III. ADMISSIONS BY THE TFS-ICAP DEFENDANTS

16. The TFS-ICAP Defendants admit to paragraphs 17 to 41 below:

Background

17. Beginning in 2001, brokers employed by the TFS-ICAP Defendants (“TFS-ICAP brokers”) used an FX options proprietary electronic trading platform called Volbroker (the “Platform”) and made it available to TFS-ICAP clients. The Platform operated alongside broker interaction with traders via voice and other communications.

18. One functionality of the Platform allowed clients to post live bids and offers for FX options on certain currency pairs, using one of three options strategies, for specified tenors. (The “tenor” of an option refers to the length of time before it expires (e.g., 1 week, 1 month, 3 months, 6 months, 1 year, etc.).)

19. This functionality of the Platform was referred to as the tiles. It also allowed brokers to post bids and offers on a bank’s behalf when directed by the bank’s trader.

20. At any moment in time, the best bid and offer (unless there were no bids or offers) appeared in the tile for the prescribed option.

21. The bids and offers were anonymous, except to the bank that was responsible for the bid or offer and to the brokers, who were able to see which institution was behind each bid and offer.

22. To trade on a particular bid or offer posted on the Platform screen, a bank's trader—or a broker on a bank trader's behalf—simply clicked on it and entered the volume of the desired trade at that level. This would result in a flash on the Platform screen, notifying users that the option had traded at that particular volatility level. It also resulted in the basic trade details appearing in a "trade ticker," which was also visible to users. The details of the banks' identities would only be known to the trading banks for each trade and the TFS-ICAP brokers.

23. TFS-ICAP brokers could configure their Platform screens to include electronic tabs containing the names of certain bank clients of the TFS-ICAP Defendants. The bank names on these tabs were called bank "aliases."

24. To post a bid or offer on behalf of a bank at the direction of the bank trader, the broker clicked on the alias of that bank and then posted the price (i.e., volatility level) in the tile corresponding to the currency pair and tenor the trader desired to bid or offer. Similarly, to hit or lift an existing price on behalf of a trader at a bank, the broker clicked the bank's alias and then clicked on the tile of the option upon which the trader wanted to transact. Again, the identity of the banks trading would only be disclosed to the trading banks at the point that the volatility was hit and the trade flashed.

25. Starting in or around 2005, certain "TFS" aliases were added to the alias list. Rather than being limited to posting prices under the alias of a trading institution, brokers were then able to post prices under aliases such as “TFS-NY” (TFS-New York), “TFS-LDN” (TFS-London), and “TFS-FFT” (TFS Frankfurt).

Conduct

26. On multiple occasions between January 2014 and August 2015, TFS-ICAP brokers on the Emerging Markets desks in both London and New York communicated to one or more U.S.-based bank clients bids or offers that had not been directed by a bank client.

27. On those occasions, TFS-ICAP brokers represented to U.S.-based bank clients that there were bids or offers for an FX option at a particular level when, in fact, no trading institution had bid or offered the option at that level. Communicating unsupported bids and offers was referred to in the FX options industry as “flying” prices.

28. The TFS-ICAP brokers in New York and London who engaged in the practice of flying did so by posting unsupported bids and offers under one of the various “TFS” aliases.

29. On multiple occasions between January 2014 and August 2015, TFS-ICAP brokers on the Emerging Markets desks in both London and New York communicated to one or more U.S.-based bank clients that trades had occurred when a trade had not, in fact, occurred.

30. This practice was known in the industry as “printing,” “spoofing,” or “calling” a trade.

31. One way TFS-ICAP brokers “printed” trades to bank traders during this period was by using one TFS alias to aggress on a price (a bid or offer) posted under another TFS alias, causing a flash on the traders’ Platform screens and signaling to them that a trade had occurred when one had not actually occurred.

32. Flying prices and printing trades as described above violated Sections 4b(a)(2), 6(c)(1), and 4c(a)(1)-(2) of the Act, 7 U.S.C. §§ 6b(a)(2), 9(1), 6c(a)(1)-(2) (2018), and Regulation 180.1, 17 C.F.R. § 180.1 (2020), to the extent such conduct was directed in part at or related to the solicitation of or formation of FX Options contracts with U.S. persons.

33. The TFS-ICAP brokers engaged in the conduct described above within the scope of their employment with the TFS-ICAP Defendants. Accordingly, the TFS-ICAP Defendants are liable for these violations pursuant to Section 2(a)(1)(B) of the Act, 7 U.S.C. § 2(a)(1)(B) (2018). The TFS-ICAP Defendants are also liable under Regulation 166.3, 17 C.F.R. § 166.3 (2020), for its failure to supervise broker conduct.

Supervision

34. Dibb was the CEO of the TFS-ICAP Defendants from on or about February 2012 to at least 2017. As the CEO, he oversaw the day-to-day operations of the joint venture.

35. From at least January 2014 through September 2015, Defendant Dibb was ultimately responsible for ensuring that there was a reasonably adequate system of controls in place to supervise TFS-ICAP broker conduct, including brokers on the Emerging Markets desks in the U.S and U.K.

36. As CEO, Dibb was ultimately responsible for implementing company policies and procedures and ensuring that brokerage conduct was in compliance with the law.

37. From at least January 2014 through September 2015, Dibb was in a position to verify whether or not the brokers under his supervision were flying and printing and, if so, to direct that the misconduct stop.

38. From at least January 2014 through at least September 2015, Defendant Woolfenden, while employed by TFS-ICAP Ltd., held the title of Global Head of Emerging Markets at TFS-ICAP—a position that at least gave him supervisory responsibility over all TFS-

ICAP brokers on the Emerging Markets desks in New York and London and authority over hiring emerging market brokers.

39. From at least January 2014 through September 2015, Woolfenden was in a position to verify whether brokers under his supervision, including those in the U.S., were flying and printing and, if so, to direct that the misconduct stop.

40. From at least January 2014 through September 2015, both Dibb and Woolfenden were responsible for maintaining and enforcing a reasonably adequate system of internal supervision.

41. At no point from January 2014 through September 2015 did the TFS-ICAP Defendants have a policy that specifically and expressly prohibited flying prices or printing trades.

IV. FINDINGS OF FACT, CONCLUSIONS OF LAW, AND ORDER FOR INJUNCTION, CIVIL MONETARY PENALTY AND ANCILLARY RELIEF
