had it. Today she took off one of her scarves and started wrapping it around her knuckles. It's time to Birx box."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump has criticized Dr. Fauci and Dr. Birx, which means somewhere, Dr. Oz waiting by a phone, like, 'This is my time to shine! Let's go!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "With the 2020 election right around the corner, people are worried Trump's trying to weaken the Post Office to delay mail-in voting. ... Trump's attacking TikTok and the Post Office. You gotta give him credit: Only he could alienate 18-year-olds and 88-year-olds in the same day."

Seth Meyers: "Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin said yesterday that extending the $600 weekly unemployment benefit leads to, quote, 'certain cases where we're paying people more to stay home than work.' Well, if you think that's bad, buddy, wait 'til you find out what we're paying [President Trump] to shank golf balls into the woods."

Seth Meyers: "White House coronavirus task force coordinator Dr. Deborah Birx said today that we've entered a new phase in the fight against coronavirus. That's right, the task force has now moved on to the 'could care less' phase."

Seth Meyers: "Health officials said yesterday they fear President Trump will push the Food and Drug Administration to approve a coronavirus vaccine before it's deemed safe in order to have it ready before the election. Cool, cool. A once-in-a-lifetime pandemic, and they're going to serve up a vaccine that they made on an episode of 'Nailed It.'"

Seth Meyers: "Former Vice President Joe Biden is expected to pick his running mate this week and make a formal announcement later this month. Then and only then will the Obamas turn their phones back on."

Treasury in the News

White House May Be Open To Compromise On Unemployment Benefits.

The Washington Post (7/14, Stein, Van Dam, Rosenberg, 14.2M) reports senior Trump Administration officials have started indicating "their willingness to approve a narrow extension of...enhanced unemployment benefits." President Trump and Administration officials have for months "argued the $600-per-week unemployment bonus provides a disincentive to work and should be scrapped so that more Americans return to work as part of the economic recovery." However, "with the benefits soon set to expire and the economy showing new signs of strain," those officials "have begun opening the door to accepting a narrower version of what Congress previously approved." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin "said on CNBC last week that the administration's priority was ensuring that future benefits amount to 'no more' than 100 percent of a worker's prior wages." The Post says Mnuchin's comments "surprised some congressional Republicans who thought he shared their strong opposition to extending the benefits."

Bloomberg (7/14, Pickert, Sasso, Sheehey, 4.73M) says, "Policy makers in Washington are at a standstill in their talks for more stimulus, and in particular whether to include an extension of the extra unemployment benefits." Democratic lawmakers "want to extend the program, called Federal Pandemic Unemployment Compensation. Republicans and the Trump administration have called for capping the amount of money jobless Americans can receive, seeing it as a disincentive to return to work."

WPost Analysis Finds "Faulty Data Collection" In PPP Disclosure.

The Washington Post (7/14, A1, O'Connell, Brown, Rich, Gregg, 14.2M) reports the PPP disclosure data "contains numerous errors that cast doubt on the Trump administration's jobs claims and obscure the real economic impact of the program, according to a Washington Post analysis and interviews with bankers and borrowers." The Post says its "analysis of data on 4.9 million loans released last week by the Small Business Administration shows that many companies are reported to have 'retained' far more workers than they employ. Likewise, in some cases the agency's jobs claim for entire industries surpasses the total number of workers in those sectors. And for more than 875,000 borrowers, the data shows that zero jobs were supported or no information is listed at all." The Post adds in "numerous cases, the listed number of jobs retained exceeded the total employment at the company, according to interviews with individual loan recipients." Such issues "complicate efforts to assess the impact of the program. The Trump administration has declared the program an 'indisputable success,' but that declaration is premature, experts say, cautioning that economists will need much more time and information to assess the results of taxpayers' significant investment."

O'Brien: PPP Shows Mnuchin, Administration Officials To Be "Inefficient And Inept." In his column for Bloomberg Opinion (7/14), Timothy O'Brien says the PPP, "a $669 billion effort that represents one of the biggest chunks of the $2.7 trillion bailout, keeps offering evidence that" Trump Administration officials "are pretty inefficient and inept." O'Brien says the "primary goal of the PPP program was to help entrepreneurs keep workers on their payrolls so they could ride out what policymakers hoped would be a relatively brief downturn. Protecting jobs to keep small businesses afloat was what it was all about." However, the federal government, "captained in this effort by Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, doesn't really know whether borrowers who received bailout money through the Small Business Administration used it to cover workers' wages. And why not?" O'Brien argues younger Americans "will have to contend with the realities and shortcomings of the bailout long after Mnuchin has left the Treasury Department. He's given no indication that matters to him."

Calabria Applauds Mnuchin, FSOC's Decision To Review Risks In Secondary Mortgage Market.

MarketWatch (7/14, Passy, 1.67M) reports that the Financial Stability Oversight Council (FSOC) "said Tuesday that it will begin a review of the secondary mortgage market" to determine "what risks activities in the secondary mortgage market pose to the stability of the broader financial system" and identify ways that regulators can mitigate these risks. In response, FHFA Director Mark Calabria said, "As demonstrated by the 2008 financial crisis and again by COVID-19, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac must be well capitalized in order to support the mortgage market during a stressed environment." American Banker (7/14, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports that "little detail was provided" about the review, but it "likely includes a focus on Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." Calabria also said, "I applaud Secretary Mnuchin and the Financial Stability Oversight Council for initiating an activities-based review of the secondary mortgage market."

Senate Democrats: Minority Communities Should Have Easier Access To Federal Funding.

Reuters (7/14, Saphir) reports Sens. Catherine Cortez Masto (D-NV), Chris Van Hollen (D-MD), and Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) called on Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell "to ease the terms of the Fed's lending facility for state and local governments to allow more to tap it," citing the "particularly sharp impact that cuts to government jobs and services would have on Black Americans." According to Reuters, "So far only one state, Illinois, has borrowed from the facility, launched in May as one of nearly a dozen Fed programs aimed at nursing hard-hit segments of the financial markets and the economy during the crisis." The Senators, in a letter sent earlier this week, wrote, "Failing to provide necessary aid to state and local governments not only threatens the stability of communities across the country, it would also have a disproportionate impact on women, Black, and Hispanic workers, who are overrepresented in public sector jobs."

McConnell Says Details On New COVID-19 Relief Package To Roll Out Next Week.

The Washington Post (7/14, Mascaro, 14.2M) reports Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell "said Tuesday he'll begin to roll out details of the new COVID-19 relief package to senators as soon as next week and suggested it will include new funding for school reopenings, some unemployment benefits and money for health care providers." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin in recent days "has been reaching out to GOP senators ahead of negotiations with Democrats, who already approved a $3 trillion House bill." Congress returns Monday "for two weeks to consider fresh coronavirus relief as the Trump administration has been unable to halt the virus' deepening spread across the country."

USPS Documents Cite Major Changes For Agency, Slower Delivery Of Mail.

The Washington Post (7/14, Bogage, 14.2M) reports new Postmaster General Louis DeJoy "established major operational changes Monday that could slow down mail delivery, warning employees the agency would not survive unless it made 'difficult' changes to cut costs." But critics "say such a philosophical sea change would sacrifice operational efficiency and cede its competitive edge to UPS, FedEx and other private sector rivals." Congress "authorized the USPS to borrow an additional $10 billion from the Treasury Department for emergency operations in an early coronavirus relief bill," but USPS officials "have yet to access the money over disagreements with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who attached terms on the loan that would turn over operations of much of the Postal Service to his department."

Dunford Reportedly Withdraws From Consideration As Chair Of Panel Overseeing COVID-19

Spending.

The Washington Post (7/14, Werner, 14.2M) reports, "Former Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman Joseph F. Dunford Jr. has removed himself from consideration to chair the Congressional Oversight Commission, a key mechanism created by Congress in March that...tasked with overseeing the $500 billion Treasury and Federal Reserve fund created by the Cares Act to lend money to corporations, municipalities and others." The panel is supposed to be comprised of five members, but it has not had a chairperson since it was created. The article says Dunford is at least the second individual to inform "Congress they would not take the post, and his decision is a major setback for the commission and efforts to find someone to lead it. Under the terms of the Cares Act, the chair of the bipartisan five-member commission must be appointed jointly by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.)." It is still unclear why Dunford withdrew.

The New York Times (7/14, Broadwater, 18.61M) reports that Dunford's withdrawal was "the latest setback in Congress's efforts to keep tabs on the distribution of hundreds of billions of dollars of federal pandemic aid." This move "leaves the committee without a driving force even as Congress prepares to debate another round of government assistance amid a worsening pandemic."

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Duehren, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) and Politico (7/14, Bresnahan, Cheney, 4.29M) also cover the story.

Business Groups Push Treasury, Fed To Create Small-Business Facility To Help With Liquidity Issues.

The Washington Business Journal (7/14, Medici, Subscription Publication, 882K) reports the Fed's "initial rollout of its $2.3 trillion CARES Act programs for businesses large and small has been met with a lackluster response so far – but now groups are looking at the Fed's unused CARES Act funding as a way to jumpstart new programs to bolster small businesses." The issue "is the $454 billion that Congress appropriated for use by the Fed to backstop potential losses in its programs," of which there is "still has about $259 billion remaining, according to a June 8 report by the Government Accountability Office." Business groups are now "pushing for the Fed and Treasury Department to create a small-business lending facility to solve short-term liquidity issues."

Leading National News

Trump "Not Interested In Talking To China" About Another Trade Deal.

Asked in an interview aired on the CBS Evening News (7/14, story 6, 0:45, O'Donnell, 4.31M) if Phase Two of trade talks with China is dead, President Trump said, "I'm not interested right now in talking to China. We made a great trade deal, but as soon as the deal was done, the ink wasn't even dry, and they hit us with the plague. Okay? So right now, I'm not interested in talking to China about another deal. I'm interested in doing other things with China."

Pompeo Urges "Free And Fair" Hong Kong Vote. AFP (7/14) reports Secretary of State Pompeo on Tuesday "urged free elections in Hong Kong after China said a primary held by the city's opposition parties may have breached a tough new security law." Pompeo tweeted, "Congratulations to Hong Kong's pan-democrats for a successful primary. The Legislative Council election in September should be equally free and fair."

The Washington Examiner (7/14, Smith, 448K) reports Beijing's top representative in Hong Kong "suggested that the weekend's pro-democracy primary was illegal and announced an investigation into the matter." China's liaison office called the informal election "nakedly illegal behavior" in a statement, asserting that it was in violation of the territory's new "national security" law.

A Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes Beijing's move to silence Hong Kong voters.

Poll: 65% Of Americans Hold China Accountable For Coronavirus Spread. Breitbart (7/14, Bleau, 673K) reports the "majority of Americans hold China accountable for the spread of the novel coronavirus and indicated that they plan to take concrete steps to demonstrate their protest of China, a Pipsay poll released Tuesday found." Pipsay surveyed 30,415 adults nationwide from July 4-6 and "found that the vast majority now place blame at the feet of China."

Speier Praises China's "Discipline" On Coronavirus. The Fox News (7/14, Dorman, 27.59M) website reports Rep. Jackie Speier (D-CA) "ripped the federal government's response to the coronavirus, comparing it unfavorably to the way China handled the disease." Speier told MSNBC on Monday, "You look at China with so much more in terms of population...and they're faring much better because they have shown the kind of discipline necessary to address this." She also "called out President Trump, accusing him of spreading false information and failing to provide leadership for the states."

Stilwell Warns Sanctions Possible In Response To China In South China Sea. Reuters (7/14, Pamuk, Brunnstrom) reports Assistant Secretary of State David Stilwell "warned on Tuesday that Washington could respond with sanctions against Chinese officials and enterprises involved in coercion in the South China Sea after the United States announced a tougher stance to Beijing's claims there." Stilwell said, "Nothing is off the table. ... There is room for that. This is a language the Chinese understand – demonstrative and tangible action."

China, meanwhile, on Tuesday accused the Administration of "trying to sow discord between China and the Southeast Asian countries with which it has long-standing territorial disputes" in the waters, the AP (7/14, Moritsugu) reports. In a statement on its website, the Chinese Embassy in Washington said, "The United States is not a country directly involved in the disputes. However, it has kept interfering in the issue. Under the pretext of preserving stability, it is flexing muscles, stirring up tension and inciting confrontation in the region."

The Los Angeles Times (7/14, Bengali, 4.64M) reports, "Seeking support in a budding cold war with Beijing, the U.S. is looking to Southeast Asia, where longstanding allies and security partners have clashed" with China in the South China Sea. But the Times says the "tougher U.S. stance illustrates a central challenge facing Washington as it tries to build pressure against China: While weaker Asian countries might recoil at China's aggressive behavior, none wants to be dragged into an open confrontation between two increasingly acrimonious powers."

NYTimes Analysis: US And China Are Moving Towards "Cold War." Under the headline "Caught In 'Ideological Spiral,' U.S. And China Drift Toward Cold War," the New York Times (7/14, Myers, Mozur, 18.61M) reports that "in a matter of weeks, the Trump administration has imposed sanctions over punitive policies in Hong Kong and China's western region of Xinjiang," and "took new measures to suffocate Chinese innovation by cutting it off from American technology and pushing allies to look elsewhere." The Times adds, "Then, on Monday, it tore up China's claims in the South China Sea, setting the stage for sharper confrontation." To the Times, these moves are "laying the foundation for a confrontation that will have many of the characteristics of the Cold War," and carries "the same risk of small disputes escalating into military conflict."

NYTimes To Move Part Of Hong Kong Office To Seoul. The New York Times (7/14, Grynbaum, 18.61M) reports the newspaper "said on Tuesday that it would relocate its Hong Kong-based digital news operation to Seoul, South Korea, a significant shift by an American news organization as China has stepped up its efforts to impede the affairs of the Asian metropolis."

China Sanctions Lockheed Martin Over Taiwan Arms Sales. The Washington Post (7/14, Fifield, 14.2M) reports that on Tuesday, China "said...that it would impose unspecified sanctions on Lockheed Martin, the gargantuan American defense contractor, in retaliation for the Trump administration's decision to continue supplying arms to Taiwan." Beijing "did not spell out what these measures would entail, and Lockheed Martin has very little exposure to China." However, the announcement, "coming just a day after China sanctioned four American officials, represents another salvo in the hostilities between Beijing and Washington." The CNN (7/14, Pham, 83.16M) website and Bloomberg (7/14, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also report the sanctions.

WTimes Analysis: China, Russia Making Global Power Plays. The Washington Times (7/14, Wolfgang, 492K) reports that "two recent standoffs with China and Russia have offered a sobering view of the coming great power competition between the U.S. and its two biggest rivals and just how dangerous it may become." On June 27, US fighter planes "intercepted Russian jets that had pierced American air defense zones near Alaska for the 10th time in less than a year." A week later, the US and Chinese navies "held dueling exercises in the South China Sea." Taken together, the Times says the incidents "highlight what national security sources describe as a 'new normal' of a 21st-century global conflict – a pattern of regular brinkmanship and posturing that is likely to shape the next several decades of U.S. foreign policy and military strategy."

Scalia Says Pandemic Could Spur "Reinvestment In America."

Labor Secretary Scalia said on WTN-FM Nashville, TN (7/14, 8K), "I think this economic rough patch we have had is really different than ones we have had in the past because any other economic downturn you think about it was because the economy was bad. Here, our economy was just absolutely incredible but we had to put it on pause." Scalia added that if we can "get it geared back up again as quickly as we safely can," it "doesn't necessarily need to be a radically different economy."

Carson: Another Shutdown Could Destroy Economy.

Appearing on Fox Business' Varney & Co. (7/14, 64K), HUD Secretary Carson said, "We have to ask ourselves: what was the impact of the first shutdown? And the answer to that is significant economic disruption. Are we willing to do that again? It is sort of like a battering ram. You're trying to bang a door down with it. The first hit maybe you just weaken it, but if you keep hitting it that door is going to come down. That is what is going to happen to our economy."

Ivanka Trump, Cook Say Laid-Off Workers Should "Find Something New."

The New York Post (7/14, Nelson, 4.57M) reports that on Tuesday, White House adviser Ivanka Trump and Apple CEO Tim Cook "urged workers who are unhappy with their jobs or unemployed due to the coronavirus pandemic to 'find something new.'" Trump and Cook offered the "seemingly simplistic advice" during a video conference launching "a national ad campaign and the website findsomethingnew.org, which links to IT training services and apprenticeships." Trump said, "We hope that it enables so many people out there to really embark on a new journey and realize their full potential."

More Than 80% Of Small Businesses That Got PPP Loans Running Out Of Money.

The Washington Times (7/14, Sherfinski, Howell, 492K) reports that with "nearly two dozen states...pausing or reversing efforts to reopen" in the wake of rising COVID-19 cases, small businesses are facing fresh difficulties. According to a Goldman Sachs survey of more than 1,500 businesses released Tuesday, "more than 80% of small employers that received loans from the Paycheck Protection Program said they will run out of money by the start of August."

Some Retailers End "Hero Pay" Hourly Wage Raises For Essential Workers.

The New York Times (7/14, Corkery, 18.61M) reports some retailers have ended the "hero pay" hourly wage increases they provided for front-line employees earlier in the coronavirus outbreak, even as the pandemic continues. Some retailers said there is less call for the wage increases since the large-scale panic-buying that characterized the early part of the pandemic has waned.

Automakers May Not Be Able To Stay Open Amid Surge In Coronavirus Cases.

The New York Times (7/14, Boudette, 18.61M) reports that while automakers are again "building cars and trucks at full speed" with coronavirus cases increasing in "much of the country, it may become difficult for the companies to keep at it." This week, GM "will lay off a third shift of workers – about 1,250 people – at its truck plant in Wentzville, Mo., where absenteeism has been rising because workers are concerned about the spread of the virus." At a GM plant in Texas, "where hospitals have been inundated," union workers "have called on the company to shut down their factory." The Times says while car makers are running nearly all of their US plants at full capacity, "conditions are changing fast." Erik Gordon, a business professor at the University of Michigan, said that no matter what officials order companies to do, auto makers will likely have to make changes such as "reducing shifts and temporarily closing plants."

Best Buy To Require Masks In All Of Its Stores.

On ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 3, 0:20, Muir, 7.36M), Victor Oquendo reported that Best Buy announced it will require masks "in all 1,000 stores nationwide. They join Costco and Starbucks. The CEO of Walmart saying they're considering the same."

Stocks Notch More Gains After Being Down In Early Trading.

The AP (7/14, Choe) reports that on Tuesday, "the stock market shook off a weak start and ended broadly higher after pinballing through another day of unsettled trading." The S&P 500 "rose 1.3%" after having "been down nearly 1% in the early going." The Dow Jones Industrial Average "rose 2.1%."

Dow Futures Up 300 Points Over Moderna Progress On COVID-19 Vaccine. CNBC (7/14, Li, 3.62M) reports on its website, "Stock futures climbed higher in overnight trading on Tuesday after Moderna said its coronavirus vaccine produced antibodies in all patients in an early trial, raising hope for a faster economic recovery." CNBC adds, "Futures on the Dow Jones Industrial Average jumped 300 points, pointing to a 270-point gain at Wednesday's open. The S&P 500 futures and the Nasdaq 100 futures rose 0.7% and 0.5%, respectively."

Court Rules Dakota Access Pipeline Can Continue Operating During Court Fight.

Reuters (7/14, Kumar, Kearney) reports that the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled Tuesday that the Dakota Access oil pipeline "can continue to operate amid an ongoing court battle...setting aside for now a lower court's order earlier this month to shut and empty the line." The court granted Dakota Access "an administrative stay while it considers whether the line, long opposed by local tribes and environmental activists, should be shut due to permitting issues dating to 2017."

Delta Posts $5.7B Q2 Loss.

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Cameron, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that Delta posted a $5.7 billion loss in the second quarter. Chief Executive Ed Bastian, said the industry's recovery has stalled. He said Delta will reduce by half the number of extra flights it adds in August to 500.

WSJournal: Left Impedes US Firms' Efforts To Sell Energy To Europe.

A Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that American firms want to sell natural gas to Europe, but Russian fuel is less expensive as a result of the left's efforts to impose legal and regulatory roadblocks on US energy.

Gray: Banks Withholding Capital From Oil And Gas Firms.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), C. Boyden Gray, who has served as White House counsel, US Ambassador to the European Union, and US special envoy to Europe for Eurasian energy, writes that the nation's largest banks are bowing to pressure from environmental activists and withholding capital from oil and gas firms, which, in addition to being a possible violation of antitrust law, is putting millions of jobs in danger.

Miller: USMCA Will Bring Jobs Back To US.

White House senior adviser Stephen Miller said on the John Fredericks Show (7/14), "The USMCA does several things that are critical to bringing jobs back to the United States. One of the most important is it substantially boosts wage requirements for workers to be amenable to the agreement. In other words, [for companies] to benefit from the USMCA, workers have to be paid a certain amount. ... What that will do, particularly in the auto industry, is it will solve the problem of plants leaving the United States in order to take advantage of lower wages." Miller added that the agreement also increases "the content requirements, i.e. the percentage of an automobile, in this case" that must be made North America. So, "a lot of American companies will now be able to get those jobs back from China."

Politico Analysis: Huge Increase In Farm Aid Under Trump May Be Hard To Cut Back.

Politico (7/14, McCrimmon, 4.29M) reports that "government payments to farmers have surged to historic levels under President Donald Trump as the Agriculture Department floods the industry with cash to stem the financial losses from Trump's tariff fights and the coronavirus pandemic." Politico adds, "As agriculture grows more reliant on unprecedented taxpayer support, farm policy experts and watchdog groups warn the subsidies are growing too big and too fast, with no strings attached and little oversight from Congress – and that Washington could have a difficult time shutting off the spigot." Politico also reports, "Direct farm aid has climbed each year of Trump's presidency, from $11.5 billion in 2017 to more than $32 billion this year – an all-time high, with potentially far more funding still to come in 2020."

Trump Says COVID Testing May Be "Working Too Well."

In an interview with Catherine Herridge of the CBS Evening News (7/14, story 2, 1:30, O'Donnell, 4.31M), President Trump was asked, "Is the national testing strategy working?" Trump replied, "Working? We have 45 million tests as of, I think, today, approximately 45 million tests. No other country tests like us. In fact, I could say it's working too much, it's working too well. We're doing testing, and we're finding thousands and thousands of cases." Herridge: "Will you push for more on site testing?" Trump: "I like it the best. I mean, I like it the best. It might not be as accurate by the way, but I like it the best."

Graham, Mulvaney, Kilmeade Among Trump Allies Critical Of Testing Capacity. Politico (7/14, Oprysko, 4.29M) reports that President Trump's former Acting Chief of Staff Mick Mulvaney "panned the administration's testing abilities in an op-ed on Monday, calling the struggles his family encountered when trying to get tested and the wait time for results afterward 'simply inexcusable.'" According to Politico, "Tuesday morning the pile-on continued as 'Fox & Friends' host Brian Kilmeade acknowledged a 'huge testing issue.'" Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) later said, "We just don't have enough testing in real time for the population as a whole."

Administration Plans To Increase Testing At Nursing Homes. Axios (7/14, Ayesh, 521K) reports the Administration said Tuesday that it will be "ramping up testing at nursing homes in coronavirus hotspots using rapid point-of-care diagnostic test instruments." Axios says the "push to increase testing at nursing homes comes as many states, particularly in the Southern U.S., see a surge."

Pence Sounds Optimistic Note On Pandemic, Backs Reopening Schools In Louisiana Trip.

The AP (7/14, Deslatte) reports that on Tuesday, Vice President Pence "insisted...schools should reopen to in-person instruction for students, making the point in Louisiana as the state has reemerged as one of the nation's hot spots for the coronavirus only months after signs pointed to a successful outbreak response." According to the AP, Pence "described the nation as 'in a much better position today to deal with the pandemic' even as virus cases surge across much of the country." Pence and Education Secretary DeVos "called for students at every level from elementary school through college to return to classrooms, with Pence calling that critical to reopening the country." Pence also "visited the state's emergency operations center, which is the operational hub of Louisiana's response to the COVID-19 disease caused by the coronavirus."

The Monroe News Star (7/14, Hilburn, 64K) reports Pence said Tuesday he supports the mask mandate introduced by Louisiana Gov. John Bel Edwards (D) "while insisting schools and colleges must open even as the COVID infection intensifies in the state." Said Pence, "We're here to help. ... It's the right thing to do." Edwards, Sens. Bill Cassidy (R-LA) and John Kennedy (R-LA), "higher education leaders and members of the White House's coronavirus task force joined Pence during a roundtable discussion at LSU." Pence and White House coronavirus task force coordinator Deborah Birx also "said wearing masks will help stem to summer surge of COVID."

The KATC-TV Lafayette, LA (7/14, 9K) website also reports "Pence insisted schools should reopen to in-person instruction for students in a visit to Louisiana," and the Baton Rouge Advocate (7/14, Karlin, 399K) that DeVos said that "it can't be a question of if schools reopen, it's how we can do it safely."

State AG Tests Positive. The Baton Rouge Advocate (7/14, Ballard, 399K) reports "Louisiana Attorney General Jeff Landry wasn't on the tarmac to greet...Pence on Tuesday morning because he has tested positive for coronavirus, according to an email blast to employees of the state Department of Justice." Fox News (7/14, Phillips, 27.59M) notes on its website that Landry said in a statement, "Out of an overabundance of caution with the vice president coming to our state, I was tested for coronavirus [sic]. ... Though experiencing no symptoms, I tested positive for COVID-19."

The AP (7/14, Deslatte) recalls that "in the early days of the state's virus outbreak, Landry stood with Edwards to support the governor's decisions to close schools, shutter some businesses and limit gatherings, defending these actions as in the best interest of health and safety." However, "more recently...Landry was again publicly questioning Edwards' continued restrictions on businesses and churches." While he "hasn't directly challenged Edwards' statewide mask mandate...Landry sent a letter to Louisiana's education leaders opposing a face covering requirement at schools, saying it 'may cross the line on liberty.'"

Louisiana Hospitalizations "More Than Doubled" In Past Month. The New Orleans Times-Picayune (7/14, Discher, 480K) reports "the Louisiana Dept. of Health reported 2,215 more coronavirus cases, 22 more deaths and 54 more hospitalizations in its daily noon update Tuesday." Meanwhile, "statewide coronavirus hospitalizations have more than doubled over the past month," as "there are now 1,362 patients with COVID-19 hospitalized in Louisiana. The last time this many people were hospitalized was on May 7."

Giroir Says Public Health Officials Do Not "Lie."

The AP (7/14, Superville, Colvin, Lemire, Miller) reports HHS Assistant Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir "said Tuesday that 'none of us lie' to the public, an accusation President Donald Trump had retweeted, and that while kids need to be back in school as Trump insists, 'we have to get the virus under control.'" Giroir's comment "came a day after Trump shared a Twitter post from a former game show host who, without evidence, accused government medical experts at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, among others, of 'lying.'" Politico (7/14, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that in an interview with NBC's Today, Giroir said, "Look, we may occasionally make mistakes based on the information we have, but none of us lie. We are completely transparent with the American people."

On NBC's Today (7/14, 3.14M), Giroir also said, "We are all very concerned about the outbreak. ... About half the cases are in four states – Texas, California, Florida, Arizona. But we are in a much different place now than we were several months ago, a much better place. ... In terms of our hospitalizations, we're at about 63,000 people now. That's much different from the 85,000 people. Only about 10% of people with COVID are on ventilators. That's down from about 25%. ... We are doing almost 700,000 tests a day on average, over 800,000 on certain days. But we still have to be careful in some of those areas to make sure the people who need a test or those who are vulnerable can get it within a short turnaround period."

Fauci Urges Trust In "Respected Medical Authorities" Like Himself.

On ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 4, 2:00, Muir, 7.36M), Mary Bruce reported President Trump "is facing growing backlash" over the Administration's handling of coronavirus. As COVID-19 "explodes, the White House is trying to discredit and sideline the nation's top authority on infectious diseases, Dr. Anthony Fauci. Speaking with medical students [Tuesday], Fauci was asked, who should Americans trust?" Fauci: "You can trust respected medical authorities. You know, I believe I'm one of them, so I think you can trust me, but I would stick with respected medical authorities who have a track record of telling the truth." Bruce: "The President is also taking shots at the medical experts at the CDC, retweeting former game show host Chuck Woolery, who said the CDC is 'lying.'"

Moore Preparing Policy Memo Highlighting Mistakes Made By Fauci Throughout Career. The Washington Examiner (7/14, Brest, 448K) reports that on Monday, Stephen Moore, a conservative economist, "informal adviser to President Trump and a Washington Examiner columnist, said...he is working on a policy memo that will point out the mistakes" Fauci has made throughout his career. Moore said, "We are working on a memo that shows how many times Dr. Fauci's been wrong during not just [this pandemic], but during his entire career."

Artist Behind Anti-Fauci Cartoon Promoted By Scavino Has Been Accused Of Anti-Semitism. The New York Times (7/14, Rogers, 18.61M) reports White House Deputy Chief of Staff for Communications Dan Scavino on Sunday shared a cartoon "mocking Dr. Fauci by an artist whose work has been criticized for its anti-Semitic imagery." The Times says the cartoon was drawn by Ben Garrison, who was "disinvited from a White House gathering of the president's social media fans because his work contains anti-Semitic messaging." In an article titled "Trump Aide Shares Anti-Fauci Cartoon Drawn By Artist Barred From The White House Over Anti-Semitic Tropes," Politico (7/14, Cohen, 4.29M) reports that "one Garrison cartoon from 2017 featured an ominous hand, labeled 'Rothschilds,' controlling prominent Jewish, progressive financier George Soros with puppet strings. In the cartoon, Soros himself had David Petraeus and H.R. McMaster attached to puppet strings."

USA Today: Fauci "Is A National Treasure." USA Today (7/14, 10.31M) says in an editorial that Fauci "is a national treasure. He is one of the leading authorities in his field. He combines extraordinary expertise with an exceptional ability to communicate with ordinary people. He has held his position for 36 years, earning the admiration of multiple presidents, including George W. Bush, who awarded him the Presidential Medal of Freedom." But to Trump, "Fauci is an annoying truth bomb that keeps going off in his garden party of falsehoods and blame shifting. ... In the difficult weeks and months ahead, America's best hope involves listening to the people, like Dr. Fauci, who have devoted their lives and careers to public health."

In a responding USA Today (7/14, 10.31M) op-ed, Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro writes, "Anthony Fauci has a good bedside manner with the public, but he has been wrong about everything I have interacted with him on. ... So when you ask me whether I listen to Dr. Fauci's advice, my answer is: only with skepticism and caution."

Redfield Warns Of "Difficult Times," Says Mask-Wearing Could Halt Virus' Advance.

All three broadcast networks opened their Tuesday evening newscasts with coronavirus coverage. David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (7/14, lead story, 4:45, 7.36M) that CDC Director Redfield said "this coming fall and winter will likely be 'one of the most difficult times that we experienced in American public health.' The US has now surpassed 136,000 lives lost." On the CBS Evening News (7/14, lead story, 4:20, 4.31M), Norah O'Donnell reported, "Florida, Alabama, Nevada, and Utah are all setting records for the number of people killed by the virus in the past 24 hours. With infections spiking in 39 states, hospitals are facing a crisis." O'Donnell also highlighted Redfield's remarks, reporting he "projected things will only get worse later this year, and he's calling on all Americans to wear masks, saying if everyone across the country used face coverings, the virus could be stopped in the next few months." On NBC Nightly News (7/14, lead story, 3:10, 5.96M), Lester Holt called it "a haunting prediction" from Redfield.

USA Today (7/14, Bacon, Flores, Reyes, 10.31M) reports a study of COVID data by the newspaper "found Tuesday that almost half of all states are spiking at a faster rate than they had been in the spring." CNBC (7/14, Kim, Rattner, 3.62M) reports on its website that on Monday, for the first time, the US "surpassed more than 60,000 new coronavirus cases...based on an average of new cases per day over the previous seven days, according to a CNBC analysis of data compiled by Johns Hopkins University." CNBC adds, "Across the country, more than a third of U.S. states reported record highs in daily new cases, based on a seven-day moving average.”

Surgeon General Adams said on WTMJ-AM Milwaukee (7/14, 13K), “When we reopened, in many cases people thought that was a light switch. ... Unfortunately, we’re going to be living with the virus for a while. That doesn’t mean it has to control us. If we do the things that we have been preaching like wearing face coverings in public, staying six feet apart, and protecting the vulnerable to slow the spread, we can actually have some degree of normalcy.”

Labor Secretary Scalia said on WTN-FM Nashville, TN (7/14, 8K), “I don’t think we reopened too fast. I think, though, that there are some people who reopened irresponsibly. What we gained by the discipline that people engaged in from March through May was – we gained the freedom to be out and about,” but “we didn’t gain the freedom to just ignore the virus and act like it is not there.”

Hahn “Encouraged” About Vaccine Development.

FDA Commissioner Hahn said on Fox News’ Bill Hemmer Reports (7/14), “I remain encouraged by what we are seeing in the vaccine development. FDA of course is responsible for calling the balls on the strikes on the safety and effectiveness of the vaccine and we have a number of vaccine developers in-house with us who are in the process of developing vaccines for COVID-19, so that does give me encouragement.”

Former CDC Directors Decry Politicization Of Health Policy.

Lester Holt reported on NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 5, 1:00, 5.96M) that President Trump is “fac[ing] fresh fallout over his coronavirus response in the form of an extraordinary rebuke from four former heads of the CDC, who argue in a new op-ed published in the Washington Post that the President and White House officials are attempting to undermine the agency’s guidance for schools hoping to reopen in the fall.” Politico (7/14, Forgey, 4.29M) reports that in the op-ed, the former officials “implicitly rebuked [Trump], arguing the ‘extraordinary’ efforts by him and other administration officials to diminish the public health agency’s guidance were contributing to a resurgence of coronavirus cases across the United States.”

Richard Besser, Tom Frieden, Jeffrey Koplan, and David Satcher write in the Washington Post (7/14, Frieden, Koplan, Satcher, Besser, 14.2M), “It is not unusual for CDC guidelines to be changed or amended during a clearance process that moves through multiple agencies and the White House. But it is extraordinary for guidelines to be undermined after their release. ... The four of us led the CDC over a period of more than 15 years. ... We cannot recall over our collective tenure a single time when political pressure led to a change in the interpretation of scientific evidence.” USA Today (7/14, Cummings, 10.31M) and Axios (7/14, Allasan, 521K) also cover the op-ed.

Warren, Pressley Press Azar On Coronavirus’ Impact On Minorities.

Politico (7/14, King, Barrón-López, 4.29M) reports that Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and Rep. Ayanna Pressley (D-MA) sent a letter to HHS Secretary Azar on Tuesday “requesting a report detailing the Trump administration’s response to racial health disparities exacerbated by the Covid-19 outbreak.” According to Politico, “The letter, which highlights the disproportionate impact of the coronavirus on communities of color, represents another push from Democrats” for President Trump “to take action to alleviate the damage of the virus on minorities.”

Virginia Congressman Tests Positive For COVID-19.

USA Today (7/14, Lalljee, 10.31M) reports Rep. Morgan Griffith (R-VA) “announced Tuesday that he tested positive for COVID-19, joining the growing list of members of Congress to contract the disease.” Griffith “announced he had tested positive on Twitter, where he wrote that he has been self-isolating since noticing symptoms, which he says are currently not ‘significant.’” The Washington Post (7/14, Vozzella, 14.2M) recounts that “Griffith, who has represented the rural Southwest Virginia district since 2011, said he was feeling fine in a brief phone interview Tuesday afternoon, while he was monitoring a committee hearing.” Said Griffith, “The quote stands for itself. I’m fine. ... I don’t feel bad.”

Politico (7/14, Zanona, 4.29M) points out the “diagnosis that comes five days after the Virginia Republican attended a GOP press conference and which spurred an effort at contact tracing within the” Freedom Caucus, to which he belongs. The Washington Times (7/14, Sherfinski, 492K), Reuters (7/14, Morgan), Newsweek (7/14, Czachor, 1.53M), and the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Wise, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), among other news outlets, also cover the news.

Administration Orders Hospitals To Bypass CDC On COVID Patient Information.

The New York Times (7/14, Stolberg, 18.61M) reports the Administration “has ordered hospitals to bypass” the CDC and send coronavirus patient information “to a central database in Washington beginning on Wednesday. The move has alarmed health experts who fear the data will be politicized or withheld from the public.” The new instructions “were posted recently in a little-noticed document” on the HHS website.

Hospitals Stock Up On COVID-19 Drugs To Prepare For Second Wave In Fall.

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, A1, Hopkins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports on its front page that US hospitals are stocking drugs with the potential to treat COVID-19 in the hopes of avoiding a rush for key medications and drug shortages in light of a predicted second wave. Many ICUs in New York and other hard-hit areas are currently in short supply of critical drugs and are competing with other facilities for limited resources.

Biden: "It's Gotten Bad Enough" That Trump Is Wearing A Mask In Public.

The CBS Evening News (7/14, story 8, 1:20, O'Donnell, 4.31M) reported Joe Biden on Tuesday "unveiled a $2 trillion plan to fight climate change and create jobs in the post-COVID economy. He also took aim at the President's record." CBS' Ed O'Keefe: "Speaking near his Delaware home today, Joe Biden ridiculed President Trump's response to the coronavirus." Biden: "It's gotten bad enough that even Donald Trump finally decided to wear mask in public." O'Keefe: "The President, who wore a mask to Walter Reed National Military Medical Center over the weekend, was also criticized by Biden for failing to listen to medical professionals like Dr. Anthony Fauci." Biden: "Please listen to your public health experts instead of denigrating them. Do your job, Mr. President, because if we can't deal with the public health crisis, we can't deal with the economic crisis."

Cruz Photographed On Flight Without Mask On.

The New York Post (7/14, Eustachewich, 4.57M) reports Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) was photographed "without a mask on a flight over the weekend – prompting American Airlines to review the matter after the image was posted online, and went viral. ... The pic was tweeted by Hosseh Enad, a Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee operative, who wrote, 'Captured today at 10:45am – @TedCruz on a commercial flight, refusing to wear a mask.'" A Cruz spokesperson said Cruz "had taken off his mask to sip his coffee – but put it back on afterward. Cruz always wears a mask while traveling and practices social distancing, the spokesperson insisted." The airline "said it reached out to Cruz anyway."

Jacksonville GOP Convention Now Expected To Be Held Outdoors.

Reuters (7/14, Holland, Mason) reports Republicans are planning to move the Jacksonville phase of next month's national convention "from an indoor arena to an outdoor venue as Florida's coronavirus cases surge, two party sources familiar with the conversations said on Tuesday." They said the plan, "which Trump tentatively accepted on Monday during a White House meeting with top Republican National Committee (RNC) officials, emerged as the party scrambles to host a large-scale event next month amid the health crisis." The New York Times (7/14, Haberman, 18.61M) reports, "Officials remain uncertain about whether a capacity crowd would be allowed to attend outdoor events, or if there would be restrictions to prevent people from being too close to one another."

Florida Reports Single-Day Record Of 132 COVID Deaths.

Sam Brock reported on NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 2, 2:00, Holt, 5.96M) that on Tuesday, Florida "set a record for coronavirus fatalities," with 132 deaths. Florida "has been ripping through its records for daily COVID cases and testing more than at any point in this pandemic." The AP (7/14, Spencer, Geller) says the figure "likely includes deaths from the past weekend that had not been previously reported."

Florida Healthcare CEO Says Supplies Are Adequate. The Washington Examiner (7/14, Miller, 448K) reports, "The CEO of one of Florida's largest healthcare providers says it has the intensive care unit capabilities to handle the recent uptick in coronavirus-positive tests." AdventHealth CEO Terry Shaw said, "We have adequate personal protective equipment. We have a stockpile of ventilators, and we have an amazing clinical team that have taken best practices from around the world and put them into our treatment protocols."

Garcetti Says Los Angeles May Need To Shut Down Again.

The Los Angeles Times (7/14, Shalby, 4.64M) reports, "Dangers posed by the coronavirus continue to loom over Los Angeles, which officials warn is inching closer to the highest threat level and an imminent shutdown of the city." Mayor Eric Garcetti (D) said late Monday, "While the city of Los Angeles' COVID-19 threat level remains at orange, we are on the border of going to red. It is up to all of us that we don't." The Washington Times (7/14, Richardson, 492K) also covers the situation in California, while the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that the state is experiencing a surge despite being the first state to shelter in place.

Experts Blast New York Report Absolving Cuomo Of Blame For Nursing Home Deaths.

The AP (7/14, Mustian, Condon) says New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D) is "facing blistering criticism over an internal report that found a controversial state directive that sent thousands of recovering coronavirus patients into nursing homes was 'not a significant factor' in some of the nation's deadliest nursing home outbreaks." According to the AP, "Scientists, health care professionals and elected officials assailed the report released last week for flawed methodology and selective stats that sidestepped the actual impact of the March 25 order, which by the state's own count ushered more than 6,300 recovering virus patients into nursing homes at the height of the pandemic." On NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 3, 2:00, 5.96M), Lester Holt reported Cuomo is also "getting tougher about quarantines from travelers from hot spots."

NYC COVID Cases Moving To Wealthier Neighborhoods. Politico New York (7/14, Durkin) reports, "Coronavirus cases are popping up in more affluent Brooklyn and Manhattan neighborhoods that weren't hard hit at the height of the pandemic, city health officials said Tuesday."

Nearly Three-Quarters Of New COVID Cases In Maryland County Are Among Latinos.

The Washington Post (7/14, Tan, 14.2M) ran a feature on COVID-19 infections among Latinos in Montgomery County, Maryland, where they account for 74% of new infections, “even though they are just a fifth of the county’s population. Advocates blame the disparity partly on government failures to provide easy access to testing and medical care in underserved Latino communities, where residents are more likely to face job and living conditions that make it harder to avoid the virus.” NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 10, 2:05, Holt, 5.96M) ran a feature on how coronavirus is affecting Latino communities across the US.

Trump Says More Whites Than Blacks Being Shot By Police.

The New York Times (7/14, 18.61M) reports that on Tuesday, President Trump “rebuffed a question about Black people dying at the hands of police officers, saying, ‘so are white people.’” The President “rejected the notion that Black Americans suffer disproportionately from police brutality, saying in an interview...that white people are killed in greater numbers.” Trump “reacted angrily when asked about the issue” by CBS’ Catherine Herridge.

In the interview aired on the CBS Evening News (7/14, story 5, 0:20, O’Donnell, 4.31M), Herridge asked Trump, “Why are African Americans still dying at the hands of law enforcement in this country?” Trump replied: “And so are white people. So are white people. What a terrible question to ask. So are white people. More white people, by the way. More white people.”

Also reporting on the President’s comments, the Washington Times (7/14, Boyer, 492K) says a study by Harvard University researchers last month found that “Blacks were three times more likely to be killed by law enforcement officers than Whites.” The Washington Post (7/14, Bump, 14.2M) likewise notes the inaccuracy of the President’s claim.

NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 4, 1:00, Holt, 5.96M) said the President “plunged back into the issue of police killings of Black Americans, calling the killing of George Floyd by police ‘terrible.’ ... The President also defending the display of the Confederate flag.” Asked in an interview with the CBS Evening News (7/14, story 4, 0:50, O’Donnell, 4.31M) if he still believes “the Confederate battle flag belongs in a museum,” as he said in 2015, Trump replied, “All I say is freedom of speech. It’s very simple. My attitude is freedom of speech, very strong views on the Confederate flag. With me, it’s freedom of speech, very simple. Like it, don’t like it, it’s freedom of speech.”

ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 5, 0:55, Muir, 7.36M) said “the President is clearly playing to his base here, and dismissing the fact that Black Americans suffer disproportionately from police brutality. The truth, David, is that Black Americans are more than twice as likely to be shot and killed by police than white Americans.”

Trump Threatens Federal Action If Cities Don’t Rein In Violence.

In an interview with Townhall (7/14, Pavlich, 177K) on Tuesday, “President Trump warned his administration will take action if Democratic mayors and governors can’t get crime under control.” Said the President, “They are cities run by liberal Democrats. We’re now looking at having to do something. You know, we have to be asked to go into a city like Chicago, which is so ridiculous where they had like, 68 shootings and 18 deaths over the weekend. It’s not even comprehensible. Worse than Afghanistan, worse than any war zone.” He continued, “We are going to have to do something very comprehensive. It means sending people in. It means sending people in to clean it up... there’s a point at which we’re allowed to go in and that point is rapidly being reached... there’s a point at which we will have to do it because we just have to do it for the good of the country.”

Miller: If Unchecked, Defund Efforts Will “Come To Every City In America.” White House senior adviser Stephen Miller said on the John Fredericks Show (7/14) that “left unchecked, not fought,” efforts to defund police “will come to every city in America and it’s because the left sets its sights on an institution and it doesn’t stop until it takes it over. ... So, what happens when they start taking over the prosecutors’ offices and they start taking over the police departments? ... Then, it is just like the radical leftists on the Supreme Court. Justice is an instrument of politics and your safety and your family are at the mercy of radical liberals.” Miller added that defunding police is “a years long project on the part of the left that is now accelerating because they’re very emboldened by a the fact that he leadership of the Democratic party and now given them a green light” and “the only thing standing in the way is President Trump.”

White House Official Invites Lightfoot To Work On Police Reform. The New York Post (7/14, Jacobs, 4.57M) reports that a “senior White House official extended a public invitation to Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot to work with the federal government on the issue of police reform,” accusing Democrats of “playing politics” on the matter. Speaking Tuesday during a Fox News appearance, Deputy Assistant to the President Ja’Ron Smith touted the Administration’s work with other Democratic mayors while sending a public message to the Chicago mayor. Smith told Fox News (7/14, 896K), “We’re willing to go back and do the work. ... But I would invite the mayor to work with us. We’ve worked with many other Democratic mayors, if you look at the city of Birmingham, we’ve done some work with them and we’re really moving the needle in those communities.” Smith was also interviewed on the Steve Gruber Show.

Hawley: Police Should Be Getting More Funding. Appearing on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (7/14, 831K), Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO) was asked about the violent rioting happening across the country. Hawley said, “We have seen this before. We have seen this war on cops before. We have seen where it gets us. What it does, when you announce an open season on cops, then it is normal, ordinary, every day working people who get hurt. That is exactly what we are seeing now. This defund the police thing is an absolute crisis. It is a travesty. It is the worst possible thing. We should be putting more police on the streets. We should be increasing officer pay. We should be giving more resources to cops to help them do this incredibly difficult job we ask them to do.”

Poll: Americans Agree On Police Reforms That Have Divided Washington. Politico (7/14, McCaskill, 4.29M) reports that “new polling from the University of Maryland School of Public Policy shows a majority of voters support 10 key policies proposed by competing House and Senate bills that Congress failed to advance last month.” The “in-depth national survey of more than 3,000 registered voters” found that “nearly 90 percent of respondents supported body cameras, including 85 percent of Republicans, 86 percent of independents and 94 percent of Democrats,” while “82 percent of respondents supported the duty to intervene (71 percent of Republicans, 78 percent of independents and 94 percent of Democrats), and 81 percent favored a national registry of police misconduct (70 percent of Republicans, 77 percent of independents and 92 percent of Democrats).”

Parson: Trump “Taking Action” To Help St. Louis Couple Facing Gun Charges.

The Washington Times (7/14, Salter) reports Missouri Gov. Mike Parson (R) said President Trump “is focused on and concerned about the possibility that a white St. Louis couple could face criminal charges for displaying guns as they defended their home during a racial injustice protest.” Parson told reporters Tuesday “that he had just been on the phone” with Trump and Attorney General Barr amid reports that St. Louis Circuit Attorney Kim Gardner may file charges against Mark and Patricia McCloskey, who wielded guns on June 28 as protesters marched by their home.

In an interview Tuesday with Townhall (7/14, Pavlich, 177K), Trump said, “When you look at St. Louis, where two people, they came out. They were going to be beat up badly if they were lucky. If they were lucky. They were going to be beat up badly and the house was going to be totally ransacked and probably burned down like they tried to burn down churches. And these people were standing there, never used it and they were legal, the weapons, and now I understand somebody local, they want to prosecute these people. It’s a disgrace.”

Bernhardt Warns Those Caught Dismantling Monuments Will Be Punished.

Interior Secretary Bernhardt said on Washington Watch (7/14) that President Trump “recognizes that America owes its present greatness to its past sacrifices and I think he was deeply troubled by the actions that are taking place. So, first, to the criminals that want to destroy these monuments and memorials, he has been very clear and he has basically issued a direction to us and to the Department of Justice that says, ‘Look, investigate these crimes, prosecute these people to the fullest extent of the law, bring the entire force of the federal government to pay great heed to these.’ What people need to know, the criminals that commit these crimes need to know there are very severe penalties up to 10 years in prison in certain cases and also tremendous financial consequences.”

Black Conservatives Launch Campaign To Save Freedmen’s Memorial. The Washington Times (7/14, Richardson, 492K) reports that “Black conservative leaders kicked off Tuesday a campaign to save the Freedmen’s Memorial, the statue of Abraham Lincoln and freed slave Archer Alexander now under attack by Democrats and Black Lives Matter protesters.” Star Parker, founder of UrbanCURE, held an “emancipation celebration” Tuesday at Lincoln Park, “home of the now fenced-off bronze statue in the Capitol Hill neighborhood,” to promote a signature drive urging Congress to “keep this statue alive, right here.”

The Washington Post (7/14, Lang, 14.2M) reports that critics, however, say the memorial “is demeaning and suggests African Americans were not active contributors to the cause of their own freedom, remaining subservient even after they were released from their bonds.”

Emmer Wants Probe Into Decisions That Allowed Looters Free Rein.

Appearing on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (7/14, 831K), Rep. Tom Emmer (R-MN) was asked why he supports President Trump’s decision to deny funds to Minnesota to rebuild following the recent violent protests and widespread looting in Minneapolis last month. Emmer said, “Actually, what I asked the President to do...is to do a full and thorough investigation. Let’s find out what happened, why it happened. Why did these elected officials who were elected to protect the citizens and their property, why did they let the cities burn for almost four nights before actually taking decisive action? ... Before any money would be delivered, I think the President and his administration should do an investigation as to what happened and why. Let’s make sure it never happens again.”

California Bars Police From Using LAPD Records In Gang Database.

The Los Angeles Times (7/14, 4.64M) reports that “as a scandal over false and inaccurate gang identifications by Los Angeles police officers widens,” California Atty. Gen. Xavier Becerra on Tuesday “stopped law enforcement agencies around the state from using department records included in a controversial statewide database.” Becerra, instead, “suggested the state Legislature should consider more reforms to the troubled system.”

New York’s Wave Of Gun Violence Continues With Three Drive-By Shootings.

The New York Times (7/14, Shanahan, Piccoli, 18.61M) reports that five people were shot in Brooklyn on Monday “in what the police described as three drive-by attacks within 20 minutes and about a mile of each other, continuing a wave of gun violence that has gripped New York this summer.” Although the shootings “did not add to the city’s gun-related death toll for the year, they occurred after another weekend of violence that was capped on Sunday night with the killing of a 1-year-old boy who was shot while he was at a cookout with his family at a Brooklyn playground.”

Catholic Churches, Statues Targeted By Vandals In String Of Attacks.

The Federalist (7/14, Davidson, 126K) reports Catholic churches and religious statues “across the country were the target of vandalism, terrorism, and potential arson this last week as tensions concerning the removal of historical statues continue to rise." A statement by the Catholic Action League "condemned the recent attacks."

Daughter Of Slain Police Officer Criticized For Tweeting #BlueLivesMatter.

Townhall (7/14, Burrow, 177K) reports 18-year-old Savannah Benavides/Chavez, whose father was one of two McAllen, Texas, police officers killed over the weekend while responding to a domestic disturbance report, tweeted, "Words cannot describe the pain I'm in, but I'm glad my dad is at peace. you were an amazing man and anyone who ever came across you knew that. I'm going to miss you so much. you died doing what you loved most, you died a hero. I love you daddy, see you soon. #bluelivesmatter" While some responded with condolences to the tweet, "others harangued her for using the #bluelivesmatter hashtag," and "many used the hashtag #ACAB (all cops are bastards)."

Democratic Strategist Labels Blackburn "Inbred Racist Trash."

The Daily Caller (7/14, Olohan, 716K) reports Democratic strategist Adam Parkhomenko called Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) "inbred racist trash" for criticizing the founders of Black Lives Matter. Blackburn on Monday tweeted that BLM is run by "trained Marxists." In response, Parkhomenko tweeted at Blackburn, "You are inbred racist trash."

WPost Investigation: 12 Protestors Partially Blinded By Police.

The Washington Post (7/14, Lee, 14.2M) reports it "found that eight people lost vision in one eye after being struck by police projectiles, including lead pellets packed in cloth pouches that were fired from shotguns." They were "among 12 people who were partially blinded by police during a week of national unrest" following the death of George Floyd.

LATimes Columnist Recommends Replacing National Anthem With "Lean On Me."

The Washington Examiner (7/14, Dibble, 448K) reports Los Angeles Times columnist Judy Rosen wrote in a piece published Tuesday "that he believes the current national anthem for the United States is 'racist' and should be replaced by a unifying tune" like "Lean on Me."

Central Park Birdwatcher Cooper: It's A Mistake To Focus On One Individual.

Christian Cooper writes in the Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M), "On May 25, when I was birding in the Ramble section of New York's Central Park, I asked a woman whose dog was off his leash to please put him back on, as the area's rules require. She refused – and, as shown in a video that went viral, she was soon calling the police and telling them an 'African American man' was 'threatening' her." Now Amy Cooper, he writes, "has been charged by the Manhattan district attorney with filing a false police report." Cooper argues that "it's a mistake to focus on this one individual. The important thing the incident highlights is the long-standing, deep-seated racial bias against us black and brown folk that permeates the United States – bias that can bring horrific consequences."

Graham Says He Will Grill Mueller About Russia Investigation.

Politico (7/14, Desiderio, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that in a Fox News podcast Tuesday, Senate Judiciary Chairman Lindsey Graham "said...he intends to grill former special counsel Robert Mueller about alleged flaws in the FBI's investigation of links between the Trump campaign and Russia in 2016." Graham "said he intends to press Mueller about a raft of developments since the former FBI chief testified to the House Judiciary and Intelligence committees nearly a year ago – from a watchdog's finding that crucial surveillance warrants were riddled with errors to the discovery that the FBI briefly intended to drop its case against former national security adviser Michael Flynn." Graham said over the weekend he would grant a request from Democrats for Mueller testify. His statement "came after Mueller wrote a Washington Post op-ed in which he defended his nearly two-year investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election and his office's prosecution of Trump confidant Roger Stone." Graham said, "Bottom line is, I had no intention of calling Mr. Mueller. He testified before the House. It was not pretty to watch. But at the end of the day...he decided to interject himself into the Roger Stone case."

Graham Says He Is Working To Declassify Memo About FBI Interview With Steele Source. The Daily Caller (7/14, Ross, 716K) reports that Graham said "he is working to declassify a memo regarding an FBI interview conducted with the primary source for Christopher Steele, the former British spy who wrote the infamous anti-Trump dossier." Graham "said that the document is 40 pages in length and covers information that Steele's source provided the FBI over the course of three days in January 2017." Graham "also said that he believes that Russian operatives fed disinformation to Steele." Graham said, "I believe that the dossier, which was the key component of getting the warrant against Carter Page, was in fact Russian disinformation. ... I believe that the FBI was on notice that it was unreliable, continued to use it anyway. I believe that they misled the FISA court."

Judge Extends Deadline For DOJ To Answer Questions About Mueller Report.

The Washington Examiner (7/14, Chaitin, 448K) reports US District Judge Reggie Walton, "who questioned Attorney General William Barr's 'credibility' granted the Justice Department's request for a delay to answer questions about former special counsel Robert Mueller's report on Russian interference in the 2016 election." Walton "gave the Trump administration until next Tuesday to respond, a week later than what was previously scheduled." The Electronic Privacy Information Center and BuzzFeed "have sued for the report in its entirety under the Freedom of Information Act.” Walton gave DOJ “a spreadsheet with questions about the redactions,” but the agency said it needed additional time to conduct “consultations with numerous Department components, including the Office of Information Privacy, the National Security Division, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and U.S. Attorney’s Offices.”

Former Trump Attorney: Durham Should “Taker A Hard Look” At Weissmann.

The Washington Examiner (7/14, Chaitin, 448K) reports that John Dowd, one of President Trump’s attorneys during the Russia investigation, says Andrew Weissman, one of special counsel Robert Mueller’s top prosecutors, should be investigated as part of US Attorney John Durham’s criminal inquiry into the Russia probe. After President Trump commuted Roger Stone’s prison sentence, Weissmann tweeted that Stone should be put “in the grand jury to find out what he knows about Trump but would not tell.” Dowd “dismissed the suggestion.” He told the Washington Times, “Weissmann and his dream team failed in their first attempt to manufacture a crime and want to further abuse the process when their sorry effort has been exposed. ... The Stone indictment did not allege a crime by President Trump. So why further abuse the process except more sour grapes. Mr. Durham ought to take a hard look at Mr. Weissmann’s conduct on the dream team.”

Study: 5.5M Workers Lost Health Insurance Between February And May.

The CBS Evening News (7/14, story 9, 0:20, O’Donnell, 4.31M) reported that according to a new study, “nearly 5.5 million workers lost their health insurance between February and May, the biggest loss of insurance in any single year. Researchers say these recent losses are 40% higher than the spike during the Great Recession when nearly four million adults lost their health insurance.”

Miller Says Democrats Oppose Anything But Completely Open Borders.

White House senior adviser Stephen Miller said on the John Fredericks Show (7/14), “The President’s position on [DACA] hasn’t changed at all. You remember back in, I believe it was 2008, he made an offer to Democrats, along with Sen. Perdue, Sen. Cotton, Sen. Grassley, and a few others that said that if you end chain migration, if you fully secure the southern border, and you do this on a permanent basis, that in exchange for that we would do a DACA legislatively. ... The Democrats rejected it, obviously because Democrats are opposed to anything short of completely, totally, irrevocably open borders.”

Miller: Border Wall “Completely Transforms” Communities Where It Is Built.

White House senior adviser Stephen Miller said on the John Fredericks Show (7/14), “The President has built hundreds of miles of wall” and “this isn’t just some eight-foot barrier that you can pull down with a team of guys. ... There are sections of this thing that are rock solid, 30 feet tall that have also additional technology built in so you can tell if anybody even gets near this thing. It is a smuggler’s and a trafficker’s worst nightmare. It completely transforms the communities where you put it up because they go from being overwhelmed by illegal border-crossers to dropping to virtually nothing.”

Barr Says “Justice Was Done” After First Federal Execution In 17 Years.

ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 8, 0:20, Muir, 7.36M) reported “a former white supremacist has been put to death in Indiana” in “the first federal execution in 17 years. Daniel Lewis Lee was sentenced to die for the gruesome murders of a gun dealer, his wife, and her 8-year-old daughter in the 1990s.” The Washington Times (7/14, Mordock, 492K) indicates Attorney General Barr on Tuesday “defended” the execution, saying in a statement that Lee “faced the justice he deserved. ... The American people have made the considered choice to permit capital punishment for the most egregious federal crimes, and justice was done today in implementing the sentence for Lee’s horrific offense.”

The AP (7/14, Balsamo) reports Lee’s execution “came over the objection of the victims’ relatives and following days of legal delays, reviving the debate over capital punishment during a time of widespread social unrest.” The AP reports that “just before he died at the federal prison in Terre Haute, Indiana, Lee, professed his innocence. ‘I’ve made a lot of mistakes in my life, but I’m not a murderer.’ said Lee, 47, of Yukon, Oklahoma. ‘You’re killing an innocent man.’”

The New York Times (7/14, Fuchs, 18.61M) reports that the Administration “announced last summer its intention to resume the federal death penalty and to employ a new procedure to carry it out – using a single drug, pentobarbital – after several botched executions by lethal injection renewed scrutiny of capital punishment.” The Times adds that the Supreme Court’s “unsigned 5-to-4 ruling early Tuesday morning said pentobarbital had been used in over 100 executions ‘without incident’ and had been upheld by the Supreme Court and appeals courts.” The Washington Post (7/14, Berman, 14.2M) says that “although the author is unclear, the opinion was the work of Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. and Justices Clarence Thomas, Samuel A. Alito Jr., Neil M. Gorsuch and Brett M. Kavanaugh.”

According to Reuters (7/14, Allen, Lynch), “Just 10 minutes passed between” the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals “revoking the last outstanding injunction stopping Lee’s execution...and the curtain in the execution chamber being pulled back at 7:46 a.m. (1146 GMT) to reveal Lee strapped to a gurney.” The Hill (7/14, Johnson, Kruzell, 2.98M), USA Today (7/14, Wolf, 10.31M), the Washington Free Beacon (7/14, Lehman, 78K), the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Bravin, Gurman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), and the Washington Examiner (7/14, Rowan, 448K), among other news outlets, also cover the execution.

Trump Says Keeping Schools Closed Would Be “A Terrible Decision.”

In an interview broadcast on the CBS Evening News (7/14, story 3, 0:45, O'Donnell, 4.31M), Catherine Herridge asked President Trump, "What do you tell parents and teachers who feel that it's unsafe to go back [to school]?" Trump: "I would tell parents and teachers that you should find yourself a new person, whoever's in charge of that decision, because it's a terrible decision, because children and parents are dying from that trauma, too. They're dying, because they can't do what they're doing. Mothers can't go to work because all of a sudden they have to stay at home and watch their child, and fathers. What's happening, you know, there's a tremendous strain on that whole side of the equation."

The President tweeted Tuesday evening, "Joe Biden claims to be prioritizing 'safety of kids' by keeping schools closed this Fall. Yet he remains silent about children being slaughtered by violence on the streets of Democrat run cities. You & your children won't be SAFE in Biden's America, and neither will anyone else!" Trump also retweeted commentator Dan Bongino, who wrote, "THE KIDS BELONG BACK IN SCHOOL. Stop making them suffer for your own political gain."

On ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 2, 1:55, Muir, 7.36M), Victor Oquendo reported, "Teachers are raising fears about returning to schools too soon. ... The Trump Administration has threatened to pull funding from schools that don't open." Education Secretary DeVos: "American investment in education is a promise to students and their families. If schools aren't going to reopen and not fulfill that promise, they shouldn't get the funds." Blayne Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 8, 2:15, Holt, 5.96M), "While the majority of public education is funded at the state and local level, all eyes are on Washington for that extra boost. Congress approved more than $13 billion of aid for schools early in the pandemic. And in the next relief package, hundreds of billions more could be on the table. And a lot of this also comes down to teachers and whether they are ready to come back."

NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 9, 2:10, Holt, 5.96M) also ran a feature on testing for antibodies as schools consider reopening.

WPost: "Bullying And Threatening" Is Not The Way To Reopen Schools. In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) says it agrees with Trump "about the importance of getting children back into the classroom." However, the Post adds, "We don't think it is sufficient, let alone effective, to make believe the virus isn't a problem while bullying and threatening states and local school districts to open their doors in August." The Post says "it is rich" that the Administration cites "the experience of other countries that have managed to reopen schools as examples to follow when those countries embraced the kind of careful steps and precautions – lockdowns, masks, extensive testing – that Mr. Trump constantly belittles."

In a second related editorial, the Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) writes, "No one could level an accusation of complacency at Kanakuk Kamps, a network of Christian camps in Missouri that posted a 31-point program of pandemic precautions as summer approached. Despite those preparations, one of its camps, for teenagers, was hit by a major outbreak last month." The Post says "that failure, and others like it nationwide, are a warning sign for schools and colleges that hope to reopen this fall."

Administration Drops Plan To Implement Rules On Student Visas For Online Learning.

Media reports are casting the Administration's decision not to pursue restrictions on visas for foreign students if schools held classes online as an unexpected reversal. The Boston Globe (7/14, Fernandes, 972K) reports that at a court hearing, US Attorney Andrew Lelling said ICE made "the decision to exercise its discretion to 'modify' its posture announced in its March guidance. ... This agile approach to the Fall 2020 semester demonstrates that ICE considered and balanced the equities of schools, foreign students, and the agency's need to uphold and enforce the immigration laws and regulations."

ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 11, 0:20, Muir, 7.36M) described the Administration as "backing down," the Los Angeles Times (7/14, Watanabe, 4.64M) that it "abruptly reversed course" in an "announcement...made without explanation," and USA Today (7/14, Shesgreen, 10.31M) that it staged an "abrupt about-face came after a backlash from universities and state officials." The Washington Post (7/14, Anderson, Svrluga, 14.2M) also refers to an "abrupt reversal" that followed "an edict that [had] stunned US higher education leaders and students worldwide," and Reuters (7/14, Rosenberg) says it was "a stunning reversal of policy."

Along similar lines, the AP (7/14, Binkley) reports the Administration faced "eight federal lawsuits and opposition from hundreds of universities," and the NBC News (7/14, 6.14M) website that "the reversal comes in the face of heavy criticism from institutions of higher education and lawmakers from both major parties." The New York Times (7/14, Hartocollis, Jordan, 18.61M), the Washington Times (7/14, Dinan, 492K), the Hill (7/14, Kruzell, 2.98M), the Chronicle of Higher Education (7/14, Thomason, 74K), the Harvard Crimson (7/14, Caldera, Kurilla, 3K), and the Daily Princetonian (7/14, Shevin, 5K), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Feds Might Apply Discarded Policy To Those Who Haven't Previously Applied For Visas. The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Hackman, Restuccia, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports, meanwhile, that Administration officials are considering applying the rules barring visas for entirely online learning only to foreign students who have not previously applied for student visas.

WSJournal Objects To Princeton Officials' Condemnation Of Professor's Views.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes Princeton President Christopher Eisgruber and other university leaders for condemning an article by Princeton classics professor Joshua Katz in which he objected to faculty demands over race and referred to the university's Black Justice League as a "local terrorist organization." The Journal argues that although Katz has tenure and cannot be fired, the cancel culture has succeeded by making him a pariah and intimidating those who might agree with him into remaining silent.

Trump To Appoint Gorka To National Security Education Board.

USA Today (7/14, Behrmann, 10.31M) reports, "Former White House aide Sebastian Gorka will be appointed to be a member of the National Security Education Board, the White House announced Tuesday." USA Today adds that "the board, that consists of 14 members, oversees the federal government's National Security Education Program (NSEP)." Gorka "is a former Breitbart contributor and currently hosts a conservative radio show," whose "comments and articles at Breitbart claiming Islam is an inherently violent religion drew widespread criticism."

Politico (7/14, Cohen, 4.29M) recounts that "a White House aide for less than a year, Gorka left his role as deputy assistant to the president in acrimonious fashion in August 2017." Politico adds that "the White House pushed back against Gorka's claims that he resigned, and MSNBC reported at the time that Gorka was barred from the White House grounds before his resignation letter surfaced."

Foreign Policy: Mosley Hiring At USAID Part Of Effort To "Seed" Agencies With Trump "Loyalists."

Foreign Policy (7/14, Lynch, Gramer, 340K) reports President Trump "has added another political loyalist and anti-abortion advocate to its roster of political hires" at USAID, "expanding the role and influence of the religious right in shaping U.S. priorities on global health and development." Patrina Mosley "has been named advisor to the director of the Center of Excellence on Democracy, Human Rights, and Governance." Foreign Policy says Mosley "is an outspoken anti-abortion advocate who recently accused the United Nations and the World Health Organization (WHO) of using the coronavirus pandemic to promote abortions – a claim the U.N. calls patently false." Foreign Policy adds that the White House personnel office "has been seeding various federal agencies with hard-line loyalists who have often espoused fringe political viewpoints."

Trump Urged To Bring Greater Accountability To CFPB.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Mick Mulvaney, the former Acting Director of CFPB, and Eric Blankenstein, a former policy associate director at the agency, write that the law which created the CFPB gave the agency an automatic funding stream from the Federal Reserve and power to write rules that impact large parts of the economy. They argue that with the law, Congress gave away two of its greatest powers, but the Supreme Court's decision that the President has the power to remove the CFPB director gives him power he should use to bring greater accountability to the agency.

First Lady Urges Americans To Wear Masks.

First Lady Melania Trump took to Twitter Tuesday to write, "Even in the summer months, please remember to wear face coverings & practice social distancing. The more precaution we take now can mean a healthier & safer country in the Fall." The Hill (7/14, Samuels, 2.98M) reports "the first lady has posted photos of herself wearing a mask previously and has been spotted in a face covering during official events in recent weeks," and adds "her direct call on Tuesday for Americans to continue to wear masks and socially distance is notable given President Trump and other White House officials have been reluctant to make similar appeals." The New York Post (7/14, Moore, 4.57M) points out, meanwhile, that the First Lady's posting "came a day after President Trump appeared publicly for the first time wearing a mask during a tour of the Walter Reed Medical Center where he met with wounded troops on Saturday."

Mary Trump Says Her Uncle Is "Utterly Incapable" Of Leading Country.

ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 6, 0:45, Muir, 7.36M) previewed George Stephanopoulos' interview with President Trump's niece, Mary Trump. Asked "the single most important thing you think the country needs to know" about the President, Trump said, "He's utterly incapable of leading this country, and it's dangerous to allow him to do so." Asked if her assessment is based on "what you see now, or what you saw then," Trump said, "Based on what I've seen my entire adult life."

Trump To Announce NEPA Reforms To Speed Permitting Process.

The Washington Post (7/14, Eilperin, Dennis, 14.2M) reports that President Trump plans to "overhaul" the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA). Trump will "announce the changes on Wednesday in Atlanta, as part of his effort to revive the economy amid the coronavirus pandemic." The Post says Trump's plan "would make it easier to build highways, pipelines, chemical plants and other projects that pose environmental risks." If the changes reflect a proposal from January, they would "force agencies to complete even the most exhaustive environmental reviews within two years and restrict the extent to which they could consider a project's full impact on the climate." WAGA-TV Atlanta (7/14, 99K) reported Transportation Secretary Chao says NEPA "is outdated and long overdue for an upgrade that boosts economic growth." Chao: "Just the permitting alone can take up to seven years. So, the President is announcing a new rule that will set time limits to construction permitting processes."

WSB-TV Atlanta (7/14, 161K) reported that Chao "says the President will announce changes in the environmental review process they believe will cut the permitting time for big infrastructure projects from seven to two years. Chao says the change will also help coordinate between government agencies, reduce paperwork, and increase public participation." Chao: "These new policy changes will actually expedite the environmental review of the I-75 commercial vehicle lane project right in Atlanta."

Watkins Faces Three Felony Charges Related To Illegal Voting Investigation.

The Kansas City Star (7/14, Lowry, 549K) reports Rep. Steve Watkins (R-KS) has been charged with "three felonies and a misdemeanor related to an investigation into whether he illegally voted in a 2019 municipal election." Shawnee County District Attorney Mike Kagay (R) "announced the charges about a half-hour before Watkins...was set to appear on a televised debate with his primary challengers Jake LaTurner and Dennis Taylor on KSNT." Watkins said the timing of the charges is "hyper political" and "very suspicious." He argued "that the district attorney shared a consultant with one of his opponents." Watkins faces felony charges of "interference with law enforcement by providing false information, voting without being qualified and unlawful advance voting," as well as "a misdemeanor charge for failing to the notify the DMV of his change of address."

Justice Ginsburg Hospitalized.

ABC World News Tonight (7/14, story 9, 0:20, Muir, 7.36M) reported last night on "late word that Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg has been hospitalized for a possible infection." Ginsburg "is a cancer survivor, and just two months ago was hospitalized for a benign gall bladder condition." The CBS Evening News (7/14, story 7, 1:05, O'Donnell, 4.31M) said Ginsburg "underwent a procedure at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore to clean out a bile duct stent that was placed last August. We're told by the court she is now resting comfortably, but will remain in the hospital a few days to receive intravenous antibiotic treatment." NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 6, 0:20, Holt, 5.96M) also mentioned the story briefly last night.

Fox News (7/14, Pappas, 27.59M) indicates on its website that it is "the latest hospitalization for Ginsburg, 87, who has faced a slew of health conditions in the past," and the AP (7/14) that "in addition to the tumor on her pancreas last year, she was previously treated for colorectal cancer in 1999 and pancreatic cancer in 2009. She had lung surgery to remove cancerous growths in December 2018." USA Today (7/14, Wolf, 10.31M), the Washington Times (7/14, Swoyer, 492K), and the Washington Examiner (7/14, Dibble, 448K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Self-Described "Centrist" NYTimes Opinion Editor Resigns Citing "Bullying," "Illiberal Environment."

The New York Times (7/14, Lee, 18.61M) reports that "Bari Weiss, a writer and editor for the opinion department of The New York Times, has resigned from the paper, citing 'bullying by colleagues' and an 'illiberal environment.'" The Times adds that "in a nearly 1,500-word letter addressed to A.G. Sulzberger, the publisher, Ms. Weiss offered a deep critique of Times employees and company leadership, describing a 'hostile work environment' where co-workers had insulted her or called for her removal on Twitter and in the interoffice communications app Slack." Wrote Weiss, "I do not understand how you have allowed this kind of behavior to go on inside your company in full view of the paper's entire staff and the public."

The Hill (7/14, Easley, 2.98M) reports "Weiss has described herself as a left-leaning centrist but she has been a vocal critic of the left," and the Washington Times (7/14, Chasmar, 492K) that wrote in her resignation letter that she "was hired by the paper three years ago as an effort to reach a wider audience following the election of President Trump." However, she wrote, "the lessons that ought to have followed the election – lessons about the importance of understanding other Americans, the necessity of resisting tribalism, and the centrality of the free exchange of ideas to a democratic society – have not been learned." She added, "Instead, a new consensus has emerged in the press, but perhaps especially at this paper: that truth isn't a process of collective discovery, but an orthodoxy already known to an enlightened few whose job is to inform everyone else."

Vice (7/14, Wagner, 2.11M) was first with the news that Weiss "has resigned from the paper...in the wake of what she recently described as a civil war at the Times between '(mostly young) wokes' and '(mostly 40+) liberals,'" a "war" that "reached its apex when Opinion head James Bennet, who had been widely tipped as a potential replacement for top Times editor Dean Baquet, left the paper" after publishing an op-ed in which Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) "called for the use of military force against protestors."

The CNN (7/14, Darcy, 83.16M) website calls Weiss a "a controversial opinion writer for The New York Times," and notes that she wrote Tuesday, "Twitter is not on the masthead of The New York Times. ... But Twitter has become its ultimate editor. ... Stories are chosen and told in a way to satisfy the narrowest of audiences, rather than to allow a curious public to read about the world and then draw their own conclusions." CNN adds "Weiss generated controversy for her criticism of aspects of progressive culture, particularly with regards to free speech," and "last week, she was one of the dozens of writers who signed an open letter published in Harper's Magazine that spoke out against so-called cancel culture." The Federalist (7/14, Reynolds, 126K) quotes Weiss as writing, "Showing up for work as a centrist at an American newspaper should not require bravery."

The Washington Examiner (7/14, Adams, 448K) headlines its report "Bari Weiss's Resignation Letter Confirms Everything Conservatives Suspected About The New York Times," and the Fox News (7/14, Flood, 27.59M) website says "acting editorial page editor Kathleen Kingsbury provided a statement to Fox News" in which she wrote, "We appreciate the many contributions that Bari made to Times Opinion. I'm personally committed to ensuring that The Times continues to publish voices, experiences and viewpoints from across the political spectrum in the Opinion report."

The Washington Post (7/14, Izadi, Barr, 14.2M) reports "Weiss's letter drew concern from many readers with her claim that some Times colleagues have 'openly demeaned' her on the company's internal Slack messaging platform."

Sullivan Leaves New Yorker, Slams “Mob” That “Bullied” Weiss And Editors Who Allowed It. The Washington Post (7/14, Izadi, Barr, 14.2M) reports that “hours after the Times confirmed Weiss’s departure, writer Andrew Sullivan announced he was leaving New York Magazine by the end of the week. He, like Weiss, has lamented that the current cultural and political climate stifles open debate.” Sullivan tweeted Tuesday, “The mob bullied and harassed a young woman for thought crimes. And her editors stood by and watched.”

Trump Bemoans Perceived Anti-Conservative Media Bias. The President took to Twitter Tuesday to write, “Would be so great if the Media would get the word out to the people in a ‘fair and balanced’ way. We will win anyway, but they are a far more difficult adversary than their Radical Left Do Nothing Democrat Partner!”

NYPPost: Trump’s Hair Showing A “More Natural” Silver-Gray Color.

The New York Post (7/14, Bowden, 4.57M) reports that President Trump has “started sporting a more natural look.” At a Rose Garden briefing on Tuesday, Trump “emerged from the Oval Office with his signature pompadour exhibiting a distinctly more silver-gray hue.” The Post says Trump “is renowned for his preoccupation with his appearance and his year-round tan and intricately coiffed mop of blond hair have demanded as much examination by the media as his stance toward China.”

Rasmussen National Poll: 54% Of Likely Voters Think Biden “Capable” Of Debating Trump.

The Washington Times (7/14, Harper, 492K) reports, “A slim majority – 54% – believe [Joe Biden] is actually ‘capable’ of a debate with [President Trump.] according to a Rasmussen Reports survey released Tuesday. Over a third – 36% – said Mr. Biden could not manage the event, while another 11% aren’t sure. And the inevitable partisan breakdown: 77% of Democrats believe Mr. Biden could pull it off, compared to 32% of Republicans and 49% of independent voters.” The poll “of 1,000 likely US voters was conducted July 9-12.”

Rothenberg: Texas Is Currently “Competitive,” Not A “Swing State.”

In his CQ Roll Call (7/14, 154K) column, Stuart Rothenberg writes, “When I saw the headline on CNN analyst Harry Enten’s July 12 column – ‘Texas is a swing state in 2020, new polls reveal’ – I did a double take. Really? ‘It’s pretty clear looking at the data that Texas is a swing state in the 2020 election,’ wrote Enten,” though “just a few paragraphs later, he used a different term, observing that ‘Texas really is competitive at this point.’” Rothenberg says, “Texas is not a ‘swing state,’ and it hasn’t been one for years. ... It leans Republican.” Rothenberg adds, “Given the current polling, Enten is unquestionably correct that Texas is competitive now and looks likely to be that way until November. And Texas may be transitioning from a Republican state into a swing state, but I doubt that it is there yet. It could still take five or 10 years for the transition.”

Rep. Kelly Contends Polls Showing Trump Trailing In Pennsylvania Are Inaccurate.

The Hill (7/14, Easley, 2.98M) reports that Rep. Mike Kelly (R-PA) “says that polls showing President Trump trailing in the key battleground state of Pennsylvania do not accurately reflect the state of the race on the ground.” During a Tuesday conference call with journalists, Kelly “said the polls are not taking into account Trump’s support from those who turned out to vote for the first time ever in 2016,” arguing “that ‘likely voter’ models used by most pollsters are not sampling those first-time voters.” Said Kelly, “If you had talked to people the week before the [2016] election, they would have said this guy is so far behind Hillary Clinton he can’t win. Well people, they didn’t poll first time voters because they didn’t know who was voting for the first time. By the same token, most of the same polls I’ve looked at, you’re still polling likely voters, so these people aren’t going to get polled.”

Clinton Says Trump May Not “Go Quietly” If He Loses 2020 Election.

The Washington Times (7/14, Sherfinski, 492K) reports that during a Monday appearance on Comedy Central’s Daily Show, Hillary Clinton “said the US needs to be prepared for President Trump not to ‘go quietly’ if he loses the fall election.” Of Trump, Clinton said, “Well, I think it is a fair point to raise as to whether or not, if he loses, he’s going to go quietly or not. And we have to be ready for that.” Clinton continued, “If people get to vote and they for whatever reason vote for Donald Trump, OK – we’ll accept it. Not happily.”

McEnany: Clinton’s Remarks “Quite Comical.” On its website, Fox News (7/14, Dorman, 27.59M) reports that during a Tuesday appearance on Fox News, White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany weighed in on Clinton’s comments. Said McEnany, “It’s quite comical to watch the Democrat Party talk about not accepting the results of the election, because the only people who haven’t accepted the results of elections are people in the Democrat Party, like Hillary Clinton who’s blamed her loss on, I think it was something like two dozen different entities, never blaming herself.”

Professor: Trump’s Attacks On Mail-In Voting Could Lead To “Ugly Election Scenario.”

Yahoo! News (7/14, Ward, 12.82M) reports that before the pandemic “made it likely that there will be a historic number of mail-in ballots in this fall’s election,” Richard Hasen, a law and political science professor at the University of California, Irvine, “was worried that if the election were close, President Trump might declare victory before all the votes were counted.” Now, his concern is “much greater.” Trump “has made numerous wild claims – without any evidence and in contradiction to known facts – that mail-in voting will lead to widespread fraud and cheating.” Hasen told a Yahoo! News podcast, “As Trump drives more and more of his supporters to vote in person and away from vote-by-mail, it's quite likely that we'll see Trump getting many more votes on election night, the votes that are counted on Election Day. ... Then, four or five days later, [if Joe] Biden becomes the winner as the absentee ballots are counted in Philadelphia or Detroit, that's a recipe, if it's close, for a really ugly election scenario." Hasen "said one of the keys to inoculating the country against claims of a stolen election is to prepare people for the possibility that if the election is close, it could take a week or more for the results to be decided."

Biden Unveils $2T Climate Change Plan.

The AP (7/14, Jaffe, Knickmeyer, Weissert) reports that Joe Biden on Tuesday "released a $2 trillion plan...aimed at combating climate change and spurring economic growth in part by overhauling America's energy industry, with a proposal to achieve entirely carbon pollution-free power by 2035." Biden "acknowledged that the economy is in 'crisis' because of the COVID-19 pandemic, but said it offers 'an incredible opportunity, not just to build back to where we were before, but better, stronger, more resilient and more prepared for the challenges that lie ahead.'" The AP says the plan "marks [Biden's] latest effort to build out a legislative agenda with measures that could animate progressives who may be skeptical of him and 'reflects ideas embraced by some of' his 'more progressive allies.'" However, Biden's plan "doesn't go as far as the Green New Deal."

The New York Times (7/14, Glueck, Friedman, 18.61M) reports that Biden, speaking in Wilmington, Delaware, "built on his plans, released last week, for reviving the economy in the wake of the coronavirus crisis, with a new focus on enhancing the nation's infrastructure and emphasizing the importance of putting the United States on a path to significantly cut fossil fuel emissions." The Times says the Biden campaign "sees an opportunity to take direct aim at [President] Trump, who has struggled to deliver on his pledges to pay for major improvements to American infrastructure."

The Washington Post (7/14, Viser, Grandoni, 14.2M) reports that the plan represents "Biden's latest attempt to channel the liberal energy in his party, as well as a response to calls for sweeping plans to lift a struggling economy. The blueprint was quickly hailed by environmentalists and liberals as a big step forward in the climate effort, and just as quickly denounced by Republicans as an unwieldy plan that would raise energy costs." The Post adds that Biden's "plan is likely to trigger a vigorous debate with...Trump, who has a much different approach to the country's energy sector and climate policy."

The Washington Times (7/14, McLaughlin, Miller, 492K) reports that Trump, speaking Tuesday at the White House, said, "Joe Biden gave a speech in which he said that the core of his economic agenda is a hard left crusade against American energy. He wants to kill American energy." The Times adds that Trump "railed against Mr. Biden allowing far-left champions" Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) and Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) "to write his policies. 'In other words, he wants to impose the Green New Deal on our country,' said Mr. Trump. 'When I first saw the Green New Deal I thought it was a joke.'"

The Hill (7/14, Brufke, 2.98M) reports, "Top Republicans are looking to target...Biden's $2 trillion climate and infrastructure plan, expressing confidence" that his "position on issues like fracking will give them an edge in the rust belt states heading into November." The Hill adds that during a Trump campaign call on Tuesday featuring House Minority Whip Scalise and Rep. Mike Kelly (R-PA), "the lawmakers told reporters they believe climate and energy are winning issues for Republicans in key states necessary in retaining the White House and down ballot." For example, Scalise said, "We have hundreds of thousands of jobs – over 250,000 jobs would be lost, under Joe Biden's Green New Deal energy plan. You would see higher energy costs, and you would see who gets hit the hardest – it's low-income families."

CNBC (7/14, Pramuk, 3.62M) reports on its website that the plan, "which comes days after a joint task force formed by the Biden and [Sanders] campaigns outlined a climate change agenda, sets out a more ambitious approach to developing clean energy than the Biden campaign did during the Democratic primary." According to CNBC, Biden "also aims to use the federal government to reverse years of Trump administration efforts to ease environmental rules, including by setting up an environmental and climate justice division within the Justice Department."

Bloomberg (7/14, Dlouhy, Epstein, and Natter, 4.73M) says "the challenge for Biden lies in convincing progressive voters that he hasn't left them short even as he set aside some of the more ambitious moves called for in the Green New Deal championed by left-wing Democrats" such as Ocasio-Cortez. Reuters (7/14, Hunnicutt, Volcovici) reports that "activist groups such as the Sunrise Movement, which had been critical of Biden's climate plans in the past, praised him on Tuesday for showing more urgency on the issue."

USA Today (7/14, Jansen, 10.31M) reports, "The energy proposal is part of Biden's broader economic agenda called 'Build Back Better,' which he began to unveil Thursday with a $700 billion plan over four years to spur manufacturing and research and development. His goal is to create 5 million jobs beyond the restoration of millions lost this year during the COVID-19 pandemic." The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Puko, Collins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the Los Angeles Times (7/14, Halper, 4.64M), the CNN (7/14, Bradner, Mucha, 83.16M) website, the Washington Times (7/14, McLaughlin, 492K), and the Washington Examiner (7/14, Siegel, 448K) also report on the story.

Author: Biden Could End Some Of Trump's Tax Cuts As Soon As 2021. In a Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) op-ed, Philip DeMuth, author of "The Overtaxed Investor: Slash Your Tax Bill And Be A Tax Alpha Dog," says Trump's Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, which greatly reduced taxes, is due to expire at the end of 2025, and at that point, President Obama's American Taxpayer Relief Act of 2012 is most likely to once again become law, resulting in higher taxes. DeMuth adds, however, that if Biden wins the White House this year and Democrats retake the Senate, some of Trump's tax cuts could be ended in 2021.

In Shift, Biden Now Says Senate Filibuster May Need To Be Eliminated.

Politico (7/14, Cohen, 4.29M) reports that Joe Biden "on Monday signaled he would be open to the Senate ending its practice of imposing a

60-vote threshold for most legislation, a positional shift from the Democratic presidential nominee who spent more than 35 years as a senator. In comments to reporters "that were reported by the New York Times, Biden said he hoped to create systemic change on an array of issues in the US and said he was open to measures that would allow legislation to pass the Senate with a simple majority vote. ... 'It's going to depend on how obstreperous they become,'" Biden "said of Senate Republicans who might filibuster legislation championed by a potential Biden administration. 'But I think you're going to just have to take a look at it.' As recently as February 2020, Biden opposed ending the filibuster."

The Washington Examiner (7/14, Larsen, 448K) reports that Biden "firmly opposed abolishing the filibuster in a January interview with the New York Times editorial board that was released just before Democratic primary voters and caucusgoers started casting ballots for their presidential picks. 'There are a number of areas where you can reach consensus that relate to things like cancer and healthcare and a whole range of things. I think we can reach consensus on that and get it passed without changing the filibuster rule,' Biden said at the time."

Tuberville Defeats Sessions In Alabama Senate Primary.

Media reports are blaming President Trump's opposition for former Attorney General Jeff Sessions' defeat in the Alabama GOP Senate primary. The AP (7/14, Chandler, Barrow) reports Sessions lost "to former college football coach Tommy Tuberville, likely ending a long political career with a bitter defeat egged on by...Trump," who "continued his criticism of Sessions right up to the eve of Tuesday's election." Shortly after the race was called last night, the President tweeted, "Wow, just called! @TTuberville – Tommy Tuberville WON big against Jeff Sessions. Will be a GREAT Senator for the incredible people of Alabama. @DougJones is a terrible Senator who is just a Super Liberal puppet for Schumer & Pelosi. Represents Alabama poorly. On to November 3rd."

The Montgomery Advertiser (7/14, Lyman, 62K) reports the race was not close, with Tuberville enjoying a nearly 30-point edge at the ballot box, and Alabama Live (7/14, Sharp, 734K) that "the loss to Tuberville represented the first time Sessions was defeated at the ballot box since his political career began with a 1994 victory in an Alabama Attorney General race followed by four terms in the Senate and an appointment as the nation's 84th US Attorney General."

The Washington Times (7/14, Varney, 492K) reports "Trump has worked hard for Mr. Tuberville since he endorsed the former coach prior to the March primary," and the New York Times (7/14, Plott, 18.61M) that Sessions "spent his final days on the campaign trail reiterating his support for...Trump's agenda," but "in the end, it wasn't enough. And in truth, after Mr. Trump endorsed Mr. Sessions's opponent, it probably never was." The Times adds that Tuberville's "platform was largely a blanket promise to support the president at all times." The Times quotes Angi Stalnaker, "a Republican strategist in Alabama," as saying, "People in Alabama voted against Jeff Sessions because Donald Trump told them to. ... If it had been Donald Trump saying, 'Go write in Mickey Mouse,' 50 percent of them would have gone to write in Mickey Mouse."

The Washington Post (7/14, Kane, Olorunnipa, 14.2M) reports that during the campaign, "Sessions endured one brutal insult after another from the president," and adds that "Trump's endorsement of Tuberville in the race has always seemed to have more to do with Trump's anger at Sessions over his recusing himself from the Russia investigation while attorney general than with any particular support for the former Auburn University football coach." Politico (7/14, Arkin, Mutnick, 4.29M), The Hill (7/14, Manchester, 2.98M), the Washington Examiner (7/14, Lim, 448K), the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Andrews, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), and the Daily Caller (7/14, Trunsky, 716K), among other news outlets, also report the story.

Poll: Kelly Leads McSally 52%-43% In Arizona Senate Race, Down From A 13-Point Edge In May.

On its website, KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (7/14, 125K) reports that an OH Predictive Insights poll of 600 likely Arizona voters, taken July 6-7, shows Democrat Mark Kelly leading appointed Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) 52%-43% in this fall's special election to fill out the remaining term of the late Sen. John McCain (R-AZ). KTAR-FM says Kelly's lead is down from a 13-point edge the Democrat held "in a similar poll taken in May." The Hill (7/14, Wilson, 2.98M) reports that Kelly "is running ahead of the margins Sen. Kyrsten Sinema (D) managed when she narrowly beat McSally in 2018, becoming the first Democrat to win a Senate seat in the state that produced Barry Goldwater and John McCain in a generation." The Washington Examiner (7/14, Drucker, 448K) also reports on the poll results.

In 2018, Kentucky Candidate McGrath Likened Late-Term Abortion To C-Sections.

Writing at Townhall (7/14, 177K), Reagan McCarthy says that Democrat Amy McGrath, who is challenging Senate Majority Leader McConnell in Kentucky, "refuses to draw a distinction between trimesters for abortion; she previously said that she was '100 percent pro-choice.' When pressed on where exactly she would begin to oppose abortion, and if a woman could elect to have an abortion while already in labor," McGrath replied, "I don't think that government should be involved in a woman's right to choose what is happening to her body." McCarthy adds that during her failed 2018 House bid, McGrath "likened late-term abortion to a C-section, claiming that 'no one' supports late term abortion: 'No one would ever dream of that scenario. It's called a C-Section!'"

Gideon "Easily" Wins Maine's Democratic Senate Primary.

As expected, state House Speaker Sara Gideon on Tuesday won Maine's Democratic Senate primary, earning the right to take on Sen.

Susan Collins (R-ME) this fall. The AP (7/14, Sharp) reports that Gideon, “who’s raised a staggering $23 million in her Senate bid, easily” defeated attorney Bre Kidman and activist Betsy Sweet to win the Democratic nomination. The AP adds that Gideon “is poised to further increase her haul: Her victory entitles her to $3.7 million from a crowdsourced fund for Collins’ challenger that was established during the Senate fight over Brett Kavanaugh’s Supreme Court confirmation. Democrats were furious over Collins’ vote in favor of Kavanaugh.”

The Bangor Daily News (7/14, Piper, 198K) reports that Gideon “decisively won the Democratic” contest, adding that “the Bangor Daily News and its national election results partner, Decision Desk HQ, called the race at 9:06 p.m., when unofficial results showed Gideon with 73.5 percent of votes.” The report adds that Gideon “was considered the favorite going into Election Day, with backing from national Democrats as well as many state legislators.” The Portland Press Herald (7/14, Miller, 244K) reports, “The Democratic race to take on Collins pitted” Gideon – “the favorite among national party leaders – against two more progressive candidates who said their election would help usher in much-needed changes to the Democratic establishment in Washington.”

The New York Times (7/14, Cochrane, 18.61M) reports that Gideon, “backed by the Senate Democratic campaign arm and a number of outside political groups, had long been the favorite to challenge Ms. Collins, the sole remaining New England Republican in Congress. The nonpartisan Cook Political Report has rated the race a tossup, and the election has already become the most expensive in Maine history.” CQ Roll Call (7/14, Ackley, 154K) reports, “Inside Elections with Nathan L. Gonzales rates the Maine Senate race a Toss-up.” The Hill (7/14, Greenwood, 2.98M) reports that Collins “is among the most vulnerable GOP incumbents seeking reelection this year, and Gideon is one of the Democratic Party’s top recruits.” Newsweek (7/14, Touchberry, 1.53M) and the Washington Examiner (7/14, Lim, 448K) also report on the story.

Hegar Defeats West In Texas Democratic Senate Primary Runoff.

Veteran MJ Hegar on Tuesday defeated state Sen. Royce West in the Texas Democratic Senate primary runoff. Hegar advances to the general election, where she will face Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX). The Houston Chronicle (7/14, Wermund, 730K) reports, “Though the Associated Press called the race for Hegar, West” still “held out hope, tweeting that there were ‘still many boxes out in urban centers’ and that he would ‘evaluate the vote totals again in the morning.’” The Chronicle adds that Hegar “is just the type of candidate the party has sought nationally since 2018, when the suburbs began to revolt against President Donald Trump, helping hand Democrats control of the House. She is a decorated war veteran who Democrats hope can appeal to disillusioned Republicans, especially in the suburbs, where she grew up and still lives – and where the party hopes to gain ground in November.”

The Texas Tribune (7/14, Svitek, 23K) says, “With 90% of locations reporting, Hegar was ahead of West, 52% to 48%. ... Hegar had a 37,488-vote lead at the time she declared victory.” The Austin American Statesman (7/14, Tilove, Subscription Publication, 343K) reports, “The size of Hegar’s lead slowly crept up and then held steady as the night wore on in an election that few expected would be this close a few months or even weeks ago.” The Dallas Morning News (7/14, 946K) reports that Hegar on Tuesday night “said the Democratic turnout was so large it’s ‘going to cause John Cornyn to have a hard time sleeping tonight.’ She then issued a message to Cornyn. ‘Pack it up, buttercup, because your time has ended and we’re coming back to take our seat back for Texas,’ she said.”

The Washington Post (7/14, Kane, Itkowitz, 14.2M) reports that Hegar, who was supported by the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, “was long considered the favorite, but a late charge” by “West forced outside groups backing Hegar to pour money into the race to get her over the finish line.” The Post adds, “The dynamics of the primary were similar to others around the country that shifted as thousands of Americans joined protests against racial injustice. West, who is African American, had captured momentum as the change candidate against establishment pick Hegar, though he has 27 years in elected office.”

Vox (7/14, 2.27M) reports that in addition to the DSCC, Gideon was also backed by “major national groups including EMILY’s List, Everytown for Gun Safety, and the Planned Parenthood Action Fund. She has long been the anointed candidate to take on Cornyn, and she was the top vote-getter in Texas’s Super Tuesday primary in March.” Newsweek (7/14, Hutzler, 1.53M) and BuzzFeed News (7/14, Prakash) also report on the story.

WPost Report: Democrats Increasingly Optimistic About Expanding House Majority.

The Washington Post (7/14, Bade, 14.2M) reports, “Just two months ago, House Republicans had been upbeat about their 2020 prospects following the surprise victory of GOP Rep. Mike Garcia in a California special election to replace Democratic Rep. Katie Hill, who had resigned,” but now Democrats are “on offense in hopes of expanding their majority in the House, where they hold 233 seats.” The Post says that “in recent days, nonpartisan political handicappers have moved several races in Texas as well as GOP seats in suburban areas from Indiana to Pennsylvania in Democrats’ favor.” The Post adds, “At the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, political aides are eyeing races in Alaska and Montana, two GOP-held states the party never dreamed would be potentially in play.”

Omar’s MN5 Primary Opponent Raised $3.2M Between April And End Of June.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (7/14, Biersbach, 1.04M) reports that opposition to Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) “is fueling an unprecedented surge in donations to her top Democratic opponent, political newcomer Antone Melton-Meaux.” Melton-Meaux “told the Star Tribune he raised a staggering $3.2 million between April and the end of June, with $2 million cash left in the bank before the Aug. 11 primary. He dramatically outraised Omar, who took in $471,624 during the same time period. Omar’s campaign said she has $1,111,861 left on hand ahead of the primary election.”

Jones Wins NY17 Democratic Primary.

The New York Times (7/14, Rubinstein, 18.61M) reports that attorney Mondaire Jones, "a progressive candidate supported by the institutional left," has won the "crowded Democratic House primary in the" race to succeed retiring Rep. Nita Lowey (D-NY) in NY17, "all but ensuring that he will join Congress next year as among its first openly gay African-American members." The race was not called by the AP "until Tuesday, three weeks after the primary, even though Mr. Jones had a commanding advantage after the machine ballot count: He had twice as many votes as his closest competitor, Adam Schleifer."

CQ Roll Call (7/14, Bowman, 154K) reports that Jones "may have to share his history-making distinction as the first openly gay Black man in Congress with [Democratic] New York City Councilman Ritchie Torres, who currently leads a crowded primary in New York's 15th District. Torres is Black and Hispanic." CQ Roll Call adds that Hillary Clinton won NY17 "by 20 points in 2016, and the district's partisan lean means Jones is likely to come to Congress next year. Inside Elections rates the race Solid Democratic."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump "Cleared A Path" For GOP QAnon Candidates.

The New York Times (7/14, Rosenberg, Steinhauer, 18.61M) reports that a GOP "Senate candidate recently declared herself 'one of the thousands of digital soldiers' in service of QAnon, a convoluted pro-Trump conspiracy theory about a 'deep state' of child-molesting Satanist traitors plotting against" President Trump. The Times says "a congressional candidate in Colorado who made approving comments about QAnon bested a five-term Republican incumbent in a primary last month. And then there is Marjorie Taylor Greene, a Georgia Republican who is perhaps the most unabashedly pro-QAnon candidate for Congress and has drawn a positive tweet from...Trump." The Times adds, "More than two years after QAnon, which the FBI has labeled a potential domestic terrorism threat, emerged...the movement's supporters are morphing from keyboard warriors into political candidates," and "have been urged on by Mr. Trump, whose own espousal of conspiracy theories and continual railing against the political establishment have cleared a path for QAnon candidates."

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 41.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 41.6%, and his disapproval at 55.9%. Trump's approval is up 0.5 since yesterday; his disapproval is up by 0.7.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (7/9-7/13) finds Trump's approval at 47%, and his disapproval at 51%.

IMF Head Urged Ukraine President To Preserve Central Bank Independence.

Reuters (7/14, Shalal) reports IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva "said she told Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskiy on Tuesday that his country was required to preserve the independence of its central bank under an IMF-supported program." Georgieva, in a statement, "said she spoke with Zelenskiy on 'concerns about the pressures being put on the National Bank of Ukraine' (NBU) and underscored the importance of an independent central bank to ensure economic stability and maintain investor confidence." Georgieva said, "It is in the interest of Ukraine to preserve the independence of NBU and it is also a requirement under the current IMF-supported program. ... I urged President Zelenskiy to stay the course of sound monetary and financial policies – those are key to stronger investment and inclusive growth."

Reuters (7/14, Polityuk) also reports Zelenskiy told Georgieva "that he would nominate a candidate for central bank head by end of this week." Zelenskiy tweeted, "Informed @KGeorgieva that by the end of the week I will have a new candidate for Head of the NBU for Parliament's approval. S/he will be an independent technocrat and continue the Bank's independent course. I make all my decisions only in the interests of the Ukrainian people."

Eurozone Banks Warn Of Business Lending Crunch.

The Financial Times (7/14, Arnold, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) reports, "Banks plan to cut back on the flow of credit to eurozone businesses this summer because they anticipate that governments will wind down..."

G20 Receives Report Detailing Need For International Payments Infrastructure.

Law360 (7/14, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Financial Stability Board and the Bank for International Settlements "have provided the G-20 with a report detailing a variety of building blocks necessary to update cross-border payment infrastructure, with a focus on technology-driven changes and enhanced global cooperation." The groups "said Monday that the Committee on Payments and Market Infrastructures had provided a Stage 2 report to the G-20, as the group of nations works to enhance cross-border payments." That report "outlines areas the forum for governments and central bank governors should focus on, including harmonizing data protocols and addressing planned new payments infrastructures like Facebook-backed Libra."

Members Of Congress, Travel Industry Want US-Canada Travel Ban Eased.

According to Politico (7/14, Gardner, 4.29M), "US lawmakers are applying pressure on Ottawa and Washington to ease restrictions on the Canada-U.S. border, but few Canadians want to welcome their American neighbors any time soon." Politico says "a growing chorus is agitating for Canada and the U.S. to loosen the rules around 'essential' travelers," including "the travel industry, border communities and members of Congress."

WPost Analysis: US, Poorer Nations Bear Growing Share Of Cases.

The Washington Post (7/14, A1, Witte, Sheridan, Slater, Sly, 14.2M) reports the impact of the pandemic "is not being felt evenly," as "poorer nations throughout Latin America, the Middle East, South Asia and Africa are bearing a growing share of the caseload, even as wealthier countries in Western Europe and East Asia enjoy a relative respite after having beaten back the worst effects through rigorously enforced lockdowns." The US, "which leads the world in new cases and, as with many nations that possess far fewer resources, has shown no sign of being able to regain control." According to the Post, "Nearly all the countries struggling with a surge share something in common: After weeks or months of trying to suppress the virus, they reopened their economies, only to find that the virus came roaring back."

Asian Countries Pause Reopening As Number Of Cases Increase.

Reuters (7/14, Packham, Tajitsu) reports, "Australian states tightened borders and restricted pub visits on Tuesday, while Disney prepared to close its Hong Kong theme park and Japan stepped up tracing as a jump in novel coronavirus cases across Asia fanned fears of a second wave of infections." Across many parts of Asia, nations are "finding cause to pause the reopening of their economies, some after winning praise for their initial responses to the outbreak."

Britain To Mandate Mask-Wearing In Shops.

The Washington Times (7/14, Meier, 492K) reports Britain is "making it mandatory to wear a face mask while in shops and supermarkets starting in less than two weeks." Those who do not abide by the new rule, set to take effect July 24, "will be subject to fines of up to £100."

Erdoğan, Trump Agree To Work More Closely On Libya.

Iran Executes Retired Defense Ministry Employee Charged With Working For CIA.

The AP (7/14) reports Iran "has executed a former employee of the defense ministry who was convicted of spying on behalf of the Central Intelligence Agency." According to the AP, "It was the second such execution in the past month." The Iranian judiciary announced that Reza Asgari was executed last week, and "had worked in the airspace department of the ministry and retired in 2016." In June, Iran "said another alleged spy, Jalal Hajizavar, was hanged in a prison near Tehran."

China And Iran Forge Closer Ties With Trade, Security Agreements.

The Washington Free Beacon (7/14, Beyrer, 78K) reports Iran and China are "closing in on a series of economic and security agreements" that will "bring Chinese capital to Iran's energy industry, threatening to curb the effects" of President Trump's "maximum pressure" sanctions campaign against Iran. The new deal would give China "a 25-year regular discount on Iranian oil exports." In return, Iran would "benefit from security and research collaborations with China's military."

NYTimes Report: "No Conclusive Evidence" Tying Russia To Marines' Deaths.

The New York Times (7/14, Cooper, Steinhauer, Gibbons-Neff, Schmitt, 18.61M) reports US intelligence agencies are investigating whether a car bomb that killed three US Marines in Afghanistan "was detonated at the behest of a Russian military agency paying bounties to Afghanistan militia groups for killing American troops." The Times says if the deaths are linked to Russian bounties, it would be "a staggering repudiation of [President] Trump's yearslong embrace of President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia." Currently, "there is no conclusive evidence linking the deaths to any kind of Russian bounty."

Deadly Taliban Attack Raises Concerns Over Faltering Afghan Peace Process.

The Washington Post (7/14, Constable, 14.2M) reports that a deadly attack Monday followed "weeks of relentless insurgent ground assaults and bombings...seemed to many Afghans like one more nail in the coffin of long-stymied talks between Taliban and Afghan delegates." Across the country, the attack "seemed to deepen growing feelings of disillusionment with the peace process and fears for the future."

Danon Says Israel Is "Grateful" To Trump Administration For Pulling Out Of Iran Deal.

In an interview with the Washington Post (7/14, Mekhennet, 14.2M), Israel's outgoing Ambassador to the UN, Danny Danon, was asked if the Trump Administration "handled the threat you see coming from Iran in a way that was sufficient," Danon said, "We are grateful for the decision to pull out of the Iran deal, it was very important. And we appreciate the strong stance of President Trump and [Secretary of State] Pompeo on this issue. We have stated many times, we will not allow Iran to achieve nuclear weapons, no matter what. We welcome the leadership of the U.S. on this issue."

Danon Says Israel Willing To Return To Negotiations With Palestinians.

In an interview with the Washington Post (7/14, Mekhennet, 14.2M), Israel's outgoing Ambassador to the UN, Danny Danon, was asked about the Palestinians' announcement that they have ended security cooperation with Israel. Danon said, "It is not the first time we hear an announcement similar to that one. And this security cooperation is not only beneficial to Israel but for the Palestinians themselves." Asked if there are any efforts to bring the Palestinians back to the table, Danon said, "We are open-minded. I have been approaching President [Mahmoud] Abbas when he came to the U.N. the last time. ... We are willing to go back to the negotiating table. But it's difficult to find a good partner on the other side."

Danon: Anti-Semitism Must Be Fought On All Fronts.

In an interview with the Washington Post (7/14, Mekhennet, 14.2M), Israel's outgoing Ambassador to the UN, Danny Danon, said, "I think we have to fight anti-Semitism on all fronts. Today with social media it is a challenge, and we have debates with scholars and legal experts about what we can do regarding, hate crimes, how to deal with freedom of speech and where we draw the line. We cherish freedom of speech, but we cannot cherish freedom of hate." Asked if he was directly confronted with anti-Semitism at the UN, Danon said, "I had difficult moments, both when you hear the voices coming from Iran or the hate crime in Pittsburgh here in the US."

Azerbaijan-Armenia Border Clashes Continue For Third Day.

Reuters (7/14, Hovhannisyanyan, Bagirova) reports, "Seven Azeri soldiers and a civilian and four Armenian servicemen were killed on Tuesday in the third day of border clashes between" Armenia and Azerbaijan. The two countries "have long been in conflict over Azerbaijan's breakaway, mainly ethnic Armenian region of Nagorno-Karabakh." Reuters says the clashes are of concern to the international community "in part because of the threat to instability in the South Caucasus, a region that serves as a corridor for pipelines taking oil and gas to world markets." The AP (7/14, Demourian) reports that the fighting left "at least 16 people killed on both sides, including an Azerbaijani general." The AP adds, "Officials in both countries blamed each other for starting the fighting and said that sporadic shelling has continued."

WPost: Trump Administration Lacks Coherent Regime Change Strategy For Venezuela.

A Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) editorial says Venezuela's Supreme Court, which is controlled by President Nicolás Maduro's regime, "has ousted the leaders of the country's three largest political parties, including that of Juan Guaidó, who has been recognized as Venezuela's interim president by the United States and more than 50 other countries," and "named new leaders that the opposition says accepted bribes to act as the regime's stooges." The Post says the move "opens the way to a fraudulent election later this year for the National Assembly." The Post argues that the Trump Administration "no longer has a coherent regime change strategy," and it "looks possible that the Chavista movement, like that of Fidel Castro in Cuba, will survive a U.S. boycott and consolidate a comprehensive dictatorship. U.S. policy ought to adjust for that eventuality. A good start would be to expand refugee admissions for Venezuelans, including activists from the authentic opposition."

Freddie Mac Multifamily's Jenkins, Martinez Recognized In "Power Finance 2020" List Of Industry Leaders.

Commercial Observer (NY) (7/14) released its "Power Finance 2020" list of industry leaders, which included Freddie Mac Multifamily EVP Debby Jenkins and SVP Rich Martinez. Commercial Observer says that Freddie "continued a run of impressive growth last year, hitting another record in loan purchasing of more than $78 billion as mandated by the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA), and it registered as the largest capital provider for multifamily housing in the country." Freddie's $75.5 billion of securitizations included $61.5 billion in K-Deals, $6.9 billion in small-balance deals, and $4 billion in Participation Certificate issuance. Despite the pandemic, Commercial Observer says, "according to Jenkins, Freddie never really fell behind its mapped pipeline and is on track to hit its $100 billion cap this year." Martinez said that Freddie Mac used the "strategic location" of its "nine satellite offices and four regional locations, plus...frequent visits to all the markets" the GSE serves in order to maintain communication with lenders. Martinez added, "The COVID-19 virus has required us to virtually connect more frequently with our Optigo lenders and borrowers to obtain that local market knowledge."

Despite Seila Ruling, Experts Say Questions Remain Regarding Constitutionality Of FHFA's Structure.

American Banker (7/15, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports, "Many observers saw the high court's recent ruling striking down the CFPB's single-director leadership structure as nearly decisive for the FHFA as well, since its structure appears to be identical." However, "with the court deciding to hear the FHFA case on its own, the justices may want to provide an opportunity to the FHFA – which says its statutory setup is different than that of the CFPB – to state its case, experts say." Last week, the Supreme Court granted cert to Collins v. Mnuchin, which involves claims by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac shareholders that the FHFA's structure is unconstitutional. FHFA Director Mark Calabria said that the Seila ruling "does not directly affect the constitutionality of the FHFA," and the FHFA said that the agency "looks forward to the U.S. Supreme Court taking up the Collins case and clarifying these important issues."

Mortgage Delinquencies Hit Record High In April.

The Washington Post (7/14, Van Dam, 14.2M) reports that in April, "new mortgage delinquencies hit a record...well above anything seen during the Great Recession." The Post says "some 3.4 percent of Americans became at least 30 days delinquent on their mortgage in April, according to an analysis from CoreLogic." The Post reports that CoreLogic Chief Economist Frank Nothaft also "estimates home prices will fall about 6.6 percent from this May to the next," and "Freddie Mac forecasts flat home prices next June."

DS News (7/14, Albanese) reports that the "overall national delinquency rate in April stood at 6.1%." The delinquency rate in April was the highest in four years, with the spike putting an end to "27 straight months of falling annual delinquency rates." CoreLogic CEO Frank Martell said, "Despite the scale and suddenness of the pandemic, mortgage delinquency has yet to emerge as a major issue, thanks to government COVID-19 relief programs and other housing finance industry efforts. As the true impact of the economic shutdown during the second quarter of 2020 becomes clearer, we can expect to see a rise in delinquencies in the next 12-18 months – especially as forbearance periods under the CARES Act come to a close."

Mortgage News Daily (7/14, Swanson) reports that the CARES Act "provides forbearance for homeowners who were economically impacted by the pandemic if their mortgages are backed by the GSEs Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the FHA, or the VA." According to MND, "CoreLogic's delinquency numbers include those loans in forbearance even if the loan has not been reported as past due to credit reporting agencies." RISMedia (7/14, 2K) also covers CoreLogic's delinquency data.

GSE Multifamily Lending Fuels Multifamily Sector's Strength In Q1 And Through Pandemic.

Commercial Observer \(NY\) (7/14) reports on the ways mortgage lenders are navigating the pandemic. The multifamily sector has been buoyed by Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, as the "presence of those behemoth quasi-government agencies in the sector lessens risk even amid tumultuous economic uncertainty, observers say." According to Commercial Observer, as a result, "multifamily had a pretty good first quarter, with acquisitions nationwide totaling $38 billion, about the same as the first quarter of 2019, and financing was 'robust,' according to a CBRE report."

FHA Proposes Streamlining Of Specialized Servicing Practices.

National Mortgage News (7/14, Sinnock) reports that as "loan performance issues remain" in the "government-insured home loan market," the FHA is mulling a "proposal that has long been in the works to streamline its complex and specialized servicing practices." According to NMN, The plan "includes a revision of the FHA's loss mitigation waterfall, a scaling back of documentation requirements for trial payment plans, and increased alignment with broad market practices through the modification of allowable fee structures, in addition to other measures." NMN says "flexibilities Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac introduced to mitigate coronavirus-related risks were recently extended to Aug. 31, when a foreclosure and eviction moratorium pertaining to their loans is currently scheduled to end as well." The FHA "said the coronavirus-related contingencies it has put in place for servicing will not be impacted by the streamlining of broader policies."

DS News (7/14, Albanese) reports that the flexibilities announced by the GSEs and FHFA cover alternative appraisals, alternative income documentation and employment verification methods, and an expansion in the use of power of attorney and remote online notarizations.

HUD Resists Calls To Withdraw Fair Housing Proposal.

Politico (7/14, O'Donnell, 4.29M) reports that the Administration "is resisting calls – even from political allies – to withdraw a proposal to make it more difficult to bring discrimination claims under the Fair Housing Act." In a letter to Bank of America Vice Chairman Anne Finucane, Deputy Housing and Urban Development Secretary Brian Montgomery "reaffirmed HUD's plans to issue a final rule later this year." Finucane "had urged HUD to drop the effort in a letter last month, citing 'recent protests and events.'" Montgomery wrote that HUD has "never ceased working to achieve more equitable results and to correct for past errors, regardless of who is setting policy. ... Contrary to your assertion, the leadership and professional staff at HUD is working on a daily basis to live up to the spirit of the Fair Housing Act." Yahoo! Finance (7/14) reports HUD Secretary Carson said, "What people need to understand is it is so wide and so broad the way it is written, all it provides is permanent employment for lawyers."

However, HousingWire (7/14, Azevedo, 23K) reports Quicken Loans Vice Chairman Bill Emerson on Friday said in a letter to Montgomery, "We recognize that the proposed changes are intended to clarify the use of disparate impact in housing discrimination cases. We agree that unclear rules in the housing and mortgage markets can, and often do, constrain lending and investment in the space, harming those the rules are intended to help. However, legitimate concerns have been raised about how the proposed rule proposed would make it difficult to address some of the more challenging systemic issues of discrimination that the Fair Housing Act should be used to address." HousingWire reports that in a separate letter released Monday, the National Association of Realtors "said that HUD's revisions place too heavy a burden on the ability of parties to bring legitimate initial disparate impact claims." RISMedia (7/14, 2K) provides additional coverage of NAR's response.

Washington, DC Reverse Mortgage Borrowers With Delinquent Loans May Receive More Assistance.

DS News (7/14, Albanese) reports that the Council of the District of Columbia has passed the "Reverse Mortgage Insurance and Tax Payment Program Temporary Amendment Act of 2020," which DS News says should "extend protections for reverse mortgage borrowers who have entered delinquency."

Fannie Mae Raises Its Economic Outlook For 2020, But Warns That Significant Risks Remain.

Mortgage News Daily (7/14, Swanson) reports, "The reopening of the economy in several states from the COVID-19 shutdowns has moved Fannie Mae's Economic and Strategic Research (ESR) Group to raise its estimate for the 2020 full year GDP from the 5.4 percent decline it predicted in June to a 4.2 percent downturn." The economists say that the faster-than-expected recovery could worsen, but they believe that any further shutdowns and restrictions will be less severe than the first round of policy responses. Fannie's economists "said they had expected purchase activity to rebound in May and June but given the magnitude they have revised their existing home sales forecast for the second quarter from 4.1 million annualized units to 4.3 million and boosted the Q3 estimate from 4.9 million units to 5.4 million." MND says, "According to Freddie Mac, the 30-year fixed rate fell to 3.03 percent in the second week of July, a new all-time low. At that rate Fannie Mae estimates that nearly 60 percent of all outstanding loan balances have at least a half-percentage point incentive to refinance."

MBA: New Home Purchase Applications Rose 54.1% In June From Year Ago.

National Mortgage Professional (7/14) reports that new home purchase mortgage applications rose 54.1% from a year ago, according to the MBA's latest Builder Application Survey. Applications rose 20% from May 2020 to last month. The MBA estimated that "new single-family home sales were running at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 774,000 units in June 2020," and there were "71,000 new home sales in June 2020 on an unadjusted basis." Conventional mortgages "made up 65.1% of loan applications, Federal Housing Administration loans made up 22.6%, RHS/USDA loans made up 1% and VA loans made up 11.2%." The average loan size for new homes rose to $338,589 in June, up $5,796 from May. MBA AVP Joel Kan said, "MBA estimates that new home sales in June increased 15% ... which would be the strongest level of activity since January 2020." RISMedia (7/14, 2K) provides additional coverage.

Ginnie Mae MBS Issuance Sets A New Record In Q2.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/14, Bancroft, Subscription Publication) say that a "huge wave of VA refinance activity" pushed Ginnie Mae single-family MBS issuance to a "record $177.71 billion" during Q2. According to IMF, "The venerable agency MBS platform set production records in both the third and fourth quarters of 2019, caught its breath in early 2020, and then rose 12.7% to a new high in the April-June cycle. Refinance activity, in particular the VA program, has been the main driver. Some $91.83 billion of FHA and VA refinance loans were securitized in the second quarter, a 14.0% increase." VA activity made up "more than two-thirds of the refi total for the two programs as volume surged 25.8%." Meanwhile, FHA refi securitization fell 5.6% from Q1 to Q2.

KBW: Q2 Earnings Of Wells Fargo, JPMorgan Chase Contain Both Encouraging And Distressing Insights.

National Mortgage News (7/14, Finkelstein) says Keefe-Bruyette & Woods released a report detailing what the Q2 earnings calls of Wells Fargo and JPMorgan Chase could mean for the mortgage industry. Although "bleak in some regards," NMN says, the megabanks' earnings "strong year-over-year growth in gain-on-sale margins for mortgage loans are likely indicative of second-quarter results for other lenders," KBW analysts believe. KBW's Bose George said, "Our expectation remains for industry-wide GOS margins to be up strongly given the widening of primary/secondary spreads during the quarter, the result of robust mortgage demand outweighing available supply." KBW also found that both banks' production revenue trends were stellar, which should bode well for mortgage banking profitability elsewhere in the industry. However, NMN says, "the fair value mark-to-market hits for mortgage servicing rights were a bit more severe than expected, which is a negative for mortgage servicers, George added."

Nonbanks Expect Better Q2 Origination Growth. Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/14, Muolo, Subscription Publication) says, "Although many nonbanks saw stellar origination growth in the second quarter, megabanks Wells Fargo and JPMorgan Chase didn't exactly join the production party." Wells originated a "respectable $59.0 billion of home mortgages during the period, a 22.9% sequential increase. JPM, on the other hand, funded $24.2 billion, a 13.8% decline." Meanwhile, several nonbanks told IMF that they expect sequential gains of at least 50%. Wells Fargo reported "$317 million of mortgage banking income, including a $531 million charge on its mortgage servicing portfolio tied to runoff from lower rates." JPMorgan Chase's mortgage division "took in revenue of $1.69 billion, a $526 million increase over 1Q20. However, its consumer and community banking division lost $176 million overall."

Robert Shiller: Major Cities May See Large Declines In Home Prices.

MarketWatch (7/14, Passy, 1.67M) reports that Nobel Prize-winning economist Robert Shiller has "outlined the broad risk to the economy posed by the spread of the novel coronavirus and the resulting impact on the global economy," telling CNBC, "We have highly priced markets in the stock market, the bond market and the housing market. All of these markets could tumble in the coming months." Shiller says that the decline in the housing market may hit some areas harder than others, as the pandemic may prompt many Americans to steer clear of cities. According to MarketWatch, "On Tuesday, Fannie Mae upgraded its forecast for home price growth. Citing June housing data from CoreLogic that showed home prices rising at the fastest pace since November 2018, Fannie Mae now expects home prices to rise 4.4% this year. The mortgage giant's forecast last month called for only a 0.4% increase."

NAHB: Lumber Prices Rose 50% From Mid-April To July 10.

M Report (7/14, Albanese) reports that the National Association of Home Builders "found that the Random Lengths Framing Composite Price reached upwards of $523 per 1,000 board feet this past week for the week ending on July 10," marking the "only time that lumber prices have tipped the scales above $500 per 1,000 board feet in two years." According to M Report, the 50% price growth increase since mid-April "has been attributed to several factors" related to the pandemic, including the forced closures of lumber mills, reduced staffing at other mills, and a spike in demand from do-it-yourself builders.

Fannie Mae's Danielle McCoy Highlights Resources To Help Borrowers Avoid Scams.

M Report (7/14, Albanese) interviewed Fannie Mae VP and Fair Lending Officer Danielle McCoy about how the GSE is ensuring borrowers are aware of scams related to the pandemic. McCoy said, "We are working through our Here to Help education effort to make sure people know about the many options available to them," and "there's a page on KnowYourOptions.com dedicated to fraud prevention." McCoy explained, "What we're doing through Know Your Options is helping to close the [information] gap. We are working closely with our regulator, the Federal Housing Finance Agency, to share available resources with homeowners and renters nationwide. The whole goal, for the industry, is to let Americans know that Fannie Mae and others in the industry stand ready to help consumers find the information that they need during these very uncertain times."

Annaly Preps A $489M Expanded-Credit MBS.

Behind a paywall, Inside Mortgage Finance (7/14, Ivey, Subscription Publication) reports that after pausing in Q2, Annaly Capital Management is "set to issue its second expanded-credit mortgage-backed security of the year. Loans in the planned $489.4 million deal have seasoned for an average of seven months, similar to the REIT's previous transaction." In the new transaction, 7.6% of the loans are in forbearance due to the pandemic, but "all of the borrowers are current on their payments." According to IMF, "The top contributor to the MBS is Quicken Loans with a 13% share followed by Guaranteed Rate at 12%. Most of the mortgages are being serviced by Select Portfolio Servicing. Quicken is processing its loans and 3% of the MBS is being handled by Specialized Loan Servicing. Some 58% of loans are non-qualified mortgages and the remainder are backed by investment properties not subject to QM standards."

Stevens: Using Secondary Market Revenue To Fund DPA Programs Could "Level The Playing Field."

Writing for National Mortgage News (7/14, Stevens), former FHA Commissioner David Stevens argues that the mortgage industry should do "everything it can to level the playing field" for potential homebuyers. Stevens suggests using "secondary market revenue" to fund a "sustainable" downpayment assistance option that "helps deserving borrowers, and particularly minorities, overcome the lack of inherited wealth to buy a home." According to Stevens, "Given the continued growth in minority households, DPA programs backed by secondary market revenue can really be game changers by helping minorities move up from renting and start building wealth that they can pass on to future generations. It creates no additional risk than any other program. Indeed, it may even have less risk, especially when paired with protections such as borrower education and incentives."

10-Year Yield Ticks Down.

MarketWatch (7/15, 1.67M) reports the 10-year Treasury yield fell to 0.622 percent.

Dollar Falls.

Reuters (7/15, Howcroft) reports the dollar index on Wednesday "fell in the early hours of the morning, hitting a one-month low of 96.032 at 0735 GMT." Meanwhile, the euro "extended gains and hit a four-month high of $1.1435 at 0744 GMT."

Gold Edges Higher.

Reuters (7/14) reports, "Gold inched higher on Wednesday, holding firm above the key $1,800 level, as worries over surging coronavirus cases and simmering China-U.S. tensions lifted demand for the safe-haven metal." Spot gold "was up 0.1% at $1,809.41 per ounce by 0031 GMT. U.S. gold futures were steady at $1,813.70."

Oil Rises.

Reuters (7/15, Chung) reports, "Oil prices rose on Wednesday following a sharp drop in U.S. crude inventories, with the market waiting for next steps from a meeting later in the day on the future level of output cuts by OPEC and its allies." Brent crude "futures were up 19 cents, or 0.4%, at $43.09 a barrel as of 0343 GMT," and US West Texas Intermediate crude futures "rose 17 cents, or 0.4%, to $40.46 a barrel."

FBI Warns Of Rising Cyber Crimes Targeting School Districts.

WEWS-TV Cleveland (7/14, Schultz) reports from Cleveland, Ohio, "As many school district leaders contemplate what schools will look like in the fall for students, teachers and staff, it's clear that online learning will play a large role in most districts." According to WEWS-TV, "The Cleveland Division of the FBI is warning school districts to make sure its cyber security systems are up to date. FBI Special Agent Vicki Anderson said that cyber crimes, in general, are up since the pandemic. She said that hacking and ransomware attacks are becoming more common in municipalities, businesses and school systems. 'And now we add COVID to it where all the bad guys out there know that a lot more people are online,' she said." The FBI "is now warning school districts about ransomware attacks, or when a type of virus holds the computer systems and data hostage until a certain amount of money is paid."

UK Sides With US Over China, Will Purge Huawei Equipment From 5G Network.

Reuters (7/14, Sandle, Faulconbridge) reports British Prime Minister Boris Johnson has "ordered Huawei equipment to be purged completely from Britain's 5G network by the end of 2027, risking the ire of China by signalling that the world's biggest telecoms equipment maker is not welcome in the West." Johnson was "under intense pressure" from President Trump, "while Beijing had warned London, which has sought to court China in recent years, that billions in investment would be at risk if it sided with Washington."

The AP (7/14, Kirka) reports Johnson's government "said it decided to prohibit Huawei from working on the so-called 5G system after U.S. sanctions made it impossible to ensure the security of equipment made by the Chinese company." The U.S. "had also threatened to sever an intelligence-sharing arrangement with Britain because of concerns that Huawei's involvement could allow the Chinese government to infiltrate U.K. networks."

The New York Times (7/14, Satariano, Castle, Sanger, 18.61M) reports that "the move reverses a decision in January, when Britain said Huawei equipment could be used in its new 5G network on a limited basis." Since then, Johnson has "faced growing political pressure domestically to take a harder line against Beijing, and in May, the United States imposed new restrictions to disrupt Huawei's access to important components." Johnson government's "about-face signals a new willingness among Western countries to confront China, a determination that has grown firmer since Beijing last month adopted a sweeping new law to tighten its grip on Hong Kong."

Reuters (7/14, Baker, Chalmers) reports, "Britain's decision to ban China's Huawei from its 5G network" increased the pressure on EU countries to also "impose stricter limits" on the company. Meanwhile, "A senior EU diplomat said some countries were now worried" that the European Union's "toolbox" of recommendations, released in January, that allowed members to "either 'restrict or exclude' so-called high-risk 5G vendors, such as Huawei, from core parts of their telecoms network," did not do enough to limit dependence on Huawei.

Harvard Kennedy School's Applied History Project Assistant Director Calder Walton, in an op-ed in Foreign Policy (7/14, 340K), writes, "There is a long history of all kinds of governments exploiting commercial communication companies to collect foreign intelligence in bulk to further their interests and protect their national security," including by the British and US governments. Walton argues, "this history offers a clear message: It would be naive to expect the Chinese government not to exploit Huawei hardware on Britain's 5G network for intelligence collection."

Analysis: US Efforts Against Huawei Part Of Overdue Change In US Handling Of China.

In an analysis, Wired (7/14, Graff, 3.49M) reports that the US efforts against Huawei are part of "an overdue acknowledgement by the foreign policy establishment that years of accommodating engagement with a rising China has done little to stem China's rambunctious and norm-shattering behavior." The Administration has engaged in "a remarkable six months of concerted effort against Huawei that has brought the Trump administration's efforts back from what appeared to be an embarrassing defeat."

House Democrat Presses Google, Apple On Foreign-Owned Apps.

The Hill (7/14, Miller, 2.98M) reports House Oversight and Reform Committee national security subcommittee Chairman Lynch "urged Google and Apple to be more transparent with customers about the potential data privacy dangers of foreign-made apps." He "reached out to the companies following statements from the FBI and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI) that foreign-made apps could pose a danger to consumers." In letters to Google CEO Sundar Pichai and Apple CEO Tim Cook, Lynch expressed concern that apps owned or operated by foreign developers or that store Americans' data overseas "could enable our adversaries to access significant quantities of potentially sensitive information on American citizens without their knowledge to the detriment of U.S. national security." Lynch requested Google and Apple "commit to requiring app developers to disclose the countries where user data is stored, make this information available to customers considering downloading the app, and also asked whether the companies would consider further changes to protect data privacy."

Rep. Langevin To Propose Cyber Director Amendment To NDAA.

NextGov (7/14, Baksh) reports Rep. Jim Langevin (D-RI) plans to offer amendments to the National Defense Authorization Act "to create a post within the White House with budgetary and policy authority to coordinate cybersecurity across the government." Langevin also plans to "propose a continuity of the economy amendment that would prioritize essential services in getting the economy back up and running in the event of a cyberattack and incentivize states and municipalities to move to the cloud as they modernize their information technology" and will back an amendment "to create a joint cyber planning office at the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency."

Federal Computer Week (7/14, Johnson, 263K) reports, "Dozens of proposed amendments that draw from recommendations in the" Cyberspace Solarium Commission's report have been introduced. "In some cases, legislators have drawn inspiration from multiple recommendations in the report to place cyber initiatives in appropriations language."

Former Special Assistant to President Barack Obama Michael Daniel, in an op-ed in CyberScoop (7/14), argues that improving the federal government's cybersecurity capabilities faces at least three challenges: "cybersecurity's cross-cutting nature," the lack of incentives for agencies "to sustain the degree of coordination required for effective cybersecurity," and a lack of central leadership that "hinders effective incident response." He argues this can start to be addressed by "creating a National Cyber Director along the lines of what the Cyberspace Solarium Commission recommends."

Report: Tax Program Required By Chinese Banks For Clients Deploys Backdoors.

CyberScoop (7/14, Vavra) reports that security vendor Trustwave published findings that specific software "required to be used through the Chinese government's Chinese Golden Tax Project" tax system – Intelligent Tax – contains "a backdoor that would give hackers a new way in." Trustwave says that a Chinese bank told a UK-based defense contractor the program was required. However, "the tax software's developer has relied on a number of subcontractors to build software flaws into other software tools for years," and "the network of companies behind the tax software scheme itself can be traced back to the Chinese government." Trustwave Vice president of Cyber Threat Detection and Response Brian Hussey said, "I know that the Chinese government very frequently uses their state-owned private organizations, their state-owned university system for just this kind of work."

TikTok's US Users Prepare For Possible Ban.

Reuters (7/14, Dang, McLymore) reports that with national security concerns that TikTok's may be required to share user data with the Chinese government, the app's fate in the United States is undecided. "The news set off a wave of worries among its devoted user base, who are coming up with backup plans on other services." Atlantic Council Nonresident Fellow Justin Sherman said, in Reuters' words, "the Trump administration's motives are primarily political, which make it not only difficult to predict what the government will decide, but nearly impossible to fight back if it proceeds with a ban."

Trump Signs Law Authorizing China Sanctions Over Hong Kong Crackdown.

Fox News (7/14, O'Reilly, 27.59M) reports on its website that President Trump on Tuesday "announced two actions his administration has taken against China as tensions between Washington and Beijing continue to rise." During a news conference in the Rose Garden, Trump "announced that he had signed into law the Hong Kong Autonomy Act and also put his signature on an executive order that ends the United States' preferential treatment of Hong Kong."

Reuters (7/14, Mason, Holland) quotes the President as saying, "Today I signed legislation, and an executive order to hold China accountable for its aggressive actions against the people of Hong Kong." Hong Kong, he added, "will now be treated the same as mainland China."

The South China Morning Post (7/14, Churchill, 138K) says "the latest move by Trump could open up Hong Kong to the tariffs his administration has slapped on Chinese exports," but Politico (7/14, Rodriguez, 4.29M) says "it remains to be seen if Trump will fully implement the sanctions," noting that the Administration "has declined to carry through on several mandatory sanctions over the years, including ones targeting Russia."

Media coverage of the announcement focuses on the President's remarks at the event about Joe Biden, comparing it to a campaign speech. The AP (7/14, Miller, Riechmann), for example, says Trump "quickly shifted his speech in the Rose Garden into a campaign rally-style broadside" against Biden. Trump, it adds, "didn't limit his criticism of Biden to China," delivering "broadside after broadside against Biden on issues from energy to the economy, education to immigration."

The Washington Times (7/14, Boyer, 492K) likewise says Trump "devoted much of his remarks to contrasting his position on Beijing" with Biden, whose "entire career," he said, "has been a gift to the Chinese Communist Party." The Washington Post (7/14, Nakamura, Olorunnipa, Rucker, 14.2M) is more direct, saying the President "held a Rose Garden event under the guise of punishing China over its crackdown on Hong Kong, delivering a lengthy diatribe against...Biden in a display that resembled a campaign speech at the White House." Trump, it writes, "began his rambling 54-minute opening statement by announcing that he had signed congressional legislation that authorizes his administration to enact sanctions" on China and an executive order to revoke Hong Kong's special economic trading status, but "glossed over the specifics and said nothing about the pro-democracy protests on the island."

Along similar lines, the New York Times (7/14, Baker, 18.61M) says Trump "summoned television cameras to the heat-baked Rose Garden...to announce new measures against China," but "that did not last long. What followed instead was an hour of presidential stream of consciousness as Mr. Trump drifted seemingly at random from one topic to another, often in the same run-on sentence. Even for a president who rarely sticks to the script and wanders from thought to thought, it was one of the most rambling performances of his presidency."

CNBC (7/14, Breuninger, Macias, 3.62M) reports on its website that Trump "began his speech in the Rose Garden focused on targeting China's actions, but quickly pivoted to lash out" at Biden and "spent a significant chunk of the speech railing against what seemed to be the bulk of Biden's campaign platform."

To the Washington Examiner (7/14, Crilly, 448K), Trump used the news conference to "attack" Biden, and USA Today (7/14, Fritze, Jackson, 10.31M) has a similar report under the headline "Trump Swings At Biden At Official Event Announcing He Signed Hong Kong Sanctions Bill."

Federal Reserve

Brainard Suggests Recession May Be Longer Than Initially Hoped.

The AP (7/14, Rugaber) reports Fed Governor Lael Brainard on Tuesday "warned...that the US economy appears to be slowing after an initial burst of recovery and called for the Fed to take aggressive steps to bolster growth." Brainard "said that hiring and consumer spending bounced back more strongly than expected in May and June. But that rebound mostly reflected a rapid reopening of restaurants, bars and other businesses in many states, she said, and those reopenings have since caused ongoing spikes in viral infections that could reverse much of that progress."

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Timiraos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Reuters (7/14), and MarketWatch (7/14, Robb, 1.67M) also report.

Harker: Downturn Is "Both Exceptionally Painful And Stubbornly Long-Lasting."

Reuters (7/14, Marte) reports Philadelphia Fed President Patrick Harker said on Tuesday that the economy remains "mired" in crisis and solutions are needed from policymakers to offer better support for struggling small businesses. Harker said in a webinar, "Indeed, even as the economy is reopening in fits and starts, the pandemic's effects are proving not to be just a brief setback. ... We are in a downturn that is both exceptionally painful and stubbornly long-lasting." Harker "said the Paycheck Protection Program, which offered loans to small businesses that could be converted to grants, was an 'immense help' to millions of businesses." However, Harker also "called the program a 'blunt instrument,' saying it fell short when it came to aiding businesses in areas hit hard by the virus."

Kaplan Predicts "Disinflationary" Trend Due To "Lots Of Overcapacity" In Economy.

Reuters (7/14) reports Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan said Tuesday that there is "lots of overcapacity in the economy," going on to describe this as having a "disinflationary" effect. Kaplan said in an interview, "While we have got this high an unemployment rate and this much overcapacity, the overwhelming trend I believe is going to be disinflationary."

CNBC (7/14, Li, 3.62M) also reports.

Bullard: "Granular" Health Strategy Needed If Economy Is To Avoid Depression.

Reuters (7/14, Schneider) reports St. Louis Fed President James Bullard said on Tuesday that COVID-19 has shown to be a "more persistent" threat to US economic activity than initially expected, and that solving it requires a more "granular" health strategy that includes ubiquitous mask usage. Bullard "said his base case is that the economy continues to grow in the second half of the year and build off of the surprise increases in employment in May and June." However, Bullard said, "the downside risk is nevertheless substantial, and better execution of a granular, risk-based policy will be critical to keep the economy out of depression." As an example, Bullard "pointed to estimates that near universal mask usage would continue lowering death rates, and that businesses can one by one learn how to more safely operate."

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Derby, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) also reports.

Barkin: Business Owners Starting To Realize Pandemic Will Not Go Away Soon.

Reuters (7/14) reports Richmond Fed President Thomas Barkin said on Tuesday that US unemployment could face a resurgence as business owners adjust plans to public health developments amid the COVID-19 pandemic. Barkin said in a webcast, "There is a complicated brew of what's happening on unemployment...A bunch of companies large and small are realizing this is not a two-month issue and recasting their business."

Internal Revenue Service

WPost: GOP's "Anti-IRS Crusade" Decreasing Public Revenues.

The Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) editorializes, "When Republicans won control of the House in 2010, they began a multi-year campaign to defund the Internal Revenue Service, slashing its budget by a fifth in real dollars over the course of the following decade." That "translated directly into lower amounts of taxes collected – and therefore a substantial net loss to the government. ... Attacking the taxman has provided easy applause lines for Republicans. But the policy has harmed honest citizens. It is past time to end the GOP's penny-wise, pound-foolish anti-IRS crusade."

Commentary: IRS Closes Out The Most Challenging Tax Season Ever.

In her San Francisco Chronicle (7/14, 2.67M) column, Kathleen Pender reflects on the conclusion of the IRS' "most taxing season ever." Pender highlights the challenges faced by the IRS amid the COVID-19 pandemic. She adds that while "the IRS extended the deadline for filing 2019 returns from April 15 to July 15, that didn't help millions of taxpayers who usually get their taxes done, for free, by volunteer tax preparers at VITA clinics run by the IRS and Tax-Aide sites run by the AARP Foundation," which "shut down as shelter-in-place orders were issued."

OCC Names Columbia University Professor As Senior Deputy Comptroller For Economics.

SNL Financial (7/14, Subscription Publication, 3K) reports behind a paywall that the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency has hired Charles Calomiris, a professor at Columbia University, to serve as the agency's Senior Deputy Comptroller for Economics.

Wells Fargo Faces Investors Suit Following House Report (OCC Mention).

Law360 (7/14, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports behind a paywall, "A Pennsylvania pension fund is suing Wells Fargo over stock drops that followed a scathing House Financial Services Committee Democrats staff report accusing the bank's top brass of a litany of oversight failures."

Big Banks Signal Worst Of Recession Is Yet To Come.

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Eisen, Benoit, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports big banks are signaling that the worst of the pandemic-related recession is yet to come. Citigroup, JPMorgan Chase, and Wells Fargo all said Tuesday that they have reserved a combined $28 billion to cover expected losses from upcoming loan defaults. JPMorgan CEO James Dimon said, "This is not a normal recession. The recessionary part of this you're going to see down the road."

The Washington Post (7/14, Merle, 14.2M) reports the three banks warned on Tuesday that the recession "will be deeper and longer than initially expected." According to the Post, "Instead of a quick economic recovery at the end of the year, JPMorgan Chase expects the recession to be 'much more protracted,' said Jennifer Piepszak, the bank's chief financial officer. 'Our view of the length and severity of the economic downturn has deteriorated considerably' from earlier this year, said Wells Fargo chief executive Charlie Scharf." The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Demos, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) additionally reports Citigroup and JPMorgan Chase both reported profits for the quarter, while Wells Fargo did not. Reuters (7/14, Marshall, Moise) and Politico (7/14, Guida, 4.29M) also have reports.

JPMorgan Profit Falls 51% As Bank Sets Aside Record $10.5B For Loan Losses.

Bloomberg (7/14, 4.73M) reports, "JPMorgan Chase's results were one more marker of the disconnect between ebullient markets and concern about the U.S. economy." The biggest US bank "said second-quarter profit fell 51% to $4.69 billion, a smaller drop than forecast, as record trading revenue helped counter the biggest loan-loss provision in the firm's history." The bank "generated $9.7 billion from trading stocks and bonds, 79% more than a year earlier," and saw "a 91% gain in investment-banking fees," both of which allowed the bank to remain profitable "even as it set aside a record $10.5 billion to cover future bad loans, more than analysts expected."

Reuters (7/14, Sen, Marshall, Henry) reports CFO Jennifer Piepszak said, "Compared to the first quarter, our reserve build now assumes a more protracted downturn...as we prepare and reserve for something worse than our base case." Overall, the bank's revenue rose 15% to $33.8 billion, while net interest margin "fell to 1.99% from 2.37% in the first quarter."

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Benoit, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), CNBC (7/14, Son, 3.62M), and The Financial Times (7/14, Noonan, Subscription Publication, 1.34M) provide similar coverage.

Citi's Q2 Profit Falls 73% To $1.32B, But Beats Some Analysts' Estimates.

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Benoit, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Citigroup reported $1.32 billion profit for the second quarter of 2020, a 73% drop from $4.8 billion a year prior. Per share earnings of 50 cents a share still exceeded an estimate from analysts polled by FactSet. Revenue increased to $19.77 billion, a gain of 5%, although revenue from consumer banking operations fell 10%. Credit card spending volume declined 24%. The funds Citi earmarked for loan-loss provisions in the quarter included $5.7 billion for potential future defaults and $2.21 billion in net charge offs. The bank had a total of $28.28 billion set aside for loan losses as of the end of June. A surge in trading activity buoyed the corporate and investment banking divisions, which saw revenue rise 55%, while the fixed-income trading division's revenue rose 68%.

Reuters (7/14) adds that "as the third largest credit card issuer in the United States, Citi is especially susceptible to any jump in credit card delinquencies, which tend to track rises in unemployment closely." So far, 6% of Citi's credit card balance holders have been offered forbearance, about 2 million cards. Deposits rose 18% to $1.23 trillion due to stimulus program funds for businesses and individuals.

Reuters (7/14) and American Banker (7/14, Subscription Publication, 31K) also report.

Wells Fargo Posts Q2 Loss Of $2.38B.

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Eisen, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Wells Fargo posted a loss of $2.38 billion in the second quarter, from $6.21 billion in profit the year before, its first quarterly loss in over 10 years. This amounts to a 66 cent loss per share, while analysts surveyed by FactSet expected only a 16 cent loss per share. The bank set aside $9.57 billion in the quarter for potential future losses in addition to the $3.83 billion set aside during the first quarter. Wells Fargo has been severely impacted by the economic fallout of the coronavirus pandemic and most of its loan loss provisions are designated for its commercial bank, which is widely-exposed to a number of industries themselves seriously affected by the pandemic.

American Banker (7/14, Wack, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the bank on Tuesday "delivered a jolt to investors...by more than doubling its expected future losses on commercial loans, reflecting its belief that there will be no rapid economic recovery from the coronavirus pandemic." Energy, real estate, and construction have been particularly hard-hit. CEO Charlie Scharf said on the earnings call, "Our expenses are at least $10 billion higher than they should be...and there's no reason why that should occur. And so we are doing the work to create a roadmap for the company that is significantly more efficient." This figure amounts to 18.5% of the bank's normal non-interest expenses annually, and likely translate into layoffs and branch closures, with CFO John Shrewsbury saying on the call that the bank aims to reduce its branch count to near 4,000 from the current 5,500.

CNBC (7/14, Son, 3.62M) reports Wells Fargo will also cut its dividend, the only firm among the largest six banks in the US forced to do so after the Fed's most recent annual stress test. The bank is still dealing with the fallout from its 2016 fake accounts scandal that led to regulatory caps on its asset growth. Scharf last month "strongly hinted...at a conference that he would have to eliminate jobs and cut expenses." The bank has also retreated from riskier lending in the auto and mortgage markets "in part because of the Fed restriction." Wells Fargo also "lacks a sizable Wall Street trading division" unlike Citigroup and JPMorgan, both of whom have seen surging revenues from their trading divisions "amid surging volatility and unprecedented Federal Reserve support."

PYMNTS (7/14, 12K) reports Wells Fargo also said that its ATM and teller transactions fell 28% due to temporary branch closings during the coronavirus pandemic. Debit card point-of-sale transaction volume was similar to last year at $93.1 billion.

The AP (7/14, Ott), Bloomberg (7/14, 4.73M), and Reuters (7/14, Hussain, Moise) also report.

Benefits Of Strong Banking Regulation Comes To The Fore.

NBC News (7/14, 6.14M) reports that most analysts are forecasting some of the worst bank earnings since the financial crisis, though the financial system itself has proven rather resilient during the current downturn, a testament to the regulatory lessons learned during last decade's Financial Crisis. NBC writes that "reforms made to the banking system after the financial system's near-implosion and subsequent bank bailouts are credited now with preventing what could have been an even bigger collapse in bank earnings." Gradient Investment portfolio manager Jeremy Bryan said of the banking sector's strength in the face of adversity, "The regulatory environment we've been in for the past 10 years has caused banks to have significantly better financials overall from a balance sheet perspective."

Coin Shortage Amid COVID-19 Could Boost Effort To Kill The Penny.

NPR (7/14, Rosalsky, 3.12M) reports the "specter of the coin shortage lurks everywhere" after the US Mint "cut back on coin production this spring to keep its workers safe." The shortage "could be a rallying cry for a long-running movement that has lost steam in recent years: Kill the penny! Last year, almost 60% of the coins that the U.S. Mint churned out were pennies. 60 percent. It made more than 7 billion pennies. Seven billion. That's a lot of manpower that could be used toward making coins we actually need." The Mint "lost over $72 million making pennies last year. But there doesn't seem to be much urgency about this because in the grand scheme of the federal budget, it's just pennies."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Congress, Do Your Job: Help Americans Without One." The New York Times (7/14, 18.61M) writes in an editorial that Congress made a good decision "in March when it responded to the arrival of the coronavirus pandemic by increasing unemployment benefits." However, "the expansion expires at the end of this month, even as the pandemic continues to rage. Congress, after dragging its feet for months, has all but run out of time to prevent a lapse in the distribution of extra aid." The Times says Congress must "act immediately to extend emergency benefits, and to authorize the extra aid to continue for the duration of the crisis."

Washington Post.

"Maduro's New Consolidation Strategy Seeks To Eliminate The Opposition – And Will Hurt Venezuela." A Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) editorial says Venezuela's Supreme Court, which is controlled by President Nicolás Maduro's regime, "has ousted the leaders of the country's three largest political parties, including that of Juan Guaidó, who has been recognized as Venezuela's interim president by the United States and more than 50 other countries," and "named new leaders that the opposition says accepted bribes to act as the regime's stooges." The Post says the move "opens the way to a fraudulent election later this year for the National Assembly." The Post argues that the Trump Administration "no longer has a coherent regime change strategy," and it "looks possible that the Chavista movement, like that of Fidel Castro in Cuba, will survive a U.S. boycott and consolidate a comprehensive dictatorship. U.S. policy ought to adjust for that eventuality. A good start would be to expand refugee admissions for Venezuelans, including activists from the authentic opposition."

"With Trump's Heedless Approach To The Pandemic, Children Will Pay An Even Higher Price." In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) says it agrees with President Trump "about the importance of getting children back into the classroom." However, the Post adds, "We don't think it is sufficient, let alone effective, to make believe the virus isn't a problem while bullying and threatening states and local school districts to open their doors in August." The Post says "it is rich" that the Administration cites "the experience of other countries that have managed to reopen schools as examples to follow when those countries embraced the kind of careful steps and precautions – lockdowns, masks, extensive testing – that Mr. Trump constantly belittles."

"This Summer Camp Took Extraordinary Covid-19 Precautions. It Still Failed." The Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) editorializes, "No one could level an accusation of complacency at Kanakuk Camps, a network of Christian camps in Missouri that posted a 31-point program of pandemic precautions as summer approached. Despite those preparations, one of its camps, for teenagers, was hit by a major outbreak last month." The Post says "that failure, and others like it nationwide, are a warning sign for schools and colleges that hope to reopen this fall."

"The Republican Campaign To Help The Wealthy Cheat On Their Taxes." The Washington Post (7/14, 14.2M) editorializes, "When Republicans won control of the House in 2010, they began a multi-year campaign to defund the Internal Revenue Service, slashing its budget by a fifth in real dollars over the course of the following decade." That "translated directly into lower amounts of taxes collected – and therefore a substantial net loss to the government. ... Attacking the taxman has provided easy applause lines for Republicans. But the policy has harmed honest citizens. It is past time to end the GOP's penny-wise, pound-foolish anti-IRS crusade."

Wall Street Journal.

"California's Second Shutdown." The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) says in an editorial that California is experiencing a coronavirus surge despite being the first state to shelter in place.

"Why Putin Loves America's Greens." A Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial says that American firms want to sell natural gas to Europe, but Russian fuel is less expensive as a result of the left's efforts to impose legal and regulatory roadblocks on US energy.

"The Speech Police At Princeton." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) criticizes Princeton President Christopher Eisgruber and other university leaders for condemning an article by Princeton classics professor Joshua Katz in which he objected to faculty demands over race and referred to the university's Black Justice League as a "local terrorist organization." The Journal argues that although Katz has tenure and cannot be fired, the cancel culture has succeeded by making him a pariah and intimidating those who might agree with him into remaining silent.

"Hong Kong's Endangered Elections." A Wall Street Journal (7/14, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes Beijing's move to silence Hong Kong voters.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "It might have taken a while for California to blow up again, probably because corona was stuck in traffic on the 405, but now they've become the biggest state to roll back their reopening."

Trevor Noah: "And I know there's a lot of politics tied up for who's rooting for which policies and states to succeed, but people, we need to understand coronavirus has no politics. It doesn't [care] what state you live in. Coronavirus is the most bipartisan thing to happen to America since hating Jussie Smollett."

Whitney Cummings, Guest Host on Jimmy Kimmel: "I live in Los Angeles, but I'm originally from Washington, DC, where, which I'm sure you heard, is making a big push for statehood. DC has always wanted this. Our license plates say 'Taxation without representation.' It's the only passive aggressive license plate. You'll never be driving around Oregon and see a license plate that says, 'Oregon, some sun would be nice.' Or Florida, 'If you can read this, you're probably not from Florida.'"

Whitney Cummings: "As you know, the [DC] football team is finally taking a stand and changing the name of the Redskins. I will say, in their defense, back when they named the team the Redskins, it was only very racist. But I also have to give credit where credit is due. Out of respect for Native Americans, the Redskins have kept their name out of Super Bowl lineups for nearly 30 years."

Whitney Cummings: "People now can find anything to be divided about, like the fact that people have managed to politicize wearing a face mask in a pandemic. And it makes me so angry, because I don't have the power to force everyone to do this one small thing that saves lives. But what I do have are a very particular set of skills. Skills I have acquired over a very long career. I can roast these fools on national television. ... First up, we've got the Chico's 'All Lives Matter' fall collection. Looks like Karen-con got off to a slow and rocky start when these women kept calling the cops on the security guards. This looks like a casting call for a Lifetime movie about women who drown their kids in a station wagon."

Stephen Colbert: "It's beginning to seem like our four months of sacrifice may have been for naught. Because coronavirus cases are spiking all over the place. Even the states that did it right are now backsliding. For instance, yesterday, Gov. Gavin Newsom announced a new wave of California closures as COVID-19 positive rates spiked there. They're shutting down, again. Hollywood loves a sequel."

Stephen Colbert: "But as bad as things are in California, as it says in their tourist slogan, 'It's always worse in Florida.' On Saturday, the state broke the nation's COVID infection record, and yesterday, Florida announced another 12,000 new cases. Well, at least they don't have a lot of old people down there. Or at least, thanks to their governor, they won't in about three weeks."

Stephen Colbert: "Coincidentally, Florida's also the site of the upcoming Republican National Convention. They'll be fine, as long as everyone remembers to wear their elephant plague masks."

Stephen Colbert: "A lot of Republicans are planning to skip Trump's COVID comin' out party, including Senator Roy Blunt of Missouri, Senator Pat Roberts of Kansas, Senator Charles E. Grassley, and Senator Lamar Alexander. ... It's not just seniors; as one GOP representative put it, 'Everybody just assumes no one is going.' ... But no one wants to get on Trump's bad side, so they're all ready with airtight excuses for why they're staying home. Take 84-year-old Senator Pat Roberts, who explained he would likely not be attending because he had 'some things to do in Kansas.' ... (as Roberts) 'Oh, I'd love to go, but I've already scheduled...things. Kansas stuff. You know, polish the tornadoes.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Not only is Florida the new epicenter, but in addition, 'party officials were considering docking cruise ships in the city's port to provide extra lodging.' So you're in Florida, spending all day in an auditorium full of screaming people who don't wear masks, then you go home to a floating petri dish. Only way it would be more infectious is if dinner was an all-you-can-bob lasagna buffet."

Stephen Colbert: "There may be a safer way, though, because Republicans are looking into holding their convention outdoors. That's right. An outdoor convention in late August in Florida. I don't know if they've drained the swamp, but they better be ready to drain the swamp [sweat]."

Stephen Colbert: "But unfortunately for future Republican votes, people who don't wear masks seem always to be Republican. Take Texas Senator...Ted Cruz. A fellow passenger recently photographed Cruz on an American Airlines flight not wearing a mask. ... The airlines have a policy that passengers must wear face coverings during the flight, but Cruz's staff explained that the senator had just 'temporarily' removed his mask to drink coffee. But the same passenger also took this photo of Cruz at the gate also not wearing a mask. Come on, Ted, what's it gonna take to get you to be a fan of masks? Have the masks call your wife ugly and accuse your dad of killing JFK?"

Stephen Colbert: "Trump's lousy summer is about to get even worse because, today, a new tell-all was released, and this one hits home. It was written by presidential niece...Mary Trump. Trump's own family is turning on him. He's gonna have to keep a close eye on his kids – and not just in case Eric gets his head stuck inside a birdhouse again."

Stephen Colbert: "Mary Trump's book about her uncle is called 'Too Much And Never Enough.' She got the title after watching her uncle at an omelet bar."

Stephen Colbert: "Mary Trump has known Donald Trump all her life, and she does not hold back. In the book, she says that, 'Donald is not simply weak. His ego is a fragile thing that must be bolstered every moment because he knows deep down that he is nothing of what he claims to be. He knows he has never been loved.' Hey, that's not fair. We know he's been loved at least twice – $130,000 worth."

Stephen Colbert: "Mary Trump writes a lot about Donald's dad, Fred Trump, labeling him a 'high-functioning sociopath.' If only he had passed down the 'high-functioning' part."

Jimmy Fallon: "The President is now holding a three-day outdoor event in Florida in August. It will be worth watching just to see Trump lap up glasses of water like a thirsty golden retriever. And poor Mike Pence is going to be sweating like he's sitting through a drag race marathon."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump decided to move the [GOP] convention outside after meeting with his most trusted advisers: Chuck Woolery and the My Pillow guy."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump lost his lawsuit against John Bolton, and his book became a best-seller. He lost his lawsuit against his niece, and her book is on its way to becoming a best-seller. Mr. President, I'm personally asking you, please sue my new children's book."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump's niece actually wrote a pretty interesting book. Chapter 11 is all about his family businesses."

Trump Administration, Congressional GOP Consider Limits On New Round Of Payments.

The Washington Post (7/9, Stein, Werner, 14.2M) reports, "The White House and congressional Republicans are exploring whether to restrict the number of Americans receiving the next round of stimulus payments," further than the income limits in the previous package, though they "may ultimately revive the original proposal because of the difficult administrative challenges created by trying to narrowly target the checks." GOP lawmakers "have been divided on whether to send out another round of checks at all." President Trump, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, "and some Senate Republicans have expressed support for another round, believing they offer both political and economic upside." However, some White House officials "remain skeptical and believe many Americans will simply pocket the money rather than spend it in the economy – a view shared by some economists."

Mnuchin Says Trump Administration Backs Another Round Of Stimulus Payments To Americans. The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Kiernan, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Mnuchin said Thursday on CNBC's Squawk On The Street (7/9, 303K) that the White House and the Senate are taking action to pass another COVID-19 aid package by month's end, just as new unemployment benefits run out. Mnuchin also indicated that the Administration backs another round of stimulus payments to consumers.

Politico (7/9, Ferris, 4.29M) Mnuchin said, "We do support another round of economic impact payments. ... The level and the criteria we'll be discussing with the Senate." Mnuchin added, "As soon as the Senate gets back, we're going to sit down on a bipartisan basis with the Republicans and the Democrats and it will be our priority to make sure between the 20th and the end of the month that we pass the next legislation."

Reuters (7/9, Lawder, Brice), CQ Roll Call (7/9, Lerman, 154K), MarketWatch (7/9, Robb, 1.67M), Fox News (7/9, Singman, 27.59M), Newsweek (7/9, Fink, 1.53M), and CNBC (7/9, Pramuk, 3.62M) also report.

Mnuchin: Next COVID-19 Relief Bill Should Cap Unemployment Benefits At 100% Of Previous Income. The Hill (7/9, Lane, 2.98M) reports Mnuchin said in the CNBC interview "that the Trump administration is unwilling to extend a boost to unemployment benefits amid the coronavirus pandemic if it allows jobless workers to make more money than they did before losing their jobs." Mnuchin "and many GOP lawmakers argue that the increased jobless benefits have hindered businesses from bringing back workers who would face lower pay and higher health risks back on the job." Mnuchin "said that any extension of enhanced unemployment insurance would cap benefits at 'no more than 100 percent' of what the recipient made before becoming unemployed."

MarketWatch (7/9, Nicholson, 1.67M) also reports.

US Sanctions Chinese Officials For Human Rights Abuses.

The AP (7/9, Riechmann) reports the US on Thursday imposed sanctions on "three senior officials of the Chinese Communist Party, including a member of the ruling Politburo, for alleged human rights abuses targeting ethnic and religious minorities." The action "is the latest of a series" by the Administration "as relations deteriorate over the coronavirus pandemic, human rights, Hong Kong and trade." Secretary of State Pompeo in making the announcement said, "The United States will not stand idly by as the Chinese Communist Party carries out human rights abuses targeting Uighurs, ethnic Kazakhs and members of other minority groups in Xinjiang." There was also "a similar announcement from the Treasury Department."

Reuters (7/9, Psaledakis, Alper, Spetalnick) reports the Administration targeted "Xinjiang region's Communist Party Secretary Chen Quanguo, who becomes the highest-ranking Chinese official to be hit with US sanctions, and the Xinjiang Public Security Bureau." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin had "raised objections to the Treasury sanctions, especially against a Politburo member, out of concerns they could further damage U.S.-China relations, according to a person familiar with the matter." Mnuchin said in a statement, "The United States is committed to using the full breadth of its financial powers to hold human rights abusers accountable in Xinjiang and across the world."

The New York Times (7/9, Verma, Wong, 18.61M) says the move "is likely to inflame tensions between Washington and Beijing." Also among those targeted are "Zhu Hailun, a former deputy party secretary for the region; Wang Mingshan, director of the Xinjiang Public Security Bureau; and Huo Liujun, a former party secretary of the bureau."

Other news outlets reporting include The Hill (7/9, Samuels, 2.98M), Axios (7/9, Basu, Allen-Ebrahimian, 521K), The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Mauldin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Fox News (7/9, Shaw, 27.59M), Bloomberg (7/9, Wadhams, Mohsin, Leonard, 4.73M), the Financial Times (7/9, Sevastopulo, Subscription Publication, 1.34M), and CNN (7/9, Hansler, Atwood, 83.16M).

Mnuchin Says US Has Not Decided On Response To France Digital Tax.

Reuters (7/9, Lawder, Brice) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said Thursday on CNBC's Squawk On The Street (7/9, 303K) that the US has not finalized a decision on a response to France's digital tax. Mnuchin said, "Ambassador Lighthizer and I have discussed it and we'll be reviewing it with the president. No decision has been made yet." The Administration "had been in talks with the European Union over the taxes on digital giants like Alphabet's Google, Amazon and Facebook, but Mnuchin called for a break in the negotiations in June."

Mnuchin Reacts To Supreme Court Ruling On Trump Tax Records.

Reuters (7/9, Freifeld, Lawder, Cowan, Cornwell, Morgan) reports the Supreme Court on Thursday "ruled that a New York prosecutor can obtain President Donald Trump's financial records but prevented – at least for now – the Democratic-led House of Representatives from obtaining similar documents." Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin responded to the ruling Thursday on CNBC's Squawk On The Street (7/9, 303K) saying, "As I understand, that case doesn't involve the Treasury. That case is between the President and third parties, but I would say the only thing I do agree on, on that report, is when things go to Congress, they tend to get leaked and when things go to grand juries they don't."

The Hill (7/9, Jagoda, 2.98M) also reports.

Treasury Issues Final Rules On Export Deduction Documentation.

Law360 (7/9, Subscription Publication, 8K) reports the Treasury Department "issued final regulations Thursday loosening reporting rules for companies to qualify for a 40% deduction on income from foreign sales included in the 2017 federal tax overhaul." The final rules "were welcomed by tax practitioners to provide an easier compliance burden" and "cover the deduction in Internal Revenue Code Section 250, which can be applied for both global intangible low-taxed income and foreign-derived intangible income, two key international provisions in the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act."

Johnson, Chertoff: Keep Secret Service In Homeland Security.

In an op-ed for The Hill (7/9, 2.98M), former Homeland Security Secretaries Jeh Johnson and Michael Chertoff write, "With the support of the Trump Administration, legislation has been offered to transfer the U.S. Secret Service out of the Department of Homeland Security and back to the Treasury Department." However, they say, "Put simply, this is a bad idea. It appears to be motivated by the politics of the moment." The Secret Service's problems are most likely to be solved with "sustained cabinet-level, presidential and congressional oversight that is committed to consistent funding and supporting the agency's critical missions. Long term, that is most likely to occur if the Secret Service is part of Homeland Security, not Treasury."

Leading National News

Media Analyses: Court Rulings Likely To Shield Trump Tax Records For Foreseeable Future.

Media coverage of Thursday's pair of Supreme Court 7-2 rulings on the President's tax and financial records highlighted the justices' rejection of his claims of absolute immunity while in office – but also concluded the decisions will likely mean Trump critics will not have access to those records any time soon. The New York Times (7/9, Liptak, 18.61M), for example, referred to "a stunning defeat for Mr. Trump but a decision that probably means the records will be shielded from public scrutiny...until after the election, and perhaps indefinitely." The court also "ruled that Congress could not, at least for now, see many of the same records." Terry Moran of ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 2, 3:15, Muir, 7M) said, along similar lines, that "the bottom line" is "if the public ever sees these tax returns, it's highly unlikely [to be] before" the November elections. NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 3, 1:45, Holt, 5.87M) reported the White House "insists" the "rulings are a win," and the Washington Post (7/9, Barnes, 14.2M) notes "the president's lawyer Jay Sekulow said in a statement, 'We are pleased that in the decisions issued today, the Supreme Court has temporarily blocked both Congress and New York prosecutors from obtaining the President's tax records. We will now proceed to raise additional constitutional and legal issues in the lower courts.'"

While most news accounts refer to Thursday's rulings as a legal defeat for Trump, the Washington Post (7/9, Bump, 14.2M) cautions that the court "handed...Trump apparent losses," but "as a political fight, it looks like the battle for Trump's tax returns is over. And there's good reason to think that Trump won." Politico (7/9, Kumar, 4.29M) also reports that "essentially, even though the nation's highest court rejected several of Trump's legal arguments, he got what he wanted politically." In fact, CQ Roll Call (7/9, Ruger, 154K) reports, the court "for the first time put limits on congressional power to subpoena a sitting president's personal and business information, in a ruling...that will frustrate the House."

Echoing that theme, the New York Times (7/9, 18.61M) editorializes that "Trump has again figured out how to game the legal system to his advantage," and "the bottom line is that" he "will almost certainly get to keep hiding his tax returns...and his other financial records from the American people." In its editorial, meanwhile, the Washington Post (7/9, 14.2M) says "the court effectively rewarded Mr. Trump's policy of total noncooperation with Congress and other investigators, allowing him to foil attempts to scrutinize his behavior before the November election." Along similar lines, under the headline "Don't Be Fooled, Trump Is A Winner In The Supreme Court Tax Case," law professor Josh Chafetz writes in the New York Times (7/9, 18.61M) that Trump "won, because we almost certainly won't get to see his financial records anytime soon" and "that is what Mr. Trump most cares about." Moreover, "Congress lost," and "the court has dealt" its oversight powers "a serious blow."

The CBS Evening News (7/9, story 3, 2:05, Brennan, 4.14M) recounted that the Supreme Court issued "two separate decisions, both written by Chief Justice John Roberts and joined by liberal justices and the two conservative Trump appointees." In the first one, "the court refused to block a subpoena from a New York District Attorney investigating whether the Trump campaign paid women hush money, making it increasingly likely a grand jury will get the President's tax returns." But in the second ruling, the court "threw a wrench in House Democrat efforts to issue even broader subpoenas for years of records from...Trump and his family and businesses," and "sent the Democrats back to the drawing board to better explain why they need it." NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 2, 1:55, Holt, 5.87M) reported the justices "rejected" House Democrats' "claims of virtually unlimited subpoena power," saying, "there has to be a balance between the two political branches to keep Congress from abusing the process and said congressional subpoenas must serve a valid legislative purpose."

Likewise, the Los Angeles Times (7/9, Savage, 4.64M) says that though "the decisions were a defeat for Trump, there is a bright side for him" in that "the details of his finances will remain a secret from the public because grand juries operate confidentially and rarely leak." In addition, "the court said Trump could still fight their release by raising certain other issues in court."

White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Newsmax TV (7/9) that the decision was "a victory for the President in this sense: that Congress is not going to get its paws on his tax returns and certainly not before the November election. This has been the witch hunt of partisans from dating back to the last campaign." Conway said on KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (7/9, 125K) that during the 2016 campaign, there were "104 pages worth of Trump financial information that was available to anybody who wanted to access it. This President, while he has been in office, has reduced your taxes. People should care much more about what their tax returns look like under Donald Trump than what his tax return looks like. It has been a ruse for a while by people who are always trying to harass and embarrass the President and his family. ... This whole ruse of we need to see his taxes to save the republic is such nonsense."

USA Today (7/9, Fritze, Jackson, Wolf, 10.31M) reports "both the White House and Democratic leaders seized on the cases as wins," but "neither side completely got what they wanted." The Hill (7/9, Kruzell, 2.98M) indicates it was a "split decision," as the justices "sided with New York state prosecutors seeking President Trump's tax returns, even as it shielded a trove of his financial records from Congress." USA Today (7/9, Wolf, 10.31M) says "the 7-2 decision...written by Chief Justice John Roberts and joined by Trump's two nominees, Associate Justices Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh," sends "the separation of powers dispute back to lower courts for further determination."

The Washington Post (7/9, Barnes, 14.2M) reports "Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus R. Vance Jr. said in a statement: 'This is a tremendous victory for our nation's system of justice and its founding principle that no one – not even a president – is above the law. Our investigation, which was delayed for almost a year by this lawsuit, will resume, guided as always by the grand jury's solemn obligation to follow the law and the facts, wherever they may lead.'"

The Washington Times (7/9, Mordock, Swoyer, 492K) reports, meanwhile, that "top House Republicans on Thursday slammed the Supreme Court" as Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH), ranking member on the House Judiciary Committee, "said the ruling gives Democrats more fuel for partisan attacks on the president." They also "credit[ed] the Supreme Court handing the president a partial win by shielding his financial records from House Democrats' investigations." The Washington Times (7/9, Muñoz, Swoyer, 492K) reports House Speaker Pelosi, nonetheless, "took a victory lap" following the decisions. The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Bravin, Kendall, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), the Washington Times (7/9, Swoyer, 492K), the Washington Examiner (7/9, Crilly, 448K), the Washington Free Beacon (7/9, Daley, 78K), and the Daily Caller (7/9, Trunsky, 716K), among other news outlets, also report on the cases.

To the New York Times (7/9, Baker, 18.61M), the "forceful decisions represented a declaration of independence not only by Mr. Trump's own justices but by the Supreme Court as an institution, asserting itself as an equal branch of government in the Trump era." Adds the Times, "That a conservative court including two of his own appointees would so decisively slap down a Republican president's expansive claim of constitutional power served as a reminder that institutional prerogatives still matter in Washington, even in a time of extreme partisanship."

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorializes, meanwhile, that while Trump can take solace in the fact that his records are unlikely to be public any time soon, the ruling weakens the presidency as an institution.

Trump Slams “Political Prosecution,” “Politically Corrupt New York.” The AP (7/9, Sherman) reports Trump “didn’t embrace Thursday’s outcome as a victory even though it is likely to prevent his opponents in Congress from obtaining potentially embarrassing personal and business records ahead of Election Day.” In fact, said ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 2, 3:15, Muir, 7M), “the President is fuming...at the justices on the Supreme Court.” The CBS Evening News (7/9, story 4, 2:10, Brennan, 4.14M) also reported that he “made clear his frustration with that Supreme Court ruling and claimed in a series of tweets that he is the victim of a political prosecution.”

Yet, the Washington Post (7/9, Olorunnipa, Wagner, 14.2M) points out, “hours later, the White House released a statement saying Trump was ‘gratified’ by one of the decisions and had been ‘protected’ in the other.” The Post adds “the disjointed responses underscore what in some ways represented a split decision for the president, marked by political and legal ramifications that hold both risks and advantages ahead of the November election.” USA Today (7/9, Fritze, Jackson, Wolf, 10.31M) also notes Trump “said he was ‘satisfied’ with one of the decisions, which temporarily blocks Congress from seeking the tax records, and ‘not satisfied’ with a separate ruling that required the material to be turned over to prosecutors in New York. He dismissed the underlying effort to get at the records as ‘purely political.’”

Trump said in an interview on Fox News’ Hannity (7/9, 535K), “First of all, I’m under tax audit, okay? So, the IRS, treats me just like they used to treat the Tea Party except worse. ... They treat me horribly, the IRS. Horribly. It’s a disgrace what’s happened. We had a deal done, in fact, I guess it was signed even, and once I ran or once I won or somewhere back a long time ago, everything was like, well, let’s start all over again. It’s a disgrace. So, I was disappointed...because I think a President should get protection from thousands of prosecutors out there. Thousands all over the country, they could go after you and you’re supposed to be running the country.”

Earlier Thursday, Reuters (7/9, Hurley, Wolfe) reports, Trump “complained about the rulings, writing on Twitter: ‘Courts in the past have given ‘broad deference’. BUT NOT ME!’ He added, ‘This is all a political prosecution ... and now I have to keep fighting in a politically corrupt New York. Not fair to this Presidency or Administration!’” USA Today (7/9, Jackson, 10.31M) says “Trump said he will continue fighting the release of his financial records to Congress and New York prosecutors.” Trump tweeted, “I won the Mueller Witch Hunt, and others, and now I have to keep fighting in a politically corrupt New York. Not fair to this Presidency or Administration.”

The Washington Post (7/9, Wagner, 14.2M) reports on Trump’s tweets in which he “decried what he called a ‘political prosecution’ in New York and complained that the case would continue.” Trump also tweeted that the court had made a “delay ruling that they would never have given for another President.” Also in a tweet, Joe Biden “used the occasion to taunt Trump.” Pelosi said the decision is “not good news for the president.” Axios (7/9, Rummler, 521K), Townhall (7/9, Pavlich, 177K), the New York Post (7/9, Bowden, 4.57M), The Hill (7/9, Samuels, 2.98M), the Washington Examiner (7/9, Brest, 448K), and Bloomberg (7/9, Sink, 4.73M), among other news outlets, also cover Trump’s tweets.

Chief of Staff Meadows said on Fox Business’ Lou Dobbs Tonight (7/9, 49K) that “this was nothing more than setting up a fishing expedition for every local DA across the country. I would call it the presidential harassment decision, if you look at it on its face. As they remanded it back to lower courts, hopefully we’ll see a little bit different opinion coming out of that.”

Barr “Disappointed” About Manhattan Prosecutors Ruling. The Washington Times (7/9, Mordock, 492K) reports Attorney General Barr “said Thursday a Supreme Court ruling that President Trump cannot shield his tax returns from Manhattan prosecutors was a disappointment.” Barr told reporters, “We are disappointed in the decision to the extent that it did not accept our argument, the government’s argument about the extent of the President’s immunity. ... But as a practical matter, the decision made very clear that the President just is not at the mercy of litigants and investigators. There are protections and defenses that can be raised.”

WSJournal Accuses Twitter Of Inaction Over Racist Attacks On Thomas After Dissent. A Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) editorial criticizes Twitter for failing to curb what it says were racist attacks against Justice Thomas Thursday in response to his dissenting votes in two Supreme Court decisions on Trump’s tax records. The Journal calls on Twitter to label such racist tweets as hate speech.

George Conway: Mary Trump Book, SCOTUS Tax Return Decision Have “A Lot” In Common. George T. Conway III writes in an op-ed for the Washington Post (7/9, 14.2M) that Thursday’s Supreme Court decision on President Trump’s tax returns and the new book by Trump’s niece, Mary Trump have “quite a lot” in common. Mary Trump’s book “describes how Donald Trump has been protected by institutions his entire life” and the court case “illustrates how the president has pushed those protections to the limit – and how they’re about to end.” Conway writes that the President’s “niece’s book and the Supreme Court’s decision may someday be remembered as the beginning of the end of his institutional protections. And not just in a legal sense. Much of the power of the presidency comes from the perception of it, and that perception is now waning as the president bleeds out in the polls.”

More Than 1.3M Applied For Unemployment Benefits Last Week.

The AP (7/9, Rugaber) reports, “More than 1.3 million Americans applied for unemployment benefits last week, a historically high pace that shows that many employers are still laying people off.” The AP adds that what it calls “the persistently elevated level of layoffs” are happening “as a spike in virus cases has forced six states to reverse their move to reopen businesses.” The six states, it adds, “make up one-third of the US economy.” Still, the AP reports the number “fell from 1.4 million in the previous week,” and those “receiving jobless benefits dropped 700,000 to 18 million” which “suggests that some companies are continuing to rehire workers.” So far, the AP says, “the economy has regained only about one-third of the jobs that vanished in March and April.” Reuters (7/9, Mutikani) says the number of applicants “dropped to a near four-month low last week, but a record 32.9 million people were collecting unemployment checks in the third week of June, supporting expectations the labor market would take years to recover from the COVID-19 pandemic.”

The Washington Post (7/9, Rosenberg, 14.2M) indicates the filings showed “a slight decrease from the week before” and “states reported that another 1 million claims were made under the Pandemic Unemployment Assistance program.” Those two numbers combined “have ticked up the past three weeks, from 2.24 million in mid-June to 2.44 million last week.” The New York Times (7/9, Friedman, 18.61M) reports, “Thursday’s unemployment data didn’t paint a clear picture,” as “new filings fell in Oklahoma, Florida and other virus hot spots, and rose only slightly in Arizona,” while “claims rose in New Jersey and New York, states where the virus is comparatively under control.” USA Today (7/9, Jones, 10.31M), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

Florida Democratic Party To Return PPP Loan.

McClatchy (7/9, Smiley, Daugherty, 19K) reports Florida Democratic Party leaders “say they will return a forgivable $780,000 federal loan after facing internal criticism for applying for relief from a federal program created to help small businesses keep employees on the payroll” during the coronavirus-related downturn.

Spread Of Coronavirus At Meat Packing Plants Prompts Safety Investments.

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, A1, Bunge, Newman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the pandemic and the ability for it to spread among workers at meat packing plants is spurring many companies to invest hundreds of millions of dollars on new safety equipment and to consider more automation.

Lumber Prices, Futures Soar Due To Social Distancing, Stay-At-Home Orders.

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Dezember, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the price of forest products including plywood and lumber have been on the rise due in large part to an increased interest in DIY projects as well as the creation of outdoor seating areas for restaurants stemming from stay-at-home orders and other restrictions from COVID-19. As a result of the increase in projects, lumber Futures have risen more than 80% since the beginning of April.

Biden Pitches $700B “Build Back Better” Proposal To Boost Economy.

The AP (7/9, Barrow) reports that Joe Biden on Thursday “turned his campaign against President Donald Trump toward the economy,” unveiling “a New Deal-like economic agenda while drawing a sharp contrast with a billionaire incumbent he said has abandoned working-class Americans amid cascading crises.” In a speech “at a metal works firm near his childhood hometown of Scranton, Pennsylvania,” Biden outlined “a comprehensive agenda that he touted as the most aggressive government investment in the US economy since World War II. He also accused Trump of ignoring the coronavirus pandemic and the climate crisis while encouraging division amid a national reckoning with systemic racism.” Of Trump, Biden said, “His failures come with a terrible human cost and a deep economic toll. Time and again, working families are paying the price for this administration’s incompetence.”

The Los Angeles Times (7/9, Mason, 4.64M) reports that outlining “a populist economic vision,” Biden offered “a $700-billion proposal to reinvigorate the nation’s manufacturing sector, and” ripped “Trump for being out of touch with the challenges facing the American public.” Biden “said the barrage of crises pummeling the nation – the coronavirus pandemic, the subsequent economic fallout, the turmoil over racial injustice – offer an opportunity for sweeping improvement to ‘build back better,’ as he dubbed his recovery plan.” The Times adds, “By turning his focus to the economy, Biden aims to chip away at one of the few advantages the president still has. Polls have shown voters continue to trust Trump more to handle the economy than Biden.”

USA Today (7/9, Jansen, 10.31M) reports, “The federal government would spend $400 billion on manufacturing during the next four years and $300 billion on research and development during the same period under” the proposal. Biden’s “goal is to create 5 million jobs beyond the restoration of millions lost this year during the COVID-19 pandemic.” However, adds USA Today, Biden “hasn’t said how much of the spending would represent continuous costs or how he would pay for them.” The proposal “is part of a broader economic agenda called ‘Build Back Better,’ which Biden will continue to explain in the coming weeks and deals with infrastructure and clean energy, care-giving and the workforce, and racial equity.”

To the Washington Times (7/9, Muñoz, Miller, 492K), Biden “tacked further left Thursday with a massive tax-and-spend economic plan, as” he “reinvented himself as the most far-left major party nominee in US history.” Biden “said the wave of spending, which would be on top of a $1.7 trillion clean energy and infrastructure plan, would be the biggest government jobs program since the Great Depression or World War II.” His “sweeping jobs plan includes $300 billion in spending for technological development, including electric vehicle technology, lightweight materials, 5G telecommunications and artificial intelligence. It would pour $400 billion into a federal ‘Buy American’ program to drive economic demand. Another $50 billion would go to job training and $70 billion to historically Black colleges and universities. Much of the spending would use roughly $4 trillion in new taxes, mostly from canceling Mr. Trump’s tax cuts.”

The Washington Post (7/9, Sullivan, Stein, 14.2M) reports that with the proposal, Biden challenged “Trump’s ‘America First’ agenda with a competing brand of economic nationalism and set...the stage for an election-year showdown over the country’s financial future.” In his address, Biden “also advocated a 100-day ‘supply chain review’ that could require federal agencies to buy only medical supplies and other goods manufactured in the United States. And he urged an end to loopholes that let procurement officers and federal contractors get around existing "Buy American" clauses. 'When we spend taxpayers' money – when the federal government spends taxpayers' money – we should use it to buy American products and support American jobs,' Biden said."

The New York Times (7/9, Goldmacher, Tankersley, 18.61M) reports, "In some ways, Mr. Biden was seizing the 'Buy American' message from Mr. Trump himself, who campaigned on an 'America First' agenda in 2016 and wrote on Twitter on his Inauguration Day that 'Buy American' and 'Hire American' were 'two simple rules' that would guide his administration." The Times adds that "Biden's campaign is riding high in the polls but his advisers, as well as Republican strategists, still see the economy as perhaps his area of greatest vulnerability against Mr. Trump."

The Washington Free Beacon (7/9, Stiles, 78K) reports that Biden, "whose first failed presidential run was marred by allegations of plagiarism, is adopting an economic slogan the United Nations used in April. ... The alliterative slogan previously appeared in an April United Nations campaign urging countries to exploit the coronavirus pandemic as an opportunity for 'enhancing climate action,' among other agenda items."

Kudlow Pans Biden's Economic Recovery Plan. NEC Director Kudlow said of Biden's economic recovery plan on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (7/9) that Biden "had his chance, particularly with [President] Obama. The last eight years before President Trump, we had one of the worst recoveries in history. Look, you go down the list and look at that campaign document. First of all, he intends to repeal every tax cut that President Trump put in to rejuvenate the economy. ... Despite the mantra of the Democrats that all tax cuts help the rich, the Trump tax cuts did exactly what we hoped. That is, middle-income, blue-collar workers, lower-wage earners performed the best."

Sur La Table Files For Bankruptcy.

The Washington Post (7/9, Bogage, 14.2M) reports that Sur La Table has filed for bankruptcy "as it prepares for a corporate sale and store closures, making the upscale cookware chain the latest retailer to buckle under the strain of the coronavirus pandemic." The company "expects to close about half of its 120 stores."

Harley-Davidson To Eliminate 700 Jobs.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (7/9, Barrett, 632K) reports Harley-Davidson will eliminate 700 jobs this year as part of a restructuring following the exit of veteran CFO John Olin. The changes "are part of Harley's efforts called 'Rewire.' About 200 of the 700 positions being eliminated are already vacant, the company said, and the remaining 500 will be eliminated by the end of the year."

Musk Taunts Ex-Investors As Tesla Shares Soar.

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Higgins, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Tesla's stock has gained more than 225% so far this year. CEO Elon Musk has been celebrating, and openly mocking investors who pulled out early during the company's difficulties in recent years.

Meadows, Navarro Tout Benefits Of USMCA.

Chief of Staff Meadows said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (7/9, 49K) that USMCA "is not only a historic deal, but it's possibly the largest trade deal that we've ever had to do and negotiate in very difficult circumstances."

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said on PBS' NewsHour (7/9, 286K), "NAFTA, which Joe Biden and a lot of other people voted for in 1992, was structured in a way so that American jobs were lured into Mexico by Mexico's cheap labor and lax environmental controls, and Mexico lost a lot of its supply chain to China. what USMCA does is turn that completely on its head. it's structured in a way to make North America the manufacturing powerhouse of the world. The way it helps American workers – and this is the most important part – it has local content regulations which provide, for example, in automobiles, that a certain percentage of that has to be American-made. To ensure that the jobs don't go south, there's also strict wage and environmental restrictions on Mexico. So, this is a situation where, rarely, in a trade deal, Mexico, Canada, and the US all benefit."

Deputy CBP Commissioner Robert Perez said on Mornings On The Mall (7/9), "We do over $1.5 trillion worth of trade with Mexico every year." CBP "is on the front line...in facilitating that trade north bound and south bound. Now, this unprecedented new trade agreement is designed to really tighten some of the trade rules and protect intellectual property and create fair labor conditions that we believe, unquestionably is going to create jobs in the US and just create a much more level playing field and, again, CBP is on the front line of implementing that."

OSU Researcher With Ties To China Charged With Grant Fraud.

The Washington Times (7/9, Mordock, 492K) reports that a Ohio State University professor "with ties to a controversial group that the Trump administration has accused of stealing U.S. intellectual property was charged with grant fraud, according to an indictment unsealed Thursday." Song Guo Zheng was arrested in late May, the Justice Department said, after he allegedly engaged in "a sophisticated medical grant fraud scheme" to fraudulently obtain more than $4.3 million in NIH grants.

Trump Says US Testing Is "Much Bigger And Better" Than That Of Other Countries.

President Trump tweeted Thursday morning, "For the 1/100th time, the reason we show so many Cases, compared to other countries that haven't done nearly as well as we have, is that our TESTING is much bigger and better. We have tested 40,000,000 people. If we did 20,000,000 instead, Cases would be half, etc. NOT REPORTED!"

Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K), "We do testing like nobody's ever done testing. And when we test, the more you test, the more cases you find. Other countries, you know when they test? And I asked them all, they test when somebody's not feeling well or when somebody walks into a hospital." Trump added, "We have cases all over the place. ... But we have a mortality rate, think of this, that's tenfold better than any other. What we are doing is incredible. ... We have fewer people dying."

Senate Democrats Say Administration Testing Approach Causing Confusion. The Washington Post (7/9, Weiner, 14.2M) reports "the Trump Administration's erratic approach to testing for the novel coronavirus has left state leaders and commercial laboratories confused, frustrated and unprepared for the fall, Democrats on the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions found in a report released Thursday." This "report is based on interviews during the past two months with state health officials, clinical laboratories, test and equipment manufacturers, and industry associations."

Testing Labs Say Results Are Being Delayed Due To High Demand. The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Krouse, Terlep, Grossman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that with growing demand for COVID-19 tests due to the surge in infections, labs are being overwhelmed and as a result the tests are taking longer to process. NIAID Director Fauci said on a Wednesday Wall Street Journal podcast that if results take that long there is no point in "contact tracing because it's already too late."

Politico Examines Rhode Island's Testing Success. Politico (7/9, Grunwald, 4.29M) examines the handling of coronavirus in Rhode Island, where "deaths, hospitalizations and infections have been plummeting since April." Rhode Island is "leading the nation in testing, with nearly a quarter of its population tested so far, and its rate of positive tests has dropped from over 18 percent to under 2 percent." Gov. Gina Raimondo (D) "copied the playbook of nations like South Korea and New Zealand that have fared much better than the United States in battling the virus."

Trump Says He Will Wear A Mask During Walter Reed Visit.

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K), "I think it's fine to wear a mask if it makes you feel comfortable. I think under certain conditions, like when you are going into a hospital – I'll be going to Walter Reed to see some of our great soldiers that have been injured, badly injured, and also see some of our COVID workers, the people who have done such a great job. And I expect to be wearing a mask when I am in Walter Reed."

Conway: Trump "Tested Regularly," Encourages Masks.

WESH-TV Orlando, FL (7/9, 42K), a Hearst Television station, reported, "In an interview with our Washington bureau, Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said [the President is] tested regularly." Conway: "I hope people are also listening to the local officials, listening to friends and family, telling their own kids, as I do, 'Don't forget to bring your mask.' ... People should be doing that regardless of whether the President is reminding them constantly or not." In an interview on WIOD-FM Miami (7/9, 439), Conway said, "The President tells everyone to wear a mask and to follow the CDC guidelines and wear a mask if they cannot otherwise stay six feet apart. The President is naturally socially distanced from most people [and he] is tested regularly."

Redfield: Social Distancing, Masks, Handwashing, Are "Powerful Weapons."

On ABC's Good Morning America (7/9, 3.26M), CDC Director Redfield said, "We are not defenseless against the virus. We have powerful weapons. Some people don't think they're powerful because they're kind of straightforward, but they're powerful. That is the social distancing. That is the facemask. That is the hand-washing and that is being smart about selectively shutting down businesses that, you know, I think encourage irresponsible behavior."

Fauci Says Some States Should Consider Shutting Down Again.

CNBC (7/9, Feuer, 3.62M) reports on its website that NIAID Director Fauci said late Wednesday that states "with rapidly expanding coronavirus outbreaks should seriously consider 'shutting down' like the country did when the virus first hit" the US in March. Fauci said, "Any state that is having a serious problem, that state should seriously look at shutting down. It's not for me to say because each state is different."

The Washington Post (7/9, Witte, 14.2M) reports, "Governors across the country are facing growing pressure from public health experts and local leaders to reimpose stay-at-home orders as the only way to regain control. ... The push appeared to receive a boost" from Fauci. The Washington Times (7/9, Muñoz, 492K), the Washington Examiner (7/9, Halaschak, 448K), and The Hill (7/9, Sullivan, 2.98M) have similar reports.

Fauci Says Political Divisions Impeding Response. USA Today (7/9, Santucci, 10.31M) reports Fauci said Thursday "that divisiveness in politics has likely hurt the country's response to the coronavirus." Speaking with FiveThirtyEight, Fauci said, "You have to be having blindfolds on and covering your ears to think that we don't live in a very divisive society now from a political standpoint. I mean, it's just unfortunate, but it is what it is."

Politico (7/9, Cancryn, Ehley, 4.29M) reports that though officials like Fauci "can no longer use the White House briefing room as a daily bullhorn for public safety messaging during the pandemic," they now "contradict Trump on other platforms" like the interviews Fauci gave this week.

McEnany: Trump “Excited” To Travel To “Home State” Of Florida For Convention.

9-TV Tampa, FL (7/9, 14K) reported about the Republican National Convention coming to Jacksonville. White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany was shown saying the President is “very excited to go to Florida. It’s his home state. Jacksonville is the designation and the designated place of the Republican National Convention.”

McCarthy Not Worried About Attending Convention. The Washington Times (7/9, Muñoz, 492K) reports House Minority Leader McCarthy “said Thursday he’s not concerned about attending the National Republican Convention.” He said, “I’ll be at the convention gladly, and I know we will do it in a safe manner, we’ll take the precautions needed.”

Two Roundtable Members Tested Positive Before Pence Event In Pennsylvania.

The Washington Times (7/9, Boyer, 492K) reports two people tested positive for COVID-19 before Vice President Pence’s roundtable in Malvern, Pennsylvania on Thursday and were asked to leave the event. The two people “had no symptoms, a campaign spokeswoman said. She said the discovery was part of routine testing of everyone who will be around the vice president during such events.”

White House Reporter Tests Positive.

The New York Post (7/9, Nelson, 4.57M) reports a White House reporter “tested positive for the coronavirus after attending two press briefings this week. ... White House Correspondents’ Association President Jonathan Karl said in an email that the journalist is asymptomatic and did not linger in press workspaces.”

AP Analysis: Trump’s Difficulties With Asian Americans Predate Pandemic.

The AP (7/9, Ho) writes under the headline “Trump Faced Issues With Asian Americans Even Before Virus” that the President’s “anti-Asian rhetoric” during the coronavirus pandemic is a “calculation that he has more to gain with his loyal base of older white voters thrilled by his inflammatory statements, than to lose among the Asian American community.” The AP says Trump already had difficulty appealing to many Asian American voters, who tend to live in solidly Democratic areas.

New COVID Case Numbers Continue To Surge.

All three broadcast networks again opened their evening newscasts with coverage of the spread of coronavirus in the US. David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (7/9, lead story, 4:45, 7M), “This is a worsening situation with cases now rising in 36 states; 10 states seeing record hospitalizations. ... The steep increase in cases since reopening: Florida up 1,300% in a matter of weeks, Arizona up 858% in cases, South Carolina up 999%, Texas up 680%, Georgia up 245%. Many of these states opening early, some skipping the guidance, steps from the President’s own team.” Miguel Almaguer said on NBC Nightly News (7/9, lead story, 2:15, Holt, 5.87M), “In a growing number of COVID hotspots, fear is spreading as fast as the virus. The lines for testing from dawn to dusk. ... In 39 states, infections are on the rise; the crushing toll on our country no different than the original peak of the pandemic in April, say experts.”

On the CBS Evening News (7/9, lead story, 2:30, Brennan, 4.14M), David Begnaud said Disney World has “reopened to their annual passholders, as they are known, despite the fact that here in Orange County where most of Disney World is located, new coronavirus infections have jumped 130% over the last 12 days. Despite that, Disney World is set to open up to the general public Saturday.” The Wall Street Journal (7/9, A1, Campo-Flores, Ballhaus, Bauerlein, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports that the increase in coronavirus cases in the southern and western parts of the US have emerged amid government rules that are often confusing and conflicting, often inconsistent, and proving hard to enforce.

The CBS Evening News (7/9, story 2, 1:35, Brennan, 4.14M) ran a feature on hospitals in hard-hit Texas, while ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 11, 1:45, Muir, 7M) profiled a security guard at Kaiser Permanente Downey Medical Center in California. NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 4, 2:05, Holt, 5.87M) reported on the lack of personal protective equipment, saying “there is still not enough to go around months into this pandemic.”

Shortage Of Glass Vials Could Make Vaccine Distribution Difficult.

The CBS Evening News (7/9, story 6, 1:50, Brennan, 4.14M) reported, “A potential coronavirus vaccine, made by the Massachusetts company Moderna, should go into advance trials later this month. But even if a vaccine is proven to be safe and effective, there are concerns that a global shortage of specialized glass for vaccine vials could delay its rollout.” CBS’ Imtiaz Tyab reported, “There are serious concerns about how to distribute [a vaccine]. Glass vials are the safest way – they can withstand cold temperatures, are resistant to contamination – but require highly specialized machinery to make and if at least 7.7 billion glass vials are needed to treat every person on the planet, there is nowhere near enough.”

Coronavirus May Be Passed From Mothers To Babies, Study Suggests.

The Washington Post (7/9, Bernstein, 14.2M) reports, “Researchers found the coronavirus and antibodies against it in the umbilical-cord blood, breast milk, placentas and vaginas of 31 pregnant infected women, another suggestion that the virus can be passed to fetuses and newborns, according to results of a small study released Thursday.” In one of the cases, “a baby tested negative two days later, an indication that the child was already producing antibodies against the virus in the womb, said” the lead researcher. The entire “study is not yet available,” but “an abstract with results was released Thursday ahead of a one-day worldwide conference on [COVID-19] that will take place Friday.”

The AP (7/9, Marchione) reports, “Researchers from Italy said Thursday that they studied 31 women with COVID-19 who delivered babies in March and April,” and “they found signs of the virus in several samples of umbilical cord blood, the placenta and, in one case, breast milk.” The study involved women at three hospitals during the height of the outbreak in Italy.

Garcetti Says Los Angeles Could Reimpose Stay-At-Home Order.

The Los Angeles Times (7/9, Money, 4.64M) reports Mayor Eric Garcetti (D) warned Wednesday that Los Angeles residents “could again be ordered to stay home to stem the spread of the coronavirus should infections and hospitalizations continue to climb.” The Los Angeles Times (7/9, Fry, 4.64M) additionally reports that in Orange County, the number of confirmed infections has “jump[ed] 97% over the past three weeks – an indicator that health experts say makes it clear the virus is spreading more rapidly in the region.”

Some New York Neighborhoods Have More Than 50% Testing Positive For Antibodies.

The New York Times (7/9, Goldstein, 18.61M) reports, “At a clinic in Corona, a working-class neighborhood in Queens, more than 68 percent of people tested positive for antibodies to the new coronavirus,” while in Jackson Heights, Queens, 56% tested positive and in Cobble Hill, Brooklyn, 13% tested positive. The Times says that “many lower-income neighborhoods...were hard hit, while many wealthy neighborhoods suffered much less.” Some experts believe that if there is a “second wave” in New York City, those neighborhoods that had been previously affected “might have herd immunity” – that is “assuming that antibodies do in fact offer significant protection against future infection.”

Some Summer Camps Have Become COVID Hotspots.

NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 6, 1:45, Holt, 5.87M) ran a feature on summer camps that are open this summer, where despite precautions, “some have already become hotspots for infections.” NBC’s Kristen Dahlgren: “Twenty-six million children typically attend summer camp. This year, only 6.5 million are expected.”

Trump Says He Is “Adamant About Defending The Past,” Protecting Free Speech.

In the first of two columns based on his interview with President Trump, Marc Thiessen writes in the Washington Post (7/9, 14.2M) the two discussed negative media coverage of the President’s speech at Mount Rushmore on July 3. The speech, he said, “was actually not dark, it was the opposite of dark. What’s dark is the other side. ... They’re trying to take everything down. And I think they’re crazy, but I also think they’re evil. There’s an evilness to it. And I can’t believe that there’s not more pushback.” Asked his defense of Confederate memorials, Trump said, “Oh, I’m not. But I am adamant about defending the past. It’s part of our history. They’re taking down everything. They’re taking down history, they’re taking down so much.” Trump also said he “against” the Confederacy, “but I also believe in free speech, and I believe in history. You can’t erase history. If you erase it, you’re going to repeat it.”

Pence: Pelosi’s Reaction To Statue Destruction A “Surrender To The Mob.” Vice President Pence told Breitbart (7/9, Boyle, 673K) in Pennsylvania that House Speaker Pelosi’s comments earlier Thursday “dismissing vandals who destroyed a Christopher Columbus statue in Baltimore on July 4 were ‘unconscionable.’” Said Pence, “Tearing down monuments is not protests. Burning churches is not free speech. To have the Speaker of the House tacitly affirm the rule of the mob is unconscionable. For Speaker Nancy Pelosi to say ‘they will do what they will do’ is a surrender to the mob. We’re not going to have it.” The Washington Free Beacon (7/9, Christenson, 78K) reports Pelosi also said that figures such as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln would “want us to be talking about the future.”

Milley Calls For “Hard Look” At Renaming Bases Honoring Confederates. The New York Times (7/9, Cooper, 18.61M) reports Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Mark Milley told a House hearing Thursday that the Pentagon should take “a hard look” at changing the names of Army bases honoring Confederate officers, “disagreeing with President Trump and further exposing a divide between the military and the president.” Milley told lawmakers that the base names had become an issue of “divisiveness,” adding, “There is no place in our armed forces for manifestations or symbols of racism, bias or discrimination.”

Axios (7/9, Knutson, 521K) reports Milley “said that minority service members – which he said make up 43% of the U.S. military – may feel uncomfortable that Army bases are named for Confederate generals.”

Trump Says He May Have To Act To Stop Violence In Cities.

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News’ Hannity (7/9, 535K), “New York City is not recognizable. Crime is way up. Shootings are way up. Murder is way up. It’s just unbelievable. Chicago, what’s going on in Chicago, and we are looking at it very seriously because we are going to have to do something. We’re really supposed to be asked to come in and help, the federal government. ... So we are ready to act and at some point we may have to act anyway. We may have to do it sooner rather than later.”

Acting DHS Secretary Wolf said on the Howie Carr Show (7/9) that there is “a lack of political leadership in a number of cities to include Portland, but we have seen it in Seattle. We have seen it in Atlanta and Chicago and elsewhere, not providing that back up, not providing leadership, at least allowing their police department to do their job.”

Acting Deputy DHS Secretary Ken Cuccinelli said on Fox Business' Evening Edit, “If you want to know what defunding the police looks like in the real world, just look at that little part of Seattle where the mayor pulled the police out. What happened? People were being killed. ... Sexual assaults taking place with no accountability. That is what you get when you defund the police, when you pull back on the police and it is really important for people to remember that the neighborhoods that need community policing the most aren't the rich neighborhoods. They're the poor neighborhoods. They're the neighborhoods that are disproportionately minority. That's who you're victimizing by pulling back and allowing the criminals to run free.” Cuccinelli was also interviewed on America First (7/9).

Deputy CBP Commissioner Robert Perez said on Mornings On The Mall (7/9) that CBP has “had to, for the better part of a couple weeks, work alongside so many of these partners around the country to really make sure that not only we are protecting these monuments and these federal properties, but also make sure that we are delivering consequence to folks who are not peaceful protesters. These are rioters. These are people who are absolutely making sure that they are doing whatever they can to cause physical damage and destroy these properties”

Trump Says Seattle's Mayor Acted Against CHOP Because He Was About To. Trump was asked in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K) if it is true that Seattle's mayor acted because they were told the President was going to. Trump said, “One hundred percent. We were going in, we were going very soon. We let them know that and all of a sudden, they didn't want that. So they went in before we got there but we were going very shortly, very soon, and we would've taken the CHOP, I call it. CHOP. We would have taken it back very easily.”

Barr Says Black Men Often Subject To Extra Suspicion By Police.

ABC's Good Morning America (7/9, 3.26M) featured outtakes of a taped interview with Attorney General Barr “talking about race and policing.” Said Barr, “I do think that it is a widespread phenomenon that African American males, particularly, are treated with extra suspicion and maybe not given the benefit of the doubt.” Asked if “Black lives matter,” Barr said, “Obviously, Black lives matter. I think all life, all human life is sacred.”

The Washington Times (7/9, Mordock, 492K) reports Barr said separately Thursday that “the current anti-police climate has left officers demoralized, raising concerns about recruiting and retaining quality officers.” Speaking with reporters in Arkansas, Barr said, “I think the current environment can be very demoralizing for law enforcement. Even before Minneapolis we were concerned about the sustainability of our law enforcement system in the United States in a full economy.”

Esper Defends Use Of National Guard In Response To Disturbances.

The AP (7/9, Burns, Baldor) reports that in testimony Thursday before the House Armed Services Committee, Defense Secretary Esper “defended using National Guard soldiers to support law enforcement agencies in handling civil unrest triggered by the killing of George Floyd.” Esper is described as “at odds with Trump” over the response. Esper told the committee, “Using active duty forces in a direct civilian law enforcement role should remain a last resort, and exercised only in the most urgent and dire of situations.”

Colin Powell: President Must Be An Example To Nation On Race.

In an interview with Andrea Mitchell on NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 9, 2:00, Holt, 5.87M), former Secretary of State Colin Powell said, “Racism still exists. We still have people who want to take it out on people who are people of color. And we have to make sure that our top leadership, especially the President of the United States, has to be an example to the rest of the country that we are one nation, one people.” Asked about President Trump's description of Black Lives Matter as a symbol of hate, Powell said, “Black lives matter. It is a matter of fact. But he hasn't accepted it. He should be leading this, not criticizing it.”

New York City Paints “Black Lives Matter” Mural Outside Trump Tower.

ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 5, 0:20, Muir, 7M) reported, “The message being painted along Fifth Avenue here in New York City today and directly in front of Trump Tower: Black Lives Matter.” Mayor Bill de Blasio and Al Sharpton “leading the painting, the Mayor saying the city is committed to the meaning of the message.” President Trump “has called the painting of the mural a symbol of hate.” USA Today (7/9, Wu, 10.31M) reports de Blasio tweeted, “Our city isn't just painting the words on Fifth Avenue. We're committed to the meaning of the message.”

Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K), “I've dealt a lot with Mayor de Blasio. I was very nice to Mayor de Blasio. I got him ventilators when he needed them. I got him hospital help when he needed it. I got him everything he needed. ... I spoke to him many times. He couldn't have been nicer and then he throws a big 'Black Lives Matter' sign right down in the middle of Fifth Avenue and all merchants along Fifth Avenue are furious. They are furious and the whole city is furious.”

Justice Thomas' Wife Criticizes Virginia Town's “Black Lives Matter” Banner.

The Washington Post (7/9, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports the small town of Clifton, Virginia put up a banner that says “Welcome to Clifton, where Black Lives Matter." Mayor William R. Holloway called "a first step" to beginning discussions of racial equity, but it "prompted outrage from some residents of Fairfax County and nearby towns." One critical email, which was shared with The Washington Post, "appears to be from Ginni Thomas, an outspoken conservative" who is married to Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas. Thomas wrote, "BLM is a bit of a dangerous Trojan Horse and they are catching well-meaning people into dangerous posturing that can invite mob rule and property looting." Thomas did not respond to a request for comment Thursday.

Former Philadelphia Police Form PAC To Combat "Defund The Police" Movement.

The Washington Times (7/9, Lovelace, 492K) reports that a group of former Philadelphia police officers have formed "a new political advocacy group to stop 'defund the police' efforts and elect pro-police candidates nationwide." The Protect Our Police PAC is "recruiting candidates to become mayors, governors and state judges all over the country."

Free Beacon Analysis: Rise In Minneapolis Violence Not Linked To Protests.

The Washington Free Beacon (7/9, Lehman, 78K) reports that "an average of over 50 gunshots per day have plagued Minneapolis since the police killing of George Floyd led to city and nationwide protests, prompting fears that hostility to the police is driving a violent crime wave." Official data released by the Minneapolis Police Department, however, "paint a complicated picture of crime in the city," but "overall levels of crime in the ensuing weeks have remained in line with historical trends."

The Washington Times (7/9, Richardson, 492K), meanwhile, reports that "after weeks of street violence that has claimed hundreds of Black victims, including children caught in the crossfire of gang violence and random shootings, onlookers are increasingly asking: Where's Black Lives Matter?" The movement "has been noticeably silent over the rash of shootings and street violence in the last few weeks afflicting predominantly Black communities."

Body Camera Transcripts Reveal Floyd's Last Moments.

ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 4, 1:50, Muir, 7M) reported, "Transcripts of body camera recordings revealing what George Floyd and the officers charged with aiding and abetting his murder were saying in his last moments. ... The documents, filed as part of a motion in court to dismiss charges against rookie officer Thomas Lane, who maintains he was just following orders from the man with his knee on Floyd's neck, Derek Chauvin." Prosecutors have "until August to respond to that motion to dismiss charges."

New Details Emerge About Taylor Shooting Death.

ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 6, 1:55, Muir, 7M) reported, "There is news tonight about the shooting death of Breonna Taylor in her own home. ABC News obtaining audio of her boyfriend describing the moment officers broke down the door and opened fire and why he shot back." ABC's Steve Osunsami: "It remains clear tonight that Louisville Metro Police were at the wrong home. And in a police interview recorded just hours after the killing in March, the boyfriend who survived the encounter," Kenneth Walker, "says that he and his girlfriend, Breonna Taylor, had no idea who was trying to break into their apartment."

The CBS Evening News (7/9, story 7, 1:50, Brennan, 4.14M) reported, "This new video taken in March by a neighbor of Breonna Taylor shows a small army of police officers with their guns drawn arresting Taylor's boyfriend, Kenneth Walker. Police claim they had a no-knock warrant for Taylor's home because of a drug investigation, but the lead officer, Sgt. Jonathan Mattingly, told investigators in a newly released audio interview that on the night of the deadly shooting officers did knock on Taylor's door." Mattingly: "We wanted to give her plenty of time to come to the door because they said she is probably there alone." NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 8, 2:00, Holt, 5.87M) reported, "But Walker, interviewed immediately following the shooting and without an attorney, said police never identified themselves, leaving he and Breonna Taylor to believe it was a break-in. So he got his gun and fired."

Native American Groups Hope Redskins Name Change Will Inspire Others.

The Washington Post (7/9, Kilgore, Stubbs, 14.2M) reports that "for some Native American groups, the push for Washington's NFL franchise to change its nickname has been not only a righteous cause, but also a strategic movement." In 2017, then-president of the National Congress of American Indians Jacqueline Pata "outlined one reason the NCAI had focused its name-change efforts on Washington: the principle that once the most egregious nickname fell, others would follow." The Post says the Redskins' announcement last Friday that the team will conduct a "thorough review" of their name may "have major ripple effects throughout professional sports."

Carlson Criticizes Seattle Employee Training On "Undoing Whiteness."

The Washington Examiner (7/9, Soellner, 448K) reports Fox News host Tucker Carlson on Thursday "urged people to stand up to racial hatred, which he views in the Seattle's new training session held for white employees to 'undo' their whiteness as it relates to certain privileges." Carlson said, "Prepare to be unemployed, pale employees of Seattle, your color disgusts us. All that actually happened in Seattle." Carlson also "accused people who support this type of program of being hypocritical in their views, comparing it to a type of conversion therapy that's been done on gay and transgender people."

Trump “Thinking” About Stone, Manafort, Papadopoulos Pardons.

President Trump was asked in an interview on Fox News’ Hannity (7/9, 535K) if he is considering pardons or commutations for Paul Manafort, Roger Stone, and George Papadopoulos. Trump said, “I am always thinking. I am always thinking. ... Roger Stone, Papadopoulos, Manafort – what they did to that man, what they did to that man. Putting him in solitary confinement. Al Capone, the great gangster, the ultimate gangster was never in solitary confinement. You know, what they did to him was just incredible.”

Politico (7/9, Caputo, 4.29M) reports that “a chorus of outside allies is pressing the president to” pardon Stone, “over the wishes of White House and campaign aides who don’t like Stone and think Trump has nothing to gain by helping him.” Politico adds “both camps expect Trump will at least split the difference by commuting Stone’s sentence, according to interviews with nine sources familiar with the discussions. A commutation would keep Stone from behind bars without wiping his record clean.”

As DOJ Orders Him To Report To Prison, Stone “Praying” Trump Will Offer Him Clemency. The Washington Post (7/9, Hsu, Marimow, 14.2M) reports on Thursday, the Department of Justice directed that Stone “should report to prison next week as ordered by his sentencing judge.” Stone “asked a federal appeals court in Washington to extend to Sept. 3 the date on which he must surrender to a federal prison in Jesup, Ga.” The court gave him until Friday to respond to the department’s directive. The New York Post (7/9, Fredericks, 4.57M) recounts, meanwhile, that Stone told Fox News “he was ‘praying’ that President Trump would offer him clemency.” Said Stone, “I think I’ll be the last person to know. He hates leaks, and he hates to be told what to do. I have instructed my lawyers not to contact the lawyers at the White House.”

Trump Says Obama And Biden Spied On His Campaign.

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News’ Hannity (7/9, 535K), “President Obama and Joe Biden spied on my campaign. They knew everything that was going on. They were in the rooms with everyone was talking about it. ... I know how the White House works. I guess I can say now better than anybody and they knew everything that was going on. They spied on my campaign. I said it a long time ago. Nobody believed me, and now it turns out to be fact.” Trump added, “Here’s a group, we have them cold, they lied, they leaked, they did everything. We have them already. ... I hope that Lindsey Graham does something with the Judiciary Committee. We have all the evidence they need. Now, maybe they’re getting new stuff. I let them handle that. But the Judiciary Committee should act.”

Berman Tells Lawmakers Barr Pressured Him To Resign.

The AP (7/9, Mascaro) reports former US Attorney Geoffrey Berman “arrived on Capitol Hill for a closed-door interview Thursday at the House Judiciary Committee as the panel deepens its probe of politicization at the Justice Department.” Berman, adds the AP, “engaged in an extraordinary standoff last month” when Attorney General Barr “sought to have him leave office.” As US attorney, “Berman oversaw several ongoing investigations of Trump associates.”

Politico (7/9, Cheney, 4.29M) reports that Berman told lawmakers that during a June 18 meeting, Barr pressured him to resign. In a written statement to the committee, Berman “said Barr repeatedly attempted to coax Berman into resigning his post by suggesting he consider other positions in government, including the chairmanship of the Securities and Exchange Commission or the head of the Justice Department’s Civil Division.” Berman said, “I said that there was no job offer that would entice me to resign from my position.” Nonetheless, Barr issued a statement later that night “announcing Berman’s resignation...which triggered Berman to publicly respond that he had done no such thing.” Berman “told lawmakers he had consulted with private attorneys and was prepared to contest his removal until Barr had agreed to elevate Berman’s deputy, Audrey Strauss, rather than insert an attorney from outside the office to replace him.” The New York Times (7/9, Fandos, Weiser, 18.61M) says that in his prepared testimony, Berman “did not speculate as to Mr. Barr’s motive for his dismissal.”

USA Today (7/9, Phillips, Johnson, 10.31M) says the testimony “is certain to raise additional questions about the Justice Department’s independence from a White House that has purged watchdogs, whistleblowers and others seen as disloyal.”

Sullivan Asks Full Appeals Court To Reconsider Dismissal Of Charges Against Flynn.

Reuters (7/9, Wolfe) reports, “The judge hearing the criminal prosecution against US President Donald Trump’s former adviser Michael Flynn on Thursday asked an appeals court to reconsider a recent decision dismissing the case.” District Judge Emmet Sullivan “asked the entire US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit to reconsider the June 24 decision that directed him to drop the Flynn case.” Fox News (7/9, Re, 27.59M) indicates on its website that “if en banc review is granted, an oral argument date would then be set, likely in the fall. If en banc review is denied, Sullivan could appeal to the Supreme Court – a process that could take months to resolve.”

Politico (7/9, Gerstein, 4.29M) says Sullivan “is putting up a highly unusual fight,” and Townhall (7/9, Pavlich, 177K) that it “comes after Sullivan refused to honor a directive from the Department of Justice, in which it was argued the FBI didn’t have proper standing to charge Flynn in the first place, to dismiss the case.” The New York Times (7/9, Goldman, 18.61M), The Hill (7/9, Neidig, 2.98M), and the Washington Examiner (7/9, Dunleavy, 448K), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Cohen Returns To Prison.

ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 3, 0:20, Muir, 7M) reported, “President Trump’s former personal attorney is back behind bars.” Michael Cohen “was taken to jail” Thursday “after the Bureau of Prisons said he refused the conditions of his home confinement.” The Washington Post (7/9, Zapotosky, 14.2M), along with several other news outlets, indicates the development is due to Cohen having been "photographed by The New York Post eating outside the French restaurant Le Bilboquet."

Reuters (7/9, Allegri, Hals) reports that according to Cohen's attorney, Jeffrey Levine, the former Trump adviser "was taken to the Metropolitan Detention Center in Brooklyn." Levine said "Cohen was ordered to a federal courthouse in Manhattan to convert his furlough to home confinement," and there "they were presented with an agreement that barred Cohen from having any contact with news media organizations and from posting on social media." Said Levine, "I'm never seen any language like this in my life." Reuters adds that "after objecting, Levine said that the US Marshals Service came with 'shackles' and ordered him remanded to the jail in Brooklyn because he failed to agree to the terms."

The AP (7/9, Balsamo, Mustian) recounts that "Cohen, who pleaded guilty to tax evasion, campaign finance fraud and lying to Congress, had been released May 21 on furlough as part of an attempt to slow the spread of the virus in federal prisons." USA Today (7/9, Johnson, 10.31M), Washington Examiner (7/9, Brest, 448K), Axios (7/9, Swan, 521K), New York Times (7/9, Haberman, 18.61M) and New York Post (7/9, Golding, 4.57M), among other news outlets, also cover the story.

Trump Says Border Wall Will Be "Close To Finished" By Year's End.

President Trump said in an interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K), "The border wall is doing incredibly well. We are moving along, and we are up to about 250 miles already. We will have, by the end of the year, it will be close to finished. It may take a couple extra months but we will have it. It has had a huge impact already, because we're about halfway finished."

CBP Reports 40% Increase In Border Arrests And Detentions From May To June.

The Washington Post (7/9, Miroff, 14.2M) reports according to CBP, "the number of migrants detained along the Mexico border jumped 40 percent in June, an increase that defies emergency Trump administration orders to swiftly 'expel' those who cross illegally." The numbers were "32,512 arrests and detentions along the Mexico border in June, up from 23,142 in May and nearly double the number recorded in April," though June's "enforcement numbers remain far below the levels tallied during last year's migration crisis." The Washington Times (7/9, Dinan, 492K) reports the numbers were "rebounding from a coronavirus lull that had pushed traffic to its lowest level in decades."

Meadows: Trump To Issue Executive Orders To Lower Prescription Drug Prices.

Chief of Staff Meadows said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (7/9, 49K), "This President is going to do three different executive orders that will substantially make sure that the average American gets to pay less for their prescription drugs."

Biden Pledges Effort To Reverse Court's Ruling On Little Sisters Of The Poor.

The Washington Free Beacon (7/9, Piro, 78K) reports Joe Biden "pledged to undo the Supreme Court's decision in favor of religious liberty for the Little Sisters of the Poor." The Free Beacon adds that "this week the Supreme Court ruled that the Little Sisters of the Poor, a charitable religious group of nuns, could not be compelled to cover the cost of contraception for employees," and "Catholic groups criticized Biden for targeting religious employers." The Federalist (7/9, Duffy, 126K) says "Biden's response to the ruling for religious liberty was that 'there is a clear path to fixing it,' meaning the Little Sisters of the Poor could find themselves back in another legal battle should he win the presidency."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) accuses Biden of acting in a highly divisive manner as he threatens – in the Journal's view – to further harass a group of nuns and drag them back to court in order to defend controversial ACA provisions.

Commerce IG: NOAA Chief Feared Firing If He Did Not Back Trump On Hurricane Path.

The New York Times (7/9, Flavelle, Friedman, 18.61M) reports Commerce Department Inspector General Peggy Gustafson concluded that the head of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Association "felt that his job and the jobs of others would be in jeopardy if the agency did not rebuke forecasters who contradicted President Trump's inaccurate claim last year about the path of Hurricane Dorian." Gustafson's report "examined the aftermath of Mr. Trump's insistence that Hurricane Dorian was headed toward Alabama, which National Weather Service forecasters from Alabama contradicted."

The Washington Post (7/9, Freedman, Samenow, 14.2M) reports Gustafson "found that the scandal that became known as 'Sharpigate' could have broader repercussions. It comes as the U.S. braces for what is expected to be an unusually active hurricane season, which comes amid a worsening coronavirus pandemic affecting multiple hurricane-prone states."

Tropical Storm Fay Forms Off Coast Of Carolinas.

ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 9, 0:20, Muir, 7M) reported that Tropical Storm Fay formed off the Carolinas late Thursday. ABC added that there are warnings "posted straight up into the northeast. Winds up to 45 miles per hour. Up to five inches of rain expected. Rain, dangerous winds from DC to Philly to New York tomorrow and then hitting New England early Saturday morning." NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 7: 0:15, Holt, 5.87M) and the CBS Evening News (7/9, story 5, 0:20, Brennan, 4.14M) provided similar coverage.

White House Says It Is In Agreement With CDC On Reopening Schools.

NBC Nightly News (7/9, story 5, 2:00, Holt, 5.87M) reported, "The White House said today it is on the same page with the CDC on timelines for reopening schools after mixed messages left a lot of parents and teachers confused." White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (7/9, 125K), "The head of the CDC, Director Redfield, was on TV [Thursday] morning saying it is not that they are revising them so much as putting out additional information so that people understand how best to utilize those guidelines. ... I think these are protocols that many of these school districts have already decided that they are going to put in place." The AP (7/9, Feldman) reports Redfield said on ABC, "It's not a revision of the guidelines, it's just to provide additional information to help schools be able to use the guidance that we put forward."

Nexstar (7/9, 13K) showed White House coronavirus task force coordinator Deborah Birx saying, "I think the CDC guidance is very clear. What we're trying to really meld that with is understanding and showing where the public health tripwires are." Assistant HHS Secretary for Health Adm. Brett Giroir said on Fox News, "We know many children have nutritional issues and emotional issues. All of these things are wrapped up in the schools. I think the thing we have to understand is we can get them back safely. If we follow the CDC guidelines, we can get them back in the classroom and be safe at the same time."

The Washington Post (7/9, Sun, Dawsey, 14.2M) says the CDC "is coming under intense pressure from President Trump and his allies, who are downplaying the dangers in a bid to revive the economy ahead of the Nov. 3 presidential election. In a White House guided by the president's instincts, rather than by evidence-based policy, the CDC finds itself forced constantly to backtrack or sidelined from pivotal decisions." The Post says the "latest clash" came over CDC guidance about safely reopening schools and the President's desire for a swift resumption of classes.

NEA President Lily Eskelsen Garcia writes in USA Today (7/9, 10.31M), "No one wants to welcome students back to classrooms more than America's educators. ... But the Trump administration's plan is appallingly reckless. Concerned more with election dynamics than the lives of students and their educators, the White House pressure campaign presents a false choice between the health of our students and the health of our economy."

Schools Face Unprecedented Challenges In Reopening. The Washington Post (7/9, Achenbach, Meckler, Janes, 14.2M) reports, "In just a matter of weeks, tens of millions of children will start a new school year, and what that will look like has become the nation's thorniest political and epidemiological issue." Reopenings are "likely to be halting and improvisational. ... There is no proven strategy for the remobilization of 56.6 million K-12 students amid a pandemic like this one."

The New York Times (7/9, Goldstein, 18.61M) reports President Trump "threatened this week to cut off federal funding to districts that do not reopen, though he controls only a sliver of money for schools." But administrators "say they are already struggling to cover the head-spinning logistical and financial challenges of retrofitting buildings, adding staff members and protective gear, and providing students with the academic and emotional support that many will need after a traumatic disruption to their lives."

DeVos: Administration Could Let Parents Spend Federal Dollars On Education If Schools Don't Open. Reuters (7/9) reports Education Secretary DeVos said on Fox News that the Administration "could allow families to use federal education funding elsewhere if the local public school does not open during the coronavirus pandemic." DeVos said, "If schools aren't going to reopen, we're not suggesting pulling funding from education but instead allowing families...[to] take that money and figure out where their kids can get educated if their schools are going to refuse to open."

Utah Governor Mandates Facemasks In Public Schools. Axios (7/9, Knutson, 521K) reports Utah Gov. Gary Herbert (R) "issued a public school face mask mandate on Thursday for all K-12 students, faculty, staff and visitors for the fall term."

Lawsuit Seeks To Block DeVos' Campus Sexual Assault Rules.

The New York Times (7/9, Green, 18.61M) reports that students, women's rights and education groups have sued to block Education Secretary DeVos' "campus sexual assault rules from taking effect next month, with plaintiffs as young as 10 joining arguments that the rules will harm students and burden institutions." Last week, seven students "joined a lawsuit the National Women's Law Center filed against the Education Department, outlining how the new rules...stand to derail their cases or deter them from pursuing them altogether." The lawsuit "is one of several by states and advocacy groups challenging the department's rules, which were completed in May and are slated to take effect on Aug. 14."

California AG Sues Administration Over International Student Rule.

The Washington Post (7/9, Svrluga, 14.2M) reports that California Attorney General Xavier Becerra sued the Trump Administration in the US District Court for the Northern District of California Thursday "seeking to block a rule that would require international students to take classes in person this fall, despite increasing coronavirus cases." The suit "argues that California is disproportionately impacted by the order with more than 184,000 international students. Becerra was joined by school leaders from California State University and California Community Colleges."

Trump Names Berrier To Lead DIA.

Politico (7/9, Matishak, 4.29M) reports that President Trump has chosen Army Deputy Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Scott Berrier to be the next director of the Defense Intelligence Agency. Berrier "was one of a handful of candidates submitted by the military branches to Pentagon brass earlier this year." If he is confirmed, Berrier "would replace Army Lt. Gen. Robert Ashley – who is expected to retire after a traditional three-year term as director – ensuring that the DIA would have back-to-back Army chiefs, something that hasn't occurred in six years, according to an agency history."

Pack Has Declined To Approve Visa Renewals For VOA Employees.

The Washington Post (7/9, Farhi, 14.2M) reports that Voice of America "could be facing the loss of many of its international journalists under a new overseer appointed by President Trump." US Agency for Global Media CEO Michael Pack "has so far ignored calls by VOA managers to extend visas held by foreign-born journalists who work at the news agency," sparking concern "that dozens of employees could lose their jobs, threatening production of VOA's many non-English-language programs and newscasts." The Post says about 100 VOA news employees are not US citizens and "work for the agency in Washington under visas that must be regularly extended or renewed." A round of visas are set to expire this month and Pack "has declined to approve renewals, leaving some employees facing the possibility of returning to their home countries," which the Post describes as "a daunting prospect given that their reporting has sometimes angered authoritarian governments."

Office Of Cuba Broadcasting May Have To Furlough Employees Due To Budget Pinch. Politico (7/9, Lippman, 4.29M) reports that the Office of Cuba Broadcasting "is quickly running out of money and could be forced to furlough some of its employees and fire contractors, according to three people familiar with the matter." The agency, which "falls under the umbrella" of the US Agency for Global Media, is "in turmoil" over the arrival of Pack, who "immediately fired the heads of Voice of America, Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty and other outlets on his first day as CEO of the taxpayer-funded media group." Politico adds, "The budget crisis is due to the uproar Pack's moves provoked on Capitol Hill, where senators in both parties fear the Trump administration is seeking to lean on coverage that is meant to be independent."

Census Bureau To Disclose More About Cogley, Korzeniewski Roles.

CQ Roll Call (7/9, Macagnone, 154K) reports that amid "growing calls for more details from trade groups, its network of partners and even its internal watchdog," the Census Bureau "has promised to reveal more about the roles of its two new political appointees." Roll Call says there are concerns that "the agency's new deputy director for policy, Nathaniel Cogley, and his adviser, Adam Korzeniewski" may "interfere in how the agency conducts day-to-day operations of its 2020 count." Census Bureau Director Steven Dillingham announced last month that Cogley and Korzeniewski would "help the Census Bureau achieve a complete and accurate 2020 Census and study future improvements." On Tuesday, the Commerce Department Inspector General "asked for a description of their duties, their ethics disclosure forms and documents about their hiring by July 20. Census Bureau spokesman Michael Cook said the agency would address Cogley's and Korzeniewski's positions in a response to the IG letter."

Trump Creates Commission On Improving Hispanic Access To Economic, Educational Opportunities.

The AP (7/9, Madhani, Colvin) reports President Trump "signed an executive order Thursday that creates an advisory commission tasked with improving Hispanic Americans' access to economic and educational opportunities." The commission "has broad marching orders to foster school choice efforts and promote public-private partnerships in Hispanic-American communities." The AP says the "push...comes as the president hopes to win a bigger share of the Latino vote than he did four years ago." According to the AP, Trump "is walking a tightrope in his attempt to court Latino voters ahead of the November election while also courting his base supporters by underscoring his administration's efforts" to stem migration on the southern border.

Acting Director of the United States Domestic Policy Council Brooke Rollins said on WIOD-FM . . . Miami (7/9, 439) that Trump's order "really focuses on the President's effort to increase prosperity for our Hispanic brothers and sisters but really for all Americans. This President has focused just a tireless and relentless amount of energy on lifting Americans out of poverty, on giving them for education opportunity to school choice, on implementing opportunity zones, criminal Justice reform. The package all taken together is really impressive."

Trump Approves Disaster Declaration For Michigan.

President Trump wrote in a tweet Thursday evening that he has approved a disaster declaration for Michigan following flooding from a recent dam break. Trump wrote, "At the request of Congressman Moolenaar, I have approved a major Disaster Declaration to provide more than $43 million in Federal Funds to help the people of the GREAT State of Michigan recover from the recent dam break flooding. I will always stand with Michigan!" The Detroit Free Press (7/9, Spangler, 1.52M) says the funds "will be made available to individuals and businesses impacted by the flooding and dam breaks that began May 17 along several rivers, especially the Tittabawassee, in several mid-Michigan counties, including Midland." The Detroit News (7/9, Jones, 825K) provides similar coverage.

High Court Rules Much Of Oklahoma Still Indian Reservation.

ABC World News Tonight (7/9, story 8, 0:30, Muir, 7M) reported on "a victory for Native Americans" at the Supreme Court, in "what many believe is the most significant ruling for Native Americans in decades." The AP (7/9, Murphy, Gresko) recounts the justices announced a 5-4 decision Thursday establishing "that a large chunk of eastern Oklahoma remains an American Indian reservation, a decision that state and federal officials have warned could throw Oklahoma into chaos." The decision, written by Justice Neil Gorsuch, "means that Oklahoma prosecutors lack the authority to pursue criminal cases against American Indian defendants in parts of Oklahoma that include most of Tulsa." The decision also "casts doubt on hundreds of convictions won by local prosecutors."

The Washington Post (7/9, Marimow, Barnes, 14.2M) says "the question for the court was whether Congress officially eliminated the Creek Nation reservation when Oklahoma became a state in 1907." Gorsuch wrote, "If Congress wishes to withdraw its promises, it must say so. Unlawful acts, performed long enough and with sufficient vigor, are never enough to amend the law." The New York Times (7/9, Liptak, Healy, 18.61M) reports the ruling "could reshape the criminal-justice system by preventing state authorities from prosecuting offenses there that involve Native Americans." The case is McGirt v. Oklahoma. McGirt, the Washington Examiner (7/9, Dibble, 448K) recounts, is "a member of the Muscogee Nation who was convicted of raping a 4-year-old child in 1997," and "argued that the case should not have been in the jurisdiction of Oklahoma courts because the incident happened on tribal land."

USA Today (7/9, Wolf, Johnson, 10.31M) reports the territory involved is "home to 1.8 million residents and including Tulsa." Writing in dissent, Chief Justice John Roberts "said that Congress made no attempt to conceal its intention to 'disestablish' reservation lands." Roberts added, "Through an open and concerted effort, Congress did what it set out to do: transform a reservation into a state." USA Today also reports, "Within hours of Thursday's ruling, the state and five Native American nations released a statement promising cooperation." Along those lines, says the New York Post (7/9, Moore, 4.57M), "Oklahoma's three US attorneys expressed optimism that 'tribal, state, local and federal law enforcement will work together to continue providing exceptional public safety' in light of the ruling." The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Bravin, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), Reuters (7/9, Hurley), Washington Times (7/9, Vondracek, 492K), the AP (7/9), The Hill (7/9, Neidig, 2.98M), and the Daily Caller (7/9, Hukeri, 716K), among other news outlets, also cover the decision.

Wisconsin Supreme Court Upholds Republican-Authored Lame-Duck Laws.

The AP (7/9, Richmond) reports "the conservative-controlled Wisconsin Supreme Court on Thursday upheld Republican-authored lame-duck laws that stripped power from the incoming Democratic attorney general just before he took office in 2019." The justices "rejected arguments that the laws were unconstitutional, handing another win to Republicans who have scored multiple high-profile victories before the court in recent years."

Hill-HarrisX National Poll: Biden Leads Trump 43%-39%, Down From 10-Point Lead In June.

The Washington Times (7/9, Harper, 492K) reports that a Hill-HarrisX national online poll of 933 voters, taken July 3-4 "has some encouraging news for President Trump." The poll shows Joe Biden leading Trump 43%-39%, down from a 10-point edge the Democrat held in a similar poll last month. Democratic pollster Terrance Woodbury said that "with Trump's supporters being very enthusiastic and insistent on voting for him, margins that close are problematic." Another "5% of said they prefer someone" else, 5% "don't plan to vote," and 8% were undecided, according to the poll.

Alaska Poll: Trump Leads Biden 48%-45%. The Washington Examiner (7/9, Lim, 448K) reports that a Public Policy Polling (D) survey of 1,081 Alaska voters, taken July 7-8, shows Trump leading Biden 48%-45%. The Examiner says, "The Trump campaign will be disappointed by the results since the president won Alaska in 2016 by almost 15 points over then-Democratic rival Hillary Clinton." According to the poll, Sen. Dan Sullivan (R-AK) "only has a 5-point advantage on independent challenger Al Gross, a commercial fisherman and doctor," while Rep. Don Young (R-AK), "the longest-serving member of Congress, is struggling, too, against independent small business owner and educator Alyse Galvin. Young, who came to the House in a March 1973 special election, is behind Galvin by 2 points."

Trump Says He Is Doing "Very Well" In The Polls. Trump said in a Thursday interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K), "I think we are doing very well in the polls. If you look at the different states, I think we are doing very well. We are rapidly rising. I was with the President of Mexico yesterday, we had an incredible day. We have tremendous Hispanic support. We have tremendous African American support. I think we have great support, period. You look at the votes, you look at the bikers, you look at everything that's happening in this country. There is great spirit, spirit like nobody's ever seen before, actually. And there's no spirit for Joe [Biden]."

Trump Says Biden Was "Brainwashed" By "Radical Left."

President Trump was asked in a Thursday interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K) if Joe Biden has the "alertness" to be president. Trump said, "I don't think it's the age, because I was with Bernie Marcus. I think he is 91. He is so sharp. He's sharp as ever. ... I deal with other guys in their late 80s, early 90s, and they're 100% mentally so sharp. ... But Joe is just, look, let's face it, he's been taken over by the radical left. He has no clue what they are doing and what they're getting him into." Trump added, "I think they brainwashed him. They brainwashed him. He doesn't know where he is. He doesn't know what he's doing, and our country will suffer. Our stock markets will crash. Bad things will happen."

Trump Says Biden Should Take Same Cognitive Test He Did. Trump was also asked in the interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/9, 535K) about Biden's claim that he has taken cognitive tests. Trump said, "He meant the COVID tests. He didn't mean 'cognitive,' he meant COVID. ... I think he was confused by the question and the words and everything else. ... He hasn't taken any cognitive tests, because he couldn't pass one. I actually took one very recently when the radical left was saying, 'is he all there, is he all there?' I proved I was all there, because I aced it. I aced the test and he should take the same exact test.”

Conway: Biden Represents The Past. White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said on the Ben Shapiro Show (7/9), “Reelections are about the future, not the past. If Joe Biden represents one four-letter word best, and he represents many, it would be ‘p-a-s-t.’ The President needs to lay out a visionary agenda for the next term. That is very clear. Tell us why to keep you here. He can go through his progress report, which is significant. Even though he has to battle a pandemic, an economic downturn, and civil unrest at the same time, so many things that he did early paid it forward so that our economy was sturdy enough to withstand many of the fundamental challenges that would have destroyed mostly any other President’s economy.”

Trump Lays Out Second-Term Agenda.

President Trump was asked in an interview on Fox News’ Hannity (7/9, 535K) about his second-term agenda. Trump said, “First of all, we’re going to defeat the invisible enemy, and we are well on our way. ... We are going to rebuild the economy. We’re going to bring back jobs from all of these foreign lands that have stolen our jobs on horrible trade deals. We are going to continue to make great trade deals. We’re going to finish rebuilding our wall.” Trump added, “We are rebuilding our military. ... We are fixing up the VA for our vets. ... We are protecting our Second Amendment, so important. We need more judges and more justices. You see that now with the Supreme Court more than ever.”

Trump: West “Is Always Going To Be For Us.”

President Trump was asked in an interview on Fox News’ Hannity (7/9, 535K) about Kanye West’s decision to run for president. Trump said, “I like his voice being heard, but he is always going to be for us and his wife is going to be for us. ... He is a person that I get along with very well and in the end, I think he would support us over anyone else.”

Pence Raises $1M During Pennsylvania Fundraiser.

The Washington Examiner (7/9, Drucker, 448K) reports that “during an outdoor fundraiser hosted by a wealthy Republican donor” in Pennsylvania, Vice President Pence “raised $1 million for President Trump’s reelection campaign.” The fundraiser was Pence’s “first stop on a daylong bus tour through central Pennsylvania, a region critical to the president’s 2020 prospects.” The $1 million “was a significant haul for a sitting vice president.” The Examiner adds that Trump and Pence “are going to need the extra resources,” as “public polls show a tight race in Pennsylvania” between President Trump and Joe Biden, “who also traveled to the state Thursday.”

Biden Hires Three New Aides To Help Boost Outreach To Minorities.

The Washington Post (7/9, Sullivan, 14.2M) reports that Joe Biden “has hired a trio of communications aides who will work to boost outreach to people of color and add more diversity to his team – two areas where his campaign has drawn criticism from allies. Pili Tobar has joined the campaign as communications director for coalitions, Ramzey Smith is serving as African American media director, and Jennifer Molina is Latino media director.” The trio, “all people of color, are part of a broader strategy of engaging core constituencies not just ‘through one lens, but through every aspect of the campaign,’ said Biden campaign manager Jen O’Malley Dillon.”

Fox Business Revisits Biden’s Release Of 2016-2018 Tax Returns.

On its website, Fox Business (7/9, Henney, 1.73M) reports that last year, Joe Biden’s “campaign released three years of income tax returns starting with 2016, his last year in office, and running through 2018.” The returns “show that Biden...enjoyed a stream of wealth once leaving office, making millions of dollars mainly from lucrative book deals.” His “federal tax return for 2016 shows his adjusted gross income was close to $400,000 in his last year in office. His 2017 tax return shows his income soared to more than $11 million; in 2018, he earned about $4.6 million.” Biden’s “spike in wealth was largely attributed to sales of his 2017” memoir, “Promise Me, Dad.” He “also made 47 paid speaking engagements from January 2017 through the end of May 2019, a majority of which were for the book tour.” The Bidens had effective tax rates of 23.5%, 33.9%, and 33.4% for 2016, 2017 and 2018, respectively.

NYTimes Report: Sources Say DeSantis “Hindering” Fundraising Efforts For GOP Convention.

The New York Times (7/9, Karni, Mazzei, 18.61M) reports that when President Trump initially “threatened to pull the Republican National Convention out of Charlotte,” Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis (R) began “campaigning to bring the event to his state. But now, as convention planners in Jacksonville seek to raise tens of millions of dollars on an almost impossibly rushed time frame,” DeSantis “is hindering those efforts, interviews show.” The Times says DeSantis “has directed his top fund-raiser, Heather Barker, to tell donors not to give to the convention because of a personal dispute between the governor and Susie Wiles, his former campaign manager who is serving as an informal adviser to the convention planners, according to multiple” sources. The Times adds that Wiles “is a veteran Republican operative who led Mr. Trump’s Florida team in 2016 and who ran Mr. DeSantis’s 2018 campaign for governor. Mr. DeSantis’s relationship with Ms. Wiles soured over his suspicion that she had leaked embarrassing information.”

Drawing from the Times’ story, the Daily Beast (7/9, Montgomery, 1.39M) says that Barker “has reportedly informed donors in no uncertain terms of DeSantis’ refusal to involve himself because of Wiles’ presence. On a recent call that involved DeSantis, Wiles, and Trump, DeSantis said outright that [Wiles] was an overrated political strategist, according to the Times.”

Duckworth Says Trump, Carlson Question Her Patriotism To Distract From Trump's Failure To Lead.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (7/9, 18.61M), Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) writes that over the Fourth of July weekend, "some on the far right started attacking me for suggesting that all Americans should be heard, even those whose opinions differ from our own. Led by the Fox News host Tucker Carlson and egged on by President Trump, they began questioning my love for the country I went to war to protect, using words I never actually said and ascribing a position to me that I do not actually hold." Duckworth argues that Trump and Carlson question her patriotism "because they're desperate for America's attention to be on anything other than Donald Trump's failure to lead our nation, and because they think that Mr. Trump's electoral prospects will be better if they can turn us against one another."

Crenshaw Suggests Duckworth Agrees With "The Destruction Of America." The Washington Post (7/9, Weigel, 14.2M) reports that in a "MAGA meetup" organized by the Trump campaign Wednesday, Rep. Dan Crenshaw (R-TX) "suggested" that Duckworth agreed with "the destruction of America." Crenshaw said, "I think a general message that the left stands for the destruction of America, and the right doesn't, probably works pretty well with veterans, even liberal ones. ... Because even liberal veterans probably don't agree with that, unless you're Tammy Duckworth." The Post says Crenshaw "defended" his remarks in a statement, "saying that his disagreement with the U.S. senator was political and not personal." Crenshaw said in the statement, "Calling for a 'national dialogue' to tear down statues of our Founders is certainly worthy of criticism, and can be reasonably described as the ideological destruction of our country."

NYTimes Analysis: Pro-Trump Base "Skeptical" Of Appointed GOP Senators In Arizona, Georgia Races.

The New York Times (7/9, Herndon, 18.61M) reports that with Rep. Doug Collins (R-GA) challenging appointed Sen. Kelly Loeffler (R-GA) in the special election to fill out the remaining term of ex-Sen. Johnny Isakson (R-GA), a number of "voters in the deeply conservative" northeast part of the state says it's Collins "who most represented the values of their political icon: President Trump. This feeling – that the Republican base understands Trumpism and its best messengers better than GOP leaders – is shaping the race in Georgia, as well as" the special election to fill out the remaining term of the late Sen. John McCain (R-AZ), in which appointed Sen. Martha McSally (R-AZ) is battling Democrat Mark Kelly. The Times says McSally is facing "not only a energized Democratic electorate but a skeptical right-wing base. In both states, Republican governors appointed the senators."

Reid To Host Nightly Show On MSNBC.

The New York Times (7/9, Grynbaum, 18.61M) reports that MSNBC announced Thursday that Joy Reid "will become the host of a new nightly show" on the network. Reid, who the Times describes as "a sharp critic of President Trump and commentator on liberal politics and race," will "move to the 7 p.m. hour on July 20. Her show, 'The ReidOut,' succeeds 'Hardball.'"

Brownstein: Trump Is Seeking To Resurrect An American Past That Is Disappearing.

Ron Brownstein writes in The Atlantic (7/9, 3.47M) that President Trump "is running for the presidency of an America that no longer exists." While Trump has recently "reprised two of Richard Nixon's most memorable rallying cries, promising to deliver 'law and order' for the 'silent majority,'" in "almost every meaningful way, America today is a radically different country than it was when Nixon rode those arguments to win the presidency in 1968." Brownstein says Americans are now "far more racially diverse, less Christian, better educated, more urbanized, and less likely to be married." In addition, polls show they are "more tolerant of interracial and same-sex relationships, more likely to acknowledge the existence of racial discrimination, and less concerned about crime." Brownstein adds that "the country's underlying evolution shows how narrow a path Trump has chosen. He is betting the Republican future on resurrecting a past that is dissolving before his eyes."

Author: "Trump Derangement Syndrome" In Danger Of Spreading Across US.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/9, Subscription Publication, 7.57M), author Joseph Epstein warns that Trump Derangement Syndrome is threatening to spread across the country but one can avoid catching it by turning off television.

RCP Average Has Trump's Job Approval At 41.6%.

The Real Clear Politics average of recent polling on President Trump's job approval stands at 41.6%, and his disapproval at 56.3%. Trump's approval is up 0.1 since yesterday; his disapproval is unchanged.

A Rasmussen poll of 1,500 "likely voters" (7/6-7/8) finds Trump's approval at 45%, and his disapproval at 54%.

Financial International News

IMF, World Bank Heads Confirm Annual October Meetings Will Be "Primarily Virtual."

Reuters (7/9, Shalal) reports the heads of the IMF and World Bank on Thursday "confirmed that they were preparing to hold their annual meetings in October largely online given the coronavirus pandemic." IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva and World Bank President David Malpass, in a joint statement, "said they were recommending the annual meetings, set for Oct. 12-18, be held in a 'primarily virtual format.'" The officials "said they remained flexible about the format of the talks, depending on developments, and would work to accommodate the needs of their members.”

ECB's Bond Purchasing Puts Greek Bonds In Spotlight.

Reuters (7/9, Bahceli) reports Greek government bonds “are back in the spotlight, outshining their peers and returning 26% since mid-March, when the European Central Bank announced it would buy Greek debt for the first time ever – a seal of approval for conservative investors.” Following three bailouts in the last ten years, “ECB purchases are the icing on the cake for Greek debt, which, boosted by economic recovery, had already been popular with yield-hungry investors prior to the pandemic.” The ECB “had already bought at least 6% of the Greek bond market, holding 4.7 billion euros ($5.3 billion) at the end of May as part of its Pandemic Emergency Purchase Programme.”

Global Regulators Renew Push To End Libor By 2021.

Reuters (7/9, Jones) reports the Financial Stability Board laid out a series of recommendations on Thursday “for coordinating and speeding up preparations to scrap Libor, an interest rate benchmark banks were fined billions of dollars for trying to rig.” The global regulatory group said that policymakers “should issue public statements to promote awareness of that Libor is on its way out, help to create a formal roadmap for scrapping the rate, and promote industry wide coordination.” In a statement, the Board said, “Authorities may need to fundamentally review their readiness to implement some of the recommendations in this report, and, if necessary, revise their plans accordingly to be prepared to work on an even more compressed timeline when the pandemic situation has stabilised.”

Drezner: Global Finance Is Lone Bright Spot For Int'l Cooperation In COVID-19 Response.

In his column for The Washington Post (7/9, 14.2M), Daniel W. Drezner writes that while “international cooperation has not been robust during the coronavirus pandemic,” there has been “one arena where international coordination has been, in some ways, superior to what happened in 2008: global finance.” Drezner says the Bank of International Settlements’ annual 2020 report said, “The response has generally been swifter, bigger and broader-based than it was for the [2008 financial crisis]. The authorities have deployed monetary, prudential and fiscal policies in a concerted way that probably has no historical precedent.” One big factor to which Drezner attributes this better response “is that in this area – in contrast to every other dimension of the crisis – the United States has been the unparalleled leader. The Federal Reserve acted quickly to inject liquidity into the system and reopen swap lines with other key central banks. This helped to reassure jittery financial markets.”

Leading International News

Navarro: China “Hid” Coronavirus From World.

Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Navarro said on PBS’ NewsHour (7/9, 286K), “The reason why we have so many cases and China has less is this: Not only did China spawn the virus in November, they hid it for about two months. During that time, China restricted travel within China to contain the virus, but they sent thousands of Chinese nationals on aircraft, which many of them were infected, and spread the seed of that virus. So that’s part of the problem we’re facing now.”

WHO To Set Up Independent Review Of Its Handling Of Pandemic.

Reuters (7/9, Nebehay, Miller) reports the WHO said Thursday “it was setting up an independent panel to review its handling of the COVID-19 pandemic and the response by governments.” The panel will be led by former New Zealand Prime Minister Helen Clark and former Liberian President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, who will generate “an interim report to an annual meeting of health ministers in November and present a ‘substantive report’ next May.”

The Washington Times (7/9, Meier, 492K) reports that in announcing the move, WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said, “This is not a standard report that ticks a box and is then put on a shelf to gather dust. This is something we take seriously.”

WHO Director-General Pleads For International Unity In Pandemic Fight.

The Washington Post (7/9, Schemm, Taylor, 14.2M) reports WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus “pleaded Thursday for international unity to fight the pandemic devastating the world in the wake of President Trump’s announced intention to quit the organization.” A tearful Tedros said the true enemy was not the virus itself but “the lack of leadership and solidarity at the global level and national levels.” He asked, “How difficult is it for humans to unite to fight a common enemy that’s killing people indiscriminately? Can’t we understand that the divisions or the cracks between us actually are to the advantage of the virus?”

WHO Says Coronavirus May Be Spread By Aerosolized Droplets.

The New York Times (7/9, 18.61M) reports the WHO on Thursday “formally acknowledged that droplets carrying the coronavirus may be airborne indoors and that people who spend long periods in crowded settings with inadequate ventilation may be at risk of becoming infected.” The agency said spreading by aerosols may be the cause of outbreaks of COVID-19 “reported in some closed settings, such as restaurants, nightclubs, places of worship or places of work where people may be shouting, talking, or singing.” While “the spread of the virus by larger droplets that are coughed or inhaled” is more common, the WHO recommends that people “avoid crowded places, close-contact settings, and confined and enclosed spaces with poor ventilation.”

Reuters (7/9, Steenhuysen) reports the statement “follows an open letter from scientists who specialize in the spread of disease in the air – so-called aerobiologists – that urged the global body to update its guidance on how the respiratory disease spreads to include aerosol transmission.”

Iran Rocked By Another Explosion.

The New York Times (7/9, Fassihi, 18.61M) reports that an “explosion rocked western Tehran early Friday,” according to state media, “causing widespread power failures in two residential areas and unnerving Iranians awakened for the third consecutive week by an early-morning blast.” The “precise location” of the explosion was not clear, analysts “said there are several military and training facilities in the area that could be the target of sabotage.”

UN Expert: Suleimani Killing Was Unlawful.

The New York Times (7/9, Cumming-Bruce, 18.61M) reports that a UN expert investigating summary executions said Thursday that the US “targeted killing of Maj. Gen. Qassim Suleimani of Iran was unlawful and risked eroding international laws that govern the conduct of hostilities.” Agnes Callamard, the UN special rapporteur investigating extrajudicial and summary executions, said the American drone strike that killed Suleimani in January “could only be justified in international law as a response to an imminent threat.” Callamard wrote, “Absent an actual imminent threat to life, the course of action taken by the U.S. was unlawful.”

Milley Says Russia Bounty Intelligence Is Uncorroborated.

Reuters (7/9) reports that Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Mark Milley told Congress Thursday that intelligence suggesting Russia paid bounties to the Taliban for the killing of US troops has not been corroborated and there is no evidence the payments resulted in the deaths of any service members. Milley told the House Armed Services Committee, “That is a unique, discrete piece of information that is not corroborated.” Reuters says Defense Secretary Esper “echoed” Milley’s comments during the hearing.

The New York Times (7/9, Savage, Schmitt, 18.61M) reports that Milley told the committee, “If in fact there’s bounties, I am an outraged general. ... If, in fact, there’s bounties directed by the government of Russia or any of their institutions to kill American soldiers, that’s a big deal. That’s a real big deal.” Milley also said that while the government does not have proof the bounties resulted in military casualties, “we are still looking. ... We’re not done. ... We’re going to run this thing to ground.”

Esper Says He Has Launched an Investigation Into Media Leaks. Esper also told the panel “he has launched an investigation into leaks across the Pentagon,” amid media reports on the bounty intelligence, Politico (7/9, Seligman, 4.29M) reports. Esper said, “We are aggressively pursuing leaks within the Defense Department. ... It’s bad and it’s unlawful and it needs to stop.”

Powell Criticizes Media Reaction To Bounty Intelligence. Fox News (7/9, Dorman, 27.59M) reports on its website that in an interview on MSNBC’s Andrea Mitchell Reports Thursday, former Secretary of State Colin Powell “indicated...that media figures overreacted” to the bounty report. Powell said, “What I know is that our military commanders on the ground did not think that it was as serious a problem as the newspapers were reporting and television was reporting. ... It got kind of out of control before we really had an understanding of what had happened. I’m not sure we fully understand now.”

The New York Post (7/9, Dorman, 4.57M) quotes Powell as saying, “But [Commander of US Central Command] Gen. [Kenneth] McKenzie ... he did not think this was of that level of importance to us. Remember, it’s not the intelligence community that’s going to go fight these guys, it’s the guys on the ground. It’s our troops. It’s our commanders who are going to go deal with this kind of a threat, using intelligence that was given to them by the intelligence community. But that has to be analyzed. ... It has to be attested. And then you have to go find out who the enemy is. And I think we were on top of that one, but it just got – it got almost hysterical in the first few days.”

Documents: US Worried Troops Exposed To Harmful Contaminants At Uzbek Base.

McClatchy (7/9, Copp, 19K) reports that it has obtained new released documents that reveal the US government was “concerned about contaminants in the air that service members breathed in at a former Soviet base in Uzbekistan as early as 2002.” Military health investigators traveled to the base, Karshi-Khanabad (K2), “multiple times between 2001 and 2004 to assess the contamination there.” According to McClatchy, “hundreds of veterans who were assigned to K2 between 2001 and 2005 have reported cancer diagnoses.” A House Oversight and Reform subcommittee is now “investigating toxic exposure faced by U.S. forces at that base and the long-term illnesses they now have, in an effort to get their illnesses recognized by the Defense Department and Department of Veterans Affairs as connected to their time at the base.”

Germany Seizes Server With Data From US Law Enforcement.

The AP (7/9, Bajak) reports, “At the behest of the U.S. government, German authorities have seized a computer server that hosted a huge cache of files from scores of U.S. federal, state and local law enforcement agencies obtained in a Houston data breach last month.” The server was used by “Distributed Denial of Secrets to share documents – many tagged ‘For Official Use Only’ – that shed light on U.S. police practices.” Those documents “include emails, audio and video files and police and FBI intelligence reports.”

Australia Suspends Hong Kong Extradition Treaty.

The Washington Post (7/9, Shih, Crawshaw, 14.2M) reports Australia on Thursday "suspended its extradition treaty with Hong Kong and offered an immigration pathway for residents fleeing the city." As Prime Minister Scott Morrison announced the measures, the Australian government "also issued a stark new travel advisory asking its roughly 100,000 citizens in Hong Kong to consider leaving" the city, "citing the risk of arbitrary detention."

Seoul Mayor's Body Found After Search.

Reuters (7/9, Shin) reports, "Longtime Seoul City Mayor Park Won-soon was found dead, police said on Friday." South Korea's Yonhap news agency "said a former secretary of Park had filed a complaint on Wednesday over alleged incidents of sexual harassment." In announcing the discovery, "Police official Choi Ik-soo told reporters at a televised briefing at the scene there was no sign of foul play although a detailed investigation would be needed." The AP (7/9, Kim, Kim) reports Park's "daughter called police on Thursday afternoon and said her father had given her 'a will-like' verbal message before leaving their home."

Increasing Extreme Weather Poses Threat To Japan's Elderly.

The New York Times (7/9, Rich, Inoue, Ueno, 18.61M) reports that in "recent years, climate change has spurred more torrential rains in Japan, causing deadly flooding and mudslides in a nation with many rivers and mountains." According to the Times, those "most vulnerable to the risks of this extreme weather are the elderly, of which Japan has the highest proportion in the world." Nursing homes, for example, "face particular challenges because of how difficult it can be to evacuate aging, frail people in the midst of disaster."

WPost: Egypt "Employing Hostage-Taking" To Interfere In US Justice.

The Washington Post (7/9, 14.2M) editorializes that former Egyptian Prime Minister Hazem el-Beblawi is the subject of a US lawsuit filed by an American citizen previously held as a political prisoner in Egypt, Mohamed Soltan. After Soltan filed the lawsuit, the regime of Abdel Fatah al-Sisi "seized five of Mr. Soltan's cousins and informed their families that they will not be freed unless the suit is dropped. Its embassy in Washington is meanwhile demanding that the State Department intervene in the lawsuit on Mr. Beblawi's side, while warning that if it does not, the U.S.-Egyptian 'strategic relationship' will be endangered." The Post argues that "in effect, the Sisi regime is employing hostage taking and blackmail in an attempt to interfere with the U.S. judicial system."

Supreme Court To Hear Appeal Regarding Investor Challenge To Agreement Between FHFA And Treasury.

Reuters (7/9) reports the US Supreme Court on Thursday "agreed to hear an appeal by President Donald Trump's administration seeking to avoid a lawsuit by shareholders of mortgage finance firms Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac relating to the government rescue of the companies following the 2008 housing crisis." The appeal is from the decision by 5th US Circuit Court of Appeals allow the company's shareholders to "pursue a challenge to the 2012 agreement between the Federal Housing Finance Agency and the Treasury Department" that "eliminated dividend payouts to various shareholders and required the companies to pay the U.S. Treasury an amount equal to their quarterly net worth each quarter."

BNN Bloomberg \(CAN\) (7/9) reports the court "agreed to decide whether investors can challenge the 2012 agreements that let the federal government collect hundreds of billions of dollars of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac's profits." The GSEs "have paid more than $300 billion in dividends to the Treasury under the so-called net-worth sweep."

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Kendall, Ackerman, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports the court will hear appeals by both the government and the investors in the October term. The investors allege that the FHFA is unconstitutionally organized.

American Banker (7/9, Lang, Subscription Publication, 31K) reports the investors will challenge "the single-director structure of the Federal Housing Finance Agency, weeks after the court ruled that the directorship of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau was unconstitutional." The case is Collins v. Mnuchin.

DS News (7/9, Albanese) also reports on the court's action.

FHFA Announces GSEs Will Extend Loan Origination Flexibilities Through August 31.

DS News (7/9, Albanese) reports, "The Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) announced that the GSEs – Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac – will extend several loan origination flexibilities until August 31." The flexibilities include: "Alternative appraisals on purchase and rate term refinance loans; Alternative methods for documenting income and verifying employment before loan closing; and Expanding the use of power of attorney and remote online notarizations to assist with loan closings."

National Mortgage Professional (7/9, Griffin) reports the action is "to ensure continued support for borrowers during the COVID-19 national emergency."

The ABA Banking Journal (7/9) and NAHB Now (7/9) also report the news.

KING-TV Seattle (7/9, Li, 225K) reports, "With the $600 in additional federal unemployment benefits and the state eviction moratorium scheduled to end, many Washingtonians are worried about how they're going to stay in their homes." KING adds, "the Federal Housing Finance Agency recently announced that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac borrowers will benefit from a foreclosure and evictions moratorium through August."

Pennsylvania Extends Eviction Moratorium Through August 31.

The AP (7/9) reports Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf on Thursday extended the state's moratorium on foreclosures and evictions through August 31. There had been "growing calls to extend the four-month-old moratorium – which had been set to lapse Friday – with housing advocates and others predicting a rush to the courthouse and a wave of evictions and homelessness." Wolf said, "I am taking this action to help families know they will have a roof over their heads and a place to live while all of us fight the COVID-19 pandemic. ... It takes one more burden off of people who are struggling and ensures that families can remain in their homes so they can protect their health and well-being."

Ransomware Hackers Demanded $390,000 To Release Knoxville, Tennessee Data.

The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (7/9, Whetstone, 307K) reports, "The cybercriminals who attacked and hampered the city of Knoxville's computer systems last month demanded 42.5 bitcoin, roughly $393,137 based on the market values at the time of the attack, city leaders told Knox News on Thursday. This is the first time the city has revealed the amount, and they maintain they do not intend to pay the ransom." The News Sentinel adds, "City spokesperson Kristin Farley said the city's response to the attack is ongoing. Last week, the hackers posted snippets of stolen information – including city personnel information – online. The data included personal details about employees, such as names, phone numbers, addresses, salaries and work performance scores."

Germany Seizes Server Hosting Stolen US Police Files.

The AP (7/9, Bajak) reports from Boston, "At the behest of the U.S. government, German authorities have seized a computer server that hosted a huge cache of files from scores of U.S. federal, state and local law enforcement agencies obtained in a Houston data breach last month." The AP adds, "The server was being used by a WikiLeaks-like data transparency collective called Distributed Denial of Secrets to share documents – many tagged 'For Official Use Only' – that shed light on U.S. police practices. The data, dating back to 1996, include emails, audio and video files and police and FBI intelligence reports. DDoSecrets founder Emma Best said the data, dubbed 'BlueLeaks,' comes from more than 200 agencies. It has been stripped of references to sexual assault cases and references to children, but names, phone numbers and emails of police officers were not redacted, said Best."

Infosecurity Magazine (7/9, Muncaster) reports, "The raid will raise questions over why an international police operation was launched to seize the leaked data, although there are reports that it may have exposed sensitive personal data. There are also concerns that the data could endanger lives, if it is used by organized crime groups to unmask undercover police officers and witnesses. It could also damage the reputations of suspects who were arrested but subsequently released without charge."

TikTok Considering Ways To Separate From China.

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Lin, Li, Subscription Publication, 7.57M) reports Chinese company ByteDance Ltd. is considering various moves to separate its app TikTok from China, including giving it a non-Chinese headquarters. India has banned TikTok out of concern for cybersecurity and other countries are considering taking action.

German Domestic Intelligence Agency Says Data Not Safe With Chinese Companies. The AP (7/9) reports, "Germany's domestic intelligence agency is warning consumers that personal data they provide to Chinese payment companies or other tech firms could end up in the hands of China's government." The agency says that "Chinese government offices have access to data stored in China by companies" and "other apps, web services and mobility providers such as for example (bike sharing) providers" some of which operate in Germany. BfV head Thomas Haldenwang "said German's data isn't safe with Chinese companies because they are required by law to provide the data to their government."

Experts Question Officials' Claims TikTok Is A National Security Threat. CNN International (7/9, Fung) reports TikTok "faces the most direct threat to its expansion in the US – not from a competitor, but from the US government." President Trump "said Tuesday his administration is 'looking at' banning the app, which is owned by the Chinese company ByteDance, affirming remarks on Monday by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo." It's just the "latest, and most high-profile, example of Washington raising alarms about the app that's popular among younger users in the US, where TikTok has been downloaded 165 million times." However, several security experts "told CNN Business that, although TikTok's links to a private Chinese company are worthy of concern, the app simply wouldn't be that useful for espionage." James Lewis, senior vice president at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a security think tank, said, "It's right to be suspicious of the Chinese. But I'm not sure TikTok is a good intelligence tool for them."

US Finalizing Federal Contract Ban For Companies That Use Huawei, Other Chinese Firms.

Reuters (7/9, Shepardson) reports a US official "said the Trump Administration plans to finalize regulations this week that will bar the US government from buying goods or services from any company that uses products from five Chinese companies including Huawei, Hikvision and Dahua." The rule "could have far-ranging implications for companies that sell goods and services to the US government since they will now need to certify they do not use products from Dahua or Hikvision, even though both are among the top sellers of surveillance equipment and cameras worldwide." The same goes for "two-way radios from Hytera Communications and telecommunications equipment or mobile devices like smartphones from Huawei Technologies or ZTE Corp." The Washington Examiner (7/9, Dunleavy, 448K) reports OMB is "helping to finalize regulations that will comply with 2019's National Defense Authorization Act."
